

Beware of phone scams

Some scammers use cleverly designed phone calls to trick you into handing over personal information or your money. Don't fall victim to scams. Ask yourself:

Could this be a grandparent scam?

Scammers may pose as your grandchild in trouble in another city or country and in need of money.

- Ask a question only your grandchild would know how to answer.
- Call your son or daughter immediately to confirm the location of your grandchild.

Could this be an impostor scam?

Scammers may pose as well-known government agencies or businesses, such as the IRS. They often disguise the number appearing on caller ID to seem legitimate.

- Do not provide any personal information.
- Hang up the phone and call back using a phone number you know is legitimate.

Could this be any other type of scam?

- Is there pressure to act immediately?
- Is payment requested by wire transfer, gift card or prepaid money card?
- Is the caller telling you not to tell friends or family about the conversation?
- Is the caller asking you to provide personal information or provide remote access to your computer or other electronic device?

sure signs of a scam.
