I am, therefore, of the opinion that the Procter and Gamble Transportation Company should report to the auditor of Hamilton county as an incorporated company all of its property excepting rolling stock. The fact that the entire business of this company is the freight line business does not affect the question as to it because as I have already pointed out there is no distinction in the entire act insofar as it relates to sleeping car, freight line and equipment companies between properties used in operation or in connection with the freight line business and property not so used. The line of demarcation seems to be drawn where I have already drawn it, that is between the rolling stock and other property.

It follows from what I have said that the commission should not assess the value of any cars owned by the Procter and Gamble Transportation Co., as such for certification to the auditor of Hamilton county, but should ascertain as to that company the total value of all the cars owned by the company wherever located or used and apportion such total value as between Ohio and the rest of the world on the basis of the route mileage regardless of the place in which such cars are customarily kept or to which they ordinarily return when not in use. Upon the result thus ascertained the capital stock excise tax is to be collected but no property taxes are to be levied. Therefore, the county auditor of Hamilton county should be instructed not to assess or attempt to assess any rolling stock of the Procter and Gamble Transportation Company although there may be cars belonging to that company which are kept in Hamilton county and which never move outside of its limits.

With respect to the case of Isaac Winkler & Bro., the only difficulty here is the fact that this concern being unincorporated has no "capital stock" in the technical sense in which the phrase is used in reference to a corporation. However, the substantial purpose of section 76 may be achieved by ascertaining the whole value of all the cars belonging to the partnership and apportioning the amount thus ascertained in the manner already described.

I beg leave to point out in closing that the capital stock of a corporation which is to be taken as the basis of the valuation required by section 76 is not the authorized capital stock, as in the case of foreign corporations, or the actual property of the corporation as such, but is the actual aggregate value of the shares of capital stock of the company.

Yours very truly,
TIMOTHY S. HOGAN,
Attorney General.

CORPORATION ORGANIZED IN OHIO MUST RETURN PERSONAL PROPERTY AT PLACE WHERE PLACE OF BUSINESS STATED IN ARTICLES OF INCORPORATION IS SITUATED—WHEN ITS ACTUAL PLACE OF BUSINESS IS LOCATED IN THE COUNTY OTHERWISE WHEN ACTUAL PLACE OF BUSINESS IS OUTSIDE OF COUNTY WHERE PROPERTY IS LISTED.

Under the rule applicable to persons described by section 5371, General Code, a corporation whose place of business is stated in its articles of incorporation to be at Mentor, Ohio, but whose actual place of business is in Cleveland, must return its personal property at the place where such property is located for the reason that the owner resides outside of the county where the property is listed.

Moneys on deposit in banks of the City of Cleveland, and credits, however, have no situs of their own and so the law presumes their situs to be that of the domicile of the owner. Such moneys and credits must be given a situs and be subjected to taxation by listing in Mentor, Ohio.

COLUMBUS, OHIO, May 26, 1913.

The Tax Commission of Ohio,

GENTLEMEN:—I acknowledge receipt of your favor of May 13th, requesting my opinion upon the following questions:

> "A corporation organized under the laws of the State of Ohio, engaged in the business of operating a line of freight boats upon the Great Lakes, designates in its charter that its principal office is located in Mentor School District, Lake County, Ohio, that being the home port of its boats. Such company has a business office in the city of Cleveland, from which its principal business is conducted. Under the decision of the Supreme Court, in the case of Pelton vs. Transportation Co., 37 Ohio State, the boats of such a company are taxable at the home port, or, in this instance, in Mentor School District.
> "Are the moneys of such a company on deposit in banks in the city of Cleveland taxable in the city of Cleveland or in Mentor School District, Lake County?
> "Are the credits of such a company taxable in the city of Cleveland or in Mentor School District, Lake County?"

The general statute of this state fixing the situs of property for taxation is section 5371, General Code, which is in part as follows:

> "Merchants' and manufacturers' stock, and personal property upon farms shall be listed in the township, city or village in which it is situated. All other personal property, moneys, credits and investments, except as otherwise specially provided, shall be listed in the township, city, or village in which the person to be charged with taxes thereon resides at the time of the listing thereof, if such person resides within the county where the property is listed, and if not, then in the township, city or village where the property is when listed."

This very ancient statute is abiguous on its face, but prolific as it has been of difficulties it has never been amended. That it applies to and determines the situs of the property of corporations, as well as individuals, has become well established; and indeed it seems to follow, without special difficulty, from the provisions of section 5405, requiring corporations to make return of their property "to the several auditors of the respective counties where such property is situate, together with a statement of the amount thereof which is situated in each township, village, city or taxing district therein," thus leaving it to the other section just cited to fix the situs of each kind or class of property owned by the corporation.

You refer to the case of Pelton vs. Transportation Co., 37 O. S. 450, as bearing upon the question. As you state, this case holds that where the principal office of a corporation, fixed by its articles of incorporation, is in one township of a county, and its actual business office is in another township of the same county, a boat owned by the company should be listed for taxation in the township in which the place fixed in the articles of incorporation as the principal place of business is located. The decision is by Judge McIlvaine, and is very clearly reasoned throughout. It establishes in the first instance the proposition that the "residence" of a corporation for the purposes of section 5371 must be conclusively presumed to be the place fixed in its articles of incorporation. It is then held that, under the facts in that case, the boat, being personal property, other than merchants' or manufacturers' stock or personal property on a farm, and being situated in the county in which the person—i.e. the corporation—required to list it for taxation "resided," it should be listed in the township where the "principal place of business" was located.

After reaching this conclusion Judge McIlvaine, in the opinion, makes use of the following language; which, I suspect, has given you the difficulty which you have encountered respecting this question:

> "In thus deciding this case, we have been guided solely by the statute, without calling to aid the familiar doctrine of the common law, that the situs of personal property follows the domicile of the owner; for we admit, that if the owner had not resided in Cuyahoga county, the result would have been different. And on the other hand, if the situs of the property had been in another county, subject to be listed and taxed under the statute, the residence of the owner in Cuyahoga county would not have given the latter county any right whatever to tax it. The residence of the owner in a particular taxing district fixes the place where his personal property is subject to taxation only in case the property is required to be listed in the same county; in which case, if the property be other than merchants' or manufacturers' stock, articles enumerated in said 7th section, or personal property on farms or on real property not in towns, it must be taxed in the district of the owner's residence, otherwise, it must be taxed where it is situated."

As I interpret this language, it means that if the law, i.e. either a statute or some settled principle of common law, assigns a particular situs for taxation purposes to a given kind or class of personal property, that situs is to be given to the property, other than merchants' or manufacturers' stock or personal property on farms, if such situs is located outside of the county wherein the owner resides. I do not interpret the paragraph as indicating that if the law assigns conclusively, to be a certain kind or class of property, as a situs for taxation, the domicile of the owner thereof, such property can be for any purpose under this section regarded as being in any county other than the county of such domicile.

It is true that the ambiguous provisions of section 5371 must be given some effect. The legislative choice of terms used therein makes it clear that whatever the seemingly vague legislative idea was, it contemplated the possibility of some kind of personal property other than merchants' and manufacturers' stock, and that on farms, being in a county other than that of the residence or domicile of its owner for purposes of taxation. Thus, the statute itself must be regarded as an effort to fix a statutory situs for some kinds of personal property; for it was the maxim of the common law that all kinds of personal property, whether tangible or intangible property—i.e. all movable things the subject of ownership—took, in the absence of a statute, the taxable situs of the owner's domicile. If, then, section 5371 did not mean in some way to disturb that common law rule, its provisions would be absolutely meaningless and absurd, for personal property could not, in contemplation of the common law "be" in a county other than that in which the owner thereof is domiciled.

I think perhaps some light is shed upon the meaning of this seemingly obscure provision by consideration of section 5328, which in a sense controls the interpretation of all of the sections relating to the assessment of taxes, inasmuch as it is the introductory provision of the entire title. That section provides:

> "All real or personal property in this state * * * and all moneys, credits, investments in bonds, stocks, or otherwise, of persons residing in this state, shall be subject to taxation, except only such property as may be expressly exempted therefrom. Such property, moneys, credits, and investments shall be entered on the list of taxable property as prescribed in this title."

I need not quote the definition sections of the General Code, nor refer to the constitution itself to demonstrate that the term "personal propery," as used in this section, does not comprise moneys, credits, investments in bonds, stocks or otherwise," which, in the mind of the legislature, constituted separate classes of property. Certain intangible things are within the definition of the term "personal property," as fixed by section 5325 which I do not quote. In the main, however, the term refers to tangible things having a physical existence. "Moneys" and "credits," on the other hand, are intangible things not having physical existence, (except, of course, as to actual cash, which constitutes a very small portion of the "moneys" which are returned for taxation).

Now, it is clear that under section 5328, which as I have said must be applied in the construction of all the other provisions in the taxation code, all "personal property" in the state, whether belonging to residents of this state or not, is to be taxed; while the "moneys" and "credits" of persons residing in this state, and those only, are to be taxed in this state.

Under this section, then, it is possible for "personal property" to be taxed when the owner does not even reside in the state. It is not so possible as to "money" and "credits." Some residents in this state on the part of the owner, or on the part of an agent or trustee with power of control, is necessary in order to give the state under its own statutes jurisdiction to assess taxes upon "moneys" and "credits;" but the state asserts its jurisdiction to tax the tangible effects, which it may find within its borders, whether owned by residents of this state or not.

There is therefore a fundamental difference in the theory of taxation as applied to tangible property and intangible interests, which is established by the statutes of this state themselves. This serves to throw light upon the meaning of section 5371. It is clear that by reason of the statute just discussed it is possible for "personal property"—i. e., tangible property—to be located in a county and taxable there, although the owner thereof may not be a resident of the state at all. The statute was evidently designed to provide for this contingency.

Now, it is possible for the legislature of the state to create what might be termed an artificial situs for the taxation of moneys and credits. In my opinion, however, section 5371 does not have this effect. It provides that moneys and credits shall be taxed at the owner's residence, if he resides within the county, and if not, then, where they are when listed. This, however, leaves undetermined the question of where "moneys and credits" are. The answer to this question must be sought, in my judgment, in the principles of the common law, which in this instance are founded upon considerations of reason and common sense.

It is the well settled rule, as stated in Cyc., Volume 37, 955, that,

> "Property of an intangible nature, such as credits * * * bank deposits * * * and corporate stock, has no situs of its own for the purpose of taxation, and is therefore assessable only at the place of its owner's domicile."

Numerous authorities are cited in support of this general rule, from which there is no dissent except as to the possibility of legislation clearly and unequivocally changing the situs of credits arising out of the transaction of business, so as to make them referable to the place where business is transacted, and even, in some instances, to the place where the debt is owned rather than where the credit is owned. In another opinion addressed to your department, in the matter of the credits of the W. M. Ritter Lumber Company, I have commented upon statutes of this sort. There are no such statutes in Ohio.

The general rule, as I have already stated, is based upon considerations of reason. A depositor in a bank may be thought of as the owner of so many silver dollars or currency notes, lying in the vaults of that financial institution; such, however, he is not. In essence he is a mere creditor of the bank, although the statute by an artificial rule constitutes his credit "moneys" for the purposes of taxation. No bank ever has on hand at any one time actual cash enough to pay its deposits. Therefore, the thing which the depositor owns is a mere right, and it is immaterial whether or not he may have some tangible evidence of right, such as a certificate of deposit or pass book; the right exists, just the same. This right is incapable of "location" in the sense that household furniture can be said to be situated in a given place. It travels with the owner and is found wherever he is found. In the absence of a statute expressly making bank deposits taxable at the place where the bank is located, or at the place where the business in which the deposit is used is carried on, the legal residence or domicile of the depositor must be regarded as the place where in fact, as well as in law, the deposit is situated.

The same considerations are true of "credits," whether evidenced by book accounts or notes, or not evidenced at all. This form of property consists merely of a right of action, either accrued or subject to accrual. It is not located where some evidence of its existence may be found, but it, like a bank deposit, is found, in the absence of a statute fixing a different situs, wherever the owner may be.

I am, therefore, of the opinion that under the facts stated by you, both the moneys on deposit and the credits of the corporation to which you refer are taxable in Mentor School District, Lake County, Ohio, and not in the city of Cleveland. The case of Pelton vs. Transportation Company, supra, is sufficient authority for the proposition that the taxable domicile of the corporation is in the school district and not in the city. My reasons for assigning that domicile to the moneys and credits as their taxable situs have just been stated. My conclusions, however, are supported by the case of Sims vs. Best, 10.C.C. n.s. 41, in which it was held that certain investments, viz.: bonds owned by a foreign corporation having a designated place of business in Ohio (which happened to correspond with and not differ from its actual place of doing business), were taxable in the county in which such place was located, and not in the county in which they were held on deposit by the treasurer of state. The case is of value, because the Pelton case is cited as an authority for the court's conclusion. Inasmuch as the only point decided in the Pelton case which could have been applicable to the case of Sims vs. Best was the conclusion that a corporation's domicile is that fixed by its articles of incorporation or certificate of compliance, and not that in which it is actually carrying on business it will be seen that the circuit court reached the conclusion that the bonds were taxable in Hamilton county, because that was the place named in its articles of incorporation as its principal place of business, and not because its business was conducted there in point of fact. To the same effect see Insurance Company vs. Halliday, 126 Fed. 257; 127 Fed. 830.

In short, then, under present statutes of this state, moneys and credits arising out of a business are not taxable where the business is carried on, as is the case under the laws of many other states, and as should, in equity, be the case in all states. The common law rule as to the situs of moneys and credits obtains in Ohio and is not changed by the provisions of section 5371, the latter portion of which relates solely to tangible personal property.

Very truly yours,

TIMOTHY S. HOGAN,
Attorney General.

ROAD TAXES—AMENDING OF SECTION 5649, GENERAL CODE, AND REPEALING OF ORIGINAL SECTION, HAS NO EFFECT UPON SECTION 7488, GENERAL CODE—RATE OTHER WORK IS PAID FOR AS SHOWN BY OTHER STATUTES IS $1.50 A DAY—HOUSE BILL 389 WHICH AMENDS SECTION 5649, GENERAL CODE, BECOMES EFFECTIVE IN AUGUST, 1913.

From a legislative history of the statutes, the reference in section 7488, General Code, to the rates other work of a similar nature is paid for, where such section provides for the working out of road taxes assessed against property, discloses that this reference does not depend upon original section 5649, General Code, but is supported by other statutes, which prescribe $1.50 a day as compensation for such work.

The amending of section 5649, General Code, therefore, by house bill 389, in no wise effects section 7488, General Code.

COLUMBUS, OHIO, June 16, 1913.

Tax Commission of Ohio, Columbus, Ohio.

GENTLEMEN:—I beg to acknowledge receipt of your letter of May 17th, wherein you ask the following questions:

"1. What effect will the passage of House Bill 389, amending section 5649, General Code, have upon section 7488, General Code?

"2. On what date will said House Bill 389 become effective?

"3. If said House Bill 389 becomes effective after taxes have been levied under favor of section 7488, what will be the rights of the taxpayers as to the payment of taxes so levied?"

House bill 389, in full, is as follows:

"An act to amend section 5649 of the General code, relating to the payment and distribution of township road tax.

"Be it enacted by the General Assembly of the State of Ohio:

"Section 1. That section 5649 of the General Code be amended to read as follows:

"Sec. 5649. Any person charged with a road tax shall pay it in money to the county treasurer in like manner as other taxes are collected and paid. Road taxes paid to or collected by the county treasurer shall be paid over to the treasurer of the township or municipal corporation from which they were collected, and be expended on the public roads and in building and repairing bridges in the township and municipal corporation from which they were collected under the direction of the trustees of the proper township or council of such municipal corporation. All funds heretofore levied for road purposes and not expended, shall be expended by the trustees of the township or council of the municipal corporation from which the funds were collected as other taxes collected under the provisions of this title.

"Section 2. That said original section 5649 of the General Code be, and the same is hereby repealed."

This act was signed by the governor and filed by him in the office of the secretary of state on May 8, 1913.

Answering your second question first, I am of the opinion that this bill will become effective ninety days after May 8, 1913, or some time in August of this year. This is for the reason that it clearly does not fall within any of the classes of laws exempted by article 2, section 1d, of the constitution as amended, from the operation of the ninety days' stay, so to speak, which applies to all laws excepting laws providing for tax levies; those making appropriations for the current expenses of the state government and state institutions; and emergency laws necessary for the immediate preservation of the public peace, health or safety, when declared to be such by the legislature.

The answer to your first question depends upon the joint construction of this section and section 7488, to which you refer. Said section 7488 is as follows:

"In addition to such levies (for road purposes) the township trustees, at any time, if they deem necessary, may levy an amount not exceeding one mill upon each dollar of valuation of the taxable property of the respective townships, for road purposes, which may be worked out at the rates other work is paid for, of a similar nature * * * "

It is essential to the completion of the legislative idea involved in the section just quoted that some means be afforded by law for ascertaining the "rates other work is paid for, of a similar nature." It was not the intention of the general assembly, I think, to leave the determination of the rates at which the taxes should be worked out to the determination of any administrative officer or board. The reference in the statute is obviously to some other statute fixing such rates. At first blush, one would think that the reference in the statute must be to original section 5649, which fixes the rate of $1.50 per day, and a ratable allowance for team and implements, as the rate at which taxpayers may discharge road taxes by labor on the public highway. If this assumption were correct, then, it would necessarily follow that, original section 5649 having been repealed and the amended section substituted in its place by House Bill 389, providing as it does that any person charged with a road tax shall pay the amount into the treasury, such repeal and amendment would necessarily repeal section 7488 in toto.

Consideration of the legislative history of the two sections involved, however, negatives this assumption. Singularly enough, the two statutes were at one time before the legislature in a single act; being the act found in 99 O. L. 436. Section 7488 was originally a part of section 1 of an act entitled "An act to authorize and empower the trustees of townships having a population, at the last federal census of not more than 2,116, nor less than 2,112, to levy a road tax," which original act was clearly unconstitutional. This section, however, was amended in the act just referred to, so as to be of general application.

In the same act section 2830, Revised Statutes, which has become section 5649, General Code, was amended so as to read substantially as section 5649 as amended by House Bill No. 389 reads. In fact, the only verbal difference between the two sections is that in section 2830, as amended in act referred to, there was an exception in favor of the township to which the special act above referred to applied. This, of course, made section 2830, or at least the exception therein, unconstitutional. It may have been the design of the legislature, in amending the two sections in 1908, to make the sentence which has now become section 7488, General Code, apply only to "townships having a population, at the last federal census, of not more than 2,116, nor less than 2,112." Such an unconstitutional intention, however, cannot be imputed to the legislature.

This legislative history shows that if the legislature intended what has now become the substance of section 7488, General Code, to be of general application, it did not mean that "the same rates as other work is paid for, of a similar nature" should be determined by reference to what subsequently became section 5649, General Code.

These considerations are, of course, by no means conclusive of the question, as it is possible that amended "section 1," as found in 99 Ohio Laws, 436, was simply inoperative for lack of a provision fixing the rates at which the extra tax levied by the township trustees might be worked out.

There were in force at the time, however, provisions sufficiently definite to supply the need suggested by what has since become section 7488, General Code. I call attention to what is now section 7147, General Code, prescribing the compensation of road superintendents, turnpike directors and pike superintendents, for road work employed by them. I find it unnecessary to cite other sections, as the one section is sufficient, and as it happens that all the sections to which my attention has been directed, provide $1.50 as the rate for day labor on the roads.

If that portion of amended "section 1," in 99 O. L. 436, which has since become section 7488, General Code, was designed to have general application, then, the broad language of section 2830, Revised Statutes, as amended in the same act, and which has since become section 5649, General Code, and corresponds with the amendment thereto in House Bill 389, cannot be regarded as all inclusive. That is to say, although the legislature, in amending section 2830, Revised Statutes, provided that "any person charged with a road tax shall pay the same in money," yet, in the same act, it also provided for the levy of a road tax "which may be worked out at the same rate as other work is paid for."

So far as these two sections are concerned, then, it seems that the legislature of 1908 did not regard them as inconsistent. It also appears that without present section 5649 there is a rule furnished by the statutes by which the rates of day labor on the roads may be determined.

In the face of these facts I am of the opinion that the amendment of section 5649 by House Bill 389 will have no effect upon the operation of section 7488.

This conclusion makes it unnecessary for me to consider the other question which you ask. This question, however, is perhaps more directly presented with reference to certain other sections of the General Code, authorizing road labor certificates to be used in payment of road taxes. If the commission desires I will further consider this question, with reference to such statutes.

Very truly yours,

TIMOTHY S. HOGAN,
Attorney General.

COLUMBUS, OHIO May 23, 1913.

Tax Commission of Ohio, Columbus, Ohio.

GENTLEMEN:—I beg to acknowledge receipt of your letter of May 9th, written in connection with your previous letter, respecting the date when house bill 500, passed by the recent session of the general assembly and approved by the governor, will take effect.

In your letter of May 9th you submit the following additional questions respecting this bill:

> "1. May the taxing authorities of a taxing district levy a tax under the provisions of section 5649-2 of the General Code, as amended, in addition to the ten mill limitation, to provide for any indebtedness incurred between the date of the passage of the Smith one per cent. law and the date of the passage of house bill No. 500, without a vote of the people?

"2. If your ruling is that house bill No. 500 does not take effect until ninety days after its approval by the governor, will the provisions of said bill eliminating the provision of the Smith bill, to the effect that no greater amount of taxes shall be levied in the year 1913, than was levied in the year 1910, plus nine per cent., be effective as to the levies for the year 1913? That is to say, may the aggregate amount of taxes for all purposes levied in any taxing district for the year 1913, exceed the amount levied in the same district in 1910, plus nine per cent?"

In order to answer your first question consideration of section 5649-2, as originally enacted and as amended by house bill No. 500, is necessary. I quote the section in both forms:

"Section 5649-2 (As enacted 102 O. L. 268). Except as otherwise provided in section 5649-4 and section 5649-5 of the General Code, the aggregate amount of taxes that may be levied on the taxable property in any county, township, city, village, school district or other taxing district, for the year 1911, and any year thereafter, including taxes levied under authority of section 5649-1 of the General Code, and levies for state, county, township, municipal, school and all other purposes, shall not in any one year exceed in the aggregate the total amount of taxes that were levied upon the taxable property therein of such county. township, city village, school district or other taxing district, for all purposes in the year 1910, provided, however, that the maximum rate of taxes that may be levied for all purposes, upon the taxable property therein, shall not in any one year exceed ten mills on each dollar of the tax valuation of the taxable property of such county, township, city, village, school district or other taxing district for that year, and such levies in addition thereto for sinking fund and interest purposes as may be necessary to provide for any indebtedness heretofore incurred or any indebtedness that may hereafter be incurred by a vote of the people.

"Section 5649-2 (As amended). Except as otherwise provided in section 5649-4 and section 5649-5 of the General Code, the aggregate amount of taxes that may be levied on the taxable property in any county, township, city, village school district or other taxing district, shall not in any one year exceed ten mills on each dollar of the tax valuation of the taxable property of such county, township, city, village, school district or other taxing district for that year, and such levies in addition thereto or sinking fund and interest purposes as may be necessary to provide for any indebtedness heretofore incurred or any indebtedness that may hereafter be incurred by a vote of the people."

By careful comparison it will be ascertained that the italicized portion of original section 5649-2 was omitted from the section in the course of its amendment, and that this was the only change made in the section. Broadly speaking, the omitted matter provided the limitation known as the "1910 tax limitation," and the effect of its omission was to abolish that limitation.

The part of the section which is involved in your first question was unchanged verbally. The phrase "any indebtedness herctofore incurred or any indebtedness that may hereafter be incurred by a vote of the people" occurs in both sections.

Your first question, then, resolves itself to this: Was the meaning of the words "heretofore" and "hereafter" changed by amendment which was made in another part of the section? Putting it in another way, the question is as to whether or not the meaning of these words is to be determined by reference to the act of which the amended section is a part. I am of the opinion that the meaning of the words "heretofore" and "hereafter" is to be primarily determined by reference to the date of the passage of original section 5649-2, viz.: May 31, 1911, or its approval on Jun 2, 1911. That was the date when the language first appeared in the statutes, although it then made its appearance in the form of an amendment to Section 5649-2, which, as such, had been first enacted at the previous session of the general assembly in 1910. The meaning of these terms then became fixed. Such meaning is not to be changed by any subsequent legislation unless the intention to effect such a change is clearly apparent therein. No such intention appears in house bill No. 500. The title of the act is "an act to amend sections 5649-2 and 5649-3b and repeal section 5649-3 of the General Code, relative to the limitation of the tax rate."

In order to carry out the intention expressed in this title it was necessary to repeal and re-enact section 5649-2, and to set forth the amended section in full, because the constitution so requires. Compliance with the constitutional rule must be deemed to be the sole motive of the legislature in re-enacting section 5649-2; and an intention to change the meaning of the words "heretofore" and "hereafter," which had previously become fixed, cannot be imputed to the general assembly.

I am of the opinion, therefore, that the words "heretofore" and "hereafter," in amended section 5469-2, mean precisely the same as they meant in original section 5649-2, and that for the reasons I have suggested levies in addition to those which may be made within the ten mill limitation, now imposed by the amended section, may be for the purpose of providing for indebtedness incurred prior to June 2, 1911, or after that date by a vote of the people, and for no other interest and sinking fund levies whatever, excepting those specifically authorized to be made outside of said limitation by the earlier provisions of section 5649-2.

I have already, in another opinion, stated that in my judgment house bill 500 does not take effect until 90 days after the date of its filing in the office of the secretary of state by the governor.

Your second question, then, involves the query as to whether the bill, which will become effective some time in August of this year, will apply to and govern the proceedings of the budget commission for the year 1913; or whether such proceedings will be governed by the provisions of the original Smith one per cent. law, so called.

Section 5649-3b, General Code, a portion of the original Smith one per cent. law and one of the sections which are amended by house bill 500, provides in the original that "the budget commission shall meet at the auditor's office in each county on the first Monday of June, annually, and complete their work on or before the first Monday in July next following."

The provision as to the date when the commissioners are to meet is probably mandatory; that prescribing the time within which their work shall be completed is undoubtedly merely directory. As a matter of fact it has been the practice thus far, under the Smith one per cent. law for budget commissions to remain in session long after the date fixed for the completion of their work.

In contemplation of law, however, the budget commission is to be in session on and after the first Monday of June. It must be conceded, therefore, that so far as their earlier deliberations are concerned they are governed by the law which will be in force during the month of June; which will be, of course, the original Smith one per cent. law, including the 1910 limitation, with the percentages of increase provided by section 5649-3.

Could, then, the budget commissioners, by remaining in session until house bill 500 becomes a law, complete their proceedings in accordance with its provisions?

It would probably be a sufficient answer to this question to state that inasmuch as the law fixes the first Monday in July as the limit of the time within which the work shall be done, the law in force on that date must be deemed to control all the actions of the budget commission, even though that date be held to be directory merely. It is not necessary, however, to place a decision upon this ground. I call attention to the provisions of section 26, General Code, which is in part as follows:

> "Whenever a statute is * * * amended, such * * * amendment shall in no manner affect pending * * * proceedings * * * unless otherwise expressly provided in the amending * * * act."

It was held in Alexander vs. Spencer, 13 C. C. 475, that the levying of general taxes is not "a part of any other proceeding." This decision is not to be regarded as a holding to the effect that the levying of taxes is not in itself a "proceeding." The holding is merely that the levying of a general tax is not a part of the proceeding looking toward the improvement for which the tax is to be levied.

Within the rule as the court defines it in the case cited, the act of levying taxes through the budget commission would have to be regarded as a "proceeding." The budget commission acquires jurisdiction of the subject-matter on the first Monday of June. A proceeding is then commenced, the object of which is to enforce the limitations of the Smith law. By force of the provisions of section 26, General Code, this proceeding must go forward to termination under the original law, and not under the amendment, regardless of the failure of the budget commission to complete its work within the time limited by section 5649-3b.

I may add that house bill 500 contains no express provision to the effect that it shall, upon taking effect, operate upon pending proceedings.

I am, therefore, of the opinion that the action of the budget commission to be taken in the year 1913 is to be governed by the provisions of the original Smith one per cent. law, and not by the provisions of house bill 500. Therefore, the limitation of section 5649-3, which is repealed by house bill 500, will be operative upon the 1913 levies, and will limit the aggregate amount of such levies, exclusive of emergency levies and levies provided for by vote of the people under section 5649-5 of the Smith law, within an amount determined by the total amount levied in the year 1910, plus nine per cent. thereof.

Very truly yours,

TIMOTHY S. HOGAN,

Attorney General.

TELEPHONE—WHAT CONSTITUTES A TELEPHONE COMPANY—PUBLIC UTILITY—SINGLE LINE TO SWITCH BOARD DOES NOT CONSTITUTE TELEPHONE COMPANY—REPORT TO TAX COMMISSION.

1. Where a number of telephone instruments and secondary wires leading thereto are connected with a switch board, such constitutes a public utility and renders the persons who have so associated themselves for the purpose of transmitting telephonic messages among themselves, a telephone company within the meaning of the statutes.

The tax commission should value the entire system as a unit for the purpose of taxation in accordance with the rule laid down in section 5456, General Code.

2. Where a number of persons own wires and poles separately, these being connected with an exchange by means of a single wire or line, such an arrangement does not constitute a telephone company.

3. All lines connected with a switch board, including the telephones of the individuals connected with the switch board should be included by the switching company in its report to the Tax Commission and should be valued in connection with the other property of the switching company.

COLUMBUS, OHIO, July 17, 1913.

The Tax Commission of Ohio, Columbus, Ohio.

GENTLEMEN:—I beg to acknowledge receipt of your letter of May 14th, requesting my opinion on the following questions, involving the application of the laws relating to the assessment and valuation of the property of telephone companies and the excise tax on such companies:

"(1) A number of farmers associate themselves together for the purpose of securing telephone service between the members of the association. They purchase in common and establish a switchboard at some central point. Each member of the association purchases his own telephone and constructs his own line of poles and wire from his home to the switchboard. The expense of operating the switchboard is borne by the members of the association jointly.

"Is such an association a 'telephone company' within the meaning of section 5415 of the General Code, the property of which the Tax Commission is required by the provisions of section 5451 et seq. to value and assess for taxation, and the gross receipts of which the commission is required by section 5475 to ascertain and determine for the purpose of assessing and levying of excise taxes?

"(2) A number of farmers associate themselves together, each one purchasing his own telephone, and building his own line of poles and wire to a common point from which the line is constructed jointly by all the members of the association to a village and there connecting with a telephone company operating a switchboard, which company by contract agrees to switch the messages of the farmers' association.

"Is the farmers' association in this instance a 'telephone company' within the meaning of section 5415 of the General Code, the property of which the Tax Commission is required by the provisions of section 5451 et seq. to value and asess for taxation, and the gross receipts of which the commission is required by section 5475 to ascertain and determine for the purpose of assessing and levying of excise taxes?

"(3) In the second case above referred to, is the property, including the telephone, wires and poles of the individuals and the common property of such association operated by the company doing the switching, within the meaning of section 5419, and should such switching company include the property of such association in its report to this commission to be valued in connection with the other property of said switching company?

The sections of the General Code which must be considered in connection with these questions are as follows:

"Section 5415. The term "public utility" as used in this act means and embraces each corporation, company, firm, individual and association * * * herein referred to as * * * telephone company * * * and such term "public utility" shall include any plant or property owned or operated, or both, by any such companies, corporations, firms, individuals or associations.

"Section 5416. * * * any person or persons, firm or firms, copartnership or voluntary association, joint stock association, company or corporation, wherever organized or incorporated:

* * * * * *

"When engaged in the business of transmitting to, from, through, or in this state, telephonic messages, is a telephone company; * * *

"Section 5417. The term 'gross receipts' shall be held to mean and include the entire receipts for business done by any person or persons, firm or firms, co-partnership or voluntary association, joint stock association, company or corporation, wherever organized or incorporated, from the operation of any public utility, or incidental thereto or in connection therewith. The gross receipts for business done by an incorporated company, engaged in the operation of a public utility, shall be held to mean and include the entire receipts for business done by such company under the exercise of its corporate powers, whether from the operation of the public utility itself or from any other business done whatsoever.

"Section 5419. The property owned or operated by a public utility, required to make return to the commission of its property to be assessed for taxation by the commission, shall be deemed and held to include such utility's plant or plants and all real estate necessary to the daily operations of the public utility and all other property, moneys and credits owned or operated, or both, by it wholly or in part within this state, used in connection with or as incidental to the operation of the public utility, whether the same be held in common or by individuals operating such public utility. In the case of incorporated companies, all the real estate, personal property, moneys and credits owned and held by such corporation within this state in the exercise of its corporate powers, or as incidental thereto, whether such property, or any portion thereof, is used in connection with such public utility business or not, shall be conclusively deemed and held to be the property of such public utility.

"Section 5449. On or before the first day of August, annually, every express, telegraph and telephone company, doing business in this state, under the oath of the person constituting such company, if a person, or under the oath of the president, secretary, treasurer, superintendent or chief officer in this state of such association or corporation, if an association or corporation, shall make and file with the commission a statement in such form as the commission may prescribe."

Section 5450. Such statement shall contain:

"13. In the case of telegraph and telephone companies, such statement shall also set forth, the whole length of their lines, and the length of so much of their lines as is without and is within this state, which shall include the lines such telegraph and telephone companies control and use under lease or otherwise and the miles of wire in each taxing district in this state.

"14. In the case of telegraph and telephone companies, such statement shall also contain the entire gross receipts, including all sums earned or charged, whether actually received or not, for the year ending the thirtieth of June, from whatever source derived, whether messages, telephone tolls, rentals, or otherwise, for business done within this state, including the company's proportion of gross receipts for business done by it within this state in connection with other companies, firms, corporations, persons or associations, excluding therefrom all receipts derived wholly from interstate business or business done for the federal government. Such statement shall also contain the total gross receipts of such company, for such period, from business done within this state. * * *

"Section 5451. On the first Monday in September, of each year, the commission shall ascertain and assess the value of the property of the express, telegraph and telephone companies in this state.

"Section 5452. In determining the value of the property of such companies in this state, to be taxed with the state and assessed as herein provided, the commission shall be guided by the value of the property as determined by the value of the entire capital stock of the companies, and such other evidence and rules as will enable such commission to arrive at the true value, in money, of the entire property of such companies within this state, in the proportion which such property bears to the entire property of the companies, as determined by the value of the capital stock thereof, and such other evidence and rules.

"Section 5455. The commission shall deduct from the total value of the property of each express, telegraph and telephone company in this state, the value, as assessed for taxation of any real estate situated within this state and owned by such company.

"Section 5456. The value of the property of telegraph and telephone companies of this state, after deducting the value of the real estate, shall be apportioned by the commission among the several counties through or into which the lines of such telegraph or telephone companies run, so that to each county shall be apportioned such part of the entire valuation as will equalize the relative value of the property of the company therein, in proportion to the whole value of the property of the company in the state, and in the proportion that the length of the lines of wire owned by the company in the county, bears to the whole length of the lines of wire in all the counties in the state, and to each city, village and taxing district, or part thereof, therein.

"Section 5475. On the first Monday of September the commission shall ascertain and determine the entire gross receipts of * * * each * * * telephone company for business done within this state for the year ending on the thirtieth day of June, excluding therefrom * * * all receipts derived wholly from interstate business or business done for the federal government.

"Section 5481. On the first Monday of October the commission shall certify to the auditor of state, the amount of gross receipts so determined, of * * * telephone * * * companies, for the year covered by its annual report to the commission, as required in this act.

"Section 5483. In the month of October, annually, the auditor of state shall charge, for collection from each * * * telephone * * * company, a sum in the nature of an excise tax, for the privilege of carrying on its intrastate business, to be computed on the amount so fixed and reported by the commission as the gross receipts of such company on its intrastate business for the year covered by its annual report to the commission, as required in this act, by taking one and two-tenths per cent. of all such gross receipts, which tax shall not be less than ten dollars in any case."

In other opinions to the commission I have discussed at some length the theory of property assessment under what is known as the "unit rule" or "going concern" plan. I have shown that the basic principle upon which this method of assessment is founded is that of unity of use as distinguished from unity of ownership. Adams Express Company vs. Ohio State Auditor, 165 U. S. 194; 166 U. S. 185.

In dealing with so much of your first question as relates to the assessment of property of telephone companies, under that group of the above quoted sections which relates to property taxation, this fundamental principle must be at all times borne in mind.

The sections themselves clearly recognize and effectuate this principle; thus, section 5415 gives two distinct meanings to the term "public utility," one of which relates to the person to be assessed, so to speak, and the other to the thing to be assessed; the second definition expressly includes property operated by a public utility (in the first tense) whether owned by it or not.

So, also, section 5419 recognizes the above stated principle and embodies it, in that it makes even plainer the legislature's intention to make unity of use the test by which to determine what property shall be assessed as a going concern.

Indeed, section 5419, read in connection with the other sections, really contains a complete answer to so much of your first question as relates to property assessment. The clause which is most important in this connection is as follows:

"The property owned or operated by a public utility * * * shall be deemed and held to include * * * all * * * property * * * owned or operated, or both, by it* * * used in connection with or as incidental to the operation of the public utility, whether the same be held in common or by the individuals operating such public utility."

It is obvious that the phrase "public utility," as used in the italicized portion of the above quotation, is employed in the second sense defined by section 5415. It is also obvious that the legislature intended that whenever any aggregation of property should be ascertained to be used or, as the statute has it, "operated" as a unit plant or system, for any of the purposes constituting one of the "businesses" defined in section 5416, all such property should be assessed as a unit, regardless of the ownership of the separate items or parts thereof. Thus, the mere fact, in the first case stated by you, that the separate telephone instruments, poles and wires, would constitute parts of a system, are separately owned by individuals who have associated themselves together for this purpose, is of no importance whatever, in the light of the italicized portion of section 5419, as above quoted from.

Again, in the 13th paragraph of section 5450 is found recognition of the basic principle already referred to, in the requirement therein embodied that telephone companies shall include in their statement of property "the lines such * * * companies control and use, under lease or otherwise;" thus, obviously dispensing with the necessity of considering the ownership of any telephone lines when the source of their operation has been ascertained.

Other portions of the sections above quoted from might be employed to emphasize the facts already referred to. It is safe, I think, in this instance, to generalize by saying that section 5416, except in so far as it relates to "equipment companies," by its definitions fixes in each instance upon the operating company as the "public utility," the subject of taxation. Thus, that is not a "sleeping car company" which does not operate cars; nor a "freight line company" which does not operate cars; nor a "pipe line company" which does not itself carry on the transportation which constitutes it such, whether by the use of agencies which it owns or not, etc.

It is easy, therefore, to eliminate from consideration in connection with so much of your first question which relates to property assessment the fact stated by you that "each member of the association purchases his own telephone and constructs his own line of poles and wires from his home to the switchboard." That fact, of itself, is immaterial. The remaining fact for consideration is the statement that in the case supposed the persons who thus own instrument, poles and wires, associate themselves together in the common ownership of an exchange switchboard, which is "operated" at the joint or common expense of them all.

In considering this fact I have, in a general way, made some study of the nature of the applied science of telephony, with a view to applying to the methods thereof and appliances used therein the definition above quoted from section 5416. I find that the telephone is an instrument which operates by the force of magnetism and resultant electrical vibrations. The telephonic apparatus is not complete without three distinct parts, namely: the transmitter, the wire or wires, and the receiver. The transmitter and the receiver, though essentially different in many technical respects, both consist of sensitive disks, placed in juxtaposition with magnets wound with insulated wire. Sound waves, produced by the human voice or otherwise, when projected upon the disk, produce vibrations therein and thus effect rapid alterations corresponding to such waves in the magnetic fields. Thus, currents of electricity are induced in the coiled wire and are transmitted along the secondary wire to the receiver, where they induce vibrations of a similar disk therein. When the disk in the transmitter is held close to the human ear its vibrations set up air waves in the ear passages which correspond to the sound waves received at the other end of the line; thus, the effects of sound, including the articulations of speech and the influences of the voice, are reproduced.

What I have described is known as the magnetic telephone. There are variations of the apparatus wherein batteries are used to generate the primary current in an induction coil; in which instance there is always some current in the wires, and the audible sounds are caused by variations therein induced in a manner essentially similar to, although not identical with, that already described. In such instances, however, the batteries themselves are and constitute a part of each separate instrument.

I mention these somewhat technical facts because it is apparent, upon consideration thereof, that the process of telephoning can be carried on without the intervention of any switchboard. Any transmitter connected by secondary wire with any receiver, may, when the circuit is completed by the return wire, be used for the purpose of transmitting telephonic messages between two persons; and when, at either end of the wire, there is both a receiver and a transmitter the complete operation, in the popular sense of the word, may be carried on without the intervention of any other apparatus whatever. Yet, two telephone instruments, thus connected and used by two individuals, could scarcely be said to constitute a "plant" or a "system." Nor would their use under such circumstances amount to "operation," in the ordinary or statutory sense of the word. The two individuals who would be using such a device could scarcely be said to be "transmitting" telephonic messages. As a matter of fact, the individuals do not themselves "transmit" anything; the transmission of the message would be effected through the automatic agency of the instruments themselves, without any human intervention or control whatever, once the apparatus is set up and in working order.

In this particular the use of the telephone is essentially different from that of the telegraph, the most similar other invention which human genius has devised for general use. In the case of the telegraph the messages, which it is desired to transmit, can be received and transmitted only by persons skilled technically in the use of telegraph instruments, and possessing a knowledge of the codes of signals necessary to be known by one who would make use of such instruments. Therefore, in order that the general public may make use of the telegraph, it is necessary that it rely upon the human agency of the telegraph operator.

The use of the telephone apparatus, in its simplest form, as above described, however, does not present such practical difficulties. It is not necessary that two persons wishing to communicate with each other by means of two directly connected telephone instruments should invoke the services of any third party. In such case it is necessary only that, by means of a signal, apparatus for which is easily attached to any telephone, the one summon the other to his instrument; then, the two may converse freely.

How, then, is it possible for any "person or persons," "firm or firms," etc., to "transmit telephonic messages" if such transmission is the result of the automatic workings of specially designed apparatus? This question cannot be answered by saying that the ownership of such specially designed apparatus, and the renting or leasing threof to others, for use as above described, constitutes the business of transmitting telephonic messages, because, as already seen, mere ownership does not and cannot enter into the question.

In my judgment the answer to the question which has been raised lies in the fact that, while two directly connected telephones may be used as I have already indicated, an apparatus having such a limited field of utility would be of little practical value, and, as a matter of fact, such apparatus is not in common use. People do not install telephones for the purpose of annihilating space in conversation with single other individuals, or with the occupants of single other places; but for the purpose of enabling themselves so to communicate with a large number of other persons. Hence, in order that the telephone might have a utility which is "public," and might therefore become a necessity, it is necessary to devise some means by which one telephone instrument, instead of connecting directly with another, might have its secondary wires conducted to some central point, there to be connected at the will of some human agency or through the medium of some automatic machinery with the secondary wire leading to any one of a large number of other similar instruments. The means or medium of exchange came to be known as the "exchange" or "central station," and the instrument or appliance by which the switching is effected came to be known as the "switchboard," which is a device operated either by human agency or by machinery, and through which the wires leading to any one instrument may be connected with those leading to any other.

Without a central exchange and a switchboard there is certainly no such thing as a "telephone system;" and while two or more instruments might be directly connected without such an apparatus, it would be impossible for any one instrument to be exclusively connected with any other single instrument.

I think it must be conceded that the general assembly, in using the language which it has used in section 5416, as above quoted, had in mind the familiar facts which I have above set out. It is true that the choice of terminology is somewhat inaccurate and confusing, in that no individual or corporation ever does, nor, in the nature of things, could "transmit telephonic messages," for reasons already pointed out. In my opinion, however, the transmission of telephonic messages, as that term is used in the statute, consists of the operation of a switchboard or switchboards by which, at the will of the operator or by machinery, and at the will of the subscriber, the telephonic message may be transmitted from one station to another designated station.

Concisely stated, then, the "business of transmitting telephonic messages" consists of the operation of an exchange; without a central exchange, and the necessary switchboard, there can be no such "transmission" as the statute requires. Hence, an association of individuals, or a corporation, which might own and use two or more telephone instruments directly connected with one another, without the interposition of a switchboard, would not be "engaged in the business of transmitting telephonic messages."

Now, when a large number of separate telephone instruments, and secondary wires leading thereto, are connected with a central exchange or switchboard, for the purpose above described, the use of all the instruments and all the wires and poles, together with the switchboard, is necessary in order that the purpose for which such connection is made can be completely achieved. In other words, all of the wires leading to such an exchange; all of the poles upon which they are strung, and all of the instruments with which they connect, are a part of a single telephone "system" or "plant." Then, in my opinion, the connection of any one of these lines with any other one line, by means of the switchboard at the central office, constitutes not only the "transmission" of messages within the meaning of section 5416, but also the "operation" of all of the property necessarily involved within meaning of section 5415 and 5419, and the "control and use" threof within the meaning of section 5450, above quoted from and commented upon.

It follows from what I have said that the fact that the switchboard, in your first question, is operated as a joint or communistic enterprise is material and, regardless of the diversity of ownership of poles, wires and telephonic instruments, constitutes all such poles, wires and instruments so owned a part of a single "public utility," and renders the persons who have so associated themselves for the purpose of transmitting telephonic messages among themselves a "telephone company" within the meaning of the statutes. Therefore, the commission should, under sections 5450 et seq., General Code, value the entire plant or system as above defined as a unit, for property taxation purposes, and assess the same to the association as such, by whatever name it may have, apportioning the unit valuation so ascertained and assessed among different taxing districts, in accordance with the rule laid down in section 5456.

It follows, as a necessary corollary, from this conclusion, of course, that the property of the individual members of the association, used in connection with such plant or system, and considered in determining the value of the whole, should not be returned by and assessed to such individual members as their personal property.

The question of excise taxation, as raised by your first question, will not be considered. I have already pointed out the reasons for holding that an association of individuals engaged in the activities described in the first question does constitute a "telephone company" within the meaning of section 5416. Being such, the association is, in my opinion, required to make the single report exacted from express, telegraph and telephone companies by section 5450, General Code; and to include therein something, at least, under item 14 of such report or statement. Said item 14, it will be observed, requires the statement to contain "the entire gross receipts, including all sums earned or charged whether actually received or not, for the year * * * from whatever source derived, whether messages, telephone tolls, rentals, or otherwise, for business done within this state." This language, in my opinion, is broad enough to apply to the first case given by you and to constitute the assessments made against the individual members of the association, on account of the expense of operating a switchboard, the "gross receipts" of the association for the purposes of such statement.

Now, it is upon the basis of this statement that the Tax Commission, under section 5475, General Code, supra, determines the amount upon which the excise tax of 1.2 per cent., charged under section 5483, is to be computed. I am of the opinion, therefore, that the charges against individual members of the association on account of the expense of operating a switchboard constitute the gross receipts of the association as a "telephone company" for excise tax purposes.

One question arises in connection with the foregoing which has not been considered in this opinion, namely: as to whether or not the method of doing business described in the first question, being co-operative in its nature and not pursued for the purpose of profit, constitutes a "business" within the meaning of section 5416. This question, however, has been considered and answered in the affirmative in other opinions to the commission, notably that in the matter of the Factory Power Company, given to you some months ago. As the commission knows, it is the purpose of the Factory Power Company to contest the opinion rendered in its case, and to raise the question as to whether a co-operative enterprise, conducted not for profit, constitutes a "business." The conclusion which I have reached upon the first question in your letter of May 14th is based upon the premise which I have heretofore adopted in the other opinions referred to, and if the court should hold that that premise is invalid the conclusion would, of course be opposite to that which I have reached.

Your second and third questions may be considered together. For reasons already sufficiently discussed, I am of the opinion that the mere association of a number of individuals, owning wires and poles separately, and a single line or group of lines of wires, strung on a line of poles in common, for the purpose of contracting with a telephone company operating an exchange switchboard and thus securing exchange service from such company does not constitute the associated individuals a "telephone company" within the meaning of the statutes above quoted. The only thing which these persons do jointly is to own and maintain the poles carrying their respective wires from a certain meeting point to the company's exchange. This is unity of ownership, but not complete and separate unity of use; because the evident purpose of the associated individuals in so conducting their separately owned wires and poles to the exchange of the company is to enable their instruments and wires to be connected through the switchboard with the other instruments reached by the company. Therefore, the unit consists of all the instruments and wires connected with the company switchboard. Having held that the operation of a switchboard constitutes the transmission of the messages, it follows, of course, that I must hold that the operating company in the case imagined in your second question is the company and not the associated individuals. Your second question must, therefore, be answered in the negative.

For the reasons already stated, your third question must be answered in the affirmative. Inasmuch as by the use of a single exchange switchboard, which is admitted to be operated by the company, the telephone instruments belonging to the associated individuals are connnected with other telephone instruments belonging to the company, and leased by its subscribers, all the telephone instruments and wires are designed for use and actually are used in connection with a single system. Inasmuch, also, as the operation of the exchange switchboard constitutes the operation of the system, I am of the opinion that, at the very least, the property of the associated individuals, under the facts stated by you, constitutes "property * * * operated * * * by" a telephone company, and "used in connection with * * * the operation of a public utility" within the meaning of section 5419, above quoted.

The answer to your third question suggests the general observation, not necessarily evoked by the particular case to which it refers, but which may be of some value to the commission as a general principle, that wherever property, owned by another, is required, because of the application of the unit rule, in the manner required by the statutes which have been discussed, to be included in the valuation of property assessed to the operator, it should not again be assessed to the owner. This is not only the manifest intention of the statutes, but to construe them otherwise would result in real double taxation. The phrase "double taxation" is a loose one, often improperly used. In its proper application, however, it means that, especially under a constitution enjoining, as ours does, the so-called "uniform rule" in property taxation, the same property shall not be more than once assessed for contribution to the public revenues for the same period of time. It is perfectly competent for the legislative power of the state to provide that property shall be assessed to one not its technical owner, leaving the rights of the parties, as between the taxpayer and the real owner, to be worked out between them. This is particularly true of property used in a given business and, therefore, impressed with a peculiar situs for taxation purposes; but it is not proper that property so used be taxed because of its business use as property and again taxed in respect to its simple ownership.

I mention this fact because, in my study of the question which you present, my attention is called to the fact that "equipment companies," so-called, are assessable upon a basis which I have defined in a recent opinion to the commission as being a property basis for cars furnished or leased by them to railroads, for the purpose of being used in the operation of the railroad. This is clearly a special provision, which controls to the exclusion of any general provision. This being the case, all rolling stock, on account of which the so-called excise tax may be assessed under sections 5462 et seq., General Code, should not be considered as property operated by the railroad company, in spite of the specific provisions of section 5429, General Code. The same principle must be observed throughout in the assessment of public utilities.

This last general observation, I am sure, the commission desires. It amounts to a supplement to a former opinion in the matter of sleeping car, pipe line and equipment companies, and does not have proper place in this opinion, save as the principle which I have defined is suggested by the facts of this opinion.

Very truly yours,
TIMOTHY S. HOGAN,
Attorney General.

OHIO OIL COMPANY NOT A PIPE LINE COMPANY UNDER LAWS OF OHIO—PRODUCERS' AND REFINERS' OIL COMPANY, LIMITED, AND THE TIDE-WATER PIPE COMPANY, LIMITED, ARE PIPE LINE COMPANIES UNDER THE LAWS OF OHIO.

The business conducted by the Ohio Oil Company does not constitute that company a pipe line company and a public utility within any of the provisions of the act of May 31, 1910, as to making property reports to the tax commission and paying excise tax thereon upon its gross receipts.

The Producers and Refiners Oil Company, limited, and the Tide-Water Pipe Company, limited, are engaged in the business of transporting oil and are pipe line companies within the meaning of section 5416, General Code, and their plants are public utilities within the meaning of section 5415, General Code.

COLUMBUS, OHIO, May 20, 1913.

Tax Commission of Ohio, Columbus, Ohio.

GENTLEMEN:—Some months ago you submitted for my opinion a question respecting the liability for excise and property taxation, as "public utilities," or more accurately, as "pipe line companies," of four certain companies or organizations. The question has given me a great deal of trouble, and I must confess that I have in recent weeks, during the legislative session, laid it aside for more careful consideration. I have at length reached a conclusion in the matter and take this opportunity to apologize for the long delay. The companies in question, with their manner of doing business are as follows:

The Ohio Oil Company is a corporation of the state of Ohio, organized for the purpose of producing, transporting and refining oil. This is not the exact phraseology of its articles of incorporation as amended, but constitutes the substance thereof. The company is actually engaged in the business of producing oil, as it owns and operates a large number of oil wells in Ohio, Indiana and Illinois. For its own convenience it maintains a pipe line which extends from the Illinois field (not the Indiana or Ohio fields) to the Pennsylvania state line where, as well as in Ohio, the company owns storage tanks. It appears from the statement of facts that all of the oil which the company transports through its pipe line is designated for storage in the tanks of the company. That is to say the movement of the oil is from the company's own wells to the company's own tanks. The oil is not secured by purchase or otherwise from other producers and is not delivered directly from the transportation line to the refineries. Therefore, although the company is authorized under its charter to engage in three distinct kinds of business, viz., production, transportation and refining, it is as a matter of fact engaged principally in the sole activity of production and incidentally (to the production) in the activity or business of transportation. The company sells all of its oil to refiners or to pipe line companies which are accustomed to purchase the oil transported by them. All of the receipts of the company are derived from the sale of its products.

The Producers' and Refiners' Oil Company, limited, operates (but does not own) an interstate pipe line originating in Ohio and extending into West Virginia and Pennsylvania. The company buys the crude petroleum from producers, it not being itself engaged in the business of producing, and when the act of transportation thereof through the pipe line is complete it sells the oil to purchasers who for the purposes of the opinion may be referred to as those engaged in the business of refining the crude petroleum. The company is a limited partnership organized under the laws of the state of Pennsylvania.

It will be seen, therefore, that the business which this company does may be summarized as follows: It is engaged in transporting crude oil or petroleum in interstate commerce between points in Ohio and points in other states through a pipe line owned by another company; but all the crude oil transported by it is purchased before it enters the transportation line and sold at the end of the journey so that it is the property of the company while it is in the company's pipe line.

The Pure Oil Company is a corporation of the state of New Jersey. It is engaged in Ohio in the business of producing and selling crude petroleum and also owns a pipe line but does not operate it; this line being the one operated by the Producers' and Refiners' Oil Company.

The Tide-Water Pipe Company, limited, is a limited partnership organized under the laws of Pennsylvania. The partnership is authorized by its partnership articles to transport and refine petroleum as well as to buy and sell this commodity. It owns and operates a pipe line through Ohio extending from a point in Illinois to a point in Pennsylvania and has other lines in the states of Pennsylvania, New York and New Jersey. A lengthy statement of facts is made from which, however, it is difficult to determine whether or not the company is actually engaged in the business of refining oil. The statement is made that, "we buy oil in Illinois, we transport it to Rixford (Ill.) * * * at Rixford it is transported by the main line to Bayonne (N. J.) * * *. Our income is derived from the sale of the oil at the seaboard to our own refinery. * * * We have no transportation charge for the oil coming in from any of these branches or any over the main line."

It seems apparent from this statement of facts that if this partnership is engaged in the business of refining oil it keeps that business separate so that the oil which is purchased in Illinois and transported through Ohio is sold to the refinery in New Jersey, by whomsoever the refinery is owned and operated. I shall, therefore, consider the business of this company as being substantially similar (save with respect to the ownership of the transportation line) to that conducted by the Producers' and Refiners' Oil Company, i. e., the business of transportation of oil purchased at the point of origin and sold at the point of delivery, so that while in the transportation lines the commodity is the property of the transporting company.

None of these companies admit that they are in fact engaged in the transportation business as a common carrier, although the Producers' and Refiners' Oil Company admits a willingness to engage in business in this manner, and that it is holding itself out in a tentative way, so to speak, in this capacity. The other companies assert that the business conducted by them is purely private and deny that they can be considered as "public utilities" and as "pipe line companies" for any purpose.

The question which the commission desires to submit for my consideration, and upon which my opinion is requested is:

> "Whether these companies are 'pipe line companies' and subject to the provisions of the act of May 31, 1911, as to making property reports to this commission and paying excise taxes thereon upon their gross receipts?"

This question involves the consideration of the following sections of the General Code, being sections of the tax commission act of 1911, 102 O. L. 224:

"Section 5415. The term 'public utility' as used in this act means and embraces each corporation, company, firm, individual and association, their lessees, trustees, or receivers * * * herein referred to as * * * pipe line companies * * * and such term 'public utility' shall include any plant or property owned or operated, or both, by any such companies, corporations, firms, individuals or associations.

"Section 5416. That any person or persons, firm or firms, co-partnership or voluntary association, joint stock association, company or corporation, wherever organized or incorporated; * * *, when engaged in the business of transporting natural gas or oil through pipes or tubing, either wholly or partially within this state, is a pipe line company; * * *

"Section 5417. The term 'gross receipts' shall be held to mean and include the entire receipts for business done by any person or persons, firm or firms, co-partnership or voluntary association, joint stock association, company or corporation, wherever organized or incorporated, from the operation of any public utility, or incidental thereto or in connection therewith. The gross receipts for business done by an incorporated company, engaged in the operation of a public utility, shall be held to mean and include the entire receipts for business done by such company under the exercise of its corporate powers, whether from the operation of the public utility itself or from any other business done whatsoever.

"Section 5419. The property owned or operated by a public utility, required to make return to the commission of its property to be assessed for taxation by the commission, shall be deemed and held to include such utility's plant or plants and all real estate necessary to the daily operations of the public utility and all other property, moneys and credits owned or operated, or both, by it wholly or in part within this state, used in connection with or as incidental to the operation of the public utility, whether the same be held in common or by the individuals operating such public utility. In the case of incorporated companies, all the real estate, personal property, moneys and credits owned and held by such corporation within this state in the exercise of its corporate powers, or as incidental thereto, whether such property, or any portion thereof, is used in connection with such public utility business or not, shall be conclusively deemed and held to be the property of such public utility.

"Section 5420. Each public utility, as defined in this act, except express, telegraph and telephone companies, shall annually, on or before the first day of March, make and deliver to the tax commission of Ohio, in such form as the commission may prescribe, a statement with respect to such utility's plant or plants and all property owned or operated, or both, by it wholly or in part within this state.

"Section 5422. Such statement shall contain:

"1. The name of the company.

"2. The nature of the company, whether a person or persons, firm, association or corporation, and under the laws of what state or country organized.

"3. The location of its principal office.

"4. The name and postoffice address of the president, secretary, auditor or the principal accounting officer or person, treasurer, and superintendent or general manager.

"5. The name and postoffice address of the chief officer or managing agent of the company in this state.

"6. The number of shares of the capital stock.

"7. The par value and market value, or if there is no market value, the actual value of its shares of stock on the first day of the month of January in which the statement is made; the amount of capital stock subscribed, and the amount thereof, actually paid in.

"8. A detailed statement of the real estate owned by the company in this state, where situated, and the value thereof as assessed for taxation, making separate statements of that part used in connection with the daily operations of the company, and that part used otherwise, if any such there be.

"9. An inventory of the personal property, including moneys, investments and credits, owned by the company, in this state, on the first day of the month of January in which the statement is made, where situated, and the value thereof, making separate statements of that part used in connection with the daily operation of the company, and that part used otherwise if any such there be.

"10. The total value of the real estate owned by the company and situated outside of this state, making separate statements of that part used in connection with the daily operations of the company, and that part used otherwise if any such there be.

"11. The total value of the personal property owned by the company and situated outside of the state, making separate statements of that part used in connection with the daily operations of the company, and that part used otherwise if any such there be.

"12. The total amount of bonded indebtedness and of indebtedness not bonded; the gross receipts for the preceding calendar year from any and all sources and the gross expenditures for the proceeding calendar year.

"14. In case of pipe line, gas, natural gas, waterworks and heating or cooling companies, such statement shall also show:

"(a) The number of miles of pipe line owned, leased or operated within this state, the size or sizes of the pipe composing such line, and the material of which such pipe is made.

"(b) If such pipe line be partly within and partly without this state, the whole number of miles thereof within this state and the whole number of miles without this state, including all branches and connecting lines in and out of this state.

"(c) The length, size and true and actual value of such pipe line in each county of this state, including in such valuation the main line, branches and connecting lines, and stating the different values of the pipe separately.

"(d) Its pumping stations, machine and repair shops and machinery therein, tanks, storage tanks and all other buildings, structures and appendages connected or used therewith, including telegraph and telephone lines and wires, and the true and actual value of all such stations, shops, tanks, buildings, structures, machinery and appendages and of such telegraph and telephone lines, and the true and actual value thereof in each county in this state in which it is located; and the number and value of all tank cars, tanks, barges, boats and barrels.

"Section 5423. On the second Monday of June of each year, the commission shall ascertain and assess, at its true value in money, all the property in this state of each such public utility, subject to the provisions of this act, other than express, telegraph and telephone companies.

"Section 5424. In determining the value of the property of each such public utility to be assessed and taxed within the state, the commission shall be guided by the value of the property as determined by the information contained in the sworn statements made by the public utility to the commission and such other evidence and rules as will enable it to arrive at the true value in money of the entire property of such public utility within this state, in the proportion which the value of such property bears to the value of the entire property of such public utility.

"Section 5425. The property of such public utilities to be so assessed by the commission shall be all the property thereof, as defined in section forty-three.

"Section 5426. Before the assessment of such property each of such public utilities (and railroad or street, suburban or interurban railroad companies) shall have the right, upon written application, to appear before the commission and to be heard in the matter of the valuation of its property for taxation.

"Section 5470. Each public utility * * * doing business in this state shall annually * * * under the oath of the president, secretary, treasurer, superintendent or chief officer in this state, of such association or corporation, if an association or corporation, make and file with the commission a statement in such form as the commission may prescribe.

"Section 5471. The statement provided for in the preceding section, shall contain:

"1. The name of the company.

"2. That nature of the company, whether a person or persons or association or corporation, and under the laws of what state or country organized.

"3. The location of its principal office.

"4. The name and postoffice address of the president, secretary, auditor, treasurer and superintendent or general manager.

"5. The name and postoffice address of the chief officer or managing agent of the company in this state.

"Section 5474. In case of all such public utilities except railroad, street, suburban and interurban railroad companies, such statement shall also contain the entire gross receipts of the company, including all sums earned or charged, whether actually received, or not, from whatever source derived, for business done within this state for the year next preceding the first day of May, including the company's proportion of gross receipts for business done by it within this state in connection with other companies, firms, corporations, persons or associations, but this shall not apply to receipts from interstate business, or business done for the federal government. Such statement shall also contain the total gross receipts of such company for such period in this state from business done within this state.

shall ascertain and determine the entire gross receipts of each light, gas, natural gas, pipe line, waterworks, messenger or signal, union depot, heating, cooling and water transportation company for business done within this state for the year then next preceding the first day of May, and of each express, telegraph and telephone company for business done within this state for the year ending on the thirtieth day of June, excluding therefrom, as to each of the companies named in this section, all receipts derived wholly from interstate business or business done for the federal government.

"Section 5487. In the month of October, the auditor of state shall charge for collection, from each pipe line company a sum in the nature of an excise tax, for the privilege of carrying on its intrastate business, to be computed on the amount so fixed and reported to him by the commission, as the gross receipts of such company on its intrastate business for the year covered by its annual report to the commission, as required in this act, by taking four per cent. of all such gross receipts, which tax shall not be less than ten dollars in any case."

The questions presented have, as I have already indicated, seemed very difficult to me. However, after careful consideration it has occurred to me that the cases of these four mentioned companies, with the exception already referred to. are not by any means identical, and it has been helpful to me to note at the outset certain distinctions which have occurred to me, and which may serve to simplify a discussion of the entire question.

I call attention to the fact that the Pure Oil Company is, in point of fact, engaged in Ohio in the sole business of producing oil. It owns a pipe line but is not operating the same. It seems to me that the fact that this company is not operating its pipe line is conclusive of the question so far as it is concerned. It is certainly not "engaged in the business of transporting oil through pipes," within the meaning of section 5416.

I, therefore, advise that the Pure Oil Company is not a public utility. This does not, however, as I shall hereafter point out, signify that the pipe line owned by this company but operated by another company is not to be valued for taxation as a "pipe line," even though by the arrangement between the parties the assessment made as a result of such valuation, may render this corporation ultimately liable for taxes levied thereon.

The case of the Ohio Oil Company should next be considered. This corporation is primarily a producing company. It transports oil but not for the purpose of conveying it to market. At least the transportation in which the company engages does not result in delivering the oil to the refinery. This company does not buy petroleum but does sell it. When the oil is sold it is delivered, not directly to the refinery but to another transportation company. The sole purpose of the transportation operations of this company, extensive as they are, is to make the petroleum available for storage in its own storage tanks. During the entire time that this company holds possession of the oil it acts primarily in the capacity of a producer. In this respect its ownership of the oil which it is engaged in transporting is perhaps of different significance from the ownership of the oil, both owned and transported by the Producers' and Refiners' Oil Co., and the Tide-Water Pipe Company, respectively, under the facts in regard to these companies as I have stated them. I think this distinction is of some importance as will hereafter more clearly appear.

The Ohio Oil Company is, then, in a word, engaged in transporting oil which it has itself produced for the purpose of collecting it together in convenient places for storage. The storage tanks are in turn connected with other pipe lines not owned or operated by the company through which the crude petroleum is again transported and sold to the refiners.

The commission will recall that in a recent opinion respecting certain corporations incidentally engaged in furnishing electric current to consumers I held that the mere fact that such an activity is merely incidental to some other principal business, is immaterial as affecting the status of such corporation as an "electric light company" and accordingly a "public utility" under the sections above cited. This is because section 5416, General Code, in defining "electric light company" contains the following language:

> "When engaged in the business of supplying electricity for lighting, heating or power purposes to consumers within this state, is an electric light company."

Every element of this definition is satisfied by the case of a corporation which actually does supply electricity to consumers, regardless of whether or not it be incidental to some other paramount business. This is true, as I tried to point out in the other opinion, whether the question turns on the mere phraseology of the definition itself or upon the fundamental reason and theory of the tax.

The conclusion reached in this opinion is not of very great assistance in considering the case of the Ohio Oil Company however, because the phrase "to consumers" finds no counter-part in the definition of the "pipe line company" as above quoted, unless such a counter-part must be supplied by interpretation. This, it is alleged, must be done. It is argued with great force that an "electric light company" is not such unless it supplies "consumers;" and a gas company is not such unless it serves "consumers." So also with a "natural gas company" a waterworks company, a heating company, and a cooling company, the definitions of all of which "public utilities," as found in section 5416, contains the identical phrase "supplying * * * to consumers."

Again, in some of the definitions in this lengthy section in which this identical phraseology is found, there are similar phrases like, "supplying messengers for any purpose" in the definition of a "messenger company." The idea of service to others, presumably the general public, being latent here. Therefore some relation to the general public or to those who are served, or would be served by the business of transporting oil must be shown to exist before, having regard to the intent of the section as a whole, the definition of a pipe line company, or rather the spirit of that definition, could be satisfied. So that it is urged that by construction the phrase "for others than itself," or some equivalent should be understood and interpolated in that portion of section 5416 which defines a "pipe line company." Indeed, it is urged that even a more comprehensive phrase should be so understood, viz., something to the effect that the oil transported is not the property of the transporting company.

Reference to one of the former opinions of this department leads me also to mention a more recent opinion in the matter of certain freight line companies in which I held that the fact that a freight line business of a company might be carried on as incidental to some other business, and that the freight transported might belong to the company itself, were both immaterial as determining its status for taxation. This is because the phrase "whether such freight is owned by such company, or any other person or company," is found in that portion of section 5416 which defined the phrase "freight line company." So that it is difficult to draw any conclusive inference from other provisions of this section by which interpretative light may be thrown upon the exact meaning of a "pipe line company" therein. On the one hand it might be argued that whereas phrases like "supplying to consumers" are frequently used in the section, and no similar phrase is found in the definition in question itself, the silence of the legislature is significant and must be applied upon a principle analogous to that referred to as expressio unius est exclusio alterius. That is to say if the legislature had intended further to qualify its definition of a "pipe line company" it would have done so inasmuch as it was careful similarly to qualify other definitions framed by it in the same section. On the other hand it is pointed out that the term "public utility" as used in the preceding section ought to be given some weight and that the obvious intent of the use of this phrase ought by itself to qualify each and every one of the definitions found in section 5416.

I have, however, in one of the previous opinions to which I have referred, shown by examination of the legislative history here involved that this phrase "public utility" must be regarded as descriptive but not as definitive. It is an artificial term and as such is not of great weight in qualifying definitions which were framed historically before it ever came into use in this connection. On the same side of the ledger, so to speak, however, there is another consideration which is the opposite of the one already discussed as tending to show an inference that the legislature did not intend further to limit its definition of the term "pipe line company;" that is, the fact that the definition of a "freight line company" found in this section contains the express qualification already referred to. From this it might be argued that if the legislature had intended that the fact that a pipe line company is transporting oil which is its own property should be regarded as immaterial, it would have said so unequivocally as it has done in defining the term "freight line company." The force of this consideration is somewhat mitigated by the historical fact that prior to the revision of the tax laws by the legislature of 1911, the definitions of sleeping car, freight line and equipment companies were found in a separate section, and indeed, were originally part of an act entirely separate and distinct from that in which the other definitions now found in the same section are incorporated.

Hence, it is true that from the standpoint of interpretation, the section itself is not a single legislative idea but is rather a conglomeration of several distinct legislative ideas. Again, the inference just referred to, even if permissible, could bear upon the argument respecting ownership only, and not upon that respecting mere relationship to the public or that portion of it to be served by the transportation of oil.

Therefore, while due weight must be given to the consideration which I have discussed as bearing upon the meaning of the definition of a "pipe line company" as found in section 5416, General Code, yet in the ultimate analysis I think that the definition must be interpreted in the light of the facts surrounding the business of transporting oil. In this same connection too, I may refer to the fact that, as I am informed, the interstate commerce commission has, under favor of an act of congress, declared all interstate pipe lines to be common carriers of interstate commerce, regardless of the ownership of the oil transported through them, and regardless also of the connection in which the transportation takes place. This order, however, was promulgated subsequently to the enactment of the statute now under consideration, and, of course, long after the original adoption of the definition which I am now discussing, which was enacted in 1896. The re-enactment of this definition from time to time without verbal-change is sufficient, it seems to me, to show that the legislature did not intend the phrase employed by it to have a meaning broader than the original meaning thereof.

So it is that I have reached the conclusion that after all the definition in question is not to be interpreted by reading into its phraseology any additional qualifying language, but that rather the nature of the "business of transporting oil" must be ascertained by reference to undisputed facts.

Now as I have already pointed out, the Ohio Oil Company itself transports oil, but this transportation is not only incidental to the business of production in the sense that it grows out of production but is completely incidental to the business because the oil after receiving the transportation which is given to it by this company is still, so to speak, producer's oil. It has not yet become available for refining. Now while the facts respecting the oil business as a whole are by no means free from confusion and doubt, it seems certain that the business as a whole may and must be divided into three distinct processes, viz.: production, transportation and refining. These three processes for the purpose of this opinion may be defined as follows:

Production is the process by which the crude petroleum is brought from its natural reservoirs to the surface and there stored or otherwise made available for the second or intermediate process of the business.

Refining is the process by which the crude petroleum is made available for commercial use in various forms. It is a species of manufacturing; whereas the production of oil is a species of mining. One transforms the raw material produced by the other into articles of use and consumption.

Now it is a fact, I think, that for reasons similar to those which have located steel mills, for example, geographically remote from iron mines, the refineries are located geographically apart from the producing fields, or some of them at least. We may therefore imagine two groups of persons engaged in these different branches of the oil business, viz., the producers and refiners. In order that they may come into that contact by and through which the business may be carried on, the intervention of a third class of persons, which has been suggested by the above definition, is required. This leads to the formulation of "transportation" as applied to the oil business as follows:

Transportation in the oil business is that activity or business by which crude petroleum is taken from the producer and delivered to the refiner, who in this instance corresponds to the "consumer" who is mentioned in some of the other definitions in section 5416.

Now the service rendered by a transporter of crude petroleum is unlike that rendered by a "natural gas company" or a "waterworks company" and is like that rendered by a railroad company in that it is not given to or for the benefit of the class of persons to whom deliveries are made alone. It is this question which has given me the greatest difficulty, and after conducting an investigation into the customs of the oil business, I have come to the conclusion that it would not be fair to state either that transportation in the oil business is a service performed for the refiner or that it is a service performed for the producer. It is in point of fact a service performed for both the refiner and producer without which neither could do business with the other. So the business is like any other transportation business, except that it does not involve the public as such. That is to say, any person engaged in almost any business is likely to require the service of a common carrier of persons or freight, such as a railroad, interurban railroad or water transportation company; but it is only the producers and refiners of oil who can ever require the services of a transporter of oil, when the transportation is effected by means of pipe lines. That is to say, while some help might be obtained from considering that railroads and water transportation companies, for example, became such by holding themselves out to the public as common carriers for all who may require their services, yet this consideration is not very helpful as applied to the business of transporting oil, because an oil pipe line is incapable of transporting anything but oil. Therefore, a pipe line can never be a "common carrier" in the full sense that a railroad can become one. So transporters of oil deal not with the public at large but with a very limited and restricted part of the public, viz., the producers and refiners of oil. It can take on its freight only in the producing fields and can deliver its consignment only at the refinery.

With these definitions and principles, all of which I think are practically true from the standpoint of facts at hand, I pass again to the specific case of the Ohio Oil Company. This corporation does not employ its pipe line for the purpose of transporting oil in the sense that I have defined the business of transportation, being engaged in the business of production, it devolves upon this company, as a part of that business, to collect the oil taken from the wells and to place it in storage tanks. To be sure storage tanks are also used in the transportation business if I am not mistaken. On this point, however, it seems clear that the storage of oil is not an essential part of its transportation, but is in a measure, at least, an essential part of its production, for while the crude oil remains in the storage tank it remains the property of the producer even when the storage tank belongs to the transporter, and I am informed that it is customary in the business for transporters of oil maintaining storage tanks to charge storage upon oil received by them for transportation between the time when the oil is received and when it is sold to the refiner; and that often oil is delivered by producers to transporters for storage facilities and is held in their tanks subject to storage charges for considerable lengths of time awaiting a more favorable market for the product.

Now I apprehend that no one would say that a producer of oil on a large scale, who collected the product from his numerous wells and stored it in a given place in the same oil field where a number of storage tanks were located in close proximity to a potential connection with a transportation line operated by another, was engaged in the business of transportation because of the operation of such pipe lines and the equipment necessary therefor as might be required in order to get the petroleum from the wells to his own storage tanks. This is because his intention, in operating such pipe lines, is not to start the oil on its journey to the refinery, which journey constitutes its "transportation" as I have above defined it, but rather to store the petroleum and thereby actually to withhold it from true transportation and delivery to the refinery until the most favorable time for such transportation and delivery. It would be easy to reach this conclusion were the storage tanks in close proximity to the wells and did this process involve no lengthy mileage of trunk pipe line. Yet upon careful consideration I cannot determine in my own mind that the mere length of the transit, and the mere separation of the storage tanks from the producing field, where both belong to and are controlled by the producer himself, are either of them material. Once the principle is laid down that transportation for the producer's own convenience is not the business of transportation which the statute describes, it must be applied regardless of the extent of the transportation.

Just at this point the question naturally arises as to what the holding would be on the above principle as to a pipe line owned by a refiner and operated in connection with the refinery, which none of the particular pipe lines about which you inquire are, unless it be the Tide-Water Pipe Company, in case the pipe line should connect directly with the producer's wells or with storage tanks supplied by a pipe line managed by a producer in the manner in which the Ohio Oil Companys' storage is conducted and maintained. That is to say, if the business of the Ohio Oil Company does not constitute transportation because it is conducted as a part of the business of production, then would the transportation of oil through a pipe line managed and conducted by a refiner in connection with his refinery constitute the business of transportation?

I mention this question so that no unwarranted inference may be drawn from the preceding discussion. At a matter of fact—although this point is not necessary to the determination of any of the questions presented by you in your letter—I am of the opinion that a pipe line operated in connection with a refinery would under certain circumstances constitute the transportation of oil within the meaning of section 5416. So also I am of the opinion that a pipe line operated in connection with producing wells or producers' storage tanks if the pipe line extended to and delivered the oil to the refinery would constitute a transporting agency. In other words it is the transportation which takes the crude petroleum from the producer and delivers it to the refiner which constitutes the business of "transporting oil" within the meaning of said section.

The transportation business conducted by the Ohio Oil Company is closely analogous to the incidental transportation conducted by large manufacturing plants and extensive mines. Railroads operated in such manner are not to be regarded as "railroads" within the meaning of the section under consideration. This is obviously the case.

For all of the foregoing reasons then I am of the opinion that the business conducted by the Ohio Oil company does not constitute that company a "pipe line company" and a "public utility" within any of the provisions of the act of May 31, 1911, containing the sections above quoted.

There remains to be considered yet the case of the Producers' and Refiners' Oil Company and the Tide-Water Pipe Company, which for the purpose of this opinion have already been assumed to be substantially similar. I have pointed out that the facts stated with respect to the second mentioned company are not as complete as might be desired, yet for reasons which I have already mentioned I think the conclusion which I should reach upon either of the two possible constructions which might be placed upon that statement of facts would be the same. For the present, however, I shall consider the two companies just named together.

It appears from the above statement of facts that these two companies are actually engaged in taking oil from the producer and delivering it to the refinery, so that insofar as these facts are concerned the definition of the business of transportation already framed is completely satisfied. However, the business conducted by each of these companies supplies an additional element not heretofore considered, viz., the fact that they actually purchase the oil from the producer and sell it to the refiner so that while it is in transit it is the property of the transporting company. Now it is apparent at a glance that these companies do two things, viz., they transport crude petroleum and they buy and sell the same commodity. In both capacities they constitute the go-between with respect to the producer and refiner. They are like, in one aspect of their business, a jobber or wholesale dealer in merchandise, except that jobbers and wholesale dealers might more properly be regarded as distributors than as collectors, whereas these companies in their relation to the refiners serve as collecting agents in that the volume of petroleum delivered to a single purchaser is greater than the volume received from a single producer if indeed the former does not constitute the entire volume of oil transported.

On the other hand, as already pointed out, the two companies are clearly engaged in transporting oil. A question might, therefore, be raised as to whether the purchase and sale of the commodity is "incidental" to the transportation, or, on the other hand, whether the transportation is incidental to the mercantile business. This puzzling question, however, is not necessarily determinative of the ultimate issue involved. In the first place the principles announced in the former opinion to the commission in the matter of certain electric light companies come into play here. The mere fact that the so-called "public utility" business is merely incidental to another paramount activity does not necessarily point to the conclusion that the company is not within the intendment of the public utility taxation statute. Applying this principle to the facts respecting these two companies would result in holding that even if the transportation of oil be regarded as incidental to the mercantile business transacted by the companies, yet the transportation itself being such transportation as the statute contemplates would render each of he companies a "pipe line company" within the meaning of the section.

But I am not so sure that it can be claimed that the transportation is even incidental to other business conducted by these companies. Broadly speaking, the activity of these companies, as already pointed out, is limited to satisfying the economic needs of two classes of persons, viz., the producers and the refiners who without their intervention could not come together in such fashion as to enable the business as a whole to be carried on. The economic want which is satisfied is primarily that of transportation. That is to say, if the refineries were located in the producing fields these companies could not do business. There would be no demand for their services. They could not buy from the producers nor sell to the refiners; because in that event the two classes of persons would deal directly with each other. It is only because of the geographical separation of the two classes that these companies exist at all. I might interpolate here a remark which, of course, has no force or weight in itself but which is an interesting sidelight upon the question, the very name of one of these companies "The Producers' and Refiners' Oil Company" is suggestive of the business in which it is engaged, which is the business of bringing producers and refiners together.

Now these companies choose to secure their remuneration for the service which they render by taking title to the commodity which they transport. That is to say, they might conduct themselves as carriers, and as such make stipulated rates for certain transits at which they would transport oil, either at the cost of the producer or at that of the refiner—most likely the latter if my understanding of the business is correct. Instead of so doing, however, they make an outright purchase of the oil in the producing field and an outright sale of it at the refinery. This does not, however, in my judgment alter the essential nature of the business transacted by these companies from the standpoint from which they have been under investigation by me. In fact these companies do no more than is done by any so-called "public pipe line," if any such there be. (In point of fact I am informed that in Ohio at any rate there are not many pipe line companies which purport to be actual common carriers of crude petroleum, although there are many pipe lines in operation.) The business then is in all respects a transportation business. It is such a business also as, in a sense, constitutes a service to so much of the public as is concerned in the general oil business. These things being true I am of the opinion that the mere taking of title in the oil transported is a fact insufficient to alter the legal effect of the other facts which are presented.

It is, therefore, my opinion that the Producers' and Refiners' Oil Company, limited, and the Tide-Water Pipe Company, limited, are "engaged in the business of transporting oil through pipes" within the meaning of section 5416, and that they thereby become "pipe line companies" within the meaning of said section, and their plants become "public utilities" within the meaning of section 5415, General Code.

As to the suggested further question respecting the specific liability of these companies for taxes I refer the commission to a previous opinion in the matter of the Connecting Gas Company in which it is pointed out that business of this kind is interstate in its character and, therefore these companies would be liable for little, if any, excise taxes on gross receipts.

So far as property taxes are concerned I note one contention made by the Tide-Water Company, limited, which deserves consideration. It is claimed by the representative of that company that the line which runs through Ohio is independent of other lines owned by the company. If this is indeed true then for purposes of property valuation the commission would be limited to the line which traverses Ohio for the purpose of apportioning on the unit basis, that is to say, even if this limited partnership be regarded as an "incorporated company" within the meaning of section 5419, General Code, above quoted, and accordingly if the commission's first inquiry by virtue of such section would be into the total value of all the property owned by the company wherever located, then if the said line in Ohio is separated from other pipe lines the value of all such other pipe lines and equipment and property used in connection with them should first be deducted from the total so ascertained before the apportionment required by section 5446, General Code, above quoted is made. But if the commission ascertains that although there are distinct and in a sense separate branch lines which are owned by this company, of which the Ohio line is one such line, together, constitute a single system used for a single purpose, then on the authority of Adams Express Co. vs. Ohio State Auditor, 165 U. S. 683, the commission may, and should, ascertain the value of the whole system and upon the equitable basis enjoined by the section just referred to apportion the ascertained value between Ohio and the rest of the world, due care being exercised to allow for any essential differences which exist among various lines which the company owns and operates.

Yours very truly,
TIMOTHY S. HOGAN,
Attorney General.

THE PRODUCERS AND REFINERS OIL COMPANY IS NOT LIABLE FOR TAXES AS A FOREIGN CORPORATION, BUT IS LIABLE FOR EXCISE TAX.

The Producers and Refiners Oil Company is not liable for tax as a foreign corporation for profit. This company is liable for excise tax if it has any gross receipts for business done in Ohio, upon which to compute such excise tax. This company is not liable at all for reports and fees as a foreign corporation for profit.

COLUMBUS, OHIO, May 4, 1913.

Tax Commission of Ohio, Columbus, Ohio.

GENTLEMEN:—On November 22, 1912, you submitted to this department for an opinion thereon a question which I shall presently state respecting the status of the Producers & Refiners Oil Company as a foreign corporation for franchise taxation. Previously you had submitted the facts respecting this company, together with other companies doing a somewhat similar business, for my opinion as to whether or not the business done by those companies constitutes them "public utilities" for excise and property taxation purposes.

I have come to a conclusion with regard to this request which in reality obviates the necessity for considering the latter question. Because of the principles involved, however, I have undertaken to answer the question as it would have to be answered if the Producers & Refiners Oil Company were not a "public utility company." The question is raised by the following facts:

> "The Producers & Refiners Oil Company is a corporation organized under the laws of Pennsylvania, and on August 7, 1906, complied both with sections 148c and 148d of the Revised Statutes. Ever since that date it has annually made reports as a foreign corporation for profit and has paid the minimum fee of $10.00.
> "The property of the company located in Ohio is small in value as compared with that located outside of Ohio. The business transacted in Ohio is separable into two classes, viz:
> "1. A relatively large amount of crude petroleum was bought by the company and delivered into its lines for transportation into other states.
> "2. A very small amount of local business intrastate in character was also transacted.
> "The company buys crude petroleum in Ohio and owns a pipe line through which it transports the crude petroleum purchased by it into other states where it is sold to purchasers. In short, the company may be regarded, for the purpose of this opinion, as doing a "pipe line' business exclusively inasmuch as it neither produces nor refines petroleum."

This statement, however, must be qualified by noting the fact that the company actually becomes the owner of the petroleum which is transported in its pipe lines and thus becomes a middle-man in the purchase and sale of the product as well as a transporting agency.

The company contends that in determining the proportion of the authorized capital stock represented in this state so far as business is concerned, the commission must compare purely local business transacted in Ohio, which is small in amount, with the business transacted outside of Ohio, for the reason that the other business of the company transacted in Ohio, which is large in amount, is interstate in character, and cannot lawfully be used for the purpose of computing the annual fee as that would impose a burden upon interstate commerce in violation of the federal constitution.

The question, therefore, is as to whether the commission in determining the proportion of the authorized capital stock of the company represented in this state may ascertain the same upon the basis of the entire amount of business transacted, or is the commission limited to the relatively small amount of purely local business for this purpose?

I call attention to an opinion rendered somewhat recently to the commission in the matter of the Detroit & Cleveland Navigation Company. In that opinion I traced the legislative history of the so-called "Willis law" with a view to disclosing the meaning of the phrase "subject to compliance with all other provisions of law," found in section 5499, General Code. I came to the conclusion that the meaning of this phrase is "subject to compliance with section 183, General Code." That is to say, I was then of the opinion, and still am, that foreign corporations which are not liable to compliance with section 183, General Code, are not liable for annual reports and fees under the so-called "Willis law" provisions of the present Tax Commission law. The corporations which are not subject to section 183, General Code, are those enumerated in section 188, General Code. The following provision of this section will be sufficient for present purposes:

"The preceding five sections shall not apply to foreign * * * express, telegraph, telephone, railroad, sleeping car, transportation or other corporations engaged in Ohio in interstate commerce; * *"

The Producers & Refiners Oil Company is a foreign corporation engaged in interstate commerce in the exact sense. Indeed, it is engaged in the transportation of interstate commerce. Therefore, it is not such a corporation as is liable to compliance with section 183, General Code, which corresponds with section 148c of the Revised Statutes.

It will, therefore, be seen that if the Producers & Refiners Oil Company had not complied with section 148c of the Revised Statutes and had not paid taxes for a series of years upon the theory that it was subject to such compliance the question presented by the facts stated in your letter would be precisely the same as that involved in the case of the Detroit & Cleveland Navigation Company.

The opinion in the matter just referred to, however, is not conclusive of the question here presented because the Producers & Refiners Oil Company has actually complied with section 148c, now section 183 and has actually been paying annual fees. This suggests the question as to whether or not a foreign corporation which is not subject to compliance with "all other provisions of law" within the meaning of section 5499 but which has actually complied with all other provisions of law is subject to the provisions of the sections immediately following and including said section 5499.

It might be urged in support of an affirmative answer to the question just suggested that the original certificate of compliance, and the annual fee exacted from foreign corporations by the sections already alluded to are in return for a privilege. Neither the original nor the annual fee constitutes a tax upon the doing of business but is a tax upon the right to exercise certain corporate franchises. Now it might be asserted that the corporation by securing the original certificate has acquired the right which constitutes the subject of taxation, and having so acquired the right cannot be heard to deny its liability for the annual tax.

Upon careful consideration I have rejected this view and have adopted the opposite conclusion. As a matter of fact the act of the Producers & Refiners Oil Company in complying with the provisions of section 148c Revised Statutes was a mere nullity. It conferred upon the corporation no right which it, so far as its transaction of business was concerned at any rate, would not have had without any such action. That is to say, it is now the settled law of the United States, as it seems to have been the certain policy of the general assembly in enacting section 148c, Revised Statutes, that a corporation of one state may without let or hindrance on the part of another state carry on in such other state the business of transportating or conducting interstate commerce, and to that end may exercise its corporate powers in such other state and be recognized as a body corporate for that purpose. Western Union Telegraph Co. vs. Kansas, 217 U. S. p. l.; Commercial Co. vs. Glenn Mfg. Co., 55 O. S. 217, Fruit Co., vs. Armour, 74 O. S. 168.

Now while it is reasonable to argue that a tax my be levied upon a right to do, even in the absence of its exercise, and that the state has a right to tax a privilege of its own creation so that so long as the privilege exists, the liability for the tax must also continue, yet if the proposed "privilege" in fact has no real existence it is my opinion that the liability for the tax is likewise non-existant.

The case is entirely different from that of a foreign corporation which after taking out a certificate under section 183, General Code, in fact withdraws from the state and ceases to transact business or to own or use property therein. In such a case the liability for the tax continues because the privileges —i.e. the right to transact business—still exists. That is to say, the privilege at one time existed and was real and substantial. In the case now under discussion, however, the "privilege" i.e., the supposed act of the state conferring rights upon the corporation, never existed in reality or substance.

For the foregoing reasons I am of the opinion that the Producers & Refiners Oil Company is in no event liable for taxes as a foreign corporation for profit. This is entirely aside from the question suggested by the other letter which I have already mentioned respecting the liability of this company for excise taxes as a "pipe line company." I have reached the conclusion that this company is liable for excise taxes if it has any gross receipts for business done in Ohio upon which to compute such excise tax. That liability of itself would, by virtue of section 5518, General Code, discharge any supposed liability for franchise taxes as a foreign corporation for profit. If, however, the company has no gross receipts from intrastate business done in Ohio, and, therefore, is not liable for any excise taxes, then the principles of this opinion apply, which is a sufficient reason for going into the question in the manner in which I have done.

It is my conclusion, therefore, that the Producers & Refiners Oil Company is not liable at all for reports and fees as a foreign corporation for profit, and therefore, the exact question which the commission submits cannot be answered. I am aware that my opinion was not directly asked upon the question which I have actually considered, but on another question. However, on careful consideration I became satisfied that I could not answer the commission's question because, at least so far as transportation companies are concerned, it would be impossible for reasons already stated, for a foreign corporation of this kind actually engaged in interstate commerce to be liable for any taxes whatever as a foreign corporation for profit.

Yours very truly,
TIMOTHY S. HOGAN,
Attorney General.

PARAGON REFINING COMPANY NOT A PIPE LINE COMPANY UNDER THE LAWS OF OHIO.

The Paragon Refining Company, a corporation engaged in refining petroleum, which transfers its petroleum in a pipe line from the field to its refinery, is not a pipe line company within the meaning of section 5416, General Code, for excise tax and general property tax under the laws of Ohio.

COLUMBUS, OHIO, June 4, 1913.

Tax Commission of Ohio, Columbus, Ohio.

GENTLEMEN: In conncetions with questions involving companies engaged in broadly similar business, you have submitted to me, separately, the question as to whether or not, upon the following statement of facts, the Paragon Refining Company is a "public utility," or a "pipe line company," for excise tax and general property tax purposes under the laws of this state.

The company is principally engaged in the business of refining, as defined in the opinion respecting the other companies above referred to. In connection with its refinery, it operated transportation pipe lines from the producing field to the said refinery, through which crude petroleum, some of which is produced by the company itself and some of which is purchased from other producers, is carried from the field to the refinery. No separate charge is made for transportation, nor is the oil produced or purchased by the company sold as it passes from the transportation line into the refinery.

At first blush I was inclined to the view that the case of the Paragon Refining Company is essentially identical with that of The Tide-Water Pipe Company, one of the companies considered in the former opinion, and therein held to be a "pipe line company," for excise tax and general property tax purposes. Upon more careful consideration, however, I observe a distinction between the two cases, which, slight though it is, has in my opinion, determining effect. I refer to the fact, as stated in the statement respecting the nature of the business of The Tide-Water Pipe Company that although the old transported through its pipe lines was purchased in the field and belonged to the company while it was in the pipe line and in course of transportation, and although the refinery, in the case of that company, belonged to the company itself, yet, there was a separation of the business of refining from the business concerning which your question was asked. So that, whether or not, in the case of the Tide-Water Pipe Company, the business concerning which your question was asked could have been regarded in any sense as incidental to the business of refining, yet it was clear that it was not strictly so, having been separated therefrom in the usual course of business by the company itself.

The case of the Paragon Refining Company differs from that of The Tide-Water Pipe Company in this one particular. As in the other case, the oil transported belongs to the transporting company, and the activity of transportation is incidental to some other business. But in the case of the Paragon Refining Company the incidental relation is much closer than that which exists in the other case. There is no separation of the business of refining from that of transportation. There are no receipts from transportation—although this is not of itself a determining consideration. The important thing is that it is, on the statement of facts furnished me, impossible to distinguish and separate the transportation activity of the Paragon Refining Company from its refining and producing business.

Now, in the opinion of March 13, to the commission, in which the meaning of the word "business" as used in section 5416, General Code, was considered, I stated the following conclusion, found on page 19 of the pamphlet which has been printed:

> "That conclusion is that a person, partnership or corporation is 'engaged in the business' defined by section 5416, when it is found doing any of the acts therein enumerated, as a continuous or habitual activity, whether as a principal pursuit, or an independent, though subordinate, undertaking, or as a purely incidental undertaking.
> "In laying down this broad principle, however, I deem it proper to state that it may be subject to certain exceptions. I have no such exceptions specifically in mind, but realize that the nature of the subject is such that it is unsafe to state rules too rigidly."

I adhere to the conclusion thus expressed, but in the light of the facts as presented by the case of the Paragon Refining Company, I am moved to add another qualification to the definition suggested, namely:

"In order to constitute a 'business' within the meaning of section 5416, an activity must be separable, by means appropriate to the purposes of the taxes involved, from other activities to which it may be incidental. If the activity is so separable, the mere fact that it is merely incidental to another activity is immaterial. If, however, it is not so separable, then it does not constitute a 'business' within the meaning of the statute."

In reaching this conclusion I have given weight to the legislative history of the sections involved, which are quoted in other opinions, and need not be quoted here. For the purposes of this opinion, it is sufficient to state that most of the definitions in section 5416 were first adopted in the act of 1896, and have remained unchanged ever since. The act of 1896 imposed a uniform excise tax at the rate of one-half of one per cent. upon certain defined companies, among them pipe line companies. I think that it is clear that under that law, a pipe line company was not liable for excise taxes and therefore, conversely, was not "a pipe line company" in the technical sense, unless it had separate receipts from the pipe line business as such, whether those receipts were in the nature of transportation charges, or consisted of receipts from sales of petroleum bought and sold by the company for the purpose of transportation only, as in the case of The Tide-Water Pipe Company. When the receipts of the company consisted entirely of receipts from the sale of manufactured products, is in the case of the Paragon Refining Company, I do not think that it could have been contended that the company constituted a "pipe line company" for the purposes of the original act.

Now, inasmuch as the definitions found in the original act have never been changed, I am of the opinion that they do not include any subjects of legislation not included within the terms of the original definitions; and this despite the fact that by recent legislation these definitions have been used to designate the subjects of general property taxation by and under the unit rule of valuation, and have been supplemented by the comprehensive definitions of section 5417, for example, under which the gross receipts of a public utility which is a corporation are held to mean and include all of the receipts of the corporation as such, from whatever source derived, whether from the operation of the utility or not. The enactment of section 5417 did not, in other words, in my opinion, operate to enlarge the class of things comprehended within the definition of section 5416, which had been previously adopted, but simply operated to enlarge the definition of the term "gross receipts."

Therefore one test of ascertaining what constitutes a "pipe line company" within the meaning of the present laws, is afforded by considering what would have constituted such a company under the act of 1896. The Paragon Refining Company, which did not so conduct its transportation business so as to permit separation of its receipts from that source, from its receipts for merchandise sold, or even to afford any means of separating its transportation activities from the remainder of its business by any means could not, under the original act, have been regarded as a "pipe line company." Therefore, it is not a "pipe line company" under the existing law.

This conclusion is supported by the decisions of the federal courts in two cases arising under the federal revenue laws, viz.: United States vs. Northwestern Ohio Natural Gas Company, 141 Federal, 198, and United States vs. Consumers Gas Trust Company, 142 Federal 134. I confess that I cannot follow the learned judges who decided these cases through the entire course of their reasoning, particularly when they cite the case of Carothers vs. Philadelphia County, 118 Penna. State, 485, in support of the conclusions reached by them.

However, I heartily agree with the principle announced by the court which is to the effect that a tax on the receipts of a business cannot be levied upon a company which does the things that would otherwise amount to the business taxed, but whose receipts or income are exclusively derived from another activity or business to which that activity is purely incidental and into which it is so merged as to be incapable of separation therefrom.

It does not militate against the conclusion which I have reached, that there is no seeming reason for distinguishing between the Paragon Refining Company and The Tide-Water Pipe Company, for example, so far as property taxation under the unit rule of valuation is concerned. The general assembly has been content to adopt the excise tax definitions in defining the subjects of this kind of taxation; hence it has failed to comprehend within the definition for property tax purposes the companies which fall outside of the definition as applied to excise taxes.

Nor can it be urged, I think, against my conclusion, either in this opinion or in the other case involved, that the facts herein are so nearly like those respecting the Producers & Refiners Oil Company, for example. The distinction, though slight, is sufficient to charge the nature of the business transacted.

This opinion should be read in connection with the opinion respecting the four other oil transporting companies. By so doing, the application of so much of section 5416, General Code, as relates to pipe line companies, as I construe it, may be worked out, I think, in its entirety.

I am of the opinion, for the reasons above suggested, that the Paragon Refining Company is not "a pipe line company" within the meaning of section 5416 of the General Code.

Very truly yours,
TIMOTHY S. HOGAN,
Attorney General.

TAXPAYERS MAY WORK OUT THE ROAD TAX LEVIED AGAINST THEM AT ANY TIME PRIOR TO THE FIRST OF SEPTEMBER, 1913.

Any taxpayer may work out the road tax levied against him any time prior to September 1913, and receive a certificate for the same, or if he so desires he may pay the tax.

COLUMBUS, OHIO, October 1, 1913.

Tax Commission of Ohio, Columbus, Ohio.

GENTLEMEN:—On June 16, 1913, I directed to you an opinion, in which, in answer to a question asked by you, I gave it as my view that the passage of house bill No. 389 amending section 5649, General Code, would not affect the continued operation of section 7488, General Code. This opinion was based upon three considerations, viz.:

1. Section 7488 was not repealed or amended expressly and the presumption is against an implied amendment or repeal thereof.

2. A former general assembly had enacted laws substantially the equivalent of present section 7488 and amended section 5649 as a part of the same act, seeming to indicate that it was possible for the two statutes to subsist side by side, and leading to the conclusion therefore, that the two sections are not necessarily inconsistent.

3. Where there is a general provision which is inconsistent with a specific provision relating to a particular subject, the specific provision is construed as an exception to the general provision, even though the latter be later in point of enactment. This is a general rule of statutory construction.

In a letter just received from you, under date of June 21st, you call my attention to certain considerations which I overlooked and which, in my judgment, entirely over-ride the considerations upon which the opinion referred to was based. You point out that while section 7488, General Code, vests in the township trustees authority to levy a tax which may be worked out by taxpayers in labor performed on the roads at the rate paid for similar services. This section of itself does not provide the machinery by which it may be carried into effect. That is to say, in order that the declared right of the taxpayer to work out his road tax may be made effective and carried into execution it is necessary to provide by law for the issuance, by some duly constituted authority, of certificates showing the amount of labor performed by an individual taxpayer, which certificates would be acceptable at the county treasury in payment of taxes, or some equivalent machinery.

You point out that former section 5649 did provide such machinery, but that the section in its amended form, when the same became effective, does not provide such machinery, these provisions of the former section having been stricken out. You point out also that the working of the roads is now under the direction of the road superintendents, who have been substituted for the road supervisors who formerly exercised this duty.

An examination of the statutes, being sections 7137 to 7180, General Code, fails to disclose any authority in the road superintendent to issue any certificate receivable at the county treasury in payment of taxes. On the other hand, section 7147, General Code, clearly implies that the road superintendent shall pay for all labor performed on the roads at the rate of $1.50 per day out of funds subject to his disposition. It is true that section 7148 gives the superintendent authority to fix compensation for cutting weeds which may be credited on the road tax, but this is a special proceeding. Aside from this provision, however, there is no authority vested in the road superintendent to do the thing which would be necessary in order to enable the taxpayer to receive credit upon his road tax for work performed by him upon the roads.

You point out that the same situation existed under the act of 1906 which was referred to in the former opinion; so that although it was proper for me to impute to the legislature of that year the intention that two provisions similar to those found in the amended law of 1913 should exist at the same time, yet that intention, even under the act of 1906, was not effective for lack of appropriate machinery to carry it into effect. These considerations lead to the following conclusions:

1. Whether or not the general assembly intended to amend section 7488 or to repeal it by implication, the amendment of section 5649 so as to strike out of that section all machinery for receiving credit on road taxes renders said section 7488 inoperative insofar as the right to work out the road tax therein provided for is concerned.

2. Inasmuch as it is of the essence of section 7488 that the tax therein provided for shall be subject to be worked out by the taxpayers, subsequent legislation which renders the labor provision thereof inoperative, is equivalent to a repeal of the whole section. That is to say, the legislature would not originally have granted to the township trustees authority to make the levy mentioned in section 7488 in the absence of any machinery giving to the taxpayers the right to work the said tax out on the roads.

Therefore, I am of the opinion that section 7488 will be no longer effective when the amendment of section 5649, General Code, becomes effective, which will be, as stated in the former opinion, sometime in August of this year. To this extent the former opinion must be regarded as reversed.

This conclusion makes it necessary to consider the other two questions asked in your letter of May 17th, which may be combined into a single question as follows:

> "Inasmuch as the change in the law did not take place until August, 1913, if township trustees have levied this year taxes under section 7488, may the taxpayer discharge the same by labor after the date when the repeal and amendment of section 5649, General Code, becomes effective."

This question is of considerable difficulty. Prior to the enactment of the Smith one per cent. law, so-called, the road taxes to be worked out in a given year were to be fixed earlier in the year so that the road labor in discharge thereof could be performed during the succeeding summer. The machinery for this purpose was provided by section 7485, General Code, which provides as follows:

> "The auditor of each county, after the county commissioners and township trustees at their annual sessions for that purpose, have determined the amounts to be assessed, for road purposes in their respective counties and townships, shall forthwith give notice, in a newspaper in general circulation in the county, of the per cent. on each hundred dollars of the valuation so determined to be assessed in such county and township respectively. He shall make a list of the names of taxpayers, and the amount of road tax with which each stands charged, and transmit it to the clerk of the proper township."

I think it is apparent from this section, read in connection with section 5649, in its present form, i. e. prior to its amendment, wherein the superintendent is required to make his return "on or before the 5th day of September in the year in which levied," and wherein it is further provided that "when such road tax is paid in labor, such labor shall be performed before the first day of September in the year in which levied," that the labor should be performed before the tax was technically charged for collection. The Smith law may have had some technical effect upon the operation of section 7485 after all, though the budget commission has no control over levies which may be worked out by the taxpayer. It may be (although the point is not decided) that the levies themselves do not become perfect until they have been certified through the budget commission.

However, this may be, I am of the opinion that section 5649, General Code, in its original form, as aforesaid, continued to control after the enactment of the Smith law, and that the labor to be performed must be credited upon the tax levied in the year of the performance thereof and not upon the taxes charged in the fall of the preceding year.

If, therefore, township trustees have made a levy for this year under section 7488, General Code (which they have the right to do), road labor performed, at least up to the date when the amendatory act became effective, can be credited upon the payment of such taxes through the machinery provided in the present section 5649. This seems to be clear. Your question, however, relates to the right of the taxpayers to receive a certificate from the superintendent for labor performed after the amendment of section 5649 became effective.

It will not be necessary to quote section 5649 in full. The section is a lengthy one and its contents have already been described. I have already pointed out that it is essential to the legislative idea implied in section 7488, General Code, that the levy therein authorized to be made, may be worked out by the taxpayer. I have also shown that section 5649, General Code, in its original form, and the machinery therein provided for, is necessary in order to complete the idea of section 7488. In other words, when the levy is made under section 7488, the right of the taxpayer to work out the road tax during the succeeding summer thereupon attaches under section 5649 in its original form, and, therefore, the superintendent will continue to issue certificates, at least up to the date when the change in the law became effective.

In my opinion the case comes within the reason and spirit of section 26, General Code, which provides that:

> "Whenever a statute is repealed or amended, such repeal or amendment shall not in any manner affect pending * * * proceedings * * * unless so expressed."

I am of the opinion that the working out of the road labor under a levy made under authority of section 7488 is a proceeding and that the taxpayer has a right to pay the tax in road labor and to have issued to him a certificate, so that the amendment of section 5649 does not by virtue of section 26, General Code, operate to take away that right.

Virtually, then, the amendment to section 5649, General Code, although it technically took effect sometime early in August, 1913, did not become complete until after the first of September, 1913, and does not operate at all until the period for the collection of road taxes in the year 1914. Therefore, any taxpayer might work out, at any time, prior to the first of September, 1913, the road tax levied under section 7488, General Code, in the year 1913.

Yours very truly,
TIMOTHY S. HOGAN,
Attorney General.

A FOREIGN CORPORATION, OTHER THAN A TRANSPORTATION COMPANY, MUST PAY FRANCHISE TAX ON ALL ITS PROPERTY AND ALL THE BUSINESS TRANSACTED IN OHIO.

Where a foreign corporation, other than a transportation company, transacts business and has property in Ohio, so as to make it subject to the annual tax on foreign corporations, all the business so transacted in Ohio, together with the property so owned and used, may be taken into consideration in determining that proportion of the authorized capital stock of the corporation on which the computation of the franchise tax may be based.

COLUMBUS, OHIO, Nov. 25, 1913.

Tax Commission of Ohio, Columbus, Ohio.

GENTLEMEN:—Mr. Laylin, of this department, informs me that the Tax Commission has been confronted in various forms with a question which may be generally stated as follows:

"A foreign corporation, other than a transportation company transacts some business and has some property in Ohio, and is admittedly liable for some franchise taxes. A part of its business in Ohio, however, consists of sales of manufactured products in the original package or otherwise under such circumstances as to lend support to the contention that such business is interstate in character, and constitutes interstate business.

"In determining the amount of the authorized capital stock of the corporation represented by its property and business in Ohio should the commission take into account the business which may be regarded as interstate in character?"

Mr. Laylin informs me that a question of this type has been raised, for example, in the matter of the National Biscuit Company, and that the question has been discussed informally but that no formal request for an opinion has come to this department from you. I have determined to adopt the somewhat unusual course of advising you in advance of the receipt of a formal request for an opinion for the reason that the question has been cleared up to a considerable extent by the decision of the Supreme Court of the United States in the case of the Baltic Mining Company vs. Massachusetts, rendered on Monday, November 3, 1913, a copy of which I have received from the clerk of that court.

In that case the Supreme Court sustained the constitutionality of a law something like our own law for taxation of the franchises and privileges of foreign corporations. The most important section of the Massachusetts act is as follows:

"Every foreign corporation shall, in each year, at the time of filing its annual certificate of condition, pay to the treasurer and receiver general, for the use of the commonwealth, an excise tax to be assessed by the tax commissioner of one-fiftieth of one per cent of the par value of its authorized capital stock as stated in its annual certificate of condition; but the amount of such excise tax shall not in any one year exceed the sum of two thousand dollars."

It will be observed that under the Massachusetts law every foreign corporation is obliged to pay on the entire value of its authorized capital stock, whereas under the Ohio law a foreign corporation is required to pay only on such portion of its authorized capital stock as is represented by its property and business in Ohio, as compared with its property and business outside of the state. In the abstract sense, therefore, the basis of taxation under the Massachusetts statute is more extensive, so to speak, than that under the Ohio statute.

The Baltic Mining Company which took the case to the Supreme Court of the United States had certain property and assets in Massachusetts but was engaged principally in the business of mining in the state of Michigan. Some of its product was sold for delivery in Massachusetts and transported from the Michigan smelter to the purchaser. The place of sale, as a general rule, was New York City, although in exceptional instances sales might be made out of the usual course of business in the state of Massachusetts for delivery there.

A case heard contemporaneously with that of the Baltic Mining Company was that of the S. S. White Dental Manufacturing Company vs. Massachusetts, which presents the converse of the case of the Baltic Mining Company, in that this company, while a non-resident of the state, had a business office and sales room in Boston from which place it conducted a business in part consisting of mail orders received at, and filled from the Boston sales room, and delivered to points outside of the state by means of the instrumentalities of interstate commerce.

As stated by Mr. Justice Day, who delivered the opinion:

> "The specific objections of the plaintiffs in error to the imposition of this tax under the facts shown in the records are threefold: First, the tax is a regulation of interstate commerce, in that it imposes a direct burden upon that portion of the business and capital of the plaintiffs in error which is devoted to interstate commerce; second, the tax is in violation of the due process of law clause, because it attempts to impose taxes upon property beyond the jurisdiction of the Commonwealth of Massachusetts; and third, the tax denies to the plaintiffs in error the equal protection of the law."

The court dismissed all three of these objections and in so doing distinguished first, the class of cases holding that a corporation may not be excluded by a state from the privilege of conducting an interstate business within its borders; holding in substance that although the state might not prohibit the business, it, nevertheless might tax it. The court distinguished also cases like Western Union Telegraph Co. vs. Kansas, 216 U. S., 1, Pullman Co. vs. Kansas, 216 U. S., 56 and other similar cases on the ground which is perhaps best stated by quoting from the opinion itself:

> "In the Kansas cases the business of both complaining companies was commerce, the same instrumentalities and the same agencies carrying on in the same places the business of the companies of state and interstate character. In the Western Union Telegraph Company case, the company had a large amount of property permanently located within the state and between 800 and 900 offices constantly carrying on both state and interstate business. The Pullman Company had been running a large number of cars within the state, in state and interstate business, for many years. There was no attempt to separate the intrastate business from interstate business by the limitations of state lines in its prosecution.
> "An examination of the previous decisions of this court shows that they have been decided upon the application to the facts of each case of the principles which we have undertaken to state, and a tax has only been invalidated where its necessary effect was to burden interstate commerce or to tax property beyond the jurisdiction of the state. In the cases at bar the business for which the companies are chartered is not of itself commerce. True it is that their products are sold and shipped in interstate commerce, and to that extent they are engaged in the business of carrying on interstate commerce and are entitled to the protection of the Federal Constitution against laws burdening commerce of that character. Interstate commerce of all kinds is within the protection of the constitution of the United States, and it is not within the authority of a state to tax it by burdensome laws. From the statement of facts, it is apparent however, that each of the corporations in question is carrying on a purely local and domestic business quite separate from its interstate transactions."

And also at another point, the following language is employed:

> "It is the commerce itself which must not be burdened by state exactions which interfere with the exclusive federal authority over it."

I apprehend that the distinction in the mind of the court lies in the fact that there is a difference, so far as the question made in the case was concerned, between foreign corporations engaged in transporting interstate commerce, i.e., furnishing the very instrumentalities by which that commerce may be carried on, and corporations engaging in such commerce as merchants or manufacturers and the like.

The second point respecting the taxation of property outside of the jurisdiction of the state was decided upon the ground that the authorized capital stock, as distinguished from the actual capital stock is a proper measure of the value of a privilege taxable in the state, and cannot be regarded as in substance a tax on property of a corporation. On this point Mr. Justice Day uses the following language:

> "In these cases the ultimate contention is not that the receipts from interstate commerce are taxed as such, but the property of the corporations, including that used in such commerce, represented by the authorized capital of the corporations, is taxed and therefore interstate commerce is unlawfully burdened by a state statute. While the tax is imposed by taking a percentage of the authorized capital, the agreed facts show that the authorized capital is only a part of the capital of the corporations, respectively. In the Baltic Mining Company case, the authorized capital is $2,500,000, while the entire property and assets are $10,776,000; and in the White Dental Company case the authorized capital is $1,000,000, while the assets aggregate $5,711,718.29. Further, the Massachusetts statute limits the tax to a maximum of $2,000. The conclusion, therefore, that the authorized capital is only used as the measure of a tax, in itself lawful, without the necessary effect of burdening interstate commerce, brings the legislation within the authority of the state. So, if the tax is, as we hold it to be, levied upon a legitimate subject of such taxation, it is not void because imposed upon property beyond the state's jurisdiction, for the property itself is not taxed. In so far as it is represented in the authorized capital stock it is used only as a measure of taxation, and, as we have seen, such measure may be found in property or in the receipts from property not in themselves taxable."

This decision, then, permits the use of the authorized capital stock of a foreign corporation as the sole measure of a tax upon the privilege of that corporation to do business in the state; that is to say, if a corporation is admittedly taxable at all on its privileges the tax may be based upon the whole authorized capital stock, and if upon the whole authorized capital stock then, assuredly, upon any portion thereof less than the whole whether that portion be ascertained by comparing business done in the state, which is interstate in character, with the whole business of the corporation, or otherwise.

I am, therefore, of the opinion that under the Ohio law, the commission is entitled to and should use all the business of the corporation transacted in Ohio whether technically of an interstate character or not, for the purpose of ascertaining the proportion of the authorized capital stock which shall constitute the measure of the tax.

Not desiring to be misunderstood, I call attention also to the fact that the Ohio law itself limits the measure of the tax to something less than the entire authorized capital stock of the corporation, although under the decision cited this limitation might perhaps be regarded as unnecessary from the view points of constitutional limitations. Hence, it follows that in applying the rule of the statute care must be taken to ascertain whether or not the business in question is actually transacted "in Ohio." The mere fact, for example, that a foreign corporation might sell goods to an Ohio purchaser would not of itself make that sale Ohio business within the meaning of the "Willis law." The sale must itself be consummated in Ohio in order to be counted on that side of the ledger, so to speak. Furthermore, the commission must bear in mind that the corporation is not liable at all if it is engaged solely in interstate business or if it is one of the transporters of interstate commerce mentioned in section 188, General Code; the non-liability of the latter class of companies existing regardless of the extent of the interstate transportation as compared with intrastate business of the company.

I might state in this connection that the fact that the Massachusetts law, as interpreted by the supreme judicial court of that state, did not apply to this class of companies, may have been one of the elements inducing the Supreme Court of the United States to hold the law constitutional. At least these facts are commented upon by Justice Day in his opinion.

In short, for the present purposes, I would limit this opinion to the statement that where business is actually transacted in Ohio, as by the making of sales in the original package or by the making of sales from an Ohio warehouse for delivery outside of the state, so that the business is transacted "in Ohio" within the meaning of the "Willis law," such business so transacted while "technically interstate" in character, may lawfully be taken into consideration by the commission in ascertaining the taxable proportion of the authorized capital stock of a foreign corporation.

While the decision in the Massachusetts case above referred to called my attention to the question in such a way as to induce me to address this opinion to you, the above conclusions are supported also by the case of People ex rel Parke, Davis & Co. vs. Roberts, 171 U. S. 657. The facts in this case are strikingly similar to the above hypothetical statement.

Parke, Davis & Co., was a corporation organized under the laws of the state of Michigan for the manufacture and sale of chemical and pharmaceutical preparations. Its manufactory was situated in the city of Detroit. The corporation had a warehouse and depot in the city of New York and there kept on hand varying quantities of its manufactured products which were sold there at wholesale in original packages.

The resident manager of the company in New York, in addition to selling the manufactured articles of the company, also sold crude drugs imported from foreign countries in the original packages.

The law of the state of New York imposed upon foreign corporations, together with domestic coporations, "a tax upon its franchise or business" to be computed upon "the amount of capital stock employed within this state."

It is claimed, of course, that the corporation was not liable to any tax, for the reason that it transacted nothing but interstate and foreign business.

Mr. Justice Shiras delivering the opinion of the court, from which Mr. Justice Harlan only dissented, first made the distinction already referred to in this opinion between corporations engaged in the business of furnishing instrumentalities of interstate and foreign commerce, on the one hand, and corporations engaged in interstate commerce in the manner in which Parke, Davis & Co., was admittedly engaged therein, in the following language:

"When a corporation of one state, whose business is that of a common carrier, transacts part of that business in other states, difficult questions have arisen, * * *. It has been found difficult to prescribe a satisfactory rule whereby the public burdens of taxation can be justly apportioned between the business and agencies of such a corporation in different states and the subject has been much discussed in several recent cases. (Citing Western Union Teleg. Co. vs. Atty Gen. 125 U. S. 530; Railway Co. vs. Backus, 154 U. S. 421; Pullman's Palace Car Co. vs. Pennsylvania, 141 U. S. 18, and Adams Express Co. vs. Ohio, 165 U. S. 194.)

"It is not necessary in this case to enter into a subject so difficult, but the cases are referred to as showing the distinction between corporations organized to carry on interstate commerce, and having a quasi-public character, and corporations organized to conduct strictly private business.

"The corporation concerned in the present litigation is of the latter character, and the case comes within the doctrine of Paul vs. Virginia, 8 Wall, 168, and subsequent cases affirming that one," (citing in particular Horn Silver Mining Co. vs. New York, 143 U. S. 305).

This distinction was considered by Mr. Justice Shiras and the court at that time as sufficient ground upon which to uphold the New York law and its application to corporations doing business in that state in the manner in which Parke, Davis & Co. was doing business therein, as against the objection that such application of the statute would constitute a burden upon interstate commerce. I shall perhaps have hesitated, however, to apply the doctrine of the case last discussed to the situation which now confronts your commission in the light of the many more recent decisions of the supreme court of the United States upon the general subject, and particularly in the light of what may be termed the "Kansas cases" already referred to herein, but for the fact that in the Massachusetts case already discussed, the court has re-affirmed its adherence to the doctrine of the Parke, Davis & Co. case and to the distinctions therein made between corporations actually carrying on interstate commerce on the one hand, and corporations whose mercantile operations might be regarded as technically interstate on the other hand. Then, too, the express reference to the unquestioned propriety of basing a franchise tax upon the authorized capital stock as distinguished from the actual capital of the corporation, made in the Massachusetts case, seems to me to furnish a final cumulative ground for the opinion which I have already expressed.

Subject to the qualifications which I have tried to outline, then, and with the additional remark that the statute of Ohio does not go so far apparently as, under the doctrine of these cases it might go without violating the federal constitution, I beg to advise the commission that where a foreign corporation actually transacts business in Ohio (as distinguished from what may be termed the transaction of "Ohio business," i. e. business with the citizens of Ohio), and owns property in this state, so as to make it subject to the annual tax on foreign corporations, all the business so transacted in Ohio, together with the property so owned and used, may be taken into consideration in determining that proportion of the authorized capital stock of the corporation on which the computation of the franchise tax may be based.

Yours very truly,

TIMOTHY S. HOGAN,

Attorney General.

PASSENGER FULL CREW LAW—INTERPRETATION—CRIMINAL OFFICES—"COACHES"—EXEMPTION OF DINING CAR AND PRIVATE CAR —"CARS CARRYING PASSENGERS" INCLUDES PULLMAN CAR.

In construing the various offices defined in the passenger full crew law, 102 O. L. pages 508 and 509, under the express provisions of that act, the term day coach shall include a combination mail or baggage and passenger car.

The term "cars carrying passengers" shall include pullman cars and day coaches, but shall not include state dining cars, and private cars. The term day coaches means the ordinary day coach as used and understood in the railroad world.

COLUMBUS, OHIO, Jan. 6, 1913.

Public Service Commission, Columbus, Ohio.

GENTLEMEN:—I am in receipt of your communication in which you request my opinion as to the meaning of what is usually designated as the Passenger Full Crew Law, being House Bill No. 93, and found on pages 508 and 509 of volume 102, Ohio Laws. In reply thereto I desire to say that on September 12, 1911, I rendered an opinion to your board, in which I endeavored to construe an offense, or how many offenses said act defines; and I can do no more now than to more fully construe said law, and, therefore, render the following as supplementary to the original opinion:

Under the provisions of said act there are six offenses defined, as set forth in the opinion of September 12, 1911, as follows:

Whoever, being superintendent, trainmaster, or other employe of a railroad company, sends or causes to be sent outside of the yard limits,

1. A train of not more than five cars, any one of which carries passengers, with a crew of less than one engineer, one fireman, one conducter and one brakeman;

2. A train of five cars, four of which said cars are day coaches carrying passengers, with a crew consisting of less than one engineer, one fireman, one conductor, one brakeman and less than one additional brakeman;

3. A train of more than five cars, three or more of which are day coaches carrying passengers, with a crew consisting of less than one engineer, one fireman, one conductor, one brakeman, and less than one additional brakeman;

4. A train of more than six cars, four of which carry passengers with a crew consisting of less than one engineer, one fireman, one conductor, one brakeman and less than one additional brakeman;

5. A train of more than seven cars, two or more of which carry passengers, with a crew of less than one engineer, one fireman, one conductor, one brakeman, with less than one additional brakeman;

6. A train of six or more cars carrying passengers, with a crew consisting of less than one engineer, one fireman, one conductor, one brakeman, and less than one additional brakeman;

Said act also defines another offense, namely:

That whoever, being superintendent, trainmaster or other employe of a railroad company, sends or causes to be sent outside of the yard limits a passenger train with more than two cars, either of which carries passengers, and requires the brakeman to perform the duties of a baggagemaster or express agent, shall be fined not less than twenty-five dollars for each offense, etc.

This act also provides that a combination mail or baggage and passenger car shall be regarded as a day coach and counted as one car, but exempts straight dining cars and private cars from being classified as such cars as are carrying passengers.

Under the first offense defined in said act a superintendent, trainmaster or other employe of a railroad company may not send out a train of not more than five cars, any one of which carries passengers, with less than a full crew, namely: one engineer, one fireman, one conductor and one brakeman, unless the car carrying passengers is a private car; in which event such train does not come within the provisions of said act, on account of the exemption of private cars. But any other cars of such train, carrying passengers, must be considered in the making up of said train for the purposes of said act.

In defining the second offense the legislature has used the term "day coaches carrying passengers," and has provided that a superintendent, trainmaster or other employe of a railroad company may not send or cause to be sent outside of the yard limits a train of five cars, four of which said cars are day coaches carrying passengers, with a crew consisting of less than one engineer, one fireman, one conductor, one brakeman and less than one additional brakeman. The term "day coach" was intened by the legislature to mean the ordinary day coach as used and understood in the railroad world.

Under the third offense defined in said act a superintendent, trainmaster or other employe of a railroad company may not send out, or cause to be sent out of the yard limits a train of more than five cars, three or more of which are day coaches carrying passengers, with a crew of less than the full crew with one additional brakeman. In computing the number of coaches carrying passengers the same rule applies as is set forth under Offense Number Two, above defined.

The fourth offense consists in sending out a train of more than six cars, four of which carry passengers, with a crew of less than a full crew and one additional brakeman; and under this offense is included any train of more than six cars, four of which carry passengers, either day coaches or pullman coaches, or any other car carrying passengers except private cars.

The fifth offense consists of sending a train outside of the yard limits, of more than seven cars, two or more of which carry passengers, with less than a full crew and one additional brakeman; and in computing the number of cars carrying passengers any cars may be included therein except private cars.

The sixth offense consists of sending or causing to be sent outside of the yard limits a train of six or more cars, carrying passengers, with a crew of less than one engineer, one fireman, one conductor, one brakeman and one additional brakeman; and in computing the number of cars carrying passengers all cars may be included, which carry passengers, except dining cars and private cars, exempted under the provisions of said act.

The other offense described in said act consists of sending, or causing to be sent outside of the yard limits, a passenger train of more than two cars, any of which carries passengers, and requiring the brakeman to perform the duties of baggagemaster or express agent.

I think that the legislature, in enacting said act, intended to exempt pullman coaches from certain offenses, and to include them in others.

In computing the number of cars which go to make up a train, or trains, under the respective offenses defined, a combination mail or baggage and passenger car shall be regarded as a day coach, and as one car.

I come to the above conclusions for the reason that the legislature, in enacting said law, must have taken into consideration the fact that pullman coaches universally have porters thereon for the purpose of taking care of passengers traveling in said coaches; but in long trains, as those set forth in offenses four, five and six, that although composed of day coaches and pullman coaches, carrying passengers, no distinction is to be made and each class of cars should be counted in making up such trains.

Very truly yours,
TIMOTHY S. HOGAN,
Attorney General.

PUBLIC UTILITY—POWER OF PUBLIC SERVICE COMMISSION TO COMPEL ADDITIONS AND EXTENSIONS UPON COMPLAINT OR UPON OWN INITIATIVE—CONTEMPLATED MERGER NO DEFENSE.

Under sections 2329 and 2330, of the "public utilities act," the public service commission is given ample power, either upon its own initiative or upon complaint, to compel, in accordance with the procedure required, any additions, extensions, improvements, repairs or changes which are just and reasonable, and which may be necessary to give patrons, adequate and sufficient service. The fact that the telephone company is contemplating a merger with a rival concern does not operate as a defense against the orders of the commission, on the ground that compliance therewith would compel unnecessary duplication and expense.

COLUMBUS, OHIO, December 4, 1912.

Public Service Commission of Ohio, Columbus, Ohio.

GENTLEMEN:—I acknowledge receipt of yours of September 11, 1912, the pertinent part of which is as follows:

> "I am directed by the commission to lay before you for an opinion, the following state of facts:
> "About four months ago a resident of Dayton, Ohio, complained informally to the commission that he had made application to The Home Telephone Company, of that city, for service and was refused. The Home Telephone Company in Dayton is an independent interest, being owned by the same parties that own The Citizens' Telephone Company at Columbus. Upon receipt of informal complaint above referred to, we took up with the manager of The Home Telephone Company at Dayton and we refered it to Mr. Frank Davis, of Columbus. Mr. Davis asked for an interview and at the interview plainly stated that the ownership of the independent telephone interests in the larger cities in Ohio did not, at the present time, intend to extend their existing facilities for the reason that a general policy of merger with the Bell interests was anticipated and that a duplication of property would be an economic waste.
> "Subsequently we sent our telephone expert to Dayton and he reports that it would cost one hundred and seventy-five thousand dollars ($175,000.00) to equip The Home Telephone Company's plant at Dayton to take care of the business now offering, and the reasonable prospective needs of the near future.
> "Kindly understand that the additional equipment referred to is not all in the nature of extension. There are localities in Dayton where the existing cables are drawn upon to their full capacity, and to serve their patrons in the same localities would require additional equipment at the central plant and additional cable extended from the central plant. Some of the $175,000.00 referred to would be expended in pure extension; that is to say, in carrying lines into territory beyond the termini of existing lines, but the greater part of it would not be so expended; but rather expended in the increase of facilities in the territory now partially covered.

"It is but fair to say that when the city of Dayton conferred upon The Home Telephone Company the franchise by which the streets and alleys were occupied and were to be occupied, the expectation undoubtedly was that the entire population within the municipal limits would be served. It is also but fair to say that the franchise in the city of Dayton was not conferred by the city itself, but was accorded by order of the probate judge after the city itself had refused."

Based on the above facts, your interrogatory to me is as follows:

"The question is, what authority, if any, lies in the public service commission of Ohio to proceed on its own initiative to compel The Home Telephone Company of Dayton to accord the citizens of Dayton the service demanded?"

You also say, at the close of your letter, "it is pretty hard to draw the line between 'extensions' as the word is used in section 53, and the word 'additions,' as used in section 30, when applied to this state of facts." I fully concur with you in your last remarks.

In the first place, it is not at all clear from your statement of facts what portion of the required constructions are "extensions," and what are "additions."

All these matters of "extension," "addition," adequate service, etc., on the part of public utilities, are provided for in the public utilities act, 102 O. L. 549.

This is a lengthy and comprehensive law; and like all acts attempting to cover too much ground, it is, in many places, ambiguous, and repeats some of its provisions in different sections.

Confusion necessarily arises by reason of the incorporation of different acts of commission and omission, together with the remedies therefor, in one section, and attempting to duplicate the same in another.

Section 23 of said act provides "upon complaint in writing, against any public utility, by any person, firm or corporation, or upon the initiative or complaint of the commission that * * * any service is, or will be, inadequate or cannot be obtained, the commission shall notify the public utility, etc." A hearing is then provided for, and the commission, according to the facts in each case, may fix and determine the just and reasonable service to be thereafter rendered.

Section 29 of said act provides as follows:

"Whenever the commission shall be of the opinion, after hearing had upon complaint, as in this act provided, or upon its own initiative or complaint, served as in this act provided, that the rules, regulations, measurements or practices of any public utility with respect to its public service are unjust or unreasonable, or that the equipment or service thereof is inadequate, inefficient, improper or insufficient, or cannot be obtained, it shall determine the regulations, practices and service thereafter to be installed, observed, used and rendered, and fix and prescribe the same by order to be served upon the public utility. It shall thereafter be the duty of such public utility and all of its officers, agents and official employes to obey the same and do everything necessary or proper to carry the same into effect and operation; provided, that nothing herein contained shall be so construed as to give to the commission power to make any order requiring the performance of any act or the doing of anything which is unjust or unreasonable or in violation of any law of the state or the United States."

Section 30 provides as follows:

"Whenever the commission shall be of the opinion, after hearing had, as in this act provided, or upon its own initiative or complaint, as in this act provided, that repairs or improvements to the plant or equipment of any public utility, should reasonably be made, or that any additions thereto should reasonably be made, in order to promote the convenience or welfare of the public, or of employes, or in order to secure adequate service or facilities, the commission may make and serve an apropriate order with respect thereto, directing that such repairs, improvements, changes or additions be made within a reasonable time, and in a manner to be specified therein. Every such public utility, its officers, agents and official employes shall obey such order and make such repairs, improvements, changes and additions required of such public utility by such order."

Section 53 of said act provides that the council of any municipality may require of any public utility such additions or extensions to its distributing plant as shall be deemed reasonable, etc. So far as "additions" are provided for in this section, the remedy is cumulative to the provisions for the same word in section 30. So that, "additions" can be compelled to be made either by the council or the commission.

Section 14 provides that "every public utility shall furnish necessary and adequate service and facilities which shall be reasonable and just * * *."

Section 15 says "every public utility shall furnish and provide with respect to its business such instrumentalities and facilities as shall be adequate and in all respects just and reasonable."

I have quoted the law extensively to show the duties of the telephone company and the powers of the commission. It makes no difference how this company acquired its franchise in Dayton, whether through the probate court or council. In return for such franchise, it is bound to furnish adequate service to the citizens; and if it requires additions to its plant or equipments, it must make the same, provided that it is just and reasonable, under the facts and circumstances, so to do.

Neither does it make any difference that the company claims it is about to sell out to the Bell Company, or be merged therewith. The company must render adequate service to the citizens, regardless of prospective sales or mergers, unless the costs thereof are not just and reasonable under all the circumstances; and that is a question for the commission, after a full and impartial hearing, to determine. The company cannot retain control of the territory of the city of Dayton and only supply the citizens thereof in a half-hearted and inefficient manner.

If the service is refused, as you say in your letter, then it "cannot be obtained," and falls within the language of sections 23 and 29. If the service is inadequate, as provided for in section 23, or inadequate, inefficient, improper or insufficient, or cannot be obtained, as recited in section 29, then it clearly makes a case which you should investigate and make such orders as are just and reasonable. You need not worry much about the name you shall apply to the further equipment of the plant for efficient service, whether it is a repair, improvement, addition, change or enlargement. You must apply common, ordinary judgment in viewing these matters in the full light of all the circumstances and say whether these changes or additions, etc., should be made by the company for the proper service of the citizens of Dayton.

By reference to the law quoted above you are given full power, either on complaint of others, or on your own initiative and complaint, to take up this matter, and make such orders as you see proper and which are just and reasonable. You will take into consideration the investments of the company, the revenue derived, the number of patrons, the territory occupied and to be occupied, the nature and extent of the service rendered and to be rendered, and all other facts connected with the case.

Exercise your best judgment and deal fairly with the citizens and the company and then make and enforce such orders as are warranted by the facts.

Very truly yours,

TIMOTHY S. HOGAN,
Attorney General.

PUBLIC UTILITIES—RAILROAD COMPANIES—RIGHT TO CHARGE FOR SINGLE JOURNEY IN EXCESS OF TOTAL AMOUNT CHARGED FOR INTERMEDIATE JOURNEY.

A railroad company has the right to make such reasonable rates and regulations pertaining to the charge for a single journey as its sees fit to impose. A journey in which a passenger is engaged is the whole journey from a place of departure to his destination and the fare which is due is for the whole distance. A passenger has no right to split up a single journey into several, by tendering fares at intermediate stations for intermediate distances, even though he might thus secure a passage cheaper than the regular fare made for his entire contemplated trip. The rates for intermediate trips are made in accordance with local conditions for the benefit of local persons, which a person contemplating a longer trip may not take advantage of.

A railroad company, therefore, is not exceeding its rights in charging forty cents from Youngstown to Leetonia, Ohio, although its fare from Youngstown to Columbiana, an intermediate point is only thirty cents, and its fare for the remaining distance, to wit: from Columbiana to Leetonia is five cents, and a passenger may not indirectly avoid this rule by disembarking at an intermediate point and reboarding the train at the same point.

COLUMBUS, OHIO, January 29, 1913.

Public Service Commission of Ohio, Columbus, Ohio.

GENTLEMEN:—In your letter of October 7, 1912, you say:

> "Please refer to attached correspondence with Mr. W. G. Wells, of Youngstown, Ohio, which involves a very abstruse legal problem. Should be pleased to have an opinion from you relative thereto."

Mr. Wells' letter to your board is as follows:

"The enclosed affidavit is self-explanatory. Will you kindly inform me, viz.:

"1st. What is the passenger fare on the Youngstown & Southern Railroad from Youngstown to Leetonia?

"2nd. If a through passenger pays the fare of 30 cents from Youngstown to Columbiana, does he have to pay 10 cents from Columbiana to Leetonia?

"3rd. Does getting off and on the car at Columbiana make any difference in the fare?"

His accompanying affidavit sets forth:

"That the passenger fare on 'The Youngstown and Southern Ry. Co's. road from Youngstown, Ohio to Columbus, Ohio, is 30 cents; and from Columbiana, Ohio, to Leetonia, Ohio, 5 cents.

"That he purchased from said company on September, 9, 1912, coupon book No. 4797, for '100 rides,' each coupon 'good for one five-cent fare' and "good between all stations for one or more persons.'

"That on September 7, 1912, he rode on said road from Leetonia to Columbiana when the conductor—McElroy—took up one of the coupons, and he rode from Columbiana to Youngstown when the conductor took up 7 coupons.

"That on September 10, 1912, he purchased from said company a regular ticket from Leetonia to Columbiana and used the same. Then went on to Youngstown when the conductor—McElroy—took up 7 coupons.

"That on September 10, 1912, he went on said road from Youngstown to Columbiana when the conductor—Bacon—took up 6 coupons; got off the car and returned to the same for Leetonia—the conductor took up 2 coupons.

"That on September 11, 1192, he purchased from said company a regular ticket from Leetonia to Columbiana and return, and used the ticket to Columbiana, then went on to Youngstown on the same car. The conductor—Flickinger—took up 7 coupons.

"That on September 11, 1912, he went on said road from Youngstown to Columbiana when the conductor—Puth—took up 6 coupons; went on to Leetonia when he gave the conductor said return ticket, the conductor demanded 5 cents more fare which was paid under protest."

The substance of your answer is:

"The question that you raise is one that involves a very uncertain legal situation. The published tariff passenger fare of The Youngstown & Southern Railway Company, Youngstown to Leetonia is 40 cents, Youngstown to Columbiana, 30 cents, and Columbiana to Leetonia 5 cents. You will observe that the combination is less than the through rate. Your contention is that if you pay from Leetonia to Columbiana, then from Columbiana to Youngstown, that the railroad has no right to demand more. As above stated, this is a very doubtful question. Your trip is through from Leetonia to Youngstown and the published fare for that trip is 40 cents. On the other hand, you have paid the tariff fare, Leetonia to Columbiana and Columbiana to Youngstown. The court decisions, so far as there are any, seem to favor the right of the railroad to demand through fare, when they know, as a matter of actual fact, and the passenger is accorded through transportation. Just how far your debarking from a train at Leetonia and immediately re-embarking would change the situation, is problematical."

I have quoted extensively from the whole correspondence, in order that we may have all the salient points involved in the controversy before us.

The undisputed facts, as gathered from said correspondence, are substantially as follows:

(1) The published tariff passenger fare of The Youngstown & Southern Ry. Co., from Youngstown to Leetonia is 40 cents, being within the price authorized by statute to be charged for the distance between said points.

(2) The fare for local passengers from Youngstown to Columbiana (and intermediate stations), is 30 cents, and from Columbiana to Leetonia 5 cents.

(3) The conductors on said road uniformly refused to permit Wells to ride from Youngstown to Leetonia for 35 cents, in 5-cent coupons, or local tickets being the sum of the local fares between the three stations on that route.

(4) Said conductors refused to allow this passenger to split up his journey, and pay from station to station, based on the local fares between the same, but charged the full published tariff fare of 40 cents. to him and others, making the continuous journey from Youngstown to Leetonia.

The questions presented are not free from difficulty, owing to the dearth of authorities thereon.

"The journey is a single entire unit."

In section 1253, of Wyman on public service corporations, under the above title, at page 1108, the author says:

"The journey for which a passenger has a right to be received and upon which he enters when he is received, is the whole transit from the point of departure to his destination; the entire journey which he means at the particular time to take. This journey is a single unit of service; for if the carrier is entitled to make a single charge, and the passenger is entitled only to an unbroken carriage. Neither party has a right to break this single unit of service into two."

Under the title "The journey as a single unit," this author, in section 446, repeats the same language as above quoted.

The same author, in sections 1254 and 1255, page 1109, discusses the proposition further, under the titles respectively: "Ticket good only for through transportation," and "Passengers cannot take two journeys for a single fare."

"Two partial fares for a single journey."

Under the above title, section 1256, page 1110, the author says:

"For this reason a passenger has no right to split up a single journey into two by tendering fare from the point of departure to an intermediate station, and then, continuing on the train, tender fare from the intermediate station to his destination, even though he might thus secure a cheaper passage by taking advantage of cheaper rates between two of the stations.

"The journey in which he is engaged is the whole journey from his place of departure to his destination; and the fare which is due, and which alone is due, is the fare for the whole distance. Same section page 1111.

"Change of destination during the journey."

Section 1260, page 1113, of the same author, says:

"If a passenger takes a train intending to go to an intermediate station, but during his journey changes his mind and determines to go further, he is still proposing to take a single journey, and must pay the difference between the fare he has already paid and the entire fare for the whole journey he decides to take, but upon doing so he would, it seems, have a right to stay in the train and complete his journey."

Under the title, "The journey the unit in passenger service," Beale and Wyman on Railroad Rate Regulations, section 671, uses the same language as above and further says:

"Furthermore it is essential that the passenger when taking the train should have determined what journey he shall take and should be ready to pay his fare for that journey."

Section 444, page 382, same author, in discussing "public service upon a unit basis," says:

"One applying to a public service company for service is not altogether free to determine what service he will have, and for what amount of service he will pay. It is for the public service company itself in the first instance to decide upon what basis it will render service, and the decision of the company as to the units in which it will provide service is conclusive unless their section is unreasonable. Thus one who wishes to go on a journey cannot demand the right to pay mile by mile, but the company may insist that he pay for the whole journey as a unit whenever fare is demanded."

Hutchinson on Carriers, 3rd edition, section 1042, page 1202, under the heading: "Through passengers cannot claim the advantage of local excursion or competitive rates between intermediate points," says:

"When the through fare from the place of departure to passenger's destination is greater than the sum of the local fare between the place of departure and an intermediate point plus the local fare between that intermediate point and the passenger's destination, owing to the existence of a competitive rate between the place of departure or destination and the intermediate point, a passenger cannot stay on the train and tender the local fare plus the remaining local fare for his through carriage, instead of the existing through rate. By remaining on the train, the passenger showed an intention to make the contract one of through carriage, and he must pay the through rate. And it would seem that the same rule is applicable to excursion tickets."

The leading case on this subject, and which is extensively quoted in all the text books above cited by me, is that of London & Northwestern Railway vs. Hinchcliffe, 2 Kings Bench (1903), page 32. Referring to said leading case, section 675 of Beale and Wyman on railroad rate regulations says:

> "The facts in the case were these: the defendant, intending to travel by a particular train from Huddersfield to Manchester on plaintiff's railway, took a ticket to Stalybridge, an intermediate station, and after giving up this ticket on the arrival of the strain at Stalybridge remained in the carriage and tendered to the plaintiff's servants 7d., which was the amount of the fare from Stalybridge to Manchester, the difference between the fare from Huddersfield to Stalybridge and the through fare from Huddersfield to Manchester being 9d. The plaintiff refused the amount tendered, but allowed the defendant to travel on in the same train to Manchester, and sued him for the excess through fare; it was held that the plaintiffs were entitled to recover."

The latter part of the above section lays down the doctrine, that a through passenger, by rebooking at intermediate stations against the rules of the company, may obtain the advantage of tourist rates between such stations which were never intended for him, or holiday and excursion rates between inter mediate local stations by wrongfully splitting his journey.

> "If he (the passenger) had remained in the train, and informed the guard (conductor) that he wanted to go on to S., he would have had to pay the full fare from G. (his starting point) to S. (his destination)."

The above is the language of Chief Justice Darley of Australia, quoted on page 624 of Beale & Wyman on railroad rate regulations.

A railroad company has the right to make and enforce any rules as to carrying passengers, which are reasonable and not in conflict with law. This includes through rates, local rates, stop-over privileges, holiday rates, excursions, party tickets, coupon tickets, mileage books or any other arrangement which the company may see fit and proper to carry out, lawfully, as a carrier of passengers. The test of any rate, charge, or regulation in passenger service is: "Is the same reasonable under all the circumstances, surrounding and conditions, and not in violation of law?

Railroads, for instance, can charge more fare from A. to B. than from B. to A. Leon vs. B. & M. R. R., 9 I. C. C. Rep. (1903) 642.

A through rate is not unreasonable because it is higher than the sum of local rates fixed by state laws. 7 I. C. C. Rep. (1898) 601.

That railroads can charge a passenger higher cash fare on train, than for a ticket, over the same route, is universally upheld by the courts. For good and sufficient reasons, the company may establish regular rates between intermediate stations on its lines, or the accommodation of local passengers between said points. Labor trains to mines, or factories, or from one town to another, covering only a part of a line of road, have become a part of the industrial necessities for reduced rates; but all these arrangements are special in their nature, and established for the benefit and accommodation of the local passengers for whose convenience and accommodation they were installed. Through passengers and those not contiguous to the sections of the road included within these local arrangements, are not entitled to the benefits thereof as parts of their journeys when their units of travel are not co-extensive with points favored by these special rates. Certainly, any one, no matter where he lives, would be entitled to these local rates, when making a local journey between stations included in such provisions; but through passengers should inform conductors, if the rules so provide, of their destination, and pay the full fare, if they provided, as in this case, with mileage coupons. Through passengers seeking to pay from station to station, either on the train, or by rushing out at each station and purchasing a ticket and rushing back on again would cause confusion and interference with others entering or leaving the coaches. In the language of Chief Justice Darley, Beale & Wyman railroad rate regulation, section 675:

> "A person might (if such rules were not enforced as above set forth) in coming from G. to S., take a ticket from G. to the next station, and then travel on the C., and take a ticket from there to S., thus traveling over a considerable portion of the journey without a ticket. To obviate this it would be necessary, to look at the tickets at every station, which would lead to inconvenience and delay, not only to the railroad department, but to the public. In the present case the respondent, by rebooking, obtained the advantage of tourist rates between M. V. and S., which were never intended for him.
> "Without regard to any statutory authority, a carrier of passengers has, under the common law, the right to make reasonable rules and regulations for the conduct of his business. Cyc. vol. 6, page 545.
> "The right of the carrier to exact payment in advance as a condition of the right of the passenger to transportation is unquestioned." Cyc. vol. 6, page 547."

In the light of all the facts submitted in this case, and the law applying thereto, I am of the opinion that the railroad company has the right to make and enforce a rule requiring through passengers from Youngstown to Leetonia to pay the full published tariff fare of 40 cents; and that such passengers are not entitled to the benefit of the lower fare between intermediate stations, as a part of their unit of travel for the entire route aforesaid.

Of course if the railroad consents to such arrangement, or permits it, such acts would give the passenger the right to split his journey; but the company can do as it sees fit, within reasonable bounds, in such matters. Getting off at intermediate stations would not help the passenger, in this matter, who is equipped with ticket, coupon or mileage transportation, as you have stated, if he was on the train originally as a through passenger.

Such passenger, if required by the company, must pay the full legal published tariff fare from his start to destination, either in money, or such other evidences of transportation as are recognized and issued by the company.

Yours very truly,

TIMOTHY S. HOGAN,
Attorney General.

PUBLIC UTILITY—FRANCHISE BY MUNICIPALITY TO PUBLIC UTILITY IS A CONTRACT—COMMISSION HAS NO AUTHORITY OVER SAME.

It is well settled that a franchise granted by a municipal corporation to a public utility is a contract. As the public service commission is not given judicial power, it may not exercise supervision over and has no jurisdiction with respect to the enforcement of the terms of such franchise.

Section 614-8, General Code, therefore, which empowers the public service commission to examine public utilities and to keep informed as to their general conditions, their capitalization and their franchises and with respect to their compliances with franchises and charter requirements, may only be construed to permit such commission power to examine such franchises in order to inform itself as to the general conditions, capitalization, etc.

COLUMBUS, OHIO, December 10, 1912.

Public Service Commission of Ohio, Columbus, Ohio.

GENTLEMAN: I beg to acknowledge receipt of your letter of October 17, 1912, in which you state:

> "Suggestions have been made to the commission at various times that the commission had the authority and was therefore charged with the duty of requiring public service corporations to comply with the terms and conditions of franchises granted to them by municipal and county authorities, and to compel obedience to the provisions and conditions of contracts entered into by such public service corporations and public authorities."

and request my advice and construction as to that part of section 10 of the Public Service Commission act, section 614-8, General Code, which authorizes the commission to exercise general supervision over all public utilities with respect to their compliance with franchise and charter requirements.

In construing said section it is necessary to read the same in connection with the whole act, particularly for the reason that certain sections of said act except the operation thereof with respect to certain utilites, to which I shall hereafter refer.

Said section 614-8, General Code, provides as follows:

> "The commission shall have general supervision over all public utilities within its jurisdiction as hereinbefore defined, and shall have the power to examine the same and keep informed as to their general condition, their capitalization, their franchises and the manner in which their properties are leased, operated, managed, and conducted with respect to the adequacy or accommodation afforded by their service, and also with respect to the safety and security of the public and their employes, and with respect to their compliance with all provisions of law, orders of the commission, franchises and charter requirements * * *"

In order to properly construe said action it is necessary to look to the definition of "franchise" and apply the same to the use of the word as found in said section and act. In its legal meaning a franchise is a particular privilege conferred upon individuals by grant from the government. Franchises are usually held by corporations created for the purpose of enjoying them. The charter of a corporation is in itself a franchise from the state, creating said corporation and authorizing it to do the things for which it was formed. The Public Service Commission act was enacted for the purpose of giving to your commission a general supervision, by vesting it with the power and jurisdiction to supervise and regulate public utilities and railroads, as in said act defined and provided; and to require all public utilities to furnish their product, and render all services as required by the commission or by the law, and thereby insure to the public, from corporations and public utilities amenable to said act, the service which the law enjoins upon them.

By early decisions of our supreme court, which have been followed to the present day, a franchise granted by a municipality to a corporation or public utility is a contract, and the contractual relation existing under such franchise cannot be impaired by subsequent act of the legislature. Upon this theory I am of the opinion that section 10 of the Public Utility Act being section 614-8 of the General Code, was enacted by the general assembly with that well established principle of law in mind; and that the legislature, by said section, intended that your commission should have, and granted to it, the general supervision of all public utilities within its jurisdiction, with the object in view that your commission should see that such public utilities complied with all the provisions of the laws of the state, and the orders of the commission, franchises and charter requirements, only insofar as that supervision and jurisdiction did not, in any manner, impair the obligations of a contract between any municipality and such utility or utilities, created prior to the enactment of said public utility act, or any legal contract entered into between any municipality and any utility as in said act defined thereafter.

I am of the opinion, under the public utility act and the particular section heretofore referred to, that your commission would be without jurisdiction to entertain a complaint by any municipality against a utility or utilities, enjoying a franchise contract from such complaining municipality, as to the enforcement of a contractual relation between such public utility and said municipality, because the municipality would have its legal remedy against the utility to compel it to specifically perform its contract, or have its remedy in law against said utility or corporation for failure to perform the obligation enjoined upon it by such contractual relation. The powers and jurisdiction granted to the Public Service Commission under said section are confined to the enforcement of those duties, imposed upon a public utility by its charter or franchise, to the public and individuals thereof, as to adequacy of service and obedience to rates, under the terms of any franchise. The legislature did not, in creating the said commission, and enacting the provisions of the law defining its powers and jurisdiction, delegate to its judicial powers; and, in section 49 of the act, provides that the act shall not apply to any rate, fare or regulation, now or hereafter prescribed by any municipal corporation granting a right, permission, authority or franchise, to use its streets, alleys, avenues or public places, for street railway or street railroad purposes, or to any prices, so fixed under sections 3644, 3982 and 3983 of the General Code, except as provided in sections 46, 47 and 48, General Code, sections 614-44, 614-45 and 614-46. In view of this fact I am of the opinion that the legislature intended that the power with respect to rate, price, charge, toll or rental, to be made, charged, demanded, collected or exacted, for any commodity, utility or service, by public utilities in the cases enumerated in the statute should remain and be vested in the municipality; but that the Public Service Commission should have the general supervision over such utilities in seeing that the operation of such utilities, under said franchises, should be in compliance with all provisions of law, orders of the commission, franchises and charter requirements.

Said section 614-8 of the General Code provides in part as follows:

> "That the commission shall have power to examine all utilities within its jurisdiction and also power to keep informed as to their general conditions, their capitalization, the franchises, etc." and in my opinion the word "franchises," as used therein, means that your commission may examine such franchises in order to inform itself as to the general conditions, capitalization, etc., of said utilities, but may not entertain any complaint against any such utility wherein the contractual relation arising out of such franchises between municipalities and utilities is the basis of said complaint, for the franchise granted to a utility by a municipality is a contract between them and the enforcement of the terms thereof, as between said municipality and utility, is a judicial power and not conferred by law upon your commission.

Very respectfully,
TIMOTHY S. HOGAN,
Attorney General.

TAXES AND TAXATION—PUBLIC UTILITY—LIABILITY OF OWNER OF BUILDING FOR EXCISE TAX WHEN FURNISHING ELECTRICITY TO TENANTS UPON EXTRA CHARGE THEREFOR.

Since the Burckhardt Estate, which is the owner of a large building, furnishes electricity to its tenants for light and power, by charging each individual tenant a higher price therefore than the estate itself is charged by the company supplying such power, such estate "is engaged in the business of supplying electricity for light and power purposes to consumers" within the meaning of section 614-2, General Code, and is, therefore, a "public utility" within the sense of that statute.

COLUMBUS, OHIO, December 21, 1912.

Public Service Commission of Ohio, Columbus, Ohio.

GENTLEMEN:—I am replying to yours of April 11, 1912, which is as follows:

> "I take the liberty of handing you herewith the correspondence with the Burckhardt Estate of Cincinnati, Ohio, and would invite your attention to the same and request your opinion as to whether or not the Burckhardt Estate is a utility?"

From the extensive correspondence submitted herewith, the facts seem to be substantially as follows:

> "The Frederick Burckhardt Estate of Cincinnati, Ohio, is the owner of a large building in that city, the several stories of which are occupied by tenants of said estate.
> "Said estate furnishes electricity to its tenants for light and power, in the following manner: A large meter is installed in the building, and the estate purchases electricity for the whole structure from an electrical company. All the electricity used in the building passes, in the first instance, through this large meter, and is paid for by the estate at certain rates. Small meters are placed in every tenant's apartment, and all the electricity used by each tenant goes through his individual meter and is paid for monthly by him at rates fixed by the estate. The price received by the Burckhardt Estate from its tenants for this electricity, is higher than it pays for the same to the electrical company, although the profit is not very great.

"This estate will not permit its tenants to purchase their electricity from any other other source."

The question then is, whether the above facts constitute the Frederick Burckhardt Estate a public utility, subject to your jurisdiction, under the public utility act?

Section 614-2, General Code, (102 O. L. 550), defining the terms as used in said act says:

"Any person or persons, firm or firms, co-partnership or voluntary association, joint stock company or corporation, whenever organized or incorporated:

"When engaged in the business of supplying electricity for light, heat or power purposes to consumers within this state, is an electric light company."

In section 4 of said act, the term "public utility" is defined as follows:

"The term 'public utility' as used in this act shall mean and include every corporation, company, co-partnership, person or association, their lessees, trustees or receivers, defined in the next preceding section, except such public utilities as operate their utilities not for profit. * * * *"

It is clear from the reading of the above sections that the act was intended to include any person, corporation, etc., engaged in the business of supplying electricity for light, heat or power purposes to consumers within this state; and it only remains to apply the facts herein to the law, in order to answer your question. There can be no question but that this estate is furnishing electricity to all the tenants in said building, and they use it for light and power. This makes them "consumers," and they are within this state.

It makes no difference whether this estate purchases this electricity from another and then distributes it, or generates it by a plant of its own, the legal status is the same. Nor does it matter whether the consumers are many or few, or whether the profits are large or small. It is the character of the business that fixes the standing of the parties in the eyes of the law. Each individual case, of course, is determined by the particular facts thereof.

Taking all of the facts of this case into consideration, as well as the law applicable thereto, I am of the opinion that the Burckhardt Estate is a public utility, and, therefore, subject to your supervision, and must comply with your orders.

Very truly yours,
TIMOTHY S. HOGAN,
Attorney General.

PUBLIC SERVICE COMMISSION—MAY USE FUNDS FOR PURCHASE OF BLANKS FROM INTERSTATE COMMERCE COMMISSION.

Under section 614-48, General Code, the public service commission is required to furnish public utilities with blank forms for its reports, and under section, 606, General Code, such commission is empowered to assess public utilities for the purpose of obtaining funds necessary for the operation of the department. These statutes, therefore, authorize the commission to purchase blanks for the Interstate Commerce Commission for the purpose of furnishing the same to public utilities in accordance with these statutes.

COLUMBUS, OHIO, March 31, 1913.

Public Service Commission of Ohio, Columbus, Ohio.

GENTLEMEN:—Your communication dated March 11, 1913, is received in which you request my opinion upon the following question:

> "Whether the commission would have authority under the law to use any of its funds for the purpose of buying blanks from the interstate commerce commission for use by the railroads of the state in making their report to the commission as required by law?

Section 606 of the General Code provides as follows:

> "For the purpose of maintaining the department of the public service commission of Ohio, and the exercise of police supervision of railroads and public utilities of the state by it, a sum not exceeding $75,000.00 each year shall be apportioned among and assessed upon the railroads and public utilities within the state by the commission, etc."

It is manifest, the intention of the legislature was to make the department of public service self-supporting, and that the funds raised by assessing the railroads and public utilities, should be expended by the commission in carrying on the duties and affairs of the commission and exercising public supervision of the railroads and public utilities.

Section 614-48, General Code, provides as follows:

> "Every public utility (which includes railroads) shall file with the commission, at such times and in such form as it may prescribe, an annual report * * * . The commission shall prescribe the character of the information to be embodied in such annual report, and shall furnish to each public utility a blank form therefor, etc."

Section 556 of the General Code provides:

> "The commission shall cause blanks to be prepared suitable for the purposes designated in this chapter which shall conform as nearly as practicable to the forms prescribed by the interstate commerce commission, and when necessary furnish such blanks to each railroad."

The furnishing of blanks to the railroads for the purposes set forth in the foregoing quoted sections is mandatory upon the commission, and they shall conform as nearly as practicable to those used by the interstate commerce commission.

The fact that you can get the blanks required to be so furnished to the railroads from the interstate commerce commission of itself goes without saying that by purchasing the blanks from said interstate commerce commission they will conform in toto with those forms used by it.

The funds proposed to be used in the purchase of said blanks are raised by assessing the railroads and public utilities for the purpose of properly exercising public supervision of said railroads and public utilities, and the reports referred to are one of the things which enable the commission to properly perform such supervision of said railroads and public utilities, hence the expenditure of so much of the funds so raised for blanks is legal and proper and from all reports the purchasing of the same from the interstate commerce commission will insure uniformity and economy.

The forms, such as you speak of in your communication, are not such state printing as comes under the provisions of sections 754 and 786 of the General Code.

I am, therefore, of the opinion that your commission may purchase the blanks for the purposes referred to from the interstate commerce commission and pay for the same from the funds of your commission.

Very truly yours,
TIMOTHY S. HOGAN,
Attorney General.

PUBLIC SERVICE COMMISSION—PUBLIC UTILITY COMPANIES MUST FILE SEPARATE ANNUAL REPORTS WHEN ONE COMPANY IS CONTROLLED BY THE OTHER THROUGH STOCK.

Under the provisions of section 614-48, General Code, every public utility company is obliged to file an annual report with the public service commission Where one company is controlled by another through stock ownership, so long as they remain distinct companies, they should file separate reports.

COLUMBUS, OHIO, August 1, 1913.

Public Service Commission of Ohio, Columbus, Ohio.

GENTLEMEN:—Your communication dated June 12, 1913, is received in which you submit copies of your file of correspondence with the officers of the Ohio Fuel Supply Company, which company controls, through stock ownership, the Federal Gas and Fuel Company, relative to the said company filing but one report, viz.: the report of the Ohio Fuel Supply Company, which includes the annual report of the Federal Gas and Fuel Company, and requesting my opinion as to whether or not the two companies' transactions can be covered in the one report of the Ohio Fuel Supply Company, which controls, through stock ownership the Federal Gas and Fuel Company, and thereby meet the requirements of the law as to reports to be made by utilities to the public service commission annually.

In reply to your inquiry I desire to say that section 614-48 of the General Code provides as follows:

> "Every public utility shall file with the commission, at such times and in such form as it may prescribe, an annual report, duly verified, covering the yearly period fixed by the commission. The commission shall prescribe the character of the information to be embodied in such annual report, and furnish to each public utility a blank form therefor. If any such report is defective or erroneous, the commission may order the same to be amended within a prescribed time. Such annual reports shall be preserved in the office of the commission. The commission may, at any time, require specific answers to questions upon which it may desire information."

Under the provisions of the above quoted section of the General Code there can be no question that so long as the Ohio Fuel Supply Company and the Federal Gas and Fuel Company exist as separate corporate entities it is the duty of each company or each utility under said section to file with the commission an annual report, duly verified as in said section provided.

The power vested in your commission to compel annual reports to be filed by each and every utility operating in this state is for the purpose of carrying into effect the provisions of law relating to said utilities under the public service commission act; and I cannot see how your commission can properly be informed as to the matters that may be embodied in such annual report and enlightened as to all things that may come into question and for which said annual reports are or may be made, such as the question of rates for the commodity furnished by the respective utilities or for the securing of such information as may enlighten the commission upon the transactions of the said separate utilities upon any issue which may be properly brought before your commission relating to the utilities referred to in your communication.

I am, therefore, of the opinion that it is a mandatory duty incumbent upon each public utility to file an annual report, and that although the Ohio Fuel Supply Company controls, through stock ownership, the Federal Gas and Fuel Company, as long as they remain separate and distinct corporate entities within this state your commission should require them to file separate reports and not take the report of one company wherein is included the transactions and proceedings of the other for the year for which the report was intended to cover.

Very truly yours,

TIMOTHY S. HOGAN,

Attorney General.

PUBLIC SERVICE COMMISSION—MEMBERS OF PUBLIC SERVICE COMMISSION ENTITLED TO SALARY UNTIL THE MEMBERS OF THE PUBLIC UTILITIES COMMISSION ASSUME THEIR OFFICE—PUBLIC UTILITIES COMMISSION TO FINISH UP BUSINESS OF PUBLIC SERVICE COMMISSION.

"Members of the public service commission are entitled to their salary from the time the public utilities law went into effect until the members of the public utilities commission are appointed and assume their duties.

"The public utilities commission, by virtue of the fact creating this commission, has authority and power to finish up any and all unfinished business of the public service commission and to use all of the funds appropriated to that commission, the same as the public service commission would have done had it continued to exist."

COLUMBUS, OHIO, August 26, 1913.

Public Service Commission of Ohio, Columbus, Ohio.

DEAR SIRS:—I have your letter of August 20, 1913, in which you inquire:

> "The auditor of the state has raised the question: First, as to whether, since the eighth day of August, the public service commission of Ohio has any authority to draw vouchers against the fund appropriated for its use.
> "Second, whether there is any fund appropriated or available for the use of the public utilities commission of Ohio against which the public utilities commission may, after its organization, draw vouchers for the money necessary to carry on the public business.
> "The auditor seems to be of the opinion the public service commission of Ohio has had no legal existence since the eighth day of August and that there is no fund appropriated or available for the use of the public utilities commission."

Section 606, G. C., reads:

> "For the purpose of maintaining the department of the public service commission of Ohio, and the exercise of police supervision of railroads and public utilities of the state by it, a sum not exceeding seventy-five thousand dollars each year shall be appropriated among and assessed upon the railroads and public utilities within the state, by the commission, in proportion to the intrastate gross earnings or receipts of such railroad and public utilities for the year next preceding that in which the assessments are made.
> "On or before the first day of August next following, the commission shall certify to the auditor of state the amount of such assessment apportioned by it to each railroad and public utility and he shall certify such amount to the treasurer of state, who shall collect and pay the same into the state treasury to the credit of a special fund for the maintenance of the department of such public service commission."

Section 20 of the act of April 18, 1913 (103 O. L., 808), reads:

"The public utilities commission shall succeed to and be possessed of the rights, authority and powers not exercised by the public service commission of Ohio and perform all the duties now imposed upon the public service commission of Ohio, and said powers and authority shall be exercised and enforced and said duties performed in the manner now provided by law for the said public service commission. Said public service commission of Ohio shall on and after the time this act shall take effect have no further legal existence, and the public utilities commission is hereby authorized and directed to assume and continue as successor of said public service commission of Ohio. Wherever in the public service the terms railroad commission or public service commission occur, the term public utilities commission shall be substituted therefor."

While it is true that after the taking effect of the said act on August 9, 1913, the public service commission had no further legal existence and its successor, the public utilities commission, was authorized and directed to assume and continue as successor of the said body with all of its rights, authority, power, and duties, yet I beg to advise that his excellency, honorable James M. Cox, consulted with this department a few days prior to August 8, 1913, advising me that he would not be prepared to appoint the members of the public utilities commission until the fifteenth day of August, and inquiring if members of the then public service commission might not continue to discharge their usual duties until August 15th. I advised him that I saw no objection to the members of the commission continuing to discharge the duties of their office until the said date so long as they made no orders, so that the state might safely have the benefit of their services for the few days intervening in the way of attending to all the other duties of the office.

About August 9th, Messrs. Sullivan and Gothlin called upon me and asked for instructions as to what they should do pending the arrival of the new public utilities commission. I advised them that it was their duty to attend to the affairs of the office until their successors arrived, refraining from making any orders.

They accordingly did perform such duties of the office as I directed them was within their power, I am of the opinion that justice requires that these men should receive their salaries. Certainly no one could claim that in paying these salaries any abuse has been committed. They rendered honest and efficient service to the state.

Moreover, the public utilities law is substantially the same as the public service commission law; the same general duties are to be performed by the same number of men, and one law may well be said to be a continuation of the other; and Judge Hughes being appointed a member of the public utilities commission rendered service during all the period, and Messrs. Sullivan and Gothlin remaining at their post in accordance with the wishes and direction of the governor, it is immaterial whether the service was rendered by virtue of the public service commission or the public utilities law—the effect would be the same, entitling all three members to their compensation.

Your second question calls for a construction of the act creating the public utilities commission, and especially the above copied section 606, G. C., and section 20 of the public utilities act.

To my mind section 20 should be given a full, fair and liberal construction, avoiding, of course, any exclusion of its language or enlargement of its provisions, and that it should be held to transfer to the utilities commission all the rights, powers, privileges and duties devolving upon the public service commission, including the right to draw vouchers against any and all funds upon which the public service commission, had it continued to exist, might have drawn.

I am therefore of the opinion that the public service commission ceased to exist at the expiration of ninety days after the finding of said public utilities bill with the secretary of state, and it had no power thereafter to transact any business whatever, but that the public utilities commission took its place and succeeded to all its business, when it ceased to exist. And by virtue of section 20, above copied, it had power and authority to finish up any and all unfinished business of the public service commission and to use any of the funds appropriated to that commission, the same as such commission might have done had it continued in existence.

Very truly yours,
TIMOTHY S. HOGAN,
Attorney General.

WHERE TWO RAILROADS MERGE AND ONE IS IN PROCESS OF BUILDING, THE PART THAT IS COMPLETED MUST CONFORM TO THE STATUTE REQUIRING A FARE OF TWO CENTS PER MILE.

The Lorain, Ashland and Southern Railway Company may not charge rates in excess of two cents per mile in excess of five miles on that part of the road now completed. The road does not come within the exemptions of section 9004, General Code, as a completed section of the road.

COLUMBUS, OHIO, Sept. 9, 1913.

Public Service Commission of Ohio, Columbus, Ohio.

GETLEMEN:—Your communication dated June 7, 1913, is received in which you state as follows:

> "The Ashland & Western Railroad has been in existence and operation for ten years or more. Within the past six months it was merged with, and became part of a road known as The Lorain, Ashland & Southern, a part of which road is still under construction.
> "The Lorain, Ashland & Southern recently submitted to this commission a proposed new passenger tariff covering the Ashland & Western portion of the new road only, and this proposed new tariff carries rates in excess of two cents per mile for distances of more than five miles. They justify these rates by section 9004."

You request my legal opinion as to whether or not the exemption specified in section 9004 of the General Code would apply under the above statement of facts.

In reply to your inquiry I desire to say that section 8977 of the General Code provides as follows:

> "A company operating a railroad in whole or in part in this state may demand and receive for the transportation of passengers on its road, not exceeding two cents per mile, for a distance of more than five miles, but the fare shall always be made that multiple of five nearest reached by multiplying the rate by the distance."

Section 9004 of the General Code provides in part as follows:

"The provisions of sections eighty-nine hundred and seventy-seven * * * shall not apply to a railroad in course of construction, * * * * . Such exemption shall not continue longer than five years after cars are run for the transportation of freight and passengers on such road."

Your inquiry, in brief, raises the question whether The Lorain, Ashland & Western Railroad Company may charge in excess of the rates provided in section 8977, General Code, because of its right to avail itself of the provisions of section 9004, General Code.

As you state the facts, The Ashland & Western Railroad Company has been in operation ten years or more and prior to the stated merger was not and did not claim to be a road in process of construction, but the claim is made by the Lorain, Ashland & Western Railroad Company that because it has a part of its road under construction, it may claim exemption from section 8977, General Code.

While the manner of this merger is not stated, it could only have been brought about in one of three ways: (1) the old road (Ashland & Western) buying out and securing control of the new road—the one then in process of construction; (2) By the new organization buying the old road, or (3) By a new corporation organized for that purpose buying both roads.

While it is true that section 8977, mentions a "company operating a railroad," and section 9004 merely directs that its provisions shall not apply to a railroad in course of construction," and it is also true that the corporation now owning both these roads is a legal entity indivisible, and that the railroad companies owning these roads, before the merger, have ceased to exist, yet it is not believed that your question is to be answered from a consideration of the ownership merely. While the ownership has changed, the physical condition of the roads remained the same—one completed road and one in process of construction. The change of ownership had no more effect in making one road of the two than it did to render the completed portion incapable of operation, and while this may be looking at the question from the standpoint of facts rather than law, I cannot conceive how the merger of these two roads could any more constitute one completed road than it could one road in process of construction.

One of three conclusions must follow:

1. That the merger of the completed road with the unfinished one constituted the combination a completed road.

2. That it constituted it a road "in process of construction," or

3. That it constituted the Ashland, Lorain and Western Company the owner of two roads, one constructed and completed and the other in process of construction.

The first and second of these are based on equal law, logic and facts and neither of them fulfill the measure of the law or meet the objects intended to be accomplished by this legislation.

The third and last has a solid foundation in the request made to your body for authority to fix a tariff on the old road only.

This company by making its application in this manner confessedly admits that it has some completed road, that it is operating the same and desires to fix rates on it.

If it should be claimed that the attachment of the new road to the old one merged the new into the old and that they both constituted a completed road, greater hardship and more inconvenience would result than in holding, as I do, that the change of ownership of the old road did not change its physical condition nor alter its relation to the statutes in question.

I am, therefore of the opinion that The Lorain, Ashland and Western is not entitled to change rates in excess of two cents per mile as requested, and does not come within the exemptions of section 9004, General Code, as to the completed portion of the road.

Very truly yours,
TIMOTHY S. HOGAN,
Attorney General.

(To the Industrial Commission)

FUNDS OF THE VARIOUS STATE DEPARTMENTS THAT ARE CONSOLIDATED INTO THE INDUSTRIAL COMMISSION ARE TO GO TO THE INDUSTRIAL COMMISSON AS ONE GROSS SUM FOR THE USE OF THE COMMISSION.

The amounts appropriated for the use of the State Liability Board of Awards, State Board of Arbitration, Chief Examiner of Steam Engineers, Department of Board of Boiler Rules, Bureau of Labor Statistics, Chief Inspector of Mines and Chief Inspector of Workshops and Factories, that are unappropriated at the time these departments cease to exist on September 1, 1913, are to be converted into one gross sum for the use of the commission.

COLUMBUS, OHIO, August 8, 1913.

Industrial Commission of Ohio, Columbus, Ohio.

GENTLEMEN:—I have your letter of August 6th in which you inquire:

> "Kindly advise us whether such portions of the amounts appropriated in detail for the state liability board of awards, state board of arbitration, chief examiner of steam engineers, department of board of boiler rules, bureau of labor statistics, chief inspector of mines and chief inspector of workshops and factories as remain unexpended on September 1, 1913 are by the provisions of sections 3 and 4 above mentioned, reduced to a lump sum and made available for the uses and purposes of the industrial commission of Ohio under the heads 'receipts and business' and 'salaries and expenses;' or, will the industrial commission in making use of such appropriations, be required to observe the detail of the same?"

The act of March 12, 1913, creating the industrial commission of Ohio, by section 11 thereof provides that after September 1, 1913, the following departments, to wit: commissioner of labor statistics, chief inspector of mines, chief inspector of workshops and factories, chief examiner of steam engineers, board of boiler rules and the state board of conciliation and arbitration shall have no further legal existence, except that the heads thereof shall report to the governor for such part of the year 1913 as they were in existence; and by the same section it is provided that,

"On and after the first day of September, 1913, the industrial commission of Ohio shall have all the powers and enter upon the performance of all the duties conferred by law on said departments."

By section 12 of said act, pp. 97 and 656, 103 O. L., the industrial commission supersedes and is given authority to perform all the duties of the state liability board of awards; and by section 24 of said act (163 O. L. 103) it is provided:

> "All duties, liabilities, authority, powers and privileges conferred and imposed by law upon the commissioner of labor statistics, special agents for the commissioner of labor statistics, chief inspector of mines, district inspector of mines, chief inspector of workshops and factories, first assistant chief inspector of workshops and factories, second assistant chief inspector of workshops and factories, chief examiner of steam engineers, assistant chief examiner of steam engineers, district examiners of steam engineers, the board of boiler rules, head of the department of the board of boiler rules and chief inspector of steam boilers, assistant chief inspector of steam boilers, general inspectors of steam boilers, special inspector of steam boilers, state board of arbitration and conciliation, are hereby imposed upon the industrial commission of Ohio and its deputies on and after the first day of September, 1913. All laws relating to the commissioner of labor statistics, special agents of the commissioner of labor statistics, chief inspector of mines, district inspector of mines, chief inspector of workshops and factories, first assistant chief inspector of workshops and factories, second assistant chief inspector of workshops and factories, district inspectors of workshops and factories, chief examiner of steam engineers, assistant chief examiner of steam engineers, district examiners of steam engineers, the board of boiler rules, head of the department of the board of boiler rules and chief inspector of steam boilers, general inspectors of steam boilers, special inspectors of steam boilers, state board of arbitration and conciliation on and after the first day of September, 1913, shall apply to, relate and refer to the industrial commission of Ohio, and its deputies. Qualifications prescribed by law for said officers and their assistants and employes shall be held to apply, wherever applicable to the qualifications of the deputies of the commission assigned to the performance of the duties now cast upon such officers, assistants and employes."

The power of the legislature to abolish these departments and consolidate them, as done by this act, cannot be questioned, and inasmuch as section 3 of the sundry appropriation act provides:

"* * * That whatever sums are herein specified and appropriated for the purposes of the state liability board of awards, state board of arbitration, chief examiner of steam engineers, department of board of boiler rules, bureau of labor statistics, chief inspector of mines and chief inspector of workshops and factories; and, whatever sums have been appropriated or may be appropriated for the purpose of said departments shall on and after September 1, 1913, be available for the uses and purposes of the industrial commission of Ohio."

Section 4 of the general appropriation act reads:

"Sums herein specified and appropriated for the purposes of the state liability board of awards, state board of arbitration, chief examiner of steam engineers, department of board of boiler rules, bureau of labor statistics, chief inspector of mines and chief inspector of workshops and factories; and, whatever sums have been appropriated or may be appropriated for the purpose of said departments shall, on and after September 1, 1913, be available for the uses and purposes of the industrial commission of Ohio."

All doubt as to what body shall use and control these appropriations

(whether in gross or specific) is removed. They are available for the uses and purposes of the industrial commission of Ohio, and there being no requirement that the appropriations shall be used for the specific purposes named, it must necessarily follow that as the industrial commission supersedes the boards and departments, named, is given all their powers, and required to perform all their duties and thus given these appropriations for the purposes of the act of March 13, 1913, without specifying that they shall be used for the specific purposes mentioned, it is only called upon to use these appropriations for the general purposes of the industrial commission.

In other language, section 3 of the one bill and section 4 of the other, substantially converts these specific appropriations to one in gross, for the use of the industrial commission in carrying out the objects of the various departments whose legal existence terminates on September 1, 1913, and whose power and duties are conferred upon the industrial commission, said commission being careful if possible to keep the expenses of each department, as made by it, within the limit of the appropriations made for the same.

From this it necessarily follows that the industrial commission of Ohio has the incidental right and power to see that the expenses of these several departments, up to September 1, 1913, are within the limits of appropriations made for each.

Yours very truly,
TIMOTHY S. HOGAN,
Attorney General.

THE PROVISION OF SECTION 6213, GENERAL CODE IN REFERENCE TO PRISON MADE GOODS IN A VALID USE OF THE POLICE POWER AND DOES NOT INTERFERE WITH INTRASTATE OR INTERSTATE COMMERCE.

Section 6213 of the General Code of Ohio requiring goods, wares and merchandise made by convict labor to be branded, labeled or marked before being exposed for sale, applies to goods, wares and merchandise made by convict labor in the state of Ohio, when such goods are imported, brought or introduced into this state, applying as well to goods of this character made within this state as well as those introduced into it.

This section is a legitimate exercise of the police power of the state, does not interfere with interstate commerce, and is violative of neither the federal nor the state constitution.

COLUMBUS, OHIO, October, 1, 1913

HON. T. J. DUFFY, Industrial Commission of Ohio, Columbus, Ohio.

DEAR SIR:—I beg to acknowledge the receipt of your letter of September 17th, enclosing a letter received from Mr. Schreiber, city solicitor of Toledo. In his letter he refers to the fact that certain firms in Toledo are selling prison-made goods and suggests that the factory inspectors throughout the state call upon merchants in the various cities and explain to them the law prohibiting the sale of prison-made goods. You state that the sections of the General Code to which you have been referred in regard to this matter do not prohibit the sale of prison-made goods, but merely provide that such goods must be labeled in order to indicate that they are prison made. You inquire whether this department has rendered an opinion upon this subject, and if it has, you desire to have a copy thereof.

This department has not rendered an opinion upon this question, but I shall hereby do so.

Section 6213 of the General Code, provides that:

> "Goods, wares and merchandise made by convict labor in a penitentiary, prison, reformatory or other establishment in this or any other state in which convict labor is employed and imported, brought or introduced into this state, shall be branded, labeled or marked as hereinafter provided before being exposed for sale, and shall not be so exposed without such brand, label or mark."

Section 6214 prescribes the style and use of the brand, section 6215 designates the form of label to be used, section 6216 states where the brand, mark or label shall be placed, and section 6217 reads thus:

> "A person dealing in convict-made goods, wares or merchandise, as described in this chapter, shall not knowingly have them in possession for the purpose of sale, or offering them for sale without the brand, label or mark required by this chapter, or remove, conceal or deface the brand, mark or label thereon."

Section 6218 provides in substance that when the commissioner of labor statistics has reason to believe that the immediately foregoing section has been violated, he shall submit to the attorney general his information in support of such belief and the attorney general shall institute the proper legal proceedings to compel compliance with the foregoing statutes.

The following is section 13170:

> "Whoever, dealing in goods, wares and merchandise made by convict labor in a penitentiary, prison, reformatory or other establishment where convict labor is employed, knowingly has them in possession for the purpose of sale or offers them for sale, without the brand, label or mark of 'convict made' as required by law, or removes, conceals or defaces such brand, mark or label, shall be fined not less than fifty dollars nor more than one thousand dollars or imprisoned not less than ten days nor more than twelve months, or both."

Preliminary to a discussion of the questions here involved, I desire to say that the section last quoted was originally enacted with other sections therein before referred to, and therefore the words "as required by law" no doubt have reference to the provisions of the other sections.

The constitutionality of this law must be determined from a consideration of its validity under the constitution as it stood prior to the amendment of 1912. This is true because the constitutionality of a statute must be based on the constitution in force at the time of the passage of the law. An unconstitutional statute is absolutely void and cannot be validated by subsequent amendment which is in harmony with the said statute. 8 Cyc. 758.

In Arnold vs. Yanders, 56 O. S. 417, an act requiring any person exposing for sale convict-made goods, to obtain a license, was held to be in conflict with that provision of the United States constitution giving congress power to regulate commerce among the several states. It must be noted, however, that this act provided that its terms should not be applicable to the products of the prisons of this state. It is a clear and distinct regulation of commerce, as its aim was to discourage the importation of convict-made goods from other states, while it did not tend to discourage the sale of such goods when they were made in Ohio. If it had been a proper police regulation, it should have been made applicable to all classes of convict-made goods. In addition to this, I think a distinction should be made between a license, such as was involved in that case and the requirement of a label as provided for in the sections here discussed. And furthermore, it must be borne in mind that the case just referred to contains no discussion of the application of the state constitution to the law thereunder consideration. At the time this decision was rendered, the statutes we are now considering applied only to convict-made goods manufactured in other states and imported into Ohio. After this decision, and probably as a result thereof, section 6213 was amended by the insertion of the words "this or" immediately after the words "establishment in." On July 5, 1901, Mr. J. H. Sheets, who was then attorney general held that the insertion of these two words rendered the statute ambiguous, with the result that the manufacturers succeeded in obtaining a decision in the circuit court of Franklin county, in the case of State ex rel. vs. Brown, etc., Company, to the effect that the provisions of this section did not apply to convict-made goods manufactured and sold in Ohio.

Vol. 5, opinions of attorney general of Ohio, 496.

If this construction be correct, then I should be inclined very seriously to doubt the constitutionality of the statute, but with the construction of Mr. Sheets, I am not entirely satisfied, notwithstanding the decision to which he refers, and think that the act can and should be so read as to apply to goods made by convicts in this state as well as to imported convict-made goods. I base this reasoning on the fact that it was the manifest intention of the legislature, by the insertion of the words above quoted, to include with its provisions goods made in this state. Clear meaning may be given the act by making the following words stand together as one separate clause, thus, "or any other state, in which convict labor is employed, and imported, brought or introduced into this state."

In other words, the act would then provide in substance—the goods, etc., made by convict labor in a penitentiary, etc., in this state or in any other state and brought into this state, should be branded, etc. After arriving at this conclusion, I found that Attorney General Richards had construed the law in the manner in which I herewith suggest.

Vol. 4, opinions of attorney general of Ohio, 581.

It is interesting to note in this connection, that in the Massachusetts case, to which I shall later refer, the justices of the court of that state treated an act like the one in question as embracing goods made within and those without the state within its terms. Of course in that case this identical question was not decided, but the assumption of the court seemed to be that which I have indicated.

Assuming that my interpretation of the law is correct, the next question is whether the act is a valid police regulation under the constitution of Ohio as it stood at the time of the enactment of the law. The New York court of appeals in People ex rel. vs. Hawkins, 42 L. R. A. 490, at least in the reasoning of the opinion of the judge who rendered the majority opinion, took the view that a law of this character was invalid under the New York constitution. The substance of the holding of the judge rendering the majority opinion was that the statute was not a valid exercise of police power, although he announced another reason to which I shall later refer. Very able dissenting opinions were rendered by Chief Justice Parker and Judge Bartlett, and the justices who concurred in the majority opinion voted for affirmance upon the ground that the statute conflicted with the commerce clause of the federal constitution. From this it will be seen that two justices distinctly held that the act was a valid police regulation, and one took a contrary view while three of the justices by concurring in the majority opinion only upon the federal question, would indicate that they agreed with the dissenting judges upon the phase of the question which I am now discussing. Judge Haight concurred with Chief Justice Parker and Judge Bartlett. The majority opinion, however, was followed in People ex rel. vs. Rayne, 136, App. Div. 417 (Aff. 198 N. Y. 549), which last decision was not upon a statute like the one in question but upon a law similar to the law declared unconstitutional by our supreme court in the case hereinbefore referred to.

I am of the opinion, although the question is one of some doubt, that this legislation is a legitimate exercise of the police power of the state because the protection of an honest, unimprisoned laborer, from competition with convict-made goods, will promote public welfare and prosperity and such production is consonant with the spirit of the age and modern thinking; and also because it is and should be competent for this state to protect its citizens from the fraud and deception that result if prison-made goods are offered for sale without any designation of their origin. The people should be advised of the fact that such goods are convict-made so that when they buy them they will do so with their eyes open and not under a delusion that such goods are the product of the labor of him who is a free citizen rather than a criminal. Congress has fully recognized this in providing by statute that prison-made goods may not be imported into the United States.

Conceding that I am correct in my interpretation of the statute and in my opinion that it is not violative of the state constitution, we are still confronted with the claim that the law is invalid as an interference with interstate commerce. The supreme judicial court of Massachusetts in re opinion of Justices 98 N. E. 334, held that a statute like the one in question, was invalid as an interference with interstate commerce. Now if this statute is so separable that one part of it may be held valid, while another part is held invalid, the constitutional part may stand and the unconstitutional part may be rejected. Consequently if the clause regulating imported prison-made goods be independent of the clause regulating prison-made goods manufactured within the state, then, even if the former clause were held to be contrary to the provisions of the federal constitution, the latter provision may be retained. This rule of statutory construction must be limited, however, and where it is found that the whole taken together warrants the belief that the legislature would not have passed the valid portion alone, then the whole statute should be held inoperative.

There is much to be said in favor of the theory that the legislature would have made a law applying solely to convict-made goods within the state, even if it could not have regulated the sale of convict-made goods which are imported into the state and I incline to that theory, although a very strong argument to the converse may be adduced. I also think that the two parts may be treated as independent. Upon the whole, however, I have arrived at the conclusion in the face of the two decisions which I have cited, that this law, even if it be treated as so inseparable as not to permit any clause to be disregarded, is nevertheless, not violative of the federal constitution, or a direct interference with the freedom of interstate commerce. The opinion of Judge Bartlett in the New York case very clearly and lucidly maintains this position and I think it would be supported by the supreme court of the United States. I wish to add that in the Massachusetts case, the justices were asked to pass upon the constitutionality of a proposed law, as is permitted in that state, rather than to construe one that had been passed, and this I think should have some bearing in considering their opinion.

A particularly nice question also arises upon the application of section 13170, General Code, to section 41 of article 2 of the new constitutional amendment. The statute was originally part of an act found in 90 Ohio Laws 320, but was carried into the General Code separate from the other parts of this act. The constitutional amendment provides that convict-made goods sold in this state shall be marked "prison made," while section 13170 prescribes a penalty for selling convict-made goods without the brand "required by law." Can these words last quoted be treated as referring to the said constitutional amendment? If so the difficulty of interpreting section 6213 will be obviated. I shall not here, however, enlarge upon this phase of the situation.

The foregoing considerations move me to suggest to you that your commission should conduct an investigation with a view of bringing a test case in order to determine the validity of the law.

Very truly yours,

TIMOTHY S. HOGAN,

Attorney General.

THE INDUSTRIAL COMMISSION TAKES THE PLACE OF CHIEF INSPECTOR OF WORKSHOPS AND FACTORIES AS A MEMBER OF THE BUILDING CODE COMMISSION—MONEY APPROPRIATED FOR THE PURPOSES OF THE CHIEF INSPECTOR OF WORKSHOPS AND FACTORIES CAN BE USED FOR THE GENERAL PURPOSES OF THE INDUSTRIAL COMMISSION.

1. The industrial commission takes the place of and succeeds the chief inspector of workshops and factories as a member of the building code commission on and after September 1, 1913, and in acting as a member of the building code commission or industrial commission should act as a unit, that is, as one member of such building code commission.

2. Appropriations made for the chief inspector of workshops and factories are available for the expenses of the industrial commission.

COLUMBUS, OHIO, October 21, 1913.

HON. WALLACE D. YAPLE, Chairman, Industrial Commission, Columbus, Ohio.

DEAR SIR:—Under date of October 11, 1913, you inquire:

"1. What, if any, duty is the industrial commission of Ohio required to perform, relative to the preparation of the building code referred to in my letter?

"2. Whether the appropriation made for the chief inspector of workshops and factories is available for the expenses of the industrial commission, and if so, in what manner shall expenditures therefrom be authorized?"

1. On May 10, 1913, an act relating to the preparation of a code of regulations to govern the erection and maintenance of public and other buildings was passed and the secretary of the state board of health, state fire marshal and chief inspector of workshops and factories, were authorized and directed to submit to the next general assembly a copy of the regulations governing the erection, etc., of such buildings. An appropriation was made to cover the expenses of this work. This act was continued on May 31, 1911, (102 O. L., 440) and additional appropriation was made. As the work was not completed at the time the last general assembly was in session, the commission was continued and an appropriation of $3,500.00 was made, such appropriation appearing under the head of "state department workshops and factories," this being the language:

"Uses and purposes of the State Building Code Commission ..... $3,500.00"

By the creation of the industrial commission, 103 O. L., 95 the office of chief inspector of workshops and factories was abolished and his powers and duties were transferred to and merged into the industrial commission of Ohio, the act in this regard taking effect on and after September 1, 1913. The title of this act, and sections 11 and 24 thereof, make very clear the fact that the industrial commission shall have all powers and perform all duties conferred by law upon the chief inspector of workshops and factories, and that all laws relating to the last named position shall relate and refer to the industrial commission. It is true that the act continuing the building code commission was passed subsequent to the passage of the industrial commission act, which continued as a member thereof the chief inspector of workshops and factories, but, in my judgment, this is an immaterial matter, as no necessity arises for the application of the doctrine of implied repeal. The chief inspector of workshops and factories was an existing position and continued so to be until September 1, 1913, and the legislature no doubt intended that he should remain a member of the building code as long as his office existed.

In view, however, of the broad language used in conferring the power, duties and obligations of the chief inspector of workshops and factories upon the industrial commission, I am of the opinion that this commission takes the place of and succeeds the chief inspector of workshops and factories as a member of the building code commission, on and after September 1, 1913. Ordinarily, there would be no question in the average mind regarding this, if an individual had been appointed to succeed the inspector, but as it is a board which takes his place, this might at first glance confuse the mind, but a careful study will develop that there is no reason for the distinction. In acting as a member of the building code commission, the industrial commission should act as a unit—that is to say, as one member of such building commission.

2: I assume from your question, that you desire information regarding all appropriations made for the chief inspector of workshops and factories rather than the one to which I have heretofore adverted.

As your board has succeeded, in all respects, to the chief inspector of workshops and factories, I think that under the language used in the appropriation act itself, there is no question that the industrial commission has the right and has been authorized, since September 1, 1913, to use the balance of the appropriations made for the inspector, by virtue of appropriations made by the last general assembly.

Section 2 of the appropriation act, 103 O. L., 611, 626, provides:

"Whatever sums herein specified and appropriated for the purpose of the * * * * chief inspector of workshops and factories; and whatever sums have been appropriated or may be appropriated for the purposes of said departments shall, on and after September 1, 1913, be available for the uses and purposes of the industrial commission of Ohio."

The specific appropriation of $3,500.00 for the use of the state building code commission, must be expended for the uses and purposes of this commission, and cannot be devoted to the general purposes of the industrial commission of Ohio.

Trusting that this fully answers your inquiry, I am,

Yours very truly,

TIMOTHY S. HOGAN,

Attorney General.

WAGES MUST BE PAID TWICE EACH MONTH.

The provisions of the General Code require the payment of wages earned during the first half of the month on or before the first of the following month, and the payment on or before the 15th day of each month all wages earned during the last half of the preceding calendar month. Any system that does not comply with these requirements is illegal.

HON. WALLACE D. YAPLE, Chairman Industrial Commission of Ohio, Columbus, Ohio.

DEAR SIR:—I beg to acknowledge the receipt of your letter of October 15, 1913, enclosing a letter from the Goodyear Tire & Rubber Co., together with a copy of your reply to their letter. You request this department to render an opinion upon the following questions, suggested by the letter of the Goodyear Tire & Rubber Co.

"Our factory employes have been divided into two divisions, each containing about one-half of the employes, Saturday has been determined upon as pay day; one division being paid one Saturday, and the other division the following Saturday. Our pay system, therefore, involves a pay period covering two weeks, making twenty-six pay days during the year. The pay period for wages paid on any Saturday always ends with Wednesday, ten days before pay day.

"To give you a concrete example, showing wherein possibly our system does not fully comply with the law, we might take a pay period of one of the divisions starting Thursday, September 11th, and ending Wednesday, September 24th. Under our system, the men in this division would be paid on Saturday, October 4th. Thus there would be in this period four days, 11th, 12th, 13th and 15th, which falls within, the first one-half of the month, and which according to the law, would have to be paid on or before the 1st of October.

"If you can, we would be glad to have a ruling on this, and an explanation from you as to whether we are working so well within the provisions of the law as to make unnecessary a change in our present system."

Section 1 of an act to provide for the payment of wages at least twice in each calendar month, provides in substance that every individual, firm, company, partnership, association or corporation, doing business in this state, who employ five or more regular employes,

> "shall on or before the first day of each month, pay all their employes engaged in the performance of either manual or clerical labor, the wages earned by them during the first half of the preceding month, ending with the 15th day thereof, and shall on or before the 15th day of each month pay such employes the wages earned by them during the last half of the preceding calendar month."

The foregoing language clearly and unequivocally requires the payment of wages earned during the first half of the month, on or before the first day of the following month, and the payment, on or before the 15th day of each month, all the wages earned during the last half of the preceding calendar month. This being true, it necessarily follows that the Goodyear Tire & Rubber Company will not comply with this act if it continues the system illustrated in its letter, for the reason that part of the wages earned during the first half of the month will not be paid on or before the first of the following month.

While the system that they have adopted seems to be eminently fair and may possibly conform to the spirit of the act, neverthless the statute is so plain that there is no room for construction or consideration of the object of the law as a means of arriving at its intention. Hence, the company should be advised that it must discontinue its present system and adopt one in conformity with the statute.

In conclusion, I wish to call your attention to the opinion rendered by this department to the Hon. Carl D. Friebolin, on July 11, 1913, a copy of which I herewith enclose.

Yours very truly,
TIMOTHY S. HOGAN.
Attorney General.

A STATIONARY ENGINEER'S LICENSE MAY NOT BE REVOKED EXCEPT ON THE GROUNDS PROVIDED BY STATUE.

The fact that charges have been set forth against an operating stationary engineer accusing him of neglect of duty in abandoning his boiler and leaving the building in darkness, during which time the oil cups, oil pump check valves and other parts of the machinery were interfered with in a very detrimental manner, is not grounds for revoking his license under section 1049, General Code.

Industrial Commission of Ohio, Columbus, Ohio.

GENTLEMEN:—I have at hand your communication of December 8th, with which you enclose an affidavit setting forth charges against an operating stationary steam engineer, who holds a license issued by your department. Said affidavit, in substance, sets forth that the engineer in question abandoned his boiler, leaving the building in darkness, and that within a very short time thereafter the oil cups, oil pump, check valves and other parts of the machinery were found to be interfered with in a very detrimental manner. You ask whether or not the facts set forth afford sufficient grounds for the revocation of the engineer's license, under section 1049, General Code.

Section 1049, General Code, is as follows:

> "If upon such examination, the applicant is found proficient in such subjects, a license shall be granted him to have charge of and operate stationary steam boilers and engines of the horse power required by law, for one year from the date on which it is issued. Upon written charges after notice and hearing, the district examiner may revoke the license of a person guilty of fraud in obtaining such license, or who becomes insane, or is addicted to the liquor or drug habit to such a degree as to render him unfit to discharge the duties of a steam engineer."

The grounds for revocation of a license are set forth fully in this statute; they are specifically enumerated and distinctly stated. Whatever may be the guilt of the engineer in question, and whatever condemnation his action may merit, it is clear that the facts stated do not afford sufficient grounds for revocation of a license, as they are set forth in the statute quoted. It is clear that none of the grounds set forth in the statute have application to the facts appearing in the affidavit; since the facts stated show not the slightest evidence of fraud in obtaining the license, nor of insanity, nor of addiction to the liquor or drug habits in any degree, which circumstances alone afford ground for revocation of a license under said statute.

I am enclosing the affidavit and the communication submitted by you.

Yours very truly,

TIMOTHY S. HOGAN,

Attorney General.

DISTRICT TAX ASSESSORS—SUBORDINATE TO TAX COMMISSION OF OHIO—NOT ENTITLED TO TWO SECRETARIES, ASSISTANTS OR CLERKS IN UNCLASSIFIED SERVICE.

The district tax assessors are responsible directly to the Tax Commission of Ohio, and are not directly responsible to the Governor. They are not heads of principal department. They are not principal executive officers, but are subordinate to the Tax Commission of Ohio, consequently they are not entitled to have two secretaries, or assistants or clerks in the unclassified service.

COLUMBUS, OHIO, Dec. 20, 1913.

State Civil Service Commission, Columbus, Ohio.

GENTLEMEN: Your favor of December 18, 1913, is received, in which you inquire:

> "The question has been submitted to us as to whether the district assessors (commonly called the county tax assessors) are to be construed as heads of principal departments, as designated in section 2 of main section 8 of the civil service act—and also whether or not each district tax assessor is entitled to appoint two persons outside the classified service, as provided in subsection 7 of main section 8. That is, are all the employes of each district assessor in the classified service or can they have two exempt persons?"

Subdivisions 2 and 7 of branch (a) of section 8, of the civil service act, section 486-8, General Code provides:

> "2. All heads of principal departments, boards and commissions appointed by the governor or by and with his consent or by the mayor, or if there be no mayor such other similar chief appointing authority of any city or city school district.
> "7. Two secretaries or assistants or clerks for each of the elective and principal executive officers, boards or commissions, except civil service commissions, authorized by law to appoint such secretary, assistant or chief clerk."

The district assessors are appointed by virtue of the act of 103 Ohio Laws, 786, and their duties are therein prescribed.

Section 1 of said act, to be known as section 5579, General Code, provides:

> "In addition to all other powers and duties vested in or imposed upon it by law, the tax commission of Ohio shall direct and supervise the assessment for taxation of all real and personal property in the state. For the purpose of such assessment, the state is hereby divided into assessment districts. Each county in the state shall constitute an assessment district. In each assessment district which contained, at the last preceding federal census, less than sixty-five thousand inhabitants, there shall be appointed in the manner provided in this act, one deputy state tax commissioner, who shall be known as the district assessor. In all other assessment districts, there shall be appointed, in the manner provided in this act, two deputy state tax commissioners, not of the same political party, who shall constitute the district board of assessors. Wherever used in this act, the term "district assessor" shall mean and include also the district board of assessors herein provided for, or a member thereof as the case may be. Such district assessors, shall, under the direction and supervision of the tax commission, be the assessors of real and personal property for taxation, within and for their respective districts, except as may be otherwise provided by law. There shall also be appointed in each assessment district, in the manner provided in this act, three persons who shall constitute a board to hear complaints and review assessments of real and personal property for taxation, which shall be known as the district board of complaints.

Section 2 of said act to be known as section 5580, General Code, provides:

"Each district assessor shall be appointed by the governor on or before the first day of November, 1913 and shall hold his office until his successor is appointed and qualified, except as otherwise provided by law. He shall be an elector of the district for which he is appointed, and upon ceasing to be such, his office shall be vacant. The tax commission of Ohio may with the consent of the governor remove any district assessor.

Section 3 of said act, to be known as section 5581, General Code, provides:

"Each district assessor shall appoint such number of deputy assessors, assistants, experts, clerks and employes as may, from time to time, be prescribed for his district by the tax commission of Ohio. Such deputy assessor, assistants, experts, clerks, and employes shall hold their respective offices and employments for such times as may be prescribed by the tax commission."

Section 4 of said act, to be known as section 5582, General Code, provides, in part:

"The district assessor shall, annually, under the direction and supervision of the tax commission, list and value for taxation all real and personal property subject to taxation in the county constituting his assessment district, except as otherwise provided by law."

It will be observed that the district assessor is appointed by the governor. The duties of such district assessor are performed "under the direction and supervision of the tax commission" of Ohio. It is the duty of "the tax commission of Ohio" to "direct and supervise the assessment for taxation of all real and personal property in the state."

For this purpose the state is divided into districts and in each district there is one or two district assessors. These district assessors are subordinate to the state tax commission.

In the opinion recently given to your department it is held that a principal department is one the head of which is directly responsible to the chief appointing authority. The chief appointing authority in this instance is the governor.

The district assessors are responsible directly to the tax commission of Ohio and are not directly responsible to the governor. They are not, therefore, heads of principal departments as said term is used in subdivision 2 of branch (a) of section 8 of the civil service law.

They are not "principal executive officers" within the meaning of subdivision 7 of said section 8. They are subordinate executive officers, as they are subordinate to the tax commission of Ohio.

The district assessors do not therefore come within the terms of either subdivision 2 or subdivision 7, of branch (a) of section 8 of the civil service law, and they are not entitled to have two secretaries, or assistants or clerks in the unclassified service.

Respectfully,
TIMOTHY S. HOGAN,
Attorney General.

662.

HEAD OF SUBDEPARTMENT UNDER CLASSIFIED CIVIL SERVICE MAY NOT HAVE ASSISTANTS IN UNCLASSIFIED SERVICE.

There is no head of a subdepartment that can be classed as a "principal executive officer" under subdivision 7 of the civil service act, nor any other position, the incumbent of which is in the classified service that can have two assistants or secretaries or clerks in the unclassified service.

COLUMBUS, OHIO, December 23, 1913.

State Civil Service Commission, Columbus, Ohio.

GENTLEMEN:—Under date of December 22, 1913, you inquire:

> "Could an appointee, either of the governor or the mayor of the city, who is himself under the classified service, have two secretaries, assistants, or clerks exempt from the classified service as provided in section 7, i. e., are there any persons with appointing power who are in the classified service and at the same time entitled to have secretaries, assistants and clerks, who are not in the classified service?"

You attach a letter from Mr. C. B. Wilby, chairman of the civil service commission of Cincinnati, in which he states:

> "What officers are entitled to two secretaries or assistant clerks, under subdivision 7 of section 8 of the civil service law. Does that apply to appointees of the heads of principal departments, boards and commissions named in subdivision 2 of that section? In other words, are any principal executive officers who themselves are not exempt, but are in the classified service, entitled to two secretaries, assistants, or clerks, who are not in the classified service?"

Subdivisions 2 and 7 of branch (a) of section 8 of the civil service law, provide:

"2. All heads of principal departments, boards and commissions appointed by the governor or by and with his consent or by the mayor, or if there be no mayor such other similar chief appointing authority of any city or city school district.

"7. Two secretaries or assistants or clerks for each of the elective and principal executive officers, boards or commissions, except civil service commissions, authorized by law to apoint such a secretary, assistant or chief clerk."

By virtue of subdivision 2 "heads of principal departments, boards and commissions," who may be termed "principal executive officers, boards and commissions" are in the unclassified service.

By virtue of subdivision 7, "principal executive officers, boards or commissions," are entitled to two secretaries, or clerks or assistants in the unclassified service.

An appointee appointed by the governor or mayor, and who is in the classified service cannot be termed a "principal executive officer." If he should be so classed he would come under the terms of subdivision 2 and himself be placed in the unclassified service.

The word "principal has the same meaning in subdivision 2 that it has in subdivision 7. It does not necessarily follow that if an officer comes within the terms of subdivision 2 he must thereby come also within the provisions of subdivision 7, or vice versa.

I know of no head of a subdepartment that can be classed as a "principal executive officer" under subdivision 7. Nor do I know of any position, the incumbent of which is in the classified service, that can have two assistants, or secretaries, or clerks in the unclassified service.

Respectfully,
TIMOTHY S. HOGAN,
Attorney General.

CIVIL SERVICE—SECRET SERVICE OFFICERS NOT UNDER CIVIL SERVICE—CLERK OF COUNCIL IN CLASSIFIED CIVIL SERVICE—CITY ENGINEERS, STREET COMMISSIONERS AND CITY CEMETARY SUPERINTENDENTS IN CLASSIFIED CIVIL SERVICE.

The clerk of council is placed in the classified civil service of the city by the new civil service law. A secret service officer appointed by the prosecuting attorney is not in the classified service under the civil service law. A street commissioner, as provided for in section 4363, General Code, is an officer of a village and not of a city and the new civil service law does not apply to villages. The city engineer is not at the head of a principal department as provided for in subdivision 2 of branch a of section 8 of the civil service law, and is, therefore in the classified service. A court bailiff is not in the classified service under provisions of section 9 of the civil service law.

COLUMBUS, OHIO, December 27, 1913.

State Civil Service Commission, Columbus, Ohio.

GENTLEMEN:—This department has received several inquiries asking for an interpretation of the new civil service law. As you have general supervision of the civil service law it is deemed advisable to address all opinions pertaining to said law to your commission. This opinion is therefore addressed to you upon the several inquiries as now presented.

Under date of July 15, 1913, Hon. D. F. Dunlavy, prosecuting attorney of Ashtabula county, inquires:

> "Kindly inform me whether or not in your opinion the secret service officer, appointed by the prosecuting attorney, comes within the Friebolin act and is a civil service man."

Hon. David G. Jenkins, city solicitor of Youngstown, Ohio, submits this inquiry under date of September 8, 1913:

> "Please render me your opinion as to whether under section 486-8, General Code, 103 Ohio Laws, 701, the clerk of council is in the unclassified service or not."

Under date of September 15, 1913, Hon. T. A. Bonnell, member of the house of representatives from Guernsey county, inquires:

> "Do city engineers, street commissioners, and city cemetery superintendents come within the provisions of the new civil service law?
> "Do these hold under civil service or by direct appointment?"

Also under date of October 13, 1913, Senator Carl D. Friebolin inquires:

> "Will you please give me your opinion on section 8, subdivision 9 of the civil service law, passed April 28, 1913, found on page 702, volume 103, Ohio Laws? Section 8 enumerates the positions not to be included in the classified service, among others subdivision 9 provides 'bailiffs of courts of record.'
> "Would you say that the term 'bailiffs of courts of record' would include persons appointed by virtue of section 1692, General Code?"

Each of these inquiries call for a construction of section 8 of the act of 103 Ohio Laws, 698. This section, to be known as section 486-8, General Code, divides the civil service of the state, counties, cities and city school districts thereof, into classified and unclassified service.

Said section 8, reads:

> "Service—Unclassified. The civil service of the state of Ohio and the counties, cities and city school districts thereof shall be divided into the unclassified service and the classified service.
> "(a) The unclassified service shall comprise the following positions which shall not be included in the classified service, except as otherwise provided in section 19 hereof:
> "1. All officers elected by popular vote.
> "2. All heads of principal departments, boards and commissions appointed by the governor or by and with his consent or by the mayor, or if there be no mayor such other similar chief appointing authority of any city or city school district.
> "3. All officers elected by either or both branches of the general assembly.
> "4. All election officers.

"5. All commissioned, noncommissioned officers and enlisted men in the military service of the state.

"6. All presidents, superintendents, directors, teachers and instructors in the public schools, colleges and universities, the library staff of any library in the state supported wholly or in part at public expense.

"7. Two secretaries or assistants or clerks for each of the elective and principal executive officers, boards or commissions, except civil service commissions, authorized by law to appoint such a secretary, assistant or chief clerk.

"8. The deputies of elective or principal executive officers authorized by law to act generally for and in place of their principals and holding a fiduciary relation to such principals.

"9. Bailiffs of courts of record.

"10. Employes and clerks of boards of deputy state supervisors and inspectors of elections.

"(b) The classified service shall comprise all persons in the employ of the state, the counties, cities and city school districts thereof, not specifically included in the unclassified service, to be designated as the competitive class.

"1. The competitive class shall include all positions and employments now existing or hereafter created in the state, the counties, cities and city school districts thereof, for which it is practicable to determine the merit and fitness of applicants by competitive examinations. Appointments shall be made to, or employment shall be given in, all positions in the competitive class that are not filled by promotion, reinstatement, transfer or reduction, as provided in sections 15, 16 and 17 of this act and the rules of the commission, by appointment from those certified to the appointing officer in accordance with the provisions of section 13 of this act."

Section 19 referred to in the first part of section 8 above quoted, applies to the appointment and duties of the members of the municipal civil service commission, and to the suspension of the chief of police, or the chief of the fire department. It does not affect any of the positions now under consideration.

Section 8, supra, places certain described positions in the unclassified service and all others in the classified service. The office of county detective or county secret service officer is not placed in the unclassified service by this section.

Section 2915-1, General Code, as amended in 103 Ohio Laws, provides:

"The prosecuting attorney may appoint a secret service officer whose duty it shall be to aid him in the collection and discovery of evidence to be used in the trial of criminal cases and matters of a criminal nature. Such appointment shall be made for such term as the prosecuting attorney may deem advisable, and subject to termination at any time by such prosecuting attorney. The compensation of said officer shall be fixed by the judge of the court of common pleas of the county in which the appointment is made, or if there be more than one judge, by the judges of such court in such county in joint session, and shall not be less than one hundred and twenty-five dollars per month of the time actually occupied in such service nor more than one-half of the official salary of the prosecuting attorney for a year, payable monthly, out of the county fund, upon the warrant of the county auditor."

Said section 2915-1, General Code, as passed in 102 Ohio Laws, 73, did not contain a provision that such "appointment shall be made for such terms as the prosecuting attorney may deem advisable, and subject to termination at any time by such prosecuting attorney." Such a provision, however, was contained in section 6184, General Code, as enacted in 100 Ohio Laws, 91. The constitutionality of original section 2915-1, General Code, need not be considered in determining the present question.

The same legislature which passed the civil service law also passed the amendatory act of section 2915-1, General Code, supra. The civil service act and section 2915-1, General Code, apply to the same subject-matter and they should be construed, if possible, so as to permit both acts to stand.

The provision in section 2915-1, General Code, to be considered in this:

> "Such appointment shall be made for such term as the prosecuting attorney may deem advisable, and subject to termination at any time by such prosecuting attorney."

This provision would tend to show that the position of secret service office is temporary. The prosecuting attorney "may appoint" such an officer and he may terminate it at any time. That is he may terminate the position. In other words it is discretionary with the prosecuting attorney as to whether he shall appoint a secret service officer. This is further shown by the provision as to payment of salary. That is, he shall be paid "for the time actually occupied in such service."

The temporary character of the position would not indicate that the appointment to such position should not be made from an eligible list after examination.

Section 8 of the civil service act does not place this officer in the unclassified service.

Is it practicable to hold examinations for this position? The determination of this question is left, in the first instance to the civil service commission, subject to review by the courts, as is held in the opinion as to assistant city solicitors and assistant prosecuting attorneys.

The duties of the secret service officer are prescribed by section 2915-1, General Code, and they are such that it can be determined as a matter of law that it is impracticable to hold examinations as to this position. The duties of the position are to assist the prosecuting attorney "in the collection and discovery of evidence to be used in the trial of criminal cases and matters of a criminal nature."

These duties are so intimately connected with the duties of the prosecuting attorney that it would be impracticable to determine the merit and fitness of applicants by examination.

"It is held to be impracticable to hold examination for a county detective in People vs. Webb, 54 N. Y. App. Div. 588, and for a subpoena server in People vs. Gardner, 157 N. Y. 520.

The county secret service officer is therefor in the unclassified service.

The next position to consider is that of clerk of council.

Section 4210, General Code, provides:

> "Within ten days from the commencement of their term, the members of council shall elect a president pro tem., a clerk and such other employes of council as may be necessary, and fix their duties, bonds and compensation. The officers and employes of council shall serve for two years, but may be removed at any time for cause, at a regular meeting by a vote of two-thirds of the members elected to council."

This section was enacted in 96 Ohio Laws, 59, and then carried into the General Code as section 4210. It was enacted prior to the adoption of the constitutional amendment pertaining to civil service.

The general rule is that a later general law does not repeal an earlier special or local law. But there are many exceptions to the general rule.

In discussing this rule it is stated at page 1087 of volume 36 of Cyc.:

"While the rule undoubtedly is that a general affirmative act, without express words of repeal, will not repeal a previous special or local act on the same subject, even though the provisions of the two be inconsistent, and although the terms of the general law are broad enough to include the cases embraced in the special act, yet it is not a rule of positive law, but of construction only. In accordance with this rule, the presumption is that a general act does not repeal a local or special statute, although it contains a general repealer of acts inconsistent with it. But, equally in accordance with the purpose and limitations of the rule, such presumption must give way to a plain manifestation of a different legislative intent. The question is always one of intention and the purpose to abrogate the particular enactment by a later general one is sufficiently manifested when the two acts are so irreconcilably inconsistent or repugnant that both cannot stand together. Such intention may also be made to appear by the words of the general act, by the subject-matter with which the general act is concerned, by other legislation on the same matter, by the surrounding circumstances, by the purpose to be accomplished, or by anything else to which reference may properly be had for the purpose of discovering the legislative intent. Thus where the clear general intent of the legislature is to establish a uniform system throughout the state, the presumption must be that local acts are intended to be repealed. So also where an act is passed to carry into effect a general amendatory provision of the constitution, all acts inconsistent therewith, although local, are repealed."

Section 4210, General Code, was passed before the constitutional amendment requiring the application of the merit system was adopted, and also prior to enactment of the civil service law.

The civil service act was passed in compliance with the provisions of section 10 of article 15 of the constitution and the act was intended to establish a uniform system throughout the state as to all offices and positions which are in the civil service as defined by the act itself.

Such a purpose shows a general intent to repeal prior inconsistent acts which may be special, particular or local.

In view of this rule the provisions of section 4210, General Code, which fix a term of office for the clerk of council and which grants the right to council to remove the clerk of council for cause are limited and qualified by the provisions of the civil service act, and to the extent that the two acts are inconsistent, the civil service act is controlling.

This is further shown by the general repealing clause of the civil service act, wherein it is provided in part:

"Repeal. Sections 4381, * * * of the General Code, and all other acts or parts of acts inconsistent with the provisions of this act be and the same are hereby repealed."

The status of the clerk of council must, therefore, be determined by the provisions of the civil service act.

It is necessary to determine first, if the clerk of council as an officer or employe of a legislative body, is in the civil service of the city.

The term "civil service" is defined in section 1 of the civil service act, section 486-1, General Code, as follows:

"Definitions. 1. The term 'civil service' includes all officers and positions of trust or employment, including mechanics, artisans and laborers in the service of the state and the counties, cities and city school districts thereof."

This section places all positions in the civil service. The purpose to include officers or employes of a legislative body in the civil service is further carried out by section 8 of the act when it is provided therein that shall be in the unclassified service.

It is evident, therefore, that the clerk of council is in the civil service of the city as contemplated by the civil service law.

It will be observed that by the terms used in section 4210, General Code, the clerk of council is spoken of as being "elected."

In section 2 of the civil service law, section 486-2, General Code, the election of officers in the civil service is referred to as an "appointment."

Said section 2 reads in part:

"On and after January 1, 1914, appointments to and promotions in the civil service of this state shall be made * * *."

The terms "election" and "appointment" are distinguished in 15 Cyc. at page 279, as follows:

"The term 'election' carries with it the idea of a choice in which all who are to be affected with the choice participate; whereas from the word "appointment" we understand that the duties of the appointee are for others than those by whom he is appointed."

In the note to the above citation it is said:

"As distinguished from an election an appointment is generally made by one person or by a limited number acting with delegated powers, while an election is the direct choice of all the members of the body from whom the choice can be made."

A number of cases are cited. Among these is the case of State vs. McCallister 11 Ohio 46.

In that case Hitchcock, J., says, at page 52:

"The constitution of the state contemplates two different modes of conferring office. One is by appointment, the other by election. And a careful examination will show, that whenever the office is to be conferred by the people, or by any considerable body of the people, it is spoken of as an election. Whenever it is to be conferred by an individual, as by the governor, or by a select number of individuals, as by a judicial court, or by the general assembly, it is spoken of as an appointment."

Also on page 53 he further says:

"It is true that in a certain, and perhaps in the most general sense of the term, every person upon whom an office is conferred may be said to hold that office by appointment, whether the appointment be made by an individual or individuals having power to make, or by the election of a more numerous body. And it is equally true that the same person may be said to have been elected to the office, as he fills it in pursuance of choice whether that choice has been made by one or more."

The clerk of council, while an employe of council is in fact in the service of the city, and his compensation is paid by the city. His selection is made by council. Although section 4210, General Code, provides that he shall be "elected" by council, the selection of a clerk of council is in effect an "appointment," in view of the foregoing distinctions between an election and an appointment.

If the clerk of council comes in the unclassified service it must be by virtue of subdivision 7 of branch (a) of section 8, which provides:

"Two secretaries or assistants or clerks for each of the elective and principal executive officers, boards or commissions, except civil service commissions, authorized by law to appoint such a secretary, assistant or chief clerk.

This branch of section 8 covers "elective and principal executive officers, boards and commissions." The council is an elective body, but it is not an executive body. By virtue of this branch of section 8 the officers, boards and commissions, must be "executive officers, boards or commissions."

This branch of section 8 does not, therefore, include the clerk of council.

It might be contended that council is not a continuous body, and that each newly elected council has the inherent power to select its officers and employes. The same contention can be made as to the general assembly. Yet the legislature has seen fit to specifically place the officers selected by the general assembly in the unclassified service.

A specific mention of one of a similar class in a statute means the exclusion of all others of that class.

I am of opinion, therefore, that the clerk of council is placed in the classified service of the city by the new civil service law. This is true as to the other employes of council.

As to street commissioner:

Section 4363, General Code, provides for the appointment of the street commissioner as follows:

"The street commissioner shall be appointed by the mayor and confirmed by council for a term of one year, and shall serve until his successor is appointed and qualified. He shall be an elector of the corporation. Vacancies in the office of street commissioner shall be filled by the mayor for the unexpired term. In any village the marshal shall be eligible to appointment as street commissioner."

The street commissioner as herein provided for is an officer of a village and the civil service act does not apply to villages. The office of street commissioner is not fixed by statute for a city. If the office is created by ordinance the duties of the office and manner of appointment should be given in order to determine its status under civil service law.

As to the city engineer:

Section 4250, General Code, provides:

"The mayor shall be the chief conservator of the peace within the corporation. He shall appoint and have the power to remove the director of public service, the director of public safety and the heads of the subdepartments of the departments of public service and public safety, and shall have such other powers and perform such other duties as are conferred and required by law."

This section authorizes the mayor to appoint the heads of the subdepartments of the department of public service. The city engineer is at the head of the subdepartment of engineering, and as such is appointed by the mayor.

Subdivision 2 of branch (a) of section 8 of the civil service law, places all heads of principal departments appointed by the mayor in the unclassified service.

The department of engineering is a "subdepartment" of the department of public service. The principal department is that of public service. The city engineer is not at the head of a principal department, and is therefore in the classified service.

The next position to be considered is that of court constable or as commonly called, the court bailiff.

Subdivision 9 of branch (a) of section 8, supra, places "bailiffs of courts of record" in the unclassified service.

Section 1692, General Code, as amended in 103 Ohio Laws, 417, provides:

"When, in the opinion of the court, the business thereof so requires, each court of common pleas, court of appeals, superior court, insolvency court, in each county of the state, and, in counties having at the last or any future federal census more than seventy thousand inhabitants, the probate court may appoint one or more constables to preserve order, attend the assignment of cases in counties where more than two common pleas judges regularly hold court at the same time, and discharge such other duties as the court requires. When so directed by the court, each constable shall have the same powers as sheriffs to call and impanel jurors, except in capital cases."

Section 1541, General Code, applies to the appointment of criminal bailiffs. This section was amended in 103 Ohio Laws, 415, which act was approved May 6, 1913, and also by act in 103 Ohio Laws, 564, which also was approved May 6, 1913.

The parts herein quoted from said section are the same in each of the acts.

Said section 1541, General Code, as amended provides in part:

"The judge of the court of common pleas of a county, or the judges of such court in a county in joint session, if they deem it advisable, may appoint either or all of the following:

"Second. A criminal bailiff, who shall be a deputy sheriff and hold his position during the pleasure of the judge or judges of such court. He shall receive compensation to be fixed by such judge or judges at the time of his appointment not to exceed the amount permitted by law to be allowed court constables in the same court, which shall be paid monthly from the county treasury upon the warrant of the county auditor."

In the act creating and governing the Cleveland municipal court, bailiffs are authorized to be appointed.

Section 1579-46, General Code, as amended in 103 Ohio Laws, 694, provides in part:

"A bailiff and deputy bailiffs, shall be designated as hereinafter provided for in this act. They shall perform for the municipal court services similar to those usually performed by the sheriff for courts of common pleas and by the constable for courts of justice of the peace. * * *"

But section 1579-47, General Code, as amended in 103 Ohio Laws 694, places such officers in the classified service as follows:

"Excepting the clerk and the chief deputy clerk, the bailiff and all deputy clerks and deputy bailiffs, of the municipal court shall be in the classified civil service of the city of Cleveland, subject to the provisions of the laws of the state applying to said classified service. * * *"

The statutes do not provide for bailiffs in police courts.

The foregoing are all the provisions of the statutes wherein officers of a court are called "bailiffs."

If subdivision 9, supra, applies only to such positions as are called "bailiffs" in the statutes, then it can only apply to the criminal bailiff authorized to be appointed by virtue of section 1541, General Code, supra. The bailiffs of the Cleveland municipal court are specifically placed in the classified service and were in said classified service prior to the amendment of the Cleveland municipal court act in 103 Ohio Laws 694, supra.

Court constables as provided for in section 1692, General Code, are commonly known as court bailiffs and are not generally known as constables, as called by statute.

A bailiff is defined at page 156 of volume 5 of Cyc.:

"Bailiff. An officer concerned in the administration of justice of a certain province; an under or deputy sheriff; a tipstaff; * * *."

Also at page 1524 of volume 35 of Cyc. under the subject of "sheriffs and constables" bailiffs are defined:

"Bailiffs. It is the duty of the sheriff, when he cannot attend to such duties in person, to appoint deputies to attend upon the terms of court, and when such deputies are put in charge of juries the term 'bailiff' is applied to them. * * *"

There is no statutory officer, other than the criminal bailiff, that is called by statute a "bailiff," to which subdivision 9 of section 8, of the civil service law can apply. The officer who performs the duties of a court bailiff is the court constable and this officer is generally known as the court bailiff. He is in fact the bailiff of such courts and as such is a bailiff of a court of record.

The legislature in specifying the officers in the unclassified service used general terms and did not call or designate each office by its specific title.

By subdivision 9, supra, the legislature evidently intended that such officers who performed the duties of "bailiffs" to courts of record should be placed in the unclassified service. The court constable provided for in section 1692, General Code, performs such duties and is therefore in the unclassified service.

Respectfully,
TIMOTHY S. HOGAN,
Attorney General.

CIVIL SERVICE—COURT STENOGRAPHERS IN CLASSIFIED SERVICE UNLESS CIVIL SERVCE COMMISSION DETERMINES OTHERWISE.

The question whether or not court stenographers are to be in the classified civil service is an administrative question and should be settled by the civil service commissioners. Court stenographers are in the classified civil service unless the civil service commissioners decide that it is not practicable to determine their merits and fitness by a competitive examination.

COLUMBUS, OHIO, December 9, 1913.

State Civil Service Commission of Ohio, Columbus, Ohio.

GENTLEMEN:—A question relating to the civil service laws has been submitted to this department by Mr. Frank L. Hogan, Secretary of the Ohio Reporters' Association, which will, no doubt, be of interest throughout the state, and with which your commission will be concerned, consequently, pursuant to our understanding that all questions of this nature should be answered as if coming from the civil service commission, I am taking the liberty of herewith submitting my opinion upon the matter involved.

Mr. Hogan's inquiry is as follows:

> "Does the position of official court stenographer come within the purview of the new state civil service law?"

Section 10 of article 15 of the constitution, was adopted by the people of this state at an election held on September 3, 1912, and provides as follows:

> "Appointments and promotions in the civil service of the state, the several counties, and cities, shall be made according to merit and fitness, to be ascertained, as far as practicable, by competitive examinations. Laws shall be passed providing for the enforcement of this provision."

This mandate to the general assembly was complied with by the passage, on April 28, 1913, of an act to regulate the civil service of the state of Ohio, the several counties, cities and school districts thereof, and to repeal certain sections of the General Code. This act was approved by the governor on May 5, 1913. It provides, among other things, that on and after Jan. 1, 1914, appointments to and promotions in the civil service of the state and the counties, cities and city school districts thereof, shall be made only according to merit and fitness, to be ascertained as far as practicable, by examination which, if practicable, shall be competitive. On and after that date, no person shall be appointed, removed, transferred, laid off, suspended, reinstated, promoted or reduced as an officer or employe in the civil service under the government of this state or the foregoing subdivisions thereof, except as prescribed in said act. Your commission is authorized to prescribe, amend and enforce rules for carrying into effect that section of the constitution just quoted, and the provisions of said act, which rules are to have the force and effect of law.

Section 8 of the act divides the civil service into unclassified and classified service. Those coming within the unclassified service are expressly designated, they being officers elected by public vote, heads of principal departments, boards and commissions, appointed by the governor or with his consent, or by the mayor or similar chief appointing authorities of any city or village school district, officers elected by either or both branches of the general assembly all election officers, all commissioned, non-commissioned officers and enlisted men in the military service of the state, presidents, superintendents, directors, teachers and instructors in the public schools, colleges and universities; the library staff of any library, supported wholly or in part at public expense, two secretaries or assistants or clerks for each of the elective and principal executive officers, boards or commissions, excepting the civil service commissions, authorized by law to appoint such employes, deputies of elective or principal executive officers authorized by law to act generally for and in place of their principals, and holding a fiduciary relation to such principal; bailiffs of courts of record, and employes and clerks of boards of deputy state supervisors and inspectors of elections.

The salient provisions relating to classified service read thus:

> "The classified service shall comprise all persons in the employ of the state, the counties, cities and city school districts thereof, not specifically included in the unclassified service, to be designated as the competitive class. 1. The competitive class shall include all positions and employments now existing or hereafter created in the state, the counties cities and city school districts thereof, for which it is practicable, to determine the merit and fitness of applicants by competitive examinations. Appointments shall be made to or employment shall be given in all positions in the competitive class that are not filled by promotion, reinstatement, transfer or reduction as provided in sections 15, 16 and 17 of this act, and the rules of the commission by appointment from those certified to the appointing officer, in accordance with the provisions of section 13 of this act."

By virtue of section 9 of this act, your commission is required to put into effect rules for the classification of offices positions and employment in the classified service of the state and the counties, and for appointments promotions, transfers, etc., which rules are to be given to appointing officers affected thereby, as well as printed for public distribution.

The nature of the examinations to be given and the manner in which they shall be conducted, are defined under section 10. Incumbents of positions in the competitive classified service, except those holding positions under the existing civil service laws, shall be subject to a non-competitive examination as a condition of continuing in the service. From the returns of these examinations the commission shall prepare an eligible list of persons whose general average is not less than the minimum fixed by your rules, provided such persons are otherwise eligible. The persons on the eligible list shall take rank in the order of their relative excellence, as determined by the examination and in case this develops equality priority of time of application shall determine the order in which the names shall be placed upon the list.

Under section 13, the heads of the departments, offices or institutions in which a position in the competitive classified list is to be filled, shall notify the commission of such fact and it shall then certify to him the names of the three candidates standing highest on the list, for the class or grade to which the position belongs. The appointing officer shall fill such position by appointment of one of the three persons certified to him by the commission, as aforesaid. This appointment shall be for a probationary period of not to exceed three months, to be fixed by the rules and no appointment or promotion shall finally be made until the probationary period has been served. At the end of this time the appointing officer shall transmit to the civil service commission a record of the employe's service, and if it is unsatisfactory the employe may, with the approval of the commission, be removed or reduced without restriction; but dismissal or reduction may be made during such period as provided in section 17 of the act, to which I shall hereafter refer.

Positions in the competitive class may be filled without competition; (a) when there are urgent reasons for filling a vacncy and the commission is unable to certify to the appointing officer a list of eligible persons, when the appointing officer may nominate a person to the commission for a non-competitive examination and if certified by the commission as qualified, such person may be appointed provisionally to fill a vacancy until appointment can be made after competitive examination. (b) In case of vacancy in a position where peculiar and exceptional qualifications of a scientific, managerial, professional or educational character are required and competition is impracticable and the position can best be filled by the selection of some designated person of high and recognized attainments, in which event the commission may suspend the provision of statute relating to competition. (c) When the services to be rendered are for a temporary period not to exceed one month and the need of such service is important and urgent, then any person on the eligible list may be selected without regard to his standing.

"Any person holding an office or position under the classified service who has been separated from the service without delinquency or misconduct on his part may, with the consent of the commission, be reinstated within one year from the date of such separation to a vacancy in the same or similar office or position in the same department."

Section 17, heretofore referred to, reads as follows:

"No persons shall be discharged from the classified service, reduced in pay or position, laid off, suspended or otherwise discriminated against by the appointing officer for religious or political reasons. In all cases of discharge, lay off, reduction, or suspension of a subordinate, whether appointed for a definite term or otherwise, the appointing officer shall furnish the subordinate discharged, laid off, reduced or suspended, with a copy of the order of discharge, lay off, reduction or suspension, and his reasons for the same, and give such subordinate a reasonable time in which to make and file an explanation. Such order together with the explanation, if any of the subordinate shall be filed with the commission.

"Nothing in this act shall limit the power of an officer to suspend without pay, for purposes of discipline a subordinate for a reasonable period, not exceeding thirty days; provided however, that successive suspensions shall not be allowed."

I have discussed at some length the provisions of this act in order that a clear understanding as to its purport and scope may be had, as this is an essential element to be taken into consideration in construing the law.

I do not believe that court stenographers can be treated as coming within the unclassified service, as they are not either directly or indirectly included within any of the classes therein designated consequently I have here to determine whether they are comprised within the classified service.

The question is one of much difficulty and it may be well to quote the provisions of law relating to their appointment. Section 1546 of the General Code, as it appeared prior to the amendment thereto which will be hereafter quoted, authorized the court of common pleas to appoint a stenographer who should hold the appointment for a term of three years and until a successor was appointed and qualified unless removed by the court, after good cause shown for neglect of duty, misconduct in office or incompetency.

On April 17, 1913, and eleven days prior to the passage of the civil service act, this section was amended, authorizing the court to appoint for a term not exceeding three years. The statute now reads as follows:

"When in its opinion the business requires it, the court of common pleas of a county may appoint a stenographic reporter as official stenographer of such court who shall hold the appointment for a term not exceeding three years from the date thereof, and until a successor is appointed and qualified, unless removed by the court, after a good cause shown, for neglect of duty, misconduct in office, or incompetency. Such official stenographer shall take an oath to faithfully and impartially discharge the duties of such position."

This act was approved on May 6, 1913 and one day after the civil service act.

It would seem to be fundamental that this authority vested in the court, would constitute within the meaning of the civil service act, an employment created in the state, as it is by virtue of the state law that a stenographer may be hired, and the court is an arm of the state rather than a county official.

A peculiar situation arises by reason of the fact that the civil service law, although passed after this act nevertheless was approved first, the difficulty being in determining what rule of statutory construction should obtain, there being a conflict to some extent at least between that provision of the civil service law which prohibits removal for religious or political reasons, and the express designation of an official term by court, under authority of the courts stenographer statute. A doubt also would arise in case the court stenographer act is to be read as an exception to the civil service law, as to whether a stenographer should be appointed from the eligible list, although such doubt is not a very serious one, in that two acts might be reconcilable in this regard upon the hypothesis that while the court should appoint his choice should be confined to those persons certified to him by the civil service commission.

In principle, the case of People vs. Gaffney, 142 App. Dec. 122 (N. Y.) seems to maintain this view. The decision has been affirmed without report by the New York court of appeals. In addition to this, under the civil service act the court would be compelled to furnish a stenographer, whom he had discharged, with reasons for such dismissal, the subordinate being given a reasonable time in which to file an explanation. In this regard the two laws might be read together and reconciled. The real conflict will arise when the term of the stenographer has expired, as it seems to be the aim and purpose of the civil service law merely to provide for civil service in so far as appointments are concerned, and not with reference to tenure in office.

Returning, however, to the subject of the construction of statutes, it is a fundamental principle that, in construing laws, the intent of the legislature is the polar star by which one is to be guided and it is a general rule that this legislative intent may be ascertained from the time at which the laws were enacted—that is to say, where there is conflict between an earlier and later statute, the last shall govern. Whether this priority is to be determined from the date of the approval by the governor or from the time of the enactment of the laws by the general assembly, is a serious question. Authority may be found to support both views, and in view of the fact that I think that the civil service act is to be construed as an exception to ordinary legislative enactments, as I shall hereafter show, I do not care to enter upon a discussion of the question as to whether the date of the approval of the governor or the date of the passage of the laws should be the guiding light to lead us out of the maze in which those laws are involved, but it would seem that the mere inadvertent act of the governor in signing last the law first passed, ought not to operate to defeat the manifest purpose of the law enacting body of the state.

State vs. Henson, 106 Pac. 362.

Of course if the principle last referred to obtains, there would be no question that the civil service act superseded section 1546, insofar as there exists any repugnancy between them, but in view of the other rules of statutory construction, which will enable us to arrive at the same result in regard to this law, I shall not further refer to that phase of the situation. Furthermore, if that view should be taken it would result in the placing of the common pleas court stenographer under civil service, while the stenographer of the court of appeals would not be within such service. This is true because on the day succeeding the passage of the civil service act, the legislature revised certain sections of the General Code relative to the organization, jurisdiction and procedure of the court of appeals, which revision was approved by the governor on May 6, 1913, one day after he approved the civil service law, thus unquestionably rendering the court of appeals law the later enactment.

Section 1520 of this act, 103 O. L., 412 provides as follows:

> "Each court of appeals may appoint one or more official stenographers. They shall take an oath of office, serve at the pleasure of the court, perform such duties as the court directs, and have such powers as are vested in official stenographers of the common pleas court.

What has already been said with reference to the reconcilement of the common pleas stenographer statute, obtains in regard to the section now under discussion, excepting that these latter stenographers "serve at the pleasure of the court," which, if the civil service act does not apply, would enable them to remove a stenographer for religious or political reasons.

It is a sound and salutary doctrine of statutory construction that all laws in pari materia should be construed together, and this applies with peculiar force to the statutes passed at the same session of the legislature. The presumption is that such laws are imbued with the same spirit and actuated by the same policy and consequently should be construed together as if parts of the same act; and statutes which are not even in pari materia may be referred to in ascertaining the legislative intent.

26 Am. En. Enc. of Law, 2d. Ed. 623, 624,

Now statutes are in pari materia when they relate to the same class of persons or things. They have the same general purpose.

26 Am. Eng. Enc. of Law, 2d edition, 621.

38 Cyc., 1147.

These three statutes have express reference to the appointment and tenure of state employes. The civil service act expressly refers to all positions and employments now existing or hereafter created in the state, while the other statutes quoted apply to particular employments. At this point I desire to say, that I cannot bring myself to believe that this is a case calling for the application of another rule of statutory construction, to the effect that a particular statute is to be read as an exception to a general statute for the reason that the civil service act relates to a primary interest of public policy, which was recognized by the people of the state in adopting the constitution. It clearly and cogently lays down the theory that it is the public policy of the state that civil service should obtain, and the other statutes to which we are here confining ourselves, are of a secondary consideration and therefore that which is greater in principle should obtain. Consequently, it must follow that the doctrine of special statutes, overriding general ones, does not here obtain.

Having established the fact that these three laws should be construed together as if they were parts of the same act, we bring the matter in hand within the purview of state ex. rel. vs. Mulhern, 74 O. S., 363, which provides that in giving construction to a legislative act, the position in the order of precedence of the several provisions will be given due consideration, but there is not arbitrary rule requiring that a provision found in the latter part of the act shall be given an effect to repeal conflicting provisions in the earlier part of the act. Where conflicting provisions are irreconcilable, the court, in seeking to make the act enforcible, will be governed by the purpose, policy and intent of the general assembly, as gathered from the whole act, even though it results in a disregard of the later provision. This rule should here obtain, even though the statutes were not in pari materia or were not parts of the same statute. The civil service law was passed on one day and the court of appeals stenographer act on the following. They are so close in point of time that the obvious policy and intent of the legislature should be ascertained from an examination of the two laws rather than by any arbitrary rule to the effect that the later provisions or statute should repeal the prior one.

Blackwell vs. Bank, 63 Pac., 43,

Mays vs. Bassett, 125 Pac., 609,

The rule last referred to is not based upon reasoning but rather upon necessity, and therefore should not be applied when that necessity does not exist. Here the intent of the legislature may be ascertained by a construction of the two acts. When the general assembly stated that the competitive class should include all positions and employments hereafter created, it meant just what it said, and when it created a position on the folowing day, it intended that position to be read as coming within the purview of the former act. Had there been any other intent or desire on the part of the legislature, such intent or desire could easily have been made clear by the insertion of the proper language. While it is true that one legislature cannot pass a law which another legislature may not repeal, nevertheless, it has been held that it may bind such subsequent legislature by providing in the law that it shall only be expressly repealed.

American Society vs. Cloversville, 78 Hun., 40. In so doing it merely lays down a rule for the construction of a certain statute and it is not an attempt by one legislature to restrict a future legislature, as the latter can frame enactments so as to bring them without the purview of the first law. This rule should obtain a fortiori in this case because all these laws were passed by the same general assembly. The foregoing doctrine has received the support of a supreme court of the United States in Lau Ow Bew vs. United States, 144 U. S., 47. Section 6 of the court of appeals act provided that these courts should have appellate jurisdiction to review final decisions of the circuit court in certain cases "unless otherwise provided by law." Chief Justice Fuller, for the court, says, that the quoted words were inserted out of abundant caution in order that any qualification of the jurisdiction, by contemporaneous or subsequent acts, should not be construed as taking it away, except when expressly so provided. "Implied repeals were intended to be thereby guarded against. To hold that the words referred to prior laws would defeat the purpose of the act and be inconsistent with its context and its repealing clause." If words of the character referred to by Mr. Chief Justice Fuller provide against implied r peals, it cannot fairly be contended that the words "hereafter created in this state" do not, just as effectually remove the possibility of impliedly repealing the civil service law, by acts such as the one here being considered.

Another important and decisive consideration to be borne in mind is, that the civil service act was passed in pursuance of a constitutional mandate. It is a law providing for the enforcement of section 10 of article 15, to be found quoted in this opinion, and under the decision of the supreme court of this state, in State vs. Harris, 77 O. S., 481, should be interpreted as if part of the amendment. In that case an amendment to the constitution relating to elections was before the court, such amendment providing that the general assembly should have power to extend existing terms of office to effect the purpose of section 1 of said amendment. This language was not as positive as is the language used in the present instance. It was contended that the law enacted in conformity with this amendment was unconstitutional, as in violation with another provision of the constitution to the effect that no person should be eligible to certain offices for more than four years in any period of six years. The court in deciding the case held that cases interpreting constitutional restrictions respecting ordinary legislation are distinguishable from those pertaining to acts especially authorized by constitution. In other words, the application of a constitutional limitation to an act passed under a general grant of legislative power, is not involved. The court holds that a law, such as the one here in question, enacted to make a constitutional amendment operator, is to be interpreted as a part of the constitutional amendment. Adopting this construction, we are confronted with the proposition to repeal by implication part of the constitutional amendment, merely because the general assembly had subsequently enacted a law, which in some respects is not in complete harmony with an act passed for the purpose of carrying into effect the constitution, which latter act must be read as part of the constitutional amendment. To permit this would be violative of sound public policy and the spirit, if not the exact letter of the decision just cited. By this I do not mean to say that the legislature could not alter a law carrying into effect a constitutional provision, but I do wish to be understood as holding that this cannot be done by implication, nor by the passage of laws in some respect conflicting with an act vitalizing the constitution. In order that the legislature may alter the civil service act, it is necessary that it do so by directly amending the provisions of that act, thereby clearly indicating an intention to carry out the provisions of the constitution in some way other than that originally designed. That has not been done in this case and consequently, I am of the opinion that the civil service act applies to stenographers of the common pleas court and the court of appeals, unless they are taken out of the classified service by the commission, under circumstances hereinafter referred to. I may add that the reasoning adopted in this branch of the opinion receives added force from the fact that all the laws here involved were passed by the same session of the legislature at approximately the same time.

The possibility just suggested that court stenographers might not be under civil service, arises by virtue of the language following the figure 1, where it appears in that provision of section 8 relating to classified service. The competitive class includes positions and employments for which it is practicable to determine the merit and fitness of the applicants by competitive examination. This determination of the practicability of an examination for the ascertainment of the fitness and merit of applicants, is in the first instance for your commission, and its decision is final in the absence of an arbitrary, unfair or improper action by it in including in or excluding from the competitive class, certain employments. Should it exceed the bounds of propriety and reasonableness, the courts will review its action. It appears, however, as a matter of law, that a court stenographer does not occupy a position for which it is not practicable to determine the merits and fitness of applicants by competitive examinations. The case of People vs. Weatherly, 130 N. Y. Supp. 1, expressly holds that a stenographer comes within civil service, and the reasoning of this case will be applicable to the whole law.

In connection with the foregoing discussion, I desire to remark that in People vs. McWilliams, 185, N. Y., 92, is to be found what is probably the latest expression of the New York court of appeals upon the question of the extent to which the courts will go in reviewing the question of the practicability of competitive examinations. The holding is to the effect that the determination of the commissioners in classifying positions is not a judicial act, although it involves in a high degree the exercise of judgment, which judgment is that of the legislative or executive officers rather than that of a judge. Decisions of matters of this kind involve considerations which cannot well be the subject of judicial inquiry, but, nevertheless, the action of the commissioners is subject to control. The proper classification depends, in no small degree, on the practical operation of such classification, but if it clearly violates the constitution or the law, mandamus will issue to correct the error. The court will not intervene unless the action of the commission is palpably illegal. In other words, if the position is clearly one that is subject to a competitive examination, the commissioners may be compelled so to classify it, while on the other hand, if the position be by law or from its nature, exempt from examination, and the action of the commission be unlawful, it may be compelled to strike the position from the competitive class. If there be fair and reasonable ground for difference of opinion among intelligent and conscientious officials, the action of the commission should stand, even though the courts might differ from the commission as to the wisdom of the classification.

Yours very truly,

TIMOTHY S. HOGAN,

Attorney General.

WHEN STATE CIVIL SERVICE COMMISSION MAY APPOINT CIVIL SERVICE COMMISSION FOR CITY—LENGTH OF TERM OF SUCH COMMISSION, ETC.

Where the mayor of a city fails, for more than sixty days after the taking effect of the civil service law, to appoint a civil service commission for such city, it becomes the duty of the state civil service commission to appoint a civil service commission for the said city, the appointment to take effect immediately and to continue in force until the expiration of the term of such mayor.

COLUMBUS, OHIO, December 26, 1913.

Civil Service Commission, Columbus, Ohio.

GENTLEMEN:—I have your inquiry in which you set forth that the mayor of the city of Washington C. H. has failed, for more than 60 days after the taking effect of the civil service law, to appoint a civil service commission for that city, and that lately, and after the expiration of said 60 days, he named three persons to act as a civil service commission for that city; and you inquire as to whether the 60 day limit in section 19 of the civil service law is directory or mandatory, and whether it is your duty, under that section, to make an appointment of the civil service commission of that city.

I have given the matter careful consideration and have concluded that the failure of the mayor to appoint within the 60 days, rendered it impossible for him to legally make the appointment thereafter, and that his naming of said parties at the time he did, had no force nor effect in law, and was nugatory. I am of the opinion that it is the duty of your board to appoint a civil service commission for Washington C. H., the appointment to take effect immediately, and the tenure of the appointees to be until the expiration of the term of the present mayor of that city, which, I am advised, is January 1, 1914.

I believe this fully and clearly answers your question and will set the matter at rest in so far as said city is concerned.

Yours very truly,
TIMOTHY S. HOGAN,
Attorney General.

MUNICIPAL CIVIL SERVICE COMMISSION—POWER OF MAYOR TO APPOINT—POWER OF STATE CIVIL SERVICE COMMISSION TO APPOINT WHERE MAYOR NEGLECTS TO APPOINT.

When the mayor of a city, or the chief appointing authority thereof, fails to appoint a member of the municipal civil service commission within sixty days after that right existed in him, the state civil service commission is the only authority which can exercise the right of appointment of such member.

COLUMBUS, OHIO, December 20, 1913.

State Civil Service Commission, Columbus, Ohio.

GENTLEMEN:—Under date of December 16, 1913, you inquire:

"In many municipalities of the state the mayors have not yet appointed civil service commissions, and in some of the municipalities of the state the existing mayors have appointed civil service commissioners since the expiration of sixty days from the taking effect of the civil service act.

"To illustrate our question we desire to say, that in one city in Ohio there never was a municipal civil service commission appointed until December 12, 1913, when the mayor of that city appointed three persons to serve for two, four and six years, respectively. There has come to our commission requests that we act under section 19 of the civil service act and proceed to appoint a commission for that city.

"We desire your opinion to this commission as to whether or not the power of a mayor of a city to appoint a municipal civil service commission continues until the power has been exercised by the state commission, or does the authority of the mayor to appoint a commission cease after sixty days have elapsed from the time the law became effective?

"The two questions we desire to have answered specifically are:

"First. When does the right and authority of a mayor to appoint a civil service commission for his city cease where the authority has never been exercised, or where a vacancy exists?

"Second. Does the authority of this commission to appoint municipal civil service commission begin at the expiration of sixty days from the time the law became effective, and is the authority of our commission thereafter the only appointing power, or does that power continue to be lodged both in the mayor and in our commission until one or the other has exercised its prerogative?"

A similar inquiry has been received from Hon. S. M. Johnson, solicitor of Athens, under date of November 19, 1913.

Your inquiry is governed by the provisions of section 19 of the civil service act to be known as section 486-19, General Code.

Said section provides in part:

"The mayor or other chief appointing authority of each city in the state shall appoint three persons, one for a term of two years, one for four years, and one for six years, who shall constitute the municipal civil service commission of such city and of the city school district in which such city is located; provided, however, that members of existing municipal civil service commissions shall continue in office for the terms for which they have been appointed and that their successors, the first appointees of the mayor or other chief appointing authority of such city, shall be appointed to serve respectively for four years, five years and six years and until their successors are appointed and have qualified.

"If the appointing authority of any such city fails to appoint a civil service commission or commissioner as provided by law within sixty days after he has the power to so appoint, or after a vacancy exists, the state civil service commission shall make the appointment, and such appointee shall hold office until the expiration of the term of the appointing authority of such city and until the successor of such appointee is appointed and qualified."

By virtue of this section the mayor is given the power to appoint the members of the municipal service commission.

Formerly the municipal civil service commission was appointed by virtue of section 4478, General Code. This section was specifically repealed by the repealing clause of the civil service act. This repeal became effective ninety days after the approval of the civil service act by the governor on May 5th, 1913.

Section 19 of the civil service act became effective ninety days after its approval on May 5, 1913, and from that time the power of appointing a municipal civil service commission vested in the mayor.

It is further provided that if the appointing authority of such city fails to make such appointment "within sixty days after he has the power to so appoint, or after a vacancy exists, the state civil service commission shall make the appointment."

Is this provision directory or mandatory? This is a matter of construction and the intention of the legislature as expressed must govern.

Provisions as to the time of performance of a duty by an officer are generally directory, but there are exceptions.

The rule is stated at section 612 of Sutherland on Statutory Construction:

> "Provisions regulating the duties of public officers and specifying the time for their performance are in that regard generally directory. Though a statute directs a thing to be done at a particular time, it does not necessarily follow that it may not be done afterwards. In other words, as the cases universally hold, a statute specifying a time within which a public officer is to perform an official act regarding the rights and duties of others is directory, unless the nature of the act to be performed, or the phraseology of the statute is such that the designation of time must be considered as a limitation of the power of the officer."

The nature of the provision under consideration and the phraseology of the statute is such that the designation of the time "must be considered as a limitation of the power of the officer," the chief appointing authority, to make the appointment.

Also at section 617 Sutherland further says:

> "A statute required that, within fifteen days after a vote to organize a new school district, directors of the new district should be elected. The provision was held mandatory as to time, and a failure to elect directors within the time specified was held to nullify the prior proceedings to organize the district."

By section 19 of the civil service act, after the expiration of sixty days the power of appointment is vested in the state civil service commission. This time of sixty days does not begin to run in all cases from the time when the civil service law became effective. The power to appoint is active when an appointment is to be made, and the time of sixty days begins to run when the appointing authority has an appointment to make.

It is evident that the legislature did not intend that the power of appointment should exist in two different authorities at the same time. It has fixed the time within which the mayor may act, and during that time his power is exclusive. This is a limitation upon his power of appointment and if he fails to act within that time, his right terminates. In that event the exclusive right of appointment is vested in the state civil service commission. At no time has the mayor and the state civil service commission a concurrent power of appointment.

Answering your specific questions:

Where no municipal civil service commission has ever been appointed the right of the mayor to appoint vested in him ninety days after May 5, 1913, and that power ceased sixty days after it vested.

The power of a mayor to fill a vacancy vests when such vacancy occurs and ceases sixty days thereafter.

The authority of the state civil service commission to appoint members of a municipal civil service commission begins at the expiration of sixty days from the time the state civil service law became effective, where no civil service commission has ever been appointed for a city.

When the mayor of a city, or the chief appointing authority thereof, fails to appoint a member of the municipal civil service commission within sixty days after that right existed in him, the state civil service commission is the only authority which can exercise the right of appointment of such member.

In this connection your attention is called to this provision of section 19, as to the appointee of the state civil service commission:

> "and such appointee shall hold office until the expiration of the term of the appointing authority of such city and until the successor of such appointee is appointed and qualified."

The state civil service commission does not appoint for the full term or for the unexpired term in case of a vacancy.

Respectfully,
TIMOTHY S. HOGAN,
Attorney General.

CIVIL SERVICE ACT—MUNICIPAL CIVIL SERVICE—CLASSIFIED SERVICE—INCUMBENTS—COMPETITIVE EXAMINATION — NON-COMPETITIVE EXAMINATION.

1. The civil service act does not repeal section 4505 of the General Code, specifically. This section would be repealed by the civil service act insofar as it is inconsistent with the provisions of this act.

2. Under the provisions of section 10 of the civil service law incumbents who were not in the classified civil service under the former civil service law, and are placed in the classified service, retain their positions subject to a non-competitive examination. This provision applies to municipal, county and state positions.

3. The word "incumbents" includes all persons legally holding positions prior to January 1, 1914, and who legally occupy their positions on January 1, 1914.

4. Incumbents holding positions on Jan. 1, 1914, are not compelled to take a competitive examination. They are required to take a non-competitive examination in order to hold their position.

COLUMBUS, OHIO, Dec. 27, 1913.

State Civil Service Commission, Columbus, Ohio.

GENTLEMEN:—Your favor of December 3, 1913, is received, in which you inquire:

"First: Does the civil service act known as amended Senate Bill No. 7, repeal section 4505 of the General Code?

"Second: Would persons in the municipal service now holding office by appointment without examination because they were not in the classified service under the old law, but who are now taken from the exempt class and put in the classified service by the new law, be included among those persons who shall not be removed on and after January 1, 1914, as provided in section 2 of the civil service act?

"That is, will those persons who are holding positions of this class on the first day of January, 1914, be from that time on in the classified service until after they have taken the non-competitive examination provided for in the last paragraph of section 10 of the civil service law?

"Third: What is the meaning of the word "incumbents" as used in the last paragraph of section 10 of the civil service law in its application to those who are in the service of the municipalities and who have not heretofore been in the classified service, and will these incumbents who may never have passed an examination be construed as in the classified service from January 1, up to the time they take their non-competitive examination?

Fourth: Does section 10 of the civil service act require a non-competitive examination for such "incumbents," or may the municipal commissions require these "incumbents" to submit to a competitive examination?"

The title to the civil service act, 103, Ohio Laws, 698, et seq., reads in part:

"To regulate the civil service of the state of Ohio, the several counties, cities and city school districts thereof, and to repeal sections 4412, * * * 4504, 4505, 7690-1, * * * of the General Code.

The repealing part of said act, section 32 thereof, reads:

"Repeal. Sections 4381, 4412, 4477, * * * 4503, 4504, 7690-1, * * * of the General Code, and all other acts or parts of acts inconsistent with the provisions of this act be and the same are hereby repealed."

Section 4505, General Code, is mentioned in the title, but is omitted in the repealing section.

Section 31 of said act provides in part:

"* * * Municipal civil service commissions now in office shall continue to perform their duties under the provisions of sections 4412, 4477, 4505, 7690-1, 7690-6, 12895 and 12896 of the General Code and the rules prescribed thereunder until rules are provided in compliance with the the provisions of this act.

The fact that section 4505, General Code, is used in this section in connection with other sections which have been repealed would not be sufficient of itself to show that section 4505, General Code, was in fact repealed.

The title of an act is not a substantive part thereof. It may be looked to in case of doubt to ascertain the intention and purpose of the legislature.

The rule is stated by Hitchcock, J., at page 10, of state of Ohio vs. Granville Alexandrian Society, 11 Ohio 1, where he says:

"True, the title to an act does not constitute any part of the act, but it may be referred to, in order to explain what is doubtful in the act, itself.

The same judge says in case of Steamboat Monarch vs. Finley, 10 Ohio 384, at page 387:

"Although the title to a statute constitutes no part of the law, yet it may well be considered in its construcion as furnishing an index by which doubtful matters in the body of a statute may be settled. Especially is this proper where, as in this state, the title is prefixed by a solemn vote of the legislature passing the law."

It will be observed that the title is referred to in order to construe doubtful provisions of the act.

The title in this case evidently shows that at one time the act proposed to repeal section 4505, General Code, but the completed act does not show such a repeal. The omission of section 4505, General Code, in the repealing section is not doubtful. It is an actual fact.

Therefore section 4505, General Code, is not specifically repealed by act of 103 Ohio Laws 698, known as the civil service act. In so far as the provisions of section 4505, General Code, are inconsistent with the provisions of the civil service act it would be repealed by implication. The section has not been examined to determine this.

Your second inquiry is as to persons in the municipal civil service, who were not in the classified service under the former civil service law but who are placed in the classified service by the provisions of the new act.

Section 2 of the civil service act, section 486-2, General Code, provides:

"Method of appointment. On and after January 1, 1914, appointments to and promotions in the civil service of this state and the counties, cities and city school districts thereof shall be made only according to merit and fitness to be ascertained as far as practicable by examination which, as far as practicable, shall be competitive; and on and after January 1, 1914, no person shall be appointed, removed, transferred, laid off, suspended, reinstated, promoted or reduced as an officer or employee in the civil service under the government of this state, the counties, cities and city school districts thereof, in any manner or by any means other than those prescribed in this act."

This section applies to all persons and positions in the civil service of the state, the counties, cities and city school districts thereof. It includes positions in municipal civil service, which under the former municipal civil service law were in the unclassified service but which will be in the classified service under the act of 103 Ohio Laws, 698, et seq.

Section 10 of the civil service act, section 486-10, General Code, provides in part:

"The incumbents of all offices and places in the competitive classified service, except those holding their positions under existing civil service laws, shall, whenever the commission shall require, and within twelve months after the rules adopted by the commission go into effect, be subject to non-competitive examinations as a condition of continuing in the service. Reasonable notice of all such non-competitive examinations shall be given in such manner as the commission may require and all such non-competitive examinations shall conform in character to those of the competitive service."

The provisions of section 10 apply to persons in the municipal civil service as well as to those in the state. This is shown by the exception in the part of this section above quoted:

"except those holding their positions under existing civil service laws."

This exception can only apply to cities and city school districts. Municipalities are specifically mentioned in other parts of section 10, supra.

By virtue of the above provisions of section 10, incumbents who were not in the classified service under the former civil service law, and who are placed in the classified service by the act of 103, Ohio Laws, 698, retain their positions subject to a non-competitive examination. This provision applies to positions in the municipal civil service as well as to those in the service of the state and of the counties thereof.

Under the former municipal service law, incumbents at the time the act became effective passed into the classified service without examination of any kind. The new law provides for a non-competitive examination as a condition of their, the incumbents, continuance in the service.

In your third inquiry you ask the meaning of the word "incumbents" as used in section 10, supra, and whether such incumbents are in the classified service from and after January 1, 1914, up to the time they take the non-competitive examination.

By virtue of section 2 of the civil service act on and after January 1, 1914, all appointments and promotions are to be made by virtue of the provisions of the new civil service law.

The word "incumbents" as used in section 10, supra, applies to all persons who have been legally appointed to an office or position prior to January 1, 1914, and who on January 1, 1914, legally occupy such offices or positions.

In other words the "incumbents" must have been appointed in conformity to the law in existence at the time of their appointment.

The word "incumbents" will include persons in the municipal civil service who were in the unclassified service prior to January 1, 1914, and who were legally appointed to such positions. Such "incumbents" if placed in the classified service by the act of 103, Ohio Laws, 698, will be subject to the provisions of section 10, supra, and will pass into the classified service subject to a non-competitive examination.

On and after January 1, 1914, all positions are either in the classified service or in the unclassified service. The civil service is divided into these two classes. On January 1, 1914, incumbents of positions in the classified service under the new law pass into the classified service, but their continuance therein is subject to a non-competitive examination. This applies to the civil service of the state, the counties, cities and city school districts.

Answering your fourth inquiry:

Municipal civil service commissions cannot compel "incumbents" on January 1, 1914, to take a competitive examination. Such incumbents are required to take a "non-competitive" examination as a condition of their continuance in the classified service.

Respectfully,
TIMOTHY S. HOGAN,
Attorney General.

ASSISTANT PROSECUTING ATTORNEYS IN UNCLASSIFIED SERVICE—ASSISTANT CITY SOLICITORS IN UNCLASSIFIED SERVICE—UNCLASSIFIED CIVIL SERVICE.

Assistant prosecuting attorneys are deputies within the meaning of the civil service law, and are in the unclassified service of the county. Assistant city solicitors are deputies within the meaning of the civil service law, and are in the unclassified service of the county.

COLUMBUS, OHIO, Dec. 30, 1912.

State Civil Service Commission, Columbus, Ohio.

GENTLEMEN:—You have made inquiry of this department as to whether or not assistant prosecuting attorneys are in the classified or unclassified service under the civil service law, 103, O. L., 698, et seq.

Section 2915, General Code, provides:

> "The prosecuting attorney may appoint such assistants, clerks and stenographers as he deems necessary for the proper performance of the duties of his office, and fix their compensation, not to exceed in the aggregate the amount fixed by the judge or judges of the court of common pleas. Such compensation after being so fixed shall be paid to such assistants, clerks and stenographers monthly from the general fund of the county treasury upon the warrant of the county auditor."

This section authorizes the prosecuting attorney to appoint assistants. The duties of such assistants are not prescribed in this section.

Section 8 of the civil service act places certain positions in the unclassified service. By virtue of subdivision 8 of branch (a) of said section, "deputies" are placed in the unclassified service. Said subdivision 8 reads:

> "The deputies of elective or principal executive officers authorized by law to act generally for and in place of their principals and holding a fiduciary relation to such principals."

Are assistant prosecuting attorneys "deputies" within the meaning of the above subdivision?

Authorities have been submitted which tend to hold that these assistants are in fact deputies. Cases have been cited which hold that assistant district attorneys are deputies of their principals. These cases do not arise under civil service regulations and are no doubt decided upon the particular wording of the statute then under consideration.

The legislature of Ohio has left no doubt as to the meaning of the word "deputy" as used in subdivision 8 of section 8, supra.

Two things are necessary to bring a position under the term "deputy."

First. Deputies must be authorized by law to act "generally for and in place of their principals."

Second. They must hold a fiduciary relation to their principal.

Now it seems that even in the absence of statute the court had the inherent power to appoint an assistant to the prosecuting attorney, but this matter has been set at rest in this state by the enactment of section 13560 which reads as follows:

"The prosecuting attorney or assistant prosecuting attorney shall be allowed at all times to appear before the grand jury for the purpose of giving information relative to a matter cognizable by it or advice upon a legal matter when required. Such attorney may interrogate witnesses before such jury when it or he deems it necessary, but no other person shall be permitted to remain in the room with the jury while the jurors are expressing their views or giving their votes on a matter before them. In a matter or case which the attorney general is required to investigate or prosecute by the governor or general assembly, he shall have all the rights, privileges and powers conferred by this section and the next succeeding section, upon prosecuting attorneys."

This section does not in any way limit the powers of an assistant prosecuting attorney but, on the contrary, places him on a parity with the prosecutor himself. The legislature evidently doubted the right of the prosecutor to appear before the grand jury and be present at the deliberations of the grand jurors, and consequently conferred this right upon him in express terms. Recognizing the fact that the assistant had the right to act for his principal it included him in the statute, thus vesting him with the same authority as the prosecutor in this regard. In other words, this section conferred an additional right upon the office and enlarged its authority. It was not intended to nor did it restrict, in any way, the powers of assistants. It is fundamental that such assistant may do whatever the prosecutor is authorized to do, and his acts have the same validity as though done by the principal in person; or as expressed in 32 Cyc., 724:

"An assistant duly appointed or permitted to prosecute is clothed with all the powers and privileges of the prosecuting attorney, and all acts done by him in that capacity must be regarded as if done by the prosecuting attorney himself."

See also 23 Am. & Eng. Ency. of Law, 2d Ed. 278.

If the assistant possess such extensive authority in that gravest of all public duties—that of prosecuting persons charged with crime, it must necessarily follow that he may act for and on behalf of his principal in other matters pertaining to the office, and by such acts binds his superior.

Subdivision 8, under consideration, requires deputies to act "generally" for and in place of their principals.

Does the word "generally" mean universally?"

The word "generally" is defined in the New Standard Dictionary as follows:

"For the most part; in general; in most but not all cases; commonly; ordinarily."

It is in the foregoing sense that the word "generally" is used in subdivision 8 of section 8 of the civil service act. That is, the deputy must be authorized to act "in general, in most but not all cases," for and in place of his principal.

By virtue of section 13560, General Code, the assistant prosecuting attorney is authorized to act generally for his principal in the grand jury room.

A deputy must also occupy a fiduciary relation to his principal. An assistant prosecuting attorney who is authorized to appear before the grand jury and examine witnesses would certainly occupy a fiduciary relation to his principal, whose duty it is to present the evidence to the grand jury.

The assistant prosecuting attorney is authorized by law to act generally for and in place of his principal and he holds a fiduciary relation to his principal, the prosecuting attorney.

Assistant prosecuting attorneys are, therefore, "deputies" within the meaning of subdivision 8 of section 8 of the civil service law and are in the unclassified service of the county.

ASSISTANT CITY SOLICITORS.

You also enquire as to whether or not the assistant or assistants to the city solicitor are within the classified or unclassified list. Very much of what has been said in reference to assistant prosecuting attorney applies with refernce to city solicitors. Of course the duties to be performed by the assistant prosecuting attorney in relation to the grand jury are ones that do not fall within the scope of the duties of an assistant city solicitor. Neverthless section 4306 of the General Code serves as a parallel so far as the reason of the question is concerned, said section being as follows:

> "The solicitor shall also be prosecuting attorney of the police or mayor's court. When council allows an assistant or assistants to the solicitor, he may designate an assistant or assistants to act as prosecuting attorneys of the police or mayor's court. The person thus designated shall be subject to the approval of the city council."

The very fact that force and effect are to be given to the provisions whereby the assistant or assistants who are designated to appear before the mayor's court are to be affirmed by the council would seem to suggest that the subject is not within the domain of the classified service. So far as I know, speaking rather off-hand, one whose merit is determined by the civil service would hardly be subject to the test of approval by the city council. The city solicitor is, under the statutes, counsel for the board of education in cities. He may appear as well through one of his assistants as personally; likewise may the city solicitor through one of his assistants perform the duties mentioned in section 4305 in relation to the preparation of contracts, bonds and other instruments in writing in which the city is concerned, and in serving the several directors and officers referred to in the title relating to city solicitors, he is, in my judgment a deputy in the ordinary acceptation of the term. The real gist of the question is that the assistant shall act generally for and on behalf of his principal, and sustain toward the principal a fiduciary relation; and the reasoning which brought me to the conclusion I arrived at in relation to the assistant prosecuting attorney applies with special force in relation to the solution of the present question.

The civil service act is one designed for practical purposes and to embrace all those offices of such character as that in fact it ought not matter what may be the political or general notions of the appointee or employe. The act is not designed to bring impracticable and unworkable relations into the administration of public affairs. My own experience in the office of the attorney general has satisfied me beyond doubt that it is humanly impossible for the head of a legal department either in the state or in any of the great cities of the state to keep in personal touch with all of the important matters requiring professional attention. It is necessary for the head of a legal department to repose the greatest trust and confidence not only in the ability of each of his assistants but in their feeling of responsibility they should know that their tenure of office depends upon that feeling of personal responsibility for results and that fidelity to the policy pursued by the head of the department.

Courts are inclined to take the practical view of questions of this character and to keep well in mind the object to be attained by any act. It will, if necessary, disregard the strict letter of the act to carry out the design and purpose thereof. This is especially true when they have precedents before them disclosing that the word "assistant" in many situations is a real substitute of the word "deputy" although apparently the latter might have a technical or even statutory meaning.

Moreover, the number of assistants in a legal department is usually more or less fluctuating, depending upon the extent of litigation. There are times when the head of a legal department in a state or city is almost wholly dependent upon his assistants for the daily operation of his office, especially is this true when the head of a department is engaged personally in the conduct of a suit. The head of a department is at times required to select the things which will engage his personal attention, leaving to his assistants to act not only generally but exclusively in his stead, and your commission, in the conduct of your office, will find it necessary to conduct examinations through others.

Very respectfully yours,

TIMOTHY S. HOGAN,
Attorney General.

(To the Liquor License Commission)

446.

UNDER PROVISIONS OF 103 O. L. 216-243, A PERSON WHO IS A STOCKHOLDER IN A BREWERY CANNOT OBTAIN A LICENSE TO SELL LIQUOR.

Under the provision of the liquor license act of April 18, 1913, no person who is a stockholder in a brewery can be permitted to have a license authorizing the sale of intoxicating liquors.

COLUMBUS, OHIO, August 15, 1913.

State Liquor License Commission, Columbus, Ohio.

DEAR SIR:—The question whether a saloon license can be issued to a person who is a stockholder in a brewery is one at once interesting, intricate and important.

The amendment to the constitution (in part) reads:

> "License shall not be granted to any applicant, who is in any way interested in the business conducted at any other place where intoxicating liquors are sold or kept for sale as a beverage, nor shall such license be granted unless the applicant or applicants are the only persons in any way pecuniarily interested in the business for which the license is sought, and no other person shall be interested therein during the continuance of the license; if such interest of such person shall appear the license shall be deemed revoked."

Section 19 of the act of April 18, 1913, 103 O. L. 216-243, in part, reads:

> "License shall not be granted to any applicant, who is in any way interested in the business conducted at any other place where intoxicating liquors are sold or kept for sale as a beverage, nor shall such license be granted unless the applicant or applicants are the only persons in any way pecuniarily interested in the business for which the license is sought, and no other person shall be interested therein during the continuance of the license; if such interest of such person shall appear, the license shall be deemed revoked."

In the application for a license, it must be stated:

> "The fact that the applicant is not in any way interested either as owner or part owner in a business, or a stockholder of a corporation engaged in the business, conducted at any other place where intoxicating liquors are sold or kept for sale as a beverage."

The evident object of the amendment and these provisions of the law is to prevent the control of more than one saloon by any one individual. And inasmuch as these provisions are clear, contain no exception, nor reservation, and there are two and only two classes of licenses— wholesale, and retail or saloon licenses—it is plain that no person interested in a saloon license can take out a wholesale license and vice versa.

The question to be solved, however, is not to be disposed of so easily as that, and we must look to all of the provisions of the amendment and the act bearing upon the subject.

The last sentence of the amendment defines a saloon in the following language:

> "The word 'saloon' as used in this section is defined to be a place where intoxicating liquors are sold or kept for sale, as a beverage, in quantities less than one gallon."

As stated, the legislature grants two classes of licenses, (1), wholesale, where sales must not be made in a smaller quantity than two gallons at one time, and (2), saloon, where the sales may be made in any quantity and consumed on or off the premises. (Sec. 22.)

Of course, intoxicants are not always sold as a beverage, nor are they manufactured for that purpose exclusively in any instance, but when sold either to a wholesale dealer or to a saloon, such sales, unless made for some mechanical, pharmaceutical or medicinal uses, must be conclusively held to have been sold for beverage purposes. In fact, it will be seen that the local option and other laws restricting the sale of intoxicants are directed at their sale for beverage purposes, and an examination of this amendment and the law under consideration will develop the fact that they deal with the sale of intoxicants as a beverage only. The amount of sales cuts no figure, whatever, especially as to beer, which is neither manufactured nor sold for any other purpose, having no use from a commercial or practical view for either mechanical, pharmaceutical or medicinal purposes.

Such being the situation, it would seem unnecessary to look further to ascertain whether a stockholder in a brewery was a person interested in any way as owner or part owner in a business, or a stockholder in a corporation engaged in the business, conducted at any other place where intoxicating liquors are sold, or kept for sale as a beverage, but I prefer going back and taking into consideration one of the objects of this amendment to see if I can, whether, in adopting it there was any specific object in view, which might aid in solving the question.

No fact was nor is better known in Ohio, than that a very large number of saloons in the state were formerly owned and managed by some brewery. The object of the brewery was to increase its trade, business and profits, and by doing so they became wholesalers of beer, retailers of intoxicants, and saloon keepers in the municipalities or counties where the brewery was located and elsewhere. Neither care nor wisdom was exercised in all instances in selecting managers, bartenders and person in charge, or in whose names the business was conducted, and the result was a deterioration of the breweries and a loud insistence from the best citizens of the state that the practice should be stopped, and that saloons and breweries should be divorced.

To my mind, this end is sought to be accomplished by this amendment and act, and the question arises as to whether it can be done without doing violence to the language used. To my mind, it is no stretch of meaning to hold that all beer is sold as a beverage, whether in a saloon, by a wholesale dealer or at the brewery, and, instead of construction of the language used being necessary to bring about the result, it is only necessary to apply the primary meaning of the words employed to the subject matter at which they are directed and we find that stockholders in breweries are not eligible under the law to secure a license authorizing the sale of intoxicants.

This may not be broad enough in statement to cover a person who is a stockholder in a distillery, for the reason that distilled intoxicants may have more uses than the product of a brewery, but the answer would have to be the same unless it was made to appear clearly to the commission that the distillery in which the applicant held stock was not, and would not be engaged in selling its products or keeping the same for sale as a beverage.

Very truly yours,

TIMOTHY S. HOGAN,
Attorney General.

THERE IS NO LIMIT UPON NUMBER OF WHOLESALE LICENSES WHICH MAY BE ISSUED IN ANY MUNICIPALITY— WHOLESALE LICENSES SHALL NOT BE COUNTED WITHIN THE LIMIT OF FROM ONE TO FIVE HUNDRED POPULATION—WHOLESALE BUSINESS CAN BE DONE UNDER A SALOON LICENSE.

Since the constitution has made no provision for the limiting of licenses in intoxicating liquors, except to those who sell in quantities of less than one gallon, and since under a wholesale licenses, a person may not sell in quantities of less than two gallons at one time, there is no limitation upon the number of wholesale licenses that may be granted.

A wholesale license is not counted a saloon license, and is not counted among saloon licenses, which may be issued within the limit of from one to five hundred population.

Under section 22, of the liquor license act, under a saloon license intoxicating liquors may be sold in any quantity, and it follows that under such a license one can conduct both a wholesale and retail business if he so desires.

COLUMBUS, OHIO, September 10, 1913.

State Liquor License Commission, Columbus, Ohio.

GENTLEMEN:—I have your letter of September 5th asking for a ruling upon the following questions:

> "1. Is there any limit upon the number of wholesale licenses which may be granted in any municipality?
> "2. Shall wholesale licenses be counted among the saloon licenses which may be issued within the limit of one to five hundred population?
> "3. Can a wholesale business be done under a saloon license?"

As the questions are inter-related I will discuss them all together. Section 9 of article 15 of the constitution, as approved September 3, 1912, reads as follows:

> "License to traffic in intoxicating liquors shall be granted in this state, and license laws operative throughout the state shall be passed with such restrictions and regulations as may be provided by law, and municipal corporations shall be authorized by general laws to provide for the limitation of the number of saloons. Laws shall not be passed authorizing more than one saloon in each township or municipality of less than five hundred population, or more than one saloon for each five hundred population in other townships and municipalities. * * *

The word 'saloon' as used in this section is defined to be a place where intoxicating liquors are sold, or kept for sale, as a beverage in quantities less than one gallon."

Under authority of this section of the constitution the legislature passed the so-called liquor licensing law, passed April 18, 1913, approved May 3, 1913, filed in the office of the secretary of state May 3, 1913, and found in 103 O. L. 216. Section 19 of this act reads as follows:

"License shall not be granted to a person who is not a citizen of the United States or who is not of good moral character. Where a corporation or other association of persons is an applicant for license, such corporation or association shall designate a manager or managers of the place of business belonging to said corporation or association, who must be a citizen or citizens of the United States, residing in Ohio, and of good moral character.

"If at any time a corporation or association shall come to be without a designated manager as provided for herein, the license of said corporation or association shall be suspended unless within ten days a new manager or managers are appointed; and if in such case no new manager is designated within thirty days after the original manager ceases to occupy the position, unless the time is extended by the county board, and if said manager has not all the qualifications provided by law in the case of an individual applicant, the license may be revoked.

"License shall not be issued to a minor or to a person of unsound mind.

"License shall not be granted to any applicant who is in any way interested in the business conducted at any other place where intoxicating liquors are sold or kept for sale as a beverage, nor shall such license be granted unless the applicant or applicants are the only persons in any way pecuniarily interested in the business for which the license is sought, and no other person shall be in any way interested therein during the continuance of the license; if such interest of such person shall appear, the license shall be deemed revoked.

"No saloon license as hereinafter provided for shall be issued to any person who has not been a resident of Ohio for more than one year preceding the date of his application.

"No license shall be granted after August 1, 1915, to operate a saloon within three hundred feet of any permanent public or parochial school building, measuring the distance in a straight line following the street from the nearest point of the premises on which such school building is located, nor two hundred feet in a straight line following the street from the nearest point of the premises. This provision shall not apply to a bona fide reputable hotel or club; or to a saloon located within three hundred feet of a school house in the central or main business section of the city."

Section 22 of this act reads as follows:

"Licenses shall be either wholesale licenses or saloon licenses. Under a wholesale license, intoxicating liquors may be sold in smaller quantities than two gallons at one time of the same kind of liquor, and not to be consumed upon the premises. Under a saloon license intoxicating liquors may be sold in any quantity and consumed on or off the premises."

Section 24 of this act reads as follows:

> "Not more than one saloon shall be licensed in any township or municipality of less than five hundred population, nor more than one saloon for each five hundred population in other townships and municipalities. * * *
> "(Then follows the provision where, in municipal corporations, thirty-five per cent. of the electors may petition for a further limitation on the number of saloons in such municipality, with provisions for the holding of elections, etc.)"

I believe from a consideration of the questions submitted I have above quoted all of the sections of the law and constitution directly applicable.

The people in approving the license amendment to the constitution changed the policy on the liquor question that had obtained since the adpotion of the constitution, and expressly provided that "license to traffic in intoxicating liquors shall be granted in this state."

Further authority was granted to the legislature to enact license laws with such restrictions and regulations as might be provided by law, and power was also given to the legislature to authorize, by general law, each municipality to provide for limitation of the number of saloons. In addition to this a general limitation was provided for in regard to "saloons." Saloons were to be limited in each township or municipality to one saloon for each five hundred population.

Attention is called to the fact that while authority was given to license the traffic in intoxicating liquors in general, the only limitation made was on the number of places where a traffic of a certain kind was carried on, to wit, saloons; and "saloon" as used in section 9, was defined "to be a place where intoxicating liquors are sold or kept for sale as a beverage in quantities less than one gallon." The constitutional convention in formulating, and the people in approving this amendment, had in mind a restriction in the number of places where intoxicating liquors are sold at retail, usually by the drink or dram, and where men resorted to for the purpose of consuming the liquor where purchased. The object and aim of most of the liquor legislation has been against the dram-shop. It was the regulation of sales in small quantities to be drunk on the spot that was primarily aimed at in the early legislation against the evils resulting from the sale of intoxicating liquors, and in the adoption of section 9 of the constitution, the same idea was in mind and limitations on the number of licenses to be granted was specifically provided for, as to those licenses as would permit places where intoxicating liquors were sold in quantities of less than one gallon.

The legislature in the adoption of the so-called liquor licensing law has attempted to carry out the spirit, intention and letter of the constitutional amendment, and divided the kinds of licenses to be issued into two classes, denominating one "wholesale license" and the other a "saloon license." Under section 22 of the act making this classification, under a "wholesale license," liquors may not be sold in smaller quantities than two gallons at one time of the same kind, and not to be consumed upon the premises. Under a "saloon license," liquors may be sold in any quantity and consumed on or off the premises. It is apparent that under a saloon license, since the sale may be in any quantity, there is a permission to sell in quantities of less than one gallon, and since there is such permission, the holder of such a license comes within the class which, under the constitution and the law, is limited in number. On the other hand, since under a wholesale license, liquor may not be sold in smaller quantities than two gallons at one time of the same kind of liquor, the holder of such a license does not come within that class which is limited in number in a particular locality. It is to be noted that the provision for a saloon license is in no wise inconsistent with the constitutional provision defining "saloon," for the definition is limited to the section in which it is used. So long as the person to whom a license to traffic in intoxicating liquors has been granted, is authorized to make sales in quantities less than one gallon he is authorized to conduct that character of place which is specifically limited in number in particular localities.

The constitution does not make any classification of licenses. It gives general power to grant licenses. It merely provides that in the event that licenses are granted which would permit sales in smaller quantities, to wit, less than one gallon, that licenses permitting such place, shall be limited in number in each particular locality.

The case of Strauss vs. Galesburg, 67 North Eastern Rep., 835 (203 Ill. 234), might be interesting to refer to in this matter. In that case the validity of an ordinance, by the provisions of which the holder of a dram-shop license might be permitted to keep a dram-shop and sell liquor in any quantity, was challenged upon the ground that it was in conflict with what was known as the "dram-shop act," and particularly that section thereof which defines a dram-shop as "a place where spirituous, vinous or malt liquors are retailed in less quantity than one gallon." It was argued that the statute having defined a dram-shop, that the statutory definition was exclusive, and when the city of Galesburg, by ordinance, conferred upon the holder of a license to keep a dram-shop, the authority and power to sell liquors in any quantity other than the quantities specified by the definition, viz., by less quantity than one gallon, that it had exceeded its power. The Illinois supreme court in that case held that the definition of a dram-shop as a place where liquors are retailed by less quantity than a gallon, is not exclusive and does not prohibit the authorities of a city from authorizing dram-shop keepers to sell liquors in any quantity. The case, of course, is not exactly similar to the case under discussion, since in the one instance the legislature had defined the term "dram-shop," and a municipality in dealing with the same subject had granted further powers than were expressed in the legislative definition, while in our case the constitution defines the word "saloon" as used in part of the section, and the legislature, by the authority granted to it, apparently broadens the definition in defining what a license for a saloon shall be; still the reasoning of the decision of the supreme court of Illinois, and its conclusion fully supports the position taken here. Coming then to your questions I would say:

First. That since the constitution made no provision for the limiting of licenses to traffic in intoxicating liquors other than those licenses which grant to a person the right to sell in quantities of less than one gallon; and that since under a wholesale license a person may not sell in smaller quantities than two gallons at one time, there is no limitation upon the number of wholesale licenses which may be granted in any municipality.

Second. Since the only limitation on the number of licenses is as to a license permitting the sale of intoxicating liquors in less than one gallon quantities, and since under a wholesale license one is not permitted to make sales in such quantities, that a wholesale license is not counted as a saloon license, and I answer your second question in the negative.

Third. It appearing that under section 22 of the act that under a saloon license intoxicating liquors may be sold in any quantity, it follows that under such a license one can conduct both a wholesale and retail business if he so desires. The mere fact that a person holding a saloon license sells in greater quantities than one gallon does not militate against the fact that he is authorized to make sales of less than one gallon. It is this right to make such sales of less than one gallon that constitutes his place a saloon. The fact that he also sells, and is authorized to sell in greater quantities does not make him any more or less the keeper of a saloon. I might remark that neither the law nor the constitution made any classification into wholesale and retail business. The classification that the legislature made is into wholesale and saloon licenses. What constitutes a wholesale business or a retail business has not been defined. Just where the line is to be drawn between a wholesaler and retailer, so far as this act is concerned, cannot be determined, but I am of the opinion that the legislature had a perfect right to make the provision that it has seen fit in section 22 of the act, and under this section, by authority of the license a person holds, liquors may be sold in any quantity and consumed on or off the premises. Consequently I would answer your third question affirmatively.

Yours very truly,
TIMOTHY S. HOGAN,
Attorney General.

HOTEL COMPANY PARTLY OWNED BY A BREWERY MAY NOT RECEIVE A SALOON LICENSE.

Where an incorporated brewery owns a minority of the stock in a hotel company, such hotel company may not receive a saloon license.

COLUMBUS, OHIO, September 18, 1913.

State Liquor License Commission, Columbus, Ohio.

GENTLEMEN:—I have your favor of the 17th wherein you advise:

> "We herewith transmit a copy of a letter received from the Hamilton county liquor licensing board, and request your opinion in writing on the question therein contained."

The copy of the letter from the Hamilton county liquor licensing board to which you refer is as follows:

> "The following question is submitted to you at the special request of an applicant for a retail license; the same query occurs in several other cases.
> "Where an incorporated brewery owns a minority of the stock in a hotel company, would that fact have any bearing upon the consideration of the application for license of said hotel company?"

Section 9 of article 15 of the constitution of Ohio, among other things provides:

> "License shall not be granted to any applicant who is in any way interested in the business conducted at any other place where intoxicating liquors are sold or kept for sale as a beverage nor shall such license be granted unless the applicant or applicants are the only persons in any way pecuniarily interested in the business for which the license is sought and no other person shall be in any way interested therein during the continuance of the license."

This same language is carried in the Greenlund act.

A hotel company, part of whose stock is owned by an incorporated brewery, could not comply with the following conditions:

> " * * * nor shall such license be granted unless the applicant or applicants are the only persons in any way pecuniarily interested in the business for which the license is sought * * *" because the brewing company clearly would be a person pecuniarily interested in the license within the contemplation of the statutes.

While the word "person" in all situations in reference to the Greenlund liquor act and the constitutional amendment upon which it is founded would not embrace corporations, undoubtedly the term "person" embraces as well as a corporation in the particular provision of the constitution quoted from.

Other reasons may be given why the applicant or applicants referred to in the communication are not eligible, but in our judgment sufficient has been said to disclose their ineligibility.

Very respectfully yours,
TIMOTHY S. HOGAN,
Attorney General.

APPLICANTS FOR SALOON LICENSES THAT ARE REFUSED, ENTITLED TO HEARING—SAME KIND OF LIQUOR MEANS THE SAME CLASSES OF LIQUOR.

Where applicants for saloon licenses have been refused, the applicants are entitled to a hearing; but in most cases no extended hearing should be necessarily granted, especially when the reason or refusing the license was because of the necessity of reducing the number of saloons.

The same kind of liquor means the same class of liquor, namely, distilled, vinous and malt, or some other kind of liquor having a well known distinction in the trade, and does not mean different varieties of the same class.

COLUMBUS, OHIO, September 18, 1913.

State Liquor License Commission, Columbus, Ohio.

GENTLEMEN:—In your communication under date of August 30th, you ask an opinion upon the following questions:

> "1. Do the provisions of section 29 of said law apply for the year 1913, to those applicants who may be rejected by the various county liquor licensing boards for the reasons that it is necessary so to do to reduce the number of saloon licenses to the number authorized by law?
> "2. We respectfully direct your attention to the phrase found in section 22, namely, 'same kind of liquor,' and ask to legally define or construe the same.
> "Section 29 of the liquor licensing law reads:

"In all cases where an application is rejected, the applicant shall be given a hearing upon the announcement of said rejection of the county board * * *."

The rest of this long section provides the procedure, etc., attendant upon such hearing. It is my view that since there is a slight ambiguity in the language used by the legislature, the provision for a hearing is a right granted to all applicants whose application for license have been rejected. The rejected applicant is entitled to his notice from the secretary of the board of the fact of the rejection of his application and shall be given a list of the complaints, if any, made against him, with the names and addresses of the complainants. Further, the applicant has the right to be present at said hearing, either in person or by counsel.

Attention is called to the fact that this section authorizes the liquor licensing board to adopt certain rules and regulations concerning the hearing and I am of the opinion that owing to the necessity for expediting the work of the boards that in cases where applications are rejected solely for the reason that there exists the necessity to reduce the number of saloon licenses to the number allowed by the constitutional provisions, that formal compliance is all that is required. It is my opinion that the board might formulate a rule that in such cases, on a day certain and within the time prescribed by this section, hearings would be had upon such rejected applications but that no extended hearing would necessarily be granted to any applicant so rejected unless sufficient evidence would first be filed with the board by said rejected applicant, against some applicant who had been tentatively granted a license and whose place was claimed by said rejected applicant, by reason of the evidence thus furnished. While every right granted by the licensing act should be afforded to one whose application is rejected, still from the very necessity of the case, owing to the brief time allotted between the time that the applications are filed and the time when the list of granted applications are finally made up, the board is justified in making such reasonable rules as will permit the expeditious performance of its duties. As in many localities a far greater number of applications will be filed for saloon license than that locality will be entitled to under the constitutional limitations, I can well understand that many applicants will be rejected solely because of this limitation. It would avail nothing to have any extended hearings showing the qualifications for license of the rejected applicants unless the board was advised where and whose place it would be possible for these rejected applicants to take.

Hence it is my view that in such cases the burden of showing that there might be made a place for them, rests upon the rejected applicant and in the absence of the furnishing by said rejected applicant of evidence that would disqualify some applicant who had been tentatively given a license, there exists no necessity for an extended hearing in the case of a rejected applicant.

Section 22 provides that licenses shall be either wholesale licenses or saloon licenses. Under a wholesale license, intoxicating liquors may not be sold in smaller quantities than two gallon at one time of the same kind of liquor. You ask what is meant by the phrase "the same kind of liquor." The license law was enacted to provide not only for a license to traffic in intoxicating liquors but also to further regulate the traffic therein and it is to be assumed that the legislature had in mind the whole scheme of Ohio law for regulating such traffic. The phrase "intoxicating liquor" had already been defined by statute.

"The phrase 'intoxicating liquor,' as used in this chapter and in the penal statutes relating thereto, means any distilled, malt, vinous or any intoxicating liquor except in subdivisions 2 and 6 of this chapter, entitled 'taxation' and 'local option in municipal corporations' respectively, and the penal statutes relating thereto, in which cases such phrase means any distilled, malt, vinous or any other intoxicating liquor."

While that definition specifically refers to the phrase as used in chapter 15 of title 2 and in the penal statutes relating thereto, in Woolen & Thornton's "The law of intoxicating liquors" in section 1, the author says:

"In its most comprehensive significance, the term 'liquor' implies a fluid substance such as water, milk, blood, sap, juice, but in its more limited sense it means spirituous fluids, whether fermented or distilled."

In a note on page 3 will be found the following language:

"The meaning of the word 'liquor' must always be ascertained by considering the sense in which it is used and that sense is ascertained by considering its connection with the words in which it is connected."

Many of the states have defined intoxicating liquors in the same manner as defined by our statute in section 6064 and the general classification of intoxicating liquors are "distilled, malt, vinous or any other intoxicating liquors." In my opinion, the legislature in speaking of the sale of liquor under the wholesale license, meant intoxicating liquor as used in our statute. It may be noted that they did not speak of a sale in smaller quantities than two gallon at one time of the same liquor. They said "of the same kind of liquor," recognizing the well known subdivision of intoxicating liquors into distilled, malt and vinous liquors. Cyc. treats the term "kind" as synonymous with "sort;" "grade;" "class." The term "class" has been defined as a crowd of persons or things taken collectively, having qualities in common and constituting a unit for certain purposes. It is my opinion that "same kind" of liquor means the same class of liquor and that so long as the holder of a wholesale license does not sell in smaller quantities than two gallon at one time of the same sort of or class of liquors, that is, of distilled, vinous, or malt liquor or of some other intoxicating liquor, having a well known designation in the trade, that he would be within his rights under his license. The mere fact that the liquors thus sold would be of different varieties of the same class, would not in my opinion make any difference.

Yours very truly,
TIMOTHY S. HOGAN,
Attorney General.

BREWING COMPANY MAY NOT OBTAIN LICENSES IN ITS NAME FOR THE SEVERAL PLACES IN THE STATE WHERE IT CONDUCTS SELLING AGENCIES.

Under the provisions of the General Code, a brewing company cannot obtain license in its name for selling liquor in the several places in the state where selling agencies are located.

All persons and corporations seeking licenses may obtain but a single license within the state.

COLUMBUS, OHIO.

State Liquor License Commission, Columbus, Ohio.

GENTLEMEN:—I have your letter of September 10th, enclosing a letter from the Huebner-Toledo Breweries Company, in which it is stated:

> "We are engaged in the brewing business in this city. We have also a number of selling agencies throughout the state at which places we have been paying the Aiken tax in the past and selling and disposing of our beer in any quantity wholesale and retail. Inasmuch as the new license code provides that a person or corporation may be interested in only one place where intoxicating liquors are sold the question arises as to how we are to make applications for our selling agencies where the beer is sold at both wholesale and retail in our name.
> "We understand very well that under a retail license we may sell in any quantity providing we pay the internal revenue tax. The question I desire answered is whether we may apply and obtain in our name retail licenses for the several counties or places in the state of Ohio where our selling agencies are located."

Section 19 of the so-called liquor license law provides among other things, that:

> "License shall not be granted to any applicant who is in any way interested in the business conducted at any other place where intoxicating liquors are sold or kept for sale as a beverage, nor shall such license be granted unless the applicant or applicants are the only persons in any way pecuniarily interested in the business for which the license is sought, and no other person shall be in any way interested therein during the continuance of the license; if such interest of such person shall appear, the license shall be deemed revoked."

Under the above provision I do not think there can be the slightest question but that is would be impossible for the brewing company to obtain licenses in its name for the several counties or places in the state of Ohio where its selling agencies are located, as the statute says that an applicant cannot in any way be interested in the business conducted at any other place where intoxicating liquors are sold. This limits all persons and corporations seeking licenses to obtain but a single license within the state.

There is no way, so far as I know, for this company to make application for more than one liquor license.

Very truly yours,

TIMOTHY S. HOGAN,

Attorney General.

UNDER THE PROVISIONS OF THE LIQUOR LICENSE LAW LIQUOR MAY NOT BE SOLD ON TRAINS.

The liquor license law does not make any provision for the sale of liquor on trains. The legislature did not see fit to attempt to make any law covering this matter, and the various boards are limited in the granting of liquor licenses to the laws enacted by the legislature regarding such subjects.

COLUMBUS, OHIO, October 3, 1913.

State Liquor License Commission, Columbus, Ohio.

GENTLEMEN:—I am in receipt of your letter of September 19th, enclosing copy of a letter from Messrs. Dolle, Taylor and O'Donnell, of Cincinnati, Ohio, which reads as follows:

> "We have been asked for an opinion as to whether under the liquor licensing law intoxicating liquors can be sold in Ohio on trains while moving through wet territories, as is now being done, and if so can such traffic be carried on under a license issued to the person in charge of the commissary of such railroad company, and which designates one of the companys' depots as the place of traffic.
> "Before giving a definite answer to said inquiry we would be pleased to have you advise us if you have made any ruling upon the subject, and if so to favor us with a copy thereof. If your conclusion is that sales will be permitted upon moving trains then we shall be pleased to have you also advise us of the place which should be designated by the applicant for its place of business, if one of the depots of the company is not the proper place."

Under the Dow-Aiken law, as found in section 6075, provision was made for a tax on a railway corporation which maintained or conducted dining or buffet cars upon a train, in which spiritous, vinous, malt or other intoxicating liquors are dispensed within the state. While the constitutionality of this section was doubted by some, still, no question was ever raised upon the same. The framers of the license law were fully cognizant of this provision, made for a tax upon a particular class engaged in the business of trafficking in intoxicating liquors; but, under the provisions of section 9 of article 15 of the constitution, providing for the licensing to traffic in intoxicating liquors, laws could not be passed authorizing more than one saloon in each township or municipality of less than five hundred population nor more than one saloon for each five hundred population in other townships and municipalities. The definition of the word "saloon," as used in this section, to wit: "a place where intoxicating liquors are sold or kept for sale as a beverage, in quantities of less than one gallon," would include the buffet and dining cars of railway corporations as heretofore conducted.

The further provision of this section of the constitution as to a denial of a license to any applicant in any way interested in the business conducted at any other place where intoxicating liquors are sold, or kept for sale as a beverage, would likewise limit the use of a license granted to one particular place and locality.

The committee having the preparation of this license law in charge had in mind the question as to whether or not licenses could be granted for the sale of intoxicating liquors on dining or buffet cars, and, I am reliably informed, concluded that under the constitution it would be very doubtful if any law could be so framed as to permit the sale of intoxicating liquors on such cars, under a license authorized by this section. At least, they did not put into the act any provisions covering the granting of licenses to persons operating or conducting dining or buffet cars, permitting the dispensing of intoxicating liquors thereon.

You can well see that since the limitation of the number of saloons is to each particular municipality and township, the question would arise as to which locality a saloon license should be charged, that would be granted to a corporation conducting such business. Then, again, since such corporations would have more than one car, the license could not cover the different buffet or dining cars in which it was sought to dispense the liquor. Since, too, the intent and spirit of the constitutional provision and the law, as indicated by the language, was to prevent a person from being interested in more than one saloon, it can readily be seen that the ordinary license could not cover a number of moving places in different localities in the state, dependent upon where the railroad ran.

The suggestion in the letter of Messrs. Dolle, Taylor and O'Donnell as to whether or not one of the depots of the company would be the proper place to designate as a place where the license might be used, in the event that sales would be permitted upon moving trains, practically answers the question. If the depot in one of the principal municipalities of the state were designated as the place of business, then each of the dining or buffet cars of the railway company would be charged against that particular municipality, and still each of the movable places in which the sales were allowed under the license might be scattered throughout the various townships and municipalities of the state, only at rare intervals being within the particular municipality designated as the place of the location of the business.

I am constrained to hold that since each municipality and township is limited by the constitution and law to a designated number of places, according to the respective population of a particular municipality, there cannot be such a thing as a "movable place," where intoxicating liquors are sold, and which, under the liquor license law could be permitted to operate under a license.

Directly answering the question propounded, I am of the opinion that the liquor license law does not make any provision for the licensing of the sale of intoxicating liquor on trains, while moving through wet territory. The legislature did not see fit to attempt to make any such provision, and the various boards are limited in the granting of such licenses to the laws enacted by the general assembly on the subject.

Yours very truly,

TIMOTHY S. HOGAN,

Attorney General.

A VILLAGE OF 700 POPULATION MAY HAVE BUT ONE SALOON.

The liquor license law permits one saloon for each 500 population. Under this provision a village of 700 population may have but one saloon.

COLUMBUS, OHIO, October 3, 1913.

State Liquor License Commission, Columbus, Ohio.

GENTLEMEN:—I am in receipt of a letter from Hon. Henry Hart, prosecuting attorney of Erie County, under date of September 25th, which reads as follows:

> "Under the constitutional provision authorizing the licensing of saloons, it is provided,
> " 'Laws shall not be passed authorizing more than one saloon in each township or municipality of less than five hundred population or more than one saloon for each five hundred population in other townships and municipalities.'
> "Under this provision, can a saloon license be issued for a fractional part of five hundred population, after one license is issued for the first five hundred?
> "Reduced to a concrete form it is this: The village of ———— has seven hundred population. Can two saloon licenses be issued to traffic in intoxicating liquors in that village?"

I am answering this letter to you, and will furnish Mr. Hart with a copy of the opinion.

I beg leave to say that the language of section 9, article 15 of the constitution, quoted above, is not susceptible of any construction other than that the full population of five hundred is required for each saloon license. The language used in section 24 of the liquor license act follows the wording of the constitutional provision, and reads as follows:

> "Not more than one saloon shall be licensed in any township or municipality of less than five hundred population, nor more than one saloon for each five hundred population in other townships and municipalities. * * *"

I am informed that the question of providing for a license for a fraction over and above one-half of five hundred population was discussed by the committee drafting the liquor license law, but that the opinion was practically unanimous that any such legislation would contravene the constitutional provision.

I am of the opinion, therefore, in answer to your concrete question, that in a village of seven hundred population there can be granted but one saloon license.

Very truly yours,
TIMOTHY S. HOGAN,
Attorney General.

A PERSON HOLDING A SALOON LICENSE MAY SELL INTOXICATING LIQUORS IN ANY QUANTITY AND TO BE CONSUMED IN ANY QUANTITY ON OR OFF THE PREMISES, SO LONG AS THE SALES TAKE PLACE ON THE PREMISES OF THE SALOONIST HOLDING THE LICENSE AND MAKING THE SALE.

A person holding a saloon license may sell intoxicating liquors in any quantity and to be consumed in any quantity on or off the premises. There is nothing in the law to prevent one saloonist from selling beer in quantities to other saloons so long as the sales take place on the premises of the saloonist holding the license and making the sale. The question of drug companies complying with the liquor license is a question of fact to be determined from the circumstances of each case.

COLUMBUS, OHIO, October 10, 1913.

State Liquor License Commission, Columbus, Ohio.

GENTLEMEN:—In your communication of October 7th you ask my opinion upon the following questions:

> "First. The firm of C. & S., applicants for a saloon license, have in the past few years established a trade in their city for a certain beer manufactured in another city. There is no interest between the brewery and saloonist whatsoever. The firm buys a carload of beer at a time and places it in a rented cold storage apartment, and have been in the habit of selling said beer to two or three other saloonists in the city, and to one saloonist outside of the county.
> "They would like to know if they can continue to sell said beer?"

In an opinion to your honorable board under date of September 10, 1913, this department held that the holder of a saloon license was permitted to sell intoxicating liquors in any quantity and to be consumed on or off the premises.

As I understand your inquiry, this firm has been a dealer in a certain brand of beer, buying the same at one price and selling it at an advanced price like a dealer in any other commodity. I assume there was no question of agency, since the question states that there was "no interest between the brewery and saloonist." The fact that sales are made to certain saloons in the city has no bearing on the question whatever, and if the sale made to the saloon located outside of the county is legally made and referable to the place for which the license is held, then the fact that the purchaser happens to live outside of the county would have no bearing on the case. As I take it, the inquiry resolves itself into the simple question of whether or not the holder of a saloon license can make sales in any quantity; and as I stated before, this question was answered in the affirmative in the opinion spoken of. In answering the above I assume that all sales are made on the licensed premises.

> "Second. The B. Drug Co., a wholesale drug concern, and the F. P. B. Drug Co., a wholesale and retail drug concern, have made application for saloon licenses. The two companies are wholly separate. The B. Drug Co., has been conducting a wholesale business while the F. P. B. Drug Co., has been conducting both a wholesale and retail business.
> "The inquiry is made as to whether in the event that the F. P. B. Drug Co., was granted a saloon license it would have to conform to the laws governing saloons.

"You further ask if the company would not have to conform to the laws governing saloons whether or not the two saloon licenses would be included in the elimination?"

I confess that I am somewhat at a loss as to how to answer this inquiry. In the first place I take it that the question before the county board is whether or not they will grant the application for saloon licenses made by these two companies. The reason why one or the other desires a saloon license, rather than a wholesale license, to my mind, is no concern of the board as far as the mere granting of the licenses is concerned. So too, it strikes me, that what laws will be applicable to the saloon acting under the license that it obtains is an entirely after consideration. I hardly think it is fair to anticipate that if either one of these companies, acting under a saloon license, conduct a saloon business that they will seek to protect themselves under the exemption of section 13050, General Code, as being a regular drug store. Whether or not they are conducting a regular drug store, and are within the exception of the section above cited would be a question of fact to be decided at the time. So with any other of the laws on the statute books affecting places where intoxicating liquors are sold as a beverage, decision as to what laws would apply would depend solely upon the state of facts presented at the time.

Then again, it is my opinion that it does not make any difference whether or not the companies must conform to the laws governing saloons when it comes to granting the number of saloon licenses that are permissible in a given municipality. Only the number of saloon licenses allowed by law can be granted and if each of these companies receive a saloon license that fact alone places them in the list of places that are limited by the constitution and the law.

Trusting this answers your inquiries, I am,

Yours very truly,
TIMOTHY S. HOGAN,
Attorney General.

BREWING COMPANIES MAY SELL BEER IN QUANTITIES OF ONE GALLON OR MORE IF IT IS DELIVERED IN THEIR WAGONS FROM THEIR BREWERY, BUT THEY ARE NOT PERMITTED TO SELL FROM STORAGE HOUSES.

Brewing companies making sales of their product in this state under the liquor license law are permitted to make sales in quantities of one gallon or more at the factory or from the wagon of said brewer to the holder of a liquor license, or in the same quantities to individual consumers when the liquor is delivered to the homes of said individual consumers in territory where the sale of intoxicating liquor is not prohibited. But they are not permitted to sell from storage houses. Orders may be taken and sales made from the manufactory, and orders may be taken and sales made from the wagons of the manufactory, but a sale that is referable to any other place would be a violation of the license law.

COLUMBUS, OHIO, October 29, 1913.

State Liquor License Commission, Columbus, Ohio.

GENTLEMEN:—In your communication of September 10th you submit a number of inquiries coming to you from numerous brewing companies within the state, all involving practically the same question, to wit, the status and rights of brewing companies in making sales of their product in this state under the new liquor license law. In this opinion I will confine myself to a discussion of the position of manufacturers within this state of intoxicating liquors from raw material.

Section 9 of article 15 of the constitution, as adopted September 3, 1912, provides amongst other things that license shall be granted to traffic in intoxicating liquors in this state, and authorizes the legislature to pass license laws, with such restrictions and regulations as might be deemed proper. The same amendment also provides that licenses to traffic in intoxicating liquors shall not be granted to any applicant who is in any way interested in the business conducted at any other place where intoxicating liquors are sold or kept for sale as a beverage, nor shall such license be granted unless the applicant or applicants are the only persons in any way pecuniarily interested in the business for which the license is sought and no other person shall be in any way interested therein during the continuance of the license.

Under authority of this amendment the legislature passed what is known as amended senate bill 203, providing a scheme for the licensing of the traffic in intoxicating liquors. Twice before the voters of Ohio had voted down a proposition to license the sale of intoxicants. The liquor question had been before the people in many phases, for many years. It was desired to place the liquor business on a higher and better plane, and by the means of a license system raise the standard of those engaged in this business, and at the same time reduce the number of places where intoxicating liquors are sold in small quantities. A feeling also was prevalent that there should be a separation of the interests of the wholesaler and the retailer in their respective business, and further that no one should be interested in any way in more than one place where intoxicating liquors are sold as a beverage. Concessions were made by the adherents of either side of this great moral question of temperance, and with due regard for the acute condition of the public mind the so-called Greenlund act was enacted.

I think it is well to keep in mind the purpose aimed at in this law in the discussion of the questions involved here, and for the purpose of reaching a conclusion that is fully justified by both the letter and the spirit of the law.

It may be well to call attention at this point to the fact that for many years a tax had been assessed upon the business of trafficking in intoxicating liquors. The Dow law, passed in 1886, 83 O. L. 157, with its various amendments, is now found in the General Code as sections 6071, et seq. Section 6071 reads as follows:

> "Upon the business of trafficking in spirituous, vinous, malt or other intoxicating liquors, there shall be assessed yearly and paid into the county treasury, as provided by sections 6072, and following, of the General Code, by each person, corporation or co-partnership engaged therein the sum of one thousand dollars. (103 Ohio Laws, page 241.)"

This section, prior to the amendment by the last legislature, provided that this tax should be paid "for each place where such business is carried on;" but since, under the license law, but one license may be issued to any one person, and that license only for a designated place, it can readily be seen that it would be necessary only to place a tax upon the business at the one place permitted under the license. The Dow law, as it stood prior to the last amendment, exempted certain classes of persons from its provisions, and specifically provided that the phrase "trafficking in intoxicating liquors" did not include the manufacture of intoxicating liquors from the raw material, and the sale thereof at the manufactory by the manufacturer thereof in quantities of one gallon or more at one time. Originally, the exemption was to all sales by the manufacturer. It was subsequently limited to sales at the manufactory; and the last legislature (103 Ohio Laws, 241) amended that portion of section 6065 so that it now reads as follows:

> "* * * Such phrases do not include the manufacture of intoxicating liquors from the raw material, and the sale thereof by the manufacturer thereof in quantities of one gallon or more at one time at the manufactory or the sale thereof in said quantities from the wagon or other vehicle of the manufacturer to the holder of a liquor license or in said quantities to individual consumers where said liquors are delivered to the homes of said individual consumers in territory wherein the sale of intoxicating liquors is not prohibited by law."

I call attention to the provisions of this liquor tax law because, while under the license a permit is issued to a person to sell intoxicating liquors at designated place, the Dow-Aiken tax law assesses a yearly tax upon the business for which it is necessary under the law to secure a license. While the one is a tax, and the other is a license, and they are therefore separate and distinct, they are nearly related, and the Ohio decisions upon the tax law will be very helpful, if not controlling, in deciding similar questions under the license law.

Attention is further called to the fact that the legislature, in excepting certain classes from the provisions of the license law, followed practically the same language as the general assembly used in designating the exceptions to the Dow-Aiken tax.

Section 48 of the license act, which provides a penalty for "liquor for drinking."

> "In the course of the entire legislative dealing with the subject, we are to discover the progress and development of a uniform and consistent design, or else the continued modification and adoption of the orignal design to apply it to changing conditions or circumstances. In the passage of each act, the legislative body must be supposed to have had in mind and in contemplation the existing legislation on the same subject, and to have shaped its new enactment with reference thereto. Hence the same principle which requires us to study the context for the meaning of a particular phrase or provision, and which directs us to compare all of the several parts of the same statute, only takes us on a broader scope when it bids us read together, and with reference to each other, all statutes in pari materia."

Originally the brewer was exempted from the provisions of the so-called Dow tax law, for certain sales made no matter where. Subsequently legislation limited these sales to the particular sales made at or referable to the place of manufacture. The last legislation on the subject extended the exemption from the tax, so that manufacturer could make sales from his wagon or other vehicle, providing such sales were to either one of the two well defined classes, to wit, license holders and individual consumers, made in "wet" territory, at their homes.

While it might have been a disputed question as to whether all sales by the manufacturer were sales of intoxicating liquors to be used as a beverage, it is no longer an open question in this state, where it is a well-known fact that the brewer fills practically all orders for his product providing the same is not below the quantity limited by law.

To my mind the reasoning of the supreme court of Tenessee, in the case of Kelly & Co. vs. State, as reported in 132 S. W., at page 193, fully justifies the conclusion that the sale by a brewer is a sale as a beverage, and that a brewery is a place where intoxicating liquors are sold or kept for sale as a beverage. The court in said case says, at page 199:

> "But counsel say the words 'as a beverage' restrict the word 'sale' so that it means a sale for consumption 'for the pleasure of drinking.' It should be borne in mind that it is 'to sell as a beverage' that is prohibited, and not to drink as a beverage. It is the seller's purpose that is referred to and not the purchaser's. The quantity so sold is not limited by the statute, and there is nothing in the language employed that necessarily restricts the prohibition to immediate consumption sales. The plaintiff in error sold 10 barrels of whiskey knowing that it would be resold in 'small and large quantities' in the ordinary course of trade. Its ultimate destination was the consumer, the purchaser being merely a distributor, and there is no suggestion in the evidence that it was not intended by all parties that, even the whiskey finally reached the consumer, it would be sold as a beverage. Plaintiff in error sold as a manufacturer in wholesale quantities, and thereby became the initial distributor of the whiskey to the general trade, and its purpose with respect to the final sale to the consumer must have been general and promiscuous. This would include beverage sales, as well as all other kinds of sales, and would clearly fall within the prohibition conceded by its learned counsel. When a sale is proven, the burden shifts to the defendant to show that it was lawfully made for a lawful purpose, and it would be straining too far to say that a sale in quantities to be distributed to the public generally for all purposes negatives a purpose upon the part of such seller that it was sold as a beverage."

Our own supreme court, in the case of Senior vs. Ratterman, 44 Ohio State, 661, while not deciding this question, did hold that wholesale dealers in intoxicating liquors were not manufacturers, nor within the terms of the act of the general assembly passed May 14, 1886; and it is readily apparent, from a reading of Judge Spear's decision in that case, that the sole reason for the exemption of the manufacturer was because he was specifically exempted by the statute. As the learned judge says, at page 673:

> "The word 'traffic' has always had a well-understood meaning in the popular sense. It is the passing of goods or commodities from one person to another for an equivalent in goods or money; and a trafficker is one who trafficks—a trader, a merchant. No limit as to amount is fixed in the section, and it is plainly as much traffic to deal in a given commodity by the wholesale as at retail."

While, of course, the statutory definition, as found in section 6065, General Code, is controlling, it is apparent that it is only the exception to the manufacturer that saves him from liability to the Dow-Aiken tax; and it cannot be contended that the brewer of today does not keep a place where intoxicating liquors are sold or kept to be sold as a beverage.

Section 19 of the so-called Greenlund license act provides amongst other things:

> "License shall not be granted to any applicant who is in any way interested in the business conducted at any other place where intoxicating liquors are sold or kept for sale as a beverage, nor shall such license be granted unless the applicant or applicants are the only persons in any way pecuniarily interested in the business for which the license is sought, and no other person shall be in any way interested therein during the continuance of the license; if such interest of such person shall appear, the license shall be deemed revoked."

Section 21 of the same act provides:

"Each applicant shall state:

* * * * * * * * * * * *

"(c) The fact that the applicant is not in any way interested either as owner or part owner in a business, or a stockholder of a corporation engaged in the business, conducted at any other place where intoxicating liquors are sold or kept for sale as a beverage."

Now, since under the express provisions of section 48 of the liquor licensing act, which imposes a penalty upon any person who sells intoxicating liquors without having obtained the license prescribed by law, the manufacturer is exempted, under the circumstances hereinbefore stated, it must be conceded that he is entirely without the law and does not have to obtain any license to make the sales that he is authorized to make under the statute; but he is limited strictly to the character of sales and in the quantities that are permitted. So, it is my opinion that the brewers in the question submitted are permitted to make sales in quantities of one gallon or more at one time at the factory, or in quantities of one gallon or more from the wagon or other vehicle of said manufacturer to the holder of a liquor license, or in quantities of one gallon or more at one time to individual consumers, where said liquors are delivered to the homes of said individual consumers in territory wherein the sale of intoxicating liquors is not prohibited by law.

Since this right and privilege is an exception to a certain class, for a certain character of sales, every sale must comply with and conform strictly to the sale so permitted.

In the past, so I am informed, brewers have had, in one or more counties of the state, other than the county where the brewery was located, a storehouse or depot for the distribution of its keg and bottled beer. Following the decisions of our courts, where sales were referable to such storehouses, the practice has been, by virtue of section 6071, to pay the tax assessed upon each place where intoxicating liquors were so sold. Questions frequently arose as to where the sale was actually made, but in the recent case of Diehl Brewing Company vs. Beck, 10 C. C. R. n. s. 361, affirmed without report in 81 O. S. 512, the court held that:

"A brewing company manufacturing and selling beer at wholesale, which maintains a cold storage house in a location separate from its manufactory, and from which cold storage house daily deliveries of beer are made to customers on order previously taken by a soliciting agent, thereby becomes a trafficker in intoxicating liquors within the meaning of Revised Statutes, 4364-9 (and section 6071, General Code,) and is subject to the Dow tax provided for by that act."

In that case the agent of the brewery took orders from saloon keepers for the amount of beer which they would need during the next period of thirty days or until he would next make his round. These order were sent to the main office of the brewing company at Defiance for approval. From its brewery the company would then ship in carload lots to Holgate and Deshler an amount of beer sufficient for the demand in those places. The beer so shipped was consigned to itself, and was received by its agents in Holgate and Deshler and stored in its cold storage houses in those towns and none of it was in any way designated or set apart for any particular customer. Each morning and evening the agent of the brewing company at Holgate and at Deshler would take the round of the saloons in his town; inquire of each saloon keeper how much beer he would need for the day or part of a day; enter that amount with the price thereof on a book which he carried with him; make a duplicate entry on the books kept by the saloon keeper; and afterwards would deliver by wagon to the saloon keeper the amount and kind of beer so ascertained to be needed, taking such amount of beer from the general stock on hand in the cold storage house, and continue so to do until the amount previously ordered by any customer had been delivered to him. Occasionally the local agent would make collections; ordinarily, however, the soliciting agent would do so.

Judge Hurin, at page 363, after stating the facts, says:

> "It is evident that the whole question involved in this case depends on the one word 'sale' and its definition.
> "When and where under the facts agreed upon in this case, did the sale take place?
> "Was the sale completed by the soliciting agent when he took the order for the supply of beer to each saloon for the coming month; or was it completed when the order for beer was accepted and confirmed by the home office in Defiance; or was it completed when the beer for all the Holgate and Deshler customers was shipped in bulk to the cold storage houses in those towns; or was it completed when the beer was delivered by the agent of the brewing company from the cold storage houses to the saloons; or was it only completed when, after delivery, the soliciting agent again called, collected the money for the beer previously delivered, and solicited a new order?"

The judge distinguishes the cases of Hanson vs. Luce, treasurer, and Monaghan vs. Luce, treasurer, reported together in 50 O. S. 440, because in those cases it was conceded that there was no traffic or sale at the cold storage houses; and calls attention to the case of Jung Brewing Company vs. Talbot, 59 O. S. 511, saying:

> "In that case it appeared that the brewing company, located in Cincinnati, maintained a cold storage house in Urbana, Champaign county, 'where beer, shipped from the brewery, was received and kept on hand ready for sale and delivery to customers in the latter city, from time to time as they might order. The sales were not made directly at the storage rooms, but were made by agents and employes of the plaintiff who drove wagons for that purpose which were supplied with beer in the keg from the storage room.' The court held that the business conducted in that manner was taxable and on page 516 of the opinion the court says:
> "'If customers had made their purchase or received the property at the building (meaning the cold storage building) it would undoubtedly have been a place of traffic. Instead of conducting the business in that way the agents who had charge of the building and contents obtained orders from the customers which they filled by hauling the beer from the building to the customers. That was merely a matter of convenience to the purchaser or inducement to buy. The building where the property sold was situated and from which it was delivered was, for every practical purpose, the place where the business was carried on. The substantial distinction between this case and the cases of Hanson vs. Luce, and Monaghan vs. Luce, 50 O. S. 440, is that in the latter case the storage room was used in connection with, and as part of the wholesale and retail traffic carried on by the proprietor at his saloon where all the business was done, and for which he had paid the tax. In such a case, it was held he was not subject to a separate tax on account of the use made of the storage room.'

"Here we find a close similarity to the case at bar and the court holds that though 'agents who have charge of the building and contents obtained orders from the customers which they filled by hauling the beer from the building to the customers, that was merely a matter of convenience to the customers or inducement to buy; the building where the property sold was situated and from which it was delivered was, for every practical purpose, the place where the business was carried on.'

"But plaintiff in the case at bar insists that the manner of sale in this case, the fact that a blanket order had previously been taken and that the daily orders delivered from the cold storage houses were merely designations of what was immediately needed, takes it out of the rule thus laid down.

"A case perhaps still more nearly identical with this case is that of village of Bellefontaine vs. Vassaux, 55 O. S. 323. There a brewery company at Sidney owned a cold storage house at Bellefontaine. There was evidence tending to show that customers in Bellefontaine ordered beer of the brewing company at Sidney, which thereupon shipped it to the purchaser at Bellefontaine, but in care of its own agent, who stored the beer in the cold storage house and delivered it to the purchaser only when paid for. In that case there was an attempt to show that the beer for each purchaser was set apart by itself in the storage house in a rack labeled with the initial of the purchaser's name but there was no attempt to show a separation between the beer ordered by two men with names of the same initial letter. The court held that such evidence justified a conviction of the charge of selling intoxicating liquor in violation of law.

" * * * What then is a sale and when is it complete?

"Blackstone (ed. Com. page 446) says it is 'transmutation of property from one man to another in consideration of some price.'

"Kent calls it 'a contract for the transfer of property from one person to another for a valuable consideration.' 2 Kent's Com. 468.

"Benjamin on Sales, section 1, declares that, 'It may be defined to be a transfer of the absolute or general property in a thing for a price in money.'

"Mecham on Sales defines it as, 'The transfer, in pursuance of a valid agreement, from one party called the seller to another called the buyer, of the general or absolute title to a specific chattel, for a price, or a consideration estimated in money,' and says further that the sale takes place only when the title passes.

"In all these definitions except that of Kent a transfer of title or property is held to be a necessary element of a sale; and in Kent's definition it is the contract for the transfer which constitutes a sale.

* * * * * * * * *

"But when the agent of the brewing company took that beer from this cold storage house, setting apart some of it for one customer and some for another and, from the cold storage house, began the delivery of their portions to the respective purchasers, then the brewing company lost its title and the purchaser gained it whether payment had been made or not. Then the sale was complete.

"True, the order had previously been given, but the execution of it, the completion of the actual sale, was carried out only from the cold storage house and by the agent in charge thereof. Until such delivery, there was no completed sale; no setting apart of any particular beer; no transfer of any title to any particular kegs or barrels of beer. The business was conducted from the cold storage house and only completed by the agent in charge of that house. * * *

"It may not be amiss to consider in conclusion the effect of a contrary view. Under that holding the brewing company—merely because it is a manufacturer—might establish in each county in the state and in each town in each county, a depot of supplies. Its agents might there conduct what is in all essential respects a wholesale business and without taxation—a privilege denied to all other wholesalers of beer.

* * * * * * * * *

"The brewing company might thus by a simple subterfuge get around the law and conduct a limitless number of subsidiary wholesale houses without taxation—just what the law prohibits in all others.

"We do not think that such an interpretation of the law is consistent either with the decisions of our supreme court or with the spirit of the law or even with its letter."

In Jung Brewing Company vs. Talbot, 59 O. S. 512, Judge Williams said:

"The business of trafficking in intoxicating liquors upon which the tax may be assessed, as defined by the statute, means the buying or procuring and selling of such liquors, and does not, it is claimed, include sales by the manufacturer of them, because he neither buys nor procures, but produces them. It seems clear, however, the word 'procure' was not used in the statute in that restricted sense. After defining the phrase 'trafficking in intoxicating liquors' to mean the 'buying or procuring and selling,' etc., the statute, in express terms, excludes manufacturers in certain cases from the definition, which is sufficiently indicative of the legislative understanding that such express exclusion was necessary to relieve manufacturers of the tax; for if they were not within the definition, the excepting clause was unnecessary. And, moreover, the excepting clause does not exclude manufacturers in all instances, but only in cases where their sales are made at the manufactory, etc. * * * In general use the word 'procure' means to obtain in any way, and that it was employed in that sense in this statute, seems clear from all of its provisions."

Continuing, Judge Williams, at page 516, says:

"The selling of intoxicating liquors from a wagon equipped as a saloon, drawn from place to place, is as certainly within the purview of the statute, as is the traffic carried on in elegantly fitted rooms; and so is the selling from any vehicle when it is not done as a part of a business on which the proprietor pays the required tax. But, was not the traffic carried on by the plaintiff at a place in the city of Urbana? The beer was shipped there and placed in the storage room, where it was kept on hand for sale by local agents. If customers had made their purchases or received the property at the building, it would undoubtedly have been a place of traffic. Instead of conducting the business in that way the agents who had charge of the building and contents obtained orders from the customers which they filled by hauling the beer from the building to the customers. That was merely a matter of convenience to the purchaser, or inducement to buy. The building where the property sold was situated, and from which it was delivered, was, for every practical purpose, the place where the business was carried on."

Keeping in mind the principles laid down by the cases discussed above, it is plainly to be seen that every case must be decided upon its own peculiar evidence, and that at all times the brewer must see to it that every sale is made in the manner and at the place permitted in the exception in the law. I believe that the cases decided by our court of last resort, and referred to above, point out the kind of sales that are permitted, and those that are not. It is perfectly apparent that all sales in the proper quantities, made at the manufactory, are within the exemption. Also, the language is so plain as to not need interpretation that the manufacturer is permitted to make sales in the prescribed quantities from his "wagon" or other vehicle to the permitted classes mentioned in the exception.

A more serious question arises when the inquiry is made as to the right of the brewer to have a warehouse or depot for the distribution of his keg or bottled beer, away from his manufactory. If this warehouses is a mere matter of convenience to the manufacturer, and no sale is made or can be legally referred to the warehouse, I can see no valid reason for preventing the stoppage at the warehouse of the goods of the manufacturer; and it is my opinion, under the authority of the Dow tax cases in our supreme court, which are so analogous to those that might arise under the license act, that a manufacturer could load up his wagon as well from his warehouse as from his manufactory, and start out to make his sales from his wagon or other vehicle. Such sales, under such circumstances, would be at the peril of the manufacturer; and if at any time the sale could be properly referred to the storehouse; and if, in the words of Judge Williams, 59 O. S. 512, the manufacturer "obtained orders from customers which he filled by hauling the beer from the building to the customers," then, since that was merely a matter of convenience to the purchaser, the building or storehouse where the property sold was situated, and from which it was delivered, would be for every practical purpose the place where the business was carried on, and the sales made, and so would be in violation of law.

A manufacturer could not solicit and receive orders and then take his wagon to the storehouse, obtain therefrom his product, and deliver the product as per the orders theretofore received. This would constitute a sale at the storehouse. He would have to have his goods on his wagon and then proceed to consummate every element that went to make up the sale of his product therefrom, in order to be within the excepting clause of the statute.

A manufacturer, by reason of the exception, is without the scope of the license act; neither he nor anyone for him can obtain a license. In the first place, one is not necessary to him for making the sales that he is allowed to make; and then, again, he could not comply with the requisites to obtain a license for another and a different place, for he would already be interested in the business conducted at another place where intoxicating liquors were sold or kept for sale.

It must be understood that the exemption is to the manufacturer, and that the practice can no longer obtain of establishing agencies in the various counties and making sales from the offices of the agencies, or from the storehouses themselves. The manufacturer, by himself and his agent, is bound to the strict letter of the law, and can make only such sales as are fully and legally completed at the excepted places, to wit: the manufactory or the wagon or other vehicle. The sales at the manufactory must be limited to the very place of manufacture; the sales from the wagon or other vehicle are limited to the wagons or other vehicles, but not to any particular locality, so long as the sales are made in the prescribed quantities and to the prescribed persons.

In discussing this entire question I am assuming that the brewery or place of manufacture is situated in so-called "wet" territory.

I hope I have made myself plain. The question is somewhat involved; yet, to me, the language of the exception in the statute can mean nothing else than the literal meaning of the words. The rule laid down by the circuit court in Brewing Co. vs. Beck, which was later affirmed in the supreme court, must be borne in mind, as well as that of the other cases cited above. The breweries may have storehouses or warehouses, but they cannot make sales at or therefrom. They must strictly comply with the letter of the law, according to all rules of statutory construction regarding exceptions.

As I view it, the manufacturer may ship a carload of beer to another point than the factory, consigned to himself, and place the same in his storage house. He may load from the storage house, into his wagon or other vehicle, and proceed to make sales from said wagon or other vehicle; but he may not take an order for some of his goods and proceed then to the storehouse, and deliver the same in fulfillment of the order therefore given. Under the cases above referred to this would be a sale at the storehouse, which is not permitted. Orders may be taken and sales made from the manufactory, and orders may be taken and sales made from the wagon or other vehicle; but any sale that is referable, under the law, to another place would be outside of the exception, and a violation of the license act.

Very truly yours,
TIMOTHY S. HOGAN,
Attorney General.

THE LIQUOR LICENSE COMMISSION SHOULD EXERCISE GREAT CARE IN GRANTING SALOON LICENSES IN ORDER THAT THE WELFARE OF ORPHANS' HOMES AND ORPHAN ASYLUMS MAY BE GUARDED.

While section 13206, General Code, in reference to locating saloons in the vicinity of state institutions does not apply to private institutions, yet the liquor license commission should exercise great care to the end that the welfare of orphans' homes and asylums, whether public or private, should be guarded. This is within the power of the liquor commission and it should not hesitate to exercise its power.

COLUMBUS, OHIO, October 31, 1913.

State Liquor License Commission, Columbus, Ohio.

GENTLEMEN:—You inquire whether, on account of section 13206, General Code, county license commissioners may lawfully issue a license to an applicant for a saloon license, whose saloon is located within twelve hundred yards of an orphan asylum, as distinct from an orphans' home which is conducted either by the state or state agencies.

The orphan asylums to which you refer are those conducted by individuals or private charitable associations or corporations, other than those in charge of the state or the agents of the state, or political subdivisions of the state.

Section 13206, General Code, is as follows:

> "Whoever sells intoxicating liquors or keeps a house of ill-fame at or within twelve hundred yards of the administration or main central building of the Columbus state hospital, Dayton state hospital, Athens state hospital, Toledo state hospital, soldiers' and sailors' orphans' home, or an other orphans' home in this state, or within two miles of the boundary line of the boys' industrial school, south of Lancaster, Fairfield county, or within two miles of the place where an agricultural fair is being held, or within one mile of a county children's home of a county of the state situated within one mile of an incorporated village or city in which the sale of intoxicating liquors is prohibited by an ordinance of such village or city, shall be fined not less than twenty-five dollars nor more than one hundred dollars, or imprisoned not more than thirty days, or both. The place wherein such intoxicating liquors are sold shall be shut up and abated as a nuisance by order of the court upon conviction of the owner or keeper thereof."

It is clear that every other institution named in this section, than orphans' homes, is conducted by the state or state agencies, or political subdivisions. In other words, they are conducted by governmental agencies. This alone tends strongly to the notion that it was not intended to embrace orphan asylums in charge of individuals, charitable associations or eleemosynary corporations. This conclusion would reasonably follow were it not for the history of the legislation on this subject.

It is not necessary to go farther back than year book 88, page 603, laws of 1891, for light on the subject. Section 6946, Revised Statutes, as found in said volume, prohibited the sale within twelve hundred yards of "the Ohio soldiers' and sailors' orphans' home." No other orphans' home was referred to.

The next act is to be found in 99 Ohio Laws, page 435 (laws of 1896), where the provision in respect to orphans' homes is as follows:

> "Soldiers' and sailors' orphans' home, or any other orphans' home in this state, except in cities of the first class."

The exception "or any other orphans' home in this state, except in cities of the first class" would leave the inference that sales were prohibited within the prescribed distance from orphans' homes other than those conducted by governmental agencies. However, the legislative intent appeared to be to except cities of the first class from the operation of the act.

The same language is used when the legislature acted again. See year book 93, page 342, section 6946.

To the same effect we find the section in the Revised Statutes, section 6946, Bates' Annotated Code, 1908.

When the General Code was adopted section 6946, Revised Statutes, passed into what is now section 13206, General Code, with the following words left out, so far as the question at hand is concerned, to wit, "except in cities of the first class."

It is easily to be seen that the exception was omitted because of the decision of the supreme court holding that classification of cities is unconstitutional.

Nothwithstanding the exception, and the changes made in reference to it, it does not conclusively follow that other than governmental homes are still embraced. Without finding it necessary to go deep into the statutes with reference to orphans' homes and orphan asylums, it is sufficient to say that an examination of the General Code, sections 3070, et seq., discloses that the statutory idea of "home" and "asylum" is not the same. It will be kept in mind that the statute under interpretation is a penal one. A home, in legal contemplation, is a permanent fixed place of abode, and presupposes that those at the home are under the entire control of the management in charge, subject to governmental authority; while this does not always obtain as to an asylum. Orphan asylums frequently do receive children for given and limited periods; and in fact do receive destitute children who may not be orphans. Too, usually there are well-defined rules and regulations as to admission to homes, as well as to departure therefrom. In my judgment a court in a criminal case would hesitate to enter into an inquiry as to the shades of difference that in some circumstances would constitute an orphan asylum a home, and in others not.

In advising you as to a constitutional provision I wish to leave the idea that great care should be taken to avoid too liberal a construction, to the end that the spirit of the constitution might be carefully complied with. Section 9 of article 15 of the constitution provides as follows:

> "Laws shall not be passed authorizing more than one saloon in each township or municipality of less than five hundred population or more than one saloon for each five hundred population in other townships and municipalities. Where the traffic is or may be prohibited under laws applying to counties, municipalities, townships, residence districts, or other districts now prescribed by law, the traffic shall not be licensed in any such local subdivision while any prohibitory law is operative therein, and nothing herein contained shall be so construed as to modify or suspend any such prohibitory laws, or any regulatory laws now in force or hereafter enacted, or to prevent the future enactment, modification or repeal of any prohibitory or regulatory law."

The maxim, expressio unius exclusio est alterius, may apply to the matter at hand, especially since the Greenlund act is directly applicable and controlling with reference to the issuance of licenses; and the legislature may have had in mind the likelihood of the existence of some part of clause of statute to which its attention might not be directed, and to leave no doubt upon the subject may have intended to describe all of the prohibited places. Sufficient at least appears from this to more than raise a question of doubt as to the right of the license commission to withhold a license to a saloon keeper, who is of good moral character, and whose place of business has been conducted within twelve hundred yards of an orphans' home or asylum other than one conducted by governmental agency.

Importance, too, is to be attached to the last paragraph of section 19 of the Greenlund act, to the effect that "no license shall be granted after August 1, 1915, to operate a saloon within three hundred feet of any permanent public or parochial school building, measuring the distance in a straight line following the street from the nearest point of the premises on which such school building is located, nor two hundred feet in a straight line following the street from the nearest point of the premises. This provision shall not apply to a bona fide reputable hotel or club; or to a saloon located within three hundred feet of a school house in the central or a main business section of the city."

Section 28 of the Greenlund act, among other things provides:

> "Where the number of applications is greater than the number of licenses allowed by law, the applicants who were engaged in the sale of intoxicating liquors prior to the fourth Monday of May, 1912 (or their bona fide successors in title), as evidenced by the payment of the assessment for the preceding period under section 6071 of the General Code, shall be preferred, provided they are otherwise qualified by law."

The legislative intent, as well as the spirit of the constitution, indicates the purpose of the legislature and the people to place the license traffic in proper hands. The criminal sections in existence before the licenses were intended to prevent abuses, largely because there was no other method provided for reaching the end to be attained and regulating the liquor traffic.

Inasmuch as the section of the constitution before quoted, prohibiting the sale in certain places, does not deny to the license commission the authority to issue licenses to persons who are to conduct the business within twelve hundred yards of privately conducted orphan asylums or homes, in my judgment, the mind rather inclines to the belief that the license commission has authority to issue the licenses, rather than that they have not. In view of the fact that the statute, section 13206, General Code, is a penal one; that its own interpretation is not free from doubt; that if its interpretation were free from doubt, it is not altogether clear that it is applicable as against the provisions of the constitution in respect to license and the Greenlund act, passed in conformity thereto; and in view of the further fact that the commission, in my judgment, in a case of this kind, has the power to protect any institution, whether private or public, from danger of proximity to the liquor traffic, I think you should be clearly of the opinion that the commission is without authority to issue a license before withholding it.

If your commission and this department should be wrong in this interpretation, the general assembly may easily remove the doubt.

My advice to you, therefore, is that the commission would hardly be warranted in construing the statute to apply to homes other than those in charge of governmental agencies; but that, in view of the doubt, great care should be taken to the end that the welfare of the orphans' homes and orphans' asylums, of whatever kind and character, public or private, should be guarded. This is within the power of the local commission, and it should not hesitate to exercise that power, to the end that no abuse might possibly be permitted.

Very truly yours,
TIMOTHY S. HOGAN,
Attorney General.

THE OWNERS OF A DISTILLERY THAT IS BEING OPERATED IN DRY TERRITORY MAY RECEIVE EITHER A WHOLESALE OR A SALOON LICENSE, PROVIDING THE ENTIRE OUTPUT OF THE DISTILLERY IS DISPOSED OF AT THE LICENSED PLACE, AND THEY DO NOT INTEND TO TAKE ADVANTAGE OF THE EXEMPTION UNDER THE LICENSE ACT.

Where a distillery is owned and operated in dry territory the proprietors of this distillery are eligible to a license either saloon or wholesale, provided they do not intend to take advantage of the exemption remaining to them under the license act, and provided further the entire output of the factory is disposed of at the licensed place.

COLUMBUS, OHIO, October 31, 1913.

State Liquor License Commission, Columbus, Ohio.

GENTLEMEN:—I have yours of October 9th enclosing a request from the Montgomery county liquor licensing board wherein an opinion is desired upon the following:

> "An application is made for a license by a partnership doing business under the firm name of D. Distilling Company, the partnership consisting of J. F. D. and B. E. D., both giving the same address at Tippecanoe City, Ohio. The place where the business is to be carried on is at a certain address in Dayton, Ohio. Both partners say in their application that they are in no way interested, either as owners or part owners in the business or stockholders of the corporation, nor engaged in a business conducted at any other place where intoxicating liquors are sold or kept for sale as a beverage.
> "One of the partners stated verbally that the partnership owns and operates a distillery at Tippecanoe City. Tippecanoe City is located in a county which is "dry" under the county local option. It is not disclosed whether or not this distillery sells liquors to other concerns or whether its product is marketed through their Dayton store.
> "Inquiry is made whether or not this distillery is such a place as debars the proprietors thereof from obtaining a saloon license in another place?"

The Rose law passed in 1908, 99 O. L., 35, makes it unlawful for any person, personally or by agent within the limits of such county to sell, furnish or give away intoxicating liquors to be used as a beverage or keep a place where such liquors are kept for sale, given away or furnished for beverage purposes. (Section 6112, General Code.)

Section 6103, General Code, which was section 3 of the Rose law excepted from the operations of the law,

> "The sale of intoxicating liquor at retail by a regular druggist for exclusively known medicinal, mechanical, pharmaceutical, scientific or sacramental purposes; nor in addition thereto shall it prevent such sale for exclusively known art purposes by a regular druggist in the limits of a township without the limits of a municipal corporation, as provided in sub-division 5 of this chapter."

Section 13225, General Code, which was section 2 of the Rose law provides a penalty against selling, furnishing, giving away or otherwise dealing in intoxicating liquors as a beverage in any manner, directly or indirectly, and also for the keeping or using of a place of any kind where the same is done.

In the case of Scheu vs. State, 12 circuit court, N. S. 118, the syllabus reads:

"Inasmuch as the Rose local option law provides its own exceptions, it is not permissible to read into it the exceptions found in the Dow law as to sales of intoxicating liquor at the manufactory and by the manufacturer in quantities of one gallon or more at any one time; but such sales are prohibited within a county where the Rose law has become operative."

Judge Donahue says at page 119:

"Looking to the law itself we find no exceptions made in favor of manufacturers or brewing companies any more than any other individual."

At page 121 the same eminent jurist says:

"Construing similar legislation, the supreme court in the 61st Ohio St., at page 597 says:

" 'The sale of beer as a beverage, in any quantity, whether by the manufacturer or not, is prohibited in a township where the people have availed themselves of the provisions of the local option law.'

"Let us change that language by substituting the word 'county' for 'township.' 'The sale of beer as a beverage, in any quantity, whether by the manufacturer or not, is prohibited in a county where the people have availed themselves of the provisions of the local option law.' It is clear to us that the supreme court has passed upon substantially the same statute as the one in question and has held against the contention of the plaintiff in error."

Later the supreme court in the same case, found reported in 83 O. S. 146, affirmed the judgment of the circuit court, and Judge Price, at the bottom of page 153 says:

"We see no exception of the brewer or manufacturer, and no privilege defined if sold, furnished or given away in quantities of one gallon or more. There is no intimation of such exemption in favor of anyone."

So it is settled beyond cavil in this state that there is no exception to the manufacturer in a "dry" county to sell, furnish or give away intoxicating liquors as a beverage or to keep a place where the same is done. The only right that would be left to the manufacturer is to transport his product, consigned to himself, in so-called "wet" territory, and to make his sales there. I am inclined to the view that while his business at this last point is the selling of his product, that he is none the less a manufacturer because the manufacturer does not lose his class as a manufacturer when he acts in the same manner as a merchant in the selling of his product.

Then the question arises, what is the status of the manufacturer who is unable to dispose of his product at his plant by reason of local option laws when it comes to his making sales of his own product at a place where the sale of intoxicating liquor is not prohibited by law.

Section 48 of the Greenlund license law grants an exemption to the manufacturer in the making of sales at two places, to wit: at the manufactory in the prescribed quantities, and from the wagon or other vehicle of the manufacturer to the two mentioned classes of consumers.

Now, in the case under discussion, the manufacturer is prevented by an intervening vis major, to wit: the county local option law, from taking advantage of the exemption to sell at the manufactory; yet, as above stated, he is none the less a manufacturer when he still holds his product at a point away from his manufactory where a sale of intoxicating liquor as a beverage is permitted by law. He would be entitled to the other exemption, to wit: the right to make a sale in the prescribed quantities "from the wagon or other vehicle of said manufacturer to the holder of a liquor license, or in said quantities to individual consumers where said liquors are delivered to the homes of said individual consumers in territory wherein the sale of intoxicating liquors is not prohibited by law."

A manufacturer is specifically exempted, and is entirely without the license law, so long as he sells at the places, in the quantity, and to the persons prescribed by the exemption.

So, if this manufacturing firm, whose plant is in "dry" territory, under the "Rose law," still desires to sell from its wagon, it may do so in "wet" territory without a license, so long as the sales are at and from the wagon of the manufactory, and to the persons prescribed by law. There is nothing in either the constitution, nor in the license laws passed by authority of the constitutional amendment, that prohibits the issuance of licenses to sell intoxicating liquor to manufacturers. There is provision against granting a license to any applicant who is in any way interested in the business conducted at any other place where intoxicating liquors are sold, or kept for sale as a beverage; and if the manufacturer does make sales of intoxicating liquors, as a beverage, from his manufactory or other place, he, of course, would be precluded from having a license to sell at an additional place. Now, since it is presumed that this manufacturing firm will not violate the law prohibiting the sale in the county in which its plant is situated, if it should choose not to avail itself of the other privilege granted in the exemption to manufacturers, to wit: to make sales from the wagon, as provided in said exemption, then, so far as the manufactory was concerned, and so far as the wagon was concerned, since no sales were to be made therefrom, the said firm would stand in the position of any other applicant. The mere fact of its being a manufacturer of intoxicating liquors, of itself, would not disqualify said firm from eligibility to receive a license.

In other words, it is my opinion that a proper construction of the provisions of the liquor licensing law does not prohibit a manufacturer from being eligible to receive a license, either wholesale or saloon; and that, as far as his application is concerned, he stands in the same position as any other applicant, as long as he does not avail himself of the privileges granted in the exemption clause of section 48 of the license act.

This would permit the manufacturer to obtain a license, and from the place so licensed to make sales of his manufactured products, as well as those of other manufacturers. Of course, it is to be understood that like any other holder of a license under this law, if at any time he desires to avail himself of the exemption to manufacturers, and made a sale at a place other than at the place licensed; or if, at any time, it should appear that he was or should become in any way interested, either as owner or part owner, in the business, or a stockholder of a corporation engaged in the business conducted at any other place where intoxicating liquors were sold, or kept for sale as a beverage; or that any other persons were in any way pecuniarily interested in the business for which the license was held, then his license would under the law be deemed revoked.

I am, therefore, of the opinion that the proprietors of the distillery in question are eligible to a license, either saloon or wholesale, provided they do not intend to take advantage of the exemption remaining to them under the license act, and provided further that the entire output of the manufactory is disposed of at the licensed place.

Very truly yours,
TIMOTHY S. HOGAN,
Attorney General.

A FOREIGN BREWERY MAY HAVE A LICENSE TO DO BUSINESS AT ONE PLACE WITHIN THIS STATE AND CANNOT BE DIRECTLY, OR INDIRECTLY, INTERESTED IN ANY OTHER PLACE WHERE INTOXICATING LIQUORS ARE SOLD AS A BEVERAGE.

The managing agent of and for a foreign brewery cannot deliver beer from its storehouse in this state on orders previously solicited by said agent from customers within this state, without said brewery having a license authorizing such sale of intoxicating liquors in the particular county in which, and at the place the business is conducted. Such a foreign brewery can have a license to do business at only one place in the state and cannot be interested directly, or indirectly, in any other place where intoxicating liquors are sold as a beverage.

COLUMBUS, OHIO, October 31, 1913.

State Liquor License Commission, Columbus, Ohio.

GENTLEMEN:—Your honorable board has inquired as to the status of a foreign brewery, which has resident managers conducting branch agencies in the different counties of the state. As I understand the practice that has obtained in these branch agencies, a local manager, under salary, is in charge of and manages the local branch. The product of the foreign brewery is shipped to the local manager, and sales are made by the local manager at the branch agency; and the several branch agencies have been paying the Aiken tax for each place so conducted.

In this opinion I am assuming that the sales are actually made by and at the local agencies; and do not consider the question of sales made directly from the office of the foreign brewery.

Section 48 of the Greenlund liquor licensing act, 103 Ohio Laws, 237, provides:

> "Whoever sells intoxicating liquors without having been duly licensed as provided herein shall be guilty of a misdemeanor, and shall be fined not less than two hundred dollars nor more than five hundred dollars for the first offense and for a second or subsequent offense not less than five hundred dollars nor more than one thousand dollars, or imprisoned in the county jail for a period of not less than one month nor more than three months, or both.

"Sales of intoxicating liquor by other than dealers therein, in quantities of forty gallons or more, where said liquors are taken by way of payment of a debt or by way of collateral security on a loan, or are acquired for investment solely and sold en bloc, and sales under provisions of law requiring an executor, administrator, guardian, receiver or other officer of the court to sell, where such sales are made of a stock of liquors en bloc, or a sale by a person, firm or corporation previously licensed but whose license is not renewed, or is revoked, forfeited, surrendered or otherwise lost, where such sales are made of a stock of liquors en bloc, are not included within the meaning of this section. Nor shall this section include the manufacturer of native wine, cider or other intoxicating liquors from the raw material and the sale thereof by the manufacturer in quantities of one gallon or more at one time at the factory or the sale thereof in said quantities by the manufacturer from the wagon or other vehicle of said manufacturer to the holder of a liquor license, or in said quantities to individual consumer where said liquors are delivered to the homes of said individual consumers in territory wherein the sale of intoxicating liquors is not prohibited by law. Nor shall this section include the sales made by a registered pharmacist upon a prescription issued in good faith by a reputable physician in active practice, or for exclusively known mechanical, pharmaceutical or sacramental purposes."

The first question that might arise is whether these branch agencies come within that part of the exemption in section 48, supra, which provides that:

"Nor shall this section include the manufacturer of native wine, cider or other intoxicating liquors from the raw material and the sale thereof by the manufacturer in quantities of one gallon or more at one time at the factory or the sale thereof in said quantities by the manufacturer from the wagon or other vehicle of said manufacturer to the holder of a liquor license, or in said quantities to individual consumers where said liquors are delivered to the homes of said individual consumers in territory wherein the sale of intoxicating liquors is not prohibited by law."

Attention is called to the fact that this language is identical with the provision found in section 6065, as amended by the last legislature. Section 6065, prior to the amendment, excepted the manufacture of intoxicating liquors from the raw material, and the sale thereof at the manufactory by the manufacturer thereof, in quantities of one gallon or more at one time. This phrase has been judicially construed, and while it is found in a section which imposes a tax upon the business of trafficking in intoxicating liquors, this tax is so similar to a license and the two laws are so intimately related, I am of the opinion that the interpretation given by the courts to the same, or similar words in the tax law, would be controlling as to the same words used in the same manner in the license law.

Our courts have held that if intoxicating liquors are shipped to a warehouse,and kept on hand for sale by local agents, the manufacturer is liable to the tax, and that the sale is not completed while anything remains to be done, such as setting apart and identifying specific goods which are the subject of the sale, from other goods belonging to the seller.

Brewing Company vs. Talbot, 59 O. S. 516.

Village of Bellefontaine vs. Vassaux, 55 O. S. 323.

So, too, it has been held that a brewing company that maintains storehouses, separate and apart from the manufactory, from which daily deliveries are made to customers on orders taken by the seller, would be liable to payment of the tax and would be a trafficker under the meaning of the tax law. True, these decisions were on a state of facts arising where the manufactory was situated in this state, and the sales were made from storage houses at other points than at the factory, but I think it must be conceded that the practice that has obtained in the conduct of branch agencies of foreign breweries is similar to the manner in which the business of the local manufacturers was sought to be done in places removed from the manufactory.

Now, it appears at a glance that the exception in the Dow-Aiken tax law was to the manufacturer selling in quantities of one gallon or more at the manufactory, and it could only have applied to those manufacturers who were manufacturing in this state. I speak now of the law prior to the last amendment. This amendment extended the exception, granted further privilege to the manufacturer, and gave him a right to make certain sales from his wagon or other vehicle to certain classes of consumers. To my mind, this further exception applies to the same class to which the exception in the prior law applied, to wit: to the domestic manufacturer; and it is he, and he alone, who is so specially favored and granted exemption in the tax law from the payment of the assessment on trafficking in intoxicating liquors; and he is likewise, by similar language, exempted from the penal provisions of the liquor license law. All who are not engaged in the business of manufacturing in this state are without the exception, as far as this particular exception is concerned. So, then, the managing agents stand in the place of the foreign breweries; and the foreign breweries come to the licensing board as any other applicant of a similar kind, i. e. whether corporation, firm or individual.

I do not believe the fact that one is a foreign manufacturer of intoxicating liquors would necessarily disqualify him from receiving a license to sell intoxicating liquors within this state. The license act only acts intrastate. It has no extra territorial effect. The provision against one being interested in the business conducted in another place where intoxicating liquors are sold or kept for sale as a beverage means any other place within this state, and it is my view that a foreign brewer is eligible to make application for either a saloon or wholesale license, under the new license act. So, then, the foreign brewer, standing on the same footing as any other applicant, may receive one license, and that either a saloon or a wholesale license. When he has obtained that, he is through. He cannot have more than one place within this state, for then he would offend against the provision of being interested in another place where the business of trafficking in intoxicating liquors is carried on. Surely, a foreign brewing company could not be in any better position than a domestic brewing company in maintaining a cold storage house, from which its products were delivered on orders previously taken by a soliciting agent.

In the case of Diehl Brewing Company vs. Beck, found reported in the 10th circuit court reports, page 361, which case was subsequently affirmed without report by the supreme court in 81 O. S. 512, the court held:

> "A brewing company manufacturing and selling beer at wholesale, which maintains a cold storage house in a location separate from its manufactory, and from which cold storage house daily deliveries of beer are made to customers on orders previously taken by a soliciting agent, thereby becomes a trafficker in intoxicating liquors within the meaning of Revised Statutes, 4364-9, and is subject to the Dow tax provided for by that act."

In this case, as well as the cases of Brewing Co. vs. Talbot, 59 O. S. 516, and Village of Bellefontaine vs. Vassaux, 53 O. S. 323, it was contended, on behalf of the brewers, that the sales were referable to the manufactory, and hence were exempt from the Dow tax, but the court uniformly held that some element of the sale was completed at the storehouse, so constituting the storehouse the place of sale, and rendering it amenable to the tax.

You understand, of course, that I am not passing on the question where the sale in law and in fact was completed at the manufactory of the foreign brewer in another state. I am assuming that the managing agent seeks to conduct the business as branch establishments of foreign brewers have been conducting business in this state in recent years.

It is my opinion, therefore, that a managing agent of and for a foreign brewery could not deliver beer from its storehouse in this state on orders previously solicited by said agent from customers within this state, without said brewery having a license authorizing such sale of intoxicating liquors in the particular county in which, and at the place the business was being conducted. Further, it is my opinion that such foreign brewery could only have a license to do business at one place within the state, and could not be interested, directly or indirectly in any other place where intoxicating liquors were sold as a beverage.

Of course, such foreign brewer, whether individual, firm or corporation, would have to comply with all the provisions of the license and other laws of this state; and if a corporation the license act specifies what qualification it must possess, as also the qualifications of its managers.

Very truly yours,
TIMOTHY S. HOGAN,
Attorney General.

THE CONTRACT ENTERED INTO BETWEEN THE VILLAGE COUNCIL OF MARYSVILLE, OHIO, AND THE OHIO REFORMATORY FOR WOMEN FOR THE CONSTRUCTION OF A SEWER, SHOULD PROVIDE THAT IT SHALL CONTINUE IN FORCE SO LONG AS MAY BE AUTHORIZED BY LEGISLATIVE APPROPRIATIONS FOR THAT PURPOSE.

Article 4 of the ordinance adopted by the village council of Marysville in regard to a sewer contract between the building commission for the Ohio reformatory for women and the village of Marysville, Ohio, which provides that the contract shall be continued in force until 1935 is invalid, and should be changed so as to provide that the contract shall be in force for the full term for which appropriations are now made for said reformatory, and for such further period or periods as may be authorized by legislative appropriations for that purpose.

COLUMBUS, OHIO, November 25, 1913.

HON. H. H. SHIBER, Secretary of Building Commission, Columbus, Ohio.

DEAR SIR:—I have your letter of November 15th with copies of sewerage contract between the building commission for the Ohio reformatory for women and the village of Marysville, together with copy of the ordinance of said village in regard to the same, and you inquire as to whether any changes should be made in said contract so as to make it conform to decisions of the supreme court.

The authority of the village council to make a contract of this character is found in the act of May 18, 1911, which reads:

> "Section 10160-1. The council of any city or village may permit the owners or association of owners of lots and lands abutting on roads or other highways entering such city or village to connect with and use the sewers of such city or village for carrying off sewage and drainage from such outside lots or lands upon such terms as may be agreed upon between such council and the owners or association of owners of such outside lots or lands. (102 O. L., 192.)"

The authority for your board to make such contract is found in the act of April 18, 1913, which reads:

> "Section 1. Any commission or board vested with authority to erect or manage a state institution, located outside of the corporate limits of a municipality and the council of such municipality may enter into a contract upon such terms and conditions as may be agreed upon, to connect the sewer system of such institution with that of such municipality. Such contract may include payment for the increased cost to such municipality occasioned by such connection and service rendered, provided that such contract shall be made for a period of not less than ten years, and is approved by the governor and the attorney general. (103 O. L., 658.)"

No criticism can be made of the act of 1911, and the power of the council to make the contract must be conceded. However, on March 6, 1845, the legislature passed an act to abolish the board of canal commissioners and revive the board of public works, the fifth section of which act provided:

> "That whenever, in the opinion of said board, it will be for the public interest to let by contract the keeping in repair, all or any portion of the public works, except the national road, said board may divide any portion of the same into suitable and convenient sections; and thereupon said board shall give due notice of the time and place of letting, for said repairs, with the plans and specifications for said repairs, and the manner of doing the same; and said board shall let the same by sections, to the lowest responsible bidders, for any term of years not exceeding five, upon condition that the bidder shall make, execute, and deliver to said board a bond, with security to be approved by the board, in any sum not less than double the amount of the contract price, payable to the state of Ohio, conditioned for the faithful performance of said contract, and upon such other terms and conditions as said board may determine. * * *"

The constitutionality of this act was assailed in State vs. Medbery et al., 7 O. S. 522, and the court held inter alia:

> "That no officers of the state can enter into any contract, except in cases specified in the constitution, whereby the general assembly will, two years after, be bound to make appropriations either for a particular object or a fixed amount—the power and the discretion, intact, to make appropriations in general devolving on each biennial general assembly, and for the period of two years.
> "The contracts of the board of public works, creating a present obligation to pay the defendants and others, for the period of five years, a certain amount, do not come within said constitutional exceptions, and are in contravention of the provisions of article 8, section 3 and article 2, section 2."

and the court in course of the opinion by Judge Swan says:

> "These contracts, then, so far as the inhibition of the constitution relating to debts is involved, stand precisely upon the same ground as any other contracts for expenditure, which the general assembly have authorized, but provided no revenue and made no appropriations to meet the amount specified to be paid by the state when it becomes due. It is a contingent debt ripening into an absolute one, without money being set apart to meet and pay it. The contracts, indeed, can stand nowhere else than among inhibited debts, inasmuch as they are, in our opinion, and for the reasons which we shall now state, in addition to those already given, inconsistent with the provisions of the constitution relating to expenditures and appropriations."

The opinion of Swan J. was concurred in by Brinkerhoff, Scott, and Sutliff, J. J., and Bartley, C. J., filed concurring opinion in which he stated:

> "I concur in the decision just announced, solely on the ground of a want of authority in the agents of the state to make such a contract as that set out in the agreed case submitted to us. I am wholly unable to reconcile the exercise of such authority by the board of public works with the provisions of the present constitution of the state."

The constitutional provisions considered in the Medbery case being still in force, the analogy between that case and the one we have is very close.

If the legislature, under the constitution, had no power to authorize the board of public works to make a contract for keeping public works in repair "for any term of years not exceeding five," it certainly has no power to authorize the building commission for the Ohio reformatory for women to make a contract for connection of a sewer system with that of a municipality for a "period not less than ten years" where such contract involves annual payments by the state during the period covered by the contract.

Such being my conclusion, it follows that article 4 of this contract, when it provides that this contract shall be continued in force until the first of January, 1935, is invalid, and my suggestion is that this article of the contract should be changed so as to read (in substance):

> "This contract shall continue and remain in force for the full term for which appropriations are now made for said Ohio reformatory for women, and for such further period or periods as may be authorized by legislative appropriations for that purpose."

This, of course, will necessitate an amendment to the village ordinance:

The question whether this amendment is subject to a referendum is exceedingly doubtful, but can be easily cared for by declaring the amendment to be an emergency measure.

The following is suggested as a guide to the framing of such section of said ordinance:

Section ..... The terms, conditions and provisions of the contract by which the village of Marysville shall take care of the sewage from the Ohio reformatory for women having been heretofore agreed upon, and the compliance with said agreement, necessitating a change in the plans, specifications and character of said system and materially affecting the time of the completion thereof, and this amendment being made solely for the purpose of making the ordinance passed ....., ..., 1913, conform to the decisions of the supreme court of Ohio, this amendment is declared to be an emergency measure affecting the health, peace and safety of the village of Marysville and therefore shall take effect upon passage and publication as provided by law.

Very truly yours,

TIMOTHY S. HOGAN,

Attorney General.

SUPERINTENDENT OF BANKS MAY COMBINE TWO OR MORE LIQUIDATIONS UNDER ONE HEAD.

Under the statutes, the superintendent of banks, is empowered, if he so desires, to establish a liquidation bureau in which to combine two or more liquidations under one head, when they reach a point where the services of special deputies and other help can be dispensed with.

COLUMBUS, OHIO, January 24, 1913.

HON. F. E. BAXTER, Superintendent of Banks, Columbus, Ohio.

DEAR SIR:—I am in receipt of your letter of January 23rd in which you make the following requests for my opinion:

> "I have been considering the advisability of establishing in this office a liquidation bureau in which to combine two or more liquidations under one head, as fast as they reach a point where the services of a special deputy and other help can be dispensed with. Please render to me an opinion as to whether or not this action would be consistent with the law. I might add that this proposed action is contemplated for the purpose of reducing the cost of liquidation to a minimum figure as well as to develop a corps of expert assistants in that feature of our work."

I take it from your letter that it is your plan to have all liquidations administered from your office after said liquidations have passed the active stage, that is, the stage when a special deputy is necessarily required to be at the situs of the corporation in process of liquidation. After this active stage is passed and it is unnecessary to have a special deputy or other assistants actually at the place where the business of the corporation was transacted, I can see no reason why the remaining business of the liquidation should not be transacted at your department in Columbus, and, if one liquidation is carried on here there is no reason why all liquidations in your charge should not be so carried on. It seems to me that such an arrangement would lessen the cost of liquidation, and also, by having the various liquidations in progress under one head, would add to the efficiency of the same.

I have carefully examined the laws governing your department and find no provision that is inconsistent with your carrying into effect the idea expressed in your letter.

Very truly yours,
TIMOTHY S. HOGAN,
Attorney General.

SAVINGS BANKS—MAY NOT MAKE DIRECT LOAN ON SECURITY OF A MORTGAGE UPON A LEASEHOLD ESTATE—MAY INDIRECTLY LOAN ON SUCH SECURITY.

Under paragraph (a), of section 9765, General Code, referring to paragraph (f) of section 9758, General Code, which concludes all nature of real estate securities upon which a savings bank may loan its funds, such bank is not empowered to invest its funds in a mortgage of a leasehold estate, for any term of years which does not contain a clause providing for the renewal thereof, forever.

Under paragraph (c), of section 9765, General Code, however, a corporation may invest its funds in promissory notes given to other individuals, firms or corporations, when such notes were secured by a mortgage on such leasehold estate, if the directors approve thereof, subject to the provisions of sections 9754 and 9755, General Code; the reason being that paragraph (f) of the section aforesaid, authorizes only real estate security, whilst paragraph (e) of the other section authorizes collateral security.

COLUMBUS, OHIO, December 19, 1912.

HON. F. E. BAXTER, Superintendent of Banks, Columbus, Ohio.

DEAR SIR:—In your letter of November 16, 1912, you asked for a clarification of the conclusion of my opinion rendered to you on January 19, 1912, stating that a certain bank had written you that it did not entirely understand my holding, and wished to know whether if a mortgage were executed on a leasehold estate (said leasehold not being permanent) securing notes a savings bank could purchase said notes. The conclusion of my opinion of January 19, 1912, is as follows:

> "My opinion, therefore, is that a savings bank cannot legally invest its funds in a mortgage or a leasehold estate, for any term of years, which does not contain a clause providing for the renewal thereof forever under paragraph 'f' of section 9758 of the General Code of Ohio.
> "This disposes of your third question, as such a loan, if made, cannot be regarded as a real estate loan.
> "Your second question, I take it, should be: 'Can a mortgage upon a leasehold estate be taken by a savings bank as security for a loan in any event?' I think that it can, under paragraph 'c' of section 9765; that is, such a mortgage if given to a third person, securing notes to such person, could be taken with said notes as collateral security for promissory notes of an individual, firm or corporation to the bank; but a savings bank, in my opinion, is not authorized to make a loan secured directly by a mortgage upon a leasehold estate which is not renewable forever."

I shall try to make my meaning a little clearer. Section 9765 of the General Code specifies the manner in which the funds of savings banks shall be invested, and is as follows:

> "A savings bank may invest the residue of its funds in, or loan money on, discount, buy, sell or assign promissory notes, drafts, bills of exchange and other evidences of debt and also invest its capital, surplus and deposits in, and buy and sell the following:

"(a) The securities mentioned in section ninety-seven hundred and fifty-eight, subject to the limitations and restrictions therein contained, except that savings banks may loan not more than seventy-five per cent. of the amount of the paid-in capital, surplus and deposits on notes secured by mortgage on real estate. But all loans made upon personal security shall be upon notes with two or more signers or one or more indorsers, payable and to be paid at a time not exceeding six months from the date thereof. In the aggregate, not exceeding thirty per cent. of the capital, surplus and deposits of a savings bank shall be so invested.

"(b) Stocks, which have paid dividends for five consecutive years next prior to the investment, bonds and promissory notes of corporations, when this is authorized by an affirmative vote of a majority of the board of directors or by the executive committee of such savings bank. No purchase or investment shall be made in the stock of any other corporation organized or doing business under the provisions of this chapter. The superintendent of banks may order any such securities which he deems undesirable to be sold within six months.

"(c) Promissory notes of individuals, firms or corporations, when secured by a sufficient pledge of collateral approved by the directors, subject to the provisions of sections ninety-seven hundred and fifty-four and ninety-seven hundred and fifty-five."

Under paragraph (a) of said section it will be noted that the first class of securities in which said funds may be invested are the securities mentioned in section 9758. This section 9758 is as follows:

"Subject to the provisions of the preceding section commercial banks may invest their capital, surplus and deposits in, or loan them upon:

"(a) Personal or collateral securities.

"(b) Bonds or other interest-bearing obligations of the United States, or those for which the faith of the United States is pledged to provide payment of the interest and principal, including bonds of the District of Columbia; also in bonds or other interest-bearing obligations of any foreign government.

"(c) Bonds of interest-bearing obligations of this or any other state of the United States.

"(d) The legally issued bonds or interest-bearing obligations of any city, village, county, township, school district or other district or political subdivision of this or any other state or territory of the United States and of Canada.

"(e) Mortgage bonds or collateral trust bonds of any regularly incorporated company, which has paid for at least four years, dividends at the rate of at least four per cent., on their capital stock. Such loan shall not exceed eighty per cent. of the market or actual value of such bonds, the purchase of which first has been authorized by the directors. All such securities having a fixed maturity shall be charged and entered upon the books of the bank at their cost to the bank, or at par, when a premium is paid, and the superintendent of banks shall have the power to require any security to be charged down to such sum as in his judgment represents its value. The superintendent of banks may order that any such securities which he deems undesirable be sold within six months.

"(f) Notes secured by mortgage on real estate, where the amount loaned thereon inclusive of prior incumbrances does not exceed forty per cent. of the value of the real estate if unimproved, and if improved sixty per cent. of its value, including improvements, which shall be kept adequately insured. Not more than fifty per cent. of the amount of the paid-in capital, surplus and deposits of such bank at any time shall be invested in such real estate securities."

Therefore, the only authority in law for a savings bank to invest its funds in notes secured by mortgage on real estate is paragraph (f) of section 9758. It has been held that leasehold estates, except permanent leasehold estates, are not real estate, and therefore a savings bank cannot directly invest its funds in any leasehold estate, except those that are permanent.

But I meant by the conclusion of my opinion to refer especially to paragraph (c) of section 9765, and I again quote this section, which is as follows:

"(c) Promissory notes of individuals, firms or corporations, when secured by a sufficient pledge of collateral approved by the directors, subject to the provisions of sections ninety-seven hundred and fifty-four and ninety-seven hundred and fifty-five."

And it seems to me that if a note is given by an individual or a corporation to a bank, and in order to secure said note said individual or corporation deposits as collateral therefor a note or notes given to him or it secured by a mortgage upon a leasehold estate, whether permanent or not, the transaction would fall under said paragraph (c). In other words, a bank cannot loan its money directly upon said leasehold estates, but under paragraph (c) of section 9765, it can indirectly do so.

Answering the question referred to in your communication, the bank cannot buy the notes which are secured by the mortgage on a leasehold estate, but it can accept such notes as collateral.

Very truly yours,
TIMOTHY S. HOGAN,
Attorney General.

SUPERINTENDENT OF BANKS HAS NO AUTHORITY TO MAINTAIN A BRANCH OFFICE IN CLEVELAND.

COLUMBUS, OHIO, March 27, 1913.

HON. EMERY LATTANNER, Deputy Superintendent of Banks, Columbus, Ohio.

DEAR SIR:—I am in receipt of your communication of March 14th, in which you make the following request for my opinion:

"Please render to this office an opinion as to whether or not it has any authority under the law to maintain a branch office in Cleveland, and to pay the salary of a stenographer for services rendered there?"

Section 719 of the General Code provides as follows:

> "The superintendent of banks shall be furnished by the state suitable rooms at the seat of government for conducting the business of his office."

I find no other section which is supplementary to this provision, and therefore in the absence of any statutory authority for you to maintain offices elsewhere than at the seat of government, my opinion is that you have no authority to maintain a branch office in Cleveland.

Very truly yours,
TIMOTHY S. HOGAN,
Attorney General.

BANKS AND BANKING—BOARD OF DIRECTORS—FILLING OF VACANCY—NUMBER OF DIRECTORS.

Under section 9733, General Code, the board of directors may fill a vacancy in the board, but under such section it is not mandatory to make the appointment at once.

When the stockholders provide at their meeting for a board of directors, consisting of twelve members, under section 9727, General Code, it is necessary at each subsequent stockholders' meeting to elect twelve directors until the stockholders provide for a different number.

COLUMBUS, OHIO, April 26, 1913.

HON. EMERY LATTANNER, Deputy Superintendent of Banks, Columbus, Ohio.

DEAR SIR:—On January 29, 1913, you asked for my opinion upon the following request received from a representative of one of the incorporated banks of Ohio:

> "The constitution of our bank provides for a flexible board of directors, the number being from 7 to 15 inclusive, and says a vacancy in the board caused by death, resignation or otherwise, may be filled for the unexpired term by appointment by a vote of a majority of the board. At our first stockholders' meeting a motion was made to elect twelve directors to direct the affairs of our bank, which number has been elected every year since. Are we required at every stockholders' meeting to pass a resolution to elect twelve men or does the first resolution make it compulsory to elect that many, until another resolution is passed to change the number? Since my last letter to you we have a vacancy in our board, so that with our constitution providing for a flexible board, and section 9733 says a vacancy in the board may be filled, can we legally do business the rest of this year with 11 men (12 men elected were elected at our last stockholders' meeting) or must the vacancy be filled?"

Ohio banking corporations are governed by the general corporation laws of Ohio except where special provisions are made by the banking act.

Section 9733, General Code, is as follows:

"Any vacancy in the board of directors may be filled by the board for the unexpired term."

Under this section it is not mandatory that a vacancy in the board of directors be filled at once.

Section 9727 of the General Code provides for the number of the board of directors as follows:

"The corporate powers, business and property of corporations formed under this chapter, shall be exercised, conducted and controlled by the board of directors, which shall meet at least once each month. Such board shall consist of not less than five nor more than thirty directors, to be chosen by the stockholders, and hold office for one year and until their successors are elected and qualified."

When the stockholders, in the manner provided by law, provide for a board of directors to consist of twelve persons, such action would be final and valid, and it would be necessary at each subsequent stockholders' meeting to elect twelve directors, until the stockholders provide for a different number.

Yours very truly,
TIMOTHY S. HOGAN,
Attorney General.

OFFICES COMPATIBLE—CASHIER AND TREASURER OF BANK.

Under the laws of Ohio a cashier is not prohibited from acting as treasurer of a bank.

COLUMBUS, OHIO, April 26, 1913.

HON. EMERY LATTANNER, Deputy Superintendent of Banks, Columbus, Ohio.

DEAR SIR:—On March 27th you sent me a communication from a representative of a certain bank asking whether the bank could make its cashier also treasurer of the bank, the cashier being a stockholder but not a director, and you ask for my opinion as to whether this action could be taken.

The laws of Ohio governing incorporated banks provide that all directors and executive officers of a banking corporation must be stockholders. The laws also provide that the president must be chosen from the directors, but there is no provision that the treasurer must also be a director, and I know of nothing that would prevent the election or appointment of any stockholder of the corporation as treasurer.

Yours very truly,
TIMOTHY S. HOGAN,
Attorney General.

P. S. I return herewith letter which you forwarded to this department.

PARTNERSHIP RECEIVING DEPOSITS OF MONEYS AND PAYING INTEREST THEREON NOT VIOLATING ANY LAW.

COLUMBUS, OHIO, April 30, 1913.

HON. EMERY LATTANNER, Deputy Superintendent of Banks, Columbus, Ohio.

DEAR SIR:—On February 7, 1913, your predecessor made the following statement of facts to me, upon which my opinion was requested:

> "A partnership, existing in the city of Cleveland, and engaged in a purely mercantile business, received from its employes deposits of money, on which it pays the employes, at the rate of six per cent. per annum, allowing them to withdraw the funds at any time. The partnership does not invest the deposits, but banks them with its own funds, the loss in interest being charged to operating expenses. The partnership is absolutely solvent, and no question has ever arisen between the partnership and its employes, who regard the arrangement as a distinct benefit to them, and earnestly desire its continuance."

While this partnership might be said to exercise one of the functions of banking, that is the receiving of deposits, still, while the receipts of deposits was originally the sole feature of the banking business, today it only constitutes one branch of the same; and the firm to which you refer, as I take it, does not hold itself out as receiving deposits generally, but only receives those made by its employes. At the present time there is nothing in our laws which would prevent this being done.

Yours very truly,
TIMOTHY S. HOGAN,
Attorney General.

BANK NOT PROHIBITED FROM DEPOSITING MORTGAGES AND OTHER SECURITIES TO INDEMNIFY A SURETY GOING ON ITS BOND.

COLUMBUS, OHIO, April 30, 1913.

HON. EMERY LATTANNER, Deputy Superintendent of Banks, Columbus, Ohio.

DEAR SIR:—I am in receipt of your favor of April 18th enclosing a communication received by you from a certain banking company, which communication is as follows:

> "We put in a bid for state funds and was awarded twenty thousand dollars. We promised to give them a bond with the Maryland Casualty Company. Now as we are just a new bank they have asked us to put up some of our mortgages with them as collateral. We are anxious to get this money and want your advice. Would this be all right? Please reply as soon as possible?"

I am not clear, in reading the letter of this bank, whether this bank wishes to put up their mortgages with the casualty company or with the treasurer of state, but I presume, taking the letter as a whole, that they refer to a deposit required by the casualty company to secure the casualty company in going on their bond to the state.

I know of nothing that would prevent this transaction as the bank would have the right to use its securities in any legitimate manner to promote its business so long as it did not violate any of the banking regulations, and there is no regulation prohibiting a bank from depositing mortgages and other securities in order to indemnify a surety in going on its bond.

I return you herewith letter from the bank referred to.

Yours very truly,
TIMOTHY S. HOGAN,
Attorney General.

CHANGE OF BANK NAME DOES NOT NECESSITATE CHANGE OF NAME OF PAYEE ON NOTES TAKEN BY BANK PRIOR TO CHANGE.

Under section 8719, General Code, empowering corporations generally to make a change of name, since there are no special conflicting bank regulations, a bank may change its name in accordance with section 9714, General Code. Such change of name does not effect the identity of the bank and therefore, the name of the payee on notes taken by the bank prior to such change of name need not be altered.

COLUMBUS, OHIO, April 26, 1913.

HON. EMERY LATTANNER, Deputy Superintendent of Banks, Columbus, Ohio.

DEAR SIR:—On March 7, 1913, your department made the following request for my opinion:

> "In the event a state bank of Ohio changes its name by amendment to its charter, is it necessary that any action be taken looking to the change of name of payee on the notes taken by the bank in its own name prior to the authorized change."

Section 9714 of the General Code provides that the provisions of the General Code applicable to other corporations shall apply to banking corporations except where special provisions are made by the banking act.

Section 8719 of the General Code provides that a corporation organized under the general laws may amend its articles of incorporation so as to change its corporate name, and, therefore, banks would have this power.

If the name of the bank is so changed it would not be necessary for any action to be taken changing the name of the payee on notes taken by the bank prior to the change of name, for the change would be simply in the name of the corporation, and the corporate entity would be at all times the same. In all cases of renewals, however, the renewals, of course, should be taken in the new name of the bank.

Yours very truly,
TIMOTHY S. HOGAN,
Attorney General.

RESTRICTIONS UPON BANK IN PURCHASING IT'S OWN STOCK.

Ordinarily where through a charter or a statute, or a constitutional provision the imposition of double liability on stockholders does not exist, a corporation may purchase its own stock.

Under section 9761, General Code, however, a commercial bank, savings bank, safe deposit company or trust company may not loan money upon nor purchase its own stock, except where such purchase is absolutely necessary to prevent loss upon a debt previously contracted in good faith, in which case the stock must be sold within six months from the time of its purchase.

COLUMBUS, OHIO, April 28, 1913.

HON. EMERY LATTANNER, Deputy Superintendent of Banks, Columbus, Ohio.

DEAR SIR:—On April 11th you sent to me a communication received by you from a certain bank in Ohio, asking for an opinion upon two questions. The first as to the competency for the attorney for a bank to act as notary public in matters in which the bank was interested. This inquiry I have answered in another opinion to you.

The second inquiry is as follows:

> "I would ask if our bank would be allowed to purchase any of our own bank stock, in the event that one of our stockholders desired to sell his stock, and resell the stock to another party whom we felt would give us a part of his banking business, thus enabling us to make a few dollars on the transfer of the stock and perhaps increase our banking business by gaining a new depositor."

In the case of Siders vs. Gem City Concrete Co., 13 circuit court, n. s., 481, it was held that where a corporation was not prohibited by its charter or by a statute or constitutional prohibition, it may purchase its own stock, and that there is no statute or constitutional provision in Ohio preventing such purchase. This decision was rendered in 1910, and the question involved was that of the right of a corporation, other than a banking corporation, to purchase its own stock.

As above stated, the court held it had such right in the absence of constitutional or statutory prohibition. Though attention is called to the fact that the court's decision is based largely on the ground that double liability of stockholders did not exist in this state at the time this decision was rendered, and the decision seems to indicate clearly that if double liability existed, then that it would be compelled to hold that such right did not exist.

By the constitutional amendment adopted September 5, 1912, which became effective January 1, 1913, stockholders in banking corporations are now subject to double liability, and the holding by analogy, from the language of the circuit court in the above case, would be that since the effective date of such constitutional amendment banking corporations have not the power to purchase their own stock. There is, however, a statute upon this subject which relates to commercial banks, savings banks and safe deposit and trust companies. This statute is as follows:

> "Section 9761. No commercial bank, savings bank, safe deposit company or trust company shall loan money on the security or pledge of the shares of its capital stock; nor be the purchaser or holder of any such shares, unless such security or purchase be necessary to prevent loss upon a debt previously contracted in good faith. Stock so acquired, shall within six months from the time of its purchase, be sold or disposed of at public sale on thirty days' notice from the superintendent of banks, and in default thereof the superintendent of banks may forthwith take possession of the property and business of such corporation until its affairs be finally liquidated, as herein provided."

Upon the authority of this section my holding is that such banks cannot purchase their own stock, unless such purchase is absolutely necessary to prevent loss upon a debt previously contracted in good faith, and that stock so acquired must be sold within six months from the time of its purchase; and that otherwise than as provided by this statute, a purchase by a bank of its own stock is illegal.

Yours very truly,
TIMOTHY S. HOGAN,
Attorney General.

P. S. I herewith return letter addressed to you.

INCORPORATED BANK NOT ORGANIZED AS A TRUST COMPANY MAY NOT ACT IN CAPACITY OF A TRUSTEE FOR HOLDERS OF BONDS ISSUED BY INDIVIDUALS.

COLUMBUS, OHIO, May 16, 1913.

HON. EMERY LATTANNER, Deputy Superintendent of Banks, Columbus, Ohio.

DEAR SIR:—On March 6, 1913, your department asked my opinion upon the following question submitted to you by one of the incorporated banks of this state:

"A state bank has received a proposition as follows: An individual, owner of improved real estate worth from $70,000 to $80,000, wishes to issue bonds to the amount of $25,000 or $30,000 to be secured by a mortgage on his said real estate, given to this bank in trust for the bond holders. The bonds to be negotiable, and to be given in place of promissory notes. The bank is not organized as a trust company. And the query is whether, under the provisions of sections 9765 and 9758, it may act in this capacity as a trustee for the bond holders, the bonds to be cancelled as they are paid and the mortgage released on the payment of all the so-called bonds. The bonds being, in fact, nothing more than so many promissory notes."

I find no authority in law for a savings bank or commercial bank to act as trustee in the manner indicated in the above statement; and as the bank referred to is not a trust company it must, therefore, be held that it cannot have the power to act in this capacity.

Yours very truly,
TIMOTHY S. HOGAN,
Attorney General.

RULE OF CORPORATION REQUIRES PROXIES TO BE IN HANDS OF SECRETARY ONE DAY BEFORE MEETING DAY, VALID.

It is clearly within the power of a corporation in its code of regulations to describe the manner of voting by proxy, so long as the statutory right of the stockholder to vote is not curtailed or limited, and within this rule the regulation requiring a proxy to be in the hands of the secretary at least one day before the date set for the annual meeting, is not invalid.

COLUMBUS, OHIO, May 17, 1913.

HON. EMERY LATTANNER, Deputy Superintendent of Banks, Columbus, Ohio.

DEAR SIR:—On January 14, 1913, your department requested my opinion upon the following question:

> "At a meeting of the stockholders of a certain bank one of the stockholders was present in person, and also represented a number of other stockholders, by proxies duly authorized in writing. The proxies held by this stockholder were refused recognition on the ground that the notice of the meeting of the stockholders of the company contained also a notice that all proxies must be in the hands of the secretary at least one day before the date set for the annual meeting.
> "Was the action in refusing recognition of these proxies on this ground proper?"

Section 9730, General Code, is as follows:

> "In elections of directors, and in deciding questions at meetings of stockholders, each stockholder shall be entitled to one vote for each share of stock held by him. Any stockholder also may vote by proxy duly authorized in writing."

Thompson on corporations, section 878, under the head of "right to vote by proxy—regulation by by-laws" says:

> "It is very clearly within the power of the corporation to regulate by a by-law the method of voting by proxy. But the corporation may not in any manner curtail or limit any statutory right of the stockholder. The corporation may prescribe the manner in which the proxy shall be executed; it may require acknowledgment, or that it shall be filed with a particular officer, or within a stated time preceding the election."

This citation from Thompson on corporations seems to dispose of the matter. The regulation is not at all one curtailing or limiting the statutory right of the stockholder. The statute seems to go only to the question of the number of votes to which a stockholder is entitled for each share of stock held by him and authorizing the voting by proxy. It does not pretend to restrain a corporation from fixing reasonable regulations as to how the voting shall be done. A reasonable regulation like this is necessary to prevent mistake or fraud and to give those interested an opportunity to inspect the proxies to the end that they may be satisfied of their genuineness.

In your inquiry you state that the proxies held by the stockholder in question were refused recognition on the ground that the notice of the meeting of the stockholders of the company contained also a notice that all proxies must be in the hands of the secretary at least one day before the date set for the annual meeting. It does not appear in your inquiry whether or not there was a provision to that effect in the code of regulations of the corporation. It would be lawful, as above stated, for the corporation to regulate by a provision in its code of regulations the method of voting by proxy and if there was a provision in the code of regulations of the corporation that all proxies must be in the hands of the secretary at least one day before the date set for the annual meeting such provision would be binding upon the stockholders, but if there was not such a regulation the secretary had no power to make such a provision in issuing the notices of the meeting. Whether or not there was such a valid provision in the code of regulations is a matter of fact which should be determined in order to ascertain whether the action in refusing recognition of proxies on the ground that they must be in the hands of the secretary at least one day before the date set for the annual meeting was proper.

Very truly yours,
TIMOTHY S. HOGAN,
Attorney General.

P. S. I herewith return letter which you forwarded to this office.

REPORTS OF BANK—LIABILITY OF OFFICIALS FOR CHARGING OVERDRAFT AS A LOAN—DISTINCTION BETWEEN FALSE ITEM AND REPORT TO INSPECTOR ON FALSE ITEM IN PUBLICATION.

An officer in the bank, who in making a report, carries an overdraft on an individual account into the column on loans, is guilty of making a false entry, under section 13183, General Code, and is subject to the penalty therein prescribed.

Should the report be made properly, but the publication of the report contain this falsity, the person responsible for such report would be liable for the penalty provided, under section 741, General Code, for failing to furnish to the superintendents of banks a copy of the publication as provided by section 739, General Code.

COLUMBUS, OHIO, May 16, 1913.

HON. EMERY LATTANNER, Deputy Superintendent of Banks, Columbus, Ohio.

DEAR SIR:—On April 28th you made the following request for my opinion:

> "Section 737, 738, 739 and 741 provide for the manner of publication of the reports of banks as called for on certain dates. A certain bank having a large overdraft of one party, as shown by their own books, in making up the list for the printer, which is supposed to be an exact copy of their statement and their own books, carried this overdraft into the loan column in order, presumably, to show a small overdraft. What is our remedy in this instance, aside from compelling them to publish their report again?"

The sections to which you refer are as follows:

"Section 737. Not less than four times during each calendar year each banking company, savings bank, savings and trust company, safe deposit and trust company, society for savings, or savings society, chartered or incorporated under any law of this state, and every person or co-partnership doing a banking business, shall make a report to the superintendent of banks. Such report shall be made at such times as required by the superintendent on forms prescribed and furnished by him, and, so far as possible, they shall be made on the same day on which reports are required from national banking associations by the comptroller of the currency.

"Section 738. Such report shall be verified by the oath or affirmation of the president, vice-president, cashier, secretary or treasurer thereof, and shall exhibit in detail, and under appropriate heads, a true statement of the resources, assets and liabilities of such banking company, savings bank, society or association, at the close of business of any past day by him specified, which day shall be the same for all corporations required to make such reports.

"Section 739. Such reports shall be transmitted to the superintendent within ten days after the receipt of the request, therefor from him, and shall be published in a newspaper in the city, town or county where the company is located, and, if there is none, then in a newspaper of general circulation in an adjoining county. A copy of such publication shall be furnished to the superintendent of banks.

"Section 741. Every company, corporation, society or association failing to make and transmit to the superintendent of banks any of the reports required by law shall forthwith be notified by the superintendent, and, if such failure continues for ten days after receipt of such notice, such delinquent company, society or association shall be subject to a penalty of one hundred dollars for each day after the time required for making such report. In case of delay or refusal to pay the penalty herein imposed for failure to make and transmit a report, the superintendent shall maintain an action against the delinquent company, society or association, for the recovery of such penalty, and all sums collected by such action or paid as such penalty shall be paid into the state treasury to the credit of the banking fund."

I take it that the report transmitted to you was a correct report and showed the overdraft of which you speak, if not, then the officer who made the report would be guilty of making a false entry in a report or statement of such bank under section 13183 of the General Code which is as follows:

"Whoever, being an officer, employe, agent or director of a corporation incorporated and doing business as a commercial bank, savings bank, savings society, society for savings, savings and loan association, savings and trust company, safe deposit or trust company or other corporation or association, except building and loan association, having power to receive and receiving money on deposit, wilfully and fraudulently issues or puts forth a certificate of deposit, draws an order or bill of exchange, makes an acceptance, assigns a note, bond, draft, bill of exchange, mortgage, judgment or decree or makes a false entry in a book, report or statement of such corporation, shall be fined not more than two thousand dollars or imprisoned in the penitentiary not more than thirty years, or both."

If the report sent you was correct, but the report published in the newspaper was not identical with the report sent to you, then said bank has failed to comply with section 739 which provides that the report transmitted to you is the report which shall be published, and the publication required by law has not been made. In this case section 741 would apply, and if upon notice the bank failed to publish the lawful report, then it would be liable to the penalty provided in said section.

Yours very truly,
TIMOTHY S. HOGAN,
Attorney General.

TRAVELING EXPENSES OF SUPERINTENDENTS OF BANKS AND DEPUTIES MAY NOT BE ALLOWED WHILST ENGAGED IN WORK IN HOME CITY.

COLUMBUS, OHIO, May 16, 1913.

HON. EMERY LATTANNER, Deputy Superintendent of Banks, Columbus, Ohio.

DEAR SIR:—On April 18, 1913, you made the following request for my opinion:

> "The matter of allowing lunch and car fare for examiners in this department who reside in Cincinnati and Cleveland and who examine the banks in these cities, is one of dispute. The examiners claim that they should be permitted lunch and car fare while they are working in their own city, as in actual cases now in existence they would lose considerable time if they were to go home, whereas a lunch down town would materially advance their work."

Section 714 of the General Code is as follows:

> "The actual and necessary traveling expenses of the superintendent of banks and of the deputies, assistants, clerks and examiners incurred in the discharge of their official duty shall be paid monthly by the treasurer of state upon the warrant of the auditor of state. Vouchers therefor shall be fully itemized, approved by the superintendent and countersigned by the auditor of state."

It has been the uniform holding of this department that state officers and employes are not entitled to what are ordinarily classed as traveling expenses in the cities where they reside. There is no more reason for allowing examiners the expense of lunches and car fare while at work in the cities where they reside than there would be for allowing state officers in Columbus their expenses of car fare and that of lunch which the majority of them incur daily in performing the necessary duties of their respective offices.

For a more extended opinion on this question I refer you to my opinion to the inspector of building and loan associations, found in volume 1, report of attorney general for the year 1911, at page —.

Yours very truly,
TIMOTHY S. HOGAN,
Attorney General.

POWER OF SAVINGS AND COMMERCIAL BANKS TO INVEST OR LOAN FUNDS ON MORTGAGE AND BONDS OF CORPORATION.

The only limitation upon the power of savings banks to loan money on bonds of private corporation, is that contained in section 9765, General Code, which requires the vote of a majority of the board of directors or the executive committee of the bank, and the power therein contained of the superintendent of banks to order such security which he deems undesirable to be sold within six months.

Bonds issued by a building company which are secured by the real estate of the company are within this rule.

Such bonds with reference to a commercial bank, however, under the terms of sections 9756 and 9758, General Code, being a form of real estate security, shall not exceed forty per cent. of the value of the real estate if unimproved, and if improved sixty per cent. of its value; and loans on the same may not be made except upon two-thirds vote by resolution of the board of directors and may not exceed fifty per cent. of the capital, surplus and deposits of such corporation; except that when a bank combines the business of commercial and savings banks, it may loan up to sixty per cent. of its capital stock.

COLUMBUS, OHIO, May 16, 1913.

HON. EMERY LATTANNER, Deputy Superintendent of Banks, Columbus, Ohio.

DEAR SIR:—On May 15, 1913, you made the following request for my opinion;

"Referring to section 9765 with reference to investments, we are confronted with this situation in the northern part of the state around Cleveland, viz.:

"A building company issues bonds on their building, which are virtually nothing more than mortgages but are called bonds and issued in small amounts, but in a large aggregate. They are purchased by the banks. Now if they are bonds, we contend that they come under paragraph b and hence ought to have been in existence at least five years. If they are mortgages, then they are in excess of the sixty per cent. limit of the value of the property. In other words, these companies are simply organized for the purpose of floating the bonds. The value of the mortgage, or bond, whichever you may call it, is in excess, so my examiners say, of sixty per cent. of the value of the property, and hence could not be classed as a mortgage; on the other hand if they are classed as a bond they do not fulfill the five year requirement."

Section 9765 of the General Code is as follows:

"A savings bank may invest the residue of its funds in, or loan money on, discount, buy sell or assign promissory notes, drafts, bills of exchange and other evidences of debt and also invest its capital, surplus and deposits in, and buy and sell the following:

"a. The securities mentioned in section ninety-seven hundred and fifty-eight, subject to the limitations and restrictions therein contained, except that savings banks may loan not more than seventy-five per cent. of the amount of the paid-in capital, surplus and deposits on notes secured by mortgage on real estate. But all loans made upon personal security shall be upon notes with two or more signers or one or more indorsers, payable and to be paid at a time not exceeding six months from the date thereof. In the aggregate, not exceeding thirty per cent. of the capital, surplus and deposits of a savings bank shall be so invested.

"b. Stocks, which have paid dividends for five consecutive years next prior to the investment, bonds, and promissory notes of corporations, when this is authorized by an affirmative vote of a majority of the board of directors or by the executive committee of such savings bank. No purchase or investment shall be made in the stock of any other corporation organized or doing business under the provisions of this chapter. The superintendent of banks may order any such securities which he deems undesirable to be sold within six months.

"c. Promissory notes of individuals, firms or corporations, when secured by a sufficient pledge of collateral approved by the directors, subject to the provisions of sections ninety-seven hundred and fifty-four and ninety-seven hundred and fifty-five."

Under paragraph "b" of said section loans on stocks must be on stocks which have paid dividends for five consecutive years next preceding the investment, but this qualification does not apply to bonds and promissory notes of corporations upon which savings banks are also authorized to loan money. The only restriction as to loans on bonds and promissory notes of corporations is that such loans must be authorized by an affirmative vote of a majority of the board of directors or by the executive committee of a savings bank; and further that you, as superintendent of banks, may order any such securities which you consider undesirable to be sold within six months. This section as to bonds and promissory notes is very indefinite, and though there is every reason for contending that it does not apply to bonds of a corporation secured by mortgage on real estate, which is nothing more nor less than a loan upon real estate, still this is not expressed by the section, and I have been compelled to hold that the only limitation upon investments by savings banks under paragraph "b" of section 9765 of bonds and promissory notes of corporations are those embraced in this paragraph, viz., the authorization by the board of directors or executive committee, and the power of the superintendent of banks to order such securities to be sold within six months.

In the case of commercial banks the matter is different. Section 9756 of the General Code is as follows:

"Loans by a commercial bank upon mortgage or other forms of real estate security, shall not be made until after the adoption of a general resolution by a two-thirds vote of the board of directors, stating to what extent its officers may loan on real estate. The aggregate amount of such loans shall not exceed fifty per cent. of the capital, surplus and deposits of such corporation; except that, if a bank combines the business of a commercial and savings bank, it may lend up to sixty per cent. of its capital stock, surplus and deposits upon real estate security, after the adoption of a general resolution authorizing it by a two-thirds vote of the board of directors. Such loans shall be upon real estate, situated in this state, or in states immediately adjacent thereto, and inclusive of prior incumbrances shall not exceed forty per cent. of the value of such real estate, if unimproved, and if it is improved, sixty per cent. of its value. The improvements shall be kept adequately insured."

The language in this section is clear, "loans by a commercial bank upon mortgage or other forms of real estate security undoubtedly covers bonds secured by a mortgage on real estate, and would be governed by sections 9756 and 9758, General Code.

Yours very truly,
TIMOTHY S. HOGAN,
Attorney General.

ATTORNEY WHO IS OFFICER OF BANK MAY NOT ADMINISTER OATH OF OFFICE TO BOARD OF DIRECTORS.

Under section 181, General Code, an attorney who is held out as an officer of a bank may not act in the capacity of notary public in any matter in which such bank is interested.

COLUMBUS, OHIO, May 19, 1913.

HON. EMERY LATTANNER, Deputy Superintendent of Banks, Columbus, Ohio.

DEAR SIR:—On February 14, 1913, your department made the following request for an opinion:

> "Could our attorney, who is a notary public and one of our stockholders, administer the oath of office to our board of directors?"

Section 9732 of the General Code provides for the oath to be taken by the directors of a bank and is as follows:

> "Every director shall take and subscribe an oath that he will diligently and honestly perform his duties in such office, not knowingly violate, or permit to be violated, any provisions of this chapter, and that he is the owner in good faith of the number of shares of stock of the company required to qualify him for such office, standing in his own name, on its books."

Section 181 of the General Code specifies who are not competent to act as notaries in certain matters, and is as follows:

> "No banker, broker, cashier, director, teller, clerk of a bank, banker or broker, or other person holding an official relation to a bank, banker or broker, shall be competent to act as a notary public in any matter in which such bank, banker or broker is interested."

Section 126 of the General Code specifies the powers of notaries public, and is as follows:

> "A notary public shall have power, within the county or counties for which he is appointed, to administer oaths required or authorized by law, to take and certify depositions to take and certify to acknowledgments of deeds, mortgages, liens, powers of attorney and other instruments of writing, and to receive, make and record notarial protests. In taking depositions he shall have the power which is by law vested in justices of the peace to compel the attendance of witnesses and punish them for refusing to testify. Sheriffs and constables are required to serve and return all processes issued by notaries in the taking of depositions. If the postoffice which is recorded in the governor's office as the address of a notary public is in a city or village, situated in two or more counties, such notary public may receive, make and record notarial protests within the established limits of such city or village."

I think it is clear from section 121, General Code, that a stockholder of a bank is not ineligible to act as notary public. If this had been intended the word "stockholder" would have been included in the catalogue of those who are ineligible and it has been held in the case of Read, Assignee vs. The Toledo Loan Co., 68 O. S., 280, that a stockholder in a corporation may, when acting in good faith, act as notary public in taking the acknowledgment of a mortgage to the corporation, but so far as I know, no judicial interpretation has been made of the provision "or other person holding an official relation to a bank, banker or broker." I think this provision, as such wide powers are given notaries public generally, in the matter of taking acknowledgments, should be strictly construed on account of the evident intention of the legislature to declare that no one connected with the active management or business of a bank should act as a notary in matters in which the bank is interested.

My opinion, therefore, is that when the attorney for a bank is regularly employed and designated as such by the directors of the bank, and is included in the list of officers of the bank, then that such attorney is not competent to act as a notary public in any matter in which such bank is interested, no matter whether the attorney is a stockholder of the bank or not; but I do not consider that this inhibition would apply to an attorney for a bank who is not regularly employed and designated as such by the directors nor held out as an officer of the bank. That is, many banks employ the same attorney in all matters where the employment of an attorney is necessary, but this attorney is not included in the list of officers of the bank, and is not chosen or elected as attorney by the directors, but it is understood or agreed that he is to represent the bank whenever the necessity arises. In such a case I do not think the inhibition would apply. The distinction is rather hard to draw, but I think the safe course to follow would be that when the attorney for the bank is included in the list of its officers, and advertised publicly as the attorney for the bank then such attorney should not act as notary in any matter in which the bank which he represents is interested.

Yours very truly,
TIMOTHY S. HOGAN,
Attorney General.

APPRECIATED VALUE OF BANK REAL ESTATE MAY BE ADDED.

When the value of real estate owned by a bank increases, such increase may be shown in the book value of the bank's property.

COLUMBUS, OHIO, May 16, 1913.

HON. EMERY LATTANNER, Deputy Superintendent of Banks, Columbus, Ohio.

DEAR SIR:—On April 29, 1913, you made the following request for my opinion:

"Is there anything in the statutes that would prevent a bank, operating under the state laws of Ohio, from adding to the value of its real estate by reason of an apparent appreciation, when it can be clearly shown that the earning capacity, as a renting proposition, would be such as to justify the carrying of the property at the increased valuation?"

There is nothing in the General Code in the provisions relating to banks and banking which govern the manner in which real estate belonging to a banking corporation shall be carried on its books. In the absence of any express requirement real estate owned by the bank should be carried in the first instance at its actual cost. In case the value of the real estate increases, then I know of nothing to prevent a conservative increase in the book value of the property. In other words, it is not only legitimate but proper to show the actual fact in regard to the value of the assets of a corporation at all times.

Yours very truly,
TIMOTHY S. HOGAN,
Attorney General.

BANKS MAY NOT ESTABLISH BRANCH OFFICES WITHIN OR OUTSIDE OF CITY OF PLACE OF BUSINESS.

Inasmuch as under section 9703, General Code, articles of incorporation of a banking company must state the place where its business is to be transacted, designating the particular city, village or township, and also inasmuch as under section 2724, General Code, the superintendent of banks in his examination is required to ascertain whether the bank is conducting its business at the place designated in its articles of incorporation, banking companies may not be deemed under the present state of the statutes to be empowered to establish branch banks.

COLUMBUS, OHIO, May 13, 1913.

HON. EMERY LATTANNER, Deputy Superintendent of Banks, Columbus, Ohio.

DEAR SIR:—On April 18, 1913, you made the following request for my opinion thereon:

"Please render this office an opinion as to whether or not there is any authority of law which would enable any of our state banks to establish branch offices either within or outside the corporate limits of the city or village (or town) named in the bank's charter as its principal place of business."

Section 2 of the Thomas act, 99 O. L. 269, provides for the form of articles of incorporation to be subscribed and acknowledged by persons desiring to form an incorporated banking company, and provides that such articles must contain, among other things, the following statement:

"b. The city, village, or township where its principal office is to be located, or where its principal business is to be transacted."

By an act of the general assembly found in 102 O. L., 171 this section was amended so that said paragraph now reads, (see section 9703, General Code):

> "b. The place where its business is to be transacted, designating the particular city, village or township."

This amendment must be regarded as significant for the reason that it leaves out the word "principal," which might, under the former section, have given rise to an inference that branch places of business might be authorized in other localities than where the principal office was to be located.

Section 724 of the General Code, which provides for examinations by the superintendent of banks of banking corporations, among other requirements, contains the following:

> "He shall also ascertain if any such corporation, company, society or association is conducting its business in the manner prescribed by law and at the place designated in its articles of incorporation."

The provisions of law governing banking corporations are to be strictly construed. The business of banking corporations is different in almost every respect from the business of other corporations, and the laws and rules applicable to corporations generally only apply to banks when there is no provision whatever in the banking laws on the subject, and the general provision is applicable. There is nothing in our laws, at the present time which gives authority for the establishment of branch banks. The only authority, if any ever existed, was by way of an inference which might possibly have been drawn from old paragraph "b" of section 2 of the Thomas act above quoted, but this inference is certainly annihilated by the amendment which I have quoted above.

It also seems to me that this amendment to paragraph "b" of section 9703 certainly implies that only one place of business is contemplated. The whole banking act treats of banks as separate and distinct entities. Nowhere is any authority given for the establishment of branch banks at any place, and none of the sections relating to the examination, regulation and supervision of banks refer expressly or by implication to branch banks. In fact to make the examination, supervision and regulation effective it is necessary that all the data relating to the business of a bank be at one place.

On account of the amendment to paragraph "b" of section 9703, and the reasons above stated I am constrained to hold that branch banks may not be established either within or without the corporate limits of the city, village or township where the bank is located.

I may add that my predecessors, Hon. U. G. Denman, came to the same conclusion upon consideration of the laws as they stood prior to the last amendment. His opinion will be found in the report of the attorney general for the year 1910-1911 at page 565, and I consider it sound in every respect. In this opinion he calls attention to the fact that while the federal laws do not expressly prohibit branch banks, yet the United States government has always construed the national banking act as not authorizing the establishment of the same.

Yours very truly,

TIMOTHY S. HOGAN,

Attorney General.

ADDENDUM:

I have confined the above opinion simply to the right of the establishment of branch banks in the future.

BANK HOLDING REAL ESTATE AT THE TIME PROVISION OF THOMAS ACT BECAME EFFECTIVE MAY HOLD THE SAME FOR FIVE YEARS SUBSEQUENT THERETO.

Under sections 9753, 9762 and 9774, General Code, all real estate purchases leased or held by banking companies must be sold by such corporation within five years after investing therein, unless the time is extended by the superintendent of banks.

Under sections 9741, 9742, 9793 and 9794, General Code, all banking corporations must come under the provisions of the Thomas act, on or before April 1, 1910, except as therein provided. Banks so coming within the act and owning real estate at the time said act became effective may hold such real estate for five years subsequent to such date.

COLUMBUS, OHIO, June 6, 1913.

HON. EMERY LATTANNER, Deputy Superintendent of Banks, Columbus, Ohio.

DEAR SIR:—On April 28, 1913, you made the following request for my opinion:

> "Under sections 9753, 9762 and 9774 it is defined when a bank may purchase real estate and how long they may hold the same. In the case of a bank which came into possession of real estate prior to the enactment of the Thomas act, does the five years in which they can hold it mean five years from the original time it was required, or five years from the enactment of said law?"

I wish to call your attention to the following sections of the General Code which were original sections of the Thomas act, 99 O. L. 272:

> "Section 9741. Banks, savings banks, savings societies, societies for savings, savings and loan associations, safe deposit companies, trust companies, and combination of any two or more of such corporations, heretofore incorporated in this state which have paid in the amount of capital stock required by this chapter to enable them to commence business, if they so elect, may avail themselves of the privileges and powers herein conferred, by signifying such election and declaration under their seal, attested by the signature of the president and secretary to the secretary of state and the superintendent of banks, which such secretary shall record, and his certificate be evidence thereof. When such election and declaration is so recorded, it shall confer all privileges and powers conferred by this chapter, and from that time such association or corporation shall be governed by its provisions.
> "Section 9742. Such election and declaration shall be made only when authorized by a vote of at least two-thirds of the capital stock at a meeting of stockholders, thirty days' notice of which meeting, and of the business to come before it, has been given by a majority of the directors in a newspaper published and of general circulation in the county where such association or corporation has its principal place of business. But after April 1, 1910, every such corporation, association in all respects must conform its business and transactions to the provisions of this chapter."

These two sections were originally part of section 36 of the Thomas act.

Section 9793 of the General Code, originally a part of section 91 of the Thomas act, is as follows:

"Every banking company, savings bank, savings and loan association, savings and trust company, safe deposit and trust company, society for savings, savings society and every other corporation or association, except building and loan associations empowered to receive, and receiving money on deposit, now existing and chartered or incorporated, or which hereafter become incorporated shall be subject to the provisions of this chapter, except that no such corporation or association having a less capital stock than the minimum amount provided in section ninety-seven hundred and four, shall be required to increase its capital stock in order to conform to the provisions of such section."

Section 9794 of the General Code, originally part of section 91 of the Thomas act, is as follows:

"No such association or corporation, may avail itself of any of the privileges or powers conferred by this chapter until it has complied with the provisions of sections ninety-seven hundred and forty-one and ninety-seven hundred and forty-two. No corporation, or. association, shall be required to comply with the provisions of this chapter before April 1, 1910, but every such corporation and association, shall be subject to the inspection, examination and supervision of the superintendent of banks, as provided by law."

Sections 9753, 9762 and 9774 of the General Code are as follows:

"Section 9753. A commercial bank may purchase, lease, hold and convey real estate only as follows:

"a. Real estate whereon is erected or may be erected a building or buildings useful for the convenient transaction of its business, and from portions of which, not required for its use, a revenue may be derived; but the cost of such building or buildings and the real estate whereon they are erected, in no case shall exceed sixty per cent. of its paid-in capital, and surplus.

"b. Such as is mortgaged and conveyed to it in good faith by way of security for loans made by or money due to such corporation.

"c. Such as has been purchased by it at sales upon the foreclosure of mortgages owned by it, or on judgments or decrees obtained or rendered for debts due to it, or in settlements effected to secure such debts. All real property referred to in this paragraph shall be sold by such corporation within five years after it vested therein, unless upon application by the board of directors, the superintendent of banks extends the time within which such sales shall be made.

"d. Such corporation also shall have power by lease to acquire a suitable building for the convenient transaction of its business, and from portions of which, not needed for its own use, a revenue may be derived.

"Section 9762. A savings bank may purchase, lease, hold and convey real estate for the purposes and in the manner hereinbefore provides as to commercial banks, and subject to like restrictions and limitations.

"Section 9774. A trust company may purchase, lease, hold and convey real estate, exclusive of trust property, for the purpose and in the manner provided by this chapter as to commercial banks, and subject to like restrictions and limitations."

Under these sections, which are part of the Thomas act, all real property referred to in paragraph "c" of section 9753, General Code, purchased, leased or held by commercial banks, savings banks and trust companies must "be sold by such corporations within five years after invested therein, unless upon application of the board of directors, the superintendent of banks extends the time within which such sales shall be made."

Under the sections which I have quoted above, all Ohio banking corporations must come under the provisions of the Thomas act from and after April 1, 1910, except that no such corporation having a less capital stock than the minimum amount required by the Thomas act can be required to increase its capital stock in order to conform with the provisions of the act, but in all other respects such corporations must comply with the regulations prescribed by the Thomas act. As the date fixed for compliance is April 1, 1910, it seems that in the matter of real estate purchased by banks prior to April 1, 1910, it should be considered as if said real estate had been purchased on that date, that is, they would have five years after April 1, 1910, within which to dispose of said real estate. To fix any shorter term would be in effect to apply the regulation of the Thomas act to such banks prior to the time of compliance as fixed by the act itself.

Yours very truly,
TIMOTHY S. HOGAN,
Attorney General.

SUPERINTENDENT OF BANKS ALLOWED PAY DURING LEAVE OF ABSENCE GRANTED PRIOR TO RESIGNATION.

Under the constitution, the compensation of state officers must be fixed for the term during which they are in office, and as there is no provision for suspension of salary during such time, the state superintendent of banks must be allowed his salary up to date of his resignation, notwithstanding a leave of absence was granted that official, immediately prior to his resignation.

COLUMBUS, OHIO, June 12, 1913.

HON. EMERY LATTANNER, Deputy Superintendent of Banks, Columbus, Ohio.

DEAR SIR:—On March 17th you made the following request for my opinion:

"Upon February 15th, F. E. Baxter, was, upon his request, granted a leave of absence by the governor. Upon March 10th Mr. Baxter's resignation as superintendent of banks was received and accepted by the governor.

"Please render to me an opinion as to whether or not Mr. Baxter is entitled to any salary covering that period."

Section 710 of the General Code provides for the appointment of the superintendent of banks and is as follows:

"The governor, with the advise and consent of the senate, shall appoint a superintendent of banks, who shall hold his office for the term of four years and until his successor is appointed and qualified. The superintendent may be removed by the governor at any time."

Section 20 of article 2 of the constitution is as follows:

"The general assembly, in cases not provided for in this constitution, shall fix the term of office and the compensation of all officers; but no change therein shall effect the salary of any officer during his existing term, unless the office be abolished."

Under the authority of this section of the constitution, by section 2250, General Code, it is provided as follows:

"The annual salaries of the appointive state officers and employes herein enumerated shall be as follows: * * * superintendent of banks, five thousand dollars. * * *"

Under section 710, above quoted, the governor is given the power to remove the superintendent of banks, and by sections 13 and 14 of the General Code the governor is given power generally to remove and suspend appointive state officers; but in the present case Mr. Baxter was neither removed nor suspended but upon his own request on February 15th was granted a leave of absence, which leave extended until March 10, 1913, when he resigned.

I find no authority whatever in our Code for the granting to an officer of a leave of absence nor any provisions of our General Code, nor any decisions which govern the matter of the salary of an officer during his leave of absence. Therefore, the question can only be considered from the standpoint of an officer who, while holding his office, does not perform all the duties of the office. This non-performance might result from sickness or from wilfulness, but the rule seems to be that unless suspended an officer is entitled to the salary fixed by law until he resigns or is removed or until his term expires. In England it has been held that even in case of suspension an officer is entitled to his salary; but the rule is otherwise in America, and our Code, sections 13 and 14, which are as follows:

"Section 13. When not otherwise provided by law, an officer who holds his office by appointment of the governor with the advice and consent of the senate. may be removed from office by the governor with the advise and consent of the senate, if it be found that such officer is inefficient or derelict in the discharge of his duties or that he has used his office corruptly. If, in the recess of the senate, the governor is satisfied that such officer is inefficient or derelict or corrupt, he may suspend such officer from his office and report the facts to the senate at its next session. If in such report the senate so advise and consent, such officer shall be removed, but otherwise he shall be restored to his office.

"Section 14. In case of such suspension of an officer, the governor shall designate a person to perform the duties of the office during the period of such suspension. The person so designated shall give bond and take the oath of office, and during the time he performs the duties of the office he shall receive the full emoluments thereof, no part of which shall, for such time, go to such suspended officer. If the suspended officer be removed or his term expires before the action of the senate, a new appointment shall be made."

provide that in case of suspension the governor shall designate a person to perform the duties of such officer during the period of suspension, and that the person so appointed shall receive all the emoluments of the office during such period. It would seem, as our statutes give the power of removal and the power of suspension as to state officers, that unless an officer is actually suspended he should be entitled to the salary fixed by law for his office.

Sections 499 and 500 of Throop on public officers are as follows:

"Section 499. Some cases, where this question was involved, have been cited in a former chapter. Cases, where it was held that an officer, wrongfully kept out of his office, was entitled to his full compensation, without any deductions for what he might have earned, or actually did earn, while thus kept out, will be cited in subsequent portions of this chapter. The principal question, to be considered here, is whether an officer's compensation can lawfully be made subject to deduction, by reason of his failure to discharge the duties of his office.

"Section 500. The general rule, applicable to this class of cases, is well stated in a case in the common pleas of the city and county of New York, in the following language: 'The right of an officer to his fees, emoluments, or salary, is such only as is prescribed by statute; and while he holds the office, such rights are in no way impaired by his occasional or protracted absence from his post, or neglect of his duties. Such derelictions find their corrections in the power of removal, impeachment, and punishment, provided by law. The compensation for official services are not fixed upon any mere principle of a quantum meruit, but upon the judgment and consideration of the legislature, as a just medium for the services which the officer may be called upon to perform. These may in some cases be extravagant for the specific services, while in others they may furnish a remuneration which is wholly inadequate. The time and occasion may, from change of circumstances, render the service onerous and oppressive, and the legislature may also increase the duties to any extent it chooses; yet nothing additional to the statutory reward can be claimed by the officer. He accepts the office 'for better or for worse;' and whether oppressed with constant and overburdening cares, or enabled, from absence of claims upon his services, to devote his time to his own pursuits, his fees, salary, or statutory compensation, constitutes what he can claim therefor, and is yet to be accorded although he performs no substantial service, or neglects his duties * * *. The fees or salary of office are 'quicquid honorarium,' and accrue from mere possession of the office."

My opinion, therefore, is that Mr. Baxter is entitled to the salary of superintendent of banks for the period beginning with February 15th and ending with the date of his resignation.

Yours very truly,
TIMOTHY S. HOGAN,
Attorney General.

CAPITAL STOCK OF BANK IS NOT NECESSARILY THE AUTHORIZED CAPITAL STOCK.

In section 8705, General Code, which provides that a corporation may borrow money in any sum not exceeding the amount of its capital stock, issue its notes, or coupons or registered bonds therefor, bearing any legal rate of interest and secure their payment by a mortgage of its property, real, personal or both, the words "capital stock" must be held to mean the actual capital stock paid in and not merely its authorized capital stock.

COLUMBUS, OHIO, July 14, 1913.

HON. EMERY LATTANNER, Deputy Superintendent of Banks, Columbus, Ohio.

DEAR SIR:—Your predecessor, on December 20, 1912, made the following request for an opinion:

> "Referring to your opinion of June 1, 1911, regarding the right of state banks to borrow money, I beg to make the further inquiry as to whether or not the language of section 8705 is understood by you to mean authorized capital stock or paid in capital stock."

Section 8705 of the General Code is as follows:

> "A corporation may borrow money in any sum not exceeding the amount of its capital stock, issue its notes, or coupon or registered bonds therefor, bearing any legal rate of interest, and secure their payment by a mortgage of its property, real or personal, or both."

I have previously held, under the authority given by this section, as well as the general authority given to banks to contract and be contracted with, that banks have the power to borrow money, but the question which has arisen as to whether the words "amount of its capital stock" mean the authorized capital stock or the capital stock which is actually paid in, is quite difficult and seems never to have been expressly decided in this state, or in any other state that has a statute in all respects similar to ours.

Section 8705 of the General Code was formerly section 3256 of the Revised Statutes. A brief consideration of the history of this section is instructive and tends strongly to the view that the intent of the legislature was to make the paid-in capital the basis for the limitation and not the authorized capital.

This section was originally enacted March 23, 1875, as a supplement to an act passed May 1, 1852 (Curwen chap. 1196) entitled "an act to provide for the creation and regulation of incorporated companies in the state of Ohio," and may be found in Sayler's Statutes of Ohio, chapter 2974, page 3433 and is as follows:

> "1. That any company heretofore or hereafter incorporated under the laws of this state for the purpose of manufacturing or mining, or any corporation organized for religious purposes, shall have power to borrow money on the credit of the corporation, not exceeding its authorized capital stock, at any rate of interest not exceeding that for which natural persons are or may be allowed to stipulate under the laws of this state, and may execute bonds or promissory notes therefor in sums of not less than one hundred dollars, and to secure the payment thereof may pledge the property and income of such company."

It will be noted that in passing this section the words "not exceeding its authorized capital stock" were used and of course this language was free from any doubt, and the corporations named in the section under the authority given by it could borrow money to an amount not exceeding their authorized capital stock. This section seems to have stood in the form in which it was passed until the codification of the statutes made in 1879 when, by section 7437 of the codification act passed June 20, 1879, the act above quoted was repealed. (See subsection 1002 of section 7437, Revised Statutes of 1880, page 1795) and such act was then enacted as section 3256 of said Revised Statutes of 1880, and as re-enacted, read as follows:

"Section 3256. A corporation may borrow money, not exceeding the amount of its capital stock, and issue its notes or coupon or registered bonds therefor, bearing any rate of interest authorized by law, and may secure the payment of the same by a mortgage of its real or personal property, or both."

It will be noted that in this re-enactment the word "authorized" was omitted. In 1902 this section was amended by two different acts. The first amendment is found on page 151, 95 O. L. and is as follows:

"A corporation may borrow money, not to exceed the amount of its capital stock, authorized by its articles of incorporation, and issue its notes or coupons or registered bonds therefor, bearing any rate of interest authorized by law, and may secure the payment of the same by a mortgage upon its real or personal property, or both."

The second amendment is found on page 390 of the same volume and is as follows:

"A corporation may borrow money, not exceeding the amount of its capital stock, and issue its notes or coupon or registered bonds therefor, bearing any rate of interest authorized by law, and may secure the payment of the same by a mortgage of its real or personal property, or both; and a private corporation may purchase, or otherwise acquire, and hold shares of stock in other kindred but not competing private corporations, whether domestic or foreign, but this shall not authorize the formation of any trust or combination for the purpose of restricting trade or competition."

By both of these amendments the language as to the capital stock used in the revision of 1880 is retained.

From the above, in the absence of any judicial interpretation, it would seem that as the original act gave express authority to corporations to borrow to the extent of their authorized capital stock, and as the amendment or re-enactment of the section omitted the word "authorized" that such elimination should be regarded as significant, and that it was the intention of the legislature to limit the amount to the capital stock of the corporation, that is the actual capital stock, not potential. A corporation may have an authorized capital stock of a very large amount, and yet may be without actual capital stock at all, for the reason that none of its capital stock may be subscribed and paid for.

Our supreme court, while never having passed expressly upon the meaning of this section, has at different times given a definition of the meaning of the capital stock of a corporation. These definitions are generally found in cases involving taxation but nevertheless a definition seems to me to apply to the question now being discussed. In the case of Jones, Auditor vs. Davis, 35 O. S., 474, the court at page 476, said:

> "The capital stock of a corporation consists of the money and property subscribed and paid in for the purposes of carrying on its business operations. It constitutes a corporate fund, belonging to a corporate body."

And further on the court quotes the language of Justice Nelson in the case of Farrigton vs. Tenn. 95 U. S., 686 as follows:

> "The capital (referring to the capital stock of a national bank) is not an idle, fictitious, arbitrary sum of money, set down in the articles of association, but in theory and practical operation of the system, is composed of substantial property, which gives value and solidity to the stock of the institution."

In the case of Lee, Treas. vs. Sturgess, 46 O. S. 153, Judge Spear says, in delivering the opinion of the court, page 160:

> "It may be assumed that 'capital stock' and 'capital and property' mean practically the same thing. Primarily the 'capital stock' is the money paid in by the stockholders in compliance with the terms of their subscriptions. It soon, however, takes the form of real estate, or personal property, or both, including machinery, buildings, credits, rights in action etc."

There is as great a reason for holding that the words "capital stock" when prescribed as the basis for loans to be made by a corporation, should refer to what is actual and tangible, as there is to give those words such meaning in matters of taxation.

The case of Lehigh Ave. Railway's appeal, being a case decided by the supreme court of Pennsylvania in 5 L. R. A., page 367, is one very much in point. The act of the legislature of Pennsylvania authorizing the incorporation of the Lehigh Ave. Railway Company provided:

> "The said company shall have the power and authority to borrow money in any sum or sums not exceeding in amount one-half of the par value of the capital stock."

The main question raised in this case was as to the meaning of the words "par value of the capital stock." The authorized value of the capital stock of the company was one million dollars, and the amount of the capital stock actually paid in was one hundred thousand dollars. The attorney general of Pennsylvania maintained that the company could only borrow to the extent of one-half of the amount actually paid in, viz., fifty thousand dollars. The company contended that the language meant the authorized stock of the company, viz., one million dollars, and that it could borrow fifty per cent. of that amount. The syllabus of the case is as follows:

> "The par value of the stock of a corporation within the meaning of its charter authorizing it to borrow money 'not exceeding one-half of the par value of the capital stock' means the actual amount of capital paid in, and not the nominal or authorized capital, where subscriptions for the full amount of stock have been made, but only part of the face value of each share actually paid in."

Of course the language of the act is different from ours in that the Pennsylvania act contains the words "par value" while ours simply limits it to the capital stock, but the discussion by the court is interesting and the reasoning seems to apply as well to our statute as it would to the Pennsylvania statute.

As stated above I am unable to find any decision of our courts, or of any court, directly in point. Our statute, section 3256, has been before the courts a number of times. In the case of Central Trust Co., of New York vs. Columbus H. V. & T. Ry. Co., et al, the United States circuit court, southern district of Ohio, 87 Fed. 815, the fourth paragraph of the syllabus is as follows:

"Rev. Stat. Ohio, section 3256, provides that a corporation may borrow money not exceeding the amount of its capital stock, issue its notes or bonds therefor and secure them by mortgage of its real or personal property, but does not declare indebtedness in excess of capital void. Held, that the mortgage of a corporation in excess of its capital stock is not void as to a subsequent mortgage with notice, if upheld by the corporation and its stockholders."

The court says at page 827:

"2. It next objected that this mortgage is void because the amount of the bonds secured exceeds the amount of the stock of the Coal & Railroad Company. The Revised Statutes of Ohio, affecting corporations of the class to which the Coal & Railroad Company belongs, provided that a corporation may borrow money not exceeding the amount of its capital stock, and issue its note or coupon and registered bonds therefor, bearing any rate of interest authorized by law, and may secure payment of the same by a mortgage of its real or personal property, or both. Rev. St. Ohio, section 3256. This limitation as to third persons must be regarded as applying to the authorized, and not the subscribed stock. Farmers' Loan & Trust Co. vs. Toledo, A. A. & N. M. Ry. Co., 67 Fed. 49; Water Co. vs. De Kay, 36 N. J. Eq. 548."

It will be seen from the syllabus and the above quotation that the court in this case had before it the interest of the third party to the transaction and not the naked question as to the meaning of the words "capital stock." The language seems, in a way, to indicate the view of the court that the words meant that a corporation had a right to borrow money to the extent of its authorized capital stock, but this view is taken as to the rights of the third party to the transaction and in effect holds that a loan made, even in excess of the amount authorized by statute, is not void but can be enforced against the corporation.

After very careful consideration of the question, and on account of the change made in the statute itself, the definitions given by our supreme court of the meaning of the words "capital stock" and the analogy of the Pennsylvania case above quoted, my conclusion is that the words "capital stock" as used in section 8705, must be held to mean the actual capital stock of the corporation and not its authorized capital.

Yours very truly,
TIMOTHY S. HOGAN,
Attorney General.

BANK STOCK—BONA FIDE HOLDER—TRANSFER OF TO A BONA FIDE HOLDER.

Where bank stock is fully paid for and the certificate bears no endorsement or statement that a lien is reserved by the bank against the holder of the stock for debts due to the bank from him, and such stock is transferred by the holder to a bona fide vendee or transferee, then the bank issuing the stock would be without authority to refuse to transfer the same.

COLUMBUS, OHIO, July 18, 1913.

HON. EMERY LATTANNER, Deputy Superintendent of Banks, Columbus, Ohio.

DEAR SIR:—On May 7, 1913, I received a letter from you enclosing a letter addressed to you by the secretary and treasurer of a certain banking company upon which you desired my opinion. The request contained in this letter is as follows:

> "If the stockholder of a bank should place his stock as collateral to another bank could the bank, issuing this stock, legally refuse to transfer the stock to another party if the original owner of the stock was indebted to the said bank?
> "Or, if there was a resolution on the records setting forth the right to hold stock of stockholders for any indebtedness they might owe the bank, would said resolution have to be embodied in the certificate of stock?"

The question as to whether or not a banking corporation has a lien upon the stock held by its members, for debts due by such members to the corporation, unless such a lien is authorized by a statute of the state, seems to be somewhat unsettled. It has been held in other states, in which the banking laws and statutes are not in all respects similar to ours, that such a lien does not exist unless a statute exists which expressly authorizes the lien, but in Ohio, even prior to the enactment of section 8673-15, hereinafter quoted, the rule seems to be different.

In the case of Stafford vs. The Produce Exchange Banking Co., 61 O. S. 160, the court held that a savings and loan company could reserve such a lien by an express stipulation in the certificate of stock issued by it. The syllabus of this case is as follows:

> "A corporation organized to do business of a savings and loan company may, by an express stipulation in the certificate of stock by it issued, reserve a valid lien upon the stock to secure the debts of the holder of it; and such lien may be asserted against a transferee who receives the stock before, but does not present it for transfer on the stock book of the company until after, the original holder becomes indebted to the corporation."

The opinion, written by Judge Shauck, in this case seems to imply that corporations have the right to reserve such a lien unless there is statutory authority forbidding such a lien. This case, I take it, is determinative of the question that a corporation has the right to reserve such a lien by an express stipulation on the certificates of stock. In addition, such a lien is now recognized by statutory authority in this state.

Section 8673-15 of the General Code is as follows:

"There shall be no lien in favor of a corporation upon the shares represented by a certificate issued by such corporation and there shall be no restriction upon the transfer of shares so represented by virtue of any by-law of such corporation, or otherwise, unless the right of the corporation to such lien or the restriction is stated upon the certificate."

This was original section 15 of the act found in 102 O. L. page 500, passed May 31, 1911, entitled "an act to make uniform the law of transfer of shares in stock in corporations."

As section 9714 of the banking act provides that in the matters not covered by the provisions of the chapter relating to banks and banking such corporations shall be created, organized, governed and conducted in the manner provided by law for other corporations insofar as not inconsistent with the banking laws, section 8673-15 would undoubtedly apply to banking corporations, and expressly recognizes the authority of such corporations to reserve a lien upon its stock by a proper statement upon the certificate.

Undoubtedly, unless the stock certificate itself has indorsed on it the restrictions that it is subject to the lien of the bank against the person to whom the stock was issued for the debts of such person to the bank, the lien would not attach, and it has been held that corporations providing for such a lien by appropriate by-laws, and issuing certificates of stock which do not show upon their face that such a lien has been reserved, cannot assert such lien against a transferee of the stock. See Bank vs. Bank, 97 Iowa, 204 and Stafford vs. Produce Exchange Banking Co., 61 O. S. 160.

A banking corporation in Ohio, also has a lien against shares of its capital stock held by its members to the extent of the amount remaining unpaid on account of the subscription for such stock. This lien is given by section 9717 of the General Code which is as follows:

"When a stockholder or his assigns fail to pay an installment on his stock, as required by the preceding section to be paid, or for thirty days thereafter, the directors for such company may sell his stock at public sale for not less than the amount due thereon, including costs incurred, to the person who will pay the highest price therefor, having first given the delinquent stockholder twenty days' notice of such sale personally or if no personal notification can be given, then by mail at his last known address as appears from the corporate record, and having advertised the sale for a like period in a paper of general circulation within the county in which the corporation is located. If no bidder can be found who will pay for such stock the amount due thereon, with costs incurred, such stock shall be sold as the directors order, within six months for not less than the amount then due thereon with all costs of sale."

The answer to your question, therefore, depends upon the facts. If the stock referred to is fully paid for, and the certificate bears no indorsement or statement that a lien is reserved by the bank against the holder of the stock for debts due to the bank from him, and such stock is transferred by the holder to a bona fide vendee or transferee, then the banks issuing the stock would be without authority to refuse to transfer the same, and even though the bank had passed a resolution that the stock of stockholders should be held for any indebtedness due from such stockholders to the bank. But if the stock certificates bore an appropriate statement, setting forth the lien then such lien would be valid, and the bank holding the same would have authority to refuse to transfer until the lien is satisfied.

I herewith return the letter which you send to this department.

Yours very truly,
TIMOTHY S. HOGAN,
Attorney General.

PRIVATE BANKS—THE WORD "STATIONERY" AS USED IN SECTION 6, 103 O. L., 381, DEFINED—THE WORD "UNINCORPORATED MUST FOLLOW THE NAME PRIVATE BANK.

The word "stationery as referred to in section 6, 103 Ohio Laws, 381, and as used in private banks, refers to the business paper used in the bank and includes all the paper used in transacting the business of the bank, including letter heads, checks, notes, deposit slips, notices and all other kinds of paper used in transacting the business of the bank in which the name of the bank appears.

COLUMBUS, OHIO, July 30, 1913.

HON. EMERY LATTANNER, Deputy Superintendent of Banks, Columbus, Ohio.

DEAR SIR:—In your letter of July 17th you make the following request for my opinion:

> "Under the private bank act, section 6 (103 O. L. 381) says:
> "That all persons, partnerships or associations that shall engage in business under the purview of this act, shall have printed on all their advertising matter and business stationery, the word "unincorporated" immediately following the name of the firm or business title.
> "The question has been raised whether this word 'unincorporated' should be on every legal paper used in the bank, or whether it pertains purely to advertisements and stationery such as is used in correspondence which goes to the public. Would it apply to notes and deposit slips, which I take it are in no sense an advertisement?"

The statute which you quote is the first paragraph of section 6 of the act entitled "an act to provide for the examination, regulation, supervision and dissolution of certain banking concerns," 103 O. L. page 379. Your request calls for a definition of the word "stationery" as used in this act, for it is clear that any advertising matter, of any kind issued by the bank, upon which the name of the bank appears, must also bear the word "unincorporated" immediately following the name of the bank.

In the case of Commissioners of Trumbull County vs. John Hutchins, 11 Ohio, 369, the court gives a definition of the word "stationery" at page 371 which is as follows:

> "The word 'stationery' embraces all things necessarily employed by the clerk for the purpose of writing and authenticating every species of writing which the law requires the clerk to write and authenticate; especially all such things as are necessarily connected with the office for such purpose."

This definition is extremely broad and would, of course, cover such articles as pens, ink, pencils, as well as the paper and blank forms necessarily used by the clerk in discharging the duties of his office.

I take it that the words as used in the above statute, viz., "business stationery" refer simply to the business paper used in the bank, and that as so used they include all the papers used in transacting the business of the bank including letter heads, checks, notes, deposit slips, notices and in fact every species of paper used in the transaction of the business of the bank upon which the name of the bank appears.

Yours very truly,
TIMOTHY S. HOGAN,
Attorney General.

LIQUIDATION OF BANK—DEPOSITOR NOT BARRED BY NOT ASSERTING HIS CLAIM WITHIN TIME SPECIFIED—FINAL DISPOSITION OF FUNDS TO BE MADE BY LEGISLATURE WHEN DEPOSITS REMAIN UNCALLED FOR.

Depositors who fail to file and prove their claim before the expiration of the date fixed for filing such claim, are not barred from afterwards asserting it.

In liquidating a bank, notice must be taken of all deposits in the bank whether the same are approved or not. Deposits that are not called for should be held by the superintendent of banks until the legislature makes some enactment for the final disposition of the same.

COLUMBUS, OHIO, July 18, 1913.

HON. EMERY LATTANNER, Deputy Superintendent of Banks, Columbus, Ohio.

DEAR SIR:—On March 21, 1913, you gave the following request for an opinion:

> "Please render this office an opinion as to what further dissolution proceedings are necessary in the liquidation of a bank, after each depositor has been paid in full, and after all other moneys coming into our hands have been paid pro rata to the stockholders."

If all the depositors have been paid in full and all other moneys coming into the hands of the liquidating agents have been paid pro rata to the stockholders then nothing remains except to dissolve the corporation. The statutes are silent at to the exact method of dissolution of a banking corporation in the hands of the superintendent of banks for purposes of liquidation, and, therefore, that would have to be worked out under the sections of the General Code providing for the dissolution of corporations.

From a conversation with you I understand that it was intended to include in this inquiry the question as to what disposition should be made by you in liquidating banks of unclaimed deposits.

Section 742-16, General Code, is as follows:

> "Dividends and unclaimed deposits remaining in the hands of the superintendent of banks for six months after the order for final distribution shall be by him deposited in one or more state banks or trust companies to the credit of the superintendent of banks in his name of office, in trust for the several depositors or creditors entitled thereto. The superintendent of banks may pay over the moneys so held by him to the persons respectively entitled thereto upon being furnished satisfactory evidence of their right to the same. In cases of doubt or conflicting claims he may apply to the common pleas court of the county in which the office of such corporation, company, society or association was located for an order authorizing and directing the payment thereof. He may apply the interest earned by the money so held by him towards defraying the expenses of the payment and distribution of such unclaimed deposits or dividends to the depositors and creditors entitled to receive the same, and he shall include in his annual report to the governor a statement of the amount of interest earned by such unclaimed dividends."

It is plain from this section that depositors who fail to file and prove their claims before the expiration of the date fixed for filing claims are not barred from afterward asserting the same, and therefore, in liquidating a bank you are bound to take notice of all deposits in the bank whether the same are proved or not, and it is your duty to hold the deposit of such funds as provided in said section until the same are paid and distributed to the depositors and creditors entitled to receive the same. The law does not specify how long such moneys should be held and, therefore, they should be held on deposit by you, as provided in said section, until the legislature makes some enactment as to the final disposition of the same.

Yours very truly,
TIMOTHY S. HOGAN,
Attorney General.

UNDER PROVISIONS OF HOUSE BILL No. 46, 103 O. L. 384, THE SUPERINTENDENT OF BANKS OR ANY OF HIS EXAMINERS SHALL NOT ENGAGE IN OR BE INTERESTED IN THE BANKING BUSINESS.

House Bill No. 46 (103 O. L. 384) which provides that neither the superintendent of banks nor the examiner appointed by him shall be interested in any bank or other institution under the supervision of the superintendent of banks, or be engaged in the business of banking, does not apply to existing obligations at the time the law passed but would prevent the renewal of these obligations after the act becomes effective.

COLUMBUS, OHIO, July 30, 1913.

HON. EMERY LATTANNER, Superintendent of Banks, Columbus, Ohio.

DEAR SIR:—On July 17th you made the following request for my opinion:

> "Referring to section 717 of the private bank act, known as House Bill No. 46 (103 O. L., 384), beg to inquire whether an examiner owing a state bank prior to the enactment of this law would be liable under this act, providing the note was not renewed, but was an existing obligation? This question has been raised and I would thank you for an early reply."

Sections 712 and 717 of the General Code, as amended by the act passed April 17, 1913, found in 103 O. L., 384, are as follows:

> "Section 712. With the approval of the governor, the superintendent of banks may employ from time to time necessary clerks and examiners to assist in the discharge of the duties imposed upon him by law. With such approval he may remove any such clerks or examiners. He shall summarily remove the deputy superintendent of banks, and any examiner, clerk or deputy connected with the department of the superintendent of banks upon the violation by any such officer, examiner or clerk of any of the provisions of section 717 of the General Code."
> "Section 717. Neither the superintendent of banks not the examiners appointed by him shall be interested directly or indirectly in any banking association, or in any bank or other corporation or association under their supervision, or be engaged in the business of banking. Neither the superintendent of banks, the deputy superintendent of banks or any examiner, deputy or clerk connected with the department of the superintendent of banks shall directly or indirectly borrow money from any corporation, person or association under the supervision of the superintendent of banks."

I think that clearly the prohibition found in section 717 against the officials named therein borrowing money from any corporation, person or association under the supervision of the superintendent of banks is operative only as to transactions occurring after the date when the act becomes effective. It does not apply to existing obligations. It would, however, apply to the renewal of an existing obligation, if by such renewal a new obligation was created.

Yours very truly,
TIMOTHY S. HOGAN,
Attorney General.

VOUCHERS FOR TRAVELING EXPENSES WHEN PROPERLY APPROVED BY THE DEPARTMENT HEAD SHOULD BE HONORED.

Where the legislature makes an appropriation to cover the actual and necessary traveling expenses of the head of a department and his deputies and assistants, and the voucher drawn on this fund is for legal and proper expenses and is properly approved by the head of the department, the auditor of state should honor it.

COLUMBUS, OHIO, August 11, 1913.

HON. EMERY LATTANNER, Superintendent of Banks, Columbus, Ohio.

DEAR SIR:—You have asked me to give you my opinion more fully upon your request of April 18, 1913, which was as follows:

> "The matter of allowing lunch and car fare for examiners in this department, who reside in Cincinnati and Cleveland, and who examine the banks in these cities, is one of dispute. The examiners claim that they should be permitted lunch and car fare while they are working in their own city, as in actual cases now in existence they would lose considerable time if they were to go home, whereas a lunch down town would materially advance their work."

In response to the above request, on May 27, 1913, I gave you the following opinion:

> "The actual and necessary traveling expenses of the superintendent of banks and of the deputies, assistants, clerks and examiners, incurred in the discharge of their official duty shall be paid monthly by the treasurer of state upon the warrant of the auditor of state. Vouchers, therefor, shall be fully itemized, approved by the superintendent and countersigned by the auditor of state.
> "It has been the uniform holding of this department that state officers and employes are not entitled to what are ordinarily classed as traveling expenses in the cities where they reside. There is no more reason for allowing examiners the expense of lunches and car fare while at work in the cities where they reside than there would be for allowing state officers in Columbus their expenses of car fare and that of lunch which the majority of them incur daily in performing the necessary duties of their respective offices.
> "For a more extended opinion on this question I refer you to my opinion to the inspector of building and loan associations, found in volume 1, report of attorney general for the year 1911 at page 815."

You state that there seems to be a conflict between the above quoted opinion and the one referred to. As I view it there is no conflict in the two opinions, but the latter one to you, in view of the fact that the question had never before been raised in your department, should have gone into the matter more fully.

I now refer you to the following opinions rendered by me upon the question of the allowance of "traveling expenses" to employes or subordinates in state departments.

(a) Opinion to the auditor of state dated May 8, 1911, (opinions of attorney general 1911, volume 1, page 140).

(b) Opinion to dairy and food commissioner, dated September 26, 1911 (opinions of attorney general 1911, volume 1, page 503).

(c) Opinion to the public service commission dated September 12, 1911, (opinions of attorney general 1911, volume 1, page 722).

(d) Opinion to inspector of building and loan associations dated November 3, 1913, (opinions of attorney general, 1911, volume 1, page 815).

There can be no question as to the correctness of my holding in my opinion to you of May 27, 1913, above quoted, namely, that state officers and employes are not entitled to what are ordinarily classed as "traveling expenses" in the cities where they reside. If the general rule were otherwise then all officers and employes here at the seat of government could charge and collect from the state their living expenses. This would be manifestly improper. But, like all general rules, this rule is subject to exceptions; and it was for this purpose that I referred you to my opinion of November 3, 1911; and I now wish to refer you especially to my opinion of September 26, 1911, to the dairy and food commissioner (above referred to), and I repeat the language used in that opinion as applicable to all cases of character:

> "The question of 'traveling expenses' must be determined by the application of common sense rules. No hard and fast regulation can be laid down; close fine spun distinctions need not be drawn, either for the purpose of defeating a claim for reimbursement or for charging to the state an expense not contemplated by the term 'traveling expenses.'
> "The commissioner, in the exercise of his judgment, can soon determine from an inspection of an itemized expense account what would or would not be a proper charge of such an item as 'traveling expense.' The interest of the state should be closely safeguarded, yet, it should be remembered that since the laborer is worthy of his hire he is entitled to all that would reasonably come under the term 'traveling expenses.'"

As I have stated, this question is one that essentially involves the application of the rule of common sense rather than a technical and inflexible rule of law. The legislature makes an appropriation to cover the "actual and necessary traveling expenses" of the head of a department, his deputies and assistants, and the vouchers for items charged as necessary and actual expenses must be countersigned by the head of the department. He is the judge and upon him must rest the responsibility. He should be quick to reject padded, improper or unnecessary expense accounts. When the items charged are for expenses actually incurred, by a public servant, in the discharge of his duty, and the head of the department approves the voucher and thereby certifies that in his opinion the charge is proper, the voucher should be honored.

Very truly yours,

TIMOTHY S. HOGAN,

Attorney General.

WHEN THE 12TH DAY OF OCTOBER, KNOWN AS "COLUMBUS DAY," FALLS ON SUNDAY THE HOLIDAY IS NOT TRANSFERRED TO THE NEXT SUCCEEDING BUSINESS DAY.

When the 12th day of October, known as "Columbus Day," falls on Sunday the holiday is not transferred to the next succeeding business day, as it is not one of the holidays to be transferred to the next business day as provided in section 8301, General Code.

COLUMBUS, OHIO, October 8, 1913.

HON. EMERY LATTANNER, Superintendent of Banks, Columbus, Ohio.

DEAR SIR:—I received a request from Hon. John L. Vance, Jr., of the Citizens Trust & Savings Bank, asking whether or not, since the 12th of October, known as "Columbus discovery day," falls this year on the first day of the week, known as Sunday, the holiday is transferred to the next succeeding secular or business day?

As this inquiry has come to my department from many other sources, and I deem it to be of public interest, in order that I may give an official ruling on the question, I am addressing my reply to you.

Section 8301, General Code, prior to the amendment passed March 23, 1910 reads as follows:

> "The following days, viz.
> "1. The first day of January, known as new year's day;
> "2. The twenty-second day of February, known as Washington's birthday;
> "3. The thirtieth day of May, known as decoration or memorial day;
> "4 The fourth day of July, known as independence day;
> "5. The first Monday of September, known as labor day;
> "6. The twenty-fifth day of December, known as Christmas day;
> "7. Any day appointed and recommended by the governor of this state or the president of the United States as a day of fast or thanksgiving; and
> "8. Any day which may hereafter be made a legal holiday, shall, for the purpose of this division, be holidays. But if such days firstly, secondly, thirdly, fourthly, sixthly and eighthly, herein, be the first of the week, known as Sunday, the next succeeding secular or business day shall be a holiday."

When the legislature, in response to the petitions of a great number of earnest admirers of the discoverer of America, concluded to fix a day that should be a holiday in his honor, section 8301 was amended to read as follows:

> "The following days, viz:
> "1. The first day of January, known as new year's day;
> "2. The twenty-second day of February, known as Washington's birthday;
> "3. The thirtieth day of May, known as decoration or memorial day;
> "4. The fourth day of July, known as independence day;
> "5. The first Monday of September, known as labor day;
> "6. The twelfth day of October, known as Columbus discovery day;
> "7. The twenty-fifth day of December, known as Christmas day;
> "8. Any day appointed and recommended by the governor of this state or the president of the United States as a day of fast or thanksgiving; and

"9. Any day which may hereafter be made a legal holiday, shall for the purpose of this division, be holidays. But if the first day of January, the twenty-second day of February, the thirtieth day of May, the fourth day of July, or the twenty-fifth day of December be the first day of the week, known as Sunday, the next succeeding secular or business day shall be a holiday."

It is to be noted that in sub-section 9 of the amended section, provision is made that certain of the holidays therein named would be transferred to the succeeding secular or business day if the holiday fell on a Sunday. Attention is further called to the fact that in the last amendment the wording of this special provision as to the holiday falling on Sunday is changed, and the twelfth of October is omitted from the list of holidays which shall be transferred if the date fall on Sunday.

I am, therefore, of the opinion that since the twelfth day of October, known as "Columbus discovery day," falls on Sunday this year, that the holiday is not transferred to the next succeeding secular or business day.

Yours very truly,
TIMOTHY S. HOGAN,
Attorney General.

THE USE OF THE WORDS "BANK," "BANKER" OR "BANKING" AS A DESIGNATION OR NAME UNDER WHICH BUSINESS IS CONDUCTED IN THIS STATE IS CONTRARY TO LAW, UNLESS THE PERSON, PARTNERSHIP, ASSOCIATION OR CORPORATION USING SUCH NAME IS EXAMINED AND REGULATED BY THE STATE BANKING DEPARTMENT.

The use of the words "Bank," "banker" or "banking," or words of a similar meaning in any foreign language, as a designation under which business is conducted in this state, is contrary to law, unless the person, partnership, association or corporation using such word or words submit to inspection, examination and regulation by the state banking department as provided by law, and also pay annually to that department the fees provided by law.

COLUMBUS, OHIO, December 6, 1913.

HON. EMERY LATTANNER, Superintendent of Banks, Columbus, Ohio.

DEAR SIR:—You have asked my opinion as to whether persons, associations, partnerships or corporations, not engaged in the banking business, have the right to use the words "bank," "banker" or "banking," as a designation or name under which such business may be conducted in this state.

The last paragraph of section 3, article 13, of the constitution, is as follows:

"* * * No corporation not organized under the laws of this state, or of the United States, or person, partnership or association shall use the word 'bank,' 'banker' or 'banking,' or words of similar meaning in any foreign language, as a designation or name under which business may be conducted in this state unless such corporation, person, partnership or association shall submit to inspection, examination and regulation as may hereafter be provided by the laws of this state."

Section 744-1 of the General Code, is as follows:

"That no corporation not organized under the laws of this state, or of the United States, or person, partnership or association, shall use the word 'bank,' 'banker' or 'banking' or 'trust' or 'trust company,' or words of similar meaning in any foreign language, as a designation or name under which business may be conducted in this state unless such corporation, person, partnership or association shall submit to inspection, examination and regulation, as provided in this act. The superintendent of banks shall execute all laws in relation to corporations, organized under the laws of this state or of the United States, persons, partnerships and associations using the word 'bank,' 'banker' or 'banking,' or 'trust' or 'trust company,' or words of similar meaning in any foreign language as a designation or name under which business is conducted in this state."

It is clear from the constitutional provision above quoted, and from section 744-1, enacted under the authority of the constitutional provision, that the words "bank," "banker" or "banking," or words of similar meaning in any foreign language, can only be used by corporations, persons, partnerships or associations which submit to inspection, examination and regulation, as provided by law. This inspection, examination and regulation is now fully provided for by law and upon you, as superintendent of banks, is cast the duty to execute all the laws relating to persons, partnerships, associations or corporations using any of said words. In addition, under section 736 of the General Code, every company, firm, corporation, person or association, which is subject to inspection and examination by you, as superintendent of banks, must pay annually the fees provided by such section.

My opinion, therefore, is that the use of the words "bank," "banker" or "banking," or words of similar meaning in any foreign language, as a designation or name under which business is conducted in this state, is contrary to law unless the person, partnership, association or corporation, using such word or words, submit to inspection, examination and regulation by your department, as provided by law, and also pay annually to your department the fees provided by law.

Yours very truly,
TIMOTHY S. HOGAN,
Attorney General.

THE WORDS "THE ISSUE" AS USED IN PARAGRAPH "F" OF SECTION 2 REFER TO A PARTICULAR BOND ISSUE WHICH THE COMPANY MAY DESIRE TO DISPOSE OF UNDER FAVOR OF THIS PARAGRAPH, AND NOT TO THE ENTIRE BOND, STOCK, OR SECURITY, ISSUED BY THE CORPORATION APPLYING.

The words "the issue" used in line six of subdivision "f" of section 2 of the act entitled "An act to regulate the sale of bonds, stocks and securities and of real estate not located in Ohio, and to prevent fraud in such sales" found in 103 O. L. 743, refer to the particular issue which a company may desire to dispose of under favor of this paragraph, and not to the entire bond, stock or security, as the case may be, issued by the corporation applying.

COLUMBUS, OHIO, November 25, 1913.

HON. EMERY LATTANER, Superintendent of Banks, Columbus, Ohio.

DEAR SIR:—Under date of September 4, 1913, I have letter from you asking opinion as follows:

"Do the words 'the issue,' used in the line six of subdivision 'f' of section 2 of the act entitled 'An act to regulate the sale of bonds, stocks and securities and of real estate not located in Ohio, and to prevent fraud in such sales,' passed April 28, 1913, refer to the particular issue of bonds, stocks or securities, of which the 'securities' under consideration are a part, or do said words 'the issue' refer to the entire bond, stock or security, as the case may be, issued by the corporation applying?"

Section 1 of the act in question (103 O. L., 743) provides as follows:

"Except as otherwise provided in this act, no dealer shall from and after the first day of August, A. D., 1913, within the state, dispose or offer to dispose of any stocks, bonds, mortgages or other instruments evidencing title to or interest in property or other securities of any kind or character (all hereinafter termed 'securities'), issued or executed by any private or quasi-public corporation, co-partnership or association (except corporations not for profit, organized under the laws of this state), or by any taxing subdivision of any other state, territory, province or foreign government, without first being licensed so to do as hereinafter provided."

Section 2 of the act states what shall not be deemed and considered "securities," within the meaning of the term as used in the act, and, further, defines the word "dealer" as therein used as follows:

"The term 'dealer,' as used in this act, shall be deemed to include any person or company, except national banks, disposing or offering to dispose of any such security through agents or otherwise, and any company engaged in the marketing or floatation of its own securities, either directly or through agents or underwriters, or any stock promotion scheme whatsoever."

The same section by separate paragraphs thereof, from "a" to "f," inclusive, conditionally except certain persons, both natural and artificial, from the meaning of the term "dealer" as above defined. The question submitted arises out of the exception stated in subdivision "f" of the section, which subdivision or paragraph reads as follows:

"An issuer organized under the laws of this state, where the disposal in good faith and not for the purpose of avoiding the provisions of this act, is made directly to its stockholders or by its own officers, without any commission, and at a total expense of not more than two per centum of the proceeds realized therefrom, and where no part of the issue is issued, directly or indirectly, in payment for patents, services, good will, or for property not located in this state; provided that the president and secretary of the issuer, shall prior to such disposal, file with the 'commissioner' a written statement setting forth the existence of all such facts."

One purpose of this act, as disclosed by the paragraph just noted, is to inhibit the issue by a company of its stock or other "securities" by exchange or payment for patents, services, good will or property not located in this state—considerations often taken over at gross over-valuation—unless the same be disposed of by a licensed "dealer" under the supervision of the superintendent of banks, secured by the provisions of other sections of the act. This consideration, as well as the general rule applicable in the construction of statutes, leads to the view that the provisions of the paragraph in question were intended to be prospective only in their operation and effect.

"It is laid down as a rule of construction that a statute should have a prospective operation only, unless its terms show clearly a legislative intention that it should operate retrospectively."

Bernier vs. Becker, 37 O. S., 72, 74.
Allen vs. Russell, 39 O. S., 336, 339.

It is manifest that if the words "the issue," as used in this paragraph, are to be construed as including more than the particular issue a company may desire to dispose of, and to include the entire bond, stock or other security, issue or issues of such company, such construction might impose a disability on the company arising out of transactions which took place before the enactment of the act under consideration; which construction is contrary to the plain intent that provisions of this paragraph are to be prospective in their effect only.

Again, a sale or other disposition of its stock or other "securities" without license under the provisions of this paragraph, is one of several exceptions to sales of "securities" which otherwise, under the provision of the act, must be made by a licensed "dealer." By section 9 of the act it is provided that before a licensee (licensed "dealer") shall dispose or offer to dispose of securities within this state, he shall file with the "commissioner" certain information including the following: "A pertinent discription of such securities, and the purpose of said issue." It is evident that the word "issue" as used in this connection, is, by legislative intent, in the singular, and referable only to the particular issue that the licensee may then desire to dispose of. The meaning of the word "issue" being clear in this connection it is to be presumed that the legislature used the word with the same meaning in the paragraph out of which the question made by you arises.

"Where the same word or phrase is used more than once in the same act in relation to the same subject-matter, and looking to the same general purpose, if in one connection its meaning is clear and in another it is otherwise doubtful or obscure, it is in the latter case to receive the same construction as in the former, unless there is something in the connection in which it is employed, plainly calling for a different construction."

Rhodes vs. Weldy, 46 O. S., 234.

For the reasons above stated, and on a consideration of the whole of the act in question, I am of the opinion that the words "the issue," as used in paragraph "f" of section 2, refer to the particular issue which a company may desire to dispose of under favor of this paragraph, and not "to the entire bond, stock or security, as the case may be, issued by the corporation applying."

Very truly yours,
TIMOTHY S. HOGAN,
Attorney General.

LIQUIDATION OF BANKS—CROWN CITY BANK—DRAFTS ON CROWN CITY BANK.

Where checks drawn on the Crown City bank are deposited with other banks and forwarded by these banks to the Crown City bank where drafts are drawn on the Huntington National bank of Huntington, W. Va., in payment of these checks and forwarded, and the drafts are presented for payment at the Huntington National bank the day of the failure of the Crown City bank, such claims cannot be allowed as preferred claims against the Crown City bank.

COLUMBUS, OHIO, December 31, 1913.

HON. EMERY LATTANNER, Superintendent of Banks, Columbus, Ohio.

MY DEAR SIR:—You have referred to me the claim of the Fifth-Third national bank of Cincinnati, Ohio, against the Crown City bank. The facts upon which this claim is based are as follows:

On October 16, 1913, the Fifth-Third national bank of Cincinnati, Ohio, forwarded by mail to the Crown City bank of Crown City, Ohio, certain checks drawn by different depositors on the Crown City bank, and deposited with the Fifth-Third national bank. These checks so forwarded by the Fifth-Third national bank reached the Crown City bank in due course; on October 16th the Crown City bank issued its draft in favor of the Fifth-Third national bank and drawn on the Huntington national bank of Huntington, West Virginia, for the sum of one hundred forty-four and sixty one-hundredths ($144.60) dollars, in payment of the checks so forwarded by the Fifth-Third national bank.

This draft was received by the Fifth-Third national bank on October 20, 1913, and was by it presented for payment to the Huntington national bank of Huntington, West Virginia, on October 21, 1913. On said day, October 21, 1913, you, as superintendent of banks, took charge of the said Crown City bank for the purpose of liquidation, and immediately notified the said Huntington national bank of that fact, and ordered it not to pay any checks or drafts issued by the Crown City bank upon it. This notice was received prior to the presentation of said draft by the Fifth-Third national bank, and the said draft was therefore rejected by the said Huntington national bank, and duly protested.

The Fifth-Third national bank now presents its claim for the amount of one hundred forty-five and seventy-two one-hundredths ($145.72) dollars, being the amount of said draft plus protest fees, and asks that the same be allowed as a preferred claim against the assets of the Crown City bank, now in your hands for the purposes of liquidation.

After consulting the authorities upon this question, I am of the opinion that this claim cannot be so allowed; it seems that no cash has actually passed in this transaction that the funds in your hands as assets of the Crown City bank have not been augmented by the amount of this draft, nor has the money represented by this draft been set aside in any way so that it can be looked to as a trust fund or special deposit. The only theory upon which it can be treated as a special fund or deposit would be that when the Crown City bank issued its draft upon the Huntington national bank, it thereby made the assignment pro tanto of a sufficient amount of funds then belonging to it in the said Huntington national bank to pay said draft.

However, the statute provides, section 8294 of the General Code, as follows:

> "A check does not of itself operate as an assignment of any part of the funds to the credit of the drawer with the bank, and the bank is not liable to the holder unless and until it accepts or certifies the check. (R. D. section 3177z.)

Our supreme court has also held to the same effect as this statute, i. e.,

> "That a bank check or draft for a part of the sum due the drawer, does not, before acceptance by the drawee, constitute an equitable assignment of the amount for which it is drawn." Covert vs. Rhodes, 48-O. S., page 66.

See also Blake vs. The Hamilton Dime Savings Bank, 79 O. S., 189, p. 196, et seq. In Morse on Banks and Banking, fourth edition, section 511-K, it is stated:

> "In case the bank on which a check is drawn becomes insolvent before the check is paid, of course the check holder could not expect a preference to the other creditors of the bank; in no reasonable view can the holder acquire more rights than the depositor would have himself."

In the present case, if one of the depositors in the Crown City bank residing at Cincinnati had sent his check to Crown City and received for the same a draft upon the Huntington national bank, and had presented said draft for payment at the Huntington national bank subsequent to the notice of the superintendent of banks, under the above authorities, he could not have compelled payment by the Huntington national bank, and his right against the Crown City bank would be only that of a depositor or general creditor; it seems to me that undoubtedly the Fifth-Third national bank by the tranaction obtained no greater rights than the depositors in the Crown City bank who issued said checks against their respective accounts.

A case almost exactly in point is that of Clark vs. Toronto Bank, et al., being the decision of the supreme court of Kansas, reported in 82 Pac. 582, and in 2, L. R. A., new series, page 83. The syllabus of this case is as follows:

> "1. Draft as assignment of fund.
> "Ordinarily the issuance of a bank draft does not, prior to its acceptance, operate as an assignment of a part of the fund against which it is drawn.
> "2. Same—insolvency of drawer.
> "Where a bank fails and passes into the hands of a receiver after it has issued a draft upon a correspondent bank in which it has funds on deposit, and the drawee has notice of the receivership before the draft is presented for payment, the title to such deposit passes to the receiver, and the holder of the draft, in the absence of any special circumstances, is entitled to no priority over other creditors of the failed bank."

I am, therefore, constrained to hold that this claim cannot be allowed as a preferred claim against the Crown City bank. The claim may be allowed as a general claim against the Crown City bank in favor of the Fifth-Third national bank, and it can then adjust matters between itself and the persons who deposited the original checks with it; or the original checks sent by the Fifth-Third national bank to the Crown City bank on October 16, 1913, can be returned to the Fifth-Third bank so that the individual drawers or holders of said checks may present their claims individually, which claims, when presented, can only be treated as general claims.

Very truly yours,

TIMOTHY S. HOGAN,
Attorney General.

LIQUIDATION OF BANKS—CROWN CITY BANK—CERTIFICATE OF DEPOSIT—LIQUIDATION BY STATE BANKING DEPARTMENT.

Where the holder of a certificate of deposit on the Crown City bank deposits the certificate of deposit with another bank, and the certificate is finally presented to the Crown City bank, and the Crown City bank returns to the bank in payment therefor its draft on the Huntington National bank of Huntington, W. Va., but before its presentation to the Huntington National bank the Crown City bank fails, the holder of said draft will not have a preferred claim, but the claim may be allowed as a general claim.

COLUMBUS, OHIO, December 31, 1913.

HON. EMERY LATTANNER, Superintendent of Banks, Columbus, Ohio.

MY DEAR SIR:—You have submitted to me various correspondence with reference to the claim of the Commercial & Savings Bank of Gallipolis, Ohio, against the Crown City Bank. The facts with reference to this claim, as I understand them, are as follows:

A Mrs. Wood became in some way the owner of a certificate of deposit for the sum of nine hundred ($900.00) dollars, issued by the Crown City Bank. This certificate of deposit she either sold to or deposited with the Commercial & Savings Bank of Gallipolis; the Commercial & Savings Bank of Gallipolis sent the said certificate of deposit to its Cincinnati correspondent, the Fourth National Bank; the Fourth National Bank sent the said certificate direct to the Crown City Bank; the Crown City Bank returned to the Fourth National Bank in payment therefor its draft on the Huntington National Bank of Huntington, W. Va.; after the issuance of said draft by the Crown City Bank to the Fourth National Bank, but before its presentation to the Huntington National Bank, the Crown City Bank was taken over by you for the purpose of liquidation, and said draft was rejected and protested upon presentation. The draft was then returned by the Fourth National Bank to the Crown City Bank of Crown City, Ohio, and the said Commercial & Savings Bank now asks that this claim for the amount of said draft be allowed as a preferred claim against the assets of the Crown City Bank, in your hands, for the purposes of liquidation.

A case quite similar to this is that of Clark vs. Toronto Bank, being the decision of the supreme court of Kansas, reported in 2 L. R. A., page 83. The syllabus of this case is as follows:

> "1. Draft as assignment of fund.
> "Ordinarily the issuance of a bank draft does not, prior to its acceptance, operate as an assignment of a part of the fund against which it is drawn.
> "2. Same—Insolvency of drawer.
> "Where a bank fails and passes into the hands of a receiver after it has issued a draft upon a correspondent bank in which it has funds on deposit, and the drawee has notice of the receivership before the draft is presented for payment, the title to such deposit passes to the receiver, and the holder of the draft, in the absence of any special circumstances, is entitled to no priority over other creditors of the failed bank."

This case seems to be in accord with the Ohio decisions and statutes.

I am, therefore, compelled to hold that this claim on the part of the Commercial & Savings Bank of Gallipolis cannot be allowed as preferred claim against the assets of the Crown City Bank, in your possession, for the purpose of liquidation; it can however, be allowed as a general claim.

The question as between the Commercial & Savings Bank of Gallipolis and Mrs. Wood, who sold to or deposited with said bank the original certificate of deposit, will depend entirely upon that transaction and whether the said bank purchased said certificate of deposit, or only received the same for collection.

Very truly yours,
TIMOTHY S. HOGAN,
Attorney General.

SUPERINTENDENT OF INSURANCE—ANNUAL FEE OF $25.00 FOR COLLECTING INTEREST UPON SECURITY DEPOSITS, COMPREHENDS CALENDAR YEAR.

The history of 657, General Code, providing for a charge by the superintendent of insurance of $25.00 each year for the collecting and forwarding of interest checks and coupons upon bonds and securities deposited, discloses that it is the intention to apply such $25.00 fee on each $100,000.00 so deposited to each calendar year, regardless of the fact that such deposit may not have been held for the entire year.

COLUMBUS, OHIO, December 14, 1912.

HON. D. H. MOORE, Superintendent of Insurance, Columbus, Ohio.

DEAR SIR:—On December 10, 1912, you made the following request for my opinion:

> "Please advise this department what construction you place upon section 657, General Code, paragraph as follows:
> "For making and forwarding annually, semi-annually and quarterly the interest checks and coupons accruing upon bonds and securities deposited, twenty-five dollars each year on each one hundred thousand dollars so deposited. (R. S. Secs. 269, 282).
> "We refer you to this specific case:
> "The Svea Fire & Life Insurance Co., Gothenberg, Sweden, was admitted September 7, 1912.
> "This department collected interest on its bonds deposited October 1, 1912.
> "Should this department charge the company the full amount of $25.00 for this collection or pro rate the fee according to the amount collected on October 1st only?"

It seems to me that it is the intent of this statute to provide for one annual payment by insurance companies to your department for services rendered in making and forwarding the interest checks and coupons accruing upon bonds and securities deposited. Whether said interest checks are made and forwarded annually, semi-annually or quarterly, it would seem, makes no difference, the fee is twenty-five dollars to be paid each year; and there is nothing expressed in the statute, nor anything that would give rise to the inference that this annual fee of twenty-five dollars is to be prorated in any event.

The meaning is perhaps clearer from this paragraph as it appeared in the revised statutes, section 269. It there appeared as follows:

> "Foreign insurance companies shall pay annually, as fees, for making out and forwarding annually, semi-annually and quarterly, the interest checks and coupons accruing upon bonds and securities deposited, the sum of twenty-five dollars on each one hundred thousand dollars so deposited which fees shall be turned over to the state treasurer on warrant of the state auditor."

I think it is clear from this that one annual payment was intended, and when checks are made out and forwarded to the company, your department should charge the fee specified, and it makes no difference, in my opinion, whether such checks are made out and forwarded annually, semi-annually or quarterly, the fee is the same; and, therefore, your department should charge the company referred to the full annual fee specified in this section.

Very truly yours,
TIMOTHY S. HOGAN,
Attorney General.

INSURANCE EXAMINERS—EXPENSES, TRAVELING—WHILE ENGAGED IN PERMANENT WORK IN THE OFFICE AT COLUMBUS, NOT ALLOWED—SAME ALLOWED WHEN TEMPORARILY EMPLOYED EXAMINING COMPANIES IN SAID CITY.

Examiners employed by the superintendent of insurance, who do not reside in Columbus may be allowed their necessary traveling expenses whilst temporarily engaged in said city in the examination of insurance companies therein.

When such examiners are permanently employed, however, in the office work of the department of the superintendent of insurance, they may not be allowed their expenses.

COLUMBUS, OHIO, January 11, 1913.

HON. E. H. MOORE, Superintendent of Insurance, Columbus, Ohio.

DEAR SIR:—In your letter of October 30th you request my opinion upon the following questions:

> "1. Shall the examiners employed by this department be allowed their necessary expenses while examining insurance companies located in the city of Columbus?
> "2. Shall such examiners be allowed their necessary expenses while employed in the work of the department in the office of the superintendent of insurance?"

I respectfully refer you to my opinion of May 8, 1911, to the Honorable E. M. Fullington, auditor of state, relative to the expenses of inspectors of building and loan associations. The direct question asked by the auditor of state at that time was whether an inspector who resided in another city being assigned to inspect an association in Columbus should be entitled to living expenses while engaged in that work. My holding, in brief, was that when an inspector is inspecting an association in a city other than that of his residence, whether that city be the capital of the state or not, all expenses incurred by him while absent from his home are really "traveling expenses." This opinion, I think, is applicable to the insurance department proper as well as to the building and loan department, and the sections providing for the inspection of insurance companies, while not identical with the provisions for the inspection of building and loan associations, are, so far as this particular inquiry is concerned, for all practical purposes the same.

An appropriation is made each year by the legislature for traveling and other expenses of the insurance department superintendent and employes on official business. The mere fact that a company happens to be located in Columbus does not seem to me to preclude an examiner who does not live in Columbus from being allowed traveling expenses while in this city and engaged in such an examination. The basis of my holding in regard to officials and employes in Columbus is that while permanently employed here, or located here, they cannot charge living expenses while in this city, and can charge only such expenses when absent on official business from Columbus.

My opinion further is that this rule applies inversely in the case of examiners who do not live in Columbus and are not permanently employed here, and that when they are here upon orders from you and engaged in examining a company or companies located in this city, such traveling expenses should be allowed; but when such examiners are brought into this city by you and employed in work in your department, not in the examination of associations, and when such period of employment in Columbus is of any length, then they would not be entitled to expenses.

Answering your questions, therefore, I would say:

1. Examiners employed by your department should be allowed their necessary expenses while examining insurance companies when located in Columbus if they do not live in this city.

2. Such examiners should not be allowed their necessary expenses while employed in the office of the superintendent of insurance in necessary office work for your department.

Very truly yours,
TIMOTHY S. HOGAN,
Attorney General.

RIGHT OF INSURANCE COMPANIES TO RECEIVE BANK DEPOSITS PLACED WITH SUPERINTENDENT OF INSURANCE, IN ACCORDANCE WITH SECTION 3641, REVISED STATUTES, NOW REPEALED, WHEN CONTRACTS WHICH DEPOSIT WAS INTENDED TO SECURE HAVE BEEN EXECUTED.

The deposit with the state superintendent of insurance required under section 3641 Revised Statutes, now repealed, should be returned to such companies, as a matter of policy, when the contracts which such deposit was intended to secure have been proven to have been executed.

There being no statutory provision therefor, however, the proper method would be for such companies to file a friendly suit against the superintendent and in such suit proof to be given of the execution of all obligations pertaining to such contract.

COLUMBUS, OHIO, May 16, 1913.

HON. E. H. MOORE, Superintendent of Insurance, Columbus, Ohio.

DEAR SIR:—On January 2, 1913, you made the following request for an opinion:

> "Where a deposit of $30,000.00 in securities required to be made by companies of other states, under section 3641 of the Revised Statutes of Ohio, as the same stood prior to the amendatory act of April 1, 1902, has been made by an insurance company, and all obligations upon contracts executed prior to said last named date have been fully extinguished, is it the duty of the superintendent of insurance to return to such company such deposit, upon appropriate proof being made of that fact?"

If the obligations of all contracts made prior to April 1, 1902, by such companies had been fully extinguished then there is no further reason for holding the deposit of $30,000 made by such companies to secure such contracts and such deposit should be returned to said company. The difficulty about the matter is that there is no provision of law now existing which provides for the return of such deposits, nor is there any method prescribed by law which you are to follow in satisfying yourself that the reason for such deposit no longer exists. It seems to me, therefore, that the only way out of the difficulty is to have such company bring suit against you, setting forth all of the facts in regard to this matter and praying for a return of such deposit. To a petition of this character an answer can be filed, admitting all the facts except the allegation that the obligation of all contracts for the security of which such deposit was originally made had been extinguished. This should be denied and the company put upon proof, and I have no doubt that upon satisfactory proof being produced the court could order the return of such deposits. This would protect you and is in fact the only method which can be safely followed to accomplish the desired result.

Yours very truly,
TIMOTHY S. HOGAN,
Attorney General.

LAW OF THE IMPROVED ORDER OF RED MEN REQUIRING ALL OFFICERS TO FURNISH BOND AND PERMITTING CERTAIN GOVERNING OFFICERS OF THE ORDER TO SELECT THEIR SURETY COMPANIES, NOT INVALID.

There is nothing in the statutes of Ohio which prohibits a fraternal order, such as the Improved Order of Red Men, from having in its general law a requirement that all officers furnish bond with a surety company, to be selected by certain governing officers of the order.

COLUMBUS, OHIO, May 16, 1913.

HON. E. H. MOORE, Superintendent of Insurance, Columbus, Ohio.

DEAR SIR:—On April 29, 1913, you referred to me correspondence of your department with Mr. J. A. O'Donnell, great sachem, Troy, Ohio, relative to the issuance of security bonds by the American Surety Company of New York City, to local tribes of the Improved Order of Red Men of Ohio.

It seems that on May 14, 1912, the great council of Ohio of the Improved Order of Red Men, amended section 226, chapter 30 of the general laws of the Improved Order of Red Men, as follows:

> "Section 226. The chief or records, collector of wampum, keeper of wampum and trustees, before entering into the duties of their chieftaincies, shall be bonded with some approved surety company for the faithful performance of their duties, and the board of great chiefs shall enter into a contract with some approved surety company for a blanket bond to cover all the tribal chiefs above named.
> "Section 226a. The expenses of said bond to be contracted for by the great sachem, great chief of records and keeper of wampum shall be apportioned among the tribes, and said amounts shall be transmitted to the great chief of records together with six moons per capita tax."

It further appears that in pursuance of the authority given by said law or resolution, the board of great chiefs of said order unanimously selected the American Surety Company of New York as the surety company to execute such bonds, and that the order now requires that the officers named in said resolution give surety bonds with the American Surety Company of New York as surety, the cost of said bonds to be apportioned and paid as provided in said section 226a. It does not appear from the correspondence before me that any one connected with the order solicits these bonds or that any one connected with the order is paid a commission on the same, and it must, therefore, be presumed that the bonds are written through the duly authorized agents of the company.

I have not the constitution and by-laws of the Improved Order of Red Men before me, and, from the data in my possession, unless there is something in said constitution and by-laws which would prohibit a transaction of this kind, I do not find that there is anything illegal in this transaction. The law or resolution primarily provides that the officers named in it shall be bonded by a bond given by some approved surety company. I think that this requirement is valid. The law then delegates to certain officers of the order the power and duty to select and approve a surety company. This, I think, can also be done. The method may perhaps be open to some criticism on the ground that it gives an opportunity for favoritism in the matter of choosing a surety company, and also it may be coercive in making all local tribes pay for bonds in a company selected by the governing body, but I take it from what is before me that this order has a representative form of government, and if the rank and file are dissatisfied with the manner in which those in authority exercise their powers, that, though this order may not have adopted the recall, still all obnoxious officers can be readily supplanted in due course of time.

Yours very truly,
TIMOTHY S. HOGAN,
Attorney General.

POWER OF SUPERINTENDENT OF INSURANCE TO MAKE ASSESSMENT UPON MUTUAL INSURANCE COMPANY TO RESTORE IMPAIRMENT OF CAPITAL, OPERATES ONLY AS TO GOING CONCERNS—INSOLVENT COMPANY.

The power of the superintendent of insurance conferred by sections 630, and following of the General Code, to compel an assessment to restore impairment of capital of a mutual insurance company is permitted to be exercised only against going concerns.

When a company is undergoing voluntary liquidation, the superintendent of insurance has no further authority in the matter and recourse must be had under section of the General Code relating to insolvent corporations.

COLUMBUS, OHIO, June 6, 1913.

HON. E. H. MOORE, Superintendent of Insurance, Columbus, Ohio.

MY DEAR SIR:—I am in receipt of your letter of January 16, 1913, as to the Akron Mutual Fire Insurance Company, together with the various enclosures attached to your letter.

It appears from your letter and the correspondence that several years ago the Akron Mutual Fire Insurance Company became insolvent, and that the superintendent of insurance revoked its license and ordered it to make an assessment of one and one-half per cent. in order to restore the impairment of its capital. I am informed that this assessment was made and was sufficient to pay off all claims that were known at that time; that subsequently the company cancelled all out-standing policies and went into voluntary liquidation, and subsequent to this, one or more judgments were obtained against the said company, and the question has arisen as to whether your department, under section 630 of the General Code, can again levy an assessment in order to satisfy these judgments.

Section 630 of the General Code is as follows:

> "If it appears to the superintendent of insurance upon satisfactory evidence that the funds and assets, other than contingent liability, of any company organized on the plan of mutual insurance, after deducting therefrom a reinsurance reserve fund, computed in accordance with law, are less than its liabilities, such company shall be deemed to have impaired its capital. If such impairment exceeds twenty-five per cent. of such reinsurance reserve fund, the superintendent shall require such company to make an assessment as provided by law in case of impairment of its capital by a mutual company, for the amount needed to pay its incurred losses and expenses and to make good the reinsurance reserve fund required by law. The assessment shall be paid within such period as the superintendent names in the requisition."

It appears from this that this section only applies to companies that may be called going-concerns. Under it, when the superintendent of insurance ascertains that the capital of any such company is impaired, he may require an assessment to be made, and to be paid within such period as he may prescribe.

Section 633, General Code, is as follows:

> "Upon default of a company to comply with the requisition of the superintendent of insurance, the superintendent shall communicate the fact to the attorney general, who shall apply to the court of common pleas of the county in which the principal office of the company is located for an order requiring such company to show cause why its business should not be closed. The attorney general shall give the company such notice of the pendency of the application as the court directs, and thereupon the court shall hear the allegations and proof of the respective parties, or refer the application of the attorney general to a referee."

Section 634, General Code, is as follows:

> "If it appears to the satisfaction of the court that the assets of such company are reduced below the amount so required by law, or that the interest of the public so require, the court shall decree a dissolution of the company and distribution of its assets. A transfer of stock of a company made during the pendency of such investigation shall not release the party making the transfer from his liability for losses which have occurred previous to the transfer."

As stated above, I gather that this company went into voluntary liquidation after the first assessment was ordered and paid by the superintendent of insurance, and, therefore, it would seem that the superintendent of insurance has now no further authority in the matter, and that the proper course to follow would be under the sections of the General Code relating to insolvent corporations.

Yours very truly,

TIMOTHY S. HOGAN,

Attorney General.

RIGHT OF INSURANCE COMPANY ORGANIZED IN DISTRICT OF COLUMBIA TO DO BUSINESS IN OHIO UPON DEPOSIT OF SECURITIES TO THE SUPERINTENDENT OF INSURANCE OF THE DISTRICT IN ACCORDANCE WITH RULES PRESCRIBED BY SAID SUPERINTENDENT AND APPROVED BY THE COMMISSIONERS OF SAID DISTRICT.

Under section 9367, General Code, an insurance company organized in the District of Columbia may do business in this state upon depositing the security required by said section with the superintendent of insurance of the District of Columbia, in accordance with the provisions of this statute, and in the manner prescribed by rules adopted by the superintendent of insurance of the district and approved by the commissioners of said district.

For this purpose the District of Columbia may properly de deemed a state and the rule adopted by the commissioners and approved as authorized by act of congress may be considered a law of the state within the comprehension of said section 9367, General Code.

Inasmuch as this statute requires a certificate from the superintendent of insurance or other officer of another state to the effect that he holds in trust and on deposit the prescribed securities, a certificate from such officer to the effect that such securities have been deposited with a bank would not be a compliance with the law.

COLUMBUS, OHIO, June 6, 1913.

HON. EDMOND H. MOORE, Superintendent of Insurance, Columbus, Ohio.

DEAR SIR:—In your letter to me, dated January 17, 1913, you make the following request for my opinion:

> "The Equitable Life Insurance Co., of Washington, D. C., has made application for admission to this state. Section 9367, General Code, provides for the deposit to be made by life insurance companies as transacting such business within this state, where the securities are not deposited with this state, they are to be deposited 'with the officer of the state in which such company was organized, designated by the laws of such state to receive them.'
> "The company in question is organized under the laws of the United States No person or officer within the district is designated by law to receive such securities.
> "It is not practical to make the deposit with this state for the reason that the company desires to do business also within the state of Maryland, and, perhaps, elsewhere, in which event, a deposit with this state would be of no avail, as the laws of other states are similar to our own and provide that the deposit must be made with the respective state in which admission is sought or with the state where the company is organized.
> "The commissioners of the district are authorized to make regulations for the government of the insurance department in matters where the law was made no provision.
> "With the approval of the district commissioners, the company seeks to deposit the securities with the Commercial National Bank, under an agreement (a copy of which is filed with this department) that such securities shall be deposited and remain in trust for the benefit and security of all the policy holders of the company, and that they shall not be released except upon a certificate signed by the superintendent of insurance of this state, and the superintendent of insurance of the District of Columbia, declaring that the said deposit is no longer required.

"I write to inquire if, in your opinion, such deposit can be taken as a substantial compliance with the law sufficient to authorize the admission of said company to this state.

"The company otherwise appears to me to be a clean and conservatively managed company, and I have found no further objection to its admission save only the matter of deposit referred to."

There has also been forwarded to me the following certificates made by the Commercial National Bank of Washington, D. C., and by George W. Ingham, superintendent of insurance of the District of Columbia, respectively.

"DISTRICT OF COLUMBIA.
WASHINGTON, February 24, 1913.

"THE COMMERCIAL NATIONAL BANK, a corporation duly incorporated under the laws of the United States and located in said District of Columbia, hereby certifies that attached hereto is the certificate of the superintendent of insurance of the District of Columbia, dated February 21, 1913, reciting the rule and regulation of said superintendent requiring $100,000.00 of the assets of the Equitable Life Insurance Company to be invested in the notes and mortgages described (in items) in the schedule attached to said certificate and deposited with the said The Commercial National Bank, in trust for the benefit of the policy holders of said company; that in pursuance of said rule and regulation, said Equitable Life Insurance Company did on December 10, 1912, duly deposit with said The Commercial National Bank the notes and mortgages referred to and described in said certificate and the schedule attached thereto, for the benefit of the policy holders of said company; that said securities consist of said promissory notes and mortgages, and said mortgages are on unincumbered real estate in said District of Columbia, of at least double value of the respective amounts loaned thereon, and said securities are worth at least one hundred thousand dollars. That said deposit cannot be withdrawn without the consent of the superintendent of insurance of the District of Columbia, and the consent of the superintendent of insurance of the state of Ohio; and that said deposit ever since has been and is now so maintained.

"IN WITNESS WHEREOF, the said The Commercial National Bank has hereunto set its name, by R. E. Clapham its president, and T. K. Sands, its cashier, and caused its official seal to be affixed hereto, the day and year first above mentioned.

"The Commercial National Bank,
By R. E. Clapham, President.
T. K. Sands, Cashier."

(Attached to the same is a list of said notes and mortgages.)

"DEPARTMENT OF INSURANCE OF THE DISTRICT OF COLUMBIA."

"WASHINGTON, February 21, 1913.

"I, GEORGE W. INGHAM, do hereby certify that I am the superintendent of insurance of the District of Columbia, and that The Equitable Life Insurance Company is a corporation duly organized under the laws of the congress relating to the District of Columbia, and is duly authorized to transact business of life insurance; that under the authority conferred upon me as such superintendent of insurance by said laws of the congress I duly made and promulgated a rule and regulation requiring said company to invest one hundred thousand dollars of its assets in promissory notes secured by mortgages on unincumbered real estate in said District of Columbia, of at least double the value of the amount loaned thereon, and deposit the same with The Commercial National Bank of Washington, D. C., in trust for the benefit of the policyholders of said company, said deposit to be so maintained and not withdrawn for substitution of other securities or otherwise without the consent of the superintendent of insurance of the District of Columbia; that said rule and regulation was duly approved by the commissioners of the district of Columbia; that in pursuance of said rule and regulation, said the Equitable Life Insurance Company duly so invested one hundred thousand dollars of its assets in said described securities, and a schedule of the notes and mortgages in which said investments were so made is hereto attached, showing respective dates of notes and mortgages, amounts of loans, location of real estate mortgages, values thereof, maturity of loan and rates of interest payable on the loans; that I am satisfied said notes and mortgages are worth at least one hundred thousand dollars; that in pursuance of said rule and regulation said company on December 10, 1912, duly deposited said notes and mortgages with said The Commercial National Bank of Washington, D. C., in trust for the benefit of the policyholders of said company, and under a stipulation that the same cannot be withdrawn without the consent of the superintendent of insurance of the District of Columbia and the consent of the superintendent of insurance of the state of Ohio; that said deposit has been ever since and is now so maintained.

"IN WITNESS WHEREOF, I have hereunto set my hand and caused my official seal to be affixed, the day and year first above written.

"GEO. W. INGHAM,
"Superintendent of Insurance of the District of Columbia."

Section 9367 of the General Code of Ohio is determinative of this question, and is as follows:

"No such company shall transact any business of insurance in this state unless one hundred thousand dollars of its assets are invested in the interest paying bonds or stocks of the United States, or of this state, or of any municipality or county thereof, or in the interest paying state bonds or stock of some other state of the United States, of the market value of one hundred thousand dollars in the city of New York or in bonds and mortgages on unincumbered real estate in this state, or in the state under the laws of which it was organized, of at least double the value of the amount loaned thereon, and such bonds and mortgages are deposited with the superintendent of insurance of this state or the chief financial or other officer of the state in which such company was organized, designated by the laws of such state to receive them. If such bonds and mortgages are deposited with the superintendent of insurance or other officer of another state, the superintendent of insurance of this state shall be furnished with the certificates of such state officer, under his hand and official seal, that he as such officer, holds in trust and on deposit, for the benefit of the policy holders of such company, the securities above mentioned, giving the items thereof, and stating that he is satisfied such securities are worth at least one hundred thousand dollars."

I have been furnished a most able and comprehensive brief on this question by Hon. A. I. Vorys, and without going into the question fully, I may say that I agree with his view, that if power has been delegated to the superintendent of insurance of the District of Columbia to make a rule requring deposits by insurance companies in practically the same manner as such requirement is made by section 9367 of the General Code of Ohio, such rule could be held to satisfy the requirement to the extent that it would have the same effect as a law; also that the District of Columbia can be considered, for the purposes of this question, as a state; but it seems to me that the deposit, as made in this instance, does not meet the mandatory requirements of our act. You will take notice that section 9367 makes it mandatory that such bonds and mortgages must be "deposited with the superintendent of insurance of this state or the chief financial or other officer of the state in which such company was organized, designated by the laws of such state to receive them." The requirement is further that, "If such bonds and mortgages are deposited with the superintendent of insurance or other officer of another state, the superintendent of insurance of this state shall be furnished with the certificate of such state officer, under his hand and official seal, that he, as such officer, holds in trust and on deposit, for the benefit of the policy holders of such company, the securities above mentioned."

This requirement seems to be mandatory and plain, it specifies directly that such deposit must be made with the chief financial or other officer of the state * * * designated by law to receive them, and further it specifies and requires that you, as superintendent of insurance of this state, must be furnished with the certificate of such state officer that he, as such officer holds in trust and on deposit said securities.

It will be seen from the certificate made by The Commercial National Bank and by the superintendent of insurance of the District of Columbia that these securities are not held by any officer of the District of Columbia, but that they are held by the Commercial National Bank of the city of Washington D. C. Therefore, it would be impossible for the superintendent of insurance of the District of Columbia (granting for the purpose of the argument that the District of Columbia can be treated as a state, and the rule of the superintendent of insurance as a law) to furnish you the certificate required by section 9367.

I have reached this conclusion with great reluctance, for I understand from you, and other sources, that this is a most excellent company, and one which your department would be glad to have do business in this state; but I am convinced that the legislature intended, in making this requirement as to the trustee for such deposits by insurance companies, to protect the policy holders to the greatest possible extent by requiring such deposit to be made in all cases with the superintendent of insurance of this state, or with the chief financial officer or some other officer of the state in which the company was organized, designated by the laws of such state to receive and hold such deposits. This requirement being made so plain and explicit it seems to me it would be not only improper, but contrary to the fundamental rules of statutory construction to read an exception into this statute upon this important particular.

Yours very truly,

TIMOTHY S. HOGAN,

Attorney General.

Addendum:

Since writing the above opinion the superintendent of insurance of the District of Columbia has made a rule requiring deposits made by legal reserve life insurance companies to be made with him for the benefit of the policy holders of such companies. This rule has been approved by the commissioners of the District of Columbia, and a certified copy of the same has been filed with you, and in pursuance of said rule the Equitable Life Insurance Company of the District of Columbia has made a deposit of $100,000 in securities with the superintendent of insurance of the District of Columbia, and such fact has been certified to you. The certificate evidencing this deposit is as follows:

"UNITED STATES OF AMERICA, DISTRICT OF COLUMBIA,
DEPARTMENT OF INSURANCE.

May 13, 1913.

"I, GEORGE W. INGHAM, do hereby certify that I am superintendent of insurance of the District of Columbia; that the Equitable Life Insurance Company is a corporation duly organized under the laws of the congress relating to the District of Columbia, and is duly authorized to transact the business of life insurance; that under the authority conferred upon me as such superintendent of insurance by said laws of the congress, I duly made and promulgated a rule and regulation requiring that when a legal reserve, life insurance company, authorized under the laws of, and located in the District of Columbia, shall make a deposit of securities in the District of Columbia for the benefit of its policy holders, such deposit shall be made with the superintendent of insurance, in trust for the benefit of the policy holders of the company, and such deposit shall be held by said superintendent of insurance of the District of Columbia in trust for the benefit of policy holders of the company until all the obligations of the company, for the protection of which the deposit is made, are paid or extinguished; subject, however, to the right of the company to substitute other acceptable securities and to receive the interest, dividends and income on said securities so long as the same are not required to discharge the liabilities for the protection of which said deposit was so made, a copy of which said rule and regulation is hereto attached, together with the certificate of approval of the same by the commissioners of the District of Columbia:

"That by a further rule and regulation I duly required said The Equitable Life Insurance Company to invest one hundred thousand dollars ($100,000.00) of its assets in promissory notes secured by mortgages on unincumbered real estate in said District of Columbia, of at least double the value of the amount loaned thereon, and to deposit said securities with me as said superintendent of insurance in trust, in pursuance of said rule and regulation.

"I hereby further certify that said The Equitable Life Insurance Company duly so invested one hundred thousand dollars ($100,000.00) of its assets in said described securities, and a schedule of the notes and mortgages, in which said investments were so made, is hereto attached, showing respective dates of notes and mortgages, amounts of loans, location of real estate mortgaged, values thereof, maturity of loan and rates of interest payable on the loans;

"That I am satisfied said notes and mortgages are worth at least one hundred thousand dollars, and that said The Equitable Life Insurance Company, in pursuance of said rule and regulation, did on the 13th day of May, 1913, duly deposit all of said notes and mortgages with me as said superintendent of insurance and trustee, and I certify that said deposit ever since has been and is now so maintained.

"And I certify that as said superintendent of insurance of the District of Columbia, I hold said securities in trust for the benefit of all the policy holders of said company, and that said deposit cannot be withdrawn until all the obligations of the company, for the protection of which said deposit was made, are paid or extinguished; subject, however, to the right of the company to substitute other acceptable securities and to receive the interest dividends and income on said securities so long as the same are not required to discharge the liabilities for the protection of which said deposit was so made.

"IN WITNESS WHEREOF, I have hereunto set my hand and caused my official seal to be affixed, the day and year first above written.

"GEO. W. INGHAM,
"Superintendent of Insurance of the District of Columbia."

The certificate of the commissioners of the District of Columbia showing the rule made by the superintendent of insurance and the approval of the same by said commissioners is as follows:

WASHINGTON, May 10, 1913.

"Ordered:

"That the following rule and regulation of the superintendent of insurance of the District of Columbia is hereby approved by the commissioners of the District of Columbia, viz:

"UNITED STATES OF AMERICA, DISTRICT OF COLUMBIA,
DEPARTMENT OF INSURANCE.

"May 10, 1913.

"Under the provisions of section 646 of the laws of congress relating to insurance, providing:

"Said superintendent shall have power to make such rules and regulations subject to the general supervision of the commissioners, not inconsistent with law, etc."

"and section 645, providing:

"Said superintendent shall have supervision of all matters pertaining to insurance, insurance companies and beneficial orders and associations, subject only to the general supervision of the commissioners.

"The superintendent of insurance of the District of Columbia, subject to the approval of the District commissioners, hereby make and establishes the following rule and regulation, to wit:

"When a legal reserve, life insurance company, organized under the laws of and located in the District of Columbia, shall make a deposit of securities in the District of Columbia for the benefit of its policy holders, such deposit shall be made with the superintendent of insurance, in trust for the benefit of the policy holders of the company, and such deposit shall be so held by said superintendent of insurance of the District of Columbia in trust for the benefit of policy holders of the company, until all the obligations of the company, for the protection of which the deposit is made, are paid or extinguished; subject, however, to the right of the company to substitute other acceptable securities and to receive the interest, dividends and income on said securities so long as the same are not required to discharge the liabilities for the protection of which said deposit was so made.

"GEO. W. INGHAM,
"Superintendent of Insurance of the District of Columbia."

The laws of the District of Columbia relative to insurance are very brief, make simply general provisions and give very broad discretionary power to the superintendent of insurance to prescribe rules for the conduct of insurance companies and their business.

Sections 645 and 646 are as follows:

"Section 645. * * * Said superintendent shall have supervision of all matters pertaining to insurance, insurance companies and beneficial orders and associations, subject only to the general supervision of the commissioners."

"Section 646. * * * Said superintendent shall have power to make such rules and regulations, subject to the general supervision of the commissioners, not inconsistent with law, as to make the conduct of each company in the same line of insurance conform in doing business in the district."

Under the authority of section 646 the superintendent of insurance made the rule which is above set out. Under this same authority the superintendent of insurance of the District of Columbia has made regulations as to the basis for calculating reserves for fire and life insurance companies, a rule prescribing the table which shall be used in computing the reserves of life insurance companies, also rules prescribing the class of investments for the capital of life insurance companies, and in fact rules on practically all the important branches of the insurance business which in our state are covered by specific laws.

"No such company shall transact any business of insurance in this state unless at least one hundred thousand dollars of its assets are invested in the interest paying bonds or stocks of the United States, or of this state, or of any municipality or county thereof, or in the interest paying state bonds or stocks of some other state of the United States, of the market value of one hundred thousand dollars in the city of New York, or in bonds and mortgages on unincumbered real estate in this state, or in the state under the laws of which it was organized, of at least double the value of the amount loaned thereon, and such bonds and mortgages are deposited with the superintendent of insurance of this state or the chief financial or other officer of the state in which such company was organized, designated by the laws of such state to receive them. If such bonds and mortgages are deposited with the superintendent of insurance or other officer of another state, the superintendent of insurance of this state shall be furnished with the certificate of such state officer, under his hand and official seal, that he as such officer, holds in trust and on deposit, for the benefit of the policy holders of such company, the securities above mentioned, giving the items thereof, and stating that he is satisfied such securities are worth at least one hundred thousand dollars."

The companies particularly referred to are specified by section 9365 which provides:

"No company organized by act of congress, or under the laws of any other state of the United States, shall transact any business, etc."

Strictly speaking this company would be a company in no way subject to or recognized by the laws of this state for it is not organized by an act of congress nor is it organized under the laws of any other state of the United States, but it is organized under the laws of the District of Columbia.

I take it that it was not meant by the enactment of our insurance code relative to foreign insurance companies, to exclude companies which might be organized in any district or territory of the United States from doing business in this state. If such had been the intention it would have been expressed; nor do I take it that it was the intention to allow such companies to do business in this state without complying with our statutes. On the contrary, I think that the only reasonable construction to be placed upon our laws is that these laws are made for the protection of the policy holders in insurance companies, they are not made to discriminate against any company on account of its location. In brief, these statutes make requirements for the protection of policy holders and if insurance companies comply with these requirements then I think hey could, under our laws, no matter where they are located, and should be allow to do business.

Section 9367, I take it, should not be construed from a territorial view point nor from the standpoint of the insurance companies. Its purpose, it seems to me, is to provide that no foreign life insurance company shall transact business in this state until at least $100,000 of its assets, invested as required by the section, are deposited with the superintendent of insurance in this state or with the chief financial or other officer of the state in which the company was organized, designated by the laws of such state to receive such deposits. The purpose of the statute is to secure the deposit of the securities with some official of the state. It seems to me that it is not essential that the territory in which the company is located shall be a state. There would be no reason whatever for such a holding because it would only result in excluding companies organized in the District of Columbia or in some territory of the United States no matter how sound such companies might be, and for the additional reason that if such was the holding then we would have no laws that could be applied to such companies, and they consequently would be allowed to do business in this state without coming under such requirements. In addition, for the purpose of this question, as well as for practically all purposes relating to comity and intercourse between the states, the District of Columbia can be treated as a state.

In fact it seems to me that upon the question of insurance and the transaction of insurance business, as between the District of Columbia and the state of Ohio, the District of Columbia is for all practical purposes a state.

It is also my opinion that the rule promulgated by the superintendent of insurance of the District of Columbia under the authority given him by the code of that state, for all practical purposes, answers the requirements of section 9367, that the deposit shall be with the "chief financial or other officer * * * designated by the laws of such state to receive them." If it is within the authority of the commissioner to make this rule, then such rule must be considered as a law of the state, just as the rules or orders made by our public utilities commission, when reasonable and within their powers, have the force and effect of laws in this state. (56 Fed. 746, and many other cases which could be cited.)

But again, the question as to whether or not this rule is a law, is immaterial so far as this inquiry is concerned. Whether it is a rule or a law, its purpose is to require the insurance companies to make the deposit with the superintendent of insurance, and the insurance company has complied with this requirement and made the deposit. If any objection should be made, it would have to be made by the insurance company, and as stated, it has complied with the order, and in so doing has met the requirement made by our statute.

My opinion, therefore, is that this company has done everything which is required by section 9367; that the only possible ground upon which it could now be excluded would be that the District of Columbia is not a state, and this holding would result in construing section 9367 as a prohibitive statute in regard to insurance companies, that is prohibitive on account of location, and not of qualification, and I can find nothing in this section or in any of the sections of our insurance code which indicate the intention of the legislature to exclude a company organized anywhere in the United States, which complies with all the requirements of our laws, from doing business in this state simply on account of its location.

I am, therefore, of the opinion that the deposit made by this company with the superintendent of insurance of the District of Columbia is a substantial requirement with our laws and is sufficient to authorize the admission of this company to do business in this state.

Yours very truly,

TIMOTHY S. HOGAN,
Attorney General.

ASSIGNMENT OF WAGES FOR PURPOSE OF PAYING INSURANCE PREMIUMS IS INVALID.

Insurance premiums are not necessaries within the purview of section 12946-1 and section 12946-2, General Code, and the assignment of future or unearned wages for the purpose of making provision for the payment of insurance premiums is invalid.

COLUMBUS, OHIO, August 11, 1913.

HON. E. H. MOORE, Superintendent of Insurance, Columbus, Ohio.

DEAR SIR:—I have your favor of June 28, 1913, requesting opinion from me in which you say:

> "I enclose you a letter from the Standard Accident Insurance Company which is self explanatory.
> "The matter concerning which a ruling of this department is asked is one not relating primarily to insurance, but is of considerable moment and general interest, for all of which reasons I respectfully request your opinion as to the construction to be placed upon section 2 of senate bill No. 132, being an act to provide for the payment of wages at least twice in each calendar month. Such request resolves itself into two queries:
> 1. "Does the act in question forbid any assignment of wages except to the extent of 10 per centum thereof, and then only for necessaries?
> 2. "Are insurance premiums 'necessaries' within the purview of the act?"

The act referred to by you (103 O. L. 154) has been carried into the General Code as sections 12946-1 and 12946-2, and the same provide as follows:

> "Section 12946-1. That every individual, firm, company, copartnership, association or corporation doing business in the state of Ohio, who employ five or more regular employes, shall on or before the first day of each month, pay all their employes engaged in the performance of either manual or clerical labor, the wages earned by them during the first half of the preceding month ending with the fifteenth day thereof and shall on or before the fifteenth day of each month pay such employes the wages earned by them during the last half of the preceding calendar month; provided however, that if at any time of payment an employe shall be absent from his or her regular place of labor and shall not receive his or her wages through a duly authorized representative, such person shall be entitled to said payment at any time thereafter upon demand upon the proper paymaster at the place where such wages are usually paid and where such pay is due. Provided nothing herein contained shall be construed to interfere with the daily or weekly payment of wages."
> "Section 12946-2 No such corporation, contractor, person or partnership shall by a special contract with an employe or by any other means exempt himself or itself from the provisions of this act, and no assignment of future wages, payable semi-monthly, under these provisions shall be valid, but nothing in this act shall prohibit the assignment by an employe of ten per centum of his personal earnings, earned or unearned, to apply on a debt for necessaries. Whoever violates the provisions of this act shall be punished by a fine of not less than twenty-five nor more than one hundred dollars."

The questions submitted by your inquiry depend for their solution upon a construction of the last section of the General Code above set out. I am of the opinion that the words "payable semi-monthly" found therein, limit and are descriptive of the words "future wages" immediately preceding, and not the word "assignments." This is evident from the whole context of the act, and especially from the words under "these provisions," immediately following the descriptive words in question. It follows, therefore, that no assignment of future wages by an employe who is within the provisions of this act is valid unless the same shall be to apply on a debt for necessaries, and then only to the extent of ten per centum of such future or unearned wages.

Your inquiry however, is whether the act in question forbids any assignment of wages except for necessaries to the extent of ten per cent. thereof. Prior to the enactment in question it was the decided law in this state that an assignment of wages whether earned, or to be earned in the future, under an existing employment was valid.

Porter vs. Dunlap, 17 O. S., 591.

The language of the enacting clause "no assignment of future wages payable semi-monthly under these provisions shall be valid" read separate and apart from the proviso or saving clause following is affective to invalidate all assignments of future wages by an employe within the provisions of this act. The express reference in the language quoted to future wages excludes by implication wages that have been earned from the meaning of the language quoted and leaves wholly unaffected and unchanged the prior law permitting the assignment by an employe of wages that have been earned. (73 O. S. 64, 80.)

The proviso or saving clause immediately following the enacting clause of section 12946-2, is as follows:

> "But nothing in this act shall prohibit the assignment by an employe of ten per centum of his personal earnings, earned or unearned, to apply on a debt for necessaries."

The question suggested by this language of the statute is, whether or not the language quoted having expressly provided that an assignment by an employe of ten cent. of his personal earnings, earned or unearned to apply on a debt for necessaries shall not be prohibited, prohibits by implication, an assignment by him of earned wages other than for necessaries. The language quoted, though not formally so stated, is in substance and effect but a proviso or saving clause, in that its only manifest purpose is to limit or restrain the operation of the general terms contained in the enacting clause of this section immediately preceding, and is not, therefore, to be considered as an enactment in addition to what precedes.

Allen vs. Parish, 3 Ohio, 187, 193.
Zumstein vs. Mullen, 67 O. S., 382, 409.

> 'It is the matter of the succeeding words and not the form, which determines whether it is or not a technical proviso."

Carroll vs. State, 58 Ala., 401.

The language of the section making provision as to assignments of wages for necessaries was not in the bill as introduced, but was inserted afterwards, and before enactment. As before noted, the terms of the section, apart from the saving clause, was to make invalid assignments of future wages for any purpose; and it is reasonable to believe that the legislature, by incorporating in the act the particular language noted as to assignments of wages for necessaries, were actuated therein by a purpose only to withdraw such assignments of future wages from the inhibition of the enacting clause which in itself made invalid all assignment of future wages. I conclude, therefore, that the provisions of this section as to assignment of personal earnings for necessaries, is not an independent enactment, but is in substance a proviso or exception, and as such, effective in its operation only as a limitation on the terms of the enacting clause immediately preceding.

Buckman vs. State, 81 O. S., 171, 180.

On the considerations above noted as pertinent to the construction of this section, I am of the opinion that assignments by employes who are within the act, of wages that have been earned is not inhibited, and the prior law as to such assignments remain unaffected and unchanged. Moreover, the consideration that statutory provision which attempt to abrogate or modify a well established rule of the common law should not be extended beyond the plain import of the words used, leads to the same conclusion that the prior law respecting the assignment of wages that have been earned is unaffected by anything in this section.

State, ex rel., vs. Fronizer, 77 O. S., 7, 16.

It may be added, that where possible, a legislative enactment should not be so construed as to inject any unnecessary question as to its constitutional validity in whole or in part.

Burt vs. Rattle, 31 O. S., 116
Bobilya vs. Priddy, 68 O. S., 373, 387.

It is to be concluded, therefore, that the effect and only effect of this section is to inhibit and invalidate all assignments by employes within the act, of future or unearned wages excepting assigments thereof to apply on debts for necessaries, which by its terms are valid to the extent of ten per cent. of such future or unearned wages.

The second question made in your inquiry is: Are insurance premiums necessaries within the purview of the act? It is evident that the word "necessaries" as used in section 12946-2 is used primarily in the same sense as that properly ascribable to the word as used in our exemption laws with respect to executions or attachments. (Sections 10253, 11725, 11738, 11819, General Code.)

In none of the sections of the exemption laws above noted is there any attempt to define the word "necessaries" as used therein. The term is one whose meaning is often important in other connections and is applied to other legal relations; such as that of infants and persons mentally incompetent with respect to commodities, services or other things of value furnished to them; likewise that of the husband or parent with respect to goods or services furnished the wife or child. There are still other relations in which the signification of the term may become important in the particular case.

Though the immediate context indicates that the legislature in the use of the term "necessaries," in section 12946-2, used the same primarily in the sense in which the term is used in the exemption laws, yet, in the construction of this section it may become important to determine the signification of the term as applied to other legal relations. This would be true, for instance, with respect to a minor employed under the provisions of the act whose circumstances might not be such as to bring him within the protection of the exemption laws.

It has been suggested that some decisions limit the definition of necessaries for an infant may contract to a narrower class than do the exemption statutes. (9 N. P. N. S., 582.)

I am of the opinion however, that whatever difference there may be in the attitude of the courts with regard to the rights of creditors as against an infant on the one hand, and against persons setting up exemption laws on the other, has respect rather to the circumstances under which the goods or services claimed to be necessaries are furnished than to any difference in the definition or meaning of the term itself in the two relations. For example, though one furnishing supplies to an infant as necessaries is bound to know whether he is already supplied, such is not the case under our exemption laws with respect to attachment on a claim for necessaries furnished an adult person.

Smith vs. Getz, 9 C. C. N. S., 321, 323.

In no relation in which the proper definition and meaning of the term may become important, do I understand that the term is ever one of absolute or fixed signification. In every instance the question in so far as it may depend on the signification of the term is largely a relative one depending on the facts and circumstances of the particular case.

Bouvier as quoted in the case of Watkins vs. Schlecter, 7 N. P., 42, defines the term as follows:

> "Such things as are proper and requisite for the sustenance of man, including food, clothing, medicine and habitation, the term 'necessaries' is not confined simply to what is requisite barely to support life, but includes many of the conveniences of refined society. It is a relative term which must be applied to the circumstances and conditions of the party."
> "The word 'necessaries' is not used in the Ohio statutes in the narrow of articles which are indispensable, but it includes all articles which will enable them to live conveniently and decently according to the custom of those among whom they reside."

Pittsburg Water Heating Co. vs. Meckel, 9 N. P. N. S., 581.

However, before the law will permit an inquiry into the facts of a particular case to determine whether articles or services are "necessaries" they must be of such nature or character that the law can say concerning them that under some circumstance or character that the law can say concerning them that under some circumstance they may be considered as such. In other words, though the term itself is a relative one, there are some things which as a matter of law may be said not to be "necessaries."

Tupper vs. Cadwell, 12 Met. 559.
Simpson vs. Pru. Ins. Co., 184 Mass. 349.

In this state, it has never been suggested that insurance contracts may be classed as necessaries or that premiums thereof are binding and collectable obligations as such. On the contrary, it has been assumed that as against an infant, insurance premiums are non-enforcible and voidable at his option.

Life Ins. Co. vs. Hilliard, 63 O. S., 478, 491.

Since the decision in the above case infants have been made competent by statute to contract for life insurance within certain limitations (section 9392-I, G. C.). This legislation is without significance here, other than as legislative recognition of the fact that, aside from the provisions of the statutute, insurance contracts of an infant are not on any consideration enforcible against him.

In other jurisdictions the decisions have been to the point that insurance contracts are not within the class of necessaries in the legal sense of that term as here used.

Simpson vs. Pru. Ins. Co., 184 Mass. 349.
N. H. Met. Ins. Co. vs. Noyes, 32 N. H., 345.
Johnson vs. N. W. Mut. Life Ins. Co., 46 Minn., 365, 370.

I am therefore of the opinion that insurance premiums are not "necessaries" within the purview of the act in question, and that assignments by employes who are within the provisions of the act of future or unearned wages for the purpose of making provision for the payment of insurance premiums are not authorized, but are invalid.

Very truly yours,
TIMOTHY S. HOGAN,
Attorney General.

BLUE SKY LAW APPLIES TO CONTRACTS ENTERED INTO IN ANTICIPATION OF ITS PASSAGE, PROVIDING FOR THE SALE OF STOCK AT MORE THAN FIFTEEN PER CENT—CONTRACTS OF THIS NATURE ENTERED INTO AFTER THE PASSAGE OF THE BLUE SKY LAW AND BEFORE ITS GOING INTO EFFECT ARE CONTROLLED BY THE BLUE SKY LAW.

Where an insurance company prior to the passage of the Blue Sky law, had entered into a contract with some underwriting concern for the sale of its stock at a larger commission than fifteen per cent, such concern may not take subscriptions from the public for such stock without being bound by the provisions of such act.

The Blue Sky law is a statute passed under the police power of the state and the right of the legislature to regulate sales of this kind cannot be questioned.

Where a contract was entered into subsequently to the passage of the act, but before it went into effect, the provisions of the Blue Sky law apply.

COLUMBUS, OHIO, August 6, 1913.

HON. EDMOND H. MOORE, Superintendent of Insurance, Columbus, Ohio.

DEAR SIR:—On July 21, 1913, you made the following request for my opinion:

"I enclose you a letter from Halfhill, Quail & Kirk with reference to the construction to be placed on section 12 of the Blue Sky law.

"A like question will arise in reference to several other insurance companies, which, in anticipation of the law, have made contracts for the sale of their stock at commission so abnormal as to amount to a fraud upon the public, and which seek now to avoid the operation of the law, as regards the sale of their stock, by the claim that the limitation imposed by section 12 of the Blue Sky law would impair the obligation of the contracts which such companies have respectfully entered into with various agents, underwriting concerns and companies.

"I respectfully request the opinion of your department upon the following:

1. "Where an insurance company, prior to the passage of house bill No. 357, commonly known as the Blue Sky law had entered into a contract with some underwriting concern for the sale of its stock at a larger commission than fifteen per cent, may such underwriting concern take subscriptions from the public for such stock without being bound by the provisions of section 12 of the act, and contrary to the provisions thereof?

2. "May this be done where the contract was entered into subsequent to the passage of the act, but before it went into effect?

"An early reply to these questions will be appreciated."

You also enclose me with your request a letter from Mr. Max E. Meisel, of Clevelabd, Ohio, in re The Ohio Commonwealth Fire Insurance company. I have carefully considered both letters and especially the arguments contained in the letter of Mr. Meisel and the questions raised by the two letters are embraced in your request for my opinion.

Section 12 of what is commonly known as the Blue Sky law, 103 Ohio Laws, 743, found on page 749, is as follows:

"No person or company shall, for the purpose of organizing or promoting any insurance company, or of assisting in the flotation of its stock after organization, dispose or ofler to dispose, within this state, of any such stock, unless the contract of subscription or disposal shall be in writing, and contain a provision substantially in the following language:

'No such sum shall be used for commission, promotion and organization expenses on account of any share of stock in this company in excess of_____ per cent. of the amount actually paid upon separate subscriptions (or, in lieu thereof there may be inserted, '$_____per share from every fully paid subscription,') and the remainder of such payments shall be invested as authorized by the law governing such company and held by the organizers (or trustees as the case may be) and the directors and officers of such company after organization, as bailees for the subscriper, to be used only in the conduct of the business of such company after having been licensed and authorized therefor by proper authority.'

"The amount of such commission, promotion and organization expenses shall in no case exceed fifteen per cent. of the amount actually paid upon the subscription.

"Funds and securities held by such organizers, trustees, directors or officers, as bailees, shall be deposited with a bank or trust company of this state or invested as provided in sections ninety-five hundred and eighteen and ninety-five hundred and nineteen of the General Code until such company has been licensed as aforesaid."

Section 23 of said act found on page 753 is as follows:

"Nothing herein contained shall be so construed as to impair the obligation of prior contracts."

The question in brief is, does section 23 allow persons or companies, for the purpose of organizing or promoting any insurance company, to dispose or offer to dispose, within this state, of any stock in any such insurance company unless the contract of subscription or disposal of such stock shall be in writing and contain the provision provided in section 12? In other words, if such persons or companies have entered into contracts with other persons or companies to sell their stock at a larger commission than the amount prescribed by the statute are such contracts excepted from the operation of the law and said companies allowed to sell stock without the restrictions imposed by the law?

Section 23 of the Blue Sky law above quoted is certainly no stronger and can be given no broader effect than the provisions of our constitution, section 23 of article II, which is as follows:

> "The general assembly shall have no power to pass retroactive laws, or laws impairing the obligation of contracts; but may, by general laws, authorize courts to carry into effect, upon such terms as shall be just and equitable, the manifest intention of parties and officers by curing omissions, defects and errors in instruments and proceedings arising out of their want of conformity with the laws of this state."

Indeed, it can be regarded as a reiteration of said constitutional provision, which is also found in the constitution of the United States.

It is contended that section 23 of the act operates to exempt from its provisions all contracts made prior to its going into effect.

Upon consideration it is difficult to see how this could be its effect. The evident purpose of the general assembly in enacting this section was to furnish a rule of construction to the courts, with a view to preserving the validity of the act against possible attack; fearing, no doubt, that without such provision same part of the act, literally construed, might be in derogation of the constitutional inhibition against impairment of the obligation of contracts.

That this must have been in the mind of the general assembly is apparent when we consider that either with or without this section any law impairing the obligation of prior contracts would be invalid. While, in the absence of this provision, if the courts should find that the legitimate construction to be placed on the language of the act was that it sought to impair the obligation of contracts, the courts, of necessity, must declare the act invalid.

Since the language of the constitution is used in the statute, it must be supposed that the general assembly had in mind the construction that the courts have placed upon the constitutional provision, and that it used the words "impairment" and "obligation" as these terms had theretofore been judicially defined.

The section does not purport to be one of exemption, taking out certain classes of contracts from under the operation of the statute, but assumes merely to lay down a rule of construction. With or without it, the act would be powerless to impair the obligation of contracts, but, in its absence, the courts might have held that the effect of the statute would be to attempt to do this thing, and that therefore the act would be repugnant to the constitution.

As will be observed from the cases hereafter cited, the state, in the exercise of its police power, may lawfully prohibit the doing of an act even though individuals may have theretofore contracted between themselves to do it; and this prohibition by the state is not construed to be within the constitutional inhibition, even though thereby the carrying out of such private contract is made impossible.

The power of the state is neither extended or abridged by the section in question. In the case of the contract in question, moreover, it is apparent that its obligation is in no wise impaired, even if we should take of the section under consideration the well nigh impossible view that it is one of exemption rather than of construction.

The obligation of the contract referred to is not impaired. It is only within this state that the act undertakes even to impose conditions upon the sale of stock. Both the corporate principal and the agent, or the company and the underwriter, as the case may be, can proceed to sell the company's stock under the terms of their contract anywhere else in the world; and, even in this state, the statute does not attempt to impair the obligation of the contract, as between the parties, but only to prevent the agent from doing a thing as regards third parties, which it is admitted that the principal cannot do. To put any other construction than this upon the statute would be to say that while a corporation of Illinois cannot sell its stock within this state without complying with the statute, yet, if it had, prior to the 8th day of August, entered into a contract with somebody else to sell its stock for it, this act, prohibited to the principal, could be performed within our borders by the agent without lot or hindrance. The mere statement of this absurd proposition furnishes its own refutation.

In the light of the authorities cited, it is clear that where the state has, within the proper exercise of its police power, prohibited the doing of a certain act, such prohibition is not in conflict with the constitutional provision referred to, even if private contracts have been entered into for the doing of the probihited thing. How, then, can it logically be contended that the passage of an act, admittedly within the legitimate exercise of the state's police powers, prescribing conditions under which a sale of stock may be made within this state, is in derogation of such constitutional provision? Especially in view of the fact that there is nothing within the terms of the contract itself that makes it imperative that it shall be performed within this state.

I have no hesitancy, therefore, in holding that the constitutional inhibition does not apply to or save the contracts to which you refer from the operation of the statute. This statute is passed under the police power, and its object is to promote the welfare of the people at large, and the question is not raised here and it is needless to consider it as the constitutionality of the act and the right of the legislature to regulate the sales of stock of this kind cannot be questioned.

"Palmer vs. State, 39 Ohio State, 236."

As to the question as to whether or not contracts of this character are saved by the constitutional provision I cannot improve upon the language used by Professor Freund in his work on police power, section 556, which is as follows:

> "It seems, however, that the constitutional prohibition applies only to laws impairing the obligation of the contract for the benefit of the party obligated. It is not an objection to an otherwise valid police regulation that it makes the performance of a contract valid in its inception impossible. Thus, the power of the state to regulate railroad rates is not defeated by the fact that the railroad company has made a contract with another railroad company that it will not charge less than the rate fixed by the existing statute (Buffalo East Side Street R. Co. vs. Buffalo Street R. Co., 111 N. Y., 132, 2 L. R. A., 384), or that the railroad company has incurred indebtedness upon the basis of an earning capacity calculated on higher rates, (Chicago, B. & Q. R. Co. vs. Iowa, 94 U. S., 155; this point was made in New York and New England R. R. Co. vs. Bristol, 131 U. S. 556, but not considered by the court) and the mere fact that a high rate of interest on bonds cannot be paid under a proposed tariff, would not make that tariff unreasonable.
> "The regulation by the legislature of the pressure of natural gas in pipes was held valid although it affected existing contracts, (Jamieson vs. Indiana Natural Gas & Oil Co., 128 Ind. 55, 12 L. R. A. 652) and it has been held that the operation of an ordinance establishing fire limits is not affected by an existing contract to erect a frame house on premises covered by the ordinance, although lumber has been bought on the faith of the contract. (Salem vs. Manyes, 123 Mass. 372; Knoxville vs. Bird, 12 Lea. (Tenn.) 121. See also, New York vs. Herdje, 68 App. Div. 370, 74 N. Y. Suppl. 104.) So the validity of an act requiring a railroad company to elevate or depress its tracks would not be a affected by the existence of contracts with adjoining owners for track connections. (See Branson vs. Philadelphia, 47 Pa. St. 329).

"Contrary to this doctrine, it was formerly held in Missouri and Kentucky that the power of the state to prohibit or revoke lottery grants could not be so exercised as to defeat rights of purchasers or lenders upon the faith of the franchise, especially when the sale of the franchise had been expressly authorized; but the United States supreme court has held that the abrogation of monopolies is valid notwithstanding such contracts. If, indeed, the grantees of a lottery franchise can be deprived of rights for which they have paid, it follows logically that those claiming under them must be equally unprotected.

"Undoubtedly in all these cases the obligation of a contract is impaired, but it is not impaired in order to confer a benefit upon the obligor or debtor. The principle is that a person cannot, by entering into a contract, impair the power which the state must have for the protection of peace, safety, health and morals. If this were not so, an owner of property who apprehended that a police regulation would be passed affecting his property, would have it in his power to nullify its effect in advance, by making contracts inconsistent with its enforcement. That the relief from the contractual obligation individually benefits the party previously bound by it, is no objection to the validity of the statute, provided such relief is not the primary object of the law. For this purpose laws which impair existing contracts as being prejudicial to public safety and morals should be treated as not enacted for the primary benefit of the party bound. Upon this theory a law limiting hours of labor in the interest of safety or health may apply to existing contracts, although it is within the legislative power to exempt existing contracts from its operation. Strong considerations of public policy require the exemption of existing contracts, and this policy is raised into a principle of constitutional law when the object of the statute is relief from pecuniary or economic burdens."

It seems that from the above authority and the decisions there cited that clearly a negative answer must be given to both of your questions, and especially to the second question for the reason, as pointed out by Professor Freund in the paragraph quoted above, that a contrary holding would allow corporations and persons, by entering into socalled contracts, whether in good faith or not, during the referendum period, to nullify the laws of this state. A further reason why negative answers should be given to each of your questions is also found in the fact that both of the requests made of you come from corporations and our constitution contains the following provisions, section 2 of article I, and section 2 of article XIII, and even if the law as it stood had allowed these corporations to enter into the class of contracts now claimed, still such laws were subject to amendment or repeal and said corporations acquired no vested rights under the same, nor no privileges which could not thereafter be altered or taken away.

Yours truly,

TIMOTHY S. HOGAN,

Attorney General.

COMPANIES WRITING LIABILITY INSURANCE AND COMPANIES THAT INSURE CORPORATIONS AND PERSONS AGAINST LOSS OR DAMAGE ON ACCOUNT OF PERSONAL INJURY OR DEATH RESULTING FROM ACCIDENT, OTHER THAN EMPLOYES, MUST MAKE THE DEPOSIT AS REQUIRED BY LAW.

Corporations that write liability insurance, as well as those companies which insure persons or corporations against loss or damage on account of personal injury or death resulting from an accident, other than employes, must make the deposit required by paragraph 2, section 9510, General Code.

COLUMBUS, OHIO, October 13, 1913.

HON. EDMOND H. MOORE, Superintendent of Insurance, Columbus, Ohio.

DEAR SIR:—In your letter of September 19, 1913, you make the following request for my opinion:

"Paragraph 2, section 9510, General Code, provides that, among other classes of insurance that may be written by companies of the class referred to in such paragraph, such companies may:

" 'Make insuranse to indemnify employers against loss or damage for personal injury or death resulting from accident to employes or persons other than employes, and to indemnify persons and corporations other than employers, against loss or damage for personal injury or death resulting from accidents to other persons or corporations. But a company of another state, territory, district or country, admitted to transact the business of indemnifying employers and others, in addition to any other deposit required by other laws of this state, shall deposit with the superintendent of insurance * * * fifty thousand dollars,' etc., etc.

"Liability for personal injury and death resulting to persons other than employes, from accidents occasioned by automobiles, is daily growing to constitute a considerable class of risks against which automobile owners seek indemnity.

"Certain casualty companies which do not write employers' liability insurance, desire to cover under their automobile policies this hazard, but contend that it is unnecessary to make the deposit referred to, and many of them would prefer not to write the insurance rather than to have so large a part of their capital tied up in the shape of a special deposit.

"The usual form of the insuring clause in the automobile liability policy reads substantially as follows:

" 'To indemnify the insured againat loss from the liability imposed by law for damages on account of bodily injuries or death suffered by any person or persons other than employes, as the result of an accident occurring while this policy is in force and caused by reason of the use, ownership or maintenance of the automobile covered hereunder.'

"I respectfully request your opinion upon the following:

"Where an insurance company does not write employers' liability insurance, but merely indemnifies persons or corporations against loss or damage for personal injury or death resulting from accidents to persons other than employes, is it necessary for such insurance company to make the deposit referred to in paragraph 2, of section 9510:

"In other words, is the word 'and' used in the phrase 'admitted to transact the business of indemnifying employers and others', to be read 'or'? "

As you have fully quoted the portion of paragraph 2 of section 9510 of the General Code, which gives rise to your inquiry, it is unnecessary to quote it again.

It is well known that the word "or" is frequently used in the same sense as the word "and." In fact there is good authority for holding that the words are interchangeable as may be required to give the statute meaning.

Section 397, of Lewis' Sutherland Statutory Construction, 2nd edition, is as follows:

"The popular use of "or" and "and" is so loose and so frequently inaccurate that it has infected statutory enactments. While they are not treated as interchangeable, and should be followed when their accurate reading does not render the sense dubious, their strict meaning is more readily departed from than that of other words, and one read in place of the other in deference to the meaning of the context."

It seems to me therefore, that the use of the word "and" in the statute now under consideration is an instance where the word should be given the meaning usually expressed by the word "or." If this were not done, and the word "and" should be regarded as used strictly in its ordinary sense, then this statute would fail to accomplish what seems to me is its expressed intent, viz., that foreign companies transacting the business of indemnity insurance shall make a deposit with the superintendent of insurance of this state to protect the holders of policies issued by them.

The first clause of the first sentence of the paragraph provides that companies may be admitted to make insurance "to indemnify employers against loss or damage for personal injury or death resulting from accidents to employes or persons other than employes."

The second clause provides that such comapnies may make insurance "to indemnify persons and corporations other than employers against loss or damage * * from accidents to other persons or corporations."

The sentence placing the restriction on such companies provides that, "a company * * * admitted to transact the business of indemifying employers and others" must make the deposit.

The clause appearing in the policy issued by the companies which claim to be exempt, as stated by you, provides for insurance "against loss * * * suffered by any person or persons other than employes * * *."

The statute is plain upon its face. It authorizes,

First, the issuance of insurance policies to employers to insure them against loss or damage on account of injuries or death from accidents to employes or persons other than employes.

Second, the issuance of insurance to indemnify all persons and corporations other than employers.

The restrictive portion of the section clearly refers to the two classes named in the first portion of the paragraph, viz., "employers" and "persons and corporations other than employers," referred to by the word "others."

It seems clear to me, therefore, that the restrictive portion of this statute applies to both classes of policies and, if necessary, the word "and" as used may be read as "or." If this is not done, then a company which qualified to make insurance, and did make insurance as authorized by the first section, indemnifying employers only against loss resulting from injuries or death of employes, would not have to make the deposit because it did not issue such insurance to "employers and others," and the company which made insurance as provided by the second clause of the paragraph, insuring persons other than employers would not have to make the deposit because it did not insure employers. This would result in the deposit being required only from companies whom issued policies to employers protecting them against loss or damage on account of injuries or death resulting from accidents to employes or persons other than employes, which, in turn, would mean that it would not only be impossible, but entirely feasible, to write all the insurance authorized by this section without making any deposit whatever. That is, one company could write insurance policies protecting employers against loss on account of injuries to employes, and another company could write policies protecting against loss to persons other than employes, for, manifestly, the fact that a person may be classes as an employer, for instance, the owner of a factory, would not classify him as an employer in case he wished to buy an insurance policy protecting him from accidents caused by his automobile to persons not in his employ.

My opinion, therefore, is that not only the companies which write employers' liability insurance, as commonly understood, but also companies which insure person or corporations against loss or damage on account of personal injury or death resulting from accidents to persons other than employes, must make the deposit required by paragraph 2 of section 9510, General Code.

Very truly yours,
TIMOTHY S. HOGAN,
Attorney General.

BUILDING AND LOAN ASSOCIATIONS NOT AUTHORIZED TO RECEIVE AND HOLD COUNTY, CITY AND TOWNSHIP FUNDS.

Inasmuch as the statutes do not so authorize, building and loan associations may not become depositories of county, city and township funds.

COLUMBUS, OHIO, May 15, 1913.

HON. E. H. MOORE, Inspector, Building and Loan Associations, Columbus, Ohio.
(HON. JAMES A. DEVINE, Deputy).

DEAR SIR:—On February 5, 1913, you made the following request for my opinion:

> "Has a building and loan association the right to bid on county, city and township funds, and, if they are awarded same under a bid, are they permitted under the statute to handle such funds?"

I have carefully examined the provisions of the General Code relative to the depositing of public funds of counties, cities and townships and find no authority whatever for depositing any such funds with building and loan associations, nor for building and loan associations bidding for such deposits.

The provisions for the depositing of county funds, sections 2715 to 2745 inclusive, refer only to banks and trust companies. The sections as to municipal funds, sections 4294 to 4299 inclusive, refer only to banks (but I take it that wherever the word "bank" is used trust companies having power to receive money on deposit would also be included).

The sections as to township funds, being sections 3320 to 3326, inclusive, refer only to banks but the word "depository" is also used. The first section relating to township funds, 3320 is as follows:

> "The trustees of any township shall provide by resolution for the depositing of any or all moneys coming into the hands of the treasurer of the township, and the treasurer shall deposit such money in such bank, banks or depository within the county in which the township is located as the trustees may direct subject to the following provisions."

As the subsequent sections refer only to banks I take it that "depository" as used in section 3320, refers also to banks and probably to trust companies, and cannot be held to include building and loan associations.

An act was passed by the 80th general assembly authorizing the treasurer of state to deposit state funds in a limited amount in building and loan associations located in the districts in Ohio affected by the floods of 1913. This act is now in operation. With this exception I know of no authority in law for depositing the public funds of the state, or any of its political divisions, in building and loan association.

Yours very truly,
TIMOTHY S. HOGAN,
Attorney General.

STREET ASSESSMENTS ON REAL ESTATE OWNED BY BUILDING AND LOAN ASSOCIATION INDISPENSABLY CONNECTED WITH AND SHOULD BE CHARGED TO SUCH REAL ESTATE.

COLUMBUS, OHIO, May 15, 1913.

HON. E. H. MOORE, Inspector of Building and Loan Associations, Columbus, Ohio.
(HON. JAS. A. DEVINE, Deputy).

DEAR SIR:—In your letter of March 25, 1913, you make the following request for my opinion:

"Where building and loan associations carry real estate accounts, can street assessments be charged as a part of the cost to such real estate accounts?

When a building and loan association is held to pay a street assessment upon real property owned by it, it would seem not only right to charge such street assessment to the cost of such real estate, but in fact that is the only place where it could properly be charged if a real estate account is carried by the association. A street assessment is not an ordinary expense; it is attached to and inseparably connected with the real property on which it is assessed, and should, therefore, be charged to that property.

Yours very truly,
TIMOTHY S. HOGAN,
Attorney General.

BUILDING AND LOAN COMPANY—NAME OF DEPOSITOR SHOULD APPEAR ON CERTIFICATE OF DEPOSIT IN BUILDING AND LOAN COMPANY—RECORD OF CERTIFICATE.

The practice of a building and loan company making certificates of deposit in which the name of the depositor does not appear on the certificate nor on the books of the company, the record of the certificate being kept by number only, is a practice that is obnoxious to the principal upon which building and loan companies are founded and should not be permitted by the building and loan department.

COLUMBUS, OHIO, May 16, 1913.

HON. E. H. MOORE, Inspector, Building and Loan Associations, Columbus, Ohio.
(HON. JAMES A. DEVINE, Deputy).

DEAR SIR:—On September 14, 1912, you made the following request for my opinion:

"We are enclosing herewith specimen copy of coupon certificate of deposit, recently put into use by a certain building and loan association, and beg to call your attention to the advertising matter on the back thereof, describing the two different forms of these certificates, viz:

"1. Registered; that is, made out in the name of the depositor.

"2. Made payable to bearer, 'in which latter case the name of the depositor does not appear on the certificate nor on the books of the company; the record of the certificates being kept by number only.'

"Will you kindly advise whether the use of this unregistered certificate is permissible under the present building and loan laws, or does the fact that such a certificate (payable to bearer with the possibility of its being transmitted by the depositor to another person without such transfer being entered upon the company's records) and the interest accruing thereon, could be collected by anyone in whose possession the certificate might be, bring the use of such a certificate within the class of business which a building and loan association is prohibited from doing?

"We would also direct their attention to what they say in regard to the 'strictest privacy' afforded by such certificate."

The portions of the advertisement to which you refer are as follows:

"These certificates are either registered, that is, made out in the name of the depositor, or are made payable to bearer, in which latter case the name of the depositor does not appear on the certificate nor on the books of the company; the record of the certificate being kept by number only.

"This insures the strictest privacy, and thus no one but the depositor himself knows how much money he has on deposit or where it is deposited.

"For various reasons it frequently happens that it is very desirable that a depositor's surplus funds shall be kept strictly private, and by placing them in an unregistered certificate of deposit, they are free from any kind of outside interference whatsoever, being in this respect safe, convenient and serviceable as unregistered municipal government bonds.

"INCOME.—These certificates bear 5 per cent. interest payable twice a year; and thus, in addition to the absolute safety they provide, return a much higher rate of interest than municipal or government bonds which yield from 2 to 4 per cent. at the very most. A coupon is attached to this certificate for each six month's interest. When this interest is due, the depositor simply clips it off and deposits it at his bank as he would a check, or cashes it wherever it may be most convenient for him to do so. As the coupons are made payable to bearer, they do not require any endorsement or identification.

"WITHDRAWABLE:—These certificates can, under ordinary circumstances, be withdrawn by the depositor at any time desired. Notice of withdrawal has never been required by the company, although it reserves the right to require the usual sixty days' notice in case of unforeseen emergencies that might arise through causes beyond the control of the company. This right is reserved merely as an additional safety measure andisfor the general protection of all the depositors of the institution, though as above stated, it has never been put into effect, nor is there any special reason to expect that it ever will. Nevertheless it is a safeguard which conservative business methods warrant."

I would call your attention to the following sections of the General Code, relative to deposits in building and loan associations.

"Section 9648. To receive money on deposit, and all persons, firms, corporations and courts, their agents, officers and appointees may make such deposits and stock deposits, but such corporation shall not pay interest thereon exceeding the legal rate. When such deposits or stock deposits are made to the joint account of two or more persons, whether adults or minors, with a joint order to the corporation that such deposits or any part thereof are to be payable on the order of any one or more of such joint depositors, and to continue to be so payable, notwithstanding the death or incapacity of one or more of the persons making them, such account shall be payable to any one or more of such survivors or survivor or order, notwithstanding such death or incapacity. No recovery shall be had against such corporation for amounts so paid and charged to such account.

"Section 8652. To permit withdrawal of deposits upon such terms and conditions as the association provides except by check or draft. But no such association shall be permitted to carry for any member or depositor any demand, commercial or checking account. Nothing in this chapter shall prevent members or depositors from withdrawing funds by non-negotiable orders."

In the first place the certificate, as described in the advertisement, violates, at least by implication section 9652, because it is practically held out as a demand account, that is, while the association reserves the right to acquire sixty days' notice, it is stated that under ordinary circumstances the deposits can be withdrawn at any time, which of course would amount to "on demand."

In addition, it seems clear to me that section 9648 contemplates that all deposits in building and loan associations shall appear in the name or names of the person or persons making the deposits, or for whose credit the deposit was made. To permit deposits of this character, issuing the certificate of deposit payable simply to bearer, with no record on the books of the company whatever to show by whom the deposit was made, and nothing whatever to identify it except the number, it seems to me would be very bad business for any institution receiving money on deposit, and especially obnoxious to the principle upon which building and loan associations operate.

My opinion is that the receiving of deposits in this manner and the issuance of such certificates should not be permitted by your department.

Yours very truly,
TIMOTHY S. HOGAN,
Attorney General.

P. S. I herewith return the certificate which you forwarded to this department.

MAGAZINES—NEWSPAPERS—AMERICAN BUILDING ASSOCIATION NEWS —BUILDING AND LOAN ASSOCIATION—ANNUAL REPORT.

The distinction between a magazine, especially a monthly magazine, and a newspaper is well marked. A newspaper is not and cannot be considered a monthly magazine.

The American Building Association News is not a newspaper as prescribed by section 683 of the General Code, which provides that annual reports of building and loan associations shall be published in a newspaper regularly issued in the county in which it is located.

COLUMBUS, OHIO, July 22, 1913.

HON. E. H. MOORE, Inspector, Building and Loan Associations, Columbus, Ohio.

DEAR SIR:—In your letter of July 10, 1913, you make the following request for my opinion:

> "I desire your opinion upon the following question:
> "Section 683 of the General Code provides that annual reports of building and loan associations shall be published 'in a newspaper regularly issued in the county in which it is located.'
> "I am enclosing with this letter copies of the American Building Association News, a monthly magazine published and issued at Cincinnati, Ohio. The question is, 'Is the American Building Association News a newspaper as prescribed by the statute?'
> "I am submitting you copies of the issue of this magazine for December, 1912, January, February, March, April and May, 1913, received at this office monthly as a regular issue and a regular subscriber. I also submit copy of the issue of May, 1913, obtained by request from the Ohio Valley Loan & Building Company, of Cincinnati, who reported in their annual statement that publication had been made in said American Building Association News. You will observe that the sworn statements are not published in the regular issue of this magazine, but that the supplement attached to the May, 1913, issue, shows the form in which these reports are published.
> "I also submit a brief sent to this department by the American Building Association News, supporting their contention that they are within the purview of the statutes, a newspaper."

Section 682 of the General Code is as follows:

> "The report required in the preceding section shall be the form and contain such information as is prescribed by the inspector of building and loan associations. It shall be sworn to by the secretary and its correctness attested by at least three directors or an auditing committee appointed by the board. The original shall be filed with the inspector of building and loan associations within forty days after the close of the fiscal year. Such an abstract thereof as the inspector requires shall be posted for sixty days in the office of meeting place of such association, and published in a newspaper regularly issued in the county in which it is located."

Therefore, the sole question to be answered is whether the American Building Association News is a "newspaper regularly issued in the county in which it is located." I take it from your letter, and from the copies of the magazine which have been submitted to me, that there can be no question but that the American Building Association News is regularly issued in the county in which the Ohio Valley Loan and Building Company is located, i. e., Hamilton county, Ohio, and, therefore, the question is whether this publication is a newspaper?

The law books are full of definitions of the term "newspaper" but though the definitions are so numerous, strangely enough, it seems almost impossible to find one that is definite. Perhaps the best definition is that given in 29 Cyc., page 693, which is as follows:

> "A newspaper is the ordinary acceptation of the term is a publication in sheet form, intended for general circulation, published regularly at short intervals, and containing intelligence of current events of general interest. It follows from this definition that if a publication contains the general current news of the day, it is none the less a newspaper because it is devoted primarily to special interests, such as legal, religious, political, mercantile or sporting."

The Century dictionary defines the term as follows:

> "A paper containing news; a sheet containing intelligence or reports of passing events, issued at short but regular intervals, and either sold or distributed gratis; a public print, or daily, weekly, or semi-weekly periodical, that presents the news of the day, such as the doings of political, legislative, or other public bodies, local, provincial or national current events, items of public interest on science, religion, commerce, as well as trade, market and money reports, advertisements and announcements, etc."

The definition in Webster is as follows:

> "A sheet of paper printed and distributed, at short intervals for conveying intelligence of passing events; a public print that circulates news, advertisements, proceedings of legislative bodies, public documents, and the like."

I have carefully examined the copies of the American Building Association News which you have sent me, viz.: the issue for December, 1912, for January, February, March, April and May, 1913. The publication itself proclaims on the first page that it is a monthly magazine, its caption or title page being as follows:

THE AMERICAN BUILDING ASSOCIATION NEWS
A Monthly Magazine
Official Organ United States League
Offices:—15 West Sixth St., Cincinnati; 314 S. Canal St., Chicago.
Subscription, $2.00 Per Annum. Canadian and Foreign, $2.25
Entered as Second Class Matter at the Post Office at Cincinnati, O., under Act of Congress of March 3, 1879.
Since 1880, The Recognized Authority on Building Association Matters.

Vol. XXXIII. May, 1913. No. 5.

On the cover of the magazine it is also stated that it is published monthly. On examining the copies which you have sent me I find that all of its contents relate to matters of interest to building and loan associations; that is, particularly to the associations themselves. I am unable to find any current or general news whatever, and applying the definitions above given to this publication I cannot find that it answers the definition in any particular. It is not in sheet form; from its purpose and contents it cannot be designed for general circulation; at the widest its circulation could only be among those interested in building and loan association matters; it is not published regularly at short intervals, although I take it that it is published regularly, yet it is published once each month, and so far as I can ascertain it contains no intelligence of current events of general interest not any of the current news of the day.

I am, therefore, compelled to hold that it is not a newspaper as contemplated by the statute. Even if this publication did answer some of the requirements held to be necessary to constitute a newspaper, still I would be compelled to hold that it is not a newspaper; it is a monthly magazine, and so proclaims itself, and I have never heard of a monthly magazine being called a newspaper. It will be noted in the definition given in the Century dictionary, above quoted, that a newspaper is a "public print, or daily, weekly or semi-weekly periodical." The same authority also defines a "magazine as" a pamphlet periodically published, containing miscellaneous papers or composition." The definition in Webster is substantially the same. Therefore, the distinction between a magizine, especially a monthly magazine and a newspaper is well marked, and a newspaper is not and cannot be considered as a monthly magazine.

My holding, therefore, is that the American Building Association News is not a newspaper as prescribed by section 683, General Code.

In addition to the above, and upon an examination of the copies of this magazine sent to me, I find that the report of the financial statement of the Ohio Valley Loan and Building Company was not contained in any form in the issue of the magazine for May which was sent to you, but that in another issue of the same magazine for the same month a sheet of paper, called "supplement to the American Building Association News" is pasted in the copy of the magazine. This so-called sheet, or supplement, contains the financial statements of seven building and loan associations and a small advertisement of the American Building Association News, and nothing else. There is no index of the magazine that refers to the supplement, and from the fact that it appears in one copy of the May issue and does not appear in the copy sent to you, it would seem that it was not included in all of the copies of the issue. This, of course, would not be "publication in a newspaper (even if the said magazine were a newspaper) as required by the statute. The statute provides that the statement must be "published in a newspaper" and were the question before me, I would be compelled to hold that the statute means what it says—that the statement must be actually published in a newspaper and not simply printed on a separate sheet and pasted on to the paper which purports to publish it.

Yours very truly,
TIMOTHY S. HOGAN,
Attorney General.

P. S. Copies of the magazine and other papers sent to me are returned herewith.

PERSONS MAKING DEPOSITS IN A BUILDING AND LOAN COMPANY CANNOT BE HELD AS STOCKHOLDERS UNLESS THEY SUBSCRIBE FOR CAPITAL STOCK.

A person making deposits in a building and loan company in the manner provided in their respective constitutions, cannot be treated as a member or stockholder unless he subscribes for a definite number of shares of capital stock of such association.

COLUMBUS, OHIO, July 18, 1913.

HON. E. H. MOORE, Inspector, Building and Loan Associations, Columbus, Ohio.
(HON. JAMES DEVINE, Deputy).

DEAR SIR:—I am in receipt of your letter of March 25, 1913, in which you make the following request for my opinion:

> "Can a building and loan association carry running stock accounts without a written subscription for a designated number of shares in such association?"

Section 9649 of the General Code is as follows:

> "To issue stock to members on such terms and conditions as the constitution and by-laws provide. Each member may vote his stock in whole or fractional shares, as the constitution and by-laws provide, but no person shall vote more than twenty shares in any such corporation in his own right, nor have the right to cumulate his votes. But every subscriber for stock in accordance with the constitution of the association, may vote the amount of stock so subscribed for, in no event to exceed twenty shares."

You will note that this section refers to "every subscriber for stock." Taking the language of this section and the language of the entire chapter governing building and loan associations there is nothing which can give rise to the inference that stock in an association can be issued in any other way than the method usually followed. That is, that each person desiring to have stock issued to him must, in some manner, subscribe for the same or else have a certificate of stock issued to him. It seems to me that the methods proposed by the constitutions of the associations which are quoted by you do not amount to stock subscriptions at all. They are nothing more nor less than ordinary deposits, and it would be impossible if a person, making a deposit of this kind, objected, to hold him as a stockholder. There would be no agreement, express or implied, by which he could be held unless it could be shown that he had read the constitution and by-laws of the association and fully agreed and assented to them when he made the deposit.

It was held in the case of the Turner Bau-Verein, No. 3 vs. Robert Woodburn, 27 Ohio Law Bulletin, 409, that a person making a general deposit in a building and loan association is not a member. The court at page 411, says:

> "I am aware that for many years section 3834 has given a power to receive general deposits and loan them to members, but these general deposits may be made by non-members without subscribing for shares, and in such unlimited amount as the association may determine; but such depositors are not shareholders or members, and cannot be fined, or share in the dividends, or receive interest or earnings in excess of legal rates."

I would call your attention to section 9642 of the General Code, which reads as follows:

> "To permit withdrawal of deposits upon such terms and conditions as the association provides except by check or draft. But no such association shall be permitted to carry for any member or depositor and demand commercial or checking account. Nothing in this chapter shall prevent members or depositors from withdrawing funds by non-negotiable orders."

Though you do not quote the provisions of these constitutions as to withdrawals, yet on deposits made in this extraordinary method, in the absence of anything to the contrary, the suspicion arises that this is a method devised to allow building and loan associations to transact an ordinary banking business, which cannot be done.

My opinion, therefore, is that persons making deposits in building and loan associations in the manner provided in these respective constitutions cannot be treated as members or stockholders unless they subscribe for a definite number of shares of the capital stock of such associations.

Yours very truly,
TIMOTHY S. HOGAN,
Attorney General.

INFANTS INCLUDED WITHIN EMPLOYERS LIABILITY ACT—PAYMENT FOR INJURIES OUT OF STATE FUNDS VOIDABLE UPON ATTAINMENT OF MAJORITY—PAYMENT TO GUARDIAN.

As a general rule of law, all contracts of an infant, except those for necessaries, are voidable by him at his election made within a reasonable time after he becomes of age. Inasmuch as it has been deemed necessary by the legislature to make express exception in certain cases, with reference to contracts which are binding upon him, (to wit. the receipt of a minor for money deposited by him with a building and loan association or a bank, and the payment for a life insurance policy) and as no such exception has been made with reference to the payment of an infant out of the liability funds for injuries received by him, an infant must be held to have the right to sue at law for injuries sustained, upon the attainment of his majority, notwithstanding such payment.

Where injuries are sustained, therefore, and such minor is entitled to payment from the state fund, such payment should be made to his guardian, and if he has no guardian, the board of awards should require one to be appointed before making payment.

COLUMBUS, OHIO, December 20, 1912.

State Liability Board of Awards, Columbus, Ohio.

GENTLEMEN:—In your letter of April 15, 1912, you make the following request for my opinion:

> "We desire your opinion as to the statue of minors under the workmen's compensation act. The questions upon which we desire your opinion are:
> "1. Does the manner of election provide in section 20-1 apply to minors as well as adults?
> "2. And in case a minor is injured, after his employer has elected to take advantage of the workmen's compensation act, and such minor is entitled to the benefits of the act, should such benefits be paid directly to the minor, or is it necessary that payments be made to a guardian?"

The questions asked by you are very important, and I have had great difficulty in satisfying my own mind as to the same, and, for this reason, I have refrained until now from expressing my opinion.

It seems to be settled that all contracts of an infant, except for necessaries, are, in general, either void or voidable. A contract to supply necessaries, at a reasonable price, is binding upon a minor; except for necessaries, and except where a special statutory provision is made, the rule seems to be as stated above. In the case of Harner vs. Dipple, 31 O. S., 72, at page 73, the court say:

> "Except for necessaries, the law grants to infants immunity from liability on their contracts. This immunity is intended for their protection against imposition and imprudence, and is continued after majority as a mere personal privilege. This privilege of immunity, after majority, is not given because of the actual or supposed incapacity of an infant to enter into contracts intelligently and prudently."

And again, on page 77, the court say:

> "In the light of principle, therefore, as well as by the weight of the later authorities, the whole question should be thus resolved: The privileges of infancy is accorded for the protection of the infant from injury, resulting from imposition by others or his own indiscretion. That object is fully accomplished by conferring on him the power to avoid his contracts, or, in other words, by giving him immunity from liability until such contracts are ratified by himself after arriving at full age."

In the case of Lemmon vs. Beeman, 45 O. S., 505, at page 509, the court say:

"The true doctrine now seems to be that the contract of an infant is in no case absolutely void. 1 Par. Cont. 295, 328; Pol. Cont. 36; Harner vs. Dipple, 31 O. S., 72; Williams vs. Moor, 11 M. & W., 256. An infant may, as a general rule, disaffirm any contract into which he has entered, but, until he does so, the contract may be said to subsist, capable of being made absolute by affirmance, or void by disaffirmance, on his arriving at age; in other words, infancy confers a privilege rather than imposes a disability."

The question raised by your request is, therefore, whether the case of a minor, employed by an employer who has elected to come under the terms of the Ohio workmen's compensation act, is an exception to the general rule. There are many strong reasons why it should be regarded as such an exception. In the first place, as stated in the letter of Mr. Yaple, accompanying your request, a minor may contract for services on his own account, his parents knowing of this and making no objection, and the child is entitled to his earnings, and payment to him would be a discharge against any claim of the parent. It is true, also, that it was, undoubtedly, part of the purpose in enacting the employers' liability act to provide a method by which an injured employe could receive compensation for his injuries without resurting to court, without the necessity of employing lawyers, and with no expense whatever; in other words, that the entire award should be paid to the employe. This purpose of the act is in part defeated in the case of an injured minor, if it is necessary to have a guardian appointed, to whom the award may be paid, for the reason that the appointment of a guardian necessitates resort to the probate court, court costs, and, in most cases, guardian's compensation and attorney fees. It is also true that the contract under which a minor employe comes under the Obio workmen's compensation act is a contract prescribed by law, a contract, in fact, in pursuance of the declared public policy of this state, and, consequently, a contract which could not possibly be regarded as unfavorable to the minor. It is true, too, that section 35 of the act provides that,

"Benefits before payment shall be exempt from all claims or creditors and from any attachment or execution, and shall be paid only to such employes or their dependents."

and thus clearly expresses the intent of the act, that in all cases payments are to be made directly to the person entitled thereto, without intervention being necessary from any source.

The above reasons, and each and all of them, tend very strongly to the conclusion that a contract of this character should be regarded as an exception to the general rule in regard to minors, and that payment could legally be made directly to the minor, and that such payment would be an acquittance, not only to the state liability board of awards, but would also relieve the employer from any liability to an action on behalf of the minor. I have given full weight to all of these considerations, and still they do not seem conclusive to me, in face of the firmly established principle of law in regard to minors, above mentioned, and other considerations which I shall now briefly mention.

Aside from contracts, all of the rights of minors are most carefully guarded by our laws; thus in the statutes of limitation, limiting the time within which various actions may be brought, it is found that an exception is made as to infants and persons of unsound mind, the limitation not starting to run until the disability is removed. There are many of these sections, applying to different kinds of actions, and, in fact, all of our code of civil procedure has woven into it this principle of the protection of minors—the provisions as to wills, as to the administration of estates, time for commencement of actions, proceedings in error, etc. The laws also provide that the action of an infant must be brought by his guardian or next friend.

Then, there is an entire chapter of the Criminal Code specifying and classifying offenses against minors. In this chapter is found a section (section 12989, General Code) providing a penalty for a person or corporation retaining or withholding from a minor, in his or its employment, the wages or compensation, or any part thereof, agreed to be paid and due such minor for work performed. This section, in a way, is responsive to one of the matters referred to in Mr. Yaple's letter—that the wages earned by a minor may be paid to the minor direct; in a way, compels such payment to the minor direct; and is an exception to the general rule.

The various statutes I have above referred to, both civil and criminal, have for their end the preservation of all the rights of a minor, whatever they may be, until he reaches the age of majority; and also seek to protect the minor, in all respects in which it has been demonstrated by experience that, in the matter of employment or otherwise, a minor should be protected.

I am not able to say that my search has been exhaustive but, at this time, I can only point to three statutory provisions by which the acts of a minor are made valid, which, except for the special provision of the statute, under the general rule first mentioned in this opinion, would not be valid. In the act governing building and loan associations is found section 9654, General Code, which is as follows:

> "To issue stock to minors and receive deposits thereon and permit both stock and deposits to be withdrawn, transferred, pledged and voted by such minors as other stock and stock deposits; to receive deposits of money by or for minors and to pay them to such minors, or upon their order. The receipt or paid order of such minor, therefor, shall be a valid acquittance of the rights of all concerned."

In the act relating to the organization and powers of banks is found section 9770, which is as follows:

> "When an account is opened in a savings bank by a minor it shall be payable to such minor, and payment to him shall be as valid as if he were of legal age."

In the act relating to legal reserve life insurance companies is found section 9392-1, General Code, which is as follows:

> "In respect to insurance heretofore or hereafter issued upon the life of any person between the ages of fifteen and twenty-one years, for the benefit of such minor, or for the benefit of the father, mother, husband, wife, child, brother or sister of such minor, the insured shall not, by reason only of such minority, be incompetent to contract for such insurance, or for the surrender of such insurance, or to give a valid discharge for any benefit accruing, or for money payable under the contract."

This last quoted section comes very close to the question we have before us, but it relates only to life insurance companies. Of course, the question could arise, and in fact has often arisen, whether a contract of life insurance, taken out by a minor is really a contract beneficial to the minor; this depends, of course, on each individual contract. But there can be no question but that the deposits in a building and loan association, and in a savings bank, by minors, are both contracts favored by the law, contracts which are certainly to the interest of the minor; and it could be said of them, as well as of the one which we have under consideration, that there is every reason why, when the deposit is made by the minor, of his own money, it should be proper for the same to be paid to him direct, and not cause him to have a guardian appointed. But it also seems clear, from the enactment of these sections, that, on account of the general rule as to minors, it was felt that a receipt by a minor for money which had been deposited by him with a building and loan association, or a bank, would not be valid in case the minor chose to disaffirm the same after reaching the age of majority; hence, the necessity of these statutes. I regard these provisions, special in their nature, as tending strongly to the conclusion that in the absence of special statutory provision, the rule as to the liability of a minor for his contracts is the same now as that quoted in the first part of my opinion, namely: that all contracts of an infant, except those for necessaries, are voidable.

> "All contracts of an infant, except those for necessaries, are voidable by him, at his election, made within a reasonable time after he becomes of age. Englebert vs. Pritchett, supreme court of Nebraska, as reported in 26 L. R. A., page 177. (See note.)
> "Where an infant, seventeen years old, obtains a policy of insurance, upon which he pays the premium and makes several semi-annual payments during his minority, but disaffirms the contract immediately upon his becoming of full age, and offers to surrender his policy to the insurance company, and demands the return of the money so paid, he can, in case of refusal, maintain an action for its recovery. Johnson vs. Northwestern Mutual Life Ins. Company, supreme court of Minnesota, as reported in 26 L. R. A., 187.
> "Upon repudiating his contract of life insurance and surrendering to the company its policy therefor, an infant may recover the whole amount of premiums paid by him thereon. Prudential Insurance Co. vs. Fuller, 9 C. C. N. S., 441."

Take a case where a minor employe is injured in the course of his employment, and the employer settles with such minor his claim for damages; it has been held, time and again, that such settlement does not protect the employer, and that the minor, upon reaching majority, can avoid the contract of settlement and bring an action for damages, notwithstanding the same.

The question really before us is:

> "In case a minor employe of an employer who has elected to come under the terms of the Ohio act, is injured in the course of his employment, makes application to your board for an award, and is granted an award as compensation for his injuries, after he reaches the age of majority, within a reasonable time, brings suit against his employer, on account of said injury, for which he had filed a claim and received an award, would the fact that the employer, at the time said injury occurred, was under the protection afforded by your board, and the employe had filed his claim and received an award, be a defense to said action?"

I am disregarding the question as to whether an offer was made by the minor after reaching majority, and before or at the time he brought such action, to repay to the state the amount he had received as an award from your board, as I do not feel that it is necessary to discuss it here, for we must take the broadest view of this question, and if such action could be maintained at all, it is immaterial for the purposes of this question whether or not restitution is necessary.

My opinion is that this question must be answered in the negative. The Ohio act is entirely silent as to minors; no reference whatever is made as to them; and, with the rule as to the liability of minors upon their contracts so well settled, with the decisions I have quoted in mind, also the further signicant fact that, in certain instances of contracts, which can be classed as of as much benefit to the minor as the contract with your board, the legislature has especially provided that payment to the minor should be an acquittance, I rather incline to the view that the courts would hold, in the absence of any such provision in the compensation act, that a minor could avoid the settlement made with him by your board, and hold his employer responsible.

Answering your questions specifically:

1. The manner of election provided in section 20-1 of the act does apply to minors to this extent; that is, a minor who remains in the employ of an employer, after the notice provided in said section, elects, or contracts, to come under the terms of the act; but he is not absolutely void by such contract; the same is voidable.

2. In my opinion, in case a minor is injured after his employer has elected to take advantage of the workmen's compensation act, and such minor is entitled to the benefits of the act, such payments should not be made directly to the minor, but should be made to his guardian. If he has no guardian the board should require one to be appointed before making payment.

Very truly yours,
TIMOTHY S. HOGAN,
Attorney General.

INTERSTATE COMMERCE—FEDERAL EMPLOYERS' LIABILITY AC PROHIBITS CORPORATION SUBJECT THERETO FROM TAKINT ADVANTAGE OF THE WORKMAN'S COMPENSATION ACT OF OHIO.

Under section 5 of the federal employers' liability act, any contract, rule, regulation or device, the purpose or intention of which enables any common carrier to exempt itself from liability under said act, is declared void; and in view of this provision a corporation subject to this federal employers' liability act cannot take advantage of the workman's compensation act of Ohio.

COLUMBUS, OHIO, April 1, 1913.

State Liability Board of Awards, Columbus, Ohio.

GENTLEMEN:—I am in receipt of the following request for an opinion, dated October 21, 1912:

> "Herewith please find enclosed letter of the 18th inst., from Charles G. Cunningham, general counsel for the Toledo Terminal Railroad Company, of Toledo, Ohio, which raises a question of importance concerning the application of the act of the general assembly of Ohio, under which this department is operating (102 O. L., 524), commonly known as the workmen's compensation law, in cases where the injured employe is employed by a carrier engaged in interstate commerce.

"I take it that the law is well settled that, where the federal government has authority to legislate on a particular question, that its power is supreme, provided it has enacted legislation relative to the subject; but until it has so acted the states may enact legislation on the subject.

"Congress has enacted an employers' liability act which if I am correct in my assumption, supersedes the acts of the several states in all causes of action coming within its scope, viz., actions against an employer engaged as a carrier in interstate commerce by an employe who has been injured while engaged as the servant of such carrier in carrying on interstate commerce. Therefore, I assume that as to all employers who are carriers engaged in interstate traffic that section 21-1 of the Ohio act above referred to would not govern, but the federal law would govern the rights of the parties.

"I believe, however, that as to all such employers and employes who have elected to operate under the corporation law by paying premiums into the state insurance fund, that the state law would govern, as congress has not yet enacted any legislation on the subject.

"As this is an important question, this department would appreciate an opinion from your department at a very early date."

The letter referred to states:

"A large part, if not all, of the employes of the Toledo Terminal fall within the class of interstate employes. While the Toledo Terminal Railroad is located entirely within two counties in the state of Ohio, the business it does is more than 90 per cent. interstate business. That is, it does a large switching business, interchanging cars between railroads and 90 per cent. at least of its cars are moved in interstate business. Under these circumstances, the statutes of the United States controlling the liability of employers engaged in interstate commerce would apply and we would receive practically no protection under the Ohio act. For these reasons, I do not believe it would be of any use to the Toledo Terminal to bring itself within the Ohio law."

As you state in your letter, "Congress has enacted an employers' liability act which, * * * superseded the acts of the several states in all causes of action coming within its scope.

It is stated by chief justice White in the case of the Northern Pacific Railway Company vs. The State of Washington, 222 U. S., page —— (decided January 9, 1912), in speaking of the authority of congress over interstate commerce:

"It is elementary, and such is the doctrine announced by the cases to which the court below referred, that the right of a state to apply its police power for the purpose of regulating interstate commerce, * * * exists only from the silence of congress on the subject, and ceases when congress acts on the subject, or manifests its purpose to call into play its exclusive power. This being the conceded premise upon which alone the state law could have been made applicable, it results that as the enactment by congress of the law in question was an assertion of its power, by the fact alone of such manifestation that subject was at once removed from the sphere of the operation of the authority of the state."

Many authorities might be cited upon this proposition, but it is so definitely settled that I deem it unnecessary to go further into this phase of this question. The result is that the Ohio workmen's compensation act is inoperative as an active agent against employers whose employes are engaged in interstate commerce. Such employers and employes are in a field over which the United States has thrown its jurisdiction by the enactment of the national employers' liability act; and the rules of law applicable to such an employe injured in the course of interstate employment would not be the rules prescribed by the laws of Ohio, but would be the rules provided by the laws of the United States.

In what is known as the "Second employers' liability case" (Mondou vs. N. Y., N. H. & Hartford R. R. Co., and other cases) 223 U. S., page 51, decided January 15, 1912, the validity of the act relating to the liability of common carriers by railroad to their employes in certain cases, approved April 22, 1908, and the amendment thereto, approved April 5, 1910, was sustained. Justice VanDevanter, in delivering the opinion of the court, said:

> "True, prior to the present act, the laws of the several states were regarded as determinative of the liability of employers engaged in interstate commerce for injuries received by their employes while engaged in such commerce. But that was because congress, although empowered to regulate that subject, had not acted thereon, and because the subject is one which falls within the police power of the states in the absence of action by congress. * * * The inaction of congress, however, in no wise affected its power over the subject. * * * And now that congress has acted, the laws of the states, in so far as they cover the same field, are superseded, for necessarily that which is not supreme must yield to that which is. * * *."

The only question remaining therefore, is that stated in your inquiry, that, "as to all such employers and employes who have elected to operate under the compensation law by paying premiums into the state insurance fund, that the state law would govern, as congress has not yet enacted any legislation on the subject."

It is true, congress has not enacted as yet a worman's compensation act. It is also true that the Ohio workmen's compensation act is not compulsory, and it is optional on both the employer and the employe whether or not they will elect to come under its terms, and it might well be supposed in the absence of legislation or decision to the contrary, that when an employer and employe, even though engaged in interstate commerce, elected, or contracted to come under the provisions of the Ohio act that they would be bound by such contract, but in the second employers' liability act above referred to, the following provision is made:

> "Section 5. That any contract, rule, regulation, or device whatsoever, the purpose or intent of which shall be to enable any common carrier to exempt itself from any liability created by this act, shall to that extent be void: provided, that in any action brought against any such common carrier under or by virtue of any of the provisions of this act, such common carrier may set off therein any sum it has contributed or paid to any insurance, relief, benefit or indemnity that may have been paid to the injured employe or the person entitled thereto on account of the injury or death for which said action was brought."

In the second employers' liability case, 223 U. S. 51, in speaking of this section of the act, the court said:

> "Next in order is the objection that the provision in section 5, declaring void any contract, rule, regulation or device, the purpose or intent of which is to enable a carrier to exempt itself from the liability which the act creates, is repugnant to the 5th amendment to the constitution as an unwarranted interference with the liberty of contract. But of this it suffices to say, in view of our recent decisions in Chicago, B. & Q. Co. vs. McGuire, 209 U. S., 549; Atlantic Coast Line R. Co. vs. Riverside Mills, 219 U. S., 388; and Baltimore & Ohio R. Co. vs. Interstate Commerce, 221 U. S., 612, that if congress possesses the power to impose that liability, which we here hold that it does, it also possesses the power to insure its efficacy by prohibiting any contract, rule, regulation or device in evasion of it."

And in the case of Philadelphia, Baltimore & Washington Ry. Co. vs. Schubert, 223 U. S., page ——, decided April 29, 1912, the court passed on section 5 of the second employers' liability act, above quoted, in a case brought against a railway company to recover damages for personal injury sustained by an employe in which the acceptance of benefits under a contract of membership in a company's relief department, is set up as a bar to the action, and justice Hughes in delivering the opinion of the court cited the quotation given above from the second employers' liability cases, and said further:

"Upon similar grounds, congress had the power to enforce the regulations validly prescribed by the act of 1908, by preventing the acceptance of benefits under such relief contracts from operating as a bar to the recovery of damages, and by avoiding any agreement to that effect. The question is whether this power has been exercised; that is, whether the stipulation of the contract of membership, asserted in defense, comes within the interdiction of section 5. The former act of June 11, 1906, * * * which was valid as to employes engaged in commerce within the District of Columbia * * * contained explicit provision that such a contract or the acceptance of benefits thereunder should not defeat the action. Section 3 of that act was as follows:

" 'That no contract of employment, insurance, relief benefit, or indemnity for injury or death, entered into by or on behalf of any employe, nor the acceptance of any such insurance, relief benefit, or indemnity by the person entitled thereto, shall constitute any bar or defense to any action brought to recover damages for personal injuries to or death of such employe: Provided, however, that upon the trial of such action against any common carrier, the defendant may set off therein any sum it has contributed toward any such insurance, relief benefit, or indemnity that may have been paid to the injured employe, or, in case of his death, to his personal representative.'

"But it is urged that the substituted provision of section 5 of the act of 1908—failed to embrace that which the earlier act specifically described. We cannot assent to this view. The evident purpose of congress was to enlarge the scope of the section, and to make it more comprehensive by a generic, rather than a specific, description. It thus brings within its purview 'any contract, rule, regulation, or device whatever, the purpose or intent of which shall be to enable any common carrier to exempt itself from any liability created by the act.' It includes every variety of agreement or arrangement of this nature; and stipulations contained in contracts of membership in relief departments, that the acceptance of benefits thereunder shall bar recovery, are within its terms."

Considering section 5 of the act, in connection with the language of the court in this case, and also taking into consideration the effect reached by an employer and his employes electing to come under the terms of the Ohio workmen's compensation act (which effect in reality is that the employe shall have compensation, and the employer shall be relieved from liability in an action in the courts) it seems that this arrangement comes under the inhibition of said section 5, for it must be conceded that the intent and purpose of the employer in electing to come under the Ohio workmen's compensation act is to exempt himself from liability created by the act, that is, liability for personal injuries suffered by his employes as provided by the act.

My conclusion, therefore, is that the Ohio workmen's compensation act would afford no protection to an employer engaged in interstate commerce who elected to come under its provisions, and paid in the premiums provided by law, in case of personal injury to one of his employes, provided such employe wished to bring an action in court. That is, that such action could be maintained under the act of the United States, notwithstanding section 20-1 of the Ohio act.

Very truly yours,
TIMOTHY S. HOGAN,
Attorney General.

THE QUESTION OF WHETHER A CLAIMANT IS A DEPENDENT IS A QUESTION OF FACT

Whether a claimant for compensation, under the workmens' compensation act, is a dependent of the killed or injured employe, is a question of fact to be determined by the state liability board of awards.

COLUMBUS, OHIO, September 9, 1913.

HON. WM. ARCHER, Secretary, State Liability Board of Awards, Columbus, Ohio.

DEAR SIR:—I have your favor of August 27th, wherein you ask for an opinion as to whether Elizabeth Frederick should be regarded as a dependent upon her son John Moeller, this being your claim No. 8152.

Elizabeth Frederich in her answers to the interrogatories submitted by your board, states that: she is married, resides with her husband who is the proprietor of a tailoring shop, she and her husband with four children, aged respectively fifteen, eighteen, twenty-three and twenty-eight years, reside together. John Moeller, the decedent, contributed weekly to the family support four ($4.00) dollars per week, and had resided with her as a member of the family all of his life, he being unmarried and having had no children. This statement is supplemented by the report of your traveling auditor which shows that Mrs. Frederich is living on a plot of ground six acres in extent, which was left to her and her children by her first husband and which, for the past two years, has yielded no profit, according to her claims. The tailoring establishment of her husband is small and its yearly earnings, which have not been ascertained, are based upon the claim that he purchased about $300.00 worth of material each year for the making of suits. The claimant had three sons by a former marriage, two of whom—the decedent and one of his brothers—paid $4.00 per week for board and gave her additional money when she needed it. Her daughters contribute nothing to her support.

It will be noted that there is some conflict between Mrs. Frederich's sworn statement and that of the statement of your auditor, in that in the one she says decedent contributed $4.00 a week to her support and in the other it is stated that this payment was for board, it being further said, however, that her sons gave her more money when she needed it.

Section 41 of the act creating the state insurance fund (102 Ohio Laws, 524) provides in part:

"The state liability board of awards shall disburse the state insurance fund to such employes * * *, or to their dependents in case death has ensued."

If there are no dependents the disbursements of the insurance fund shall be limited to the expenses provided for in sections 23 and 24.

If there are wholly dependent persons at the time of death, the payment shall be 66 2-3 per cent. of the average weekly wage, and to continue for the remainder of the period between the time of death and six years after the time of injury, and not to amount to more than a maximum of thirty-four hundred dollars ($3,400.00), nor less than a minimum of fifteen hundred dollars ($1,500.00).

If there are partly dependent persons at the time of death, the payment shall be 66 2-3 per cent. of the average weekly wage and to continue for all or such portion of six years after the date of the injury, as the board in each case may determine, and not to amount to more than a maximum of thirty-four hundred ($3,400.00) dollars.

From this it is clear that in order to justify payment to a claimant he or she must be wholly or partly dependent upon the decedent, and in this case the only question that arises is whether Mrs. Frederich was partly dependent upon her son, as the facts clearly show that she was not wholly dependent upon him.

A careful consideration of the authorities dealing with questions of this kind develops the fact that the meaning of the word "dependent" is purely one of fact—that is, did the claimant wholly or partly depend upon the decedent for support. In deciding this regard should be had:

(a) To the station in life of the claimant in order to ascertain what were necessaries for her, as it is the supplying of such necessaries, in whole or in part, that will determine the question of her dependency upon him who furnishes or helps to furnish these necessaries.

(b) To the support furnished her by her husband, for if he supplied her with all necessaries proper to her station in life, then she would be dependent upon no one else.

(c) To the income from and the value of her property (which by the way is not set out in the question here submitted) as, if her property were supplying her with all that was necessary for her, she would not be dependent upon anyone.

(d) To whether decedent gave his mother only $4.00 per week and that in payment of board, as the mere payment of board did not constitute her a dependent upon him who paid the board.

(e) To whether the additional sums of money, if any, be paid her, were necessary for her support, or were mere gifts for the purpose of enabling her to purchase things which were not at all necessary for her support in the station of life she occupied.

With these considerations in mind, if your honorable board should find that Mrs. Frederich's husband was not able to, and did not supply her with the necessaries to which her position in life entitled her, and that her property was insufficient for this purpose, and that decedent did so supply her, in whole or in part, then she is a dependent. If, however, her husband's earnings or her own resources, or both, were maintaining her in a manner suitable to her position in life, or, if decedent did not contribute to her support, except by the payment of money for board and lodging, the sum so paid by him being but the reasonable value of such board and lodging, or if decedent paid her more than the reasonable value of such board and lodging and such excess sum was used by her for the purchase of things that were not necessaries, as hereinbefore defined, then she was not a dependent within the meaning of the statutes, provided she was otherwise supplied with necessaries.

I have gone into this matter at some length in order that this opinion may meet with other situations which may arise in your determination of the questions here suggested, and was compelled to deal with the matter in an abstract way because the facts stated by you are not complete. In addition to this, your board should be the judge of the facts.

Very truly yours,
TIMOTHY S. HOGAN,
Attorney General.

LIABILITY BOARD OF AWARDS—PAYMENT OF AWARD TO DEPENDENTS OF AN ALIEN—FOREIGN CONSUL MAY NOT RECEIVE SUCH AWARD UNLESS AUTHORIZED BY PERSON ENTITLED TO AWARD—NO DISCRIMINATION MAY BE SHOWN—MOST FAVORED NATION CLAUSE IN TREATIES.

Whenever an employe suffers death in such a manner and under such circumstances as to entitle his dependents to an award from the state liability board of awards, then the liability board of awards should merely notify the consul of the country of which the person killed is a citizen of the fact that his dependents are entitled to an award from the board, and should proceed in the same manner in making the award as though the employe were a citizen of this country. No distinction in any way can be made in the matter of aliens dependents. The award may be made only to the dependents, or to a person deemed by the board as a competent and suitable person to receive the same in case of incapacity of the dependent or dependents. These payments may not be made to the consul of the country unless he is duly authorized to receive same.

COLUMBUS, OHIO, September 20, 1913.

State Liability Board of Awards, Columbus, Ohio.

GENTLEMEN:—On March 4, 1913, you made the following request for my opinion:

"This department has been notified of the death of Johann Schatz, an employe of the Columbus Iron & Steel company, of Columbus, Ohio, it being claimed that his death resulted from an injury received in the course of his employment.

"The Columbus Iron & Steel company is a contributor to the state insurance fund.

"The deceased was an alien and a native of Austria-Hungary, in which country, we are advised, a widow and minor child survive him.

"As we interpret the workmen's compensation law, the state liability board of awards is authorized to pay compensation in all cases of death direct to the dependents, and that such dependents may make application for the compensation due them, and that it is unnecessary for an administrator to be appointed in any case unless those sustaining the relation of dependents to the deceased are not sui juris.

"We are advised that the imperial and royal Austro-Hungarian conusul for the states of Ohio and Michigan, located at Cleveland, Ohio, claims to be authorized to receive and transmit to those who are entitled thereto, all compensation due to the deceased subjects of his country, by reason of certain provisions contained in existing treaties between the United States of America and his country, by virtue of which consular officers are made the legal representatives of all residents of that country who die intestate in this country.

"As we will no doubt have a great many such claims, we would appreciate your opinion as to the correct method of procedure to be adopted by this board in this and similar cases.

"We are transmitting a copy of this letter to Hon. Ernest Ludwig, imperial and royal Austro-Hungarian consul, of Cleveland, Ohio."

I also received from Hon. Ernest Ludwig, consul for Austria-Hungary for the states of Ohio and Michigan, the following letter, in connection with your request:

"The state liability board of awards of Columbus sent me a copy of a letter, which was addressed to you a few days ago requesting your opinion on the proper way of procedure to transmit benefits of the state fund to the dependent of a deceased, if such dependents live abroad.

"Permit me to draw your kind attention to the booklet herewith enclosed on the treaty rights of foreign consuls with reference to administrations of estates. Consulates are established as instruments of peace and harmony between two countries and co-operate with all courts and state officials in order to protect the rights of their respective foreign subjects. Consulates are the ex-officio representatives, attorneys of all the respective absent citizens as well as the home courts and home state officers.

"In view of the fact that so many hundreds of thousands of our people reside here in this state of Ohio, which belongs to my consular district, I have had the honor to call on His Excellency Governor Cox and Mr. Duffy, the chairman of the above board some time ago that some line of procedure could be worked out whereby the payments made by the board to absent beneficiaries could be made through the medium of the consulate. Estates of Austrian Hungarian aliens have been liquidated and transmitted to the next of kin heirs in the old country by this consulate in the past and as a new law has now been enacted, making workingmen's insurance compulsory and establishing a regular state board of awards, a similar question has come up now for the first time with reference to the death benefit of one John Schatz.

"This imperial and royal consulate in transmitting estates to the rightful heirs does not charge any fees whatsoever except the nominal fee of ¼ of one per cent. prescribed by the consulate tariff which is in force and approved by the governments of both countries. This nominal fee does actually not cover the loss in exchange, as the official exchange is better than under ordinary circumstances any bank of the country could allow. The transmission of such funds is made through official channels and in such a way to insure perfect safety, that the money really reaches those to whom it is intended by law, according to the order of distribution of the courts here or in cases such as the one at issue according to the award made by the state board. This is done because the Austro-Hungarian government desires to afford the maximum of protection (of the rights) to Austrian or Hungarian aliens while at the same time it desires that the friendliest possible relations be established with all local and state authorities.

"If you desire that this consulate's attorneys submit a further brief to you as to the right of consulates in connection with the transmission of estates or death benefits, I will be glad to direct them to do so at your instance."

There has also been submitted to me, in this connection, a brief prepared by Mr. Herman J. Nord, of Messrs. Reed, Eichelberger & Nord, which I have found very helpful in considering this question.

The law establishing the Ohio State liability board of awards (workmen's compensation act) provides:

"Section 1465-54. The state liability board of awards shall establish a state insurance fund from premiums paid thereto by employers and employes as herein provided, according to the rates of risk in the classes established by it, as herein provided, for the benefit of employes of employers that have paid the premium applicable to the classes to which they belong and for the benefit of the dependents of such employes, and shall adopt rules and regulations with respect to the collection, maintenance and disbursement of said fund.

"Section 1465-59. The state liability board of awards shall disburse the state insurance fund to such employes of employers as have paid into said fund the premiums applicable to the classes to which they belong, and have been injured in the course of their employment, wheresoever such injury has occurred, and which have not been purposely self inflicted, or to their dependents in case death has ensued.

"Section 1465-62. The board shall disburse and pay from the fund, for such injury, to such employes, such amounts for medical, nurse and hospital services and medicines, as it may deem proper, not, however, in any case, to exceed the sum of two hundred dollars, in addition to such award to such employe.

"Section 1465-63. In case death ensues from the injury reasonable funeral expenses, not to exceed one hundred and fifty dollars, shall be paid from the fund, in addition to such award to such employe.

"Section 1465-67. In case the injury causes death within the period of two years the benefits shall be in the amounts and to the persons following:

(1) "If there be no dependents, the disbursements from the insurance fund shall be limited to the expense provided for in sections 23 and 24,(General Code, sections 1465-62 and 1465-63).

(2) "If there are wholly dependent persons at the time of the death, the payment shall be sixty-six and two-thirds per cent. of the average weekly wage and to continue for the remainder of the period between the date of the death and six years after the date of the injury, and not to amount to more than a maximum of thirty-four hundred dollars, nor less than a minimum of one thousand five hundred dollars.

(3) "If there are partly dependent persons at the time of the death, the payment shall be sixty-six and two-thirds per cent. of the average weekly wage and to continue for all or such portion of the period of six years after the date of the injury, as the board in each case may determine, and not to amount to more than a maximum of thirty-four hundred dollars.

"Section 1465-68. The benefits, in case of death, shall be paid to such one or more of the dependents of the decedent, for the benefit of all the dependents, as may be determined by the board, which may apportion the benefits among the dependents in such manner as it may deem just and equitable. Payment to a dependent subsequent in right may be made, if the board deem proper, and shall operate to discharge all other claims therefor.

"Section 1465-69. The dependent or person to whom the benefits are paid shall apply the same to the use of the several beneficiaries thereof according to their respective claims upon the decedent for support, in compliance with the finding and direction of the board.

"Section 1465-70. The average weekly wage of the injured person at the time of the injury shall be taken as the basis upon which to compute the benefits.

"Section 1465-71. If it is established that the injured employe was of such age and experience when injured as that under natural conditions his wages would be expected to increase, the fact may be considered in arriving at his average weekly wage.

"Section 1465-72. The power and jurisdiction of the board over each case shall be continuing, and it may from time to time make such modification or change with respect to former findings or orders with respect thereto, as, in its opinion, may be justified.

"Section 1465-73. The board, under special circumstances, and when the same is deemed advisable, may commute periodical benefits to one or more lump sum payments.

"Section 1465-74. Benefits before payment shall be exempt from all claims or creditors and from any attachment or execution, and shall be paid only to such employes or their dependents."

It will be noted from the above quoted sections that the state liability board of awards is to establish a state insurance fund for the benefit of employes who may be injured and the dependents of such employes who may be killed in the course of their employment, and is to disburse such fund "to such employes * * * that have been injured * * * or to their dependents in case death has ensued."

It will also be noted that section 1465-54 gives the board power to "adopt rules and regulations with respect to the collection, maintenance and disbursement of said fund."

Section 1465-68 specifically provides that in case of death the benefits shall be paid to "such one or more of the dependents of the decedent, for the benefit of all the dependents, as may be determined by the board * * *."

Section 1465-74 is even more explicit than the other sections, as it provides that "benefits before payment shall be exempt from all claims of creditors and from any attachment or execution, and shall be paid only to such employes or their dependents."

It has been held, and obviously there can be no question about this holding, that the payments authorized by the above statutes are to be made directly to the persons specified therein; the only exception being in the event of incompetency of the person entitled to receive the award as in the case of an injury to a minor employe, where I have held in an opinion to your board dated January 30, 1913, that the compensation due such minor should be paid to his guardian. The reasons for this holding are expressed in the opinion.

The requirement that the payments authorized to be made by your board shall be made directly to persons specified in the above sections was clearly made for the purpose of obviating the necessity for administration.

The consul for Austro-Hungary contends that on account of the treaty between the United States and his country he is authorized to receive and transmit to those who are entitled thereto all compensation due from your board on account of the death of a deceased subject of Austria Hungary, who suffered death in such manner as to entitle his dependents to an award from your board. This contention is supported by a brief filed on behalf of the consul and by a pamphlet entitled "Treaty Rights of Austro-Hungarian Consuls," which contains many abstracts from treaties and quotations from many authorities.

All of the authorities submitted, however, bear primarily upon the question of the right of the counsel of a foreign nation to be appointed as administrator of the estate of a subject of his country who dies in the United States, intestate, and without next of kin in this country, it being asserted by the consul for Austria-Hungary, that under what is called the "most favored nation clause" in the treaty between his country and the United States, there must be read into said treaty the provision of the treaty between the United States and the Argentine Republic, as to the appointment of an administrator upon the estate of a subject of his country, and that under said treaties so construed, the consul of Austria-Hungary has the exclusive right to be appointed as such administrator. This contention seems to have been upheld by the weight of authority prior to the decision of the United States supreme court in the case of Rocca vs. Thompson, 223 U. S., 317, which will be hereinafter referred to.

Section 2, of article VI, of the constitution of the United States, provides:

> "This constitution, and the laws of the United States, which shall be made in pursuance thereof; and all treaties made, or which shall be made, under the authority of the United States, shall be the supreme law of the land; and the judges of every state shall be bound thereby, anything in the constitution or laws of any state to the contrary notwithstanding."

In the case of State vs. Vanderpool, 39 Ohio State, 273, the court say, at pages 276-277:

> "By section 2, article 6, of the constitution of the United States, 'This constitution, and the laws of the United States, made in pursuance thereof, and all treaties made, or which shall be made under the authority of the United States, shall be the supreme law of the land, and the judges of every state shall be bound thereby, anything in the constitution and laws of any state to the contrary notwithstanding.'
> "This treaty is therefore the law of the land, and the judges of every state are as much bound thereby as they are by the constitution and laws of the federal or state governments. It is therefore the imperative duty of the judicial tribunals of Ohio to take cognizance of the rights of persons arising under a treaty to the same extent as if they arose under a statute of the state itself."

The treaty between the United States and the monarchy of Austria-Hungary, proclaimed June 29, 1871, contains the following provision:

> "Article XV. Consuls-general, consuls, vice-consuls and consular agents, also consular pupils, chancellors and consular officers, shall enjoy in the two countries, all the liberties, prerogatives, immunities and privileges granted to functionaries of the same class of the most favored nation."

This is what is commonly called "the most favored nation clause," and is contained in substantially the above form in practically all general treaties. It is claimed that when this clause appears in a treaty, its effect is that there must be read into the treaty under consideration, the most liberal provisions made in any treaty of the United States with any other nation as to the liberties, prerogatives, immunities and privileges granted to consuls and like officers upon any given subject, or in reference to any particular matter.

Article XVI, of the treaty between the United States and Austria-Hungary, provides:

> "In case of the death of a citizen of the United States in the Austro-Hungarian monarchy, or of a citizen of the Austro-Hungarian monarchy in the United States, without having any known heirs, or testamentary executors by him appointed, the competent local authorities shall inform the consuls or consular agents of the state to which the deceased belonged, of the circumstances in order that the necessary information may be immediately forwarded to the parties interested."

Article IX, of the treaty between the United States and the Argentine Republic, provides:

"If any citizen of the two contracting parties shall die without will or testament in any of the territories of the other, the consul-general or consul of the nation to which the deceased belonged, or the representative of such consul-general or consul in his absence, shall have the right to intervene in the possession, administration and judicial liquidation of the estate of the deceased, conformably with the laws of the country for the benefit of the creditors and legal heirs."

Article XV, of the treaty between the United States and the kingdom of Belgium, provides:

"Consuls-general, consuls, vice-consuls and consular agents shall have the right to appear, personally or by delegate, in all proceedings on behalf of the absent or minor heirs, or creditors, until they are duly represented."

Article XXXIII, of the treaty between the United States and the republic of Peru, provides:

"Until the conclusion of a consular convention which the high contracting parties agree to form as soon as may be mutually convenient, it is stipulated that in the absence of the legal heirs or representatives of the consul or vice-consul of either party shall be ex-officio the executor or administrator of the citizens of their nation who may die within their consular jurisdiction and of their countrymen dying at sea whose property may be brought within their jurisdiction."

Article XIV, of the treaty between the United States and Sweden, provides in part as follows:

"In case of the death of any citizen of Sweden in the United States or of any citizen of the United States in the kingdom of Sweden without having in the country of his decease any known heirs or testamentary executors by him appointed, the competent local authorities shall at once inform the nearest consular officer of the nation to which the deceased belongs, of the circumstances, in order that the necessary information may be immediately forwarded to parties interested.

"In the event of any citizen of either of the two contracting parties dying without will or testament, in the territory of the other contracting party, the consul-general, consul, vice-consul-general, or vice-consul of the nation to which the deceased may belong, or, in his absence, the representative of such consul-general, consul, vice-consul-general or vice-consul, shall so far as the laws of each country will permit and pending the appointment of an administrator and until letters of administration have been granted, take charge of the property left by the deceased for the benefit of his lawful heirs and creditors, and, moreover, have the right to be appointed as administrator of such estate.

"It is understood that when, under the provisions of this article, any consul-general, consul, vice-consul-general, or vice-consul, or the representative of each or either, is acting as executor or administrator of the estate of one of his deceased nationals, said officer or his representative shall, in all matters connected with, relating to, or growing out of the settlement of such estates, be in such capacities as fully subject to the jurisdiction of the courts of the country wherein the estate is situated as if said officer or representative were a citizen of that country and possessed of no representative capacity."

Under the treaty provisions between the United States and Austria-Hungary it was held by judge Wilkin, in the common pleas court of Trumbull county, Ohio, in the case of in re., estates of Joe Stingate and Joe Mora (unreported), that:

> "By reason of the use of what is known as the most favored nation clause in the treaty between the United States and the Austro-Hungarian government, we must read this provision, found on the treaty between this government and the Argentine Confederation.
> "It therefore, seems clear to me, that Mr. Ernst Ludwig, the accredited representative of the Austro-Hungarian government, being located at Cleveland, is absent from Trumbull county, and if he appoints a representative to act for him in his absence, and such appointment is so made as to become a matter of record under the authority of the accredited representative in the probate court of this country, then it would be the duty of the probate court to appoint such representative so selected, designated by the accredited representative of the Austro-Hungarian government."

There are a number of other decisions from several other states, principally from New York, holding to this same effect, that under the "most favored nation clause" the consul of a foreign country is entitled to be appointed administrator of the estate of a subject of the country represented by the consul, who dies in this country intestate leaving no heirs or beneficiaries resident of this country. The consul being considered, under the treaties and decisions, as the legal representative of the nonresident heirs or beneficiaries.

It was also held by judge Healea, of the common pleas court of Tuscarawas county, Ohio, in the matter of the estate of Vincenzo Arduine, 9 Nisi Prius (n. s.), 269, that the treaty between the United States and the Argentine Republic provides that the consul of that government shall have the right to be appointed as administrator of a subject of his country who died in this state intestate and leaving no next of kin, and that the provisions of the treaty of the Argentine Republic must be read into the treaty between the United States and Italy, and therefore, the consul of Italy was entitled to administration upon the estate of a subject of Italy who died in this state and sustained a motion to remove an administrator who had been appointed for the estate of such an Italian subject without notice to the consul, and appointed said consul in his stead.

To the same effect are cases found in 191 Mass. 276; 33 Misc. Rep., N. Y., 18; 38 Misc. Rep., N. Y., 77.

This question, however, has now finally been disposed of by the supreme court of the United States in the case of Rocca vs. Thompson, 223 U. S. 317, where it is directly held that:

> "The most favored nation clause in the Italian treaty of May 8, 1878 (20 Stat. at L. 732), does not give an Italian consul-general the right to administer the estate of an Italian citizen dying intestate in one of the United States, to the exclusion of the one authorized by the local law to administer the estate because of the privilege conferred by the Argentine treaty of July 27, 1853 (10 Stat. at L. 1009), art. 9, upon the consular officers of the respective countries as to citizens dying intestate 'to intervene in the possession, administration and judicial liquidation of the estate of the deceased, conformably with the laws of the country for the benefit of the creditors and legal heirs,' since this provision, if applicable, cannot be construed as intended to supersede the local law as to the administration of such esta es."

This was a proceeding in error, from the supreme court of the state of California; the decision in the state court being affirmed by the supreme court of the United States. It will be noted that in this case the provision in the treaty with the Argentine Republic, which is relied on in practically all the cases cited, was construed by the court, and the court held as stated above, that this provision could not be construed as intending to supersede the local laws as to the administration of such estates.

The California statutes provide that in the absence of next of kin of a person dying intestate, the public administrator shall take charge of and administer the estate for the benefit of the creditors and heirs. The court (justice Day), says, on page 331:

> "Emphasis is laid upon the right under the Argentine treaty to intervene in possession, as well as administration; but this term can only have reference to the universally recognized right of a consul to temporarily possess the estate of citizens of his nation for the purpose of protecting and conserving the rights of those interested before it comes under the jurisdiction of the laws of the country for its administration. The right to intervene in administration and judicial liquidation is for the same general purpose, and presupposes an administration or judicial liquidation instituted otherwise than by the consul, who is authorized to intervene.
> "So looking at the terms of the treaty, we cannot perceive an intention to give the original administration of an estate to the consul-general, to the exclusion of one authorized by local law to administer the estate.
> "But it is urged that treaties are to be liberally construed. Like other contracts, they are to be read in the light of the conditions and circumstances existing at the time they were entered into, with a view to effecting the objects and purposes of the states thereby contracting. Re Ross, 140 U. S., 453, 475, 35 L. ed. 581, 589, 11 Sup. Ct. Rep. 897.
> "It is further to be observed, that treaties are subject of careful consideration before they are entered into, and are drawn by persons competent to express their meaning, and to choose apt words in which to embody the purposes of the high contracting parties. Had it been the intention to commit the administration of estates of citizens of one country, dying in another, exclusively to the consul of the foreign nation, it would have been very easy to have declared that purpose in unmistakable terms. For instance, where that was the purpose, as in the treaty made with Peru, in 1887, it was declared in article 33, as follows: * * *"

The court then cites the provisions of the treaty with Peru and article 14 of the treaty with Sweden, which I have quoted above. These treaties do give the right to consuls to be appointed as administrators of citizens of their nations who may die within their consular jurisdictions; but they were not relied upon in this case as applicable to the Italian consul, perhaps for the reason that the treaties with Peru and Sweden were made subsequent to the treaty with Italy, while the treaty with the Argentine Republic was made prior to the treaty with Italy. This case decisively settles the question that under the treaty with the Argentine Republic the consul is not entitled to be appointed as administrator to the exclusion of the public administrator. In this state, of course, we have no public administrator, and our statutes provide, section 10617, that in case of the death of a person intestate in this state, leaving no husband or wife or next of kin, or competent creditors, the court may commit the administration to such other person as it deems fit, and under this section the decisions of our courts, appointing consuls as administrators, would probably be correct, but not upon the theory that such consuls were exclusively entitled to that right.

The contention, therefore, that the award from your board due to dependents residing in a foreign country should be paid to the consul of such country, so far as such contention rests upon the argument that such consul is entitled to the administration of the estate of a subject of his country dying intestate and without next of kin in this state, must fail.

As I view the matter even if such contention were upheld by authority in the matter of the appointment of administrators, still the analogy between the right to administer the estate of an alien, and the right to receive awards from your board due to the dependents of such alien, is not sufficiently close to be of great value. The compensation due from your board to the dependents of an employe constitute no part of the estate of such employe, and, as stated above, the purpose of the act is to make unnecessary the payment of such award to an administrator in any event, and there is no way in which an administrator could demand or receive from your board an award due the dependents on account of the death of an employe.

In addition to this, the estate of a person dying intestate in this state descends and must be distributed in the manner provided by our laws governing descent and distribution, while an award to dependents from your board is paid to the persons and in the manner determined by your board without respect to the statute of descent and distribution.

The question, in a way, seems analogous to me to the right of a consul to claim the distributive share in the estate of a deceased alien in the hands of an administrator or court in this country on behalf of the person entitled thereto who are citizens of the country represented by the consul.

I do not find that this question has been expressly determined in any state except New York, and in that state by an inferior court. But in that state the decisions are directly in point to the effect that the consul has such right.

In the matter of the estate of Libretto Tartaglio, deceased, 12 Misc. Rep., 245 (N. Y.) the syllabus is as follows:

> "The consul general of Italy has power under the treaty with that country to maintain affirmatively the rights of his countrymen in any court having jurisdiction, and has a right to demand and receive the distributive shares in an estate which belong to persons in his country and have been deposited in court, upon giving a proper receipt therefor."

The decision in this case is not lengthy, and I, therefore, quote it in full:

> "Application is made by the consul general of Italy at New York to have paid to him the distributive shares of the widow and five minor children in the estate of Libretto Tartaglio, an Italian subject, who died leaving personal property which has been administered in this country, and which distributive shares have been deposited with the county treasurer pursuant to a decree of this court.
> "The widow and children are residents and subjects of the kingdom of Italy.
> "The county treasurer opposes the application upon the ground that the consul-general has no authority to receive such distributive shares and give such an acquittance as will relieve him from responsibility.
> "The rights of cubjects of foreign countries, both as to their persons and property, largely depend upon treaty provisions. The treaty between the United States and the kingdom of Italy provides that consuls-general 'may have recourse to the authorities of the respective countries within their respective districts, whether federal or local, judicial or executive, in order to defend the rights and interests of their countrymen.'
> "The term 'defend' as used is to be given the broadest meaning, and includes the power to maintain affirmatively the rights of the consul's countrymen, and our local as well as federal judiciary must, in obedience to the treaty, recognize such rights. But in the absence of such treaty provision a foreign consul would have much the same power.

"We find the rule laid down in Kent, 'the practice of our courts is that a foreign consul may assert and defend as complainant party the rights and property of a person of his nation.'

"The consul of a foreign nation recognized by the United States is competent to defend and watch over the interests of persons of his nation, and may bring suits for such purpose without any special authority from the parties in interest.

"The Bello Corrunes, 6 Wheat. 168.

"The court says in the case cited 'that a vice-consul duly recognized by our government is a competent party to assert or defend the rights of property of the individuals of his nation in any court having jurisdiction of causes affected by the application of international law. To watch over the rights and interests of their subjects wherever the pursuits of commerce may draw them or the vicissitudes of human affairs may force them is the great object for which consuls are deputed by their sovereigns, and in a country where laws govern and justice is sought for in courts only it would be a mockery to preclude them from the only avenue through which their course lies to the end of their mission. The long and universal usage of the courts of the United States has sanctioned the exercise of this right, and it is impossible that any evil or inconvenience can flow from it.'

"Foreign consuls have authority and power to administer on the estates of their fellow subjects deceased within their territorial consulate. Wheat. Int. L. (2nd Eng. Ed.) 151; Woolsey Int. L. Sec. 96.

"The right to demand and sue for necessarily implies the authority to acquit and release. In case of a debt due by a resident of this state to the widow and children of Libretto Tartaglio there would seem to be no doubt not only of the consul's power, but his duty under the authorities to demand and collect it, and if so, I can see no reason in principle that would prevent his demanding and receiving moneys or property deposited in court belonging to a subject of such consul's country. Neither can I see that the infancy of some of the parties affects or limits the right or power of the consul. The question as to what disposition may be made of the property after the consul has received and exported it is something with which courts have nothing to do; that is to be settled by the laws or authority of the government to which the foreign subject owes allegiance.

"An order will be made directing the county treasurer to pay the distributive shares of the widow and children of Libretto Tartaglio in his estate, deposited with said county treasurer pursuant to the decree of this court, to the consul-general of Italy at New York upon his executing and delivering a proper receipt therefor."

The case referred to by the court, viz.: The Bello Corrunes, 6 Wheat, 168, is an apt citation so far as the language of the court is given, but in that case the court also remarked and held that while a foreign consul had a right to claim or institute proceedings in rem where the rights of property of his fellow citizens are in question without special authority from those for whom he acts, still he could not receive actual restitution of the property in question without specific authority. The court says upon this point:

"Whether the powers of the vice-consul would in any instance extend to the right to receive in his national character the proceeds of property libeled and transferred into the registry of a court, is a question resting on other principles. In the absence of specific powers given him by competent authority, such an authority would certainly not be recognized."

In the matter of the estate of Pietro Fiorentine, deceased, Surrogate's Court, Kings county, N. Y., 43 Misc. Rep. 573, the syllabus of the case is as follows:

"The consul-general of Italy has a right to receive from the public administrator of Kings county a balance payable by him, as administrator, to the next of kin of an Italian subject who dies a resident of that country and it is not necessary that the father and sole next of kin, a resident of Italy, be cited and paid directly."

In this case the deceased was an Italian subject who died in Kings county, New York. The sole next of kin was his father, a resident of Italy. The estate was administered by the public administrator and there was a balance found due to the next of kin. The Italian consul claimed a right to intervene and take possession of said balance. The court refers in his decision to the case in the 12 Misc. Reports above quoted in this opinion, and also to the conflicting opinions upon the question of the right to administer and then says:

"In the case before me the question is simply whether the public administrator shall turn over the balance to the consul-general or cite the next of kin and pay him directly.

"Even if we give to the word 'intervene' as used in the treaty with the Argentine Republic the interpretation placed on the same by Judge Thomas, still the right to so 'intervene' would certainly include the right to receive the property belonging to the alien and hence the money in question here should be paid over to the consul-general."

As stated, these cases are the only cases I find holding to this effect and are cases of an inferior court, and by the same court whose decision as to the right of the consul to be appointed administrator was over-ruled and criticized by the supreme court in the Rocca case above cited, and these decisions seem to be based upon the same reasoning which led the same courts to decide the question in regard to administration. After a full consideration of the Rocca case, it does not seem to me that these cases can be regarded as high authority. In addition to this, the holding in the Tartaglio case seems to be contrary to the holding of the supreme court of the United States in the Bello Corrunes, 6 Wheat, 168 case in the particular that I have pointed out, viz.: that while consul has the right to institute an action, still he has not authority to receive actual restitution of the property in question without specific authority. Also the supreme court in the Rocca case holds that the word "intervene" as used in the treaty with the Argentine Republic does not have the meaning which the Surrogate court of New York gives to it. It is also stated by the supreme court of California in deciding the Rocca case, 37 L. R. A. n. s. 549 (which case was affirmed by the supreme court of the United States in the decision to which I have heretofore referred) that the "right to intervene in a legal proceeding, partaking of the nature of a proceeding in rem is not usually understood in either country to include the right to take the property from the custody of the court or from an officer upon whom the laws of the country impose the duty of administering and distributing it. The object and purpose of the treaty would be fully met by allowing the foreign consul to represent the citizens of his country who are interested as heirs or creditors in case they are not present or otherwise represented, giving them the right to appear in court for them, either officially or in their name, to protect their interests, and requiring that he be served with notices to them when notice is required."

The authority would therefore seem to be contrary to the holding in the New York cases. In addition the New York court says in deciding the Tartaglio case, "the right to demand and sue for necessarily implies the authority to acquit and release."

This does not necessarily follow. A "next friend" is authorized by our statutes to bring suit for a minor. In case such suit is for damages on account of a tort, such friend can bring suit, but in case of recovery he is not authorized to receive the amount of the judgment. Also in this state a minor's defense in an action is made by a guardian adlitem, but the guardian adlitem, while having the authority to appear in the action and do everything to maintain the claim of the minor, has no right to receive the amount found due the minor in such action.

For the above reasons, therefore, especially from the language used by the court in the case of Bello Corrunes, 6 Wheat, 168, above quoted, and from the decision of the supreme court in the Rocca case, I feel that these two New York decisions cannot be regarded as sufficient authority to maintain the proposition that a consul is entitled to demand and receive the distributive shares which belong to persons resident of the country which he represents coming from an estate of a person dying in this country.

In the matter of the settlement of the account of the executor of Ickrow, deceased, 66 Misc. Rep. N. Y. 418, another decision by the surrogate's court of New York in 1910, it was held:

> "The Austro-Hungarian cosul is not entitled to appear for minors, subjects of Austria-Hungary, and legatees under a will duly admitted to probate in this state, in a proceeding for the judicial settlement of the executor's account, without citation having been served upon them."

In this case, practically the same claim was made on behalf of the consul of Austria-Hungary, based upon the "most favored nation clause" as in the other cases to which I have referred. The consul maintained that he had the right to appear for the minor legatees, resident of Austria-Hungary, and to receive their share of the estate without the issuance of a citation directed to be served upon them. The court denied the application of the consul and ordered the citation to be served on the minors in the manner provided by law. This case, taken in connection with the decisions of the supreme court to which I have referred, it seems to me, even if it can be regarded as not deciding the exact contrary to the two New York cases holding that the consul has the right to demand and receive distributive shares of an estate, at least makes the question so doubtful that the said decisions cannot be safely followed as authority for the proposition. I am, therefore, compelled to hold that these cases cannot be regarded as establishing the propositions that under the treaties which I have quoted, a consul of a foreign nation is entitled to receive and demand from your board an award due to dependents resident of the country which he represents.

The only case which I have been able to find, which is in any way really pertinent to the question I am considering, is the case of in re., Holmberg's estate, District Court, N. D. Col., decided Jan. 15, 1912. and reported in 193 Fed. Rep. 260.

Section 4514 of the Revised Statutes of the U. S. provides as follows:

> "If the money and effects of any seaman or apprentice paid, remitted, or delivered to the circuit court, including the moneys received for any part of his effects which have been sold, either before delivery to the circuit court, or by its directions, do not exceed in value the sum of three hundred dollars, then subject to the provisions hereinafter contained, and to all such deductions for expenses incurred in respect to the seaman or apprentice, or of his money and effects, as the said court thinks fit to allow, the court may pay and deliver the said money and effects to any claimants who can prove themselves either to be his widow or children, or to be entitled to the effects of the deceased under his will, or under any statute, or at common law, or to be entitled to procure probate, or to take out letters of administration or confirmation, although no probate or letters of administration or confirmation have been taken out, and shall be thereby discharged from all further liability in respect of the money and effects so paid and delivered."

The purpose of this statute is obviously quite similar to the purpose of our liability board of awards act. It provides for the payment of money in certain cases without the necessity of administration. This particular case arose upon application of the consul of Sweden to have paid to him, in his official capacity, the money and effects left by one Holmberg, a deceased seaman, and subject of Sweden. The court cites section 14 of the treaty between Sweden and the United States, heretofore quoted in this opinion, and says:

"While the statute of California does not expressly make eligible or provide for the appointment of the representative of a foreign government, as such, as an administrator, it does provide, after the specific enumeration of certain persons to whom letters shall issue, and the order in which they are entitled thereto, that they may be granted to 'any person legally competent.' Since the provisions of a treaty become a part of the law of the land, and are binding and obligatory upon the states, I am of opinion that the above cited stipulation in our convention with Sweden has the effect to bring the applicant within the category of those 'legally competent,' under the statutes of California, to receive a grant of letters.

"It is not necessary, to meet the requirements of section 4544, that the applicant shall appear to have the exclusive right to administer, but only that he shall be eligible to 'take out letters;' and it is therefore unnecessary to determine whether the effect of the treaty would be such as to give him a first or paramount right thereto. It is enough to hold that he is, within the statute, one entitled to have the money and effects of the deceased paid and delivered to him, and the court be thereby 'discharged, from all further liability' therefor. The obvious purpose of the statute is to provide a brief, informal, and summary method of disposing of the money and effects of the class to which it relates, where they do not exceed in value the amount specified, in such manner as to reach those eventually entitled thereto, with the greatest expedition and the least expense, without the necessity of formal administration; and the provision of the treaty is in keeping with this purpose."

It will be noted that the court in this case held that the consul was entitled to have the money belonging to this estate paid to him, although the California statute did not make eligible or provide for the appointment of such consul as administrator.

It will be noted, however, that the treaty with Sweden expressly provided for the appointment of the Swedish consul as administrator in certain cases where the decedent was a subject of Sweden, and, therefore, the statutes of the United States quoted in the opinion, the provision in the treaty with Sweden and the laws of California could all be harmonized in this case in such a way as to expressly carry out the intention expressed in the statute of the United States (section 4544,) above quoted, and the Swedish treaty. In other words, the matter was expressly covered by the statute and the treaty, and the decedent was a subject of the country with whom the treaty relied upon was made, and the "most favored nation clause" is not considered at all in this case.

From the decision on the Rocca case, as announced by justice Day, we take it that, while treaties are to be liberally construed, still they must be read like other contracts, and that we are not allowed to read into them provisions which could not have been contemplated by the makers of the treaty. The court also seems to regard the construction which is claimed for the "most favored nation clause" by consul for Austria-Hungary as at least doubtful, for it is stated on page 334 of the opinion in the Rocca case that:

> "Our conclusion, then, is that, if it should be conceded for this purpoe that the most favored nation clause in the Italian treaty carries the provisions of the Argentine treaty to the consuls of the Italian government in the respect contended for (a question unnecessary to decide in this case) * *."

We can, therefore, regard the decision in the Holmberg case as authority for the construction of section 4544 of the Revised Statutes of the United States in connection with the treaty with Sweden, and not as authority upon the right of consuls-general to receive the money or property due to the next of kin or legatees resident of a foreign country from the estate of an alien in this country.

I again call attention to the provisions of the liability board of awards' act providing how the awards due to dependents shall be paid, and I also call attention to the act passed by the last legislature known as house bill No. 526-103 O. L., 396, entitled "An act to prevent discrimination against alien dependents of killed employes." This act is as follows:

> "Section 1. That it shall be unlawful for the state liability board of awards, or any other body constituted by the statutes of the state of Ohio, or any court of said state, in awarding compensation to the dependents of employes, or others killed in Ohio, to make any discrimination against the widows, children or other dependents, who shall reside in a foreign country; and it shall be the duty of the state liability board of awards, or any other board or court, in determining the amount of compensation to be paid to the dependents of killed employes, to pay to the alien dependents residing in foreign countries the same benefits as to those dependents residing in the state of Ohio.
> "Section 2. When the dependents of killed employes reside in a foreign country, the consul-general, consul, vice-consul or consular agent, duly accredited to the consular district within which such killed employe lived at the time of his decease, by the country wherein such dependents of the killed employe reside, shall furnish the necessary information regarding such dependents of killed employes so that the state liability board of awards may transmit to such dependents the funds provided for in the compensation act of the state of Ohio, or any amendments thereto."

This act can only be regarded as reiterating and making more positive the provisions of the original act, that the compensation to be paid to the dependents of killed employes must be paid to the dependents, and putting foreign dependents upon the same basis as dependents resident of this country. In addition, it must be presumed that the legislature, in passing this act, knew of the treaties between the United States and foreign countries, and also knew of the rights and prerogatives of consuls; and the legislature having before it this very matter of the manner of payment of compensation to dependents, residents of foreign lands, provided, that the consul should furnish the necessary information regarding such dependents to your board, and then provided that such information should be furnished so that your board might transmit such compensation "to such dependents."

It seems to me, this is conclusive. If the legislature had regarded that the consul had the right to receive such compensation on the part of such dependents, it certainly would have recognized such fact by the use of some other language; or if it intended that your board should pay such compensation to such consuls, on behalf of such dependents, and that such payment would be an acquittance for your board, it certainly would have so stated in the act.

From all of the above, I am forced to the conclusion that under the treaties and laws as they now stand, there is no authority for consuls of foreign countries to demand and receive compensation due from your board to dependents resident of foreign countries. It seems to me that it would be most proper for the consuls to have this right, and that if they did, the compensation would undoubtedly reach the persons entitled to it with the least possible delay and expense; but it is necessary for this right to be conferred in some way, and until it is, your board would not be safe in so making payments.

My opinion, therefore, is that whenever an employe suffers death in such manner and under such circumstances as would entitle his dependents to an award from your board, and such employe was a subject of a foreign nation, then your board should at once notify the consul of the facts in regard to his death, and the fact that his dependents, if any, would be entitled to an award from your board. Proof must then be furnished your board, in the manner and to the extent that you may by rule require, as to the existence of dependents and as to the proportion in which they may be entitled to an award, and that in determining such dependency and the apportionment your board shall proceed in the same manner as if the employe and dependents were citizens of this country, and that you cannot make any discrimination in any way in the matter of alien dependents.

As to the payment of the award and compensation you can only pay the same to the dependents or to a person deemed by you to be competent and suitable to receive the same in case of the incapacity of the dependent or dependents. These payments cannot be made to the consul unless he is duly authorized to receive the same by the person entitled thereto.

Yours very truly,
TIMOTHY S. HOGAN,
Attorney General.

(To the State Highway Commissioner)

339.

NECESSITY OF COUNTY COMMISSIONERS TO APPLY FOR APPROPRIATION AND PASS RESOLUTION AND APPROVE CONTRACT BEFORE RECEIVING STATE AID.

Under section 1185, General Code, the county commissioners must apply for their state aid appropriation prior to the first of May of the year in which the appropriation becomes available, and must then proceed to adopt a resolution for the improvement of the roads under the state highway law, agreeing to assume not less than fifty per cent. of the total cost and expense of construction and must furthermore approve the awarded contract of the state highway commissioner as conditions precedent to taking advantage of the state aid provisions. Under the same statute, if such conditions are not fulfilled within the calendar year without good and sufficient cause, or failure so to do, the state aid provisions may not be taken advantage of for that year.

COLUMBUS, OHIO, May 28, 1913.

HON. JAMES R. MARKER, State Highway Commissioner, Columbus, Ohio.

DEAR SIR:—In your letter of February 27th, you inquire of me as follows:

"There are several counties in this state which have applied in due form for the use of the 1912 appropriation, but as yet the contract for the construction of the road for which the application is filed, is not executed. In a few cases the failure to enter into a contract is due to the board of commissioners failing to sign the resolution agreeing to assume 50 per cent. of the cost and expense.

"I most respectfully request your opinion on the provisions of section 1185, whether or not it is mandatory that this work be under contract on or before the first day of April, 1913, i. e., if the county commissioners are to use the funds in co-operation with this department."

Section 1185, General Code, provides:

"The commissioners of a county may make application to the state highway commissioner for aid from an appropriation by the state for the construction, improvement, maintenance, or repair of highways. Such application shall be filed prior to May first of the year in which such appropriation may be made or become available. If the county commissioners have not made use of the apportionment to such county, in the year in which it is available, then the township trustees may make application prior to the first day of April of the succeeding year. And if the township trustees do not make use of the appropriation prior to the first day of July next succeeding, then the state highway commissioner shall have full power and authority to enter upon and construct, improve, maintain or repair any of the inter-county highways or parts thereof of said county, either by contract, force account, or in such manner as the state highway commissioner may deem for the best interests of the public, paying the full cost and expense thereof from the said apportionment of the appropriation to said county so unused as aforesaid. Any part of the apportionment to a county remaining unexpended shall remain to the credit of such county and be available for the succeeding year as herein provided."

It will be observed from a reading of the foregoing, that if county commissioners desire to receive the benefit of state aid money apportioned to their respective counties in any year, they must make application therefor to the state highway commissioner prior to May 1st of the year in which such money becomes available. If the commissioners do not make use of the apportionment of state aid money allotted to the county in the year in which the same is available, the trustees of any township or townships in a county may make application therefor prior to April 1st of the succeeding year.

After the application has been made, in proper form, to the state highway commissioner and approved by him, it is his duty under section 1190, General Code, to cause to be made plans and specifications for, and estimates of, the cost of the construction of the improvement, and transmit a copy of such plans and specifications to the commissioners of the county making application, as provided by section 1193, General Code.

The county commissioners may then adopt a resolution that the improvement be made under the state highway law, and agree to assume in the first instance not less than fifty per cent. of the total cost and expense of construction. Until such resolution is adopted, the state highway commissioner cannot advertise for bids or let the contract for the construction of the improvement. After the adoption of such resolution, said highway commissioner must advertise for bids for the construction of the improvement and award the contract therefor to the lowest responsible bidder. The award and contract are both subject to the approval of the county commissioners, and when such approval is given, the power of the county commissioners over the construction of the improvement ceases. It is thereafter carried on under the direction and control of the state highway commissioners.

It is a well established principle of statutory construction that the language used in a statute is to be given its ordinary meaning unless it clearly appears that the contrary was intended. The word "year" as used in section 1185 means, in my judgement, a calendar year.

In order to make use of the state aid appropriation, the county commissioners must take all the steps required of them, after the filing of an application, that is to say, they must adopt a final resolution and approve the award and contract, unless, through no fault of their own, the commissioners have been prevented from so doing.

I am, therefore, of the opinion, that unless the county commissioners in question have adopted a final resolution and approved the award and contract on or before December 31, 1912, except in the absence of good and sufficient reasons for not doing so, they have not made use of the appropriation in the year in which it is available, as understood by section 1185, and such appropriation becomes subject to application by the trustees of any township or townships in the county, prior to April 1, 1913.

Very truly yours,

TIMOTHY S. HOGAN.

Attorney General.

THE HIGHWAY COMMISSIONER IS LIMITED TO THE EXPENDITURE OF $1,200.00 FOR TRAVELING EXPENSES IN ANY ONE YEAR.

Under the provisions of section 1180, General Code, the state highway commissioner shall be allowed in addition to his salary the sum of $1,200.00 for traveling expenses. The highway commissioner may not expend in any one year in excess of $1,200.00 for such traveling expenses.

COLUMBUS, OHIO, October 21, 1913.

HON. JAMES R. MARKER, State Highway Commissioner, Columbus, Ohio.

DEAR SIR:—Your favor of October 8, 1913, is received, in which you quote in full the provisions of sections 1183 and 1184-4, General Code, as amended in 103 Ohio Laws, 449, and then state:

> "You may see by the above that the duties and work thrust upon the head of this department are both extensive and onerous, and that it is impossible for the commissioner to give the state even a fair proportion of the services which it requires, and keep within the limit allowed by law for the traveling expenses.
> "Of the two state road systems as provided for above, the main market comprises 2,600 miles, and the "inter-county" 9,200 miles, and it is impossible for the commissioner and his deputies to inform themselves as to the conditions and the problems which arise in these systems without actually traveling over, viewing and investigating this mileage.
> "The state now has under contract between $2,000,000 and $2,500,000 of highway construction, and we are anticipating improvements to the amount of $7,000,000 for next year. This has been brought about by the enactment of what is known as the half-mill levy bill Yet with all this extra amount of work thrust upon the department, there has been no provision made for the extra expense necessary to comply with the same.
> "Sufficient funds have been appropriated for traveling expenses so that I would not need to call upon the emergency board to help out in this matter.
> "The question is, in view of the statutes, has the commissioner the authority to use this, or any other funds available to the department for the said excess?"

The difficulty which confronts you arises because of a provision contained in section 1180, General Code, which limits the traveling expenses of the state highway commissioner to $1,200 in any year.

It appears that sufficient funds have been appropriated to the department for traveling expenses, but that the traveling expenses of the state highway commissioner will exceed the limitation contained in section 1180, General Code.

Said section provides:

> "The state highway commissioner shall be provided with suitable rooms for the use of the department. Such office shall be open at all reasonable times for the transaction of public business and be furnished by the state with necessary stationery, office supplies, fixtures, apparatus for testing materials, engineering instruments and supplies. The salary of the state highway commissioner shall be $4,000 per annum. In addition to his salary, he shall be allowed his actual traveling expenses incurred in the discharge of his official duties, not to exceed $1,200 in any year.

The appropriations for the year ending February 15, 1913, were made in accordance with the above limitation.

For example, in 102 Ohio Laws, 400, the appropriation is made in these words:

> "Traveling expenses of commissioner and three deputy commissioners at $1,200 each.....$4,800."

In the partial appropriation act for expenditures after February 15, 1913, the appropriation is made as follows, in 103 Ohio Laws, 50:

> "Traveling expenses of commissioner, three deputies, and 12 engineers.....$5,000."

Also in the general appropriation bill for 1913, as shown at page 616 of 103 Ohio Laws:

> "Traveling expenses of commissioner, three deputies, twelve engineers; unexpended balance and.....$1.000."

These appropriation acts make no limit as to the amount to be used by the commissioner or of the other persons. It is a general appropriation for traveling expenses.

Section 1183, General Code, as amended in 103 Ohio Laws, 449, contains this provision:

> "* * * All expenses incurred by reason of the provisions of this chapter shall be paid out of any fund or funds available for the use of the department."

This is a general provision applicable to all expenses incurred in the state highway department. The limitation as to traveling expenses of the commissioner contained in section 1180, General Code, supra, is in the same chapter as section 1183, General Code.

In order to permit the highway commissioner to use more than $1,200, in any year for his traveling expenses, it must be held that the limitation of section 1180, General Code, is repealed by implication by the provisions of the appropriation acts.

Repeals by implication are not favored. The rule is stated by Sutherland in his work on statutory construction at page 465, as follows:

> "Repeals by implication are not favored. This means that it is the duty of the court to so construe the acts, if possible, that both shall be operative."

Section 1180, General Code, is a part of the statutes of Ohio, and is permanent in character. The appropriation act is temporary, that is, it is for the particular year, and is not a part of the statutes of Ohio.

The limitation contained in section 1180, General Code, may stand with the provisions contained in the appropriation acts. The total appropriation for traveling expenses, for the fiscal year of 1913, is $6,000, and unexpended balance. This sum is to pay the traveling expenses, not only of the highway commissioner, but also of three deputies and twelve engineers. There is nothing in the appropriation act to show that it was intended that the highway commissioner should be allowed in excess of $1,200 for his traveling expenses.

It is to be presumed that the legislature had in mind the limitation contained in section 1180, General Code, when it made the above appropriation.

Section 1180, General Code, is not repealed by the appropriation act and said section limits the amount to be expended by the highway commissioner for his traveling expenses in any year to $1,200.

I am of the opinion that the highway commissioner cannot expend in excess of $1,200 for his traveling expenses in any year. Respectfully,

TIMOTHY S. HOGAN,
Attorney General.

CHARTER COMMISSION MAY NOT DEPRIVE STATE BOARD OF HEALTH OF JURISDICTION IN CITIES.

Article 18, section 3, of the constitution, and section 7, authorizes a municipality in its charter government to exercise such local sanitary powers only as are not in conflict with general laws.

The charter of a city, therefore, may not oust the state board of health of its supervision over local sanitary matters which is given by general statutes.

COLUMBUS, OHIO, May 6, 1913.

E. F. MCCAMPBELL, M. D., Secretary, State Board of Health, Columbus, Ohio.

DEAR SIR:—In your letter of March 26, 1913, you say:

> "In a city where a charter commission has been provided a question has been raised as to the authority of a charter commission to provide some form of health organization other than that now provided in section 4404, et seq., of the General Code.
> "I shall be glad if you will give me an opinion as to the authority of a charter commission of a municipal corporation to provide for a health commissioner or other form of health organization for a municipal corporation under the provisions of article XVIII of the new constitution."

Article XVIII of the new constitution provides for the establishment of charter governments in municipalities in Ohio; and sets forth the manner of proceeding to perfect this new form of administration therein. The object of this constitutional provision is to afford an opportunity for local self-government to such municipalities as may avail themselves of its provisions.

Section 3 of said article XVIII, reads as follows:

> "Municipalities shall have authority to exercise all powers of local self-government and to adopt and enforce within their limits such local police, sanitary and such other similar regulations, as are not in conflict with general law."

Section 7, says:

> "Any municipality may frame and adopt or amend a charter for its government and may, subject to the provisions of section 3 of this article, exercise thereunder all powers of local self-government."

Section 8 provides that the question: "shall a commission be chosen to frame a charter," shall be submitted to the election of the municipality? If the majority of electors vote in the affirmative, the fifteen men elected shall frame a proposed charter. A copy thereof shall be mailed to each elector in the municipality, and an election thereon is held. The last sentence in section 8 then says: "If such proposed charter is approved by a majority of the electors voting thereon it shall become the charter of such municipality at the time fixed therein."

In brief, then, when a municipality has adopted by vote, a charter for its government, the same is legal and binding therein, if, in the language of section 3, the same is "not in conflict with general law."

The word "sanitary," as used in section 3, is broad enough to cover all phases of the law applying to boards of health, as set forth in sections 4404, et seq., General Code.

In lieu of the titles given in the chapter on boards of health, such as "health officer," "board of health," etc., in the General Code, above cited, a municipality may provide in its charter for a head of the sanitary or health department, and call him "health commissioner" or by any other appropriate name. And such officer is vested with all powers conferred by the charter, ordinances thereunder and the law applying to such department generally.

Such charter cannot deprive the state board of health of its rights as now guaranteed by the general law, to intervene and enforce the provisions of the statutes on health and sanitation. In case a chartered municipality should fail to provide for a system of enforcement of sanitary measures, and clothe some one with the power to act therein, or should defy the state laws on the subject, then the state board of health could intervene and enforce the general laws on the subject.

In my opinion, all municipalities, whether chartered or not, will be subject, as to sanitary matters, to the supervision of the state board of health. Local self-government cannot divest the state of its general rights through its board of health to look after the health and safety of its citizens.

Yours respectfully,
TIMOTHY S. HOGAN,
Attorney General.

COUNTY COMMISSIONERS — TOWNSHIP TRUSTEES — UNHEALTHFUL DEPOSITS IN TOWNSHIP—TAX LEVIES—BOND ISSUE—HEALTH FUND—BOARD OF HEALTH.

In the event of the refusal of the commissioners to act under section 2, of house bill 640, it becomes the duty of the township trustees to act, and they, having incurred obligations by removing the dangerous and unhealthful deposits from their township, must provide funds therefor, either by tax levy or bond issue; or if they have a sufficient amount in the treasury to the credit of the health fund, not appropriated for any other purpose, it is their duty to pay the claim which they have incurred as a board of health out of such money.

COLUMBUS, OHIO, July 9, 1913.

HON. E. F. MCCAMPBELL, Secretary, State Board of Health, Columbus, Ohio.

DEAR SIR:—I beg to acknowledge receipt of your letter of June 26th, in which you request my opinion as to the obligation of the county commissioners to pay the claim of the trustee of a township, under the following statement of facts:

> "The flood of March and April, 1913, deposited upon the private lands of the township, a large quantity of matter, the presence of which was inimical to the public health, and the removal of which was thought necessary by the township trustees, in their capacity as township health authorities. Their attention being directed to section 2 of house bill 640, 103 Ohio Laws, 141, the trustees suggested to the county commissioners the advisability of undertaking the work of cleaning up the township as a county enterprise.

The county commissioners refunded to do so; whereupon, the trustees caused deposits to be removed, and presented the bill therefor to the county commissioners."

"The council of any municipal corporation, and the commissioners of any county, are hereby empowered to borrow money in the manner specified in section 3 of this act, for the purpose of removing from the public places and private grounds or buildings in the corporation, or, as the case may be, in the county outside of municipal corporations therein, any obstruction or matter deposited therein by the floods mentioned in section 1 of this act, the presence of which is inimical to the public health, safety or convenience. The sum thus borrowed may be expended for the above mentioned purpose, in such manner and through such agencies as such council or commissioners, by resolution, may prescribe. Such resolution shall not be published nor be subject to a referendum. Contracts entered into by such council or commissioners, or by any board, officer or employe authorized by either of them to expend funds acquired under this section, shall not be subject to any provisions of the general law requiring competitive bidding. In the event that the power provided for in this section is exercised, the local boards of health or health officers within and for the territory under the jurisdiction of such council or commissioners as provided in this section, shall not have nor exercise any power or duty respecting the removal of such matter; but all the powers and duties of such local boards of health shall, for the purposes of this act, be vested in and imposed upon such council or commissioners and the agencies designated by them as provided in this section."

In my opinion, the commissioners of the county to which you refer in your letter correctly interpreted this provision. It is not made the duty of the county commissioners to supplant the local health authorities in territory outside of municipal corporations; but they are empowered by the act quoted to do so. In this instance, they declined to exercise the power. The result of their non-action was to leave the authority and duty of the township trustees, as local health officers, unimpaired. The trustees proceeded, evidently, to exercise their authority and to discharge their duty. In so doing, thay acted under the provisions of section 3391 to 3394, inclusive, General Code, which said sections, and in particular the last one, vest in the trustees, as a township board of health, "the same duties, powers and jurisdiction * * * as by law are imposed upon or granted to boards of health in municipalities." Among these powers are the powers enumerated in sections 4420 to 4451, inclusive, General Code. These sections need not be quoted, as no question seems to be raised as to the propriety of the township trustees' exercising the powers which they have exercised in the instance mentioned by you.

It is clear, however, that under the general laws of the state, the expense of the prevention of a threatened epidemic in a township is to be borne primarily by the township as a local health unit, and not by the county, and, as I have already stated, the only change in the law with reference to the floods of March and April, 1913, was to permit but not to require counties to assume this expense in territories outside of municipal corporations.

The trustees have properly incurred the bills as a board of health, it not being necessary, in my judgment, that moneys required for the expenditure be in the township treasury, unappropriated to any other purpose before expenditures of this sort be made or authorized, as required generally by section 5660, General Code, commonly referr ed to as the "Burns' law."

Trustees, then, acting no longer as a board of health, but rather in their capacity as trustees, may, under authority of sections 3295 and 3939, General Code, which must be read together, provide the necessary funds. The first of these sections gives to trustees the same power to issue bonds as is imposed by section 3939 upon the council of a municipal corporation. Section 3939, in turn, specifically authorizes the issuance of bonds by a municipal council for the purpose, inter alia, of "the payment of obligations arising from emergencies resulting from epidemics or floods or other forces of nature."

In the event, therefore, of the refusal of the commissioners to act under section 2 of house bill 640, it becomes the duty of the township trustees to act; and they, having incurred obligations by removing the dangerous, unhealthful deposits from their township, must provide funds therefor, either by tax levy or by borrowing money in the manner above described; or, if they have a sufficient amount in the treasury of the township to the credit of the health fund, not appropriated for any other purpose, it is their duty to pay the claim which they have incurred as a board of health out of such money.

Very truly yours,
TIMOTHY S. HOGAN,
Attorney General.

ABATEMENT OF NUISANCES—HEALTH OFFICER—EXTENT OF AUTHORITY.

The health officer, or other employe of the board of health, can proceed in the summary abatement of a nuisance only by direction of the board of health, and such person has no authority to proceed otherwise.

COLUMBUS, OHIO, November 18, 1913.

State Board of Health, Columbus, Ohio.

GENTLEMEN:—In your letter of July 8, 1913, you ask:

> "What authority has a health officer or other employe of a board of health to proceed with the abatement of a nuisance without the adoption of an order by the board of health declaring a condition to be a nuisance?"

Section 4408, General Code, says:

> "The board of health shall appoint a health officer who shall be the executive officer."

The law as to nuisances is found in the chapter applying to boards of health, from sections 4420 to 4424, General Code, inclusive.

Section 4420, supra, provides:

> "The board of health shall abate and remove all nuisances within its jurisdiction. It may by order, therefore, compel the owners, agents, assignees, occupants or tenants of any lot, property, buildings or structure to abate or remove any nuisance therein, and prosecute them for neglect or refusal to obey such orders."

Section 4421, in speaking of all natters therein which come within the jurisdiction of the health department, uses this language: "The board of health may regulate;" "the board of health may declare;" "the board of health may order;" "the board may remove, abate, etc."

Section 4422 also speaks of what the board of health may do or cause to be done.

Sections 4423 and 4424 likewise speak of what the "board of health" may do, etc.

Again section 4413 provides that "the board of health" may make rules for the abatement of nuisances, etc.

There is no statutory authority vesting in the health officer power to determine what is a nuisance and to abate it. Therefore, I am of the opinion that the health officer or other employe of the board of health can proceed in the summary abatement of nuisances only by direction of the board of health, and has no power to proceed otherwise.

It will require additional powers to be conferred on him by statute before he can so proceed.

Very truly yours,
TIMOTHY S. HOGAN,
Attorney General.

EXPENSES, TRAVELING—OHIO STATE DENTAL BOARD—NOT ALLOWED TO DELEGATES ATTENDING NATIONAL BOARD MEETINGS OR FOR PAYING DUES BY THE NATIONAL DENTAL BOARD.

The fact that the funds of the Ohio state dental board are not paid into the state treasury, nor the fact that such board is self-supporting, does not tend in any way to modify the rule of law that expenses of attending national conferences may not be allowed to state officers, in the absence of a statute imposing such duty or authorizing the payment of such expenses.

COLUMBUS, OHIO, January 2, 1913.

DR. H. C. MATLACK, President, Ohio State Dental Board, Cincinnati, Ohio.

DEAR SIR:—Under date of October 23rd you state as follows:

> "In view of the fact that the funds of the Ohio state dental board are not paid into the state treasury, and that no money is ever drawn from the state treasury when there is a lack of funds in the treasury of the dental board, and if there is a lack of funds in the treasury of the dental board, the members reduce their per diem, as has been the case, do the opinions rendered relating to state board expenses include the dental board, with reference to sending delegates to national dental board meetings and paying dues in the national dental board."

In my opinion there is no distinction to be made between your board, the funds of which are not paid into the state treasury, and that of a board, the funds of which are paid into the state treasury. It is a settled principle of law that the funds under the control of a board such as yours, whether the same be paid into the state treasury or are retained by the treasurer of the board, cannot be used in any way not authorized by statute. Since there is no authorization by statute for the payment of the expenses of delegates to national dental board meetings, or any duty devolving upon the members of such board to attend such meetings, I am of the opinion that the per diem and the expenses of a member of your board attending as a delegate to a national dental board meeting cannot be paid out of the funds belonging to your board even though the same are not turned over to the state treasury but retained by the treasurer of your board.

Very truly yours,
TIMOTHY S. HOGAN,
Attorney General.

STATE DENTAL BOARD—DENTISTRY—PERSON WHO OWNS A DENTAL OFFICE MUST HAVE LICENSE FROM STATE DENTAL BOARD

Since, under section 1329, General Code, the proprietor of a place for performing dental operations is regarded as practicing dentistry, and under section 1320, General Code, no person may practice dentistry without having obtained a license from the state dental board, a person who owns a dental office and conducts the same by employing legally licensed men to perform the dental work, is guilty of a violation of section 12714, General Code, providing a penalty for a violation of the laws relating to the practice of dentistry, when such person conducts such business without having obtained a license.

COLUMBUS, OHIO, January 12, 1913.

DR. H. BARTILSON, Secretary, Ohio State Dental Board, Columbus, Ohio.

DEAR SIR:—Under date of November 8th you advised me as follows:

> "A, who is not a legally licensed dentist owns a dental office, and employs legally licensed man to conduct his place and perform the dental work."

and you then inquire:

> "Can the owner of such dental office be prosecuted under the dental statutes?"

Section 1320, General Code, provides as follows:

> "Unless previously qualified as provided by law, no person shall practice dentistry in this state until he has obtained a license from the state dental board as hereinafter provided."

Section 1329, General Code, provides in part as follows:

> "A person shall be regarded as practicing dentistry who is manager, proprietor, operator or conductor of a place for performing dental operations * * *."

Section 12714, General Code, provides in part:

> "Whoever violates any provision of law relating to the practice of dentistry, * * * for which no specific penalty has been prescribed, shall be fined not less than fifty dollars nor more than one hundred dollars, or imprisoned not less than ten days nor more than thirty days, or both."

On examination of section 1320, General Code, it is to be noted that it is provided that no person shall practice dentistry in this state until he has obtained a license so to do, and section 1329, General Code, provides who shall be considered as practicing dentistry in this state, and stipulates that one who is a manager, proprietor, operator or conductor of a place for performing dental operations shall be considered as practicing dentistry.

The word "proprietor" is defined by Webster to be:

> "One who has the legal right or exclusive title to anything, whether in possession or not; an owner; sometimes, esp. in statutory construction, in a wider sense, a person having an interest less than an absolute and exclusive right, as the usufruct, or present control and use of property.'

In the statement of facts which you submit you state that A owns a dental office. Being, therefore, the owner of a dental office he is under the statute what is designated as a proprietor.

Therefor, A, being a proprietor of a place for performing dental operations, as provided in section 1329, General Code, and therefore, being regarded as practicing dentistry, and since it is provided in section 1320, General Code, that no person shall practice dentistry in this state without obtaining a license so to do, and since in the law regarding the practice of dentistry no specific penalty is prescribed therefor, section 12714, General Code, would apply, and I am, therefore, of the opinion that the owner of such dental office can be prosecuted under the dental statutes as above provided.

Very truly yours,
TIMOTHY S. HOGAN,
Attorney General.

POWER OF BOARD TO SUSPEND IMPOSITION AND EXECUTION OF FINE OR PENALTY.

In Ohio the authority of the court to remit a fine when the statutory language will so permit and the right to suspend the execution of a sentence is admitted to be an inherent power. When a person pleads guilty or is convicted therefore of an offense under section 12705, General Code, of the pharmacy statutes, such person, in accordance with the terms of the statute, must be fined not less than $20.00. If the court sees fit, however, by reason of special facts to suspend the execution of such fine, it is empowered so to do.

COLUMBUS, OHIO, March 7, 1913.

MR. M. N. FORD, Secretary, State Board of Pharmacy, Columbus, Ohio.

DEAR SIR:—Under date of January 24th, you requested my opinion as follows:

"Mr. John Smith, upon affidavit issued by the secretary of the state board of pharmacy, was found guilty of violating section 12705 of the pharmacy law, before a justice of the peace, and was fined $20.00 and costs, and later the fine being remitted: the question is, has the justice of the peace the authority to remit said fine?"

Section 12705, General Code, is as follows:

"Whoever, not being a legally registered pharmacist, manages or conducts a retail drug store unless he has in his employ in full and actual charge of the pharmaceutical department of such store, a pharmacist legally registered under the laws of this state, and, whoever, being a legally registered pharmacist, shall manage or conduct a retail drug store without being personally in full and actual charge of such store, or unless he has in his employ in full and actual charge of the pharmaceutical department of such store a pharmacist legally registered under the laws of this state, shall be fined not less than twenty dollars nor more than one hundred dollars * * * * * *

"Fines are to be fixed with reference to the object which they are designed to accomplish, and their imposition and regulation belong to the legislature, to whose discretion and judgment the widest latitude must be conceded. The courts cannot with discretion or propriety question the actions of the legislature or control or restrain its discretion in the matter of fixing the amount of a fine, however, except where the minimum penalty is so plainly disproportioned to the offense or act for which it is imposed as to shock the sense of mankind."

13 American and English, page 60.

"The court or jury, in assessing a fine on conviction of an offense, must conform to the statute prescribing the punishment for the offense, and as a general rule any departure therefrom makes the sentence illegal."

19 Cyc., page 547.

"A sentence is not the discretionary act of the court; it is the judgment of the law which the court is commanded to pronounce. The act of passing sentence, like the mere entering of judgment upon a verdict, is purely a ministerial duty, and, therefore, its performance may be compelled by mandamus; such writ may as well issue to the successor of the judge, before whom the cause was tried, as to such judge since the duty is perfunctory, containing no element or ingredient of discretion."

25 American and English, page 292.

Section 12705, General Code, prescribes that a person guilty of the offense set out, "shall be fined not less than $20.00 nor more than $100.00." This language is clear and explicit, and in the light of the above authorities, when a person is found guilty of violating this statute, the court has no discretion, and is obliged to render sentence for not less than $20.00. To permit such fine to be remitted, after it has been imposed, would render the mandatory act of the judge nugatory, and such a procedure therefore, could not be authorized.

The authorities, however, recognize a clear distinction between the right to remit a fine, and the right of the court to suspend the execution of a fine which has been imposed in accordance with the terms of the statute.

Upon the question of the right of the court to suspend the execution of a fine, however, there is a very marked conflict in the decisions. Thus, on page 313, of the 25th volume, American and English, the following appears:

"But the right to suspend sentence, or to defer rendition of sentence for an indefinite time, after a regular conviction had been had, has, in some cases, on the ground that the exercise of such right would be an intringement upon or a usurpation of the pardoning power, been declared not to be within the power of the court. But other authorities have denied that it is a complete objection to the claim of this authority in the courts that its use is equivalent to a pardon, and, in professional pursuance of long established usage which they declare supportable upon forceful considerations of public policy, hold that its exercise in proper cases is within the judicial discretion of the court."

And in 12 Cyc., page 772, the following is said:

"Whether the court, in the absence of statute, has power to suspend sentence for an indefinite period, is not absolutely decided. It has been held that where there are extenuating circumstances, or a like case is pending on appeal, or where for any sufficient cause, an immediate sentence is not required, the court may, with the consent of all parties, and upon terms which to it seem just, suspend sentence. Some cases hold, however, that courts have not the power to suspend indefinitely the passing or the execution of the sentence, and that an attempt to do so is a usurpation of the power to pardon or to remit the punishment, which belongs solely to the executive."

In Ohio, the courts have taken the rule that the court has the inherent power to suspend the execution of a sentence in whole or in part, unless otherwise provided by statute.

"The power to stay the execution of a sentence in whole or in part, in a criminal case is inherent in every court having final jurisdiction in such cases, unless otherwise provided by statute."

Webber vs. State, 58 O. S., 619.

"In the absence of a statutory enactment to the contrary, the power to suspend execution of sentence during good behavior, or to revoke such suspension, is not impaired or limited by the passing of the term in which the suspension was made."

In re., Clara Lee, 3 N. P., N. S. 533.

On page 535 of this case, in taking up the argument of the contrary rule, to the effect that the power to suspend the execution of a sentence is a usurpation of the executive power to grant pardons, judge Dillon says:

"Without quoting further it may be pertinent to observe that the theory of the courts which have decided the right to enforce sentence at a term subsequent to the conviction, is not based upon the time of the sentence, but has for its chief support and argument the fact that it is delegating to the judge the power to exercise parole and pardon in violation of the fundamental law of the state. These cases seem not to have observed that it already lay in the power of the same courts to discharge the prisoner at will at the conclusion of the state's evidence or if the verdict of the jury was not satisfactory, to set it aside."

In support of this Ohio rule also the case of People vs. Court of Sessions 141, N. Y., page 288, may be cited. On page 294 thereof, the court says:

"The power to suspend sentence and the power to grant reprieves and pardons as understood when the constitution was adopted, are totally distinct in their origin and nature. The former was always a part of the judicial power. The latter was always a part of the executive power * * *. A pardon reaches both the punishment prescribed for the offense and the guilt of the offender. It releases the punishment and blots out of existence the guilt, so that in the eye of the law, the offender is as innocent as if he had never committed the offense. It removes the penalties and disabilities and restores him to all his civil rights; it makes him as it were, a new man, and gives him a new credit and capacity."

Whilst there is, therefore, vast conflict of authorities upon the question of the inherent right of a court to suspend the execution of a sentence and whilst the weight of the authorities outside of this state seems indeed to be opposed to this right, the decisions of our court must be followed, and I am of the opinion that in this state, the court, unless otherwise provided by statute, has the inherent power to suspend sentence or the execution thereof. In the present case, the language of the statute will not permit remissions or suspensions of the imposition of the sentence itself, and I am of the opinion that sentences must be imposed upon the finding of the defendent guilty, or when he pleads guilty of a violation of section 12705, General Code, to the extent of at least $20.00.

In view of the above authorities, however, I am of the opinion that the execution of a sentence may be indefinitely suspended, when in the discretion of the court, the facts seem to justify such action.

Very truly yours,
TIMOTHY S. HOGAN,
Attorney General.

PHARMACY—PRESCRIPTIONS MAY BE FILLED ONLY BY REGISTERED PHARMACIST OR BY REGISTERED ASSISTANT PHARMACIST ACTING UNDER THE CONTROL AND MANAGEMENT OF A REGISTERED PHARMACIST—STATE AND CITY INSTITUTIONS.

In state and city institutions where drugs are sold and physicians' prescriptions are filled, the department conducting such work constitutes a retail drug store within the meaning of section 12705, General Code, and such department may, therefore, not be conducted under said statute without having in charge thereof a legally registered pharmacist.

Under section 12706, General Code, prescriptions may not be filled in such departments by other than a legally registered pharmacist or a legally registered assistant pharmacist, when a legally registered pharmacist is in control thereof.

COLUMBUS, OHIO, April 9, 1913.

HON. M. N. FORD, Secretary, State Board of Pharmacy, Columbus, Ohio.

DEAR SIR:—Under favor of November 21, 1912, you request my opinion as follows:

"At a meeting of the state board of pharmacy, held in October, I was instructed to file a request for an opinion from your office concerning state and city institutions wherein drugs are sold, and physicians' prescriptions are filled by non-registered pharmacists.

"The doctor or doctors of said institutions are not in charge of the drugs, neither do they supply their patients personally; but, they issue prescriptions to the drug department and this department fills said prescription and delivers to the nurse for administering to the patient.

"Can such institution be legally conducted without having employed in full and actual charge of the drug department of said institution a legally registered pharmacist under the laws of this state?"

Sections 12705 and 12706 of the General Code are as follows:

"Section 12705. Whoever, not being a legally registered pharmacist, manages or conducts a retail drug store, unless he has in his employ in full and actual charge of the pharmaceutical department of such store, a pharmacist legally registered under the laws of this state, and, whoever being a legally registered pharmacist shall manage or conduct a retail drug store without being personally in full and actual charge of such store, or unless he has in his employ in full and actual charge of the pharmaceutical department of such store a pharmacist legally registered under the laws of this state, shall be fined not less than twenty dollars nor more than one hundred dollars. Each day's violation of this section shall constitute a separate offense. A retail drug store, within the meaning of this section, shall be any room, rooms or place of business wherein drugs, poisons, chemicals or pharmaceutical preparations shall be offered or displayed for sale at retail, or upon which as a sign the words 'pharmacy,' 'drugs,' 'drug store,' 'pharmacist,' 'pharmaceutical chemist,' 'apothecary' or any of these words, or their equivalent in any language, are or is displayed.

"Section 12706. Whoever, not being a legally registered pharmacist, or a legally registered assistant pharmacist, employed in a pharmacy or drug store under the management or control of a legally registered pharmacist, compounds, dispenses or sells a drug, chemical, poison or pharmaceutical preparation, shall be fined not less than twenty dollars nor more than one hundred dollars. Each day's violation of this section shall constitute a separate offense."

The facts stated in your letter do not sufficiently detail the situation so as to make clear that the drug department of these institutions comes within the definition of a retail drug store, as is comprehended by section 12705, General Code.

Webster's dictionary defines the term "retail" as follows:

"To cut up and dispose of in small parcels; to sell at second hand—opposed to selling by wholesale."

The Century dictionary defines the term as follows:

"To sell in small quantities or parcels."

Inasmuch as you state in your letter that drugs are sold in these institutions, I take it that it is very probable that these drug departments come within the definition of section 12705, General Code. If the facts are such that drugs are sold in these departments and the physicians pay for the prescriptions obtained, it is clear that, under the terms of section 12705, such departments must be conducted and managed by a legally registered pharmacist.

Whether or not this be the case, however, it is clear that under the terms of section 12706, General Code, the filling of a prescription is covered by the terms "compounds" and "dispenses," as used in this section, and such prescription, therefor, may not be filled by other than either a legally registered pharmacist or a legally registered assistant pharmacist, acting under the control and management of a legally registered pharmacist. I reach this latter conclusion under the clearly justified assumption that the term "pharmacy," as used in section 12706, includes such a drug department as that referred to in your letter.

In conclusion, and direct answer to your inquiries, such institutions may not be legally conducted without having in full and actual charge thereof a legally registered pharmacist, if drugs are actually sold therein. Second—Prescriptions may not be filled in such departments by other than a legally registered pharmacist; or by a legally registered assistant pharmacist, when a legally registered pharmacist is in control thereof.

Very truly yours,
TIMOTHY S. HOGAN,
Attorney General.

PRESCRIPTIONS MAY BE FILLED ONLY BY LEGALLY REGISTERED PHARMACIST AND BY LEGALLY REGISTERED ASSISTANT PHARMACIST ACTING UNDER CONTROL OF FORMER.

Under section 12706, General Code, prescriptions may not be filled by other than legally registered pharmacists or by a legally registered assistant pharmacist, when employed in a pharmacy or drug store, under the management and control of a legally registered pharmacist.

COLUMBUS, OHIO, April 9, 1913.

HON. M. N. FORD, Secretary, State Board of Pharmacy, Columbus, Ohio.

DEAR SIR:—Under date of November 21st you request my opinion as follows:

> "At the last meeting of the state board of pharmacy I was instructed to ask for an opinion from your office concerning the compounding of medicines and filling of physicians' prescriptions by non-registered pharmacists in all religious and benevolent institutions.
> "If such institutions have a drug department wherein physicians' prescriptions are received, can any other than a legally registered pharmacist compound or fill said prescription?"

Section 12706 of the General Code is as follows:

> "Whoever, not being a legally registered pharmacist, or a legally registered assistant pharmacist employed in a pharmacy or drug store under the management or control of a legally registered pharmacist, compounds, dispenses or sells a drug, chemical, poison or pharmaceutical preparation, shall be fined not less than twenty dollars nor more than one hundred dollars. Each day's violation of this section shall constitute a separate offense."

Under this section drugs may not be compounded or dispensed by other than a legally registered pharmacist or by a legally registered assistant pharmacist when employed in a pharmacy or drug store which has in charge thereof a legally registered pharmacist.

This section clearly applies to your case, and I am of the opinion that under its terms none other than a legally registered pharmacist or a legally registered assistant pharmacist, when the latter is acting under the control and management of a legally registered pharmacist, may compound or fill prescriptions in such institutions.

Very truly yours,

TIMOTHY S. HOGAN,

Attorney General.

PRESCRIPTION—FILLING BY DRUGGIST WHEN DATE AND NAME NOT INSCRIBED THEREON, ILLEGAL.

It is the intention of section 12672, General Code, that a prescription for cocaine or any of its salts or compounds shall not be filled by a druggist unless there has been inscribed thereon by a physician, veterinary surgeon or druggist issuing it, the date of issue and the name of the person for whom it is issued.

A druggist, therefore, who himself fills out these items upon the prescription is guilty of a violation of this section in filling out the same.

COLUMBUS, OHIO, April 30, 1913.

HON. M. N. FORD, Secretary, State Board of Pharmacy, Columbus, Ohio.

DEAR SIR:—Under favor of January 9th, you request my opinion as follows:

"Following is a copy of a prescription upon which the board requests an opinion from your office as to whether it can be legally filled under section 12672 of the cocaine law.

"John Doe, Druggist,
423 Adams street, corner Main.....City, Ohio.

Cocaine Hyd.....Gr. X.
Acetanilid.....Oz. SS.
Triturate thoroughly.
Sig: Snuff a little Triturate thoroughly up the nose twice a day.
J. H. Smith, M. D."

"The druggist before delivering the medicine the prescription called for asks the bearer of same to write his name on the face of the prescription. This he does, and then the druggist fills in the date on same and delivers the said medicine."

Section 12672 of the General Code is as follows:

"Whoever sells, barters, furnishes or gives away any quantity of cocaine, alpha or beta eucaine or alypin, or any of their salts or compounds, or any preparation or mixture containing any of the aforesaid drugs or their salts or compounds of any of the combinations, of the same, except upon the prescription of a physician, veterinary surgeon or dentist duly licensed under the laws of this state, which prescription shall contain the name of the physician, veterinary surgeon or dentist issuing it, the date of issue and the name of the person for whom it is issued; or fails to keep such prescription on file for at least two years, in such manner that it is accessible at all reasonable times to the inspection of the proper officer or officers of the law and the members of the state board of pharmacy and the secretary of the state board of pharmacy, or fills said prescription more than once, shall be fined not less than fifty dollars, nor more than five hundred dollars, for the first offense, and for each subsequent offense shall be imprisoned not less than one year nor more than five years in the penitentiary. This section does not extend to sales at wholesale of any quantity of the above mentioned drugs to duly registered pharmacists, physiciains, dentists or veterinary surgeons."

It is manifestly the intention of this statute that the question of the policy of issuing such prescriptions and the control of their date of issue, the person to whom issued and the quantity of ingredients should be vested, in the first place, in a physician, veterinary surgeon or dentist, duly licensed under the laws of this state. It is just as important, as far as the policy of the law is concerned, that the physician dictate the time at which such prescription should be obtained and the person who is to be permitted to receive the same, as it is that a physician should dictate the constituent parts and the amount of the medicine that is to be obtained. I am of the opinion that the act intends that a prescription, with all these conditions, should be the work of the physician himself, and that the date and the name of the person should be designated in the prescription at the time the same is signed by the physician.

At any rate, in the present case, since the druggist took it upon himself to fill in the date on the prescription, whilst the statute prescribes that no cocaine shall be sold except when the date of issue and the name of the person appear upon the prescription issued for the same, there is a clear violation of the statute, and I am of the opinion that the prescription was illegally filled by this druggist.

Very truly yours,
TIMOTHY S. HOGAN,
Attorney General.

FINE ASSESSED FOR VIOLATION OF COCAINE LAW TO BE PAID TO SECRETARY OF STATE BOARD OF PHARMACY AND NOT TO LAW LIBRARY ASSOCIATION.

Section 3056, General Code, providing for the payment of a certain portion of fines assessed by the police court, is a general law to which section 12673, General Code, (providing for payment of fines assessed for violations of said law to the secretary of the Ohio board of pharmacy), which is a special and a later law, is to be considered an exception.

Fines assessed under the later section, therefore, must be paid as therein directed.

COLUMBUS, OHIO, April 19, 1913.

State Board of Pharmacy, Columbus, Ohio.

GENTLEMEN:—Under date of March 6th you state as follows:

> "One J. B. was found guilty of violating section 12672 of the cocaine law, in Cincinnati police court on March 5, 1913, and fined. The clerk of the police court is not clear as to where to deposit this fine, and asks for an opinion from your office."

Since you state that the said J. B. had been fined under section 12672, General Code, I assume that he was so fined as being guilty of the first offense.

By virtue of section 4577, General Code, the police court has jurisdiction of, and to hear, finally determine, and to impose the prescribed penalty for any misdemeanor committed within the limits of the city, or within four miles thereof. I assume that the only question which arises is as to the disposition to be made of the fine which was assessed by said court.

Section 12673 of the General Code reads as follows:

> "It shall be the duty of the Ohio board of pharmacy to enforce the provisions of section 12672, and all fines collected under section 12672 shall be paid to the secretary of the Ohio board of pharmacy, and by him covered into the state treasury to be credited to the use of the Ohio board of pharmacy."

Section 3056, General Code, provides in part as follows:

"All fines and penalties assessed and collected by the police court for offenses and misdemeanors prosecuted in the name of the state, except a portion thereof equal to the compensation allowed by the county commissioners to the judges, clerk and prosecuting attorney of such court in state cases shall be retained by the clerk and be paid by him quarterly to the trustees of such law library associations, but the sum so retained and paid by the clerk of said police court to the trustees of such law library association shall in no quarter be less than 15 per cent. of the fines and penalties collected in that quarter without deducting the amount of the allowances of the county commissioners to said judges, clerk and prosecutor."

The question, therefore, arises as to whether the fine as assessed under section 12672, General Code, should by virtue of the provisions of section 12673, General Code, be paid to the secretary of the Ohio board of pharmacy, or by virtue of section 3056, General Code, should be paid to the trustees of the law library association of Hamilton county.

A study of the relative age of the statutes will disclose that the provisions of section 12673 of the General Code were first enacted May 9, 1908 (99 O. L., 473). The provisions of section 3056, General Code, were enacted originally on April 27, 1872 (69 O. L., 166). I will not attempt to follow the statute through the 89th Ohio Laws and the 91st Ohio Laws. In the 94th Ohio Laws 135, section 2680, Revised Statutes (now section 3056, General Code), was again amended so as to read in part as follows:

"All fines and penalties which are assessed and collected by the police court for offenses and misdemeanors in the name of the state, except a portion thereof equal to the compensation allowed by the county commissioners to the judges, clerk and prosecuting attorney of such court, in state cases, which shall be retained by the clerk, shall be paid by the clerk quarterly to the trustees of such law library associations mentioned in the next two preceding sections, except those in cities of the first and second grades of the first class, but the sums so paid shall not be less than five hundred dollars per annum, if there be such an amount."

Said section 2680, Revised Statutes, as found in 94 O. L., 135, was carried into the General Code of Ohio as section 3056.

This section was subsequently amended in 101 Ohio Laws, 295. It may be stated, however, that the provisions of said section 3056, General Code, practically in the form in which they are now found, were enacted prior to the provisions of section 12673, General Code. So that section 12673, General Code, having been enacted alter than section 3056, General Code, would be read as an exception to the provisions of section 3056, General Code.

Again it is a proposition of law that such a special statute as section 12673, General Code, being a statute dealing with a part of the fines which might be assessed by the police court, should be read as an exception to the general provisions relative to such fines as found in section 3056, General Code.

"Where there is one statute dealing with a subject in general and comprehensive terms and another dealing with a part of the same subject in a more minute and definite way the two should be read together and harmonized, if possible, with a view to giving effect to a consistent legislative policy; but to the extent of any necessary repugnancy between them, the special will prevail over the general statute. Where the special statute is later, it will be regarded as an exception to, or qualification of, the prior general one, where the general act is later, the special will be construed as remaining and an exception to its terms, unless it is repealed in express words or by necessary implications."

See also opinion of Marshall, J., in the case of city of Cincinnati vs. Holmes, Adm'r., 56 O. S., 104, at page 114, wherein it is stated:

"It is a rule constantly observed in the construction of statutes, that where the general provisions of a statute conflict with the more specific provisions of another, or are incompatible with its provisions, the latter is to be read as an exception to the former."

For the reason, therefore, that the provisions of section 12673, General Code, were enacted after the provisions of section 3056, General Code, and the further reason that section 12673, General Code, deals but in part with the subjects embraced in section 3056, General Code, I am of the opinion that the provisions of section 12673, General Code, would control and that, therefore, the clerk of the police court of the city of Cincinnati should pay to the secretary of the Ohio board of pharmacy fines assessed by the said police court for violations of section 18672, General Code, and that no part of said fines should be paid under the provisions of section 3056, General Code.

Very truly yours,
TIMOTHY S. HOGAN,
Attorney General.

RETAIL DRUGGIST WHO MANUFACTURES AND SELLS INSECTICIDES AND FUNGICIDES IS SUBJECT TO PROVISION OF ACT PROVIDING REGULATION FOR MANUFACTURE AND SALE OF SAME.

COLUMBUS, OHIO, June 5, 1913.

HON. M. N. FORD, Secretary, State Board of Pharmacy, Columbus, Ohio.

DEAR SIR:—Under date of May 20th you inquire as follows:

"I am enclosing a copy of house bill No. 230, Mr. Bogg, to regulate the manufacture and sale of insecticides and fungicides in Ohio. The bill provides that manufacturers of insecticides shall pay a license of $20 per year.

"The question arises, will the provisions of this act apply to retail druggists who manufacture bedbug poisons, etc?"

This bill, copy of which accompanies your letter and which I return herewith, is entitled "An act to regulate the manufacture and sale of insecticides and fungicides in Ohio."

"Manufacture" is defined in the Century dictionary as follows:

"To make or fabricate, as anything for use, especially in considerable quantities or numbers, or by the aid of many hands or machinery."

And in Webster's dictionary the following is said:

> "To make or fabricate from raw material by the hand, by art or machinery and to work into forms convenient for use."

Your request is expressly with relation to retail druggists who manufacture bedbug poisons, etc. In section 3 of the act it is said:

> "The term 'insecticide' as used in this act shall include any substance or mixture of substances intended to be used for preventing, destroying, repelling or mitigating any insects which may infest vegetation, man or animals, or households, or be present in any environment whatever."

This definition of "insecticide" clearly includes bedbug poisons. I know of no reason why retail druggists who engage in the manufacture of such should be exempted from the safeguarding and regulatory provisions of this act; and as in the act there is not the slightest suggestion of any intention to except any one class of manufacturers, I am of the opinion that retail druggists who manufacture bedbug poison must comply with all related provisions of the act.

Very truly yours,
TIMOTHY S. HOGAN,
Attorney General.

BUILDING FOR OHIO STATE REFORMATORY FOR WOMEN—LIMITATION OF FORMER LEGISLATURE AS TO COST NOT BINDING UPON FUTURE GENERAL ASSEMBLIES.

It is beyond the power of one legislature to pass an act which is not subject to amendment or repeal by a succeeding legislature. The limitations therefore, placed in the appropriation bills of 1911 and 1912, restricting the cost of a building for the Ohio state reformatory for women to $350,000, is not binding upon present legislators and they may authorize an expenditure for that purpose in excess of such sum.

COLUMBUS, OHIO, March 20, 1913.

HON. H. H. SHIRER, Secretary, Board of State Charities, Columbus, Ohio.

DEAR SIR:—I acknowledge receipt of your letter of March 18th requesting my opinion upon the following question:

> "In 1911 the general assembly appropriated for the expenses, uses and purposes of the site and building commission for the Ohio state reformatory for women the sum of one hundred thousand dollars for each of the years 1911 and 1912, inserting in the appropriation clause the following language: 'Building to cost not to exceed $350,000 complete.' " (102 O. L., 383-409).

The act providing for the institution and construction of the building through the commission (102 O. L., 207) imposed no limitation upon the cost of the building or buildings necessary for the purposes of the institution to be known as the Ohio reformatory for women.

The question is now raised as to whether or not the prresent general assembly is bound by the above quoted language in the two general appropriation bills passed by the last legislature.

In my opinion the present general assembly is not so bound. It is beyond the power of one legislature to pass an act of legislation which is not subject to amendment or repeal by a succeeding legislature. It is quite true, undoubtedly, that the legislature of 1911 would not have appropriated as it did for the purpose of purchasing a site and erecting buildings thereon for the Ohio reformatory for women except with the reservation which has been referred to. That is to say, it was a part of the legislative idea entertained by that session of the general assembly that the first building erected should not exceed in cost $350,000.00. This limitation serves as notice to the succeeding legislatures that the legislature creating it had this definite idea. Its binding force upon succeeding legislatures is limited, however, to their respective consciences.

There is absolutely no legal or constitutional restraint upon the present session of the general assembly by virtue of the provision which has been quoted and discussed.

The conclusion which I have reached renders it unnecessary for me to consider your specific question.

Very truly yours,
TIMOTHY S. HOGAN,
Attorney General.

APPOINTMENT AS CERTIFIED PUBLIC ACCOUNTANT NOT VALID UNTIL CERTIFICATE GIVEN—CERTIFICATE VOID WHEN CONDITIONS NOT FULFILLED.

An appointment as certified public accountant by the board of public accountancy is not complete until the certificate has been signed and issued. The fact, therefore, that the board at an informal meeting, under a mistaken conception of the facts had promised a certificate, does not of itself entitle the applicant to the degree, and such informal promise may be revoked at any time prior to the issuance of a certificate.

COLUMBUS, OHIO, March 8, 1913.

The Honorable State Board of Accountancy, Columbus, Ohio.

GENTLEMEN:—Your honorable board has submitted to this department for consideration, a request in regard to the right of Mr. W. Wilson MacFarlane, to act as a certified public accountant, under the following statement of facts:

> "I am enclosing correspondence of the state board of accountancy with Mr. W. Wilson MacFarlane, 15 Wall street, New York City.
> "The first letter requires some explanation on my part as secretary of the state board. The first paragraph of this letter refers to a meeting of the state board of accountancy, June 8th. This was not a regular, but informal meeting, only two members being present, Mr. Thomas and myself, and in the consideration of this application, we were under the impression that the applicant was a member of the chartered accountants of England When we, at the September meeting, discovered our error, we advised Mr. MacFarlane of the facts, and stated that we could not issue him a certificate except on examination as noted in letter attached, under date of September 11th.
> "Mr. MacFarlane has taken exceptions to our ruling as noted by the attached correspondence, and the writer was interviewed by Mr. Bond, of New York, and Mr. Allen, of this city, attorneys, apparently representing Mr. MacFarlane, and demanding the issuance of a certificate in accordance with our letter of June 17th. The attached letter of October 28th will convey to you the attitude of Mr. MacFarlane as represented by his attorney.
> "The purpose of this letter is to advise you of all the facts in the case and ask for an opinion as to the standing of the board in relation to Mr. MacFarlane."

In reply to your inquiry, section 1370 of the General Code, provides for the establishment of a state board of accountancy, as follows:

> "There shall be a state board of accountancy, consisting of three members, not more than two of whom shall belong to the same political party. Each member of the board shall be a person skilled in the knowledge and practice of accounting, and actively engaged as a professional public accountant within this state."

Section 1373 of the General Code prescribes who may become certified public accountants, as follows:

"A citizen of the United States, or a person who has duly declared his intention to become such citizen, not less than twenty-one years of age, of good moral character, a graduate of a high school, or having received an equivalent education, with at least three years experience in the practice of accounting, and who has received from the state board of accountancy as herein provided, a certificate of his qualifications to practice as a public expert accountant, shall be styled and known as a certified public accountant. No other person shall assume such title or use the abbreviation "C. P. A.," or other words or letters to indicate that he is a certified public accountant."

Section 1374 provides for an examination of applicants for certificates, as follows:

"Each year, the state board of accountancy shall hold an examination for such certificate. Each applicant shall be examined in theory of accounts, practical accounting, auditing and commercial law as affecting accountancy. If three or more persons apply for certificates within not less than five months after the annual examination, the board shall hold an examination for them. The time and place of each examination shall be fixed by the board."

Section 1376 provides that the state board of accountancy may recognize certificates granted by other states or territories of the United States, or by foreign nations, as follows:

"A person who is a citizen of the United States, or has declared his intention of becoming such citizen, who is at least twenty-one years of age, of good moral character, who has complied with the rules and regulations of the state board of accountancy, and who holds a valid and unrevoked certificate as a certified public accountant, issued under the authority of another state or territory of the United States or the District of Columbia, or of a foreign nation, may receive from the board a certificate as a certified public accountant if the board is satisfied that the standards and requirements for a certificate as a certified public accountant thereof are substantially equivalent to those established by this chapter. Such person may thereafter practice in this state as a certified public accountant and assume and use the name, title and style of "certified public accountant" or any abbreviation or abbreviations thereof."

Section 1377 of the General Code provides the manner whereby a certificate issued by the state board of accountancy may be revoked, as follows:

"For sufficient cause the state board of accountancy may revoke a certificate issued under this chapter if a written notice has been mailed to the holder thereof at his last known address at least twenty days before hearing thereon. Such notice shall state the cause of such contemplated action and appoint a time for hearing thereon by the board. No certificate issued under this chapter shall be revoked until after such hearing."

It appears that on June 8th, 1912, the state board of accountancy held a meeting (a majority of the members being present), and acted favorably upon Mr. MacFarlane's application to become a certified public accountant. It is furthermore disclosed by a letter of date June 17th, 1912, from the state board of accountancy to Mr. MacFarlane, that the certificate making Mr. MacFarlane a certified public accountant was not signed nor executed by the board, and that such certificate was not to be forwarded to the applicant until a later date.

In the meantime, the state board of accountancy, for the reason set forth in the inquiry, reversed its action taken on June 8th, 1912, and refused to issue a certificate to Mr. MacFarlane making him a certified public accountant.

As a general proposition of law, such an appointment as a certified public accountant is not complete until the certificate has been signed and issued by the state board of accountancy; that is to say, the appointment was not fully consummated until the issuing of the certificate properly executed by the board.

> "Where provision is made for the exercise of a power to commission, the appointment is not complete until the commission has been signed."

Conger vs. Gilmer, page 75:

> "The appointment to office by the board of supervisors is not complete until the person appointed has received a certificate of his election under the seal of the board, signed by the proper officers of the board. An appointment made by a majority of the board may be revoked at any time before such certificate is issued, and another person may be appointed."

Magruder vs. Tuck, 25 Maryland, page 217:

> "No clerk of court has authority to qualify a person elected before he has been commissioned, for, in the absence of a commission, there would be no sufficient evidence of an election or appointment."

In the case of Marbury vs. Madison, 1 Cranch's Report, at page 151 of the opinion, the court says:

> "The appointment of such an officer (justice of the peace in the District of Columbia) is complete when the President has nominated him to the senate and the senate has advised and consented, and the President has signed the commission and delivered it to the secretary to be sealed."

In the syllabus of the last quoted case, the court holds as follows:

> "When a commission for an officer not holding his office at the will of the President is by him signed and transmitted to the secretary of state to be sealed and recorded, it is irrevocable and the appointment is complete."

In the case of State vs. McCollister, 11 Ohio Reports, page 46, at page 50 of the opinion, the court says:

> "I cannot concur with counsel, that a man appointed or elected to an office thereby becomes an incumbent of that office. An incumbent of an office is one who is legally authorized to discharge the duties of that office. For instance, a man who is elected county treasurer is required to give bond and to take an oath of office. These things must be done before he can discharge the duties of the office and if not done in due time, the office itself is vacant. There is no incumbent; so where a man is elected judge, he does not by the election become a judge; he must receive a commission as evidence of his authority to act."

From the statement of facts, it is clear that a certificate making Mr. MacFarlane a certified public accountant has never been issued by the board. For the reasons above given, Mr. MacFarlane has never been legally appointed a certified public accountant by the state board of accountancy.

Furthermore, every person desiring to become a certified accountant, without taking the examination required by section 1374 of the General Code, supra, must comply with the requirements of section 1376 of the General Code, supra.

From the statement of facts in your inquiry, and the correspondence thereto attached, it is disclosed that Mr. MacFarlane did not hold a valid and unrevoked certificate as a certified public accountant, issued under the authority of another state or territory of the United States, the District of Columbia, or of a foreign nation as required by said section 1376 of the General Code.

It follows therefore, that the state board of accountancy was without authority to issue a certificate, as a certified public accountant to Mr. MacFarlane, without requiring him to take an examination. The board, under the circumstancec, being without legal authority to issue such certificate in the first instance, and such certificate, as a matter of fact, never having been issued, it is my final conclusion that Mr. MacFarlane is not a certified public accountant under the laws of Ohio.

Very truly yours,
TIMOTHY S. HOGAN,
Attorney General.

WOMEN ARE PERMITTED TO TAKE THE EXAMINATION FOR CERTIFIED PUBLIC ACCOUNTANTS IN OHIO WHEN THEY COMPLY WITH THE PROVISIONS OF SECTION 1373, GENERAL CODE.

All women who are citizens of the United States have a legitimate right to sit at an examination for certified public accountants in this state, providing they have the other qualifications set forth in section 1373, General Code.

COLUMBUS, OHIO, September 27, 1913.

HON. J. J. MCKNIGHT, Secretary, State Board of Accountancy, Columbus, Ohio.

DEAR SIR:—On August 30, 1913, this department received from you the following communication:—

> "The enclosed inquiry was submitted to the writer, and feeling that I had no authority to make any ruling in this case, I submitted the letter to Mr. E. S. Thomas of Cincinnati, president of the Ohio state board of accountancy. He has returned it to me with notation. Will you be kind enough to submit to the board, an opinion in this matter?"

The question referred to in said communication, and upon which you desire an opinion, is as follows:

> "Whether or not women are allowed to sit at the certified public accountancy examinations in the state of Ohio?"

In reply thereto I desire to say that section 1373 of the General Code provides as follows:

> "A citizen of the United States, or a person who has duly declared his intention to become such a citizen, not less than twenty-one years of age, of good moral character, a graduate of a high school, or having received an equivalent education, with at least three years experience in the practice of accounting, and who has received from the state board of accountancy, as herein provided, a certificate of his qualifications to practice as a public expert accountant shall be styled and known as a certified public accountant. No other person shall assume such title or use the abbreviation 'C. P. A.' or other words or letters to indicate that he is a certified public accountant." Section 1 of article 14 of the constitution of the United States is as follows:

"All persons born or naturalized in the United States, and subject to the jurisdiction thereof, are citizens of the United States and of the state wherein they reside. No state shall make or enforce any law which shall abridge the privileges or immunities of citizens of the United States; nor shall any state deprive any person of life, liberty or property, without due process of law; nor deny to any person within its jurisdiction the equal protection of the laws."

In construing said section, the supreme court of the United States in the case of Minor vs. Happersett, 88 U. S. report, 21 Wallace's report, page 162, holds that a woman, if born of citizen parents within the jurisdiction of the United States, is a citizen of the United States, in the following language:

"The word 'citizen' is often used to convey the idea of membership in a nation.

"In that sense, women, if born of citizen parents within the jurisdiction of the United States, have always been considered citizens of the United States, as much so before the adoption of the fourteenth amendment to the constitution as since."

In the case of William E. Ritchie, plaintiff in error, vs. people of the state of Illinois (155 Ill., 98), 29 L. R. A., 79, the supreme court of Illinois in its opinion uses the following language:

"It has been held that a woman is both a 'citizen' and a 'person' within the meaning of this section. Minor vs. Happersett, 88 U. S. 21, Wall. 162, 22 L. ed., 627. The privileges and immunities here referred to are, in general, 'protection by the government, with the right to acquire and possess property of every kind, and to pursue and obtain happiness and safety, subject, nevertheless, to such restraints as the government may prescribe for the general good of the whole'. Slaughterhouse cases, 83 U. S., 16 Wall., 36, 21 L. ed., 394. As a citizen, woman has the right to acquire and possess property of every kind. As a person, she has the right to claim the benefit of the constitutional provision that she shall not be deprived of life, liberty or property without due process of law. Involved in these rights thus guaranteed to her is the right to make and enforce contracts. The law accords to her, as to every other citizen, the natural right to gain a livelihood by intelligence, honesty and industry in the arts, the sciences, the professions or other vocations. Before the law, her right is to a choice of vocations cannot be said to be denied or abridged on account of sex. Re Leach's petition, 134, Ind. 665, 21 L. R. A., 701."

By virtue of the foregoing, it follows that all women who are born or naturalized in the United States, thereby become citizens of the United States, and being citizens of the United States, I am of the opinion that they have a legal right to sit at the certified public accountancy examinations in this state, provided they also possess the other qualifications set forth in section 1373, General Code, Supra.

Yours very truly,
TIMOTHY S. HOGAN,
Attorney General.

WHERE AN APPLICATION FOR AN EXAMINATION IS FILED WITH THE OHIO STATE BOARD OF ACCOUNTANCY, ACCOMPANIED BY THE REQUIRED FEE FOR SUCH EXAMINATION, AND THE APPLICANT IS REJECTED, THE FEE SHOULD BE RETURNED TO THE APPLICANT.

In case an application for an examination is filed with the Ohio state board of accountancy accompanied by a certified check or its equivalent, and the applicant is not in the judgment of the board eligible for examination, and the application is rejected by the board and the applicant denied examination, the board should return to the rejected applicant the fee which he had deposited.

COLUMBUS, OHIO, November 24, 1913.

The State Board of Accountancy, Columbus, Ohio.

GENTLEMEN:—Under date of November 15, 1913, your department submitted to this department for an opinion, the following request:

> "Chapter 26, section 1375 (99 vs. 332, p. 4), states:
> "At the time of filing the application for such examination and certificate, each applicant shall pay to the treasurer of the state board of accountancy a fee of twenty-five dollars. Such examination fee shall not be refunded, but an applicant may be re-examined without the payment of an additional fee within eighteen months from the date of his application.
> "In case an application is filed with the Ohio state board of accountancy, accompanied by certified check or its equivalent, and the applicant is not in the judgment of the board eligible for examination, and such application is by the board rejected, and the applicant denied examination, may the board within the law, return to such applicant his fee, or is this fee to be understood as that designated by the law which shall not be refunded? The board has in some instances, upon the rejection of an application, returned the fee to the applicant. The question of the validity of such action has been raised, and the board desires an opinion as to the correct interpretation of the law."

In reply thereto, section 1373 of the General Code, provides that a person who has received from the state board of accountancy a certificate of his qualifications to practice as a public expert accountant, shall be styled and known as a certified public accountant, as follows:

> "A citizen of the United States, or a person who has duly declared his intention to become such citizen, not less than twenty-one years of age, of good moral character, a graduate of a high school, or having received an equivalent education, with at least three years' experience in the practice of accounting, and who has received from the state board of accountancy, as herein provided, a certificate of his qualifications to practice as a public expert accountant shall be styled and known as a certified public accountant. No other person shall assume such title or use the abbreviation 'C. P. A.,' or other words or letters to indicate that he is a certified public accountant."

Section 1374 of the General Code provides that the state board of accountancy shall hold an examination for such certificate each year, as follows:

"Each year, the state board of accountancy shall hold an examination for such certificate. Each applicant shall be examined in theory of accounts, practical accounting, auditing and commercial law as affecting accountancy. If three or more persons apply for certificates within not less than five months after the annual examination, the board shall hold an examination for them. The time and place of each examination shall be fixed by the board."

Said section 1374, supra, specifically provides that "each applicant shall be examined in the theory of accounts, practical accounting, auditing and commercial law as affecting accountancy," and section 1375, General Code, which you cite and quote in your request, supra, specifically provides that "at the time of filing the application for such examination and certificate, each applicant shall pay to the treasurer of the state board of accountancy a fee of $25.00."

From the foregoing language, as employed in the two foregoing sections of the General Code, I gather that the said fee of $25.00 is paid for the taking of the examination and for the certificate issued, if such applicant is successful in passing the prescribed examination. In fact, the last sentence of section 1375, General Code, which is the cause of the difficulty about which you request an opinion, refers to such fee as an examination fee in the following language:

"Such examination fee shall not be refunded, but the applicant may be re-examined without the payment of an additional fee within eighteen months from the date of his application."

It could hardly be said that such fee is an examination fee if such applicant is not eligible to take the examination, by reason of the fact that his application is rejected by the board of accountancy and the applicant denied an examination for not possessing the required qualifications, as stated in your inquiry. Furthermore, while said section provides that "such examination fee shall not be refunded," nevertheless, in lieu of such refunder, where the applicant has taken the examination and failed to secure a certificate, it is to be noted that such "applicant may be re-examined without the payment of an additional fee within eighteen months from the date of his application." It is apparent that an applicant cannot be re-examined unless he has taken a previous examination, and said fee of $25.00 which is paid to the treasurer of the state board of accountancy, being termed an examination fee by said section 1375, cannot be said to be an examination fee in the strict sense of the word, unless such applicant has taken the examination; and the board of accountancy cannot legally refuse to refund such fee of $25.00 unless the applicant gets within the provision of section 1375 of the General Code, supra, by having taken the examination so as to be entitled to a re-examination in lieu of such refunder. If for any cause an applicant is not eligible to take such examination, and his fee of $25.00 is retained by the board of accountancy, then such applicant has paid such fee without having received anything in return therefor, and not even an opportunity of taking such examination. I do not think that this is the intent of the above quoted legislative enactment. On the other hand,

I believe the intent of said sections to be, that such applicant is first entitled to an examination, and if he fails in such examination, his examination fee shall not be refunded, but in lieu thereof, he is entitled to a re-examination within the prescribed time. Therefore, if in the judgment of the state board of accountancy, an applicant is not eligible for examination and the application of such applicant is rejected and the applicant denied an examination, it is my conclusion that said board of accountancy is without legal authority to retain the said fee of $25.00 and the same should be refunded to the applicant, as not coming within the purview of section 1325 of the General Code.

Yours very truly,
TIMOTHY S. HOGAN,
Attorney General.

APPROPRIATION—RECEIPTS FROM SALE OF SERUM MAY BE USED BY STATE BOARD OF AGRICULTURE FOR THE PURPOSE OF BUILDING AND EQUIPPING PLANT FOR THE PRODUCTION OF SERUM FOR THE TREATMENT OF HOG CHOLERA TO THE EXTENT OF THE DIFFERENCE BETWEEN THE AMOUNT AUTHORIZED TO BE EXPENDED FOR SUCH BUILDING AND THE AMOUNT SPECIFICALLY APPROPRIATED THEREFOR.

Since the legislature has authorized an expenditure of $75,000.00 for the purpose of building and equipping a farm for the production of serum for the treatment of hog cholera, and since the legislature has appropriated only $60,000.00 for this purpose, the appropriation made by the legislature in addition thereto of receipts and balances will permit such receipts and balances to be devoted to the purpose of building and equipping such plant to the extent of the difference between the amount specifically appropriated and the amount authorized to be expended, to wit: $15,000.00.

COLUMBUS, OHIO, December 27, 1912.

Ohio State Board of Agriculture, attention Dr. Paul Fischer, State Veterinarian, Columbus, Ohio.

GENTLEMEN:—I beg to acknowledge receipt of your letter of December 19th, wherein you state:

> "In reference to the work of serum production operated under the direction of the state board of agriculture.
> "The plant now in operation was developed from an original appropriation of three thousand dollars, equipment, etc., as it was needed from time to time, being provided from the funds obtained by the sale of serum.
> "The new plant is being built with the special appropriation of sixty thousand dollars. In both cases it was understood that the proceeds of the sale of serum be used to carry on and develop the work, as well as to purchase such apparatus as was needed from time to time and replace worn-out and broken articles.
> "We are now about to remove the equipment from the old to the new laboratories, as far as practicable, without interrupting the progress of the work. We should like to be advised by your office whether there is an obstacle in the law which would prevent the use for the new plant of the funds accumulated from the sale of serum produced in the old laboratories, in the same manner in which these funds have been used in the past for the original plant."

The original appropriation referred to in your letter was included in the general appropriation made to your department by the general assembly in 1909, 100 O. L., 31, as follows:

> "Serum for hog cholera ..... $3,000.00."

The general assembly at its session in 1910, 101 O. L., 178, appropriated for:

> "Purchase and equipment of serum farm of prevention of hog cholera ..... $25,000.00."

And at the session of 1911, 102 O. L., 374, appropriated for year 1911:

"Building and equipment for serum farm to cost complete $75,000.00 ..... $30,000.00."

And at the same session, 102 O. L., 394, appropriated for the year 1912:

"Building and equipment for serum farm to cost $75,000 complete ..... $30,000.00."

In addition to these items there was appropriated the sum of $2,700.00 for the salaries of laborers at said serum farm for each of the years 1911 and 1912. The legislature at all of the sessions hereinbefore mentioned appropriated to the Ohio state board of agriculture the receipts and balances of that department. This was necessary in order to permit the department to expend its receipts, otherwise those receipts would have reverted to the general revenue fund in the state treasury.

The fact that the legislature appropriated only $60,000 for the building and equipment of a serum plant and limited the total cost thereof to $75,000 and also appropriated receipts and balances of your department, is, to my mind, strong evidence of the intent of that body to permit the expenditure for the equipment of the new plant from the fund arising out of the sale of serum at the old plant, of an amount equal to the difference between the appropriation of $60,000 and the total cost of the building and equipment of the new plant as limited by the appropriation bill to $75,000, that is the sum of $15,000.

I am, therefore, of the opinion that you are legally authorized to expend for the building and equipment of the new serum plant any sum not to exceed $15,000 out of the funds arising from the sale of serum at the old plant.

Yours very truly,
TIMOTHY S. HOGAN,
Attorney General.

COUNTY AGENTS FOR THE AGRICULTURAL COMMISSION SHOULD NOT ENTER INTO CONTRACTS FOR THE BENEFIT OF THE FARMERS IN THE COMMUNITY IN WHICH THEY ARE WORKING.—THE AGRICULTURAL COMMISSION MAY REQUIRE EMPLOYES TO GIVE BOND WHEN THEY DEEM IT NECESSARY THAT BOND SHOULD BE GIVEN.

1. Persons employed by the agricultural commission with the official title "county agents" should not enter into contracts with persons, firms or corporations for furnishing farmers supplies of the right quality at correct prices.

2. The agricultural commission may make the giving of a bond a condition of employment, when the same is not prescribed by statute, should they deem the same reasonably necessary. The premium on the bond of a public official may not be met with public funds unless the statutes so prescribe.

COLUMBUS, OHIO, November 21, 1913.

HON. BENJ. F. GAYMAN, Secretary, Agricultural Commission of Ohio, Columbus, Ohio.

DEAR SIR:—Under favor of November 20th, you request my opinion as follows:

> "1. Can a state official, board or commission, or employe of the same, enter into contracts for the benefit of private parties, firms or corporations?
> "This question is raised by the following conditions: The commission employs certain persons with the official title of "county agent," whose duties are to instruct farmers and farmer's organizations in improved methods in agriculture and to advise and assist them in the purchase of proper supplies for the increase in the production of food products. It is sometimes the custom of these agents to enter into contracts with persons, firms or corporations for furnishing to farmers supplies of the right quality at correct prices. The question is, should the agent make these contracts or should they be made by the farmers themselves?"

The constitution of the state prohibits the state from, in any manner, giving, loaning to or aiding by its credit any private enterprise. (Article VIII, section 4). And the statutes nowhere authorize any official board or commission, or any employe of the same, to enter contracts for the benefit of private parties, firms or corporations, or to in any way back up, support or guarantee, in any manner, a private enterprise. It is clear beyond the slightest doubt that the agents you mention would be without power, in their official capacity, to either make these contracts or to in any way lend the sanction of the state as security for their performance.

Should these agents, in their personal capacity, and upon their own individual responsibility, enter into such contracts, in behalf of private individuals, out of an excessive zeal for the welfare of the individuals concerned, or for the progress and success of the work the agent is undertaking, I know of no legal principle which would invalidate such a course of action. The proceeding, however, would present a very doubtful policy, and when viewed in the light of the very probable results of the situation in which such agent would be placed, such action, as a general proposition, would be justly attended by suspicion. I understand that it is the view of the board that such a practice is a very undesirable one. I may, therefore, venture the suggestion that the situation is very easily controlled through the authority which the board has in the employment of such assistants.

The agents are employed under section 9 of the agricultural commission act, section 1087, General Code, which authorizes, in general terms, the employment by the commission of such experts, assistants and employes as they deem necessary, subject to the approval of the governor. Under this provision the commission may make such terms of employment with these agents as it deems advisable, and may lay down the condition that contracts of the nature referred to shall not be entered into.

You next inquire:

> "When the General Code does not explicitly provide that employes shall be required to give bonds to the state, is the commission warranted in requiring bonds of employes and paying the premiums thereon from funds appropriated for the uses and purposes of the commission?"

It is settled beyond doubt that the premium on the bond of a public official may not be met with public funds in the absence of express legislative authority therefor. The premium on bonds required of employes of the agricultural commission, therefore, may not be paid from funds appropriated for the uses and purposes of the commission.

I am of the opinion, however, that the commission is empowered to make the giving of a bond a condition of employment, when the same is not prescribed by statute, should they deem the same reasonably necessary. In such event, however, the individual would be required to pay the premium on his own bond.

Very truly yours,
TIMOTHY S. HOGAN,
Attorney General.

THE GOVERNOR IS EX OFFICIO A MEMBER OF THE AGRICULTURAL COMMISSION AND CONCERNING MATTERS COVERED BY SECTION 9 OF THE AGRICULTURAL COMMISSION ACT, HE MUST ACT AS GOVERNOR, WHETHER HE ACTS AS A MEMBER OF THE COMMISSION OR NOT, AND UNTIL HE APPROVES WHAT HAS BEEN DONE BY THE COMMISSION, ITS ACTS ARE INEFFECTIVE.

The governor is made a member ex officio of the agricultural commission by virtue of his office, and when present his action and vote is taken and considered as a member of the board, not as governor, until it comes to the matters covered by section 9 of the agricultural commission act, when he may act as a member of the board, or as governor, or as both. Concerning matters covered by section 9, he must act as governor, whether he acts as a member of the commission or not. In these matters he is the controlling power, and until he acts affirmatively, by approving what has been done by the commission, its acts are ineffective.

COLUMBUS, OHIO, November 26, 1913.

HON. BENJ. F. GAYMAN, Secretary, The Agricultural Commission, Columbus, Ohio.

DEAR SIR:—I have your letter of November 21st in which you call attention to section 9 of the agricultural commission act, section 1087, General Code, and ask:

> "At nearly every meeting held by the commission some action is taken involving the expenditure of money. In view of this condition, is it necessary to submit the record of proceedings of each meeting to the governor for his approval? I shall be glad to receive, at your earliest convenience, your opinion on the legal interpretation that should be placed on the language requiring the governor's approval of the acts of the commission."

Section 9, to which you refer, reads:

"The agricultural commission is authorized to employ a secretary, heads of bureaus, experts, clerks, stenographers and other assistants and employes, and to fix their compensation and these and all similar acts involving expenditures of money shall be subject to the approval of the governor. The commissioners, secretary, experts, clerks, stenographers and other assistants and employes that may be employed, shall be entitled to receive from the state their actual and necessary traveling expenses while traveling on the business of the agricultural commission. Such expenses shall be itemized and certified to by the person who incurred the expense, and allowed by the agricultural commission."

Inasmuch as the language of this section is "secretary, heads of bureaus, experts, clerks, stenographers and other assistants and employes, and to fix their compensation and these and all similar acts involving the expenditure of money shall be subject to the approval of the governor," the language used must be construed as limiting the acts which are subject to the approval of the governor to those named, and "similar acts involving the expenditures of money," and may not be construed to include all acts of the commission involving the expenditure of money; and, consequently, it is not necessary to submit the record of every action of the board to the governor for his approval, but only such actions as are included in section 9, and acts similar thereto.

To illustrate: Section 31 of this act reads:

"The agricultural commission shall appoint a competent veterinarian who shall perform the duties prescribed by the commission and be subject to its rules and regulations. The veterinarian so appointed shall receive such compensation as the commission may fix. In case of an outbreak of disease among animals, if it deem it advisable, the commission may appoint temporarily additional veterinarians or other persons for special work in connection with its duties, and fix their compensation."

This furnishes a "similar" condition, and one that must be submitted to the governor for his approval.

Section 37 of the act, 103 O L, 312, reads:

"If an animal is killed under the provisions herein relating to the agricultural commission, the compensation to be made for the slaughtered animal shall be computed on the basis of the actual value of such animal at the time of killing; for an animal that has been kept in the same building or enclosure, two-thirds of such value, and for any other animal, the full value of such animal without reference to the suspicion of contagion. No compensation, however, shall be made to a person who has brought animals into this state affected with such contagious disease, or from a district in which such contagious disease existed, or who has wilfully concealed the existence of such disease among his stock or on his premises, or who by wilful neglect or purposely has contributed to the spread of such contagion. In case of the destruction of a horse, mule or ass affected with glanders or farcy, no compensation for it shall be made, if it was so diseased when it passed into possession of its owner. In appraising animals to be killed as hereinbefore provided, no allowance shall be made because such animals are thoroughbred or pedigreed stock."

This presents a situation absolutely unlike those described in section 9, and one where the action of the board is not subject to the approval of the governor.

I believe that calling your attention to these two sections will sufficiently present the question to you, and fully enable you to determine what actions of the board are, and what are not subject to the approval of the governor.

The governor is made a member of the board ex officio by virtue of his office, and when present, his action and vote is taken and considered as a member of the board, not as governor, until it comes to the matters covered by section 9 of the act, when, as a matter of fact, he may act as a member of the board or as governor or as both. Concerning matters covered by section 9, he must act as governor whether he acts as a member of the commission or not. As to these matters he, as governor, is the controlling power, and until he acts affirmatively, by approving what has been done by the commission, its acts are ineffective.

Yours truly,

TIMOTHY S HOGAN,

Attorney General.

BOARD OF CONTROL—AGRICULTURAL EXPERIMENT STATION—MANDATORY DUTY OF COUNTY COMMISSIONERS TO APPROPRIATE MAINTENANCE FUND AFTER AGREEMENT MADE WITH BOARD OF CONTROL—DUTY TO MAKE AGREEMENT NOT MANDATORY.

Section 1165-8, General Code, provides that the county commissioners shall appropriate as a maintenance fund for the conduct of an agricultural experiment station such funds as may be agreed upon by the commissioners with the board of control of such farm, not to exceed $2,000.00 annually.

Under this section the county commissioners may not be mandamused to enter into such agreement for the reason that this duty involves a discretion.

When such agreement has been made, however, the statute imposes a mandatory duty upon the commissioners to appropriate an amount agreed upon; this duty is mandatory and may, therefore, be enforced by mandamus.

COLUMBUS, OHIO, December 3, 1912.

HON. CHARLES MCINTIRE, Agent of Board of Control, Ohio Agricultural Experimental Station, Troy, Ohio.

DEAR SIR:—I desire to acknowledge receipt of your communication of September 9, 1912, wherein you inquire as follows:

> "We desire some information and advice in regard to the maintenance fund for the county experiment farms of the state. In Clermont county we began to operate the farm in October, 1911. The county commissioners have made no effort to provide maintenance fund and are not likely to as they say the county funds are already overdrawn. The original bond issue has been used for purchase and equipment of farm which has also been maintained by this fund to present time. The farm can be kept going but a short time longer unless the maintenance fund is provided. Section 1165-8 of the General Code provides that the county commissioners shall provide a maintenance fund. Under the circumstances, can the commissioners be forced to provide this fund, and what course would you advise us to pursue?"

In a communication received from you under date of November 26, 1912, you state that the board of control submitted estimates at the beginning of operations, including the maintenance fund for the first year for the operation of the Clermont county experimental farm, and that the same was accepted by the commissioners of Clermont county, but that said fund was not provided by the said county commissioners.

In reply to your inquiry I desire to say that section 1165-8 of the General Code provides for the maintenance and equipment of the county experimental farms as follows:

> "The equipment of an experimental farm shall consist of such buildings, drains, fences, implements, live stock, stock feed and teams as shall be deemed necessary by the board of control of the experiment station for the successful work of such farm, and the initial equipment shall be provided by the county in which the farm is established, together with a sufficient fund to pay the wages of the laborers required to conduct the work of such farm during the first season. The county commissioners shall appropriate for the payment of the wages of laborers employed in the management of such farms as may be established under this act, and for the purpose of supplies and materials necessary to the proper conduct of such farms such sums not exceeding two thousand dollars annually for any farm, as may be agreed upon between said commissioners and the board of control of the experiment station."

Section 1165-13 of the General Code provides that if an experiment station shall cease to use such farm, then such farm and its equipment shall be sold at public auction as follows:

"In case the experiment station shall cease to use for the purposes herein specified any farm established under this act, such farm and its equipment shall be sold at public auction to the highest bidder after notice of such proposed sale shall have been published for four consecutive weeks in two newspapers of opposite politics, once a week, published in and having the largest circulation in the county within which the farm is located, and the proceeds of such sale shall be covered into the county treasury, the sums thus covered to be placed to the credit of the school funds of the county."

From the wording of the above sections, it is my opinion that so long as a farm has been established and equipped as an agricultural experiment farm, and inasmuch as the board of county commissioners of Clermont county and the board of control of the experimental farm agreed upon the first year's maintenance fund, it becomes mandatory upon the commissioners of said county wherein such farm is located to appropriate such sum as is necessary for the payment of the wages to laborers employed in the management of such farm and for the purchase of supplies and materials necessary to the proper conduct of such farm for the first year, not exceeding two thousand dollars, and so agreed upon between the said commissioners and the board of control of the experiment station, in event the board of commissioners fail to comply therewith, I am of the opinion that such board could be compelled to comply with said agreement by issuing a writ of mandamus. In event the board of county commissioners and the board of control of the experiment farm fail to agree upon a maintenance fund, then a different situation arises, for the reason that said section 1168-8 of the General Code, supra, leaves some discretion to the board of county commissioners as to the amount to be agreed upon for the annual maintenance of such farm, and the courts will not attempt in any way to control that discretion.

Section 34 of High's extraordinary legal remedies, and section 42 of the same provides:

"Section 34. An important distinction to be observed in the outset, and which will more fully appear hereafter, is that between duties which are peremptory and absolute, and hence merely ministerial in their nature, and those which involve the exercise of some degree of official discretion and judgment upon the part of the officers charged with their performance. As regards the latter class of duties, concerning which the officer is vested with discretionary powers, while the writ may properly commend him to act, or may set him in motion, it will not further control or interfere with his action, nor will it direct him to act in any specific manner. But as to the former class of cases, where mandamus is sought to compel the performance of a plain and unqualified duty, concerning which the officer is vested with no discretion, a specific act or duty by law required of him, the writ will command the doing of the very act itself.

"Section 42. We come next to the consideration of a fundamental rule, underlying the entire jurisdiction by mandamus, and especially applicable in determining the limits to the exercise of the jurisdiction over public officers. That rule is, that in all matters requiring the exercise of official judgment, or resting in the sound discretion of the person to whom a duty is confided by law, mandamus will not lie, either to control the exercise of that discretion, or to determine upon the decision which shall be finally given. And whenever public officers are vested with powers of a discretionary nature as to the performance of any official duty, or in reaching a given result of official action they are required to exercise any degree of judgment, while it is proper by mandamus to set them in motion and to require their action upon all matters officially intrusted to their judgment and discretion, the courts will in no manner interfere with the exercise of their discretion, nor attempt by mandamus to control or dictate the judgment to be given. Indeed, so jealous are the courts of encroaching in any manner upon the discretionary powers of public officers, that if any reasonable doubt exists as to the question of discretion or want of discretion, they will hesitate to interfere, preferring rather to extend the benefit of the doubt in favor of the officer."

In conclusion I desire to say that I know of no method whereby the board of county commissioners of Clermont county could be compelled to agree upon an annual maintenance fund if they fail to agree upon the amount of such fund with the board of control of the experimental farm after having fulfilled their statutory duty in attempting to agree upon such maintenance fund, and after having exercised their statutory discretion.

Yours very truly,
TIMOTHY S. HOGAN,
Attorney General.

BOARD OF BOILER RULES HAS AUTHORITY TO CONDEMN THE USE OF ANY UNSAFE BOILERS.

The board of boiler rules may condemn the use of any steam boiler that is unsafe. It has no power to remove the boiler or to condemn it as is done in appropriation proceedings, but it should have the boiler labeled as unsafe and attached thereto the penalty for its use.

COLUMBUS, OHIO, September 9, 1913.

HON. CHARLES WIRMEL, Chief Inspector Steam Boilers, Columbus, Ohio.

DEAR SIR:—I have your letter of August 25, 1913, in which you inquire:

> "If the Ohio board of boiler rules, under section 1058-8 of the Ohio boiler inspection laws (a copy of which is herewith appended), has the authority to condemn and order discontinued from further service, such boilers as have become dangerous and, in the opinion of the board, are a menace to life and property?"

In reply thereto, permit me to say:
Section 1058-8, to which you refer, reads:

> "It shall be the duty of the board of boiler rules to formulate rules for the construction, installation, inspection and operation of steam boilers, and for ascertaining the safe working pressure to be carried on such boilers, to prescribe tests, if it is deemed necessary, to ascertain the qualities of materials used in the construction of boilers to formulate rules regulating the construction and sizes of safety valves for boilers of different sizes and pressures, for the construction, use, and location of fusible plugs, appliances for indicating the pressure of steam and level of water in the boiler, and such other appliances as the board may deem necessary to safety in operating steam boilers; to make a standard form of certificate of inspection, and to examine applicants for certificates as boiler inspectors as hereinafter provided."

In your use of the word condemn, I take it that you mean not to take away or appropriate, as sometimes comes within the meaning of that word, but to condemn its condition as suitable or safe for use. There is no power in your office to take away, or condemn as property is condemned in appropriation proceedings, but you have full power, and it is your duty, to condemn the use of any and all unsafe boilers or boilers not in such condition to comply with the rules of your department.

My suggestion is, that you prepare a tag which can be securely fastened and at tached to a boiler by the inspector, and which he can sign officially, and that a tag in the following, or similar language, would answer your wants.

> "This boiler is unsafe.
> "Certificate is refused.
> "Penalty of from $20.00 to $500.00 for using the same will be enforced.
> ----------
> Deputy inspector of steam boilers."

In my opinion, with this class of notice, an owner will hesitate a long while before using a boiler so labeled, and that this course will carry out the objects of the law and meet the approbation of all good citizens.

Very truly yours,
TIMOTHY S. HOGAN,
Attorney General.

BUILDING CODE COMMISSION MAY NOT RECEIVE EMERGENCY ALLOWANCE.

Inasmuch as the building code commission is not an institution or department of the state, that commission cannot be held to come within the terms of section 2312, General Code, authorizing an emergency board to permit officers of state institutions or departments to create a deficiency.

COLUMBUS, OHIO, December 17, 1912.

HON. THOMAS P. KEARNS, Chief Inspector, Workshops and Factories, Columbus, Ohio.

DEAR SIR:—I beg to acknowledge receipt of your letter of December 6th in which you state:

> "The seventy-eighth general assembly, which convened in 1910, created a commission known as the 'Building Code Commission,' composed of the chief inspector of workshops and factories, the secretary of the state board of health, and the state fire marshal, for the purpose of drafting a state building code, and appropriated for its use a fund of $2,500.00 which was used to defray the expenses of compiling the present state building code, which was adopted by the seventy-ninth general assembly.
> "This commission was continued by an act of the seventy-ninth general assembly, and an additional fund of $5,000.00 was appropriated for this work.
> "The work of the commission is not quite completed and the funds appropriated are about exhausted. It will be necessary, in order to complete this work, to secure additional funds, and I would be pleased to have you render an opinion as to whether or not this could be considered an emergency, and whether or not it would be a legal transaction for the emergency board to make an appropriation for this purpose."

The act of the general assembly creating the building code commission is found in 101 O. L., 202. The objects and purposes for which said commission was created are sufficiently stated in your letter, and I do not deem it necessary to set them out at length here.

The act of 1911 continuing said commission in existence and prescribing a maximum expenditure of $5,000.00 by the commission is found in 102 O. L., at page 440.

An emergency board is provided for and its powers and duties defined by sections 2312 and 2313 of the general code as follows:

> "Section 2312. There shall be an emergency board to consist of the governor, auditor of state, attorney general, chairman of the state finance committee and chairman of the house finance committee, which board may authorize deficiencies to be made. The governor shall be the president, and the chairman of the house finance committee shall be secretary of the board. The secretary shall keep a complete record of all its proceedings. The necessary expenses of the chairman of the senate and house finance committees, while engaged in their duties as such members, shall be paid from the fund for expenses of legislative committees, upon itemized vouchers approved by themselves, and the auditor of state is hereby authorized to draw his warrant upon the treasurer of state therefor.
> "Section 2313. In case of an emergency requiring the expenditure of a greater sum than the amount appropriated by the general assembly for an institution or department of the state in any one year, or for the expenditure of money not specifically provided for by law, the trustees, managers, directors or superintendent of such institution, or the officers of such department, may make application to the board for authority to create a deficiency, or to expend money not specifically provided for by law. Such officer shall fully set forth to the secretary in writing the facts in connection with the case. As soon as can be done conveniently, the secretary shall arrange for a meeting of the board, and shall notify such officer of the time and place of the meeting, and request his presence. No permit shall be granted with the approval of less than four members of the board, who shall sign it."

The word "emergency" is not defined in our statutes, hence there is nothing to indicate that the legislature intended it to have any other than its ordinary meaning. It is defined by Webster as:

"An unforeseen occurrence or combination of circumstances which calls for immediate action or remedy; pressing necessity; exigency."

I am of the opinion that when an institution or department of state requires more funds for its maintenance and operation than could reasonably have been foreseen during the session of the legislature immediately preceding the time of making the application to the emergency board or when funds are needed for a purpose not specifically provided by law, and such need was not apparent during the preceding legislative session, the emergency board has the discretionary power to authorize the head of a state institution or department to create a deficiency in a sum to be fixed by said board. The fact that the funds appropriated for the use of the building code commission are exhausted and the work of the commission is not completed, in my judgment constitutes an emergency.

It will be observed, however, that the emergency board may authorize only an "institution or department of state to create a deficiency."

The answer to your second question depends entirely upon whether the building code commission is an institution or department of state. I am clearly of the opinion that it is not. Said commission has no governmental functions of any sort. It merely acts in an advisory capacity, empowered by the act establishing it to complete the code of building regulations and submit the same to the consideration of the general assembly at its forthcoming session.

For the reason, therefore, that said commission does not come within the purview of the statute which permits the emergency board to authorize the creation of deficiencies, I am of the opinion that said board is without legal power to authorize the building code commission to create a deficiency.

Yours very truly,
TIMOTHY S. HOGAN,
Attorney General.

MINORS—FEMALES UNDER SIXTEEN AND MALES UNDER FIFTEEN YEARS OF AGE MAY NOT BE EMPLOYED—WAGE AND SCHOOLING CERTIFICATES MUST BE SECURED—INTERPRETERS MAY NOT BE EMPLOYED TO EXAMINE CHILDREN WHO SPEAK A FOREIGN LANGUAGE.

Under section 12993, General Code, boys under fifteen and girls under sixteen years of age may not be employed at any kind of employment referred to in said section.

Under section 12994, General Code, it will be necessary for minors to secure a new age and schooling certificate when this law goes into effect.

It is necessary for children who speak a foreign language to pass the same test as a native born person.

Board of education are not authorized to employ interpreters to examine minors who speak a foreign language and those who cannot take the examination because of this fact will be denied the privilege of working until they have passed the age when a certificate is required.

COLUMBUS, OHIO, August 5, 1913.

HON. THOMAS P. KEARNS, Chief Inspector, Workshops and Factories, Columbus, Ohio.

DEAR SIR:—I have your favor of July 30th, wherein you submit several questions the first of which is as follows:

"The new minor labor law, section 12993, raises the age limit at which minors may be employed in any class of employment to fifteen for boys and sixteen for girls. There are at present a number of boys under fifteen and girls under sixteen employed at the various occupations throughout the state, which was permissible under the old law. I would ask you to kindly advise me whether or not these minors may continue in their present employment, or must they be dismissed until they have arrived at the age required under the new law?"

In reply, thereto, I beg to advise you that under section 12993 of the General Code, boys under fifteen years and girls under sixteen years may not continue in their present employments referred to in said section. The statute, being one in relation to police powers, is not limited in its application to future employments.

Your second question is as follows:

"Section 12994 of the minor labor law provides that boys under sixteen and girls under eighteen years of age must secure the proper age and schooling certificate as provided by law before they can be employed at any kind of employment. Section 7766 of the compulsory education law provides that such minor, if a male, must pass a satisfactory 6th grade test, and if a female, a satisfactory 7th grade test before such certificate will be issued. This is an advance of one grade in each case of the test required under the old law, and there seems to be some question as to whether or not this law will apply to minors who are now working with certificates secured under the provisions of the old law. Kindly advise me whether or not minors so employed may continue in that employment with their present certificate, or if it will be necessary on and after August 12, 1913, when the new law goes into effect, for all minors, if males under sixteen, and if females under eighteen, to secure new age and schooling certificates as prescribed by the new law."

In reply to this question I have to say that the same principle applies as did in reference to section 32993, and that under this section it will be necessary for minors on and after August 12, 1913, when the new law goes into effect, if male under sixteen and if female under eighteen, to secure new age and schooling certificates as provided by the new law.

You will keep in mind in connection with this section the provisions in relation to vacations, which is contained in the last paragraph of section 7766, and which reads as follows:

"The superintendent or person authorized by him may issue special vacation certificates to boys under sixteen years of age, and girls under eighteen years of age, which shall entitle the holder thereof to be employed during vacation in occupations not forbidden by law to such children, even though such child may not have completed the sixth grade, but provided he has complied with all the other requirements for obtaining the certificate hereinbefore described."

Your third question is as follows:

"The compulsory education law, section 7762, enumerates the studies in which applicants for schooling certificates must be examined, namely: reading, spelling, writing, arithmetic, English grammer and geography. There are a great many foreign born children in our state who can neither speak or understand the English language and for that reason could not take this examination, except in their own language. Under these circumstances, is it necessary for these children to pass the same test as a native born child, and would it be legal for the various boards of education throughout the state to employ interpreters or men who understand the various foreign languages to examine these minors in their respective languages, or shall those who cannot take the examination in the English language be denied the privilege of working until they have passed the age when no certificate is required?"

The requirements of section 7762 are:

> "All parents, guardians and other persons who have care of children, shall instruct them, or cause them to be instructed, in reading, spelling, writing, English grammer, geography and arithmetic."

It is apparent that the studies herein referred to are the same branches an applicant is required to pass an examination in who desires a teacher's certificate, insofar as the branches in section 7762 go, and it is necessary that the instruction in each of these branches be in the English language. No other test seems to be contemplated by the statutes.

My answer, therefore, to your inquiry is that it is necessary for the children to which you refer to pass the same test as native born children, and that boards of education are not authorized to employ interpreters or men who understand various foreign languages to examine minors who speak a foreign tongue, and that those who cannot take the examinations required in the English language are denied the privilege of working until they have passed the age when no certificate is required.

Yours very truly,
TIMOTHY S. HOGAN,
Attorney General.

GIRLS OVER SIXTEEN AND UNDER EIGHTEEN YEARS OF AGE MAY LABOR AT EMPLOYMENTS NOT PROHIBITED BY LAW.

Under the provisions of the act of April 28th, 103 O. L. 914, girls over sixteen and under eighteen years of age may labor at employments not prohibited by law, providing they can pass a satisfactory educational test. It is not the intention of the legislature to permit them to remain out of school and not labor. The insertion of the words "over eighteen" in section 7766, is a mistake; it was intended that it should be "over sixteen." With this construction the law becomes operative.

COLUMBUS, OHIO, August 14, 1913.

(Supplementary to opinion of August 5, 1913).

HON. THOMAS P. KEARNS, Chief Inspector of Workshops and Factories, Columbus, Ohio.

DEAR SIR:—Since writing you in August 5, 1913, and answering the questions then propounded by you concerning the act of April 28, 1913, 103 O. L., 864-914, many questions have been asked concerning said act, and one of them a very great number of times. It is:

> "Whether a female over sixteen and under eighteen years of age may work in a factory or any employment whatever, on account of the conflict found between sections 7765 and 7766?"

The first of said sections reads:

> "Section 7765. No boy under sixteen years of age and no girl under eighteen years of age shall be employed or be in the employment of any person, company or corporation unless such child presents to such person, company or corporation an age and schooling certificate herein provided for, as a condition of employment. Such employer shall keep the same on file in the establishment where such minor is employed for inspection by the truant officer or officers of the department of workshops and factories."

From this it is apparent that the legislature intended that females over sixteen and under eighteen might be employed and accept employment provided they could pass a satisfactory educational test.

Section 7766 reads in part as follows:

"An age and schooling certificate shall be approved only by the superintendent of schools, or by a person authorized by him, in city or other districts having such superintendent, or by the clerk of the board of education in village, special and township districts not having such superintendent, upon satisfactory proof that such child, if a male, is over fifteen years of age, or, if a female, is over eighteen years of age, and that such child has been examined and passed a satisfactory sixth grade test, if a male, and seventh grade test, if a female, in the studies enumerated in section seventy-seven hundred and sixty-two, * * *.

"Provided * * * that the employment contemplated by the child is not prohibited by any law regulating the employment of children * * *."

The conflict between these provisions is so apparent that it cannot be over-looked, and it is impossible for a female under eighteen to make the proofs required by section 7766. An adherence to the language of section 7766 would result in the conclusion that girls between 16 and 18, possessed of the educational requirements set forth, would not be compelled to attend school and would be prohibited from working at any employment whatever, notwithstanding the fact that they are not expressly prohibited therefrom, while the right to work is clearly inferred from all the other provisions of the act.

In order to ascertain the legislative intention as to this matter, other sections of the act should and must be considered. Section 7768 provides that every child between 8 and 15, if a male, and 8 and 16, if a female, and every male between 15 and 16 "not engaged in some regular employment" shall be subject to the laws relating to delinquent children. This section carries with it by strong implication the idea that boys between 15 and 16 may engage in some regular employment.

Section 12993 prescribes the character of work in which children may engage.

Section 12994 reads:

"No boy under sixteen years of age and no girl under eighteen years of age shall be employed or permitted to work on or in connection with the establishments mentioned in section 12993 of the General Code, or in the distribution or transmission of merchandise or messages unless such employer first procures from the proper authority the age and schooling certificate provided by law."

This section recognizes the right of boys under 16 and girls under 18 to engage in labor provided he or she procures the age and schooling certificates required by law.

Section 7764 reads:

"In case such superintendent, principal or clerk refuses to excuse a child from attendance at school, an appeal may be taken from such decision to the judge of the juvenile court of the county, upon the giving of a bond, within ten days thereafter, to the approval of such judge, to pay the costs of the appeal. His decision in the matter shall be final. All children between the ages of 15 and 16 years, not engaged in some regular employment, shall attend school for the full term the schools of the district in which they reside are in session during the school year, unless excused for the reasons above named."

It will here be observed that children between the ages of 15 and 16 shall attend school when not engaged in some regular employment, and not excused as provided by section 7763, General Code.

Section 12995 gives a right of action in favor of a child whose employment is terminated against the employer who fails for two days to return its certificate to the superintendent of schools, or other authority legally issuing it.

Section 12998 requires that employers shall keep two lists, each of which shows:

1. All boys under 16, and
2. All girls under 18, one of which shall be posted near the principal entrance and the other kept on file.

Section 12993 prescribes the character of work in which children may engage, fixing the age limit at 15 for boys and 16 for girls, as already stated in my communication of August 5th.

Section 12994, General Code, above quoted, clearly shows that the age and schooling certificate mentioned in section 7765, and provision for the issuance of which is found in section 7766, was for boys under 16 and girls under 18.

Attention is also called to the fact that section 7765 refers to boys under 16 and girls under 18; while section 7766 refers to boys over 15 and girls over 18 years of age, evincing an intention in so far as boys were concerned to make provision for those who were included in section 7765, or, in other words, an intention on the part of the legislature to provide a means whereby the children described in the preceding section might qualify for performing labor. When sections 7765 and 7766 are compared, however, it will be seen that the age limit of boys in the first is reduced one year, while as to girls it is changed from under 18 to over 18, this in terms excluding from the authorization of employment certificates females under 18 years of age; and as females over 18 are not compelled to go to school, and not required to furnish an employment certificate, it follows, if we construe section 7766 literally, that females over 16 and under 18 are left out of the compulsory education law, and prohibited from engaging in any employment whatever. This construction violates every idea and object of both laws, and presents the question whether this enactment may be so construed as to make it harmonize with the legislative intention and at the same time make it operative and effective.

Without going into any of the rules of construction other than the one which is paramount to all others, i. e., the determination of the legislative intent, I will close this with one statement before setting forth my conclusion.

It is stated to me that in section 7766, as originally typewritten "eighteen" where applied to females read "sixteen;" but without knowledge as to when and by whom this change was made, the presumption obtains that it was done in a proper manner, and by the proper authority after presentation and before passage. I feel quite certain that this suggestion furnishes no aid in ascertaining what is intended by this law.

However, it is apparent from the entire act, and clearly so, that girls between the age of 16 and 18 might labor in the employments, and in doing the things not prohibited, that it was not intended to permit them to stay out of school and not labor and I, therefore, hold that the entire act when properly considered, clearly shows that the insertion of the words "over eighteen" in section 7766, was a mistake; that it was intended that it should be "over sixteen," and with this construction I feel that the entire act is made operative, harmonious, and that in doing what I have, I am fully sustained by the authorities upon constitutional and statutory construction.

I desire this as a supplement to my former opinion, which I feel to be correct as to the matters considered and not to include the matters herein discussed.

Yours very truly,

TIMOTHY S. HOGAN,

Attorney General.

STATE CHIEF INSPECTOR OF MINES—COLLECTOR PERMITTED ON MINING MACHINE—NOT A LOCOMOTIVE.

Section 947, General Code, providing that a collector or any device attached to the cable as a substitute for a trolley may not be permitted to be used, upon a locomotive, cannot be construed to apply to a mining machine.

COLUMBUS, OHIO, February 14, 1913.

HON. J. C. DAVIES, Chief Inspector of Mines, Columbus, Ohio.

DEAR SIR:—I am in receipt of your letter of January 12, 1913, in which you inquire whether power may be used through a collector on a mining machine for the purpose of propelling the same through entries in a mine.

In order to answer your inquiry it will be necessary to consider section 947 of the General Code, that being the only provision of the General Code which would prevent the use of a collector for this work, if it be prohibited on a mining machine.

Section 947, General Code, provides in part as follows:

> "* * * No locomotive shall be operated by means of a person holding and sliding upon or frequently making contact with the positive wire with any device attached to the cable as a substitute for a trolley, * * *."

A "collector," as I understand the term, is a device used by an operator of a mining machine as a substitute for a trolley, the operator holding the device in contact with a positive wire in moving machine about in mine. This is prohibited as to locomotives by section 947, General Code, just quoted.

A mining machine is propelled by a motor which is a part of the machine.

A "locomotive" is defined in the century dictionary as follows:

> "* * * Having the power to produce motion to move something else from place to place."

The word "locomotive" as popularly used implies a machine or power used in moving something else from place to place. It is so used in mining code.

Section 943 of the General Code, provides in part as follows:

> "The owner, lessee or agent of a mine at which locomotives are used for hauling coal shall keep a light on the front end of the locomotive when it is in use * * *."

Section 958, General Code, provides in part:

> "Motormen and trip-riders shall use care in handling the locomotive and cars, and shall see that the signal or marker, * * * is used as provided. * * * They shall warn persons forbidden to ride on the locomotive or cars * * *."

The term "locomotive," as used in these two sections and other sections of the General Code, always refer to a separate car or power as used in hauling cars in the mine. Wherever the term "mining machine" is used, although it has its own motive power, is always designated and referred to in the General Code as a mining machine and never as a locomotive or motor. So that the word "locomotive" as used in section 947, General Code, refers to car used to haul coal in a mine. Therefore, section 947, General Code, does not prohibit the use of a collector on a mining machine for the purpose of propelling the same through the mine.

Very truly yours,
TIMOTHY S. HOGAN,
Attorney General.

MINES AND MINING—PROPS OF "APPROXIMATE" LENGTH.

Section 953, General Code, requiring miners to keep each working place supplied with props of "approximate" length, must be construed to require miners to have in readiness props as nearly of the proper length as circumstances will reasonably permit.

COLUMBUS, OHIO, April 12, 1913.

HON. J. C. DAVIES, Chief Inspector of Mines, Columbus, Ohio.

DEAR SIR:—Your letter of April 10th received. You ask me to interpret section 953, General Code, relative to the length of props supplied to miners, which reads as follows:

> "He shall see that the working place of each miner is kept supplied with props of approximate length, etc."

It becomes the duty of the mine foreman under this section, a part of which you quote, to see that the working place of each miner is kept supplied with props of approximate length, caps and other timber necessary to securely prop the roof of his working place.

In some coal fields, like Jackson County, where there is a solid vein of coal, with but little draw slate, and the vein running uniformly in various entries, it is plainly the duty of the company to furnish props of the length required, as the various lengths of the props that miners require in this district are easily ascertainable. But from the statement contained in your letter, and also made to me personally by you, I learn that there is no uniformity in the height of coal or in the length of props required in a single entry; that because of the different depths of draw slate and the varying thickness of the coal, many sizes of props are required in a single entry or room in these mines. The question arises, then, what is the duty of the mine foreman as to furnishing props? Under this section he is required to supply miners with props of approximate length. Does that mean that the foreman must ascertain the exact length required in every part of the entry, and have props of varying sizes and lengths at the miners' working places, so that timber of the proper length can be always had?

"Approximate" is defined in the century dictionary as follows:

> "Near in character; nearly approaching accuracy or correctness."

On account of the conditions which you state exist in the eastern Ohio coal field, it would be practically impossible to furnish the exact length of props required in each instance. The statute does not require it. The statute recognizes the natural condition which requires different lengths of props and only makes it the duty of the foreman to supply props of approximate length; that is, as defined in the century dictionary nearly approaching accuracy or correctness; near in length, not exactly. However, if the operator can ascertain what length of props will be required in an entry or room, or working place, it is his duty to furnish that length; and he must exercise diligence to ascertain, if he can, what lengths may be required, and furnish either the exact length or as nearly the exact length as the conditions require.

Very truly yours,

TIMOTHY S. HOGAN,

Attorney General.

STATE INSPECTOR OF OILS IS NOT PERMITTED TO RECEIVE FEES FOR INSPECTION OF OIL UNLESS THE INSPECTION IS ACTUALLY MADE.

Where oil has never been inspected, but the fee for inspection is remitted to the state inspector of oils, the fee should be returned to the remitter, unless the oil is actually inspected. Where oil is sold before it has been inspected, there is a violation of section 12569, General Code, and the offense may be prosecuted.

COLUMBUS, OHIO, August 13, 1913.

HON. B. J. MCKINNEY, State Inspector of Oils, Columbus, Ohio.

DEAR SIR:—Under date of July 7, 1913, you referred to this department for an opinion thereon, the following request:

"The following is respectfully referred to you for your opinion and advice:

"Some weeks ago I received information that one H. L. Granger, of Aurora, Ohio, had received a shipment of refined oil at that place, and "rumor" said that it had been inspected.

"I at once, under date of April 23, 1913, instructed S. M. Raymond, deputy inspector of oils for district No. 31, to investigate the affair and report results to me. Of date of May 3d, Mr. Raymond reported the result of his investigation. His report is attached hereto, being marked exhibit "A." In this report I desire to call your particular attention to what is said about Mr. Granger's mental condition, due to alleged sun-stroke. Mr. Raymond has since verbally reiterated to me what he had written.

"Under date of May 6th, Mr. Granger wrote me admitting the sales of three cars of oil and enclosing an express money order for $14.98 to pay the inspection fees on same; said money order is still in my possession unused. Mr. Granger's letter is marked exhibit "B."

"I replied to Mr. Granger's letter on May 13th, a copy of my letter being attached as exhibit "C."

"Mr. Granger wrote again on May 19th, his letter being marked ex-exhibit "D"; since its receipt I have not written him, but have been leaving the matter hanging over him undecided, as far as he knew.

"What I would like if you please, is: First, your opinion as to my authority to receive these inspection fees, no inspections having been made. General Code, section 850. Second, your opinion as to whether or not Granger should be prosecuted, taking his reported mental troubles into consideration, for his violation of the provisions of section 12569 of the General Code. That is, shall I accept his money and close up the case, or shall I refuse his money and take steps to prosecute him?"

In reply thereto, I desire to say that section 850 of the General Code provides as follows:

"Each owner of oil inspected under this chapter shall pay to the state inspector or the deputy inspector for such inspection the following fees:

"For a single barrel, package or cask, fifty cents;

"When the lot inspected does not exceed ten barrels of fifty gallons each in the aggregate, for each barrel, thirty cents;

"When the lot inspected does not exceed fifty barrels of fifty gallons each in the aggregate, for each barrel, twenty cents;

"When the lot inspected exceeds fifty barrels of fifty gallons each in the aggregate, for each barrel, seven cents.

"All fees under this chapter shall be payable on demand of the state inspector, and in no case shall payment thereof be deferred beyond the tenth day of the next month after the inspection is made, and such fees shall be a lien on the oil so inspected."

You state that under date of May 6, 1913, Mr. Granger wrote you a letter enclosing an express money order for $14.98, to cover the inspection fee for inspecting three cars of oil, although you state in your request that said oil had never been inspected. Said fee of $14.98 was at the rate of 7 cents per barrel, for 214 barrels of oil, as disclosed by the said letter of Mr. Granger, which reads as follows:

"I have sold three tanks of oil. I have not paid the 7 cents per barrel state inspection, through no willful neglect on my part, and I trust this tax will now be accepted.

Empire Oil Works, Reno, Pa.

July, 1912	Tank No. 152, 70 bbl., 7 cents,	$4 90
October, 1912	Tank No. 154, 72 bbl., 7 cents,	5 04
April, 1913	Tank No. 154, 72 bbl., 7 cents,	5 04

"Enclosed please find money order, $14.98."

It is to be noted that said section 850 of the General Code, supra, specifically requires that the owner of oil inspected under the provisions of said chapter, shall pay to the said inspector, or deputy inspector, certain inspection fees for the oil actually inspected. In this case, the oil never having been inspected, that is to say, the dealer having sold the oil before the same was inspected, it follows therefore, that your department is without legal authority to receive said inspection fees above referred to, and the check received by your department covering the same should be returned to Mr. Granger.

In answer to your second question, section 12569 of the General Code provides as follows:

"Whoever, for himself or as agent for another, sells or attempts to sell oil to be consumed within this state for illuminating purposes, whether manufactured in this state or not, before it is inspected according to law, shall be fined not less than one hundred dollars nor more than three hundred dollars."

Technically speaking, Mr. Granger violated said section 12569 of the General Code, in selling said oil before it had been inspected according to law, but in view of the fact that your deputy inspector reported to the effect that Mr. Granger was weak mentally, due to an alleged sun-stroke, which he received some time previous to the time he received said oil I would suggest that you suspend or withhold the prosecution in this instance, but that you admonish Mr. Granger not to let the same occurrence happen again.

Yours very truly,

TIMOTHY S. HOGAN,
Attorney General.

STATE INSPECTOR OF OILS IS WITHOUT AUTHORITY TO PROSECUTE MERCHANTS WHO SELL OIL THAT HAS BEEN PROPERLY INSPECTED.

Where oil has been properly inspected and approved by the state inspector of oils, the oil inspection department is without authority to prosecute merchants who sell this oil, unless there is a violation of some statute regulating the inspection and sale of oils.

COLUMBUS, OHIO, September 26, 1913.

HON. B. J. MCKINNEY, State Inspector of Oils, 1010 New Hayden Bldg., Columbus, Ohio

DEAR SIR:—On June 27, 1913, you submitted to this department the following letter of inquiry:

"The following is respectfully submitted to you for your opinion as to what are the further duties, if there are any, of this department in reference to the matters therein recited.

"On March 19, of this year, I was notified by telephone that there had been a number of supposed oil explosions at or near Kenton, Hardin county, and that several deaths had resulted therefrom; I at once decided to have the matter investigated and immediately called up Mr. George W. Montgomery, of Findlay, deputy inspector of oils for the fourteenth district, and requested him to be in Kenton the following morning, where and when he would receive a letter of instructions from me. A copy of said letter is hereto attached and is marked exhibit 'A'.

"Mr. Montgomery went to Kenton as directed, stayed there two days, and in addition to telephonic and verbal reports made a written report to me. His report is marked exhibit 'B.' I neglected to state that I had asked fire marshal Zuber to send a deputy to Kenton and that deputy fire marshal Bell was there at the same time my deputy was there. When the report of deputy Montgomery was received I felt that my duty in reference to these explosions was performed and that I had nothing more to do with or about them. Mr. Zuber was of the same opinion as to his department. At a later date, however, as I had learned that the people of Hardin county were not satisfied with the results of the investigation, and at the solicitation of the prosecuting attorney, I sent Mr. J. L. Strange of Greenfield, deputy inspector of oils for district No. 12 to Kenton to make another investigation. A copy of my letter of instructions to Mr. Strange is hereto attached marked exhibit 'C.'

"This investigation has been completed and the report thereof is hereby submitted to you as exhibit 'D.'

"Thanking you in advance for any light you may throw upon any course that should be mine as to these explosions, I am,

[Signed] Ben. J. McKinney,
State Inspector of Oils".

In reply thereto, sections 844 to 871 inclusive, of the General Code, create the state department of oil inspection and provide for the inspection of petroleum oil and its products in the state of Ohio.

Section 854 of the General Code specifically provides for the inspection of all petroleum oil and all products thereof, before the same shall be sold for illuminating purposes, as follows:

"Before being offered for sale to a consumer for illuminating purposes within this state, all mineral or petroleum oil, and any fluid or substance, the product of petroleum, or into which petroleum or a product of petroleum enters or is a constituent element, whether manufactured within this state or not, shall be inspected as provided in this chapter."

Section 855 of the General Code provides that such inspection shall be made by an apparatus known as the "Foster cup," as follows:

"Such inspection shall be made by the apparatus known as the 'Foster cup,' or Foster's automatic oil tester, in accordance with the following directions:

"(1.) Remove the thermometer with its mountings from the oil cup.

"(2.) Lift off the oil cup containing the flashing taper and fill open water bath with water to the mark upon the inside.

"(3.) Take the wick holder from the oil cup, and fill this vessel with the oil to be tested, pouring in the oil at the place of the wick holder and noting the gauge mark at the themometer hole, pouring very gradually as the surface approaches the gauge mark. The gauge mark consists of a small pendant shelf and the oil cup is properly filled when the upper surface of the oil just adheres to the lower surface of the gauge mark. Too much care cannot be taken at this point. Having ceased pouring, tip the cup so that the oil flows away from the gauge, then gradually restore it to the horizontal, and if the surface does not again adhere, add a little more oil.

"(4.) Adjust the wick of the flashing taper to give a flame that does not exceed one-quarter of an inch in height and that exhibits as much blue at its base as yellow at its top.

"(5.) Set the oil cup on top and into the water bath, return the flashing taper to its place, inverting the conical thimble around it, and return the thermomcter to its place upon the cup. In doing this be sure that the casing of the latter is pushed down upon the cup as far as it will go.

"(6.) Fill the lamp beneath half full of alcohol, light and place it beneath the water bath. Note the rate of increase in temperature as shown by the thermometer and adjust the wick to raise the temperature at the rate of two degrees per minute. When the temperature has reached one hundred degrees, light the flashing taper and observe it closely. As soon as the oil under test has reached its 'flashing point,' the flame of this taper will be extinguished by the first 'flash,' and the point of attention is the temperature at the instant the flame of the taper is extinguished. This 'flashing point' is the point of temperature at which the oil generates vapor."

Section 856 of the General Code provides for a flashing test limit for illuminating oil, as follows:

"Any oil described in this chapter which bears a flashing test of one hundred and twenty degrees Fahrenheit, as shown by the test prescribed in the preceding section, may be sold for illuminating purposes. No oil or other substance which, by such test, flashes at a temperature below one hundred and twenty degrees Fahrenheit shall be sold or offered for sale to a consumer for illuminating purposes in this state."

Section 858 of the General Code provides that if the oil inspector meets the requirements of said section 856, above quoted, the inspector shall affix by stencil or brand on the package, cask or barrel containing it, the word "approved," as follows:

"The inspector of oils and his deputies shall make a flash test of mineral or petroleum oils, or any oil, fluid or substance, the product of petroleum, or into which petroleum or any product of petroleum enters, or is a constituent element offered or intended to be offered for sale to consumers for illuminating purposes in this state. If, upon test, such oil or substance meets the requirements herein specified, the state inspector or a deputy shall affix by stencil or brand on the packages, cask or barrel containing it, the word 'approved' with the date of inspection and his name and official designation. If so approved, a manufacturer, vender or dealer may sell such oil, fluid or substance to be consumed within the state for illuminating purposes."

Section 859 of the General Code provides that if the oil inspected does not meet the requirements of said section 856, above quoted, the inspector shall affix by stencil or brand on the package, cask or barrel containing it, the words "rejected for illuminating purposes," and further provides a penalty if such oil so rejected is sold by a manufacturer, vender or dealer, as follows:

"If, upon test, an oil, fluid or substance does not meet the requirements, the state inspector or his deputy shall mark by stencil or brand, in plain letters, on the package or barrel containing it the words 'rejected for illuminating purposes,' and give the date of such inspection and his name and official designation. If so rejected, no manufacturer, vender or dealer shall sell or offer for sale, oil so branded or rejected, to be consumed within the state for illuminating purposes. Whoever violates a provision of this section shall be fined not to exceed one thousand dollars, or be imprisoned in the county jail not to exceed twenty days, or both."

Section 860 of the General Code provides the method of inspecting oil at refineries or in tank cars, as follows:

"Oil intended for sale for illuminating purposes within this state, as defined herein, shall be inspected within this state. When consigned to a distributing station in tank cars, oil shall be inspected at the refinery where manufactured, if located in this state, or at the distributing station to which it is consigned, at the discretion and direction of the state inspector. When inspection is made, the inspector or his deputy shall deliver to the owner or his agent, a certificate of inspection which, in addition to the word 'approved,' shall set forth the car initials and number, the date of inspection and the official signature of the officer making the inspection. Such certificate shall be attached to the car containing the oil so inspected, or be delivered to the owner or his agent at the distributing station, as directed by the state inspector, and the oil may then be transferred to a storage or receiving tank from which illuminating oil is distributed to consumers or dealers."

Section 861 of the General Code provides that if oil in tank cars is rejected, the certificate in addition to the word "rejected" shall set forth the car initials and number, the date of inspection and the official signature of the officer making such inspection, and further provides for imposing a penalty upon whomsoever transfers the contents of such car to a storage or receiving tank, from which illuminating oil is distributed to consumers of dealers within this state, as follows:

"If upon inspection oil in tank cars is rejected, the certificate, in addition to the word 'rejected,' shall set forth the car initials and number, the date of inspection, and shall be delivered to the owner of the oil or his agent. Whoever transfers the contents of such car to a storage or receiving tank from which illuminating oil is distributed to consumers or dealers within this state shall be fined not less than one thousand dollars or imprisoned in the county jail not exceeding twenty days, or both."

Section 862 of the General Code provides that wagons from which oil intended for use for illuminating purposes within this state is delivered to consumers or dealers, shall bear a certificate in duplicate with that issued by the inspector or his deputy, covering the contents of the car last emptied into the storage or receiving tank from which such wagon was filled, as follows:

"Wagons from which oil intended for consumption for illuminating purposes within this state is delivered to consumers or dealers, shall bear a certificate in duplicate with that issued by the inspector or his deputy, covering the contents of the car last emptied into the storage or receiving tank, from which such wagon was filled. Such duplicate certificate shall be issued without additional fee. Whoever, being a driver of such wagon, violates this provision shall be fined ten dollars for each day of such violation."

Section 863 of the General Code provides as follows:

"Barrels or packages filled from such storage or receiving tank with oil intended for illuminating purposes within this state shall be branded by the inspector or his deputy without additional fee. Whoever offers for sale to dealers or consumers for illuminating puposes within this state such oil not so branded shall be fined ten dollars."

Section 864 of the General Code provides for the inspection of oil delivered by pipe lines as follows:

"Each delivery of oil from refineries to local trade by pipe line or means other than tank cars into such storage or receiving tank, before such delivery, shall be inspected in the same manner as prescribed herein for the inspection of cars, except the certificate issued by the inspector or his deputy shall state the date of inspection and the number of barrels inspected. Whoever delivers such oil to a dealer or a consumer for illuminating purposes within the state without the certificate required by this section shall be fined ten dollars."

Section 865 prohibits the sale of unstamped gasoline, petroleum ether or similar or like substances, under whatever name called, whether manufactured within this state or not, as follows:

"Gasoline, petroleum ether or similar or like substances, under whatever name called, whether manufactured within this state or not, having a lower flash test than provided in this chapter for illuminating oils, shall be inspected by the state inspector of oils or his deputies. Upon inspection, the state inspector or a deputy shall affix by stamp or stencil to the package containing such substance a printed inscription containing its commercial name, the word 'dangerous,' the date of inspection and the name and official designation of the officer making the inspection. For such inspection, the state inspector or his deputy shall receive the same fees as for the inspection of oil, which shall be paid into the state treasury as herein provided for other fees. Such fees shall be a lien on the gasoline, petroleum ether or similar substances so inspected. For such inspections, deputy inspectors shall receive the same fees and shall make a monthly report of such inspections, as provided herein, for the inspection of oils. Whoever sells or offers for sale any gasoline, petroleum ether or similar or like substance, not stamped as provided in this chapter, shall be fined not more than one thousand dollars or imprisoned in the county jail not exceeding twenty days, or both."

I have quoted quite extensively from the sections of the General Code, regulating and governing the inspection and sale of petroleum oil and its products for the reason that you have stated orally in a conference, that all the oil sold in and about Kenton, prior to the time the explosions occurred, which are mentioned in your letter of inquiry, had been inspected by your department in accordance with the provisions of the above quoted sections, and that none of the oil had been found to be below the requirements contained in said sections.

The report of Mr. George W. Montgomery, the deputy inspector of oils, whom you sent to Kenton after the explosions mentioned in your inquiry had occurred, for the purpose of making a special investigation, is as follows:

"The following are the tests that I made on the samples that I was able to secure from the dealers:

	Oil temperature.	Light flashed.
Cozart Grocery	60	127
A. D. Close, residence	60	126
Vancamper Grocery	60	138
Wilkin & Brigg Grocery	60	121
E. D. Briggs Grocery	60	128
Wray & Son	60	125
Pearl Martin (farmer)	60	120
Robinson Grocery	60	130
Peter Herbert Grocery	60	135

60 degrees was the temperature of the oil when placed in cup. Flash was the final test. My Pearl Martin sample was exactly the same as that which Mr. Bell took to Columbus. The rest of the samples may vary a little from Mr. Bell but ought not to be very much. Hoping to see you soon, I remain,

[Signed] Geo. W. Montgomery."

The said report shows that none of the samples of oil inspected by said inspector were below the required standard of section 856, General Code, supra.

On May 28, 1913, you sent Mr. Strange of Greenfield, Ohio, a deputy oil inspector from another district, to Kenton for the purpose of making a second special investigation. The report of deputy oil inspector J. L. Strange discloses that he first made a number of tests of oil furnished by the prosecuting attorney of Hardin county, said samples having been collected by the county detective, and that none of these samples of oil came up to the standard as required by law. The report further discloses that he procured samples of oil from several citizens in and about Kenton, who had purchased oil from various local dealers, and in nearly every instance the test showed that said samples of oil were below the standard required by section 856 of the General

Code, above quoted, that is to say, in nearly every instance the samples flashed less than 120 degrees Fahrenheit, under the test prescribed by section 855 of the General Code, supra. In one instance, the oil flashed at 94 degrees Fahrenheit, and other samples flashed at various degrees, even as low as 69 and 70 degrees Fahrenheit.

The list of accidents attached to the report of the last mentioned inspector, discloses that the explosions resulted in six deaths and about the same number of injuries. In every instance, where the explosion resulted in the loss of lives, and in all but one or two instances where the explosions resulted in serious injury, the parties were engaged in pouring the oil from a can for the purpose of starting fires, and may thereby have contributed to their own injury. However much the unfortunate accidents resulting in the death of six persons and resulting in the injury of as many more is to be deplored and lamented, nevertheless, it is to be borne in mind that the criminal offense of the dealers or venders of oil consists in selling oil, petroleum or the products thereof which has been rejected, and so marked or labeled as having been "rejected for illuminating purposes" by the inspector at the time such oil or petroleum or the products thereof were inspected by the inspector. In other words, if the oil so sold by the dealers or venders thereof had been inspected and approved, and the word "approved" had been affixed by stencil or brand on the package, cask or barrel or other receptacle containing oil, then no criminal liability attaches to such dealers or venders under the above quoted sections.

Section 12569 of the General Code provides for the imposing of a penalty upon those selling uninspected oils, as follows:

> "Whoever, for himself or as agent for another, sells or attempts to sell oil to be consumed within this state for illuminating purposes, whether manufactured in this state or not, before it is inspected according to law, shall be fined not less than one hundred dollars nor more than three hundred dollars."

But as above suggested, inasmuch as this oil had been inspected, the provisions of the last quoted section does not apply in this instance.

Section 12565 of the General Code provides as follows:

> "Whoever, being a retail dealer in gasoline, benzine, or naphtha, delivers it except in a barrel, cask, package or case having the word 'gasoline,' 'benzine' or 'naphtha' plainly painted or stencilled thereon or being a purchaser thereof for use, fails to procure and keep it in a barrel, cask, package or can so painted or stencilled, shall be fined not less than five dollars nor more than fifty dollars, or imprisoned in the county jail not more than ninety days, or both."

Section 12567 of the General Code provides as follows:

> "Whoever, being a retail dealer in kerosene, delivers it except in a barrel, package, cask or can having the word 'kerosene' plainly painted or stencilled thereon, or being a user thereof or keeping it for use, keeps it in a barrel, package, cask or can not so painted or stencilled, shall be fined not less than five dollars nor more than fifty dollars or imprisoned not more than ninety days, or both."

Section 12571 of the General Code provides as follows:

> "Whoever adulterates for the purpose of sale, or for use for illuminating purposes, oil obtained from petroleum or coal so as to render it dangerous to use, or knowingly sells, offers for sale or uses oil obtained from petroleum or coal, or the products of either, for illuminating purposes, which will flash at a temperature less than one hundred and twenty degrees Fahrenheit, under the test prescribed by law, shall be fined not more than five hundred dollars or imprisoned not more than one year, or both."

In conclusion I desire to say that inasmuch as the oil which was sold by the dealers in this case had been inspected and approved by the inspector, it is the opinion of this department that your department is without authority to prosecute the said dealers under the provisions of sections 854, 855, 856, 859, 861, 862, 863, 864 and 865 of the General Code, above quoted, unless it should develop upon further investigation by your department that the retail dealers had delivered gasoline, benzine or naphtha in barrels, casks, packages or cases not having the word "gasoline," "benzine" or "napthha" plainly painted or stencilled thereon in violation of section 12565 of the General Code, above quoted; or, that such retail dealers had delivered kerosene in barrels, packages, casks or cans not having the word "Kerosene" plainly printed or stencilled thereon, in violation of section 12567; or, that said retail dealers had adulterated the oil for the purpose of sale or for use for illuminating purposes or had knowingly sold said oil for illuminating purposes, which will flash at a temperature less than 120 degrees Fahrenheit, in violation of section 12571, General Code, above quoted. In other words, if such investigation discloses that there had been any violation of said sections 12565, 12567 and 12571 of the General Code, then it would be possible to prosecute such dealer or dealers who had been found to have so violated said sections.

Yours very truly,
TIMOTHY S. HOGAN,
Attorney General.

THE OFFICE OF DEPUTY INSPECTOR OF OILS AND COUNTY LIQUOR LICENSE COMMISSIONER ARE COMPATIBLE.

There is nothing in the statutes that will prohibit a deputy inspector of oils from being appointed to the position of county liquor license commissioner, and he may perform the duties of both offices until a successor is appointed for him as deputy inspector of oils.

COLUMBUS, OHIO, December 10, 1913.

HON. WILLIAM F. MASON, State Inspector of Oils, Columbus, Ohio.

DEAR SIR:—In your favor of December 9, 1913, you advise that a deputy inspector of your department was appointed to the position of liquor license commissioner of Lorain county early in September, that he continued his duties as deputy inspector of oils whilst occupying the office of liquor license commissioner and performing the obligations thereof. You further state that said deputy's resignation was accepted and a successor appointed in his place as deputy inspector of oils on the 30th day of September and you request my opinion as to whether or not the resigning deputy may receive the fees for services performed by him as such deputy during the month of September, whilst occupying during this time the position of liquor license commissioner.

Section 7 of the act providing for the liquor license commission occurring on page 218, O. L., provides that county license commissioners shall not hold any other public office for profit except that of notary public.

Section 846 of the General Code provides for the position of deputy inspector of oils as follows:

"The state inspector of oils shall appoint a suitable number of deputy inspectors of oils, who shall have the same qualification, be empowered to perform the duties of inspection, and be liable to the same penalties as the state inspector of oils * * *."

In Ohio it is well settled that a deputy proper is not to be considered a public officer.

"Volume 11, page 214, Encyc. Digest of Ohio reports. Supplement to the same work for the year 1911, page 843."

The authorities herein cited seem to establish definitely that in the absence of contrary provision in the statutes a deputy is not a public officer, and it may, therefore, be concluded that a liquor license commissioner is not probihited from performing the duties and receiving the fees attached to the position of deputy inspector of oils by virtue of section 7 of the liquor license commission law above quoted, which prohibits county liquor license commissioners from holding any other public office for profit.

Since neither of these offices can in any wise be viewed as entailing obligations of supervision, control or check over the other, and since there is nothing in the statutes requiring the encumbents of either of these positions to devote their entire time to the obligations thereof, I am of the opinion that they may not be deemed incompatible.

Whatever lack of policy there may appear therefor, or however inadvisable it may seem to permit any individual to hold two such positions, I am of the opinion that there is nothing in the law which makes such a situation prohibitive. In the present situation it seemed quite necessary and proper that the deputy in question should continue the performance of his duties until the appointment of a successor, and I am of the opinion that it is certainly not unfair and clearly not illegal for the person in question to receive his compensation for the duties so performed.

Very truly yours,
TIMOTHY S. HOGAN,
Attorney General.

DEPARTMENT OF PUBLIC PRINTING MAY DO PRINTING FOR STATE INSTITUTIONS UPON REQUISITION OF THE BOARD OF ADMINISTRATION.

The department of public printing has authority to do whatever binding may be required by the state institutions on the requisition of the board of administration, so far as it may be practicable for the department so to do with its equipment. Where it is not practicable for the department to do binding it may be done on contract let to the lowest responsible bidder.

COLUMBUS, OHIO, September 4, 1913.

HON. FRANK HARPER, Supervisor of Public Printing, Columbus, Ohio.

DEAR SIR:—Under date of July 18, 1913, you write and ask opinion of me as follows:

> "This department has been requested by the deaf and dumb institution, through the state board of administration, to make a set of blank books for its use. Up to this time the printing department has not been doing any printing or binding for any of the state institutions.
> "An opinion is desired as to whether there is authority under the law for the printing department to do printing and binding for the state institutions."

Section 2 of article XV of the state constitution as amended September 3, 1912, provides as follows:

> "The printing of the laws, journals, bills, legislative documents and papers for each branch of the general assembly, with the printing required for the executive and other departments of state, shall be let, on contract to the lowest responsible bidder, or done directly by the state in such manner as shall be prescribed by law. All stationery and supplies shall be purchased as may be provided by law."

Prior to the amendment of this section of the constitution the provision was that the printing therein designated should be let on contract to the lowest responsible bidder by such executive officers and in such manner as shall be provided by law. No statutory provision has been made making effective the amendment to the constitution providing that the printing for the legislative, executive, and other departments of state may be "done directly by the state in such manner as shall be provided by law," and we are remitted on a consideration of the questions presented to prior existing statutes upon the subject.

Section 754, General Code, provides that the printing for the state shall be divided into seven classes, and shall be let in separate contracts as follows:

> "First Class. * * * * * *
> "Second Class. * * * * * *
> "Third Class. Reports, communications and other documents ordered by the general assembly or either house thereof, or by the executive departments to be printed in pamphlet form, not including the bulletins of the agricultural experiment station.

"Fourth Class. * * * * * *

"Fifth Class. Blanks, circulars and other work for the use of the executive departments, not including those to be printed in pamphlet form.

"Sixth Class. * * * * * *

"Seventh Class. The report of the secretary of state, auditor of state, commissioner of common schools, superintendent of insurance, railroad commission, commissioner of labor statistics, state board of agriculture, and other reports of executive officers required by law to be bound in either cloth or half law binding, not including the laws, joint resolutions and journals of the house and senate."

This section further provides that the printing for each of the classes designated in the section, except the seventh class, shall be let in one contract; and that the printing for the seventh class may be let in one or more contracts, as the commissioners of public printing in their discretion may require. Sections 755 to 778, inclusive, General Code (except section 776, repealed) related statutes to 754, make provision for bids for public printing to be advertised for by the commissioners of public printing, the letting of contracts therefor, and the manner in which the work contracted for shall be done. Section 786, General Code, provides as follows:

"All printing and binding for the state not authorized by the provisions of this chapter shall be subject to the provisions thereof so far as practicable, and whether provided for by law or resolution, the commissioners of public printing may advertise for proposals and let contracts therefor as herein provided."

By the provisions of section 1835, General Code, state institutions are placed under the control and management of the Ohio board of administration. This board is undoubtedly an executive department, and the members thereof executive officials as those terms are used in the various provisions of section 754, and this board may make requisitions on the department of public printing for such printing as is therein authorized and provided for. Under the present state of the law, however, such printing will have to be done on contract let by the commissioners of public printing on bids submitted responsive to advertisements therefor. By constitutional mandate, printing for the executive and other departments of the state government must be let on contract to the lowest responsible bidder, or done directly by the state in such manner as shall be provided by law. As before noted, no provision has as yet been made whereby the state may do the printing for its several departments of government directly, and it follows that printing for the state institutions as managed and controlled by the board of administration, must be done on contract let to the lowest responsible bidder (60 O. S. 406, 420).

You also inquire as to the authority of the department of public printing to do binding for the state institutions.

Sections 750 and 779, General Code, provide as follows:

"Section 750. The supervisor of public printing shall have charge of the book binding establishment at the state school for the deaf; he shall provide the necessary materials, implements, machinery and fixtures thereof; he shall have supervision and control thereof and the exclusive management of its practical operation.

"Section 779. The commissioners of public printing shall provide for the necessary binding of the state in such manner, upon such terms and for such periods as they may deem most advantageous to the state. Before a contract for binding is awarded, the contractor shall execute a bond to the state in the sum of five thousand dollars with two or more sufficient sureties, conditioned for the faithful performance of the work specified in the contract. In the execution of the work of binding and the transportation of sheets, bound copies and documents, the commissioners and the contractors shall be governed so far as practicable by the rules relative to contracts for public printing."

Section 1879, General Code, provides, as does section 750, that the book binding at the state school for the deaf shall be under the supervision of the supervisor of public printing, and section 1880, General Code, provides as follows:

"As far as practicable, the book binding for the state shall be done at this institution, and the supervisor of public printing shall have reference to this object in the organization of the business and preparation for work. When the book binding is let to others the supervisor may arrange with the contractors to do any part of the work in addition to the work for the state then let, that can be done at the institution on proper terms. If fair rates cannot be had from such contractors to employ the pupils engaged in this department, the supervisor may contract for and perform other binding."

Harmonizing the provisions of the sections just noted and of section 786 hereinbefore set out, as far as possible, and resolving whatever conflict there may be therein in favor of the provisions of section 1880, as the later statute, I am of the opinion that the department of public printing, under your supervision, has authority to do whatever binding may be required by the state institutions on the requisitions of the board of administration so far as it may be practicable for your department to do the particular work required with the equipment the department may have. Insofar as it may not be practicable for your department to do any particular binding for which requisition may be made, the same may be done on contract let to the lowest responsible bidder therefor.

Very truly yours,
TIMOTHY S. HOGAN,
Attorney General.

TOWNSHIP TRUSTEES HAVE AUTHORITY TO ACCEPT GIFT ON BEHALF OF THE TOWNSHIP AND TO ESTABLISH TOWNSHIP LIBRARY.

Where an offer of a Carnegie library building has been received by the people of a township, if the library is to be a township institution, a vote of the people is required in order to establish and maintain it.

Upon a favorable result of such election, the trustees will have authority to borrow money or issue bonds in order to acquire a site for the erection of a building. The trustees cannot turn over the library to a library association. They would be required to appoint three library trustees in the manner provided by law.

COLUMBUS, OHIO, September 6, 1913.

HON. J. H. NEWMAN, State Librarian, Columbus, Ohio.

DEAR SIR:—I beg to acknowledge receipt of your letter of August 23d, and have noted your request therein for an early consideration of the question submitted, which is as follows:

> "Mr. Carnegie has offered to the people of a certain township for the erection of a library building, an amount equal to ten times as much as may be annually received by taxation for the support of the proposed library.
> "A special election has been held under the provisions of section 3403, et seq., General Code, at which the proposition to establish a township public library was carried. The necessary levy has been made and the first installment of the proceeds will be available in February, 1914.
> "The township now has in sight, so to speak, the necessary funds for the construction of a building and for the support and maintenance of the library but lacks a site upon which to construct the building.
> "A library association has been organized.
> "You ask whether or not the money produced by the tax levy may be used in part for the purchase of a site, and if this can be done, whether or not it would be lawful to anticipate the proceeds of the tax by borrowing money for that purpose?"

Before answering your question specifically, I wish to clear up some points upon which you appear to have made erroneous assumption.

In the first place, the question which you speak of could not lawfully have been submitted at a special election. The only township election on the question of a public library is that provided for by section 3403, General Code, which is required to be held at the time of holding the general election in November.

In the second place, under an election, such as that of which you speak, the organization of a library association is uncalled for.

Chapter 2, title II, division III, part first, of the General Code, is divisible into two parts. The first five sections refer to a township library organized under authority of the vote of the electors. The last four sections refer to the support of a private association maintaining and furnishing a free public library.

Your letter is not clear in that it speaks both of an electon and of the organization of a library association, and in that you refer to section 3407, General Code, which is the section respecting the support by taxation of a private association. I shall, therefore, have to answer your question in two ways; first, upon the assumption that the proposed library is a township library, and the further assumption that you are in error in stating that the election was a special one, and, second, upon the assumption that the proposed library is to be maintained by a private association.

I will first discuss the second of these two assumptions.

If the library association has been formed, and if the library is to be under the control of such an association, then the township has no right to furnish a building or site. Sections 3407 to 3430, inclusive, provide that the private association shall, by subscription or otherwise, furnish the site and erect a building thereon. Then it becomes lawful for the trustees of the township, without any vote of the people, to levy the tax of one-half mill, and to pay it to the private association for the support of the library. It is not lawful, however, for the township to build a library building or to furnish a site therefor, for the use of such an association.

In this connection, of course, I recognize the possibility of the election having been held upon the question you speak of, because of the limitation of the Smith one per cent. law and because of a desire to make a levy outside of such limitations. Such an election, however, under section 5649-5a, et seq., could only be held in November. So that this supposition does not explain the fact referred to in your letter that a "special election was held."

I will now discuss the first of the two assumptions made by me:

If the library is to be a township library, then, as already remarked, there is no place for a library association. The institution is to belong to, and be established and maintained by the township as such, under the control of three trustees, to be appointed by the township trustees. (Section 3405, General Code.)

The question to be submitted at the regular election is as to the establishment and maintenance of the library, and the proceeds of the tax may be used under section 3404, which is the governing section for "the establishment and maintenance of a library and the procuring of a suitable room or rooms therefor." In other words, section 3407, to which you refer, has nothing whatever to do with the expenditure of the proceeds of the tax authorized by an election held under section 3404.

If the library is to be a township institution, and is not to be maintained by a library association, then, in my opinion, the township trustees have authority to secure funds for the purchase of a site. Section 3404, General Code, of itself, seems to authorize the application of the proceeds of the levy referred to therein to the "procuring of suitable room or rooms therefor," which, by inference, would carry with it the authority to purchase a site and to erect a building.

Section 3281, General Code, authorizes the township trustees to receive "on behalf of the township any donation by bequest, devise, or deed of gift, or otherwise of any property, real or personal, for any township use," which would authorize them to accept Mr. Carnegie's gift of money, and to apply it to the intended use.

In addition to the provisions just mentioned, however, the township trustees have authority by virtue of the provisions of sections 3295 and 3939, General Code, read together, to borrow money and levy taxes for the re-payment of the same for any of the purposes mentioned in the last named section, which are township purposes. The establishment and maintenance of a library, and the procuring of a suitable room or rooms therefor, being by virtue of section 3404, a township purpose, and the trustees being authorized under section 3281, General Code, to accept donations for township purposes, I am of the opinion that when section 3939 authorizes a municipal corporation, in paragraph 15, thereof, to borrow money "for establishing free public libraries and reading rooms," and in paragraph 1, thereof, "for procuring real estate * * * for an improvement authorized by this section, or for purchasing real estate with a building or buildings thereof to be used for public purposes," these powers, by virtue of section 3295, General Code, are thereby conferred upon township trustees.

The powers thus conferred, however, must be exercised under the limitations of sections 3939, et seq., so that if the amount desired to be borrowed and expended for the purpose of acquiring a site is such that with the out-standing indebtedness already incurred by the township, and subject to limitation, would exceed two and one-half per cent. of the total tax duplicate of the township, it would be necessary to refer the question to a vote of the electors; if the amount desired to be expended, together with other similar indebtedness incurred during the current year would exceed one per cent. of the duplicate of the township, the authority of the electors would be likewise required; and if the indebtedness in question, together with the other out-standing indebtedness of the township would exceed five per cent. of the duplicate, then the township trustees would have to wait until enough of the out-standing indebtedness were retired to exercise the borrowing power.

You will observe that my answer to your letter is indirect and somewhat equivocal. It was necessarily so because of the somewhat conflicting statement of facts upon which my opinion was requested. Repeating my conclusions, they are as follows:

1. If the proposed library is to be established and maintained by a private association, then the moneys derived from taxation for the support of such association may not be used by the association in the purchase of a site; but funds for this purpose must be raised by the association itself. The association being a private corporation, might borrow money on such terms as it would be able to negotiate, but before the levy could be paid at all to the association, it would have to qualify by "maintaining and furnishing a free public library." That is to say, to make my answer clear on this point, I do not attempt to hold that if the association has obligated itself by borrowing money for the purchase of a library site, it may not, after the library is in operation, and it is receiving the proceeds of the levy made under section 3407, use a part or for a time, all of the proceeds of such levy in retiring the indebtedness which it has incurred. This, I am inclined to think, would be proper, but until the library is actually in operation, a private association is not qualified to receive the proceeds of the tax levy under section 3407. The trustees are without authority to make the levy for the purpose of contributing to an association which is not actually maintaining a library, and an attempted levy for this purpose could be successfully enjoined as unlawful. So that if there is an association in existence, the arrangement of which you speak, could only be worked out by having the members of the association borrow the money on their individual responsibility, and by permitting them, when the building is erected, to use a part or all of the money derived from taxation under section 3407, for the retirement of that indebtedness; but until the building is erected, the association would not have any right to the tax moneys at all. Therefore, the moneys cannot "accumulate," as you phrase it in your letter, until the building is erected, and then be used for the purposes suggested. Therefore, also, and if this is the state of affairs, the first available proceeds of the levy of which you speak, which could be paid to the library association, would not be those accruing in February, 1914, but would be those of the first levy made after the library was actually in operation. And, finally, if the association has been organized and is operating a library, then no election is necessary to authorize the trustees to levy a tax for its support. This, the trustees have the right to do without the authority of the electors, and if the election of which you speak was merely for the purpose of avoiding the limitation of the Smith one per cent. law, in any event it should have been at a general election and not at a special election.

2 If the library is to be a township institution, then a vote of the people was required in order to establish and maintain it. This vote should have been taken at a regular election. If legally held, however, a favorable result of such an election would authorize the trustees to accept Mr. Carnegie's gift, and by borrowing money or using the proceeds of a levy to acquire a site for the erection of a building. In such an event, however, it would not be competent for the trustees to turn over the management of the library to a library association. They would be required to appoint three library trustees in the manner provided by law.

If, upon receipt of this opinion, you are in doubt as to how to advise the persons interested in the particular transaction about which you inquire, I suggest that you obtain a more complete statement of facts, so that I may be able to reach a definite and unequivocal conclusion in the matter.

Yours very truly,
TIMOTHY S. HOGAN,
Attorney General.

GOVERNOR—COMMUTATION OF SENTENCE CANNOT AUTHORIZE PARDON BOARD TO PAROLE PRISONER OTHERWISE NOT ENTITLED TO PAROLE.

The power to define crimes, to prescribe the mode of procedure for their punishment and to fix the kind and manner of their punishment, as well as to provide disciplinary regulations for prisoners, is a legislative power. Inasmuch as the legislature has provided, under section 2169, General Code, that the board of administration may not pardon any prisoner under sentence for murder in the first or second degree, or any prisoner previously convicted of felony and having served a term in a penal institution, except where the prisoner under sentence has served under said sentence twenty-five years, the fact that the governor commutes the sentence of such prisoner would not operate to give such board power to parole.

COLUMBUS, OHIO, January 30, 1913.

Ohio State Board of Pardons, Columbus, Ohio.

GENTLEMEN:—I am in receipt of your communication in which you request my opinion upon the following question:

> "Can the governor of Ohio grant a commutation of sentence to a prisoner who is not eligible to parole, for the express purpose, stated in the commutation, of making such prisoner eligible to parole; and does such specific action on the part of the governor remove the statutory ineligibility to parole in such case?"

In reply to your inquiry I desire to call your attention to section 11 of article III of the constitution of Ohio, which provides as follows:

> "He (the governor) shall have power after conviction to grant reprieves, commutations and pardons for all crimes and offenses except treason and cases of impeachment, upon such conditions as he may think proper, etc."

Commutation of sentence, in its legal sense, means:

> "Substitution of a less for a greater penalty or punishment."

Section 2169 of the General Code provides as follows:

> "The board of managers (now the board of administration) shall establish rules and regulations by which a prisoner under sentence other than for murder in the first or second degree, having served the minimum term provided by law for the crime of which he was convicted and not previously convicted of felony or not having served a term in a penal institution, or a prisoner under sentence for murder in the first or second degree having served under such sentence twenty-five full years, may be allowed to go upon parole outside the buildings and enclosures of the penitentiary. * * *"

The sovereign power of the state is vested in three departments, namely: the legislative, executive and judicial departments. It is a well established rule of law that one of the legislative powers vested in the legislature is to define crimes, to prescribe the mode of procedure for their punishment, to fix by law the kind and manner of punishment, and to provide such disciplinary regulations for prisoners, not in conflict with the fundamental laws, as the legislature deems best.

The legislature has provided as to what prisoners are eligible to parole, and has vested the board of administration, under the provisions of the above quoted section of the General Code, with the power to make such rules and regulations, under which such eligible prisoners may be paroled; and in so doing, has exercised its legislative function under our state government.

Under the above quoted section and article of the constitution of Ohio the general power to grant reprieves, commutations and pardons, to prisoners convicted of crimes and offenses, except cases of treason and impeachment, is vested in the governor, and no other person can exercise such right, because whatever power is vested in either the executive or judicial departments cannot be exercised by the legislative; and, under the organic law of our state, giving the pardoning power to the governor, the legislature is without authority to vest any other party or parties with such power.

While the section of the constitution, above quoted, confers upon the governor the power to grant reprieves, commutations and pardons, for all crimes and offenses except treason and cases of impeachment, upon such conditions as he may think proper, I am of the opinion that certain conditions, such as the governor may think proper, may be made the basis of a pardon, but there can be no conditions to reprieves or commutations of sentences. Further, said unlimited pardoning power, constitutionally vested in the governor, does not vest him with the power to grant a commutation which would make the prisoner eligible to parole, if such prisoner were ineligible to parole under the provisions of section 2169, General Code. In other words, the governor is not vested with legislative power and, therefore, could not delegate to the board of administration the power to parole a prisoner ineligible to parole, nor, by commutation of sentence of such ineligible prisoner make him eligible to parole, as that would be the exercise of a legislative power by an executive officer, something not sanctioned nor authorized under the laws of this state.

The legislature, under section 2169, General Code, has made it impossible for any prisoner, under sentence for murder in the first or second degree, or any prisoner previously convicted of a felony and having served a term in a penal institution, to be paroled, except where the prisoner under sentence has served under such sentence twenty-five full years; and under the rule above laid down, any prisoner serving a sentence for murder in the first or second degree, by having had his sentence commuted, would not become eligible to parole, as the commutation is only a substitution of a less for a greater penalty or punishment, inflicted upon said prisoner for the crime, and not a change of the crime for which he was sentenced.

Very truly yours,
TIMOTHY S. HOGAN,
Attorney General.

WARDEN—ACCOUNTABILITY FOR PENITENTIARY FUNDS—LIABLE FOR SHORTAGE IN CONVICT FUND.

Under sections 2187, 2188 and 2189, General Code, the warden of the penitentiary is given express supervision and charge of penitentiary funds. When, therefore, a shortage occurs in the convict fund, he is responsible therefor. Interest which accrues on the convict fund may not be applied to cover a shortage in such funds, but must be made a part of the convict fund for which the warden must account.

COLUMBUS, OHIO, February 13, 1913.

The Ohio Board of Administration, Columbus, Ohio.

GENTLEMEN:—I am replying to your inquiry of January 15, 1913, concerning a shortage in the convict fund of the Ohio penitentiary.

The facts, as set forth by you, are as follows:

At the close of business on April 30, 1909, the cash journal showed $31,355.92 on hand in all of the funds of said institution. Of this amount $7,994.96 was in the convict fund.

Underneath the above showing of balances on said cash journal appears another statement that at said date, April 30, 1909, there was a shortage in said convict account, over and above said $7,994.96, of $1,304.88. It is recited in this last statement that this shortage was caused by errors in bookkeeping of former prison clerks prior to May 1, 1900. (Signed) "C. B. Shook, Clerk." Under the above statement is written the following receipt:

"April 30, 1909.

Received of C. B. Gould, $31,355.92.

(Signed) T. H. B. Jones."

The above receipt of Warden Jones included $7,994.96 belonging to the convict fund.

On the 2nd day of May, 1912, at the close of business, there was $12,344.73 in said convict fund, and the face of the convict ledger at the same time was $13,981.97, a difference of $1,637.24, or a shortage to that amount of paying in full the face of the convict ledger accounts. This makes an additional shortage of $332.36, as shown in the convict account between April 30, 1909, and May 2, 1912, all occurring in the term of the present warden. You then ask "an opinion as to who would be responsible for this increased shortage of $332.36, which apparently occurred between April 30, 1909, and May 2, 1912."

On the same date as the foregoing communication, January 15, 1913, you addressed the following communication and request to me:

"In my report of the examination of the accounts of the Ohio penitentiary, submitted to the board of administration under date of July 3, 1912, their attention was called to the shortage in the convict fund amounting to $1,637.24. Mention was also made in this report that interest on this fund at that time amounted to $189.80.

"Your attention is respectfully called to the fact that it is impossible to distribute the accumulated interest among the one thousand or more convict accounts, and your department is requested to render an opinion as to what action this board should take in regard to making up the deficit in this convict fund of $1,637.24, and whether or not the $489.80 accumulated interest should be applied toward making up this deficit."

Inasmuch as both of these letters pertain to "convict funds," I will take them up and embrace them in the same reply.

The warden of the Ohio penitentiary has charge of all money which goes to make up the fund known as the "convict fund." It is very largely made up of the prisoners' earnings. Section 2208, General Code, provides that the warden may place to the credit of each prisoner, except life prisoners, an amount of his earnings, not to exceed twenty per cent, part of which can be paid to the prisoner or his family; but that twenty-five per cent. thereof shall be paid to him on regaining his liberty. Five cents a day is the limit for life prisoners. This was the law for many years before the General Code. Revised statutes 7388-12.

Prisoners occasionally receive gifts of money, all of which, together with funds from any other sources, is taken charge of by the warden in a separate account with each convict. There is no officer other than the warden who lawfully can handle the funds of a convict, whether earnings or gifts.

Section 2189, General Code (R. S. 7418) provides:

"All revenues of the penitentiary, except as otherwise provided by law, shall be paid to the warden."

The language, "otherwise provided by law," refers to matters spoken of in sections 2193 and 2200, General Code (sections 7421 and 7417, R. S.), sales of tickets and amounts due from contractors.

Section 2188 prohibits the steward from collecting amounts due the penitentiary, and says payment must be made alone to the warden. (Section 7416, R. S.). Section 2187, General Code, requires the warden to balance his cash account monthly, furnish the auditor of state a detailed report of his receipts for the preceding month, and pay the money into the state treasury, as ordered by the board. (Section 7400, R. S.).

Section 2192, General Code, says: "The clerk shall keep the accounts of the penitentiary in such a manner as to accurately exhibit the financial transactions relating to it." (Section 7407, R. S.).

The warden has entire charge of the penitentiary; he selects all other employes, and can discharge them. I have cited the statutes applying to this institution, to show the unlimited control of the warden; and that all financial matters connected therewith are daily, weekly and monthly under his immediate personal supervision. His relations with the finances thereof, are such, that he ought to know, on any day, the exact status of each and every fund of said prison, including the amount due each convict out of the convict fund. He is responsible for the actions of his clerks, stewards and subordinates, in all matters, with full power of removal if they go wrong.

If any fund is short in the whole system, he is bound to know it: he is responsible therefor, and must make the same good; because it occurred, as a matter of law, as the result of his own acts. So then, if an additional shortage of $332.36 is found to have occurred in the convict fund, as set forth in your letter, between April 30, 1909, and May 2, 1912, the present warden must account for it. He receipted for $31,335.92 in money, April 30, 1909, including $7,994.96 of convict fund. At that time there was a shortage of $1,304.88. On May 2, 1912, this shortage had increased $332.36. The warden and his bondsman must explain this, or make it good.

Replying to your last inquiry: You say you have $489.80, interest on the convict fund. I am of the opinion that you have no right to apply that amount, or any other such interest accumulation, towards making up the deficit in this convict account, unless authorized by an act of the legislature so to do. And it is doubtful whether it can be done in that manner. You may, however, deposit this interest as a part of the convict fund. The "convict fund" produced this interest, and it is a fair disposition of it to let it augment that fund.

Very truly yours,
TIMOTHY S. HOGAN,
Attorney General.

OHIO BOARD OF ADMINISTRATION MAY COMPEL COUNTY AND MUNICIPAL OFFICERS TO PURCHASE—QUALITY AND PRICE.

Under sections 1846 and 1847, General Code, the board of administration may compel county and municipal officers to purchase articles manufactured by state institutions under the control of the board, except such officers as maintain institutions which produce the articles themselves. The price shall be uniform, however, and no higher than the usual market price.

COLUMBUS, OHIO, March 10, 1913.

The Ohio Board of Administration, Columbus, Ohio.

GENTLEMEN:—I beg to acknowledge receipt of your letter of February 27th in which you request my opinion as follows:

> 1. "What interpretation is to be placed on the term 'political divisions' as contained in sections 14 and 15 of the act creating the Ohio board of administration?
> 2. "How far do the powers of the board extend under said sections?
> 3. "Can the board compel county and municipal officers to purchase state made articles, prices and quality, of course, to be equal to similar goods made elsewhere?"

On October 31, 1911, I rendered a very carefully prepared opinion to your board which answers your first and second questions in full.

As to the third question I desire to say that under the rules of law laid down in the cases cited in the opinion above referred to, and the ruling made under that opinion, I am of the opinion that your board, under sections 1846 and 1847, General Code, can compel county and municipal officers to purchase articles manufactured by state institutions under your control, subject, however, to the proviso in section 1847, General Code, which is as follows:

> "This provision shall not apply to any officer, board or agent of any municipality which maintains an institution that produces or manufactures articles of the kind desired."

Provided, further, that the prices shall be uniform, as fixed by your board, and not higher than the usual market price for said articles, that is, the price at which said articles can be purchased by the respective county and municipal officers or boards in the open market.

Very truly yours,
TIMOTHY S. HOGAN,
Attorney General.

PENITENTIARY—PRISONER SENTENCED FOR TWO CRIMES AT THE SAME TIME SERVES THEM CONCURRENTLY WHEN NOT OTHERWISE PROVIDED.

When a judge sentences a prisoner for two crimes on the same day, not specifying in either sentence when it was to take effect, such sentences shall be served concurrently.

COLUMBUS, OHIO, March 11, 1913.

The Ohio Board of Administration, Columbus, Ohio.

GENTLEMEN:—I am in receipt of your communication dated December 30, 1912, in which you enclose a letter from James Blair, a prisoner now confined in the Ohio penitentiary, having been sentenced by the common pleas court of Pickaway county in January, 1911, for two crimes—one for grand larceny for which he was sentenced to serve a term of two years in the Ohio penitentiary, and the other a charge of grand larceny for which he was sentenced to serve two years, in which letter he stated that he had served out one of the terms and had begun on the second, and requested the opinion of your board as to whether or not he is not now being illegally held, on the ground that the sentences should have been designated by the court imposing the same "one to take effect at the expiration of the other;" and you request the opinion of this department as to the question propounded to your board by the said prisoner.

In reply thereto I desire to say that the certificates of sentence for the two crimes above specified for which the prisoner is now incarcerated in the Ohio penitentiary on file in the auditor of state's department show that the said James Blair was sentenced on each charge to serve a term of two years and pay the costs of prosecution in each case, and the certificate of sentence does not show that the judge in imposing the same designated in the entry therein that one should commence to run at the expiration of the other.

On December 3, 1912, I rendered an opinion to Honorable T. H. B. Jones, warden of the Ohio penitentiary, on the same question involved in your inquiry, a copy of which I am sending you, and in which I held that where more than one sentence was imposed upon a prisoner at the same time without specification of the time of their commencement or that one should should follow the expiration of the other, that then the prisoner will be serving the two or more sentences concurrently.

I am, therefore, of the opinion that the prisoner James Blair, under the rules of law and the opinion rendered as above referred to, has served all the time under the two sentences that he can be compelled to serve, and that the two sentences were served concurrently, and that he should be released from the Ohio penitentiary at once.

Very truly yours,
TIMOTHY S. HOGAN,
Attorney General.

BOARD HAS POWER TO GIVE INDETERMINATE SENTENCE TO PENITENTIARY—CONSTITUTIONAL LIMITATION.

Although when section 7388-6, revised statutes, was inserted into the code by the codifying commission, the express authority of the court to render sentences for indeterminate imprisonment in the penitentiary was dropped from the statutes, nevertheless, the recognition of that power which still remained within the terms of this statute, as it appears in the code, and also the recognition contained within the terms of section 13697, General Code, providing for the furnishing of a record by the clerk to the warden in the case of an indeterminate sentence, justifies the resort to the original statute for the purpose of settling the ambiguity which is apparent in the statutes with relation to the power of the court to render such general sentences.

Under this mode of construction, therefore, the power to render a general sentence must be construed to remain with the courts.

COLUMBUS, OHIO, March 13, 1913.

The Ohio Board of Administration, Columbus, Ohio.

GENTLEMEN:—Your communication requesting me to give you my opinion in regard to the powers of your board concerning indeterminate sentences to the penitentiary is received, as is also your supplemental letter in which you state that one Lawrence Kaufman, alias Bailey No. 41719, was received in the month of January from Lucas county to serve on an indeterminate sentence for horse stealing and larceny, and you request my opinion bearing on this case as to whether or not your board would have to release this prisoner on the ground that he was given an illegal sentence.

In order to properly answer your first question it is necessary first to look to the section in reference to indeterminate sentences to the penitentiary and trace the history of such section from its enactment, which includes any and all amendments and supplementary sections to the original section.

Section 2160 of the General Code provides in part as follows:

> "The board of managers (the board of administration, successor to the board of managers) shall provide for the conditional or absolute release of prisoners under a general sentence of imprisonment, and their arrest and return to custody within the penitentiary. * * * A prisoner under general sentence to the penitentiary shall not be released therefrom until he has served the minimum term provided by law for the crime of which he was convicted; and he shall not be kept in the penitentiary beyond the maximum term provided by law for such offense."

The section of the General Code just quoted was original section 7368-6 Bates revised statutes, and the codifying commission dropped from said original section the following:

> "May be, if the court having said case, thinks it right and proper a general sentence of imprisonment in the penitentiary."

Section 13695 of the General Code provides as follows:

> "If the defendant has nothing to say or if he shows no sufficient cause why judgment should not be pronounced, the court shall pronounce the judgment provided by law, etc."

This section was original section 7319 Bates revised statutes, and no change whatever was made by the codifying commission between the said code section and original section of the revised statutes.

Section 7388-7 of Bates' revised statutes was enacted into the code by the codifying commission, and is now section 13697 of the General Code which provides as follows:

> "The clerk of a court by which a criminal has been sentenced to the penitentiary, if the term of such sentence is not fixed by the court, shall furnish the warden a record containing a copy of the indictment and of any special plea, the name and residence of the judge presiding at the trial and of the jurors and witnesses sworn on the trial, with a statement of any fact or facts which the presiding judge may deem necessary for the full comprehension of the case together with his reasons for inflicting the sentence. The clerk shall be entitled to such compensation for such record as the presiding judge certifies to be just and shall be paid by the county wherein the trial was held. Upon such sentence the clerk shall forthwith transmit to the warden of the penitentiary a notice thereof."

In construing a codified statute, which, like section 2160, above referred to, is on its face ambiguous, the rule is as follows:

> "That if a codified section is ambiguous on its face, in construing the same you may look to the language of the prior law for the purpose of resolving the ambiguity, the presumption being that any verbal changes in the codified statutes made in the process of codification, were made without the intention of changing the meaning of the law."

Under the codification, adopting the rule of construction above quoted, the powers still being vested in the board of managers, now the board of administration, under section 2160 to provide for the conditional or absolute release of prisoners under general sentence of imprisonment, and the further provision that no such prisoner under general sentence to the penitentiary shall be released by the board until he has served the minimum term provided by law for the crime for which he was convicted, and shall not be kept in the penitentiary beyond the maximum term provided by law for such offense, and the further fact that the codifying commission left intact section 7388-7 of the revised statutes, being section 13697 of the General Code defining the duties of the clerk when the term of the convict is not fixed, and his compensation, leads me to the opinion that it was not the intention to deprive the court of the power to give a general sentence to a prisoner convicted of a crime, and that the court still has the power, the same as it had prior to the codification.

This being the case, I am of the legal opinion that your board, under section 2160, has the power to provide for the conditional or absolute release of any prisoner or prisoners sentenced under a general sentence of imprisonment in the Ohio penitentiary, subject, however, to the provisions of said section 2160, and particularly the latter part of said section, which provides that no prisoner under general sentence to said institution shall be released until he has served the minimum term provided by law for the crime for which he was convicted, and he shall not be kept in the penitentiary beyond the maximum term provided by law for such offense.

This last section of the General Code referred to gives your board authority to release all such prisoners either conditionally or absolutely after having served the minimum period or term for the crime for which he was sentenced upon such rules and regulations as your board may adopt.

In answer to your second question I am of the opinion that the said Lawrence Kaufman, the prisoner referred to in your inquiry, is now legally confined in the Ohio penitentiary, and for the reasons above set forth his sentence is not illegal, and therefore, you should not release him until he has served the minimum term for the crime for which he was sentenced under the rules and regulations of your board for the release of such prisoners serving indeterminate sentences.

I might say in addition to the above that even if the power to sentence prisoners to a general or indeterminate sentence in the penitentiary, as provided by section 7388-6 Bates' revised statutes, has been repealed by the codification under section 2160 of the General Code, and there are incarcerated in the Ohio penitentiary certain convicts under general sentence, nevertheless unless there be a showing of lack of jurisdiction upon or dehors the record of conviction habeas corpus proceedings would not lie in behalf of such convicts, where the court sentencing them had jurisdiction of the person of the prisoner or prisoners, and of the offense of which they were charged and a verdict is valid, and the judgment not void but merely irregular, such prisoner cannot be released under a petition for habeas corpus: but your board should refuse to release such prisoners other than in conformity to said section 2160 of the General Code, and in case of any such attempt on the part of any such prisoner, the prosecuting authorities of the county from which said prisoner was committed, should be notified in order that they may protect the state's interest in the premises.

Yours very truly,
TIMOTHY S. HOGAN,
Attorney General.

BOARD OF ADMINISTRATION AUTHORIZED TO BOOK BUT ONE COMPREHENSIVE REPORT AS TO ALL INSTITUTIONS UNDER ITS CONTROL.

Section 1870, General Code, which requires a board of administration to report annually to the governor all its acts and proceedings for the fiscal year, with a complete financial statement of the various institutions under its control, comprehensive that such report shall contain all necessary details with reference to each institution and must be construed to impliedly repeal other sections of the statutes which formerly provided for separate reports by each institution, prior to the time such institution came under the control of the board.

COLUMBUS, OHIO, April 8, 1913.

The Ohio Board of Administration, Columbus, Ohio.

GENTLEMEN:—In your letter of February 12, 1913, you say:

> "Will you please render this department an opinion as to whether the repealing of section 1871 carries with it section 2270, General Code; also, as to whether the state printer could not, under section 2270, General Code, include these biennial reports in the executive documents."

This involves an examination of the statutes governing state institutions as to the duties of the officers thereof, relative to reports and their printing before and since the creation of the Ohio board of administration.

This board was established by statute, May 11, 1911, and became effective on the 15th of the following August.

Part of section 645, R. S., as amended, passed into original General Code section 1871, and reads as follows:

"After the close of the fiscal year next preceding the regular session of the general assembly, the board of trustees or managers of each benevolent and correctional institution shall make a report to the governor of their proceedings during the two years, and of the condition, progress and wants of the institution, with a report by the superintendent and such other employes thereof as the trustees deem important. * * *"

Part of section 63, R. S., as amended, passed into original General Code, section 2270, and reads as follows:

"The biennial reports of the state benevolent institutions shall be printed as follows: For each institution, five hundred copies of the report of such institution. Board of state charities, for the board, one thousand copies."

On the 10th day of January, 1910, said original section 2270, was amended to read as follows:

"The biennial reports of the state benevolent and correctional institutions shall be printed as follows: Five hundred copies of the report of each institution. Board of state charities, two thousand copies."

So long as the various state institutions remained under separate boards of trustees and managers, no questions originally arose under the above statutes; and the making and publishing reports of the various institutions was not difficult to carry out. The officials of each institution managed the same separately and independently of each other; and but little confusion could arise, if the statutes were followed.

But, as I have said before, on the 11th day of May, 1911, the legislature created the board of administration to take charge of the various institutions named in the act; and on the 15th day of August, 1911, all separate boards for these institutions were abolished, and their powers vested in the present board.

This act, 102 O. L., at page 223, repealed the above section, 1871; and the last section (41) of the act says:

"And that all parts of sections inconsistent with the provisions of this act be, and the same are hereby repealed in so far as said inconsistencies exist."

All printing of reports since the creation of this board of administration, must be in accordance with said act. So that the biennial reports of 1910 and 1911, of the various state institutions under control of the central board, should not be published as under the repealed section 1871. The same must appear under the act creating the present board of administration, which directs annual reports section 36 (General Code, 1870), of which, reads as follows:

"The board shall annually report to the governor its acts, proceedings and conclusions for the fiscal year, giving a complete financial statement of the various institutions under its control. * * *."

Therefore, I believe, that when section 1871, General Code, was repealed, as to the separate reports for each institution, and section 36 of the act above referred to was enacted, requiring the central board to report their acts as a whole, there could be no such thing as printing any number of separate reports of each institution.

It was an economical provision to avoid the multifarious printing of separate reports, and effected a consolidation thereof in one general report. I am of the opinion that when section 1871 was repealed, it carried with it section 2270, so far as it applied to the publication of separate reports, provided for in section 1871.

After the board of administration assumed control of all of these institutions, there could be no such thing as separate reports to the governor. It was the duty of the board thereafter to make a report as a whole, covering all these institutions of which it had charge.

It is only the report of the board of administration, as a department, that can be printed in the "Executive documents," as shown by section 2275, General Code.

There could be no objection to the central board taking the reports in hand, of the various institutions, for 1910 and 1911, condensing the same, and incorporating the same in a report to the governor, and then have the same incorporated in the "Executive documents." But all such data must come from the board in one document, as their report of all institutions under their jurisdiction, instead of separately, and cannot be otherwise printed in the "Executive documents."

Very truly yours,
TIMOTHY S. HOGAN,
Attorney General.

ABSTRACT OF TITLE—PROPERTY SITUATED IN GALLIPOLIS.

COLUMBUS, OHIO, May 26, 1913.

The Ohio State Board of Administration, Columbus, Ohio.

GENTLEMEN:—I beg to acknowledge receipt of abstract of title and warranty deed for the following described real estate which it is proposed to purchase for use in connection with the Ohio hospital for epileptics at Gallipolis, to wit:

> "Situated in the township of Gallipolis, county of Gallia and state of Ohio, and known as being all that portion of eight acre lots 1185 and 1186, lying south and west of the Mill Creek road as it now is and adjoining lands of Mary Wade and David Conrad, supposed to contain 5 acres more or less, except 17-100 of an acre in the southwest corner of lot No. 1185. Also a part of eight acre lot 1186 bounded and described as follows: Beginning at a Mulberry tree three inches in diameter in the west lune of eight acre lot 1186, thence south 42 degrees, east 2 chains and 68 links to the center of the Mill Creek road, thence along said road in the middle thereof south 50 degrees, west 2 chains and 45 links to a stake in the west line of said land, thence north 3 chains and 50 links to the place of beginning containing 32-100 of an acre more or less."

The abstract discloses no liens or incumbrances against said premises, except the second half of the 1912 taxes, due June 20, 1913, and the undetermined taxes for the year 1913. An affidavit should be attached to the abstract as to whether Eliza A. Blazer, one of the grantees in instrument 15, is the same as Addie E. Blazer, one of the grantors in the deed to the state of Ohio. The name of Harvey Betz appears as one of the grantees in the same instrument, but insofar as the abstract shows his interest has not been conveyed either in the deed to the state of Ohio or otherwise, and a deed should be procured from him.

Subject to the foregoing, I am of the opinion that the state of Ohio will acquire a good and sufficient title to the above described premises in fee simple.

Very truly yours,
TIMOTHY S. HOGAN,
Attorney General.

ABSTRACT OF TITLE—PROPERTY SITUATED IN GALLIA COUNTY FOR USE OF THE OHIO HOSPITAL FOR EPILEPTICS AT GALLIPOLIS.

COLUMBUS, OHIO, June 5, 1913.

The Ohio Board of Administration, Columbus, Ohio.

GENTLEMEN:—I acknowledge receipt of amended abstract of title for certain real estate in Gallia county which your board is to acquire for the use of the Ohio hospital for epileptics at Gallipolis, and upon examination thereof, I find that the suggestions made in my former opinion have been complied with. The title and deed are therefore approved.

You have also transmitted to me for examination and approval an unexecuted deed from Wilson Blazer and wife to the state of Ohio for seventeen one-hundredths of an acre of land in the southwest corner of lot No. 1185, which land was included in the other abstract. Upon examination of said deed, I am of the opinion that the state will acquire a good and sufficient title to said land, in fee simple, upon the execution and delivery thereof.

The abstracts, deeds and other papers forwarded by you, are herewith enclosed.

Very truly yours,
TIMOTHY S. HOGAN,
Attorney General.

BANKS AND BANKING—SPECIAL DEPOSIT OF TRUST FUNDS DEVISED TO STATE BOARD OF ADMINISTRATION WITH POWER TO LOAN AT INTEREST MAY NOT BE PREFERRED IN THE LIQUIDATION OF INSOLVENT BANK.

When the state board of administration, in accordance with the terms of a bequest, made to said board, deposits the sum thereof generally in a bank possessing therefor the ordinary pass book containing the rules applicable to all general deposits, in accordance with the express power of said bequest to loan the fund at interest, such deposit must be treated as all general deposits and may not be treated as a claim preferred over the claims of other creditors, when the bank in which such deposit is made is undergoing liquidation.

COLUMBUS, OHIO, May 21, 1913.

The Ohio Board of Administration, Columbus, Ohio.

GENTLEMEN:—On March 25, 1913, you submitted to me proof of claim covering the account of the Ohio board of administration with the Columbus Savings & Trust Company, also receipt given by Daniel H. Sowers, special deputy in charge of liquidation of the Columbus Savings & Trust Company, No. 1304, issued to your board for savings pass book No. 36881, delivered by your board to said liquidating agent, on March 23, 1912. You also enclose a copy of the will of Sarah Ann Kyle, and you have also asked for my opinion whether the deposit made by your board with said bank, evidenced by said savings pass book, and amounting to $1,649.02, is a special deposit of trust funds which can be preferred in the liquidation of said bank over the claims of the general depositors. The facts as I understand them are as follows:

On the 22nd day of June, 1908, Sarah Ann Kyle, of Carroll county, Ohio, executed her last will, in which the following bequest was made:

> "After the death and burial of my husband, David Kyle, I desire my farm to be sold and the proceeds, with the balance of my personal property, if any, to be given to the Ohio institutions for the blind and deaf."

After her death, under this provision of her will, and by the decree of the court of common pleas of Carroll county, the sum of $1,585.00 came into the hands of the board of trustees of the Ohio state school for the blind. Though this is not shown by the documents before me, I presume that this sum of $1,585.00 was invested in some manner until on August 28, 1911, it had amounted to $1,616.70, on which date it was deposited with the Columbus Savings & Trust Company, and savings pass book No. 36881 was issued in the name of "Ohio board of administration, by A. W. Thurman pt." The only entries in this book are as follows:

> "Aug. 29, 1911, deposited.....$1,616.70, balance, $1,616.70.
> "Interest to Jan. 1, 1912..... 32.32, balance, 1,649.02."

This pass book, which is the only evidence of this deposit submitted to me, is the ordinary pass book issued by the Columbus Savings & Trust Company to the savings depositors, and was subject to the following rules and regulations:

> "1. All sums deposited herein not exceeding $10,000, shall draw interest at four (4) per cent. per annum, from the last day of the month in which the deposit is made, provided said sums remain on deposit until the first day of January or July, next following, at which time the interest shall be credited.
> "Deposits made on or before the tenth days of January or July, shall draw interest from the first days of said months. Interest shall not be allowed in sums less than five dollars nor on fractional parts of a dollar.
> "Deposits in excess of $10,000 must be subject to special agreement.
> "2. Deposits, as a general rule, may be withdrawn at any time without notice, but to protect the interests of depositors, and avoid sacrifice of securities, sixty days' notice of withdrawal may at any time be required.
> "3. Depositors shall not be entitled to receive any part of their principal or interest unless the original deposit book be produced, that such payment may be entered therein, or unless they shall prove to the satisfaction of the secretary that such book has been lost or destroyed, in which case a written discharge shall be required and bond of indemnity at the discretion of the bank.
> "As the officers of this bank may not be able to identify every depositor, the bank will not be responsible for loss sustained where the depositor has not given notice of the pass book having been stolen or lost, if such deposit be paid in whole or in part, on presentation of pass book.
> "Whenever such notice shall not have been given, all payments made to persons producing the deposit book shall be deemed good and valid payments to the depositor.

"4. The amount that may be credited herein shall be payable only to the depositor, his or her order, or to his or her legal representative; and deposits made by minors or married women shall be fully under their control, and payable to them or their order, without regard to parents, guardians or husbands.

"5. These rules and regulations, including the rate of interest to be credited, may be changed, amended or added to at any time, and such changes, amendments or additions shall be obligatory and binding upon all depositors after due notice."

On May 31, 1911, the legislature of Ohio passes an act with reference to the investment of this fund. This act is found in 102 O. L., page 315, and is as follows:

"An act to provide for the investment and disposition of the interest arising from the investment of a certain legacy left to the Ohio state school for the blind.

"Whereas, by the will of Sarah Ann Kyle, of Carroll county, Ohio, the Ohio state school for the blind and the Ohio state school for the deaf, were made residuary legatees of her estate; and

"Whereas, the estate of such testatrix has been settled in accordance with such will and pursuant to a decree of the court of common pleas of Carroll county, and the circuit court of the seventh district of the state of Ohio; and

"Whereas, by the terms of the said settlement there have come into the hands of the board of trustees of the Ohio state school for the blind, the sum of one thousand, five hundred, eighty-five dollars ($1,585); and

"Whereas, from the statement of the scrivener who wrote the will, it appears that the intent of the said testatrix was to benefit 'those poor people,' meaning thereby the blind and deaf, therefore,

"Be it enacted by the general assembly of the state of Ohio:

"Section 1. That the board of trustees of the Ohio state school for the blind be authorized, empowered, and directed hereby forthwith to invest the such one thousand, five hundred, eighty-five dollars ($1,585) in such manner as to provide proper security and to yield as large an interest return as possible, and to keep such sum so invested, and that the income arising from such investment be used for the sole purpose of assisting worthy needy blind persons who have been students of the Ohio state school for the blind to secure a start in life by loaning money to such persons, under proper rules and regulations.

"Section 2. And, that for the purpose of this benevolence the board of trustees of the state school for the blind shall appoint an advisory committee of three well-known and competent graduates of the Ohio state school for the blind, one to serve for three years, one to serve for two years, and one to serve for one year, each from the date of appointment, and thereafter one to be appointed annually to serve for three years, and the duties of such advisory committee shall be to investigate the conditions surrounding any benevolence proposed under the terms of this act, and to make recommendations to the board of trustees as to the proper action thereon."

I presume from the date of this act, May 31, 1911, and the date of the deposit by your board as evidenced by the pass book, that this fund was originally deposited with the Columbus savings and trust company, by the board of trustees of the Ohio state school for the blind, and that on August 29, 1911, the deposit was simply transferred to your board as successor to the board of trustees of the Ohio state school for the blind; or it may have been deposited by said trustees in some other bank, and upon your board succeeding said trustees the deposit may have been withdrawn and redeposited with the Columbus Savings & Trust Company; this, however, is immaterial, because this particular deposit dates from August 29, 1911, and is by your board with the Columbus Savings & Trust Company, whether or not it was a new deposit at that time or was simply a transfer to your board of the deposit previously made by the trustees of the Ohio state school for the blind.

Under the will of Sarah Ann Kyle, and the act of the legislature above quoted, the trustees of the Ohio state school for the blind, held this fund in trust as provided by the will and the act, with power especially granted to invest the same in such manner as to provide proper security and to yield as large an interest return as possible, and to keep such sum so invested, and your board as successor to the board of trustees of the Ohio state school for the blind also succeeded to this trust and it vested in your board, subject to the same conditions, restrictions and limitations as attached to it while the board of trustees of the Ohio state school for the blind.

The question to be decided in this case is whether this deposit made by your board with the Columbus Savings & Trust Company is a special deposit, and so entitled to preference. This question depends upon whether or not your board was authorized to make the deposit in the manner in which it was made.

It is not necessary in this opinion to go into the subject of the duty of the trustees in the preservation and management of trust property, and it is also unnecessary to discuss the question as to when a trustee has the implied right to invest trust funds, or to loan the same and thus create the relation of debtor or creditor because the act above quoted gives the trustees in this instance the express authority to invest this fund and to create this relation.

In Morse, on Banks and Banking, section 185 (4th ed.), it is stated:

> "When money is deposited to pay a specified check drawn or to be drawn, or for any purpose other than mere safe keeping, or entry on general account, it is a specific deposit, and the title remains in the depositor until the bank pays the person for whom it is intended, or promises to pay it to him."

This is a good general statement of the matter though, of course, it is subject to many distinctions and qualifications, especially in the matter of collections and authorization of deposits. The same author in section 186, further states:

> "A deposit is general unless expressly made special or specific. Or the circumstances are such as to imply that the deposit is not meant to be general * * *." (Citing a number of authorities to sustain this proposition).

It is also stated that,

> "Wherever the bank has the right to mingle the funds deposited with its own, and treat them as a debt due from it, even though the money may be trust property given to the bank on condition that it would pay a certain sum to the cestui during life, the deposit is general. In the absence of evidence to show that it is the bank's duty, by agreement express or clearly implied, to keep the funds and their investment separate, it must be treated as a general deposit." (Vail vs. Newark Savings Institute, 32 N. J., eq., 627).

Bearing in mind the above definitions, which from an examination of the authorities may be said to be well settled principles, I find nothing in relation to this deposit by your board with the Columbus Savings & Trust Company which would entitle it to be considered as a special deposit, and to be given preference over other saving deposits in said bank. The evidence of the deposit, that is the savings deposit pass book, is the ordinary pass book issued by said bank to all savings depositors, the contract under which the deposit is made is the identical contract made with all savings depositors in said bank, and the interest paid is the same. It is a trust fund, but that fact does not place it in a class separate from the other savings deposits because the law governing the management of the fund expressly authorizes its investment, and therefore the deposit will have to be treated as a general savings deposit in said bank and entitled to share on an equality with the other claims against said bank for like deposits.

You will note from the above, that the determining feature in regard to a deposit of this character is whether or not the trustee is authorized or has the power to make the deposit and incur the relation of debtor and creditor. This is clearly indicated in two cases, in one, McLain vs. Wallace, 103 Indiana, 562, it is held that where a deposit is made by a clerk of court under its order and not kept separate from the other funds of the bank, the deposit is general and the clerk is not entitled to be preferred to other creditors of the bank in case of its failure.

In the case of Otis vs. Gross, 96 Ill., 612, it is held that a deposit of school district funds by its treasurer is not within his power, and the deposit does not become general.

For a very full opinion upon this question I further refer you to the case of Smith et al., trustee, vs. Fuller, et al., assignee, 86 O. S., 57, paragraphs 1, 2, 3, and 4, of the syllabus, are as follows:

> "1. It is the duty of a trustee appointed to wind up and settle the affairs of an insolvent savings company to protect the trust property in every reasonable way; to get possession of the assets, reduce them to money, and under the direction of the court appointing him, after the payment of expenses, apply the funds to the satisfaction of the claims of creditors of the insolvent company."
> "2. Such trustee has not, in the absence of a proper order of court the right or power to loan the funds of the trust coming into his hands as such trustee.
> "3. A general deposit by such trustee of the trust funds in a bank is in legal effect a loan to the bank, and unless authorized by the court, is a violation of duty by the trustee.
> "4. Where a trustee deposits trust money in a bank, taking as evidence thereof a certificate of deposit, certifying that he as trustee, has deposited the fund payable to self on return of the certificate properly indorsed, the same not being subject to check, and no stipulation for interest made, a presumption will be indulged, in the absence of proof to the contrary, that the trustee intended to perform and not violate his duty, and that the deposit was intended as a special, and not a general, deposit."

The court, at page 62, says:

> "It cannot, we think, be seriously contended that the trustees had, in the proper discharge of their duties as such, the right or power, by express contract, to create the relation merely of debtor and creditor; that is, to loan out the trust funds."

The court further says, in brief, that when funds are so deposited or loaned, that such an act in the absence of authority from the court, would clearly be inconsistent with, and a violation of, the duty of the trustee; that if he has no right to make such loan general, it is clear that a loan to a bank by way of a general deposit would be equally beyond his power, and that in the absence of clear proof showing that a deposit was made as a loan to the bank by way of a general deposit, such purpose (that is the purpose to loan the money) cannot be attributed to the trustee.

And it will be seen from the syllabus and the opinion, that the court decided that the deposit in the case before it was a special deposit largely upon the ground that the trustee was without authority to make a general deposit.

Your case is the converse of this for the reasons stated above, viz., that your board was expressly authorized by law to do this very thing.

Yours very truly,
TIMOTHY S. HOGAN,
Attorney General.

MADISON HOME—BOARD OF ADMINISTRATION MAY MAKE IMPROVEMENT—ADMINISTRATOR—FUND DERIVED FROM BEQUESTS.

1. Where money was bequeathed to the Madison home for the benefit of state institution, the board of administration is authorized to receive such money from the administrator of the deceased.

Such funds may be used for making any improvement at the institution which would be within the legal power of the board to make from any other funds at its disposal for state purposes.

2. The erection of a cellar and the digging of a well would be lawful improvements, such as may be paid for by the board of administration out of such money.

3. Under section 1840, General Code, the funds derived from such bequests should be kept separate and apart from other funds and the board should keep an itemized account of the receipts and disposition thereof.

COLUMBUS, OHIO, July 3, 1913.

The Ohio Board of Administration, Columbus, Ohio.

GENTLEMEN:—I beg to acknowledge receipt of your communication, dated June 30th, in which you enclose correspondence from the superintendent of the institution known as the Madison home, together with copies of two wills, executed by former members of said institution, namely; Mary Eliza Rehren and Mary W. Babcock; and request my opinion as to whether or not the money devised to your board under the provisions of said wills can be used by your board for the purpose of erecting at said institution a frost-proof cellar, and digging a well at said institution.

In order to properly advise you in the premises, I desire to quote the provisions of both wills above referred to. In the will of Mary Eliza Rehren the following provision or item is contained:

> "It is my wish and desire that all money in bank as shown by my bank book and checks in the hands of the managing officer of the Madison home at the time of my death (should I die while a member of the home) after paying my funeral expenses here at the home, be given to the board of managers of the Madison home, Madison, Lake county, Ohio; for the benefit of the home as they may deem best."

In the will of Mary W. Babcock is the following provision:

> "It is my wish and desire that all moneys, checks, notes, bonds or securities whatsoever, belonging to me, or that may hereafter accrue to me from bequest or otherwise, shall at my death (should I die while a member of this home), after paying all of my funeral expenses, be given to the board of managers of the home for Ohio soldiers, sailors, marines, their wives, mothers, widows and army nurses, to be used by them for the benefit of said home, as in their best judgment they may deem best."

Under the provisions of both of said wills there can be no question but that the intent of the testatrix in each case was that all of said moneys or securities remaining after the payment of her debts and funeral expenses should go to your board, as the board of managers of said institution, to be used by you as you deem best.

The main question for determination after the intent of the testatrix is arrived at is whether or not, under the provisions of law relating to devices, bequests and gifts for the benefit of any state institution, your board has the legal authority to spend said bequest for the purposes set forth in your inquiry.

Section 18 of the General Code of Ohio is as follows:

"The state, a county, township or cemetery association, the commissioners or trustees thereof, a municipal corporation, the council, a board or other officers thereof, a benevolent, educational, penal or reformatory institution, wholly or in part under the control of the state, the board of directors, trustees or other officers thereof, may receive by gift, devise or bequest moneys, lands or other properties, for their benefit or the benefit of any of these under their charge, and hold and apply the same according to the terms and conditions of the gift, devise or bequest. This section shall not affect the statutory provisions as to devises or bequests for such purposes."

Section 1840, General Code, being section 9 of the act creating your board, provides as follows:

"The board shall accept and hold on behalf of the state, if deemed for the public interest, any grant, gift, devise or bequest of money or property made to or for the use or benefit of said institutions or any of them, whether directly or in trust, or for any pupil or inmate thereof. The board shall cause each such gift, grant, devise or bequest to be kept as a distinct property or fund, and shall invest the same if in money, in the manner provided by law; * * The board shall include in the annual report a statement of all such funds and property and the terms and conditions relating thereto, * * * but each such officer shall keep an itemized book account of the receipt and disposition thereof, which book shall be open at all times to the inspection of any member of the board of administration or of the board of state charities."

Under the two sections of the General Code above quoted there can be no question as to the authority of your board to receive bequests such as those set forth in the two wills above referred to. The only remaining question is whether or not your board may use the funds derived from said bequests for the purpose of erecting a frost-proof cellar and digging a well at said institution. As to this proposition I would say that in the case of Christy vs. Commissioners of Ashtabula County, 41 O. S., 711, the supreme court of our state held that, where a testator devised and bequeathed the residue of his property to the county of Ashtabula, in the state of Ohio, for educational purposes to be under the full control of said commissioners, to use and expend as seems best in their judgment to promote and advance the cause of education in said county of Ashtabula, the board was competent to take and hold it and was authorized to spend the said funds for any legal educational purpose, as the board of county commissioners deemed best to promote and advance the cause of education in said county. By analogy I am of the opinion that under the terms of the wills above referred to, your board is authorized to expend, upon receiving the same from the administrators of the respective decedents, the funds so bequeathed to your board for the benefit of said institution, in making any improvement or improvements at said institution which would be within the legal power of the board to make for the benefit of said institution from any other funds at its disposal for said purpose.

I am further of the opinion that the erection of such a cellar and the digging of such a well would come within such lawful improvements as those above referred to; for, under section 1840 of the General Code, a board is authorized to invest or expend the money in the manner provided by law, which means that the terms of the will which authorize your board to use their discretion in expending said bequest for the benefit of the institution, should be carried into effect.

I am further of the opinion that, under section 1840, General Code, the funds derived from the bequests above referred to should be kept separate; and that your board, through its officers, should keep an itemized account of the receipts and disposition thereof.

Very truly yours,
TIMOTHY S. HOGAN,
Attorney General.

BOARD OF ADMINISTRATION—GRAND JURY—WITNESS MAY BE SUBPOENAED FROM STATE HOSPITAL—GRAND JURY NOT PERMITTED TO DEPART FROM ROOM—HEARSAY EVIDENCE—MANAGER OF STATE INSTITUTION ENTITLED TO HEARING—OHIO PENITENTIARY——PAROLE.

1. There is no limitation as to who may or may not be compelled to testify before a grand jury. A prosecuting attorney may subpoena attendants or inmates of the state hospital to appear as witnesses before a grand jury.

2. A grand jury has no right to depart from the rooms wherein they are in session for the purpose of making an investigation of the state hospital.

3. The powers and duties of the board of administration are very broad, as expressed in section 1868, General Code. It may make investigations as it deems necessary; may administer oaths and force attendance of witnesses and the protection of books and papers and when the chief officer of an institute is removed, shall give him a hearing if he so desires it.

4. Where charges have been made against a managing officer of a state institution, the person preferring the charges has no right to be represented by counsel.

5. The board of administration may make rules prohibiting the introduction of hearsay evidence.

6. The provisions of senate bills Nos. 83 and 87 apply to all persons in the Ohio penitentiary as to their eligibility to parole.

COLUMBUS, OHIO, July 28, 1913.

The Ohio Board of Administration, Columbus, Ohio.

GENTLEMEN:—Your communication of May 23, 1913, received in which you request my opinion upon the following questions:

> "1. Can a prosecuting attorney subpoena attendants or inmates of a state hospital to appear before a grand jury?"

"2. Can a grand jury visit a state hospital for the purpose of making an investigation?"

"3. What are the powers and duties of the board of administration as provided in section 1868, General Code?"

"4. In case charges are made against a managing officer of a state institution, has the person preferring charges the right to have an attorney conduct the examination of witnesses, etc., at a hearing before the board?"

"5. Can the board make a rule to prohibit the introduction of hearsay evidence in such cases?"

"6. Do senate bills Nos. 83 and 87, by Senator Wieser apply to all prisoners confined in the Ohio penitentiary, or only to those prisoners sentenced after said laws become effective?"

I will answer each of your questions in the order in which they are asked:

In answer to your first question I desire to say that section 13563 of the General Code provides:

"When required by the grand jury or the prosecuting attorney, the clerk of the court in which such jury was impaneled, shall issue subpoenas and other process to any county to bring witnesses to testify before such jury."

Under said section there can be no question as to the power of the prosecuting attorney to cause to be subpoenaed attendants or inmates of a state hospital to appear before a grand jury, there to testify in any matters that may lawfully be inquired of before such grand jury, as there is no limitation as to who may or who may not be compelled to testify before a grand jury under the provisions of said section.

Having arrived at the legal conclusion that the prosecuting attorney can compel the attendance of inmates or attendants of an insane asylum to testify before a grand jury, the further question arises as to how the attendance of any inmate of an asylum as a witness before a grand jury could properly and legally be compelled. I find no statutory provision covering the question in this state nor any decisions on the subject, but where the person, whose attendance as a witness is desired, is lawfully restrained as an inmate of an insane asylum his attendance is secured by means of a writ of habeas corpus ad testificandum which is directed to the custodian of the witness and requires him to have the body of the witness in the court at the time specified in said writ that he may give his testimony. Under the decisions of the different states it has been held that it is an inherent power of the court to issue such a writ, and I am of the opinion that as the legislature has provided by statute the means of securing the attendance of prisoners confined in penal institutions in this state for the purpose of testifying, and not having provided by statute for those, such as inmates of insane asylums, this writ above referred to should be issued by the courts under their inherent power so to do for the purpose of securing the attendance of such inmates to testify in any trial or before the grand jury in any county where the grand jury is in session, pertaining to any matters properly before said grand jury, or to testify in any case before such court.

In answer to your second question I desire to say, that sections 13554, 13555, 13556 and 13557 provide for the grand jury and matters legally to be done before they retire to hold the inquiry which they are chosen to hold.

Section 13558 of the General Code provides that:

"The grand jurors, after being sworn, shall be charged as to their duty by the judge, who shall call their attention particularly to the obligation of secrecy which their oaths impose, and explain to them the law applicable to such matters as may be brought before them."

Section 13559 of the General Code provides:

> "After the charge of the court, the grand jury shall retire, with the officer appointed to attend it, and proceed to inquire of and present all offenses committed within the county in and for which it was impaneled and sworn."

From the statutes relating to grand juries and our criminal procedure it is plainly to be seen that the grand jurors are sworn secrecy. It is also plainly to be seen that the intention of the legislature was that the grand jury should retire to some place where such secrecy could properly be maintained while they were deliberating in matters coming properly before it, and it is plainly to be seen that the grand jury must retire to the jury room for their sessions, for under section 13561, General Code, it is provided that:

> "The official stenographer of the county, at the request of the prosecuting attorney, shall take shorthand notes of the testimony and furnish a transcript thereof to him and to no other person, but the stenographer shall withdraw from the jury room before the jurors begin to express their views or give their votes on a matter before them."

Therefore, taking all of these matters which we find in the sections above referred to into consideration, I am of the opinion that a grand jury, as soon as it is sworn, shall retire to its room and there continue to hold sessions from time to time, they to be the judge of their sessions until their deliberations are complete, and that they have no right, as a grand jury, to depart therefrom and visit a state hospital for the purpose of making an investigation.

Your third question is, what are the powers and duties of the board of administration as provided in section 1868, General Code?

That section of the General Code is as follows:

> "The board may make such investigations as it may deem necessary to the performance of its duties, and to that end it or any member thereof shall have the same power as a justice of the peace to administer oaths and to enforce the attendance and testimony of witnesses and the production of books and papers. It shall keep a record of such investigations stating the time, place, charges or subject, witnesses summoned and examined, and its conclusions.
> "In matters involving the conduct of an officer, a stenographic report of the evidence shall be taken and a copy thereof, with all documents introduced, kept on file at the office.
> "The fees of witnesses for attendance and travel shall be the same as in the court of common pleas, but no officer or employe of the institution under investigation shall be entitled thereto. Any judge of the probate or of the common pleas court, either in term time or in vacation, upon application of any member of the board, may compel the attendance of witnesses, the production of books or papers and the giving of testimony before said board, or before any member of the board, by a judgment for contempt or otherwise, in the same manner as in cases before said courts."

Under said section, just above quoted, the powers of your board are very broad in that it may make such investigations as it may deem necessary to the performance of its duty, may administer oaths and force the attendance and testimony of witnesses, and the production of books and papers. I might say in addition, that one of your duties is that you shall give to any chief officer appointed by your board a hearing where you have removed him for any of the causes specified in section 1842 of the General Code, being section 11 of the act creating your board and defining its powers and duties, for under said section it is provided in part that:

> "Such chief officer shall be appointed by the board to serve for the term of four years unless removed for want of moral character, incompetency, neglect of duty, or malfeasance, after opportunity to be heard."

Therefore, it is the duty of your board, under the provisions of section 1868, taken in conjunction with the provisions of section 1842, just quoted, to have a hearing, should the chief officer so removed desire it.

But as to all employes of the state institutions under your supervision I am of the opinion that you, under the provisions of section 1842, General Code, have the power to discharge any employe of any institution for reasons set forth in writing, where you deem it proper in order to carry into effect the proper administration relating to said institution where said employe has been employed.

I believe that I have sufficiently set forth your powers under said provisions of the code as well as your duties, as the provisions of the code are so explicit, taken in conjunction with section 1842, that you cannot be misled as to either the powers of your board or its duties.

In answer to your fourth question, viz.: In case charges are made against the managing officer of a state institution, has the person preferring charges the right to have an attorney conduct the examination of witnesses, etc., at a hearing before the board? I desire to say that I think the answer will have to be in the negative. I believe it is your duty, where charges have been preferred against a managing officer of a state institution under your supervision to give a hearing to said officer as indicated in my answer to your third question, and your board has the right to have the attorney general, or some one assigned by him to your board, to sit in the hearing and examine witnesses on behalf of your board, and the accused officer has the right to be represented by counsel and cross examine witnesses who take the stand for the purpose of testifying in support of the charges filed against said officer; but I do not believe that the person preferring the charges has the right to be represented by counsel and conduct the examination of witnesses at the hearing before the board, for that is against the system of procedure of our courts, and where the procedure is not specifically defined and set forth under the code, I think that that procedure adopted by our courts should be followed in all hearings, such as would be conducted and referred to in your fourth question.

In answer to your fifth question I desire to say that your board can make a rule to prohibit the introduction of hearsay evidence for in all judicial and extra-judicial proceedings hearsay evidence is not admissable, and the hearing of such cases by your board are extra-judicial proceedings; hence your board can make such a rule—and should make such a rule prohibiting the admissibility or introduction of hearsay evidence in all such cases.

In your sixth question you ask me to give you my opinion as to whether senate bills Nos. 83 and 87, passed by the 80th general assembly, apply to all prisoners confined in the Ohio penitentiary, or only to those prisoners sentenced after said laws become effective.

Senate bill No. 83, referred to in your sixth question, is to be found in 103 Ohio Laws at page 29, which bill amended section 2166 of the General Code relating to the sentences to be imposed upon prisoners sentenced to the Ohio penitentiary for certain felonies, and could not in any manner, shape or form apply to prisoners confined in the Ohio penitentiary prior to the law becoming effective, and, therefore I see no reason for your inquiry as to the bill just referred to because it can only apply to prisoners to be sentenced from and after the date said law became effective, as it pertains only to the sentencing of criminals who have been convicted, or plead guilty to felonies, by the courts of the state having the sentencing power over said criminals.

In answer as to whether or not senate bill No. 87, passed by the last general assembly, applies to all prisoners confined in the Ohio penitentiary, I desire to say that said senate bill so passed by the last general assembly is to be found in 103 Ohio Laws at page 474, and said bill amended section 2169 of the General Code to read as follows:

> "The Ohio board of administration shall establish rules and regulations by which a prisoner under sentence other than for treason or murder in the first or second degree, having served the minimum term provided by law for the crime of which he was convicted, and who had not previously been convicted of felony or served a term in a penal institution, or prisoner under sentence for murder in the second degree having served under such sentence ten full years, may be allowed to go upon parole outside of the building and enclosure of the penitentiary. Full power to enforce such rules and regulations is hereby conferred upon the board, but the concurrence of every member shall be necessary for the parole of a prisoner. The board may designate geographical limits, within and without the state, to which a paroled prisoner may be confined, or may at any time enlarge or reduce such limits, by unanimous vote."

This law became effective August 6th and thereafter will guide your board in relation to the granting of paroles to all prisoners therafter confined in the Ohio penitentiary so long as said section remains in the code unrepealed or amended, and it will apply to all prisoners in the Ohio penitentiary as to their eligibility for parole after said law becomes effective, regardless of the time when said prisoners were received at said institution, because a law, when amended, becomes effective as amended and regulates those things pertaining to the amended section, and it is not, in my opinion, retroactive in any sense of the word, but is effective from the 6th day of August and applies to the paroling of prisoners then or thereafter confined in the Ohio penitentiary so long as it remains in force and effect.

Yours very truly,
TIMOTHY S. HOGAN,
Attorney General.

GUARDS AT THE OHIO PENITENTIARY ARE NOT PERMITTED TO CARRY CONCEALED WEAPONS UNDER THE PROVISIONS OF SECTION 12819, GENERAL CODE, AS AMENDED IN 103 O. L. 553.

All persons are liable under the law for carrying concealed weapons unless they come within the excepted classes.

Guards at the Ohio penitentiary do not come within the excepted classes, and they are therefore liable under the law for carrying concealed weapons.

COLUMBUS, OHIO, September 10, 1913.

The Ohio Board of Administration, Columbus, Ohio.

GENTLEMEN:—In your letter of August 15, 1913, you inquire:

> "What effect, if any, has house bill 33, amending section 12819 of the General Code, prohibiting the carrying of concealed weapons, have upon guards and parole officers of the penal and correctional institutions of the state, and other officers and attendants of the state institutions under the control of the board of administration?"

Section 12819, General Code, as amended in 103, Ohio Laws, 553, reads as follows:

"Whoever carries a pistol, bowie knife, dirk, or other dangerous weapon concealed on or about his person shall be fined not to exceed five hundred dollars, or imprisoned in the penitentiary not less than one year, nor more than three years. Provided, however, that this act shall not affect the right of sheriffs, regularly appointed police officers of incorporated cities and villages, regularly elected constables, and special officers as provided by sections 2833, 4373, 10070, 10108 and 12857 of the General Code, to go armed when on duty. Provided, further, that it shall be lawful for deputy sheriffs and specially appointed police officers, except as are appointed or called into service by virtue of the authority of said sections 2833, 4373, 10070, 10108 and 12857 of the General Code, to go armed if they first give bond to the state of Ohio, to be approved by the clerk of the court of common pleas, in the sum of one thousand dollars, conditioned to save the public harmless by reason of any unlawful use of such weapons carried by them; and any person injured by such improper use may have recourse on said bond."

Old section 12819, General Code, read as follows:

"Whoever carries a pistol, bowie knife, dirk or other dangerous weapon, concealed on or about his person, shall be fined not more than two hundred dollars or imprisoned not more than thirty days, and, for each subsequent offense, shall be fined not more than five hundred dollars or imprisoned not more than three months, or both."

It will be noted that the old section made the offense a misdemeanor, and contained no exceptions. The new law makes the offense a felony, and also excepts certain classes of persons from its provisions. This statute being a general one on the subject, and enumerating the classes of persons who may carry concealed weapons, includes and protects only the the persons named therein; and excludes all other persons not so named.

It will be necessary then to carefully analyze the statutes and see who are excepted.

1. The special officers mentioned in section 2833, are all persons called by the sheriff to his aid in the execution of his duties as required by law.

2. Section 4373 includes additional patrolmen and officers appointed by the mayor in cases of riot and like emergency.

3. Section 10070 provides for the appointment of agents by humane societies who have power to arrest violators of humane laws.

4. Section 10108 provides that officers of cemetery associations may appoint watchmen, who are vested with powers of policemen.

5. Section 12857 refers to persons called on to assist a sheriff, constable, coroner or other ministerial officer in securing and conveying accused persons to prison.

The above five classes of persons, together with sheriffs, regularly appointed police officers of cities and villages and regularly elected constables, are the only ones who can carry weapons while on duty, without giving bond.

This section further provides that deputy sheriffs and specially appointed police officers (except those who are appointed or called into service by the last five named sections) are permitted to go armed if they give a bond of $1,000.

Now, the "guards and parole officers of the penal and correctional institutions of the state, and other officers and attendants of the state institutions, under the control of the board of administration," mentioned in your inquiry, are not included in the list who can carry concealed weapons either with or without bond. Therefore, such officers and employes as you named are prohibited from so doing under the new laws.

There is another statute, being section 13693, General Code, on the subject, which reads as follows:

> "Upon the trial of an indictment for carrying a concealed weapon, the jury shall acquit the defendant if it appear that he was at the time engaged in a lawful business, calling or employment, and that the circumstances, in which he was placed, justified a prudent man in carrying such weapon for the defense of his person, property or family."

This section is the only relief for violators of the new law, and was in force under the old. But each person indicted must take his chances of coming strictly within the provisions thereof. Each case will depend on the peculiar circumstances thereof, alone; and this section is not intended to extend the right to carry concealed weapons promiscuously to persons who do not fall within the provisions of section 12819, General Code, as amended.

The object of the new statute is to restrict the carrying of concealed weapons, and lessen the dangers resultant from such practices. If the legislature intended to extend the privilege to others to carry concealed weapons, it should have said so in section 12819. Whatever the practice or custom in that behalf was, under the old law, the same is no longer permissible under the new; and until additional legislation is had on the subject, all persons are liable under the law, unless they come within the classes of exceptions enumerated. Such state employes as named by you do not fall within the excepted and protected class.

Yours very truly,
TIMOTHY S. HOGAN,
Attorney General.

474.

BOARD OF ADMINISTRATION MAY REQUIRE THE MANAGING OFFICER TO GIVE BOND FOR ALL SUBORDINATE OFFICERS UNDER HIS CONTROL—SUBORDINATE OFFICERS SHOULD GIVE BOND TO MANAGING OFFICER.

Since the managing officer of the board of administration appoints all subordinate employes, he should be responsible for their acts and should give bond to the board of admin stration. He in return may require a bond from each one of the subordinate officers for his own protection.

COLUMBUS, OHIO, September 15, 1913.

The Ohio Board of Administration, Columbus, Ohio.

GENTLEMEN:—In your letter of August 14, 1913, you call my attention to section 1855, General Code, which reads as follows:

> "The board shall require its secretary and fiscal supervisor and each officer and employe of every institution under its control who may be charged with custody or control of any money or property belonging to the state or who is now required by law to give bond, to give a surety company bond, properly conditioned, in a sum to be fixed by the board which when approved by the boards, shall be filed in the office of the secretary of state. The cost of such bonds, when approved by the board, shall be paid from funds available for the board or the respective institutions."

You then ask:

"Whether or not, under the provisions of the section above quoted, the board can by resolution place the entire responsibility for all money and property at each institution under its control upon the managing officer thereof."

Section 1842, General Code, provides:

"Each of said institutions shall be under the executive control and management of a superintendent or other chief officer designated by the title peculiar to the institution, subject to the rules and regulations of the board and the provisions of this act."

This section further provides that "he shall select and appoint the necessary employes."

Section 1853, General Code, provides:

"The board shall make rules for the proper execution of its powers and may require the performance of additional duties by the officers of the several institutions * * *"

The last part of the section provides that if there are any apparent conflicts between the powers conferred by law as a managing officer and those conferred by this act upon the board, the presumption shall be conclusive in favor of the board.

In view of the very broad powers conferred on your board by the provisions of this act, as above quoted, and by the whole act itself, I am of the opinion that your board can lawfully adopt such a resolution as you refer to; and require a bond from the chief officer, holding him responsible for all money and property of such institution, of which he is given control. This would be a matter of economy, and obviate the trouble of requiring bonds from subordinates.

Inasmuch as the chief officer appoints all the subordinate employes, he should be held responsible for their acts; and if he desires to protect himself, he should require a personal bond from such appointees to himself.

Very truly yours,
TIMOTHY S. HOGAN,
Attorney General.

THE BOARD OF ADMINISTRATION IS NOT AUTHORIZED TO PRODUCE AND SELL IN THE OPEN MARKET ROAD BUILDING MATERIAL PRODUCED BY CONVICT LABOR.

Section 41, article 2, of the constitution of Ohio, invalidates section 2235-1, General Code, which provides that the board of administration may sell road building and ballasting material, dimensions and other stone in the open market.

At the present time the board of administration has no authority to produce and sell through convict labor any of the above mentioned commodities in the open market.

COLUMBUS, OHIO, August 27, 1913.

The Ohio Board of Administration, Columbus, Ohio.

GENTLEMEN:—In your letter of August 15, 1913, you say:

> "Your attention is called to an amendment to section 41 of article II of the constitution of Ohio, which was passed at a special election held September 3, 1912, and which reads as follows:
> "Laws shall be passed providing for the occupation and employment of prisoners sentenced to the several penal institutions and reformatories in the state; and no person in any such penal institution or reformatory, while under sentence thereto, shall be required or allowed to work at any trade, industry or occupation, wherein or whereby his work, or the product or profit of his work, shall be sold, farmed out, contracted or given away; and goods made by persons under sentence to any penal institution or reformatory without the state of Ohio, and such goods made within the state of Ohio, and such goods made within the state of Ohio, excepting those disposed of to the state, or any political subdivision thereof, or to any public institution owned, managed or controlled by the state or any political subdivision thereof, shall not be sold within this state unless the same are conspicuously marked 'prison made.' Nothing herein contained shall be construed to prevent the passage of laws providing that convicts may work for, and that the products of their labor may be disposed of to the state or any political subdivision thereof, or for or to any public institution owned or managed and controlled by the state or any political subdivision thereof.
> "I am directed to respectfully request your opinion as to whether the amendment quoted above invalidates section 2235-1 of the General Code, which provides that the board of administration are authorized to sell road building and ballasting materials, dimension and other stone, in the open market."

Your inquiry raises the interesting question whether the above quoted section 41 of article II, of the new constitution is self exacting; and whether in the light of its provisions, section 2235-1, General Code, is still in force, or repealed by implication.

Section 2235-1, General Code, reads as follows:

> "That the board of managers of the Ohio penitentiary shall erect upon the said land described in this act, such building or buildings as are necessary for the operation of a stone crushing plant and quarry, and shall equip the said building or buildings for the purpose of manufacturing and the production of crushed stone, and in the preparation of road building and ballasting materials to be sold by the board of managers of the Ohio penitentiary in the open market, and may also conduct the business of quarrying and selling dimensions and other stone."

This section has never been specifically repealed, and is still in force, unless repealed by implication by the above section and article of the constitution.

The schedule to the new constitution provides that the several amendments, when adopted, shall take effect January 1, 1913; and that "all laws then in force, not inconsistent therewith shall continue in force until amended or repealed."

This presents the question squarely: Is section 2235-1 inconsistent with section 41, article II, of the new constitution?

I think it is; and that said statute is repealed by implication and no authority now exists for the board to operate thereunder by producing and selling in the open market such commodities as are mentioned in said statute.

Note the language in the above article and section of the new constitution "And no person in any such penal institution or reformatory (referring to all such institutions in the state), while under sentence thereto, shall be required or allowed to work at any trade, industry or occupation, wherein or whereby his work, or the product or profit of his work, shall be sold, farmed out, contracted or given away."

The provisions of the constitution above quoted, are clear, positive, unambiguous, mandatory and self explanatory. It only remains to determine whether the kinds of labor, materials and products, enumerated in section 2235-1, General Code, fall fairly within the purview of the inhibitive provisions of the above quoted specification of the new constitution. I believe they do.

The operation, by convict labor, under section 2235-1, of a stone crushing plant, the manufacture and production of road and ballasting material, the quarrying and selling dimensions and other stone, in the open market, certainly fall clearly within the prohibitive language of the new constitution.

It is just what the people of the state voted to prevent, when they adopted the part of the new constitution, relative to convict labor. The people are presumed to have known of the existing statute, and to have intended to abrogate it, and insert their will to that effect in article II, section 41.

The constitution is the supreme law on a subject which it covers; and it is the law that statutes must yield to the constitution, where it is clear that the intention of the framers and adopters are manifest to that effect.

Judge Bartley, in 1 O. S., 451, says:

> "No one will presume to controvert the position that all laws of the state inconsistent with any express provision and the clear intent of the constitution, were abrogated when the constitution went into operation."

He also recites the fact that the framers of the constitution of 1851 saw fit to provide therein, that all laws consistent with said constitution should remain in force until amended or repealed, leaving it as a conclusion that those not consistent do not remain in force.

In 2 O. S., 607, the supreme court, Thurman J., in referring to the constitution of 1851, says:

> "It follows, that all laws in force when the latter took effect, and which were not inconsistent with it would have remained in force without an express provision to that effect; and all inconsistent laws fell simply because they were inconsistent; in other words, all repugnant laws were repealed by implication."

The supreme court of Illinois, 60 Ill., 86, says:

"It must be presumed that the people who adopted the constitution understood the force of the language used * * *. When the act is prohibited by clear and unambiguous language of the constitution, the policy of such inhibition, or the inconvenience that may ensue from its enforcement, is a matter with which the court has no concern, its duty being faithfully to enforce it."

The same doctrine is laid down in Cooley on constitutional limitations, section 55. Chief justice Marshall in Gibbons vs. Ogdon, 9 Wheat, 188, says:

"The framers of the constitution and the people who adopted it must have been understood to have employed words, in their natural sense, and to have intended what they meant."

On page 92 of the above authority, the court in referring to the effect of the adoption of a new constitutional provision on a general subject says:

"If such an act would be unconstitutional if passed after the adoption of the constitution, because of the inconsistency with it, would not the same act be annulled by it, if in existence at the time of its adoption? This court has said it would."

I am, therefore, of the opinion that section 2235-1, if it had been passed since the taking effect of the new constitution, would be void; and that although it was on the statutes at the latter date, it was repealed by the express provisions of article II, section 41, aforesaid; and your board has no right to produce and sell through convict labor, the commodities mentioned, in the open market.

Yours very truly,
TIMOTHY S. HOGAN,
Attorney General.

ABSTRACT OF TITLE.

Deed from Pliny O. Van Fleet and others to Toledo state hospital.

COLUMBUS, OHIO, October 31, 1913.

The Ohio Board of Administration, Columbus, Ohio.

GENTLEMEN:—I beg to acknowledge receipt of abstract of title to, and deed from Pliny O. Van Fleet and others, heirs of Lucretia T. Van Fleet, to the Toledo state hospital for the following described premises:

Situate in the township of Adams, county of Lucas and state of Ohio, and known as being

"The west one-half (½) of the south one-half (½) of the southwest quarter (¼) of section number seventeen (17) in township number three (3) United States reserve of twelve miles square at the foot of the rapids of the Miami of Lake Erie containing forty (40) acres more or less."

I have carefully examined the abstract and while some defects in the early history of the title are apparent therefrom, I am of the opinion that the present owners have a good and sufficient title. However, there are some ambiguities which should be explained.

By the will of Lucretia Van Fleet, found on page 27 of the abstract, all of her property was devised to her children, among whom are mentioned William F. Van Fleet and Blanch Pennington. The deed is signed by William T. Van Fleet and Mary Blanche Pennington, among others, and an affidavit as to whether these two persons who signed the deed are the same as those named in the will should be attached to the abstract.

There are no uncancelled mortgages against said premises as disclosed by the abstract, except the mortgage given by Oscar White to James Buckingham, dated May 2, 1862. This, however, has been long since barred by the statute of limitation and is not now a lien.

A mortgage appears to have been given by Mary E. Pray to Norman Billings on July 17, 1909 on a part of the premises described in the caption. This mortgage was cancelled and my reason for calling attention to it is that the abstract does not disclose that Mary E. Pray was at any time a party to the title. If this is a mistake in copying the description, as stated in a letter from the superintendent of the state hospital, the abstract itself should be amended so as to show that fact. From what is before me, I cannot assume that the description of the real estate described in said mortgage, as shown by the abstract, is erroneous nor that said Mary E. Pray did not in fact have an interest in the land. If she did have any interest in the land, a quit claim deed from her should be obtained.

The taxes for the year 1912, according to certificate of the abstractor, have been paid but the taxes for the year 1913, amount undetermined, are listed as a lien.

The deed has a clause which in effect exempts the grantors from the payment of taxes and assessments due and payable after the date thereof. The lien of the taxes and assessments, the payment of which is sought to be avoided by the grantors, had attached at the time of the making of the deed and your board is without authority to exempt the grantors from the payment of such taxes by an agreement to assume the payment of the same. Before the purchase price is paid, the taxes for the year 1913 should be fully paid or an amount sufficient to pay the same should be deducted by your board from the purchase price.

No examination appears to have been made in the United States courts for pending suits or judgments against the grantors in said deed. In lieu of such examination, a certificate of the clerk of said court would be attached to abstract. The deed is given to the Toledo state hospital instead of the state of Ohio and it should be corrected in that respect. This can be done when the deed is rewritten for the purpose of eliminating the objectionable clause as to taxes.

Your attention is also called to the necessity of having an affidavit as required by section 2768, General Code, as amended in 102 O. L., p. 99, before the property can be transferred.

Subject only to the foregoing qualifications, I am of the opinion that the state of Ohio will, upon the correction of the deed and abstract in the particulars above mentioned, acquire a good title to said premises in fee simple.

The abstract and deed are herewith returned.

Very truly yours,
TIMOTHY S. HOGAN,
Attorney General.

AN EPILEPTIC CRIMINAL, NOT A RESIDENT OF THE STATE OF OHIO, SHOULD BE TAKEN CARE OF BY THE OHIO STATE BOARD OF ADMINISTRATION, AND SHOULD NOT BE CONFINED IN THE COUNTY JAIL.

In the matter of John Henry Robinson, an alleged criminal epileptic, now confined in the Hamilton county jail, and being a non-resident of Ohio, the probate court of Hamilton county should notify the Ohio state board of administration under section 1819. Then the board should proceed under section 1820, and if they find him to be a resident of some place in Kentucky, or other point outside of Ohio, they should order his transportation thereto, as provided in said section. If his residence cannot be determined, then he should be disposed of under section 1817, General Code.

COLUMBUS, OHIO, December 2, 1913.

The State Board of Administration, Columbus, Ohio.

GENTLEMEN:—In your letter of September 27, 1913, which is accompanied by considerable correspondence and exhibits, you ask what action your board should take with reference to John Henry Robinson, colored, an alleged criminal epileptic, now confined in the Hamilton county jail, awaiting disposition by the proper authorities?

It appears, from the facts submitted herein, that said Robinson has been an epileptic for over fourteen years. He was confined in the Eastern state hospital of Kentucky, from June 7, 1910, to April 19, 1912, when he was discharged as "improved." On September 25, 1913, he was brought before the probate court of Hamilton county, Ohio, as an epileptic. The report of the physicians shows he is a dangerous, malicious, criminal epileptic, with daily epileptic convulsions. He shot an officer, and is of low mental calibre. The court refused to commit him to the Ohio hospital for epileptics, because he had only been in Ohio a couple of months and was therefore a non-resident. He is further confined in the jail charged with shooting a police officer, with intent to kill. The prosecuting attorney of Hamilton county, where he is now confined, writes me as follows:

> "There is absolutely no evidence narrating this office prosecuting the case to trial, as it would be absolutely impossible to prove the necessary intent."

The prosecutor further says, that at the time Robinson committed the act, he had enough cocaine in him to kill ten ordinary men, and that he did not recover consciousness for three or four days. The prosecutor also says, that Robinson was "absolutely irresponsible for his act at the time he committed the crime, and did not know what he was doing."

I therefore conclude, from all the facts disclosed by the prosecuting attorney of Hamilton county, Ohio, that Robinson is an insane epileptic. It would be dangerous to turn him loose; and from his mental and physical condition he should not be sent to any penal or reformatory institution. The evidence before me shows that said Robinson, when confined in the Kentucky institution, was a resident of Girard county, in said state. The probate judge of Hamilton county, Ohio, has not lost jurisdiction of Robinson, and can notify your board of the true situation as shown by the facts set out above.

Section 1818, General Code, provides as follows:

> "When application to a judge of the probate court is made for the commitment of a person to a hospital for insane, a hospital for epileptics or the institution for the feeble minded, or whenever application to the superintendent of any other benevolent institution is made for the admission of a person thereto, such judge or superintendent shall require answers to the following questions:

"1. Where was the person born?

"2. When did he become a resident of this state?

"3. When did he become a resident of this county?

"4. If not a legal resident of state and county, on what ground is the application made?"

Section 1819, General Code, as amended in 103 O. L., 446, reads as follows:

"If the judge or superintendent finds that the person whose commitment or admission is requested has not a legal residence in this state, or his legal residence is in doubt or unknown, and is of the opinion that such person should be committed or admitted to such institution, he shall notify without delay the Ohio board of administration, giving his reasons for requesting commitment or admission."

Section 1820, General Code, as amended in 103 O. L., 446, reads as follows:

"The board of admistration by a committee, its secretary or such agent as it designates, shall investigate the legal residence of such person, and may send for persons and papers and administer oaths or affirmations in conducting such investigation. At any time after investigation is made, and before or after the admission or commitment to such institution, a non-resident person whose legal residence has been established, may be transported thereto at the expense of this state."

Robinson being an epileptic insane person, and a non-resident of Ohio, the probate court of Hamilton county should notify your board under section 1819. Then your board should proceed under section 1820; and if you find him to be a resident of some place in Kentucky, or other point outside of Ohio, you should order his transportation thereto, as provided in said section.

This is the shortest and most practical solution of the case. If he is not a legal resident of the state, and his residence cannot be ascertained, then he should be disposed of under section 1817, General Code, which reads as follows:

"A person not a legal resident of the state shall not be admitted to a benevolent institution, but, after investigation as hereinafter provided, the board of state charities may authorize the reception of such person into an institution, if the legal residence cannot be ascertained, or the peculiar circumstances of the case constitute, in their judgment, a sufficient reason therefor."

Whatever disposition is made of him should be done speedily, as the jail is not a proper place for an insane epileptic. It is demoralizing on the other imates. Possibly, correspondence with Kentucky authorities would result in their taking him back, without formal action on your part, as a matter of comity between states.

Yours very truly,

TIMOTHY S. HOGAN,

Attorney General.

INSANE PRISONERS TO BE MAINTAINED BY STATE—COUNTY FROM WHICH PRISONERS ARE RECEIVED NOT REQUIRED TO PROVIDE CLOTHING FOR SUCH PRISONERS.

Where a man sent to the penitentiary is later transferred to the Columbus state hospital as an insane prisoner, the state must pay the expenses of maintaining such insane prisoner at the state hospital. The provisions of section 1816, General Code, providing for the payment of bills for the support of inmates of hospitals for the insane by the county from which the person came, has no application in this case.

COLUMBUS, OHIO, November 18, 1913.

The Ohio Board of Administration, Columbus, Ohio.

GENTLEMEN:—In your letter of July 21, 1913, you say:

> "Your attention is respectfully called to the attached correspondence, the substance of which is as follows:
> "Chas A. Madder, a convict, was sent to the Columbus state hospital from the Ohio penitentiary and his papers state that he was from Seneca county. In accordance with section 1816, General Code, 1910, the managing officer of the Columbus state hospital sent to the auditor of Seneca county a bill for clothing furnished Madder. The same was referred to the prosecuting attorney of Seneca county, who writes that while Madder was sent to the penitentiary from Seneca county, he was a resident of Stark county and, consequently, Seneca county could not be expected to pay for his clothing.
> "Will you please render this department an opinion as to whether Madder should be considered as a resident of Stark county or of Seneca county, and, also, as to which county we should look to for payment for clothing furnished him."

I am of opinion that section 1816, General Code, has no application to Madder and that neither of the counties named in your letter is responsible for his clothing under the circumstances.

It is admitted that Madder was sent to the penitentiary from Seneca county and later transferred to the Columbus state hospital as an insane prisoner.

The Lima state hospital not being open to receive insane convicts, such prisoners are disposed of under sections 2222, et seq., General Code. Section 2222 provides that when a convict in the penitentiary becomes insane, the warden shall notify the physician, who shall forthwith examine him, and if the prisoner is found by him to be insane, he shall so certify to the warden, who shall forthwith confine the convict in the insane department of the penitentiary.

Section 2223 then provides that after the confinement of such convict in the insane department of the penitentiary, if it is necessary, and the superintendent of the Columbus state hospital and the penitentiary physician so certify, such insane prisoner may be removed to said state hospital and confined in the portion thereof set aside for such purpose.

Under section 2224, General Code, when the penitentiary physician or superintendent of the Columbus state hospital certifies to the warden of the penitentiary that a convict transferred from the penitentiary to the said hospital is restored so far to his proper mind that it is safe to put him at labor under his sentence, then said convict shall be returned to the penitentiary from said hospital and placed at labor under his sentence.

It will be seen that at all stages after being received at the penitentiary such a convict is subject to be conveyed thereto. He is in no sense an inmate of the state hospital, as others are, who are sent there directly from the various counties of the state through the probate courts. It follows then that the provisions of section 1816, General Code, which provide for the payment of bills for the support of inmates of hospitals for the insane by "the county from which the person came," have no application to the class of persons such as Madder. There is no provision in the statutes requiring counties from which such a convict was sent to pay for his clothing. Section 1815, General Code, provides that all persons admitted to, or who are inmates of benevolent institutions, shall be maintained at the expense of the state, except provision is made therefor in chapters relating to particular institutions. There being no special provision made, the state must pay under the general statute and the county is exempt.

Very truly yours,
TIMOTHY S. HOGAN,
Attorney General.

ABSTRACT OF TITLE.

Deed to state of Ohio from J. Wesley Phillips and Stella Phillips.

COLUMBUS, OHIO, December 15, 1913.

The Ohio Board of Administration, Columbus, Ohio.

GENTLEMEN:—I beg to acknowledge the receipt of your letter of December 9th, in which you enclose, for my examination and approval, abstract of title and deed to the state of Ohio from J. Wesley Phillips and Stella Phillips, for the following described real estate:

> "Situate in section 23, Gallipolis township, Gallia county, Ohio; being part of eight (8) acre lots numbers 1186 and 1187, section 23, township 3 and range 14 of the Ohio company's purchase, and bounded and described as follows:
> "Beginning at the southwest corner of eight acre lot No. 1187, and running thence north along the west line of said lot four hundred and ninety-five (495) feet, or to the center of the Mill Creek Road; thence with the center of said road north 50¾ degrees, east four hundred and sixty-two (462) feet; thence north 43½ degrees, east sixty-six (66) feet; thence north 9 degrees, east two hundred and thirty-five and one-half (235½) feet, or to the north line of said lot No. 1186; thence east with the north line of said lot two hundred and fifty-two and three-fourths (252¾) feet, or to the northeast corner thereof; thence south with the east line of said lots Nos. 1186 and 1187 seven hundred and eighty-four (784) feet, or to a point thirty (30) feet distant northwest from the center line of the main track of the Hocking Valley Railroad; thence along the northwesterly side of the Hocking Valley Railroad, south 53½ degrees, west, or parallel with and thirty (30) feet distant from the center line of the main track of said railroad, about four hundred and ninety-five (495) feet, or to the south line of said 8 acre lot No. 1187; thence west on the south line of said lot about two hundred and ninety-five (295) feet to the place of beginning and containing twelve (12) acres, be the same more or less."

I have carefully examined these documents and from such examination I find that the deed is properly signed, acknowledged and witnessed, and is sufficient in form to convey to the state of Ohio a fee simple title. However, I advise that before payment is made, the abstract be corrected in the following particulars, to wit:

"1. The interest of Sarah Moch, acquired by virtue of deeds shown at pages 17 and 18 of the abstract, does not appear to have been extinguished. If she is living, a quit claim deed should be obtained from her, and if she is dead such deed should be obtained from her legal heirs.

"2. The abstract does not disclose any connection of the Columbus, Hocking & Toledo Railway Co. with this title, prior to the time that deed was given by said company to Moses Moch, as shown at page 21 of the abstract. The abstract should be amplified so as to show how this corporation acquired title to the portion of the premises so sold by it to Moses Moch.

"3. An affidavit showing whether Francis Stewart, mentioned in the affidavit of Lillian Stewart as one of the heirs at law of R. L. Stewart, deceased, is the same person as F. R. Stewart who signed quit claim deed to J. Wesley Phillips, shown at page 30 of the abstract.

"4 The statement of the county treasurer of Gallia county, as to the unpaid taxes against this land, is indefinite and vague in that it does not disclose whether the amount mentioned represents taxes for the full year 1913, due December, 1913, and June, 1914. These are now a lien upon the land and should be discharged before deed is finally accepted and payment of the purchase money made.

"5. While action is probably barred by the statute of limitations on the mortgage for $750.00, given by Moses Moch to John T. Halliday, on November 22, 1884, as shown by the affidavit of J. E. Halliday, yet in order that there may be no question about it, we would prefer to have the mortgage released specifically, by the heirs of John T. Halliday.

"6. The mortgage from J. Wesley Phillips to Albert Moch, for $400.00, dated December 28, 1912, is a lien and should be discharged."

I am returning to you herewith the abstract for correction in the respects indicated above, and will retain the deed in my possession until abstract is returned and approved.

Yours very truly,
TIMOTHY S. HOGAN,
Attorney General.

PRISONERS—SENTENCE IMPOSED WHILST PRISONER IS AN INMATE OF PENITENTIARY COMMENCES AT EXPIRATION OF PRESENT TERM.

Under the rule of the common law, when it is not otherwise provided, a sentence of imprisonment commences with the date of incarceration and if the subject of the sentence is serving a term, such sentence imposed whilst serving such term will run concurrently with the term being served.

In Ohio, however, under sections 13601 and 13605, General Code, when a prisoner who is already serving a sentence in the penitentiary, receives a second sentence for another offense, the second sentence will not begin to run until the expiration of the term which the prisoner is presently serving.

COLUMBUS, OHIO, November 25, 1913.

HON. T. H. B. JONES, Warden Ohio State Penitentiary, Columbus, Ohio.

DEAR SIR:—In your letter of October 7th, you submit, for my opinion, the following state of facts:

> "No. 37363 was received at the Ohio penitentiary on January 15, 1907, from Belmont county, to serve three years for having in his possession burglar tools. On the 19th day of October, 1907, he was taken to the common pleas court of Franklin county for trial on another charge, and on the 25th day of October, 1907, he was sentenced by judge F. N. Bigger, to serve ten years in the Ohio penitentiary, and returned to this institution. The administration then in charge caused him to serve out his time on the first sentence, which expired on March 26, 1909, and then under a new number (39008) he began serving his ten year sentence, which will expire July 25th, 1915."

You desire to know whether the prisoner's sentence began on the day he was returned to the penitentiary, October 25, 1907, or whether said sentence would commence at the expiration of the first sentence.

It is a well settled rule that sentences need only state the duration and the place of imprisonment; it is not necessary to specify the time upon which the imprisonment is to commence.

12 Cyc., page 779, No. 76, is as follows:

> "Date of commencement of punishment. All sentences in criminal proceedings take effect and begin to operate from the date of their entry, unless a different date be fixed by the court in the judgment. Hence it is not necessary that the date when punishment begins shall be inserted in the judgment. Rhea vs. U. S., 6 Okla., 45, 43 Pac. 1072. See also Ex. p. Gafford, 25 Nev. 101, 57 Pac. 83 Am. St. Rep. 568."

The following is stated on page 967, 12th vol. Cyc.:

> "When term begins.—(1) In General. The general rule is that the term of imprisonment for which the convict is sentenced begins with the first day of actual incarceration in the prison to which his sentence has consigned him." And on page 968 of the same volume, the following statement is made:

"When terms are concurrent. In the absence of a statute, if it be not stated in either of two or more sentences imposed at the same time, that the imprisonment under any of them shall take effect at the expiration of the others, the periods of time named will run concurrently and the punishment be executed simultaneously. The fact that the terms of imprisonment are to be successive must be clearly and expressly stated."

In the case of ex parte, Gafford, 25 Nevada, 101, at page 103, the court said:

"Petitioner alleges that he is illegally restrained of his liberty by the warden of the state prison. It is shown that on the 26th day of January, 1895, the petitioner was duly sentenced by the district court of Washee county to serve a term of four years in said prison, for the crime of an attempt to break jail; second, that on the 5th day of May, 1895, the petitioner and one Seward Leeper, upon a joint indictment, trial and conviction for the crime of an assault with intent to kill, were jointly sentenced by said court to serve a term of seven years in said prison, that it was not specified when said second term should begin, and that the petitioner has fully served said first term.

"Council contends that the second sentence is void for uncertainty, in that it neither provides that the second term shall begin at the expiration of the first, nor at any other specified time. But a sentence which does not specify any time for imprisonment to commence is not void. The better practice is not to fix the commencement of the term, but merely to state its duration and the place of confinement, where the statute does not otherwise provide. (State vs. Smith, 10 Nev.; Bish. New Cr. Proc. 804, and cases cited).

"Where the defendant is already in execution on a former sentence, and the second sentence does not state that the term is to begin at the expiration of the former, the second will run concurrently with the first, in the absence of a statute providing a different rule. (21 Am. & Eng. Enc. Law, 1075, note 4).

From these authorities, the general rule of law is apparent that sentences of imprisonment must be definite and certain, and that when not otherwise definitely and certainly provided, the sentence will begin to run from the first day of incarceration in the prison to which sentence consigns the prisoner.

In Ohio, however, express legislation has been provided for the situation presented by you. I beg to refer you to sections 13601 and 13605, General Code, which are as follows:

"Section 13601. A convict in the penitentiary who escaped or forfeited his recognizance before receiving sentence for a felony or against whom an indictment is pending, may be removed to the county in which such conviction was had or such indictment was pending, for sentence or trial, upon the warrant of the court of such county. This section shall not extend to the removal of a convict for life, except the sentence to be imposed or the indictment pending against him, is for murder in the first degree.

"Section 13605. If such convict is acquitted, he shall be forthwith returned by the sheriff to the penitentiary to serve out the remainder of his term, but, if he is sentenced to imprisonment in the penitentiary, he shall forthwith be returned thereto by the sheriff and the term of such imprisonment shall begin at the expiration of the term for which he was imprisoned at the time of his removal. If he is sentenced to death, such sentence shall be executed as if he were not under sentence or imprisonment in the penitentiary."

From these statutes, which are a codification of sections 7234 and 7238, Revised Statutes, and which were in effect at the time the prisoner referred to was sentenced, it is clear that when a prisoner, confined in the penitentiary, against whom an indictment for felony is pending, is removed for trial upon such indictment, and he is sentenced to imprisonment in the penitentiary, the time of such imprisonment shall begin at the expiration of the term for which he is imprisoned at the time of his removal for trial. This provision clearly supersedes the rule of common law above stated.

I, therefore, conclude that the term of imprisonment, for which No. 39008, in this case, was sentenced by judge Bigger, will not run concurrently with the balance of the term which the prisoner was serving at the time of the second sentence, but will begin at the expiration of the first term as provided by section 13605, General Code.

Very truly yours,
TIMOTHY S. HOGAN,
Attorney General.

WHERE A PRISONER IS SENTENCED FOR TEN YEARS FOR BURGLARY AND SENTENCE IS SUSPENDED DURING GOOD BEHAVIOR AND HE IS AFTERWARDS SENTENCED FROM ANOTHER COUNTY FOR FIVE YEARS, AND THEN THE SENTENCE FOR TEN YEARS IS PUT INTO EFFECT, HE SHOULD BE CONSIDERED AS SERVING THE SENTENCES CONCURRENTLY AND BE RELEASED AT THE END OF THE TEN YEARS SENTENCE.

Cumulative sentences may be made in Ohio and also sentences may be made to commence in futura.

Where a prisoner had been sentenced from Licking county to serve ten years for burglary and the sentence is suspended during good behavior and the person is afterward convicted in Franklin county and sentenced five years for burglary and larceny, the sentence to begin at the expiration of the Licking county sentence, the said prisoner is serving the sentences concurrently if he is serving the Franklin county sentence at all and should be released when he has served the maximum time under the Licking county sentence.

COLUMBUS, OHIO, July 23, 1913.

HON. P. E. THOMAS, Warden, Ohio Penitentiary, Columbus, Ohio.

DEAR SIR:—Your communication dated May 10, 1913, in which you give the following statement of facts, duly received:

"On the 1st day of May, 1913, there was received at this institution one Theodore Hays, who was sentenced by the Franklin county common pleas court to serve 5 years in this institution for burglarizing an inhabited dwelling and larceny. Upon the certificate of sentence appeared the following:

" 'And it being made to appear to the court that the defendant is already under sentence for the crime of burglarizing an inhabited dwelling, it is ordered that the sentence herein imposed upon the said Theordore Hays shall begin at the expiration of a sentence of ten years to the Ohio penitentiary, imposed by the court of common pleas of Licking county upon the said defendant, Theodore Hays, on the 14th day of February, A. D., 1913, and suspended during good behavior.'

"On the day this prisoner was received, viz: May 1, 1913, we had received no official knowledge of any such sentence from the courts of Licking county and therefore disregarded the above order, which was impossible to carry out, and started the prisoner Hays upon the said five year sentence immediately.

"On the 5th day of May, 1913, we received a subpoena from the Licking county court, and in obedience thereto, on the 6th day of May, our deputy warden delivered the prisoner Hays before the court of that county, whereupon the former sentence, which had been suspended, was placed in course of operation by the following order of the court:

" 'This day came the prosecuting attorney, Howard Jones, on behalf of the state; also came the said Edward Fisher, alias Ted Hays, in custody of an officer, and it appearing to the court that the said defendant did on the 14th day of February, 1913, enter a plea of guilty to the charge of burglary, and the court sentenced him, the said Edward Fisher, alias Ted Hays, to serve ten years in the Ohio penitentiary and pay the costs of prosecution; and for good cause shown the court suspended the sentence on conditions that the said defendant conduct himself as a law abiding citizen, and refrain from the use of intoxicating liquors'.

" 'It now appearing to the court that the said Edward Fisher, alias Ted Hays, has grossly violated the conditions of the suspension of his said sentence, the court orders that the suspension thereof be, and the same is hereby revoked, and the said defendant is ordered to be taken forthwith to the Ohio penitentiary to begin his former sentence of ten years'.

"When the prisoner Hays was returned to the penitentiary, on the evening of the 6th day of May, with certificate of sentence and the above order, we thought it our duty to have the ten year Licking county sentence begin on the 6th of May and run concurrently with the balance of the Franklin county sentence, which had commenced on the 1st of May.

"Query: In view of all the facts as above stated will you kindly advise me if we have acted correctly in this matter?"

I desire to say in answer to your inquiry that it must be conceded that in this state cumulative sentences may be made, and that sentence may be pronounced to commence in futura. This is clearly recognized in Williams vs. State, 18 O. S., 47.

Sentences, whether they commence at once or in the future, must be definite and certain. The sentence of the Franklin county court provides as follows:

"And it being made to appear to the court that the defendant is already under sentence for the crime of burglarizing an inhabited dwelling, it is ordered that the sentence herein imposed upon the said Theodore Hays shall begin at the expiration of a sentence of ten years to the Ohio penitentiary, imposed by the court of common pleas of Licking county upon the said defendant, Theodore Hays, on the 14th day of February, A. D., and suspended during good behavior."

From this it will appear, (1) that Hays was already under sentence for burglarizing an inhabited dwelling; (2) said sentence was suspended during good behavior; (3) that if said Hay's crime was properly described there was no power in the court to suspend under the provisions of section 13708, General Code; (4) that the term of Hays was to commence at the expiration of a suspended sentence; (5) that jurisdiction of the suspended sentence was in Licking county, Ohio, and, (6) that the ten-year term could not commence until its suspenslon was set aside, and this involved the action of the Licking county court upon information and the production of Hays before that court.

The commencement of the five year term, fixed by the court of Franklin county, Ohio, was without any degree of certainty at all, and in fact could not have been fixed at the time the Franklin county court imposed the same. I think the case of Williams vs. State, 18 O. S., 47, fully sustains this proposition and leaves it an open question as to whether Hays should be returned to the Franklin county court and resentenced or should be left to serve both terms concurrently as stated in your letter.

I am of the opinion that the prisoner should be left as you have him, and that your action in the premises is correct, as I doubt the right of the state to ask for a re-sentence, and as Hays is not injured by the construction given, and action taken, he will not be heard to complain.

I am, therefore, of the opinion that your action is correct and that the said prisoner is serving the sentences concurrently if he is serving on the Franklin county sentence at all, and as soon as he has served the maximum time under the Licking county sentence it will be your duty to discharge him.

Yours very truly,
TIMOTHY S. HOGAN,
Attorney General.

WHERE PRISONER IS PAROLED FROM THE PENITENTIARY AND HE IS AFTERWARDS SENTENCED ON ANOTHER CHARGE AND HIS PAROL IS REVOKED, THE LAST SENTENCE BEGINS AT THE EXPIRATION OF THE FIRST SENTENCE.

Where a prisoner is sentenced to the penitentiary for life, under the habitual criminal act, the right of parole is a part of the sentence and there is no legislative authority to take this right of parole away.

If this be true, section 2175, General Code, controls cases where prisoner is released on parole and afterwards sentenced on another charge. The last sentence would begin at the expiration of the first sentence.

COLUMBUS, OHIO, August 11, 1913.

HON. P. E. THOMAS, Warden Ohio Penitentiary, Columbus, Ohio.

DEAR SIR:—I have your letter of August 8th in which you state:

> "That one Addis Lewis was sentenced to the penitentiary for life under the habitual criminal act; that Governor Herrick commuted his life sentence to twenty years; that on February 20, 1906, he was released on parole. The Parole was revoked October 11, 1906, and on December 5, 1906, he was sentenced to the Ohio penitentiary for ten years from Pickaway county for forgery."

Your queries are:

> "The habitual criminal act having been repealed May 6, 1902, was there power to parole him on February 20, 1906, and should the ten year sentence commence with the expiration of the twenty year sentence, or be served concurrently with it?"

By the terms of the habitual criminal act, an habitual criminal was subject to parole. Lewis' sentence was for life, subject to such right of parole. The commutation by the governor could not place him in the category of a prisoner to whom a parole might be granted after serving the minimum term, consequently the question is whether the repeal of the habitual criminal act deprived Lewis of his right to a parole.

This raises a question of far-reaching effect and of the greatest importance, and while there is no saving clause in the repealing act, and there is no doubt of the power of the legislature to make the repeal, yet there is grave doubt as to its being effective to deprive Lewis of a right which was his under his sentence.

This does not raise the question as to whether the repeal was retroactive, but merely the power of the legislature to deprive Lewis of his right to parole.

In my opinion the right to a parole, as found in section 2 of the habitual criminal act, must be read into and made part of the sentence for life, and that there was no legislative power to take it away.

If this view be correct, section 2175, General Code, is applicable, and the Pick-away term commences with the expiration of the twenty year sentence. If it is not correct, then the parole was without authority, but inasmuch as it was given at Lewis' request, and he accepted it, he will not be heard to question its legality and his mouth is closed as to the validity of the parole, and the result is the same.

The question as to when the first term expires must be determined under the rules controlling other cases.

Yours very truly,
TIMOTHY S. HOHAN,
Attorney General.

THE INDETERMINATE SENTENCE LAW RELATES TO ALL SENTENCES IMPOSED BY THE COURT AFTER THE INDETERMINATE SENTENCE LAW WENT INTO EFFECT.

The indeterminate sentence law, found in volume 103, Ohio Laws, 29, was filed in the office of the secretary of state February 27, 1913, and was effective on the 29th day of May, 1913.

Any person sentenced on or after the 29th day of May, 1913, except those found guilty of treason or murder in the first degree, shall receive an indeterminate sentence.

COLUMBUS, OHIO, September 26, 1913.

HON. P. E. THOMAS, Warden Ohio State Penitentiary, Columbus, Ohio.

DEAR SIR:—In your letter of August 28, 1913, you inquire when the law as to indeterminate sentences to your institution became effective. This law, volume 103, O. L., page 29, was filed in the office of the secretary of state February 27, 1913.

This law was passed since the new constitution became effective. The time when laws are operative under the new constitution is expressed in article II, section 1-c, as follows:

"No law passed by the general assembly shall go into effect until ninety days after it shall have been filed by the governor in the office of the secretary of state."

It only remains then to compute the time according to the statutes. Section 10216, General Code, says:

"Unless otherwise specifically provided, the time within which an act is required by law to be done shall be computed by excluding the first day, and including the last; except that the last shall be excluded if it be Sunday."

Section 10217, General Code, says:

"When an act is to take effect, or become effective, from and after a day named (in the new constitution in this case), no part of that day shall be included."

Under the above rules, the law was effective on the 29th day of May, 1913, at any time after midnight of the 28th.

You also ask if the date of sentence governs, as to whether a man is to be committed definitely or indefinitely, regardless of the date of his conviction; and whether, when persons are sentenced for a definite number of years, after the above indeterminate sentence law was in effect, they should be entered on your records as indeterminates, regardless of the date of their conviction.

Section 166, General Code, above referred to, says:

"Courts imposing sentences to the Ohio penitentiary for felonies, except treason, and murder in the first degree, shall make them general and not fixed or limited in their duration."

The latter part of the section says:

"If through oversight or otherwise, a sentence to the Ohio penitentiary should be for a definite term, it shall not thereby become void, but the person so sentenced shall be subject to the liabilities of this chapter, and receive the benefits thereof, as if he had been sentenced in the manner required by this section."

In view of the fact that this statute relates only to the sentence, the court should impose an indeterminate one, and you should enter such persons in your records as indeterminates, if sentenced after the above section was in force.

Yours very truly,
TIMOTHY S. HOGAN,
Attorney General.

THE CLERK OF COURT UNDER THE NEW INDETERMINATE SENTENCE LAW IS REQUIRED TO FURNISH THE DOCUMENTS AND INFORMATION PROVIDED FOR IN SECTION 13697, GENERAL CODE, TO THE WARDEN OF THE PENITENTIARY.

It is the duty of the clerk of court under section 13697, General Code, to furnish the documents and information provided for in the said section in the cases of prisoners sentenced under the new indeterminate sentence law upon demand to the warden of the penitentiary.

COLUMBUS, OHIO, November 24, 1913.

HON. P. E. THOMAS, Warden Ohio Penitentiary, Columbus, Ohio.

DEAR SIR:—Under date of October 20th, you inquire as follows:

"Is the clerk of court of various counties required, upon demand by me, to furnish the documents and information provided for in section 13697 of the General Code, in cases of prisoners sentenced under the provisions of the new Indeterminate Sentence Law (103 O. L. p. 29)?"

The original indeterminate sentence law (Bates R. S. 7388-6 and 7388-7) conferred on the courts the power to impose a "general sentence to the penitentiary" and prescribed the powers and duties of the board of managers of the penitentiary, and the duty of the clerk of courts when said general sentence had been imposed.

These sections read as follows:

"Section 7388-6. Every sentence to the penitentiary of a person hereafter convicted of a felony, except for murder in the second degree, who has not previously been convicted of a felony and served a term in a penal institution, may be, if the court having said case thinks it right and proper, a general sentence of imprisonment in the penitentiary. The term of such imprisonment of any person so convicted and sentenced may be terminated by the board of managers, as authorized by this act; but such imprisonment shall not exceed the maximum term provided by law for the crime of which the prisoner was convicted and sentenced; and no such prisoner shall be released until after he shall have served at least the minimum term provided by law for the crime of which he was convicted. Provided, that any person now serving a sentence in the penitentiary, or that may hereafter be sentenced to the penitentiary for two or more separate offenses, where the term of imprisonment for a second or further term is ordered by the court to begin at the expiration of the first and each succeeding term of sentence named in the warrant of commitment, shall be entitled to have his succeeding term or terms of imprisonment terminated by the board of managers, as provided by law, at the expiration of the first term of sentence named in said warrant of commitment, without serving the minimum term as herein provided under more than one of said sentences."

"Section 7388-7. Every clerk of any court by which a criminal shall be sentenced to said institution, whenever the term of such sentence may not be fixed by the court, shall furnish the warden or other officer having such criminal in charge, a record containing a copy of the indictment and of any special plea; the name and residence of the judge presiding at the trial; also of the jurors and of the witnesses sworn on the trial; with a statement of any fact or facts which the presiding judge may deem important or necessary for the full comprehension of the case; and of his reasons for the sentence inflicted. The clerk of the court shall be entitled to such compensation in every case in which he shall perform the duties required by this act, as shall be certified to be just by the presiding judge at the trial, and shall be paid by the county in which the trial is had, as part of the court expenses. The clerk shall, also, upon any such conviction and sentence, forthwith transmit to the warden of the penitentiary notice thereof."

The codifying commission in writing the present General Code carried into it that part of the indeterminate sentence law relating to the powers and duties of the board of managers, and that section prescribing the duties of the clerk of courts when such sentences were imposed, but failed to write into the code that part of the law conferring power on the courts to impose such general or indeterminate sentences.

The two sections carried into the code by the commission, are now known as sections 2160 and 13697, and read as follows:

"Section 2160. The board of managers shall provide for the conditional or absolute release of prisoners under a general sentence of imprisonment, and their arrest and return to custody within the penitentiary. A prisoner shall not be released, conditionally or absolutely, unless in the judgment of the managers there are reasonable grounds to believe that his release is not incompatible with the welfare of society. A petition or application for the release of a prisoner shall be entertained by the board. A prisoner under general sentence to the penitentiary shall not be released therefrom until he has served the maximum term provided by law for the crime of which he was convicted; and he shall not be kept in the penitentiary beyond the maximum term provided by law for such offense.

"Section 13697. The clerk of a court by which a criminal has been sentenced to the penitentiary, if the term of such sentence is not fixed by the court, shall furnish the warden a record containing a copy of the indictment and of any special plea, the name and residence of the judge presiding at the trial and of the jurors and witnesses sworn on the trial, with a statement of any fact or facts which the presiding judge may deem necessary for the full comprehension of the case together with his reasons for inflicting the sentence. The clerk shall be entitled to such compensation for such record as the presiding judge certifies to be just and shall be paid by the county wherein the trial was held. Upon such sentence the clerk shall forthwith transmit to the warden of the penitentiary a notice thereof."

On March 31, 1913, I rendered an opinion to the Ohio board of administration, the substance of which was that, inasmuch as the codifying commission carried into the General Code as section 13697 all of section 7388-7, R. S., relative to the clerk's duties when indeterminate sentences have been imposed, and also carried into the General Code as section 2160, that part of section 7388-6 R. S., relative to the powers and duties of the board of managers when such indeterminate sentences have been imposed, it was not the intention of the legislature to deprive the court of the power to give an indeterminate sentence; that such power was still in the courts of this state, and that sections 7388-6 and 7388-7 R. S., were in effect in their entirety.

But, aside from this opinion, now that the legislature has seen fit in 103 O. L., p. 89, to again confer on the courts the power to impose indeterminate sentences to the penitentiary, the clerk of courts finds himself in the same position as before the codification was made, and it is his duty under section 13697 of the General Code, when indeterminate sentences have been imposed to furnish the warden of the Ohio penitentiary such information as such section requires.

Very truly yours,
TIMOTHY S. HOGAN,
Attorney General.

SECTION 2166, OF THE GENERAL CODE, CONFERRED UPON THE BOARD OF ADMINISTRATION POWER TO PAROLE PRISONERS AT THE END OF THEIR FIRST TERM WHEN THEY ARE SERVING MORE THAN ONE TERM CONSECUTIVELY. UPON REPEAL OF THIS SECTION THE BOARD IS WITHOUT SUCH AUTHORITY.

Under section 2166, General Code, the Ohio board of administration had power to parole prisoners at the expiration of their first term, when they were sentenced to two or more terms running consecutively. Said section was subject to repeal by the legislature, and upon its repeal the board is without authority to parole such prisoners, notwithstanding such section was in full force and effect at the time sentence was imposed.

COLUMBUS, OHIO, December 1, 1913.

HON. P. E. THOMAS, Warden Ohio Penitentiary, Columbus, Ohio.

DEAR SIR:—I have your letter of October 20th, in which you inquire substantially as follows:

> "Did section 2166 of the General Code confer authority on the Ohio board of administration to parole prisoners at the expiration of their first term when they were sentenced to two or more terms running consecutively?"
> "And if so, does the repeal of said section by the 'indeterminate sentence law' (103 O. L. 129) deprive such prisoner sentenced when said section was in operation, of the right to a parole thereunder at this time?"

Section 2166 of the General Code reads as follows:

> "A person serving a sentence in the penitentiary, or hereafter sentenced thereto for two or more separate offenses, where the term of imprisonment for a second or further term is ordered by the court to begin at the expiration of the first and each succeeding term of sentence named in the warrant of commitment, shall have his succeeding term or terms of imprisonment terminated by the board of managers, as provided by law, at the expiration of the first term of sentence named in such warrant, without serving the minimum term under more than one of such sentences."

In answering your first question, I am of the opinion that the Ohio board of administration, which succeeded to the powers and duties of the board of managers of the penitentiary, had authority under this section to parole prisoners serving two or more terms consecutively at the expiration of the first term.

Your second inquiry, however, raises a more difficult question. The supreme court of this state, in re Kline, 70 O. S. p. 25, held that a conviction and sentence under section 7388-11 R. S., commonly known as the "Habitual Criminal Act," does not confer upon the prisoner the right to be paroled at the discretion of the board of managers, which remains to him after repeal of said act. This court construed a parole statute as merely a "disciplinary regulation" and said:

> "As a disciplinary regulation it would no more confer a vested right upon the prisoner than would any other rule or regulation which may be promulgated from time to time for the regulation of prisons and prisoners. It is not an essential part of the prisoner's sentence, and in its very nature and object it is subject to modification or repeal. And for the reason that it is not a part of the sentence, but extraneous to it, because it is only a tentative rule for prison government, a repeal of such legislation neither takes away any right of the prisoner nor in any manner affects his sentence theretofore made and put into execution."

While the case just quoted was qualified to some extent in State vs. Lawrence, 74 O. S., 43, the holding in the latter case in no way affects the question under consideration here, and I am of the opinion that section 2166 conferring authority on the board to parole certain prisoners was subject to repeal by the legislature, and upon such repeal the board is without authority to parole such prisoners, notwithstanding such section was in full force and effect at the time of sentence.

This opinion modifies one rendered to you under date of September 26, 1913, in re Addis Lewis, but does not affect the conclusion arrived at in that opinion.

Very truly yours,
TIMOTHY S. HOGAN,
Attorney General.

THE COURT IS WITHOUT AUTHORITY TO SUSPEND A PART OF A SENTENCE IMPOSED UPON A PERSON FOUND GUILTY OF A FELONY.

Where the court sentences a prisoner to be confined in the Ohio penitentiary for a period of two years at hard labor, and the court, upon further consideration, suspends one year of the sentence and directs that after the prisoner has served one year, less the time that may be allowed for good behavior, the suspension of the balance of the sentence shall take effect. The court is without authority to pass sentence of this kind, and the prisoner must serve his sentence of two years subject to any clemency that may be extended by the board of administration or the governor.

COLUMBUS, OHIO, November 17, 1913.

HON. P. E. THOMAS, Warden Ohio Penitentiary, Columbus, Ohio.

DEAR SIR:—In your letter of November 8, 1913, you request my opinion as follows:

> "I should like your opinion as to when Mita Eremich, No. 41991, who was committed to this institution under the following certificate of sentence, should be released?
> "The regular form of certificate of sentence is filled out, stating that he was indicted for stabbing with intent to wound, and having entered a plea of guilty of stabbing with intent to wound, it is therefore the sentence of the court that he be imprisoned in the penitentiary of this state, and kept at hard labor (no part of said time to be kept in solitary confinement) for the term of two years and that he pay the costs of the prosecution, etc.

"Immediately below this, on a type-written sheet, pasted to the certificate of sentence, appears the following:

"It is the sentence of the court that the defendent be taken hence to the jail of this county and there safely kept, and that within five days he be taken to the Ohio state penitentiary at Columbus, Ohio, there to be imprisoned for the period of two years at hard labor, but no part of said sentence to be solitary confinement, and that he pay the costs of this prosecution, for which judgment is hereby rendered against him.

"Upon further consideration, the court suspends the execution of one year of the aforesaid sentence, and directs that after the defendant has served one year, less the time that may be allowed for good behaviour, the said suspension of the balance of said sentence shall at once take effect; providing the defendant conducts himself while so imprisoned as to obey fully all the rules and regulations of said Ohio state penitentiary.

"It is a further condition of this suspension, that upon the defendant leaving said penitentiary, he shall absolutely refrain from using intoxicating liquors or visiting places where intoxicating liquors are sold or handled, and that he live generally a sober and industrious life, and obey fully the laws of the state of Ohio.

"It is further provided, that during the time of said suspension said defendant shall be under the supervision of the penitentiary authorities.

"Will you therefore kindly advise if it is my duty to discharge said Mita Eremich after he has served the short time under a one-year sentence, under the provisions of said certificate of sentence, and place him on parole during the remainder of his two-year sentence?"

In the absence of statutes to the contrary, courts imposing sentences have the power to suspend them. In this state, however, the legislature has provided, in section 13706 of the General Code, how and when sentences may be suspended, and the courts of this state in suspending sentences are restricted by such provisions. This section reads as follows:

"In prosecutions for crime, except as hereinafter provided, where the defendant has pleaded or been found guilty, and the court or magistrate has power to sentence such defendant to be confined in or committed to the penitentiary, the reformatory, a jail, workhouse, or correctional institution, and the defendant has never before been imprisoned for crime, either in this state or elsewhere, and it appears to the satisfaction of the court or magistrate that the character of the defendant and circumstances of the case are such that he is not likely again to engage in an offensive course of conduct, and that the public good does not demand or require that he shall suffer the penalty imposed by law, such court or magistrate may suspend the execution of the sentence and place the defendant on probation in the manner provided by law."

When a prisoner has been sentenced to the Ohio penitentiary and the sentence has been suspended, the effect of this section is to place him on probation under the control of the Ohio board of administration, as provided in section 2210 of the General Code, which reads:

"When a sentence to the penitentiary or to the reformatory has been imposed, but execution thereof has been suspended, and the defendant placed on probation, the effect of such order of probation shall be to place the defendant under control of the management of the board of managers of the institution to which he is sentenced. and he, shall be subject to the same rules and regulations as apply to persons paroled from such institutions."

In the case under consideration, the court did not see fit to suspend the sentence and place the defendant under the control of the Ohio board of administration, but sentenced the prisoner to two years in the Ohio penitentiary, with the additional order that after the short time on a year's sentence should expire the remainder of the sentence should be suspended provided the prisoner's conduct be good, and upon the condition that he refrain from the use of intoxicating liquor during the remaining year.

This, I am of the opinion, the court was without authority to do.

The constitution of the state, and various sections of the General Code, delegate to the governor the power to grant pardons and commutations of sentences, and section 2169 of the General Code authorizes the Ohio board of administration to parole prisoners after they have served the minimum term provided by law for the crime of which they were convicted.

This, I think, clearly shows that it was the intention of the legislature that if a prisoner in the penitentiary should so conduct himself there as to deserve clemency, this clemency should be granted him at the hands of the governor or parole board. In other words, I believe the prisoner's conduct record in the penitentiary is to be considered by the prison authorities and the governor and not by the trial judge at the time of sentence.

Admitting, then, that the court had no authority to suspend the latter half of the prisoner's sentence conditional upon his good conduct in prison, the question is what effect, if any, had the additional order of the court with reference to the suspension of the latter half of the sentence, upon the two-year sentence first imposed?

The court, without question, had authority to impose the two-year sentence but for reasons stated above, the second part of the sentence attempting to suspend the second year of imprisonment, was void.

It has often been held, that where a sentence imposed is valid in part and void in part, the void portion should not necessarily, or generally, vitiate the valid portion. See United States vs. Pridgeon, 153 U. S., 48 (38 L., ed. 631).

For this reason, therefore, I am of the opinion that the prisoner, Mita Elemich, must serve the sentence of two years, subject of course, to any clemency that may be extended by the Ohio board of administration or the governor.

Very truly yours,
TIMOTHY S. HOGAN,
Attorney General.

ABSTRACT OF TITLE—PROPERTY OF J. C. BELT, SITUATED IN CLINTON TOWNSHIP, FRANKLIN COUNTY, OHIO.

COLUMBUS, OHIO, July 31, 1913.

HON. CARL E. STEEB, Secretary, Board of Trustees, Ohio State University, Columbus, Ohio.

DEAR SIR:—I beg to acknowledge receipt of abstract of title to lands owned by J. C. Belt, which the trustees of the Ohio state university desire to purchase. Description of said land as given in the deed from Minnie Matlack and husband to J. C. Belt on page 89, is as follows:

> "Situated in the county of Franklin, in the state of Ohio, and in the township of Clinton, bounded and described as follows, to wit:
> "Being in quarter township three (3), township one (1), range nineteen (19), United States military lands. Beginning at the intersection of Lane avenue and the Fleniken pike; thence north eighty-five degrees (85 deg.) thirty-five minutes (35″) west along the center of Lane avenue thirty-eight hundred and eighty-three feet (3883 ft.) to a stone in the center of the township road; thence south three degrees (3 deg.) thirty minutes (30″) west along the center of said township road and the Fairview Free Pike four hundred and sixty-four feet (464 ft.); thence south eighty-five degrees (85 deg.) thirty-five minutes (35″) east eleven hundred and fifty-nine feet (1159 ft.) to a stone; thence south three degrees (3 deg.) twenty-five minutes (25″) west six hundred and seventy-nine feet (679 ft.) to a point; thence south four degrees (4 deg.) thirty-five minutes (35″) west one hundred seventy-one and five-tenths feet (171.5 ft.) to an iron pipe; thence south eighty-five degrees (85 deg.) thirty-five minutes (35″) west one hundred seventy-one and five-tenths feet (171.5 ft. to an iron pipe, thence south eighty-five degrees (85 deg.) thirty-five minutes (35″) west twenty-seven hundred eleven and seven tenths feet (2711.7 ft.) to the center of the Fleniken Pike; thence north four degrees (4 deg.) fifteen minutes (15″) east thirteen hundred fourteen and five tenths feet (1314.5 ft.) to the beginning, containing ninety-three and eighty-six hundredths acres (93.86 acres) of land more or less, excepting seventeen and twenty hundredths (17.20) acres of land heretofore sold by grantors, leaving to be conveyed by this deed a balance or remainder of 76.76 acres more or less."

The part of the aforesaid description which is underscored is a repetition and should be omitted from the deed to be made to the university.

It will be observed that said deed calls for 93.86 acres, except 17.20 acres of land theretofore sold by the grantors therein. The description of such tracts as were previously sold are found on pages 73, 74 and 78 of the abstract and should be incorporated in the deed as an exception to the general description of the 93 acre tract.

No examination appears to have been made of the United States court records to determine the existence or non-existence of pending suits or judgments in said court against the present owner of said premises. A certificate of the clerk of said court as to these matters should be attached to the abstract.

No liens of any character against said premises are disclosed by the abstract except a certain mortgage for $8,500.00 from Minnie Matlack and husband to the Buckeye State Building and Loan Company (page 83), the last half of the 1912 taxes amounting to $40.36, the undetermined taxes for the year 1913 and the unpaid portion of a special assessment for the improvement of North Star avenue.

Upon the discharge of the aforesaid liens and the execution and delivery of a proper warranty deed, I am of the opinion that the university will acquire a good and marketable title to said real estate in fee simple.

The abstract is herewith enclosed.

Yours very truly,
TIMOTHY S. HOGAN,
Attorney General.

ABSTRACT OF TITLE—PROPERTY OF HENRY HANSBERGER, SITUATED IN CLINTON TOWNSHIP, FRANKLIN COUNTY, OHIO.

COLUMBUS, OHIO, July 31, 1913.

HON. CARL E. STEEB, Secretary, Board of Trustees, Ohio State University, Columbus Ohio.

DEAR SIR:—I beg to acknowledge receipt of abstract of title to land owned by Henry Hansberger, which the trustees of Ohio State University desire to purchase described as follows:

> "Situated in the county of Franklin, in the state of Ohio, and township of Clinton.
> "Being lot No. 2 as the same appears upon the plat marked exhibit 'A' attached to the report of the commissioners in partition and as described in their report in the case of Lucy T. Nyers, plaintiff, against Minnie Matlack and others, defendants, court of common pleas, Franklin county, Ohio, and numbered on the dockets of said court 46847, and recorded in the complete records of said case, volume 253, page 408, et seq. to which case, plat report and the records thereof, reference is here made and more fully bounded and described as follows: Situated in and being a part of Quarter township 3, township 1, range 18, I. S. M. lands in Clinton township, Franklin county, Ohio, beginning at a point at the center of Fleniken Pike; south 4 deg., 15″; west 1314.5 feet from the intersection of Lane Ave. and said Fleniken Pike; thence north 85 deg., 35″; west 2711.7 feet to an iron pipe; thence south 4 deg., 35″; west 1209 feet to an iron pipe; thence south 85 deg., 35″; east 2720 feet to a point in the center of Fleniken Pike; thence north 4 deg., 15″; east along the center of Fleniken Pike, 1209 feet to the place of beginning, containing 75.38 acres more or less."

A careful examination of said abstract discloses the existence of several ambiguities and omissions, to which I desire to direct your attention.

The deed of conveyance from John Huffman to Charles W. Hess (page 12) purports to be for the same premises described in transfer No. 12, page 10.

Reference to the latter shows that the property was acquired by Joseph Huffman from Washington Lakin. The abstract of title to the piece of property owned by J. C. Belt, which I have examined and which covers part of the same promises included in this abstract, shows that the deed for said tract was from Joseph Huffman to Hess (see page 32, abstract of Belt property).

Belson A. Sims and Westley O'Harra do not appear to have had title to the land conveyed by them to Ephraim Sells (page 25). This is also true of Margaret Shrum et al., grantors in No. 28. This abstract shows no title in William Tepper and wife for the premises conveyed by them to Ephraim Sells (page 26). However, the Belt abstract at page 38 thereof, shows that Tepper acquired title from Charles W. Hess.

The proceeding leading up to the execution of the sheriff's deed on page 37 are not abstracted and it is impossible to learn the nature thereof, the names of the parties thereto or the description of the land sold, except by reference to page 20 of the Belt abstract. The latter discloses that said proceedings were for the foreclosure of mortgages and marshalling liens, and that the premises were sold to Ephraim Sells. The abstract should be amplified so as to supply the aforesaid omissions.

No examination appears to have been made of the United States court records to determine the existence or non-existence of pending suits or judgments in said court against the present owner of said premises. A certificate of the clerk of said court as to these matters should be attached to the abstract.

No liens of any character against said premises are disclosed by the abstract except the last half of the 1912 taxes ($40.40), the undetermined taxes for the year 1913 and the unpaid portion of a special assessment for the improvement of North Star Avenue.

Upon the correction of the abstract as above indicated, the payment of said liens and the execution and delivery of a proper warranty deed, I am of the opinion that the university will acquire a good and marketable title to said real estate in fee simple.

Said abstract is herewith enclosed.

Yours very truly,

TIMOTHY S. HOGAN,

Attorney General.

ABSTRACT OF TITLE—PROPERTY OF ELI DUNKLE SITUATED IN ATHENS COUNTY.

COLUMBUS, OHIO, May 6, 1913.

HON. DR. ALSTON ELLIS, President Ohio University, Athens, Ohio.

DEAR SIR:—You have submitted to me for approval, an abstract of title of Eli Dunkle, for the following described real estate, which the president and trustees of Ohio university propose to purchase, situated in the city of Athens, county of Athens and state of Ohio, to wit:

> "Beginning six (6) feet north and five (5) feet west of the southeast corner of in-lot number four-hundred and fifty-six (456) in the city of Athens; thence running north fifty-four (54) feet; thence west to the west line of in-lot number four hundred and fifty-seven (457); thence south to a point ten (10) feet south of the southwest corner of said in-lot number four hundred and fifty-seven (457); thence south eighty-five and one-half (85½) degrees east 138 feet to the place of beginning."

A careful examination of said abstract discloses that the warranty in the deed from Jane Hibbard to Eli Dunkle (page 26) is made subject to a promissory note for $200.00 executed by said Dunkle to said Jane Hibbard. This claim should be released of record.

The second half of the 1912 taxes are unpaid, and the undetermined taxes for the year 1913 are a lien against said premises. On the discharge of said liens and the execution and delivery of a proper warranty deed, the president and trustees of the Ohio university will acquire a good and sufficient title to said premises, in fee simple.

Very truly yours,
TIMOTHY S. HOGAN,
Attorney General.

ABSTRACT OF TITLE—PROPERTY OF GEORGE R. WALKER, SITUATED IN ATHENS COUNTY.

COLUMBUS, OHIO, May 6, 1913.

HON. DR. ALSTON ELLIS, President Ohio University, Athens, Ohio.

DEAR SIR:—You have submitted to me for approval an abstract of title and warranty deed from George R. Walker for the following described real estate which Ohio university proposes to purchase, situated in the city of Athens, county of Athens state of Ohio, to wit:

> "Beginning sixty (60) feet north and five (5) feet west of the south-east corner of in-lot number four hundred and fifty-six; (456) thence running north fifty (50) feet; thence west parallel with the north line of said in-lot to the west line thereof; thence south on the west line of said in-lot number four hundred and fifty-six (456), fifty (50) feet to the northwest corner of Eli Dunkle's lot; thence east on the north line of said Eli Dunkle's lot to the place of beginning."

A careful examination of said deed and abstract discloses no liens or incumbrances against said premises, except the second half of the 1912 taxes, due June 20, 1913, and the undetermined taxes for the year 1913.

Upon the discharge of said liens and the execution and delivery of the deed from George R. Walker, the president and trustees of Ohio university will acquire a good and sufficient title to said premises in fee simple.

Very truly yours,
TIMOTHY S. HOGAN,
Attorney General.

ABSTRACT OF TITLE—PROPERTY OF HATTIE J. BURSON, SITUATED IN ATHENS COUNTY.

COLUMBUS, OHIO, May 6, 1913.

DR. ALSTON ELLIS, President Ohio University, Athens, Ohio.

DEAR SIR:—You have submitted to me for approval an abstract of title and warranty deed from Hattie J. Burson and husband, to the president and trustees of Ohio university, for the following described real estate, situated in the city of Athens county of Athens, state of Ohio, to wit:

"Beginning twenty-five (25) feet west of the southeast corner of in-lot numbered sixty-four (64) and thence running west, forty-three (43) feet; thence north, one hundred and thirty-two (132) feet, more or less, to the north line of said in-lot numbered sixty-four (64); thence east, forty-three (43) feet; thence south, one hundred and thirty-two (132) feet, more or less, to the place of beginning."

A careful examination of said deed and abstract discloses no liens or incumbrances against said premises except the second half of the 1912 taxes, due June 20, 1913, and the undetermined taxes for the year 1913.

Upon the discharge of said liens and the delivery of said deed, the president and trustees of Ohio university will acquire a good and sufficient title to said premises in fee simple.

Very truly yours,
TIMOTHY S. HOGAN,
Attorney General.

COLUMBUS, OHIO, July 3, 1913.

HON. ALSTON ELLIS, President of Ohio University, Athens, Ohio.

DEAR SIR:—I have your favors of May 26 and 29, 1913, in which you call my attention to a recent appropriation by the legislature to Ohio University in the sum of $15,000, for the completion of an electric light plant, and in which you ask my opinion as to the expenditure of the appropriation which you state is special for the purpose named. You further say:

> "Auditor Donahey writes me that the appropriation is not subject to referendum, and so is available for present use. However, he is in doubt as to whether we are not under the provisions of the general Code, which provides the manner in which public officers must proceed in the erection of public buildings. We have no building to put up, but finally ready to complete lighting extensions that are now half put in. My wish is to use that $15,000 just like we use our appropriation for buildings and grounds, and for apparatus and equipment; for as I see the matter, the cases are exactly the same. If we advertise for the work and give it to one bidder, we shall be delayed in getting our plant, and in addition to that, we will loose about $3,000 in the matter of construction. Our people here are prepared to do all the necessary work, and all that we would have to do would be to make purchase of the different kinds of apparatus needed to put it in place. Of course, in buying this apparatus, we should solicit bids, but no one piece we require would cost more than the legal limit for such purchases We have all the boilers that are required. Further, we have most of the conduits already laid, and many of them already wired, so that is just a statement of the facts, as our purpose is to use the $15,000 for putting in some appliances at the power house, extending a few conduits, and placing the proper wires in them. All this is preliminary to my asking definite information as to what we can do in the matter, taking it for granted that the statements I have made herein are absolutely correct."

The money referred to in the above inquiry is an appropriation for Ohio University, made by the legislature in house bill No. 674, April 28, 1913, and which reads as follows:

> "Completion of electric light plant, $15,000."

Section 7925, General Code, makes provision for the support of this institution by annual tax levy; states the rate of taxation therefor, and further provides as follows:

> "This levy shall not hereafter be increased, but this shall not prevent such appropriations from time to time, as may be necessary, for apparatus for university purposes, exclusive of buildings."

Section 2314, General Code, provides as follows:

"Before entering into contracts for the erection, alteration or improvement of a state institution or building or addition thereto, excepting the penitentiary, or for the supply of materials therefor, the aggregate cost of which exceeds three thousand dollars, each officer, board, or other authority by law, charged with the supervision thereof, shall make or cause to be made, the following: Full and accurate plans, showing all necessary details of the work, with working plans suitable for the use of mechanics and other builders in such construction, so drawn and represented as to be plain and easily understood; accurate bills showing the exact amount of different kinds of material necessary to the construction to accompany such plans; full and complete specifications of the work to be performed, showing the manner and style required, with such directions as will enable a competent mechanic or other builder to carry them out, and afford bidders all needful information; a full and accurate estimate of each item of expense and of the aggregate cost thereof."

Section 2315, General Code, provides that the plans, specifications, etc., shall be submitted to the governor, auditor of state and secretary of state, for approval Sections 2316 and 2317, General Code, provide for the giving of public notice of the time and place for the reception of sealed proposals from bidders on the work to be done.
Section 2318, General Code, provides as follows:

"On the day named in the notice, such officer, board or other authority, shall open the proposals and award the contract to the lower bidder. No proposals shall be considered unless accompanied by a bond from the bidder, with sufficient sureties, conditioned that, if accepted, the bidder will enter into and faithfully perform a proper contract in accordance with the proposal, plans, specifications and descriptions which shall be made a part thereof. The contract shall not be binding on the state until submitted to the attorney general and he certifies thereon that he finds it to be in accordance with the provisions of the chapter."

I assume it is not questioned but Ohio university is a state institution, and the buildings thereof are public buildings within the provisions of section 2314, and that the question for determination here is whether the purpose calling for this appropriation, and for which it is to be expended, in an improvement or addition to a state institution or building within the provisions of this section requiring contracts therefor to be made on competitive proposals or bids as provided for therein, and in the succeeding sections above noted.

It appears that the erection of a building for, and as a part of, the electric light plant, is not called for, but the vital question is whether the conduits, material and appliances to be furnished in the expenditure of this appropriation do not, when installed, become such a component and permanent part of the buildings and realty of this institution as to constitute an improvement or addition thereto. The appropriation is for the completion of an "electric light plant" and these words in themselves, in the connection in which they are used, carry some import to the point that the appropriation is for a permanent improvement. Moreover, I take it, the conduits to be laid and the material and appliances to be furnished and installed are, for the most part to be so constructed, fixed and adjusted as to become fixtures and a part of the buildings and realty. This being true, it seems impossible to escape the conclusion that the installation of an electric light plant is an improvment to this institution and the buildings thereof. The above observations are based on the facts stated in your inquiry. I note however, that by act of the general assembly, April 30, 1910, Ohio university received an appropriation, the terms of the act awarding the appropriation reading as follows:

> "Four central heating plants, with facilities for electric lighting and power, $20,000.00."

It can be assumed consistent with the facts stated in your inquiry, that the plant to be completed is the plant for which the appropriation just noted was made.

Section 2343, General Code, formerly section 795, Revised Statutes, provides:

> "When it becomes necessary for the commissioners of a county to erect or cause to be erected, a public building, * * * or an addition to or alteration thereof, before entering into any contract therefor or repair thereof, or for the supply of any materials therefor, they, the commissioners, shall cause full and accurate plans and specifications preliminary to the reception of bids for such work."

Under this section, in circuit court of Crawford county, in the case of State, ex rel., vs. Commissioners, 17 C. C., 370, held as follows:

> "When the necessary machinery, pipes, radiators and appliances, constituting a steam heating plant, is erected in a public building, and is so securely fastened to and connected with the building, as when completed, to form a part of it, such steam heating plant is 'an addition to such building' within the meaning of section 795, Rev. Stat., and the construction of such plant by the commissioners is governed and controlled by the provisions of that section."

The court in its opinion says:

> "Counsel for respondents urges that this particular contract for the erection of a steam heating plant, is not included or covered by the provisions of the section just quoted, as not being a building, an addition or alteration of a building, and therefore, there is no requirement that the contract for its construction be let at public or competitive bidding. The suggestion is not warded by the facts, and is wholly untenable as a legal proposition. The steam heating plant is of such character, and is attached to the building in such manner and for such purpose, that it becomes a part of it, and so included and referred to in the section as 'an addition to a building' and the letting of a contract for its construction is governed by the provisions of the section."

In the case of State, ex rel., vs. Commissioners of Butler county, 18 C. C., 275, where one of the questions involved was whether the construction of an elevator in a court house was an addition thereto, within the meaning of this section, the court says:

> "It seems clear to us, that if the putting in of this elevator into the court house is an addition or repair thereof, that the commissioners, by the terms of this section, must advertise as provided in the section, if the estimated cost is over $1,000.00, as was the case here. And it seems equally clear to us that the improvement in question was an addition to, or an alteration of, the court house. It is evident from the proposals submitted and the specifications of the character of the work to be done, and what it would be when completed and attached to the building, that it would be a part thereof—certainly a fixture, and would pass with the realty. We see no reason whatever for likening it to articles of furniture, purely personal property, as to which the claim is that any amount may be purchased at private sale by the commissioners, which is doubtful. On this ground alone we would be of the opinion that the commissioners should be perpetually enjoined from carrying out this alleged contract."

On the considerations above noted it is plain that were this appropriation and the expenditures thereof for the construction or ercetion of a complete electric light plant in buildings already erected, the same would constitute an improvement and addition within the meaning of section 2314. Nor am I able to see that the completion of an unfinished plant calling for the expenditure of the sum of money carried by this appropriation presents a question any different in kind. The question as I see it is not one as to furnishing equipment which is to be and remain personal property, but one as to the erection or installation of a plant or system which becomes a component and permanent part of a state institution in its physical aspect as including its ground and buildings as well as the buildings themselves. If, on the considerations before noted, the erection of an electric light plant at this institution is an improvement and addition thereto and to the buildings thereof, the completion of an unfinished plant is no less such.

You state that in buying apparatus needed in the completion of the plant, it was your intention to solicit bids, but no one piece that you would require would cost more than the legal limit for such purchases. As to this, it is to be noted that the purpose calling for this appropriation was one single and entire, to wit: the completion of an electric light plant, and it would be a violation of the spirit of the sections before noted applicable to the consideration of this question, to separate the money called for by this appropriation and the items of material needed in the completion of the plant into amounts less than $3,000.00 for the purpose of avoiding the competitive bidding required by these sections.

Lancaster vs. Miller, 58 O. S., 558, 573.
Wing vs. Cleveland, 15 Bull. 50.

I have no reason to take issue with your contention that this work can be done more advantageously and economically on the plan suggested and desired by you, but such considerations can have no bearing on the question submitted for my determination, to wit, whether the purpose of this appropriation is within the sections noted and by them controlled.

These statutes were enacted on a consideration of a well defined purpose, looking to the protection of the state in the erection of its public buildings and improvements, and they are not to be set aside in any particular instance on considerations of convenience or even assumed or real advantage.

I am of the opinion, therefore, that the expenditure of the money called for by this appropriation, comes within the requirements of sections 2314-2318, and succeeding sections, providing for the advertisement for and reception of proposals or bids, and providing for the execution of the contract entered into on the bid or proposal accepted.

Very truly yours,
TIMOTHY S. HOGAN,
Attorney General.

ABSTRACT OF TITLE—PROPERTY SITUATED IN ATHENS, OHIO.

COLUMBUS, OHIO, June 12, 1913.

DR. ALSTON ELLIS, President, Ohio University, Athens, Ohio.

DEAR SIR:—I acknowledge the receipt of the abstract of title and warranty deed rom Louis Clark Moore and wife, to the president and trustees of the Ohio University, for the following described real estate, to wit:

> "Situated in the city of Athens, county of Athens and state of Ohio, and known as being ten feet (10 ft.) off of the south side of inlot numbered 52 in said city, excepting all the stone coal under said ten feet, (10 ft.); also sixty feet (60 ft.) off of the north side of inlot numbered 53 in said city."

A careful examination of said abstract discloses no liens or incumbrances against said premises except the undetermined taxes for the year 1913. The deed is duly signed and acknowledged by Louis Clark Moore and wife.

Subject to the foregoing liens, I am of the opinion that the grantees in said deed will acquire thereby a good and sufficient title to said premises, in fee simple.

Very truly yours,
TIMOTHY S. HOGAN,
Attorney General.

ABSTRACT OF TITLE—PROPERTY SITUATED IN ATHENS COUNTY, OHIO.

COLUMBUS, OHIO, July, 12, 1913.

DR. ALSTON ELLIS, President, Ohio University, Athens, Ohio.

DEAR SIR:—You have this day submitted to me for examination and approval an abstract of title to, and deed from Clinton L. Poston and wife, to the president and trustees of Ohio University, for the following described real estate situated in the city of Athens, county of Athens and state of Ohio, to wit:

> "First Tract. Beginning at the southwest corner of outlot number thirty-one (31) in said city, and thence running east four and fifty-five hundredths (4.55) chains to within fifty (50) feet of the middle of the Baltimore & Ohio Southwestern Railroad; thence north sixteen degrees (16 deg.); east, parallel with, and fifty (50) feet from the middle of said railroad, one and sixty-seven hundredths (1.67) chains; thence west five (5.00) chains; thence south one and forty hundredths (1.40) chains to the place of beginning, containing sixty-seven hundredths (0.67) of an acre, more or less, and being the same premises conveyed to Jane Root by Eliakim H. Moore, by his deed dated October 14, 1896, and recorded in deed book 77, at page 271 of record of deeds in said county.
> "Second Tract. Beginning at the southwest corner of out-lot number thirty-two (32) in said city, and thence running north twenty and one half degrees (20½ deg.); west, one and fifty-three hundredths (1.53) chains; thence east five and sixty-four hundredths (5.64) chains; thence south one and forty hundredths (1.40) chains to the southeast corner of said out-lot number thirty-two (32); thence west five (5.00) chains to the place of beginning, containing eighty hundredths (0.80) of an acre, more or less.

"Third Tract. Beginning at the northwest corner of out-lot number thirty-three (33) in said city, and thence running south one and thirty-eight hundredths (1.38) chains; thence east five (5.00) chains to the east line of said out-lot number thirty-three (33); thence north one and thirty-eight hundredths (1.38) chains to the northeast corner thereof; thence west five (5.00) chains to the place of beginning and containing seventy-two hundredths (0.72) of an acre, more or less.

"Fourth Tract. Beginning at the northwest corner of out-lot number thirty-three (33), and thence running south one and thirty-three hundredths (1.33) chains; thence west two chains (2.00) to the west line of out-lot number one hundred and eighty-seven (187); thence north one and eighty-one hundredths (1.81) chains; thence east one and eighty hundredths (1.80) chains to the east line of said out-lot number one hundred and eighty-seven (187); thence south twenty and one-half (20½ deg.) degrees; east, fifty-five (55) links to the place of beginning, containing thirty-six hundredths (0.36) of an acre, more or less, being a part of out-lot number one hundred and eighty-seven (187) in said city, and also being the same premises deeded to Jane Root by Johnson H. Welch and wife, by their deed dated December 17, 1857, and recorded in deed book 77, at page 270 of record of deeds in said county.

"Fifth Tract. Beginning at the southwest corner of out-lot number thirty-two (32) in said city, and thence running north twenty and one-half (20½) degrees; west, one and fifty-three hundredths (1.53) chains; thence thence west twenty-one (21) links; thence south twenty and one-half (20½) degrees; east, two and eight hundredths (2.08) chains; thence west twenty (20) links to the east line of out-lot number one hundred and eighty-seven (187); thence south twenty and one-half (20½) degrees; east, fifty-five (55) links to the northwest corner of out-lot number thirty-three (33); thence east five (5.00) chains to the northeast corner of said out-lot number thirty-three (33); thence north fifty (50) links; thence east four and forty hundredths (4.40) chains to within fifty (50) feet of the middle of the Baltimore & Ohio Southwestern Railroad; thence north sixteen (16) degrees; east, parallel with and fifty (50) feet from the middle of said railroad; fifty-one (51) links to the south line of out-lot number thirty-one (31); thence west along the south lines of out-lots numbered thirty-one (31) and thirty-two (32), nine and fifty-five (9.55) hundredths chains to the place of beginning, containing eighty hundredths (0.80) of an acre, more or less, and being out-lot numbered two hundred and nine (209) in said city."

I have made a careful examination of said abstract and as a result of such examination I find that no liens or incumbrances against said premises are disclosed by the abstract except the second half of the 1912 taxes, due June 20, 1913, and the undetermined taxes for the year 1913. No examination appears to have been made of the records of the United States court and I would suggest that a certificate of the Clerk of said court, as to the existence or non-existence of judgments against the present owner of said property and liens against the same, be attached to the abstract. The deed from C. L. Poston and wife to the president and trustees of the university is duly signed and acknowledged and is in proper form, and I am of the opinion that upon the discharge of the above mentioned liens, the grantee will acquire by said deed, a good and sufficient title to said premises in fee simple.

Very truly yours,

OHIO UNIVERSITY—BOARD OF TRUSTEES MAY NOT APPROPRIATE PRIVATE PROPERTY BY CONDEMNATION PROCEEDINGS—STATE NORMAL COLLEGE.

The board of trustees of the Ohio university have no right under the statutes of Ohio to appropriate private property by condemnation proceedings for the needs of the university or of the state normal college.

COLUMBUS, OHIO, July 19, 1913.

HON. ALSTON ELLIS, President of the Board of Trustees of Ohio University, Athens, Ohio.

DEAR SIR:—Your favor of July 14, 1913, is received in which you inquire:

> "Has the board of trustees of Ohio university the right to condemn property in a case such as has been instanced—or in any case? If the trustees of the university, as such, have not such power, have they not as trustees of the state normal college established by legislative act passed in 1902?"

You call attention to the appropriations of money made at the last session of the legislature to construct a building for the agricultural department and the domestic science department of the state normal college. You state that the trustees of Ohio university have purchased a lot, prepared plans and have let a contract to construct such building. Also that the lot selected for the site of the building is not of sufficient size because of the provisions of the building code, and that you desire to purchase additional ground adjoining this lot but that you are unable to agree with the owner as to the price.

The right to appropriate private property for public purposes is a power which exists in the sovereign state under its right of eminent domain. The exercise of this right is given to various political subdivisions and to private corporations by the legislature. Such acts are necessary in order to authorize the exercise of such right and they are strictly construed.

The rule is stated in 15 Cyc. at page 567:

> "Inasmuch as the right of eminent domain is one which lies dormant in the state unless legislative action is had pointing out the occasion, mode, conditions, and agencies for its exercise, the right to exercise the power must be conferred by statute, either in express words or by necessary implication. The power should not be gathered from doubtful inferences, but should be unmistakably expressed.
> "The power of eminent domain being in derogation of the common right, acts conferring it are to be strictly construed, and are not to be extended beyond their plain provisions. The right to exercise the power is strictly limited to the purposes specified in the statute conferring it."

The Ohio university was made a body corporate by act in second Ohio Laws, page 193, under the name of "The President and Trustees of the Ohio University."

Section 2 of said act provided:

> "And be it further enacted, that there shall be and forever remain in the said university, a body politic and corporate, by the name and style of 'The President and Trustees of the Ohio University,' which body politic and corporate shall consist of the governor of the state (for the time being), the president, and not more than fifteen nor less than ten trustees, to be appointed as hereinafter provided."

This act did not grant to the trustees of the university the right to condemn property. The reason therefor is apparent. By virtue of section 11 of the act the land of two townships was vested in the trustees for the purposes of the university.

By virtue of section 16 of said act the trustees were authorized to reserve land sufficient for the buildings of the university.

Said section 16, read:

"And be it further enacted, that the said corporation shall have full power from time to time to contract for and cause to erect such building or buildings as they shall deem necessary, for the accomodation of the president, professors, tutors, pupils and servants, of said university; as also, to procure the necessary books and apparatus, for the use of said university, and shall cause payment therefor to be made out of the funds of the university, and shall reserve such lot or lots in said town of Athens, as they deem necessary for the purposes aforesaid, and for the erection of buildings for the use of the town and county."

You call attention to the provisions of the act establishing a state normal school at the Ohio university. This act is now known as sections 7897 to 7901, inclusive, of the General Code.

Section 7897, General Code, provides:

"There are hereby created and established two state normal schools to be located as follows: One in connection with the Ohio university, at Athens, and one in connection with the Miami university, at Oxford.

Section 7898, General Code, provides:

"Boards of trustees of such universities shall maintain at their respective institutions a normal school which shall be co-ordinate with existing courses of instruction, and be maintained in such a state of efficiency as to provide proper theoretical and practical training for all students desiring to prepare themselves for the work of teaching. Such normal schools in each case shall be under the general charge and management of the respective boards of trustees of such universities."

This act does not authorize the trustees of Ohio university to appropriate private property for the purposes of the normal school.

The appropriations of money for the proposed building are made for the Ohio university, Athens, Ohio.

In 103 Ohio Laws, 622, the appropriation is made as follows:

"Building for agricultural department and the domestic science department of the state normal college; cost not to exceed $90,000.00 . . . $25,000.00."

Also on page 643 of 103 Ohio Laws:

"Building for the agricultural department and the domestic science department of the state normal college; cost not to exceed $90,000.00 . . . $65,000 00."

No reference is made in these appropriations as to the purchase of any real estate.

I find no direct or specific authority of statute granting to the trustees of the Ohio University the right to appropriate private property, either for the university or for the normal college.

Section 1807, General Code, provides:

> "When, in the judgment of the board of trustees or managers of a state benevolent, correctional or penal institution, it is necessary for such institution or for the accomplishment of the purposes for which it was organized, or is being conducted, to acquire any real estate, right of way or easement in real estate, and the board is unable to agree with the owner or owners thereof upon the price to be paid therefor, it may appropriate such property in the manner hereinafter provided."

The Ohio university is not a correctional or penal institution. If it comes within the provisions of this section it must be because it may be classed as a benevolent institution.

I find no legal definition of the term "benevolent institution" which fits the present situation.

In Dunham vs. Kauffman, 10 Nisi Prius, N. S., 49, it is held:

> "An organization whose main purpose is to prmote the temporal, moral or intellectual uplift of others, without pecuniary reward to itself or its promoters, is a benevolent organization within the meaning of the statute authorizing benevolent and charitable institutions to consolidate."

On page 51, Rogers, J., says:

> "Benevolence does not merely consist in feeding the hungry and clothing the poor. It has a broader significance where the religious and moral needs of humanity are involved. Without going into a detailed discussion of what a benevolent society is, I am satisfied that whatever organization has for its main purpose the lending of a hand to promote the spiritual, intellectual and moral uplift of others, whether it be its members, without pecuniary reward to the society or its promoters, is a benevolent organization, and certainly these two organizations come within that definition, and the connection that they do not come within the statute, in my opinion, is not sound."

The statutes under consideration in this case are sections 10033, et seq., General Code, and the phrase "benevolent or charitable association" is used throughout the statutes. This signifies that the words "benevolent" and "charitable" are similar in meaning. The two organizations involved in the above case were the Women's Educational and Industrial Union and the Young Women's Christian Association.

Loomis, J., says, on page 71 in case of Adye vs. Smith, 44 Conn. 60:

> "While it is true that there is no charitable purpose which is not also a benevolent purpose, yet the converse is not equally true, for there may be a benevolent purpose which is not charitable, in the legal sense of the term."

In case of Chamberlain vs. Stearns, 111 Mass., 267, Gray, J., says:

> "The word 'benevolent,' of itself, without anything in the context to qualify or restrict its ordinary meaning, clearly includes not only purposes which are deemed charitable by a court of equity, but also any acts dictated by kindness, good will or a disposition to do good, the objects of which have no relation to the promotion of education, learning or religion, the relief of the needy, the sick or the afflicted, the support of public works or the relief of public burdens, and cannot be deemed charitable in the technical and legal sense."

In case of Norris vs. Thomson's Executors, 19 N. J. Eq., 307, the Chancellor, says on page 313:

"The word benevolent is certainly more indefinite and of far wider range than charitable or religious; it would include all gifts prompted by good will or kind feeling towards the recipient, whether an object of charity or not. The natural and usual meaning of the word would so extend it. It has no legal meaning, separate from its usual meaning. The word 'charitable' has acquired a settled limited meaning in law, which confines it within known limits.

From these definitions it appears that the word "benevolent" is a broader term than the word "charitable." That the term "benevolent" includes all purposes that are charitable and others which are not considered as charitable in the legal meaning of that term.

Education is considered as a charity, in the legal sense, not only in this country but in England as well.

In Gerke vs. Purcell, 25 Ohio St., 229, it is held:

"A charity, in a legal sense, includes not only gifts for the benefit of the poor, but endowments for the advancement of learning, or institutions for the encouragement of science and art, without any particular reference to the poor."

White, J., says on page 243:

"The meaning of the word 'charity,' in its legal sense, is different from the signification which it ordinarily bears. In its legal sense it includes not only gifts for the benefit of the poor, but endowments for the advancement of learning, or institutions for the encouragement of science and art, and, it is said, for any other useful and public purpose. 3 Steph. Com. 229.

"The maintenance of a school is a charity. Gifts for the following purposes have been declared to be charities: For schools of learning, free schools, and scholars of universities; ....."

The work of education as promoted by the Ohio University would not be considered a charity in the common meaning of that term, but in its legal meaning the Ohio University is engaged in promoting a public charity, to wit—the education of youth.

It may be urged that as the term "benevolent" applies to all things which are embraced by the word "charitable" in its legal sense, that therefore the Ohio University, as an educational institution may also be termed as a charitable institution and is therefore a benevolent institution.

The Ohio university is no doubt doing a work of benevolence in the broad meaning of that term. That is, it is promoting "the intellectual and moral uplift of others."

In what sense is the term "benevolent institution" used in section 1807, General Code, supra? Does it apply to all institutions that are doing a work of benevolence, or does it apply to those institutions which are doing a work of charity in the common meaning of that term?

The intent of the legislature may be found by an examination of the history of section 1807, General Code, and by the manner in which benevolent institutions and educational institutions have been treated and classified in the different divisions of he statutes.

The provisions now found in sections 1807, 1808 and 1809, General Code, were first enacted by act of March 30, 1875, as shown in 72 Ohio laws, 148. Under this act the power of appropriation was given to the board of trustees of "any of the benevolent institutions organized and conducted under the laws of the state."

This act did not refer to correctional or penal institutions, nor was it placed under any particular heading or title of the statutes. It was carried into the revised statutes of 1880, as section 623 and placed in title V of part I, which title was headed "Benevolent institutions." It was amended in 92 Ohio laws, 343, to read the board of trustees "of any benevolent institution of the state."

It remained under the above heading until the passage of the General Code, wherein title V of part I was headed, "State Institutions," and correctional and penal institutions were included in the terms of the statute, and these institutions were also placed under title V.

The various benevolent institutions of the state were treated in the revised statutes under said title V. They included, under separate chapters, the board of state charities, the institutions for the deaf and dumb, for the blind, for feeble minded youth, soldiers and sailors home, the boy's and girl's industrial homes and similar institutions.

Educational institutions, schools, colleges, and universities were placed under a separate title and part of the statutes. Benevolent institutions were considered under the part of the statutes classified as political, and schools and colleges under the part classified as civil.

It is apparent from these classifications and divisions of the statutes that the legislature did not mean to include educational institutions in the term "benevolent institution" as used in section 1807, General Code. It has been seen that statutes conferring the right to exercise the power of eminent domain are strictly construed and it would require a liberal construction of this act in order to have it include educational institutions.

Special provision of statute is made to authorize boards of education to appropriate private property. The trustees of Ohio university were not granted that power by the act by which it was organized or by the act establishing a normal college at that university.

The term "benevolent institution," therefore, as found in section 1807, General Code, does not include educational institutions, such as colleges and universities.

In any event another feature of the statutes would make section 1807, General Code, unavailable at the present time, in your case.

Section 1809, General Code, provides:

> "Upon the adoption of the resolution, application may be made by the board in its name to the court of common pleas or probate court of the county wherein the property is located, for the appropriation of the property or easement. Such property may be appropriated, appeals taken, and error prosecuted in all respects as provided for the appropriation of private property by municipal corporations. No such proceedings may be instituted unless sufficient money has been appropriated by the general assembly for the purpose of acquiring such real estate, right of way or easement."

It does not appear that sufficient money "has been appropriated by the general assembly for the purpose of acquiring such real estate." The money appropriated is for the construction of the building and not for the purchase of real estate.

I am of the opinion, therefore, that the board of trustees of Ohio university have no right, under the statutes of Ohio, to appropriate property by condemnation proceedings, for the needs of the university of the state normal college.

Respectfully,

TIMOTHY S. HOGAN,

Attorney General.

A MEMBER OF THE BOARD OF TRUSTEES OF WILBERFORCE UNIVERSITY WHO ACTS AS SECRETARY MAY NOT RECEIVE COMPENSATION FOR SUCH WORK.

Where a member of the board of trustees of Wilberforce university acts as secretary for the board, he may not receive compensation for such work, although an appropriation has been made by the legislature for the purpose of compensating him for his extra work.

COLUMBUS, OHIO, November 5, 1913.

HON. B. F. STEWART, Secretary C. N. & I. board, Wilberforce university, Norwalk, Ohio.

DEAR SIR:—I have your letter of July 15, 1913, as follows:

"On May 22, 1913, I was appointed by the governor of Ohio, as one of the trustees of the C. N. & I. board, Wilberforce university, Wilberforce, Ohio. On July 14, 1913, I was elected secretary of the above named board.

"The duties of the secretary are to keep a record of the business transactions of said board at its regular and special meetimgs. In addition to said duties of the regular and special meetings, said secretary has, on or about the 15th of each and every month, requiring from one to two days, to examine all bills of expenses and salaries, certifying to the correction thereof, of the C. N. & I. schools, and to sign all warrants for the payment of said expenses and salaries.

"Being a member of the said trustee board, the law governing the same does not provide any compensation for said trustees other than the traveling and necessary expenses to and from their place of residence to Wilberforce, Ohio, the place of meeting of said board.

"The last legislature made an appropriation of $750.00 for salaries of secretary and trustee expenses section 103 O. L., 623). The question is whether the said secretary is entitled to compensation out of said appropriation for the said additional and necessary duties. Does the fact that said secretary, being also a member of the trustee board, bar him from compensation for necessary work done outside of the regular and special meetings of said board, inasmuch as there is an appropriation for the salary of a secretary and expenses of the trustee board."

In reply to which I desire to say:

The appropriation to which you call attention is in the following language:

"Wilberforce university."

* * * * * * * * * *

"Salary of Secretary and trustees' expenses.....$750

* * * * * * * * * *."

Section 7980, General Code, reads in part:

"The trustees shall receive no compensation, but shall be reimbursed their traveling and other reasonable and necessary expenses out of the appropriations under this subdivision of this chapter."

The board of trustees may select one of their own number to act as secretary of the board cannot be questioned, but when it comes to fixing his compensation as secretary, a very different question is presented, as it involves the right of the secretary, as a member of the board, to vote on the matter of his own salary.

It has been held:

> "Contracts entered into between a board of gas trustees of a municipality and an incorporated company, when a member of the board of gas trustees is at the same time an officer and personally interested in the incorporated company, are against public policy and void."

(Coblet Co., vs. City of Findlay, 5 C. C., 418, 5th Syl.)

That this, as a proposition of law cannot be questioned, must be conceded by all.

The reasoning of Seney, J., on pages 429 and 430, in disposing of this quetion, is neither as clear nor as satisfactory as the 5th paragraph of the Syllabus above copied.

That a member of the board of trustees may not act in a matter in which he is personally interested is too well established to call for authority to support it. In some cases his action is void; in others voidable merely; in others criminal, but in none may he reap an advantage from his position and action in connection therewith. The fact that he does not act, and leaves the matter to his co-trustees, who constitute a quorum of the board, does not aid the matter, nor change the situation; the result is the same.

That the secretary performs duties for which he should be paid is clear, but the question here presented is whether a member of the board, who must serve as such without compensation, may be selected as secretary and recover compensation as such, merely because an appropriation has been made to pay a secretary. I find that similar appropriations have been heretofore made, and while they clearly evince a legislative intention that the board of trustees of the Wilberforce university should have a secretary, and that he should be paid for his services, yet, I cannot conclude that such board is authorized to select one of their number to so act and pay him, in the absence of express authority to do so.

The reason for this conclusion is that as an individual, he will endeavor to get not only the job, but the highest attainable compensation, while as trustee it is his duty to secure the best secretary at the lowest price. A disposition has been shown in many courts of late years to look at results merely, and where a trustee did not act in a matter in which he had an interest, or his vote was not essential to the result, to leave the matter stand unless some undue or unreasonable advantage was obtained. I believe the old rule to be the better, and that the strongest statement yet made and applicable to the situation is that the true doctrine does not rest upon wrong done or advantage gained, but as stated by one of the great English chancellors upon that older principle of—"Lead us not into temptation."

Very truly yours,
TIMOTHY S. HOGAN,
Attorney General.

A CORRIDOR MAY BE CONSTRUCTED AS A PART OF A BUILDING FOR SCIENCE AT BOWLING GREEN NORMAL SCHOOL AND PAID FOR FROM THE APPROPRIATION FOR THIS BUILDING—LABORATORY FIXTURES THAT ARE PERMANENTLY ATTACHED TO THE BUILDING MAY BE PAID FOR FROM THE APPROPRIATION MADE FOR THE CONSTRUCTION OF THE BUILDING.

1. A part of the appropriation made for the construction of a building for science and agriculture at the Bowling Green normal school may be used for the construction of a corridor, this corridor to be a part of this building.

2. All laboratory fixtures that are permanently attached to the science building should be made a part of the plans and specifications for such building. Bids for such furnishings should be asked for as part of the entire bid for construction of the building.

COLUMBUS, OHIO, October 14, 1913.

HON. H. B. WILLIAMS, President of Bowling Green Normal School, New York City, N. Y.

DEAR SIR:—In reply to your request of recent date in which you inquire:

"The undersigned, having advisory power under the law in determining building plans for the Bowling Green state normal college, and having been especially directed by the board of trustees to approve the plans and specifications for a building for science and agriculture for which there is an appropriation of $100,000; $50,000 in 1913 and $50,000 in 1914, respectfully requests an opinion on the following questions:

"1. Can any part of this appropriation be used for the construction of a connecting corridor between the administration building and the science building, provided the plans for such corridor are made a part of the plans for the latter building?

By way of explanation, permit me to say that the general building scheme contemplates the erection of three buildings for instruction purposes, viz.: the administration building, a building for science and agriculture, and a building for combined purposes of a library and practice school. The plans for the administration building, which is now under construction, provide for locker rooms for both sexes. It is proposed to connect the administration and science buildings by an enclosed corridor and to eliminate locker rooms from the plans for the latter. It will be necessary also to build a tunnel between these buildings to carry the heating mains, and it is found that these two connecting features can be constructed at the same time at a saving of considerable expense.

"2. Can any part of this appropriation be used for the installation of laboratory fixtures such as standard students' and instructors' tables for the teaching of agriculture, biology, physics, and chemistry, if such equipment is connected with the general plumbing or wiring of the building?

"3. If, in your opinion, part of this appropriation can be used for the purposes mentioned in question 2, must the plans for each equipment be made a part of the general plans and specifications, or may they be separated from the general plans, and may contracts for the same be let apart from the general contract, or even at a later date, the object being to have gas, water, and electricity roughed in only under the plans and specifications now being prepared by the architects, Howard & Merriam?

"While in Columbus, recently, I went over these questions with judge McGillivary, and since they are involved in the preparation of the plans for the building for science and agriculture, work on which is now in progress, an early reply will be appreciated."

The appropriation for 1913, found on page 624 of 103 Ohio Laws, reads as follows:

"Building for science and agriculture; cost not to exceed $1000,000. ----------$50,000."

And your first inquiry really goes to the question whether you can use any part of this for the construction of a corridor connecting the administration and science building, provided the plans thereof are made part of the plans of the science building.

This corridor being a necessary and proper part of the general plans of the school buildings, I can see no valid reason why it cannot be made a part of the science building and paid out of the appropriation mentioned.

The answer to your second question really involves the determination whether these laboratory fixtures are or are not made part of the science building. If they are made parts of the building, instead of mere furnishings of it, that is, if they are permanently attached to and made part of the science building and not merely placed in it, as furnishings which may be taken out and placed elsewhere at pleasure, they can be included and should be in the plans and specifications of the science building. If not so included, and made part of that building, their purchase and installation would have to be deferred until such time as an appropriation was made for the purpose of furnishing the building.

In answer to yout third inquiry, I desire to say that if the fixtures mentioned in your second question are made part of the plans and specifications of the science building, and thereby made payable from this appropriation, they become a part of the general plans of the building and should not be separated from them this appropriation, they become a part of the general plans of the building and should not be separated from them, but bids for such furnishings should be asked for as part of the entire bid for construction of the building.

In regard to whether such equipment be made a part of the general plans and specifications or may be separated from the general plans * * * and may contract for the same be let apart from the general contract, or even at a later date, I am of the opinion that as section 2362, General Code, provides that the officers or board authorized to contract shall, "advertise and receive proposals for furnishing materials and doing the work necessary for the erection thereof, shall require separate and distinct proposals to be made for furnishing such materials or doing such work, or both, in their discretion, for such separate and distinct trade or kind of mechanical labor employment or business entering into the improvement," and sections 2363 and 2364, read:

"Section 2363. When more than one trade or kind of mechanical labor, employment or business is required no contract for the entire job, or for a greater portion thereof than is embraced in one such trade or kind of mechanical labor shall be awarded, unless the separate bids do not cover all the work and materials required or the bids for the whole of for two or more kinds of work or materials are lower than the separate bids therefor in the aggregate."

"Section 2364. The contract for doing the work belonging to each separate trade or kind of mechanical labor, employment or business or for the furnishing of materials therefor, or both, shall be awarded by such officer, board or other authority in its discretion, to the lowest and best separate bidder therefor and shall be made directly with him or them in the manner and upon the terms, conditions and limitations as to giving bond with security and otherwise as prescribed by law, unless it is let as a whole, or to bidders for more than one kind of work or materials. The provisions of this and the preceding two sections shall not apply to the erection of buildings and other structures of a less cost than ten thousand dollars."

It seems clear to me that while the general plans should, and must include full details of the improvement and the advertisement for bids must be as broad as the plans and specifications, yet in making the contract or contracts and accepting the bids the board must be governed by the restrictions found in section 2363, General Code and the limitations as to estimates and appropriations found in section 2323, General Code.

Believing the above fully answers your inquiry, I am,

Very truly yours,
TIMOTHY S. HOGAN,
Attorney General.

EMPTYING OF SALT WATER OF OIL WELLS INTO STREAMS FROM WHICH STATE HOSPITAL RECEIVES WATER SUPPLY NOT SUBJECT TO CRIMINAL PROSECUTION—INJUNCTION.

Since the occasional emptying of salt water of oil wells into streams in which a state hospital receives its water supply is not to be classified as a public nuisance, detrimental to health or comfort, nor as a pollution of the source of any public water supply, such an act is not covered by criminal statutes in this state.

When such act amounts to a substantial interference with rights, however, an injunction is the proper remedy to protect the same.

COLUMBUS, OHIO, April 30, 1913.

HON. S. A. HOSKINS, President Lima State Hospital Commission, Wapakoneta, Ohio.

DEAR SIR:—In your letter of February 26, 1913, you say:

> "I am directed by the commission for the erection of the Lima state hospital to procure your opinion upon the following state of facts:
> "There is a stream of water running through the state lands at the Lima state hospital known as Sugar creek, and it is from this stream that the commission finds it necessary to procure its water supply for the institution. In the Sugar creek valley and extending several miles above the state lands are a number of oil wells now being pumped from time to time, and the salt water from these wells is emptied into Sugar creek, and so contaminates the water as to make it unfit for boiler uses. These wells are not abandoned wells, but are all wells of several years standing, which are only pumped intermittently. The water is only emptied into the stream from time to time, and there are days when the water is comparatively free from salt, but at other times the conditions are such as to render the water unfit for use.
> "The commission desires to know whether or not there is any authority by which the emptying of this salt water into Sugar creek can be stopped."

From your statement of facts, it does not appear that this discharge of salt water amounts to a pollution of the stream so as to interfere with the public health, or with the health of those who will occupy your institution. Therefore the act complained of does not fall within any criminal statute of Ohio, as to the pollution of streams.

Section 12647, General Code, provides:

> "Whoever intentionally throws deposits or permits to be thrown or deposited, coal dirt, coal slack, coal screenings or coal refuse from coal mines, refuse or filth from a coal oil refinery or gas works, or whey or filthy drainage from a cheese factory, into a river, lake, pond or stream, or a place from which it may wash therein, or causes or permits petroleum, crude oil, refined oil, or a compound, mixture, residuum of oil or filth from an oil well, oil tank, oil vat or place of deposit of crude or refined oil, to run into or be poured, emptied or thrown into a river, ditch, drain or watercourse, or into a place from which it may run or wash therein, upon conviction in the county in which such coal mine, coal oil refinery, gas works, cheese factory, oil well, oil tank, oil vat or place of deposit of crude or refined oil is situated, shall be fined not less than fifty dollars nor more than one thousand dollars."

This statute is not broad enough to cover the case submitted by you. Section 1249, General Code, provides:

"Whenever the council or board of health of a city or village, the commissioners of a county, or the trustees of a township set forth in writing to the state board of health, that a city, village, corporation or person is permitting to be discharged sewerage or other waste into a stream, water course, lake or pond and is thereby creating a public nuisance detrimental to health or comfort, or is polluting the source of any public water supply, the state board of health shall forthwith inquire into and investigate the conditions complained of."

You will see by this section, the act must amount to a public nuisance detrimental to health or comfort, or the pollution of the source of any public water supply, before the board of health can take the matter up. If the act continues, and amounts to a substantial interference with your use of the water for boiler purposes, an injunction would, in my opinion, be the proper remedy to protect the same. This is the only remedy which I now see covering the matter.

Very truly yours,
TIMOTHY S. HOGAN,
Attorney General.

ABSTRACT OF TITLE MARY D. DUNN TO STATE OF OHIO, PROPERTY SITUATED IN COUNTY OF ALLEN, STATE OF OHIO.

COLUMBUS, OHIO, October 14, 1913.

DR. M. F. HUSSEY, Superintendent Lima State Hospital, Lima, Ohio.

DEAR SIR:—Under date of September 12th, you submitted to me for approval a warranty deed from Mary D. Dunn to the state of Ohio for the following real estate situated in the county of Allen, state of Ohio, to wit:

"A certain tract of land in Bath township, Allen county, Ohio, in the east half of the southeast quarter of section 7, town 3 south, range 7 east, described as follows:

"Beginning at a pin in the center line of Sugar Creek road, nine hundred and ninety-four and 2/10 (994.2) feet west of a stone at the southeast corner of said section, said line bearing about south eighty-nine degrees and thirty minutes (89-30) west, thence turning a deflection of one hundred and eight degrees and fifty-three minutes (108-53) to the right for a distance of six hundred and fifty-seven and 34/100 (657.34) feet to a corner of a fence along the right of way of the Lima and Toledo Traction company, thence turning a deflection angle to the left of six degrees and one minute (6-01) for a distance of fifty-one and 24/100 (51.24) feet to a stake along the right of way of the Lima and Toledo Traction company, thence turning a deflection angle to the left of ninety-nine degrees and four minutes (99-04) for a distance of five hundred and twenty-five and 95/100 (525.95) feet to a pin in the center line of a road, thence turning a deflection angle of ninety-one degrees and forty-six minutes (91-46) to the left for a distance of seven hundred and seven and 15/100 (707.15) feet to a pin in the center of Sugar Creek road, thence turning a deflection angle to the left of ninety-two degrees and four minutes (92-04) along the center line of Sugar Creek road for a distance of three hundred and twenty-five and 8/10 (325.8) feet to the place of beginning, containing six and 8/10 acres.

"And the said grantee does for itself and assigns hereby agree and covenant with said grantor, her heirs and assigns, to keep open permanently a road that now begins at Sugar Creek road and runs north through above described premises and through other land owned by said grantor, which land lies north of above described premises, so that said grantor, her heirs and assigns shall always have a mode of ingress and egress to and from her said land by said road."

Said deed has been duly signed, acknowledged and recorded.

Pursuant to my request on October 9th, you furnished abstract of title to said premises.

I have carefully examined the abstract and find no defects in the title as disclosed thereby. Taxes for the year 1913 are a lien and should be discharged before the purchase price is paid or a sufficient amount should be retained out of the purchase price to pay said taxes. No examination appears to have been made in the federal court for pending suits and judgments against Mary D. Dunn. In lieu of such examination a certificate of the clerk of the proper court as to these matters should be attached to the abstract.

Subject only to the foregoing qualifications, I am of the opinion that the state of Ohio has under said deed acquired a good and sufficient title to said premises in fee simple.

When the suggestions herein made have been complied with, I shall advise the auditor of state to accept said deed and pay the purchase money therefor.

The abstract is herewith returned to you.

Yours very truly,
TIMOTHY S. HOGAN,
Attorney General.

A CONTRACT FOR THE CONSTRUCTION OF A ROAD AT THE LIMA STATE HOSPITAL MAY BE AWARDED TO THE LOWEST RESPONSIBLE BIDDER ALTHOUGH HIS BID IS SOMEWHAT IRREGULAR IN FORM.

A bid was submitted for the construction of a road at the Lima State Hospital, and was the lowest responsible bid submitted but was somewhat irregular in form. The board may award the contract to this party and require him to give proper bond for the performance of the contract as required by law.

COLUMBUS, OHIO, October 16, 1913.

DR. M. F. HUSSEY, Superintendent Lima State Hospital, Lima, Ohio.

DEAR SIR:—I am in receipt, under date of October 11th, of a communication from Hon. S. A. Hoskins, president of the Lima state hospital commission, who requests that the answer be addressed to you. Mr. Hoskins states:

"The Lima hospital commission on October 10th received bids for certain grading on the road way and around part of the buildings on the hospital grounds. We received three bids, which we herewith enclose you, marked A. B and C. You will note that bid marked 'A' is regular in form and is accompanied by the contract bond, which is ordinarily used in state work and which seems to comply with the code.

"The paper marked 'B' is sufficient in form, giving statement of labor and material, although somewhat informal in other respects. A check is attached to bid 'B' which was intended to be a guarantee on the part of the bidder that he would later enter into bond, etc.

"The commission expects to eliminate two items from these bids, and when these items are eliminated, the bid marked 'B' will be about $1,000.00 less than the bid marked 'A.' The commission regards both these bidders as responsible and able to do the work. The question we desired answered is—'Can the commission accept the bid marked "B," when the same was not accompanied by bidder's bond?' "

It is provided by section 1968, General Code, that the Lima state hospital commission

"shall be governed in all things by the provisions of law relating to the erection of public buildings, but shall not enter into any contract for the erection of any building until the money therefor has been appropriated by the general assembly."

The giving of bonds for the erection, alteration or improvement of state institutions or buildings, is governed by section 2318 of the General Code, which provides as follows:

"On the day named in the notice, such officer, board or other authority shall open the proposals and award the contract to the lowest bidder. No proposals shall be considered unless accompanied by a bond of the bidder with sufficient sureties, conditioned that, if accepted, the bidder will enter into and faithfully perform a proper contract in accordance with the proposal, plans, specifications and descriptions which shall be made a part thereof. The contract shall not be binding on the state until submitted to the attorney general and he certifies thereon that he finds it to be in accordance with the provisions of this chapter."

The check for $5,000 accompanying bid "B" is duly certified and has a condition written on the back thereof and signed by the bidder, which is as follows:

"Payable to the order of the board of commissioners of the Lima state hospital in case I fail to enter into a contract for work bid on this 10th day of October, 1913, and to be returned to the undersigned upon execution of a bond in the sum of 50 per cent. of this bid.

"[Signed] F. R. Stone."

It is clear from a reading of section 2318, that it was the intention of the legislature to require a bidder on public work of this character, to furnish a bond with sufficient sureties, conditioned that if his bid is accepted, the bidder will enter into and faithfully perform the contract. Manifestly, the purpose of this requirement was to furnish a sufficient guarantee with the objects of the statute would be complied with. The certified check is another form of guarantee than that provided by the statute and the question is whether this is such a variance from the terms of the statute as would justify a rejection of the bid.

The general rule on this subject is stated in 36 Cyc. in a note at the bottom of page 875, as follows:

> "Purpose and sufficiency of the bond. It is sometimes provided that every bidder shall accompany his bid with a bond conditioned upon his undertaking and performing the contract if awarded to him. The object of this requirement is to secure good faith on the part of bidders, and the statutory provisions must be at least substantially complied with, but such compliance as will accomplish the object of the requirement is sufficient."

In the case of people ex rel., Lyon vs. McDonough et al., 173 N. Y. Rep., 181, the court held:

> "Where a statute or ordinance requires the performance by public officers of a certain specified act, or that it shall be performed in a certain specific manner, they must at least substantially comply with these requirements to render their acts valid. But such a statute or ordinance is not required to be literally performed in unessential particulars, where there has been a substantial compliance which answers the purpose or intent of the statutory requirements."

The certified check is in effect a cash bond and it seems to me that the state is as fully protected and the object of the statute as effectually secured thereby as though a bond were furnished in strict compliance with the statute. Furthermore, bid "B" is the lowest bid and as it is the policy of the statutes to award contracts to the lowest bidder, I am of the opinion that your board may, in its discretion, award the contract to the person who submitted said bid, and require him to give the proper bond for the faithful performance of the contract, as required by law.

The copy of advertisement, the bids and check enclosed in your letter, are herewith returned.

Yours very truly,
TIMOTHY S. HOGAN,
Attorney General.

HABEAS CORPUS—RELEASE OF GIRL IRREGULARLY COMMITTED TO STATE INSTITUTION FOR FEEBLE MINDED—KEEPING OF CHILD OVER AGE.

When compliance is not made with section 1903, of the General Code, providing that a probate judge shall state upon application for admission of a person into an institution for the feeble minded, whether or not such person has sufficient means, or relatives able to pay for his support, confinement in such institution by the probate court is illegal and habeas corpus proceedings are available when the parents of said child are willing to support and maintain it.

The statutes pertaining to this institution do not provide for release of inmates when they reach majority.

In accordance, therefore, with section 1894, General Code, specifying the object of the institution to be the training and educating of those received so as to render them fit to care for and support themselves, inmates may be retained beyond their majority, if such proceeding is necessary to obtain the object stated.

COLUMBUS, OHIO, April 23, 1913.

HON. E. J. EMERICK, Superintendent Institution for Feeble Minded, Columbus, Ohio.

DEAR SIR:—Your communication of recent date in which you enclose papers in the case of Edith Krangel, now confined in your institution. from Cuyahoga county, and requesting my opinion as to whether or not said girl was legally committed, was duly received.

In reply I desire to say that I have gone over the papers very carefully and find that they are not in conformity to law, and for that reason I am of the opinion that should habeas corpus proceedings be instituted by one of the parents of this girl that the court would hold in favor of said applicant.

Section 1903 of the General Code provides that:

> "In approving an application for the admission of a person to the institution, the probate judge shall state whether or not such person has an estate of sufficient value, or a parent or parents of sufficient financial ability to defray the expense, in whole or in part, of supporting such person in the institution, and if there be means of support in part only, the amount per month which the parent, or legal guardian, may be able to pay. The person who makes the application for such admission shall therein make statement, under oath, as to such means of support."

Section 1904 of the General Code provides that the trustees shall fix the amount, if any be paid, for such support according to the ability of his parents and the value of his estate.

Upon investigation I find that the orders on hearing, being signed by the deputy clerk of the probate judge, do not contain the fact that the parent or parents have or have not sufficient property to support in whole or in part said child, and in my opinion for that reason the question as to whether or not this child is legally committed is properly solved. For if the parent or parents of said child are willing to support and maintain it then in that event I think they would be entitled to the custody of said child, and particularly in view of the fact that the commitment papers do not contain all the matters of law required to be therein set forth under oath.

In the same letter you request my opinion upon the following matter:

"In case of a child under age committed to the institution whether you have the right to retain him after he becomes of age."

In reply to your second inquiry I desire to say that section 1901 of the General Code provides as follows:

"The trustees shall receive as inmates of the custodial department, feeble minded children, residents of this state, under the age of fifteen years, who are incapable of receiving instruction in the common schools of the state," etc.

Section 1894 of the General Code specifies the object of the institution to be:

"To train and educate those received, so as to render them more comfortable, happy and better fitted to care for and support themselves."

There is nowhere in the laws of this state any provision made for the discharge of any inmate of your institution committed under the provisions of section 1901 of the General Code above quoted; therefore in arriving at the proper legal conclusion as to your right to retain any such inmate after he attains his majority, we must look to the purpose and object of the state in fostering and maintaining said institution, and taking that as a basis of my conclusion, I am of the opinion that any inmate of your institution committed under the provisions of section 1901 of the General Code may be retained by you after attaining his majority if in the opinion of the board of administration and the superintendent the discharge of such inmate would be incompatible with his ability to care for and support himself.

Yours very truly,
TIMOTHY S. HOGAN,
Attorney General.

NONE BUT CITIZENS OF OHIO MAY BE ADMITTED TO OHIO STATE SANATORIUM.

Under section 2065, General Code, none but citizens of this state of more than seven years of age are authorized to be admitted to the Ohio state sanatorium.

COLUMBUS, OHIO, June 13, 1913.

S. A. DOUGLAS, M. D., Superintendent Ohio State Sanatorium, Mt. Vernon, Ohio.

DEAR SIR:—In your letter of May 22, 1913, you say:

> "We have had some correspondence with the Pennsylvania society for the prevention of tuberculosis, regarding the admission of aliens to this institution, and they bring up a point which we have discussed pro and con without being able to satisfactorily answer. Therefore we refer the matter to you for ruling by which we may be governed."

You also enclose letter from the Pennsylvania society, which is as follows:

> "In your letter of April 29th, about the admission of aliens to the Ohio state sanatorium, you say that the law limits you to the acceptance of citizens of the state of more than seven years of age. The pamphlet containing the rules and information for patients says that the law requires that the patients be residents of Ohio. Does resident in this connection mean citizen?"

The law governing this state sanatorium is embraced in a short chapter of the General Code, being sections 2052 to 2072, inclusive.

There is absolutely no provision in the law for the admission to this institution of either aliens or non-residents.

It is true, that section 2054, General Code, says: "Such sanatorium shall be known and designated as the Ohio state sanatorium, for the treatment of persons residents of this state, * * * etc." But this is only description of the title of the institution; and when the law comes to define just what class of persons may be admitted, we must look to section 2065, General Code, which says: "Any citizen of this state of more than seven years of age, suffering from pulmonary tuberculosis in the incipient or early stage, as determined by the superintendent, may be admitted to the sanatorium." This is the only place in the law which specifically defines the qualification of those eligible to admission to this institution.

In my opinion, the words resident and citizen, as applied to persons admissible to this institution, should be construed intelligently together.

The century dictionary defines resident as follows:

> "Residing; having a seat of dwelling; dwelling or having an abode for a continuance of time; fixed; firm; one who or that which resides in a place permanently or for a considerable time."

The same author in defining residence says:

> "A dwelling, a habitation; the place where a man's habitation is fixed without any present intention of removing therefrom; domicile; an established abode, fixed for a considerable time."

The same author defines citizen, as follows:

> "A member of a state or nation; one bound to the state by reciprocal obligations of allegience on the one hand and protection on the other; practically, as a general rule, citizenship in a state consists of citizenship of the United States, plus a domicile (that is, a fixed abode) in the state. The right to vote or hold office is not a test of citizenship, for minors and women are commonly citizens without these rights."

Therefore, in view of the above definitions, children, wives and permanent members of a family, are both residents and citizens of Ohio, if the head of the family is such. Guardians of minors, or other dependent persons, in this state, whose residence is fixed, and who are citizens, fix the residence and citizenship of their wards by permanency of abode.

Therefore, I conclude, that no aliens, or more temporary residents, are eligible to admission to this institution. This must be so in order to prevent an influx of foreigners or non-residents from crowding this institution to the exclusion of bona fide residents and citizens. Good judgment in testing the qualifications of applicants, under the foregoing rules, will work out a practical solution of the question. Each case should be carefully viewed from the standpoint of the law and the facts, thereby guaranteeing relief in proper cases, and exclusion in improper ones.

Very truly yours,
TIMOTHY S. HOGAN,
Attorney General.

CONTRACT—ORDER BY RETAIL COMPANY TO OHIO SAILORS' AND SOLDIERS' ORPHANS' HOME TO PAY VOUCHERS FOR COAL TO WHOLESALE COMPANY MAY BE REVOKED IN ABSENCE OF CONTRACTUAL RELATIONS.

The P. J. H. Company agreed to furnish coal to the Ohio Sailors' and Soldiers' Home and issued an order to the home requiring the latter to pay the C. G. B. Coal and Coke Company, from whom the first company received its coal, all vouchers due the first company, held: when the first company defaulted upon its contract and failed to send coal, and ordered the home to cease paying vouchers to the second company, the home should retain all funds due for coal received until it could be ascertained whether or not contractual relations prevented the order for payment of vouchers from being revoked.

COLUMBUS, OHIO, March 3, 1913.

HON. D. Q. MORROW, President Ohio Soldiers' and Sailors' Orphans' Home, Xenia, Ohio.

DEAR SIR:—In answer to your inquiry of February 16, 1913, in which you inquire:

"On the 17th day of August, 1912, the trustees of this institution entered into a contract with Paul J. Hawes & Company to furnish coal from September 1, 1912, to September 1, 1913, and said Paul J. Hawes & Company, to secure the performance of said contract, entered into a bond in the sum of $5,000 with the Southern Surety Company as surety.

"The coal to be furnished by said Paul J. Hawes & Company was obtained by them from The C. G. Blake Coal & Coke Company, and to protect the Blake Company, an order was given of which the following is a copy:

"XENIA, OHIO, September 27, 1912.

"MR. WILLIAM LUTZ, Financial Officer, O. S. & S. O. Home, Xenia, Ohio.

"DEAR SIR:—We hereby authorize you to send the coal vouchers to the C. G. Blake Coal & Coke Company, 114 First National Bank Building, Cincinnati, Ohio. PAUL J. HAWES COMPANY."

"We delivered the vouchers under this order to the C. G. Blake Coal & Coke Company from time to time, but previous to January 16, 1913, differences having arisen between the Paul J. Hawes & Company and The C. G. Blake Coal & Coke Company, on the said January 16, 1913, the said Paul J. Hawes & Company served upon us the following order:"

"XENIA, OHIO, January 16, 1913.

"MR. WILLIAM LUTZ, Financial Officer, O. S. & S. O. Home, Xenia, Ohio.

"DEAR SIR:—This will notify you that I hereby cancel order heretofore given you notifying you to pay moneys due the Paul J. Hawes Coal Company on a certain contract between yourselves and said Company, dated on or about the 1st day of September, 1912, to the C. G. Blake Company. All moneys now due and payable the Paul J. Hawes Company under said contract, or that may become due said company under said contract you are notified to pay to the Paul J. Hawes Company. Yours very truly,

PAUL J. HAWES COMPANY."

"Paul J. Hawes & Company, since the said 16th day of January, 1913, have defaulted in their contract with us and have failed to deliver us coal in pursuance of same, by reason of which, we have called upon their surety to make good their failure."

In the absence of information as to the character of the contract between the Paul J. Hawes Company and The C. G. Blake Coal & Coke Company, under which said coal was furnished, a positive answer may not be given, but construing the paper writing of September 27, 1912, as it reads and not as the result of an agreement between the two companies, I am of the opinion that it is revocable, and is revoked by the notice of January 16, 1913.

However, the Paul J. Hawes Company has defaulted, and you have called upon its surety to make good for which reason my advice to you is to decline to issue vouchers to either The C. G. Blake Coal & Coke Company or The Paul J. Hawes Company, upon the ground, as to the former that the direction to send vouchers had been revoked, and the latter for the reason it had defaulted and the balance was being held to apply on loss on account thereof.

If it should develop that under the contract of purchase of the coal the Hawes Company agreed to have vouchers issued to the Blake Company for coal delivered there would be no power of revocation on the part of the Hawes Company, but in that event I would still retain the balance due on the contract until fully assured as to who should have it.

Very truly yours,
TIMOTHY S. HOGAN,
Attorney General.

ABSTRACT OF TITLE—PROPERTY SITUATED IN TOWNSHIP OF XENIA, OHIO.

COLUMBUS, OHIO, June 5, 1913.

HON. JOSEPH P. ELTON, Superintendent Ohio Soldiers' and Sailors' Orphans' Home, Xenia, Ohio.

DEAR SIR:—On June 4th you personally delivered to this office for examination and approval abstract of the title to and unexecuted deed from John Sullivan and wife to the state of Ohio for the following described real estate upon which the trustees of your institution have an option and which they desire to purchase:

"Situated in the county of Greene, township of Xenia and state of Ohio, being part of military survey No. 2242, bounded and described as follows:

"Beginning at a stone in the center of the New Burlington Pike, corner to Henry Sanborn, T. U. Nichols and the O. S. and S. O. home grounds; thence with the center of said pike and the line of said Sanborn, also T. B. James, north 12 degrees, 32″ east, 88.42 poles, to an iron stake in center of said pike in the line of said James, southwest corner to Hartley and Fulton Lake View Park addition; thence with the south line of said addition south 81 degrees, east 118 poles to a stone corner to said addition in the west line of the said home grounds; thence with the line of said grounds, south 12 degrees, 5″ west, 89.72 poles to a stone corner to said grounds; thence again with said grounds, north 80 degrees, 20′ west, 118.84 poles to the place of beginning, containing 65.83 acres of land, be the same more or less."

The certificate of the abstractor is incomplete in that it fails to set forth the existence or non-existence of pending suits or judgments in any of the courts of record in Greene county, Ohio, whether there are any unpaid taxes or assessments, mechanics' liens, executions foreign or domestic outstanding against said property, and should be amended in the foregoing respects.

The deed from John Sullivan and wife upon the execution and delivery thereof will, in my opinion, be sufficient to convey to the state of Ohio a good and marketable title in fee simple.

The abstract, deed and option are herewith enclosed.

Very truly yours,
TIMOTHY S. HOGAN,
Attorney General.

COUNTY CENTENNIAL—COUNTY COMMISSIONERS MAY APPROPRIATE $2,500.00 FOR CENTENNIAL CELEBRATION OF FOUNDING OF COUNTY ONLY.

The provisions of section 2927, General Code, enabling county commissioners to appropriate from the county funds any sum not to exceed $2,500.00 for defraying the expenses of a county centennial celebration, must be construed to mean only such centennial celebration, within the county, as is held in honor of the one hundredth anniversary of the formation of the county. To hold otherwise would enable the county commissioners, under the broad authorization of the statute, to hold celebrations as many times each year as they deem fit in honor of any event of importance affecting the county.

COLUMBUS, OHIO, December 31, 1912.

HON. WEBSTER P. HUNTINGTON, Secretary General Perry's Victory Centennial, Federal Building, Cleveland, Ohio.

DEAR SIR:—In your letter of September 25, 1912, you make the following request for my opinion:

> "The commissioners of the Perry's victory centennial and the county commissioners of Ottawa county are interested in the interpretation of the statute of 101 Ohio Laws, page 288, relative to centennial celebrations by counties in this state.
> "The question arises as to whether the county commissioners may appropriate, or the people of the county may vote, a sum of money in accordance with the statute, for the centennial observance of an event which occurred before the county was erected. * * *
> "In Ottawa county, the battle of Lake Erie was unquestionably the event which subsequently permitted the county to be organized as a part of the state of Ohio, and history records it as the most important event occurring within the county. The county commissioners are favorable to a celebration under the statute, and inquiry indicates that such celebration would receive very general, popular support. The commissioners, however, desire an opinion from you before proceeding in the matter, and have asked me to obtain it for them.
> "The form of the ballot prescribed by the statute indicates to those of us who have considered the subject that the celebration to be voted for or against is clearly a celebration of any one hundredth anniversary of special interest to the county, and we do not find anything to conflict with this view in the remainder of the statute. But, on the contrary, some very prudent persons might urge that the statute only contemplates a centennial celebration involving a period during all of which the county as now constituted was actually a county of this state."

The act to which you refer, found in Ohio 101 Ohio Laws, page 288, now appears as sections 2927, 2928 and 2929 of the General Code. These sections are as follows:

> "Section 2927. The county commissioners may appropriate from the county fund any sum not to exceed twenty-five hundred dollars towards defraying the expense of a county centennial celebration, but the appropriation of any sum exceeding twenty-five hundred dollars and not to exceed fifteen thousand, five hundred dollars shall be upon the ratification thereof by a majority of votes cast at the November election. At such election the question of such ratification shall be submitted by the proper board or authority in the usual method or form of submitting questions for submission to the voters of a county. The ballot therefor shall contain the following:

For the county centennial celebration of_____Yes.

For the county centennial celebration of_____No.

"At such election, each township may select by ballot, in a separate box provided therefor, two managers, who shall be those receiving the largest number of votes therefor.

"Section 2928. The two persons so selected from each township shall constitute a board of centennial managers for such celebration. Such managers shall serve in all capacities connected with such board without compensation or salary. The money approriated by the county commissioners shall be paid only to the order of such board of centennial managers upon vouchers duly authenticated by the president and secretary or by the executive committee of such board and such vouchers shall show the date and purpose of such expenditure and the name of the person to whom payable.

"Section 2929. Any portion of such fund not appropriated and used for the purpose of such celebration shall remain in and belong to the county fund and shall not be expended otherwise than moneys in such fund."

This act is a splendid example of the loose legislation which nearly always results in a necessary appeal to the courts to have determined what the legislature meant by the act. The only language used to specify the purpose for which a large amount of public money may be spent is, "a county centennial celebration."

A "centennial" as defined in the century dictionary, is:

"The commemoration or celebration of an event which occurred a hundred years before; as, the centennial of American independence."

Now what is meant by a "county" centennial celebration? Does it mean the celebration of the one hundredth anniversary of the formation of the county; or the one hundredth anniversary of some event that occurred within the boundaries of the county; or does it mean the celebration, by the county, of the one hundredth anniversary of any great event, whether occurring within the boundaries of the county or not?

Unless the meaning is held to be the celebration of the formation of thecounty, then there is nothing to limit the purpose for which expenditure can be made except that it must be a centennial celebration, and it could be a celebration of any event which occurred within or without the boundaries of the county. Until the legislature specifies just what is meant by the language used, as the act involves the possible expenditure of a large amount of money by every county in the state (for there is no county but that has in its history some event the centennial of which is worthy of celebration, especially if the cost of the celebration is to be paid out of the public treasury) I am constrained to give this act a strict, instead of a liberal, construction, and to hold that the centennial celebration contemplated by this act is the one hundredth anniversary of the formation of the county, and no other event would come under its terms. I am more strongly persuaded in this view for the reason that if the other construction should be adopted, and it should be held that the act applied to the centennial celebration of an event other than the formation of the county, then it would be possible for any county in this state to spend fifteen thousand, five hundred dollars annually in centennial celebrations, or rather, there would be no limit at all, and celebrations could be held and fifteen thousand, five hundred dollars could be expended just so often as ratification of the action of the commissioners was made; and a celebration could be held and the sum of twenty-five hundred dollars expended just so often as the commissioners were willing and there was sufficient money in the county fund. A construction of the act that would make this condition possible, it seems to me, would be most vicious. The construction I have given limits the expenditure to once in each one hundred years, and to my mind, in most of the counties of the state, is sufficient.

I do not wish to be understood as in any way depreciating the celebration by Ottawa county of the centenary of the battle of Lake Erie. That is unquestionably an event of which all Americans are proud, and which not only Ottawa county, but the people of the whole state and nation should celebrate. If the act related to this event alone, nothing could be said against it, and I wish it were possible, because I think it so eminently fitting that this event should be celebrated by Ottawa county, I could hold otherwise, but for the reason pointed out I feel that the construction I have placed upon the act is the only one possible.

Very truly yours,
TIMOTHY S. HOGAN,
Attorney General.

PRIZE FIGHTING FORBIDDEN IN OHIO—DUTY OF SHERIFF TO PREVENT PRIZE FIGHT.

The matter of prize fighting as well as sparring exhibitions is completely covered by the sections of the general Code. Sparring matches, either with or without gloves cannot be held without the consent of the sheriff of the county in which the exhibition is to be held, nor in a municipality without the consent of the mayor.

Prize fighting has been held to be a nuisance and a perpetual injunction will be granted against persons proposing to engage in prize fighting.

In consideration of the solemnity connected with the celebration of Perry's Victory Centennial, a prize fight would be a public nuisance, and it is the duty of the sheriff of Ottawa county and the village authorities of Put-In-Bay to co-operate to see that the proposed fight does not take place.

COLUMBUS, OHIO, June 30, 1913.

HON. WEBSTER P. HUNTINGTON, Secretary General, Perry's Victory Centennial, Cleveland, Ohio.

DEAR SIR:—I am in receipt of your letter of June 24, 1913, which is as follows:

> "I enclose a newspaper clipping of this date indicating an intention on the part of certain persons to hold a prize fight or sparring exhibition at Put-in-Bay Island on the 4th of July. For some time we have understood that events of this character had been scheduled by private individuals at the Island during the entire summer, and we are apprehensive not only as to the character of the events but as to their effect upon the public mind in connection with the Perry's victory centennial. In particular we regret to see the national holiday employed as an occasion for an exhibition of this nature at Put-in-Bay, not only on general principles, but because on that day the corner stone of the Perry memorial will be laid with solemn Masonic rites, and there will be religious and patriotic exercises in connection therewith.

"We are aware that our authority on Put-in-Bay Island is limited to the memorial reservation of fourteen acres, and are in doubt as to how to proceed in order to extend it so as to prevent abuses elsewhere. As the legal adviser of the Perry's victory centennial commission of Ohio, we respectfully invite your attention to the subject and request your co-operation in suppressing the prize fight evil in case it should threaten to manifest itself at Put-in-Bay during the centennial period."

The following sections of the General Code of Ohio completely cover the matter of prize fighting, as well as the subterfuge frequently resorted to and commonly called "sparring exhibitions."

"Section 12800. Whoever engages as principal in a prize fight shall be imprisoned in the penitentiary not less than one year nor more than ten years."

"Section 12801. Whoever aids, assists or attends a prize fight as backer, trainer, second, umpire, assistant or reporter, shall be fined not less than fifty dollars nor more than five hundred dollars and imprisoned not less than ten days nor more than three months.

"Section 12802. Whoever agrees to fight and willfully fights or boxes at fisticuffs or engages in a public sparring or boxing exhibition without gloves or with gloves, or aids, assists or attends such boxing exhibition or glove fight, or being an owner or lessee of grounds, or a lot, building, hall or structure, permits it to be used for such exhibition purpose, shall be fined not more than two hundred and fifty dollars or imprisoned not more than three months, or both."

"Section 12803. The next preceding section shall not apply to a public gymnasium or athletic club, or any of the exercises therein, if written permission for the specific purpose has been obtained from the sheriff of the county, or, if the exercises or exhibition are within the limits of a municipal corporation, from the mayor of such corporation."

It will be noted from section 12803 that sparring or boxing exhibitions, with or without gloves, cannot be held without the written permission obtained from the sheriff of the county, or if the exercises or exhibition are within the limits of a municipal corporation, from the mayor of such corporation.

The sections above quoted are specific and have been upheld by our courts; and the supreme court has declared that the purpose of these statutes is to suppress all prize fighting. Not only do the above quoted sections make prize fighting a crime and provide for its punishment, but the following sections provide an effectual method for preventing contemplated prize fights:

"Section 13474. When a sheriff, constable, marshal or other police officer has reason to believe that a person in his jurisdiction is about to engage as principal or second in a premediated fight or contention, commonly called a prize-fight, or is in training or preparation to engage as principal therein, he shall forthwith arrest such person and take him before a judge of the court of common pleas, justice of the peace, mayor or police judge and give notice to the prosecuting attorney, who shall forthwith attend before such officer, and upon proper affidavit filed, prosecute the complaint.

"Section 13475. Such officer, as provided in the next preceding section, shall hear the witnesses on oath, and if he finds the complaint true, order the accused to enter into a recognizance, with sufficient sureties, in a sum not less than five hundred dollars nor more than ten thousand dollars, that he will not engage in such a fight or contention within one year thereafter in this state or elsewhere. In default of such recognizance, the officer shall commit the accused to jail there to remain until the order is complied with."

"Section 13476. After the expiration of one month of confinement, if the accused is unable to give the recognizance named in the next preceding section, a judge of the court of common pleas or probate judge may discharge him upon his own recognizance in a like amount and with like conditions, upon proof of his own affidavit and other evidence, that he will never engage in such a fight or contention.

"Section 13477. When a sheriff has reason to believe that a fight or contention, as is described in section 13474, is about to take place in his county, he shall forthwith summon sufficient citizens of the county, suppress such fight or contention and arrest all persons found thereat violating the law and take them before a judge of the court of common pleas or a magistrate, to be dealt with as provided by law."

Under the last four quoted sections it is made the duty of the sheriff, constable, marshal or other police officer who has reason to believe that a prize fight is to be held within his jurisdiction to arrest the principals; and it is also made the duty of the sheriff, when he has reason to believe that a prize fight is about to take place in his county to summon sufficient citizens of the county to suppress such fight and arrest all persons found thereat.

Under the sections above quoted it seems to me there should be no difficulty if the matter is called to the attention of the sheriff and prosecuting attorney of Ottawa county to prevent all attempts at prize fighting, and I feel quite sure that the officials of Put-in-Bay would co-operate with the county officials should it be attempted to hold a prize fight within that village.

The courts have also held that a prize fight is a public nuisance and that a perpetual injunction will be granted against the persons proposing the same upon the petition of the state on the relation of the attorney general. See the case of State of Ohio ex rel. Attorney General vs. Hobart, et al., 8 Nisi Prius, 246.

In this case an injunction was issued by the court against a so-called athletic club of Cincinnati from holding a prize fight, under the guise of a "boxing contest" between the "heavy weight champion of the world" and an aspirant for that coveted honor. The court granted the injunction on the ground that the so-called "boxing exhibition" would be a public nuisance. The governor of the state of Ohio at that time, Hon. George K. Nash, intimated in no uncertain terms, prior to the granting of the injunction, that if the attempt was made to give said prize fight he would suppress the same with the state militia if necessary.

It seems to me that in view of the solemnity connected with the celebration on Put-in-Bay Island on July 4th, a prize fight would undoubtedly be a public nuisance. I suggest, therefore, that you immediately call this matter to the attention of the prosecuting attorney and the sheriff of Ottawa county and also the village authorities of Put-in-Bay, and if they will co-operate with you a prize fight on the island is an impossibility for the necessary laws are now in the Code to prevent the same and all that is needed is courageous officials to enforce them. If, however, on account of some unforeseen contingency, the local officials are not in a situation to act, then an injunction can be sought against the persons proposing to carry on this affair, and if necessary an appeal can be made to the governor.

Yours very truly,

TIMOTHY S. HOGAN,

Attorney General.

PROBATE JUDGE—ANNUAL AND OFFICIAL YEAR ARE IDENTICAL—ENTITLED TO FULL SALARY FOR TIME SERVED.

Inasmuch as section 1580, General Code, provides that a probate judge shall hold office for a term of four years, commencing on the 9th day of February, and section 2989, General Code, provides that the judge shall receive an annual salary, in accordance with section 2996, General Code, the official and calendar year of such judge's term is identical and he will receive full salary for the full time served.

COLUMBUS, OHIO, January 16, 1913.

HON. DUDLEY E. THORNTON, Probate Judge, Marysville, Ohio.

DEAR SIR:—I am in receipt of your letter post-marked January 15, 1913, wherein you state as follows:

> "I see the sheriffs were not allowed pay for the six days they held into January. Now what is your holding on the probate judges. Will they get pay for the eight days they hold in February?"

Section 1580, General Code, provides the term of the probate judge and reads as follows:

> "Quadrennially, one probate judge shall be elected in each county, who shall hold his office for a term of four years, commencing on the ninth day of February next following his election."

Section 2989, General Code, reads as follows:

> "Each county officer herein named shall receive out of the general county fund the annual salary hereinafter provided, payable monthly upon warrant of the county auditor."

Section 2992, General Code, provides for the annual salary that is to be received by each probate judge, which salary is determined by the population of the county as shown by the last federal census last preceding his election.

Section 2996, General Code, provides as follows:

> "Such salaries shall be instead of all fees, costs, penalties, percentages, allowances and all other perquisites of whatever kind which any of such officials may collect and receive, provided that in no case shall the annual salary paid to any such officer exceed six thousand dollars."

Under the provisions of section 1580, General Code, above quoted, it is to be seen that the term of the probate judge is for four years, commencing on the 9th day of February next following his election. In other words, his official year and the calendar year are identical, and under the provisions of section 2989, General Code, the salary set out in section 2992, General Code, is an annual salary payable monthly upon warrant of the county auditor, and section 2996, General Code, provides that the annual salary so received shall be in lieu of all fees, costs, etc., and provides further that the annual salary shall not exceed six thousand dollars.

It is my opinion that the probate judge is entitled to the salary not to exceed six thousand dollars, as is set forth in section 2992, General Code, which under section 2989, General Code, is to be considered an annual salary. Since in the case of the probate judge the calendar year and the official year are of the same duration a probate judge is entitled to receive the full annual salary under section 2992, General Code, as restricted by section 2996, General Code, for each and every year that he served and no more.

I am enclosing copy of an opinion rendered by the Hon. E. C. Turner, prosecuting attorney of Franklin county, to the Hon. F. M. Sayre, county auditor, under date of December 26, 1912, and approved and thereby made the official opinion of this department by the attorney general January 2, 1913.

Yours truly,
TIMOTHY S. HOGAN,
Attorney General.

PROBATE COURT—CORRECTNESS OF ENTRY PROVIDING FOR REDUCTION OF FEES WHEN EARNINGS EXCEED 10% OF REQUIRED SALARIES—FEES FOR MARRIAGE LICENSE AND RECORDING CERTIFICATE—FEE FOR RECORDING AND INDEXING CERTIFICATES OF A BAN MARRIAGE AND FOR MINISTER'S LICENSE.

Under section 1603-1, General Code, when an aggregate amount of fees and allowances collected by the probate judge in any year exceeds by more than 10% the amount necessary to pay the salaries in the offices, a proportionate reduction may be made in the fees and allowances charged for services in said court. This section authorizes the same proportionate reduction for services comprised within the terms of section 1603, General Code, which provides that the probate judge shall be allowed for other services not enumerated in the preceding sections, the same fees as clerks of common pleas courts are allowed for similar services.

Since section 1601, General Code, providing $1.00 as a fee for a marriage license, was enacted subsequent to section 11192, providing seventy-five cents as such a fee, the later statute should be permitted to control. Since the statutes relating to the probate court do not fix a specified fee for the filing, recording and indexing of a certificate of marriage solemnized upon publication of bans, the probate judge should be allowed fees for such services under section 1603, General Code, providing for the same fees as are allowed the clerks of courts of common pleas for similar services.

Under sections 2900 and 2901, General Code, therefor, a probate judge may charge five cents for filing a certificate of such marriage; ten cents per hundred words, or fraction thereof, for recording the same, and five cents for indexing. For issuing a license to a minister for solemnizing marriages, the same arguments apply, and the probate judge shall be allowed the sum fixed by section 2901, General Code, to a clerk of court of common pleas for issuing a license, to wit: fifty cents.

COLUMBUS, OHIO, December 28, 1912.

HON. WILLIAM B. LUEDERS, Probate Judge, Cincinnati, Ohio.

DEAR SIR:—Your favor of December 19, 1912, is received in which you state as follows:

"First. Enclosed herein please find copy of entry I propose entering on the journal of the Hamilton county probate court, in pursuance to authority given under section 1603-1, General Code.

"The figures given in the entry are approximate; the exact figures will be put in the entry at the close of the calendar year's business, December 31, 1912.

"Sections 1601-1602-1603 fix the fees to be charged and collected. The above section 1603-1 referred to, permits a reduction if the aggregate amount exceeds by more than ten per cent. the amount necessary to pay salaries.

"Query. Does copy of entry herein enclosed fully and specifically cover the entire matter?

"Second. Section 1601 of the General Code, on page 594, Page and Adams Annotated General Code, eight lines from the bottom of the page, fixes the fee to be charged for marriage licenses at one dollar, section 11192, fixes the fee for granting marriage license and recording certificate at the sum of seventy-five cents.

"Query. Which statute shall I follow, the one fixing the fee at one dollar or the one fixing the fee at seventy-five cents?

"Third. When I became probate judge in 1909, I found that the customary charges for recording certificate of ban marriages was twenty-five cents, which custom I have followed up to the present day. Recently I carefully searched the statutes to find authority for such charge, but I fail to find any statute giving me authority to make any charge for recording and indexing certificates of a ban marriage? While the statute does not fix a charge for this work, I believe this office should be paid something for this work, to wit; the recording and indexing of the same.

"Query. Under the circumstances would you advise a continuance of the charge of twenty-five cents for recording and indexing, or should the same be done without charge?

"Fourth. Another custom in vogue in this office for many years last past, I am informed, and continued by me, is the charge of seventy-five cents for a minister's license, authorizing him to solemnize marriages under section 11183 of the General Code. In this case also I fail to find any authority for the charge. In this case as in the matter of the ban marriage we record the license number and index the same and do work for which the county should be paid.

"Query. Under the circumstances should I continue the charge of seventy-five cents as heretofore, or should no charge be made for this work."

The prosecuting attorney of Hamilton county also joins with you in the request for an opinion upon the foregoing.

The entry which you submit is as follows:

"Whereas, sections 1601-1602-1603, General Code of Ohio, provide, enumerate, fix and specify the various fees and allowances to be charged and collected by the probate judge, and

"Whereas, section 1603-1, provides as follows:

"When the aggregate amount of fees and allowances collected by the probate judge in any calendar year, exceeds by more than ten per centum the amount necessary to pay salaries of said probate judge, deputies, assistants, clerks, bookkeepers and other employes of his office, including court constables, for the same calendar year, such probate judge, may by an order entered on his journal, provide for a reduction or discount of all the fees and allowances required to be charged and collected by him for the use of the county, by fixing a stated percentage of discount which shall be applied to all the earnings of said office, for the whole of the ensuing year and shall constitute the legal fees of said office for said year; provided, that such order shall in no wise be allowed to affect the aggregate amount of fees and allowances of said office, as the same may be used as a basis of arriving at a limitation on clerk hire of said office, as the same is required to be fixed by county commissioners, under section 2980 of the General Code.

"Whereas, the aggregate amount of fees and allowances collected by the probate judge of this, Hamilton county, Ohio, in the calendar year 1912, the same being from January 1st to December 31st, thereof, exceeds by more than ten per centum the amount necessary to pay salaries of said probate, judge, deputies, assistants, clerks, bookkeepers and other employes of this, the probate court of Hamilton county, Ohio, including court constables for the calender year, 1912, as shown by the following figures, to wit:

"Aggregate amount of fees and allowances collected during calendar year, 1912, January 1st to December 31st, thereof, $47,500.00.

"Aggregate amount necessary to pay the salaries of the probate judge, deputies, assistants, clerks, bookkeepers and other employes of said office, including court constables, for the same calendar year, 1912, from January 1st to December 31st, thereof, the sum of $33,270.00.

"Leaving a balance of $14,230.00 in the county treasury and which said balance for said calendar year of 1912 exceeds by more than ten per centum, to wit, the sum of $10,903.00, the amount necessary to pay the salaries aforesaid, and

"Whereas, under these financial conditions, the probate judge may by an order entered on his journal, provide for a reduction or discount of all fees and allowances required to be charged and collected by him for the use of the county, by fixing a stated percentage of discount, which shall be applied to all earnings of said office for the whole of the ensuing year, to wit; the year 1913, and shall constitute the legal fees of said office for said year, 1913.

"Therefore, upon due consideration by the court, it is decreed and adjudged, pursuant to said section 1603-1 of the General Code, that all fees and allowances to be charged and collected by the probate judge under sections 1601-1602-1603 be reduced twenty per cent., beginning on January 1, 1913, continuing during said calendar year, 1913, to December 31st, thereof.

"It is further ordered that said twenty per cent. reduction when applied to all fees to be charged under section 1601-1602 and 1603 of the General Code, the fees shall be as follows:

"For appointment of administrator, executor, guardian for minor, except guardian ad litem, assignee or trustee, four dollars and forty cents; for copy of will for executor or administrator with the will annexed, per one hundred words, eight cents; for appointment of guardian of drunkard, idiot, imbecile or lunatic, six dollars and forty cents; for injunction proceedings, two dollars; for inventory when there is no appraisement, one dollar and twenty cents; for inventory with appraisement, three dollars and twenty cents; for public sale bill, two dollars; for petition to sell personal property at private sale, and sale bill, two dollars and forty cents; for petition for sale of real estate, nine dollars and sixty cents; for each account, three dollars and sixty cents; for account of final distribution, one dollar and sixty cents; for statement in lieu of final account, one dollar and sixty cents; for petition for removal of administrator, executor, guardian, assignee or trustee, four dollars; for application for administrator, or executor for allowance of claim, two dollars; probating will, four dollars; for election of widow, or widower, one dollar and sixty cents; and for appointment of commissioner to take election, one dollar and sixty cents additional; for deposit of will, eighty cents; for marriage license, eighty cents; for execution, forty cents; for petition for adoption of child, two dollars and eighty cents; for petition to change name, two dollars and forty cents; petition to lease and improve real estate, application and settlement of claim by wrongful death, application and order to complete contract, application to lease for oil, gas, clay or mineral, application to invest in productive real estate, application to borrow money and mortgage real estate, each four dollars; for application and order to loan unclaimed money, one dollar and sixty cents; for application of new or additional bond, eighty cents; for application and order for release of any surety or reduction of bond, one dollar and sixty cents; for application and order to record receipts, one dollar and sixty cents; for application, order and report of distribution of assets in kind, one dollar and sixty cents; for application for record of foreign will one dollar and twenty cents; for application to compound, sell or dispose of desperate claims, and report thereon, two dollars; for appointment of commissioners to take depositions of witnesses to wills or election of widow, one dollar and twenty cents; for recording physicians certificates, forty cents; for hearing in ditch cases, four dollars per day; for record in excess of fifteen hundred words, in the following matters at the rate of eight cents per hundred words; inventory, sale bill, account, will and petition to sell real estate or personal property; when a contest of appointment is instituted or exceptions filed in any of the proceedings named in this section, for additional services made necessary thereby, the same fees as are provided for the clerk of court of common pleas for like services, with a twenty per cent. discount.

"Provided, however, that in estates, the assets of which do not exceed two hundred dollars in value, the total fees of the probate judge chargeable against such estate shall not exceed eight dollars.

"Section 1602. The fees enumerated in this section shall be paid to the probate judge out of the county treasury upon the warrant of the county auditor, which shall issue upon the certificate of the probate judge and shall be in full for all services rendered in the respective proceedings; for each inquest of lunacy when the person is committed to a state hospital or to relatives, six dollars and forty cents; when the person is discharged, four dollars; for the return of an insane person, to a state hospital or removal therefrom, eighty cents; for each inquest of epilepsy, when a person is committed, six dollars and forty cents; when application is not granted, four dollars; for return of an epileptic insane person to a state hospital or removal therefrom, eighty cents; for proceedings for committing a person to the institution for feeble minded, six dollars and forty cents; for proceedings for sending or committing a person to the state school for the deaf or blind, four dollars; for proceedings against a juvenile disorderly person, under the provision of section 7774, when commitment is made, four dollars; when child is discharged or judgment suspended, two dollars and forty cents; for holding an examining court under section 13531, when defendant is held to be insane or idiotic, six dollars and forty cents for proceedings on habeas corpus when a person is confined under color of proceedings in a criminal case and is discharged, four dollars; when acting as a judge of the juvenile court, for each case filed against a delinquent, dependent or neglected child, two dollars; for proceedings to take child from parent or other person, having control thereof, two dollars; for appointment of examiners of the county treasury, two dollars and forty cents; for appointment of each county school examiner, one dollar and sixty cents; for appointment of each member of board of county visitors, eighty cents; for appointment of each blind relief commissioner, one dollar and sixty cents for the report of judicial statistics to the secretary of state the same fees as are allowed to the clerk of courts, with twenty per cent. reduction. Upon the certificate of the probate judge and the warrant of the county auditor the probate judge shall receive from the county treasury to be credited to his fee fund his legal fees for services in criminal cases wherein the state fails to convict or the defendant proves insolvent, but not more than three hundred dollars shall be allowed for services rendered in any one year of his term.

"Section 1603. For other services for which compensation is not otherwise provided by law, the probate judge shall be allowed the same fees as are allowed the clerk of the court of common pleas for similar services (with a twenty per cent. reduction).

"Provided, that such order shall in no wise be held to affect the aggregate amount of fees and allowances of said office as the same may be used as a basis of arriving at a limitation of clerk hire of said office as the same is required to be fixed by county commissioners under section 2980 of the General Code."

The foregoing entry is prepared by authority of section 1603-1, General Code, which provides:

"When the aggregate amount of fees and allowances collected by the probate judge in any calendar year exceeds by more than ten per centum the amount necessary to pay the salaries of said probate judge, deputies, assistants, clerks, bookkeepers and other employes of his office, including court constables, for the same calendar year, such probate judge may, by an order entered on his journal, provide for a reduction or discount of all the fees and allowances required to be charged and collected by him for the use of the county by fixing a stated percentage of discount which shall be applied to all the earnings of said office for the whole of the ensuing year and shall constitute the legal fees of said office for said year. Provided that such order shall in no wise be held to affect the aggregate amount of fees and allowances of said office as the same may be used as a basis of arriving at a limitation on clerk hire of said office as the same is required to be fixed by county commissioners under section 2980 of the General Code."

In your county the fees collected by the probate court exceed by more than ten per centum the amount necessary to pay the salaries of the probate judge and of all the deputies, clerks and other employes therein; and therefore, the probate judge is authorized to make a reduction in all of said fees and allowances to be collected by him.

The entry submitted follows the words of the statutes and enumerates the fees as they will be when reduced.

Section 1601, General Code, provides:

"The fees enumerated in this section shall be charged and collected by the probate judge and shall be in full for all services rendered in the respective proceedings: For appointment of administrator, executor, guardian for minor, except guardian ad litem, assignee or trustee, five dollars and fifty cents; for copy of will for executor or administrator with the will annexed, per hundred words. ten cents; for appointment of guardian of drunkard, idiot, imbecile or lunatic, eight dollars; for injunction proceedings, two dollars and fifty cents; for inventory when there is no appraisement, one dollar and fifty cents; for inventory with appraisement, four dollars; for public sale bill, two dollars and fifty cents; for petition to sell personal property at private sale, and sale bill, three dollars; for petition for sale of real estate, twelve dollars; for each account, four dollars and fifty cents; for account of final distribution, two dollars; for statement in lieu of final account, two dollars; for petition for removal of administrator, executor, guardian, assignee or trustee, five dollars; for application for administrator or executor for allowance of claim, two dollars and fifty cents; probating will, five dollars; for election of widow, or widower, two dollars; and for appointment of commissioner to take election, two dollars additional; for deposit of will, one dollar; for marriage license, one dollar; for execution, fifty cents; for petition for adoption of child, three dollars and fifty cents; for petition to change name, three dollars; petition to lease and improve real estate, application and settlement of claim by wrongful death, application and order to complete contract, application and order to complete contract, application to lease for oil, gas, clay or mineral, application to invest in productive real estate, application to borrow money and mortgage real estate, each five dollars; for application and order to loan unclaimed money, two dollars; for application of new or additional bond, one dollar; for application and order for release of any surety or reduction of bond, two dollars; for application and order to record receipts, two dollars, for application, order and report of distribution of assets in kind, two dollars; for application for record of foreign will, one dollar and fifty cents; for application to compound, sell or dispose of desperate claims and report thereon, two dollars and fifty cents; for appointment of commissioners to take deposition of witnesses to wills or election of widow, one dollar and fifty cents; for recording physician certificates, fifty cents; for hearing in ditch cases, five dollars per day; for record in excess of fifteen hundred words in the following matters at the rate of ten cents per hundred words: inventory, sale bill, account, will and petition to sell real or personal property; when a contest of appointment is instituted or exceptions filed in any of the proceedings named in this section, for additional services made necessary thereby, the same fees as are provided for the clerk of the court of common pleas for like services."

Section 1602, General Code, provides:

"The fees enumerated in this section shall be paid to the probate judge out of the county treasury upon the warrant of the county auditor, which shall issue upon the certificate of the probate judge and shall be in full for all services rendered in the respective proceedings: for each inquest of lunacy when the person is committed to a state hospital or to relatives, eight dollars; when the person is discharged, five dollars; for the return of an insane person to a state hospital or removal therefrom, one dollar; for each inquest of epilepsy, when a person is committed, eight dollars; when application is not granted, five dollars; for return of an epileptic insane person to a state hospital or removal therefrom, one dollar; for proceedings for committing a person to the institution for feeble-minded, eight dollars; for proceedings for sending or committing a person to the state school for the deaf or blind, five dollars; for proceedings against a juvenile disorderly person under the provision of section 7774, when commitment is made, five dollars; when child is discharged or judgment suspended, three dollars; for holding an examining court under section 13531, when defendant is held to be insane or idiotic, eight dollars; for proceedings on habeas corpus when a person is confined under color of proceedings in a criminal case and is discharged, five dollars; when acting as a judge of the juvenile court, for each case filed against a delinquent, dependent or neglected child, two dollars and fifty cents; for proceedings to take child from parent or other person, having control thereof, two dollars and fifty cents; for appointment of examiners of the county treasury, three dollars; for appointment of each county school examiner, two dollars; for appointment of each member of the board of county visitors, one dollar; for appointment of each blind relief commissioner, two dollars; for the report of judicial statistics to the secretary of state the same fees as are allowed to the clerk of courts. Upon the certificate of the probate judge and the warrant of the county auditor the probate judge shall receive from the county treasury to be credited to his fee fund his legal fees for services in criminal cases wherein the state fails to convict or the defendant proves insolvent, but not more than three hundred dollars shall be allowed for services rendered in any one year of his term."

Section 1603, General Code, provides:

"For other services for which compensation is not otherwise provided by law, the probate judge shall be allowed the same fees as are allowed the clerk of the court of common pleas for similar services."

The fees set forth in the entry have been compared with those set forth in the above sections and it is found that the proper reductions have been made as to such fees.

The entry as submitted did not provide for a reduction in the fees which are authorized to be charged by virtue of section 1603 of the General Code. Whether or not there should be a reduction in these fees, as in the others, is the question, as I understood, which you propounded to me verbally. After most careful consideration of all the provisions herein, of concern, this department is of opinion that the reduction provided for in section 1603-1 relates as well to section 1603 as to sections 1601 and 1602. I have, therefore, added to the entry, after the word "services," in the paragraph noted, "section 1603," the words "with a reduction of twenty per cent." With the change suggested and entered the entry is approved by this department.

Your second inquiry applies to the fee to be charged for issuing a marriage license.

Section 1601, General Code, supra, provides the fee for a marriage license in these words:

"for marriage license, one dollar;"

This section was amended in 102 O. L. 277. This amendment made a complete change in the method of charging fees in the probate court.

Section 11192, General Code, provides:

"The judge shall be entitled to receive as his fee for administering the oath and granting a license, with the seal affixed thereto, recording the certificate of marriage, and filing the necessary papers, the sum of seventy-five cents."

This section has not been amended since first inserted in the General Code.

In section 1601, General Code, as carried into the General Code, as adopted in 1910, it was provided:

"Administering an oath when necessary, and issuing a marriage license and filing and recording the certificate of marriage, seventy-five cents;"

When section 1601, General Code, was amended, it is evident that the provisions of section 11192, General Code, were overlooked.

The fee fixed in section 1601, General Code, as amended in 102 Ohio Laws, 277, is the later enactment and must govern.

The probate judge, therefore, is authorized to charge one dollar for issuing and recording a marriage license.

Your third inquiry is in reference to the fee to be charged for filing and recording a certificate of marriage when the marriage is solemized after publication of bans in a congregation.

Section 11186, General Code, provides:

"Previous to persons being joined in marriage, notice thereof shall be published in the presence of the congregation on two different days of public worship; the first publication to be at least ten days before such marriage, within the county where the female resides; or, a license must be obtained for that purpose from the probate judge in the county where such female resides."

Section 11195, General Code, provides:

"A certificate of every marriage solemnized, whether authorized by publication of bans in the congregation, or by license issued by the probate judge, shall forthwith be transmitted to the probate judge in the county where the marriage license was issued, or of the congregation wherein such bans were published is situated, or where the marriage was celebrated. All such certificates of marriage filed with the probate judge, shall be consecutively numbered and be recorded in the order in which they are received."

The probate judge is required to file such certificates and to record the same. Section 1585, General Code, provides:

"All pleadings, accounts, vouchers and other papers in each estate, trust, assignment, guardianship, or other proceeding, ex-parte or adversary, which are filed in the probate court shall be kept together, and upon the final termination or settlement of such case, cause or proceeding shall be preserved for future reference and examination. Such papers shall be properly jacketed, and otherwise tied, fastened or held together numbered, lettered or otherwise marked in such manner that they may be readily found by reference to proper memoranda upon the docket, record or index entries thereof, which memoranda shall be made or caused to be made by the probate judge. Certificates of marriage, reports of births and deaths and similar papers not part of a case or proceeding, shall be arranged and preserved separately in the order of their dates or in which they were filed. The words "case or cause" herein used shall include all proceedings in the settlement of any estate, guardianship or assignment."

Section 1594, General Code, reads in part:

"The following books shall be kept by the probate court:

"10. A marriage record, in which shall be entered licenses, and the names of the parties to whom issued, the name of the person or persons applying therefor, with a brief statement of the facts sworn to by such person, and the returns of the person solemnizing the marriage."

Section 1595, General Code, provides:

"To each record required by the preceding section, an index shall be attached securely bound in the volume. Each index shall be kept up with the entries therein and refer to such entries alphabetically by the names of the parties or persons in which originally entered, indexing the page of the book where the entry is made. On the order of the probate judge, blank books for such records and indexes shall be furnished by the county commissioners at the expense of the county."

By virtue of these sections the marriage certificate must be filed, recorded and indexed.

Sections 1601 and 1602, General Code, do not fix the fee to be charged for the filing, recording and indexing of a certificate of marriage solemnized upon publication of bans. The fee, if any can be charged, must be governed by section 1603, General Code, supra, which authorizes the probate judge to charge the same fees, for other services, as are allowed the clerk of the court of common pleas for similar services.

The fees to be charged by the clerk of courts are fixed by sections 2900 and 2901, General Code.

Section 2900, General Code, provides:

"For the services hereinafter specified, when rendered, the clerk shall charge and collect the fees provided in this and the next following section and no more: For docketing each cause in appearance docket, ten cents; for docketing each execution in execution docket, ten cents; for docketing each transcript of judgment in execution docket, ten cents; for indexing each cause in the execution or appearance docket each plaintiff and each defendant, five cents; for filing each praecipe, pleading, subpoena, cost bill and other necessary document, five cents; for noting the filing of same, except subpoena and praecipe therefor, on the appearance docket, each, five cents; for taking each affidavit including certificate and seal, twenty-five cents; for issuing each writ, order or notice, except subpoena, thirty cents; for noting the issue of same on appearance docket, each, five cents; for recording return of same on appearance docket, each, ten cents; for issuing subpoena, each name, five cents; for taking undertaking, bond or recognizance, twenty-five cents; for impaneling and swearing jury, each cause, fifty cents; for swearing each witness, five cents; for entering attendance of each witness, ten cents; for certifying fees of each witness, five cents; for entering each cause on the trial or motion docket and indexing same, each term, ten cents; for each entry on journal per one hundred words or fraction thereof, ten cents; for indexing same, five cents; for posting same on appearance docket, ten cents; for entering on the indictment any plea, ten cents; for poling a jury, twenty-five cents."

Section 2901, General Code, reads in part:

"For making cost bill to be taxed but once, forty cents; for making complete record in each cause, ten cents per hundred words; for indexing same, each cause, ten cents; * * * for issuing any license, fifty cents; for issuing certificates to receiver or order of reference with oath, seventy cents; for certificates of fact under seal of the court, to be paid by the party demanding same, thirty-five cents; for certificate of deposit on foreign writ, certificate of opening deposition, certificate for attorney's fee, certificate for stenographer's fee, each ten cents."

Section 2900, General Code, supra, contains these provisions:

"for filing each praecipe, pleading, subpoena, cost bill and other necessary document, five cents; * * * for each entry on journal per one hundred words or fraction thereof, ten cents; for indexing same, five cents."

I am of the opinion that the above provisions read in connection with section 1603, General Code, will authorize the probate judge to charge five cents for filing the certificate of a ban marriage; ten cents per hundred words or fraction thereof for recording the same and five cents for indexing. As these certificates are usually less than one hundred words the total charge to be made would be twenty cents.

You further inquire as to the fee to be charged for issuing a minister's license to solemnize marriages.

Section 11183, General Code, provides:

> "A minister of the gospel, upon producing to the probate judge of any county within this state in which he officiates, credentials of his being a regularly ordained or licensed minister of any religious society or congregation, shall be entitled to receive from the court a license, authorizing him to solemnize marriages within this state so long as he continues a regular minister in such society or congregation."

Section 11184, General Code, provides:

> "Each minister, who is licensed to solemnize marriages, must produce to the judge of the probate court in each county, in which he solemnizes a marriage, his license so obtained. The judge thereupon shall enter the name of such minister upon record as a minister of the gospel duly authorized to solemnize marriages within this state, and note the county from which such license issued; for which service no charge shall be made by the judge."

Section 11184, General Code, prevents the probate judge from charging a fee for noting the certificate of a minister from another county, but this exemption from charge does not apply to the issuance of a license as provided in section 11183, General Code. Sections 1601 and 1602, General Code, supra, do not provide for the fee to be charged for issuing such license. It also is governed by section 1603, General Code.

In section 2901, General Code, providing for the fees of the clerk of the court of common pleas is found the following:

> "for issuing any license, fifty cents;"

This provision, read in connection with the provisions of section 1603, General Code, will authorize the probate judge to charge fifty cents for issuing a license to a minister, authorizing such minister to solemnize marriages.

Respectfully,

TIMOTHY S. HOGAN,

Attorney General.

STATE HOSPITAL FOR INSANE AND EPILEPTICS—POWER OF PROBATE COURT TO COMMIT AND DUTY OF HOSPITAL OFFICIALS TO RECEIVE.

Under sections 1947 to 1983, General Code, providing for state hospital for the insane, and under sections 2035 to 2051, General Code, with reference to the Ohio hospital for epileptics, an insane person who is not an epileptic, should, on being found insane, by the probate court, be committed to the hospital for the insane; and an insane person who is also an epileptic, and also epileptic persons, should when so adjudged by the probate court, be committed to the Gallipolis hospital for epileptics.

No one affected with a contagious or infectious disease or vermin can be admitted to either institution.

The only limitations upon the power of the probate court to commit are the statutory provisions providing for review on error and the restriction as to the full quota allowed to be received from each district. Municipal authorities have no discretion to refuse admission upon commitment by the probate court upon any other grounds.

COLUMBUS, OHIO, May 20, 1913.

HON. SAMUEL L. BLACK, Probate Judge, Columbus, Ohio.

DEAR SIR:—I have your letter of May 12, 1913, before me, in which you state that you have a man in the county jail adjudged to be insane, who is also an epileptic and has suicidal intentions; and that the state hospital refuses to accept him because he is an epileptic. You cite another case of a woman remaining in jail thirty days who was insane, epileptic, and had homicidal and suicidal tendencies; and the state hospital refused to accept her beacuse she was an epileptic, and the epileptic hospital refused because she was insane. Further on in your letter, you speak of a young colored girl, adjudged an epileptic in January last, who is now in the county infirmary, afflicted with a venereal disease, who was refused admission to the epileptic hospital, for the assigned reason of the superintendent, that the hospital was too crowded.

You then ask:

> "whether or not the superintendent of the different institutions occupy the position of a court of review over the probate court, in lunacy and epilepsy cases, and who is to be the judge of what patients will be received into the institutions owned by the state of Ohio?"

The solution of the questions submitted, involves a construction of the various statutes applicable to these state hospitals, and those prescribing the mode of commitment thereto, by the probate court.

The statutes are not as broad and complete as they should be on these matters; and the result is, there is some apparent conflict and doubt existing in their practical application and enforcement.

HOSPITALS FOR THE INSANE.

Section 1948, General Code, gives the board of state charities authority to divide the state into districts for hospitals for the insane, fix the quota of each county on the census basis. The same section authorizes said board to change the boundaries of the districts from time to time as may be necessary. Section 1949, General Code, provides that these regulations as to districts shall not be effective until approved by the governor. After such approval, said board must notify the various probate judges of any changes in districts or quota.

Section 1951, General Code, requires the medical superintendent of each state hospital to inform the probate judge, monthly, of the quota of patients to which each county is entitled, and the number in the hospital therefrom. This section further provides:

> "The probate judge, at any time, may forward an acute case if the quota is not full, and the papers and clothing are in compliance with law."

Section 1952, General Code, says:

> "If at any time any such hospital cannot accommodate the patients of the district to which it is attached, or if the best interests of a patient make his transfer advisable, with the consent and written approval of the superintendent interested, the board of state charities may order the transfer of such patients to the hospital of either of the other districts, which at that time has room for such patients."

By section 1956, General Code, the probate judge, if he is satisfied that the person charged is insane, shall cause a certificate to that effect to be made by two medical witnesses. The next section says that all such medical certificates shall be void in ten days, unless the person named therein is admitted to a state hospital within that time. This requires promptness in committing patients to the various institutions.

Section 1958, General Code, then provides that when the probate judge receives the medical certificate above referred to, he shall forthwith apply to the superintendent of the hospital in the resident district of the patient, and transmit, under official seal, copies of the medical certificates and his findings in the case. This section then concludes with the following language:

> "Upon receiving the application and certificate, the superintendent shall immediately advise the probate judge whether the patient can be received, and, if so, at what time."

Section 1959, General Code, provides:

> "When advised that the patient will be received, the probate judge shall forthwith issue his warrant to the sheriff, commanding him forthwith to take charge of and convey such insane person to the hospital."

In section 1961, General Code, there is a provision as follows:

> "Until a certificate is furnished by a medical witness that the patient is free from all infectious diseases and from vermin, the probate judge shall refuse to make such application to the superintendent."

The law relative to hospitals for the insane is found in sections 1947 to 1983, General Code, inclusive.

There are seven state hospitals for the insane, enumerated in section 1947, General Code, and they are designated therein as

> "The institutions for the care and treatment of the insane in this state."

Section 1983, supra, in defining terms, says:

"The terms 'insane' and 'lunatic' as used in this chapter, include every species of insanity or mental derangement, etc."

OHIO HOSPITAL FOR EPILEPTICS.

The mode of admission to the above institution, and matters pertaining to that class of the wards of the state, are provided for in sections 2035 to 2051, General Code, inclusive. The only institution in Ohio of this class is designated in General Code, 2035, as follows:

"The asylum for epileptics and epileptic insane at Gallipolis, shall be known as the Ohio hospital for epileptics."

The class of patients eligible to this institution is fixed in General Code, 2037, as follows:

"Insane persons who are also epileptic, and whose disease has developed during their residence in this state, and epileptics who have been residents of the state for one year next preceding application for admission, shall be admissible as inmates of this institution. The number of inmates shall be apportioned among the counties of the state according to population."

By section 2041, General Code, the manager of this institution is required to inform the probate judge of each county, on the 15th day of each month, of the quota of patients to which it is entitled, and the number then in the hospital therefrom.

This chapter provides that the application for admission to said hospital shall be made to the probate judge upon blanks furnished said court by the proper officers of said institution; and the proceedings thereon are the same as in the commitment and care of the insane. A physician's certificate is required that the patient is admissible under the requirements of said institution and is free from infectious or contagious disease and vermin.

If the judge is satisfied that the patient is an epileptic, and a suitable person for treatment at the hospital, he shall transmit the application and other papers in the case to the manager of the hospital, who shall advise him whether the patient can be received, and at what time.

If advised that the patient may be received, the judge shall take the same steps for his transmission as are had in the conveyance of patients to the other state hospitals, except if the patient can travel alone, he may issue the warrant of committal to the patient himself.

I have gone extensively into these statutes, in order to compare and construe them with reference to your inquiries.

From the statutes I conclude that an insane person, who is not an epileptic, should, on being found insane by the probate court, be committed to a hospital for the insane. An insane person who is also an epileptic, and all epileptic persons, should, when so adjudged, be committed to the Gallipolis hospital for epileptics.

No one not free from contagious and infectious disease or vermin, can be admitted to either institution.

The man and woman mentioned in your letter should each have been accepted at the Gallipolis institution; and the superintendent had no right to reject her because she was insane, if at the same time she was an epileptic. The unfortunate colored girl, afflicted as she is with a loathsome disease, could not be admitted at all, in any state institution until cured.

The questions

"Whether or not the superintendents of the different institutions occupy the position of a court of review over the probate court, in lunacy or epilepsy cases,

and

"Who is to be the judge of what patients will be received into the institutions owned by the state of Ohio," as propounded by you, raise an interesting proposition for discussion.

There is no authority in these superintendents to review the findings of the probate court in such cases. The probate court is a court of record, and its findings and judgments impart absolute varity. The only means of a review is on error, or appeal, to a higher court.

After a full hearing is had, and all statutory steps are followed, in lunacy and epileptic cases by the probate judge, he is the judge of what patients are to be received into these state institutions; and his judgment as to whether said patients are lunatics, epileptics, or both, is final and binding, subject only to review by a higher court, or a release on habeas corpus as provided in section 1976, General Code. In my opinion, when the medical superintendent receives the application from the probate judges, accompanied by the certified copies of medical certificates, and the findings of the court, and the patient is provided with clothing as provided by statute, he shall admit the patient on the warrant of the court, unless such patient has an infectious or contagious disease, or vermin, or the quota for that county is filled, at that particular asylum.

The last part of section 1958 requires the medical superintendent to immediately advise the probate judge "whether the patient can be received, and if so, at what time."

The expression quoted above, does not mean that the superintendent can review the case and reject the patient on his own opinions of the matter; but it has reference to the quota allotted to that county, and whether there are accommodations for such patient, and whether he is free from disease and vermin. All other questions of eligibility for admission, are concluded by the judgment of the probate court. That the probate judge is clothed with power in these matters, is shown by section 1958, which provides that an acute patient may be forwarded at any time by said judge "if the quota is not full and the papers and clothing are in compliance with law."

These great institutions are created and maintained by the state for the reception, care and maintenance of those citizens, from whom the light of reason has fled, and who are helpless and afflicted, by epilepsy, or the mental and physical destroying agencies, which call for restraint and protection. The state is taxed, and carefully gives support to all our unfortunates who are helpless, or dangerous, by reason of mental and physical defects which come to them voluntarily or involuntarily. The protection of society demands their segregation and separation from the public in general, and the highest and best service is required on account of both the applicant and the community.

This being so, there ought to be exercised by the authorities controlling these institutions, the highest diligence and care, that no one upon whom the hand of mental or physical affliction falls, shall suffer for lack of a place in these institutions, where he can be cared for comfortably and efficiently. Epileptics and insane can no longer be admitted to infirmaries or other county institutions, where their presence would be detrimental and degenerating to the other inmates; neither should they, except in temporary emergencies, be incarcerated in local jails, where thay may be compelled to await the red tape and the doubt and uncertainties of the law, as to where they shall be taken for care and comfort. Promptness and certainty in rendering relief to our unfortunate wards should obtain; and there should be no arguments or disagreements between the authorities in these cases, which can only prove detrimental to those who most need the protecting power of the state. If an institution is crowded, or the quota of a county therein is full, the state board of charities, and officers of the institutions, should take measures for the transfer of patients to such institutions as can take care of them. Furthermore, great care should be taken that too many "pay" patients, or non-residents, or voluntary patients, are not admitted, to the prejudice and exclusion of those who are admitted by the police court, thereby relieving the quota of each county.

With these suggestions and opinion as to the powers of the probate court and duties of the asylum authorities, I believe the problems submitted by you can be solved, and all can work together in harmony and effectively care for the class of patients described by you.

Yours very truly,
TIMOTHY S. HOGAN,
Attorney General.

UNDER THE PROVISIONS OF SECTION 1902, GENERAL CODE, THE SAME PROCEDURE THAT FORMERLY APPLIED TO THE ADMISSION OF ADULTS TO INSTITUTIONS FOR FEEBLE MINDED, NOW APPLIES TO ALL PERSONS.

Feeble minded persons other than adults may be admitted to institutions for feeble minded by pursuing the same course of legal commitment as governs admissions to the state hospital for the insane.

COLUMBUS, OHIO, August 14, 1913.

HON. CHARLES E. CAPPLE, Probate Judge, Chillicothe, Ohio.

DEAR SIR:—In your letter of June 7, 1913, you ask my opinion concerning the commitment of persons other than adults to the institution for feeble minded; also as to the fees in such cases, the number of physicians and their fees.

Under the old laws relating to this institution (sections 1891 to 1904, General Code), the matters inquired of by you were extremely indefinite, except as to adults. But the last legislature, in 103 O. L., page 245, amended section 1902, General Code, so as to read as follows:

> "Feeble minded persons of such inoffensive habits as to make them proper subjects for classification and discipline in the institution, may be admitted, on pursuing the same course of legal commitment as governs admission to the state hospital for the insane."

This law became effective August 2, 1913.

This statute, as you will note, is not confined in its provisions to adults alone, but uses the word "persons," which is broad enough to include both adults and minors. This amendment was made to solve the difficulties and doubts suggested by you.

Very truly yours,
TIMOTHY S. HOGAN,
Attorney General.

PROBATE JUDGE SHALL BE ALLOWED FEES SPECIFIED IN SECTION 2901, FOR RECEIVING ON DEPOSIT THE AMOUNT OF A VERDICT IN APPROPRIATION PROCEEDINGS.

The probate judge, under authority of section 1603, General Code, shall be allowed the fees specified in section 2901, General Code, for receiving on deposit the amount of a verdict in appropriation proceedings, under authority of section 11059, General Code.

COLUMBUS, OHIO, August 8, 1913.

HON. H. C. WILCOX, Probate Judge, Elyria, Ohio.

DEAR SIR:—Under favor of July 3, 1913, you inquire as follows:

> "Whether under section 2901, of the General Code, a commission of one per centum upon the first one thousand dollars and one-fourth per centum upon the cases of one thousand dollars, should be taxed as costs in cases where deposit is made with the probate judge of the amount of verdict in appropriation cases as provided in section 11059?"

Sections 2901, 11059 and 1603, of the General Code, are as follows:

> "Section 2901. * * * for receiving and disbursing money other than costs and fees paid to such clerks in pursuance of an order of court or on judgments, and which has not been collected by the sheriff or other proper officer or order of execution to be taxed against the party charged with the payment of such money, a commission of one per centum on the first one thousand dollars and one-fourth of one per centum on all exceeding one thousand dollars; * * *."
> "Section 11059. Upon the payment of the party entitled thereto, or deposit with the probate judge of the amount of the verdict, and such costs as lawfully accrued in the case up to the time against the corporation, it will be entitled to take possession of and hold the property, rights or interests so appropriated, for the uses and purposes for which the appropriation was sought, as set forth in the petition. The judge shall enter of record an order to that effect, and if necessary, proper process shall be issued to place the corporation in possession thereof.
> "Section 1603. For other services for which compensation is not otherwise provided by law, the probate judge shall be allowed the same fees as are allowed the clerk of the court of common pleas for similar services."

Under section 1603, General Code, the probate judge is allowed the same fees as are allowed the clerk of the court of common pleas for services similar to those performed by the probate judge for all work for which a specific fee is not otherwise provided in the statutes. I nowhere find any provision for payment of a fee to a probate judge expressly for receiving and disbursing moneys paid to the court in pursuance of an order of court or on a judgment.

Section 11059 provides the fee which the clerk of the court of common pleas is entitled to receive for receiving such money.

Under authority of section 1603, General Code, therefore, I conclude that the probate judge shall be allowed the fees specified in section 2901 for receiving on deposit the amount of a verdict in appropriation proceedings under authority of section 11059.

Yours very truly,

TIMOTHY S. HOGAN,

Attorney General.

PROBATION OFFICERS MAY CARRY CONCEALED WEAPONS AFTER THEY FILE THE PROPER BOND REQUIRED BY LAW.

Under the provisions of section 12819, General Code, probation officers are specially appointed officers of the juvenile court and when they give the bond required by law, they may carry concealed weapons in the discharge of their duties.

COLUMBUS, OHIO, September 12, 1913.

HON. JOHN W. DAVIS, Probate Judge, Youngstown, Ohio.

DEAR SIR:—In your letter of August 27, 1913, you say:

> "As judge of the juvenile court of Mahoning county, I hereby request of you, at your earliest convenience, a construction of section 12819 of the General Code of Ohio, as amended in 103 Ohio Laws at page 553, as to whether or not taking this section of the Code in connection with section 1663, or any other section covering police duties, as to whether or not it will be necessary for my chief probation officer or any of his assistants to give bond to entitle him or them to carry concealed weapons, or is he or they exempt from being required to give bond."

Section 12819, General Code (103 O. L., 555), provides that sheriffs, regularly appointed police officers of incorporated cities and villages, regularly elected constables, and special officers as provided in sections 2833, 4373, 10070, 10108 and 12857 of the General Code, may go armed when on duty. Your probation officers do not fall within any of the above sections, provisions or enumerations; and cannot carry concealed weapons thereunder. This section 12819, however, further provides that deputy sheriffs and *specially appointed police officers (except those appointed or called into service under the five sections above quoted), may go armed, if they first give bond of $1,000.00 to the state, approved by the clerk of the court of common pleas, conditioned according to law.

If your probation officers can carry concealed weapons at all, the authority so to do must be found in the above provision. Probation officers are special officers of the juvenile court, under section 1662, General Code. That they possess the powers of sheriffs and police officers in serving processes and making arrests, and calling other officers to aid them, is manifest from the last part of section 1663, General Code, which reads as follows:

> "* * * He shall serve the warrants and other process of the court within or without the county, and in that respect is hereby clothed with the powers and authority of sheriffs. He may make arrests without warrant upon reasonable information or upon view of the violation of any of the provisions of this chapter, detain the person so arrested pending the issuance of a warrant, and perform such other duties, incident to their offices, as the judge directs. All sheriffs, deputy sheriffs, constables, marshals and police officers shall render assistance to probation officers in the performance of their duties, when requested so to do."

This clearly constitutes probation officers, specially appointed officers of the juvenile court, and when they give the bond required by law, they can carry concealed weapons while in the discharge of their duties. Very truly yours,

TIMOTHY S. HOGAN,
Attorney General.

WHERE PROCEEDINGS IN THE SALE OF REAL ESTATE ARE STARTED AND NOT FINISHED, THE FEES FOR SUCH WORK SHOULD BE CHARGED AS IN MISCELLANEOUS CASES.

Where proceedings for the sale of real estate are instituted and were dismissed before the sales were completed the flat rate of twelve dollars should not be charged, but the charge should be made as a miscellaneous case.

COLUMBUS, OHIO, October 8, 1913.

HON. HOMER O. DORSEY, Probate Judge, Findlay, Ohio.

DEAR SIR:—I have your letter of September 11, 1913, in which you inquire:

> "Please inform us how to charge in cases where the proceeding is started but not finished; for instance, we now have a couple of sales of real estate that were dismissed before they were completed. Shall we charge the flat rate of $12.00, even though no record is made, or figure the costs just the same as any other miscellaneous case?"

Section 1601, General Code, in so far as applicable to your question reads: "For petition for sale of real estate twelve dollars," and your inquiry goes to the question whether once a petition is filed you should charge the twelve dollars in every case, or when a petition is filed and for some reason the cause is dismissed or discontinued, you should only tax and collect the fees chargeable for the work done.

Inasmuch as different cases furnish very different amounts of labor for a probate judge, I take it that the legislature attempted to fix a flat rate of twelve dollars, as being enough in excess of the fees in one and below another to make a fair average compensation in all. However, that does not satisfy me that it was intended that the legislature intended a flat charge of twelve dollars in each case where a petition was filed, and I am of opinion that when a petition to sell real estate is filed and disposed of prior to making an order of sale, and selling, that fees should be charged as in miscellaneous cases.

Very truly yours,
TIMOTHY S. HOGAN,
Attorney General.

IT IS PURELY DISCRETIONARY ON THE PART OF THE JUVENILE COURT AS TO WHETHER THEY SHALL GIVE NOTICE TO THE BOARD OF COUNTY VISITORS OF THE HOLDING OF COURT—COUNTY VISITORS ARE NOT REQUIRED TO ATTEND THIS COURT UNLESS THEY RECEIVE NOTICE TO DO SO.

The matter of giving notice to the board of county visitors is purely discretionary on the part of the juvenile court. The said board of county visitors has no statutory authority to recommend to the juvenile court what its action should be in any case. The board is not required to attend juvenile court unless the said court sees fit to notify them. Any attendance of such board without notice from the court is purely discretionary on the part of the individual members thereof.

COLUMBUS, OHIO, November 19, 1913.

HON. C. E. CAPPLE, Probate Judge, Chillicothe, Ohio.

DEAR SIR:—In your letter of October 4, 1913, you say:

> "I should be much pleased to have an opinion from your office as to whether or not Senate Bill No. 18 as shown on pages 864, etc., of volume 103 of Laws of Ohio, repeals and does away with sections 2975 and 7782 of the General Code of Ohio, requiring notice to the board of county visitors of proceedings in actions to commit to boys' and girls' homes, etc.
> "Also, if there is any law at all at the present time that gives boards of county visitors any authority at all in the way of recommending to the juvenile court as to what its action should be in any case, and any law at all requiring that said board or its members should have any notice as to any proceedings in juvenile court, or in any way be recognized by said court in juvenile matters."

Former section 2975, General Code, provided that in proceedings to commit a child under sixteen years to the boys' industrial school, or girls' industrial home, notice shall be given to the board of county visitors of such proceedings; and that it should be the duty of such board to attend as a body, or committee, and protect the interests of such child.

Former section 7782, General Code, provided that in every case of complaint against a child involving commitment to a children's home or a juvenile reformatory, the board of county visitors shall be notified and must attend; and the record was required to show such notice and attendance.

On April 28, 1913, section 2975, General Code, was amended, so as to read that notice may be given of such proceedings to the board of county visitors. (103 O. L., p. 888.)

On the same date, section 7782, General Code, was amended so as to read that the board of county visitors may be notified; and if so notified, said board shall attend. The order of commitment may show such notice and attendance. (103 O. L., p. 905.)

The present statutes on the subject, leave the matter of notice to the board of county visitors purely discretionary on the part of the juvenile court. The said board of county visitors has no statutory authority to recommend to the juvenile court what its action should be in any case.

If the juvenile court sees fit not to notify the said board of visitors, they are not required to attend. The board is not, as a matter of law, entitled to any notice from the said court of its proceedings in such cases.

Any attendance of such board, without notice from the said court, would be purely voluntary on the part of the individual members thereof; and they would have no more rights than any other citizens who might volunteer their presence or advice.

Very truly yours,

TIMOTHY S. HOGAN,

Attorney General.

A COMMON PLEAS JUDGE HAS AUTHORITY TO MAKE ALLOWANCE OF FEES TO COMMITTEE APPOINTED TO INVESTIGATE CHARGES FILED AGAINST A MEMBER OF THE BAR—SUCH EXPENSES MAY BE PAID FROM COUNTY TREASURY WITHOUT FIRST BEING PRESENTED TO THE COUNTY COMMISSIONERS.

The judge of the common pleas court has a right under section 1710, General Code, to make an allowance of fees to members of a committee appointed by the court to investigate certain charges filed against a member of the bar within his jurisdiction, and to make an order for reimbursement of their expenses incurred under such appointment, and the bill may be paid from the county treasury without first being presented to the county commissioners.

COLUMBUS, OHIO, November 18, 1913.

HON. JOHN M. BRODERICK, Judge, Court of Common Pleas, Marysville, Ohio.

DEAR SIR:—I have your inquiry of November 14, 1913, in regard to allowance of a fee to members of a committee, by you appointed, to investigate certain charges filed against a member of the bar within your jurisdiction, and to make an order for reimbursement to them of their expenses incurred under your appointment.

Section 1710, General Code, reads:

> "The court in which such charges or written motion is filed, shall allow to the person or persons appointed to file and prosecute the charges, or to resist the modification of any decrees for their services in either case, such sum as by the court may be deemed reasonable, not exceeding one hundred dollars to each person, together with the costs and expenses incurred by them in such proceedings. The amounts so allowed shall be paid from the county treasury of the county wherein such proceedings are had, upon the warrant of the county auditor. If such charges or motion are filed in the supreme court, such allowances shall be paid from the state treasury."

To my mind the appointment to investigate and report to the court comes within the scope of "person or persons appointed to file and prosecute the charges;" that you have full power under this section to make allowances, and that they may be paid from the county treasury without being first presented to the commissioners.

Very truly yours,

TIMOTHY S. HOGAN,

Attorney General.

3.

PROSECUTING ATTORNEY—ANNUAL SALARY PAYABLE ACCORDING TO OFFICIAL, NOT CALENDAR YEAR—NOT ENTITLED TO EXCESS COMPENSATION FOR PERIOD OF SERVICE EXTENDING BEYOND CALENDAR YEAR.

Section 3002, General Code, providing for the annual salary of the prosecuting attorney, contemplates such payment for the official and not for the calendar year. The prosecuting attorney, therefore, is not entitled to compensation in excess of the annual salary provided for, for services intervening the end of the calendar year and the first Monday in January when he forsakes office.

COLUMBUS, OHIO, January 2, 1913.

HON. JAMES W. GALBRAITH, Prosecuting Attorney, Mansfield, Ohio.

DEAR SIR:—Under date of December 31, 1912, you advise me that you entered upon your second term as prosecuting attorney on January 2, 1911, and that your successor takes office January 6, 1913. You desire my opinion as to whether you would be legally entitled to a portion of the monthly salary for January, 1913, i. e., from the 1st to 5th, inclusive.

Section 2909, General Code, provides:

> "There shall be elected biennially, in each county, a prosecuting attorney, who shall hold his office for two years, beginning on the first Monday of January after his election."

Section 3003, General Code, provides:

> "Each prosecuting attorney shall receive an annual salary, not to exceed sixty dollars for each full one thousand of the first fifteen thousand of the population of the county as shown by the federal census next preceding his election; fifty dollars for each full one thousand of the second fifteen thousand of such population of the county; sixty dollars for each full one thousand of the third fifteen thousand of such population of the county; forty dollars per thousand for each full thousand of the fourth fifteen thousand of such population of the county; thirty dollars per thousand for each full one thousand of the fifth fifteen thousand of such population of the county; ten dollars per thousand for each full one thousand of the sixth fifteen thousand of such population of the county; ten dollars per thousand for each full one thousand of such population of the county in excess of ninety thousand.
> "No prosecuting attorney shall receive a salary in excess of five thousand five hundred dollars. Such salary shall be paid in equal monthly installments, from the general fund, and shall be in full payment for all services required by law to be rendered in an official capacity on behalf of the county or its officers, whether in criminal or civil matters."

On a consideration of section 2909, General Code, supra, it will be seen that the prosecuting attorney is to hold his office for two years, beginning on the first Monday of January next after his election. As I view the wording of this section the year referred to therein is what might be considered as the official year of the prosecuting attorney; that is to say, the year running from the first Monday of January of one year to the first Monday of January of the next succeeding year and does not refer at all to the calendar year.

This same construction is to be given to section 3003, General Code, supra, which fixes the salary of the prosecuting attorney, and provides that he shall receive "an annual salary," and that "such salary shall be paid in equal monthly installments." In other words, as I interpret the statutes, they mean that the salary of the prosecuting attorney, as fixed under section 3003, is to be paid for each full offiical year whether the same contain more or less days than the calendar year. In the instance cited by you your official year began on January 2, 1911, to wit: the first Monday of January of that year, and continued until January 1, 1912, and your second official year in this term began on January 1, 1912, and continues until January 6, 1913. For each of the two official years so set forth you are entitled to the amount of compensation due you on an annual basis as fixed in section 3003, General Code, and no more.

Very truly yours,

TIMOTHY S. HOGAN,

Attorney General.

INFIRMARY SUPERINTENDENT—COUNTY COMMISSIONERS—POWERS AND DUTIES OF, AS TO INVESTIGATION OF SUBJECTS FOR RELIEF—INITIAL INVESTIGATION MADE BY OFFICERS OF TOWNSHIP AND MUNICIPALITY—POWERS OF COUNTY COMMISSIONERS TO EMPLOY HELP FOR INVESTIGATION—TRAVELING EXPENSES OF COUNTY COMMISSIONERS AND HELP.

Under sections 3481, 3482, 3484, General Code, all initial investigations of cases entitled to relief in the county infirmary, whether found within or outside of the county, must be made by the township trustees or by the proper officers of the municipality, enumerated in section 3481, General Code, residing within the township in which the subject for relief is found.

Under section 2544, General Code, providing that the superintendent of the infirmary shall be satisfied that the subject for relief, found within the county and certified to him by the officers enumerated in section 3481, General Code, is entitled to be received within the infirmary and under section 2526, General Code, providing that such superintendent shall have full authority to discharge inmates from the infirmary, the superintendent of the infirmary is impliedly given power to make such investigation as may be reasonably necessary to satisfy his judgment as to the validity of receiving the subject into the infirmary.

The county commissioners themselves are given no duties with reference to investigations of any character.

Under section 2522, General Code, providing that the county commissioners shall make all contracts necessary for the county infirmary and prescribe rules and regulations for its good government, the commissioners may employ help to assist the superintendent in making necessary investigations, or under section 2533, they may order the superintendent himself to make the same. Under the same statutes they may provide for the payment of traveling expenses incurred by such help or by the superintendent in making such investigation.

Inasmuch as section 3002, General Code, providing for compensation of the county commissioners, formerly provided for the allowance of traveling expenses and for their certification and approval by the prosecuting attorney and the probate judge, and as such provisions have been done away with, the legislative intent is apparent that the county commissioners can in no event be allowed for traveling expenses in the performance of any duties incumbent upon them.

COLUMBUS, OHIO, January 7, 1913.

HON. RALPH A. BEARD, Prosecuting Attorney, Youngstown, Ohio.

DEAR SIR:—Under date of December 4th, you submit for my opinion thereon, the following questions:

> "First: Under the law abolishing the office of infirmary directors and providing for the commissioners taking over their duties, are the county commissioners allowed expenses for investigating cases of outside relief or for going into another county or state to investigate applicants for relief who properly belong in this county?
> "Second: Are the county commissioners allowed to hire whatever help is necessary for the investigation of such cases where complaint is made or are they supposed under the law to investigate them themselves?
> "Third: Are the county commissioners allowed their expenses when traveling throughout their county or adjoining counties when in the performance of their ordinary duties and in the joint county ditch cases?

"Fourth: Whose duty under the law is it to investigate the different complaints of the poor and needy of the county under the above law, the superintendent of the infirmary, the township trustees, or the county commissioners; if the county commissioners what remuneration or expense if any, are they allowed for investigating the different complaints throughout the county?

"Fifth: Can the county commissioners employ an additional clerk to investigate reported cases of applicants for relief under the infirmary law, and can his expense be allowed for investigating said cases?

"Sixth: Are the county commissioners allowed expenses when five counties are jointly building a tuberculosis hospital, in traveling back and forth in the different counties to the necessary meetings?

"These questions have arisen under the new law taking over the duties of the infirmary directors by the commissioners and the forming of a tuberculosis hospital by five adjoining counties."

For convenience, your questions may be resolved into the following:

First: What are the powers and duties of the county commissioners and others under the new law with reference to the investigation of the complaints of the poor and needy within the county, both as to cases of outside relief and as to cases to be cared for within the infirmary?

Second: What are the powers and duties of the county commissioners with reference to the investigation of cases of persons who are found outside of the county, but entitled to relief therein?

Third: What are the powers of the commissioners as regards the hiring of help necessary for the investigation of cases within the county?

Fourth: What are their powers as regards the employment of help in the investigation of cases outside of this county?

Fifth: What powers have they to allow expenses for such help incurred in such investigations?

Sixth: Are county commissioners allowed expenses when engaged in the investigation necessary within the range of their duties pertaining to the county infirmary?

Seventh: What expenses may the county commissioners be allowed in the performance of their general duties, in joint county ditch cases and when attending meetings in various counties, made necessary by the work of jointly building a tuberculosis hospital?

Answering the first of these questions, sections 3481, 2544 and 2526, provide as follows:

"Section 3481. When complaint is made to the township trustees or the proper officers of a municipal corporation that a person therein requires public relief or support, one or more of such officers, or some other duly authorized person, shall visit the person needing relief, forthwith, to ascertain his name, age, sex, color, nativity, length of residence in the county, previous habits and present condition, and in what township and county in this state he is legally settled. The information so ascertained shall be transmitted to the township clerk, or proper officer of the municipal corporation, and recorded on the proper records. No relief or support shall be given to a person without such visitation and investigation, except that in cities, where there is maintained a public charity, organization, or other benevolent association, which investigates and keeps a record of the facts relating to persons who receive or apply for relief, the infirmary directors, trustees, or officers of such city shall accept such investigation and information and may grant relief upon the approval and recommendation of such organization.

"Section 2544. In any county having an infirmary, when the trustees of a township, after making the inquiry provided by law, are of the opinion that the person complained of is entitled to admission to the county infirmary, they shall forthwith transmit a statement of the facts to the superintendent of the infirmary, and if it appears that such person is legally settled in the township or has no legal settlement in this state, or that such settlement is unknown, and the superintendent of the infirmary is satisfied that he should become a county charge, (they) shall forthwith receive and provide for him in such institution, or otherwise, and thereupon the liability of the township shall cease. The superintendent of the infirmary shall not be liable for any relief furnished, or expenses incurred by the township trustees.

"Section 2526. The superintendent of the infirmary shall receive therein any person who produces to him an order or voucher required by law, and shall require all persons therein to perform such reasonable and moderate labor as is suited to their age and bodily strength. The superintendent shall sell all products of the infirmary farm not necessary for its use, and pay all moneys arising therefrom into the county treasury to the credit of the poor fund, to be paid out by the board of county commissioners as exigency requires. The superintendent of the infirmary shall have full authority to discharge inmates from the infirmary."

Section 3481, General Code, provides that when complaint is made to the township trustees or to the proper officers of a municipal corporation, one or more of such officers or some duly authorized person shall make investigation; and further provides that no relief or support shall be given without such visitation and investigation, except that the cities where is maintained a public charity, organization or benevolent association, which investigates and keeps a record of the facts relating to persons who receive or apply for relief, the infirmary directors shall accept such investigation and information and grant relief upon the approval and recommendation of such organization.

In section 2544, General Code, the word "they" enclosed in parenthesis, as set out, has no antecedent other than the term superintendent of the infirmary. This word "they" should therefore read "he," and it undoubtedly appears as it does, as a result of a neglect to properly conform this pronoun to the change made in the statute. This section provides that when the trustees of a township, after making due inquiry, have transmitted a statement of the facts to the superintendent of the infirmary, the subject of the complaint shall be received into the infirmary or provided for otherwise by the superintendent, if it appears that he is a proper subject for the jurisdiction of the county; and if, furthermore, the superintendent of the infirmary is satisfied that he shall become a county charge.

Section 2526, General Code, provides that the superintendent shall receive any person who produces to him on order or voucher required by law; and further provides that the superintendent shall have full authority to discharge inmates from the infirmary.

It is clear that under section 3481, General Code, the duties of investigation in the first instance, rest entirely upon the officers enumerated in that section, to wit: township trustees, the proper officers of a municipal corporation, some other duly authorized person, or the proper officers of a benevolent charity association in a city. Neither the county commissioners nor the superintendent of the infirmary have any duties or any express powers as regards initial investigations.

It is furthermore clear that under section 2544, General Code, the discretion of admitting persons certified by the officers enumerated in section 3481, General Code, into the county infirmary, is vested, not in the county commissioners, but in the superintendent of the infirmary, to whom it must appear, under section 2544, that the person seeking relief is properly under the jurisdiction of the county and who must be satisfied that such person should become a county charge.

These statutes, insofar as duties of investigation are concerned, apply equally to cases of relief cared for outside the infirmary, as to cases cared for within the infirmary. They are the only authorities which I am able to find with reference to the investigation of cases calling for relief within the county, and I am, therefore, of the opinion that the county commissioners have no duties of themselves to make any investigations, but that under section 2544, the superintendent of the infirmary is impliedly given power to make such investigation as is necessary to satisfy himself as to the legal settlement and the general condition of the party seeking relief, after investigation and certification by the officers enumerated in section 3481, General Code.

Section 2526, provides that the superintendent of the infirmary shall receive therein any person who produces to him an order or voucher required by law, and I am of the opinion that this statute, which is carried into the present law from the old law, which provided that none should be received into the infirmary except upon the order or warrant of the trustees of the proper township, does not deprive the infirmary superintendent of the discretion which is clearly vested in him by section 2544, as to the receiving of inmates, inasmuch as the same statute confers upon the infirmary superintendent full authority to discharge inmates from the infirmary.

The first stipulation, that he shall receive therein any person who produces to him an order, etc., should be regarded as directory and not mandatory, and in fact merely declaratory of the very power that is set our in section 2544, General Code.

Answering question two, sections 3482, 3483 and 3484, provide as follows:

"Section 3482. When it has been so ascertained that a person requiring relief has a legal settlement in some other county of the state, such trustees or officers shall immediately notify the infirmary directors of the county in which the person is found, who, if his health permits, shall immediately remove the person to the infirmary of the county of his legal settlement If such person refuses to be removed, on the complaint being made by one of the infirmary directors, the probate judge of the county in which the person is found shall issue a warrant for such removal, and the county wherein the legal settlement of the person is, shall pay all expenses of such removal and the necessary charges for relief, and in case of death the expense of burial if a written notice is given infirmary directors thereof within twenty days after such legal settlement has been ascertained."

"Section 3483. Upon refusal or failure to pay such expenses, such infirmary directors may be compelled so to do by a civil action against them by the board of infirmary directors of the county from which such person is removed, in the court of common pleas of the county to which such removal is made. If such notice is not given within twenty days after such directors ascertain such person's residence, and within ninety days after such relief has been afforded, the directors of the infirmary where such person belongs shall not be liable for charges or expenditures accruing prior to such notice.

"Section 3484. When the trustees of a township in a county in the state in which there is no county infirmary ascertain that any person in such township, has a legal settlement in another county of the state, they shall immediately notify the infirmary directors thereof to remove such person to the infirmary of such county. Should his health permit, such infirmary directors shall immediately remove such person to their infirmary, and, if within twenty days after such legal settlement is ascertained, a written notice is given to them, pay all expenses theretofore, incurred for his relief in the township in which such person is found. Upon their refusal or failure to so remove such person, the trustees of such township may furnish him the necessary relief and collect the amount thereof from such infirmary directors by civil action, in the name of such township trustees, in the court of common pleas of the county in which such infirmary is situated."

These statutes present the difficulty of not having been conformed to the law abolishing infirmary directors. There should be no difficulty, however, in reading the words "county commissioners" where words "infirmary directors" now stand. Under these statutes, as in the statutes cited in answer to question one, the initial investigation must be made by the officers enumerated in section 3481, General Code.

Under section 3482, General Code, when the county wherein the person requiring relief is found, has an infirmary, a statement of facts must be submitted by the officers making the investigation, as provided by section 3481, to the infirmary directors (now county commissioners), of their own county who shall immediately remove such person to the infirmary of the legal settlement.

Section 3484, General Code, provides for cases found in counties having no infirmary, in which the subject has legal settlement in an outside county, in which there has been established an infirmary. A statement of facts must be submitted by the township trustees to the infirmary directors (county commissioners) of the county of legal settlement, who shall immediately remove the subject to their own infirmary. There is nothing in these expressly requiring the county commissioners or anybody else to review the statements of facts submitted by the proper officers, nor is there any requirements akin to that of section 2544 (which applies only to cases within the county), providing that the superintendent of the infirmary shall be satisfied as to the legal settlement and general qualifications of the subject for relief. On the contrary, the statutes provide that the respective authorities shall immediately remove the subject to the respective infirmaries, upon receipt of the statement of facts. These provisions would seem to vest the officers making initial investigations with full power to determine the legal settlement and general rights to relief on the parts of the subjects.

In view, however, of the power vested in the superintendent, by section 2526, above quoted, to discharge inmates from the infirmary, the determination of those officers in this respect, cannot be deemed absolutely conclusive. The power to discharge, comprehends the power to refuse admission and the superintendent is thereby given impliedly the power to use the utmost economical and efficient means to determine the right of the contemplated inmate to relief, and I am therefore of the opinion that if a superintendent has reasonable doubt on this point and the necessary facts cannot be ascertained without investigation, he may make such investigation as is necessary to enable him to form his judgment.

In direct answer to question two, therefore, the county commissioners are given no duties to make investigations with reference to cases found outside of the county. The duties of making initial investigations rest upon the officers of the locality in which the subject is found, as provided by section 3481, General Code.

The superintendent of the infirmary may make only such investigaton as is necessary to determine the correctness of the statement of facts submitted by the aforesaid officers.

Questions three and four may be answered together. Sections 2522 and 2523 provide as follows:

"Section 2522. The board of county commissioners shall make all contracts and purchases necessary for the county infirmary and prescribe such rules and regulations as it deems proper for its management and good government, and to promote sobriety, morality and industry among inmates. The commissioners shall keep a separate book in which the clerk, or if there is no commissioner's clerk, the county auditor, shall keep a separate record of their transactions respecting the county infirmary, which book shall at all times be open to public inspection.

"Section 2523. The county commissioners shall appoint a superintendent, who shall reside in some apartments of the infirmary or other building contiguous thereto, and shall receive such compensation for his services as they determine. The superintendent shall perform such duties as the commissioners impose upon him, and be governed in all respects by their rules and regulations. He shall not be removed by them except for good and sufficient cause. The commissioners shall not appoint one of their number superintendent, nor shall any commissioner be eligible to any office in the infirmary or receive any compensation as physician, or otherwise, directly or indirectly wherein the appointing power is vested in such board."

Sections 2535 and 2537, providing for the report of the superintendent of the infirmary and the publication of accounts by the county commissioners, expressly provide for a statement of wages paid employes.

Section 2522, therefore, gives the county commissioners power to make any contracts and purchases nesessary for the county infirmary and to make rules and regulations as deemed proper for its management and good government, and confers upon the county commissioners power to employ such help as is necessary for the proper administration of the infirmary. Section 2523 compels the superintendent to perform such duties as the commissioners impose upon him.

Under these statutes, the commissioners may, if necessary, employ help for the purpose of making such investigation as may be essential for the superintendent to form his judgment in the exercise of the discretion vested in him by sections 2544 and 2526, General Code, with reference to the admission of inmates found within or outside of the county; or they may order the superintendent to make such investigation himself.

In answer to question five, I am of the opinion that under section 2522, General Code, the county commissioners may fix a compensation for employes, and if they deem necessary, may provide payment for necessary expenses incurred in the performance of their duties, or under section 2523, General Code, they may, in fixing the compensation of the superintendent of the infirmary, provide for the allowance of the expense incurred by that official when the investigations are made by him in person.

Questions six and seven may be answered together. Under date of November 26, 1912, in an opinion to the bureau of inspection and supervision of public offices, which I am herewith enclosing, I held that section 3002, General Code, providing for compensation and traveling expenses of infirmary directors, does not apply to county commissioners.

As to payment of expenses incurred in the performance generally, of the duties of the county commissioners, permit me to quote the following:

"A public official in performing the duties of his office may incur miscellaneous expenses which are a proper charge upon public funds, and this is especially true where the expense was one incurred in the performance of a duty in which the public corporation has a direct and beneficial interest, or one which rests upon it as a duty or as an agency of the sovereign. For such disbursements a public officer is clearly entitled as a matter of right to a reimbursement.

(Abbott on Municipal Corporations, vol. 2, page 1652).

The payment of such expenses, however, has largely become a subject of stautory provision. Thus, in 11 Cyc., page 386, the following is stated:

"In some states members of a county board in counties of a certain class are allowed a gross sum as an annual salary in full payment for all services rendered and travel performed by them in discharge of their duties. So in some jurisdictions it is provided that in counties of a certain class, the pay of members of the board for their services, including regular and special sessions shall not exceed a specified sum to each commissioner in any one year; and in one jurisdiction this is the rule in respect to counties of all classes."

And on page 387, the following language is used:

"In a number of jurisdictions, in addition to compensation, provisions are made for the allowance to members of the board of certain items of reasonable and necessary expenses incurred in the performance of their duties, as for instance, traveling expenses, expenses incurred in the sale of goods manufactured in the county house of correction, or any other reasonable and necessary expense in addition to compensation and mileage incurred when necessarily traveling on official business outside of the county."

The question of allowance of expenses to county commissioners in Ohio, therefore, becomes a question of the intent of the statutes.

Section 3001, General Code, provides as follows:

"The annual compensation of each county commissioner shall be determined as follows:

" 'In each county in which on the twentieth day of December, 1911, the aggregate of the tax duplicate for real estate and personal property is five million dollars or less, such compensation shall be nine hundred dollars, and in addition thereto, in each county in which such aggregate is more than five million dollars, three dollars on each full one hundred thousand dollars of the amount of such duplicate in excess of five million dollars. That the compensation of each county commissioner for the year 1912, and each year thereafter, shall not in the aggregate exceed 115 per cent. of the compensation paid to each county commissioner for the year 1911. In counties where ditch work is carried on by the commissioners, in addition to the salary herein provided, each commissioner shall receive three dollars for each day of time he is actually employed in ditch work; the total amount so received for such ditch work not to exceed three hundred dollars in any one year. Such compensation shall be in full payment of all services rendered as such commissioner and shall not in any case exceed four thousand dollars per annum. Such compensation shall be in equal monthly installments from the county treasury upon the warrant of the county auditor."

A study of the history of this statute discloses the fact that formerly the legislature saw fit to expressly provide for traveling expenses and other expenses of the county commissioners, and that wherever such expenses were allowed, it was required that they be certified to by the prosecuting attorney and approved by the probate judge. It has furthermore been a custom of the Ohio legislature to expressly provide for expenses when they are incidental to the office.

In view of these facts, therefore, I am of the opinion that when the legislature, in the statute, as it now appears, omitted the provision, formerly made, for expenses, and also did away with the requirement for their certification by the prosecuting attorney and their approval by the probate judge, it was the intent that the salary allowed should cover the same and be in full payment of all services and all expenses incurred.

In direct answer to questions six and seven, the county commissioners can in no event be reimbursed for expenses incurred by them in any duties performed by them.

Very truly yours,
TIMOTHY S. HOGAN,
Attorney General.

TAXES AND TAXATION—POLL AND LABOR TAX—CONSTITUTIONAL AMENDMENT.

By virtue of the amendment of proposal 2 of the constitutional amendment, providing that no services may be required which may be commuted in money or other thing of value, sections 3375 to 3384, General Code, providing for certain labor on highways or the commuting of the same by the payment of $3.00 in lieu thereof, have been repealed.

COLUMBUS, OHIO, January 4, 1912.

HON. L. T. CROMLEY, Prosecuting Attorney, Mt. Vernon, Ohio.

DEAR SIR:—I am in receipt of your letter of December 21, 1912, in which you inquire:

> "Is it not a fact that sections 3375 to 3384, inclusive, of the General Code of Ohio, are repealed by the adoption of proposition 32 of the constitutional amendments recently voted upon, and especially by section 1 of article XII?"

Section 1 of article XII of the constitution of 1851 reads:

> "The levying of taxes by the poll is grievous and oppressive; therefore the general assembly shall never levy a poll tax for county or state purposes."

Proposal No. 32 changes this so that it reads:

> "No poll tax shall ever be levied in this state, or service required which may be commuted in money or other thing of value."

Under the constitution of 1851, the supreme court of this state held that,

> "Section 4717 of the Revised Statutes, which provides for two days' labor on the public highways of this state is not in conflict with the constitution and is a valid law." (Dennis vs. Simon, 51 O. S., 233, syl.)

The decision of this case is found in a per curiam and reasons are not given for the conclusion reached. However, we encounter the added sentence "or service required which may be commuted in money or other thing of value" which clearly inhibits the doing of that which is expressly provided by section 3376 of the General Code.

The serious question presented, however, is whether the provision for commutation found in section 3376 has the effect of nullifying the provisions of section 3375.

Section 3375 is found as section 4 of the act of April 2, 1906; 3376, as section 5; 3377 as section 8; and all present the appearance of being parts of a scheme by which certain persons were required to perform two days' labor on the public highways, pay three dollars in lieu thereof, or be subject to a suit for collection.

That they are dependent sections seems apparent, and that the inhibition of a poll tax, and also the requirement of service which may be commuted in money, will prevent the legislature doing that which was permissible under the constitution of 1851, must necessarily follow.

I am, therefore, of the opinion that the amendment of section 1 of article XII of the constitution prevents the enforcement of the sections of the statute to which you call attention, and calls for their repeal.

Very truly yours,
TIMOTHY S. HOGAN,
Attorney General.

BOARD OF EDUCATION—COMPENSATION FOR ATTENDANCE AT INSTITUTE MUST BE ALLOWED TO BOTH A TEACHER EMPLOYED AT TIME OF INSTITUTE AND TO ONE EMPLOYED WITHIN THREE MONTHS SUBSEQUENT THERETO.

Under the decisions interpreting the same, it is comprehended by section 7870, General Code, that teachers should be allowed payment for attendance at the teachers' institute (1) when such teacher is employed at the time of attendance at such institute, (2) when a teacher, though not employed at such time, is employed within three months subsequent thereto. Therefore, when a board of education of a township school district, prior to the teachers' institute of 1912, hired a teacher then holding a temporary certificate to teach school, and was obliged to dismiss said teacher upon the termination of said certificate, and employ another in the place, under section 7870, General Code, both of said teachers should be allowed compensation therein provided, in addition to their regular salary for attendance at such teachers' institute.

COLUMBUS, OHIO, January 2, 1913.

HON. ERNEST THOMPSON, Prosecuting Attorney, Bellefontaine, Ohio.

DEAR SIR:—I beg to acknowledge receipt of your inquiry under date of December 5th, 1912, which is as follows:

> "The board of education of a township school district in this county prior to the teachers' institute of 1912, hired a teacher then holding a temporary certificate as provided in section 7826 of the General Code of Ohio, to teach school. This teacher was to teach the school during the life of the temporary certificate, and for the remainder of the school term providing said teacher duly passed the required examination. This teacher taught the first month of school but failed to pass the teachers' examination.
> "The board of education employed another teacher to begin at the close of the first month of school and finish the term, which would have been taught by the first teacher had this first teacher received a certificate. The first teacher was employed at the time of the teachers' institute and the second teacher commenced teaching within three months after the institute closed. Both teachers had attended institute and were properly certified by the officers thereof.
> "Both teachers have handed their bill and certificate to the same board of education for institute pay, as provided by law. Which of these two teachers should the board of education pay for attendance at the teachers' institute? Should they pay both persons for such attendance?"

In reply to your inquiry I desire to say that section 7870 of the General Code provides for the payment of teachers while attending institutes as follows:

"Section 7870. The boards of education of all school districts are required to pay the teachers and superintendents of their respective districts their regular salary for the week they attend the institute upon the teachers or superintendents presenting certificates of full regular daily attendance, signed by the president and secretary of such institute. If the institute is held when the public schools are not in session, such teachers or superintendents shall be paid two dollars a day for actual attendance as certified by the president and secretary of such institute, for not less than four nor more than six days of actual attendance, to be paid as an addition to the first month's salary after the institute, by the board of education by which such teacher or superintendent is then employed. In case he or she is unemployed at the time of the institute, such salary shall be paid by the board next employing such teacher or superintendent if the term of employment begins within three months after the institute closes."

Construing said section the court in the case of Reid vs. Board of Education, 16 O. D., 414, held as follows:

"A teacher in the public schools may, under favor of the provisions of Revised Statutes 4091 (Lan. 6683), recover compensation from the board of education for attending a teacher's institute, although the same was held during the summer vacation, if such teacher was actually engaged in teaching at the time or began teaching within three months after the institute closed."

On page 420 of the opinion the court says:

"In my judgment the legislature intended to provide for two very simple and proper conditions:

"First. Pay for the teacher who is actually engaged in teaching when the time to attend this institute arrived.

"Second. Pay for all other teachers, subject, however to the limitation that they must begin teaching some public school in this state within three months after the institute closes."

In the case of Beverstock, a taxpayer vs. Board of Education et al., 75 O. S., 144, the court in construing said section held:

"When a board of education has employed teachers for the public schools of the district for the school year ensuing thereafter, and such teachers, during vacation and after their employment, attend the county institute during the week it is held in the same county said board is authorized by the provisions of section 4091, Revised Statutes, to pay them for the institute week as an addition to their first month's salary as fixed by the terms of their employment, and at the same rate on presentation of the certificates prescribed by said section."

On page 150 of the opinion the court said:

"Boards of education are required to pay the teachers their regular salary for the week upon presentation of the proper certificate of their attendance at the institute. In other words, the salaries continue during that week. Then it is said: 'The same to be paid as an addition to the first month's salary after said institute by the board of education by which said teacher is then employed, or, in case he is unemployed at the time of the institute, then by the board of education next employing said teacher, provided the term of said employment begins within three months after said institute closes.' 'The same to be paid'—that is, salary at the same rate, is to be paid for the institute week to the teachers who then are under employment for the ensuing school year, that they will receive after service under such employment begins, and this rate of salary is to be paid as an addition to the first month's salary after the institute closes. Or, put it in other words, the teacher shall be paid for the week spent at the institute on the basis of the salary agreed upon for teaching in the schools thereafter, and this shall be paid as an addition to the first month's salary earned after said institute."

In construing said section the court says at page 152 of the opinion that,

"The same construction of language will control cases where a teacher is not under employment at the time the institute is held. In this case, he is to be paid by the board next employing him after such institute, providing the term of said employment begins within three months after such institute closes. When he becomes so employed, his rate of compensation is fixed, and on presentation of the proper certificate, showing that he had attended the preceding institute for a week, his compensation for that week is ascertainable and his right to receive it complete, if his term of employment begins within three months after said institute closes."

Therefore, in view of the language used in said statute and the decisions cited, I am of the opinion that both teachers are entitled to be paid for attending the teachers' institute. The first teacher because he was employed at the time of the teachers' institute, and the second teacher because the term of his employment began within three months after the institute closed. In other words, both teachers come within the provisions of said section 7870 of the General Code.

Yours very truly,
TIMOTHY S. HOGAN,
Attorney General.

DITCHES—COUNTY COMMISSIONERS MUST COMPLY WITH MUNICIPAL REGULATIONS PERTAINING TO CONNECTION WITH SEWERS AND MUST INVESTIGATE WHETHER THE PRELIMINARY STEPS HAVE BEEN COMPLIED WITH BY COUNCIL IN FILING PETITION FOR DITCH.

Phe power given to construct and tile a ditch, implies the power to do whatever is necessary to accomplish such ends and when council has provided certain regulations pertaining to connection with its sewers, the county commissioners may comply with such regulations when the ditch constructed by them has an outlet in a city sewer.

Before the county commissioners may proceed upon a petition filed by a municipal corporation for a ditch, in accordance with section 6494, General Code, it is incumbent upon them to determine whether or not the preliminary requirements of such petition have been complied with by the council of the municipal corporation.

COLUMBUS, OHIO, December 19, 1912.

HON. HUGH R. GILMORE, Prosecuting Attorney, Eaton, Ohio.

DEAR SIR:—Under date of December 5, 1912, you requested the opinion of this department as follows:

> "A petition has been filed with the county commissioners asking for the construction of a certain county ditch under the terms and provisions of section 644 and sections following, said ditch lying wholly within the municipal corporation of Eaton. The mayor of the village has signed such petition, as provided in section 6494, General Code.
> "The village of Eaton has a sewerage system and the proposed outlet of the ditch is in a storm sewer of the village. The village by ordinance has established certain requirements for the connection with its sewers, such as cementing the joints of tile ditches draining into such sewers. Assuming that the commissioners find the ditch to be conducive to the public health, convenience and welfare, as required by section 6443, General Code, can they locate and establish the ditch and comply with the requirements of the village in connecting with the sewer?"

Sections 6443 and 6494 of the General Code provide as follows:

> "Section 6443. The board of county commissioners, at a regular or called session, when necessary to drain any lot, lands, public or corporate road or railroad, and it will be conducive to public health, convenience or welfare, in the manner provided in this chapter, may cause to be located and constructed, straightened, widened, altered, deepened, boxed or tiled, a ditch, drain or watercourse, or box or tile part thereof, or cause the channel of a river, creek or run, or part thereof, within such county to be improved by straightening, widening, deepening or changing it, or by removing from adjacent lands, timber, brush, trees or other substance liable to obstruct it. The commissioners may change either terminus of a ditch before its final location, if the object of the improvement will be better accomplished thereby.
> "Section 6494. The council of a municipal corporation, by resolution, may authorize the mayor to present a petition, signed by him officially, and a bond, to the county commissioners, to locate and construct a ditch described in the resolution, or authorize the mayor to sign officially a petition and bond for a ditch, to be presented by parties interested whose lands are without the limits of the corporation, whenever the improvement will be conducive to the public health, convenience or welfare of the whole or any portion of the inhabitants of the corporation. In such case, the commissioners shall count the municipal corporation as an individual petitioner, and may direct the surveyor or engineer to locate the improvement in accordance with the petition, whether wholly within or wholly without, or partly within and partly without the limits of the corporation. The surveyor or engineer, in making his schedule of lots and lands benefited, may enumerate such lots and lands within or without the corporate limits as are specially benefited, and also the municipal corporations which will receive benefits to the health and welfare of their inhabitants."

There can be no question of the power of a municipality to make reasonable regulations, such as the requirement referred to, with reference to connections with its sewers. Under the statutes above set out the county commissioners are given the power to construct and tile a ditch within a municipal corporation when the conditions of the chapter are complied with. The power to construct and tile a ditch comprehends the power to do whatever is essentially necessary to accomplish that end; and when council has made regulations regarding the connection stated, I am of the opinion that such connections constitute a necessary part of the work of constructing and tiling a ditch which requires an outlet into a city sewer. If the regulation is a reasonable and just one there is no reason why work done by the county commissioners should be exempted from these requirements. To hold otherwise would greatly impair the power of council to regulate its sewer construction and would also seriously hinder the ability of a municipal corporation to take advantage of these statutes providing for the construction of a county ditch within or partly within the limits of a municipality.

I, therefore, conclude that when the preliminary requirements have been complied with, the commissioners may construct and tile a ditch upon petition of the mayor of a municipal corporation as provided by section 6494, General Code, and in so doing should comply with the regulation of council providing certain requirements for connections with its sewers.

You next inquire:

> "Upon the filing of the petition, signed by the mayor, can the commissioners assume that the preliminary steps required by section 6494, General Code, have been complied with by the council, or would they be compelled to find whether or not such preliminary steps had been taken?"

I assume that the preliminary steps to which you refer are a proper resolution of council, authorizing the mayor to act, and the bond required by section 6494, General Code. The prudence and caution which it is incumbent upon every public officer to exercise in the performance of his duties, would compel the county commissioners to ascertain whether or not such conditions precedent have been fulfilled, as would be essential to give them jurisdiction to perform their work, and I am of the opinion that it is their duty to ascertain whether the preliminary requirements have been complied with.

Yours very truly,
TIMOTHY S. HOGAN,
Attorney General.

ROADS AND HIGHWAYS—COUNTY COMMISSIONERS MAY APPOINT TOWNSHIP TRUSTEES, SUPERINTENDENTS OF ROADS AND MAY PAY THEM COMPENSATION THEREFOR.

By virtue of sections 7445, 7447 and 7458, General Code, the county commissioners are constituted a board of turnpike directors to manage and control all roads within the county, and they may appoint suitable persons, superintendent of repair on such roads, and may compensate them for such work. Since the duties of the township trustees are not incompatible with the duties of such superintendents, they may be engaged by the county commissioners to perform such duties and may be compensated by them at a rate not to exceed $2.50 per day, in accordance with section 7458.

COLUMBUS, OHIO, December 18, 1912.

HON. W. J. SCHWENCK, Prosecuting Attorney, Bucyrus, Ohio.

DEAR SIR:—I beg to acknowledge receipt of your letter of December 13th, wherein you state:

> "On October 21st, I submitted to you the following question:
> "I desire to ask your opinion as to whether or not the township trustees can be appointed and paid the sum of $2.00 per day as superintendent of roads on which state aid money raised prior to 1911 is used. You understand that the county commissioners are issuing money in the various townships and have authorized the township trustees in their respective townships to superintend or inspect the repairing of the roads that are being repaired with state aid money. We now have several bills filed by the township trustees and we are holding up the payment of these bills pending the receipt of your opinion?
> "On November 11th, you gave it as your opinion that under section 1218 this sum could not be paid to the township trustees when they were acting as superintendents in the repair of roads, the funds of which were raised through what is known as the state aid. Since the receipt of your answer of the above date, I have gone over our proceedings and I find that we are acting under section 7407 of the General Code, up to and including 7463. We have complied with these sections, as our record will show, and that is the way we have used the state aid money for 1909 and 1910.
> "I also find in section 7458 of the General Code, which provides that the superintendent shall receive not to exceed $2.50 for time actually employed, and under this section our board of county commissioners acting as a board of turnpike directors, employed the trustees of the various townships to superintend the work in their respective townships, and it is under that agreement, and having in mind section 7458 of the General Code, that the trustees were employed as such superintendents, and under which section, the commissioners as a board of turnpike directors had expected to pay them.
> "Kindly let me know by return mail whether or not you agree with us in the way we have expended this money, and also whether or not, being advised of all the facts you desire to amend your opinion of November 11th."

I have examined the opinion of November 11th to which you refer, and upon the facts before me at that time I am satisfied of the correctness of the conclusion therein reached. I interpreted the language used in your communication of October 21st to mean that the county commissioners of your county had paid state aid money to the township trustees in their official capacity, and that the latter disbursed the same instead of the county commissioners acting as a board of turnpike directors. Inasmuch as it seemed to be the duty of the township trustees to disburse said funds under section 1218, General Code, and as no compensation was provided by statute for such service, I hold that it was to be regarded as gratuitous, or as compensated by the other fees accruing to the township trustees by virtue of their office. The additional facts supplied by your second letter raise an entirely different question, and I have concluded to consider the matter de novo in the light of said additional facts.

Sections 7407 to 7463 inclusive, of the General Code, which you cite comprise the chapter relating to road repairs.

Sections 7422, provides as follows:

> "The county commissioners shall cause all necessary repairs to be made for the proper maintenance of all improved roads in the county. For such purpose they may levy a tax upon the grand duplicate of the county, not exceeding three-tenths of one mill in any one year upon each dollar of the valuation of taxable property in such county. Such levy shall be in addition to all other levies authorized by law, notwithstanding any limitation upon the aggregate amount of such levies now in force."

Section 7445, provides as follows:

> "In each county, the county commissioners are constituted a board of turnpike directors, in which the management and control of all such roads therein shall be exclusively vested."

Section 7447, provides as follows:

> "The directors may appoint suitable persons to superintend the work of repairs on the several roads, who shall give bond and security to the satisfaction of the directors for the faithful performance of their duties, and take and subscribe an oath, which shall be endorsed on the back of the bond and filed in the auditor's office of the county."

Section 7458, provides as follows:

> "The compensation for services of superintendent shall be subject to the agreement of the board of directors, not to exceed two dollars and fifty cents per day for the time actually employed and shall be paid out of the turnpike fund."

It will be observed that county commissioners, acting as a board of turnpike directors, are charged with the duty of repairing all improved roads in the county.

Section 7447 authorizes the county commissioners to employ suitable persons to superintend the repair of such roads in the respective townships and the persons so appointed are entitled to such compensation as the commissioners may allow, not to exceed $2.50 per day for the time necessarily consumed in such work. The only limitation in the statute as to the class of persons who may be appointed to superintend the repair of improved roads is that such persons be "suitable." Said work is not a part of the official duty of township trustees; they are not expressly prohibited by statute from accepting such employment, nor is the same inconsistent in any way with their official duty. Such compensation, however, must be wholly paid out of the turnpike fund as provided by section 7458, supra.

I am, therefore, of the opinion that township trustees may legally be appointed by the county commissioners, acting as a board of turnpike directors, to superintend the repair of improved roads at such compensation, not to exceed $2.50 per day, as may be fixed by the county commissioners.

Yours very truly,
TIMOTHY S. HOGAN,
Attorney General.

BOARD OF EDUCATION—CENTRALIZATION OF SCHOOLS—PUPILS RESIDING IN PROPERTY ATTACHED TO TOWNSHIP SCHOOL DISTRICT UPON ABOLITION OF JOINT SUB-DISTRICTS ARE ENTITLED TO CONVEYANCE TO CENTRALIZED SCHOOL.

By virtue of sections 4723 and 4724, General Code, joint sub-districts are abolished and the territory of such districts situated in the township in which the school house of the joint sub-district is not located, is attached for school purposes to the township school district in which said school house is located and shall constitute a part of said township school district.

Pupils of such attached territory, therefore, are entitled to conveyance to the centralized school, when the board abolishes sub-districts; the expense thereof to be paid out of the funds of the township district.

Under the terms of section 7730, General Code, providing such pupils live more than one and one-half miles from such school in accordance with section 7731, General Code, the fact that said officials have failed to make a map of attached territory which is to be made a part of the records of the board of education and a copy of which is to be filed with the auditor of the county in which the territory is situated, as provided by section 4724, General Code, does not operate to prevent the territory included in the joint sub-district and outside of the township becoming a part of the township school district as provided by section 4723, General Code.

COLUMBUS, OHIO, November 27, 1912.

HON. C. A. LEIST, Prosecuting Attorney, Circleville, Ohio.

DEAR SIR:—I desire to acknowledge the receipt of your letter of inquiry of the date of October 1, 1912, wherein you inquire as follows:

> "The board of education of Jackson township, Pickaway county, Ohio, want your opinion on the following: 'Jackson township, within the past year voted to, and have centralized their schools. They now have a single centralized school house in the center of the township, and have provided conveyances for the pupils of the township by township lines. Prior to the adoption of the school code there was a joint subdistrict comprising part of Jackson and Monroe townships. The school house was located in Jackson township, which sub-district, since the codification of the school laws, was under the control of Jackson township board of education, and was abolished with the centralized schools of Jackson township. The pupils living in this sub-district were enrolled in Jackson township, and state fund drawn by Jackson township. When the school code went into effect section 4724, of the General Code, had never been complied with, so that the part of the joint sub-district situate in Monroe township was never taxed in Jackson township for school purposes. The board of education of Jackson township now refuse to convey the scholars living in Monroe township, but within the territory of this sub-district, claimimg that after centralization they had nothing further to do with that part of the territory. Jackson township board sold the school house within the sub-district.'

" 'The scholars living in the disputed territory live more than one and one-half miles away from the centralized schools. Monroe township has not centralized its schools. Under this state of facts, and under the law, is that part of Monroe township comprised within what was formerly this joint sub-district still a part of the Jackson township schools? Can the scholars living within the disputed territory attend the Jackson township schools, and must the board of education of Jackson township furnish conveyances for these pupils living within the disputed territory, same as other pupils living within Jackson township, proper. The board of education have agreed to abide by your decision in this matter, and as the scholars living within the disputed territory are now without school privileges, and are not attending school, a very early opinion is requested. I refer you to sections 4683, 4723, 4724, 4725 and 7730, General Code.' "

In reply thereto I desire to say that joint sub-districts of the townships were originally established under the authority of sections 3928 and 3929 of Bate's Revised Statutes (1902 edition); section 3928 provided as follows:

"Section 3928. (Township Boards May Establish By Mutual Agreement). When the better accommodation of scholars makes it desirable to form a joint sub-district, or joint township high school district composed of parts, or all of two or more townships, the board of education of the townships interested, may, by mutual agreement, at a joint meeting held for the purpose, establish the same, and fix the boundaries thereof;

"(School Building). If there is no suitable school house within such boundaries, or if there is one, but it is not suitably located, the board shall designate a site whereon to erect such buiilding; but if there is a suitable school house within such boundaries, properly located, the school shall be held therein;

"(Organization of Meeting). A chairman and secretary shall be chosen at such meeting, and the secretary shall make a memorandum of the proceedings had thereat;

"(Copies of Memorandum of Proceedings to be Transmitted by Secretary). A copy of such memorandum, signed by the chairman and secretary shall be transmitted to the clerk of each of the boards, who shall record the same in his record of proceedings of the board; and the secretary shall transmit a like copy of the proceedings to the auditor of each county having territory embraced in the joint sub-district, or township, or joint high school district."

and said section 3929 provided as follows:

"Section 3929. (Control of School in Joint Sub-Districts or Joint Township High School District). The school in a joint sub-district, or joint township high school district, shall be under the control of the board of education in the township in which the school house is situate, of which board the director of the joint sub-district, or joint township high school district, shall be a member, or members;

"(Support of Same). But such school shall be supported from the school funds of the townships having territory in the joint sub-district, or joint township high school district, in proportion to the enumeration of youth, as provided in sections thirty-nine hundred and sixty-one and thirty-nine hundred and sixty-two and thirty-nine hundred and sixty-three, as amended by this act."

Section 3930 of Bates' Revised Statutes (1902 edition), made additional provision for the establishment of joint sub-districts in the townships, as follows:

"Section 3930. (Further Provisions for Establishment). Joint sub-district may be established also in the manner provided in succeeding sections of this chapter."

Section 3931, Bates' Revised Statutes (1902 edition), provides as follows:

"Section 3931. (May Be Established on Petition). Three or more qualified electors, resident of the territory sought to be included therein, may apply, in writing, to the board of education of any township wherein any part of the territory is situate. for the creation thereof."

Sections 3932 to 3941, inclusive, Bates' Revised Statutes (1902 edition), provided the procedure to be followed in establishing joint sub-districts under sections 3930 and 3931, as above quoted.

Section 3941a, Bates' Revised Statutes (1902 edition), provided as follows:

"Section 3941a. (Estimate For Site and School House; Report to County Auditor; Making of Levy and Collection of Money). When in a joint sub-district established by proceedings in the probate court, a site has been designated for a school house, the board of education of the township in which such site is designated, shall make the necessary estimate to purchase such school house site, and erect and furnish a suitable school house thereon; and said board shall report such estimate and levy to the county auditor; said levy shall be made and the money collected in like manner as the funds are levied and collected for other joint sub-districts."

Section 3944, Bates' Revised Statutes (1902 edition), provided as follows:

"Section 3944. (Report and Judgment for Sub-District). If the report be in favor of the establishment of a joint sub-district, the judge shall make an entry confirming the same; and a certified copy of the report, including the plat and his order shall be delivered to the clerk of the board of education of each township interested therein, and thereafter such joint sub-district shall be fully established, and shall be governed and controlled in the same manner as joint sub-districts otherwise established."

I cite the above sections for the purpose of setting forth the two methods that could be pursued in establishing joint sub-districts prior to their repeal by the adoption of the school code as passed April 25, 1904, and found in the 97 Ohio Laws, page 334.

I assume that the joint sub-district referred to in your inquiry was established by one of the two methods set forth in the statutes above quoted, that is, either by the mutual agreement of the school boards of Jackson and Monroe townships, as provided in section 3928, Bates' Revised Statutes, above quoted, or by petition on the part of three or more qualified electors of the territory sought to be included in said joint sub-district as provided by sections 3931 to 3944, inclusive, Bates' Revised Statutes (1902 edition).

The school house of said joint sub-district being located in Jackson township, placed the control of the school in the board of education of that township.

Section 3923, Bates' Revised Statutes, as enacted by the legislature April 25, 1904, abolished all joint sub-districts, and at the same time attached the territory of such districts situated in the township in which the school house was not located to the township school district in which the school house was located for school purposes, as follows:

> "Section 3923. Joint sub-districts are hereby abolished and the territory of such districts, situated in the township in which the schoolhouse of the joint sub-district is not located shall be attached for school purposes to the township school district in which said school house is located, and shall constitute a part of said township school district, and the title of all school property located in said joint sub-district, is hereby vested in the board of education of the township to which the territory is attached. A map of such attached territory shall be prepared under the direction of the board of education of the township district to which such territory is attached and shall be made a part of the records of said board and a copy of the same shall be filed with the auditor of the county in which said territory is situated, or if the territory be in two or more counties, said map shall be filed with the auditor of each county."

Said section 3923, Bates' Revised Statutes (now sections 4723 and 4724, of the General Code), was amended April 14, 1908, to read as follows:

> "Joint sub-districts are hereby abolished and the territory of such districts, situated in the township in which the school house of the joint sub-district is not located, shall be attached for school purposes to the township school district in which said school house is located, and shall constitute a part of said township school district, and the title of all school property located in said joint sub-district, is hereby vested in the board of education of the township to which the territory is attached. A map of such attached territory shall be prepared under the direction of the board of education of the township district to which such territory is attached and shall be made a part of the records of said board and a copy of the same shall be filed with the auditor of the county in which said territory is situated, or if the territory be in two or more counties, said map shall be filed with the auditor of each county. Provided, further, that when such sub-district is a part of townships, both of which have centralized schools, and no school is maintained in said sub-district, then the boundaries of the civil township so situated shall form the boundaries of the township school districts, and each township shall have entire control of the territory of such sub-district lying within its boundaries."

Furthermore, section 4683, of the General Code, defines a township school district as follows:

> "Section 4683. Each civil township, together with the territory attached to it for school purposes, and excluding the territory within its established limits detached for school purposes, shall constitute a township school district."

Section 7730 of the General Code provides that when the board of education of any township school district suspends the school in any or all sub-districts in the township school district, such board must provide for the conveyance of the pupils residing in such sub-districts to a public school in the township district as follows:

> "Section 7730. The board of education of any township school district may suspend the schools in any or all sub-districts in the township district. Upon such suspension the board must provide for the conveyance of the pupils residing in such sub-district or sub-districts to a public school in the township district or to a public school in another district, the cost thereof to be paid out of the funds of the township school district. Or, the board may abolish all the sub-districts providing conveyance is furnished to one or more central schools, the expense thereof to be paid out of the funds of the district. No sub-district school where the average daily attendance is twelve or more, shall be so suspended or abolished, after a vote has been taken under the provisions of law therefor, when at such election a majority of the votes cast thereon were against the propostition of centralization, or when a petition has been filed thereunder and has not yet been voted upon at an election."

Regardless of whether or not the said joint sub-district referred to in your inquiry was established by the first or second method, as provided in sections 3928 to 3944 inclusive, of Bates' Revised Statutes, referred to above, the board of education of Jackson township was bound thereby to recognize the said joint sub-district, composed partly of territory in Jackson township and partly of territory in Monroe township, and, as a matter of fact, the board of education of Jackson township did so recognize said joint sub-district, and while section 4725 of the General Code abolished joint sub-districts, yet, said section, in substance attaches for school purposes the territory of the township in all such joint sub-districts theretofore established, in which the school house is not located, to the township in which the school house is located, by providing "that the territory of such districts situated in the township in which the school house of the joint sub-district is not located shall be attached for school purposes to the township school district in which such school house is located."

Furthermore, section 4683 of the General Code clearly intended that territory attached to the township, as in the case about which you inquire, constituted a part of the township school district.

It is my view, therefore, that the portion of said joint sub-district within the boundaries of Monroe township, and which said territory was attached to Jackson township for school purposes under the old school code, is still attached to said Jackson township for school purposes and still constitutes a part of the Jackson township school district, even though the board of education failed in its duty to have a map of such attached territory prepared and made a part of the record of such board, and failed to have a copy made of such map and filed with the auditor of the county in which such territory is situated, as required by section 4724 of the General Code, above quoted. Said section says "a map shall be prepared, etc." and it was, therefore, mandatory upon said Jackson township school board to perform that duty, and official neglect or failure to perform such duty on the part of said board does not operate to set aside or abrogate the plain and clear provisions of said section; in other words, said section 4724 of the General Code controls, official failure to follow its plain provisions by the Jackson township school board, to the contrary notwithstanding.

Inasmuch as said joint sub-district referred to in your inquiry constitutes a part of the Jackson township school district, as defined by section 4683 of the General Code, above quoted, it follows that the board of education of Jackson township is subject to and governed by section 7730 of the General Code, and said board is legally bound to provide conveyance for all the pupils living in said former joint sub-district, including those living in that portion of said former joint sub-district which is within the boundaries of said Monroe township who have the undoubted statutory right to attend the Jackson township schools.

This situation will continue to exist until such time as both townships establish centralized schools, and then the boundaries of the civil townships will form the boundaries of the civil townships will form the boundaries of the said respective township school districts, and each of said townships will have control of the territory of such former joint sub-district as lies within its boundaries.

Section 7731 of the General Code, which provides, in substance, "that transportation for pupils living less than one and one-half miles by the most direct public highway from the school house shall be optional "with the board of education," does not apply for the reason that the said pupils living in that portion of the said former joint sub-district lying within Monroe township live more than one and one-half miles from the centralized schools.

Very truly yours,
TIMOTHY S. HOGAN,
Attorney General.

BONDS ADVERTISED AND AWARDED PRIOR TO JANUARY 1, 1913, BUT DELIVERED SUBSEQUENT TO THAT DATE ARE NOT OUTSTANDING AT THE TIME OF THE PASSAGE OF THE CONSTITUTIONAL AMENDMENT—THEREFORE TAXABLE.

COLUMBUS, OHIO, January 8, 1913.

HON. HOLLAND C. WEBSTER, Prosecuting Attorney, Toledo, Ohio.

DEAR SIR:—Under date of December 16, 1912, you inquire:

> "Whether bonds advertised for sale and awarded prior to January 1, 1913, but delivered subsequent to that date, will be taxable."

In answer thereto permit me to say the language of section 2 of article 12 of the constitution as amended, exempts bonds "at present outstanding," which means outstanding on January 1, 1913, and I am of opinion that a bond cannot be considered as outstanding until it has been delivered, and, consequently bonds offered for sale and awarded prior to January 1, 1913, but not delivered until after that date are taxable, as not coming within the exemption.

Respectfully yours,
TIMOTHY S. HOGAN,
Attorney General.

BRIDGES—ELECTION ON QUESTION OF BRIDGE IMPROVEMENT COSTING OVER $18,000.00 APPLIES TO ONLY ONE BRIDGE.

Section 5638, General Code, prescribes that when the building of a county bridge will cost more than $18,000.00 the question of making such improvement shall be submitted to the voters of the county. This requirement applies only when the cost of a single bridge exceeds such sum; and the election is clearly not necessary when the combined cost of two or more bridges necessary to a single improvement exceeds that sum, when any one of such bridges does not require an expenditure of that amount.

COLUMBUS, OHIO, January 31, 1913.

HON. W. V. WRIGHT, Prosecuting Attorney, New Philadelphia, Ohio.

DEAR SIR:—Under date of January 23, 1913, you inquire of this department as follows:

> "The county commissioners desire to remove the Bolivar bridge over the Tuscarawas river from its present location to a point about 1,000 feet north. The placing of the bridge at the last point will require an addition to the old bridge, new abutments, etc., and the building of a bridge over the Ohio canal, about 500 feet distant from the river, to complete the roadway into Bolivar.
> "The river bridge without the canal bridge would be useless.
> "The combined cost of the two bridges will exceed the $18,000.00 limit under section 5638, General Code, but the separate cost of each bridge will be much less than this amount.
> "Question: Will the building of the two bridges be considered as one expenditure, or can the commissioners treat the two bridges as separate expenditures and proceed to build them without first submitting the question as to the policy of making such expenditure to the voters of the county?"

Section 5638, General Code, to which you refer, provides:

> "The county commissioners shall not levy a tax, appropriate money or issue bonds for the purpose of building county buildings, purchasing sites therefor, or for land for infirmary purposes, the expenses of which will exceed $15,000.00, except in case of casualty, and as hereinafter provided; or for building a county bridge, the expense of which will exceed $10,000.00, except in case of casualty, and as hereinafter provided; or enlarge, repair, improve or rebuild a public county building, the entire cost of which expenditure will exceed $10,000.00; without first submitting to the voters of the county the question as to the policy of making such expenditure."

This statute fixes a limitation upon the amount to be expended by the county commissioners "for building a county bridge," without first submitting the question to a vote of the electors. The word "bridge" is used in the singular and means one bridge. The limitation of $18,000.00 applies to the cost of one bridge and not to the combined cost of two or more bridges.

In the case you submit there are two streams which must be spanned by a bridge. One is a natural stream and the other is an artificial stream. These streams are distinct from each other and it appears that there is a strip of land between them of a width of five hundred feet. I take it that the road in question will be built over this strip of land and the strip will not be bridged. In that event there will be two bridges, each complete in itself. There are two separate streams and two bridges are required.

The limitation in section 5638, General Code, will apply to the cost of each bridge and not to the cost of the two bridges combined.

As the expenditure for neither bridge by itself will amount to $18,000.00, the limitation in section 5638, General Code, will not apply, and the county commissioners may construct the two bridges without first submitting the question to the voters.

Respectfully,

TIMOTHY S. HOGAN,

Attorney General.

OFFICES INCOMPATIBLE—CLERK OF COUNTY COMMISSIONERS APPOINTED IN PLACE OF COUNTY AUDITOR MAY NOT SERVE AS DEPUTY COUNTY AUDITOR.

Section 2409, General Code, authorizes the commissioners to appoint a clerk in place of the county auditor, only when it is necessary for such clerk to devote his entire time to the discharge of the duties of such position. As this is the only authority empowering the commissioners to appoint a clerk and as such clerk is obliged thereby to devote his entire time to the duties of such position, he may not at the same time act as deputy county auditor.

COLUMBUS, OHIO, January 25, 1914.

HON. CLARK GOOD, Prosecuting Attorney, Van Wert, Ohio.

DEAR SIR:—Under favor of January 16th, you request my opinion as follows:

> "The board of county commissioners of Van Wert County, Ohio, have appointed as their clerk, one of the auditor's deputies, for this appointment he is to receive compensation and to give his full time to the position. Has he authority to exercise or perform any of the duties of a deputy county auditor, and can he still remain deputy county auditor and perform any of such duties, even though he does the same without compensation?"

Sections 2566, 9 and 2409, General Code, provide as follows:

> "Section 2566. By virtue of his office, the county auditor shall be the secretary of the county commissioners, except as otherwise provided by law. When so requested, he shall aid them in the performance of their duties. He shall keep an accurate record of their proceedings, and carefully preserve all documents, books, records, maps and papers required to be deposited and kept in his office."
> "Section 9. A deputy, when duly qualified, may perform all and singular the duties of his principal. A deputy or clerk, appointed in pursuance of law, shall hold the appointment only during the pleasure of the officer appointing him. The principal may take from his deputy or clerk a bond, with sureties, conditioned for the faithful performance of the duties of the appointment. In all cases the principal shall be answerable for the neglect or misconduct in office of his deputy or clerk."
> "Section 2409. If such board finds it necessary for the clerk to devote his entire time to the discharge of the duties of such position, it may appoint a clerk in place of the county auditor and such necessary assistants to such clerk as the board deems necessary. Such clerk shall perform the duties required by law and by the board."

Notwithstanding the language of section 9, General Code, that deputies may perform all and singular the duties of his principal, and the language of section 2566, General Code, that the county auditor shall, by virtue of his office, be secretary to the county commissioners, I am of the opinion, that it was not the intention of these statutes to impose upon the auditor's department such a duty of performing the clerical work of the county commissioners. I reach this conclusion in view of section 2409, General Code, which provides that when the clerk of the county commissioners shall be obliged to devote his entire time to the discharge of the duties of such position, the county commissioners may appoint a clerk in place of the county auditor.

In view of this provision, it is clear that it was not the object of the above statutes to join the work of the two departments, nor to impose upon the entire auditor's force, as such a duty of conducting the clerical work of the county commissioners. On the contrary, the intention was to provide, for the sake of the consequent economy, that the clerical work of the county commissioners may be performed by the county auditor himself, when the duties of each department are so light as to permit this practice.

In direct answer to your question, therefore, the only authority permitting county commissioners to appoint a clerk, is section 2409, General Code, and this section authorizes the appointment of such clerk only when it is necessary for the clerk to devote his entire time to the discharge of his duties as such clerk; and under the terms of this statute, when such appointment is made, the clerk must serve in place of the county auditor. Inasmuch as the clerk is obliged to devote his entire time to the duties of such position, he cannot in contemplation of this statute, also serve as deputy county auditor.

Very truly yours,
TIMOTHY S. HOGAN,
Attorney General.

OFFICES INCOMPATIBLE—TOWNSHIP CLERK AND TEACHER IN TOWNSHIP DISTRICT.

Inasmuch as by the provision of section 7786, a clerk of the township board of education is obliged to pass on reports of teachers before an order may be drawn by said clerk for the payment of their salaries, the office of said clerk constitutes a check upon the position of teacher, and, therefore, both positions may not be held at the same time by the same individual.

COLUMBUS, OHIO, January 30, 1913.

HON. I. H. BLYTHE, Prosecuting Attorney, Carrollton, Ohio.

DEAR SIR:—Under date of January 6th, you submitted for my opinion the question of whether a township clerk who has qualified not only as township clerk but as clerk of the township school district can be employed as a sub-district teacher in said township district by the board of education thereof.

You inquire further whether such township clerk when he qualifies as clerk of the township school district under section 4747, General Code, is a member of the board of education as contemplated under section 4757, General Code.

Section 4757 of the General Code provides in part as follows:

> "* * * No member of the board shall have directly or indirectly any pecuniary interest in any contract of the board or be employed in any manner for compensation by the board of which he is a member except as clerk or treasurer. * * *"

I assume from your inquiry that there is no question as to the said clerk being a member of the board of education duly elected, but that he is simply by virtue of his qualification under section 4747 clerk of the board; such being the case I do not believe he comes within the purview of section 4757, General Code.

I can find no statute which expressly prohibits a clerk of a board of education from being employed as teacher by the board of which he is clerk. Unless there is a conflict between the duties of the two positions, it is apparent they are not inconsistent.

Section 7786, General Code, provides in part as follows:

> "No clerk of a board shall draw an order on the treasurer for the payment of a teacher for services until the teacher files with him such reports as are required by the state commissioner of common schools and the board of education, a legal certificate of qualification, or a true copy thereof, covering the entire time of the service, and a statement of the branches taught."

Under the above provisions it is made the duty of the clerk of the board of education to require teachers employed by the board to make the reports therein enumerated before an order may be drawn by the clerk for the payment of their salaries. The clerk is the sole judge of the performance of such duty. It would be within his power to draw an order for the payment of his own salary without having made such report and thereby violate the plain provisions of section 7786, supra. I am clearly of the opinion, therefore, that one person may not be clerk of the board and teacher at the same time, and, therefore, the county commissioners could not under section 7610, General Code, issue an order for the payment of the salary of such teacher.

Very truly yours,
TIMOTHY S. HOGAN,
Attorney General.

VILLAGES—LOT OWNED BY VILLAGE AND USED BY LIBRARY TRUSTEES IS SUBJECT TO CONTROL OF FORMER.

Under the general powers granted to municipal corporations to maintain and regulate free public libraries, a village may submit to a board of library trustees the use of a building owned by said village for library purposes. It is the intention of section 4004 and follow- to confer upon the board of library trustees the control and management of such physical property only as is owned by them.

When a village, therefore, permits them the use of a building, held in its own right, the control of such building remains vested in the village and the library trustees must be considered merely tenants at sufferance thereof.

COLUMBUS, OHIO, December 16, 1912.

HON. HUGH R. GILMORE, Prosecuting Attorney, Eaton, Ohio.

DEAR SIR:—Under date of December 6th, you wrote in part as follows:

"The village is the owner (with title in the village) of a lot, upon which is situate two buildings. The up-stairs of one of these buildings is used for library purposes; the down-stairs being used for board of education and board of public affairs. The other building is used to store street working machinery. The village has a board of library trustees.

"The question is, who has control of the property—the village council, or the board of trustees?"

Among the provisions granting general powers to municipal corporations, section 3620, General Code, provides as follows:

"To establish, maintain and regulate free public band concerts, free public libraries, and reading rooms, to purchase books, papers, maps and manuscripts therefor, to receive donations and bequests of money or property therefor, in trust or otherwise, and to provide for the rent and compensation for the use of any existing free public libraries established and managed by a private corporation or association organized for that purpose."

Section 3677, General Code, provides as follows:

"Municipal corporations shall have special power to appropriate, enter upon and hold, real estate within their corporate limits. Such power shall be exercised for the purposes, and in the manner provided in this chapter. * * * For libraries, university sites and grounds therefor; * * *

Section 3939, specifying purposes for which council may issue bonds, in subhead 15, provides "for establishing free public libraries and reading rooms, and free recreation centers."

Section 4356, pertaining to villages, provides as follows:

"The council shall provide by resolution or ordinance for the care, supervision and management of all public parks, baths, libraries, market houses, crematories, sewage disposal plants, houses of refuge and correction, workhouses, infirmaries, hospitals, pest houses, or any of such institutions owned, maintained or established by the village, when the council determines to plat any of the streets as authorized by law, it shall provide for the platting thereof."

Statutory provisions, however, which confer general powers are to be restricted to those of like character which are granted specifically, if such construction can be given, in accordance with the apparent intention of the legislature. At Wellsville vs. O'Connor, 1 O. C. C., N. S., 253, special statutes, referring to the control and management of libraries in municipal corporations, provide for a board of library trustees. Sections 4004 and 4005 of these statutes are as follows:

"Section 4004. The erection and equipment, and the custody, control and administration of free public libraries established by municipal corporation, shall be vested in six trustees, not more than three of whom shall belong to the same political party, and not more than three of whom shall be women. Such trustees shall be appointed by the mayor, to serve without compensation, for a term of four years and until their successors are appointed and qualified. In the first instance, three of such trustees shall be appointed for a term of two years, and three for a term of four years. Vacancies shall be filled by like appointment for the unexpired term."

"Section 4005. Such trustees shall employ the librarians and necessary assistants, fix their compensation, adopt the necessary by-laws and regulations for the protection and government of the libraries and all property belonging thereto, and exercise all the powers and duties connected with and incident to the government, operation and maintenance thereof. Four trustees shall constitute a quorum, and four votes shall be necessary to pass any measure to authorize any act, which votes shall be taken by the yeas and nays and entered on the record of their proceedings. In the making of contracts, the trustees shall be governed by the provisions of law applicable thereto."

Under the rule of Wellsville vs. O'Connor, above stated, the power of control and management of the library must be permitted to the village, except insofar as it is restricted in these special statutes. It will be noted that under these statutes, the custody, control and administration of free public libraries is unquestionably vested in the library trustees. There is nothing in these statutes, however, upon which could be founded a holding that the library trustees are given absolute control and management of all physical property, which the corporation may have permitted them the use of.

Section 4004, General Code, above quoted, provides that the erection and equipment of such public libraries shall be vested in such trustees.

Section 4007, General Code, provides that the trustees may issue bonds to provide buildings for the public libraries in their charge and to furnish them and to provide the costs thereof.

Section 4005, General Code, provides that such trustees may adopt the necessary by-laws and regulations for the protection and government of the libraries and all property belonging thereto.

In am of the opinion, therefore, that these special statutes give control to the trustees only of such property as they may have acquired the ownership of, and, that property properly owned by the corporation itself, may, by virtue of the general powers above set out, be permitted by the council to be used by the library trustees without surrendering to them all control and management thereof.

I, therefore, conclude that the control of the building referred to remains in the village corporation and that the library trustees are mere tenants thereof, subject to the sufferance of the village council.

Very truly yours,
TIMOTHY S. HOGAN,
Attorney General.

ROADS AND HIGHWAYS—NAMES MAY BE WITHDRAWN FROM PETITION FOR VACANCY OF COUNTY ROAD AT ANY TIME PRIOR TO TIME COMMISSIONERS ACQUIRED JURISDICTION.

When a petition is signed by more than twelve freeholders for the vacancy of a county road, as required by section 6861, General Code, but before the meeting at which the petition was to be presented, enough of the petitioners, by separate papers signed by them, withdrew their names to make the number of petitioners less than twelve, held: That under the general rule of law to the effect that names may be withdrawn from the petition at any time before the board has taken such action as to acquire jurisdiction of a subject matter, the commissioners would lose jurisdiction by virtue of the withdrawal of such names.

COLUMBUS, OHIO, February 11, 1913.

HON. J. W. SMITH, Prosecuting Attorney, Ottawa, Ohio.

DEAR SIR:—I beg to acknowledge receipt of your letter of December 21st, wherein you state:

> "I wish your opinion upon the following question:
> "A petition had been filed with the board of county commissioners of this county for the vacation of a county road. This petition, on its face, was signed by more than twelve freeholders as required by section 6861 of the General Code, but, before the meeting at which the petition was to be presented, as provided by section 6865 of the General Code, enough of the petitioners, by separate paper signed by them, withdrew their names to make the number of petitioners less than twelve. These persons withdrew, by the paper filed by them, after the original petition for vacation of the road had been filed with the commissioners under section 6861, but before the meeting of the commissioners, specified therein under section 6865. Have the commissioners authority to appoint viewers on the petition to vacate such road after the number of signers has been reduced below twelve by withdrawals in the manner above set forth? In other words, can persons withdraw their names from a petition for the vacation of a road after such petition has been filed, and before a hearing has been had thereon?"

Sections 6861 and 6865 of the General Code are a part of the general chapter thereof relating to county roads, and provide as follows:

> "Section 6861. Applications for laying out, altering, changing the width of, or vacating a county road shall be by petition to the county commissioners, signed by at least twelve freeholders of the county residing in the vicinity of the road to be laid out, viewed or reviewed, altered or vacated. One or more of the signers to such petition shall enter into bond with sufficient surety, payable to the state for the use of the county, conditioned that the persons making such application shall pay into the treasury of the county the amount of all costs and expenses accruing thereon in case the application fails.
> "Section 6865. Notice of the presentation of such petition must be given by advertisement set up at the auditor's office, and in three public places in each township through which any part of the road is to be laid out, altered, or vacated, at least thirty days prior to the meeting of the commissioners at which the petition shall be presented, stating the time when such petition is to be presented."

Section 6866 is also pertinent to your inquiry and is as follows:

"The substance of such notice shall be published for four consecutive weeks, before its presentation, in a newspaper published in the county in which the road sought to be established, altered, or vacated, is situated."

The general rule is that when petitions are presented to a body clothed with jurisdiction to grant the prayer thereof, petitioners may withdraw their names at any time before final action is taken thereon.

In the case of Hays et al. vs. Jones et al., 27 O. S., 218, the court held:

"The board of county commissioners, under the act passed March 29, 1867 (64 O. L., 80), as amended March 31, 1868 (S. and S., 673), and again amended May 9, 1869 (S. and S. 675-6), to 'authorize county commissioners to construct roads on the petition of a majority of the resident landowners along and adjacent to the line of said roads,' are not authorized to grant a final order for making such road improvement, except upon the petition of 'a majority of the resident landholders whose lands are reported benefited' by, 'and ought to be assessed' for the costs of the improvement." (1st Syl.)

"The jurisdiction of the board of county commissioners to make the final order for the improvement, under these statutes, is special, and conditioned upon the consent, at the time the final order is to be made, of a majority of the resident landholders, who are to be charged with the costs of the improvement. (2nd Syl.)

"Resident landholders, who have subscribed a petition praying for such road improvement, may, at any time before such improvement is finally ordered to be made by the board of county commissioners, withdraw their assent by remonstrance, or having their names stricken from the petition, and after withdrawal of consent, such persons can no longer be counted as petitioning for the improvement. (3d Syl.)

In Dutton vs. Village of Hanover, 42 O. S., 215, the court held:

"Upon the presentation of a petition to the council for such an election, it is the duty of the council, before taking action thereon, to satisfy itself that it contains the requisite number of qualified petitioners, and for that purpose may refer the same to a committee to make the necessary examination. (2nd Syl.)

"While such petition is under consideration and before action thereon by the council, signers thereof may withdraw their names from such petition, and if thereby the number of names is reduced below the requisite number, it is the duty of the council to refuse to order such election. (3rd Syl.)

In Grinnell et al. vs. Adams et al., 34 O. S., 44, it was held:

"After the jurisdiction of county commissioners, in the matter of laying out or altering a county road, has attached by the filing of a proper petition, etc., such jurisdiction cannot be defeated by any number of the petitioners afterward becoming remonstrants against the granting of the prayer of the petition." (Syllabus.)

An examination of the facts upon which the decision in the last cited case was based discloses that the attempted withdrawal of certain petitioners was made after the county commissioners had acquired jurisdiction of the petition, had appointed viewers of the proposed improvement, and after the report of the latter, favorable to such improvement, had been made. In both of the other cases the withdrawal was made prior to final action by the county commissioners and village council, respectively. The facts presented by your inquiry come within the decisions in the 27th Ohio state report and the 42nd Ohio state report rather than within the decision in the 34th Ohio state report, because the petitioners for the vacation of said road had withdrawn their names before any action was taken by the board of county commissioners on the petition.

County commissioners cannot acquire jurisdiction to order the opening, alteration or vacation of a county road until the requirements of sections 6866 and 6866 of the General Code have been complied with, and it is my opinion that petitioners can withdraw their names at any time before action is taken by the county commissioners. If, pending the completion of publication, as required by sections 6865 and 6866, and before any action is taken by the county commissioners, enough of the original petitioners withdraw their names from the petition to leave the number remaining on the petition less than twelve, the commissioners are, in my judgment, without authority to appoint viewers or to take any proceedings to vacate said road.

Very truly yours,
TIMOTHY S. HOGAN,
Attorney General.

INTOXICATING LIQUORS—FINES—ASSESSMENT FOR VIOLATION OF ROSE LAW PAID INTO COUNTY TREASURY, NOT TO LAW LIBRARY ASSOCIATION.

Section 13247, General Code, providing that fines collected under the subdivision of the chapter of the General Code in which this section is found, shall be paid into the county treasury, if enforced in a county court and into the municipal treasury if enforced in a municipal court, makes special provision as to the disposition of such fines. This statute must, therefore, be construed as an exception to section 3056, General Code, which provides that a certain percentage of fines and penalties assessed by the common pleas and probate court shall be paid to the law library association.

Such fine, therefore, must be paid into the county treasury when assessed by the probate court.

COLUMBUS, OHIO, February 11, 1913.

HON. C. C. CRABBE, Prosecuting Attorney, London, Ohio.

DEAR SIR:—Under date of January 15th, you submit for my opinion the request which follows in part:

> "As prosecuting attorney of Madison County, I would like an opinion as to the disposition of a fine of $500.00 now in the hands of the probate judge, the same having been collected for the violation of the Rose law. * * *
> As we have a library association in this county, the question presented is whether this money should be paid into the county treasury or to the trustees of the library association."

The sections of the General Code bearing upon your inquiry are 12378, 3056 and 13247.

"Section 12378. Unless otherwise required by law, an officer who collects a fine, shall pay it into the treasury of the county in which such fine was assessed, to the credit of the county general fund within twenty days after the receipt thereof, take the treasurer's duplicate receipts therefor and forthwith deposit one of them with the county auditor."

"Section 3056. All fines and penalties assessed and collected by the police court for offenses and misdemeanors prosecuted in the name of the state, except a portion thereof equal to the compensation allowed by the county commissioners to the judges, clerk and prosecuting attorney of such court in state cases shall be retained by the clerk and be paid by him quarterly to the trustees of such law library associations, but the sum so retained and paid by the clerk of said police court to the trustees of such law library association shall in no quarter be less than 15 per cent. of the fines and penalties collected in that quarter without deducting the amount of the allowances of the county commissioners to said judges, clerk and prosecutor. In all counties the fines and penalties assessed and collected by the common pleas court and probate court for offenses and misdemeanors prosecuted in the name of the state, shall be retained and paid quarterly by the clerk of such courts to the trustees of such library association, but the sum so paid from the fines and penalties assessed and collected by the common pleas and probate courts shall not exceed five hundred per annum. The moneys so paid shall be expended in the purchase of law books and the maintenance of such association."

"Section 13247. Fines and forfeited bonds collected under this subdivision of this chapter, except as provided in section thirteen thousand two hundred and thirty-one, if enforced in the county court, shall be paid into the county treasury, and, if enforced in municipal courts, shall be paid into the treasury of the municipal corporation in which the cause was tried. Such funds paid into the treasury of the municipal corporation in which the cause was tried. Such funds paid into the treasury of the municipal corporation shall be applied as the council thereof may direct."

The fine referred to by you was assessed under the Rose law and comes within the terms of section 13247, General Code, above quoted. This fine was assessed for an offense prosecuted in the name of the state, and were it not otherwise provided for, the same would have come within the terms of section 3056, General Code. Section 13247, however, is a special statute and must be allowed to control. There can be no doubt as to the intention of the legislature to make special provision for the disposition of fines assessed under the Rose law, when it is noted that council is given entire control over such fines, when assessed by a municipal court, under the provisions of section 13247, General Code.

I am of the opinion that the special requirement of this same section, that such fine when assessed by county courts shall be paid into the county treasury, shall be given equal force as a special provision with the requirement that fines assessed by municipal courts shall be paid into the municipal treasury. A fine assessed, therefore, cannot be paid to the law library association, under section 3056, General Code, but must be paid into the county treasury, as provided by section 13247, General Code.

Very truly yours,
TIMOTHY S. HOGAN,
Attorney General.

ROADS AND HIGHWAYS—SECTIONS 6903 TO 6914, GENERAL CODE, NOT REPEALED BY SECTIONS 6956-1 TO 6956-16, GENERAL CODE.

Sections 6903 to 6914, General Code, provide for road improvements by the county commissioners only upon a petition signed by the owners of at least a majority of the foot frontage of the lands abutting on the county road or part thereof sought to be improved; and the cost and expense of the improvement may be assessed against the taxable property abutting the improvement, according to the foot frontage or benefits.

Under section 6956-2, such improvement can be made upon the petition of a majority of the owners of real estate who reside within the county and who own lands lying within one mile of the road or part thereof to be improved, and the assessment of the cost and expense is to be made payable partly from a levy on the general duplicate of the county and partly from the general duplicate of the township and partly from assessments.

These statutes, therefore, respectively authorize distinct and different modes of procedure and one cannot, therefore, be construed to supercede the other. The former statutes, therefore, cannot be held to have been repealed by the passage of the latter.

COLUMBUS, OHIO, January 27, 1913.

HON. HARRY T. NOLAN, Prosecuting Attorney, Painesville, Ohio.

DEAR SIR:—I acknowledge receipt of your letter of January 11th, as follows:

> "In view of the decisions of the supreme court in the case of Groff et al. vs. Gates et al., commissioners, and Gates et al. commissioners vs. Granger, 87 O. S., —- (published in Ohio Law Bulletin, January 6th, 1913) are sections 6903 to 6914 of the General Code repealed by the act of May 10, 1910, now designated as sections 6956-1 to 6956-15 of the General Code?"

The second and third syllabi of the decisions of the supreme court in the cases to which you refer are as follows:

> "2. Section 2 of the act of the general assembly, passed May, 1910, entitled: "An act to provide for the laying out, construction, repair, or improvement of any public road or any part thereof, and for the straightening, widening, or altering and draining of the same by the county commissioners," is in direct conflict with section 6926, General Code, and therefore repeals said section of the General Code by implication.
> "3. The act of the general assembly, of May 10, 1910, completely revises the whole subject matter covered by sections 6926 to 6956, General Code, inclusive, and is evidently intended as a substitute for those sections and therefore repeals the same by implication."

The following sections of the Code are pertinent to your inquiry:

> "Section 6903. On a petition therefor signed by the owners of at least a majority of the foot frontage on a county road or part thereof, the county commissioners may do any one or more of the following acts or things:
> "1. Cause the county surveyor to establish a grade along it, or part thereof, subject to their approval;
> "2. Cause it or part thereof to be widened, altered or established or established to a greater width than sixty feet and not more than one hundred feet, to be determined by the viewers as provided in this chapter;

"3. Drain, grade, curb, pave and improve it or part thereof.

"Section 6904. The county commissioners may assess the damages on account of the widening, altering or establishing of such road, or part thereof, and the costs and expenses of any or all of the improvement or such part of said damages, costs and expenses as they deem equitable under the circumstances, upon the taxable property abutting upon the road or part thereof, either according to the foot frontage or according to the benefits. The commissioners shall be an assessing board for the purpose of assessing the damages, costs and expenses, as herein set forth, upon the abutting property as aforesaid.

"Section 6956-2. When a majority of the owners of real estate who reside within the county and who own lands lying and being within one mile in any direction from either side, end or terminus of the road or part thereof to be laid out, constructed or improved shall present a petition to the commissioners of any county in the state asking for the laying out, construction, repair, improvement or alteration of any public road or part thereof and upon the filing of a bond in such an amount and with such security as the county commissioners shall deem sufficient, conditioned for the payment of the cost and expense of the preliminary survey, the county commissioners shall go upon the line of said road or part thereof or such proposed road, and if in the opinion of the county commissioners it seems that the public utility and convenience require such road to be laid out, constructed, repaired, improved, altered, straightened, or widened as petitioned for, the commissioners shall determine the route and termini of such road, if the petition is for the laying out of a new road, the kind and extent of the improvement or repairs and what alterations in the line or change of grade of said road, if any, should be made, and at the same time the commissioners shall appoint the county surveyor as engineer to go upon the line of such road or proposed road, and make such surveys, plats, profiles, estimates and specifications as the commissioners shall order; provided that in locating such road and road improvements within the territorial limits of any municipality the county commissioners shall be confin d to the platted streets of such municipality.

"Section 6956-10. When the improvement is wholly within one county, the cost and expense of said improvement including all damages and compensation awarded shall be apportioned by the commissioners as follows: Not less than thirty-five per cent. (35%) nor more than fifty per cent. (50%) thereof shall be paid out of the proceeds of any levy or levies upon the grand duplicate of all the taxable property of the county, or out of any funds available therefor, as provided in section 6956-14 of this act; not less than twenty-five per cent. (25%) nor more than forty per cent. (40%) thereof shall be paid out of the proceeds of any levy or levies upon the grand duplicate of the county levied upon the taxable property of any township or townships in which said improvement may be situated in whole or in part, as provided in section 6956-14 of this act; and the balance, which shall not be less than twenty per cent. (20%) nor more than thirty-five per cent. (35%) thereof shall be assessed upon and collected from the owners of real estate lying and being within one mile from either side, end or terminus of the improvement and assessed according to benefits derived from the improvement as determined by the commissioners. Such assessment shall be in addition to all other assessments authorized by law notwithstanding any limitations upon the aggregate amount of assessments on such property.

"Section 6956-11. When any part of the improvement is in more than one county or along the line between two or more counties, the cost and expense of the entire improvement including all damages and compensation awarded, shall be divided between the counties in which such improvement may be in the proportion the distance in such county bears to the whole distance improved and the amount of expense so falling upon the several counties shall be assessed by the commissioners of said counties separately in the same manner and form as though the improvement was wholly in one and the same county, and in the proportion provided in the preceding section."

You will note that the several improvements contemplated by section 6903 can be made by the county commissioners only upon a petition signed by the owners of at least a majority of the foot frontage of the lands abutting on the county road or part thereof sought to be improved, and such part or all of the cost and expense of such improvement and the amount awarded as damages, as may be deemed equitable by the commissioners, may be assessed against the taxable property abutting such improvement according to the foot frontage or benefits. The improvement authorized by section 6956-2 can be made only upon the petition of "a majority of the owners of real estate who reside within the county and who own lands lying and being within one mile in any direction from either side, end or terminus of the road or part thereof to be laid out," etc., and the assessment of the cost and expense of such improvement is to be made in the manner prescribed by section 6956-10, supra.

It will be observed that while both of the statutes from which I have quoted constitute a scheme of legislation on the subject of county road improvements, each complete in itself, yet they are different from each other. The act of May 10, 1910, being now sections 6956-1 to 6956-16 of the General Code, provides a method of building county roads similar to that outlined in sections 6926 to 6956 and on the same subject matter, to wit: one mile assessment pikes. The act of May 10, 1910, being later in point of enactment than sections 6926 to 6956 and covering the subject matter embraced in those sections, it was held by the court that said act, being in direct conflict with said sections, repealed the same by implication. The decisions of the supreme court in these cases, however, are not, in my judgment, broad enough to justify the view that sections 6903 to 6914 are repealed by implication by the act of 1910.

As before stated, the method prescribed for improvement under sections 6903 to 6914 is different from that prescribed by sections 6956-1 to 6956-16, and for this reason I am constrained to hold that sections 6903 to 6914 of the General Code are not repealed by implication by the act of May 10, 1910, but on the contrary are in full force and effect.

Very truly yours,
TIMOTHY S. HOGAN,
Attorney General.

ROADS AND HIGHWAYS—GARRETT LAW REPEALED BY IMPLICATION—CONCRETE ROADWAY WITH TAR TOP NOT AUTHORIZED BY STATUTE PROVIDING FOR IMPROVEMENT BY "GRADING, MACADAMIZING OR GRAVELING, DRAINING, CULVERTING AND BRIDGING."

In accordance with the decision of Goff vs. Gates, et al. Commissioners, the Garrett law has been repealed by implication, through the enactment of sections 6956-1 to 6956-15.

In accordance with the maxim, the expression of one thing excludes others, section 7033, authorizing the improvement of public ways of the township by "grading, macadamizing or graveling, draining, culverting and bridging," does not authorize the construction of a concrete road with a tar top.

COLUMBUS, OHIO, January 7, 1913.

HON. F. R. HOGUE, Prosecuting Attorney, Jefferson, Ohio.

DEAR SIR:—I beg to acknowledge receipt of your letter of December 19, 1912 which is in part as follows:

> "1. I desire to inquire whether the language in section 6926, General Code, 'stone, gravel or brick, any or all * * *' may be so construed as to authorize the construction of a concrete roadway with tar top?"
> "2. May the language of the township improvement law, being sections 7033 and 7045, be so construed as to authorize a concrete road with tar top?"
> "3. In determining the assessment district and the majority of resident owners under section 6926, are the lands within the mile circle from the end of the road, or part thereof, to be improved, to be included?"

Your first and third questions involve a construction of the so-called "Garrett law," sections 6926 to 6956 inclusive, of the General Code. The supreme court in the cases of Goff vs. Gates et al., commissioners of Morrow County, No. 13376, and Gates et. al., commissioners of Morrow County vs. Granger, No. 13375, on November 26, 1912, held that the "Garrett law" was repealed by implication by the act of May 10, 1910, 101 O. L., 247, sections 6956-1 to 6956-15 inclusive, of the General Code, and perpetually enjoined the commissioners of said county in case No. 13376 from levying any assessment under said law.

In view of these facts, I assume that no answer is desired to your first and third questions.

Coming now to your second question, sections 7033 and 7045 of the General Code provide as follows:

> "Section 7033. The board of trustees of a township, when in their opinion, it is expedient and necessary, and for the public convenience and welfare, to improve the public ways of the township, in whole or in part, by grading, macadamizing or graveling, draining, culverting, and bridging, by resolution, may create the township into a road district for the purpose of improving the public ways therein, or any number of them. If in the township, there is a municipal corporation or corporations, such trustees by resolution, may erect the portion or portions of the township not included within the corporate limits of a municipal corporation, into such road district. In like manner the trustees may erect an election precinct, or part thereof, in the township, into such road district."

"Section 7045. Thereupon the trustees shall determine the order and manner in which the public ways shall be improved, beginning, so far as practicable, with the main roads. In improving such public ways the macadamized or graveled portion shall be located, when practicable, so as to leave sufficient space for a dirt road at its side. The graveled or macadamized portion shall be not less than eight nor more than fourteen feet in width, and the gravel or macadam shall be not less than twelve inches in depth in the center, and eight inches in depth at each outer side."

These sections are incorporated in the sub-division of the chapter of the code relating to township roads which sub-division in entitled "Township or precinct a road district." The two sections above quoted are the only ones in which mention is made of the kind of material to be used in building roads under said sub-division. There is no mention of any other kind of material any where else in these statutes, nor do they contain any language which could be construed, to allow township trustees any wider lattitude in the selection of road-building material than what is clearly and expressly provided by the statutes themselves. Doubtless a road built of concrete with tar top would be as satisfactory at least as one built of any material enumerated in the statutes, but it is not a question of what would be satisfactory or desirable but rather what is permitted by the statutes. It is a well established principle of law embodied in the maxim, expressio unius exclusio alterius est, that the expression of one thing is the exclusion of another. The statutes in question prescribe the character of material to be used in building roads, and that material is exclusive. Since no provision is made for building roads of concrete with tar top, I am of the opinion that the same may not be done under these statutes as they now stand.

Yours very truly,
TIMOTHY S. HOGAN,
Attorney General.

SHERIFF'S RESIDENCE—COMMISSIONERS NOT REQUIRED TO PAY FOR FUEL THEREFOR.

The statutes do not authorize the county commissioners to furnish coal for the sheriff's residence. The county commissioners are authorized, however, to provide light and heat in the county jail.

When the commissioners enter into a contract, therefore, the contractors are not obliged to ascertain the use to which said fuel is to be put by the former, and the county commissioners are not relieved of their obligation to pay for such coal, on the ground that the same was illegally used for furnishing light and heat for the sheriff, when the latter's residence was provided within the county jail. The cost of lighting the sheriff's residence should be computed and the sheriff required to pay the same, however.

COLUMBUS, OHIO, February 11, 1913.

HON. J. B. TEMPLETON, Prosecuting Attorney, Wauseon, Ohio.

DEAR SIR:—I desire to acknowledge receipt of your letter dated December 6, 1912 wherein you inquire as follows:

"In Fulton county the sheriff's residence is in connection with the county jail and both buildings are heated by one large furnace, the said residence belongs to the county and the rent has always been free to the sheriff, the electric current for lighting both structures is measured through one meter. Must the commissioners pay for the coal so used and light so furnished, from county funds?"

In reply thereto I desire to say that section 3177 of the General Code, provides for suitable means for warming the jail and its cells and apartments, etc., as follows:

"Section 3177. The county commissioners, at the expense of the county, shall provide suitable means for warming the jail, and its cells and apartments, frames and sacks for beds, night buckets, fuel, bed, clothing, washing, nursing when required, and such fixtures and repairs as are required by the court. They may appoint a physician for the jail, at such salary as is reasonable to be paid from the county treasury. Such physician, or any physician or surgeon employed in the jail, shall make a report in writing whenever required by the commissioners, the grand jury or the court. The sheriff shall make a report to the commissioners annually, or oftener if they so require, of the property of the county in the jail, and the condition thereof."

It is the duty of the county commissioners to provide county buildings and provide the same with heat and light, and if such heat and light has been furnished to the county commissioners by contract, properly entered into in accordance with the provisions of the statute, then it is the duty of the commissioners to pay for the coal so used and the light so furnished. It is no part of the legal duty of the party furnishing such heat and light to see to it that the heat and light sold to the county commissioners is not illegally used, after, as above stated, the contract has been entered into in strict accordance with the statutory provisions. The duty of seeing to it that the heat and light is used for authorized purposes devolves upon the county commissioners.

I am of the opinion that there is no statutory provision authorizing county commissioners to provide the sheriff's residence with heat and light. I base my opinion in this regard upon the decision in the case of State of Ohio vs. Toan, Auditor, 13 O. C. C., (n. s.) 276.

The cost of lighting the sheriff's residence should be determined by the county commissioners, and the sheriff required to pay it and a separate meter should be installed for measuring the light furnished in lighting the sheriff's residence, likewise the cost of the coal used in heating the sheriff's residence should be determined by the commissioners and the sheriff required to pay it. There should be an understanding between the county commissioners and the sheriff in advance as to the amount to be paid by the sheriff in heating his residence, when the jail and sheriff's residence are heated by one furnace as in the case stated in your inquiry.

Yours very truly,
TIMOTHY S. HOGAN,
Attorney General.

TAXES AND TAXATION—INHERITANCE TAX—TAX ON PRIVILEGE OF RECEIVING, NOT ON PROPERTY—DEDUCTION OF $200.00 FOR EACH PORTION RECEIVED BY DEVISEE.

It is the object of the collateral inheritance tax to place an assessment upon the privilege of receiving and not upon the property devised. The legislature intended the value to be taxed, to be measured by the value of the thing inherited and not by the value of the thing devised.

Under section 5331, General Code, therefore, which provides that property which passes by will or by intestate laws of this state to other than certain designated relatives, shall be liable to a tax of 5% of its value above the sum of $200.00, the sum of $200.00 so designated shall be deducted from the amount which the taxable heir is entitled to, after all expenses and debts of the estate devised have been substracted.

COLUMBUS, OHIO, February 5, 1913.

HON. J. W. SMITH, Prosecuting Attorney, Ottawa, Ohio.

DEAR SIR:—I acknowledge the receipt of your letter of December 19th, requesting my opinion upon a certain question to the administration of the collateral inheritance tax law of this state, and apologize for my delay in answering it which has been due to the extraordinary pressure of business arising out of the legislative session.

I quote the question as you state it in your letter:

> "A party died intestate in this county, possessed of a small amount of personal property, together with real estate worth about $6,000.00. The real estate was sold for the payment of debts and there remained for distribution approximately $5,000.00. This money will be distributed to first cousins of the descendants of such. The share of none of the distributees will exceed $200.00. Is this property, which will be distributed as above, subject to the collateral inheritance tax under the provisions of 5331 of the General Code?"

I enclose herewith a copy of an opinion addressed to Hon. Harry P. Black, prosecuting attorney, Tiffin, Ohio, relating to another phase of the application of this law. Some of the discussion therein, however, is applicable to the question which you state.

Section 5331, General Code, provides in the abstract as follows:

> "All property within the jurisdiction of this state, and any interests therein * * * which passes by will or by the intestate laws of this state * * * to a person * * * other than to or for the use of (certain enumerated relatives of the decedent) shall be liable to a tax of five per cent. of its value above the sum of two hundred dollars."

Resolved into its ultimate terms, your question is as to whether or not the phrase "above the sum of two hundred dollars" is to be understood as applicable to the entire estate of the decedent, the entire amount or value thereof which passes to collateral relatives, or to the separate interests of each collateral relative. As will be apparent from a perusal of the other opinion herewith, different provisions of the succeeding sections relating to the same subject-matter seem to give rise to perhaps more doubt than is suggested by the primary meaning of the sentence just quoted. Thus section 5333 provides that when a prior estate is bequeathed or devised to a lineal relative, and the remainder to a collateral relative or stranger to the blood, the value of the prior estate shall be appraised and deducted together with the sum of $200.00 from the appraised value of the property.

Again, section 5334 provides that when a bequest or devise which would otherwise be liable to the tax is made in lieu of the compensation of the legatee or devisee as executor or trustee, the excess only of the value of the estate bequeathed or devised over the reasonable compensation of the legatee or devisee as such executor or trustee shall be liable to the tax.

These two sections seem to indicate that the separate interests are separately liable for the inheritance tax from which it would logically follow that the deduction of $200.00 is to be made from the value of each separate interest. Of similar import, so far as this question is concerned, are the provisions of sections 5336 to 5339, inclusive. The confusion arises by reason of the provisions of section 5340, from which it appears that the value of the thing to be taxed is to be ascertained from the inventory of the estate filed in the probate court. From this it might be argued that the estate, or at least so much of it as is subject to the tax, is to be valued as a whole, and if this is the case, any deductions should be made from the whole value so ascertained.

In the other opinion which is enclosed herewith, I held, citing Hagerty vs. State, ex rel., 55 O. S., 613, State, ex rel., vs. Ferris, 53 O. S., 314, and State, ex rel., vs. Guilbert, 70 O. S., 229, that the thing taxed under the collateral and direct inheritance tax laws of this state (the latter of which has since been repealed), is the privilege of succeeding to or receiving property by operation of law, either through the medium of a will or deed of gift, to take effect at the death of the donor or through the medium of the statutes of descent and distribution. It is the privilege, and not the estate, which is taxed; if it were not so, these laws would constitute a species of property taxation repugnant to the uniform rule enjoined by article XII, section 2 of the constitution, and would therefore have to be held unconstitutional.

This fact, being established, becomes the keynote of the entire law. If the real subject of taxation is the right to inherit, succeed to or receive, then it must be presumed that the legislature intended the value of the right in each instance to be measured by the value of the thing inherited, succeeded to or received and not by the value of the thing transmitted, devised or bequeathed.

Therefore, in spite of the use of the inventory in the machinery of assessment, I have reached the conclusion, as will be observed by reading the other opinion enclosed herewith, that debts of the decedent and costs of administration of his estate must be deducted from the face value thereof as shown by the inventory, and proportionately from the face value of so much of the estate as passes to collateral relatives and strangers to the blood.

Having reached the conclusion just stated, it seems to me quite logical to advance a step further for the purpose of answering the question submitted by you and to hold that, when the value of so much of the estate as is transmitted to and received by collateral relatives and strangers to the blood is ascertained in bulk by making the necessary deductions or when the debts and costs chargeable against particular devises and bequests have been properly deducted from the value thereof, that portion of the entire estate which is subject to the collateral inheritance tax should be separated into the various interests, portions, devises or bequests receivable by different persons under the statute or the will or deed of gift and the tax assessed separately against each one of them. This is consistent with the provisions of sections 5333, 5334, 5336 and similar sections. If the tax is to be so separately assessed, it follows as a matter of course, that the deduction of $200.00 must be made from the ascertained value of each separate share or interest.

I am of the opinion, therefore, that in a case where any property of an intestate decedent is so divided by the operation of the statutes of descent and distribution as that no single distributive share exceeds two hundred dollars in value, no collateral inheritance tax can be assessed against the estate as a whole or against any of such separate distributive shares.

Yours very truly,
TIMOTHY S. HOGAN,
Attorney General.

OFFICERS—APPOINTING POWER CANNOT APPOINT BEYOND TERM—COUNTY COMMISSIONERS—TAX MAP DRAUGHTSMAN.

Under the laws of this state an appointee holds subject to the will of and only for the term of the appointing officer. An officer may appoint and empower to hold beyond his own term, only when such appointment is made for a reasonable time, and made necessary by public exigency. An appointment, therefore, by a retiring board of county commissioners of a tax map draughtsman for two years after the term of said commissioners expires, may be awarded by the succeeding board and a new appointment made by it.

COLUMBUS, OHIO, February 1, 1913.

HON. L. E. KERLIN, Prosecuting Attorney, Greenville, Ohio.

DEAR SIR:—Your predecessor in office, Hon. John F. Maher, under date of November 29, 1912, submitted to this office a request for an opinion upon the following:

> "On June 21, 1911, surveyor C. S. S. of this county was appointed tax map draughtsman under the provisions of section 5551, General Code, for the period expiring on the first Monday of September, 1911, at a salary of $1,500.00 a year, payable monthly. (Com. Journal 31, P. 110-111.)
> "On September 2, 1911, the retiring board of county commissioners (none succeeding themselves) again employed said surveyor S. as such tax map draughtsman for a period of two years, beginning September 4, 1911, and ending the first Monday of September, 1913, at $1,500.00 per year, payable monthly.
> "Said resolution also fixes the salary of one assistant tax map draughtsman at $840.00 per year. (Com. J., page 353 and 354.)
> "Have the county commissioners the right to make a contract terminating practically two years beyond their term of office? And if so has the party (C. S. S.) a right to draw per diem as county engineer ($5.00 per day), and drawing practically for each working day in the year, and also draw his $1,500.00 per year or $125.00 per month as tax map draughtsman. His assistant tax map draughtsman is his wife, drawing $840.00 per year or $70.00 per month, making $2,340.00 per year for services rendered as tax map draughtsman."

The appointment of the county surveyor as tax map draughtsman is provided for by sections 5551 and 5552 of the General Code, as follows:

> "Section 5551. The board of county commissioners may appoint the county surveyor, who shall employ such number of assistants as are necessary, not exceeding four, to provide for making, correcting, and keeping up to date a complete set of tax maps of the county. Such maps shall show all original lots and parcels of land, and all divisions, subdivisions, and allotments thereof, with the name of the owner of each original lot or parcel and of each division, subdivision or lot, all new divisions, subdivisions or allotments made in the county, all transfers of property showing the lot or parcel of land transferred, the name of the grantee, and the date of the transfer, so that such maps shall furnish the auditor, for entering on the tax duplicate, a correct and proper description of each lot or parcel of land offered for transfer. Such maps shall be for the use of the board of equilization and the auditor, and be kept in the office of the county auditor."

"Section 5552. The board of county commissioners shall fix the salary of the draughtsman at not to exceed two thousand dollars per year. They shall likewise fix the number of assistants not to exceed four, and fix the salary of such assistants at not to exceed fifteen hundred dollars per year. The salaries of the draughtsman and assistants shall be paid out of the county treasury in the manner as the salary of other county officers are paid."

You will observe that the foregoing empowers the county commissioners to appoint the county surveyor as tax map draughtsman and determine the number of assistant tax map draughtsmen not exceeding four, whose salaries shall be fixed by the county commissioners, that of the draughtsman not to exceed $2,000.00 per year and of his assistants not to exceed $1,500.00 per year. The statute does not fix any definite term either for the tax map draughtsman or his assistants, nor is there any provision protecting them from summary dismissal at any time.

The general rule of law is, that when the statutes authorize the employment of anyone to render services to the public, and no definite term is fixed, such persons hold their positions only during the will of the appointing officer or board.

In the case of Brady vs. French, 6 N. P., 122, it was held:

"The employment of a collector by the treasurer for a period of two years does not bind the successor of the treasurer making the appointment, but the appointment expires necessarily with the power that gave it. The appointee assumes the peril of the death of the treasurer appointing him, and the law affords him no remedy."

The court on page 126 of the opinion say:

"Having determined that the collector is a deputy treasurer, the question remains to what extent may one treasurer contract for the employment of a deputy so that such contract shall be binding upon his successor. The answer is found in the language of section 9, which declares that 'a deputy or clerk appointed in pursuance of law shall hold the appointment during the pleasure of the officer appointing him;' but an officer can have no legal or official 'pleasure' after his term has expired, because with the expiration of his term of office he is functus officio and a private citizen. His appointments expire necessarily with the power which gave them life."

And in Commissioners vs. Ranck, 9 C. C. Rep., 301, held:

"A contract for the employment of janitors by a board of county commissioners, for a period of time extending beyond the time when a change is certain to occur in the persons composing the board, unless made in good faith, in the interest of the public and for a time reasonable under the circumstances, is against public policy, and void."

An examination of the facts in this case as related in the court's opinion discloses that the board of county commissioners of Franklin county on January 5, 1895, appointed Ranck as janitor of the court house of said county for the term of one year next ensuing. The term of office of one member of the board making this appointment expired the next day. His successor was duly qualified and entered upon his duties, and immediately thereafter the new board of county commissioners adopted a resolution rescinding the action of its predecessor in authorizing such employment. Commenting on these facts the court, on page 308 of the opinion, use this language:

> "We fully concur in what was said in State ex rel. Attorney General vs. Thompson, 9 O. C. C. 161, and believe that in the absence of some necessity or special circumstances, showing that the public good required it, such a contract, as the one under consideration, made by an expiring board, and which has the effect to forstall the action of its successor for a year, is not only evidence of unseemly conduct on the part of the members of the board, but in its object, operation and tendency, is calculated to be prejudicial to the public interests, and is against public policy, and void.
> "The maxim, omnia praesumuntur rite esse acta, rests largely on the ground of public policy, so that in a case of this character, where the contract prima facie has a bad tendency, the maxim does not apply, and a court might well refuse to enforce the contract in the absence of a showing that it was made in good faith, and in the interests of the public, even though it might hold that the question of the necessity for the employment was one of discretion and not of jurisdiction. This contract was made on Saturday, the last working day of the board. On the following Monday, the new board came into existence. No necessity of an employment for a year is shown. Indeed, it is conceded by the pleadings that the employment was unnecessary, and a contract made under such circumstances and for such length of time, is strong evidence, to say the least, that the only object in making the contract was to forestall the action of the new board. We, therefore, hold that the contract is void, as against public policy."

A general review of the decisions of courts in other jurisdictions is given by the circuit court in the Ranck case, from which it appears to be the general holding that a board or officer vested with the power to appoint can not, prior to retiring from office, forestall the action of their successors by making an appointment, the term of which is to extend beyond their own term.

I am of the opinion that the county surveyor when acting in the capacity of tax map draughtsman and his assistants in such capacity, are merely employes and not officers. They have no definite statutory term and accordingly their services can be dispensed with by the county commissioners at any time by the adoption of a resolution declaring the continuance of such services to be unnecessary, after which the tax map draughtsman and his assistants are not entitled to compensation from the county treasury.

The language used by Mr. Maher in his letter indicates that in the event it should be held by this department that the present board of county commissioners is bound by the act of its predecessor in employing the county surveyor as tax map draughtsman and can not of its own motion terminate such employment, no answer to the second question contained in his letter is desired; and inasmuch as it has been held in answer to his first question that the present board of commissioners may terminate the employment of the tax map draughtsman and his assistant I have not answered the second question.

Very truly yours,

TIMOTHY S. HOGAN,

Attorney General.

CONSTITUTIONAL AMENDMENT—INITIATIVE AND REFERENDUM SELF EXECUTING—NO TIME LIMIT AS TO PRESENTING OF PETITION AFTER SIGNATURE PLACED THEREON—POWER OF LEGISLATURE TO PROVIDE FURTHER REGULATIONS.

By express provision of section 1-g of article 2, such section providing for the signing of petition for initiative and referendum purposes, is self executing. The legislature is empowered should it see fit to enact such supplemental legislation to the right of initiative and referendum as will protect it from abuse, and further regulate its procedures so long as they do not curtail the right or place any undue burden upon its exercise.

Under the present statutes and constitutional provision, there is nothing requiring a signature secured to an initiative petition to be placed thereon at any definite period prior to the time of presenting of the petition. The signatures, therefore, secured during the years 1913 or 1914 will be valid to a petition filed during the year 1914.

COLUMBUS, OHIO, January 10, 1913.

HON. G. P. GILMER, Prosecuting Attorney, Warren, Ohio.

DEAR SIR:—Your favor of December 23, 1912, is received in which you inquire:

> "I am in receipt of a letter from Mrs. Harriett Taylor Upton, treasurer of the Ohio Woman's Suffrage Association with request for an opinion from your office on the following question:
> "The I. & R. amendment to the constitution, adopted September 3rd seems to provide that the percentage of votes necessary to initiative legislation shall be 10 per cent. of the total vote cast in the recent gubernatorial election if the proposed legislation is to be acted upon in 1913 or 1914, that is, before another election for governor. The question she makes is whether there is any time limit within which signatures may be secured for this purpose, or to be more exact, if signatures are obtained during 1913 and 1914, would they be within the requirement for legislation to be submitted in 1914."

The ten per cent. requirement of the initiative and referendum provision of the new constitution of Ohio applies to proposed amendments to the constitution when they are proposed by means of the initiative. I assume, therefore, that the petitions about to be circulated are in reference to a proposed constitutional amendment.

Section 1 of article 2, the initiative and referendum provision in the new constitution, reads:

> "The legislative power of the state shall be vested in a general assembly consisting of a senate and house of representatives, but the people reserve to themselves the power to propose to the general assembly laws and amendments to the constitution, and to adopt or reject the same at the polls on a referendum vote as hereinafter provided. They also reserve the power to adopt or reject any law, section of any law or any item in any law appropriating money passed by the general assembly, except as hereinafter provided; and independent of the general assembly to propose amendments to the constitution and to adopt or reject the same at the polls. The limitations expressed in the constitution, on the power of the general assembly to enact laws, shall be deemed limitations on the power of the people to enact laws."

Section 1-a of article 2 of said constitution reads:

"The first aforesaid power reserved by the people is designated the initiative, and signatures of ten per centum. of the electors shall be required upon a petition to propose an amendment to the constitution. When a petition signed by the aforesaid required number of electors shall have been filed with the secretary of state, and verified as herein provided, proposing an amendment to the constitution, the full text of which shall have been set forth in such petition, the secretary of state shall submit for the approval or rejection of the electors, the proposed amendment, in the manner hereinafter provided, at the next succeeding regular or general election in any year occurring subsequent to ninety days after the filing of such petition. The initiative petitions above described shall have printed across the top thereof: 'Amendment to the Constitution Proposed by Initiative Petition to be Submitted Directly to the Electors.' "

Section 1-b of said article 2 pertains to the initiation of laws. Section 1-c refers to the referendum, and sections 1-d and 1-e of said article 2 make certain limitations upon the power to use the initiative and referendum. Section 1-f reserves the power to the people of municipalities.

Section 1-g of said article 2 reads:

"Any initiative, supplementary or referendum petition may be presented in separate parts but each part shall contain a full and correct copy of the title and text of the law, section or item thereof sought to be referred, or the proposed law or proposed amendment to the constitution. Each signer of any initiative, supplementary or referendum petition must be an elector of the state and shall place on such petition after his name the date of signing and his place of residence. A signer residing outside of a municipality shall state in addition to the name of such municipality the street and number, if any, of his residence and the ward and precinct in which the same is located. The names of all signers to such petition shall be written in ink, each signer for himself. To each part of such petition shall be attached the affidavit of the person soliciting the signatures to the same, which affidavit shall contain a statement of the number of the signers of such part of such petition and shall state that each of the signatures attached to such part was made in the presence of the affiant, that to the best of his knowledge and belief each signature on such part is the genuine signature of the person whose name it purports to be, that he believes the persons who have signed it to be electors, that they so signed said petition with knowledge of the contents thereof, that each signer signed the same on the date stated opposite his name; and no other affidavit thereto shall be required. The petition and signatures upon such petitions, so verified, shall be presumed to be in all respects sufficient, unless not later than forty days before the election, it shall be otherwise proved and in such event ten additional days shall be allowed for the filing of additional signatures to such petition. No law or amendment to the constitution submitted to the electors by initiative and supplementary petition and receiving an affirmative majority of the votes cast thereon, shall be held unconstitutional or void on account of the insufficiency of the petitions by which such submission of the same was procured; nor shall the rejection of any law submitted by referendum petition be held invalid for such insufficiency. Upon all initiative, supplementary and referendum petitions provided for in any of the sections of this article, it shall be necessary to file from each of one-half of the counties of the state, petitions bearing the signatures of not less than one-half of the designated percentage of the electors of such county. A true copy of all laws or proposed laws or proposed amendments to the constitution, together with an argument or explanation, or both, for, and also an argument or explanation, or both, against the same, shall be prepared. The person or persons who prepare the argument or explanation, or both, against any law, section or item, submitted to the electors by referendum petition, may be named in such petition and the persons who prepare the argument or explanation, or both, for any proposed law or proposed amendment to the constitution may be named in the petition proposing the same. The person or persons who prepare the argument or explanation, or both, for the law, section or item, submitted to the electors by referendum petition, or against any proposed law submitted by supplementary petition, shall be named by the general assembly, if in session, and if not in session, then by the governor. The secretary of state shall cause to be printed the law, or proposed law, or proposed amendment to the constitution, together with the arguments and explanations, not exceeding a total of three hundred words for each, and also the arguments and explanations, not exceeding a total of three hundred words against each, and shall mail or otherwise distribute a copy of such law, or proposed law, or proposed amendment to the constitution, together with such arguments and explanations for and against the same to each of the electors of the state, as far as may be reasonably possible. Unless otherwise provided by law, the secretary of state shall cause to be placed upon the ballots, the title of any such law, or proposed law, or proposed amendment to the constitution, to be submitted. He shall also cause the ballots so to be printed as to permit an affirmative or negative vote upon each law, section of law, or item in a law appropriating money, or proposed law, or proposed amendment to the constitution. The style of all laws submitted by initiative and supplemental petition shall be: 'Be in Enacted by the People of the State of Ohio.' The basis upon which the required number of petitioners in any case shall be determined shall be the total number of votes cast for the office of governor at the last preceding election therefor. The foregoing provisions of this section shall be self-executing, except as herein otherwise provided. Laws may be passed to facilitate their operation, but in no way limiting or restricting either such provisions or the powers herein reserved."

The first question to be determined is whether or not the initiative and referendum amendment to the constitution is self-executing.

In section 1g of article II, it is provided that:

"The foregoing provisions of this section shall be self-executing, except as herein otherwise provided."

This provision is apparently limited to the provisions of that particular section.

The initiative and referendum provision of the Oregon constitution has been held to be self-executing.

In case of Stevens vs. Benson, 91 Pac., 577 (Sup. court of Oregon), it is held:

"Const. art. 4, sec. 1, as amended in 1902, reserving to the people initiative and referendum powers, and providing for the submission of legislation to the voters of the state or other political subdivision, is self-executing.

"Laws 1907, p. 399, providing the procedure to facilitate the enforcement of the initiative and referendum powers reserved to the people by const. art. 4, sec. 1, as amended in 1902, was a proper exercise of legislative powers, though the constitutional provision was self-executing.

"Laws 1907, p. 399, providing for the carrying into effect of the initiative and referendum powers reserved to the people, provided (section 1) a form of petition, which was required to be substantially followed. The form contained a warning clause that it was a felony for any one to sign any such petition with any name other than his own, or to knowingly sign such petition when he was not a legal voter; and section 2 declared that the form given was not mandatory, and if substantially followed in any petition it should be sufficient, regardless of clerical or mere technical errors. Held, that the form, in so far as it contained the warning clause, was merely directory and that a referendum petition omitting such clause was not thereby fatally defective.

Eakin, J., says at page 578:

"But, when a provision of the constitution is self-executing, legislation may be desirable for the better protection of the right secured and to provide a more specific and convenient remedy for carrying out such provision, and it is plain that the statute in question was intended for that purpose, and reduces to a system and simplifies the proceeding, makes every step definite, as well as placing safeguards around it to protect it from abuse, without curtailing the right or placing any undue burdens upon its exercise. As said by Judge Cooley in his work on constitutional limitations (page 122), a constitutional provision that is self-executing may admit of supplementary legislation in particulars where in itself it is not as complete as may be desirable.

The initiative and referendum provision of the Ohio constitution is very similar to that of the Oregon constitution, as to the features which determine whether or not it is self-executing.

On page 753, volume 8 of Cyc., it is said:

"A self-executing provision then is one which supplies the rule or means by which the right given may be enforced or protected or by which a duty enjoined may be performed."

Also, on page 756 of volume 8 of Cyc., it is further said:

"Constitutional provisions conferring privileges and imposing liabilities are held to be self-executing in cases where the language used is positive and independent of legislative action. But such provisions will be held to be inoperative in cases where the object sought to be accomplished by them is made to depend in whole or in part upon subsequent legislation."

The initiative and referendum provision of the Ohio constitution is a right or privilege which the people have reserved in themselves. The means by which this right may be exercised is contained in the provision itself. Petition sare provided for the number of signatures required, the vote upon which the percentage of voters is to be based is stated, the general nature of the ballots is prescribed, and the time of the election is also provided for. The very nature of the reservation shows that it was not to depend upon the will or caprice of the legislature in order that it might become operative.

It is therefore my opinion that the initiative and referendum provisions of the Ohio constitution, as to the initiative and referendum of state laws and as to initiating proposed amendments to the constitution are self-executing.

Your specific inquiry is as to the time in which petitions must be signed in order to be valid.

The constitution does not place any time limit upon signatures to petitions.

In section 1g of article II, it is provided:

"The basis upon which the required number of petitioners in any case shall be determined shall be the total number of votes cast for the office of governor at the last preceding election therefor."

This provision determines upon what vote the ten per cent. required for a petition to propose an amendment to the constitution shall be based.

The constitution does not provide a time limit as to the signatures, although the date of the signature is required. The legislature has not acted in this matter, and from the decision in Stevens vs. Banson, supra, it is apparent that the legislature may enact such supplemental legislation to the right of initiative and referendum as will protect it from abuse, "without curtailing the right or placing any undue burdens 1914 will be valid to a upon its exercise."

What the legislature will do is mere conjecture, but in the present status of the constitutional provision, I am of the opinion, that signatures secured to an initiative petition for a proposed constitutional amendment during the years 1913 or 1914 will be valid to a petition filed during the year 1914.

Neither the people, in their sovereign power, nor the legislature have limited the time in which signatures may be secured and it is not within the province of an executive or judicial officer to make a definite limitation.

Respectfully,
TIMOTHY S. HOGAN,
Attorney General.

PROSECUTING ATTORNEY NOT LEGAL ADVISER OF HUMANE SOCIETY NOR TOWNSHIP ROAD SUPERINTENDENT—MAY BE EMPLOYED AS PRIVATE ATTORNEY.

Section 13440, General Code, empowers a humane society to employ private attorneys in its prosecutions. A prosecuting attorney is presumed, therefore, not to be a legal adviser for such society and may, therefore, be employed by them as attorney.

A road superintendent of township trustees is not a township officer within the meaning of section 2917, General Code, and a prosecuting attorney is, therefore, not a legal adviser to such. A prosecuting attorney may not receive compensation for acting as legal adviser for the road superintendent of the trustees in the absence of an order made and entered on their journal by the latter officials, directing the employment and fixing the compensation.

COLUMBUS, OHIO, December 18, 1912.

HON. ARTHUR VAN EPP, Prosecuting Attorney, Medina, Ohio.

DEAR SIR:—In your letter of December 12, 1912, you inquire:

"1. Can the prosecuting attorney, under the authority of section 13440, General Code, as an attorney-at-law, properly charge and collect of the county. attorney fees for services rendered a duly organized humane society; such services being rendered in his private capacity as an attorney and at the special instance and request of the society, or its agents, in the trial and prosecution of a case before a justice of the peace for cruelty to animals?"

You also ask:

"2. What is the duty of the prosecuting attorney in reference to representing a township road superintendent in an action to collect a poll tax?

Under sections 3377-3385 of the General Code, by necessity an action of this sort must be instituted by the road superintendent before a justice of the peace, and is it the duty of the prosecuting attorney to take charge of and prosecute such an action to final judgment, or would the road superintendent or other township officer, at his request, be authorized and empowered to employ an attorney for that purpose, and if so, would they have a right to employ the prosecuting attorney in his private capacity as an attorney, and pay him for such services from the township funds?"

Section 13440 reads:

"A humane society or its agent may employ an attorney to prosecute the following cases, under this section, who shall be paid for his services out of the county treasury in such sum as the judge of the court of common pleas or the probate judge of such county or the county commissioners thereof may approve as just and reasonable:

"1. Violations of law relating to the prevention of cruelty to animals or children;

"2. Violations of law relating to the abandoment, non-support or ill-treatment of a child by its parent;

"3. Violations of law relating to the employment of a child under fourteen years of age in public exhibitions or vocations injurious to health, life or morals or which cause or permit such child to suffer unnecessary physical or mental pain;

"4. Violations of law relating to neglect or refusal of adult to support destitute parent."

Under authority of this section the humane society or its agent may employ an attorney to prosecute—1, violations of the law in relation to prevention of cruelty to animals and children.

This covers the employment mentioned in your question, and in the absence of a statute prohibiting the employment of the prosecuting attorney, and I can find none, I would regard such employment as being entirely lawful.

In answer to your second question, I can find no authority granted to the road superintendent or township trustees to employ attorneys for collection of the poll tax. Neither can I find that it is the duty of the prosecuting attorney to prosecute such cases.

Section 2917, General Code, reads:

"The prosecuting attorney shall be the legal adviser of the county commissioners and all other county officers and county boards and any of them may require of him written opinions or instructions in matters connected with their official duties. He shall prosecute and defend all suits and actions which any such officer or board may direct or to which it is a party, and no county officer may employ other counsel or attorney at the expense of the county except as provided in section 2412. He shall be the legal adviser for all township officers, and no such officer may employ other counsel or attorney except on the order of the township trustees duly entered upon their journal, in which the compensation to be paid for such legal services shall be fixed. Such compensation shall be paid from the township fund."

A road superintendent is hired by the trustees. Section 3370, General Code. He is, therefore, not a township officer for whom the prosecuting attorney is the legal adviser, and as your statement does not come within the provisions of section 2917, my answer is:

1. It is not part of the duty of the prosecuting attorney as part of his official duties to prosecute suits brought by a road superintendent to collect poll tax.

2. No order of the trustees having been made and entered on their journal, directing the employment and fixing the compensation, there can be no payment from the township treasury to the attorney whether he be prosecuting attorney or not. In State ex rel. vs. Delany vs. Commissioners of Franklin county, 21 O. S., 648, it is held:

> "A board of county commissioners has no power under the constitution and laws of Ohio to employ an attorney to prosecute criminal complaints before the examining magistrates of the county, except in cases in which the county in its quasi corporate capacity, has a direct interest. Nor can the board of commissioners be compelled, by mandamus, to pay for such services out of the county treasury."

While this is not directly in point and is a percuriam in the words given above, yet it must rest upon the fact that in the absence of legal authority to do so a board cannot employ counsel except there is a direct interest to protect. But this is outside of your inquiry and might be pertinent only in the event of a contract made by the trustees under section 2917 being brought in question.

To summarize—My answer to your first question is, Yes; and to the second, No.

Yours very truly,

TIMOTHY S. HOGAN,

Attorney General.

COUNTY COMMISSIONERS MAY EMPLOY CLERK TO SUPERINTENDENT OF INFIRMARY AND COMPENSATE HIM FROM INFIRMARY FUNDS—COUNTY AUDITOR OR CLERK OF COUNTY COMMISSIONERS MUST ACT AS CLERK WITH RESPECT TO DUTY OF COMMISSIONERS PERTAINING TO COUNTY INFIRMARY.

Under section 2566, General Code, a county auditor is "ex officio" secretary to the board of county commissioners. Under section 2409, General Code, the board may appoint a clerk in place of the county auditor, when it is necessary for such clerk to devote his entire time to the discharge of the duties of such position.

Under section 2522, General Code, the board of county commissioners can make all purchases and contracts necessary for the county infirmary and pay for the same out of the infirmary funds, provided for by sections 2529 and 2530, General Code.

Under these statutes, therefore, when it is necessary to appoint a clerk to the superintendent of the infirmary, the county commissioners may employ such, under section 2522, General Code. All clerical duties pertaining to the work of the county commissioners as such must be performed by the county auditor or the clerk appointed in his place, under sections 2566 and 2409, General Code, aforesaid.

COLUMBUS, OHIO, January 18, 1913.

HON. R. M. KNEPPER, Prosecuting Attorney, Tiffin, Ohio.

DEAR SIR:—In your favor of January 11th, you request my opinion as follows:

"The county commissioners of Seneca county desire to employ an infirmary clerk. Under section 2409 of the General Code I understand they can employ a clerk for the commissioners, and I understand that the clerk employed under said section would take the place of the county auditor, as far as the commissioners' work is concerned. The query is: Have they a right to employ a clerk or secretary to the infirmary or to the superintendent of the infirmary, and would he be paid out of the infirmary funds, or out of the county salary fund?"

Sections 2409 and 2566 of the General Code provide as follows:

"Section 2409. If such board finds it necessary for the clerk to devote his entire time to the discharge of the duties of such position, it may appoint a clerk in place of the county auditor and such necessary assistants to such clerk as the board deems necessary. Such clerk shall perform the duties required by law and by the board."

"Section 2566. By virtue of his office, the county auditor shall be the secretary of the county commissioners, except as otherwise provided by law. When so requested, he shall aid them in the performance of their duties. He shall keep an accurate record of their proceedings, and carefully preserve all documents, books, records, maps and papers required to be deposited and kept in his office."

The word "secretary" as used in section 2566, General Code, is to be regarded as synonymous, in legal effect, with the word "clerk," as that official is referred to in section 2409, General Code. (State vs. Godfrey 13 O. D. [N. P.] 535.)

The clerk referred to in section 2409, General Code, therefore, is properly the secretary to the commissioners, and is employed as their assistant in the performance of their general duties.

Section 2522, General Code, provides as follows:

"The board of county commissioners shall make all contracts and purchases necessary for the county infirmary, and prescribe such rules and regulations as it deems proper for its management and good government, and to promote sobriety, morality and industry among inmates. The commissioners shall keep a separate book in which the clerk, or if there is no commissioner's clerk, the county auditor, shall keep a separate record of their transactions respecting the county infirmary, which book shall at all times be open to public inspection."

From the import of your inquiry it seems clear that the clerk referred to by you is to reside at the infirmary, and his duties shall pertain altogether to work of the superintendent of that institution. Such an assistant is, in my opinion, not comprehended by section 2409 above quoted, and he must be appointed under the provisions of section 2522, General Code, requiring the county commissioners to make all contracts for the county infirmary and to prescribe such rules and regulations as they deem proper for its management and good government.

Sections 2529 and 2530, General Code, provide as follows:

"Section 2529. On the first Monday of March in each year, the board of county commissioners shall certify to the county auditor the amount of money they will need for the support of the infirmary for the ensuing year, including all needful repairs thereof. The county auditor shall place the amount so certified on the tax duplicate of the county, and the county commissioners shall have full control of the poor fund and shall be held responsible therefor."

"Section 2530. When in any county the funds applicable for the support of the poor are insufficient, the county commissioners may levy for such purpose, in addition to those otherwise authorized, any rate not exceeding six-tenths of a mill on the dollar of valuation."

I am of the opinion that the compensation paid the clerk of the superintendent of the infirmary is an expense needed for the "support of the infirmary," and should be paid from the poor fund provided for in sections 2529 and 2530, General Code.

In conclusion, therefore, I am of the opinion that the auditor, or the clerk serving in his place, as provided in section 2409, General Code, shall perform all clerical duties connected with the work of the county commissioners pertaining to the county infirmary, as provided by section 2522, General Code, and a clerk serving as assistant to the superintendent of the infirmary alone should be appointed by the county commissioners, and his compensation paid from the fund provided for the support of the infirmary.

Yours very truly,

TIMOTHY S. HOGAN,

Attorney General.

FENCE, LINE—OWNER OF UNENCLOSED LANDS MAY NOT BE COMPELLED TO PAY PORTION OF COST OF LINE FENCE FOR EXCLUSIVE BENEFIT OF NEIGHBOR.

The provisions of the constitution forbid the taking of private property, or the laying of an imposition upon it for the sole benefit of another. In accordance with the Alma Coal Company vs. Cozad, 79 O. S. 348, a person owning unenclosed lands may not be assessed for a portion of a fence erected for the benefit of a neighbor, the provision of section 5908-10, etc., notwithstanding.

COLUMBUS, OHIO, February 11, 1913.

HON. FRED. W. CROWE, Prosecuting Attorney, Pomeroy, Ohio.

DEAR SIR:—Under date of February 1, 1913, you submit the following to this department for opinion.

"Mr. Z. M. and Mr. E. Mc. are both residents of Meigs county, Ohio, and own adjoining farms in Bedford township in said county and state. Mr. M. desires to have a partition fence constructed on the line between his farm and that of Mr. Mc., but Mr. Mc. refuses to build his portion of the same. Mr. M. has complained according to law to the trustees of Bedford township and the trustees of said township have duly assigned according to section 5910 of the General Code, to M. and Mc. equal shares of said partition fence to be constructed. Mr. Mc. refuses to either build the portion of fence assigned him by the trustees of said township to be constructed or to pay for the construction of same. It furthermore appears that Mr. Mc's farm is unenclosed, a portion of his farm consists of woods and the remainder of same is used exclusively for farming purposes and not used for grazing.

"In case Mr. Mc will not build the portion of the partition fence assigned him by the trustees of said township to be built, can the trustees of Bedford township sell the contract as provided by section 5913, of the General Code, and have the costs certified to the auditor of Meigs county for collection against the land of Mr. Mc., and the same be collected? In other words if Mr. Mc. will not build the portion of the partition fence assigned him by the trustees of said township to be built, nor pay for the construction of the same, can the costs of same be legally placed on the tax duplicate of Meigs county and his land be sold to pay same?"

Section 5908, General Code, provides:

"The owners of adjoining lands shall build, keep up and maintain in good repair in equal shares all partition fences between them, unless otherwise agreed upon by them in writing and witnessed by two persons. This chapter shall not apply to the enclosure of lots in municipal corporations or of lands laid out into lots outside of municipal corporations or affect any provision of law relating to fences required to be constructed by persons or corporations owning, controlling or managing a railroad.

Section 5910, General Code, provides:

"When a person neglects to build or repair a partition fence, or the portion thereof which he is required to build or maintain, the aggrieved person may complain to the trustees of the township in which such land or fence is located. Such trustees, after not less than ten days' written notice to all adjoining land owners of the time and place of meeting, shall view the fence or premises where such fence is to be built, and assign, in writing, to each person his equal share thereof, to be constructed or kept in repair by him so as to be good and substantial."

The following sections and those to which you refer provide the manner in which this duty to construct partition fences may be enforced.

This act in reference to partition fences was passed upon by the supreme court in case of The Alma Coal Co. vs. Cozad, Treasurer, 79 Ohio St., 348, in which it is held:

"The provisions of the constitution forbid not only the taking of the private property of one, but as well the laying of an imposition upon it, for the sole benefit of another.

"The act of April 18, 1904 (97 O. L., 138), may not be so construed and administered as to charge an owner of lands which are, and are to remain, unenclosed, with any part of the expense of constructing and maintaining a line fence for the sole benefit of the adjoining proprietor."

It appears that the lands in question of Mr. Mc. are to remain unenclosed and this makes your case fall clearly within the rule of Alma Coal Co. vs. Cozad, Treasurer, supra.

In the case cited it appears that the plaintiff alleged that none of its lands were used for cultivation while in the case submitted by you a part of the unenclosed farm is cultivated. The court, however, in laying down the rule in the syllabi and also in its opinion do not make this fact a condition of the rule. The decision is based upon the fact that the lands which are sought to be assessed for a part of the cost of the partition fence are unenclosed.

The partition fence in your case would be for the sole benefit of Mr. M. and Mr. Mc. cannot be required to pay a part of the cost of the same.

Respectfully,
TIMOTHY S. HOGAN,
Attorney General.

HUMANE OFFICER—MAY BE APPOINTED AND REMOVED BY HUMANE SOCIETY, PROBATE JUDGE AND MAYOR.

It is a general rule of law that where it is not otherwise specified, an appointee may be removed from office at the will of the appointing power and where confirmation of appointment is required, the consent of the confirming power is equally necessary to removal.

Since, therefore, a humane officer is appointed by a humane society, upon the approval of the mayor or of the probate judge, such humane officer may be removed at will by the society, with the consent of the mayor or the probate judge, upon whose approval the appointment was made.

COLUMBUS, OHIO, February 28, 1913.

HON. GEORGE D. KLEIN, Prosecuting Attorney, Coshocton, Ohio.

DEAR SIR:—I acknowledge receipt of your letter of February 20th, which is in part as follows:

> "The humane society of our county, when it was first organized, appointed an agent who is known as the humne officer, under section 10070 of the General Code. Recently thay called a meeting at which the humane officer was not invited to be present. The next day he recived a letter asking him to resign not later than March 1, 1913.
> "The humane officer, then consulted me as to whether or not the society had the right to remove him. I have examined the statutes and I find nowhere, where the statutes provide for the removal of such an officer.
> "I desire your opinion as to whether or not such humane officer can be removed."

The appointment of agents for humane societies is governed by sections 10070 and 10071 of the General Code, as follows:

> "Section 10070. Such societies may appoint agents who are residents of the county or municipality for which the appointment is made, for the purpose of prosecuting any person guilty of an act of cruelty to persons or animals, who may arrest any person found violating any provision of this chapter, or any other law for protecting persons or animals or preventing acts of cruelty thereto. Upon making such arrest, such agent shall convey the person so arrested before some court or magistrate having jurisdiction of the offense, and there forthwith make complaint on oath or affirmation of the offense."
> "Section 10071. All appointments by such societies under the next preceding section shall have the approval of the mayor of the city or village for which they are made. If the society exists outside of a city or village, appointments shall be approved by the probate judge of the county for which they are made. The mayor or probate judge shall keep a record of such appointments."

Section 10072 makes it the duty of council to provide reasonable compensation for agents in municipalities, and of county commissioners to provide compensation for county agents. The statutes nowhere fix a term of office for agents of humane societies, nor is there any provision protecting such agents from summary dismissal at any time.

The general rule of law is, that when the statutes authorize the employment of persons to render services in a public capacity, and no definite term is fixed, such persons hold their positions only during the pleasure of the appointing power.

On this subject it is said by Mechem in his work on public officers, section 445:

> "The question whether the power of removal from appointive offices is one which is incident to the power to appoint, is an important one in respect of which much difference of opinion has prevailed. Offices, even though appointive, are usually created to be held for a definite time, as for a given number of years, or during life or good behavior. In some cases, however, no such tenure is fixed by law, and the officer must then hold, either expressly or implied, at the will or pleasure of the appointing power, or his tenure must be indefinite, and subject to no will but his own—a construction which is entirely inconsistent with the spirit of our institutions.
> "Where, therefore, the tenure of the office is not fixed by law, and no other provision is made for removals, either by the constitution or by statute, it is said to be "a sound and necessary rule to consider the power of removal as incident to the power of appointment."
> "But this power of arbitrary removal is to be limited to these circumstances, and if the tenure is fixed by law, or if the officer is appointed to hold during the pleasure of some other officer or board than that appointing him, the appointing power cannot arbitrarily remove him."

and in section 449, the same author says:

> "Except where the constitution or other paramount authority confers the power upon the executive alone, it is competent to require the consent of the senate, common council or other body to the removal as it is, in many cases, required for his appointment, and where such consent is required, a removal attempted without it is ineffectual. Where the authority of removal is vested in the "appointing power" and the appointing power is vested in the governor by and with the advice and consent of the senate, the consent of the latter body is necessary to a removal."

In support of the statement made in the last quoted section, the author cites the sase of People vs. Freese, 73 Cal., 633, 18 Pac. Rep., 812.

An examination of the facts of that case discloses that, at the time the decision was rendered, there was a statute of the State of California which vested in the governor of the state, by and with the advice and consent of the senate, the power to appoint pilot commissioners for certain ports specifically named in the statute, which commissioners were to hold office during the pleasure of the appointing power, not exceeding four years.

The defendant, Freese, was appointed to the office of pilot commissioner by the governor and confirmed by the senate, in January, 1887. He duly qualified and entered upon his duties, and continued to act under said appointment until, on the 28th day of September, 1887, the then governor, while the senate was not in session, issued to the relator, Travers, a commission appointing him pilot commissioner in place of said Freese. It appears that no notice was given Freese of such action on the part of the governor. The other members of the board, including the defendant, refused to recognize the relator as pilot commissioner, or to let him take his office as such, whereupon the relator commenced a proceeding in quo warranto, to oust the defendant. The court held that, inasmuch as the statute provided for the appointment by the governor, with the consent of the senate, the governor alone was not the appointing power, and, therefore, could not remove the defendant from office except by the consent of the senate.

Section 10071 of our Code requires that appointments of humane officers must have the approval of the city or village for which they are made, and if the humane society appointing them exists outside of the city or village, the approval of the probate judge is necessary and a record must be kept of such appointment thereof, by the mayor or probate judge, or both, as the case may be.

It will be observed that the humane society is not the sole appointing power and following the decision in the California case, I am of the opinion that a humane society acting alone, cannot remove a humane officer. Such removal can be accomplished only by the joint action of the appointing power; that is, the humane society, probate judge and mayor.

As to whether or not it is necessary, before removing a humane officer from office to prefer charges, give notice and accord him a hearing, I direct your attention to section 354 of Throop on public officers, where it is said:

> "The general rule is, that where a definite term of office is not fixed by law, the officer or officers, by whom a person was appointed to a particular office, may remove him at pleasure, and without notice, charges, or reasons assigned."

In a foot note to this section, the author cites numerous cases in support of the text. I have examined all of these authorities, and they are practically unanimous in holding that in a case where no definite term is fixed by statute for an officer he may be removed at any time by the appointing power without notice or trial.

I have not succeeded in finding any Ohio authorities directly in point, but in all of the decisions of our supreme court that I have been able to discover on the question of the removal of public officers, the officers involved had a definite term, or were, by express provision of statute, protected from summary removal.

I am therefore of the opinion that a humane officer may be removed by the power appointing him, without notice, preference of charges or trial. The appointing power is the humane society, probate judge and mayor.

Very truly yours,
TIMOTHY S. HOGAN,
Attorney General.

REHEARING—APPLICATION FOR, IN CIRCUIT COURT, WILL NOT PREVENT OBTAINING OF PAPERS FROM FILE IN PROCEEDINGS ON ERROR TO SUPREME COURT.

A new trial is a statutory proceeding and a rehearing rests solely upon the favor of the court. A motion for a rehearing, therefore, is an unknown quantity in statutory procedure, and the filing of the same in the circuit court after judgment will not prevent a party from obtaining a copy of the court records, for the purpose of proceeding to the supreme court on error.

COLUMBUS, OHIO, March 5, 1913.

HON. B. F. ENOS, Prosecuting Attorney, Cambridge, Ohio.

DEAR SIR:—I have your letter of February 27, 1913, in which you inquire:

"In a case pending in the circuit court of this county, on the 14th day of last November, entitled J. W. Campbell, plaintiff in error, vs. C. M. Campbell, defendant in error, the judgment of the common pleas court, against J. W. Campbell was affirmed. On November 15, 1912, J. W. Campbell filed a motion for a rehearing of the case because of certain matters not considered by the circuit court. The clerk did not know whether this motion could be properly filed, so he wrote to the judge of the circuit court, M. A. Norris (presiding judge) and asked his advice in the matter. He replied that he saw no objection to retaining the case on the docket for the hearing of the motion, and that the clerk might do so. So the case is now on the circuit court docket, or the docket of the court of appeals, pending on this motion. J. W. Campbell, the plaintiff in error, has signified to the clerk his intention to file this case in the supreme court on error, and has made a demand for the papers and especially the bill of exceptions, so that he may have the record printed. The attorney for the defendant in error objects to the bill of exceptions being taken out of the jurisdiction of the court, in which it now is, claiming that the case is still pending on the plaintiff in error's motion. The court of appeals does not meet or hold court in this county until some time in April, and by that time, the four months from the time of the rendition of the decision of the circuit court, will have elapsed, probably preventing the filing of the case in the supreme court.

"This case involves several thousand dollars, and the clerk is at a loss as to what to do in the matter, and does not wish to prevent any one from having proper remedy in the higher court, and has asked my advise or opinion as to what he should do; whether he should surrender up the bill of exceptions to the plaintiff in error, J. W. Campbell, for filing in the supreme court, or whether he should hold it until the motion for rehearing is had in the court of appeals. Neither the plaintiff in error nor the defendant in error seem to care whether the case is heard in the court of appeals or not. It is my opinion that the plaintiff in error should have his motion disposed of, at once, if he desires his case to go to the supreme court, by either withdrawing his motion or by making arrangements to meet the court of appeals where in session and have his motion submitted and disposed of by said court.

"Now, I would like to have your written opinion as to what is the proper thing for the clerk of courts to do, that is, whether or not he should surrender the papers including the bill of exceptions without said motion being disposed of as I have indicated in my opinion."

The real question for determination is, whether the motion for a rehearing is such a pleading as requires the cause kept on the docket for its determination. If I understand the statement it is that a cause was tried in the common pleas court, motion for new trial was overruled, bill of exceptions taken. Petition in error filed in the circuit court, hearing had, judgment affirmed, and later a motion was filed in the circuit court for a rehearing, which motion was pending on January 1, 1913.

Section 11575, General Code, reads:

> "A new trial is a reexamination in the same court, of an issue of fact, after a verdict by a jury, a report of a referee or master, or a decision by the court."

A motion for a rehearing, if statutory, must fall within the above section, which your question does not.

I have always been of opinion that, the distinction between a motion for a new trial and for a rehearing, lay in the fact that the former was a statutory mode of securing a review by the court of an issue of fact, while the latter was an application to the court for a reconsideration of all questions presented in the record, and rested upon the favor of the court and not upon the statutes. Such being the case, the supreme court has adopted Rule XX as follows:

> "No motion can be made or heard for a rehearing. Applications for a rehearing must be made at the same term at which the decision is announced, and within thirty days after such announcement. The application must be typewritten, and six copies thereof sent to the chief justice, and must be confined strictly to reasons for a rehearing. No reargument of the cause on such application will be considered." (Vol. 82, p. lxxiii.)

Taking the statute as it reads and this rule, a motion for a rehearing is an unknown quantity in the practice, and the filing of the same in the case you mention carried no effect with it whatever, and did not toll the statute of limitations.

I am therefore of the opinion that it is the duty of the clerk to permit the papers to be filed in the supreme court, for a review of the affirmance of November 14, 1912, and that he should not insist upon their retention in his office for the purposes of that motion. Of course he should be careful to see that the papers get from his possession to that of the clerk of the supreme court.

Respectfully yours,
TIMOTHY S. HOGAN,
Attorney General.

TAXES AND TAXATION—TOWNSHIP TRUSTEES NOT AUTHORIZED TO ISSUE BONDS IN EXCESS OF $100,000 FOR ROAD IMPROVEMENT.

Township trustees have no authority to improve roads by general taxation and to issue bonds for that purpose without a vote of the people upon the question of such improvement by general taxation. Such a vote is authorized by section 6976, General Code.

Where such election has been held, restriction of section 7005, General Code, which prevents the trustees from issuing bonds in excess of $100,000, controls.

Sections 3939, 3925 and 3941, General Code, do not authorize the township trustees to issue bonds for the purposes enumerated in section 3939, General Code, but only for such purposes as are expressly authorized to the township trustees.

COLUMBUS, OHIO, February 25, 1913.

HON. A. M. HENDERSON, Prosecuting Attorney, Youngstown, Ohio.

DEAR SIR:—I beg to acknowledge receipt of your letter of February 7th, requesting my opinion upon the following question:

> "Are the township trustees of any township in Ohio authorized, either by a majority vote of the people or otherwise, to issue bonds in excess of the sum of $100,000 for the improvement of roads within the township?"

You cite section 7005, General Code, which limits the amount of bonds which may be outstanding at any one time under authority of related sections to $100,000, and state that it is claimed that by the joint operation of sections 3295, 3939 and 3941 the trustees may issue bonds for road improvement purposes to an amount limited only by a percentage of the total tax duplicate as set forth in section 3939 et seq.

I enclose herewith copy of an opinion to Hon. Lewis P. Metzger, prosecuting attorney of Columbiana county, in which I hold, as you will observe, that section 3925, General Code, does not authorize a township to issue bonds for any and all of the purposes mentioned in section 3939, General Code, but only for such purposes, among those enumerated in the latter section, as for which a township as such may lawfully expend money. That is to say, a township certainly may not borrow money for the purpose of constructing a waterworks plant and system nor for any of the other purposes named in section 3939 which pertain exclusively to municipal corporations as such. In other words, section 3939 et seq., authorizes the borrowing of money only and does not authorize the making of any particular kind of improvement. Authority to make improvements must be sought in other sections of the General Code.

In the opinion to Mr. Metzger, I have endeavored to cover by discussion such provisions of the General Code as seem in any way to authorize township trustees to improve the roads of the township by general taxation. I came to the conclusion at that time, and am still of the opinion, that no board of township trustees has any authority to embark upon the policy of improving roads by general taxation, and to issue bonds for that purpose without a vote of the people on the question of improving roads by general taxation. Such a vote is authorized by section 6976 et seq., General Code, one of which sections is that cited by you, viz.: section 7005.

Your letter does not state whether or not any election has been held in the township concerning which you inquire upon the policy of improving roads by general taxation. If no such election has been held, then I am of the opinion that the trustees are without authority to improve roads in this manner. If such an election has been held then I am of the opinion that section 7005, being special, controls to the exclusion of the general provisions found in section 3939, General Code, and that no greater amount of bonds issued for such purpose and under such authority, may at any one time be outstanding than $100,000.

It is possible that I have overlooked some provision of law authorizing township trustees to improve roads by general taxation, I would be glad to have you call m attention to any such provision, as a question quite different from that which I havy discussed would be presented by such statute.

Yours very truly,
TIMOTHY S. HOGAN,
Attorney General.

COUNTY COMMISSIONERS—POWER TO BORROW MONEY FOR COUNTY INFIRMARY—CONSTITUTIONAL LAW—PROVISION FOR LEVYING AND COLLECTING.

Section 5649-3d, of the Smith one per cent. law, providing that expenditures for a given period of time shall be made from and within the appropriations required by the section, limits the power of the commissioners to expend current revenues only and does not restrain the expenditure of borrowed money. Under section 2434, General Code, provided that this section has not been invalidated by section 11, article 12, of the new constitution, the county commissioners may borrow money for the relief or support of the poor, and may expend the same regardless of said section 5649-3d, of the Smith one per cent. law.

Article 12, section 11, of the new constitution, however, provides that no bonded indebtedness of any political subdivision shall be incurred unless the legislation, under which such indebtedness is incurred, provides for the annual levying and collecting, by taxation, of an amount sufficient to retire said bonds and pay interest thereon. Opinion is withheld as to whether this constitutional provision invalidated section 2434, General Code.

COLUMBUS, OHIO, February 28, 1913.

HON. ELI H. SPEIDEL, Prosecuting Attorney, Batavia, Ohio.

DEAR SIR:—In your letter of January 23rd, you request my opinion upon the following question:

> "May the county commissioners borrow money for the purpose of supporting the county infirmary when the funds raised by taxation for that purpose are exhausted?"

You cite section 2434, General Code, which provides in part as follows:

> "* * * for the relief or support of the poor, the commissioners may borrow such sum or sums of money as they deem necessary * * * and issue the bonds of the county to secure the payment of the principal and interest thereof."

The Smith one per cent. law, section 5649-3d provides that, all expenditures for a given period of time shall be made from and within the appropriations required by the section.

I have in other opinions held that this section imposes an absolute limitation upon the amount which may be expended by the county commissioners for any purpose other than one for which money may be borrowed. That is to say, it has been, and still is my opinion that if the county commissioners are authorized to borrow money for a particular purpose they may, through the exercise of the borrowing power, expend more money in a given half yearly period than is permitted to be expended by section 5649-3d. Stating it still in another way, section 5649-3d limits the power of the commissioners to expend current revenues only and does not restrain the expenditure of borrowed money.

I am, therefore of the opinion that so far as the Smith one per cent. law is concerned money borrowed under section 2434, "for the relief or support of the poor" may be expended, without reference to any appropriation made by the county commissioners.

Section 2434, as I have quoted it, contains ample authority for the borrowing of money to meet the situation described in your letter.

I am of the opinion, therefore that as far as the sections of the General Code are concerned, the commissioners of Clermont county are authorized to meet the indebtedness incurred for the support of the poor by borrowing money and issuing bonds under section 2434.

I cannot at this time, however, return an unqualified answer to a question like the one which you present. All such questions are complicated by the adoption of section 11 of article XII of the constitution, which was one of the amendments recently incorporated in it. This section provides as follows:

> "No bonded indebtedness of the state, or any political sub-division thereof, shall be incurred or renewed, unless in the legislation under which such indebtedness is incurred or renewed, provision is made for levying and collecting annually by taxation an amount sufficient to pay interest on said bonds and to provide a sinking fund for their final redemption at maturity."

I have not yet determined in my own mind what this provision means. It seems reasonable to suppose, however, that it may mean that unless the statutes authorize the proper authorities to levy a tax at the time the borrowing power is exerted by the issuance of bonds, and to make the levy continuous during the life of the bonds and sufficient to meet all accruing principal and interest, no bonds can be issued. I am not aware of any provision of law authorizing county commissioners, for the purposes specified in section 2434 to levy such a co-incidental tax. In fact all of our levying sections at the present time, with probably a few exceptions, provide for annual levies for such interest and sinking fund purposes. I cite sections 2439, 2440 and 2609 to 2614 inclusive of the General Code, as indicating the present policy of our statutes respecting the manner of providing for the payment of a county's funded debt.

I have the question, which I have myself suggested in connection with your inquiry, under consideration, and, at an early day will render a separate opinion thereon, unless in the meantime the question is properly raised in litigation.

The point last discussed, of course, has no application to the simple borrowing of money on notes of the board of commissioners but only to the issuance of bonds.

Yours very truly,

TIMOTHY S. HOGAN,

Attorney General.

CEMETERY—TOWNSHIP TRUSTEES EXECUTE DEEDS—ABOLITION OF BOARD OF DIRECTORS DISCRETIONARY.

Under sections 3448 and 3451, General Code, the titles to cemetery lands are vested in the township trustees, and they alone are given power to execute deeds for such lands. Under section 3464, General Code, the appointment of directors for any cemetery and their abolition rests upon the voluntary discretion of the township trustees. The abolition of such board should affirmatively appear in the township trustees' records, as such officers will continue until successors are elected and qualified, unless their abolition is made evident.

COLUMBUS, OHIO, February 11, 1913.

HON. JAMES A. TOBIN, Prosecuting Attorney, Lancaster, Ohio.

DEAR SIR:—In your letter of January 29, 1913, you say:

> "I am requested to submit the following propositions to you for solution: (Under section 3464, General Code.)
> "First: When the township trustees have appointed directors to take charge of a township cemetery, can such directors sign deeds for the conveyance of lots therein, or should such deeds be signed by the township trustees?
> "Second: When the appointment of such directors has once been made, and the appointees have accepted and are acting as such, when the term of appointees expire, can the township trustees refuse to appoint others to succeed them, or can they abolish the board of directors so appointed at their pleasure?"

The answers to your questions depend upon the language of the statutes in reference to township cemeteries.

The law relating to township cemeteries is found in title XI, div. III, chap. 6, being sections 3441 to 3475 inclusive, of the General Code.

Section 3448, General Code, says:

> "Upon application, the township trustees shall sell at a reasonable price such number of lots as the public wants demand for burial purposes. Upon complying with the terms of sale, purchasers of lots shall be entitled to receive a deed or deeds therefor which the trustees shall execute, etc."

The latter part of the same section says "the trustees shall make a deed to the head of a family without charge, if the circumstances of said family are such as to make payment therefor oppressive."

Section 3451, General Code, provides that "the title to all such public grave yards and burial grounds shall be vested in the township trustees."

In view of these two sections, there can be no question that the township trustees are the only persons who are authorized to sign deeds for lots in a township cemetery.

In answer to your second question, it will be observed that the appointment of directors of township cemeteries is not mandatory, but directory.

Section 3464 of the General Code says:

> "The township trustees may appoint three directors to take charge of any cemetery in the township, the control of which is vested in such trustees."

This section further says "that the first appointments shall be for one, two and three years, respectively, and they shall serve until their successors are appointed and qualified. Each year one director shall be appointed to serve three years from the second Monday in May."

It will be noted that these directors are "to take charge" of the cemetery for which they are selected. The last part of section 3464 says:

> "Such directors shall be governed in the discharge of their duties by the laws so far as applicable relating to township trustees in the control of cemeteries in the township."

Nothing further is said as to these directors in any other part of this chaper. No provision is made as to oath of office, bond, or compensation of these directors. Their appointment, in the first place, is optional on the part of the trustees. They have no general jurisdiction over all the cemeteries; for the statute in this same section says:

> "the order appointing a director shall designate, by name, the cemetery or cemeteries over which he shall have supervision."

These directors are local in their jurisdiction, compared to a designated burial ground; and their powers are limited to the rights and duties in control and management of the particular cemetery to which they are assigned.

They are to relieve the trustees in their duties, and assist them in the care and supervision of certain assigned burial grounds. There may be no need for their services for a second term. The trustees may conclude at any time to take charge of all of the cemeteries of the township. They may deem it expedient not to reappoint or continue the board of directors and thereby abolish the said board. I think that inasmuch as it is only directory, in the first instance, to create the board of directors, the township trustees may discontinue such board by not appointing any successors, thereby abolishing the board, such discontinuance and abolition should affirmatively appear in the township trustees' records.

Very truly yours,
TIMOTHY S. HOGAN,
Attorney General.

DISTRICT CHILDREN'S HOME—JOINT BOARD OF COUNTY COMMISSIONERS—EACH COUNTY MAY EXPEND $15,000 WITHOUT VOTE OF PEOPLE—HOW MONEY BORROWED.

Under section 3119, General Code, when a district children's home is built by joint board of county commissioners, the cost of the same is to be borne by the respective counties in proportion to the taxable property of such counties, and each county raises the sum incumbent upon it for itself.

Section 5638, General Code, which prohibits county commissioners from levying a tax, appropriating money or issuing bonds for county buildings, to the sum of $15,000, without a vote of the people, places the limitation solely upon each individual board engaged in the construction of such district home, and not upon the joint board as such. Each county, therefore, without a vote of the people may contribute to the extent of $15,000, without the authorization of a popular election.

The county commissioners of each county constituting a district are authorized to borrow money necessary to meet the proportionate share of such county, under the provisions of either section 2434 or of section 3079.

COLUMBUS, OHIO, March 5, 1913.

HON. WILLIAM H. VODREY, Prosecuting Attorney, Lisbon, Ohio.

HON. HUBERT C. PONTIUS, Prosecuting Attorney, Canton, Ohio.

GENTLEMEN:—Your joint inquiry of February 6, 1913, is received, in which you state:

> "The counties of Stark and Columbiana some years ago established a district children's home, which is located at Alliance, Ohio. The joint board of commissioners of the two counties has determined that it is necessary to erect an additional building to provide for the wants of the home. In fact this action of the joint board is due to an order of the chief inspector of workshops and factories, ordering the trustees of the home to provide more room for the children, because of the present overcrowded condition in both the girls' and the boys' cottage.
> "We desire an opinion from you in regard to this matter on the following propositions:
> "First: Does section 5638 of the General Code apply to the amount that can be expended by each of the counties for the above purpose, and if so, can the joint board expend only $15,000.00 without a vote of the people, or may each county expend $15,000.00 without a vote of the people?
> "Second: How can the respective boards of commissioners of the counties provide the necessary money for the purpose of erecting an additional building?"

Section 3109, General Code, provides for the organization of a district for the purpose of establishing a joint children's home, as follows:

> "In accordance with the purposes, provisions, and regulations relating to county children's homes, when in their opinion the public good so demands, the commissioners of two or more adjoining counties, not to exceed four may form themselves into a joint board, and proceed to organize a district for the establishment and support of a children's home, and provide for the purchase of a site, and the erection of necessary buildings thereon."

Section 3126, General Code, provides:

"All provisions of this chapter relating to county children's homes so far as applicable, shall be in full force and effect in the organization, support, and management of district children's homes."

By virtue of this latter section the provisions of the statutes pertaining to a county children's home will apply to the district children's home, so far as the same may be applicable.

Section 3119, General Code, provides:

"The first cost of the home, and the cost of all betterments and additions thereto, shall be paid by the counties comprising the district, in proportion to the taxable property of each county, as shown by their respective duplicates. The current expense of maintaining the home and the cost of ordinary repairs thereto, shall be paid by each such county in proportion to the number of children therefrom maintained in the home during the year."

By virtue of this section, the first cost of such children's home and all betterments and additions thereto shall be paid by the respective counties in proportion to the taxable property of such counties, as shown by the duplicates. The taxes are not levied upon the joint district as a taxation district, but each county is to separately provide for its proportion of the cost.

Section 3078, General Code, which is in the part of the chapter which pertains to county children's homes, provides:

"If at such election a majority of electors voting on the proposition are in favor of establishing such home, the commissioners of the county, or of any adjoining counties in such district, having so voted in favor thereof, shall provide for the purchase of a suitable site and the erection of the necessary buildings and provide means by taxation for such purchase and the support thereof."

Section 3079, General Code, provides:

"In anticipation of the collection of taxes levied or to be levied for the purchase of such site and erection of such buildings, or for the purchase of a suitable site and buildings already erected thereon, the commissioners of any county may issue the notes or bonds of the county, to bear interest not to exceed six per cent. per annum, payable semi-annually, which shall not be sold for less than their par value."

It appears from the several sections herein quoted that the children's homes are supported by the county. If it is a county home that county maintains it. If it is a district home each county of the district pays its proportionate share. The share of each county is raised by taxation on the property of such county and not by taxation upon the whole district. The county commissioners levy the tax for their respective counties.

Section 5638, General Code, provides:

"The county commissioners shall not levy a tax, appropriate money or issue bonds for the purpose of building county buildings, purchasing sites therefor, or for land for infirmary purposes, the expenses of which will exceed $15,000.00, except in case of casualty, and as hereinafter provided; or for building a county bridge, the expense of which will exceed $18,000.00, except in case of casualty, and as hereinafter provided; or enlarge, repair, improve, or rebuild a public county building, the entire cost of which expenditure will exceed $10,000.00; without first submitting to the voters of the county, the question as to the policy of making such expenditure."

The limitations prescribed in this section are limitations upon the powers of the county commissioners of a single county. There is no provision in the sections pertaining to the organization and maintenance of a district children's home, which makes the limitations of section 5638, General Code, applicable to the joint board of county commissioners, who have charge of such district home.

Each county could maintain its own children's home and in such case the commissioners of the county could expend $15000.00 for the erection of a building for such home without first submitting the same to a vote of the people.

Where districts are formed of two or more counties it would appear that each board of county commissioners should have the power to make the same expenditure for a district home that it would have if such county maintained a county home.

If the limitations of section 5638, General Code, were to apply to the powers of the joint board of commissioners, the limitation would be $7,500.00 on each county where two counties are joined and a limitation of $3,750.00 on each county when four counties constitute the district. The statute will not permit of such a construction.

I am of the opinion, therefore, that where two or more counties have formed a district for the maintenance of a children's home, the limitations provided in section 5638, General Code, apply to the powers of each board of county commissioners and not to the powers of the joint board of commissioners provided for by section 3109, General Code.

Your next inquiry covers the manner in which the county commissioners may secure the necessary funds.

Section 2434, General Code, provides:

"For the execution of the objects stated in the preceding section, or for the purpose of erecting or acquiring a building in memory of Ohio soldiers, or for a court house, county offices, jail, county infirmary, detention home, or additional land for an infirmary or county children's home or other necessary buildings or bridges, or for the purpose of enlarging, repairing, improving or rebuilding thereof, or for the relief or support of the poor, the commissioners may borrow such sum or sums of money as they deem necessary, at a rate of interest not to exceed six percent. per annum, and issue the bonds of the county to secure the payment of the principal and interest thereof.

"Provided, that if the judge designated to transact the business arising under the jurisdiction provided for in section 1639 of the General Code of the state of Ohio, shall advise and recommend in writing to the county commissioners of any county the purchase of land for and the erection of a place to be known as a detention home, or additional land for an infirmary or county children's home, the commissioners without first submitting the question to the vote of the county may levy a tax for either or both of such purposes in an amount not to exceed in any one year two-tenths of one mill for every dollar of taxable property on the tax duplicate of said county.

This section gives general power to the county commissioners to borrow money for the purposes therein enumerated and to issue bonds of the county as security. Bonds may be issued under this section for securing additional land for a county children's home and for enlarging and repairing the same.

Section 3079, General Code, supra, also authorizes the county commissioners to issue notes or bonds of the county in anticipation of the collection of taxes levied or to be levied for the purchase of a site and the erection of a building for a children's home. This section applies to a county children's home as well as to a district children's home.

I am of the opinion, therefore, that the county commissioners of each county constituting the district may borrow the money necessary to meet the proportionate share of such county, for the erection of the building in question, within the limitations fixed by section 5638, General Code, under the provisions of either section 2434, General Code, or of section 3079, General Code.

Respectfully,
TIMOTHY S. HOGAN,
Attorney General.

TAXES AND TAXATION—BOARD OF EDUCATION—SURPLUS IN SINKING FUND MAY NOT BE TRANSFERRED TO CONTINGENT FUND UNTIL WHOLE OF ISSUE AND INTEREST HAS BEEN RETIRED, NOR DOES IT REVERT TO GENERAL FUND.

Under section 7614, General Code, it is the mandatory duty of a board of education having a funded debt, to levy for the retirement of the bond and payment of interest, and to create a sinking fund commission, and even though such commission be not created, a levy specifically made for the payment of bonds and interest must be credited to the sinking and separated from other funds of the district.

The purpose of the sinking fund cannot be considered to have been accomplished until the bonds for which it is intended to provide, have been fully paid, and there is never a surplus in the sinking fund until all bonds and interest outstanding are paid and discharged.

For this reason moneys in the sinking fund may not be appropriated to any other purpose, under section 5649-3e, General Code, which section authorizes balances remaining over after the fixed charges shall have been terminated, to revert to the general fund. Any surplus remaining after all bonds and interest have been paid may be transferred to the contingent fund under section 5655, General Code.

COLUMBUS, OHIO, March 14, 1913.

HON. C. C. CRABBE, Prosecuting Attorney, London, Ohio.

DEAR SIR:—I beg to acknowledge receipt of your letter of February 6th, requesting my opinion upon the following facts:

> "A village board of education has issued bonds and has provided a levy for the purpose of meeting the installments of principal and interest as they become due. During the last year the amount of money produced by such levy was more than sufficient to meet the obligations of that year. The board of education undertook to and did, under section 5655, General Code, treat the excess as a "surplus" and transfer one thousand dollars to the contingent fund of the district at the meeting at which the annual tax levy was considered.
> "It is now desired to transfer the remainder of such surplus to the contingent fund at an ordinary regular meeting. The provisions of section 5649-3-e are relied upon as authority for such transfer."

The question submitted is as to the authority of the board of education to transfer the remainder of the excess of the amount produced by the levy for the last year over the amount necessary to be used from the proceeds of that levy to retire bonds and interest falling due in that year from the sinking fund to the contingent fund.

In considering this question I have assumed a fact which seems to be reasonably apparent from your letter, but is not explicitly stated therein, viz: that the bonds issued by the district have sometime yet to run; that is, such bonds will not all be retired for a number of years.

In my opinion the question presented cannot be accurately considered or answered without taking into account the provisions of the sections relating to the manner of levying taxes by a board of education for the extinguishment of a funded debt. I quote some of these provisions:

"Section 7587. Such levy shall be divided by the board of education into four funds: First, tuition fund; second, building fund; third, contingent fund; fourth, bonds, interest and sinking fund. A separate levy must be made for each fund.

"Section 7613. In any school district having a bonded indebtedness, for the payment of which, with interest, no provision has been made by a special tax levy for that particular purpose, the board of education of such district annually, on or before the thirty-first day of August, shall set aside from its revenue a sum equal to not less than one-fortieth of such indebtedness together with a sum sufficient to pay the annual interest thereon.

"Section 7614. The board of education of every district shall provide a sinking fund for the extinguishment of all its bonded indebtedness, which fund shall be managed and controlled by a board of commissioners designated as the 'board of commissioners of the sinking fund of .....' (inserting the name of the district), which shall be composed of five electors thereof, and be appointed by the common pleas court of the county in which such district is chiefly located, except that, in city or village districts the board of commissioners of the sinking fund of the city or village may be the board of the school district. Such commissioners shall serve without compensation and give such bond as the board of education requires and approves. Any surety company authorized to sign such bonds may be accepted by such board of education as surety. The cost thereof, together with all necessary expenses of such commissioners shall be paid by them out of the funds under their control.

"Section 7615. The board of commissioners of the sinking fund shall invest that fund in bonds of the United States, of the state of Ohio, of any municipal corporation, county, township or school district of any state or in bonds of its own issue. All interest received from such investments shall be deposited as other funds of such sinking fund, and reinvested in like manner. For the extinguishment of any bonded indebtedness included in such fund, the board of commissioners may sell or use any of the securities or money of such fund.

"Section 7618. The board of education shall appropriate to the use of such sinking fund any taxes levied for the payment of interest on its bonded indebtedness, together with the sum provided for in sections 7613 and 7614.

Sums so appropriated shall be applied to no other purpose than the payment of such bonds, interest thereon and necessary expenses of such sinking fund commission."

The joint effect of these sections may be described as follows:

It is the mandatory duty of a district having a funded debt to levy for the payment of the bonds and interest. The district must create a "sinking fund" as such. It is also the duty of the board of education to provide for the creation of a board of commissioners of such sinking fund. When the board of commissioners is created that board is entitled to the exclusive management of the fund, which for this purpose is withdrawn from the control of the board of education as such. (State ex rel. vs. Board of Education, 3 N. P. n. s. 401.)

I am of the opinion that the proceeds of a levy specifically made for the payment of bonds and interest should be credited to the sinking fund, and as such separated from the remaining funds of the district for the purpose of management and control, even though the board of education has not discharged its duty under section 7614 by securing the creation of the board of commissioners of the sinking fund.

I am further of the opinion that by reason of this consideration section 5655 must be construed as not applicable to the transfer of moneys from the sinking fund, so long as the purpose of the sinking fund is not fully accomplished. Another way of stating the same thing would be that there is never a "surplus" in the sinking fund within the contemplation of section 5655 until all the bonds and interest outstanding are paid and discharged. If this were not the case there would be no purpose in providing for the investment of funds by the commissioners of the sinking fund as is done by section 7615. Again, such conclusion is the only one which is consistent with the last sentence of section 7618 above quoted.

For similar reasons the provisions of section 5649-3-e, General Code, must be construed as not authorizing the appropriation of moneys in the sinking fund to any other purpose. This section, one of the provisions of the so-called Smith one per cent law, provides that,

"* * * balances remaining over at any time after a fixed charge shall have been terminated * * *, shall revert to the general fund, and shall then be subject to other authorized uses."

The "fixed charge" to which this section refers would never be "terminated" in the case of a sinking fund until the whole bond issue and interest thereon had been retired.

I might add in this connection that in a former opinion I have held that the phrase "revert to the general fund" is equivalent in meaning to "revert to the funds from which they were appropriated." So that this portion of section 5649-3-e is insufficient in itself to authorize the use of money in a specific fund for purposes other than those pertaining to that fund.

For all the reasons above suggested I am of the opinion not only that the proposed transfer of funds cannot be made, but also that the board of education was without authority to transfer the sum transferred by it at the meeting at which the annual tax levy was considered to the contingent fund. In short, all moneys levied for sinking fund purposes must be devoted to the payment of bonds and interest and to no other purpose until all the outstanding bonds have been paid, with interest. Any surplus then remaining, however, may be transferred.

Yours very truly,
TIMOTHY S. HOGAN,
Attorney General.

PROBATE JUDGE—MAY NOT PRACTICE LAW SUBSEQUENT TO HIS ELECTION EXCEPT AS TO BUSINESS COMMENCED PRIOR TO ELECTION AND NOT CONNECTED WITH HIS OFFICE.

Under sections 12854 and 12856, General Code, a judge elected to the probate court cannot practice law, or be associated with another in the practice of law, except as to business commenced by him prior to his election or appointment, provided it is not connected with his official duties.

COLUMBUS, OHIO, March 4, 1913.

HON. FRANK X. FREBIS, Prosecuting Attorney, Georgetown, Ohio.

DEAR SIR:—I haye vour letter of February 17, 1913, in which you inquire:

> "Has the probate judge the right, after assuming his office, to practice law to the extent of finishing business pending at the time he assumes his office, which business is in other courts and in no way connected with or affecting his official duties?"

An answer to this question involves a consideration of sections 1706, 12854 and 12856 of the General Code.

Section 1706, General Code, so far as material to this question reads:

> "No person shall practice as an attorney and counsellor at law in any court in this state * * * who holds a commission as judge of a court of record * * * Nothing herein contained shall prevent a judge of any court of this state from finishing business by him undertaken in the district, circuit or supreme court of the United States prior to his election as judge. * * * "

Section 12854 of the General Code reads:

> "Whoever, being the judge of a probate court or his deputy clerk or engaged in the business of such court as clerk thereof, practices law or is associated with another as partner in the practice of law, in a court or tribunal of this state, or prepares a petition or answer or makes out an account required for the settlement of an estate committed to the care or management of an executor, administrator, guardian or other person, or appears as counsel or attorney before a justice of the peace, court or judicial tribunal, shall be fined not more than fifty dollars and removed from office."

Section 12856 of the General Code reads as follows:

> "Section twelve thousand eight hundred and fifty-four shall not prevem a probate judge or deputy clerk from finishing business commenced by him prior to his election or appointment provided it is not connected with his official duty."

Section 563, which was construed in 61 O. S., 549, is now section 1706 of the General Code. The language in this section 1706, holding a commission as judge will have to be construed as was section 563 in the Savage-Hidy case, but there seems to be quite a distinction between the Hidy case and the question you present. To re-state them: The question presented in the Hidy case was whether a common pleas judge-elect to whom a commission has been issued might practice law after receipt of the commission and prior to the commencement of his term of office, while the question you propound is—whether a probate judge, may after his induction into office complete unfinished business which was commenced after his election and prior to the commencement of his term.

This question depends upon construction of section 12854 and section 12856 and not on section 1706. The latter provides who may practice law while the two former, provide what class of business a probate judge, who, prior to his induction into office was practicing law, might close up.

Section 12854, General Code, provides:

> "Whoever, being a judge of a probate court * * * practices law, or is associated with another as partner in the practice of law or * * * shall be fined not more than fifty dollars and removed from office."

This section is clear and unequivocal, and standing alone precludes a probate judge from engaging in the practice at all under penalty of fine and removal from office.

Section 12856, General Code, however, must be read as an exception to this section, as follows:

> "Section 12854 shall not prevent a probate judge from finishing business commenced by him prior to his election.

It is not for me to determine why the legislature drew the line at business commenced prior to election, nor the wisdom of the provision, and I can only answer your question by saying that I do not consider sections 1706, 12854 and 12856 in pari materia, and while of the opinion that the Hidy case should govern as to section 1706, I do not think it controlling nor in point as to the other sections, and therefore, a probate judge may only finish business not connected with his office and commenced prior to his election.

Yours truly,
TIMOTHY S. HOGAN,
Attorney General.

COUNTY COMMISSIONERS MAY NOT EMPLOY ASSISTANT ENGINEER OR ARCHITECT TO PREPARE PLANS FOR BRIDGE WITHOUT REQUEST OF COUNTY SURVEYOR—BIDS UNNECESSARY.

Professional work is not contemplated by the terms of sections 2343 and 2344, General Code, requiring bids to be submitted for labor and material in bridge construction. Bids for the works of preparing plans and specifications are not required.

Under section 2792, General Code, it is the duty of the county surveyor to prepare all plans and specifications necessary for bridge improvements, and assistants for such work may not be employed except upon the request of the county surveyor in accordance with section 3411, General Code.

COLUMBUS, OHIO, March 14, 1913.

HON. H. F. CASTLE, Prosecuting Attorney, Akron, Ohio.

DEAR SIR:—Under date of January 11th, you inquired of me as follows:

"1. Can county commissioners employ engineer or architect under sections 2343 and 2344 to prepare plans and specifications for bridge without first submitting to competitive bidders?

"2. Can commissioners for the purposes of the above employ engineer or architect under section 2411; if so, should compensation of architect or engineer be from fund contemplated by sections 2343 and 2344?"

Sections 2343, 2344 and 2411 of the General Code provide:

"Section 2343. When it becomes necessary for the commissioners of a county to erect or cause to be erected a public building, or substructure for a bridge, or an addition to or alteration thereof, before entering into any contract therefor or repair thereof or for the supply of any materials therefor, they shall cause to be made by a competent architect or civil engineer the following: Full and accurate plans showing all necessary details of the work and materials required with working plans suitable for the use of mechanics or other builders in the construction thereof, so drawn as to be easily understood; accurate bills, showing the exact amount of the different kinds of material, necessary to the construction, to accompany the plans; full and complete specifications of the work to be performed showing the manner and style required to be done, with such directions as will enable a competent builder to carry them out, and afford to bidders all needful information; a full and accurate estimate of each item of expense, and of the aggregate cost thereof.

"Nothing in this section shall prevent the commissioners from receiving from bidders on iron or reinforced concrete substructures for bridges the necessary plans and specifications therefor.

"Section 2344. When it becomes necessary to erect a bridge, the county commissioners shall determine the length and width of the superstructure, whether it shall be single or double track, and advertise for proposals for performing the labor and furnishing the materials necessary to the erection thereof. In their discretion, the commissioners may cause to be prepared, plans, descriptions, and specifications for such superstructure, which shall be kept on file in the auditors' office for inspection by bidders and persons interested, and invite bids or proposals in accordance therewith.

"Section 2411. When the services of an engineer are required with respect to roads, turnpike ditches or bridges, or with respect to any other matter, and when, on account of the amount of work to be performed, the board deems it necessary, upon the written request of the county surveyor, the board may employ a competent engineer and as many assistant engineers, rodmen and inspectors as may be needed, and shall furnish suitable offices, necessary books, stationery, instruments and implements for the proper performance of the duties imposed on them by such board."

Sections 2343 and 2344 are incorporated in the general chapter of the Code relating to building regulations. Sections 2352, 2353 and 2354 of the same chapter prescribe when bids in connection with the construction of a public building, bridge, bridge substructure, or for making an addition, alteration or repair thereof, must be advertised for by county commissioners and the manner of making such advertisement. These sections read as follows:

"Section 2352. When plans, drawings, representations, bills of material, specifications and estimates are so made and approved, the county commissioners shall give public notice in two of the principal papers in the county having the largest circulation therein, of the time when and the place where sealed proposals will be received for performing the labor and furnishing the materials necessary to the erection of such building, bridge or bridge substructure, or addition to or alteration thereof, and a contract based on such proposals will be awarded. If there is only one paper published in the county, it shall be published in such paper. The notice shall be published weekly for four consecutive weeks next preceding the day named for making the contract, and state when and where such plan or plans, descriptions, bills and specifications can be seen. They shall be open to public inspection at all reasonable hours, between the date of such notice and the making of such contract."

"Section 2353. When the estimated cost of a public building, bridge or bridge substructure or of making an addition to or repair thereof does not exceed one thousand dollars, it shall be let as heretofore provided, but notice of the letting need be given for only fifteen days, by posting on a bulletin board or by writing on a blackboard in a conspicuous place in the county commissioners or auditor's office, showing the nature of the letting and when and where proposals in writing will be received. Plans or specifications, or both as hereinbefore provided shall be kept on file during the fifteen days and open to public inspection."

"Section 2354. When the estimated cost of a public building, bridge or bridge substructure or of making an addition thereto or repair thereof does not exceed two hundred dollars, it may be let at private contract without publication or notice."

It will be observed that it is necessary to advertise for bids only for the furnishing of labor and material for the construction of a public building, bridge, bridge substructure, or an addition, alteration or repair thereof, under section 2343.

The services of an architect or civil engineer are professional and do not come within the provisions of these statutes relating to advertising for bids.

I am therefore of the opinion, in answer to your first question, that county commissioners, when proceeding under section 2343, are not required to advertise for bids for the services of an architect or civil engineer to prepare plans and specifications for the construction of bridges, etc.

Section 2792 of the General Code makes it the duty of the county surveyor, among others to:

"* * * prepare all plans, specifications, details, estimates of cost, and submit forms of contracts for the construction or repair of all bridges, culverts, roads, drains, ditches and other public improvements, except buildings, constructed under the authority of any board within and for the county. * * *."

Section 2411 is a general statute empowering county commissioners to:

"employ a competent engineer and as many assistants, etc., as may be needed, when, on account of the amount of work to be done, their services are required with respects to roads, turnpikes, ditches or bridges."

The commissioners, however, cannot employ such engineer and assistants, under section 2411, unless a request therefor is first made in writing, by the county surveyor; nor can they employ an engineer or architect to prepare plans and specifications for bridges, under section 2343, without the requisition of the county surveyor.

When an engineer is employed, pursuant to the provisions of section 2411, I am of the opinion that he may perform the services prescribed by section 2343, as to bridges. His compensation, however, must be paid in the manner set forth in section 2413 and not from any fund contemplated by sections 2343 and 2344.

Very truly yours,
TIMOTHY S. HOGAN,
Attorney General.

PROSECUTING ATTORNEY—NO AUTHORITY TO SUBPOENA WITNESSES FOR PURPOSE OF INVESTIGATING CRIMES.

A prosecuting attorney is not authorized by the statutes to file precipes for witnesses in the clerk's office, directed to the sheriff of the county, to subpoena witnesses to appear before him for the purpose of giving evidence relative to crimes within the county.

COLUMBUS, OHIO, March 28, 1913.

HON. JAY S. PAISLEY, Prosecuting Attorney, Steubenville, Ohio.

DEAR SIR:—I am in receipt of your letter of January 8, 1913, in which you inquire if the prosecuting attorney may file precipe for witnesses, in the clerk's office, directed to the sheriff of the county, to subpoena witnesses to appear before the prosecuting attorney to give evidence relating to crimes committed within the county; and whether the costs of the officers and witnesses fees would be paid as in other criminal proceedings before a grand jury.

Section 2916, of the General Code, is as follows:

"The prosecuting attorney shall have power to inquire into the commission of crimes within the county and shall prosecute on behalf of the state all complaints, suits and controversies in which the state is a party and such other suits, matters and controversies as he is directed by law to, prosecute within or without the county, in the probate court, common pleas court and circuit court. In conjunction with the attorney general he shall also prosecute cases in the supreme court arising in his county. In every case of conviction he shall forthwith cause execution to be issued for the fine and costs, or costs only, as the case may be, and faithfully urge the collection until it is affected (effected), or found to be impracticable, and forthwith pay to the county treasurer all moneys belonging to the state or county which come into his possession as fines, forfeitures, costs or otherwise."

This section simply defines the general powers and duties of the prosecuting attorney and gives him power to inquire into the commission of crimes within the county. Under authority of this section he may expend money allowed him by the commissioners under section 3004, and he may pay witnesses who will voluntarily come to his office at his request from this allowance; but there is no authority granted him to file precipes for witnesses, in the clerk's office, directed to the sheriff of the county, as is provided by sections 13495, 13563 and 13662, General Code. These sections are as follows:

"Section 13495. Justices of the peace, police judges and mayors may issue subpoenas and other process to bring witnesses before them. * * *

"Section 13563. When required by the grand jury or the prosecuting attorney, the clerk of the court in which such jury was impaneled, shall issue subpoenas and other process to any county to bring witnesses to testify before such jury. * * *

"Section 13662. In all criminal cases, the clerk of the court of the county, upon a precipe being filed, shall issue writs of subpoena for the witnesses named therein, directed to the sheriff of such county or the county where such witnesses reside or are found, which shall be served and returned as in other cases. * * *"

In the absence of express statutory authority it is my opinion that the prosecuting attorney may not file precipes for witnesses directed to the sheriff of the county, subpoenaing witnesses to appear before him to give evidence relating to crimes committed within the county. The answer to this question makes it unnecessary to answer the remaining questions of your letter.

Very truly yours,
TIMOTHY S. HOGAN,
Attorney General.

COUNTY DETECTIVE EMPLOYED BY PROSECUTING ATTORNEY NOT GIVEN POWER OF PEACE OFFICER—NO AUTHORITY TO BREAK INTO A BUILDING IN WHICH GAMBLING IS SUSPECTED—STATUTE PROVIDING FOR APPOINTMENT OF SECRET SERVICE OFFICER BY PROSECUTING ATTORNEY UNCONSTITUTIONAL.

Section 2915, General Code, providing for the appointment by a prosecuting attorney of a secret service officer, having been declared unconstitutional on the ground that the appointing power is too indefinite for execution, the former statute, to wit: section 1541, General Code, as it existed prior to its amendment, providing for a secret service officer for the prosecuting attorney's office or office in the court of common pleas, is still in force. Such officer is not specifically made a peace officer or given police powers, and inasmuch as he is not given such powers, he may not, under settled rules of law, break into a public building in which gambling is reasonably believed to be going on.

COLUMBUS, OHIO, February 18, 1913.

HON. A. M. HENDERSON, Prosecuting Attorney, Youngstown, Ohio.

DEAR SIR:—Your favor of January 27, 1913, is received, in which you inquire:

> "What powers has a county detective appointed by the court of common pleas or a judge thereof, particularly with reference to arrests made where the crime of gambling is suspected, and where it is deemed necessary by the detective to break into the building in which the gambling is reasonably believed to be going on?"

It will be necessary to determine which statute is now in force in reference to the appointment of a county detective.

Section 2915-1, General Code, as passed in 1902 Ohio Laws, 77, reads:

> "The prosecuting attorney may appoint a secret service officer, whose duty it shall be to aid him in the collection and discovery of evidence to be used in the trial of criminal cases and matters of a criminal nature. The compensation of said officer shall be fixed by the presiding judge of the court of common pleas of the subdivision of that judicial district and shall not be less than one-fourth nor more than one-half of the official salary of the prosecuting attorney per year, payable monthly, out of the county fund, upon the warrant of the county auditor."

In State vs. Sayre, 12 Nisi Prius, N. S., 13, it is held:

> "Section 2915-1 of the General Code, providing for the appointment of a secret service officer by the prosecuting attorney, is inoperative and void for the reason that it is impossible to determine what judge or officer is designated by the statute to fix the compensation of such appointee; and inasmuch as it cannot be supposed the legislature would have repealed the existing act providing for the appointment of such an officer without providing a substitute therefor, and these acts so far as the attempted amendment, supplement or repeal are concerned, relate to a single subject, section 1541 remains in force."

As held herein, section 2915-1, General Code, is void and section 1541, General

Code, as it existed prior to the amendment thereof, in 102 Ohio Laws, 77, is still in force. In said section it is provided:

> "The judge of the court of common pleas of a county, or the judge of such court in a county in joint session, if they deem it advisable, may appoint either or all of the following:
> "Third: A secret service officer for the prosecuting attorney's office, who shall aid the prosecuting attorney in the collection and discovery of testimony to be used in the trial of criminal cases and in matters of a criminal nature. Such appointment may be made for such term as the judge or judges deem advisable, subject to termination at any time for cause sufficient within the judgment of the judge or judges of the court. He shall receive such compensation, payable monthly from the county fund upon the warrant of the county auditor, as the judge or judges so appointing shall determine, not exceeding the rate of fifteen hundred dollars for each year."

This section prescribes the duty of such secret service officer, who is commonly known as the county detective, and such duty is to "aid the prosecuting attorney in the collection and discovery of testimony to be used in the trial of criminal cases and in matters of a criminal nature."

Such officer is not specifically given power to make arrests or to execute criminal process.

It does not appear in the case you submit whether the county detective is to act without warrant or with a search warrant in his possession.

Gambling is defined by sections 13058 and 13059, General Code, and said sections prescribe the penalty therefor.

Section 13058, General Code, provides:

> "Whoever plays a game for wager in an ordinary tavern, race-field, booth, arbor, out-house or erection connected therewith, or in a public place, or wagers on those so playing therein, shall be fined not more than one hundred dollars."

Section 13059, General Code, provides:

> "Whoever plays a game for money or other thing of value or makes a wager for money or other thing of value, shall be fined not more than one hundred dollars or imprisoned not less than ten days nor more than six months, or both."

It appears therefore, that gambling is a misdemeanor and is not a felony.

The rule for breaking doors or into a building where a breach of the peace is suspected of occurring is stated in 3 Cyc., at page 893, as follows:

> "After due demand, either a peace officer or a private person may, without a warrant, break open doors for the purpose of apprehending a felon, or for the purpose of preventing the commission of a felony. When the arrest is upon suspicion of felony, it seems that a peace officer may break doors for the purpose of apprehending the suspected party, but that a private person may not. A peace officer, moreover, may, without a warrant, break into a dwelling or other house for the purpose of suppressing or preventing a disturbance or breach of the peace, and of arresting the offenders, even at night, but a private person may not."

In accordance with this rule of law a peace officer would have the right, without warrant, to break doors in order to suppress a breach of the peace, and to arrest the offenders, but a private person would not have such right.

The question arises, is a county detective, or secret service officer, appointed by virtue of section 1541, General Code, a peace officer?

A peace officer is defined in Cyc. at page 1327, where it is said:

> "The sheriff, under sheriff or deputy, or a constable, marshal, police constable or policeman of a city, town or village; the sheriff and his deputy; constable; marshal, constable, and policeman of any incorporated town or city, and any private person especially appointed to execute criminal process."

The duty of a county detective, as prescribed by section 1541, General Code, are to aid the prosecuting attorney in the collection and discovery of testimony. Nothing is said as to his power or duty to make arrests or to serve criminal process.

In case of Penny vs. The New York Central & Hudson River Railroad Co., 34 N. Y. App., 10, it is held:

> "That there is no such settled significance to the term 'detective' as of necessity imports authority to arrest criminals or persons charged or suspected of committing criminal acts, and that in order to establish such authority, it is essential that evidence of such conditions as warrant the inference of its existence shall be given."

This was an action for false imprisonment against the railroad company, and the detective in question was the detective of the company.

Hatch, J., says on page 14:

> "There is no such settled significance attached to the term 'detective' as of necessity imports authority to arrest criminals or persons charged or suspected of committing criminal acts. * * * But it is quite well known that the term 'detective' is applied to persons in the employ of various individuals and corporations whose authority is limited to the collection of evidence and the performance of other acts having sole reference to civil litigation."

In the above definition of a peace officer, sheriffs, constables, marshals and policemen are specifically named. Detectives and secret service officers are not named.

Section 2833, General Code, prescribes the duties of a sheriff and reads:

> "Each sheriff shall preserve the public peace and cause all persons guilty of breach thereof, within his knowledge or view, to enter into recognizance with sureties to keep the peace and to appear at the succeeding term of the common pleas court of the proper county and commit them to jail in case of refusal. He shall return a transcript of all his proceedings with the recognizance so taken to such court and shall execute all warrants, writs and other process to him directed by proper and lawful authority. He shall attend upon the common pleas court and the circuit court during their sessions, and, when required, upon the probate court. In the execution of the duties required of him by law, the sheriff may call to his aid such person or persons or power of a county as may be necessary. Under the direction and control of the county commissioners, he shall have charge of the court house."

Section 3340, General Code, prescribes certain duties of a constable, as follows:

"Each constable shall apprehend, or view or warrant, and bring to justice all felons, disturbers and violators of the criminal laws of this state, and suppress all riots, affrays, and unlawful assemblies, which may come to his knowledge, and, generally, keep the peace in his proper county."

Certain duties are given to a policeman by virtue of section 4378, General Code which reads:

"The police shall preserve the peace, protect persons and property and obey and enforce all ordinances of council and all criminal laws of the state and the United States. The fire department shall protect the lives and property of the people in case of fire, and both the police and fire departments shall protect the lives and property of the people in case of fire, and both the police and fire departments shall perform such other duties, not inconsistent herewith, as council by ordinance prescribes. The police and fire departments in every city shall be maintained under the civil service system, as provided in this subdivision."

Section 4385, General Code, applies to marshals of villages and reads:

"The marshal shall be the peace officer of the village and the executive head under the mayor of the police force. The marshal, deputy marshals, policemen or night watchmen under him shall have the powers conferred by law upon police officers in all villages of the state, and such other powers not inconsistent with the nature of their offices as are conferred by ordinance."

Section 4386, General Code, provides:

"He shall suppress all riots, disturbances and breaches of the peace, and to that end may call upon the citizens to aid him. He shall arrest all disorderly persons in the corporation and pursue and arrest any person fleeing from justice in any part of the state. He shall arrest any person in the act of committing any offense against the laws of the state or the ordinances of the corporation, and forthwith bring such person before the mayor or other competent authority for examination or trial, and he shall receive and execute any proper authority for the arrest and detention of criminals fleeing or escaping from other places or states."

Each of the foregoing officers are made, by the statutes, peace officers, with power to arrest and execute original process.

The county detective is appointed to aid the prosecuting attorney.

Section 2916, General Code, gives certain powers to the prosecuting attorney, and reads:

"The prosecuting attorney shall have power to inquire into the commission of crimes within the county and shall prosecute on behalf of the state all complaints, suits and controversies in which the state is a party, and such other suits, matters and controversies as he is directed by law to prosecute within or without the county, in the probate court, common pleas court and circuit court. In conjunction with the attorney general, he shall also prosecute cases in the supreme court arising in his county. In every case of conviction, he shall forthwith cause execution to be issued for the fine and costs, or costs only, as the case may be, and faithfully urge the collection until it is affected (effected), or found to be impracticable, and forthwith pay to the county treasurer all moneys belonging to the state or county, which come into his possession as fines, forfeitures, costs or otherwise."

The prosecuting attorney is given the power to inquire into the commission of crimes. This does not make him a peace officer, and he is not a peace officer with power to arrest or to execute criminal process.

The duty of the county detective is to aid in the collection and discovery of testimony in criminal cases. There is no authority to break doors in order to collect or discover testimony for a criminal trial. The authority to break doors is to make an arrest or to suppress a breach of the peace.

The office of county detective, or secret service officer, as stated in the statute, is a statutory office, and the duties granted him by the statute do not authorize him to make arrests or to execute criminal process as such officer. He is not, therefore, a peace officer, and his power to break doors to suppress or prevent a breach of the peace is the same as that of any other person who is not a peace officer.

The statutes provide for the issue and service of a search warrant in certain cases. Section 13482, General Code, provides:

"A justice of the peace, mayor or police judge may issue warrants to search a house or place:

"4. For a gaming table, establishment, device, or apparatus kept or exhibited for unlawful gaming, or to win or gain money or other property, and for money or property won by unlawful gaming."

Section 13483, General Code, provides:

"A warrant for search shall not be issued until there is filed with the magistrate an affidavit particularly describing the house or place to be searched, the person to be seized, and the things to be searched for, and alleging substantially the offense in relation thereto, and that affiant believes, and has good cause to believe, that such things are there concealed."

Section 13484, General Code, provides:

"The warrant for a search shall be directed to the proper officer, and, by a copy of the affidavit inserted therein or annexed and referred to, shall show or recite all the material facts alleged in the affidavit, and particularly describe the thing to be searched for, the house or place to be searched, and the person to be seized. Such warrant shall command the officer to search such house or place for the property or other things, and, if found, to bring them, together with the person to be seized, before the magistrate or another magistrate of the county having cognizance thereof. The command of the warrant shall be that the search be made in the day time, unless there is urgent necessity for a search in the night, in which case a search in the night may be ordered."

This section does not name the officer, but states that the warrant shall be issued to the "proper officer." A proper officer would be one with power to make arrest, or to execute criminal process.

Section 13504, General Code, provides:

"In executing a warrant for the arrest of a person charged with an offense, or a search warrant, the officer may break open an outer or inner door or window of a dwelling house or other building, if, after notice of his office and purpose, he is refused admittance. But an officer executing a search warrant shall not enter a house or building not described in the warrant."

This section gives the officer the power to break a door or window in the execution of a warrant. It does not extend that power to a person who is not an officer. The officer contemplated by this section is an officer with power to make arrests and to execute criminal process. It means a peace officer. The county detective, or secret service officer, appointed by virtue of section 1541, General Code, is not such peace officer.

It is my conclusion, therefore, that the secret service officer appointed by virtue of section 1541, General Code, has no authority as such officer to break into a building in which gambling is reasonably believed to be going on.

Respectfully,
TIMOTHY S. HOGAN,
Attorney General.

SCHOOLS—BOXWELL GRADUATE ENTITLED TO ADMISSION INTO ELEMENTARY SCHOOL.

Under section 7644, General Code, which provides that each board of education shall establish a sufficient number of elementary schools to provide for the free education of the youth of school age, and under section 7681, which provides that schools of each district shall be free to all youth between six and twenty-one years of age, a pupil of that age who has received a Boxwell diploma and has failed in his studies in the first year of the high school course, is entitled, if he so desires, to re-admission into the elementary school of his district.

Under section 4750, General Code, a board of education is empowered to make such regulations as it deems necessary for the government of its employees and the pupils of the school. Under this section, the board may designate what studies such pupil shall be required to take.

COLUMBUS, OHIO, Februarv 5, 1913.

HON. ARTHUR VAN EPP, Prosecuting Attorney, Medina, Ohio.

DEAR SIR:—I desire to acknowledge your letter of the date of December 17, 1912, wherein you inquire as follows:

"In Medina township of this county there is a special school district designated as the Weymouth Special school district, and which maintains no high school of any class, the eighth grade being the highest of the school there maintained.

"1. 'A' is a pupil residing in said special district and who attended the school maintained therein and took the full course prescribed by the rules and regulations of the board of education, and fully completed and graduated from said school and then took the Boxwell-Patterson examination, passed and received the diploma provided by that law, and then entered the Medina high school, his tuition being paid by the board of education of the special school district, as provided by law. 'A' failed to pass his examinations at the end of his first year's attendance at the Medina high school, and was therefore not promoted, and he now seeks to again attend the school maintained in the special school district, and the question arises, is he legally entitled to attend said school.

"2. If the pupil in question were to be permitted to again attend the school who would be charged with the duty designating the studies to be again taken and prescribed for him, and the class to which he might be attached?"

In reply to your first question I desire to say section 7648 of the General Code defines an elementary school as follows:

"An elementary school is one in which instruction and training are given in spelling, reading, writing, arithmetic English language, English grammar and composition, geography, history of the United States, including civil government, physiology and hygiene. Nothing herein shall abridge the power of boards of education to cause instruction and training to be given in vocal music, drawing, elementary algebra, the elements of agriculture and other branches which they deem advisable for the best interests of the schools under their charge."

Section 7649 of the General Code defines a high school as follows:

"A high school is one of higher grade than an elementary school, in which instruction and training are given in approved courses in the history of the United States and other countries; composition, rhetoric, English and American literature; algebra and geometry; natural science, political or mental science, ancient or modern foreign languages, or both, commercial and industrial branches, or such of the branches named as the length of its curriculum makes possible. Also such other branches of higher grade than those to be taught in the elementary schools, with such advanced studies and advanced reviews of the common branches as the board of education directs."

From the description of the schools maintained in Medina township, as set forth in your inquiry, it is my conclusion that said school falls within the category of the elementary school, as defined by the above quoted sections.

Section 7644 of the General Code provides that each board of education shall establish a sufficient number of elementary schools to provide for the free education of the youth of school age, as follows:

"Each board of education shall establish a sufficient number of elementary schools to provide for the free education of the youth of school age within the district under its control, at such places as will be most convenient for the attendance of the largest number thereof. Every elementary day school so established shall continue not less than thirty-two nor more than forty weeks in each school year. All the elementary schools within the same school district shall be so continued."

From the facts as stated in your inquiry that the pupil in question finished the course of study provided in the schools of the Weymouth special school district, then attended the Medina high school after passing the Boxwell-Patterson examination, and then failed to pass the examination at the end of his first year in said high school, thereby failing to be promoted, it would seem to follow that said pupil has not satisfactorily completed his elementary education. Said elementary education is to be furnished free to every youth of school age within the district wherein such youth lives by the board of education, as provided by section 7644, General Code, above quoted.

Furthermore, section 7681, of the General Code, provides that the schools of each respective district shall be free to all youth between six and twenty-one years of age, as follows:

> "The schools of each district shall be free to all youth between six and twenty-one years of age, who are children, wards, or apprentices of actual residents of the district, including children of proper age who are inmates of a county or district children's home located in such a school district, at the discretion of its board of education, but the time in the school year at which beginners may enter upon the first year's work of the elementary schools shall be subject to the rules and regulations of the local boards of education. But all youth of school age living apart from their parents or guardians and who work to support themselves by their own labor, shall be entitled to attend school free in the district in which they are employed."

Therefore, in answer to your first question, I am of the opinion that said pupil is legally entitled to attend the schools in the Weymouth special school district.

In answer to your second question, section 4750 of the General Code provides as follows:

> "The board of education shall make such rules and regulations as it deems necessary for its government and the government of its employes and the pupils of the schools. No meeting of a board of education, not provided for by its rules or by law, shall be legal, unless all the members thereof have been notified, as provided in the next section."

In view of the provisions contained in said section and the authority thereby lodged in the board of education it follows that said pupil must pursue such studies of the respective grades as are prescribed and designated by the rules and regulations of the board of education of the said Weymouth special school district.

Very truly yours,
TIMOTHY S. HOGAN,
Attorney General.

SHERIFF PERMITTED EXPENSES OF MAINTAINING AUTOMOBILE.

The provision of section 2997, General Code, permitting a sheriff expenses of maintaining horses and vehicles necessary to the proper administration of the duties of his office, comprehends the payment of expenses for the maintenance of an automobile used by him in the performance of his official duties.

COLUMBUS, OHIO, February 18, 1913.

HON. THOMAS L. POGUE, Prosecuting Attorney, Cincinnati, Ohio.

DEAR SIR:—I am in receipt of letter of Hon. Charles A. Green, assistant prosecuting attorney, Hamilton county, Ohio, in which he inquires as to whether repairs on automobile maintained by the sheriff and used in the business of the county, may be properly paid by the county commissioners.

Section 2997 of the General Code provides in part as follows:

> "In addition to the compensation and salary herein provided the county commissioners shall make allowances quarterly to each sheriff * * * and all expenses of maintaining horses and vehicles necessary to the proper administration of the duties of his office. * * *"

The part of section 2997, General Code, just quoted, was construed in the case of state ex rel. Denormandie vs. Commissioners of Mahoning county, found in 10 C. C. n. s. 398. The court said in part:

> "What, then, is the definition—the ordinary meaning—of the word 'maintaining,' especially when applied to animals and vehicles?
> "All lexicographers define maintenance as 'maintaining, supporting, upholding, keeping up, * * *' and the word maintain 'to hold or keep up in any particular state or condition, * * * to keep up.' So that the meaning of the word 'maintaining' as used in this section in reference to horses and vehicles means supporting, sustaining, keeping up, supplying with the necessaries of life, and the legislature therefore in this provision only meant and intended that sheriffs should be allowed the necessary expenses incurred in supporting, sustaining and supplying their horses with the necessaries of life, and in keeping their vehicles in good condition, and not in the purchase of them."

Section 2997, General Code, prior to 1911, did not authorize the sheriff to expend money for livery hire and only allowed expenses for maintaining horses and vehicles. So that, if he did not own his own vehicle he was not authorized to hire conveyances, and to meet the situation the legislature amended section 2997, General Code, and gave county commissioners authority to make allowances for necessary livery hire for the proper administration of the duties of the office.

It was contended after the amendment that the phrase "livery hire," as used in this statute, did not include the hire of automobiles. This question was raised in the common pleas court of Franklin county, Ohio, in the case of state of Ohio ex rel. Sartain, as sheriff of Franklin county, against Sayre, auditor, et al.

Judge Rathmell held that the sheriff under the amended section authorizing livery hire could hire automobiles.

The court said in part:

> "It is the contention of counsel for defendants that the phrase 'livery hire' as used in the statute does not include the hire of automobiles; and cannot apply to any expenditure for the hiring of horseless vehicles.
> "It is not questioned that an automobile is a vehicle which is subject to hire.
>
> "Does the expense account (which was for hire of automobile by the sheriff for use in the performance of the duties of his office) fairly come within the provision for the allowance which may be made for necessary livery hire? * * *
> "It appears clear that by the intent of the statute that livery service necessary for the proper administration of the duties of the sheriff's office may be paid for by the commissioners.
>
> "The word 'livery' is used in a number of senses. * * *
> "The standard dictionary defines 'livery' in one of its accepted senses as 'The keeping of horses and vehicles ready for hire.' 'A livery man is one who keeps a "livery stable." ' 'A livery stable is a building where horses or vehicles are kept or let for hire.' (19 A. & E. Enc. of Law 430.) A livery stable 'A place where horses and vehicles are kept for hire.' (Eng. L. Dict.)

"From their definition, it would appear that as 'livery' pertains to the keeping of horses and vehicles ready for hire, or the keeping of horses or vehicles ready for hire, that to constitute 'livery hire' it is not necessary that both horses and vehicles be connected with the letting or transaction; that the hire of a horse from a liveryman can constitute 'livery hire' within the unstrained meaning of the definition; and the hire of a vehicle would likewise constitute 'livery hire.'

"It is not uncommon that liverymen keep and maintain automobiles, in connection with horses and carriages, for hire to their customers. And automobiles are maintained alone in stables or buildings for hire.

"In 28 Cyc. 42 the following definition appears: 'The public garage is the modern substitute for the livery stable and may be defined as a building or inclosure for the care and storage of motor vehicles and in which motor vehicles are kept for hire.'

"General Code 13130, where penalty is provided against hiring certain animals or vehicles with intent to defraud the owner or keeper of a livery stable, 'Automobile' is mentioned as one of the vehicles within the range of such hiring, which lends some support to the claims that an automobile is there recognized as a proper subject of a liveryman's business, and hence a subject of 'livery hire.'

"An automobile is a vehicle, but to insist that 'vehicle' is the definition of 'livery' is limited in meaning to horse-drawn vehicles, seems hardly warranted in modern usage of the word."

I quote at length from this last decision because it has been contended by some, as before stated, that vehicles as used in section 2997, General Code, refers only to buggies and carriages. The Sayre case decides that the automobile is a vehicle within the meaning of section 2997, General Code. The sheriff may engage either horse, buggy or automobile under the term "livery hire." So that if the sheriff is the owner of a buggy or an automobile which he uses in the service of the county in connection with the duties of his office and he presents the bills for the repair of automobile they should be allowed.

Very truly yours,
TIMOTHY S. HOGAN,
Attorney General.

AUDITOR, COUNTY—WARRANT MAY NOT BE DRAWN TO PAY JUDICIAL AND COURT EXPENSES AFTER APPROPRIATION FOR SUCH EXPENSES HAS BEEN EXHAUSTED.

Section 5649-3d, General Code, requiring that all expenditures by county commissioners within the six months of each fiscal year, shall be made for and within the appropriations made and balances thereof, has modified section 5637, General Code, which provides that the auditor may draw his warrant upon the general or county fund for the payment of judicial and court expenses, when the fund appropriated for the same became inadequate. The latter section can now only be construed to empower the auditor to draw his warrant upon such fund as has been appropriated for the express purpose of caring for all expenditures not covered by special and detailed appropriations.

COLUMBUS, OHIO, March 7, 1913.

HON. JOHN J. WOOLEY, Prosecuting Attorney, Athens, Ohio.

DEAR SIR:—I beg to apologize for not sooner replying to your letter of December 20th. The unusual pressure of business, due to the legislative session, has occasioned some delay in this department in the answering of correspondence.

You request my opinion upon the following question:

> "May the county auditor, under section 5637 of the General Code of Ohio, draw his warrant upon the county treasurer to pay judicial and court expenses after the amount appropriated for such expenses has been exhausted but where there are funds in the treasury not otherwise appropriated?"

Section 5637, General Code, which you cite, after providing the rates which (prior to the enactment of the Smith one per cent. law, so-called) could be levied for the judicial fund by the county commissioners provides that, "In case such fund should become inadequate to meet the expenses of the courts, the general or county fund shall be drawn upon for the payment of such expenses."

This section was enacted in 1902, 95 O. L., 465. Subsequently, in 1911, the legislature passed the Smith one per cent. law, so-called, which contained the following provision.

> "Section 5649-3d. At the beginning of each fiscal half-year the various boards mentioned in section 5649-3a of this act (including county commissioners) shall make appropriations for each of the several objects for which money has to be provided * * * and all expenditures within the following six months shall be made from and within such appropriations and balances thereof." * * *

In other opinions I have held that the explicit provisions of the section last quoted permit of only one implied exception, namely: the expenditure of moneys acquired by the exercise of the borrowing power. Even this case is seemingly covered by the express language of section 5649-3d, but for reasons which I need not discuss at this time I am satisfied that such expenditures are not within the contemplation of the section.

Section 5637 was passed at a time when there was no such requirement as is at present embodied in section 5649-3d, and its provisions are therefore inconsistent with the latter section. That is to say, when section 5637 was enacted the warrants of the auditor were drawn upon and made payable directly from the funds in the county treasury. Such is not now the case; the auditor's warrants are now payable, not from the funds as such but from the appropriated funds—out of appropriation accounts, so to speak; except that the borrowing of money for a specific purpose is in itself an appropriation of the proceeds of the loan for that purpose.

The general principle then which governs the question asked by you is that the county auditor no longer has any authority to issue warrants against any fund raised by taxation or otherwise derived from the current revenues of the county, but only against the appropriated parts of such funds.

In my opinion, the utmost effect that can now be given to the above provisions of section 5637, which is certainly so inconsistent with section 5649-3d as to be substantially amended, if not wholly repealed, by implication, by the enactment of the latter section, is to regard it as declaratory of the objects and purposes of the general account of the county. That is to say, if from the "general" or "county" fund, which is the proceeds of a certain levy made by the county commissioners, the commissioners have appropriated a "general" account—that is, an account from which it is intended that all expenditures not covered by the special and detailed appropriations are to be paid. The provision of section 5637, which has been quoted, might be regarded as authorizing the expenditure of such an appropriation after the amounts levied and appropriated for the judicial fund had been exhausted. I believe this to be the intention of the legislature, derivable from its somewhat ambiguous enactments. So that, if in Athens county the commissioners have created such a general appropriation account, they may use it for the purpose of meeting deficiencies in the judicial account. The county auditor may not, however, do precisely what you inquire about, namely: draw warrants for judicial expenses upon unappropriated balances in the general county fund.

I anticipate that the answer which I have given to your question may raise in your mind the further question as to the method of paying judicial expenses after a fund for that purpose has become exhausted in the event that there is not a sufficient amount in any general appropriation account to meet the deficiency. In my opinion the only provision which may lawfully be made for such a case is to borrow money to meet the expenses of the courts as they accrue from time to time. Without going into detail, suffice it to say that I am of the opinion that the expenses of the courts are legal charges against the county, regardless of any action of the county commissioners, i. e., are not contractual in their nature and must at all events be paid. That being the case, the commissioners have authority, under section 5656 of the General Code, to borrow money to provide for paying indebtedness so incurred; but they may not under this section anticipate the incurring of indebtedness.

For the sake of accuracy, however, I am constrained to call your attention to section II of article XII of the constitution, as amended in 1912, which seems to cast some doubt upon the power of the commissioners under existing statutes to issue bonds for any purpose. Inasmuch as you do not ask this precise question, and because also I have not fully made up my mind as to the application of this section of the amended constitution, I do not pass upon the question which I have suggested in this connection.

Very truly yours,
TIMOTHY S. HOGAN,
Attorney General.

TERMS OF OFFICE OF COUNTY BOARD OF VISITORS FIXED BY LEGISLATIVE ACT OMITTED FROM CODE BY CODIFYING COMMISSION.

Although the general assembly has provided in section 633-15, revised statutes, for specific terms of office for the board of county visitors, this statute was omitted from the General Code by the codifying commission. Since, however, sections 2971 and 2974, General Code, both recognize the existence of a term of office for such officers, there is sufficient ambiguity in the statutes as they appear in the code to justify resort to the original acts in order to settle the same. The statutes aforesaid, therefore, providing terms of office must be held to control.

COLUMBUS, OHIO, March 28, 1913.

HON. L. T. CROMLEY, Prosecuting Attorney, Mt. Vernon, Ohio.

DEAR SIR:—Your letter of January 9th received. You call my attention to the change made by the codifying commission in sections 2971 to 2976, inclusive, General Code. You state that:

> "The general assembly last acted upon these statutes in 1906, and as they amended they appear in year book 98, pages 27 and 28.
> "You will observe that the codifying commission omitted a very essential part of section 2971, when they failed to fix the beginning of the terms of the county board of visitors and also the length of terms.
> "The general assembly had provided (supra) that the terms should begin the first of May, and that two should serve for one year, two for two years and two for three years. The codifying commission omitted this entirely. The matter becomes important when considered with section 2973, which fixes a limitation of one hundred dollars for any one year by said board. Our auditor contends that the fiscal year should govern; that is, from September 1st to September 1st; but I can see no reason for that holding. My own opinion is that under the present statute, as mutilated, the terms of the members begin from the day of their appointment, and if the probate judge sees fit, he could appoint a new board each year, even to the extent of an entire new board."

and request my opinion as to the time when the terms of the board of visitors begin and how long they extend.

Section 2971 of the General Code provides as follows:

> "Between the first day of March and the first day of April the judge of the probate court in each county shall appoint six persons, not more than three of whom shall have the same political affiliation, who shall constitute a board of county visitors for the inspection of all charitable and correctional institutions supported in whole or in part from the county or municipal funds. Three of such appointees shall be women. All vacancies in the board shall be filled in the manner provided by the original appointment for the unexpired term only."

This section, before it was codified, was found in 98 Ohio Laws, 28 (Section 633-15, Revised Statutes). It provides as follows:

> "The judge of probate court in all counties shall between the first day of March and the first day of April appoint six persons, three of whom shall be women, and not more than three of whom shall have the same political affiliations, two of whom, as indicated by the appointing judge, upon the fixed appointment, shall serve for one year, two for two years, and two for three years, beginning the first day of May, who shall constitute a board of county visitors for the inspection of all charitable and correctional institutions supported in whole or in part from the county or municipal funds. All vacancies in the board, whether occasioned by the expiration of term, removal or otherwise, shall be filled in the manner that the original appointment is made and, when occurring at any time before the expiration of the term of appointment, shall be for the balance of the term only. * * *"

The general assembly provided by said section that the terms of the board of county visitors should begin on the first day of May; and that two should serve for one year, two for two years, and two for three years; and provided by section 633-17, Revised Statutes (Section 2 of the same act), that the first appointments under that act should be made for such terms or parts of terms as should thereafter cause the terms of two members of said board to expire each year on the first day of March. The codifying commission omitted, in section 2971, General Code, all reference to the length of the terms of the members of the board, and seemingly provided that the members of such board should be appointed for no definite term, and removable at the pleasure of the probate judge, and that he should appoint six members each year.

Section 2971 provides, in the last sentence, that "All vacancies in the board shall be filled in the manner provided by the original appointment for the unexpired term only." Here is, plainly, a reference to a term of office of the members of the county board.

Section 2974, General Code, after reciting the duties of the board of visitors provdes in part as follows:

> "Failure in the performance of these duties on the part of any member of the board for one year shall be sufficient cause for his or her removal by the judge of the probate court."

As before stated, the codifying commission omitted to refer to the terms of the members, or at least makes them annual appointees by the probate judge. Section 2974, just quoted, provides that any failure in the performance of his duties on the part of any member of the board, for one year, shall be sufficient cause for removal by the probate judge. This plainly creates an ambiguity in the statutes, or at least a conflict between sections 2971 and 2974, and also makes their meaning doubtful.

In Rathburn vs. Hamilton, 4 App. Cas. (D. C.) 475, the supreme court of the United States said:

> "The general rule is perfectly well settled that where a statute is of doubtful meaning and susceptible upon its face of two constructions, the court may look into the prior and contemporaneous acts, the reason which induced the act in question * * * and the purpose intended to be accomplished by it to determine the proper construction. * * * The whole doctrine applicable to the subject may be summed in the single observation that prior acts may be resorted to to solve but not to create an ambiguity."

It is also a well settled rule, and one peculiarly applicable to revisory statutes, that in the revision of statutes neither an alteration in phraseology nor the omission or addition of words in the latter statute shall be held necessarily to alter the construction of the former act. Conger et.al. vs. Barker's Administrator and Heirs, 11 O. S., Page 1.

Referring back to the original act, as to the meaning of section 2971, and supplying the parts omitted by the codifying commission, which is necessary to solve the ambiguity, I am of the opinion that the term of two of the members of the board of county visitors expire each year on the first day of March; that the probate judge shall appoint two members each year, for a period of three years; and the county commissioners shall allow the board and its members, for annual expenses in any one year, the sum of one hundred dollars.

Very truly yours,
TIMOTHY S. HOGAN,
Attorney General.

COUNTY COMMISSIONERS—DISCRETIONARY DUTY TO COMPENSATE PERSON BITTEN BY ANIMAL AFFLICTED WITH RABIES.

Under section 5852, General Code, the allowance of damages to a person bitten by an animal afflicted with rabies, rests with the discretion of the county commissioners, and the commissioners may make such reasonable requirements for the purpose of investigation of the facts as they deem necessary.

COLUMBUS, OHIO, March 31, 1913.

HON. HORACE L. SMALL, Prosecuting Attorney, Portsmouth, Ohio.

DEAR SIR:—I beg to acknowledge receipt of your letter, dated December 21, 1912, which reads as follows:

> "Sections 5851 and 5852, General Code of Ohio, provide for the payment by the county commissioners of certain expenses incurred by persons who have been bitten by animals afflicted with rabies.
> "We have at present pending before the commissioners of this county a very peculiar case. A certain man, a resident of Cincinnati, Ohio, A. J. Conley by name, several months ago, while in this city on business, was bitten one evening, after dark, by a dog which he says gave every appearance of having rabies, such as frothing at the mouth, etc. Mr. Conley proceeded to have his wounds cauterized by a local physician and subsequently took a Pasteur treatment in Cincinnati, for which he rendered a bill, properly signed, to the commissioners of this county.
> "This office has refused to approve the bill, on the ground that no proof has been presented that the animal in the case was afflicted with rabies. I desire, however, to be fair in the matter and if, under the provisions of the sections above referred to, Mr. Conley is entitled to be reimbursed to the extent of his expenses I shall be very glad to approve the account. It has, however, been the policy of this office to insist in matters of this sort that the dog's head should be sent to Columbus and an examination and analysis made by the state board of health to determine beyond any reasonable doubt that the animal was so afflicted. In the absence of such proof I have always refused to approve such bills.
> "I very much desire the opinion of your office as to what is proper under the circumstances."

In reply thereto I would say that section 5851, General Code, provides as follows:

> "A person bitten or injured by a dog, cat or other animal afflicted with rabies, if such injury has caused him to employ medical or surgical treatment or required the expenditure of money, within four months after such injury and at a regular meeting of the county commissioners of the county where such injury was received, may present an itemized account of the expenses incurred and amount paid by him for medical and surgical attendance, verified by his own affidavit or that of his attending physician; or the administrator or executor of a deceased person may present such claim and make such affidavit. If the person so bitten or injured is a minor such affidavit may be made by his parent or guardian."

Section 5852, General Code, provides as follows:

> "The county commissioners not later than the third regular meeting, after it is so presented, shall examine such account, and, if found in whole or part correct, and just, may order the payment thereof in whole or in part, out of the general fund of the county; but a person shall not receive for one injury a sum exceeding five hundred dollars."

I have made a careful examination of the provisions of the General Code and find no other sections relating to a case such as you recite in your inquiry. Under said sections I am of the opinion that the commissioners, in deciding whether or not an account, presented to them for payment under said sections, is correct and just, may go into the matter in any manner which said board may desire to enlighten them thereon; and if, in the opinion of the board of commissioners, it was necessary to have the dog's head analyzed and examined by the state board of health, or any other person, either a physician or a chemist, for the purpose of assisting said board in determining that the animal was so afflicted with rabies, they would have the right and power so to do.

In any event, the payment of such account, under said sections, is discretionary with the board of commissioners; and, in my opinion, it is the duty of the board of commissioners, in the allowance of any claim under said sections, to be very careful and sure of the facts that are the basis of the claim against the county. But where the board is convinced of the correctness and the justice of the bill, and particularly of the fact that a person has been bitten or injured by a dog which is afflicted with rabies, they should exercise their discretionary powers with reasonableness.

Under section 5852 the commissioners may adopt any rules to compel the claimant to establish the correctness of the fact that said dog was afflicted with rabies, and the fact that his bill is just and correct. The commissioners, in my opinion, should determine that said injury was not received through the neglect or carelessness of the person so bitten.

Very truly yours,
TIMOTHY S. HOGAN,
Attorney General.

DAMAGES—SECTIONS 6563-1, AND FOLLOWING, DO NOT REPEAL EXISTING JOINT COUNTY DITCH LAW.

Since section 6563-1, and following, General Code, provide for the construction of joint county ditches, through a joint procedure on the part of the commissioners of each county, whilst the existing laws provided for substantially a single county activity on the part of each board, since the new law does not cover the entire ground of the existing laws, and since a substantial amendment to the old law was passed, on the same day with the new law, the new law cannot be construed to repeal the old law by implication.

COLUMBUS, OHIO, March 19, 1913.

HON. W. J. SCHWENCK, Prosecuting Attorney, Bucyrus, Ohio.

DEAR SIR:—I have at hand your letter of March 8th, wherein you request my opinion as to whether or not section 6563-1, General Code, and following, repealed by implication, sections 6536 to 6563, General Code, including the joint county ditch law found on pages 313 and 314 of 102 Ohio Laws, which was passed on the same day as sections 6563-1 to 6563-48, General Code, as found on page 578 of 102 Ohio Laws. You call attention to the decision of Goff et al. vs. Gates, et al. Commissioners, decided by the supreme court, and reported in the Ohio Law Reporter, page 76, under date of January 13, 1912.

The syllabus of the case referred to is as follows:

"1. An act of the legislature that fails to repeal in terms an existing statute on the same subject-matter must be held to repeal the former statute by implication if the later act is in direct conflict with the former, or if the subsequent act revises the whole subject-matter of the former act and is evidently intended as a substitute for it.

"2. Section 2 of the act of the general assembly, passed May 10, 1910, entitled: 'an act to provide for the laying out, construction, repair or improvement of any public road or any part thereof and for the straightening, widening or altering and draining of the same by the county commissioners,' is in direct conflict with section 6926, General Code, and, therefore, repeals said section of the General Code by implication.

"3. The act of the general assembly of May 10, 1910, completely revises the whole subject-matter covered by sections 6926 to 6956, General Code, inclusive, and is evidently intended as a substitute for these sections, and, therefore, repeals the same by implication."

Of the law upon the question of whose repeal you inquire, permit me to cite sections 6536, 6537, 6540, 6556, 6557, 6558 and 6559, General Code.

"Section 6536. Ditches, drains or watercourses which provide drainage, or, when constructed, will provide drainage for lands in more than one county, may be located, constructed, cleaned, repaired, straightened, widened, altered, deepened, boxed or tiled, as provided in this chapter and the laws prescribing for locating, constructing, cleaning, repairing, straightening, widening, altering, deepening, boxing or tiling single county ditches, drains or watercourses.

"Section 6537. When a ditch or improvement is proposed, which will require a location in more than one county, application shall be made to the board of county commissioners of each of such counties, and the surveyor or engineer shall make a report for each county. Application for damages shall be made, and appeals from the finding of the commissioners, in joint session, locating and establishing such ditch, and from the assessment of damages or compensation, shall be taken to the probate court of the county in which the greatest length of such ditch or improvement is located. A majority of the commissioners of each county, when in joint session, shall be competent to locate and establish such ditch or improvement. No county commissioner shall serve in any case in which he is personally interested; and any two commissioners of their respective counties, may form a quorum for the transaction of business under this chapter.

"Section 6540. When the board of county commissioners of an upper county shall cause to be located, constructed, cleaned, repaired, straightened, widened, altered, deepened, boxed or tiled, a ditch, drain or watercourse, the water from which flows into an adjoining county, or into, or finds an outlet in a ditch, drain or watercourse constructed, or being constructed in an adjoining county, or when the board of county commissioners of a lower county shall cause to be located, constructed, cleaned, repaired, straightened, widened, altered, deepened, boxed or tiled, a ditch, drain or watercourse, which is, or may be an outlet for a ditch, drain or watercourse of lands of an upper county, or which, by reason of a proposed improvement thereof, will provide better drainage, or a more sufficient outlet, drain or watercourse for lands of an upper county, or finds it necessary to locate, construct, clean, repair, straighten, widen, alter, deepen, box or tile a ditch, drain or watercourse of a lower county, in order to secure a sufficient and proper outlet for a proposed ditch, drain or watercourse of an upper county, the commissioners of such upper county shall pay the commissioners of such lower county such sum as is agreed upon by the commissioners of both counties for the use and benefit of such outlet. The commissioners of such upper county shall apportion such sum to the lands in their county, for whose benefit such ditch was or is constructed.

"Section 6556. Proceedings for the location, construction, cleaning, repairing, straightening, widening, altering, deepening, boxing or tiling either of such ditches in either the upper or lower counties, whether or not they were originally constructed as joint ditches, or whether or not the ditch to be located and constructed might be a joint ditch, may be commenced and conducted in the manner provided in this chapter, and the laws relating to single county ditches.

"Section 6557. In addition to the procedure provided by law for the location, construction, cleaning, repairing, straightening, widening, deepening, boxing or tiling of a ditch which furnishes, or may furnish drainage for more than one county, proceedings shall be commenced and conducted in the manner provided by law for the location and construction of joint ditches, when a majority of each board of commissioners of such county so agree.

"Section 6558. When the county commissioners do not agree or determine to proceed under the laws for the construction of joint ditches, and the board of commissioners of the lower county unanimously agree that such improvement is necessary or will be conducive to the public health, convenience or welfare, and the line described is the best route, the proceedings in reference thereto shall be conducted as provided in this chapter and the laws for single county ditches. The proceedings shall be conducted by the commissioners of the lower county.

"Section 6559. When a ditch needs to be cleaned, repaired or enlarged, which has been located in more than one county, an owner of a lot or tract of land, which was assessed for its construction, may make a written statement to the commissioners of either of said counties, setting forth such necessity. The commissioners shall forthwith appoint a disinterested freeholder of the county or an engineer, to examine such ditch, whose compensation shall be as in other cases, and who shall be sworn to go upon the line thereof, carefully make such examination, make an estimate of the amount of work to be done and the amount of money required therefor and fix the portion thereof that the owner of each lot or tract of land, and each corporation, county or township assessed for the construction thereof or that may be benefited by such cleaning, repairing or enlarging, should be assessed for such improvement."

These sections represent the foundation points of the old laws providing for the improvement of joint county ditches.

Under section 6536, General Code, it is provided that ditches, drains or watercourses which provide drainage or when constructed will provide drainage for lands in more than one county, may be improved as provided in this chapter, and the laws prescribing for improvement of single county ditches, drains or watercourses. Under this statute, such procedure as is necessary in the construction of a joint county ditch, which is not found provided for in this chapter relating to joint county ditches, must find its directions in the chapter relating to single county ditches.

Under section 6537, General Code, application for a joint county ditch improvement must be made to the board of county commissioners of each county, and the surveyor or engineer shall make a report for each county. In the case of Chesbrough vs. Commissioners, 37 Ohio State, page 514, the court said, in construing this section:

> "The joint action consists in the finding that the provisions of law, preliminary to the consideration of the petition on its merits, have been complied with, a finding that the proposed ditch is conducive to the public health, convenience or welfare, the location of the same, if they so find, and the apportionment of the costs and work of construction. If damages are claimed, the application therefor must be made to the commissioners of the county where the land is situated. The joint-session has nothing to do with the assessment of damages for property appropriated. It locates and establishes the ditch, and apportions the cost of its location and construction, and damages, if any, to the persons owning lands through, or in the vicinity of which, the proposed ditch is to be constructed. As the ditch is an entirety and lies in more than one county, the statute requires the concurrent action of each county to locate and establish it, and to apportion among land owners its aggregate cost. A majority of each board, in joint session, and not a majority of the joint board, is required. Hence each board acts as an integral part of the joint body. The assumption that the commissioners of either county are acting and exercising authority over the internal affairs of the other county, is therefore not well founded."

Under the plan herewith provided, therefore, it is contemplated that the county commissioners of each county shall assume control and direction of practically all procedures within their respective counties. The allowance of damages, letting of contracts, and sending of notices and publications, must be cared for by the officials of the county in which the respective part of the ditch is constructed. The work of the boards, when assembled, jointly, consists solely in locating and establishing the ditch and apportioning the costs and assessments to the respective counties; and even in these joint matters, a majority of the commissioners of each county is necessary for valid action.

Under section 6539, General Code, when the county commissioners in joint sessions find in favor of the improvement, but are unable to agree upon the apportionment of the costs, of such location and construction which shall be made to each of the counties, action may be brought in the common pleas court, whereby such court may appoint three disinterested free holders to make the apportionment. After final determination of these free holders, report of the findings are made to the commissioners of each county, and each board is then required to proceed as in the case of single county ditches.

These statutes, to wit, sections 6536 to 6539, inclusive, represent the original law, providing for the improvement of joint county ditches.

Owing no doubt to the fact that it was found in the attempted application of this law that necessity or public convenience often required the improvement or construction of joint county ditches, when an agreement therefor could not be obtained between the commissioners of the counties, this law was supplemented by an act appearing first in 86 Ohio Laws, page 123. This supplemental law provided for improvement of joint county ditches, without agreement of the different counties, and presented a procedure by which a county benefited by a ditch, constructed in another county, may be compelled to contribute for the benefit thereby received. This law has been several times amended and now appears in the General Code as sections 6540 to 6558, inclusive.

Section 6540, above quoted, provides in general, that when a ditch is constructed or improved in one county which will work consequent benefit to another county, the county benefited shall pay to the county in which such improvement is constructed, such sum as the commissioners of both counties agree upon for the use and benefit; and in the following sections it is provided that when the county commissioners of a county so benefited, upon notice, refuse to take action toward any such agreement, procedure may be had for the appointment of free holders by the probate courts of each county, which free holders shall be required to estimate and report the amount which should justly be paid by the upper county to the lower county for the benefit received from such improvement.

Under these statutes as under the first statutes, the procedure, beyond that of the mere agreement of compensation between the two counties and the compulsion of such compensation through the probate court, is substantially a single county ditch procedure.

Under sections 6556 to 6558 of these later statutes, provision is made whereby in the constructing of a ditch in one county which will afford benefit to another county, procedure may be had by agreement of the county commissioners of each county, through the common pleas court, as provided by section 6539, instead of through the probate court as provided by section 6543 (see Commissioners vs. Commissioners, 10 O. C. C., N. S., page 25); and that if the county commissioners do not agree procedure must be had through the probate court as provided by the latter statute.

Section 6559, and following, above quoted, provide for a method of cleaning, enlarging or repairing joint county ditches under the somewhat similar procedure to that in construction as herein outlined.

Having thus briefly outlined the procedure set out in the old law for joint county ditches, attention may be had to the later law appearing in 102 Ohio Laws, page 575, and in the General Code, as section 6563-1, which it is suggested may have repealed the old law.

Sections 6563-1 to 6563-8, inclusive, General Code, which are as follows, present an index as to the general nature of the plan contemplated by the new law.

"Section 6563-1. When it is proposed to construct or improve a ditch or to improve or straighten a natural watercourse which will require location in two or more counties, or which will cut off any of the water which flows into one county from one or more counties, such improvement may be made according to the following provisions: A petition for such improvement shall be filed by fifty or more persons interested therein with the auditor of one of said several counties.

"Section 6563-2. Any ditch constructed under the provisions of this act may be so constructed that it will take the water out of its natural course and cause the same to flow through said ditch in a different direction and find its outlet at a different place than it would naturally.

"Section 6563-3, Said petition shall set forth the general character of the proposed improvement together with the route and termini thereof and the different counties affected thereby, together with the prayer for the location thereof, and shall contain a statement of the time at which it is desired that the commissioners shall meet for the consideration thereof.

"Section 6563-4. Said petitioners shall file with said petition a bond with sufficient sureties to the satisfaction of the auditor with whom said petition is filed, payable to the state of Ohio, conditioned that the petitioners will pay all costs and expenses made and incurred on account of the filling of said petition in case the joint board shall not cause surveyors to be appointed as herein provided.

"Section 6563-5. Upon the filing of said petition, the auditor of the county in which the same is filed shall give notice to the auditors of the other counties affected by said ditch improvement of the filing thereof and each of said auditors shall give notice to the commissioners of his county of the filing thereof, and the time set for the hearing of the same, and it shall be the duty of the commissioners of said several counties to meet at the office of the commissioners of the county having the largest population at the time named in said petition.

"Section 6563-6. When said commissioners so meet they shall constitute a joint board of county commissioners and the chairman of the board of commissioners of the county in which the petition was filed shall be the temporary chairman of said joint board. Said board shall organize by electing one of their number permanent chairman and by choosing the auditor of one of said counties to be the secretary of said joint board and shall determine the place at which the meeting of said joint board shall be held. And the next meeting of said joint board shall be held not earlier than twenty days nor later than thirty days after said meeting at which said joint board shall organize.

"Section 6563-7. A majority of the members of said joint board shall decide all questions before said joint board, and all votes shall be 'yea' and 'nay' and recorded on the record, and if a majority of the members of said joint board find that said ditch or improvement is necessary and will be conducive to the public health, convenience and welfare, then said ditch or improvement shall be constructed as prayed for in said petition or in substantial compliance therewith, as may be ordered and directed by said joint board, and said joint board shall have the power to change the route of said proposed ditch, keeping the general course named in the petition, and said joint board shall have the power to adjourn from time to time as the business thereof may be required.

"Section 6563-8. After having determined the place at which the future meetings of said board shall be held the secretary of said joint board appointed shall notify the auditors of the several counties of the place at which the meetings of said joint board shall be held and of the next meeting thereof, as provided in section 5 (General Code, section 6563-5), and it shall be the duty of the auditor of each county to cause notice of the filing of said petition and the prayer thereof and the fact that the prayer of said petition will be considered by said joint board at said meeting giving the date and place thereof to be published in two newspapers of opposite politics published and having general circulation in his county. Said notice shall be published one week and shall be evidenced by the certificate of the auditor copied upon the record."

Under this new law, a petition signed by fifty persons shall be filed with the auditor of one of said several counties. The petition must state the date upon which the commissioners are expected to meet. The auditor is required to notify the auditors of the other counties of the time set for the hearing of the petition, and the commissioners are required to meet at said time in the largest county. All further proceedings of the statutes provide for joint action of said board in all proceedings.

Under section 6563-9, General Code, the joint board order the county surveyor of each county to go over the line of the improvement, to make plans, specifications and profiles and to estimate the cost together with a map to show all the lands in each county which will be affected.

Under section 6563-11, General Code, said surveyors shall constitute a joint board of surveyors and shall act jointly.

Under section 6563-13, General Code, reports of said surveyors shall be made to the joint board and hearing shall be conducted by said joint board.

The joint board, under section 6563-22, shall hear claims for compensation and damages and under section 6563-26, the joint board shall determine and apportion the cost and expense of the ditch improvement. Under section 6563-39, such board sells the work of construction and sections 6563-42 and 6563-43 provide payment of compensation and damages by a joint arrangement between the counties.

This brief consideration is sufficient to make it clear that the procedures outlined under the respective laws, with respect to which the question of conflict arises, are totally and substantially different. The first provides for a clean cut jurisdiction over the ditch construction in each county by a board of county commissioners of that county, and for the compulsion for compensation for an improvement made in only one county, by another county benefited thereby; the second act provides clearlyfor the improvement of joint county ditches by a clean cut joint procedure in which the county commissioners of each county take part and whereby a majority of the joint board controls.

A second distinction between the two laws is clearly presented in the matters covered by each; thus, the first law, under sections 6536 and 6537, comprises ditches, drains or watercourses which provide drainage or when constructed will provide drainage for lands in more than one county, or which will require location in more than one county. Under section 6540, this old law further provides for the improvement of ditches, first, "the water from which flows into an adjoining county, or into, or finds an outlet in a ditch, drain or watercourse constructed or being constructed in an adjoining county;" second, a ditch constructed or improved by a lower county which is or may be an outlet for a ditch, drain or watercourse, of lands of an upper county; third, a ditch improved by a lower county which will provide better drainage or a more sufficient outlet for drains of an upper county; fourth, a ditch constructed by a lower county made necessary in order to secure a sufficient and proper outlet for a proposed ditch, drain or water course of an upper county.

The ditches which are authorized to be improved under the new law, under section 6563-1, General Code, are merely those which will require location in two or more counties or which will cut off any of the water which flows into one county from one or more counties.

It is clear that the second law does not always include a ditch constructed or improved by the county commissioners of the lower county, which is or may be an outlet for a ditch drain or watercourse for lands in an upper county, or which by reason of its construction or improvement will provide better drainage or a more sufficient outlet, drain or watercourse for lands of an upper county. In short, the second law does not include the improvement by a lower county which acts as a benefit to the upper county without requiring ditch construction or improvement in the upper county. The second law, therefore, does not fully cover the ground of the former law.

It is held by this department that the first laws do not provide improvement of living streams and in all probabilities the second law was passed to make provisions for such. The fact that the second law also permits, under the procedure therefor outlined, the improvement of ditches, drains or watercourses, appear to present about the only element of similarity between the two laws.

Having thus briefly reviewed the provisions of both laws, permit me to cite the following in Sutherland Statutory Construction, on page 465:

> "In Winslow vs. Morton the court sums up the general principles touching implied repeals in the form of rules which it formulates as follows:
> " '(1) That the law does not favor a repeal of an older statute by a later one by mere implication.'
> " '(2) The implication, in order to be operative, must be necessary, and if it arises out of repugnancy between the two acts, the later abrogates the older only to the extent that it is inconsistent and irreconcilable with it. A later and an older statute will, if it is possible and reasonable to do so, be always construed together, so as to give effect not only to the distinct parts or provisions of the latter, not inconsistent with the new law, but to give effect to the older law as a whole, subject only to restrictions or modifications of its meaning, when such seems to have been the legislative purpose. A law will not be deemed repealed because some of its provisions are repeated in a subsequent statute, except in so far as the latter plainly appears to have been intended by the legislature as a substitute.

" '(3) Where the later or revising statute clearly covers the whole subject-matter of antecedent acts, and it plainly appears to have been the purpose of the legislature to give expression in it to the whole law on the subject, the latter is held to be repealed by necessary implication.'

"Repeals by implication are not favored. This means that it is the duty of the court to so construe the acts, if possible, that both shall be operative."

and on page 511:

"If, by fair and reasonable interpretation, acts which are seemingly incompatible or contradictory may be enforced and made to operate in harmony and without absurdity, both will be upheld, and the latter one will not be regarded as repealing the others by construction or intendment. As laws are presumed to be passed with deliberation and with a full knowledge of all existing ones on the same subject, it is but reasonable to conclude that the legislature, in passing a statute, did not intend to interfere with or abrogate any former law relating to the same matter, unless the repugnancy between the two is irreconcilable."

In connection furthermore with your own statement to the effect that an amendment to the old law appears in 102 Ohio Laws, on pages 313 and 314, which was passed on the same day as were section 6563-1 and following, page 513 of the same authority presents the following:

"Acts passed at same session—Provisions in same act.—The presumption is stronger against implied repeals where provisions supposed to conflict are in the same act or were passed at nearly the same time. In the first case it would manifestly be an inadvertence, for it is not supposable that the legislature would deliberately pass an act with conflicting intentions; in the other case the presumption rests on the improbability of a change of intention, or, if such change had occured, that the legislature would express it in a different act without an express repeal of the first. 'Statutes enacted at the same session of the legislature should receive a construction, if possible, which will give effect to each. They are within the reason of the rule governing the construction of statutes in pari materia. Each is supposed to speak the mind of the same legislature, and the words used in each should be qualified and restricted, if necessary, in their construction and effect, so as to give validity and effect to every other act passed at the same session.' The presumption is that different acts passed at the same session of the legislature are imbued by the same spirit and actuated by the same policy, and that one was not intended to repeal or destroy another, unless so expressed. Where two acts are passed or go into effect on the same day it is strong evidence that they were intended to stand together. So where the later law was the first to be introduced."

In conclusion, therefore, in view of the express language of the decisions of the supreme court referred to by you and of the authority of Sutherland, above stated, since entirely different procedures are contemplated by the respective laws, the first providing for single county activities, very largely, and the latter for joint county action exclusively; since the second act does not cover the same ground as the first act and since, furthermore, the legislature at the same session and on the very same day, as it passed the new law, also passed a very substantial amendment to the old law, I am of the opinion that both laws must be recognized and that the later act can in no sense be held to have repealed the former.

Very truly yours,
TIMOTHY S. HOGAN,
Attorney General.

COUNTY SURVEYOR MAY NOT BE ALLOWED EXPENSES AND PER DIEM FOR ATTENDANCE AT GOOD ROADS CONGRESS.

Inasmuch as such services are not imposed by the statutes, nor their compensation authorized, a county surveyor may not be permitted an allowance by the county commissioners of per diem and expenses, whilst attending the good roads congress held outside of his own county.

COLUMBUS, OHIO, March 22, 1913.

HON. EDWARD C. TURNER, Prosecuting Attorney of Franklin County, Columbus, Ohio.
DEAR SIR:—

ATTENTION OF MR. SHERMAN.

I am in receipt of your letter of January 16, 1913, wherein you inquire as follows:

> "I have a letter from the board of county commissioners of Franklin county, Ohio, enclosing two bills submitted by Hugh K. Lindsay, county surveyor, one in the sum of $13.60, for expenses in attendance at the good roads congress held in Cincinnati, December 3rd and 4th, 1912, the other in the sum of $110.00 for per diem as surveyor of Franklin county during the month of December, 1912, including the dates December 3rd and 4th, while in attendance at said congress. Said board of commissioners have requested an opinion as to the legal right or authority of said board to allow the expense account of $13.60; also the per diem for the days in December 3rd and 4th, 1912."

In reply to your inquiry as to the legal right or authority of the county commissioners to allow to the county surveyor the expense account of $13.60 for attending a good roads congress in Cincinnati on December 3rd and 4th, 1912, I desire to say that section 2786 of the General Code provides that the county commissioners shall provide fixtures and equipment for the office of the county surveyor, and also certain expenses of the county surveyor and his deputies in the performance of their official duties as follows:

> "The county surveyor shall keep his office at the county seat in such room or rooms as are provided by the county commissioners, which shall be furnished with all necessary cases and other suitable articles, at the expense of the county. Such office shall also be furnished with all tools, instruments, books, blanks and stationery necessary for the proper discharge of the official duties of the county surveyor. The cost and expense of such equipment shall be allowed and paid from the general fund of the county upon the approval of the county commissioners. The county surveyor and each assistant and deputy shall be allowed his reasonable and necessary expenses incurred in the performance of his official duties."

I am unable to find any other statute providing for the payment of expenses of the county surveyor by the county commissioners, except as provided in section 2801 and section 2802 of the General Code, which sections are as follows:

> "Section 2801. When so directed by the county commissioners of his county, the county surveyor shall procure from the general land office, or any office in this state where they may be procured, a certified plat, together with the field-notes of the corners and bearing trees to each section, quarter section, lot or original survey in his county, and cause it to be preserved in a book by him provided for that purpose, which shall be deposited in the surveyor's office for the use of the land-holders in such county. A certified copy from such book by the surveyor shall be received as prima facia evidence, when the original would be received.
> "Section 2802. The expenses incurred by reason of the preceding section shall be paid from the county treasury on the warrant of the auditor. For making and recording or for transcribing plats, or maps, the surveyor shall receive such reasonable compensation as the commissioners order, not exceeding the amount allowed by law for similar services, and for indexing, the same fees as are allowed to recorders."

It follows that under sections 2801 and 2802 expenses can be allowed by the county commissioners when the latter direct the county surveyor to procure from the general land office or any office in this state where they may be procured, a certified plat, together with field-notes of corners and bearing trees to each section, quarter section, lot or original survey in this county; said sections do not cover the question involved in your inquiry, however.

Reverting again to section 2786 of the General Code, supra, it is to be noted that said section specifically provides that the county surveyor shall be allowed his reasonable and necessary expenses incurred in the performance of his official duties. It cannot be said that attending a good roads congress in Cincinnati is a part of the official duties of such surveyor, and such expense not being provided for by the statutes, this department is constrained to hold that said item of $13.60 cannot be allowed legally by the county commissioners.

In answer to the other branch of your inquiry as to the legal right or authority of the board of county commissioners to allow the county surveyor his per diem for the days December 3rd and 4th, 1912, while so attending said good roads congress in Cincinnati, I desire to say that section 2822 of the General Code provides that the county surveyor when employed by the day shall receive five dollars for each day and his necessary actual expenses. The term "salary" means annual or periodical payment for services. (Thompson vs. Phillips, 12 O. S., 617). Employment by the day at the rate of five dollars per day comes within the term "compensation" rather than salary. (See Gobrecht vs. Cincinnati, 51 O. S., 73). An allowance by the day or per diem comes within the term "wages" (See Cowden vs. Huff, 10 Ind., 85). A per diem as provided in section 2822 being an allowance rather than a salary, it follows therefore that such surveyor is only entitled to five dollars for each day that he spends in the actual service of the county. It can hardly be said that the two days spent by the surveyor in attending the good roads congress at Cincinnati were spent in the actual service of the county.

This department, for the foregoing reasons, is constrained to hold that said surveyor is not entitled to the per diem allowance for said dates, December 3rd and 4th, 1912.

Very truly yours,
TIMOTHY S. HOGAN,
Attorney General.

JOINT COUNTY DITCHES—PROCEDURE FOR IMPROVEMENT OF NATURAL WATERCOURSE—POWERS OF JOINT COUNTY BOARD.

Inasmuch as the procedure outlined in section 6536, and following, General Code, provide for the improvement only of ditches, drains or watercourses, in accordance with the general use of these terms in the statutes, these provisions do not authorize the improvement of rivers, creeks or runs.

Section 6563-1, General Code, and following, however, provide for the improvement of ditches and natural watercourses, and in accordance with the use of the term natural watercourse in the statutes generally, these sections authorize the improvement of living streams, such as rivers, creeks and runs.

COLUMBUS, OHIO, February 21, 1913.

HON. HOMER E. JOHNSON, Prosecuting Attorney, Marion, Ohio.
and
HON. CHAS. F. CLOSE, Prosecuting Attorney, Upper Sandusky, Ohio.

GENTLEMEN:—I have at hand your communications requesting my opinion upon the powers of a joint board of county commissioners to construct an improvement along a natural water course.

The material portion of the communication of Mr. Johnson, prosecuting attorney at Marion, Ohio, which follows herewith, substantially sets forth the question:

> "As per copy of ditch petition hereto attached the joint board of county commissioners of Wyandotte and Marion counties are considering the construction of an improvement some six miles in length and about four miles of which is in the channel of Tymochtee creek, a part of the four miles being in each of the aforesaid counties. * * * *
> "1. Has a joint board of county commissioners authority to improve channels of rivers, creeks and runs?
> "2. Has a joint board of county commissioners authority to improve the channel of a river, creek or run other than that laid down in section 6563-1, Vol. 102, pp 5., et seq. O. L.
> "3. Has a joint board of county commissioners authority to convert a river, creek or run into a drain, ditch or water-course?
> "4. Does the term 'natural water-course' as used in section 6563-1, Vol. 102, pp. 575-, Ohio Laws, mean 'river, creek and run, or does it mean drain, ditch or water-course?'
> "5. Has the joint board of county commissioners jurisdiction or power to grant the improvement asked in the ditch petition appended hereto?"

Section 6536, General Code, which follows, sets out generally the powers of joint board of county commissioners to construct a ditch improvement:

> "Section 6536. Ditches, drains or water courses which provide drainage, or when constructed, will provide drainage for lands in more than one county, may be located, constructed, cleaned, repaired, strightened, widened, altered, deepened, boxed or tiled, as provided in this chapter and the laws prescribing for locating, constructing, cleaning, repairing, straightening, widening, altering, deepening, boxing, or tiling single county ditches, drains or water courses."

It will be observed that this statute provides that ditches, drains or water courses may be improved or constructed as provided in this chapter, and also as provided by the law for constructing and improving single county ditches, drains or water courses. The chapter in which this statute is considered speaks solely of ditches, drains or water courses, until we come to section 6563-1, of this chapter, where for the first time we find provisions made for the improvement or straightening of a natural water course by a joint board of county commissioners.

Section 6563-1, General Code, is as follows:

> "When it is proposed to construct or improve a ditch or to improve or straighten a natural water course which will require location in two or more counties, or which will cut off any of the water which flows into one county from one or more counties, such improvement may be made according to the following provisions: A petition for such improvement shall be filed by fifty or more persons interested therein with the auditor of one of said several counties."

To obtain a proper understanding of the meanings of the terms water courses and natural water courses, attention must be had to the provisions for single county ditches. Section 6445, General Code, of these provisions is as follows:

> "The board of county commissioners, at a regular or called session, when necessary to drain any lots, lands, public or corporate road or railroad, and it will be conducive to public health, convenience or welfare, in the manner provided in this chapter, may cause to be located and constructed,straightened, widened, altered, boxed or tiled, a ditch, drain or water course, or box or tile part thereof, or cause the channel of a river, creek or run, or part thereof, to be improved by straightening, widening, deepening, or changing it, or by removing from adjacent lands timber, brush, trees, or other substance liable to obstruct it. The commisssioners may change either terminus of a ditch before its final location, if the object of the improvement will be better accomplished thereby."

This section gives the board of county commissioners power to construct and improve, and as therein provided, (1) A ditch, drain, or water course, and (2) The channel of a river, creek or run.

The use of the term water course, herein, in connection with ditches or drains, and the alternative use, in this connection, of the words river, creek or run, discloses the intention to distinguish a water course from a living stream. Furthermore, section 6442, General Code, has this provision, "the word ditch used in this chapter shall include a drain or water course." Decisions construing these sections clearly show that the term water course is intended to be used synonymously with drain or ditch, whilst the term natural water course is applicable only to living streams, such as rivers, creeks or runs.

Thus, the syllabus of Commissioners vs. Harbine, 74 O. S. 318, is as follows:

> "The word 'water course' as used in the county ditch law, title 6, ch. 1, Revised Statutes, is synonymous with the word 'drain', and the county commissioners are without authority to convert a living stream of water into a ditch by proceedings for the locating and constructing of a ditch." and also in the case of Gease vs. Carlisle, 15 Ohio Decisions, N. P. 436: the court recognized this distinction in construing section 6443, General Code. The syllabus of this case is as follows:

> "County commissioners are authorized by Lan. R. L. 7629 (R. S. 4448) (6443 G. C.), to change the terminal of ditches, drains and artificial water courses, if the object of an improvement will be better accomplished thereby; but as to the termini of rivers, creeks, runs and natural water courses, they have no such power."

also see case of Abel et al. vs. Board of County Commissioners of Hardin county, 6, O. N. P. 349. This use of the term natural water course is also borne out by the passage of section 6444, providing for the improvement of living streams or natural water courses in municipal corporations, which statute undoubtedly passed in view of the decision of Pleasant Hill vs. Commissioners 71, O. S. 133, which held that county commissioners could not make ditch improvements within a municipal corporation, except in strict compliance with the statutes pertaining to such corporations in ditch matters; the former statutes in this respect providing only for the improvement of ditches within municipal corporations and not dealing with living streams.

I am of the opinion, that in the light of these decisions, and the use of these terms in the statutes, there can be no doubt that when the legislature speaks only of ditches, drains or water courses, as it does in section 6536, General Code, such language can clearly not be interpreted to in any way apply to living streams, such as rivers, creeks or runs.

I, therefore, conclude that section 6536, General Code, and the provisions following up to section 6563-1, do not give joint boards of county commissioners power to improve living streams, such as a river, stream or run.

Coming now to section 6563-1 of the General Code, this statute extends the power of such joint board to the improvement or straightening of a natural water course. In the light of the foregoing, I am of the opinion, that in accordance with this section and the statutes following, such joint board may improve a river, creek or run, which will require location in two or more counties, or which will cut off any water which flows into one county from one or more counties.

I have not reached this conclusion without carefully considering the authorities and the arguments contended for by those who have seen fit to take the opposite view of this matter. The basis of their contention, as it has been presented to me, is stated in the principle that where it is necessary to enlarge or improve a natural water course or living stream, in order to obtain an outlet for a ditch, drain or water course, such natural water course may be so enlarged under the proceedings provided for the improvement of drains and water courses, upon the theory that such a power is necessary and incidental to the accomplishment of the purpose contemplated by the statutes.

In view of the clean-cut distinction throughout the statutes in the use of the terms water course and natural water course; in view furthermore of the fact that under the later statutes, to-wit: sections 6563-1, General Code, and following, express provision is made for the improvement of a natural water course, under added restrictions and safe guards, I am convinced that the contention of the contrary view cannot be given prevalence. I might further cite the fact that in the statutes providing for interstate county ditches, sections 6590 and 6593, General Code, make express provision for the improvement of an outlet in another state, or in this state when the same becomes necessary for the proper construction of ditches, drains and water courses, which this chapter otherwise only provides for. A very plausible reason for the policy adopted by the legislature in this connection, in providing a more cautious procedure and added safe-guards and regulations, as it does in section 6563-1, and following, when it authorizes the improvement of living streams, is suggested by a consideration of sections 6540 to 6557, General Code, of the chapter relating to county ditches, which statutes empower the county commissioners of one county to compel improvements in another county by an action in probate court, when the county commissioners of both or several counties fail to agree and determine to proceed under the laws for the construction of joint ditches. That the legislature should see fit to impose a different procedure, in which the boards act jointly throughout, in the case of living streams, is not surprising.

To summarize, therefore, since the legislature in the chapters relating to single county ditches, joint county ditches and interstate county ditches, everywhere distinguishes between water course and natural water course, and since no mention is made of natural water course in section 6536, General Code, whilst express mention and provision is made for the same in section 6563-1, General Code, and since furthermore in the case of interstate county ditches, express provision has been made for the improvement of an outlet when the same is deemed necessary, I am of the opinion that no rule of reasoning would justify the strained construction which would be necessary to imply the power to improve a natural water course, under section 6536, General Code, upon the assumption that the same was necessary for the purpose of providing an outlet.

Answering your questions specifically:

1. In answer to question one, a joint board of county commissioners has no authority to improve channels of rivers, creeks or runs, except in accordance with the provisions of section 6563-1, General Code.

2. The answer to question one includes the answer to question two.

3. In answer to question three, I am of the opinion that if, in the improvement of a natural water course or river, a joint board of county commissioners sees fit to convert the same into a drain, ditch or water course, the provisions of section 6563-1, General Code, are sufficiently broad to enable them so to do, by complying with the statutory regulations imposed; under no other provisions of the statutes would they have such power.

4. I am of the opinion that the term natural water course as used in section 6563-1, General Code, means river, creek or run and does not mean drain, ditch or water course.

5. The ditch petition to which you have referred and the copy of which you enclose is signed by five petitioners only; the provisions of 6563-1, General Code, require that such petition shall be filed by fifty or more persons interested therein. I am of the opinion that this provision is mandatory and jurisdictional, and since the petition herein does not comply with the same, I have no hesitancy in concluding that such petition does not give a joint board of county commissioners jurisdiction or power to grant the improvement of the living stream, known as Tymochtee Creek, as asked for in the petition.

Very truly yours,
TIMOTHY S. HOGAN,
Attorney General.

TAXES AND TAXATION—CHURCH NOT AN INSTITUTION OF PURELY PUBLIC CHARITY NOR FOR EXCLUSIVELY PUBLIC PURPOSES SO AS TO BE EXEMPT FROM COLLATERAL INHERITANCE TAX.

Under the provisions of the collateral inheritance tax law, it was formerly provided, that institutions for purposes of purely public charity or other exclusively public purposes should be exempt from the tax. The codifying commission changed the language so as to read institution for purposes only of public charity and other exclusively public purposes, and under settled rules of construction, the changed language should be read in the light of the language in the original law.

It is well settled, under the decisions of this state, that a church is not an institution of purely public charity.

Under the rule of ejusdom generis, the term "or exclusively public purposes" as used in this exemption clause should be confined to public purposes of the nature of those enumerated in connection with this clause. Inasmuch as all of these enumerations apply solely to such public purposes as are governmental in their character and whose operations tend pro tanto to reduce the burden of taxation, a church cannot be construed to come within the exemption of an institution for exclusively public purposes.

COLUMBUS, OHIO, February 25, 1913.

HON. THOMAS L. POGUE, Prosecuting Attorney, Cincinnati, Ohio.

DEAR SIR:—I beg to acknowledge receipt of a letter under date of December 6th, 1912, from Hon. Charles A. Groom, assistant prosecuting attorney, and beg to apologize for my delay in answering, which has been due wholly to an unprecedented pressure of business in this department growing principally out of the session of the legislature. The letter requests my opinion upon the following questions:

> "1. Is a bequest of money in a sum exceeding two hundred dollars to a church, without limitation as to the manner of its use, subject to the collateral inheritance tax?
> "2. Is a bequest to a church, in excess of two hundred dollars, to be used for the support of the gospel therein subject to the collateral inheritance tax?"

For reasons which will hereinafter appear I shall discuss the two questions together, and in so doing shall assume that the word "church," as used in the letter means a society, incorporated or unincorporated, located in all respects within this state, so that the question passed upon in Humphreys vs. State, 70 O. S. 69 may be obviated.

The statute, the construction of which is involved, is what is at present known as section 5332, General Code, the second section of the group which provides for the levying and collection of the collateral inheritance tax and is in part as follows:

> "The provisions of the next preceding section shall not apply to property or interests in property transmitted to * * * or for the use of an institution in this state for purposes only of public charity or other exclusively public purposes."

The phraseology of this section was changed to a slight extent on the codification of 1910. Formerly it read in part:

"To or for the use of any institution in said state for purposes of purely public charity or other exclusively public purposes."

Relying upon the well established rule that verbal changes of the kind here exemplified are presumed to have been made without any intention of changing the substance of the law, I shall discuss the meaning of the phrase "purposes only of public charity" as equivalent to that of the phrase "purposes of public purely charity."

The question which is suggested by Mr. Groom's letter resolves itself into two parts, viz.:

1. Is a bequest to a church, or for the disemination of the gospel one "to an institution for purposes of purely public charity" or one "to an institution for purposes only of public charity?"

2. Is such a bequest one to "an institution for exclusively public purposes other than the purpose of purely public charity?"

The first question above suggested has not been passed upon by the courts of this state. The statute itself was under consideration in Humphreys vs. State, supra, and in Re Estate of Brown, 13 O. D. N. P. 168, but in each of these cases a point collateral to the question now under discussion became the ground of the court's decision. I am of the opinion, however, that if the phrase "institution of purely public charity" can be ascertained to have received a definite construction under the property tax laws of the state, it may with propriety be assumed that the legislature intended to use the phrase, or one which is substantially like it, as found in the statute now under consideration, in the same sense.

Under former section 2732, Revised Statutes, and under that portion of it which is now found in section 5353, General Code, both of which sections relate to exemptions from general property taxation made under favor of constitutional authority found in Article XII, section 2 of the constitution of 1851, the supreme court of this state has held that a church being an institution, the principal purpose of which is the teaching and extension of doctrines and practices of religion, is not "an institution of purely public charity." Gerke vs. Purcell, 25 O. S. 229; Watterson vs. Halliday 77 O. S. 150-179.

Without further discussion I may state as my opinion that the bequests concerning which Mr. Groom inquires cannot be regarded as having been made "to or for the use of an institution in this state for purposes only of public charity," for the reason that a church is not such an institution, and for the further reason that the support of the gospel is not such a purpose.

The second question above suggested is more difficult of solution. The decisions just cited do not afford a direct answer to it. That is to say, admitting that a bequest to a church for its general purposes or the spread of the gospel is not one "to an institution in this state for purposes only of public charity," it does not necessarily follow that such a bequest is not one "to an institution in this state for other exclusively public purposes." What then is the meaning of the phrase "other exclusively public purposes?" The general taxation statutes of the state contain no such language. We have, therefore, no precedents either direct or analogous by the application of which this clause may be given a definite meaning. Decisions under statutes of other states are not helpful here.

In Dos Passos on Inheritance Tax Law, 2nd Ed., Sec. 34, will be found an abstract of the exemptions found in the laws of the various states. Without enumerating these various exemptions it may be said that in all cases churches and religious institutions are either expressly exempted or else exemption from the inheritance tax is extended to bequests and institutions which are themselves exempted under the general tax laws of the state, The Ohio statute, therefore, stands alone in its use of the indefinite residuary clause now under consideration.

Some assistance can be derived from the application of the general principles of statutory construction. Under what is known as the rule of ejusdem generis. It is held that where an enumeration of specific things to which a principle of law, embodied in the statute, is to apply is followed by a general phrase modified by the word "other," the meaning of the general phrase so modified will be limited so as to include such things only as are like the specifically enumerated things in character. That is to say, when the statute says that bequests to institutions "for other exclusively public purposes" shall be exempted, the intention of the legislature must be deemed to be to limit the institutions thus exempted to those of the same kind as have been previously enumerated.

Before the rule of construction just referred to can be accurately applied to the statute under consideration the extent to which the relative operation of the word "other," as used therein, goes must be determined. That is to say, the whole provision is that bequests to (1) the state of Ohio, (2) a municipal corporation or other political sub-division for exclusively public purposes, (3) public institutions of learning, (4) to institutions for purposes only of public charity, and (5) to institutions for other exclusively public purposes. Seemingly, the phrase "exclusively public purposes" follows the word "for" and therefore modifies the word "institutions." So that in one sense there are only two kinds of bequests mentioned in the grammatical clause in which the phrase now under discussion is found, viz.: "institutions for purposes only of public charity" and "institutions for other exclusively public purposes." So that it is not sufficient that the bequest be "for exclusively public purposes" but it must be made to "an institution." This is consistent with the language of the entire section as in each instance the legal or beneficial taker of the estate to be exempted is specifically designated as well as the purpose for which the bequest is made. This point is not of great importance in connection with the question submitted because it may be conceded that a church is an "institution." In Re Brown estate, supra, and Watterson vs. Halliday, supra.

The question which I have now in mind is as to whether or not in determining the modifying effect of the word "other" all of the enumerated exemptions may be taken into consideration or only that of "institutions of purely public charity." This question is not free from doubt, but upon careful consideration I have reached the conclusion that all of the exemptions are to be taken into consideration. I do not know that this conclusion is decisive of the question as perhaps the same ultimate conclusion may be reached by confining the comparison now about to be made to so much of the section as follows the phrase "an institution in this state only."

Coming now to the application of the conclusion just reached it is to be observed that the enumerated takers of exempted bequests, and perhaps less clearly, the purposes for which they are to be used, all relate either directly or indirectly to the discharge of the functions of government. The first taker is the state, and presumably any use to which the state could put money bequeathed to it would be a governmental one. The second taker, or kind of taker mentioned is a municipality or other political sub-division, and the use is limited to exclusively public purposes. Clearly the legislature here had in mind that a bequest in order to be entitled to exemption under this language should be made for the purpose of discharging some governmental function. So also with the phrase "public institution of learning;" because education is a function of the state. So also with "institutions of purely public charity" or bequests made to "institutions for the purpose of purely public charity," the support of the poor having been regarded from time immemorial as a true and proper function of government. A single idea then is found to run through all these exemptions. The reason for that idea, when the same is reduced to its last analysis, appears to be that bequests which enable the government to discharge its ordinary functions tend pro tanto to reduce the burdens of general taxation, and may, therefore, with propriety be exempted from taxation.

Mr. Groom refers in his letter to my opinion in the matter of the Western Methodist Book Concern. In that opinion will be found citations to a line of authorities—the more liberal one of which I did not follow—in which this philosophical reason for exemption from taxation is expressly affirmed and fully discussed. In fact all authorities agree that the theory of exemption just laid down is and ought to be the fundamental principle in such cases.

Having regard, then, to the manifest intention of the legislature as disclosed by what precedes the word "other" in section 5332, I am of the opinion that the phrase "exclusively public purposes" as therein used must be held to mean exclusively public purposes which constitute or relate to the usual and proper functions of government. In fact the fundamental rule just discussed could be relied upon to give this meaning to the phrase even if the operation of the rule ejusdem generis were ignored.

How is it then with the support of the gospel and the dissemination of religious principles; do these matters constitute proper functions of government? It is true that our government is founded to a certain extent upon an acknowledgement of the existence of Almighty God and the eternal verity of the fundamental principles of religion. (See preamble to constitution of 1851.) I think, however, that it will be universally conceded that the principle of the separation of church and state, and that of the liberty of conscience in religious matters are both firmly established in the policy of our constitution and laws. Thus section 7 of article I of the constitution of 1851 provides:

> "All men have a natural and indefeasable right to worship Almighty God according to the dictates of their own conscience. No person shall be compelled to attend, erect or support any place of worship, or maintain any form of worship, against his consent; and no preference shall be given, by law, to any religious society; nor shall any interference with the rights of conscience be permitted. No religious test shall be required, as a qualification for office, nor shall any person be incompetent to be a witness on account of his religious belief; but nothing herein shall be construed to dispense with oaths and affirmations. Religion, morality, and knowledge, however, being essential to good government, it shall be the duty of the general assembly to pass suitable laws to protect every religious denomination in the peaceable enjoyment of its own mode of public worship, and to encourage schools and the means of instruction."

Now it must be acknowledged that it is also the policy of the state to permit the exemption of some property used for religious purposes from general taxation. Article XII, section 2 of the constitution of 1851 provided that "Houses used exclusively for public worship may be exempted from taxation." This exemption is reasonable and in line with the provisions of section 7 of the Bill of Rights, requiring the general assembly to "protect every religious denomination in the peaceable enjoyment of its own mode of public worship." But the exemption herein authorized is a limited one. It does not extend further than to the houses used by a religious society. Watterson vs. Halliday, supra. It does not comprise the funds applied by such a society. So that there is nothing in article XII, section 2, inconsistent with the idea of the complete separation of church and state, and with the conclusion that the support of the gospel and the dissemination of principles of religion as such are not governmental purposes or functions. Money contributed for the support of religion does not directly relieve the burden of taxation; therefore, upon the principles above laid down the phrase "other exclusively public purpose" cannot be held to include the purpose of propagating the gospel.

I have reached this conclusion, as will be apparent, without considering the meaning of the word "public." I would not have it understood that I regard this word itself as synonomous with "governmental;" for such is not the case. If there were in section 5332 any indication of any purpose to extend the exemption to bequests made for purposes other than those which are essentially govermental, I should have had no difficulty in reaching the conclusion that a church and its purposes might be included within the meaning of the phrase which has been discussed. I believe that a church is a "public institution" and that its purposes are "public purposes," but I am of the opinion that such purposes are not included in the "other exclusively public purposes" mentioned in section 5332. Furthermore, I do not wish to be understood as holding that there is any constitutional objection to exempting bequests to churches or for religious purposes. In citing article I, section 7 of the constitution I had another idea in mind, as will appear from my discussion of this section.

My conclusion is simply that in order that bequests to churches and for religious purposes may be exempted from the collateral inheritance tax, such bequests must be expressly mentioned in the statute if the other provisions of section 5332 are to remain as they are at present drawn.

I am of the opinion, for the reasons above stated that a bequest to a church is subject to the collateral inheritance tax if it exceeds two hundred dollars in amount, and also that a bequest to a church, exceeding such sum, to be used for the support of the gospel therein is subject to such tax.

Yours very truly,
TIMOTHY S. HOGAN,
Attorney General.

ROADS AND HIGHWAYS—TOWNSHIP—ACT PROVIDING FOR IMPROVEMENT OF ROADS BY GENERAL TAXATION—$100,000 LIMITATION ON BONDS WHICH MAY BE AT ANY TIME OUTSTANDING NOT A LIMITATION UPON TOTAL ISSUE.

From the language of section 25 of the act providing for the improvement of roads in a township by general taxation upon the authorization of electors, which section provides that not to exceed five miles shall be improved in any one year, and that bonds shall not be issued for a greater sum than is required to pay the cost of a current year; and from section 18 of said act, which provides for an annual levy until all roads shall be improved, it is clear that the $100,000 limitation upon bond issues, comprised in section 17 of said act, is intended to limit the amount of bonds which may be at any time outstanding, and not to place a limitation upon the total amount of bonds which may be issued for the purpose of making such roads and improvements.

The special provisions of this act must be allowed to control over the general provisions providing for limitations upon township bond issues comprised within the terms of the so-called Longworth act, to wit: section 7939, and following, General Code.

COLUMBUS, OHIO, April 4, 1913.

HON. RUSSELL M. KNEPPER, Prosecuting Attorney, Tiffin, Ohio.

DEAR SIR:—I beg to acknowledge receipt of your letter of February 8th, requesting my opinion upon the following question:

> "In May, 1906, the electors of a certain township in Seneca county voted affirmatively upon the policy of improving roads therein by general taxation, as provided by the act of April 16, 1900, 94 O. L. 284, at present found in sections 6976 et seq., General Code. Bonds have been issued from time to time under authority of this election and retired from year to year, there being outstanding at no one time an aggregate bonded indebtedness on this account exceeding fifty thousand dollars; but the total amount of bonds issued under this authority has exceeded that sum.

"Are the trustees of the township authorized to continue to issue bonds indefinitely under said act, at no time, however, exceeding the $50,000 limit at one time, and keeping in mind also the tax limit; or is it necessary for them to hold an election under the present statute in order to continue to issue bonds for road improvements?"

The limitation upon the issue of bonds provided by the related statutes operate upon the total amount of bonds which may be issued or upon the amount which may be outstanding at any time. The act to which you refer has been amended frequently since its original enactment. See 97 Ohio Laws, 550; 98 Ohio Laws, 284; 99 Ohio Laws, 468. The scheme of the law, however, has never been materially changed. The act as a whole originally provided and still provides for a vote upon petition of the tax payers as to the question of the policy of road improvement by general taxation, as opposed to that of improvement by assessment of specially benefited property. Upon a favorable vote three commissioners are to be appointed for the purpose of supervising the making of the improvements; the commissioners are to cause a plan of improvement to be prepared and are to submit, from time to time, to the trustees of the township their recommendations for the improvement of specific roads or parts of roads. The trustees are to let the contracts and to provide the money for making the improvements. For this purpose they are authorized by section 17 of the original act to issue bonds and to levy a tax for their redemption and the payment of the interest thereon. Sections 17 and 18 of the act may well be quoted in connection with the question. They are, in part:

"Section 17. For the purpose of providing the money necessary to meet the expenses of improving such roads the trustees of any such township may * * * issue the bonds of the township * * * The aggregate amount of the bonds of any such township at any one time outstanding shall not exceed fifty thousand dollars * * *

"Section 18. * * * In order to provide for the payment of such improvement and to provide a fund for the redemption of any bonds issued by them * * * together with the interest thereon, they (the trustees) shall * * levy annually upon each dollar of valuation of all the taxable property of such township * * * and shall continue such levy from year to year until all the roads by said commissioners designated for improvement have been improved, as herein provided, and the bonds issued for that purpose, together with the interest thereon, have been paid."

Section 25 of the act imposes another limitation, indirectly, upon the power to issue bonds. It is as follows:

"Not to exceed five miles of roads shall be improved in any one year and * * * in no event shall the bonds herein authorized be issued for a sum greater than is required to pay the cost of the improvement of roads for the current year."

Having regard to the entire scheme, it is apparent that the plan of the act is to provide a comprehensive method of improvement of all the roads of the township. The purpose of the act could not, in practice and under the limitation of section 25, above quoted, be worked out in any short period of years. That is to say, it would probably take some time for the plan of improvement submitted by the commissioners to be completed. This seems to be contemplated by the act as a whole. That is, it is not intended that not more than fifty thousand dollars shall be expended under the act; it is rather the purpose that as much as may be necessary to improve all the roads of the township be expended, but that the expenditure be gradual, so that not more than five miles shall be improved in any one year, and not more than fifty thousand dollars worth of bonds shall be outstanding at any one time.

The subsequent amendments to the act have changed the law in its application to your specific question. Sections 7004 and 7005, General Code, contain the present substance of section 17, as amended, 99 O. L. 102. The amendment which is found in present section 7005 relates to the limitation upon the amount which may be outstanding at any one time, which has been increased to one hundred thousand dollars in place of fifty thousand dollars.

The amendments made in 97 Ohio Laws, 554, provide a method of authorizing additional levies; and also the amendment in 98 Ohio Laws, 284, provides a method of discontinuing the policy, by availing themselves of which the electors of the township may, if the policy proves burdensome, do away with the township levies, and stop the making of the improvements already mapped out. I call attention to these provisions because you seem to have overlooked them in your study of the question. Undoubtedly, the amendment made in 99 Ohio Laws enlarges the powers of the trustees under the election already held, there being no constitutional inhibition which would restrain the legislature from enacting such a law.

The Smith One Per Cent. Law, so-called, to which you refer in your letter, has no direct bearing upon the power to issue the bonds. To be sure, it restrains the township trustees in a practical way, because, although the bonds are issued under the authority of a vote of the people, yet, levies to provide for their retirement must come within some of the limitations of the Smith law; so that this fact would have to be taken into consideration in making up the annual budget.

I am of the opinion, therefore, that the limitation of one hundred thousand dollars (not fifty thousand dollars) is upon the amount of bonds which may be outstanding at any one time, and not upon the bonds which may be issued by the township trustees under authority of the act which you mention.

Perhaps a more difficult question is presented by the joint operation of sections 3295 and 3939, General Code, which impose what are known as the Longworth act limitations upon the power of township trustees to borrow money and issue bonds. Without quoting these sections, suffice it to say that I am of the opinion that the special provisions of sections 7004 and 7005, General Code, control, and that bonds issued under their authority are not within the Longworth act limitations. This must necessarily follow, because the limitations of section 7005 are measured in terms of money directly, while those of section 3939 and succeeding sections are measured by a percentage of the tax duplicate.

Very truly yours,
TIMOTHY S. HOGAN,
Attorney General.

ROADS AND HIGHWAYS—STATE AID NOT APPLICABLE TO HIGHWAYS WITHIN LIMITS OF MUNICIPALITY.

By the terms of section 1186, General Code, provisions for highways included within the limits of any municipality are expressly excluded from state aid provisions.

COLUMBUS, OHIO, March 3, 1913.

HON. WILLIAM C. HUDSON, Prosecuting Attorney, McArthur, Ohio.

DEAR SIR:—I have your letter of February 11th, wherein you inquire as follows:

> "Under the statutes creating the state highway department, is it possible for an incorporated village in any way to secure state aid for public highways within its limits?"

Section 1186 of the General Code provides:

> "Each application for state aid in the construction, improvement, maintenance or repair of highways shall be accompanied by a proper certified resolution of the county commissioners or township trustees having jurisdiction of the road to be constructed, improved, maintained or repaired, stating that the public interest demands the improvement of the highway therein described; that the description does not include any portion of the highway in the limits of any municipailty. Provided, also, that when all the inter-county highways within a county have been improved to the standard specified by the state highway commissioner, then the appropriation may be used, in the construction, improvement, maintenance or repair of any road within such county. Each application for state aid shall also contain an agreement on the part of the county commissioners or township trustees, having jurisdiction over the road, to pay one-half of the cost and expense of surveys and other expenses preliminary to the construction, improvement, maintenance or repair of said road."

It is evident from the foregoing that state money cannot be obtained by a municipality for road improvements since it is expressly stated therein that the application of county commissioners or township trustees must show that the description of the road, improvement of which is sought, "does not include any portion of the highway in the limits of any municipality."

The state highway law makes no provision for applications by other officials than county commissioners and township trustees. If the legislature had intended to permit the use of state money by municipalities it would have made some provision to that effect or at least would have used the language of limitation found in section 1186.

I am clearly of the opinion that municipal corporations are not entitled to receive any portion of state money for the improvement of highways within their limits.

Yours very truly,

TIMOTHY S. HOGAN,

Attorney General.

ROADS AND HIGHWAYS—AGREEMENT BY COUNTY COMMISSIONERS AND VILLAGE COUNCIL IN CONSTRUCTION OF JOINT VILLAGE AND COUNTY ROADS.

The terms of section 6905, General Code, authorize the construction of a road lying upon the boundary line of a village and a township, by agreement between the council of the village and the county commissioners.

COLUMBUS, OHIO, March 27, 1913.

HON. C. F. ADAMS, Prosecuting Attorney, Elyria, Ohio.

DEAR SIR:—Under date of February 5th, you submitted, for an opinion, the following:

> "In the village of Wellington, Ohio, a municipal corporation is a certain county road which requires improvement. The township line divides the road, fifteen feet of the road being within the township and thirty-five feet of the road being within the village.
> "Can the board of county commissioners under section 6905 of the General Code enter into an agreement with the trustees of the township and the council of the village in relation to said improvement?"

Section 6905 of the General Code provides:

> "The board of county commissioners may enter into an agreement with the board of trustees of any township or the council of any village, or both, into or through which a state or county road improvement is contemplated, whereby said board of trustees or council may assume and pay such a proportion of the costs and expenses of such improvement not assessed upon abutting land in accordance with section 6904 of the General Code, as may be agreed upon between said board of county commissioners and said board of trustees or council, and such agreement or agreements may be entered into at any time before the contract for said improvement is let."

The facts stated in your letter, in my judgment, are within the purview of section 6905, and I am, therefore, of the opinion that the commissioners of your county may enter into an agreement with the township trustees and the council of the village of Wellington, as to the amount of money said village and township will pay towards said improvement.

Very truly yours,
TIMOTHY S. HOGAN,
Attorney General.

EXPENSES—SHERIFF NOT ALLOWED FOR LABOR OF MAINTAINING OWN HORSE—ALLOWANCE TO SHERIFF'S FAMILY.

Section 2997, General Code, authorizing allowance by county commissioners to the sheriff for expenses of maintaining horses and vehicles, contemplates only recompense to the sheriff for expenditures made by him and does not comprehend payment to such sheriff for labor performed by himself in the care of his horse. Such section does, however, authorize honest and reasonable payment to members of the sheriff's family for labor so performed.

COLUMBUS, OHIO, March 26, 1913.

HON. WILLIAM C. HUDSON, Prosecuting Attorney, McArthur, Ohio.

DEAR SIR:—Your favor of February 11, 1913, received. You state that under section 2997 of the General Code the county commissioners have the authority to allow the sheriff for the expense of maintaining horses and vehicles necessary to the proper administration of the duties of his office, and you inquire, "can he or members of his family collect pay for taking care of his own horses?"

Section 2997, General Code, provides in part as follows:

> "In addition to the compensation and salary herein provided, the county commissioners shall make allowance quarterly to each sheriff for * * * all expenses of maintaining horses and vehicles necessary to the proper administration of the duties of his office."

You inquire whether the sheriff can collect for taking care of his own horses. I suppose you mean by your inquiry, the actual labor performed by him in keeping the horses in good condition, such as currying and physical care.

In order to answer your question we must look to section 2997 of the General Code which authorizes the county commissioners to make a quarterly allowance for the expense of maintaining the horses used by him in the county's business. Expense is defined by the Century dictionary as: "Laying out or expending; the disbursing of money."

Under this section the sheriff has the right to employ some person to take care of his horses and present the bill to the county commissioners for allowance; but I am of the opinion that if the sheriff should take care of his own horses he cannot present a bill for his services in that behalf, because that would not come under the head of "expense" as contemplated by section 2997, General Code.

Under section 2997, General Code, each sheriff shall file, under oath, with his quarterly report, a full and accurate itemized account of all his actual and necessary expenses mentioned and authorized by said section 2997, before they shall be allowed by the commissioners. It is the object of said section 2997 only to make the sheriff whole for money actually expended in performing the duties of his office, and does not authorize any payment for labor performed by himself as that would not be an expense in contemplation of the statute.

You inquire further whether members of the sheriff's family may collect for taking care of his horses.

Section 2997, General Code, above quoted, requires the county commissioners to make allowance for all expenses for maintaining horses necessary to the proper administration of his office. The sheriff is not required under this section to maintain his own horses. He can employ some other person to take care of and maintain his horses and vehicles, and the amount expended by him for that purpose would be a proper ubject of charge against the county. There is no prohibition against members of the sheriff's own family being employed to take care of and maintain his horses and vehicles, and if he should employ members of his own family to take care of the horses used by him in the county's business, if the bill for the same is reasonable and just, it should be allowed by the county commissioners.

Yours very truly,
TIMOTHY S. HOGAN,
Attorney General.

DEPUTY SEALER OF WEIGHTS AND MEASURES—POWER OF COUNTY COMMISSIONERS TO BORROW MONEY TO PAY SALARY OF—FUNDING INDEBTEDNESS.

Under section 5656, General Code, the county commissioners are empowered to borrow money for the purpose of paying the salary of a deputy state sealer of weights and measures, when the limits of taxation will not permit the payment of the same from existing funds.

COLUMBUS, OHIO, March 24, 1913.

HON. LEVI B. MOORE, Prosecuting Attorney, Waverly, Ohio.

DEAR SIR:—I beg to acknowledge receipt of your letter of February 24th, in which you state that in effect, under the Smith one per cent. law, so-called, Pike county is scarcely able to secure enough revenue to pay its earned expenses and the salaries of its principal county officers. You call my attention to the requirement of section 2622, General Code, as amended, 102 O. L. 426, to the effect that each county sealer of weights and measures shall appoint a deputy who shall receive a salary fixed by the county commissioners. I am of the opinion that a salary fixed in the manner provided in section 2622 would, upon its being earned by the incumbent of the position of deputy sealer of weights and measures, become an obligation of the county, of dignity equal to that of the salary of the prosecuting attorney or one of the county commissioners. If money could not be raised in any year within the tax limit sufficient to pay such salary, it would be necessary for the commissioners to borrow money, under the authority in them vested by section 5656 et seq., General Code, to provide for such indebtedness.

Of course, section 2622 does not fix any minimum salary, and if the needs of the county are such as not to require the whole time of a single person as deputy sealer, the commissioners may in their discretion fix the salary at such an amount as will fairly compensate a competent person for occasional service in this capacity.

I may add that I am fairly satisfied in my own mind that the Smith law is just and must not be repealed. The general taxation laws of the state must be enforced much more rigorously than they have been in the past, in order to enable some counties and subordinate taxing districts in the state to continue to meet their current obligations and to provide for their current needs.

Very truly yours,
TIMOTHY S. HOGAN,
Attorney General.

CONSTABLE—ALLOWANCE OF COST RESTRICTED TO $100 IN ANY ONE YEAR FOR CASES IN WHICH STATE FAILS AND DEFENDANT PROVES INSOLVENT.

The provisions of section 3019, General Code, to the effect that a constable may be allowed expenses by the county commissioners not in excess of $100, for cases in which the state fails and the defendant proves insolvent, may not be evaded. In the allowance of such cost, therefore, the provision of section 3020, General Code, to the effect that such cost may not be allowed until the commissioners are satisfied that precautions as to security for cost have been taken, must be carefully observed.

COLUMBUS, OHIO, March 31, 1913.

HON. HOMER E. JOHNSON, Prosecuting Attorney, Marion, Ohio.

DEAR SIR:—I beg to acknowledge receipt of your inquiry of March 20, 1913, wherein you inquire as follows:

> Under section 3019, General Code of Ohio, the commissioners make an allowance to the constable for his fees in cases where the defendant is insolvent, but such allowance in the aggregate shall not exceed $100.00 in any one year. Does this mean an official year or a calendar year? One of the constables since the first of January, 1913, has filed three cost bills of $35.86, $33.31 and $48.66 respectively, which in the aggregate exceed the $100.00 limit. These cost bills are large because they are cases where a boarding house keeper has been defrauded and the defendant in each case was apprehended in another county, also, because in this county it is necessary to transport the prisoner to the workhouse at Dayton, Ohio. We feel that we should not let future cases go simply because we cannot pay the constable fees. Should like to have your suggestions as to a way out of this situation, if there is any.

In reply thereto, section 3019, General Code, provides as follows:

> "In felonies wherein the state fails, and in misdemeanors wherein the defendant proves insolvent, the county commissioners, at any regular session, may make an allowance to any such officers in place of fees, but in any year the aggregate allowance to such officer shall not exceed the fees legally taxed to him in such causes, nor in any year shall the aggregate amount allowed an officer exceed one hundred dollars."

From the language used in this section, the intention is clear that the maximum of $100.00 for any one year means a calendar year and not an official year, for the reason that the statute is to be construed in accordance with its ordinary meaning, and, therefore, it follows in the absence of language fixing the date or time when such year begins and ends, that the phrase "in any year" means a calendar year as distinguished from an official year.

You state in your inquiry that the constable about whom you inquire has filed, in accordance with section 3019, General Code, three cost bills, which, in the aggregate, exceed $100.00. In this particular instance, about which you inquire as above, the constable is not entitled to exceed $100.00 for lost costs in any year, by virtue of the provisions of said section 3019, supra.

Furthermore, section 3020 of the General Code, provides that the justice of the peace, mayor or police judge or police justices must exercise reasonable care in taking security for costs in cases wherein he is authorized to take such security for costs, as follows:

> "Section 3020, General Code. In ascertaining the amount of fees taxed by a justice of the peace, mayor, or police judge or justices, to make such allowance, in cases where such officer was authorized to take security for costs, it must appear that he exercised reasonable care in taking such security. Until satisfied by the certificate of such justice of the peace, police judge or justice, or mayor, or by other proof, to the satisfaction of the commissioners, that the prosecuting witness was indigent and unable to pay the costs or procure security thereof, and that the officer exercised due care in taking such security, such officer's fees in such causes shall not be included in ascertaining the amount so to be allowed."

Section 13499, General Code, authorizes such magistrates to require the giving of security for costs in misdemeanor cases before the issuing of the warrant, as follows:

> "When the offense charged is a misdemeanor the magistrate, before issuing the warrant, may require the complainant, or, if he considers the complainant irresponsible, may require that he procure a person to become liable for the costs if the complaint be dismissed, and the complainant or other person shall acknowledge himself so liable and such magistrate shall enter such acknowledgment on his docket. Such bond shall not be required of a sheriff, deputy sheriff, constable, marshal, deputy marshal, watchman or police officer, when in the discharge of his official duty."

It follows that the only way to avoid large bills for lost costs, is for the county commissioners to insist, in accordance with the provisions contained in section 3020, supra, that no portion of the maximum of $100.00 to cover lost costs, —— will be allowed, unless the magistrate exercised reasonable care in taking security for costs, which said security he is authorized to require before issuing a warrant, as provided by section 13499, supra.

Very truly yours,
TIMOTHY S. HOGAN,
Attorney General.

BOARD OF EDUCATION—LABORATORY FEES MAY NOT BE PAID AS TUITION.

Section 7747, General Code, which provides that the tuition of Boxwell graduates residing in township and special districts in which no high school is maintained, must be paid by the board of education of such districts, does not authorize the payment of a laboratory fee charged to such pupils at an institution which they are attending.

COLUMBUS, OHIO, March 24, 1913.

HON. KENT P. JOHNSON, Prosecuting Attorney, Kenton, Ohio.

DEAR SIR:—I desire to acknowledge the receipt of your letter of January 29, 1913, wherein you inquire as follows:

"The board of education of a township in this county send their Boxwell graduates to the high school in the village of Ada, which has a four year high school course. By arrangements between the citizens of Ada and the trustees of the Ohio Northern University the school board are permitted to send, tuition free, thirty fourth year high school students to the university for their entire course of study. The township pays the school board an agreed tuition for each pupil under section 7767. The village school board maintain no fourth year department. The trustees of the university, demand laboratory fees of $6.00 from the township students coming to them through the Ada high school.

"The board of education desire to know if they are authorized to pay these laboratory fees as a part of the tuition, and have requested an opinion from your department on this question."

In reply to your inquiry I desire to say that section 7747 of the General Code provides that the tuition of pupils holding diplomas and residing in townships of special school districts in which no high school is maintained, shall be paid by the board of education in which they have legal school residence as follows:

"The tuition of pupils holding diplomas and residing in township or special districts, in which no high school is maintained, shall be paid by the board of education of the school district in which they have legal school residence, such tuition to be computed by the month. An attendance any part of the month shall create a liability for the entire month; but a board of education maintaining a high school shall not charge more tuition than it charges for other non-resident pupils."

The term "tuition" as used in said section is defined by the Century dictionary as follows: "The fee for instruction;" and by Webster's Dictionary as follows: "The money paid for instruction; the price or payment for instruction."

According to the above definitions of the term "tuition" it cannot be said that the said term includes the laboratory fees of $6.00 as demanded by the university authorities, under the circumstances as set forth in your letter. There is no statutory provision whereby a township board of education having no high school is legally authorized to pay the laboratory fees of its Boxwell-Patterson graduates. Therefore, in the absence of statutory provision for the payment of such laboratory fees, it is the opinion of this department that the township board of education in question is without authority to pay said laboratory fees as a part of the tuition of its Boxwell-Patterson graduates.

Yours very truly,
TIMOTHY S. HOGAN,
Attorney General.

COMMISSIONERS AUTHORIZED TO PROVIDE SUPPLIES FOR OFFICE OF PROSECUTING ATTORNEY.

Under section 2419, General Code, which provides that county commissioners shall provide offices for county officers of such style, dimension and expenses as the commissioners determine, county commissioners may supply such offices with the necessary text books, stationery, etc.

COLUMBUS, OHIO, April 5, 1913.

HON. C. E. BALLARD, Prosecuting Attorney, Springfield, Ohio.

DEAR SIR:—Under date of January 11th, you inquire as follows:

> "The commissioners of this county, and other counties, have, in the past, bought and paid for certain supplies for the office of the prosecuting attorney, such as text books, stationery, etc.
> "Examiners of the state from the bureau of inspection and supervision of public offices have approved, at least have not objected, to an expenditure of public money in this way.
> "I assume the county commissioners have the right, under the law, to make such purchases but I have been unable to find any statute which gives them such power.
> "Therefore, I write to ask you what statute gives them the authority to make the purchases above mentioned?"

There is no specific authority given in the statutes for the furnishing of supplies such as you describe in your letter to the office of the prosecuting attorney.

Section 2419 of the General Code provides that offices for county officers shall be provided by the commissioners when in their judgment any of them are needed and that such offices shall be of such style, dimension and expense as the commissioners determine. By reference to the statutes defining the duties of the prosecuting attorney it will be seen that it is provided therein for assistants, clerks and stenographers, and further that the prosecuting attorney is made the legal adviser for county officers and township officers and is required to prepare in legal form their official bonds, etc. All of these duties which are placed upon the prosecuting attorney and the fact that the county commissioners under section 2419, General Code, are authorized to furnish offices in style, dimensions and expense as determined by the commissioners has been construed as an implied power upon the part of the county commissioners to furnish text books, stationery, etc., as determined by such commissioners. This is the only authority which is to be found in the statutes relative to the subject, but the bureau of inspection and supervision of public offices has always deemed it sufficient authority for the expenditure of public moneys for such purpose. Said text books, stationery, etc., belong to the office of the prosecuting attorney and remain the property of the county.

Yours truly,
TIMOTHY S. HOGAN,
Attorney General.

POOR RELIEF—POWER OF COUNTY COMMISSIONERS AND SUPERINTENDENT OF INFIRMARY TO PROVIDE FOR POOR FAMILY OUTSIDE OF INFIRMARY AND TO CARE FOR POOR CHILDREN.

Under section 2544, General Code, the superintendent of the infirmary is empowered to care for poor outside of the infirmary, when by reason of special facts or circumstances, he finds such method the most feasible one.

Under section 3092, General Code, children under the age of sixteen years may not be maintained at the county infirmary, but under the restrictions of section 3089, General Code, they must be provided for by the county commissioners, either in a children's home of the county, if the county has such, or in such home in another county, or in a private home by contract agreement or otherwise as the county commissioners deem best.

Under section 3476, General Code, trustees of a township are empowered to afford relief to persons within the township who require it and the township trustees, may, therefore, agree with the county commissioners to assist in providing for the maintenance of children of a poor widow by making a certain allowance to her.

COLUMBUS, OHIO, January 27, 1913.

HON. ALLEN THURMAN WILLIAMSON, Prosecuting Attorney, Washington County, Ohio:

DEAR SIR:—Under date of January 17th, you submit for my opinion a communication, the material portion of which is herewith set out:

> "Under section 2544, General Code, is it lawful for the commissioners, in a county having an infirmary as Washington county, to furnish aid outside of the infirmary to persons whom the superintendent of the infirmary is satisfied should become county charges? On the other hand do the words 'or otherwise' authorize such expenditure generally or should they be limited to the giving of relief where by reason of sickness or other physical disability it is impossible to move the indigent person to the infirmary?"

I submit two specific cases as follows:

> "(a) A man totally disabled having a legal settlement in the county requires the services of a regular attendant and one of his relatives, none of whom are able to support him and none of whom are liable for his support, is willing to care for him at her home if paid by the county $8.00 per month.
> "(b) A widow having four children under ten years of age whose husband died six years ago and who owns a little home worth perhaps $300.00. She is well qualified to care for the children and with the aid of about $6.00 a month can keep the family together and out of the children's home, and by working some can manage to make a living for the family. In this case the township trustees in which township the widow resides have been paying the widow $3.00 per month for a few months and are asking that the county contribute another $3.00.
> "Heretofore it has been the policy of the infirmary directors to furnish partial support to indigent persons outside of the infirmary in cases such as the above, but since the infirmary has come under the charge of the commissioners we are desirous of having some definite ruling to go by in matters such as the above; and that if such relief is to be discontinued, to do so now."

Section 2544, General Code, formerly provided as follows:

"In any county having an infirmary, when the trustees of a township, after making the inquiry provided by law, are of the opinion that the person complained of is entitled to admission to the county infirmary, they shall forthwith transmit a statement of the facts to the infirmary directors, and if it appears that such person is legally settled in the township or has no legal settlement in this state, or that such settlement is unknown, and the directors are satisfied that he should become a county charge, they shall forthwith receive and provide for him in such institution, or otherwise, and thereupon the liability of the township shall cease. The infirmary directors shall not be liable for any relief furnished, or expenses incurred by the township trustees."

The same section now appears in the General Code, as follows:

"In any county having an infirmary, when the trustees of a township, after making the inquiry provided by law, are of the opinion that the person complained of is entitled to admission to the county infirmary, they shall forthwith transmit a statement of the facts to the superintendent of the infirmary, and if it appears that such person is legally settled in the township or has no legal settlement in this state, or that such settlement is unknown, and the superintendent of the infirmary is satisfied that he should become a county charge, they shall forthwith receive and provide for him in such institution, or otherwise, and thereupon the liability of the township shall cease. The superintendent of the infirmary shall not be liable for any relief furnished, or expenses incurred by the township trustees."

Under the present statute, the superintendent of the infirmary is given the duties formerly resting upon the infirmary directors. I have ruled in a former opinion, that the word "they" as it appears in the present statute should be properly interpreted to read "he," and refers in reality to the superintendent of the infirmary.

Other than to place upon the superintendent of the infirmary the duties formerly resting upon the infirmary directors, there has been no change made in the law contained therein.

In an opinion rendered to Honorable Holland C. Webster, under date of March 31, 1911, the powers of the infirmary directors, under the former statute, as to outside relief, were fully considered. In that opinion I said:

* * * It is manifestly the intention of the law that paupers coming under the charge of the infirmary directors shall be provided for in the county infirmary, and unless there be sufficient cause to justify infirmary directors in providing for a person who is a county charge, outside of the infirmary, it is the duty of the infirmary directors to provide for all paupers, coming under their charge inside the county infirmary. If however, on account of overcrowding, or on account of any special fact or circumstance, such as that the person in need of relief is not in a physical condition to be removed, to the county infirmary, or is affected with some contagious disease, or for other similar reasons, the infirmary directors would deem it advisable to care for a county charge elsewhere than at the infirmary of the county, they may do so and be within the pale of the law; * * *

The same principles apply under the present statute, except that the superintendent of the infirmary now exercises the duties which at the time that opinion was written, rested upon the infirmary directors. This opinion, I believe, affords a complete answer with respect to the situation presented in the first of the two specific cases set out by you, and in accordance therewith, I am of the opinion that the infirmary superintendent may pay the relatives the $8.00 per month as suggested, if the superintendent of the infirmary, in the exercise of the discretion resting in him, deems it advisable to care for such subject in that manner, rather than at the county infirmary.

With reference to the second specific case set out by you, I beg to refer you to sections 3089 and 3092, General Code, which are as follows:

> "Section 3089. The home (children's home) shall be an asylum for children under the age of sixteen years, of sound mind and free from infectious or contagious diseases, who have resided in the county not less than one year, and for such other children under such age from other counties in the state where there is no home, as the trustees of such home and the persons or authority having the custody and control of such children, by contract agreed upon, who are, in the opinion of the trustees, suitable children for admission by reason of orphanage, abandonment or neglect by parents, or inability of parents to provide for them.
> "Section 3092. Except such as are imbecile, idiots or insane, no child or children entitled to admission into a children's home shall be kept or maintained in any county infirmary in this state. In any county where such home has not already been provided, the board of commissioners shall make temporary provisions for such children by transferring them to the nearest children's home where they can be received and kept at the expense of the county, or by leasing premises for that purpose, which shall be furnished, provided and managed in all respects as provided by law for the support and management of children's homes, but the commissioners may provide for the care and support of such children within their respective counties, in the manner deemed best for the interest of such children, and they shall levy an additional tax, which shall be used for that purpose only."

Under the provision of section 3092, General Code, it is clear that children under the age of sixteen years, who properly come within section 3089, General Code, may not be maintained at the county infirmary, but must be provided for in a children's home of the county, if the county has such, or in the home of another county, or in a private home, by contract agreement, or in some premises temporarily leased, or otherwise as provided by section 3092, General Code.

Inasmuch as section 2544, General Code, provides only for such persons as in the opinion of the township trustees are entitled to admission to the county infirmary, that section cannot be considered applicable to the relief of children entitled to admission in children's homes. I am, therefore, of the opinion that the superintendent of the infirmary has no duties, whatever, pertaining to the relief of such children.

Under section 3092, General Code, above quoted, however, "commissioners" may provide for the care and support of such children within their respective counties in the manner deemed best for the interests of such children. Under this provision, I am of the opinion that the county commissioners may, if they so desire, afford the relief contemplated in the second case presented by you, provided, of course, that the subject for relief is properly settled in the county, and other conditions have been complied with, as set out in section 3089, General Code.

Section 3476, General Code, provides as follows:

> "Subject to the conditions, provisions and limitations herein, the trustees of each township or the proper officers of each municipal corporation therin, respectively, shall afford at the expense of such township or municipal corporation public support or relief to all persons therein who are in condition requiring it."

There are no specific provisions in the statutes relative to the powers of township trustees as regards care of the poor, with reference to children, and I am of the opinion that the township trustees have the power, under section 3476, General Code, to care for the children in this situation. If the county commissioners and the township trustees desire to make the arrangements referred to, as to the payment of one-half the expenses by each board. I know of no reason, in view of the statutes, why such an agreement may not be entered into.

Very truly yours,
TIMOTHY S. HOGAN,
Attorney General.

CORONER—POWER TO HOLD INQUEST UPON SUSPICION OF POISONING WITHOUT EXHUMING BODY.

Under section 2856, and following, General Code, a coroner may subpoena witnesses and examine into the death of a person whom he has been informed met death by poisoning: and when without exhuming the body, the coroner acts in good faith and subpoenas and examines witnesses, the officers serving subpoenas and the witnesses should be allowed their proper fees.

COLUMBUS, OHIO, April 19, 1913.

HON. CHAS. F. ADAMS, Prosecuting Attorney, Elyria, Ohio.

DEAR SIR:—I beg to acknowledge receipt of your letter of March 21, 1913, in which you present the following statement of facts:

> "Information is given the prosecutor to the effect that a child has been poisoned; the prosecutor in turn notifies the coroner. The child has been buried, at this time, a number of weeks. The coroner, without exhuming the body, proceeds to inquire, subpoena and examine witnesses, and, becoming convinced that there is no reason to suspicion death by any criminal agency, concludes the inquest and makes his report without exhuming the body."

and request my opinion as to whether or not the witness and officer serving the subpoenas are entitled to fees and mileage; and if the coroner is entitled to his fees for record and necessary writings.

Section 2856, General Code, provides as follows:

> "When informed that the body of a person whose death is supposed to have been caused by violence has been found within the county, the coroner shall appear forthwith at the place where the body is, issue subpoenas for such witnesses as he deems necessary, administer to them the usual oath, and proceed to inquire how the deceased came to his death, whether by violence from any other person or persons, by whom, whether as principals or accessories before or after the fact, and all circumstances relating thereto. The testimony of such witnesses shall be reduced to writing, by them respectively subscribed, except when stenographically reported by the official stenographer of the coroner, and, with the finding and recognizances hereinafter mentioned, if any, returned by the coroner to the clerk of the court of common pleas of the county. * * *"

Section 2857, General Code, provides:

"The coroner shall draw up and subscribe his finding of facts in writing. If he finds that the deceased came to his or her death by force or violence, and by any other person or persons, so charged, and there present, he shall arrest such person or persons, and convey him or them immediately before a proper officer for examination according to law. * * *"

Section 2858, General Code, provides that,

"The coroner may issue any writ required by this chapter, to any constable of the county in which such body is found, or, if in his opinion the emergency so requires, to any discreet person of the county. * * *"

Section 2859, General Code, provides:

"When an inquest is held, as part of his finding the coroner shall give a description of the person over whose body the inquest is held, which description shall specify the name, age, sex, residence, place of nativity, color of the eyes, hair, marks, and all other particulars which may assist in the identification of the person. * * *"

From a reading of the above quoted sections of the General Code it is plainly to be seen that it was the intention of the legislature, in specifying the duties of the coroner, to enjoin upon him the duty of holding an inquest, which inquest was intended to aid in the detection of crimes and in the punishment of those who perpetrated such crimes. Section 2856 specifically provides that the coroner shall, when informed that the body of a person whose death is supposed to have been caused by violence has been found within the county, appear forthwith at the place where the body is, issue subpoenas for such witnesses as he deems necessary, etc. Section 2859 specifically provides that when an inquest is held, as part of his findings, the coroner shall give a description of the person over whose body the inquest is held, etc. From a reading of said sections it seems to me that a coroner might legally hold an inquest, upon being informed that the body of a person whose death is supposed to have been caused by violence has been found within the county, without an actual view of the body, for he would be able, from the examination of witnesses to get the description of the body of a decedent necessary to be contained in his findings to be filed with the clerk of the courts, as provided by law. I am not inclined to believe that it is absolutely proper procedure for a coroner to hold an inquest weeks after the burial of the body of a person whose death is supposed to have been caused by violence. However, I can see no legal reason why a coroner should not hold an inquest at any time he is informed that the body of a person, whose death is supposed to have been caused by violence, has been found within the county, for the purpose of aiding in the detection of crime or of anybody connected with said death.

In the case referred to in your inquiry, you having informed the coroner of the fact that said child was supposed to have come to its death by being poisoned, there seems to me to be a prima facie case that the coroner acted in the best of faith, and was endeavoring to assist the prosecuting attorney in the detection of crime, if any had been committed. The coroner, acting in good faith, pursued the proper course, in my opinion, when he proceeded to examine witnesses before ordering the body exhumed; for if the testimony of the witnesses disclosed the fact that the child came to its death through natural causes, it would be a useless expenditure of public money to order the body exhumed for the purpose of holding an autopsy. In the last analysis the purposes for which the law creates the office of coroner and defines his duties have in this case been fully carried into effect; and in my opinion, the coroner having acted in good faith, as above stated, he is entitled to the statutory fees for all actual services performed in his official capacity, in relation to such case, which, in my opinion, includes everything except the statutory fee for viewing the body, the coroner not having performed that service.

I am also of the opinion that, the coroner having the legal right to subpoena witnesses and also to compel any constable of the county or other person to execute certain writs and serve subpoenas upon witnesses, and the same having been done, and the witnesses having obeyed said subpoenas, said witnesses should be paid from the county treasury their fees and mileage; and any and all officers serving subpoenas or other writs under the direction of the coroner should be paid their legal fees fixed by statute for such services.

Very truly yours.
TIMOTHY S. HOGAN,
Attorney General.

SHERIFF—COUNTY COMMISSIONERS TO ALLOW FOR UPKEEP OF AUTOMOBILE.

Under section 2997, General Code, which authorizes county commissioners to make allowance to sheriffs for the maintenance of horses and vehicles, county commissioners must allow the sheriff sufficient to keep in repair an automobile used by the sheriff in the public administration of the necessary duties of his office.

COLUMBUS, OHIO, April 19, 1913.

HON. E. L. SAVAGE, Prosecuting Attorney, Paulding, Ohio:

DEAR SIR:—Your letter of February 16th received. You ask my opinion upon the following question:

> "Where a county sheriff owns his own auto should the county pay for the upkeep of such auto while and when used in the discharge of his official duties, and should the depreciation in the value of the machine be included in the expense of the upkeep?"

Section 2997 of the General Code provides in part as follows:

> "In addition to the compensation and salary herein provided, the county commissioners shall make allowances quarterly to each sheriff * * * for all expenses of maintaining horses and vehicles necessary to the proper administration of the duties of his office. * * *"

The answer to your question depends upon the construction of the words "all expenses of maintaining," as used in this section. The circuit court of Mahoning county, in the case of State vs. Commissioners, 10 C. C. N. S. 398, defined "maintaining," as used in this statute, as applied to vehicles, as follows:

> "Supporting; upholding; keeping up; to hold or keep up in any particular state or condition; to sustain; to keep up."

The court said further that the legislature, in this provision, only meant and intended that sheriffs should be allowed the necessary expense incurred in keeping their vehicles in good condition, and not in the purchase of them.

I have already held, in an opinion addressed to Hon. Thomas L. Pogue, prosecuting attorney of Hamilton county, Ohio, that the sheriff is entitled to repairs on an automobile used in the county business. I enclose herewith a copy of said opinion. I also hold in that opinion that an automobile is a vehicle within the meaning of section 2997.

I am of the opinion, therefore, that the county should pay for the upkeep of the sheriff's auto, which is used by the sheriff exclusively in the discharge of his official duties; that is to say, the county should keep the sheriff's auto, so used, in good condition, and keep up the repairs thereon. But this does not permit the sheriff to present a bill of expenses for depreciation in the value of the machine, as that is not to be included in the expense of the upkeep.

Very truly yours,
TIMOTHY S. HOGAN,
Attorney General.

CLERK OF COURTS—DUTY TO TURN OVER ACCOUNTS AND INTEREST TO SUCCESSOR—RETURN OF EXCESSIVE AMOUNT TO PREDECESSOR.

Since section 3032, General Code, requires a clerk of court to keep a cash book and to turn over the same to the successor in office, it is clear that all funds stated to be on hand in such cash book should be turned over to the clerk's successor, together with such book. If there was an excessive amount of money paid over to the incoming officer, it should be returned to his predecessor just as a deficiency should be made good by the outgoing clerk.

COLUMBUS, OHIO, December 23, 1912.

HON. JOHN A. CLINE, Prosecuting Attorney, Cleveland, Ohio.

DEAR SIR:—The letter of your assistant, Mr. Minsall, under date of December 17, 1912, enclosing a letter to you from Mr. Horner, clerk of courts, dated November 14, 1912, in which two questions are asked has been considered and I desire to say:

The first query states that in handling the funds in the clerk's office all county funds are separately deposited and earn interest which is accounted for to the auditor. Other funds also bear interest and are kept in a separate account, and the inquiry is whether this interest can be turned over to the county auditor, he releasing the clerk and his bondsmen from liability.

The second question goes to the matter of "overage," so-called, that is the money in the hands of the clerk in excess of the amount shown by the cash book.

Section 3032, General Code, reads:

> "Each clerk of a court of record, and the sheriff and prosecuting attorney, in each county, shall enter in a journal or cash book provided at the expense of the county, an accurate account of all moneys collected or received in his official capacity, on the days of the receipt, and in the order of time so received, with a minute of the date and suit, or other matter, on account of which the money was received. Such cash book shall be a public record of the office, and on the expiration of the term of such officer, be delivered to his successor in office. Each such clerk shall be the receiver of all moneys payable into his office, whether collected by public officers of court or tendered by other persons, and, on request shall pay them to persons entitled thereto."

This section provides for the keeping of a cash book by the clerk and the turning over of the same to his successor in office, and while nothing is said about the turning over of the balances shown to the successor, yet it would destroy the value of such book or the necessity for its being kept if the balances were not turned over with the book.

I am, therefore, of the opinion that the interest fund, assuming that the cash book will furnish data from which the amount may be ascertained, should be turned over to the successor in office, and not to the auditor as the interest mentioned does not come within what is meant by unclaimed costs, as described in sections 3040 to 3045, General Code.

The second question relates to "overage" as termed in Mr. Horner's letter.

I am of the opinion that this money should also be turned over to the successor in office and his receipt therefor taken, which will release the outgoing clerk and his bond and transfer the liability to the incoming officer.

If there was an excessive amount of money paid over to the incoming officer, it should, on discovery be returned to his predecessor, just as a deficiency (on discovery) should be made good by the out-going clerk.

Yours very truly,
TIMOTHY S. HOGAN,
Attorney General.

STREET ASSESSMENTS—ASSESSMENT BY FOOT FRONTAGE AND FOOT FRONT—ASSESSMENTS ON ABUTTING LOTS GENERALLY, FOR ABUTTING PROPERTY NOT ASSESSED BY REASON OF FOOT FRONT RULE ON CORNER LOTS.

Under a former law which required the assessment of abutting property by the "foot front" of the property bounding and abutting upon the improvement, the courts held that a corner lot could be assessed only for such number of feet as constituted the actual number of feet in the actual front of such property. When the law was changed, requiring such assessment by the "foot frontage" of the property bounding and abutting, the court held that the actual number of feet bounding and abutting upon the improvement could be assessed.

Since the law has been again changed so as to permit the assessment of such property by the "foot front" of the property bounding and abutting, under a well settled rule of construction, the interpretation of the courts of this language as it existed in the first law must be construed to be again intended by the legislature, and the former law must be again allowed to prevail.

In accordance with the case of Streiber vs. City of Lima, the cost of the improvement which cannot be assessed against the corner lot, by reason of the foot front rule, may be apportioned against all of the property abutting upon said improvement, which may be assessed therefor.

COLUMBUS, OHIO, March 26, 1913.

HON. CHARLES F. CLOSE, Prosecuting Attorney, Upper Sandusky, Ohio.

DEAR SIR:—Under date of February 15, 1913, you send to this department a letter of inquiry from a member of the council of the village of Carey, Ohio. It appears that this village has no solicitor and you have been requested to secure the opinion of this department upon the question submitted in the enclosed letter.

The letter which you enclose states the facts and question as follows:

> "In levying special assessments in municipalities by the third method named under section 3812, General Code, namely by 'the foot front of the property bounding and abutting on the improvement,' it is a settled construction of the law that a corner lot can only be assessed according to the number of feet in that boundary of such lot which constitutes its 'front.'
> "This construction causes the number of assessable feet of frontage on a street improvement to be less than the number of feet of property actually abutting on the improvement, and since the improvement is to be assessed by the foot front of the property abutting the cost per foot is consequently increased.
> "The query is: Can this increased cost occasioned by the loss of the frontage on corner lots be thrown back and imposed upon the properties abutting, or should it be borne by the municipality as a whole?"

Section 3812, General Code, provides:

> "Each municipal corporation shall have special power to levy and collect special assessments, to be exercised in the manner provided by law. The council of any municipal corporation may assess upon the abutting, adjacent and contiguous or other specially benefited lots or lands in the corporation, any part of the entire cost of an expense connected with the improvement of any street, alley, dock, wharf, pier, public road, or place by grading, draining, curbing, paving, repaving, repairing, constructing sidewalks, piers, wharves, docks, retaining walls, sewers, drains, water courses, water mains or laying of water pipe and any part of the cost of lighting, sprinkling, sweeping, cleaning or planting shade trees thereupon, and any part of the cost and expense connected with or made for changing the channel of, or narrowing, widening, dredging, deepening or improving any stream or water course, and for constructing or improving any levee or levees, or boulevards thereon, or along or about the same, together with any retaining wall, or rip rap protection, bulkheads, culverts, approaches, flood gates, or water ways or drains incidental thereto, which the council may declare conducive to the public health, convenience or welfare, by any of the following methods:

"First. By a percentage of the tax value of the property assessed.

"Second. In proportion to the benefits which may result from the improvement, or

"Third. By the foot front of the property bounding and abutting upon the improvement."

This section gives three methods for levying the special assessment. The third method is involved in the present inquiry.

This method of levying special assessments has been construed, in reference to corner lots, in two ways by the supreme court of Ohio. In each of these decisions a different phraseology of the statute was under consideration. Also the legislature changed the phraseology after each of the decisions of the supreme court.

In Haviland vs. City of Columbus, 50 Ohio St., 471, it is held:

"In assessing the cost of a street improvement on abutting property by the front foot, regard must be had to what is the real front of the property. This is a question of fact, to be determined by the manner in which it was laid out, or in which it has been built upon, and used and occupied, by the owner.

"If a lot abuts lengthwise on the improvement, but fronts breadthwise on another street and not on the improvement, the lot should be deemed as fronting breadthwise on the improvement, and be assessed for the number of feet on the improvement that it would have in such case, and no more."

Section 2264, Revised Statutes, was under consideration in this case and the third method of levying special assessments was expressed in said statute as follows, as shown on page 473 of the opinion:

"or (3) by the foot front of the property bounding and abutting upon the improvement."

This section of the statutes was amended by the municipal code of October 22, 1902, as shown at section 50 of 96 Ohio laws 39, wherein the third method of levying special assessments was stated:

"Third. By the foot frontage of the property bounding and abutting upon the improvement."

The only change in the language of section 2264, Revised Statutes as amended in section 50 of the municipal code of 1902, is that the words "foot front" were changed to read "foot frontage." This change, however, permitted the supreme court to make a new rule as to levying assessments on corner lots.

In Village of Oakwood vs. Stoecklein, 81 Ohio St., it is held:

"Since the municipal code passed October 22, 1902, (96 Ohio laws, 20), repealed section 2264, Revised Statutes, and defined the following made of assessing the costs and expenses of street improvements, 'by the foot frontage of the property bounding and abutting upon the improvement,' the rule of assessment laid down in Haviland et. al. vs. City of Columbus et. al., 50 Ohio St., 471, is abrogated, and municipalities are authorized to assess upon an entire lengthwise frontage of a lot abutting upon the improvement."

On page 334 of the opinion, Shauck, J., quotes the holding in Haviland vs. the City of Columbus, supra, and then says:

"Whatever may have been thought of the decision in that case as an interpretation of the statute, and however general may have been the belief that it imposed upon interior lots burdens which in justice should be borne by corner lots, the case was reconsidered and adhered to in the City of Toledo vs. Sheill, 53 Ohio St., 447. In one of the opinions in that case it was suggested that the rule should be regarded as established so far as judicial decisions were concerned, and that if it was thought to operate unjustly it should be changed by the general assembly by an act operating prospectively. Accordingly by the uniform municipal code enacted October 22, 1902, (96 Ohio Laws, 20), section 2264, Revised Statutes, was repealed and by section 50 of that act, the third mode of assessing the costs and expenses of street improvements was defined as follows: "By the foot frontage of the property bounding and abutting upon the improvement." Since the general assembly under the circumstances changed the phraseology of the clause and employed language in making the change which indicates very clearly the purpose of the legislature to act upon the suggestion referred to and to change the rule established in the case which appears to have controlled the judgements under review, the judgement must be regarded as erroneous."

It will be observed that the court does not overrule the holding in Haviland vs. city of Columbus, but bases the new rule upon the fact that the legislature changed the phraseology of the provision in question.

The case of village of Oakwood vs. Stoecklein, supra, was decided January 18, 1910, and on April 22, 1910, the general assembly, by act of 101 Ohio Laws 134, amended this provision and placed the phraseology in the same condition it was in when the ruling in Haviland vs. city of Columbus, was given, and which is:

"Third. By the foot front of the property bounding and abutting upon the improvement."

The supreme court in Oakwood vs. Stoecklein, supra, took advantage of the change in the language of the section, to hold that the legislature intended thereby to abrogate the ruling in Haviland vs. city of Columbus, but immediately thereafter, the legislature amended the language and made it the same as it was when passed upon in Haviland vs. city of Columbus.

It is evident, from the reasoning of the court in Oakwood vs. Stoecklein, and from the act of the legislature in 101 Ohio Laws 134, immediately thereafter, that the general assembly desired to have in force, the rule laid down in Haviland vs. city of Columbus, as to assessing corner lots.

This is the holding in the case of Henry vs. Barberton, 12 Ohio Nisi Prius N. S. 364, decided January 19, 1912, wherein it is held:

"When a statute, which has received a settled judicial construction, is repealed and is afterward re-enacted in the same terms and for the same purpose and object, it will be presumed that the legislative body, so re-enacting it, intended that it should bear the same construction which had been given to the original, unless a different intention is shown.

"The term 'foot front' in section 2264 of the Revised Statutes, having been construed by the courts as meaning, for assessment for the improvement of a street, a frontage equal to the linear measurement of the most prominent and conspicuous side of a property, rather than the side actually abutting in the street on which the improvement is made; and the courts, upon the repeal of this section (96 Ohio Laws 39, section 50), and the substitution of another act providing for an assessment by the 'foot frontage' having construed that substitution as an intention of the general assembly to abrogate the former construction by the courts of the meaning of the term 'foot front;' when the latter act was repealed and in the repealing act an assessment was provided for by the 'foot front' in language identical with old section 2264 (101 Ohio Laws 134), the presumption arises that, by so doing, the general assembly intended the assessment so provided for by the 'front foot' should mean the same that it had theretofore been construed to mean by the courts.

"The act of April 22, 1910, (101 Ohio Laws 134), amending section 3812 of the General Code, requires the third method of assessing property for improvements to be made by the 'foot front,' meaning thereby that if a lot abuts lengthwise on the improvement, the lot should be deemed as fronting breadthwise on the improvement and be assessed for the number of feet on the improvement that it would have in such case, and no more."

I am, therefore, of the opinion that the decision of Haviland vs. city of Columbus, 50 Ohio St., 471, is the settled law of Ohio in reference to the method of levying special assessments upon corner lots by the "foot front."

The question asked is how to apportion the cost of the improvement which is not assessable because of the corner lot rule.

This was passed upon in Steiner vs. city of Lima, 8 Nisi Prius, N. S., 509, where it is held:

> "The burden of bearing that portion of the cost of a street improvement not assessable under the law against corner lots rests upon the abutting owners, notwithstanding in the petition for the improvement they only bound themselves to pay an assessment 'by the front foot for the number of feet set opposite their names, less two per cent. and the cost of the intersections of public alleys and that portion of corner lots exempted by law and not signed for in this petition.'"

This case was decided in May, 1909, before the amendment of section 3812, General Code, in 101 Ohio Laws, 134, and before the decision was rendered in Oakland vs. Stoecklein. The decision was affirmed by the circuit court, but was reversed in 82 Ohio St., 447, without report, under authority of Oakland vs. Stoecklein. As the decision of Oakwood vs. Stoecklein has been abrogated by the legislature in the amendatory act of 101 Ohio Laws, 134, the rule of apportioning the unassessable part of the corner lot must be as set forth in Steiner vs. city of Lima, 8 Nisi Prius, N. S., 509, supra.

I am, therefore, of the opinion that the cost of the improvement which cannot be assessed against the corner lot by reason of the corner lot rule in Haviland vs. city of Columbus, may be apportioned against all the property abutting upon said improvement and which is to be assessed therefor.

Respectfully,
TIMOTHY S. HOGAN,
Attorney General.

BOARD OF EDUCATION — BOXWELL GRADUATE — CONTRACT FOR TUITION—NO REQUIREMENT OF NOTICE FROM PUPIL LIVING OUTSIDE OF THREE MILES FROM SCHOOL CONTRACTED WITH WHEN PUPIL SELECTS OTHER SCHOOL.

Under section 7744, General Code, a Boxwell diploma entitles the graduate to enter any high school in the state.

Under section 7747, General Code, boards of education having no high school are required to pay the tuition of Boxwell graduates attending other high schools.

Under section 7750, General Code, a board of education, by entering into a contract for the education of such graduates, may be exempted from paying the tuition of pupils residing within three miles of the school designated in the agreement, when such school is located in the same or some adjoining township. Under the same statute, if no such agreement is made, a pupil selecting his own school is entitled to have his tuition paid only upon his giving notice to the board of education of his residence as therein provided. The terms of such statute, however, do not require such notice of pupils residing outside of three miles of the school designated by a contract agreement made by the board of education.

COLUMBUS, OHIO, March 28, 1913.

HON. ELI H. SPEIDEL, Prosecuting Attorney, Batavia, Ohio.

DEAR SIR:—I herewith acknowledge the receipt of your letter of February 15th, wherein you inquire as follows:

> "Can a Patterson graduate, who lives in a township where no high school is maintained, and who lives more than three miles from a high school located in an adjoining township, which has been selected by his township board to school its Patterson graduates, select a high school of his own choice not located in an adjoining township, and if he can, must he give the written notice required by section 7750 of the General Code before he can compel his school district to pay for his tuition?"

In reply thereto would say that section 7744 of the General Code provides that the diploma granted to a Patterson graduate shall entitle such graduate to enter any high school in the state as follows:

> "The board of county school examiners shall provide for the holding of a county commencement not later than August 15th, at such place as it determines. At this commencement an annual address must be delivered, at the conclusion of which a diploma shall be presented to each successful applicant who has complied with the provisions hereof. Such diploma shall entitle its holder to enter any high school in the state."

Section 7747 of the General Code, provides that the tuition of the pupils holding diplomas and residing in township or special districts in which no high school is maintained, shall be paid by the board of education of the school district in which such pupils have legal residence as follows:

> "The tuition of pupils holding diplomas and residing in townships or special districts, in which no high school is maintained, shall be paid by the board of education of the school district in which they have legal school residence, such tuition to be computed by the month. An attendance any part of the month shall create a liability for the entire month; but a board of education maintaining a high school shall not charge more tuition than it charges for other non-resident pupils."

The board provisions of the above sections are modified and limited by section 7750 of the General Code, which provides that any board of education having no high school, by contracting for the schooling of its high school pupils with one or more boards of education of the same or some adjoining township, may exempt itself from paying the tuition required by section 7747 of the General Code, except as to pupils who live more than three miles from the school designated in such contract, as follows:

"A board of education not having a high school may enter into an agreement with one or more boards of education maintaining such school for the schooling of all its pupils. When such agreement is made the board making it shall be exempt from the payment of tuition at other high schools of pupils living within three miles of the school designated in the agreement, if the school or schools selected by the board are located in the same civil township, as that of the board making it, or some adjoining township. In case no such agreement is entered into, the school to be attended can be selected by the pupil holding a diploma, if due notice in writing is given to the clerk of the board of education of the name of the school to be attended, and the date the attendance is to begin, such notice to be filed not less than five days previous to the beginning of attendance."

It is to be noted that the board of education by entering into such contract is not exempt from paying the tuition of pupils living more than three miles from the high school so designated, who attend some high school other than the one designated in such contract. Inasmuch as the provisions of said section 7750 of the General Code do not apply to pupils living more than three miles from the high school designated, and inasmuch as no limitation seems to be placed upon the provisions of sections 7744 and 7747 of the General Code as regards pupils living more than three miles from a designated high school it follows therefore that such pupils can select and enter any high school in the state by virtue of section 7744, supra, and the tuition of such pupils must be paid by the board of education of the township or special school district in which no high school is maintained in accordance with section 7747, supra.

Section 7750 of the General Code in so far as giving notice in writing of the school to be attended by the pupil, provides in substance that if the board of education not having a high school does not provide a high school for its Patterson graduates, a school which said graduates may attend can be selected by the pupils holding the diplomas provided due notice in writing is given to the clerk of the board of the name of the school to be attended, and the date the attendance is to begin, such notice to be filed not less than five days previous to the beginning of the attendance.

It is my judgment that said notice is required only in case the board of education not having a high school fails to enter into an argeement with one or more boards of education maintaining such high school for the schooling of its high school pupils. You state, however, that in this instance the township board of education where no high school is maintained has selected a high school for its high school pupils in accordance with section 7750 of the General Code.

It follows, therefore, that the said Patterson graduate need not give the written notice required by section 7750 of the General Code before he can compel his school district to pay for his tuition.

Yours very truly,
TIMOTHY S. HOGAN,
Attorney General.

ROADS AND HIGHWAYS—POWER OF STATE HIGHWAY COMMISSIONER TO PERMIT MODIFICATION OF CONTRACT WITHOUT RESUBMISSION OF ADVERTISEMENT AND BIDS, WHEN LOCATION OF ROAD IMPROVEMENT IS CHANGED BY VIRTUE OF AN UNFORESEEN RAILROAD CONSTRUCTION.

When the state highway commissioner has entered into a contract by compliance with all statutory provisions and a change in the location of the road improvement is made necessary by a railroad construction, the railroad furnishing bond of indemnity for additional costs, by reason of such change and the contractor consenting thereto, the state highway commissioner may permit such departure from the original terms of the contract as is made necessary by such change, without re-advertising and re-letting of bids.

COLUMBUS, OHIO, April 22, 1913.

HON. A. M. HENDERSON, Prosecuting Attorney, Youngstown, Ohio.

DEAR SIR:—I am in receipt of your letter of April 22nd, wherein you state:

> "Sometime during the summer of 1912, a contract was let by the state highway department for the paving and curbing of a road in Mahoning county, Ohio, over a distance of about sixty-four hundred (6400) feet; the contractors proceeded in the performance of their work and improved this road for a distance of about twenty-two hundred (2200) feet when they were stopped by order of the state highway commissioner. This order was made necessary by reason of the fact that a new railroad was being constucted parellel to the highway in question, rendering necessary the shifting of about thirty-five hundred (3500) feet of this road southerly of about the width of itself. The contractors thereupon refused to carry out the contract over the proposed new portion of the road. A petition was filed by the railroad company under section 6895 of the General Code, asking that a change of the road be turned over this portion of about thirty-five hundred feet; the differences between the railroad company and the contractors have been adjusted, and the contractors stand ready and willing to pave the new portion of said road and the commissioners stand ready to grant said new portion and vacate the portion of the old road rendered unnecessary by the establishing of the new portion. The state highway commissioner approves the arrangement as agreed upon by the railroad company and the county commissioners if the same can lawfully be done. The contractors are to furnish a new construction bond covering the change, and the railroad company is to furnish a five year maintenance bond. Insofar as the expense of the improvement to the state is concerned nothing will be added by reason of this change. The railroad company bearing any and all additional expenses and this is covered by a contract entered into between the railroad company and the contractors," and submit for my opinion the following question:

> "Can the state highway commissioner notify the contractors that their contract is modified in the respect that they are to make the improvements over the changed portion of the road instead of over the old portion of the road, the contractors, of course, accepting in writing, the order of the state highway commissioner directing such modification, or will it be necessary to re-advertise and re-let that portion of the improvement over the changed portion?"

In view of the fact that the contract made by the state highway commissioner with the contractors has been duly let and that only by reason of the fact that part of the road in question had to be moved because of the building of a railroad the improving of the new portion of said road could well be considered simply as a modification of the contract, and since the expense of the improvement to the state is not increased by reason of improving the road over the new portion instead of over the old portion, I am of the opinion that the state highway commissioner can notify the contractors for the road that their contract is modified in the respect that they are to make the improvement over the changed portion instead of over the old portion and that it will not be necessary to re-advertise and re-let that portion of the improvement, and furthermore, that the money now in the hands of the state highway commissioner retained by him and based on estimates heretofore furnished by the contractors should be paid to the contractors in the same manner as if the portion of the road had not been changed since the signing of the contract.

You will, of course, see to it that all the necessary legal proceedings in reference to bonds, agreements, etc., to lawfully carry out this change are made.

Very truly yours,
TIMOTHY S. HOGAN,
Attorney General.

TAXES AND TAXATION—LAW PROVIDING FOR WORKING OUT OF TAX ASSESSMENT ON PROPERTY FOR ROAD PURPOSES, NOT UNCONSTITUTIONAL.

Section 7488, General Code, which provides for a levy not exceeding one mill on each dollar of the valuation of the taxable property of the township for road purposes, which may be worked out by the taxpayer, the same being a tax upon the property and not levied by the poll, and not requiring the services, but merely permitting when in lieu of the money payment, is not in conflict with article 3, section 1 of the constitution, providing that no poll tax may be levied or services required which may be collected in money or other thing of value. Under section 5649-3a, taxes for this purpose are excluded from the two mill township limitation of Smith one per cent. law.

COLUMBUS, OHIO, April 22, 1913.

HON. THOMAS L. POGUE, Prosecuting Attorney, Cincinnati, Ohio.

DEAR SIR:—I acknowledge receipt of your letter of March 18th, from Hon. C. A. Groom, assistant prosecuting attorney, respecting the constitutionality of section 7488 of the General Code, upon which my opinion is asked. This section provides as follows:

"In addition to such levy the township trustees, at any time, if they deem necessary, may levy an amount not exceeding one mill, upon each dollar of valuation of the taxable property of the respective townships, for road purposes, which may be worked out at the rates other work is paid for, of a similar nature. Said amount so levied shall be certified to the township clerks as provided for by section seventy-four hundred and eighty-five."

Section 1 of Article XII of the Constitution, as recently amended, provides:

> "No poll tax shall ever be levied in this state, or service required, which may be commuted in money or other thing of value."

In my opinion the section above quoted is not in conflict with the constitutional provision referred to. The tax is a property tax not levied by the poll but according to the valuation of property. The service which the section contemplates is not a required one—it is the money, i. e. the taxes, which are required; and this is done through the exercise of the general taxing power of the state, in a way which is consistent with all of the provisions of the articles of the constitution which refer to taxation. The service is optional. This option is for the benefit of the taxpayers. A provision like this is not merely the reverse of one like that which is found in the old road labor statutes of this state, at which the constitutional provision is palpably aimed. Those statutes required the service of male citizens as such, and permitted the commutation of such service in money. This section requires nothing of citizens as such—it does not even apply to citizens, but does apply to owners of property taxable within the township. I do not believe that the constitutional provision can be used to declare invalid any tax levied upon the duplicate of a taxing district in the regular way, even though the tax be payable in service. I know of no provision of the constitution in any way restraining the legislature from making any commodity, service or thing other than money, receivable in payment of taxes.

Perhaps a more serious difficulty is suggested by the question as to how "the rates other work is paid for of a similar nature" are now to be ascertained, inasmuch as the general road labor statutes must now be regarded as unconstitutional. This question was not asked in Mr. Groom's letter, however, and I do not pass upon it.

Mr. Groom does ask another question which I have so far not touched upon, however. He inquires whether or not the tax authorized by the section above cited is within the limitations of the Smith One Per Cent. law, so-called. I find what seems to me to be a clear answer to his question in the Smith law itself, and particularly in section 5649-3a thereof, which provides in part as follows:

> "Such (interior) limits for * * * township * * * levies shall be exclusive of * * * levies for road taxes that may be worked out by the taxpayers * * * over which the budget commissioners shall have no control."

It is my opinion that this express mention of taxes of this sort has the effect of excluding such levies from the two mill limitation of the entire act, but from none of the other limitations thereof. That is to say, such levies are within the ten mill limitation, the 1910 tax limitation and the fifteen mill limitation of the law. The budget commissioners have no control over such levies; that is to say, they may not reduce the amounts certified or estimated for such purposes. In short, it may perhaps clarify the situation to observe that levies of this sort are to be treated, for the purposes of the budget commission, in precisely the same manner as the state levies are treated.

Very truly yours,
TIMOTHY S. HOGAN,
Attorney General.

COUNTY COMMISSIONERS AND SHERIFF—EXPENSES, TRAVELING.

Section 6563-44, General Code, providing for actual expenses to the county commissioners when performing the duties herein prescribed and section 2997, General Code, providing for allowance to the sheriff of his actual and necessary expenses, authorize the payment of these officials for transportation, lodging and meals when engaged in the duties prescribed.

COLUMBUS, OHIO, April 24, 1913.

HON. THEO. H. TANGEMAN, Prosecuting Attorney, Wapakoneta, Ohio.

DEAR SIR:—Your favor of March 21st received. You inquire whether the members of the board of county commissioners, under favor of section 6563-44 of the General Code, may be paid the amount actually expended by them for transportation, lodging and meals.

Section 6563-44, General Code, insofar as it relates to this matter, provides as follows:

> "shall receive the sum of $3.00 a day and their actual expenses while employed under this bill."

The bureau of public accounting has held that the commissioners, while employed under section 6563-44, General Code, are entitled to a per diem of three dollars per day, and their transportation, lodging and meals; and I concur in their holding. This department has uniformly held, under all statutes providing for salary and expenses, that the expenses include transportation, lodging and meals.

I am therefore of the opinion that county commissioners, under favor of section 6563-44, General Code, may be paid the amount actually expended by them for transportation, lodging and meals, while employed under such section.

You also inquire as to the authority of the sheriff to charge for meals and lodging when engaged in pursuing persons accused of crimes.

Section 2997, General Code, provides in part:

> "In addition to the compensation and salary herein provided, the county commissioners shall make allowances quarterly to each sheriff * * * for his actual and necessary expenses incurred and expended in pursuing or transporting persons accused or convicted of crimes and offenses."

I am of the opinion, under favor of this section, that the sheriff has a right to charge for his meals and lodging when engaged in pursuing persons accused of crimes, as the statute expressly authorizes that he may be allowed for his actual and necessary expenses incurred and expended in transporting persons accused or convicted of crimes and offenses.

Very truly yours,
TIMOTHY S. HOGAN,
Attorney General.

TOWNSHIP TRUSTEES MAY NOT CONDEMN STONE QUARRY FOR PURPOSE OF ENGAGING IN STONE BUSINESS.

The terms of section 8283, General Code, would not justify township trustees in condemning an unused stone quarry for the purpose of producing stone therefrom and selling the same to other townships and the public at large.

COLUMBUS, OHIO, March 28, 1913.

HON. CLARK GOOD, Prosecuting Attorney, Van Wert, Ohio.

DEAR SIR:—I have your letter of March 12th, in which you request my opinion on the following:

> "There is located in Ridge township a stone quarry that is not being used. Have the township trustees a right under the provisions of section 3283 G. C. to condemn the said quarry, and place a man in charge who will equip it with necessary machinery and operate it, and this man will then sell the stone to the township at a reasonable price, and also sell stone to other townships and the public at large at the same price; the price at which the stone shall be sold to be the cost of placing same upon the market and a small profit?"

Section 3283 of the General Code provides:

> "When the trustees are unable to purchase of, or contract upon fair and equitable terms with, the owner of a gravel bank, gravel bed, other deposit of gravel, or of any stone, timber, or other material, in the judgment of the trustees necessary for the construction or repair of any road, improved road or highway within the township, or in case the owner refuses to sell or contract with the trustees, for the sale of such material, upon the trustees agreeing to allow a just and reasonable compensation therefor, they may condemn for public use such material, in such quantities as, in their judgment, the public needs require, allowing the owner thereof a just and equitable compensation. Such authority to contract, sell, agree and condemn shall extend to all townships within the county in which such trustees are elected or appointed in pursuance of law, or within any township of any adjoining county."

The powers of township trustees under the foregoing statute extend no further than to permit them to condemn for public use "a gravel bank, gravel bed, other deposit of gravel, or of any stone, etc.," when in the judgment of the trustees such material is necessary for the construction or repair of any road, etc., within the township. This power to condemn can be exercised only when they are "unable to purchase of, or contract upon fair and equitable terms with, the owner" of such material, "or in case the owner refuses to sell or contract with the trustees for the sale of such material.

The acts enumerated in your question would amount to engaging in the stone business, and this the trustees are not permitted to do under favor of said section 3282.

Yours very truly,
TIMOTHY S. HOGAN,
Attorney General

ARMORY—MUNICIPAL CORPORATION MAY NOT PURCHASE CHAIRS FOR AND EQUIP.

Section 3631, General Code, and section 3939, General Code, provide only for the purchase of real estate and the issuing of bonds therefor, by a municipal corporation for the purpose of erecting an armory upon the same, and such sections cannot be construed to empower a corporation to build an armory thereon, nor to equip or purchase chairs for the same.

COLUMBUS, OHIO, March 22, 1913.

HON. HUGH R. GILMORE, Prosecuting Attorney, Eaton, Ohio.

DEAR SIR:—Under date of March 8th, you request my opinion as follows:

> "Can the municipality purchase chairs to equip an armory built by the state, on a site donated by popular subscription of such municipality?
> "You will notice by section 1 of that section (3939) the council may purchase real estate upon which to build an armory.
> "By section 2 council may equip a building authorized by said section, and 'for securing a more complete enjoyment of * * improvement.'"

Section 3939, General Code, sub-divisions one and two, which you cite, are as follows:

> "When it deems it necessary, the council of a municipal corporation, by an affirmative vote of not less than two-thirds of the members elected or appointed thereto, by resolution or ordinance, may issue and sell bonds in such amounts and denominations for such period of time, at such rate of interest, not exceeding six per cent., and in the manner as provided by law, for any of the following specific purposes:
> "1. For procuring the real estate and right of way for an improvement authorized by this section, or for purchasing real estate with a building or buildings thereon, to be used for public purposes, or to be donated to the state of Ohio by deed in fee simple as a site for the erection of an armory.
> "2. For extending, enlarging, improving, repairing or securing a more complete enjoyment of a building or improvement authorized by this section, and for equipping and furnishing it."

In your request you speak of this section as conferring upon the municipality the power to purchase real estate, upon which to build any armory. This section, however, simply authorizes the issuing of bonds for that purpose. The general statute containing the power, is section 3631, General Code, which section is as follows:

> "To hold and improve public grounds, parks, park entrances, free recreation centers and boulevards, and to protect and preserve them. To acquire by purchase, lease, or lease with privilege of purchase, gift, devise, condemnation or otherwise and to hold real estate or any interest therein and other property for the use of the corporation and to sell or lease it, or to donate the same by deed in fee simple to the state of Ohio as a site for the erection of an armory."

Statutes conferring powers upon municipal corporations must be strictly construed against the existence of the power, and inasmuch as in these statutes, expression is made of the purpose of purchasing real estate to be donated "to the state of Ohio by deed in fee simple as a site for the erection of an armory," I am of the opinion that these provisions cannot be construed to do more than to authorize the purchase of the real estate itself. They can in no sense be said to extend the power, either of erecting an armory or of equipping and furnishing it.

The provision in subdivision 2, section 3939, General Code, extending power to issue bonds for equipping and furnishing a building, relates only to buildings authorized by this section, and I am of the opinion, for the reason aforesaid, that an armory is not such a building as is authorized by this section.

Very truly yours,
TIMOTHY S. HOGAN,
Attorney General.

POWER OF COUNTY COMMISSIONERS TO REFUND TAXES ERRONEOUSLY ASSESSED AGAINST A RAILROAD BY RETURNING A PORTION OF TRACK WHICH WAS SITUATED IN A TOWNSHIP AS BEING SITUATED IN A MUNICIPAL CORPORATION—LIMITATION TO TAX WITHIN FIVE YEARS OF DISCOVERY OF MISTAKE.

Under section 2588, General Code, a county auditor is empowered to correct clerical errors discovered in the tax list and duplicate, as to description of lands or as to amount of taxes or assessments. When a portion of railroad track, therefore, has been returned as being situated in a municipal corporation, when in reality the same was situated in a township, such a mistake constitutes an error in the description of the lands and the amount of the taxes as contemplated by section 2588, General Code. As the mistake was a mutual mistake of taxes between the taxing authorities and the taxpayer, the fact that payment was voluntarily made does not preclude recovery.

Under the statutes, in compliance with which the assessments in this case were made, the investigation and the assessment was to be made by the board of auditors and not by the railroad company. The latter merely furnishing such information as may be required by the assessing board. There was no element of intentional or successful misrepresentation or culpable negligence, thereby inducing a wrong belief on the part of the taxing authorities, and the doctrine of estoppel, therefore, cannot be applied against the railroad company.

Under sections 2589 and 2590, General Code, refunds may be allowed by the county commissioners for taxes paid by mistake, such as the auditor is permitted to collect under the statutes aforesaid. Such refunds, however, are limited to taxes erroneously collected in the five years next prior to the discovery thereof by the auditor. Taxes paid more than five years prior to such discovery thereof may not be refunded by authority of these statutes.

COLUMBUS, OHIO, April 24, 1913.

HON. W. V. WRIGHT, Prosecuting Attorney, New Philadelphia, Ohio.

DEAR SIR:—I beg to acknowledge receipt of your letter of March 1st, in which you request my opinion upon the following statement of facts:

> "Taxes for the years 1905, 1906 and 1907 were erroneously assessed upon the duplicate of Tuscarawas county against a certain railroad in the following particular: A portion of the main track of the railroad company was returned by the company to the appraising board as being situated in a certain municipal corporation, whereas, as a matter of fact, this portion of the main track was situated in a township.

"The error is perfectly apparent, I take it, and can be discovered by comparing the returns for these three years with the returns for other years made by the same railroad company.

"The aggregate rate of taxes in the municipal corporation during these years was greater than the rate in the township; so that, if the error can be corrected, a further question arises as to the possibility of a refunder for the taxes already paid."

I thank you for your memorandum of authorities, submitted with reference to this question. These authorities have been of material assistance to me in reaching my conclusion, which is based upon them.

The section of the General Code requiring interpretation in this connection is section 2588. It is as follows:

"From time to time the county auditor shall correct all errors which he discovers in the tax list and duplicate, either in the name of the person charged with taxes or assessments, the description of lands or other property or when property exempt from taxation has been charged with tax, or in the amount of such taxes or assessment. If the correction is made after the duplicate is delivered to the treasurer, it shall be made on the margin of such list and duplicate without changing any name, description or figure in the duplicate as delivered, or in the original tax list, which shall always correspond exactly with each other."

This section (excepting the phrase "when property exempt from taxation has been charged with tax") has been uniformly construed as applying to the correction of errors which are clerical merely as opposed to fundamental errors or errors of judgment on the part of the taxing authorities. State vs. Commissioners, 31 O. S. 271; Humphries vs. Safe Deposit Company, 29 O. S. 608.

An error is "clerical" within the meaning of this rule when it occurs in the course of the performance of a ministerial act, or when it relates to a matter other than the valuation of property as such, i. e., to a matter as to which some taxing officer has discretionary power.

The error apparent in the case submitted by you is one which might be regarded as either in "the description of lands or other property," or "in the amount of such taxes." It is clearly an error in description, because the location of property with respect to the taxing district in which it is located is an essential part of the tax description of the property. It is an error in the amount of taxes, because if the plant were properly described the amount of the tax would have been less than it was. I am, therefore, of the opinion that the error described by you is one which might lawfully be corrected under section 2588, General Code.

Your letter raises the question as to whether or not the circumstances of the occurrence of this error are such as to take it out of the operation of the statute. That is, it is suggested that the corporation itself was responsible for the return and that the auditor (or board of auditors) was in no wise responsible therefor; and that the taxes have been paid without question for the years involved; so that, it is claimed that the payment was voluntary and that the railroad company is estopped from claiming the benefit of the statute.

Considering, first, the question as to whether or not the payment is a voluntary one, I beg to advise that on careful consideration of this question I am of the opinion that the question of voluntary payment does not enter into this case. It is a well established rule of law that a payment voluntarily made under mistake of law may not be recovered; and this principle has been applied to the interpretation of these statutes. (Commissioners vs. Rosche Bros., 50 O. S. 103). However, this principle cannot be applied to the facts submitted by you because the mistake was not a mistake of law. There was undoubtedly a mutual mistake of fact—an oversight on the part of the taxing authorities and the railroad company, and not an erroneous application of the law by either party. That being the case, I think this feature of the question may be dismissed.

The question of estoppel is a more serious one. The statutes under which these assessments are made are not at present in force. Reference to the revised statutes must be made in order to ascertain their purport. The sections are sections 2770 et seq., Bates' revised statutes. Under these provisions the respective county auditors of the several counties in the state in which any railroad company had its track and roadway, or any part thereof, were constituted a board for the appraisement and assessment of the entire property of the railroad company. These auditors were required to meet at the place where the railroad had its principal office and "proceed to ascertain all the personal property, which shall be held to include road bed * * * and * * * other realty * * * necessary to the daily running operations of the road, moneys and credits of such company," etc. These boards were given power "to require from the president * * * and principal accounting officer of such road a detailed statement, under oath, of all the items and particulars constituting such property, moneys and credits, and the value thereof, 'and' to examine the books and papers of such road * * * touching any matter relating to the same." Having reached a conclusion as to the aggregate value of the property, moneys and credits, the board was to apportion the same among the counties in which the road ran, and among the taxing districts in such manner as to "equalize the relative value of the real estate, structures and stationary personal property * * * therein, in proportion to the whole value of the real estate, structures and stationary personal property of such railroad company in this state; and so that the rolling stock, main track, road bed, supplies, moneys and credits of such company shall be apportioned in the same proportion that the length of such road in such county bears to the entire length thereof in all said counties or county, and to each city, village and district, or any part thereof therein." Special provision was made for branch roads (which I take the particular road inquired about is, from the facts stated by you), but the procedure was not essentially different.

Now, it will be observed that the primary investigation, and, in short, the assessment was to be made by the assessing board or the auditor, as the case may be, and not by the railroad company. The company made no return in the technical sense; it merely furnished such information as might be required by the assessing board. Therefore, whatever may be the law respecting the effect of an erroneous return made by a taxpayer upon his right subsequently to ask for a correction and refund on account of the error which he himself has created, such a principle, even when ascertained could have no application to this case. In order to work an estoppel the party guilty of the misrepresentation must intentionally or through culpable negligence induce his adversary to believe in the existence of certain facts, and the adversary must rely and act upon that belief in such manner as to be prejudiced if a denial of the existence of the facts is permitted.

In this case it is quite evident that the mistake was an innocent one on the part of the railroad company, if its sworn statement contained the foundation for the error. This is true because the motive to make a false statement would scarcely have induced a statement which would result in liability for a greater amount of taxes. On the other hand, the adversary party had no right to rely upon this statement exclusively. It—that is, the board of auditors or county auditor—should have exercised ordinary diligence to ascertain the exact facts respecting the matter concerning which the mistake occurred. These facts, in the particular case, were just as accessible to him, through examination of previous duplicates and the like, as they were to the railroad company itself. In fact, if the railroad company made the mistake, and the auditor, recognizing the mistake, nevertheless placed the property upon the duplicate as it was placed, upon the theory that if the railroad company was injured it had itself been responsible for its own injury, he was guilty of a culpable act, although not one which would subject him to any technical liability.

Having regard to the machinery of taxation under the statutes in force at the time this assessment was made, and to the general rule respecting estoppel by misrepresentation, I am of the opinion that no such estoppel against the railroad company may be said to have been raised by the facts mentioned by you.

For all the foregoing reasons, I am of the opinion that the error of which you speak is such an error as may be corrected by the auditor under section 2588. By virtue of section 2589, then, such an error may be corrected for previous years as well as upon a current duplicate. That section provides in part:

> "If at any time the auditor discovers that erroneous taxes or assessments have been charged and collected in previous years, he shall call the attention of the county commissioners thereto at a regular or special session of the board. If the commissioners find that taxes or assessments have been so erroneously charged or collected, they shall order the auditor to draw his warrant on the county treasurer in favor of the person paying them for the full amount of the taxes or assessments so erroneously charged and collected."

This section must be read in connection with the preceding section, and by so doing the true meaning of the word "erroneous" as used in section 2589 is ascertained. I am of the opinion that so far as section 2589 is concerned, it is the duty of the county auditor, when his attention is directed to the occurrence of an error, such as that described by you, in a previous year or years, to call the same to the attention of the county commissioners; and that if the county commissioners find that the error has occurred it is their duty to order a refund in the principal amount.

But the question as to whether or not a refunder may be ordered in the case you submit is not finally answered by the conclusions which I have already reached. I call your attention to the provisions of section 2590 of the General Code, which must again be read in connection section 2589. It provides in part:

> "No taxes * * * shall be so refunded except as have been so erroneously charged or collected in the five years next prior to the discovery thereof by the auditor."

Under the facts as submitted by you, the auditor "discovered," i. e., had his attention called to these errors on December 15, 1911. Section 2590 is somewhat ambiguous, in that it uses the phrase "charged or collected." It is, of course, true that taxes are not both charged and collected in the same year necessarily; the charge is made prior to the first of October in one year; the first half of the collection is made in December of the same year and the last half thereof in June of the next year. I am disposed to believe that under the peculiar phraseology of the section, if the taxes have actually been collected, then, the five years runs from the time when the collection took place.

You state the taxes are "taxes paid for the years 1905, 1906 and 1907." The technical meaning of the phrase "taxes for the year, etc.," is that which refers to the tax levied in the previous year for the needs and expenditures of the year designated; that is, the taxes for the year 1913 were levied in the year 1912. But this technical meaning is so often disregarded and the opposite meaning—i. e. that which implies that the designated year is the year in which the levy and charge are both made—taken, that it is not safe to lay down any general rule. I therefore call your attention to the possibility of confusion and ask you to ascertain just when the last collection of the taxes complained of was made. It is clear that section 2590, above quoted, precludes the refunder of all the taxes referred to in your letter. Those "for the year 1905," if regularly paid, would, under either interpretation of that phrase, have been paid prior to December 15, 1906, the date when the 1905 year period preceding December 15, 1911, began to run. On the other hand, the taxes "for the year 1906," under one interpretation of that phrase, might have been paid either in full or as to the first half before December 15, 1906; therefore, the necessity for ascertaining the exact facts arises.

My conclusion is that such of the taxes complained of as were paid more than five years prior to December 15, 1911, cannot be refunded; but that it is the duty of the auditor and the commissioners, acting as they are required to act by the provisions quoted, to cause the refunder of taxes paid by the railroad company within the five year period under the mistake described by you.

Very truly yours,
TIMOTHY S. HOGAN,
Attorney General.

COUNTY COMMISSIONERS—POWER TO ISSUE BONDS FOR PURPOSE OF BUILDING OR ENLARGING COUNTY CHILDREN'S HOME—PUBLICATION AND CIRCULATION OF HAND BILL UNNECESSARY.

Under the doctrine of ejusdem generis, the words "or other necessary buildings," as employed in section 2434, General Code, authorizes the issuance of bonds for county buildings of any nature whatever, and therefore, said authority extends to county children's homes.

The power extended by said statute for issuing bonds for the purpose of enlarging buildings, also extends to the county children's home.

Under the authority of State ex rel. vs. Auditor, 43 O. S. 311, the erection of a county children's home is not governed by the requirements of section 3044, General Code, with reference to publication. Inasmuch as section 2434, General Code, does not authorize contract for the purpose of enlarging county children's homes, such authorization must be found in the provisions relating to the original erection of such home, to-wit: section 7039.

Inasmuch as this later section does not require publication and the issuance of hand bills, the same are unnecessary in a contract for the enlarging of such home.

COLUMBUS, OHIO, April 22, 1913.

HON. ROBERT C. PATTERSON, Prosecuting Attorney, Dayton, Ohio.

DEAR SIR:—I beg to acknowledge receipt of your letter of March 19th, submitting for my opinion thereon the following questions:

"1. May the county commisioners issue bonds under section 2434, General Code, for the purpose of enlarging the children's home building?

"2. Must the county commissioners, before erecting such an enlargement or addition, publish and circulate hand-bills and publish notice of their intention to do so as required generally by section 2444, General Code, assuming the cost thereof to exceed $1,000.00:

"3. If the notice must be given as required in section 2444, should such notice be published prior to the issuance of bonds:

Section 2434, General Code, in its present form, reads in part as follows:

> "For the execution of the objects stated in the preceding section, or for the purpose of erecting or acquiring a building in memory of Ohio soldiers, or for a court house, county offices, jail, county infirmary, detention home, or additional land for an infirmary or county children's home or other necessary buildings or bridges, or for the purpose of enlarging, repairing, improving, or rebuilding thereof, or for the relief or support of the poor, the commissioners may borrow such sum or sums of money as they deem necessary, at a rate of interest not to exceed six per cent. per annum, and issue the bonds of the county to secure the payment of the principal and interest thereof."

I think the first question to be encountered arises out of the grammatical construction of the section. On its face, the statute is quite ambiguous because it is not clear whether the phrase "county children's home" follows or is modified by the preposition "for," or whether, on the other hand, it is to be read in connection with the principal nouns following the main verb, i. e., "court house," "county office," "jail," "county infirmary" and "detention home." If the former is true, then the express and specific authority with reference to county children's home is confined to the purchase of land for this purpose. If the alternative construction be given to the section in this particular, then the question is answered without further discussion.

In my opinion this particular question must be answered by choosing the first of the two alternative constructions. That is to say, I am of the opinion that the phrase "county children's home" follows the preposition "for," so that the whole phrase is, "land for a county children's home."

I reach this conclusion by considering the meaning of section 2434, as codified prior to its amendment in 102 O. L. 54. That section read as follows:

> "For the execution of the objects stated in the preceding section, or for the purpose of erecting or acquiring a building in memory of Ohio soldiers, or for a court house, county offices, jail, county infirmary, or other necessary buildings, or bridge, or for the purpose of enlarging, repairing, improving or rebuilding thereof, or for the relief or support of the poor, the commissioners may borrow such sum or sums of money as they deem necessary, at rate of interest not to exceed six per cent. per annum, and issue the bonds of the county to secure the payment of the principal and interest thereof."

It will be observed by comparing the original section with the amended section that the only change in this part of it consists in the insertion of the words "additional land for an infirmary or county children's home." Therefore, it will be presumed that the mind of the legislature which made this amendment was directed to the single proposition of acquiring land.

On the other hand, the conclusion that the phrase "county children's home" follows the preposition "for" next preceding, does not of itself lead to the conclusion that the section does not confer authority to borrow money for the purpose of erecting a county children's home or an addition thereto. In order to reach such a conclusion it becomes necessary to hold also that the phrase "or other necessary buildings" which immediately follows the phrase just under discussion, is also subject to the modifying effect of the next preceding "for." Such a construction is perhaps gramatically correct under the peculiar language of the present section 2434; but such was certainly not the case under original section 2434, wherein this particular phrase was co-ordinate, so to speak, with the enumeration of other buildings for which money might be borrowed, i. e., "court house, county offices, jail and county infirmary." The question then is as to whether or not the legislature in inserting the phrase "or additional land for an infirmary or county children's home" intended to modify or change the meaning and gramatical construction of the succeeding phrase "or other necessary buildings."

Upon careful consideration I have come to the conclusion that the legislature did not intend any such thing. It is true that the general assembly's choice of the position of the inserted phrase was unfortunate, and that in order to make the matter entirely clear, it would have been better to insert the phrase "or additional land for an infirmary or county children's home" later in the section. Consideration of the fact that the same phrase, however, was inserted in section 2433, and regarded for the effect of all the amendments made to the statutes as a whole, leads me to the conclusion that all the legislature sought to do in amending section 2434 was to confer power to borrow money for additional land for infirmary or children't home purposes; not to confer power to acquire additional land in connection with any other class of county buildings than infirmaries or children's homes, and not to limit the meaning of the phrase, "other necessary buildings" beyond what it meant in the statute as it was phrased before the amendment.

This conclusion is strengthened by the consideration of the fact that the word "or" is repeated both before and after the phrase "county children's home." If it had been intended that the phrase "other necessary buildings" should be co-ordinate, so to speak, with the phrase "county children's home" then, instead of the first "or" it would have been proper to use a comma.

Again, the significance of the word "bridges" must be taken into consideration. Under the original section money might be borrowed for the purpose of erecting a bridge, giving to the amended section the alternative meaning which I have rejected this would limit the present borrowing power of the commissioners to the acquisition of land for bridges which could not have been the legislative intent.

I am, therefore, of the opinion that the phrase, "or other necessary buildings" is co-ordinate with the enumeration of buildings for the erection of which money may be borrowed, viz., "court house," "county offices," "jails," "county infirmaries and "detention homes."

Some meaning must be given to the phrase "other necessary buildings." This term means and includes buildings other than court houses, county offices, jails, county infirmaries or detention homes. The use of the word "other" in such a context is limited, of course, by the application of the rule ejusden generis. So that it means things of the kind or class indicated by the preceding enumeration. The only single class of buildings which will include all the enumerated buildings above mentioned is the class of county buildings. That is to say, there is no kind or character of buildings which the county is authorized to acquire and maintain which is indicated by the enumerated buildings.

County buildings, in general, might ordinarily be divided into two classes, viz, those which the county commissioners, as such, are authorized originally to construct and to maintain, and those, the administration and maintenance of which are in the hands of some other county authority. At the time this statute was enacted, the court house and county offices were to be built by and controlled and maintained by the county commissioners; the jail was to be built by the county commissioners and controlled and maintained by the sheriff; the county infirmary was to be built by the county commissioners and controlled and maintained by the infirmary directors; the detention home was to be built by the county commissioners and controlled and maintained by the juvenile court. So that the only attribute which all of these buildings have in common is that they are to be built originally under the supervision of the county commissioners; this is tantamount to saying that they are county buildings as, of course, all county buildings of whatsoever kind are originally constructed through the agency of the county commissioners. The phrase "other necessary buildings" then, means, other necessary county buildings.

Then it must necessarily include a county children's home unless it be inferred that such was not the intention because of the express mention of land for county children's home, and the failure to mention county children's home in the other connection. That such an inference is possible cannot be disputed. The argument here could be stated as follows: The general assembly having the entire subject matter before it saw fit expressly to mention the county children's home in connection with the acquisition of land for its purpose; having expressly mentioned the institution once, it must be assumed that failure to mention it again in another connection is indicative of an intention that it should not be embraced within the general phrase.

Persuasive as such an argument is, I am not disposed to yield my assent to its correctness. The obvious reason for a contrary conclusion is found in the legislative history already outlined. It was the purpose of the legislature in 1911, in amending this section, to add to and not subtract from the powers of the county commissioners, and one of the added powers was the acquisition of additional land for county children's home purposes. It cannot, therefore, be supposed that in adding this power the general assembly intended to subtract from the power, which upon the proper construction of section 2434 in its original form, the commissioners already had to borrow money for the purpose of erecting or acquiring a children's home building as an "other necessary building."

Inasmuch as the phrase "for the purpose of enlarging * * * thereof" must be held to refer to the buildings already mentioned, it follows that it being established that under section 2434 the commissioners have power to borrow money for the purpose of erecting a children's home, they have power also to borrow money for the purpose of enlarging a children's home.

Your first question, therefore must be answered in the affirmative.

Section 2444, of the General Code, mentioned in your second question is as follows:

> "Before the county commissioners purchase lands, or erect a building or bridge, the expense of which exceeds one thousand dollars, they shall publish and circulate handbills, and publish in one or more newspapers of the county, notice of their intention to make such purchase, erect such building or bridge, and the location thereof, for at least four consecutive weeks prior to the time that such purchase, building, or location is made. They shall hear all petitions for, and remonstrances against such proposed purchase, location or improvement."

The question which you ask, has it seems to me been rather conclusively answered by the supreme court in the case of State ex rel. vs. Auditor, 43 O. S. 311. It is pointed out in the decision that original section 877 Revised Statutes, which has become section 2444 of the General Code, was a part of the act providing the procedure for the erection of court houses, jails and county infirmaries, but that the procedure for the purchase of a site and the erection thereon of a county children's home was in an entirely different and separate act, citing the leading case of Allen vs. Russell, 39 O. S. 336, the court per Okey, J., holds that the true meaning of the otherwise ambiguous codification of 1880 was to be ascertained by reference to the pre-existing law.

Upon this theory the conclusion is reached that what is now section 2444 does not apply to proceedings for the construction of a children's home.

Now, in my opinion, the authority to enlarge a children's home is referable to the authority to originally construct the same. This authority is found in section 3078, General Code, and is in the form of general authority for the "purchase of a suitable site and the erection of the necessary buildings."

Section 2434 of itself does not authorize contracts to be entered into; it merely authorizes money to be borrowed. Therefore, it is obvious that the authority to enter into the contracts and actually to make the improvement must be found elsewhere. Inasmuch as the authority to make the improvement is found in the chapter relating to children's home, as such, and inasmuch as proceedings under that chapter have been held not to be subject to the requirements of section 2444, I am of the opinion that the commissioners, before proceeding to erect an addition to the children's home building, need not comply with the requirements of section 2444.

In this connection I might observe that consideration of the decision of State ex rel. vs. Commissioners, supra, might seem to create some doubt to the correctness of my conclusion with respect to your first question. That is to say, the children's home statutes, and in particular, section 3079 thereof, original Revised Statutes, section 929, authorize the borrowing of money in anticipation of the collection of taxes levied or to be levied for the purchase of a suitable site and the erection of necessary buildings. This is a special provision for children's homes, and at first blush it might seem that this special provision must govern to the exclusion of the general provision found in section 2434, so as, in effect, to take children's homes out of the general term "other necessary buildings" as found in the last named section.

On careful consideration, however, I have rejected this view. In the first place it is possibly true that original section 3079 (section 929, R. S., then) constituted the only authority for borrowing money for the purposes therein mentioned. At that time section 2434, General Code, did not contain the language "or other necessary buildings" or (to be more accurate) "any necessary buildings," section 93 O. L., 372, when this phrase was inserted in the section.

I have already given my reasons for holding that the phrase "other necessary buildings" as found in section 2434 cannot be given any reasonable interpretation which will exclude children's home buildings.

Now the borrowing power which may be exerted under section 2434 is essentially different from that which may be exerted under section 3079. The former power is one, the execution of which may precede the making of a levy; the latter power must follow the levy and must be limited to the anticipation of the proceedings in such a levy. The former power is general and continuing. The latter might be a strict construction and be limited to the original establishment of the children's home.

Having regard to all these facts and to the legislative history involved, I am of the opinion that even if it be held that section 3079, General Code, confers continuing power upon county commissioners not exhausted at the time of the original establishment of the children's home (a question which I do not find it necessary to pass upon) the power to borrow money for children's home purposes under section 2434 is cumulative thereof.

Therefore, I re-affirm my already expressed conclusion respecting your first question, and in answer to your second question am of the opinion that the commissioners are not bound by section 2444, General Code, in proceeding to enlarge a county children's home building.

This answer to your second question renders unnecessary an answer to your third question. I might state, however, for your information, that it seems to have been held in Franklin vs. Baird, 7 N. P., 571, that compliance with section 2444, in cases in which it applies, is not a jurisdictional step necessary to the issuance of bonds.

Yours very truly,

TIMOTHY S. HOGAN,

Attorney General.

PROSECUTING ATTORNEY—DUTY TO DEFEND TOWNSHIP OFFICER IN SUIT AGAINST OFFICIAL CAPACITY BUT NOT INDIVIDUAL CAPACITY.

Under section 2917, General Code, which requires a prosecuting attorney to be the legal adviser of township officers, that official is required to defend a justice of the peace or road superintendent in a suit brought against either in their official capacity, but not when such suit was brought against them in their individual capacity. Whether or not a person is sued in official capacity and what effect the refusal of an officer to follow the opinion of his legal adviser should be, must be left to the circumstances of each case.

COLUMBUS, OHIO, April 12, 1913.

HON. WILLIAM C. HUDSON, Prosecuting Attorney, McArthur, Ohio.

DEAR SIR:—Under date of February 11, 1913, you inquire as follows:

> "Is the prosecuting attorney required under section 2917 of the General Code, to defend a township officer (justice of the peace or road superintendent for instance) in a suit for damages for failure to do his duty, or for misconduct in office, especially if the township officer has been advised as to his duties by the prosecutor and neglected or refused to follow his counsel?"

Section 2917, General Code, to which you refer, provides:

> "The prosecuting attorney shall be the legal adviser of the county commissioners and all other county officers and county boards and any of them may require of him written opinions or instructions in matters connected with their official duties. He shall prosecute and defend all suits and actions which any officer or board may direct or to which it is a party, and no county officer may employ other counsel or attorney at the expense of the county except as provided in section 2412. He shall be the legal adviser for all township officers, and no such officer may employ other council or attorney except on the order of the township trustees duly entered upon their journal, in which the compensation to be paid for such legal services shall be fixed. Such compensation shall be paid from the township fund."

By virtue of this section the prosecuting attorney is the legal adviser of all township officers. This statute contemplates that the prosecuting attorney shall advise such township officers in their official capacity and not in their personal or individual capacity. When a prosecuting attorney advises an officer he represents the interests of the public.

Whether or not a prosecuting attorney shall represent an officer of a township in a suit against such township officer must depend upon the particular facts in each case. If the interest of the township, that is the public, is involved in such action it would be the duty of the prosecuting attorney to represent the township in such action, through its proper officer or officers, and to protect its interests. If, however, the action involves only the personal liability of an officer, as for misconduct or negligence in office, the prosecuting attorney would not be required to represent such officer in such action.

The prosecuting attorney is required by section 2917, General Code, to represent the township officers in their official capacity and not in their individual capacity. He is not required to represent an officer who is sued in his personal capacity for damages alleged to have been sustained by an official misconduct of such officer.

The difficulty in answering your question categorically arises from the fact that it is not always easy to tell when one is in reality sued in his official capacity. Let us assume that it should develop that an attorney-general or prosecuting attorney were in error in giving legal advise and that the official who disregarded such legal advice were in reality following the law; in that situation the official is entitled to be defended by the attorney general or the prosecuting attorney as the case may be. A justice of the peace might be right in disregarding official advice. True, it is a dangerous thing for an official to do, but if he is acting in good faith and believes that he is right and is undertaking to act officially, I would give him the benefit of the doubt and defend him. But where an official acts arbitrarily and in disregard of advice of the legal department, and without any reasonable ground for his action, and is sued as an individual, he should be left to employ his own counsel.

No hard and fast rule can be laid down. It is the general duty of an official who is entitled to advise from a prosecutor or from the attorney general to follow that advice, and if he does not so follow that advice there is a presumption arising that he is not acting from good motives. The prosecuting attorney will be pursuing safe grounds if he lets each case stand upon its own foundation and follows his own conscience as to what he should do in the premises.

Very truly yours,
TIMOTHY S. HOGAN,
Attorney General.

TAXES AND TAXATION—LIABILITY OF MUTUAL TELEPHONE COMPANY FOR WILLIS TAX.

The Citizens Telephone Company, of Rutland, Ohio, which is a mutual company organized for service among its own members, who are charged $1.80 per year for running expenses, and which company received the sum of $75.00 during the year for messenger service, should be taxed under the Willis tax law provisions upon its entire gross receipts, to wit: the assessments made against each member and the amount received as extra earnings for messenger service.

COLUMBUS, OHIO, April 23, 1913.

HON. FRED. W. CROW, Prosecuting Attorney, Pomeroy, Ohio.

DEAR SIR:—I am in receipt of your letter of April 15th, in which you inquire as follows:

> "The Citizens Telephone Company of Rutland, Ohio, has asked me to submit to you the following question for your opinion, to-wit:
> "The Citizens Telephone Company of Rutland, Ohio, is a mutual company, organized for service among its own members and not for profit to its members or officers, and the said company assesses each member of said company fifteen cents per month, or $1.80 per year for running expenses, which goes to pay switch tenders and other expenses, including property tax of said company. The said company also charges a message fee of ten cents to parties not members of said company, and the said company reported $75.00 as receipts from this source to the Ohio tax commission, and the said Ohio tax commission did not levy one and two-tenths per cent. excise tax on the said receipts amounting to $75.00, but instead thereof did levy the excise tax on $3,900.00 (being the $1.80 per year heretofore referred to, paid by each of the said company's 2,167 members) which made a tax of $46.80.

"The Citizens Telephone Company of Rutland, Ohio, desires to know whether or not the Ohio tax commission erred in levying excise tax of one and two-tenths per cent. on said $3,900.00, instead of the said $75.00, being the true receipts as said company maintains."

The opinion asked for in your letter is covered by statute and is found in the so-called tax commission act of 1911, passed May 31, 1911, and contained in 102 O. L., pages 224-260, inclusive.

Section 5474, of the General Code, provides that all public utilities shall make a statement which shall contain the entire gross receipts of the company, including all sums earned or charged, whether actually received or not, from whatever source derived, for business done within the state for the year next preceding the first day of May.

Section 5475 provides that the tax commission of Ohio shall, on the first Monday of September, ascertain and determine the entire gross receipts of each telephone company for business done within this state, for the year ending on the 30th day of June, excluding therefrom, only receipts derived wholly from interstate business or business done for the federal government.

Section 5476 provides that the amount so ascertained by the tax commission of Ohio shall be the gross receipts of such telephone company for business done within this state for such year.

Section 5481 provides that on the first Monday of October, the commission shall certify to the auditor of state, the amount of the gross receipts so determined, for the year covered by its annual report to the tax commission of Ohio.

Section 5483 provides that in the month of October, annually, the auditor of state shall charge, for collection from each telephone company, a sum in the nature of an excise tax, for the privilege of carrying on its intrastate business, to be computed on the amount so fixed and reported by the tax commission of Ohio as the gross receipts of such company on its intrastate business for the year covered by its annual report to the tax commission, by taking one and two-tenths per cent. of all such gross receipts, which tax shall not be less than ten dollars in any case.

The gross receipts of a corporation are the entire receipts from any source received by a said corporation for the year, and as the dictionary defines the word "gross" as whole; entire; total; and specifically, without deduction; it is clear that the amount paid by the mutual subscribers of the Citizens Telephone Company of Rutland, Ohio, to-wit the sum of $1.80 per year from each subscriber, should be included in the report of the company to the tax commission.

In your letter you state that the tax commission levied upon the amount so received from the members, to-wit, the sum of $3,900.00, but did not levy on the receipts of the company, amounting to $75.00, and ask whether or not the Ohio tax commission erred in levying excise tax on said $3,900.00,instead of the said $75.00, being the true receipts as said company maintains.

I am of the opinion that the tax commision did not err in levying excise tax on said sum of $3,900.00, but it did err in failing to charge an excise tax on the said sum of $75.00, for the total levy should have been on the sum of $3,975.00, which, according to the company's report, is the gross receipts of said telephone company for the year.

Very truly yours,
TIMOTHY S. HOGAN,
Attorney General.

ROADS AND HIGHWAYS—METHOD OF MAKING CONTRACTS FOR MATERIALS AND LABOR FOR IMPROVEMENT OF ROADS UNDER SECTION 7033, GENERAL CODE, AND FOLLOWING.

Under section 7047, General Code, contracts for materials and labor in the improvement of roads under sections 7033, General Code, and following, must be made by sections and in like manner as provided by law for other township improvements, and therefore, part of the labor and materials necessary to such improvement may not be furnished by the trustees by force account under their own supervision without the letting of contracts.

COLUMBUS, OHIO, April 22, 1913.

HON. IRVING CARPENTER, Prosecuting Attorney, Norwalk, Ohio.

DEAR SIR:—I acknowledge receipt of your letter of March 1st as follows:

> "From several sources the question has come to me in my short term as prosecuting attorney of Huron county, whether funds of a road district, erected under sections 7033 to 7052, General Code, raised by the sale of bonds of such district, can be used by the township trustees in improving the roads of such district by force account under their own supervision, and not by letting contract. And whether contract can be let for part of the labor and material on such improvement and part of the labor and materials furnished by the trustees, paying therefor from such funds."

Section 7047, General Code, provides:

> "The contracts for furnishing the materials and performing the labor in and about such improvement shall be made by such sections and in like manner as provided by law for other township improvements."

In view of the foregoing provisions of statute, which are so plain as to admit of no doubt, I am of the opinion that township trustees may not legally expend, in whole or in part, money derived from the sale of bonds, under the subdivision of the code embraced within sections 7033 to 7052, inclusive, otherwise than upon contract.

Very truly yours,

TIMOTHY S. HOGAN,

Attorney General.

CONSTITUTIONAL AMENDMENT—PROVISION FOR COMMENT UPON FAILURE OF ACCUSED TO TAKE THE STAND IS SELF EXECUTING.

Under Proposal No. 41, of the constitutional amendments, article 1, section 10, which provides for comment upon the failure of the accused to take the stand, and the consideration of that fact by the court and jury, took effect on January 1, 1913. This amendment is self executing. As to pending cases, however, the former method of procedure is preserved by the language of Proposal No. 41.

COLUMBUS, OHIO, April 29, 1913.

HON. THOMAS L. POGUE, Prosecuting Attorney, Cincinnati, Ohio.

DEAR SIR:—Under date of April 24th you call my attention to that part of article I, section 10 of the constitution as recently adopted, which states as follows:

> "No person shall be compelled, in any criminal case, to be a witness against himself; but his failure to testify may be considered by the court and jury and may be made the subject of comment by counsel," and request my opinion as to the effect thereof as such provision now stands. In other words, as to whether such provision requires remedial legislation, or was self-executing when the amendment was passed.

Proposal No. 41, which was carried at the election on September 3, 1912, provides as follows:

> "The several amendments passed and submitted by this convention when adopted at the election shall take effect on the first day of January, 1913, except as otherwise specifically provided by the schedule attached to any of said amendments. All laws then in force, not inconsistent therewith shall continue in force until amended or repealed; provided that all cases pending in the courts on the first day of January, 1913, shall be heard and tried in the same manner and by the same procedure as is now authorized by law. Any provision of the amendments passed and submitted by this convention and adopted by the electors, inconsistent with, or in conflict with, any provision of the present constitution shall be held to prevail."

There was no provision in proposal No. 3 in reference to the amendment of article I, section 10 as to when such amendment would go into effect. Therefore, since it was not specifically provided by the schedule attached to proposal No. 3 as to when the same would go into effect such amendment went into effect on the first day of January, 1913.

As I view such amendment it is self-executing when the same went into effect and does not require any further legislation in order to carry it into effect. However, proposal No. 41 provides further that "all cases pending in the courts on the first day of January, 1913, shall be heard and tried in the same manner and by the same procedure as is now authorized by law."

While I am of the opinion that the provision of the constitution permitting the prosecutor to comment upon the fact that the accused does not take the stand is self-executing, yet in view of the provisions of proposal No. 41 such right would not apply to any prosecutions which were pending on the first day of January, 1913.

I am informed that the common pleas court of Franklin county in a criminal case, the indictment for which had been returned subsequent to January 1, 1913, has taken the same view as I have herein expressed.

Very truly yours,
TIMOTHY S. HOGAN,
Attorney General.

THREE-FOURTHS JURY RULE—WHEN ACT BECOMES EFFECTIVE—PENDING CASES NOT EFFECTED.

The amendment to section 11455, General Code, having been filed in the office of the secretary of state, February 13, 1913, the same will not be effective until ninety days thereafter, in accordance with article 2, section 1-c, of the constitution.

Under section 26, General Code, which provides that the repeal or the amendment of a statute shall not affect pending proceedings even when such statute pertains to the remedy and it is not so expressly provided, the three-fourths jury rule, does not maintain as to cases pending when said amendment became effective.

COLUMBUS, OHIO, April 29, 1913.

HON. T. M. POTTER, Prosecuting Attorney, New Lexington, Ohio.

DEAR SIR:—Under date of April 25th, you inquire whether senate bill No. 8, amending sections 11455, 11456 and 11457 of the General Code, relative to verdicts in the court of common pleas will apply:

> "First: To cases pending at the time the bill was passed.
> "Second: To cases filed after the enactment and before the coming into effect of the statute. In other words, before the expiration of the ninety day period required by the constitution."

Section 11455, General Code, provides in part:

> "In all civil actions a jury shall render a verdict upon the concurrence of three-fourths or more of their number."

Said bill was passed on February 6, 1913, approved February 12, 1913, and filed in the office of the secretary of state February 13, 1913.

Section 1-c of article II of the constitution, as amended, provides in part as follows:

> "No law passed by the general assembly shall go into effect until ninety days after it shall have been filed by the governor in the office of the secretary of state, except as herein provided."

It is to be noted that there is no emergency clause to be found in senate bill No. 8. Therefore, under the provision above quoted said law will not go into effect until ninety days after February 13, 1913.

The law not going into effect until ninety days after February 13, 1913, the question then arises as to whether or not as to cases which are tried after the law so goes into effect will be tried under such senate bill No. 8.

Section 26, General Code, provides as follows:

"Whenever a statute is repealed or amended, such repeal or amendment shall in no manner affect pending actions, prosecutions, or proceedings, civil or criminal, and when the repeal or amendment relates to the remedy it shall not affect pending actions, prosecutions, or proceedings, unless so expressed, nor shall any repeal or amendment affect causes of such action, prosecution, proceedings, existing at the time of such amendment or repeal, unless otherwise expressly provided in the amending or repealing act."

Such section provides that when an amendment relates to the remedy it shall not affect pending actions unless so expressed. The question, therefore, arises, whether or not the three-fourths jury law relates to the remedy. If it does, then since there is no statement in the bill that it shall affect pending actions, prosecutions or proceedings, it would not so affect actions, prosecutions or proceedings as were pending at the time the law goes into effect.

Prior to the codification of 1880, what is now section 26 of the General Code, and known as section 79, revised statutes, was found in the form as enacted in 63 Ohio Laws, 22, section 2, which reads as follows:

"That whenever a statute is repealed or amended, such repeal or amendment shall in no manner affect pending actions, prosecutions, or proceedings, civil or criminal; nor causes of such action, prosecution, or proceeding, existing at the time of such amendment or repeal, unless otherwise expressly provided in the amending or repealing act."

Based on the statute as it existed as last foregoing set forth the case of Warner vs. Railroad Company, 31 O. S., 265, was decided, the first syllabus of said case reading as follows:

"Where a jury of twelve men was selected and summoned for the trial of a cause before a justice of the peace, under the act of March 30, 1875 (72 Ohio Laws, 159), and before the day set for trial this act was repealed by another (73 Ohio Laws, 14), which provided for a jury of six men for such trials: HELD, That the act in force at the time of the trial governed, and that the justice erred in submitting the cause to a jury of twelve men."

On page 268 Gilmore, J., states as follows:

"It is contended by counsel for plaintiff that the act of February 19, 1866 (S. & S. 1), saved the right of the plaintiff to a trial by a jury of twelve men in this case. The act saves pending actions, prosecutions or proceedings in civil and criminal cases, and also saves the causes of such actions, prosecutions, or proceedings. It was intended to preserve existing rights, and its provisions do not rebate to the remedies by which such rights may be asserted or obtained. Remedies always have been subject to legislative control, except to the extent which the constitution has limited such control. As has been shown, jury trials before justices of the peace are subject to legislative control. They are simply one of the means by which justice is administered in those courts. They are remedial in their nature, for they may be given or taken away, at the pleasure of the legislature; and while there exists a right to appeal from the judgment of a justice of the peace, to a tribunal, in which a trial by jury of twelve men can be had, no constitutional or legal right is violated by changing the number of men that shall constitute a legal jury for the trial of a cause before a justice.

"In this case, at the time of the trial, the justice had no legal authority to impanel a jury of twelve men, and therefore erred in overruling the motion of the defendant to set aside the jury of that number."

It is to be noted from the above citation that the supreme court distinctly recognized that jury trials were subject to legislative control, and simply one of the means by which justice is administered, and that they are remedial in their nature.

In the case of State vs. Caldwell, 50 La. Ann. 166, 41 L. R. A. 718, the court adopts with approval the language of the trial judge, wherein said judge referring to article 116 of the constitution of 1898 required only nine of a jury to find a verdict in a case not capital, states that "It is a mere change in the remedy, or mode of procedure, which does not deprive the defendants of any right." In other words, said court distinctly recognizes that a change in the law in reference to the number of the jury necessary to return a verdict was simply a change in the remedy.

Bouvier's law dictionary defines "remedy" as "the means employed to enforce a right or redress an injury." This definition has been endorsed by the supreme court of this state in the case of the Missionary Society of the M. E. Church vs. Ely et al., 56 O. S., 405.

Subsequent to the decision in the case of Warren vs. Railroad Company, supra, and at the time of the codification of the statutes of Ohio in 1880, the statute was amended so as to read as follows:

"Whenever a statute is repealed or amended, such repeal or amendment, shall in no manner affect pending actions, prosecutions, or proceedings, civil or criminal, and when the repeal or amendment relates to the remedy, it shall not affect pending actions, prosecutions, or proceedings, unless so expressed; nor shall any repeal or amendment affect causes of such action, prosecution or proceedings, existing all the time of such amendment or repeal, unless otherwise expressly provided in the amending or repealing act."

The statute as above given is identical with present section 26 of the General Code. There having been inserted therein the provision that an amendment relating to the remedy shall not affect pending actions, unless so expressed, and the supreme court in the case of Warren vs. Railroad Co., supra, having held that jury trials were remedial in their nature, I am of the opinion that there being no provision in senate bill No. 8 applying the provisions thereof to pending actions, prosecutions or proceedings, the said act will not apply to any action, prosecution or proceeding pending at the time the law goes into effect.

Therefore, such act will not apply:

First: To cases pending at the time the bill was passed, nor,

Second: To cases filed after the enactment and before the coming into effect of the statute."

Very truly yours,
TIMOTHY S. HOGAN,
Attorney General.

ROADS AND HIGHWAYS—NO POWER TO IMPROVE TOWNSHIP ROAD WHEN QUESTION IS DEFEATED AT ELECTION.

When under section 6976, General Code, the trustees of a township have submitted to the electors therein, the question of improving a township road and the electors have voted against such improvement, there is no power in the trustees to issue bonds for such improvement under related statutes.

COLUMBUS, OHIO, May 8, 1913.

HON. CHARLES F. ADAMS, Prosecuting Attorney, Elyria, Ohio.

DEAR SIR:—I have your letter of February 4th, wherein you state:

"For the benefit of the trustees of Camden township, I desire your construction of section 7004-5-6 of the General Code, the facts are as follows:

"The trustees are desirous of improving a certain township road within Camden township, which matter was submitted to the vote of the people at the last general election, and defeated, and the question now is, can the trustees under these sections issue the bonds of the township for the purpose of macadamizing the road?

"If in your opinion the trustees have not the authority under said sections to issue township bonds, is there any statute under which money can be secured without submitting it to public vote?"

Sections 7004, 7005 and 7006 of the General Code, provide as follows:

"Section 7004. For the purpose of providing the money necessary to meet the expenses of improving such roads and streets the trustees of a township, if advisable in their opinion, may issue the bonds of the township, payable at such times as they determine not exceeding thirty years, in the sum of five hundred dollars each, bearing interest at a rate not to exceed five per cent per annum payable semi-annually."

"Section 7005. Such bonds shall not be sold for less than their par value, and accrued interest, and the aggregate amount of the bonds of a township, at one time outstanding, shall not exceed one hundred thousand dollars. The sale of such bonds shall be advertised for at least thirty days, and they shall be sold to the highest bidder at the office of the trustees of such township.

"Section 7006. When the trustees of such township have determined to improve a road, as herein provided, in order to provide for the payment of such improvement and to provide a fund for the redemption of bonds issued by them under the provisions of the next preceding sections, with interest thereon, in addition to the other road taxes authorized by law, they shall levy annually upon each dollar of valuation of all taxable property of such township an amount not exceeding six mills upon each dollar of such valuation, and shall continue such levy from year to year until the roads and streets, by said commissioners designated for improvement, have been improved, as herein provided, and the bonds issued for that purpose, with interest thereon, have been paid."

These sections are part of the subdivision of the chapter relating to township roads, the title of which subdivision is "Roads Partly Within a Municipality."

Section 6976, General Code, provides:

> "The trustees of a township, when the petition of one hundred or more of the taxpayers of such township is presented to them, praying for the improvement of the public roads within such township and including a road running into or through a village or city, shall submit the question of the improvement of said roads to the qualified electors of the township at the next general election or at a special election, held after the presentation of such petition."

It will be observed that before the trustees can acquire jurisdiction to improve roads under this subdivision, a petition signed by at least one hundred taxpayers of the township must be presented to them praying for the improvement. After this is done the trustees must submit the question of the policy of making the improvement of such roads to the qualified electors of the township at the next general election or at a special election held after presentation of such petition.

Sections 6977, 6978, 6979 and 6980 of the General Code, prescribe the form of ballot to be used at the election and the manner of giving notice thereof, and provide for the appointment of judges and clerks to conduct the same, and as these sections are not necessary to a determination of your questions I forebear to quote them.

Section 6981 of the General Code is in part as follows:

> "At such election if a majority of the votes cast are against the policy of improving the roads by general taxation, the township trustees shall not assess taxes for that purpose; * * *"

The last quoted provision leaves no room for doubt that when the question of the improvement of township roads under these statutes has been legally submitted by the township trustees to the electors of the township, and a majority of the votes cast at the election are against the proposition, the roads cannot be improved by general taxation.

The power of township trustees under these statutes to issue bonds to pay for road improvements, and to levy taxes to meet the obligation created by the issuance of the bonds, is dependent upon the authority given the trustees by virtue of a favorable vote of a majority of the qualified electors of the township, and cannot be exercised otherwise.

You state that the question of the improvement of a certain road in one of the townships of your county was submitted to the electors of the township and defeated. Under this state of facts, I am of the opinion that the township trustees cannot now issue bonds under sections 7004, 7005 and 7006 for the purpose of macadamizing said road.

Your last question was considered and answered in an opinion of this department to Hon. Lewis P. Metzger, under date of July 20th, 1912, a copy of which opinion is herewith enclosed.

Yours very truly,
TIMOTHY S. HOGAN,
Attorney General.

INITIATIVE AND REFERENDUM HAS NO APPLICATION TO BILL WHICH HAS NOT BECOME A LAW.

Since the Potting bill relating to local option election in counties has not passed the senate nor reached the house, and consequently did not become a law, and since section 3, article 2, of the constitution, provides for a referendum solely on laws, such a bill is not included within the initiative and referendum provisions.

COLUMBUS, OHIO, May 9, 1913.

HON. D. F. DUNLAVY, Prosecuting Attorney, Jefferson, Ohio.

DEAR SIR:—I am in receipt of your letter of April 30th, wherein you state that you are anxious to inquire whether a referendum can be had on the Potting liquor law.

Upon an examination of the senate journal of Monday, April 28, 1913, which date was the last day on which the senate sat prior to adjournment, I find that Mr. Potting introduced senate bill No. 299, being:

> "A bill to amend section 6116 of the General Code, relating to local option elections in counties and to give independent effect to the vote of municipal corporations at such elections."

It further appears that on motion of Mr. Potting the constitutional rule requiring bills to be fully and distinctly read on three different days was dispensed with and such bill was read the second time and referred to the committee on temperance; that was the last action taken by the last legislature in reference to such bill.

Section 1-c of article II of the constitution as amended provides for the exercise of the power reserved by the people designated as the referendum, and provides for the signature of six per centum of the electors upon petition to order the submission to such electors for their approval or rejection "of any law, section of any law, or any item in any law appropriating money passed by the general assembly." It further provides that no law passed by the general assembly shall go into effect until ninety days after it shall have been filed by the governor in the office of the secretary of state, except as otherwise provided. It further provides that when a petition signed by six per centum of the electors of the state is filed with the secretary of state "within ninety days after any law shall have been filed by the governor in the office of the secretary of state, ordering such law, section of law or any item in such law appropriating money to be submitted to the electors for their approval or rejection," the secretary of state shall so submit the same at the next regular or general election and "no such law, section or item shall go into effect until and unless approved by a majority of those voting upon the same."

It will be observed by an examination of house bill 299 that the same is not a bill which was initiated by the people, but was a bill introduced by a member of the legislature, consequently the question of initiative petition is not in question here.

Section 16 of article II provides that "Every bill passed by the general assembly shall, before it becomes a law, be presented to the governor for his approval."

Senate bill No. 299 was simply introduced in the senate and read a second time and referred to the committee on temperance. The bill got no further along in its passage. It was not passed by the senate nor did it at any time reach the house. Consequently, it did not become a law, and since section 1-c of article II provides for referendum solely on laws, no referendum could be had on senate bill No. 299 introduced by Mr. Potting.

Yours truly,

TIMOTHY S. HOGAN,

Attorney General.

DUTIES OF PROSECUTING ATTORNEY AS TO SUITS BEFORE JUSTICES OF THE PEACE FOR COLLECTION OF TAXES.

Under section 2917, General Code, which requires the prosecuting attorney to prosecute and defend all suits and actions which any county officer or board may direct or to which it is a party, that officer may be directed by the county treasurer to institute suits before justices of the peace for collection of delinquent taxes.

The remedy of distraint for taxes given to the county treasurer, under section 2658, General Code, however, is by far the most effective and all such means should be exhausted by the county treasurer before calling upon the prosecuting attorney to conduct litigation. It is within the power of the prosecuting attorney to mandamus the county treasurer and thereby compel him to do his duty, under section 2658, General Code.

COLUMBUS, OHIO, February 17, 1913.

HON. T. J. KRAMER, Prosecuting Attorney, Woodsfield, Ohio.

DEAR SIR:—I have your letter of January 7, 1913, in which you state that the treasurer and county commissioners are continually asking you to bring suits before justices of the peace for collection of taxes, and asking my opinion as to your duty in the premises.

The general duties of the prosecuting attorney are prescribed by section 2916, of the General Code, as follows:

> "The prosecuting attorney shall have power to inquire into the commission of crimes within the county and shall prosecute on behalf of the state all complaints, suits and controversies in which the state is a party, and such other suits, matters and controversies as he is directed by law to prosecute within or without the county, common pleas court and circuit court. In conjunction with the attorney general, he shall also prosecute cases in the supreme court arising in his county. In every case of conviction, he shall forthwith cause execution to be issued for the fine and costs, or costs only, as the case may be, and faithfully urge the collection until it is affected (effected) or found to be impracticable, and forthwith pay to the county treasurer all moneys belonging to the state or county, which come into his possession as fines, forfeitures, costs or otherwise."

This does not include the matter about which you inquire, but section 2917, General Code, would seem to do so, and provides as follows:

> "The prosecuting attorney shall be the legal adviser of the county commissioners and all other county officers and county boards and any of them may require of him written opinions or instructions in matters connected with their official duties. He shall prosecute and defend all suits and actions which any such officer or board may direct or to which it is a party, and no county officer may employ other counsel or attorney at the expense of the county except as provided in section twenty-four hundred and twelve. He shall be the legal adviser for all township officers, and no such officer may employ other counsel or attorney except on the order of the township trustees duly entered upon their journal, in which the compensation to be paid for such legal services shall be fixed. Such compensation shall be paid from the township fund."

You will observe that while section 5696, as follows, to wit:

> "The commissioners, at each September session, shall cause the list of persons delinquent in the payment on personal property to be publicly read. If they deem it necessary, they may authorize the treasurer to employ collectors to collect such taxes or part thereof, prescribing the compensation of such collectors which shall be paid out of the county treasury. All such allowances shall be apportioned ratably by the county auditor among all the funds entitled to share in the distribution of such taxes;"

yet, nevertheless the latter section is a very old one. It was originally enacted in the year 1866, see year book 63, page 43; while section 2917, which authorizes the prosecuting attorney to prosecute and defend all suits and actions which any such officer or board may direct, or to which it is a party, was first enacted in the year 1906 (See year book 98, page 160), section 2917, you will notice, was section 1274 of the Revised Statutes. It is not necessary to pass on this question as to whether or not section 5696 was impliedly repealed for the reason that section 2917 gives the treasurer the power to request the prosecuting attorney to bring the suits in question. However, the treasurer ought not except for the most valid reasons call upon the prosecuting attorney to bring suits before justices of the peace. Recently, Hon. Edward C. Turner, prosecuting attorney of Franklin county, compelled the county treasurer, by proceeding in mandamus, to do his duty under the distress proceedings.

Section 2658, of the General Code, provides as follows:

> "When taxes are past due and unpaid, the county treasurer may distrain sufficient goods and chattels belonging to the person charged with such taxes, if found within the county, to pay the taxes so remaining due and the costs that have accrued. He shall immediately advertise in three public places in the township where the property was taken the time and place it will be sold. If the taxes and costs accrued thereon are not paid before the day appointed for such sale, which shall not be less than ten days after the taking of the property, the treasurer shall sell it at public vendue or so much thereof as will pay such taxes and costs."

No remedy is more effective than that provided in section 2658, of the General Code, and in my judgment it is one that should be vigorously pursued. Mr. Turner advises me that the results here after the court issued the order of mandamus on the treasurer upon his application were most efficacious, and joins me in the proposition that the treasurer should not except in extreme cases, call upon the prosecutor under section 2917. It is the duty of the treasurer to exhaust all appropriate remedies before making it necessary to litigate. There is a growing tendency on the part of many officers to cast upon the legal department duties that can ordinarily be discharged by the officer himself. If in your judgment your county treasurer is not vigorous in making use of the power given in section 2658, you have the remedy of mandamus at hand. I hope after you confer with him he will see his way clear to proceed, and thus recover promptly into the county treasury moneys which there now belong.

Yours very truly,
TIMOTHY S. HOGAN,
Attorney General.

TAXES AND TAXATION—TAXES DUE AND UNPAID NOT A DEBT TO BE DEDUCTED FROM CREDITS.

Inasmuch as a tax operates invitum and is not an obligation created by the voluntary act of the obligor, arising out of contract by him entered into, it may not be considered a debt so as to be deducible from credits, under section 5327, General Code.

COLUMBUS, OHIO, April 23, 1913.

HON. JAMES A. TOBIN, Prosecuting Attorney, Fairfield County, Lancaster, Ohio.

DEAR SIR:—I beg to acknowledge receipt of your letter of April 15th, requesting my opinion upon the following question:

> "Under section 5327, General Code, can taxes due and unpaid be considered a 'Debt' and be legally deducted from 'Credits'? "

The statute, the construction of which is involved in the consideration of this question, is section 5327 of the General Code, which provides, in part, as follows:

> "The term 'credits' * * * means the excess of the sum of all legal claims and demands, whether for money or other valuable thing, or for labor or services * * * including deposits * * * other than such as are held to be money, * * * when added together, * * * over and above the sum of legal bona fide debts owing by such person. In making up the sum of such debts owing, there shall not be taken into account an obligation to a mutual insurance company, or an unpaid subscription to the capital stock of a joint stock company, nor a subscription for a religious, scientific, literary or charitable purpose; nor an acknowledgment of indebtedness, unless founded on some consideration actually received, * * * nor an acknowledgment made for the purpose of diminishing the amount of credits to be listed for taxation; nor a greater amount or portion of a liability as surety, than the person * * * believes that such surety is in equity bound * * * to * * * contribute * * *."

Your question doubtless arises from the fact that at tax listing time, viz.: the day preceding the second Monday in April, each taxpayer will naturally have charged against him for collection on the duplicate of the county the taxes for the second half of the previous year, or the current year (depending upon the sense in which the word "year" is used). This is, of course, not necessarily the case, as every taxpayer has the right to pay the entire amount of taxes charged against him in any year at any time prior to the 20th of December of that year, and after the duplicate is in the hands of the treasurer for collection. Customarily, however, the situation as I have described it exists. Of course, it is conceivable that a taxpayer making a return in April of any year may have charged against him in addition to the last half of taxes charged in the previous year, delinquent taxes for other years, which he has not yet paid.

The face of section 5327, above quoted, does not furnish an answer to the question because there is no complete definition of the word "debt." It is true that certain express exceptions from what might otherwise be the meaning of this word are made by the section. All these are apparent on the face of the quotation which I have made. However, all of these excepted obligations are of one kind, viz., obligations created by the voluntary act of the obligor, and arising out of a contract by him entered into.

None of the excepted claims are similar to claims of the state for taxes, which is a claim arising not by virtue of the voluntary act of the taxpayer and not owing its origin to an express or even an implied contract by him entered into.

It might be argued that the phrase "all legal claims and demands" as used in connection with the term "credits" might with propriety be employed for the purpose of defining the term "debts," which is not expressly so defined. That is to say, there might be force in an argument to the effect that inasmuch as credits consist of the sum of all legal claims and demands, deducting debts, the things deducted should be of the same kind as the things from which they are deducted. Whether or not this supposed principle is valid, the solution of your question is not greatly aided by its application as the phrase "all legal claims and demands" still lacks an accurate definition.

The question which you ask, then, is one which must depend for solution upon judicial interpretation. You refer to the case of Peter vs. Parkinson, Treasurer, 83 O. S., 36. This case involved the right of the county commissioners to compromise a claim for delinquent personal taxes, and the conclusion of the court was that the right did not exist because the claim for taxes was not a "debt due to the county" within the meaning of section 2416 of the General Code. In reaching this conclusion the court placed stress upon the nature of a tax as such rather than upon the consideration that the taxes are not primarily due to the county, which consideration was mentioned merely as an additional reason for the conclusion reached (see page 49). On page 47 of the Opinion, per Crew, J., is found a discussion of the nature of a tax. The following is quoted therefrom:

> "In City of Camden vs. Allen, 2 Dutcher's Reports (New Jersey), 398, Chief Justice Green says: 'A tax, in its essential characteristics, is not a debt, nor in the nature of a debt. A tax is an impost levied by authority of government, upon its citizens or subjects, for the support of the state. It is not founded upon contract or agreement. It operates in invitum. Pierce vs. City of Boston, 3 Metc., 520. A debt is a sum of money due by certain and express agreement. It originates in, and is founded upon contract express or implied.'"

The court also cites upon this principle Perry vs. Washburn, 20 Cal., 318, Shaw vs. Peckett, of Boston, (3 Met. ,520) and Shaw vs. Peckett, (26 Vt., 482), Lane County vs. Oregon, 7 Wall., 71; Meriwether vs. Garret, 102 U. S., 472; City of Augusta vs. North, 57 Maine, 392; and 1 Cooley on Taxation (3 ed.) page 17.

These authorities all sustain the principle upon which they are cited, but none of them, including the principal case of Peter vs. Parkinson, are exactly in point, as none of them concern the deduction of "debt" from other taxable things.

This line of decisions, however, of which the above cited cases are leaders, was cited in the case of Bailies vs. Des Moines, 127 Iowa, 124, which is a case exactly in point. The statutes of the state of Iowa permit the deduction of debts from money as well as from credits, the phrase being, that the person required to list may deduct from the amounts of moneys and credits "all debts in good faith owing by him." The sequence of dates respecting the period of assessment and collection in that state is similar to that in this state, so that the question arose naturally in Iowa just as it has evidently arisen, or is about to arise, in your county. The attorney general of Ohio has given an opinion similar to that which you say has been given by a prominent attorney of your city, and it seems that the practice in Iowa has been, as it may have been in Ohio, to regard unpaid taxes as debts for the purpose of deduction. The court held, however, upon the line of authorities already cited, that within the meaning of the Iowa statute the term "debt" did not include unpaid taxes, but imported obligations arising out of contracts express or implied. I can see no distinction between the phraseology of the Iowa and the Ohio statutes in this particular. If any distinction could be said to arise it would be by virtue of the enumeration of the things in the Ohio statute which are not to be included within the meaning of the term in its primary significance. As already pointed out, however, all these enumerated things are obligations which arise out of express or implied contracts. So that this enumeration cannot be relied upon to enlarge the meaning of the term "all legal bona fide debts owing" beyond what it would be held to mean under the authorities cited.

I am of the opinion that the reasoning of the Iowa supreme court is sound and that it is proper to apply the line of authorities cited in Peter vs. Parkinson and in the Iowa case as well, to the solution of the present question.

It is my conclusion, therefore, that unpaid taxes, either real or personal, may not be deducted from the sum of claims amd demands owing to a person required to list property for taxation for the purpose of ascertaining the amount of his taxable "credits."

Very truly yours,
TIMOTHY S. HOGAN,
Attorney General.

BUILDING COMMISSION, COURT HOUSE—POWERS AND PROCEDURE OF MAKING EXTRA ALLOWANCE TO ARCHITECT.

Since the contract providing for the employment of an architect in the building of the court house at Ottawa, Ohio, provided five per cent. as the entire fee and fixed time of employment as correspondent with the time set forth in the various contracts with contractors, and since no provision for extra allowance was made, in accordance with section 2341, General Code, in writing, and by a vote of five members of the commission, the fact that the main contract for construction was delayed, will not entitle such architect to fees in excess of said five per cent.

COLUMBUS, OHIO, May 3, 1913.

HON. A. A. SLAYBAUGH, Prosecuting Attorney, Ottawa, Ohio.

DEAR SIR:—On December 31, 1912, Honorable J. W. Smith, then prosecuting attorney of your county, requested my views as to the claims of Frank L. Packard, architect, against the court house building commission of your county for extra allowance for premium bonds, services and expenses, after August 1, 1911, as architect and superintendent of construction of the court house in your county.

Mr. Packard entered into a written contract with said building commission December 16, 1909, in which his powers and duties are fully, and with the exception hereinafter referred to, clearly set forth. He was to prepare contracts, plans, specifications, details, and the like and superintend construction for which he was to receive five per cent. on the aggregate cost of construction, to be paid one-half (two and one-half per cent.) when the contracts were let and the balance as the work progressed. Twice in said contract the words "entire fee" having reference to said five per cent. are used.

The matter of time of employment is cared for as follows: "The length of time covered by the architect's services in supervision shall correspond with the time set forth in the contracts between said building commission and the various contractors as prepared by the architect for the completion of the work and approved by said building commission."

The principal contract for construction was made with R. A. Evans & Company, was dated May 19, 1910, and contained the following provisions: "This contract shall be fully completed on or before August 1, 1911, or pay or cause to be paid to said owner the sum of fifteen dollars per day for each and every day said work shall remain uncompleted, for and as liquidated damages."

The contract was not completed on August 1, 1911, nor until December 12, 1912, and the claims of Mr. Packard all accrue since said date and on account of such failure to complete. No new or additional contract was made with Mr. Packard, but the continued to fulfill his duties until the building was finished.

Section 2339, General Code, authorizes the employment of architects and reads:

> "The commission may employ architects, superintendents and other necessary employes during such construction and fix their compensation and bond."

The building commission, under favor of this section, entered into the contract of December 16, 1909, with Mr. Packard, and having done so, and his plans, specifications, etc., having been adopted and contracts made in pursuance thereto, were the powers of the building commission ended in so far as employment of architects were concerned? If they were not, and the contract of December 16, 1909, is to be construed as expiring by limitation in accordance with its own terms on August 1, 1911, did the failure of the contractors to complete the building by that time furnish an exigency calling for further action by the building commission, and authorize a second or additional contract with an architect?

At this point we are confronted with section 2341, General Code, which reads

> "Resolutions for the adoption or alteration of plans or specifications, or award or contracts, hiring of architects, superintendent or other employes and the fixing of their compensation, the approval of bonds, and the allowance of estimates shall be in writing and require for their adoption the votes of five members of the commission, taken by yeas and nays recorded on the journal of the county commissioners. When signed by five members of the commission the county auditor shall draw his warrant on the county treasurer for the payment of all bills and estimates of such commission."

The serious question arises when we attempt to determine whether there is power to make a second contract with an architect; that the contract with Packard was intended to cover the entire construction for an entire fee of five per cent. cannot be disputed.

However, Mr. Packard's claim must rest and can only rest upon the fact that his contract terminated with the time at which under their contracts the contractors should have completed the building. Such being his contention, it does not lie in his mouth to say either that this contract was not ended at that time, or that there was no power under section 2339 to make a new contract.

Sections 2339 to 2343, General Code, in line with other provisions of our laws, provide a means for changes in plans, specifications, bills of material and the like, and establish the manner in which it may be done.

The language, "Resolutions for the adoption or alteration of plans or specifications * * * hiring of architects * * * allowance of estimates shall be in writing and require for their adoption the votes of five members of the commission taken by yeas and nays recorded on the journal of the commissioners. When signed by five members of the commission the county auditor shall draw his warrant, etc.," may not require a contract with an architect to be in writing but it does require the resolution of hiring to be in writing, entered on the journal of the commissioners and signed by five members of the commission, before a warrant may issue.

These sections prescribe the manner of hiring architects, and to my mind are exclusive. Such being the construction, no implied contract can be enforced by an architect, nor recovery be had or allowance made on a quantum meruit.

I am of the opinion that in the absence of a showing of re-employment, Mr. Packard has no claim for extra time after August 1, 1911, nor expense of any character, and if one is presented the question is burdened with grave doubts, and almost insurmountable obstacles, the principle of which is that to construe Mr. Packard's contract as having a time limit the same as the contractors, and to hold that it is of the essence thereof, and recognize his right and duty under his employment to prepare all contracts for construction, vests in him the power to shorten the contractors' time limit and thus furnish an opportunity for a renewal of his own contract; in other words gives him an opportunity to squeeze the contractors as to time limit on construction and reap advantage to himself by securing a new or additional contract for supervision.

Besides to give Mr. Packard's contract the construction its language demands, he gets five per cent. on aggregate cost, and this is referred to as "the entire fee" and "said entire fee," the use of which language is abhorrent, as it seems to me to a conclusion that the time limit fixed in the Packard contract was of its essence, and he is entitled to no more than five per cent.

Very truly yours,
TIMOTHY S. HOGAN,
Attorney General.

CONTRACTS—EXTRA ALLOWANCE FOR ALTERATIONS MADE BY CONTRACTOR IN ACCORDANCE WITH VERBAL DIRECTION OF ARCHITECT WITHOUT WRITTEN AGREEMENT NOT PERMITTED.

Under section 2340, General Code, changes in contracts made by the building commission may not be made without written agreement between the commission and the contractor, and under section 2341, General Code, resolution of such changes must be in writing and receive the yeas and nays of five members of the commission.

When changes are made, therefore, without such precaution and solely in accordanc with the verbal direction of the architect no allowance may be made.

COLUMBUS, OHIO, May 10, 1913.

HON. A. A. SLAYBAUGH, Prosecuting Attorney, Ottawa, Ohio.

DEAR SIR:—I have your letter of February 21, 1913, before me, in which you say:

"On the 24th day of December, 1912, you rendered an opinion to J. W. Smith, then prosecuting attorney of Putnam county, Ohio, upon the following questions submitted to you by him, to wit:

1. "This county has just completed the building of a court house under the provisions of section 2333 et seq. of the General Code. Can a claim by the contractor for extras be enforced against the county where such changes or additions were made without any agreement in writing between the commission and the contractor as provided for in section 2340 of the General Code?

2. "If the claim cannot be enforced against the county would the commission be authorized in its discretion to allow such extras if they considered that such changes were necessary and that the county had received full value for such changes or extras?

"The questions submitted to you by Mr. Smith involve only the construction of section 2340 of the General Code of Ohio, and especially the following language contained in said section, to wit: 'No such change shall be made until the price to be paid therefor shall have been agreed upon in writing between the commission and the contractor.'

"The contention between the building commission of Putnam county, Ohio, and the contractor, Robert H. Evans & Company, of Columbus, Ohio, arose under the following conditions, to wit:

"On the 19th day of May, 1910, the building commission of Putnam county, Ohio, entered into a contract with Robert H. Evans & Company for the construction of a court house, authorized under section 2333 et seq., General Code of Ohio. The original plans and estimate were adopted by the commission, and the architect duly employed, and the said contractor entered upon the construction of said building and his bid therefor in pursuance of the original plans, specifications and estimate as submitted by the architect. It appears that when the construction of the building had reached the stage of putting on the roof, it was found by the contractor and the architect that the plans as originally made and the details therefor were faulty in this, to wit: that the support of the roof, as shown on page 14 in the upper right hand corner in the original plans, would not be sufficient to carry the weight of the roof, and the architect thereupon made new details for said cornice and submitted the same to the contractor, showing the change to be made in the construction of this part of the building. The new details as submitted by the architect to the contractor are herewith enclosed.

"There was no contract or agreement in writing between the commission and the contractor fixing the price of material and labor necessitated by the change in the original plans. The only authority to the contractor for making such change being given verbally by the architect at the time he submitted to the contractor the amended details for this particular part of the building which is enclosed.

"Under the circumstances in this case, would the architect have the authority to instruct the contractor to make this change in the original plans, under section 2338 of the General Code, and article 3 of the contract?"

Article III of the contract provides as follows, to wit:

"No alterations shall be made in the work except upon written order of the architect; the amount to be paid by the owner, or allowed by the contractor, by virtue of such alterations to be stated in said order. Should the owner and contractor not agree as to the amount to be paid or allowed, the work shall go on under the order required above, and in case of failure to agree, the determination of said amount shall be referred to arbitration, as provided for in article XII of this contract."

My opinion of December 24, 1912, referred to by you on the questions submitted was as follows:

"Attention is called to the sentence 'no such change shall be made until the price to be paid therefor shall have been agreed upon in writing between the commission and the contractor.' Inasmuch as a 'change' may not be made until a written agreement as above provided is entered into, it necessarily follows that payment cannot be made for a change in the plans or contract not so entered into.

"I am further of the opinion that the commission is not authorized to make payment of claims which cannot be enforced against the county."

To this opinion I still adhere, and shall endeavor to cover the additional facts, questions and law applicable thereto as set forth in your above quoted communication.

I have before me the contract of Evans & Company with the court house building commission of your county. It appears from the facts stated in your letter that the architect made certain changes in the details of the original plans and submitted them to the contractor. He then gave verbal authority and instructions to the contractor to make the changes for which extra compensation is sought. The building commission, including the county commissioners, was not party to these changes, no record thereof was made, and no memorandum or additional contract in writing was entered into relative thereto. No prices for these changes were fixed by architect, contractor or any one else, and if any allowance is to be made therefor, the same must be based upon the state of facts above recited, as a quantum meruit. Can any allowance be made, in view of the facts and the law as applied thereto? In my opinion it can not be done.

County commissioners and the four freehold electors appointed by the court, under section 2333, General Code, constitute the building commission and serve until the completion of the building. Their powers and duties cannot be delegated. The duties and powers of this commission are all statutory, and no money can be paid out of the county treasury even with their sanction and approbation unless the preliminary statutory steps leading up to such disbursement have been complied with literally. Such board has no implied powers, and he who deals with them is chargeable with a knowledge of what the law is relative to contracts, alterations thereof or extras thereunder. The matter, then, resolves itself into a simple proposition as to what the statute says concerning the course to be pursued in a case covered by the facts submitted herein.

Section 2340, General Code, says:

"When approved by the building commission, plans, drawings, representations, bills of material, specifications of work and estimates of cost thereof shall be filed by the county auditor in his office and shall not be altered unless such alteration shall first be drawn, specified and estimated as required by law for the original plans and approved by the building commission. No such change shall be made until the price to be paid therefor shall have been agreed upon in writing between the commission and the contractor."

Section 2341, General Code, provides that "resolutions for the adoption or alteration of plans or specifications, etc., shall be in writing, and require for their adoption the votes of five members of the commission, taken by yeas and nays and recorded on the journal of the county commissioners.

This utterly precludes the idea that the architect can make the alterations himself, submit the same to the contractor and orally order him to complete the work in conformity therewith. If the members of the building committee shall acquiesce therein or agree orally to such changes, their action would not render the county liable for the extras claimed thereunder.

The contract itself, in article 3 thereof, as quoted heretofore, specifically provides:

"No alterations shall be made in the work except upon the written order of the architect, the amount to be paid by the owner or allowed by the contractor by virtue of such alterations to be stated in said order."

No such compliance was had with the above terms, and any oral arrangement in that behalf renders the same ineffectual.

In view of the language of the statutes above quoted and the terms of the contract, I think the architect had no authority to order these changes made in the manner he did, and that no recovery can be had by the contractor for such extras.

Very truly yours,
TIMOTHY S. HOGAN,
Attorney General.

GERMAN CRIMINAL AUTHORITIES PERMITTED TO CLAIM REWARD OFFERED IN OHIO FOR ARREST AND APPREHENSION OF CRIMINAL IN GERMANY.

In Germany the rule prohibiting an officer to claim a reward for services which he is required to perform by virtue of his office, does not maintain, and German authorities may claim and receive a reward offered in Ohio for the arrest and conviction of a criminal unpunished in Germany.

COLUMBUS, OHIO, May 20, 1913.

HON. THEODORE H. TANGEMAN, Prosecuting Attorney, Auglaize County, Wapakoneta, O.

MY DEAR SIR:—I am in receipt of your letter of May 5th, in which you supply additional information relative to the claim of certain officers of the German government to a reward for the arrest and conviction of Joseph and John Hormann for the crime of horse stealing. It appears from the correspondence that the county commissioners of Auglaize county on the 18th day of May, 1907, adopted a general resolution offering a reward of fifty dollars ($50.00) for the detection, apprehension and conviction of horse thieves and of persons aiding and abetting in the stealing of horses.

In pursuance of this resolution the sheriff of the county caused to be printed and circulated notices of the reward offered by the county commissioners, together with a description of a certain horse, the property of Reverend B. Grimm, alleged to have been stolen by said Joseph and John Hormann. These men were tried and convicted of stealing said horse by the Bavarian land court at Memmingen, Germany, and sentenced to two years' imprisonment.

In view of the fact that the persons claiming this reward are officers of a foreign government, the strict rule that prohibits public officers accepting a reward for arrest and conviction of criminals does not apply. The real purpose which your board of commissioners has in view has been subserved by the foreign government in imposing a sentence for the crime committed. Your county and this state has been saved the expense growing out of the trial, and to my mind in honoring of a claim of this kind, even though the statutes may not have been strictly complied with, no abuse can result. Liberal treatment should be shown toward the officers and representatives of a foreign government who have assisted in meting out punishment to such offenders as the two Hormanns; and, too, when you consider the German government is punishing its own citizens for crime committed in Ohio, one is impressed with the lofty purpose of that government. Every consideration of justice and courtesy, in my judgment, requires that Auglaize county shauld pay the reward.

I am sending you this opinion in duplicate so that a copy thereof may be kept on file with your county auditor to the end that the bureau of inspection and supervision of public offices will be advised when they come to examine these items.

Thanking you for your courtesy and promptness, I beg to remain,

Very truly yours,
TIMOTHY S. HOGAN,
Attorney General.

DUTY OF COUNTY COMMISSIONERS TO HOLD AND DISPENSE TRUST FUND BEQUEATHED TO INFIRMARY DIRECTORS.

It is well settled that public corporations may hold bequests in trust for public uses and under section 2522, General Code, which requires county commissioners to make all contracts and purchases necessary for the county infirmary, they may hold and carry out the terms of a bequest made to the infirmary directors for the benefit of infirmary inmates.

COLUMBUS, OHIO, May 27, 1913.

HON. CHAS. F. ADAMS, Prosecuting Attorney, Lorain, Ohio.

DEAR SIR:—Under date of May 3rd, you requested my opinion as follows:

> "Prior to the enactment of the law dispensing with the infirmary directors and placing the infirmary under the control of the commissioners, the infirmary directors of Lorain county received a bequest in a certain will. The fund received by them was to be devoted to the providing of 'luxuries' for the inmates of the infirmary.
> "I desire to know whether any action on the part of the commissioners or infirmary superintendent is necessary to reduce this fund to their control, or whether by virtue of the statute, they are the successors of the infirmary directors to the extent that they may proceed with the disbursement of the fund according to the will?"

The power of the infirmary directors to receive this bequest was conferred by original section 2522, General Code. This section at the time the bequest was received, was as follows:

> "The board infirmary of directors shall make all contracts and purchases necessary for the county infirmary and prescribe such rules and regulations as it deems proper for its management and good government, and to promote sobriety, morality and industry among inmates. It shall meet not oftener than once each month at the infirmary, but the president shall call a special meeting thereof at any time he deems necessary. The directors shall keep a book in which the clerk shall record the proceedings at their meetings and of their transactions, which book shall at all times be open to public inspection."

Upon the power of the infirmary directors to receive this bequest, under the conditions imposed, the following is said in Dillon's municipal corporations, sections 981 and 982:

> "Section 981 (566). Municipal and public corporations may be the objects of public and private bounty. This is reasonable and just. They are in law clothed with the power of individuality. They are placed by law under various obligations and duties. Burdens of a peculiar character rest upon compact populations residing within restricted and narrow limits, to meet which property and revenues are absolutely necessary, and, therefore, legacies of personal property, devises of real property and grants or gifts of either species of property directly to the corporation for its own use and benefit, intended to and which have the effect to ease it of its obligations or lighten the burdens of its citizens, are, in the absence of disabling or restraining statutes, valid in law. Thus, a conveyance of land to a town or other public corporation, for benevolent or public purposes, as for a site for a school house, city or town house, and the like, is based upon a sufficient consideration and such conveyances are liberally construed in support of the object contemplated.

"Section 982 (567). Not only may municipal corporations take and hold property in their own right by direct gift, conveyance or device, but the cases firmly establish the principle, also, that such corporations, at least in this country, are capable, unless specially restrained, of taking property, real and personal, in trust for purposes germane to the objects of the corporation, or which will promote, aid or assist in carrying out or perfecting those objects."

The same principle applies to the board of infirmary directors, and I am of the opinion that there can be no question of their right to receive this bequest and to devote it to the proposition named.

The powers formerly resting in the board of infirmary directors have been transferred substantially in quantity to the county commissioners by section 2522 of the General Code, which section now reads as follows:

"Section 2522. The board of county commissioners shall make all contracts and purchases necessary for the county infirmary and prescribe such rules and regulations as it deems proper for its management and good government, and to promote sobriety, morality and industry among inmates. The commissioners shall keep a separate book in which the clerk, or if there is no commissioners' clerk, the county auditor, shall keep a separate record of their transactions respecting the county infirmary, which book shall at all times be open to public inspection."

Under the power herein conferred upon the county commissioners to make all contracts and purchases for the county infirmary and to maintain the management and control of this institution, I am of the opinion that they have the same power to hold and administer this bequest as did the infirmary directors.

Yours very truly,
TIMOTHY S. HOGAN,
Attorney General.

LEVIES IN ROAD DISTRICTS, UNDER SECTION 7095, GENERAL CODE, FOR INTEREST AND SINKING FUND PURPOSES MADE SUBSEQUENT TO JUNE 1, 1911, NOT EXCEPTED FROM THE 1910 TAX LIMIT OF THE SMITH ONE PER CENT. LAW.

Levies for interest in sinking fund purposes, not authorized by the electors prior to the enactment of the Smith one per cent. law in special districts, created for road or ditch improvements, are excepted by the terms of section 5649-3a from the limits of county, township, municipal and school levies.

The provision of this statute taking such levy from the control of the budget commissioners merely prevents the budget commissioners from cutting the same down, but does not exempt such levies from the 1910 tax limitations.

COLUMBUS, OHIO, June 4, 1913.

HON. A. M. HENDERSON, Prosecuting Attorney, Mahoning County, Youngstown, Ohio.

DEAR SIR:—I beg to acknowledge receipt of your letter of April 17, 1913, in which you request my opinion as to the application of the 1910 tax limit of the so-called "Smith One Per Cent. Law" to levies in road districts organized under section 7095 of the General Code for the purpose of providing for interest and sinking fund purposes in connection with an issue of bonds of such district made subsequently to June 1, 1911.

At the outset of the discussion of the question which you present, I call your attention to the fact that the so-called Kilpatrick bill passed by the current session of the general assembly eliminates from the Smith one per cent. law all reference to any 1910 tax limitation. This bill has passed the general assembly, but whether or not it is at present in effect depends upon the interpretation of article 2, section 1-d of the constitution of the state as amended in 1912. This part of the constitution provides for the initiative and referendum and prescribes a general rule under which

> "No law passed by the general assembly shall go into effect until ninety days after it shall have been filed by the governor in the office of the secretary of state, except as herein provided." (Section 1-c).

Section 1-d then provides exceptions to this general rule, among which is the following:

> "Laws providing for tax levies * * * shall go into immediate effect."

Now, the amendment to the Smith one per cent. law does affect the levying of taxes. It does not, however, directly provide for a tax levy in the sense, for example, that a tax levy is "provided for" by the so-called Hite road levy law passed by the current session, or by the statutes relating to the levies for interest, sinking fund and university purposes.

My opinion is not requested upon the point which I have raised, and I do not propose to anticipate the question to an undue extent. It occurs to me, however, that if the Kilpatrick bill be regarded as a law providing for a tax levy, it is already in effect, and obviates the whole question raised by you.

If, on the other hand, the Kilpatrick bill is not yet a law, and will not become a law until ninety days after having been filed by the governor in the office of the secretary of state, then a somewhat different situation arises because the bill has either not yet been filed or has been filed within the past few days by the governor in the office of the secretary of state. That being the case, the ninety days which the constitution provides for will not expire until sometime in July. The budget commission, however, under the general provisions of the Smith law, is required to meet and perform its work in the month of June. It is well known that the budget commission frequently requires a much longer period for the completion of its work and sometimes remains in session until the time is at hand for the delivery of the duplicate to the treasurer for collection of taxes thereon, the provisions of the Smith law respecting the time in which the work shall be performed being merely directory.

There is, therefore, a serious question as to whether or not the Kilpatrick bill would be operative this year if it be held to be otherwise than a law providing for a tax levy. Pursuasive reasons occur to me for holding both that the budget commission, if it were in session when the Kilpatrick bill became effective, might disregard the 1910 limitation; and, on the other hand, that the budget commission would be bound by the law as it existed when it began its work, and therefore by the 1910 limitation.

I call your attention to these matters because of the bearing which they may possibly have on your question. So far as your question is concerned it arises under the Smith law prior to its amendment by the Kilpatrick bill. The status of the road districts under section 7095 of the General Code is, it seems to me, made rather clear in the Smith law itself. Section 7095 of the General Code provides a method of improving roads by general taxation through the organization of two or more contiguous townships into road districts. The township, when so organized by the county commissioners upon the petition of resident taxpayers of the proposed district, becomes a special taxing district for road purposes under the government of road commissioners, one from each township in the district. These commissioners have the power to borrow money for the purpose of improving the roads designated by them for improvement in the district. This does not, however, affect the levying power, that being reserved to the county commissioners. (See sections 7123 and 7127). Apparently the bonds may be issued from time to time as the needs of the improvement project require, the limitation being upon the amount which may at any one time be outstanding. (See section 7124).

That provision of the Smith one per cent. law which it seems to me clearly defines the status of the levies made by the county commissioners for the purpose of road districts of this kind, is one of the provisions of section 5649-3a. That section, in the first instance, provides certain interior limitations, i. e., limitations upon the rate for current purposes of municipal corporations, townships, school districts and counties then follows this provision:

> "Such limits for county, township, municipal and school levies shall be exclusive of any special levy, provided for by a vote of the electors, special assessments * * * and levies * * * in special districts created for road or ditch improvements, over which the budget commissioners shall have no control."

Now, it will be observed that the only limitation of the Smith law from which levies in special districts created for road improvements are expressly exempted are these limitations upon county, township, municipal and school district levies as such. If it had been the intention of the legislature to exempt these levies from the other limitations of the act, it would have been most appropriate to insert the proposition which I have quoted in section 5649-2 or 5649-3 wherein there are certain exceptions which have been expressly made from the operation of the 1910 tax limitation, and also from the operation of the ten mill limitation. The general assembly's choice of phraseology in this instance cannot be ignored. Considering this point, then, it seems logical to hold that the general assembly intended the levy in the special road improvement district should be within those limitations of the act from which they were not expressly exempted.

Regard must be had, however, to the phraseology "over which the budget commission shall have no control;" yet when this clause is properly considered it offers no special difficulties. The budget commissioners have no control over certain other levies that are within the 1910 tax limitation and also the one per cent. limitation of sections 5649-2 and 5649-3. I refer to the state levies which must be taken into consideration in determining the application of both of the limitations just referred to, but which are quite beyond the control of the budget commission.

It seems clear to me that the levies in the special road districts, for road districts are like state levies in this particular. They cannot be reduced by the budget commission, but they must be first taken out together with state levies from the sum, so to speak, of the available amount in any district under the 1910 and the one per cent. limitation, leaving the remainder of such fund available for other purposes, for which taxes are to be levied. Putting it in another way, the budget commissioners have no control over these levies, but they must take these levies into consideration in exerting their control over the other levies which must be made in the district in which the former are applicable.

Of course it is possible that a part of the levies made in a given road district are outside of some of the limitations of sections 5649-2 and 5649-3 by reason of the fact that they constitute levies for interest and sinking fund purposes to provide for indebtedness incurred prior to the passage of the Smith act, which levies are exempted from the ten mill limitation by both of the sections last above mentioned. This, however, is not the case with the levies concerning which you particularly inquire. These levies would be made for the purpose of providing for the retirement of obligations incurred subsequently to the passage of the Smith act and without a vote of the people. Therefore they would have to be counted in ascertaining the operation of the 1910 tax limitation, and also that of ten mills.

Very truly yours,
TIMOTHY S. HOGAN,
Attorney General.

LOTTERIES—PLANS BY BUSINESS ORGANIZATION OF GIVING AWAY TICKETS UPON EACH PURCHASE OF A DEFINITE VALUE, SAID TICKETS TO ENTITLE POSSESSOR TO CHANCE DRAWINGS FOR PRIZES, ARE PROHIBITED IN OHIO.

A lottery is defined as a distribution of prizes—something valuable—by chance or lot. And under adjudicated cases, section 13063, General Code, prohibiting lottery schemes, business organizations may not give away tickets for each cash sale of a definite value, entitling the possessor to certain chances on prizes to be decided by lot.

COLUMBUS, OHIO, June 7, 1913.

HON. BENJAMIN OLDS, Prosecuting Attorney, Mt. Gilead, Ohio.

DEAR SIR:—On April 15, 1913, you submitted to this department a request for an opinion as follows:

> "Several business men organizations in this county propose giving away tickets for each cash sale of whatever amount the same may be, each $1.00 in value to be entitled to a chance, and every so often to give away prizes the winner of the prizes to be decided by lot, and have asked my opinion as prosecuting attorney, whether or not the same would come within the condemnation of the statute law of the state of Ohio. Will you kindly give me your opinion as to the same."

In reply thereto, section 13063, of the General Code, provides as follows:

> "Whoever vends, sells, barters or disposes of a ticket, order or device for or representing a number of shares or an interest in a lottery, 'policy' or scheme of chance, by whatever name, style or title denominated or known, whether located or to be drawn, paid or carried on within or without this state, shall be fined not more than five hundred dollars or imprisoned not more than six months, or both."

Section 13064, of the General Code, provides as follows:

> "Whoever establishes, opens, sets on foot, carries on, promotes, makes, draws or acts as 'backer' or 'vender' for or on account of or is in any way concerned in a lottery 'policy,' or scheme of chance, by whatever name, style or title denominated or known, whether located or to be drawn, paid or carried on within or without this state, or by any of such means, sells or exposes for sale anything of value, shall be fined not less than fifty dollars nor more than five hundred dollars and imprisoned not less than ten days nor more than ninety days."

A lottery has been defined by Bouvier's law dictionary as follows:

"A scheme for the distribution of prizes by chance."

A lottery is defined by Webster's dictionary as

"A distribution of prizes by lot or chance."

And by the Century dictionary as follows:

"Distribution of anything by lot, determination by chance; a scheme for the distribution of prizes by chance, among persons purchasing tickets, etc."

In law the term "lottery" embraces all schemes for the distribution of prizes by chance.

In the case of United States vs. Olney, 1 Abbott's United States reports, page 275, it is held:

"A scheme for the disposal of town lots, by the terms of which a number of lots are sold, and others are reserved to be distributed by lot among the purchasers of the first portion, so that the chance of obtaining one of the reserved or prize lots forms a part of the inducement or consideration for which each purchaser pays the price agreed on for the lot sold to him, is a 'lottery' within the operation of a law imposing a tax on lotteries, for the purposes of revenue."

At page 279 of the opinion therein the United States district court defines "lottery" as follows:

"A distribution of prizes—something valuable—by chance or lot constitutes a lottery."

In the case of Stevens vs. Times-Star (72 O. S.) page 112, the Ohio supreme court comments upon the various definitions of the term "lottery" at page 147 of the opinion as follows:

"Many definitions of the word lottery are found in the books. An often quoted definition is given by Folger, J., in Hull V. Ruggles, 56 N. Y., 424, which is 'where a pecuniary consideration is paid, and it is determined by lot or chance according to some scheme held out to the public, what and how much he who pays the money is to have for it, that is a lottery.' 'A sort of gaming contract by which, for a valuable consideration, one may, by favor of the lot, obtain a prize of a value superior to the amount or value of that which he risks.' "

American Cyclo. "A lottery," says the supreme court of Michigan, in The People vs. Elliott, 74 Mich. 2 4, "is a scheme by which a result is reached by some action or means taken, and in which result man's choice or will has no part nor can human reason foresight, sagacity, or design enable him to know or determine such result until the same has been acccomplished." However, it should not be concluded that the term "lot or chance" implies that if any element of certainty or skill enters into the scheme, it therefore relieves it of its character as a lottery, or scheme of chance. Chance is something that befalls; the result of unknown or uncertain forces or conditions. An intelligent definition is given in 6 Cyc., 89 C. thus: "Possibility, hazard, risk or the result or issue of uncertain and unknown conditions or forces, neither understandingly brought about by one's act, nor pre-estimated by one's understanding."

"A lottery is a species of gaming, which may be defined as a scheme for the distribution of prizes by chance among persons who have paid or agreed to pay, a valuable consideration for the chance to obtain a price." (25 Cyc. 1633).

You state in your request that it is the plan of the business men's organizations in your county to give away tickets for each purchase of $1.00 in value of merchandise, said ticket entitling such purchaser to a chance to draw prizes, the winners to be determined by lot. The weight of authority seems to hold to the effect that, procuring such tickets by the purchasing of goods, or with goods purchased, does not take such a proposition, similar to the plan of your business men's organization as above stated, out of the category of being a lottery or scheme of chance.

In the case of Stevens vs. Times-Star, supra, the newspaper company gave a chance to each subscriber, giving a fifty cent subscription, to guess upon the result of a certain election, the one guessing the closest to the total vote cast to receive a certain prize and others next nearest to receive prizes of less value, in accordance with their guess. The court held this proposition to constitute a lottery or scheme of chance, as follows:

"A guessing contest, instituted by a newspaper company, by which persons are invited to deliver to the company fifty cents each, twenty-four cents of which being payment for a subscription to the newspaper and the twenty-six cents for the privilege of making a guess upon the total vote for a state officer who is to be chosen at an approaching election, the guesser coming nearest to the actual total vote cast to receive a money prize from the fund equal to one-tenth thereof, and others next nearest to receive from the fund lesser money prizes, is within the condemnation of the statutes of Ohio against lotteries and schemes of chance and is an unlawful enterprise."

In the case United States vs. Olney, supra, an agreement was entered into by the defendant to sell a number of lots, each purchaser of a lot to receive a ticket which entitled him to a chance in drawing one of several other lots which were reserved for the lottery. The court in that case held that this proposition constituted a lottery as follows:

"A scheme for the disposal of town lots, by the terms of which a number of lots are sold, and others are reserved to be distributed by lot among the purchasers of the first portion, so that the chance of obtaining one of the reserved or prize lots forms a part of the inducement or consideration for which each purchaser pays the price agreed on for the lot sold to him, is a 'lottery' within the operation of a law imposing a tax on lotteries, for the purposes of revenue."

In construing said section 13063 and section 13064 of the General Code, (6930 and 6931 Bates Revised Statutes) supra, the court in the case of the Jackson Steel Nail

Co. vs. Marks, 4 C. C. R., page 343, held that the method of determining by a drawing, to whom of several subscribers a lot or lots were to be conveyed, constituted a scheme of chance or lottery, as follows:

> "Where a corporation undertook to raise money by agreeing to convey to the several persons who would subscribe for one or more of 400 lots at $200 each, to be paid for in the manner pointed out in said contract—the lot or lots so to be conveyed to the several subscribers to be determined by a drawing—this was a scheme of chance in contravention of the provision of section 6930-31, Revised Statutes, and therefore void. And no action can be maintained to recover the price agreed to be paid for such lots.
> "Offers of prizes to purchasers of goods, the prizes to be distributed by chance among the purchases (purchasers) constitute lotteries, whether the goods purchased or the chance to obtain a prize is the consideration that moves the purchaser to enter into the transaction; and of similar nature is the distribution of prizes by chance among purchases of concert tickets. (25 Cyc. 1637)."

In referring to the celebrated case of the American Art Union decided in the New York court in 1852, the court in the case of United States vs. Olney, supra, at page 282 of the opinion says:

> "The scheme of the Art Union was that by paying five dollars any person could become a subscriber and entitled to an engraving and certain numbers of The Bulletin containing the proceedings of the society, and the chance of obtaining one of a number of valuable paintings, which in December of each year were to be distributed by lot among the members. The drawing was to be conducted precisely as in this case, by placing the name of the subscriber in one box and the name of the painting in another. A number being drawn from the latter box, a name was drawn from the former one, and the person whose name was thus drawn was to be the owner of the prize represented by that number.
> "The supreme court decided that this was a lottery, 13 Barb. 577. The case was then taken to the court of appeals and argued on behalf of the Art Union with great ability. The court of appeals affirmed the decision of the supreme court that the scheme was a lottery." 7 N. Y. (3 Seld. 228).
> "The proprietors of a newspaper, in pursuance of a pre-arranged and advertised scheme, issued to each subscriber for their paper, in addition to the paper itself and without extra charge, a ticket which entitled the holder to participate in a distribution of prizes offered by the proprietors to all persons who should become subscribers. The distribution was made by lot. Held, that the scheme was a lottery within the purview of the criminal laws; and it made no difference that the tickets were not sold, but were given to subscribers and to no one else. (The State vs. Murford 73 Mo. Rep. 647.)
> "A merchant who gives to a designated class of customers an opportunity to secure, by lot or chance, any article of value additional to that for which such customers have paid, violates the provisions of section 407 of the Penal Code, which declares that 'no person shall keep, maintain, employ or carry on any lottery in this state, or other scheme or device for the hazarding of any money or valuable thing.'" (Meyer vs. State of Georgia, 51 L.R.A. 496.)

As measured by the above quoted definitions and by the principles laid down in the above cited authorities, it is apparent that the proposed plans of the business men's organizations of your county, as set forth in your inquiry constitute a lottery or scheme of chance and therefore this department is constrained to hold that the same come within and are prohibited by sections 13063 and 13064 of the General Code, above quoted.

Yours very truly,
TIMOTHY S. HOGAN,
Attorney General.

SNYDER ACT—BONDS MAY BE SOLD ONLY UPON ADVERTISEMENT AND BIDS.

The provision of section 5 of the Snyder act, permitting bonds issued thereunder to be sold at popular subscription, refers to that style of popular subscription which is provided for by sections 3926 and 3927, General Code, and bonds issued, therefore, under this act may not be sold at private sale without advertisement and bids.

COLUMBUS, OHIO, May 27, 1913.

HON. D. F. DUNLAVY, Prosecuting Attorney, Ashtabula County, Jefferson, Ohio.

DEAR SIR:—I acknowledge receipt of your telegram of May 26th in which you request my opinion as to whether or not bonds issued under the so-called Snyder emergency act passed by the recent session of the general assembly, known as house bill No. 640, may be sold without competitive bids.

Section 5 of the act referred to provides in part as follows:

> "* * * Such bonds may be sold at popular subscription or otherwise at not less than par. Their sale shall be advertised by notice published once a week, for two consecutive weeks, in one newspaper published and of general circulation in the county, or in either county, in case the municipal corporation or district is located in more than one county. When sold at popular subscription they shall be distributed to bidders according to the rules prescribed for municipal bonds by section 3827 of the General Code. * * *"

In my opinion no bonds may be sold under this act at private sale without advertising, but the advertisement required by the above quoted provision must be made in all cases.

"Popular subscription" to which the act refers is similar to that provided for by sections 3926 and 3927, General Code, which requires advertising.

Accordingly, I advise that bonds issued under the act mentioned may not be sold at private sale.

Yours very truly,
TIMOTHY S. HOGAN,
Attorney General.

WHEN PROVISIONS OF BUILDING CODE MAKE NECESSARY A GREATER EXPENDITURE FOR THE ERECTION OF A TOWN HALL THAN HAS BEEN AUTHORIZED BY ELECTION, A NEW ELECTION IS NECESSARY TO AUTHORIZE THE INCREASE—SUBMISSION OF QUESTION AT REGULAR ELECTION.

When under the terms of sections 3395 and 3396, General Code, an election in a township is held, and at such election the erection of a town hall, at a settled cost, is favorably voted upon, and an expenditure in excess of the amount authorized is made obligatory, by virtue of the building code provisions, such increased expenditure may not be made without the holding of a subsequent election upon the question of making the same, with a result favorable to the excess expenditure.

Under section 4840, General Code, since a special election is not authorized for such purpose, the question must be voted upon at a regular election.

COLUMBUS, OHIO, June 9, 1913.

HON. R. H. PATCHIN, Prosecuting Attorney, Chardon, Ohio.

DEAR SIR:—I beg to acknowledge receipt of your letter of May 28th, requesting my opinion upon the following question:

> "If, after a vote has been taken and carried in a township upon the proposition of issuing bonds in an estimated amount, for the purpose of erecting a township hall, it develops that the amount so authorized to be borrowed is insufficient to complete the building in accordance with the specifications of the state building code, may the amount necessary to complete the township hall be borrowed without holding another election; and if another election is necessary may it be a special election, or must the proposition be submitted at a general election?"

It is, of course, obvious that the mere fact that the requirements of the state building code are responsible for the additional cost of the proposed structure is immaterial.

I am clearly of the opinion that money may not be borrowed in addition to that already authorized without resubmitting the question. Section 3395, General Code, under which this proceeding is had, expressly provides that the electors of the township shall have notice "of the estimated cost" of the proposed improvement.

It will be noticed that the election is, however, not upon the proposition of borrowing money, but upon the proposition of levying taxes. Sections 3395 and 3396, General Code, provide as follows:

> "If in a township it is desired to build, remove, improve or enlarge a town hall, at a greater cost than is otherwise authorized by law, the trustees may submit the question to the electors of the township, and shall cause the clerk to give notice thereof and of the estimated cost, by written notices posted in not less than three public places within the township at least ten days before election." (Section 3395).
> "At such election the electors in favor of such hall, removal, improvement or enlargement shall place on their ballots 'Town Hall—Yes,' and those opposed 'Town Hall—No.' If a majority of all the ballots cast at the election are in the affirmative, the trustees shall levy the necessary tax, but not in any year to exceed four mills on the dollar valuation. Such tax shall not be levied under such vote for more than seven years. In anticipation of the collection of taxes, the trustees may borrow money and issue bonds for the whole or any part therefor, bearing interest not to exceed seven per cent. payable annually." (Section 3396).

The question submitted is the policy of building by general taxation a structure of the estimated cost specified in the notices of election. The bonds are to be issued in anticipation of taxes to be levied. In fact, the building might be constructed without the issuance of any bonds whatever.

There is no express inhibition against expending more money for the purpose authorized than the estimated cost of the improvement as stipulated in the notices of election. I am of the opinion, however, that the effect of the notice is to create such an implied limitation; so that if the cost of the building materially exceeds the amount estimated the levy of taxes or the issuance of bonds for the excess might be enjoined at the suit of a taxpayer. Whether or not a slight and perhaps accidental excessive expenditure would, under the peculiar machinery of these sections, create such a right of action is a question which it is not necessary to determine on the facts which you submit, because it appears from your letter that the estimated cost was six thousand dollars and the total cost will be nine thousand dollars, an increase of fifty per cent. over the estimated cost.

As to the questions repecting the kind of an election which may be held, I call attention to the fact that the section above quoted contains no specific provision, and that, therefore, the case is one within the intendment of section 4840, General Code, which provides as follows:

"Unless a statute providing for the submission of a question to the voters of a county, township, city or village provides for the calling of a special election for that purpose, no special election shall be so called. The question so to be voted upon shall be submitted at a regular election in such county, township, city or village, and notice that such question is to be voted upon shall be embodied in the proclamation for such election."

It is clear that under this section the question cannot be submitted otherwise than at a regular election.

Very truly yours,
TIMOTHY S. HOGAN,
Attorney General.

DUTY OF BOARD OF DIRECTORS OF AGRICULTURAL SOCIETY TO MAINTAIN FENCE IN THE SAME MANNER AS INDIVIDUALS.

Inasmuch as a county agricultural society is not a public corporation, such society is comprehended by the terms of a statute applicable to persons generally and such corporation is obliged to maintain fences to the same extent that individuals are so required to do.

COLUMBUS, OHIO, June 2, 1913.

HON. THOS. E. MCELHINEY, Prosecuting Attorney, McConnelsville, Ohio.

DEAR SIR:—Under date of April 30th you submitted a request for my opinion upon the question of the constitutionality of the laws providing for two days road labor; and also whether or not the board of directors of an agricultural society are obliged to maintain fences enclosing their grounds. The first question I answered by sending you copy of an opinion heretofore rendered, and I am pleased to now take up your second question. Your inquiry is as follows:

> "Is it the duty of the board of directors of an agricultural society to maintain all or any part of the fence inclosing their grounds when the same are owned by the society?"

The method of organization and the powers and duties of county and district agricultural societies are set out in sections 9880 to 9910, General Code. These statutes provide, in brief, for the organization of such societies and the incorporation of the same for the purpose of holding fairs and offering awards for the improvement of agricultural implements and products. Certain provisions are therein made for assistance to such societies in the purchase of their property and for reimbursement of their funds by the county. Sections 9885 and 9906 of these statutes are as follows:

> "Section 9885. County societies which have been, or may hereafter be organized, are declared bodies corporate and politic, and as such shall be capable of suing and being sued, and of holding in fee simple such real estate as they have heretofore purchased, or may hereafter purchase, as sites thereon to hold their fairs. They may mortgage the grounds of the society for the purpose of renewing or extending pre-existing debts, and for the purpose of furnishing money to purchase additional land. But if the county commissioners have paid money out of the county treasury to aid in the purchase of the site of such grounds, no mortgage shall be given without the consent of such commisssioners.
> "Section 9906. When the title to grounds and improvements occupied by agricultural societies is in the county commissioners, the control and management of such lands and improvements shall be vested in the board of directors of such society so long as they are occupied and used by it for holding agricultural fairs. Moneys realized by the society in holding county fairs and derived from renting or leasing the grounds and buildings, or portions thereof, in the conduct of fairs or otherwise, over and above the necessary expenses thereof, shall be paid into the county treasury of the society, to be used as a fund for keeping such grounds and buildings in good order and repair, and in making other improvements from time to time deemed necessary by its directors."

Under the first quoted of these statutes county societies are made bodies corporate with power to sue and be sued, and to hold real estate as sites whereon to hold their fairs. Under this statute and the accompanying sections, which recognize throughout the duty of the board to hold and conduct such fairs, and to manage the property, there can be no question of the power of the board to maintain fences on the property where the same are a necessary incident to the conduct of the fairs and the proper maintenance of the grounds.

This opinion is strengthened by the terms of section 9906, General Code, which specifically vests in the board of directors of such society the control and management of such lands and improvements, even though the title to the same be vested in the county commissioners.

If there be any duty, therefore, to keep the grounds of an agricultural society fenced, the board of directors of such society, being given the full control and management of the grounds and improvements, would be the officers vested with the responsibility of carrying such duty into effect.

I have been able to find nothing in the statutes of this state expressly requiring such grounds to be fenced in any special manner. There are numerous provisions throughout the statutes, however, making it incumbent upon private individuals who are owners of property to maintain fences on the same. Ordinarily, a statute requiring an individual or "person" to maintain a fence includes a corporation. In Clark & Marshall on private corporations, sections 23 and 24, the following is said:

> "Section 23. In general. A corporation is a 'person', 'resident,' 'inhabitant' or 'citizen,' within the meaning of such terms in a constitutional or statutory provision, when it is within the reason and purpose of the provision, but not otherwise.
> "Section 24. A corporation as a 'person.' Since a corporation is a legal entity, and has an artificial existence distinct from that of its members, so that it can act through its duly-authorized agents as if it were an individual, it has been properly described as an 'artificial person.' While it is invisible and intangible, it is a person in the law, and, as such, it has repeatedly been held to be within a constitutional or statutory provision using the word 'person,' and not referring to corporations in express terms.
> "The rule in this respect is that, when a constitutional or statutory provision confers a right or imposes a duty or liability upon any 'person' generally, without referring to corporations eo nomine, it applies to corporations, as well as to natural persons, if they are within its reason and purpose. But they are not included if they are not within its reason and purpose. In some states there is an express statutory provision that the word 'person' in a statute may be extended to bodies politic and corporate, but such a provision is not at all necessary.

There are decisions, both of this state and other states, wherein the court passed upon the nature of agricultural societies. Thus, on page 66 of Clark & Marshall on Private Corporations, the following is said:

> "A state board of agriculture, or agricultural society, composed of private individuals, and incorporated for the purpose of promoting agriculture, holding agricultural fairs, etc., is not a public corporation, though the state has made an appropriation of money for its benefit."

In the case of Markley vs. State of Ohio, 12 O. C. C. n. s. page 83, the court says:

> "In Dunn vs. Agricultural Society, 46 O. S. 97, the supreme court of Ohio held that this, the Brown County Agricultural Society, was a private corporation aggregate, being a number of natural persons associated together by their free consent for the better accomplishment of their purposes, and were bound to the same care in the use of their property and conduct of their affairs to avoid injury to others as natural persons, and a disregard or neglect of that duty involves a like liability.
> "If this association was a public agency established exclusively for public purpose by the state, and connected with the administration of the local governments, then it might well be said the legislature had authority to regulate even to prohibition of acts which would interfere with its successful operation. The court, however, having found that it was a private corporation it must be treated the same as a natural person, though it may serve a public purpose."

and in the case of Chemical Company vs. Calvert, 7 O. N. P. n. s. 107, the language of the court is as follows:

"The supreme court of this state has expressly decided in Dunn vs. Agricultural Society, 46 O. S. 93, that a county agricultural society, organized under the act of February 8, 1846, and amendments thereto, was not a public agency of the state, invested with power to assist the state in the conduct of local administration, and with no power to decline the functions devolved upon it, but was only a voluntary association of individuals formed for their own advantage, convenience and pleasure.

"Some time after the passage of the act by the legislature of this state creating the state board of agriculture, the legislature of the state of Indiana passed an act which is practically a copy of the Ohio act creating the Ohio state board of agriculture, and it seems manifest that the legislature of Indiana merely copied the Ohio law upon the subject.

"In the case of Downey vs. The Indiana State Board of Agriculture, 129 Indiana 443, the supreme court of Indiana decided that the Indiana state board of agriculture was a private corporation. The reasoning of the supreme court of Indiana in deciding that case seems to me to leave no reasonable doubt that our state board of agriculture, which was created under precisely a similar law to that of the Indiana state board of agriculture, is a private corporation.

"It seems that laws similar to the law of Ohio under which the Ohio state board of agriculture was created, were originally passed in other states besides Ohio and Indiana, and that when brought before the courts it was held that these corporations were not public corporations or agencies of the state, but private corporations. It seems that Minnesota also had such a law, and in the case of Lane vs. The Minnesota State Agricultural Society, 62 Minn. 175, it was decided by the supreme court of that state that the state agricultural society was not a public corporation organized for the purpose solely of discharging a governmental function. The court pointed out that the state had no voice in the selection or control of its officers or in fixing their compensation, etc. After this decision, the legislature of that state proceeded to create a department of agriculture.

"The case of Thomas vs. Lambert, 44 Iowa 239, is also authority upon the point that this state board of agriculture is not a public agency of the state. Other authorities are cited to the same effect in the brief of plaintiff's counsel, but these seem to me to be conclusive upon this proposition, and I am therefore forced to the conclusion that the Ohio state board of agriculture is not a public corporation, or agency, or department of the state government, but is essentially a private corporation."

Such agricultural societies not being agencies of the state must be held to be included in the same manner as individuals in statutes prescribing regulations with reference to the maintenance and repair of fences. From the nature of your question it would not seem necessary to enumerate the special provisions making such regulations.

In conclusion, therefore, I am of the opinion that the board of directors of county agricultural societies are bound to maintain fences on their grounds in the same manner and to the same extent as individuals are required so to do.

Very truly yours,
TIMOTHY S. HOGAN,
Attorney General.

INDIGENT WIDOW OF SOLDIER WHO HAS SUBSEQUENTLY MARRIED AND DIES A WIDOW MAY BE BURIED AT THE EXPENSE OF THE COUNTY.

Under section 2950, General Code, the county commissioners may bury at the expense of the county, the body of the widow of any soldier who has done service at any time in the army of the United States. Under this statute a widow who marries after the decease of such soldier and whose second husband dies leaving her in indigent circumstances, may upon her death be buried at the expense of the county.

COLUMBUS, OHIO, June 9, 1913.

HON. E. L. SAVAGE, Prosecutinp Attorney, Paulding, Ohio.

DEAR SIR:—On May 15, 1913, you submitted to this department for our opinion, the following request:

> "We beg to ask you for a construction of section 2950 of the General Code. Does said section authorize the county commissioners to defray the necessary funeral expenses in a case presenting the following facts and conditions?
> "There recently died in this county a woman whose first husband was a soldier. After the first husband's death she married a man who was not a soldier. After living with him some years he died. After the death of the second husband the widow's pension which had accrued by reason of the death of her first husband, was restored to her. She survived her second husband several years and died in indigent circumstances not owning sufficient property to pay the necessary funeral expenses. The question is should the county commissioners, under the provisions of said section, defray the necessary funeral expenses of this woman?"

In reply thereto, section 2950 of the General Code, provides as follows:

> "The county commissioners of each county shall appoint two suitable persons in each township and ward in the county, other than those prescribed by law for the care of paupers and the custody of criminals, who shall contract, at a cost not to exceed seventy-five dollars, with the undertaker, selected by the friends of the deceased, and cause to be interred in a decent and respectable manner, the body of any honorably discharged soldier, sailor or marine having at any time served in the army or navy of the United States, or the mother, wife or widow of any such soldier, sailor or marine, or any army nurse who did service at any time in the army of the United States, who dies, not having the means to defray the necessary funeral expenses. Such burial may be made in any cemetery or burial ground within the state, other than those used exclusively for the burial of paupers and criminals."

You state in your letter of inquiry, that after the death of the first husband who was a soldier in the war of the rebellion, his widow received a pension for some years and then remarried and of course her pension was discontinued at the time of her second marriage. After the death of her second husband, her pension was again restored to her as the widow of her first husband, who, as herein before stated, was a soldier in the war of the rebellion. This was done I take it, in accordance with section 4708 of the Federal Statutes, which said section provides in part as follows:

"The remarriage of any widow, dependent mother, or dependent sister entitled to pension shall not bar her right to such pension to the date of her remarriage, whether an application therefor was filled before or after such marriage; but on the remarriage of any widow, dependent mother, or dependent sister having a pension, such pension shall cease: Provided, however, That any widow who was the lawful wife of any officer or enlisted man in the army, navy or marine corps of the United States, during the period of his service in any war, and whose name was placed or shall hereafter be placed on the pension roll because of her husband's death, as the result of wound or injury received or disease contracted in such military or naval service, and whose name has been or shall hereafter be dropped from said pension roll by reason of her marriage to another person who has since died or shall hereafter die, or from whom she has been heretofore or shall be hereafter divorced, upon her own application and without fault on her part, and if she is without means of support other than her daily labor as defined by the acts of June twenty-seventh, eighteen hundred and ninety, and May ninth, nineteen hundred, shall be entitled to have her name again placed on the pension roll at the rate now provided for widows by acts of July fourteenth, eighteen hundred and sixty-two, March third, eighteen hundred and seventy-three, and March nineteenth eighteen hundred and eighty-six, such pensions to commence from the date of the filing of her application in the pension bureau after the approval of this act."

By virtue of the provisions of said statute, the Federal Government recognized her at least to the extent of granting her a pension as the widow of her first husband, notwithstanding the fact that she has remarried, and her second husband was also deceased.

It was the clear intention of the legislature in enacting section 2950 of the General Code, supra, to provide that every honorably discharged soldier, sailor or marine, should be interred or buried in a respectable manner and that every mother, wife or widow of any such soldier, sailor or marine, should also be interred or buried in a respectable manner.

Therefore, in direct answer to your question, it is the opinion of this department for the foregoing reasons, that the county commissioners, at least from a humanitarian standpoint and under the circumstance you state in your inquiry; should defray the necessary funeral expenses of the woman about whom you inquire, whose first husband was a soldier in the war of the rebellion and whom the United States government recognized as the widow of such soldier, by restoring her pension to her after the death of the second husband.

Yours very truly,
TIMOTHY S. HOGAN,
Attorney General.

BANK HOLDING COUNTY FUNDS UNDER CONTRACT FOR DEPOSIT THEREOF PAYS RATE PROVIDED BY CONTRACT FOR PERIOD DURING WHICH SUCH FUNDS ARE HELD OVER PERIOD SPECIFIED IN THE CONTRACT.

When a bank holds or deposits county funds under contract with the county, providing for their deposit for three years at the rate of 4.51 per cent., the bank should be required to pay the same rate for the period such funds are held over the time designated by the contract when the banks make no objections thereto.

COLUMBUS, OHIO, June 6, 1913.

HON. JOE T. DOAN, Prosecuting Attorney, Wilmington, Ohio.

DEAR SIR:—On February 6, 1913, you made the following request for my opinion:

> "On November 1, 1909, the First National Bank of Wilmington, Ohio, was made the depository for the county funds for the period of three years ending November 1, 1912. The rate to be paid was 4.51.
> "Near the close of said term said funds were readvertised, but on account of a defect in the advertisement a readvertisement was made necessary, and the money was not finally awarded, and the new depository created until December 23, 1912. The rate to be paid being 2.90 for both active and inactive deposits.
> "From November 1 to December 23, 1912, the aforesaid bank retained the moneys of the county, and made no attempt and expressed no desire to turn the money into the county treasury.
> "The question is whether the bank should pay to the county 4.51 per cent. on the average daily balance on deposit in the bank from November 1 to December 23, 1913."

Under the facts detailed by you, if at the expiration of the three year period the bank did not wish to continue paying at the rate of 4.51 per cent. on the funds of the county deposited with it, it should have returned such deposit to the treasurer at that time.

Section 2729 of the General Code is as follows:

> "Upon the acceptance by the commissioners of such undertaking, and upon the hypothecation of the bonds as hereinafter provided, such bank or banks or trust companies shall become the depositary or depositaries of the money of the county and remain such for three years or until the undertaking of its successor or successors is accepted by the commissioners."

I take it that under this section the bank is undoubtedly the designated depository from the time its undertaking is accepted by the commissioners until the date when the undertaking of its successor or successors is accepted, and so long as it receives and retains the funds of the county, it must be considered that it receives and retains them under the contract made with the county when the funds were awarded to it and its undertaking accepted.

Yours very truly,
TIMOTHY S. HOGAN,
Attorney General.

PERSON ACQUITTED ON GROUND OF INSANITY SHALL BE DELIVERED TO PROBATE COURT OF COUNTY WHERE TRIED TO BE PROCEEDED AGAINST ON CHARGE OF LUNACY AND COMMITTED TO HOSPITAL FOR INSANE AS A PATIENT FROM COUNTY WHERE TRIED.

Under section 13612, General Code, a person tried and indicted for an offense in a county other than his residence and acquitted on the ground of insanity, should be certified by the clerk of the trial court to the probate court of the county where tried. Such probate court shall proceed upon the charge of lunacy and commit the defendant to a proper hospital for the insane as a patient of the county where tried.

COLUMBUS, OHIO, June 6, 1913.

HON. I. H. BLYTHE, Prosecuting Attorney, Carrollton, Ohio.

DEAR SIR:—In your letter of May 14th, you say:

> "A man is indicted for horse stealing in Carroll County. Defense is insanity. Jury in common pleas court finds him insane. He is sent to the probate court, and he finds that his legal residence is in Lucas county."

Your first letter was indefinite as to the procedure in finding him insane. Upon inquiry from this office, under date of June 3, 1913, you give us the information necessary, as follows:

> "The jury found the defendant not guilty on the sole ground of being insane at the time he committed the act."

You then ask: "Which probate judge, of Carroll or Lucas county, should proceed as of inquest held?"

Section 13612, General Code, provides as follows:

> "When a person tried upon an indictment for a offense is acquitted on the sole ground that he was insane, such fact shall be found by the jury in the verdict, and certified by the clerk to the probate court. Such person shall not be discharged, but forthwith delivered to the probate court, to be proceeded against upon the charge of lunacy, and the verdict shall be prima facie evidence of his insanity."

This is the statute governing and controlling the question submitted by you. In order to determine which probate court should hear the case we must examine the law governing the proceedings under the above section.

I am of the opinion that the clerk of the court in which the verdict of acquittal was rendered, upon the sole ground of insanity, should certify said verdict to the probate court of the county in which he was tried; and that the person so tried should not be discharged but delivered to the probate court of the county in which he was tried; that, thereafter, said defendant, so acquitted upon the sole ground of insanity, should be proceeded against upon the charge of lunacy by the said probate court in conformity to law. When found insane in such proceeding he shall be committed to and be received by the proper hospital for the insane as a Carroll county patient. This seems to be the only rational solution of the proposition.

Very truly yours,
TIMOTHY S. HOGAN,
Attorney General.

COUNTY COMMISSIONERS—REBUILDING OF COURT HOUSE DESTROYED BY FIRE—NECESSITY FOR ELECTION—WHEN AN EXPENDITURE EXCEEDS $50,000—PROCEDURE FOR BOND ISSUE—ILLEGALITY OF CHANGE IN CONTRACT—NON-NECESSITY OF AUDITOR'S CERTIFICATE—LEGALITY OF PROCEDURE WHEN CONTRACT MADE PRIOR TO AUTHORIZATION OF ELECTORS—EFFECT OF RECOVERY OF INSURANCE—USE OF PROCEEDS OF TAX FOR CURRENT YEAR— DETERIORATION OF STANDING WALLS PART OF ORIGINAL DESTRUCTION, NOT A SUBSEQUENT CASUALTY—CURE OF DEFECTS BY AUTHORIZATION OF ELECTORS SUBSEQUENT TO MAKING OF CONTRACT—ARCHITECT'S FEE PAYABLE FROM COUNTY OR BUILDING FUND.

Under section 5638, General Code, the county commissioners may not expend more than $15,000 for the building of county buildings without the authorization of electors, except in the event of casualty, and as otherwise provided, nor may they expend more than $10,000 for the enlarging, repairing, improving or rebuilding of a public county building without the authorization of electors.

Under section 2436, General Code, which must be read in connection with and in pai materia to section 5638, General Code, as an exception thereto, the county commissioners may expend up to $50,000 for the rebuilding of a court house destroyed by fire without the authorization of the electors. The limitation of this latter section being upon the amount of the expenditure and not a separate limitation upon appropriation, levy and expenditure.

When, therefore, the county commissioners in the event of such casualty, have on hand an amount recovered from insurance and a further amount from the county treasury, and contemplate an expenditure exceeding $50,000, and issue bonds, and enter into contract for the erection of a building exceeding such amount, the question of whether a subsequent election ratifying such contract and issue of bonds would cure the proceedings is one of doubt. The legality of the contract would in all probability be upheld by the court when so ratified, but the legality of the bond issue, at least in so far as original bond holders as opposed to bona fide purchasers for value are concerned would be questionable.

The holding of such election, however, with favorable action and the ballot, disclosing the facts as they existed, would operate to confirm the estoppel existing against the county, and the courts, under the circumstances, of emergency would in all probability be constrained to protect the bond holders and the contractors.

When such expenditure is authorized there is nothing to prevent the use of a tax levied for the county building fund for the current year to pay such expenditure.

Under section 2436, General Code, there can be but destruction, authorizing such expenditure, and the subsequent deterioration of the standing walls during the period of reconstruction cannot be construed such a second casualty as to authorize a renewal of the proceedings on such expenditure.

Inasmuch as section 5639-1, General Code, authorizes the county commissioners to fix a day upon which such question shall be submitted, the same shall be submitted at a special election. Inasmuch as there is no express provision authorizing the county commissioners to provide for alterations and changes in the plans and specifications without advertisement for bids, where the amount exceeds $200.00, changes involving an excessive amount are illegal.

Architects' fees may be paid either out of the general county fund or out of the building fund; the better and more general practice being to pay out of the building fund.

COLUMBUS, OHIO, June 23, 1913.

HON. IRVING CARPENTER, Prosecuting Attorney, Norwalk, Ohio.

DEAR SIR:—I beg to acknowledge receipt of memorandum, dated June 12th, and prepared by yourself, setting forth the statement of facts upon which certain questions arise, concerning which questions you invite my opinion. I also acknowledge receipt of your letter of June 16th, suggesting an additional question upon the same statement of facts.

The facts are as follows:

"The court house of Huron county was partially destroyed by fire in the summer of 1912. The building and its contents were covered by insurance, so that the county realized about thirty-four thousand dollars from this source.

"Immediately after the occurrence of the fire the commissioners caused plans, specifications, details and estimates to be prepared. Such plans, etc., were duly submitted to the commissioners, clerk of court, sheriff, probate judge and the appointee of the judge of the court of common pleas, as provided in section 2348, General Code. Said plans provided for the enlargement and fire-proofing of the building and the veneering of the exterior walls, which were left standing at the time of the fire, with sawed sand stone. The architect's estimate of the cost of the building, exclusive of numerous items of equipment was about $91,000.

"While the plans, etc., were in process of preparation the commissioners, without a vote of the people, assuming authority under section 2436, General Code, authorized the sale of bonds in the amount of fifty thousand dollars. The bonds were sold and delivered, realizing about $54,000 in cash.

"There was, at the time, about $12,000 in the general building fund of the county, so that the total amount of money available for the work was about $89,000.

"On January 2, 1913, the contract for the building was entered into. providing in the aggregate for expenditures amounting to about $82,500. Time after time, during the progress of the work, numerous additions and changes have been made in the plans and specifications, bringing the total expense of the general contract up to substantially $85,000.

"In the meantime separate contracts for the installation of necessary equipment have been made, aggregating in amount a sum sufficient to make the entire cost of the proposed improvement about $100,100.00, to which must be added a five per cent. architect's fee.

"Now, it has just been discovered that the old outside walls, which have been subjected to the elements during the winter, and which have deteriorated during that time, are not strong enough to sustain the burden of the new building and will have to be rebuilt. If this is done the general contract expense will be increased about $20,000, making the total expense of the improvement in the neighborhood of $128,000.

"The commissioners have asked the budget commission for a liberal allowance for general building fund purposes."

I think I have fairly abstracted the necessarily lengthy statement of facts which you make. Upon this statement you submit the following quesions:

"1. Under section 2436, General Code, can the commissioners expend more than $50,000 without submitting the question of the policy of the expenditure to the electors; or does the limitation fixed in that section refer only to the amount of bonds that can be issued without a vote?

"2. Can the proceeds of the tax for the current year, levied for general building fund purposes be used to help in rebuilding the court house?

"3. Does the deterioration of the standing walls, as described in the statement of facts, constitute a separate casualty? And if so, does its occurrence authorize a further bond issue without a vote of the electors, under section 2436, General Code?

"4. May a special election be now held to authorize the issuance of more bonds, and the expenditure of the money necessary to complete the building? If so, or in case a submission at a general election is required, what amount should be indicated on the ballot—the amount over and above funds already on hand; or the entire cost of the building; or the cost of the building in excess of $50,000?

"5. Assuming a negative answer to the first question, above stated, may the defects in the proceedings already had be cured by an election to be held in the future?

"6. Have the commissioners power to make changes or alterations in plans for the rebuilding of a court house, made necessary by unforeseen contingencies, involving an expenditure of over $200.00, and to enter into supplementary or subsiduary contracts therefor with the original contractor without advertising for bids?

"7. Can the architect's fee be paid from the general county fund; or must it be paid from the building fund?"

The following sections of the General Code are involved in your questions:

"Section 5638. The county commissioners shall not (1) levy a tax, (2) appropriate money, or (3) issue bonds for the purpose of building county buildings * * * the expense of which will exceed $15,000, except in case of casualty and as hereinafter provided; * * * or enlarge, repair, improve or rebuild a public county building, the entire cost of which expenditure will exceed $10,000; without first submitting to the voters of the county the question as to the policy of making such expenditure.

"Section 5639-1. When the board of county commissioners desires to submit such question to the voters of the county it shall pass * * * a resolution declaring the necessity of such expenditure, fixing the amount of bonds to be issued, if any, in connection therewith, and fixing the date upon which the question of making any such expenditure shall be so submitted, and shall cause a copy of such resolution to be certified to the deputy state supervisors of elections of the county; and thereupon the deputy state supervisors shall * * * make * * * arrangements for the submission of the question * * * at the time fixed in such resolution.

"* * * notice of the submission of any such question shall be given the deputy state supervisors by publication * * * which notice * * * shall state (1) the amount of such proposed expenditure, (2) the amount of the bonds, if any, to be issued in connection therewith, (3) the purpose for which such expenditure is to be made, and (4) the time of holding such election.

"Section 5640. The ballots * * * shall have printed upon the same the words, 'In favor of the expenditure of $_____ for the purpose of _____' and 'Against the expenditure of $_____ for the purpose of _____,' said blanks to be filled with the amount proposed to be expended and the purpose for which said money is to be expended. * * *."

Before quoting other sections I deem it proper to pause for the purpose of commenting upon the meaning of the sections already quoted.

Obviously, the limitation upon the power of the county commissioners, imposed by these related sections, affects not only the power to borrow money by the issuance of bonds, but also, and equally, the power to make the expenditure. In fact, the question submitted substantially amounts to a joining of the two propositions, in that the notice of election is required to set forth both the total expenditure and the amount of bonds to be issued; so that it is presumed that the electors have in mind both of these questions when voting upon the proposition submitted to them.

Section 5638, General Code, above quoted, is peculiar in another respect. The exception "in case of casualty and as hereinafter provided" is apparently limited to the matter of building county buildings, and by a strict reading of the statute there is no exception on its face to the requirement that the repair and rebuilding of public county buildings, if the entire cost of the expenditure will exceed ten thousand dollars, be submitted to the voters of the county. In fact, I cannot avoid the conclusion that so far as section 5638 and succeeding sections themselves are concerned, there is no exception whatever to the requirement that the enlargement, improvement, repair and rebuilding of a public county building, if it exceeds $10,000 in cost, be submitted to the voters of the county.

It is my opinion that the words "except in case of casualty" constitute an exception to the requirements respecting the building of a court house, and not the rebuilding thereof. To hold otherwise would be to do violence to the English language.

I pause here to remark that this distinction is by no means inconsequential; for if the enterprise be the building of a court house, and the total cost exceeds $25,000, then, there must be a court house commission, under section 2333 and succeeding sections, General Code, but a court house commission is not required in case the proposition is to "rebuild."

But, of course, the sections which I have already quoted do not set forth all the exceptions to their operation. There are several others than those specified in section 5638 itself. Thus, section 5643 does away with the necessity of submitting the proposition to the electors in cases of the decay or destruction of important public bridges. The section which you cite, section 2436, is of this class. It provides as follows:

> "For the purpose of rebuilding (a) * * * court house destroyed by fire or other casualty, the commissioners of a county may (1) appropriate money, (2) levy tax, (3) issue and sell the bonds of such county in anticipation thereof, in an amount not to exceed $50,000, without first submitting to the voters of said county, the question of rebuilding such * * * court house, appropriating such money, levying such tax and issuing and selling such bonds * * * The provisions of section twenty-four hundred and forty-four (requiring the circulation of hand bills or the publication of notice) and fifty-six hundred and sixty (requiring the issuance of an auditor's certificate) of the General Code shall not apply to the making of any of the improvements mentioned in this section."

It is apparent on the face of this section, in the first place, that it is intended to be an exception to the provisions of section 5638, et seq.; otherwise, the reference therein, to the submission of the question to a vote of the electors, would be meaningless. Therefore, the two sections are to be considered together, being strictly in pari materia. So construing them, the conclusion inevitably follows that the limitation of $50,000 in section 2436 is upon the power of the commissioners to make the expenditure—not merely upon their power to issue the bonds. The fact that the commissioners may have on hand in the treasury, available for expenditure, an amount which, added to the sum of $50,000, will presumably provide for the improvement, does not dispense with the necessity of submitting the question of spending the aggregate amount in excess of $50,000 to a vote of the electors.

This is my opinion in answer to your first question.

For purposes of convenience, I shall now take up your fifth question, which is intimately related to your first question, and the answer to which will, I think, throw some light upon the meaning of the statutory provisions already considered.

It is to be observed that both section 5638 and its successors, on the one hand, and section 2436, on the other hand, impose limitations upon the power of the commissioners to do one of three things, viz: appropriate money, levy taxes, and issue bonds. There is in neither of these sections, or groups of sections, any direct bearing upon the power of the commissioners to enter into contracts.

Now, under the general statutes relative to the powers and duties of county commissioners, the making of a contract constitutes an appropriation of money. But this is solely by virtue of section 5660, General Code, which requires that before a contract be entered into by the county commissioners the auditor of the county certify that the money necessary therefor is in the treasury to the credit of the proper fund and not appropriated for any other purpose, or is levied and in process of collection; and which further expressly provides that "the sums so certified shall not thereafter be considered unappropriated and the county * * * is fully discharged from the contract * * *."

Now, section 2436, General Code, expressly exempts the making of the improvements to which the section relates from the provisions of section 5660, General Code. As I construe this portion of section 2436, it relates to the improvement, as such, and not merely to the expenditure of the money derived from the issuance of the bonds.

There is what amounts to an interesting question of law upon the point whether or not the making of a contract for the rebuilding of a court house, destroyed by fire or other casualty, amounts technically to an "appropriation" of money for that purpose; and as to whether or not a contract made before any money had been appropriated, and before the authority of the electors to make the improvement had been secured, would not become perfectly valid ab initio upon subsequently securing the approval of the electors; that is to say, whether or not contracts made under these circumstances are subject to adoption or ratification by the electors, and, while unenforceable prior to such ratification, become valid thereafter.

Under the peculiar circumstances of the case, however, I do not believe the action of the commissioners should be determined by the application of strict rules of law. Contracts were entered into after competitive bidding and full compliance with every statute, save the one I am now discussing. If, subsequently, that statute is complied with, I would certainly not advise that the contractor's performance be interrupted or interfered with. Clearly, the payments which have already been made to him are legal in the sense that they cannot be recovered back. State vs. Fronizer, 77 O. S. 7, The decision cited, being grounded upon the doctrine of unjust enrichment, it seems clear to me that in the absence of an action by the prosecuting attorney or some tax payer, enjoining further proceedings under the contract, the work might, and in good morals should, be allowed to proceed to completion, and payments should be made therefor.

Indeed, I am by no means certain that the effect of a subsequent election would not be, as I have already stated, a ratification of the contract already let, by virtue of the non-application of section 5660, General Code, to such contract, and therefore a validation of whatever defects may have existed in the execution of the contract.

It is otherwise with respect to the bonds. Strictly speaking, these bonds may have been unlawfully issued. Nevertheless, they have been sold, and, in the hands of bona fide holders at least, would be enforceable against the county. So that I do not deem this question of great importance.

Before leaving the discussion of your first and fifth questions, I wish to acknowledge that the construction which I have placed upon section 2436 is not the only construction which might be placed upon it, according to a liberal reading of its language. The alternative meaning is that which would make the $50,000 limit apply to the appropriation of money, the levying of the tax, and the amount of the bond issue; so that, in reality, the aggregate limit is $150,000 instead of $50,000. That is to say, such a construction would hold that the commissioners might issue bonds to the amount of $50,000, appropriate money to the amount of $50,000, and levy a tax to the amount of $50,000, each as separate actions, before being required to seek authority of the electors to rebuild the court house.

My principal reason for rejecting such a construction has already been stated. I repeat it, however, It is that section 2436 must be read in connection with section 5638, and as an exception to the latter section. So reading it, it appears that the $50,000 limitation must be regarded as relating to the expenditure in gross.

There is another reason, however, which may, with propriety, be stated. The power to issue bonds, imposed by this section, is not a separate and distinct power, such as is a similar one embodied in section 2434 (which also gives power to borrow money for the rebuilding of a court house.) Under section 2434 the borrowing power is asserted independently of the levying power. That is to say, the commissioners are authorized to borrow on the credit of the county, and then must provide for retiring the bonds through the county debt fund.

But when the commissioners are proceeding under section 2436, they must first make the levy and can only issue bonds in anticipation thereof. From your statement of facts, I am unable to apprehend whether or not the commissioners followed the procedure of section 2434, or that of section 2436, in issuing the bonds. The two procedures are in reality quite distinct and virtually opposite to each other. If the commissioners did not go through the form, at least, of levying the tax before making the bond issue, they have not strictly followed section 2436.

It appears, therefore, that the power to "levy tax" is not a separate thing from the power to "issue and sell bonds," as both are created in section 2436; and that the $50,000 limitation applies, at the very least, to the exercise of these two powers together. This conclusion would reduce the limitation which I have already mentioned to $100,000. That is to say, it would still leave room for the contention that the appropriation of money, and the levying of the tax and issuance of bonds in anticipation thereof, are two separate things, and that $50,000 might be appropriated, and another $50,000 borrowed, in anticipation of a tax levy.

Even if this be the correct construction, the opinion previously expressed would apply, because the total cost of the improvement already provided for is in excess of $100,000, while the cost of rebuilding the wells will make the aggregate expense on account of the improvement greatly exceed that sum.

I am inclined, however, for reasons already expressed, to the view that the $50,000 limitation is upon the expenditure, and not upon the appropriation of money and the levying of a tax, separately.

Fully answering your fifth question, then, I am of the opinion that the validity of the contracts heretofore let may be regarded as questionable, but that a subsequent favorable vote of the electors would at least, in the absence of an affirmative action taken by the prosecuting attorney or some tax payer, or in the absence of the resisting of payments on the part of the commissioners, serve to strengthen the estoppel which would be worked against the county in case the contract was fully performed and payments made thereunder.

So far as the bonds are concerned, I am of the opinion that they may have been unlawfully issued, because, as you point out, the power conferred in section 2436, to appropriate money and issue bonds in anticipation of taxes, cannot be exercised at all "without first submitting," etc. I would not say unequivocally, however, that the bonds were not properly issued. If they were issued before the insurance money was received and appropriated by the commissioners to the rebuilding of the court house, then, the bonds were properly issued; but the appropriation was unlawfully made. Conversely, if the insurance money was received, and by resolution appropriated by the commissioners before the bonds were issued, then, the bonds were unlawfully issued. That is because, as already pointed out, it is the act which causes the $50,000 limit to be exceeded that is the unlawful act.

If the facts were such as to make the bonds invalid at the time of their issuance, yet, that is a matter of which the county would have to avail itself as an affirmative defense, and after a subsequent election had been held, by which the electors had expressed their approval of the entire transaction, I do not believe a court, having regard to the emergency which actually existed, and all the circumstances of the case, would permit the county to interpose such a defense, especially as against a bona fide holder.

Answering your second question, I am of the opinion that a tax for the current year may be levied for the building fund, and when collected appropriated and used for the purpose of completing the court house; provided, authority of the electors is hereafter obtained to expend more than $50,000 for that purpose. That is to say, I believe that by virtue of section 2436 the commissioners are without authority to expend money, no matter how it may have been raised, whether by taxation or otherwise, in excess of $50,000, for the purposes therein mentioned, without a vote of the people.

Answering your third question, I am clearly of the opinion that within the meaning of section 2436 there has been but one "destruction," regardless of how many separate "casualties" have occurred. The authority to spend $50,000 without a vote of the people does not depend upon the number of agencies which may have contributed to the destruction, nor upon the number of separate and distinct events that may have reduced the court house to the condition requiring rebuilding, but upon the mere fact that it is destroyed. Of course, if between two casualties the court house had been rebuilt, the case would be different. My answer to your third question is therefore in the negative.

Answering your fourth question, I beg to state that section 5639-1, in my opinion, clearly authorizes a special election, in that it gives to the commissioners authority to fix the date upon which the question shall be submitted. It is true that the word "special" is not used; and it is true also that section 4840, General Code, provides as follows:

> "Unless a statute providing for the submission of a question to the voters of a county, township, city or village provides for the calling of a special election for that purpose, no special election shall be so called. The question so to be voted upon shall be submitted at a regular election in such county, township, city or village, and notice that such question is to be voted upon shall be embodied in the proclamation for such election."

However, I am of the opinion that sufficient provision is made in section 5639-1 for a special election, and that the same may be held at any time which the commissioners may fix upon.

In my opinion the question to be submitted at the election should, from the viewpoint of caution, at any rate, fix the entire amount to be expended, including that already expended and including the bonds which have already been issued therein. In other words, if the aggregate cost of the improvement is expected to be in the neighborhood of $125,000 that should be the amount printed upon the ballots. The notice of the election should, in my opinion, mention the issuance of bonds. This is not at all necessary, and the notice should not be misleading, in that it should state that the bonds already have been issued.

However, I have recommended this procedure because of its possible bearing upon the question suggested by your fifth question, already discussed. In other words, while I agree with you that it is not absolutely essential that the entire amount be indicated on the ballot, or that the amount of bonds already issued should be mentioned in the notice, yet, there could not be any valid objection to this procedure; it would certainly not invalidate the election, and it might have some bearing by way of estopping the county to take advantage of any possible defects in the prior proceedings. You will observe, therefore, that my suggestion is not made with reference to the strict necessity of the case.

Your sixth question involves an examination into all of the provisions relating to the powers and duties of the county commissioners, and in particular those respecting entering into contracts for the construction of public buildings. As you say, there is nowhere any express authority vested in the county commissioners to provide for alterations and changes in the plans and specifications of an improvement instituted by them, and to enter into supplemental contracts for such purposes with the original contractor without advertising for bids, unless the amount of the additional expenditure does not exceed $200, in which case section 2354 permits this to be done, by necessary implication.

You point out that section 2340 expressly provides for such changes in the erection of a new court house, through a court house commission, and that the sections providing for the construction of state buildings authorize these things to be done. I regret to state that these considerations but confirm me in the conclusion which I have reached; which is that desired action cannot be taken. That is to say, there is no authority, either expressed or implied, in the county commissioners to make changes or alterations in the specifications, and to enter into supplementary contracts with the original contractor without advertising. The authority is not express, as you point out; it is not implied, because the implication which arises from the fact that the legislature has in other instances expressly conferred the power is to the effect that it did not intend that the power should exist where not expressly conferred. The maxim which applies is Expressio Unius Est Exclusio Alterius. This principle is said to apply most strongly and appropriately to cases where the imposition of a power is in question.

I am aware that it is sometimes said that courts will construe statutes reasonably; but I do not believe that it is sound law to hold that a mistake of the legislature can be corrected by the courts, especially when to do so would necessitate the creation of a power and the imposition of definite limitations upon that power, both of which are essentially legislative acts.

Nor does the fact that there is an exigency amounting to an emergency, in the present instance, alter the case. It cannot be said that the present exigency or emergency is any greater than that which existed when the court house was burned down. There is no greater cause for haste at the present time than there was in July, 1912. Yet, it could not be contended that merely because the county is suffering for lack of a court house, all provisions of law requiring the letting of contracts for its rebuilding at competitive bidding should be dispensed with.

As a strict proposition of law, I think it must be conceded that the power to act in an emergency differently from that which is prescribed as a course of official conduct in other instances cannot be created by implication; for if there were such power the official imagination would be very quick to construct an emergency at every possible juncture.

Remedial legislation is doubtless advisable; but the mere fact that such legislation, if it were similar to the other statutes to which you call attention, would provide the precise manner in which alterations and changes should be made, and the limitations upon them, is of itself sufficient reason for holding that where the power is not expressly conferred it does not exist.

I am of the opinion, therefore, that changes or alterations in the plans, made necessary by unforeseen contingencies, involving the expenditure of over $200.00, may not be made and contract therefor let to the original contractor without advertising for bids. Accordingly, the tearing down and rebuilding of the walls, which is now contemplated, must be let as a separate contract, after advertising in the manner provided by law.

Answering your seventh question, I am of the opinion that the architect's fee should be paid from the building fund. No statute requires it to be paid otherwise than as are other claims against the county. The commissioners may have discretion to provide for this expenditure either out of the general fund or out of the building fund; and the fact that the architect is most often employed before the building fund is provided, and sometimes before it is even determined finally to proceed with the improvement, strengthens this view; but the better and customary practice is to regard his fee as a part of the cost of construction.

My opinion has been very hastily prepared, because of the acuteness of the situation, as you have described it to me. I confess that I have not been able to give to the matter the extended research that I might have given to it under other circumstances.

Very truly yours,
TIMOTHY S. HOGAN,
Attorney General.

POWERS OF FLOOD RELIEF COMMISSION TO EMPLOY ENGINEER TO SURVEY GREAT MIAMI RIVER FOR PURPOSE OF INVESTIGATING NECESSITY OF DEEPENING, WIDENING AND STRAIGHTENING—"REBUILDING" INCLUDES "REPLACEMENT"—IMPROVEMENT NOT SUBJECT TO REFERENDUM—DUTIES OF EMERGENCY COMMISSION EXTEND AS WELL TO TEMPORARY AS TO PERMANENT WORK.

The term "replacement" as used in section 9 of the Snyder Emergency Act, provides the power to widen, deepen or straighten a river, under the proceedings provided by sections 2428 and 3623, of the General Code, and inasmuch as this act is intended to be read in connection with and parallel to the emergency commission act, such power must be comprised within section 10 of the later act, empowering the emergency commission to rebuild public works destroyed or damaged by the flood.

This view is further supported by the fact that such straightening and widening are incidental and necessary to the improvement and repair of damaged bridges, which powers are clearly conferred by the emergency act.

The emergency commission, therefore, in conjunction with the county commissioners may employ a resident engineer for the purpose of making a survey of the Great Miami river with the end in view of ascertaining the necessity of straightening, widening and deepening such river.

Such survey must be considered one of the proceedings mentioned in the last part of section 9 of the Snyder Bill. Inasmuch, however, as by general law such a proceeding would not be subject to a referendum vote, section 8 of the Snyder Act must control in its effect to exempt such a proceeding from the necessity of a vote of the electors.

Since the Snyder Act and the emergency commission act must be read together, the powers and duties of the emergency commission must be deemed to be extended to the temporary as well as the permanent work to be done.

COLUMBUS, OHIO, June 13, 1913.

HON. BEN A. BICKLEY, Prosecuting Attorney, Hamilton, Ohio.

DEAR SIR:—I beg to acknowledge receipt of your letter of May 26th, submitting for my opinion thereon certain questions arising under section 10 of Senate Bill No. 287, which is entitled, "An Act to establish the Ohio relief commission; to define the powers and duties, etc."

> "First: Does the word 'rebuilding' in section 10 defining the powers and duties of the emergency commission include the term 'replacement' as used in section 9 of the Snyder bill?
> "Second: And if so, can an engineer be employed to make a survey of a river, through the entire county for the purpose of securing knowledge to prevent the recurrence of the recent flood?
> "Third: And would said survey be considered as one of the proceedings mentined in the last part of section 9 as herein stated?
> "Fourth: And before said river can be permanently deepened, widened or straightened is it necessary to subject the same to the approval of the electors or to a referendum?
> "Fifth: Do the powers and duties of the emergency commission extend to the temporary as well as the permanent work to be done and as provided in the Snyder bill?"

Section 10 of Senate Bill No. 287, to which you refer is as follows:

> "Section 10. The emergency commission of any county shall exercise in conjunction with the county commissioners such powers and duties as are conferred upon the county commissioners in so far as they extend to the repairing, rebuilding and restoring of public works destroyed or damaged by the floods of March and April, 1913, and the emergency commission shall exercise and perform such duties jointly with such county commissioners."

Section 9 of House Bill No. 640, providing a method of securing necessary funds to meet the emergency situation presented by the occurrence of the recent floods, provides in part as follows:

> "* * * The term 'replacement' as used in this act includes the temporary establishment and operation of ferries and the widening, deepening or straightening of any river, creek or run which overflowed its banks and caused damages to public or private property at the time mentioned in section 1 of this act, as provided in sections 2428 and 3623 of the General Code, for the purpose of preventing the recurrence of destructive floods. In addition to the powers vested in municipal corporations by section 3677, General Code, such municipal corporations shall have special power to appropriate, enter upon and hold real estate within and without their corporate limits in furtherance of the above mentioned purpose. Provided, however, that proceedings for the permanent deepening, widening or straightening of a river, creek or run shall be subject to the approval of the electors or to a referendum as provided by general law."

It appears from your letter that the first question which you ask is suggested by that which constitutes your second inquiry, that is to say, the exact matter before the emergency commission and the county commissioners is, as to whether or not they may jointly employ an engineer to make a survey of the Great Miami river in Butler county, for the purpose of ascertaining what, if anything, may be done to prevent a recurrence of the recent floods.

I do not know that it is necessary for the purpose of your second question to answer your first question. I take it that the principal part of the public works belonging to Butler county as such, which were destroyed by the floods in question, consist of the county bridges across the Great Miami and other streams.

The county commissioners, under the general statutes of the state, would, in the construction of the necessary bridges, or for their protection, have the powers in them vested by section 2428, General Code. These powers do not depend upon the provisions of section 9 of House Bill No. 640, but would have existed if that section had never been passed. In fact, section 9, whatever its effect upon the power of the commissioners in this respect, does not confer any new or additional power upon them, but only that measure of power for the specific purpose already generally conferred by section 2428, General Code.

Section 2428, General Code, historically, is a part of the context with section 2429 et seq. These sections constitute a special proceeding which can be commenced only by the filing of a petition, signed by one or more tax payers, with the county auditor. This, however, amounts to no more than a mere formality as it would be easy to get one tax payer to file the necessary petition.

Section 2430, General Code, especially authorizes the appointment of a competent engineer, but does not permit the appointment of a non-resident engineer. The engineer appointed must be a resident of the county. While section 2430 is not very explicit, I am of the opinion that it authorizes the engineer to make such a survey as will enable him to report upon the policy of the straightening of the creek or water course, and to estimate the cost thereof. A question arises here which seems to involve considerable difficulty.

Section 2428 and succeeding sections of the General Code limit the authority of the county commissioners to the straightening of "creeks and water courses," and under this language I do not believe it would be held that the Great Miami river in Butler county could be straightened by the county commissioners for the protection of a bridge, it not being a "creek" or "water course."

Other statutes of the General Code might be cited for the purpose of showing that where it is intended that large streams and rivers shall be subject to the jurisdiction of the commissioners they are expressly mentioned. On the other hand, however, section 9 of the so-called Snyder act, House Bill No. 640, refers to "any river, creek or run," and this phraseology is clearly applicable to the Great Miami river in Butler county. Now, I have already stated in a general way, that it did not seem to be the intention of the legislature to enlarge the powers of the county commissioners by section 9 of House Bill No. 640. I was speaking then in the sense which related to the proceeding to be followed as bearing upon the employment of an engineer. Considering said section 9, however, from the point of view of the stream which may be straightened, I am of the opinion that it is clearly the intention of the legislature to enlarge the power of the county commissioners thereby, and to make, for the special purpose of said House Bill No. 640, the machinery of section 2428 et seq., General Code, extend to large streams and rivers as well as to creeks and water courses.

It becomes necessary, therefore, to determine whether the term "rebuilding" as used in the emergency commission act includes the term "replacement" as used in House Bill No. 640. Of course, consideration of this question might be obviated by holding that inasmuch as the emergency commission clearly must join with the county commissioners in rebuilding the bridges, and inasmuch as the rebuilding of the bridges is contingent upon their proper protection by the making of any necessary alterations in the channel of the river, the authority of the emergency commission should be regarded as extending to the preliminary steps as well as to the letting of the contracts for the construction of the bridges and the succeeding steps in connection therewith.

However, I have reached my conclusion upon other grounds. The two acts in question clearly relate to the same subject matter which is special in its nature. They must be read and construed in connection with each other, and each of them must receive a liberal construction for the purpose of affecting the objects plainly within the contemplation of the legislature. Indeed, I think that the interpretation which is to be given to each of these measures is the most liberal which is at all possible. The necessities of the situation which the legislature was trying to deal with require such a liberal construction. Authorities might be cited upon this point, but I regard it as elementary. I believe it to have been the intention of the legislature, expressed with sufficient clearness in section 10 of the emergency commission act as to obviate all reasonable doubt, that the commission therein provided for should act as a check upon the county commissioners in all undertakings growing out of damages wrought by the floods of March and April, 1913.

I think the phrase "repairing, rebuilding and restoring public works" is sufficiently comprehensive to support this conclusion. Now, one of the activities, which by prior legislation the county commissioners had been authorized to undertake, with special reference to the flood damages in question, was that mentioned in section 9 of the Snyder act. As extended by that section, the powers of county commissioners become very important in counties like Butler county. It is not to be supposed that the legislature did not intend that the commissioners, in the exercise of these powers, should be subject to the same restraint and entitled to the same assistance to which they are subject and entitled in other matters growing out of the floods.

I am, therefore, of the opinion that whether or not the word "rebuilding," by itself, be regarded as inclusive of or synonymous with the word "replacement" as used in the Snyder act, yet it was the intention of the legislature in passing the emergency commission act that it should be regarded as a part of the same scheme of legislation as House Bill No. 540 and construed in connection with it, and that therefore objects within the contemplation of House Bill No. 640 are to be regarded as within the purview of Senate Bill No. 287. It follows from this that if the proceedings are properly instituted under section 2429, General Code, an engineer may be employed to make the necessary surveys; each survey, however, must relate to the protection of a particular bridge or bridges. I should imagine, however, that it could well be regarded as a measure protective of the county bridges in Butler county to investigate the necessity of straightening the Great Miami river throughout its entire course in that county.

I am, therefore, further of the opinion that because of the fact that the two acts of the legislature above referred to must be construed together, the powers of the emergency commission extend to the proceedings provided for in section 2428 et seq., so that although the taxpayer's petition would be filed with the county auditor as provided in said section 2429, yet the advertisement provided in section 2431 and the employment authorized by section 2430 should be made by the county commissioners with the approval of the emergency commissioners. It therefore follows that upon the necessary jurisdictional steps being taken, the employment of the resident engineer, authorized to be employed under section 2430, should be made jointly by the county commissioners and the emergency board. The foregoing constitutes an answer to your first and second questions.

Answering your third question I am of the opinion that in the academic sense the proceedings of which the survey in question would be a part, do constitute "proceedings" within the meaning of section 9 of the Snyder act.

However, answering your fourth question, which is related to your third question, I am of the opinion that it is not necessary before the river could be permanently deepened, widened or straightened to submit the question to a vote of the electors. The said provision of section 9 is in full as follows:

> "The term 'public property,' as used in this act means and embraces, among other things of like nature, any public building, school house, publicly owned and operated public utility and all equipment, wires, poles, pipes, machinery and all other things used in connection therewith, any street or road machinery, fire and police apparatus, any public works of any kind, levee, embankment, ditch, drain, storm sewer, sanitary sewer, bridge, culvert, viaduct or approach to any of them, and all and singular, every kind and description of public improvement, building, structure or article of public use, which the authorities mentioned in this act are severally empowered by the laws of this state to make, construct, purchase or maintain and repair, save and excepting those which are herein defined to be public ways. The term 'public ways' means and embraces streets, alleys, sidewalks and public places and all things appurtenant thereto in municipal corporations, and the paving or other improvements heretofore constructed or made thereon, whether by assessment of abutting property or otherwise; and all public highways and roads, including those for the repair of which county commissioners are authorized to make emergency levies under sections 7410 and 5649-4, General Code. Provided, however, that in case any road or highway is repaired under authority of this act by any board of county commissioners, such commissioners shall not be authorized thereafter to levy for the repair of such road or highway under the provisions of section 7419, General Code, save for emergencies arising subsequently to the occurence of the floods mentioned in section one of this act. The term 'replacement' as used in this act includes the temporary establishment and operation of ferries and the widening, deepening or straightening of any river, creek or run which overflowed its banks and caused damage to public or private property at the time mentioned in section one of this act, as provided in sections 2428 and 3623 of the General Code, for the purpose of preventing the recurrence of destructive floods. In addition to the powers vested in municipal corporations by section 3677, General Code, such municipal corporations shall have power to appropriate, enter upon and hold real estate within and without their corporate limits in furtherance of the above mentioned purpose. Provided, however, that proceedings for the permanent deepening, widening or straightening of a river, creek or run shall be subject to the approval of the electors or to a referendum as provided by general law."

This section must be read in connection with the earlier provision of section 8 of the same act, which is as follows:

"Proceedings under the general laws of this state for the permanent repair, reconstruction or replacement of public property and public ways, destroyed or injured in the manner described in section one of this act, shall not be subject to any provisions of such laws requiring the submission of the proposition to make such repair, reconstruction or replacement, or to expend money for such purposes to a vote of the electors, or subjecting any ordinance or resolution making or authorizing to be made any such contract to a referendum. * * *"

It appears upon examination of these related provisions that the effect of section 8 is to dispense with the necessity of any approval of the electors or referendum vote in cases in which the general statutes provide for such approval or referendum. The object of the proviso in section 9, then, is to except from the operation of section 8, in so far as it does operate upon them and no further, the special proceeding to which it relates. In other words, the provison in section 9 really belongs in section 8, and has the same effect as if section 8 read:

"Proceedings under the general laws of this state for the permanent repair, reconstruction or replacement of public property and public ways, destroyed or injured in the manner described in section one of this act, shall not be subject to any provisions of such laws requiring the submission of the proposition to make such repair, reconstruction or replacement, or to expend money for such purposes to a vote of the electors, or subjecting any ordinance or resolution making or authorizing to be made any such contract to a referendum; but this exception shall not be so construed as to apply to proceedings for the permanent deepening, widening or straightening of a river, creek or run. Money to be derived from bonds or notes issued under authority of section three of this act shall, when their issuance is authorized, and for the purpose of the certificate that money for the specific purpose is in the treasury, as required by the general law, be deemed in the treasury and in the appropriate fund."

Construing the Snyder act as a whole, then, it clearly appears that it was not the intention of the legislature in the use of the peculiar phraseology of section 9 to make anything subject to the approval of the electors which was not subject thereto under the general laws of the state.

I find nothing in the general statutes of the state requiring the submission of the proposition to spend money for the purposes set forth in section 2428, etc., to a vote of the electors. The general statutes requiring the approval of the electors of certain county expenditures are sections 5638 et seq., General Code, but these sections do not mention the expenditures referred to in section 2428 et seq. In fact, the method of procedure outlined in the sections last above mentioned is inconsistent with the idea of submission to a popular vote.

I am, therefore, of the opinion that whatever proceedings are had by the county commissioners and the emergency commission, acting jointly under section 2428 et seq., as enlarged by section 9 of House Bill No. 640, it will not be necessary to submit the proposition of making the proposed improvement to a vote of the electors. The power to straighten, widen or deepen the river, however, is not a general discretionary power but must be exercised only for the purposes mentioned in section 2428, General Code. So that if the two commissions jointly acting should determine upon the policy of expending money for the purpose of straightening the Great Miami river, without reference to the protection of any particular county bridge of county road, this would constitute an abuse of discretion which could be restrained by the courts; the more so because the procedure of section 2428 et seq., has, in a very limited sense, the elements of a quasi judicial proceeding. Restraint by the powers of the court is, in this instance, to be substituted for the popular check which is imposed by section 5638 et seq., General Code.

Answering your fifth question, I am clearly of the opinion that the powers and duties of the emergency commission extend to the temporary as well as the permanent work to be done. This conclusion is inevitable in the light of the principle already announced that the Snyder act and the emergency commission act must be read together. Of course if temporary work has already been done by the county commissioners either under the general law or in the special manner provided for in the Snyder act, the obligations so incurred are not affected by the subsequent appointment of the commission.

Yours very truly,
TIMOTHY S. HOGAN,
Attorney General.

MOTHERS' PENSION—PROBATE JUDGE MAY NOT PAY CLAIMS UNTIL LEVY AND APPROPRIATION FOR THE PURPOSE HAVE BEEN MADE, UNLESS FUNDS ARE PROVIDED THROUGH CHARITABLE SOURCES.

Under section 1683-9, General Code, the county commissioners are required to provide the sum necessary for mothers' pension purposes by a levy therein provided for.
