GOVERNOR—POWER TO EMPLOY PRIVATE COUNSEL WHEN ATTORNEY GENERAL ADVISES AGAINST HIS RIGHT TO PREVAIL IN AN ACTION.

When the attorney general, having advised the governor of his opinion against the right of said officer in an action brought against him, it becomes impossible for the attorney general to act as his counsel in such case. The governor may employ private counsel and may compensate the latter out of the contingent fund provided for the governor's office.

COLUMBUS, OHIO, January 7, 1913.

HON. JUDSON HARMON, Governor of Ohio, Columbus, Ohio.

DEAR GOVERNOR HARMON:—You inquire of me verbally as to whether you are warranted, under the law, in paying Judge Okey his fee as attorney for you as governor in the case of the State, ex rel., Charles E. Chittenden vs. Judson Harmon, Governor, in the supreme court, out of the appropriation for "contingent expenses for the executive department," the facts in reference to the employment being as follows:

Upon the institution of the suit I called upon you to advise that inasmuch as I was of opinion that the relator in the case was entitled to the relief prayed for in the petition, and inasmuch as I had given an opinion to that effect previously to yourself as governor, I could not with propriety, either to myself or in fairness to you, or to the court, act as your counsel, and, therefore, suggested that it would be proper for you to employ counsel to represent the defendant; payment to be made either out of your contingent fund or to be made by this department; said payment to be made from the former source if the law warranted it.

Section 3 of the appropriation act, to be found in Vol. 102 O. L., page 412, provides as follows:

> "No bills for clerk hire, for furniture or carpets, or for newspapers shall be paid out of appropriation for contingent expenses; no bills for furniture or carpets shall be paid out of the appropriations made for current expenses of benevolent, penal or educational institutions."

This seems to be the only limitation in reference to the appropriation bills.

On December 4, 1912, in an opinion to Hon. Charles C. Weybrecht, adjutant general of Ohio, this department held that where the attorney general could not act on behalf of any department in a case wherein such department was entitled to have counsel, it was lawful for such department to employ counsel and compensate him out of appropriate fund. In the case referred to, the attorney general was designated by both parties to the controversy as an arbitrator, and being such arbitrator it was my opinion that I could not even assign counsel to represent General Weybrecht, much less compensate him.

No authority, I believe, is necessary to disclose the soundness of the proposition that where the legal department in either the state or county cannot properly act, the party for which he cannot properly act is entitled to employ counsel.

In the matter at hand it was eminently proper for you to refuse the commission. Such was your own judgment, and in that this department fully concurred. In causing the question to be submitted to the court you were performing your duty legally, and as the chief executive of this state. In my judgment there is no doubt whatever of your right to compensate Judge Okey out of your contingent fund.

Yours very truly,
TIMOTHY S. HOGAN,
Attorney General.

GOVERNOR——POWER TO REMOVE MAYOR FOR MISCONDUCT—WHAT CONSTITUTES MISCONDUCT.

Under section 4268, General Code, in accordance with the proceedings therein provided, the governor may remove a mayor for misconduct in office. Such misconduct, however, must be "pari materia" with the causes of removal, specified in said section, to wit: "Bribery, gross neglect of duty, gross immorality, or habitual drunkenness," within the comprehension of this statute.

A mayor, who is charged with using profane language toward a street commissioner; attempting to remove said commissioner without right or authority; ruling out of order the motion of council to strike the suspension of said commissioner from the minutes; refusing to put before council the motion of appeal from such ruling; employing threats of intimidation toward one of the members of council, arising out of his dispute with said commissioner, cannot be considered to be guilty of such misconduct as would justify proceedings under this statute.

COLUMBUS, OHIO, January 23, 1913.

HON. JAMES M. COX, Governor of Ohio, Columbus, Ohio.

MY DEAR GOVERNOR COX:—Your letter, transmitting papers, charges and specifications filed against John W. Stiger as mayor of the village of Bradner, Ohio, by one John H. Denny, is at hand and has been considered.

Six specifications are made as follows:

"1. Gross immorality in speaking of Mr. Denny, as marshal and street commissioner, and saying to him, 'You are a damn cur—I did not think he (meaning Denny) was such a damn cur and coward.'

"2. Misconduct in office in attempting to remove said Denny from the office of street commissioner without any right or authority to do so.

"3. In ruling that a certain motion made before the council to strike the suspension of Denny from the minutes as being out of order.

"4. Using certain language to the council which is not characterized as being misconduct or immorality.

"5. Refusal of the mayor while presiding over the council to put to the council a motion of an appeal from his ruling that a certain motion was out of order and in refusing to allow said council to vote on such appeal.

"6. Misconduct in office and gross neglect of duty in certain remarks to the effect that he would have nothing to do with Denny as marshal; that he would file additional charges; that he sought to intimidate the council by threatening one of the members that he would see that he would not be president for the ensuing year, etc."

The complaint and specifications appear to be signed by only one person, to wit, John H. Denny through his counsel, Benjamin F. James. Accompanying the specifications are exhibits, the same being a transcript of the minutes of the meeting of the council of the village of Bradner.

Assuming as true all that is charged in the complaint or contained in the specifications or that which appears in the minutes of the council, the acts complained of relate substantially and solely to Mr. Denny the marshal. This appears particularly true in the transcript of the minutes of the meeting of council. The mayor appears, in respect to the minutes of council, to have properly performed his duty in all respects except as claimed in relation to Mr. Denny and perhaps in relation to the council as respects the said Denny. It appears that the complaint was based on the proposition that the marshal would not make an arrest of certain persons charged with violating the liquor laws of the state. There is nothing to show but that the mayor was attempting to do his duty, whether his methods were legal or otherwise.

Section 4268 of the General Code, in respect to the removal of mayor by the governor is as follows:

"In case of misconduct in office, bribery, any gross neglect of duty, gross immorality, or habitual drunkenness of any mayor, upon notice and after affording such mayor a full and fair opportunity to be heard in his defense, the governor of the state shall remove him from office. The proceedings for his removal shall be commenced by the governor putting on file in his office a written statement of the alleged causes for the mayor's removal, and he shall cause a copy of such statement to be served upon the mayor not less than ten days before the hearing of the matter. Pending such investigation by the governor, he may suspend the mayor for a period of thirty days."

"Misconduct in office means misconduct in an official capacity; and not a personal misconduct during the term in which the officer is in office." —Graham vs. Stein, 18 O. C. C. 770.

"It is misconduct in office for an officer knowingly to disobey and violate a statute imposing a duty upon him, from a spirit of willful and improper opposition to the law, although he may derive no benefit whatsoever from such misconduct."—State vs. Blair, 50 Bull. 11.

"If an officer has committed a criminal offense for which he may be indicted and punished, but such offense does not involve his official conduct, such officer should not be removed until he has been indicted, tried and convicted of such criminal offense."—State vs. Chapman, 11 O. 430.

"Misconduct includes wantonness and violations of the law."—State ex rel. vs. Roll, 7 W. L. J. 121.

To my mind the only possible head under which the specifications could be claimed to come is that of "misconduct in office," because, clearly, there is nothing in the charges coming under the head of "bribery," gross neglect of duty," "gross immorality" or "habitual drunkenness."

Now, do the charges, even if true, show misconduct in office? The charges rather disclose on their face a dispute between the mayor on the one hand and the marshal on the other. True, the council exonerated the marshal. This does not preclude the idea that the mayor may have had an honest conviction that he was right, and for that matter, the mayor may have been right, although in personally abusing the marshal he was unquestionably in error, if the charges be true, and such conduct, if continued, would, in my judgment, afford good ground for the charge "misconduct in office."

The removal of an officer is a matter of considerable seriousness. This is disclosed by the character of the causes which are grounds for removal. Misconduct in office in relation to its seriousness must be considered in pari materia with bribery, a word of great heinousness; gross neglect of duty, a term of serious import; gross immorality, a phrase denoting immorality of the most unpardonable kind, and habitual drunkenness, giving the idea of continuation of an offense. So that misconduct in office is usually such misconduct as arouses a feeling of indignation at the hands of the public. In my judgment, as a matter of law, considerable weight is to be attached to the fact that there is no evidence that the general public about Bradner have made any complaint of the conduct of the mayor. If they did, it would not be conclusive, but its absence here is noticeable. The complaint is filed by the one person affected. The council itself has not complained. The fact that the mayor put all the motions and questions arising before council, except those in relation to the marshal, is suggestive. The mayor was doubtless right in the matter of parliamentary law in declining to entertain a motion to strike from the minutes the action in reference to the suspension of the street commissioner; but right or wrong, the fact is not of sufficient moment to move the governor to action.

On the whole, as a matter of law, I do not believe you are called upon at the present time to put on file in your office the written statement of Mr. Denny. I would suggest, however, that you retain the same and wait to see whether or not there is any repetition of the things complained of.

Respectfully submitted,

TIMOTHY S. HOGAN,

Attorney General.

STATE TAX COMMISSION—APPOINTMENT OF MEMBERS BY GOVERNOR—NECESSITY FOR CONFIRMATION BY SENATE.

Section 5445, General Code, provides for the appointment of three tax commissioners, the terms of whom terminate respectively on the second Monday of February, 1911, 1912 and 1913; and under this statute, in February, 1911, and annually thereafter there shall be appointed one commissioner for a term of three years from the second Monday in February of such year. The statute also provides that no appointee shall be qualified to act until after his appointment has been confirmed by the senate, unless appointed during recess or adjournment.

The language providing for confirmation by the senate must be construed to demand a similar procedure as that set out by section 12, General Code, providing for confirmation of appointments made in time of session and in time of adjournment of the senate.

Section 1475-1, General Code, is a later statute and provides that after February, 1913, the tax commissioners shall be appointed biennially for a term of six years from the time of appointment. This latter statute must be construed to amend section 5445, General Code, only insofar as its terms are inconsistent with the former statute. The provisions of the former statute, therefore, as to appointment confirmation must still be allowed to control.

COLUMBUS, OHIO, February 6, 1913.

HON. JAMES M. COX, Governor of Ohio, Columbus, Ohio.

DEAR SIR:—You have verbally requested my opinion as to whether or not appointments of members of the state tax commission of Ohio by the governor require the confirmation of the senate.

The state tax commission was created by an act passed May 10, 1910, and said act was given the Code numbers from 5445 to 5542-24, inclusive, section 1 of said act being given the Code number, section 5445.

In an act passed May 31, 1911, and approved June 2, 1911, sections 5446 to 5542-8, inclusive and sections 5542-10 to 5542-24, inclusive, were repealed, leaving, however, in force and effect section 5445, being section 1 of the act of May 10, 1910.

The first section of the act of May 31, 1911, which was given the Code number 1465-1, modified the first section of the act of May 10, 1910, which as before stated bears the Code number 5445.

Section 5445 of the General Code, being section 1 of the act of May 10, 1910, and which was not repealed by the act of May 31, 1911, reads as follows:

> "A tax commission is hereby created, to be known as the tax commission of Ohio, to be composed of three commissioners, electors of the state, not more than two of whom at any time shall be of the same political party. On or before July 1, 1910, the governor shall appoint such commissioners as follows: The term of one of such appointee, who shall belong to the same political party as one of the other members appointed on such commission, if there be two appointees from the same political party, shall terminate on the second Monday of February, 1911; the term of the second such appointee shall terminate on the second Monday of February, 1912; the term of the third such appointee shall terminate on the second Monday of February, 1913. In February, 1911, and annually thereafter, in the month of February, there shall be appointed in the same manner, one commissioner for the term of three years, from the second Monday of February of such year. Each commissioner so appointed shall hold his office until a successor is appointed and qualified. Any vacancy on the commission shall be filled by appointment of the governor for the unexpired term. No appointee shall be qualified to act until after his appointment has been confirmed by the senate, unless appointed during recess or adjournment of senate."

Section 1465-1, General Code, reads as follows:

"Between the first day and the second Monday of February, 1913, and biennally thereafter, the governor shall appoint one member of the tax commission of Ohio for the term of six years from the second Monday of February of such year."

An examination of section 5445, supra, discloses that it is the section which creates the tax commission of Ohio in the first sentence thereof. Thereafter it is stipulated when the three commissioners shall be appointed and the term for which they shall be appointed. It is then provided that: "In February, 1911, and annually thereafter, in the month of February, there shall be appointed in the same manner, one commissioner for the term of three years, from the second Monday of February of such year."

Section 1465-1, supra, modified the above quoted language and provides that from February, 1913, the terms of the commissioners to be appointed thereafter shall be six years.

Section 1465-1 did not repeal by implication section 5445 as the said two sections can easily be read together and are, therefore, not in conflict with each other. It is a well known principle of law that repeals by implication are not favored, and that when two sections can be reconciled both sections shall stand. I, therefore, conclude that section 5445, General Code, is in full force and effect, except as modified by section 1465-1, which modification takes place in February, 1913.

Section 5445, General Code, provides:

First. That the commissioner appointed shall hold his office until his successor is appointed and qualified.

Second. That any vacancy shall be filled by appointment of the governor for the unexpired term, and then stipulates the following:

"No appointee shall be qualified to act until after his appointment has been confirmed by the senate, unless appointed during recess or adjournment of senate."

There are two classes of appointments that are made by the governor. One is the appointments that are made by him absolutely, and the second are those appointments which are made by him with the advice and consent of the senate.

The language of section 5445 that no appointee shall be qualified to act until after his appointment has been confirmed by the senate convinces me that such appointments are made in the same way as are those appointments which are stipulated in so many words to be made with the advice and consent of the senate.

Section 12 of the General Code provides as follows:

"When a vacancy in an office filled by appointment of the governor, with the advice and consent of the senate, occurs by expiration of term or otherwise during a session of the senate, the governor shall appoint a person to fill such vacancy and forthwith report such appointment to the senate. If such vacancy occurs when the senate is not in session, and no appointment has been made and confirmed in anticipation of such vacancy, the governor shall fill the vacancy and report the appointment to the next session of the senate, and, if the senate advise and consent thereto, such appointee shall hold the office for the full term, otherwise a new appointment shall be made."

Since in my judgment the provisions of section 5445, General Code, in reference to the appointment by the governor are of the same effect as if it were clearly provided that the appointment should be made "with the advice and consent of the senate" I am of the opinion that an interim appointment made by the governor must fall within the provisions of section 12, General Code, above quoted, and that if the vacancy occurs when the senate is not in session and no appointment has been made and confirmed in anticipation of such vacancy the governor shall fill the vacancy and report the appointment to the next session of the senate, and if the senate advise and consent thereto such appointee shall hold the office for the full term, otherwise a new appointment shall be made.

Very truly yours,
TIMOTHY S. HOGAN,
Attorney General.

PROBATE JUDGE—TERM OF OFFICE FOUR YEARS—APPOINTMENT BY GOVERNOR TO FILL VACANCY WHEN JUDGE-ELECT FAILS TO QUALIFY BY REASON OF VIOLATION OF CORRUPT PRACTICES ACT.

The courts of this state, having decided that the term of an office which has been fixed by the constitution, may not be decreased or diminished by the legislature, and since the term of a probate judge has been so fixed at four years, such officer cannot remain in office after the expiration of four years from the date of his taking office. When, therefore, a person elected to such office is refused a certificate of election, because of a violation of the corrupt practices act, under section 27, article 2, of the constitution, which provides that the filling of a vacancy, not otherwise provided for by the constitution, shall be accomplished as directed by law, and under section 142, General Code, which provides that when the office of a probate judge becomes vacant, by reason of the expiration of term of the incumbent, and the failure to provide therefor at the preceding election, such vacancy shall be filled by appointment by the governor.

The governor may appoint a person to fill the position of such probate judge, which appointee shall hold office until a successor is properly elected for the unexpired term at the first general election for the office which is vacant, that occurs more than thirty days after such appointment, as is provided by section 142, General Code.

COLUMBUS, OHIO, February 25, 1913.

HON. JAMES M. COX, Governor of Ohio, Columbus, Ohio.

MY DEAR GOVERNOR:—I have your favor of February 22nd, wherein you request my opinion as to whether or not there is a vacancy in the office of probate judge in Jefferson county, Ohio, and if there is such a vacancy, how the same shall be filled. In reply thereto I beg to advise that under article 17, section 2 of the constitution of Ohio, the term of the judges of the probate court is fixed at four years. Section 1580 of the General Code of Ohio provides:

> "Quadrennially, one probate judge shall be elected in each county, who shall hold his office for a term of four years, commencing on the ninth day of February next following his election."

The term of the outgoing probate judge commenced on the ninth day of February, 1909. The first question to be determined: When did his term expire, and should he hold office until his successor is elected and qualified? This question is disposed of by the case of the State ex rel. Attorney General vs. Brewster, 44 O. S., 589, the syllabus whereof is as follows:

> "1. Where the term of an office is fixed and limited by the constitution, there is no power in the general assembly to extend the term or tenure of such office beyond the time so limited."

So that it appears that the time of the last incumbent expired on the ninth day of February, 1913, and that such incumbent had no right de jure to hold over until his successor was elected and qualified.

The next question that arises is, how is the vacancy to be filled? Section 13 of article IV of the constitution of Ohio provides:

> "In case the office of any judge shall become vacant before the expiration of the regular term for which he was elected, the vacancy, shall be filled by appointment by the governor, until a successor is elected and qualified; and such successor shall be elected for the unexpired term, at the first annual election that occurs more than thirty days after the vacancy shall have happened."

This section does not apply because the office of no judge had become vacant before the expiration of the regular term for which he was elected.

Section 27 of article II provides as follows:

> "The election and appointment of all officers, and the filling of all vacancies, not otherwise provided for by this constitution, or the constitution of the United States, shall be made in such manner as may be directed by law; * * *"

There being no method provided by the constitution for filling a vacancy in the office of probate judge, the last quoted section, to wit, section 27, unquestionably applies, and we are then to ascertain whether the method of filling the vacancy in question is directed by law.

Section 27 of article 2 provides as follows:

> "If the office of a judge becomes vacant by reason of the expiration of the term of the incumbent, and a failure to provide therefor at the preceding election, such vacancy shall be filled by appointment by the governor. This person so appointed shall hold the office until a successor is elected and qualified. Such successor shall be elected for the unexpired term at the first general election for the office which is vacant that occurs more than thirty days after such appointment."

Now, the Jefferson county case presents the case of the office of a judge becoming vacant by reason of the expiration of the term of the incumbent, and the only question left is, "Was there a failure to provide therefor at the preceding election?" At the election held in November, 1912, there was various candidates for the office of probate judge in Jefferson county, Ohio. John G. Belknap appears to have received the required number of votes entitling him to proper certificate from the board of deputy state supervisors of elections, but the latter board, acting upon the advice of their superior officer and this department, declined, and still declines, to issue his certificate of election, for the reason that, as claimed, the said John G. Belknap failed to file a true statement of his expense account with the election board as provided by the Kimble corrupt practices act. Now, the said John G. Belknap, being without such certificate of election, is not entitled to assume the duties of the office as required by section 138 of the General Code, which is as follows:

> "A judge of a court of record, state officer, county officer, militia officer and justice of the peace, shall be ineligible to perform any duty pertaining to his office, until he presents to the proper officer or authority a legal certificate of his election or appointment, and receives from the governor a commission to fill such office."

Section 140 of the General Code provides:

> "When the result of the election of any such officer is officially known to the deputy state supervisors of elections of the proper county, and upon payment to them of the fee prescribed in the preceding section, they shall immediately forward by mail to the secretary of state a certificate of such officer together with the fee so paid. * * *"

Mr. Belknap, probate judge-elect, is without the last mentioned certificate, and is without the commission from the governor.

The question now presents itself whether in view of the fact that the people of Jefferson county elected a man to the office of probate judge who is ineligible to perform any of the duties pertaining to his office by reason of the absence of the legal certificate of his election or appointment and the absence of his commission, there has been a failure to provide at the preceding election for a successor to the incumbent whose term expired. What would be the result if a man had been elected to the office of probate judge and died prior to the ninth day of February, 1913, would there have been a failure to provide at the preceding election? I think that in contemplation of the spirit of section 142 of the General Code there would. Or, if an alien had been elected there would have been a legal failure to provide, and to my mind the same result follows when one is elected who is ineligible for any purpose. Such person is, in contemplation of law, not entitled to office. In other words there was a failure to elect a man legally entitled to the office. The essence of the section in question is the authority conferred upon the governor to fill a vacancy in the office of the judge by reason of the expiration of the term of the incumbent.

My opinion, in conclusion, is that there is a vacancy at the present time in the office of the probate judge of Jefferson county, Ohio, and that it is the duty of the governor to fill such vacancy by appointment, such appointment to last until a successor is elected and qualified. Under the statutes "such successor shall be elected for the unexpired term at the first general election for the office which is vacant that occurs more than thirty days after such appointment."

Very truly yours,

TIMOTHY S. HOGAN,

Attorney General.

NATIONAL GUARD—GOVERNOR MAY ORGANIZE TO MAKE IT CORRESPOND WITH UNITED STATES ARMY SO FAR AS PRACTICABLE.

Under sections 5190 and 5191, General Code, the governor may change the tactical organization of the national guard or a part thereof from time to time to make it correspond with that prescribed for the regular and volunteer armies of the United States. When, however, the numbers of the national guard are insufficient to constitute a division, as the same exists in the United States armies, the governor can only provide for its organization insofar as it is practicable to make it similar to that of the United States.

COLUMBUS, OHIO, February 26, 1913.

HON. JAMES M. COX, Governor of Ohio, Columbus, Ohio.

MY DEAR SIR:—You have verbally requested my construction of sections 5190 and 5191 of the General Code of Ohio, in their application to the following state of facts:

The national guard of Ohio as at present organized consists of two brigades of infantry, four troops of cavalry, three batteries of light artillery, one battalion of engineers, one battalion of signal corps, two field hospitals, and two ambulance corps. These units, as I understand it, fall far short of the number necessary to constitute a division as provided for in the organization of the United States army, a division consisting of the following: three brigades of infantry, two regiments of cavalry, two regiments of light artillery, one battalion of engineers, one battalion of signal corps, four field hospitals and four ambulance companies. It will be thus seen that the Ohio organization only comes up to the requirement for a division in two particulars, namely: the battallion of engineers and the battalion of signal corps, and, as stated before, falls far short of the necessary number of units to compose a division.

Sections 5190 and 5191 of the General Code provide as follows:

> "The national guard shall be organized in a like manner as is prescribed for the regular and volunteer armies of the United States. The governor may change the tactical organization of the national guard or a part thereof from time to time to make it correspond with that prescribed for the regular and volunteer armies of the United States. In time of peace the governor shall fix the maximum strength of organizations within the minimum and maximum limits prescribed by the president of the United States. (Section 5190.)
> "When practicable the governor shall organize the national guard into a division, brigades, regiments and battalions with such staff officers and non-commissioned staff officers as may be necessary for each of the several commands. (Section 5191.)"

Under the above quoted sections, it seems to me the question of the organization and reorganization of the national guard is a matter to be determined by you as commander-in-chief; the only limitation upon your complete authority as to this being that it shall be organized in like manner as is prescribed for the regular and volunteer armies of the United States, and that you may change the tactical organization from time to time to make it correspond with that prescribed for the United States regular and volunteer armies. These two sections must be taken together, and when practicable, under section 5191, the organization should be into a division, brigades, regiments, etc.; but it seems clear that if it is not practicable, that is, if in the national guard as now constituted there are not enough units to constitute a division, it would not only be impracticable but would be impossible for you, or anyone else, to create what does not exist.

Therefore, under said section 5191, it is my opinion that it is your power and you have the duty, in providing for the organization of the national guard, to do so in whatever manner may be practicable and efficient with regard to the number of units in existence. In short, if there are enough units to constitute one or more effective brigades, with a complete brigade organization, under said sections, you would have full power to provide for such organization; and in the future, if the national guard were increased to a point where the organization of a division were possible, then, it could be so organized by and order from you.

Very truly yours,
TIMOTHY S. HOGAN,
Attorney General.

THE MONEY RECEIVED FROM THE TREASURER OF THE NATIONAL HOME FOR DISABLED VOLUNTEER SOLDIERS IS TO BE PAID IN TO THE GENERAL REVENUE FUND OF THE STATE.

Where the governor has received from the treasurer of the national home for disabled volunteer soldiers the sum of $28,400.00, being the amount due the state on account of aid to state or territorial homes, the treasurer of state is authorized to receive such money from the governor on the pay in warrant of the auditor of state and to credit the same to the general revenue fund of the state.

COLUMBUS, OHIO, November 8, 1913.

HON. JAMES M. COX, Governor of Ohio, Columbus, Ohio.

DEAR SIR:—The treasurer of state has handed to me a letter addressed to you by Major Moses Harris, general treasurer of the national home for disabled volunteer soldiers, apparently accompanying a check on the treasury of the United States to your order as governor for $28,400.00, "being amount found due the state of Ohio on account of aid to state or territorial homes, for the quarter ending September 30, 1913." The letter is dated October 28, 1913.

The treasurer of state informs me that the check has been tendered by you to him, and that he is in doubt as to his authority to accept it.

The members of the board of administration inform me that they have relied upon the use of this money for the maintenance of the Ohio soldiers' and sailors' home at Sandusky and that unless it can be used the board will be at a loss as to how to manage the finances of that institution.

The question is suggested as to whether or not if the money is to be paid into the treasury of the state it can be drawn upon by the board of administration in the absence of an appropriation, the legislature having failed to pass any appropriation which would make this money so available.

I am informed also that in the past the invariable custom has been for the governor to receive the checks due the state from the federal appropriation and to cover them into the state treasury, and have the legislature make annual appropriations thereof. So that the question would not have arisen at this time but for the failure of the legislature to make the necessary appropriation.

The money comes to the state or to its officers by virtue of an appropriation made by congress for this purpose. A typical current appropriation of this kind is found in 35 Statutes at Large, 1012, being that made by the 60th congress at its second session in 1908. It is as follows:

> "State or territorial homes for disabled soldiers and sailors: For continuing aid to state or territorial homes for the support of disabled volunteer soldiers, in conformity with the act approved August twenty-seventh, eighteen hundred and eighty-eight, including all classes of soldiers admissible to the national home for disabled volunteer soldiers, one million one hundred and fifty thousand dollars: Provided, That no part of this appropriation shall be apportioned to any state or territorial home that maintains a bar or canteen where intoxicating liquors are sold: Provided further, That for any sum or sums collected in any manner from inmates of such state or territorial homes to be used for the support of said homes a like amount shall be deducted from the aid herein provided for, but this proviso shall not apply to any state or territorial home into which the wives or widows of soldiers are admitted and maintained."

The act referred to is found in 25 Statutes At Large, 450, and in full is as follows:

> "Be it enacted by the senate and house of representatives of the United States of America in congress assembled, That all states or territories which have established, or which shall hereafter establish, state homes for disabled soldiers and sailors of the United States who served in the war of the rebellion, or in any previous war, who are disabled by age, disease or otherwise, and by reason of such disability are incapable of earning a living, provided such disability was not incurred in service against the United States, shall be paid for every such disabled soldier or sailor who may be admitted and cared for in such home at the rate of one hundred dollars per annum. The number of such persons for whose care any state or territory shall receive the said payment under this act shall be ascertained by the board of managers of the national home for disabled volunteer soldiers, under such regulations as it may prescribe, but the said state or territorial homes shall be exclusively under the control of the respective state or territorial authorities, and the board of managers shall not have nor assume any management or control of said state or territorial homes. The board of managers of the national home shall, however, have power to have the said state or territorial homes inspected at such times as it may consider necessary, and shall report the result of such inspections to congress in its annual report.
> "Sec. 2. That the sum of two hundred and fifty thousand dollars, or so much thereof as may be necessary, is hereby appropriated out of any money in the treasury not otherwise appropriated, to carry out the provisions of this act, and payments to the state or territories under it shall be made quarterly by the said board of managers for the national home for disabled volunteers to the officers of the respective states or territories entitled, duly authorized to receive such payments, and shall be accounted for as of the appropriations for the support of the national home for disabled volunteer soldiers.
> "Approved August 27, 1888."

The intent of congress is clear. The appropriation is for the purpose of paying the state so much for each soldier; it is not directly in aid of any particular institution maintained by the state, and so far as the act of congress is concerned the state is at liberty to do what it pleases with the very moneys which are paid over to the state in pursuance of this act.

From this it follows that this is not a trust fund, but it is a general revenue of the state. That being the case, and your authority as governor to receive the money on behalf of the state, as required by the act, being assumed, it would be, and is your duty under section 24 of the General Code of Ohio immediately to pay it into the state treasury, where, under section 270 of the General Code, it is to be credited to the general revenue fund.

I am, therefore, of the opinion that the treasurer of state is authorized to receive from you, on the warrant of the auditor of state, the money represented by the check referred to in the letter handed to me, and to credit the same to the general revenue fund of the state.

Article II, section 22 of the constitution of Ohio, provides that:

> "No money shall be drawn from the treasury, except in pursuance of a specific appropriation, made by law; and no appropriation shall be made for a longer period than two years."

Even if the money in question were a special or trust fund, I believe this section would apply to and govern its disbursement, once it were legally in the state treasury. Being a part of the general revenue fund, however, there can be no question as to the application of the section of the constitution just quoted.

From the time when the state first received such moneys they have been treated in the manner already outlined, being paid into the state treasury and disbursed therefrom only on appropriations. Such a long continued legislative interpretation of the constitution and of its own duties and those of the executive departments having to do with the internal management of this fund, could not lightly be disturbed even if the question were doubtful. Inasmuch, however, as the question is devoid of any element of doubt, I am of the opinion that the money represented by the check to which the letter refers, when paid into the state treasury may not lawfully be withdrawn therefrom, save in pursuance of an appropriation made by the general assembly.

Yours very truly,
TIMOTHY S. HOGAN,
Attorney General.

REPAIRING OF SCHOOL BUILDING DAMAGED BY FLOODS—DAMAGE, QUESTION OF FACT—SNYDER ACT—REPAIR AFTER CONDEMNATION BY CHIEF INSPECTOR OF WORKSHOPS AND FACTORIES.

When a school building fit for occupancy prior to the flood has been damaged by the flood as to render the same unfit for use, the provisions of the Snyder emergency act, exempting from the general limitations of the law upon levies and borrowing powers may be resorted to.

The question of damage is one of fact, the answer to which may be assisted by the reports of the chief inspector of workshops and factories.

Under section 7630-1, General Code, a school building condemned by the chief inspector of workshops and factories may be rebuilt or repaired. The money may be borrowed therefor, regardless of the Smith law limitations.

COLUMBUS, OHIO, June 18, 1913.

HON. HUGH L. NICHOLS, Lieutenant Governor of Ohio, Columbus, Ohio.

DEAR SIR:—I beg to acknowledge receipt of your letter of June 12th, in which you state that in a certain village a very old and virtually unsafe school building was damaged by the floods of March and April, 1913, although the condition of the building, aside from its dampness, is not visibly different from that in which it was prior to these floods. The state authorities have not condemned the building for use, but it is felt that if an inspection were now made it would be condemned.

You request my opinion as to whether or not the so-called Snyder emergency law, authorizing the borrowing of money and the levying of taxes outside of the limitations of the general law for the restoration and replacement of property destroyed or injured by the aforementioned floods, can be used to borrow money and construct a new building in place of the old building; the desire to do so arising from the fact that under what you speak of as the "Longworth act" the tax limits of the district are such as to preclude the expenditure of money for this purpose under the general laws of the state.

At the outset I desire to correct what was evidently a misapprehension on your part. The "Longworth act," being section 3939, et seq., General Code, has no application whatever in school districts; it relates solely to municipal corporations and townships. There is no limit whatever upon the bonded indebtedness of a school district. I take it you have in mind the so-called Smith one per cent. law, which, while it does not limit the bonded indebtedness of a school district directly, does have a practical effect thereon, in that it limits the amount or rate of taxes which may be levied for any and all purposes, including the retirement of bonds and the payment of interest thereon. I shall discuss the question upon this assumption.

The so-called Snyder law authorizes the replacement of property damaged by the floods which you mention, and for that purpose empowers the board of education, as to school property, to issue bonds and to provide for the payment of the same by special tax levy, which may be made outside of all of the limitations of the Smith law. The only question which would arise under the facts submitted by you is as to whether or not, in view of the fact that the building, after the flood, was not in very much worse condition than it was before the flood, it can be said to have been "damaged," within the meaning of the Snyder act.

This, of course, would be a mixed question of fact and law. It may be that the building was so near the border line of unfitness for use, prior to the flood, that the damages to it, which would necessarily occur if water to the depth of nine feet or more stood in it for an appreciable length of time, would cause it actually to become unfit for use. This might easily be the fact, and in such case the damages, though slight, would, in my opinion, authorize proceedings to be had under the Snyder law. If, on the other hand, the unfitness of the building for use does not result from the flood, but the building is really no more unfit for use since the flood than it was before the flood, I should think that a contrary result would follow, as in such case it could not be said that the damages to the building had resulted from the flood.

The question here is one of fact, and I should be of the opinion that the findings of the district inspector of workshops and factories ought to be entitled to some weight. If, a reasonable time prior to the flood, the chief inspector, acting upon the report of the district inspector, had approved the use of the building for school purposes, that would, in my judgment, constitute a sufficiently conclusive finding to the effect that the building was actually, at the time, fit for use as a school building. If an inspection were now made and the finding should be that the building is not fit for use as a school building, I should be of the opinion that such a finding would be conclusive. And if the change in the position of the department of workshops and factories could be said to have resulted from the action of the waters, comparatively slight though that may have been, I would be of the opinion that the case would be a proper one for proceedings under the Snyder act.

In connection with the question which you present, I beg leave to call attention to the provisions of senate bill 264, passed by the late session of the general assembly, and made an emergency law, so it is at present in effect. This act provides as follows:

"AN ACT

"To supplement section 7630, General Code, by the enactment of a section to be known and designated as section 7630-1, and to amend section 5649-4 of the General Code for the purpose of facilitating the replacement of school houses condemned or destroyed by fire or other casualty.

"Be it enacted by the General Assembly of the State of Ohio:

"Section 1. That section 7630 of the General Code be supplemented by the enactment of a section to be known and designated as section 7630-1 as follows; and that section 5649-4 of the General Code be amended so as to read as follows:

"Sec. 7630-1. If a school house is wholly or partly destroyed by fire or other casualty, or if the use of any school house for its intended purpose is prohibited by any order of the chief inspector of workshops and factories, and the board of education of the school district is without sufficient funds applicable to the purpose, with which to rebuild or repair such school house or to construct a new school house for the proper accommodation of the schools of the district, and it is not practicable to secure such funds under any of the six preceding sections because of the limits of taxation applicable to such school district, such board of education may, subject to the provisions of sections seventy-six hundred and twenty-six and seventy-six hundred and twenty-seven, and upon the approval of the electors in the manner provided by sections seventy-six hundred and twenty-five and seventy-six hundred and twenty-six issue bonds for the amount required for such purpose. For the payment of the principal and interest on such bonds and on bonds heretofore issued for the purposes herein mentioned and to provide a sinking fund for their final redemption at maturity, such board of education shall annually levy a tax as provided by law.

"Sec. 5649-4. For the emergencies mentioned in section forty-four hundred and fifty, forty-four hundred and fifty-one, fifty-six hundred and twenty-nine, seventy-four hundred and nineteen and 7630-1 of the General Code, the taxing authorities of any district may levy a tax sufficient to provide therefor irrespective of any of the limitations of this act. * * *"

If the chief inspector of workshops and factories should, by order, prohibit the use of the old building for school purposes, this statute might be employed for the relief of the situation. The advantage of its employment would be that it would obviate the embarrassing question which might arise under the Snyder act, while, at the same time, it affords an equal exemption from the limitations of the Smith law. The disadvantage of proceeding under section 7630-1 is that it necessitates submitting the question of expenditure to a vote of the people, entailing some expense and delay. The election, however, may be called at any time, and need not await the holding of a regular election.

In any event, I should advise that the attention of the department of workshops and factories be directed to the building, and the advice of the chief inspector obtained. If he condemns the present edifice for use, then section 7630-1 can clearly be followed; and a much clearer case can be made for proceeding under the Snyder act.

I regret that I feel unable to give you an unequivocal answer to the question which you submit, especially as concerns the application of the Snyder emergency act. I have, however, tried to lay down the principles by which the action of the board of education may be determined when the facts are ascertained with exactness.

Very truly yours,

TIMOTHY S. HOGAN,

Attorney General.

EMERGENCY BILL—SECTION OF AN ACT DECLARING A BILL TO BE AN EMERGENCY MEASURE MUST BE SEPARATELY VOTED UPON.

Inasmuch as section 1-d of the amendment to article 2 of the constitution expressly declares that the reasons for the necessity of declaring a bill an emergency must be set forth in a separate section of the law, which section shall be passed upon by a "yea" and "nay" vote, upon a separate roll call thereon, a bill providing lobbying regulations, which in a section thereof, is declared to be an emergency measure for the reasons therein stated, but which section did not receive a separate roll call was not legally passed.

COLUMBUS, OHIO, January 20, 1913.

HON. J. H. LOWRY, House of Representatives, Columbus, Ohio.

MY DEAR SIR:—You have today requested my opinion as to the legality of the passage by the senate on January 16th, of senate bill No. 11, entitled:

> "A bill to provide for the registration of persons employed to advocate or oppose legislative measures, and to regulate the method of such advocacy or opposition."

You state that this bill was passed by the unanimous vote of the senate upon the bill as a whole, and that no separate vote was taken upon section 14 of the bill which is as follows:

> "Section 14. This act is hereby declared to be an emergency act and that its enactment is necessary for the immediate preservation of the public safety. The necessity therefor lies in the fact that the public welfare and safety require that the deliberations of the present general assembly shall be free from interference, and its members, in the performance of their duties, protected from solicitation by persons representing interests that are undisclosed and principals who are unknown."

Section 14 defines the act as an emergency measure and states the reason for its going into effect immediately so as to remove it from the necessity of referendum. I wish to call your attention to section 1-d of the amendment to article II of the constitution of Ohio adopted by the electors of this state at the election held on September 3, 1912. This amendment is as follows:

> "Such emergency laws, upon a yea and nay vote, must receive the vote of two-thirds of all the members elected to each branch of the general assembly, and the reasons for such necessity shall be set forth in one section of the law, which section shall be passed only upon a yea and nay vote upon a separate roll call thereon."

This section is so clear as to admit no controversy as to its requirement in regard to the passage of emergency acts. Such emergency laws must receive the vote of two-thirds of all the members elected to each house of the general assembly, upon a yea and nay vote. The reasons for the necessity of the law must be set forth in one of the sections of the law, and the section containing this reason must be passed upon a yea and nay vote and upon a separate roll call. Section 14 of the act complies with the constitutional requirement in that it sets forth the reason for its necessity, but the requirement that this section containing such reason, namely section 14, can only be passed upon separate roll call and a yea and nay vote thereon was not met in the passage of this bill, herefore the bill was not legally passed.

Very truly yours,
TIMOTHY S. HOGAN,
Attorney General.

RESOLUTION AUTHORIZING CLERK OF HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES TO DISTRIBUTE COPIES OF JOURNAL FOR MEMBERS OF THE GENERAL ASSEMBLY, VALID.

In view of section 768, General Code, providing for the distribution of six hundred copies of the house journal among the members of the house of representatives a resolution of the house authorizing a clerk to cause to be mailed, not to exceed five copies of such journal to such names and addresses as may be furnished him by each member, is not subject to objection.

COLUMBUS, OHIO, January 21, 1913.

HON. JOHN R. CASSIDY, Clerk, House of Representatives, Columbus, Ohio.

DEAR SIR:—Under date of January 18th you submitted house bill No. 24 passed by the house of representatives on January 15, 1913, and you inquire whether there exists any legal reason why you should not comply with the requirements of the resolution both as to postage and numbers.

The resolution in question reads as follows:

80th General Assembly H. R. No. 24.
Regular Session
Mr. Sweeney.

"WHEREAS, section 768 of the General Code provides for the distribution of six hundred (600) copies of the house journal among the members of the house of representatives during time said house is in session, therefore,

"Be It Resolved, That the clerk of the house of representatives be, and is hereby authorized to cause to be mailed during the session of the house not to exceed five copies of such journal to such names and addresses as may be furnished by him to each member; the cost of mailing the same to be paid out of the contingent fund of the house."

Section 768, General Code, provides as follows:

"Each day one copy of such pamphlet shall be placed on the desk of each member of the senate and house of representatives, one copy shall be sent to each state department, two hundred copies shall be distributed by the members of the senate, under the direction of the clerk thereof, and six hundred copies shall be distributed by the members of the house of representatives under the direction of the clerk of the house of representatives. The proper number of sheets for the permanent copies of such journals shall be printed, retained and bound with the indexes therefor, as provided by law."

We assume that the house journal referred to in the resolution in question refers to the daily pamphlet referred to in section 767 of the General Code. Since section 768 of the General Code provides that six hundred copies of such pamphlet shall be distributed by the members of the house of representatives under the direction of the clerk of the house of representatives I can see no legal reason why you should not comply with the requirements of such resolution, providing, of course, that no more than six hundred copies are so distributed. You cannot, of course, exceed the six hundred copies provided for in section 768, General Code.

Very truly yours,
TIMOTHY S. HOGAN,
Attorney General.

LOBBY BILL DOES NOT INCLUDE PERSON GATHERING AND SELLING INFORMATION RELATING TO MATTERS PENDING BEFORE THE GENERAL ASSEMBLY, NOR INDIVIDUAL, ASSOCIATION, OR CORPORATION PURCHASING SUCH INFORMATION, NOR TO UNEMPLOYED INDIVIDUALS.

The terms of the act to provide for registration of persons employed to advocate or oppose legislative measures, do not include an individual engaged in the business of gathering and selling information relating to matters pending, or which may come before the general assembly, providing such individual is not also employed by any person, association or corporation, purchasing such information for the purpose of influencing legislation; nor does such act include individuals, associations or corporations purchasing such information.

The act is intended to apply to persons employed or persons employing others for the purpose of influencing legislation and in no way operates upon an individual acting solely on his own initiative as a citizen, without receiving compensation for his services.

COLUMBUS, OHIO, January 24, 1913.

HON. CARL D. FRIEBOLIN, Member Ohio Senate, Columbus, Ohio.

DEAR SIR:—In your letter of January 22nd you ask my opinion on three qnestions concerning the act passed by the general assembly on January 21, 1913, entitled "An act to provide for registration of persons employed to advocate or oppose legislative measures, and to regulate the method of such advocacy or opposition."

Your first question is as follows:

"Is an individual engaged in the business of gathering and selling information relating to matters pending, or which may come before the general assembly, exempt from the provisions of this bill; provided, of course, that the individual so engaged in the business of furnishing or selling information is not also employed by any person, associations or corporations purchasing such information for the purpose of influencing legislation?"

Section 1 of the act is as follows:

"Any person, firm, corporation or association, or any officer or employe of a corporation or association acting for or on behalf of such corporation or association, who or which directly or indirectly employ any person or persons, firm, corporation or association to promote, advocate, amend or oppose in any manner any matter pending or that might legally come before the general assembly or either house thereof, or a committee of the general assembly or either house thereof, shall within one week from the date of such employment furnish in a signed statement to the secretary of state the following information, to wit:

"1. If an individual, his full name, place of residence and place of business.

"2. If a firm, its correct firm name, place of business, and the full name and place of residence of each partner.

"3. If a corporation or association, its full name, the location of its principal place of business, whether a corporation or voluntary association, whether a domestic or foreign corporation, and the names and the places of residence of each of its officers.

"4. The nature and kind of his, their, or its business, occupation or employment.

"5. The full name, place of residence and occupation of each person, firm, corporation or association so employed, together with the full period of employment.

"6. The exact subject matter pending or that might legally come before the general assembly or either house thereof or before any committee thereof with respect to which such person, firm, corporation or association is so employed.

"7. When any change, modification or addition to such employment or the subject matter of the employment is made, the employer shall within one week of such change, modification or addition furnish in writing full information regarding the same to the secretary of state.

"The secretary of state shall immediately enter all such information, appropriately indexed so as to show all employers, employes and the subject-matter of such employment, in a separate book to be kept for that purpose in the office of the secretary of state, which book at all times shall be open to public inspection. Upon the payment of the fee hereinafter provided for, the secretary of state shall issue to each person or to the representative of any firm, corporation or association, so employed, a certificate showing the name of the person to whom the certificate is issued, the name or names of his employers, the particular matter in respect to which such person is so employed, and the duration of the employment. A new certificate shall be required and issued upon any change, modification or addition being made to such employment. Such certificate shall be prima facie evidence during the period of the employment therein recited, but not to exceed two years, of compliance with this section by the employer and employe named in said certificate. Provided, that nothing in this section shall apply to a bona fide newspaper, journal or magazine, or a bona fide news bureau or association which in turn furnishes such information solely to bona fide newspapers, journals or magazines, in employing correspondents to furnish information or news for publication only."

It seems apparent to me from the language used in the first paragraph of this section, and from the information required to be given by item 6 in the statement furnished the secretary of state, that the act applies whenever a person, firm, corporation or association is employed directly or indirectly to promote, advocate, amend or oppose in any manner any matter pending or that might legally come before the general assembly or either house thereof, or a committee of the general assembly or either house thereof; and therefore for the reason that in the case specified by you the individual is not employed, by any one, directly or indirectly to promote, advocate, amend or oppose in any manner any matter pending or that might legally come before the general assembly, but simply gathers and sells information relating to matters pending or which may come before the general assembly, he would not come under the provisions of the act.

Your second question is as follows:

"2. Are individuals, associations or corporations purchasing information as above described exempt from the provisions of this bill?"

I find nothing in the act that seems to or would prevent individuals, associations or corporations from purchasing information relating to matters pending or which might come before the general assembly, unless such individuals, associations or corporations sought by so doing, to directly or indirectly promote, advocate, amend or oppose a matter pending or that might legally come before the general assembly as provided in the act.

Your third question is as follows:

"3. Is an individual not employed by any person, firm or corporation to influence legislation, exempt from the provisions if he is acting solely in his capacity as an individual without reference to the interests of such person, firm or corporation, if he attempts to influence legislation pending in, or which may come before the general assembly?"

There is no attempt made in this bill to interfere with or restrict the rights of a citizen to express his approval or disapproval of any legislative measure, provided he is acting simply in his individual capacity. In other words, there is no attempt made by it to throttle free speech, and if an individual, acting solely upon his own initiative, and without being employed directly or indirectly by a person, firm, association or corporation, and who has not been promised or does not expect to receive directly or indirectly any compensation for his services, attempts to influence legislation, in other words, if he acts solely for himself and neither directly or indirectly for another, then I do not think he would be subject to this act.

Very truly yours,

TIMOTHY S. HOGAN,

Attorney General.

LOBBYISTS—MANUFACTURING INDUSTRY—REGISTER OF LOBBYIST MAY STATE SUBJECT-MATTER GENERALLY—FEE OF SECRETARY OF STATE FOR REGISTRATION.

Under paragraph 6, section 1, of the act providing for regulations of lobbying, it is sufficient that the person registers as to the particular subject-matter of legislation in regard to which he is employed, and it is not necessary for him to specify each bill. Such registration, however, would not cover legislation, indirectly or remotely, affecting such subject-matter.

When any change, modification, or addition to the particular subject-matter is made, the full information must be furnished regarding the same and a new certificate issued, which must specify the new matter.

The secretary of state is entitled to a fee of $3.00 for the issuance of each necessary certificate, whether original or additional.

COLUMBUS, OHIO, January 28, 1913.

HON. W. A. GREENLUND, Member of the Ohio Senate, Columbus, Ohio.

MY DEAR SIR:—I am in receipt of your letter of January 27th in which you make the following request for my opinion:

> "The question has arisen in regard to the interpretation of the act providing for the registration of lobbyists. A particular question which has been raised is as to whether or not the secretary of an organization has the right to register and appear at the hearing on any bills which may affect the organization which he represents.
> "A secretary has registered and wanted the privilege of appearing before the committee on any bills which might affect the manufacturing industry.
> "Will you please advise whether or not he will have to register for the hearing of each bill or whether registering once will suffice?
> "This further question has been raised regarding the fee to be paid at the time of registration. Has the secretary of state the authority to charge and collect a $3.00 fee for each subject on which a lobbyist appears?"

Paragraph 6 of section 1 of the act, specifying the information that must be given by and concerning a person registering as required by the law, is as follows:

> "The exact subject-matter pending or that might legally come before the general assembly or either house thereof or before any committee thereof with respect to which such person, firm, corporation or association is so employed."

Subsection 7 of section 1 provides:

> "When any change, modification or addition to such employment or the subject-matter of the employment is made, the employer shall within one week of such change, modification or addition furnish in writing full information regarding the same to the secretary of state."

The last paragraph of section 1 provides:

"Upon the payment of the fee, * * * the secretary of state shall issue to each person * * * a certificate showing the name of the person, to whom the certificate is issued, the name or names of his employers, the particular matter in respect to which such person is so employed, and the duration of the employment. A new certificate shall be required and issued upon any change, modification or addition being made to such employment. * * *"

Section 8 provides:

"The secretary of state shall charge and collect, and be entitled to receive from the employer the sum of three dollars for each certificate necessary under the provisions of this act. The secretary of state shall neither receive nor file any such statement or issue any such certificate unless the fee herein prescribed has been paid."

From the above provisions of the act, and especially the language of subsection 6 of section 7, I take it that all that is necessary when a person desires to register is to give the particular subject-matter of legislation in regard to which he is employed, and that it is not necessary to specify each bill. For instance, as in the matter specified by you, I think a person could be properly employed to advocate or oppose any legislation which would affect the manufacturing industry. Of course, it would be a broad classification, but still the subject-matter though broad, is well understood, and one registration should cover all legislation directly affecting that matter; but it should not be held that it covers legislation indirectly or remotely affecting such subject-matter. For instance, if a person were employed with reference to legislation affecting the manufacturing industry and subsequently he wished to appear with reference to legislation affecting insurance, then a new certificate would be required, though it might be contended that the subject of insurance in a way affected the manufacturing industry. In other words, the legislation upon which a person is entitled to appear must be legislation directly affecting the subject-matter stated in the registration.

The language of the act seems to be clear that when any change, modification or addition to the particular subject-matter specified is made, the full information must be furnished regarding the same, and a new certificate issued which must specify the new, or additional, or changed subject-matter.

And section 8 seems to be explicit that the secretary of state is entitled to a fee for the issuance of each necessary certificate, and therefore when a change is made and a new certificate is necessary, an additional fee must be paid.

Very truly yours,

TIMOTHY S. HOGAN,

Attorney General.

CONSTITUTIONAL LAW—CUTTING OF WEEDS BY LAND OWNER—COMPENSATION OF ROAD SUPERINTENDENT.

House bill, No. 198, General Code, providing that the superintendent of roads shall allow a land owner or tenant to destroy weeds along the road abutting on his property, and for compensation to the road superintendent for services performed by that official, presents no evidence of unconstitutionality.

COLUMBUS, OHIO, February 18, 1913.

HON. G. G. O. PENCE, Member House of Representatives, Columbus, Ohio.

DEAR SIR:—I have your letter of February 11th, which is as follows:

"Please give in writing your answer as to the constitutionality of house bill No. 198, herewith submitted."

The purpose of house bill No. 198 is to amend section 7148 of the General Code so that the same shall read as follows:

"Sec. 7148. The superintendent of such roads shall allow a land owner or tenant to destroy such brush, briers, burrs, vines, thistles or other noxious weeds, growing or being on such roads along the lands abutting thereon, owned or occupied by such land owner or tenant. * * * Such land owner or tenant shall do the work or cause it to be done before the first day of the month in which it is required to be done as specified in section seventy-one hundred and forty-six. In case such owner or tenant fails to comply with sections 7146 and 7148, the superintendent of roads or turnpikes shall be allowed and paid, for such services performed by him, by the proper authority, and such compensation shall be charged on the tax duplicate against said land owner."

Under section 7148 as at present constituted the land owner or tenant may destroy certain noxious weeds and receive credit on his road tax, while the proposed amendment would allow township road superintendents to receive such reasonable compensation as might be allowed by the proper authority, such compensation to be charged on the tax duplicate against the owner.

It is a well established principle of law that acts of the legislature are presumed to be constitutional and valid, and the courts will not declare them unconstitutional unless it is clearly made to appear that they are so. I see no reason for holding house bill No. 198 unconstitutional. In my judgment it comes within the police power of the state, being a measure for the preservation of the public health, convenience and welfare.

Yours very truly,
TIMOTHY S. HOGAN,
Attorney General.

PUBLIC OFFICER—SUPERINTENDENT OF GIRLS' INDUSTRIAL HOME AND WOMEN'S REFORMATORY ARE PUBLIC OFFICERS—WOMAN MAY NOT BE—CONSTITUTIONAL LAW.

Under article 15, section 4 of the constitution, a person may not be elected or appointed to an office in this state unless he possess the qualifications of an elector. Inasmuch, therefore, as the superintendency of the girls' industrial home or the women's reformatory at Marysville, constitutes a public office, a woman may not hold such position.

COLUMBUS, OHIO, March 21, 1913.

HON. WILLIAM E. HAAS, Ohio Senate, Columbus, Ohio.

MY DEAR SIR:—Your communication dated March 14th, received, in which you request my opinion as to the constitutionality of the law now on the statute books providing for the appointment of a woman superintendent or matron of the girls' industrial home and the woman's reformatory at Marysville, and in reply to your inquiry I desire to say that as to the matron of the girls' industrial home the general assembly of Ohio on the 21st day of May, 1911, passed an act which is now section 2103-1 of the General Code, which provides as follows:

> "That the office of superintendent of girls' industrial home is hereby abolished. The board of trustees shall appoint a chief matron who shall have executive charge of said institution with all the powers and duties now or hereafter given by law to or imposed on superintendents of public institutions, in so far as the same are applicable. Such chief matron shall receive an annual salary of not less than twelve hundred nor more than two thousand dollars, as may be determined by the board."

In order to properly construe said section as to its constitutionality it is necessary first to decide whether or not the creation of chief matron constitutes the creation of an office under the law and the decisions of the courts of this state. Article 15, section 4 of the constitution of the state of Ohio provides as follows:

> "No person shall be elected or appointed to any office in this state, unless he possesses the qualifications of an elector."

Section 1 of article V of the constitution specifically defines an elector as follows:

> "Every white male citizen of the United States, of the age of twenty-one years, who shall have been a resident of the state one year next preceding the election, and of the county, township, or ward, in which he resides, such time as may be provided by law, shall have the qualifications of an elector and be entitled to vote at all elections."

The question, then, which is decisive of your inquiry is, did the act in controversy create an office, and did it attempt to create the party filling the same by appointment an office, or if this position be an office within the meaning of the clause of the constitution above referred to, then it is clear that it can only be filled by an elector—a male citizen of the age of twenty-one years who shall have been a resident of the state one year, etc., as specified in the constitution of Ohio. The first question, then, is, what is an office.

We have had numerous decisions in our state upon this question. In the case of Stae, ex rel., Attorney General vs. Kennon, et al., 7 O. S. 547, it was held that a statute which provides for the creation of a board authorizing it to appoint commissioners of the state house and directors of the penitentiary of the state, and fill all vacancies which might occur in the offices of directors or state house commissioners, and authorizing such board, or a majority, to remove any director of the penitentiary for causes specified, or which might by the board of directors be deemed sufficient, created offices.

Webster defines the word "office" to signify "a particular charge or trust conferred by public authority for a public purpose;" and Platt, J., 20 Johns, 492, defines it to be > "An employment on behalf of the government, in any station or public trust, not merely transient, occasional or incidental."

And it was held in the same case that compensation or emoluments are not a necessary element in the constitution of an office. Chief Justice Marshall, in 2nd Broc., 103, says that if a duty be a continuous one, defined by rule, prescribed by government and not by contract, it is an office. Again in the case of State, ex rel., Attorney General vs. Wilson, 29 O. S. 347, it was held:

> "The place of medical superintendent of a hospital for the insane, under the act of March 27, 1876 (Ohio Laws 80), is an 'office within the meaning of section 4, article 15, of the constitution, which ordains that, 'No person shall be elected or appointed to any office in this state unless he possesses the qualifications of an elector.'"

I cannot arrive at any other legal conclusion under the authorities above quoted than that the act referred to creates an office. Then, the next question is, is it constitutional in view of the fact that the office created shall be filled by the appointment of a chief matron who shall have executive charge of the said institution with all the powers and duties now or hereafter given by law to or imposed on superintendents of public institutions in so far as the same are applicable.

Century Dictionary defines the word "matron" as follows:

> "In a special sense a head nurse in a hospital; the female head or superintendent of any institution."

In view of the fact that it cannot be doubted that the matron which this act provides for the appointment of is an officer under the rulings or decisions of the court of last resort of our state, it follows that the person to fill such position must be an elector, under the provisions of our constitution above referred to, or the act is unconstitutional. We cannot but conclude from the language of the decisions above quoted that the act in question attempts to invest the board of trustees with the power to appoint a female as chief matron with the powers and duties of an office such as is required by the constitution to be filled solely by an elector.

It is a general rule of construction that legislative acts are always to be upheld unless clearly in violation of the constitution, but when so the courts are required to declare them void. Therefore under that well established rule of construction and the decisions of the court and the constitutional provisions first as to the offices, and second that they must be filled by an elector, I am of the legal opinion that said section, namely 2103-1 of the General Code providing for the appointment of a woman superintendent or matron of the girls' industrial home is absolutely void.

The next question you ask is as to the constitutionality of the law providing for the appointment of a chief matron to manage the woman's reformatory to be erected at Marysville, Ohio. The law providing for the establishment of a reformatory for women and to provide for the management thereof was passed May 15, 1911, and is now sections 2148-1 to 2148-11, inclusive, of the General Code (102 O. L. 207), and the 4th section of said act, referred to in your letter, is section 2148-4, which reads, in part, as follows:

> "* * * The board of trustees may select and designate a chief matron to manage the institution and promote the welfare of the inmates thereof," etc.

And upon the same principle of law as above quoted in relation to the chief matron of the girls' industrial home, I am of the opinion that said law is for the same reason unconstitutional and void in so far as that section is concerned.

In addition to what I have given as my reasons for rendering my opinion that said respective sections of the General Code, above referred to, are unconstitutional and void, I desire to say that there is another reason which goes to strengthen my belief in the correctness of my opinion, namely the constitutional convention in 1912 adopted proposal No. 36, which was to amend section 4 of article 15 of the constitution of Ohio to read as follows:

> "No person shall be elected or appointed to any office in this state unless possessed of the qualifications of an elector; provided that women who are citizens may be appointed, as notaries public, or as members of boards of, or to positions in, those departments and institutions established by the state or any political subdivision thereof involving the interests or care of women or children or both."

The intent of this amendment was to permit the appointment of women as superintendents and members of the boards of those institutions of the state or any of its subdivisions where the interests and care of women and children were involved, although they were not electors under the laws of the state. Said proposal was submitted to the electors of Ohio at the election held on September 3, 1912, and resulted in the rejection of said amendment, thereby retaining the said section as found in the constitution of our state adopted in 1852. There can be no question that said proposed amendment as adopted by the constitutional convention for the very purpose of so amending the constitution as to make women eligible to such positions as the legislature in the enactment of both of the sections referred to by you in your communication attempted to do.

In conclusion I might say that I am compelled to give the opinion above expressed because I am sure that it is the law, although there may be great necessity, and it may be of great value, to have women fill such positions in order to attend to the wants of and watch over the many unfortunate victims of crime incarcerated in the girls' industrial home or that will be incarcerated in the women's reformatory which is to be erected. I have no doubt that ladies of high character have or may have been appointed to the positions attempted to be created under the two respective acts, and that under their guidance the condition of the inmates might be greatly improved, if not entirely changed, and as a result thereof the public would be the gainer, but if the electors of Ohio were guilty of a great oversight in rejecting the said constitutional amendment above referred to and thereby made it impossible for the legislature to enact a law making provision for women filling such positions, I am nevertheless compelled to abide the decision of the electorate of Ohio and render the above opinion.

Very truly yours,
TIMOTHY S. HOGAN,
Attorney General.

CLERK OF SUPREME COURT—BILL PROVIDING FOR APPOINTMENT OF, UNCONSTITUTIONAL.

Article 4, section 6, of the constitution, provides that the general assembly may provide for the election of clerks of court other than clerk of common pleas, for the term of three years.

Article 17, of the amendment to the constitution adopted in 1905, changed the terms of various state officers, but is silent as to the office of clerk of the supreme court. Under the constitution, therefore, a clerk of the supreme court may be provided for only by an election and for a term of three years.

House bill No. 73, therefore, providing for the appointment of a clerk of said court to hold his office during good behavior is unconstitutional and void.

COLUMBUS, OHIO, March 22, 1913.

HON. WARREN J. DUFFY, Member of the House of Representatives, of the 80th General Assembly of Ohio, Columbus, Ohio.

DEAR SIR:—You inquire of me as to the constitutionality of house bill 73 recently enacted by the general assembly of Ohio amending section 1500 of the General Code, and providing that:

> "The supreme court shall appoint a clerk of said court, who shall hold his office during good behavior. The term of the clerk first appointed hereunder shall commence on the first Monday in February, 1915. Any person elected clerk of the supreme court prior to the enactment of this amendment shall hold said office for the full term for which he was elected and until his successor is appointed and has duly qualified."

In reply thereto I beg to advise section 16 of article IV of the constitution of Ohio provides as follows:

> "There shall be elected in each county, by the electors thereof, one clerk of the court of common pleas, who shall hold his office for the term of three years, and until his successor shall be elected and qualified. He shall, by virtue of his office, be clerk of all other courts of record held therein; but, the general assembly may provide, by law, for the election of a clerk, with a like term of office, for each or any other of the courts of record, and may authorize the judge of the probate court to perform the duties of clerk for his court, under such regulations as may be directed by law. Clerks of courts shall be removable for such cause and in such manner as shall be prescribed by law."

The provisions of the constitution just referred to are of the constitution of 1851. At that time the clerk of the court of common pleas of Franklin county was by virtue of his office the clerk of the supreme court when the court was sitting in Franklin county. Not until 1865 did the legislature take advantage of the provisions of section 16 of article 4, aforesaid, authorizing it to provide by law for the election of a clerk with a like term of office, i. e. three years for the supreme court.

On March 29, 1865 (see year book, vol. 62, page 69) an act was passed to provide for the election and qualification of the clerk of the supreme court of Ohio and prescribing the duties and fixing the compensation of such clerk. This act provided for the election of the clerk of the supreme court triennially.

The act of 1865 remained unchanged until the year 1906, when the legislature passed an act purporting to "conform the term of office of the various state and county officers to the constitutional provisions relating to biennial elections (see year book 98, page 272). This last act continued the existing term of the office of the clerk of the supreme court to the first Monday of February following the expiration of the current term, and further provided that,

"At any election for state and county officers hereafter held, successors to all such officers whose term will expire during the odd numbered year next succeeding the holding of such election, shall be elected, for terms to commence at such time during said odd numbered year as is provided by law, and to continue for the following periods respectively: clerk of the supreme court, two years."

Terms of office for other officers were provided for, no state officer being therein mentioned except the clerk of the supreme court; certain other state officers being provided for by the 17th amendment to the constitution which was adopted in 1905. When the 17th amendment to the constitution was adopted the proposers of the amendment unquestionably had overlooked the fact that the office of the clerk of the supreme court was a constitutional office, they regarded it as a statutory office, and must have entertained the view that the office of the clerk of the supreme court was primarily created by the act of 1865, when in fact the act of 1865 received its authority from section 16 of article 4 of the constitution, aforesaid. Article 17 of the amendment to the constitution adopted in 1905 fixed the terms of the various state officers, but is silent as to the office of the clerk of the supreme court; consequently the only constitutional provision in reference to the office of the clerk of the supreme court is section 16 of article 4 of the constitution of 1851. Under it there is warrant given to the legislature to provide by law for the election of a clerk of the supreme court with a like term of office as therein provided for a clerk of the court of common pleas, to wit, for a term of three years.

I am, therefore, of the opinion that the bill to which you refer, i. e., house bill 73, recently adopted is unconstitutional and void.

Very respectfully submitted,

TIMOTHY S. HOGAN,

Attorney General.

PUBLIC OFFICER—WOMAN MAY NOT BE MEMBER OF BOARD OF EXAMINATION AND REGISTRATION OF NURSES—MAY BE SECRETARY TO BOARD—CONSTITUTIONAL LAW.

Under article 15, section 4 of the constitution, a person may not be elected or appointed to any office in this state unless he possesses the qualifications of an elector, as set out in article 5, section 1. Inasmuch as H. B. 105, clothes members of the board for the examination and registration of nurses with the power to license the nursing occupation, the members of such board are endowed with the power to exercise a part of the sovereignty of the state, and are, therefore, public officers.

The above constitutional restrictions, therefore, will not permit a woman to serve as a member of such board.

The fact that the secretary treasurer of such board as contemplated in this act must give a bond and is required to prosecute the law relating to the practice of nursing, nor the further fact that such incumbent is empowered to administer oaths, do not constitute such position a public office and the incumbent therefore may be a woman.

COLUMBUS, OHIO, April 9, 1913.

HON. H. L. SCHAEFER, Member House of Representatives, Columbus, Ohio.

DEAR SIR:—On April 9th you handed me copy of house bill No. 105 printed as reported by committee on public health, being entitled "A bill to provide for the examination and registration of nurses in Ohio," and call my attention to section 1 of said bill, which provides that the governor shall appoint a state board of examiners of nurses, consisting of five members, each of whom shall be a graduate of a training school for nurses. Said section 1 further provides that one of the members shall be designated to hold office for one year, two for two years and two for three years, and upon the expiration of the term of any person so appointed a successor shall be appointed in the same manner, to hold office for three years. Said section further provides that each member of the board of examiners shall receive five dollars for each day actually engaged in the work of the board and their necessary expenses. Said section further provides that the board shall organize by electing a president, a secretary who shall also act as treasurer and an inspector of training schools, each to serve for a term of one year. It further provides that the secretary-treasurer shall give bond to the state of Ohio for the faithful discharge of her duties. It empowers the president and secretary-treasurer to administer oaths.

Section 7 of the bill further places the duty upon the secretary-treasurer to enforce the provisions of the law relating to the practice of nursing and requires her to investigate the matter upon knowledge or notice of a violation of such law and file complaint with the prosecutor.

The entire bill is offered so as to require that the profession of nursing shall be registered in this state. It empowers the board to issue certificates of registration under the provisions of the bill and also suspend and revoke certificates of registration.

Your question is as to whether or not the governor would be authorized to appoint women as members of the state board of examiners of nurses. This question is to be solved by the determination of whether or not members of such a board would be holding an office by reason of appointment to such board.

Article XV, section 4 of the constitution of Ohio provides as follows:

"No person shall be elected or appointed to any office in this state, unless he possesses the qualifications of an elector."

Article V, section 1, defines an "elector" as follows:

"Every white male citizen of the United States, of the age of twenty-one years, who have been a resident of the state one year next preceding the election, and of the county, township or ward, in which he resides, such time as may be provided by law, shall have the qualifications of an elector and be entitled to vote at all elections."

It is clear, therefore, that should the appointment as a member of the state board of examiners of nurses be considered as an appointment to an office a woman cannot be appointed to such position. One of the best definitions as to what constitutes an office to be found in the Ohio reports is that found in the second syllabus of the case of State ex rel. vs. Jennings et al., 57 Ohio State 415, as follows:

"To constitute a public office, against the incumbent of which quo warranto will lie, it is essential that certain independent public duties, a part of the sovereignty of the state, should be appointed to it by law, to be exercised by the incumbent, in virtue of his election or appointment to the office, thus created and defined, and not as a mere employe subject to the direction and control of some one else."

The power to license occupation in a state is a governmental power and is the exercise of a part of the sovereignty of the state, and the exercise of such power by such a board as the one in question would be the exercising by such board of certain independent public duties and would, therefore, as I view it, constitute those exercising such powers officers within the meaning of the constitutional provisions. It is to be noted from an examination of the bill in question that the entire power of granting, suspending and revoking certificates of registration is lodged with the board, and, therefore, must be exercised by those who are in law designated as officers.

In reference to the secretary-treasurer which position the bill contemplates shall be held by a woman the proposition is not quite so clear. The first section of the bill provides that said board shall organize "by electing a president, a secretary who shall also act as treasurer, and an inspector of training schools, each to serve for a term of one year."

I do not at this time pass upon the question as to whether such language contemplates that not only the president but the secretary-treasurer and inspector shall be chosen from among the members of the board. Assuming, however, that it is not contemplated that the secretary-treasurer shall necessarily be chosen from among the members of the board. It would appear that such secretary-treasurer is required to give bond in the sum of one thousand dollars to the state of Ohio for the faithful discharge of her duties, and is given the power to administer oaths. She is further entrusted with the registration fee, and also is given the duty of enforcing the provisions of law relating to the practice of nursing in this state.

I do not think that the requirement that a bond be given by the secretary-treasurer to the state of Ohio would of necessity determine whether or not holding such position would be considered as holding an office, nor the fact that such secretary-treasurer is given the duty of seeing that the law relating to the practice of nursing is enforced. The only other power specifically given to said secretary-treasurer in the bill is the power to administer oaths.

In the case of Warwick vs. State of Ohio 25, Ohio State 21, the syllabus reads as follows:

> "1. The deputy clerk of the probate court has authority to administer oaths to parties making applications for marriage licenses, touching the merits of such applications, and perjury may be assigned upon such oaths.
> "2. Section 4 of article 15 of the state constitution, which provides that 'no person shall be elected or appointed to any office in this state unless he possess the qualifications of an elector,' does not apply to the office of deputy clerk of the probate court, and therefore a female is eligible to that office, and may lawfully discharge its duties."

Since the supreme court of this state has given it as its opinion that the right of a woman to administer an oath would not of itself constitute the position that she held an office, I am constrained to the opinion that the power of administering oaths by the secretary-treasurer under the bill in question would not be sufficient to constitute such position an office within this state.

I would, therefore, hold:

First. That the position of member of board of state examiners of nurses would be an office and could not, therefore, under the constitutional provision be held by a woman, and Second. That should it be the intention of the legislature that the secretary-treasurer was not to be appointed from among the members of the board the position of such secretary-treasurer could be held by a woman.

Very truly yours,
TIMOTHY S. HOGAN,
Attorney General.

VILLAGE BOARD OF EDUCATION MAY FILL VACANCY ONLY FOR UNEXPIRED TIME—INCUMBENT HOLDS UNTIL SUCCESSOR ELECTED AND QUALIFIED.

Under section 4748, General Code, the vacancy in a board of education may be filled by the remaining members for the unexpired term only. Where, however, provision is not made for the election of a successor at the regular election for such officers, the incumbent will hold over until a successor is elected and qualified.

COLUMBUS, OHIO, April 8, 1913.

HON. C. J. SMITH, Member House of Representatives, Columbus, Ohio.

DEAR SIR:—You have submitted to this department for opinion a letter received by you from one John Neimeyer, of Trenton, Ohio, dated February 26th, wherein Mr. Niemeyer says that he is writing you in regard to the Trenton school board and requests you to refer the matter to me as to whether or not the actions of the members of the board of education of said school board are legal. He states:

> "The terms of O. S., J. B. and G A. expired January 1, 1912. About October, 1911, one would resign and at next meeting the others would reappoint him for a long term. Kept this proceeding up until all were appointed to a long term."

Upon further inquiry from Mr. Neimeyer of the facts he, under date of March 24th, states as follows:

"Following are the facts regarding the school board of the village of Trenton, Butler county, Ohio. On the first day of January, 1912, the terms of O. S., Pres. and J. B., Clerk, expired as members of the board—about six weeks or two months prior to that date they resigned and immediately had themselves appointed for the long term. (See State Examiner Fowler's report of February, 1912). Was this action legal?"

Upon examination of the report made by J. C. Fowler, state examiner on the Trenton village school district, filed in the office of the auditor of state May 3, 1912, we find the following:

"Fifth. In regard to members of the board perpetuating themselves in office, we note the following:

George Alspach's term would expire December 31, 1911. He resigned November 20, 1911, and eight days thereafter he was appointed to fill a four-year vacancy.

"J. K. Brill's term would expire December 31, 1911. He resigned May 3, 1911, and seven days thereafter he was appointed to fill a vacancy of two and one-half years.

"C. O. Smith's term would expire December 31, 1911. He resigned June 6, 1911, and thirteen days thereafter he was appointed to fill a vacancy of two and one-half years.

"Messrs. Brill and Schmidt being present testified under oath that they did not resign and then accept appointment for the purpose of extending their time in office."

The question, therefore, arises as to whether or not it is legal for members of a village board of education to resign prior to the expiration of the term for which they were elected and be re-elected by the board of education to fill the vacancies created by their own resignation for a term extending beyond the expiration of the original term for which they were elected.

I am not advised as to when the Trenton village school district was created, but assume that it was so created prior to the election of the members referred to in the report by Examiner Fowler, and that when the three members referred to in such report were elected they were each elected for a period of four years.

Section 4708, General Code, provides:

"In village school districts, the board of education shall consist of five members elected at large at the same time as municipal officers are elected and in the same manner."

Section 4745, General Code, provides:

"The terms of office of members of each board of education shall begin on the first Monday in January after their election, and each such officer shall hold his office four years and until his successor is elected and qualified."

Section 4748, General Code, provides in part:

> "A vacancy in any board of education may be caused by * * * resignation * * *. Any such vacancy shall be filled by the board at its next regular or special meeting, or as soon thereafter as possible, by election for the unexpired term. A majority vote of all the remaining members of the board may fill any such vacancy."

It would appear, therefore, by virtue of section 4748, General Code, that a vacancy had been caused by the resignation of the members in question. The board was therefore authorized by a majority vote to fill such vacancy for the unexpired term. The filling of the vacancy for a period longer than the unexpired term was beyond the authority of the board to do, consequently, it must be considered that the persons appointed although they are the same parties who had formerly resigned, were appointed only for the unexpired term. Had at the election held in November, 1911, any persons been voted for as members of the school board such persons so elected would have assumed their office on the first Monday in January, 1912, in accordance with section 4745, General Code. If there were no such members elected in November, 1911, to succeed the members whose terms would expire on the day preceding the first Monday in January, 1912, the members then holding would continue to hold for the reason that no successor was elected and qualified. Such members would, therefore, be entitled to hold until the members of the school board elected in November, 1913, had qualified and assumed their office on the first Monday in January, 1914.

I am, therefore, of the opinion that while the election by the school board of members who resigned to fill the vacancies caused by their own resignations for a term beyond the expiration of the term for which they were originally elected was illegal, yet since as I assume no members of the school board were elected at the election in November, 1911, they would, under the provisions of section 4745, General Code, continue to hold their office until their respective successors were elected and qualified and assumed their office on the first Monday in January, 1914.

Very truly yours,
TIMOTHY S. HOGAN,
Attorney General.

ROADS AND HIGHWAYS—CONSTITUTIONAL LAW—LAW PROVIDING FOR DISTRIBUTION OF AUTOMOBILE REGISTRATION FEES EQUALLY AMONG COUNTIES.

Although as a general rule of law, the imposition of taxes must be confined to the taxing district receiving the benefit of the levy, yet, the improvement, maintenance and repair of public highways being very largely for a state purpose, and intended for a prominent public use, the legislature is vested with a wide discretion as to the method of distributing public revenues for such purpose.

The law, therefore, providing that the revenues derived from the registration of automobiles shall be distributed equally among the counties of the state for the purpose of maintaining, protecting and policing and patroling public roads of the county would not seem to be unconstitutional.

COLUMBUS, OHIO, April 18, 1913.

HON. IRVIN F. SNYDER, Member House of Representatives, Columbus, Ohio.

DEAR SIR:—I have your request for an opinion as to the constitutionality of section 6309 of the General Code, as amended yesterday on the floor of the house, being a section of the proposed motor vehicle license law. The amended section is as follows:

> "The revenues derived by registration fees provided for in this chapter shall be applied by the secretary of state toward defraying the expenses incident to carrying out and enforcing the provisions of this chapter, and any surplus thereof shall be paid by him quarterly, into the different county treasuries of the state through the proper county auditors, making an equal division thereof among all the counties of the state. All such money coming into the county treasury shall be a separate fund for the repair, maintenance, protection, policing and patroling of the improved public roads and highways or mail routes of such county, and be expended under the direction of the county commissioners of such county."

Section 6309 of the General Code, was as follows:

> "The revenues derived by registration fees provided for in this chapter shall be applied by the secretary of state toward defraying the expenses incident to carrying out and enforcing the provisions of this chapter, and any surplus thereof shall be paid by him, monthly, into the state treasury. All such moneys coming into the state treasury shall be a separate fund for the improvement, maintenance and repair of the public roads and highways of this state, and be apportioned as the state highway fund is apportioned.

In order to understand the meaning of the italicized portion of original section 6309, it is necessary to refer to section 1222 of the General Code, being section 48 of the highway department law, passed by the last session of the general assembly. I quote this section:

> "Moneys appropriated by the state for the purpose of carrying out the provisions of this chapter, shall not be used in any manner or for any purpose, except as provided herein. Moneys so appropriated shall be equally divided among the counties of the state, except such moneys as are appropriated for the use of the department and for surveys, plans and estimates of inter-county highways."

In connection with this section, section 1218, which applies to the repair of improved roads, should be read. I will not quote this section, but content myself with stating that in order to qualify for an apportionment, under favor of section 1222, of repair funds the county commissioners of any county would be required to make a levy equal to the amount apportioned. Otherwise, under another section of the highway department law, the county would lose its apportionment and the amount thereof would be distributed equally among the other counties of the state.

Of course, it was necessary to appropriate the proceeds of the license fees paid into the state treasury under original section 6309, and this was customarily done from session to session by appropriating the receipts and balances of the state highway department under the automobile license act.

I have considered but one constitutional question, which I gather from your statement to be the one which is in the mind of the committee. That question is as follows:

"Is the proposed section unconstitutional because of the equal distribution of the funds to the counties?"

I have not chosen to give fundamental consideration to this question because, to my mind, the proposed section would be no more unconstitutional, so to speak, in this respect than original section 6309, read in connection with the other sections above quoted, was. Both the sections provide for an equal distribution of automobile license moneys to the counties and for the making of the repairs, i. e., expenditure of money through the agency of the county commissioners. To be sure, the new section refers to "protection, policing and patroling," which the county commissioners at the present time, under existing laws, have no authority to do. For that matter, however, there is no state agency really which has been created for this purpose by legislation so far enacted. So that these words, being of no present application, cannot affect the question either way.

Without further discussion, I may say that I am of the opinion that the mere fact that the state-raised revenue derived under the proposed law will be equally distributed among the counties would not make the law unconstitutional; and at the very least would not subject it to this criticism in any higher degree than the present automobile license law might be subjected to the same criticism.

On the general proposition upon which a constitutional criticism of this sort, if made, would be based, and its application to the subject matter of highways and roads, see generally Cooley on Taxation, Volume 1, page 212, et seq. The principle here laid down is that, whereas there is a general rule to the effect that the purpose for which taxes are levied must pertain to the district in which they are levied, yet, the improvement, maintenance and repair of public highways and roads is a matter having such a variety of interest, both local and state-wide, that the legislative authority is vested with wide discretion in determining the manner of the distribution of the proceeds of taxes levied for such purposes.

Other constitutional questions might possibly arise concerning this section, but in the very limited time which I have had for the consideration of the matter I have not been able to imagine any other questions of this sort.

Very truly yours,
TIMOTHY S. HOGAN.
Attorney General.

MUNICIPAL ELECTIONS ARE GENERAL AND REGULAR ELECTIONS FOR PURPOSE OF VOTING ON INITIATIVE AND REFERENDUM PETITIONS.

Inasmuch as municipal and township elections are held at specific periods generally throughout the state, they are to be deemed regular and general elections within the meaning of article 2, section 10 of the constitution, providing for the submission to the electors of the state of laws with reference to which referendum petitions have been filed.

COLUMBUS, OHIO, April 4, 1913.

HON. MAURICE BERNSTEIN, Member Ohio Senate, Columbus, Ohio.

DEAR SIR:—Under date of February 6th, you inquire as follows:

"I have had several inquiries as to when the next general election in Ohio will take place. As you know, the law provides petitions on laws passed by this assembly must be submitted to the voters at the next general election. The question is as to whether the municipal election of 1913 will be a general election, or whether said referendum petitions must wait until the state election, which occurs in 1914?"

The question as to the meaning of the words "next general election" which you raise, is, we take it, under article II, section 10 of the constitution as recently amended wherein it states that "The second aforestated power reserved by the people is designated the referendum" and provides that when a petition signed by six per centum of the electors of the state shall have been filed with the secretary of state within ninety days after any law shall have been filed by the governor in the office of the secretary of state the said secretary of state shall submit to the electors of the state for their approval or rejection of such law at the next succeeding regular or general election in any year occurring subsequent to sixty days after the filing of such petition. It is to be noted that the election described in section 10 of article II is the next succeeding regular or general election in any year. The word "general" is used in contradistinction to "local" and the word "regular" is used in contradistinction to "special." The election which will take place in 1913 while it is simply an election for municipal and township officers is nevertheless a regular election throughout the state and is also generally held throughout the state, in that the election is held on the same day in each political subdivision of the state. I am therefore of the opinion that the municipal and township elections to be held on the first Tuesday after the first Monday in November, 1913, will be within the provisions of said article II, section 10, in that it will be a regular or general election, and the secretary of state should submit to the electors of the state for their approval or rejection the law, section or item in reference to which a referendum petition has been filed at such November (1913) lection providing such petition is filed within the time specified in such section.

Yours truly.
TIMOTHY S. HOGAN,
Attorney General.

POWER OF MAYOR TO CLOSE SALOONS IN CASE OF A FLOOD EMERGENCY.

Under section 4261, General Code, a mayor is empowered to suspend business in all of the saloons of a municipality in case of tumult, riot, mob or considered action with intent to commit a felony. This section would authorize the closing of saloons in a municipality by a mayor in the event of a flood to prevent the action of organized bands of looters and disturbers but such action must extend equally to all parties engaged in such business within the municipal corporation.

COLUMBUS, OHIO, April 15, 1913.

HON. JACOB J. WISE, Member Ohio Senate, Columbus, Ohio.

DEAR SIR:—You request my opinion upon the following question:

"May a mayor close all the saloons of a city in case of a flood emergency?"

The only section which I have been able to find in any way applicable to the question which you ask is section 4261 of the General Code, which is in full as follows:

> "When in any municipal corporation there is, in the opinion of the mayor thereof, a tumult, riot, mob, or body of men acting together with intent to commit a felony or to do or offer to do violence to persons or property, or by force and violence to wreck property and resist the laws of this state, or there is reasonable apprehension thereof, he shall issue his proclamation requiring the keepers of all saloons, or places where intoxicating liquors are sold at retail as a beverage, to close such places of business and to keep them closed during the continuance of such above described disturbance, when the mayor shall withdraw his proclamation."

The mere occurrence of a flood and consequent damage to property and incidental disorder does not of itself authorize the mayor to issue such a proclamation as is referred to in this section. The situation must present, at the very least, cause for reasonable apprehension of the gathering of a body of men acting together with intent to commit felony or to do violence to persons or property, or by force to wreck property and resist the laws of the state. I can conceive of such a situation arising out of a disaster like that which has overwhelmed a great number of localities in this state within the past few weeks. The existence of organized bands of looters would be sufficient cause in my judgment for the exercise of the power.

It is to be observed that the mayor cannot close some of the saloons in a municipal corporation under this section without closing all of them. I am informed by the public press that in this city the mayor attempted to exercise his power in this way, and that it was ultimately agreed that his act was invalid.

I should be of the opinion that in order that the mayor might lawfully exercise his proclamation under the above quoted section, the emergency must effect the municipality as a whole, and the order must be directed to all of the saloons therein.

Yours very truly,
TIMOTHY S. HOGAN,
Attorney General.

SNYDER ACT—LIMITATIONS UPON AMOUNT OF BOND ISSUE—TIME LIMIT—PROCEDURE.

The contemplated Snyder act, being house bill No. 640, whilst placing a limitation upon the amount of notes and certificates of indebtedness which may be issued by a municipality thereunder, places no limitations whatever upon the amount of bonds which may be issued. The only limitation upon bonds issued under said act is the limitation upon the amount of bonds which may be retired in any one year. Said act provides an eighteen month limitation upon the running of notes, but places no time limit upon the running of bonds.

The procedure of the issuance of bonds therein provided for is that outlined in the general law respecting the issuance of bonds, except that their issuance may be exempted from the initiative and referendum requirements by reciting facts respecting an emergency; and that publication and notice must be made once a week for two consecutive weeks by a newspaper published in the county and also that said bonds need not be offered to the sinking fund trustees for the commissioners or to any other taker and that they also may be sold at popular subscription.

COLUMBUS, OHIO, April 23, 1913.

HON. EARL ERTEL, Member House of Representatives, Loveland, Ohio.

DEAR SIR:—I have your request of April 23rd for an opinion as to the construction of the so-called Snyder act, being house bill No. 640, passed at the present session of the general assembly and now in effect. Your questions are as follows:

"1. In what amount can bonds be issued under this act by a municipality?

"2. What is the time limit on the running of said bonds?

"3. Also I would be pleased to have you suggest very briefly the procedure to be followed in issuing such bonds?"

Answering your first question, I am of the opinion that there is no limitation upon the amount of bonds which can be issued by a municipality under favor of this act. The act, in section 3 thereof, which I do not quote, provides for the issuance of two distinct kinds of evidences of indebtedness for the purposes mentioned therein, viz. notes, i. e., certificates of indebtedness and bonds. The distinction between these two forms of securities is too well known to require elaborate discussion.

Section 4 of the act does impose limitation, both as to amount and as to the time for which they may run, upon notes or certificates of indebtedness which may be issued. This section, however, has no relation whatever to bonds.

Section 5 of the act relates to this form of security, and that section contains no limitation whatever upon the amount of bonds which may be issued nor upon the length of time for which they may run, except that there is a limitation upon the amount which may be made payable in any one year. The words "made payable" as therein used are not to be understood as equivalent in meaning to the word "issued." This phrase means that in issuing bonds the authorities issuing them must not provide that the final redemption of more than the amount therein referred to shall take place in any one year. If the amount (an amount equal to one-tenth of one per cent. of the 1912 duplicate of the taxing district) is insufficient for the needs of the borrowing corporation or sub-division, the only requirement is that the bonds be issued in series, some of them falling due in one year and some in another. The purpose of this limitation is evidently to prevent the corporation or subdivision from paying off its obligations too soon, and thus placing an inordinately great burden upon the taxpayers of any one year.

As to your first question, then, there is no limit upon the amount of bonds which may be issued under this act by a municipality.

As to your second question there is no time limit on the running of such bonds. The eighteen months' limitation to which you refer in your inquiry relates to notes and not to bonds.

The procedure of issuing bonds under this law is as follows:

The resolution or ordinance providing for their issuance may be passed and become effective immediately without publication or suspension for referendum purposes, but must recite the facts respecting the emergency, and otherwise bring the proceedings within the terms of the act. (Section 3.) The bonds may then be sold after publication and notice once a week for two consecutive weeks in one newspaper published and of general circulation in any county in which a part of the municipality is located. On the expiration of the two weeks' period they may be sold directly to bidders without necessity of being offered to the sinking fund trustees or the commissioners or to any other taker. If the council wishes they may be sold at popular subscription.

The bonds must be executed as other bonds of the corporation are executed, except that on their face they must recite the purpose for which they are issued, and that they are issued under authority of this act.

In all other respects the provisions of the general law respecting the issuance of bonds apply, and it will be necessary for the municipality to vary its ordinary procedure only in the particulars which I have specified.

When the issuance of the bonds is provided for, and even before their sale, the contracts may be let, the money being regarded as in the appropriate fund for that purpose.

I trust that the information I have given you will be sufficient for your needs.

Yours very truly,

TIMOTHY S. HOGAN,

Attorney General.

TOWNSHIP TRUSTEES—COMPROMISE NOT PERMITTED IN ABSENCE OF DISPUTE OF CLAIM OR VALUABLE CONSIDERATION.

The power conferred by Section 3244, General Code, upon township trustees to sue and be sued, carries with it the authority to compromise a suit. Such compromise, however, may not be entered into without a valuable consideration or unless there exists a bona fide dispute as to the township rights with reference to the claim.

COLUMBUS, OHIO, April 1, 1913.

HON. C. P. VENUS, Member of the House of Representatives, Columbus, Ohio.

DEAR SIR:—Under date of March 19th you request my opinion as follows:

"The Ohio Trust Company of Huron county, Ohio, was depository for the funds of Norwalk, township, said county, and while such depository said trust company became insolvent, and the township had on deposit $6,000.00.

"The township sued the sureties on the bond of said depository, and recovered a judgment which carried with it interest due the township on said deposit.

"I would be pleased to have your legal opinion as to the authority of the township officers to compromise said case now pending against the sureties of said trust company as such depository, by the payment of the principal without any interest."

Section 3244 of the General Code is as follows:

"Each civil township lawfully laid off and designated, is declared to be, and is hereby constituted, a body politic and corporate, for the purpose of enjoying and exercising the rights and privileges conferred upon it by law. It shall be capable of suing and being sued, pleading and being impleaded, and of receiving and holding real estate by devise or deed, or personal property for the benefit of the township for any useful purpose. The trustees of the township shall hold such property in trust for the township for the purpose specified in the devise, bequest, or deed of gift. They may also receive any conveyance of real estate to the township when necessary to secure or pay a debt or claim due the township, and may sell and convey real estate so received, and the proceeds of such sale shall be applied to the fund to which such debt or claim belonged."

It is well settled that authority imparted to a public officer to sue and be sued implies the power to compromise an action brought by or against the official. Compromise is defined in 8 Cyc., 501, as follows:

"A compromise is an agreement between two or more parties as a settlement of matters in dispute."

On page 504 of the same authority it is said:

"A compromise and settlement must, like all other contracts, be supported by a sufficient consideration or it cannot be enforced."

And on page 505 it is said:

"The rule is well settled that an agreement of compromise is supported by a sufficient consideration where it is in settlement of a claim which is unliquidated, where it is in settlement of a claim which is disputed, or where it is in settlement of a claim which is doubtful."

On page 509 it is stated:

"The usual test, however, as to whether a compromise and settlement is supported by a sufficient consideration is held to be not whether the matter in dispute was really doubtful, but whether or not the parties bona fide considered it so, and that the compromise of a disputed claim made bona fide is upon a sufficient consideration, without regard as to whether the claim be in suit or not."

From your statement of the facts, it is not clear that the matter of claim against the surety is really in dispute. You do state that the case is pending, and the assumption would seem to be justified that an appeal had been made. The question, therefore, whether or not the township trustees are empowered to compromise the claim by the remission of the interest due in accordance with the judgment recovered is one of fact. If there in reality exists a bona fide dispute as to the right to recover, or if some other substantial consideration for the release of interest exists, the claim readily might be settled by the acceptance of the principal without the interest. If such is not the case, however, and it is clear in the minds of all the parties that the township is legally entitled to the judgment with interest, no compromise can be made.

Very truly yours,
TIMOTHY S. HOGAN,
Attorney General.

BANKS AND BANKING—BANK AND TRUST COMPANIES MAY NOT ENGAGE IN REAL ESTATE BROKERAGE BUSINESS.

The purposes for which savings banks and trust companies may hold real estate, by virtue of sections 9774 and 9762, General Code, are enumerated in section 9753, General Code.

The power to purchase leases and hold real estate for the mere purpose of conducting a real estate or brokerage business is not therein included and is, therefore, not possessed by such institutions.

COLUMBUS, OHIO, April 24, 1913.

HON. W. A. GREENLUND, Member Ohio Senate, Columbus, Ohio.

DEAR SIR:—On March 3, 1913, you made the following request for my opinion:

> "Will you please advise me whether or not in your opinion savings banks and trust companies have the right under their charters to engage actively in the real estate brokerage business."

The following sections of the General Code govern savings banks and trust companies in the matter of their dealing in real estate:

The provision as to trust companies, is section 9774, which is as follows:

> "A trust company may purchase, lease, hold and convey real estate, exclusive of trust property, for the purpose and in the manner provided by this chapter as to commercial banks, and subject to like restrictions."

The provision as to savings banks is section 9762, which is as follows:

> "A savings bank may purchase, lease, hold and convey real estate for the purposes and in the manner hereinbefore provided as to commercial banks, and subject to like restrictions and limitations."

You will note that the requirement as to trust companies and also as to savings banks gives authority to these companies to purchase, lease, hold and convey real estate only in the manner provided for commercial banks and subject to the same restrictions. Therefore, the provision as to commercial banks must be read as if it applied directly to trust companies and savings banks. This provision governing the dealing, of commercial banks, in real estate is section 9753, which is as follows:

"A commercial bank may purchase, lease, hold and convey real estate only as follows:

"a. Real estate whereon is erected or may be erected a building or buildings useful for the convenient transaction of its business, and from portions of which, not required for its use, a revenue may be derived; but the cost of such building or buildings and the real estate whereon they are erected in no case shall exceed sixty per cent. of its paid-in capital and surplus;

"b. Such as is mortgaged or conveyed to it in good faith by way of security for loans made by or money due to such corporation;

"c. Such as has been purchased by it at sales upon foreclosure of mortgages owned by it, or on judgments or decrees obtained or rendered for debts due to it, or in settlements effected to secure such debts. All real property referred to in this paragraph shall be sold by such corporation within five years after it is vested therein, unless upon application by the board of directors, the superintendent of banks extends the time within which such sales shall be made;

"d. Such corporation also shall have power by lease to acquire a suitable building for the convenient transaction of its business, and from portions of which, not needed for its own use, a revenue may be derived."

Therefore, savings banks and trust companies can only purchase, lease and hold real estate as provided in the above section, and they would be without authority to engage actively in the real estate or brokerage business, that is buying and selling real estate for profit.

Yours very truly,
TIMOTHY S. HOGAN,
Attorney General.

ROADS AND HIGHWAYS—POWERS OF COUNTY COMMISSIONERS IN APPLICATION FOR AND RECEIPT OF STATE AID BENEFIT FOR YEARS 1912 AND 1913—EFFECT OF FLOOD DESTRUCTION.

Under section 1185, General Code, when the county commissioners have not applied for state aid funds for 1912, prior to May 1*st of that year and the township trustees have not made such application prior to April* 1*st, the state highway commissioners may expend the allowance for the construction, maintenance and improvement of inter-county highways within the county, except that no part of the* $444,000 appropriated by the legislature may be used for repairs unless there are at least two hundred miles of improved road in the county.

Under section 1225, General Code, only such highways may be kept in repair by the use of state aid money as were improved or constructed under the state aid act and such inter-county highways in which no state aid money has been expended, where they have been permanently improved with construction equal to that specified by the state highway commission for the material used, providing such roads have been taken over by the state on application of the county commissioners.

By applying prior to May 1, 1913, the county may receive its share of the 1913 state aid for repairs, if the commissioners appropriate an amount at least double that received from the state and the trustees of the township or township in which the roads to be repaired are situated appropriate an amount equal to that received.

COLUMBUS, OHIO, April 18, 1913.

HON. R. B. CAMERON, House of Representatives, Columbus, Ohio.

DEAR SIR:—You have requested my opinion upon the following statement of facts:

> "Great damage was done by the recent floods to the highways and bridges in Defiance county and by reason thereof, it will be necessary for the county commissioners to issue bonds in the sum of $100,000.00 approximately, to build and repair bridges. On account of the additional burden that will thereby be placed upon the taxpayers of the county, it is desired to use the state aid money allotted to said county for the years 1912 and 1913, for the purpose of repairing the roads which have been damaged as aforesaid, without requiring the county to expend an equal amount.
> "The county auditor states in a letter addressed to the governor, which is before me, that the amount now in the road fund of the county is $8,000.00, and that about $6,000.00 will come into said fund from the June collection of taxes.
> "In addition to the foregoing facts, I have been informed by the state highway commissioner that no application was made by the county commissioners or by the trustees of any township in Defiance county, for the state aid money appropriated to said county for the year 1912, and that there is in such fund, the sum of $7,500.00."

I respectfully direct your attention to section 1185 of the General Code, which provides:

> "The commissioners of a county may make application to the state highway commissioner for aid from an appropriation by the state for the construction, improvement, maintenance, or repair of highways. Such application shall be filed prior to May 1 of the year in which such appropriation may be made or become available. If the county commissioners have not made use of the apportionment to such county, in the year in which it is available, then the township trustees may make application prior to the first day of April of the succeeding year. And if the township trustees do not make use of the appropriation prior to the first day of July next succeeding, then the state highway commissioner shall have full power and authority to enter upon and construct, improve, maintain or repair any of the inter-county highways or parts thereof of said county, either by contract, force account; or in such manner as the state highway commissioner may deem for the best interests of the public, paying the full cost and expense thereof from the said apportionment of the appropriation to said county so unused as aforesaid. Any part of the apportionment to a county remaining unexpended shall remain to the credit of such county and be available for the succeeding year as herein provided."

It was the duty of the county commissioners of Defiance county, under the above quoted statute, to have made application for the 1912 funds, on or before May 1, 1912, and as they failed to do so, the trustees of any township of the county, on or before April 1, 1913, could have applied for and receive said money. Inasmuch as the trustees did not do this, the state highway commissioner has full power to expend the same for the construction, maintenance, improvement or repair of any of the inter-county highways of the county without the contribution of an equal amount by the county, except that no part of the $440,000.00 specifically appropriated by the legislature for 1912 (102 O. L. 401), may be used for repairs unless there are at least two hundred miles of improved road in the county. The consent of the state highway commissioner, however, must be obtained before the 1912 state aid money can be used for repairs.

The use of the 1913 state aid money, for repairs, is governed by section 1225 of the General Code, which provides:

"Highways improved or constructed under the provisions of any act providing for aid by the state shall be kept in repair and maintained by the state highway commissioner. The expense of such repair and maintenance shall be divided and payable twenty-five per cent. thereof by the state, fifty per cent. thereof by the county and twenty-five per cent. thereof by the township or townships. The state's share being payable from moneys appropriated by the general assembly for the purpose; the county and township shares from their respective road or road repair funds.

"It is hereby provided that the state highway commissioner may enter into a contract with an individual, firm or corporation who shall give sufficient surety bond for the faithful performance of this contract, or with the county commissioners of any county, the township trustees of any township in which such state highway is situate, for the repair and maintenance of such highway according to the plans and specifications provided by the state highway commissioner, or for the furnishing of the material or the labor necessary for such repair and maintenance, or the state highway commissioner may furnish the material or labor or both and directly supervise the repair and maintenance from his office, the work being done under any conditions or contract being subject at all times to inspection and supervision of the state highway commissioner. Inter-county highways in which no state aid money has been expended, if permanently improved with construction equal to that specified by the state highway commissioner for the material used, may be taken over by the state on application of the county commissioners and shall henceforth be maintained as prescribed herein for other designated highways. County roads and state roads not taken over by the state shall be maintained by the county, and township roads by the township, the cost of such maintenance being paid from their respective road levies for the purpose."

Under the last quoted section, only such highways may be repaired by the use of state aid money as were (1) "improved or constructed under the provisions of any act providing for aid by the state;" or, (2) "inter-county highways in which no state aid money has been expended, if permanently improved with construction equal to that specified by the state highway commissioner for the material used," providing such roads have been taken over by the state on application of the county commissioners.

On application of the county commissioners made prior to May 1st, the county may receive its share of the 1913 state aid appropriation, for repairs, if the county commissioners appropriate an amount at least double that received from the state, and the trustees of any township or townships in which the roads to be repaired are situated, appropriate an amount equal to that received from the state.

Very truly yours,
TIMOTHY S. HOGAN,
Attorney General.

OFFICES INCOMPATIBLE—MEMBER GENERAL ASSEMBLY AND HOLDER OF CITY OFFICE.

Under article 2, section 4 of the constitution, a member of the general assembly may not during his term, hold a city office and postpone receipt of vouchers therefor until the end of his term, even though holding himself in readiness for service in the general assembly at call.

COLUMBUS, OHIO, May 7, 1913.

HON. CARL D. FRIEBOLIN, Cleveland, Ohio.

DEAR SIR:—I beg to acknowledge receipt of your letter of April 30th, asking my opinion on the following question:

"A member of the general assembly, having served in the regular session of 1911, is elected to a city office the next year, 1912. He receives his vouchers as a member of the legislature of 1912, but does not wish to cash them now, having always held himself in readiness for special session. The question is: Shall he present his vouchers for 1912?"

Section 4 of article 2 of the constitution provides:

"No person holding office under the authority of the United States or any lucrative office under the authority of this state shall be eligible to or have a seat in the general assembly; but this provision shall not extend to township officers, justices of the peace, notaries public or officers of the militia."

This constitutional provision is one of several safeguards thrown about the legislative department to prevent undue influence in performing the solemn and important governmental function of legislating for the state. There is a direct prohibition against a person holding office either under the authority of the United States, or a lucrative office under the authority of this state, being eligible to the general assembly. The section provides certain exceptions to this sweeping prohibition, namely: Township officers, justices of the peace, notaries public and officers of the militia. The holding of any and all other offices renders one both ineligible to, as well as causing the forfeiture of their seat in the general assembly. The well known maxim "Expressio unius exclusio alterius est" applies—a doctrine that has been so frequently interpreted by our supreme court, and the principles so often applied as to not need citation of authority.

So, to my mind, there is no question but that a person holding a city office to which he has been elected is ineligible to, or to have a seat in the general assembly.

Where the holding of two offices at the same time is forbidden by the constitution, an incompatibility is created similar in its effect to that of the common law, and the acceptance of a second office of the kind prohibited ipso facto absolutely vacates the first. 77 Va. 503; Dixon vs. People, 17 Ill. 191; Mechem on Public Offices, Sec. 429; People vs. Green, 40 N. Y. 394.

It is my view, therefore, that when the person was elected to and accepted a city office he ceased to be a member of the general assembly, and lost all right to obtain the emoluments attached thereto.

The reasoning apparent from an examination of the case of State, ex rel., vs. Mason, 61 O. S. 62, indicates that had the clerk in that case have been an officer instead of merely an employe the court would have arrived at a different conclusion.

It is my opinion that the party referred to in the question is not entitled to draw pay for any time after he accepted and entered upon the duties of the city office.

Very truly yours,
TIMOTHY S. HOGAN,
Attorney General.

ROAD NOT EXTENDING THROUGH MUNICIPALITY CONTINUOUSLY MAY NOT BE IMPROVED AS A DISTRICT ROAD.

Under section 7108, General Code, a road not extending continuously through the corporate limits of a municipality may not be improved by the commissioners of a road district.

COLUMBUS, OHIO, April 17, 1913.

HON. D. W. CRISWELL, Member of House of Representatives, Columbus, Ohio.

DEAR SIR:—I acknowledge receipt of your letter of March 24th, requesting my opinion upon the following:

"Under the statute providing for special road districts for highway improvement, Franklin, Tuscarawas, Keene and Jackson townships in Coshocton county, Ohio, formed a special district for the purposes set forth in the statute. There has been some eighteen miles of highway improved.

"Within this district are two municipalities, viz.: Coshocton (population 10,000) and Roscoe (population 700).

"These two municipalities, while subject to the tax, cannot, according to the decision of the road commissioners of this district, have any road improvement within their incorporated limits, finding their decision on section 7108 of the General Code.

"Coshocton has not asked, nor does not want any improvements made under the provisions of this law but Roscoe, with a small tax duplicate finds they cannot improve their highways by an additional tax for such a purpose. The several roads leading into Roscoe are improved as shown by the accompanying map.

"The continuity of such improvement is broken at the village limits and thus the traffic through this village to Coshocton, the county seat, is greatly interfered with by bad roads in Roscoe.

"I would be pleased to have your department render an opinion upon the ruling of the road commissioners of this district on section 7108."

Section 7108 of the General Code, provides:

"If a majority of the votes cast at such election is in favor of improvement of the public roads of such district by general taxation, the road commissioners shall each year designate and determine what roads in their opinion should be improved in said year, the extent of such improvement in each township, at what points the improvement shall begin, and how much improvement shall be completed annually. No public highway within the corporate limits of a city or village in such road district shall be improved unless such road extends through such road district continuously."

You will observe that before any roads in a road district can be improved within a municipality, they must extend through the district continuously; that is to say, such roads must extend from one side or boundary of the district, to another side or boundary thereof, without interruption or break in their continuity.

I am unable to determine from the plat furnished with your letter, whether the roads sought to be improved within the village of Roscoe come within the requirements of section 7108, as above defined, but unless they do, the funds of the district may not be used to improve them.

The commissioners of the district are in possession of all the facts, and I am not prepared to say, from the information at hand, that their ruling is erroneous.

Very truly yours,

TIMOTHY S. HOGAN,

Attorney General.

STATE SENATOR DOES NOT VACATE OFFICE BY REMOVAL FROM DISTRICT.

Under article 2, section 2 of the constitution, senators are required to have resided in their respective districts and counties one year next preceding their election. Inasmuch, however, as there is no constitutional or statutory provision requiring a state senator to live in such district during his incumbency in office, his removal therefrom, subsequent to his election, will not operate to vacate such office.

COLUMBUS, OHIO, June 11, 1913.

HON. WM. A. WEYGANDT, State Senator, Ravenna, Ohio.

DEAR SIR:—Under date of May 26th, you request my opinion as follows:

> "Can a duly elected and qualified senator subsequently reside outside of the senatorial district and hold office legally as state senator?"

In the 29th volume of Cyc., page 1377, the following is said:

> "Residence within the district over which the jurisdiction of the office extends is often also made a necessary qualification by statute. In the absence of such an express provision, however, there would seem to be no reason for holding that residence within the district is necessary to eligibility, provided the other qualifications mentioned in the statute are present. But a provision of statute requiring residence must be observed."

The only Ohio authority on the subject of your question which I have been able to find is section 3, article 2, of the constitution, which is as follows:

> "Senators and representatives shall have resided in their respective counties or districts, one year next preceding their election, unless they shall have been absent on the public business of the United States, or of this state."

So far as I have been able to find, the courts of this state in no way passed upon your question.

The case of People ex rel. vs. Markham, 96, Cal., page 262, however, bears a direct relation to your question. The syllabus of that case is as follows:

> "Constitutional Law—Qualification of State Senator—Change of District After Election—Under section 4 of article 4 of the constitution, providing that 'no person shall be a member of the senate or assembly who has not been a citizen and inhabitant of the state three years, and of the district for which he shall be chosen one year, next before his election,' a citizen and resident of the state for three years who was duly elected state senator at the election held in 1890 for the fortieth district, composed of the counties of San Bernardino and San Diego, and who was at that time a qualified citizen and inhabitant of San Bernardino county, of which he remained a resident, was not deprived of his office because of the redistricting of the state by the legislature in 1891, whereby the county of San Diego alone was made to constitute the fortieth district."

In this case the court distinguishes case of State vs. Cheate, 11 Ohio St., 511, the syllabus of which case is as follows:

> "The legislature may change the boundaries of a county, and when such change places an associate judge within the limits of another county, who does not, within a reasonable time, remove into the limits of the county for which he was appointed, he forfeits his office.
> "A person who attempts to exercise the office of associate judge in a county wherein he does not reside, is guilty of intrusion and usurpation.
> "The legislature may fill a vacancy that has happened, or that is certain to happen, before the meeting of the next general assembly."

In the later case, however, it was expressly provided in the constitution, section 3, as it existed at that time, that the incumbent of the office in question should during his continuance in office reside in the county for which he was elected.

In the Ohio case the change of boundaries placed the judge in question outside of the district for which he was obliged to act as judge, by virtue of his office. The Ohio case is authority for the proposition that a change in boundary which results in placing an officer outside of his district, is equivalent to a removal from the district by the officer himself.

Granting this principle, the California case may be considered on all fours with the question you present. In that case the constitutional provision required residence in the district for a certain period prior to the election of a senator, but said nothing with relation to his residence within such district after his election, and the court held that change of boundary, leaving the officer's residence outside of his district, did not disqualify him from holding office.

That the matter is one dependent upon constitutional or statutory regulations is apparent from the fact that the legislature, with reference to councilmen, has taken pains to provide that removal from the ward of a city or from a village, shall disqualify. Sections 4207 and 4218, General Code. And also by the fact that the constitution in section 12, of article 4, at the present time, expressly provides that judges of the court of common pleas shall, while in office, reside in the county for which they are elected.

In accordance with the above authorities, therefore, since there is no existing constitutional or statutory provision requiring a senator to reside in his district during his continuance in office, I conclude that a senator may subsequent to his his election reside outside of the senatorial district and still legally hold his office.

Very truly yours,

TIMOTHY S. HOGAN,

Attorney General.

WAGES MUST BE PAID NOT LESS THAN TWICE A MONTH—PAYMENT OF DAILY OR WEEKLY WAGES NOT INTERFERED WITH.

Under the provisions of house bill No. 132, every employer who employes five or more persons regularly must pay them their wages on or before the first day and on or before the fifteenth day of each month.

Payment of daily or weekly wages is not interfered with by the provisions of this act.

COLUMBUS, OHIO, July 9, 1913.

HON. CARL D. FRIEBOLIN, Member of the 80th General Assembly, Cleveland, Ohio.

DEAR SIR:—I am in receipt of your communication dated June 13, 1913, in which you recite the following statement of facts:

> "The first half of section one (1) of senate bill No. 133, entitled: 'An act to provide for the payment of wages at least twice in each calendar month' (approved April 12, 1913,) provides that employers 'shall on or before the first day of each month pay all their employes engaged in the performance of either manual or clerical labor, the wages earned by them during the first half of the preceding month ending with the fifteenth day thereof, and shall on or before the fifteenth day of each month pay such employes the wages earned by them during the last half of the preceding calendar month.'
> "For illustration say an employer who pays every other week has the following pay days in June and July, namely: June 14th and 28th, July 12th and 26. On each of said pay days he pays for the two weeks preceding the pay day week, which pay day week's wages are held back. For example: on pay day July 12th he will pay wages for the weeks June 23rd to 28th inclusive and June 30th to July 5th, inclusive; holding back July 7th to July 12th, inclusive. On July 26th pay day, he will pay for the weeks July 7th to 12th inclusive and July 14th to 19th, inclusive, holding back July 21st and 26th, inclusive.
> "Nevertheless, said employer, as required by said act, would not on or before the 15th day of July pay his employes the wages earned by them during the last half of the preceding calendar month, and likewise on or before the 1st of July would not be paying his employes the wages earned by them during the first half of June."

and you request my opinion as to whether or not such an employer is complying with the provisions of section 1 of senate bill 132, passed March 25, 1913, and approved April 12, 1913.

In reply to your inquiry I desire to say that under the rules of construction in Ohio there can be no question but that the employer paying as cited in your statement of fact would not be complying with the provisions of section 1 of said act. That section provides that every employer who employs five or more regular employes in the state of Ohio,

> "shall on or before the first day of each month pay all their employes engaged in the performance of either manual or clerical labor the wages earned by them during the first half of the preceding month ending with the fifteenth day thereof, and shall on or before the fifteenth day of each month pay such employes the wages earned by them during the last half of the preceding calendar month."

Under that part of section 1 just quoted there can be no question of what the intent of the general assembly was, for it places the first day of each month and the 15th day of each month as mandatory pay days, and specifically sets forth what wages must be paid on each such pay day, and it provides in the latter part of said section as follows:

"Provided nothing herein contained shall be construed to interfere with the daily or weekly payment of wages."

And, while an employer paying in the manner set forth in the illustration in your letter may be doing better for his employe than by strict compliance with the provisions of section 1 of said act, nevertheless such employer would not, in my opinion, be following the provisions of the said act.

Very truly yours,
TIMOTHY S. HOGAN,
Attorney General.

POSITION OF TEACHER IN PUBLIC SCHOOL NOT AN OFFICE—MEMBER OF GENERAL ASSEMBLY MAY BE EMPLOYED AS TEACHER IN PUBLIC SCHOOL.

The position of teacher in public schools is not considered a public office, consequently there is no inhibition against a member of the general assembly being employed as a teacher in the public schools.

COLUMBUS, OHIO, July 14, 1913.

HON. GEORGE S. CRAWFORD, Member House of Representatives, Graysville, Ohio.

DEAR SIR:—Under date of July 12th you request my opinion whether a member of the general assembly can be employed as teacher of common schools when not engaged in session at Columbus.

Section 4, of article 2 of the constitution provides as follows:

"No person holding office under the authority of the United States, or any lucrative office under the authority of this state, shall be eligible to, or have a seat in, the general assembly; but this provision shall not extend to township officers, justices of the peace, notaries public, or officers of the militia."

The question which arises therefore is whether or not the position of school teacher can be considered as an "office."

Section 4752, General Code, provides in part that:

"Upon a motion to adopt a resolution * * * to employe a * * * teacher * * * the clerk of the board shall publicly call the roll of the members composing the board and enter on the record the names of those voting 'aye' and the names of those voting 'no.'"

It will be seen, therefore, that the legislature considers the position of a teacher as a mere employment by the board of education. Measured by all of the definitions of "office" it is clear that the position of teacher is not an office; consequently there being an inhibition either statutory or constitutional against a member of the general assembly holding a lucrative employment such a member can be employed as a teacher of common schools when not engaged in session at Columbus.

This case is clearly distinguishable from the case of State vs. Gard 29 O. C. C. R. 426. In that case it was held that the election of one who is a teacher to the office of councilman of a city would contravene the provisions of section 120 of the Municipal Code (now section 4207, General Code) for the reason that such section 4207 provides in part as follows:

> "Each member of council shall be an elector of the city, shall not hold any other public office or employment except that of notary public or member of the state militia, and shall not be interested in any contract with the city."

While the position of teacher is not an office, yet it is a public employment.

Very truly yours,
TIMOTHY S. HOGAN,
Attorney General.

DEPUTY UNITED STATES MARSHAL AN OFFICER OF THE UNITED STATES—MEMBER OF GENERAL ASSEMBLY OF OHIO MAY NOT SERVE AS DEPUTY UNITED STATES MARSHAL.

Since section 4 of article 2 of the constitution of Ohio provides that no person holding an office under the United States shall be eligible to or have a seat in the general assembly, a member of the general assembly cannot serve as deputy United States marshal and retain his seat as a member of the general assembly, as a deputy United States marshal is an office of the United States.

COLUMBUS, OHIO, July 29, 1913.

HON. LAWRENCE BRENNAN, Member House of Representatives, 2705 East 55th St., Cleveland, Ohio.

DEAR SIR:—Under date of July 15th you request my opinion as to whether or not you being a duly elected and qualified member of the house of representatives of the general assembly of Ohio may accept an appointment as deputy United States marshal without interfering with your position as such representative, providing you report for duty as representative whenever the legislature convenes.

Section 4 of article 2 of the constitution of Ohio provides:

> "No person holding office under the authority of the United States, or any lucrative office under the authority of this state, shall be eligible to, or have a seat in, the general assembly; but this provision shall not extend to township officers, justices of the peace, notaries public, or officers of the militia."

The question, therefore, is whether or not one holding the position of deputy United States marshal is holding an office under the authority of the United States.

The constitution provides that such a person shall not have a seat in the general assembly.

Therefore, the acceptance of an office under the authority of the United States by a member of the general assembly would forfeit his rights as a member of the general assembly. While it is true that section 6 of article 2 provides that each house shall be the judge of the qualifications of its members, yet in the case of State ex rel. Leland vs. Mason, 61 O. S. 513 it was held:

> "A member of the general assembly, who has accepted an appointment to a federal judgeship thereby, by force of section 4 of article 2 of the constitution, becomes ineligible to a seat in the general assembly and ceases to be a member of that body, and is not entitled to payment of salary thereafter."

The question, therefore, narrows itself down whether the position of deputy United States marshal is an office under the authority of the United States.

Mechem on public offices, section 38, cited with approval in the case of State vs. Meyers, 56 O. S. 340 at page 349 states:

> "Whether deputies appointed by public officers are to be regarded as public officers themselves, depends upon the circumstances and method of their appointments. Where such appointment is provided for by law, and a fortieri where it is required by law, which fixes the powers and duties of such deputies, and where such deputies are required to take the oath of office and to give bonds for the performance of their duties, the deputies are usually regarded as public officers. * * * So a deputy marshal is an officer of the United States, and deputy sheriffs are recognized by the statutes of most states as independent public officers. * * *"

The case cited under such section of Mechem in support of the proposition that a deputy United States marshal is an officer is the case of United States vs. Tinklepaugh 3 Blatchford (G. C.) 425. In that case, which was a criminal case the defendant was charged with obstructing, resisting and opposing an officer of the United States in serving or attempting to serve a warrant, and the court on page 429 states as follows:

> "The question, then, is: were Myer and Horton officers of the United States, authorized to serve the warrant? They were deputies of the marshal. It is so charged in the indictment. As such deputies they were authorized to serve the warrant without any special appointment. But it is said that, although they may have been authorized to execute the warrant, they were merely agents or servants of the marshal, and were not, within the meaning of the law, officers of the United States. A little consideration of the laws of congress will show that a deputy marshal is an officer of the United States, authorized to serve process; and, if he be such officer, so authorized, resistance to him is prohibited by the act of congress in question.
> "The marshal has power, as there shall be occasion, to appoint one or more deputies, who are removable from office by the judge of the district court or the circuit court sitting in the district, at the pleasure of either. (Act of September 24, 1789, I. U. S. Stat. at Large 87, section 27.) If a deputy marshal can be removed from office, he is an officer before he is so removed, for, he cannot be removed from office unless he is an officer; and as he has power to serve process he is an officer of the United States empowered to serve process. Upon the death of the marshal, his deputies continue in office, unless otherwise specially removed, until another marshal is appointed and sworn. (Act of September 24, 1789, I. U. S. Stat. at Large 87, section 28.) Every marshal or his deputy, when removed from office, has power, notwithstanding his removal, to execute all such precepts as are in his hands at the time of such removal. Id. 88, section 28.) Marshals and their deputies have the same powers, in executing the laws of the United States, that sheriffs and their deputies in the several states have, in executing the laws of the several states. (Act of February 28, 1795, section 1 U. S. Stat. at Large, 425.) When a witness is material on the trial of a criminal case, a judge is authorized to issue a warrant, directed to the marshal or other officer authorized to execute criminal and civil process, to arrest such witness and carry him before such judge. (Act of August 8, 1846, section 7, 9 U. S. Stat. at Large 74.) These several laws show that deputy marshals are officers of the United States, authorized to serve process."

The United States court having held that a United States deputy marshal is an officer of the United States I am of the opinion that should you accept a United States marshalship you would under the case of State ex rel. Leland vs. Mason supra cease to be a member of the general assembly and would not be entitled to payment of salary thereafter.

Yours truly,
TIMOTHY S. HOGAN,
Attorney General.

BY FORCE OF SECTION 16 ARTICLE 2 OF THE CONSTITUTION AN ACT OF THE LEGISLATURE IN CONFORMITY WITH THIS PROVISION PURPORTING TO AMEND PRIOR STATUTES HAS THE FORCE OF A NEW ENACTMENT.

1. By force of section 16 of article 2 of the state constitution an act of the legislature in conformity with this provision purporting to amend prior statutes has the force and effect of a new enactment, and is effective as law although the statutes it purports to amend are repealed by an earlier act passed in pari materia with it.

2. The reference to the "state board of agriculture" in the act regulating the sale of feed stuffs (H. B. 393; 103 O. L. 515*) is a mistake that may be corrected by construction by reading therein instead the "agricultural commission" the board intended by the act. As thus corrected, this act as the later enactment is effective and repealed by implication sections* 64 to 69 inclusive and sections 71 and 72 of senate bill 178 as enacted (103 O. L. 318, 319) relating to the same subject matter.

COLUMBUS, OHIO, October 14, 1913.

HON. STEPHEN M. YOUNG, Member House of Representatives, Cleveland, Ohio.

DEAR SIR:—As previously acknowledged, I have your favor of June 10, 1913, in which you call my attention to apparent conflict in certain provisions of senate bill 178 (103 O. L. 304) with those of house bill 393 (103 O. L. 515).

More specifically the discrepancy in these laws, as appointed by you, arises from the fact that senate bill 178 as enacted, by sections 64 to 72, inclusive, thereof, makes certain provisions regulating the sale of feed stuffs, and by section 124 thereof, repeals sections 1129 to 1138, inclusive, of the General Code, relating to the same subject matter, while house bill 393 as enacted amends sections 1129 to 1134 inclusive, and sections 1136, 1137 and 1138 of the General Code, and by the amendment thereof makes provisions with reference to the subject matter of the act, to wit, the sale of feed stuffs, in some respects materially different from those made by the sections of senate bill 178 relating to the same subject matter. In view of this apparent conflict you ask my opinion as to the effect to be given to these enactments in question. More particularly, you inquire, first, whether it was competent for the legislature in the enactment of house bill 393 to amend the sections of the General Code which had been repealed by senate bill 178; second, whether senate bill 178 as enacted, will be rendered nugatory in part by the enactment of house bill 393; third, whether effect must be given to both sections 66 of the senate bill and 1131 General Code of the house bill requiring a person engaged in the sale of feed stuffs to obtain a license from the agricultural commission, and the state board of agriculture, respectively.

Briefly stated, the history of these two enactments is as follows:

Senate bill 178 was passed by the senate March 18, 1913, and by the house, with certain amendments thereto, on April 15, 1913. On the same day the house amendments were concurred in by the senate. The bill as enacted was signed by the presiding officers of the senate and house on April 28, approved by the governor May 3, and deposited in the office of the secretary of state on May 7. House bill 393 was passed by the house March 19, 1913, and by the senate with certain amendments thereto, on April 11. These amendments were concurred in by the house on April 15, and the bill as enacted signed by the presiding officers of the house and senate on April 28, and approved by the governor May 7. The law as enacted was filed with the secretary of state on May 8.

Senate bill 178 as enacted (103 O. L., 304) is an act creating the agricultural commission of Ohio and prescribing its organization, power and duties. This act confers on the agricultural commission certain powers and duties previously conferred upon and exercised by other officers and boards, including the state board of agriculture. Prior to the act in question, just noted, the power and duty of enforcing the statutory law with reference to the sale of feed stuffs (sections 1129 to 1138 G. C.) was vested in the state board of agriculture. By section 11 of the act just noted it is provided that on and after the fifteenth day of July, 1913, this board, among others, should have no further legal existence; and further by this act, the sections of the General Code creating this board and prescribing its regulations, powers and duties, were expressly repealed. Now sections 64 to 72 of this act, inclusive, make certain provisions as to the sale of feed stuffs, and certain of these sections, to wit, sections 65, 66 and 72, confer powers and impose duties on the agricultural commission with reference to the matter of the sale of feed stuffs. House bill 393 as enacted (103 O. L. 515) by sections 1129 to 1134 inclusive, and sections 1136, 1137 and 1138 G. C., as therein amended, and by section 1136-a, G. C., as therein enacted, likewise makes certain provisions regulating the sale of feed stuffs, and certain sections of the act, to wit, sections 1130, 1131, 1133, 1137 and 1138, confer certain powers and impose certain duties upon the state board of agriculture.

Aside from the sections of the respective acts in question conferring powers and imposing duties upon the agricultural commission and the state board of agriculture, respectively, it is noted that the provisions of senate bill 178 regulating the sale of feed stuffs, correspond quite closely, as to subject matter, with the provisions of house bill 393. Your inquiry does not invite any discussion by me as to which provisions in the sections above noted in these respective enactments are in harmony, or as to which are in conflict and in the view I take of the questions presented, such discussion is not necessary.

It is clear that the provisions of house bill 393, insofar as they purport to confer power and duties on and with reference to the state board of agriculture are wholly ineffectual. With this exception, however, this act (103 O. L. 515) must be given effect as the law on the subject matter, to wit, the sale of feed stuffs. This latter conclusion follows from the fact that this act covers the whole subject matter and purports to revise the statutory law pertaining thereto. In the case of Goff vs. Gates 87 O. S. 142, 149 the court says:

> "It is a well known rule of construction that where a statute purports to revise the whole subject matter of a former act and thereby evidences the fact that it is intended as a substitute for the former, although it contains no express words to that effect it operates as a repeal of the former law."

On a consideration of both of these acts in question, I am of the opinion that it was the legislative intention to confer all power, duties and authority with reference to the sale of feed stuffs on the agricultural commission of Ohio provided for by the senate bill. This follows not only from the fact that the state board of agriculture has been abolished but also from the consideration that by section 11 of the senate bill it is expressly provided that the agricultural commission shall succeed to and be possessed of the rights, authority and powers of the state board of agriculture. And it seems quite clear that insofar as the state board of agriculture is referred to in house bill 393 it is the agricultural commission which is intended. The reference therein to the state board of agriculture is in legal intendment a mistake or misnomer to be corrected by construction. In the case of State ex rel. vs. Archibald 52 O. S. 9, the court says:

> "That courts have power to correct errors and mistakes in statutes, cannot be doubted; but such errors and mistakes must be manifest beyond doubt, either on the face of the act or when read in connection with other statutes in pari materia. When it thus appears beyond doubt that a statute, when read literally as printed, is impossible of execution, or will defeat the plain object of its enactment, or is senseless, or leads to absurd results or consequences, a court is authorized to regard such defects as the result of error or mistake, and to put such construction upon the statute as will correct the error or mistake, by carrying out the clear purpose and manifest intention of the legislature."

In view of the fact that the state board of agriculture has been abolished, the provisions of house bill 393, with reference to the state board of agriculture are senseless and absurd, and impossible of execution; while on the other hand it is clear from the provisions of the senate bill as enacted in pari materia with the house bill as enacted that it is the legislative intent to invest the agricultural commission with the powers and duties incident to the enforcement of the law as to the sale of feed stuffs. I am of the opinion therefore that the words "agricultural commission" should by construction be read into house bill 393, instead of the words "state board of agriculture" and that so read effect is to be given to the provisions of the house bill as the effective law on the subject.

It follows that a person engaged in the sale of feed stuffs is required to obtain but one license, and that from the agricultural commission, for which he is required to pay the sum of twenty-five dollars and no more.

I note your query as to whether it was competent for the legislature in the enactment of house bill 393 to amend sections of the General Code which had been repealed by the enactment of senate bill 178, I do not think that the situation presented any difficulty.

By force of constitutional provision (section 16 article 2) the act of the legislature in passing house bill 393, had the force and effect of a new enactment (15 O. S. 573, 602) it follows that the act (103 O. L. 515) is valid and effective notwithstanding the sections of the General Code it purports to amend were repealed by the senate bill as enacted.

Attorney General vs. Stryker 141 Mich., 437.

Golonbieski vs. State 101 Wis. 333.

In conclusion I note that the subject matter of section 70 of the senate bill to wit: feed stuff adulterants is not covered by any corresponding section or provision in the house bill, and of course, the provisions of said section 70 is the effective law on the matters covered by it. As to the other sections of the senate bill covering the subject of feed stuffs it will be noticed that, save that the words "agricultural commission" are used instead of the words "state board of agriculture," their language is identical with the corresponding sections of the General Code which the house bill purports to amend, and as sections of the house bill cover completely the subject matter in the corresponding sections of the senate bill and are evidently intended as substitutes for corresponding sections of previous legislation, it follows that the sections of the house bill stand as the effective law on the particular subjects covered by them and the corresponding sections of the senate bill are repealed by implication.

THE PRACTICE OF EMPLOYES SIGNING "PAYMASTERS' ORDERS" DOES NOT VIOLATE THE PROVISION OF 103 OHIO LAWS 154, AN ACT PROVIDING FOR THE PAYMENT OF WAGES TWICE A MONTH AND PROVIDING THAT NO ASSIGNMENT OF FUTURE WAGES SHALL BE VALID.

The practice represented by employes signing "paymasters' orders" directing their employers to apply a part of their earnings to the payment of the premium on their insurance is not avoided by the provisions of 103 Ohio Laws, page 154, an act to provide the payment of wages twice a month and also providing that no assignment of future wages shall be valid.

COLUMBUS, OHIO, November 5, 1913.

HON. HERMAN FELLINGER, Member House of Representatives, Cleveland, Ohio.

DEAR SIR:—I beg to acknowledge receipt of your letter of November 5th, requesting my opinion upon the effect, if any, of an act entitled, "To provide for the payment of wages at least twice in each calendar month" (103 O. L. 154), upon the use of what is commonly called paymasters' orders for the payment of insurance premiums out of periodical wages.

You enclose for my examination, in connection with this question form No. 1603 of the Standard Accident Insurance Co., and forms Nos. 968, 2339 and 2489 of the Continental Casualty Co.

The act in question, in so far as it applies to the subject at hand, provides as follows:

"No assignment of future wages * * * shall be valid."

Form No. 1603 of the Standard Accident Insurance Company contains the following order, directed to the paymaster:

"Agreement for $_____ H. O. No. _____
"Acc. Pol. No. _____ Sick Pol. No. _____
"To. _____ _____

"For valuable consideration, I have agreed to pay to the Standard Accident Insurance Company, of Detroit, Michigan, the amount of money herein stated, from my wages earned during the several periods respectively specified, and to leave the amount thereof with you, to be transmitted to the Standard Accident Insurance Company, or its duly authorized agents, and to that end, I hereby request you to make such payments for me, and in my behalf, $_____ from wages earned in the month of _____ 19____ * * *

"These payments cover the premiums on a policy issued to me by said Standard Accident Insurance Company, bearing even number and date herewith; the first payment applying on the first insurance period of two months from date hereof, the second payment to the second insurance period of two months more; the third payment to the third insurance period of three months more; and the fourth payment to the fourth insurance period of five months more. * * *"

Form No. 968 of the Continental Casualty Company provides as follows:

"Paymaster's order for $_____ No. _____
"To the paymaster of _____.

"Please pay for me to the Continental Casualty Company the sum of _____ dollars and charge the same against my pay account for services rendered or to be rendered by me.

"This order is given to provide for the payment of premium, on policy of insurance for which I have this day made application, and you are authorized and requested to pay the said sum in installments from my wages as follows:

"$_____ from my wages for month of _____ 19____ * * *"

Form No. 2239 of the Continental Casualty Company contains the following provision:

"Order for $_____ on paymaster of _____ No._____.

"Please pay for me to the Continental Casualty Company the sum of _____ dollars and charge the same against my pay account for services rendered or to be rendered by me.

"This order is given to provide for the payment of premium on a policy of insurance for which I have this day made application, and you are authorized and requested to pay the said sum in installments as follows:

"First installment of $_____ to be paid from my wages for month of _____ 19____. * * *"

Form No. 2489 of the Continental Casualty Company contains the following provision:

"I have this day made application to the Continental Casualty Company (hereinafter called the company) for a policy of insurance. This order is given to provide for the payment of the premium thereon which you are authorized and requested to deduct from my wages in installments as hereinafter provided, pay to the company for me, and charge against my pay account for services rendered to or to be rendered to my employer on whom this order is drawn.

"These installments are to be deducted and paid without notice, one from the wages of each of the months hereinafter named. If my wages are paid to me more often than once a month, then each installment instead of being deducted and paid from the whole month's wages is to be deducted and paid from that part of the month's wages first payable to me. If for any reason whatever you fail to make deduction and payment of any of said installments you are further authorized and requested at the option of the company to deduct and pay the defaulted installment from my wages for any subsequent period."

There are other stipulations in these various contracts which are made a part of the insurance contract by adoption and reference. Such adoption and reference, in my opinion, however, does not have the effect of giving to the insurance company any vested contractual right to pay any specified amount of wages as such. In other words, the paymaster is made the agent of the assured for the payment of his premium, and this agency does not give the company any right to the wages as such, but merely the right to demand and receive payment of the premium in the installments specified, which said right is personal as against the assured.

These things being true, the order to the paymaster does not, in my judgment, amount to a technical "assignment." An assignment is an act whereby the owner of a chose in action transfers to a third party an absolute or pro tanto right to the thing itself.

I am, therefore, of the opinion that the practice represented by these orders, and the orders themselves, are not avoided by the act referred to.

Yours very truly,

TIMOTHY S. HOGAN,

Attorney General.

APPOINTMENT OF HUMANE OFFICER—PROBATE JUDGE WITHOUT AUTHORITY TO APPOINT SUCH OFFICER—POWER OF JUDGE TO APPROVE SUCH APPOINTMENT.

A probate judge has no power under the act found in 103 O. L. 864, to appoint a humane officer. The probate judge may approve the appointment of a humane officer, and that is the extent of his power.

COLUMBUS, OHIO, December 29, 1913.

HON. WILLIAM A. WEYGANDT, Member of Ohio Senate, Ravenna, Ohio.

DEAR SIR:—Under date of October 4, 1913, you inquire:

> "I have been asked by a probate judge whether he has the power under the new statutes to name a humane officer. He states that he understood he had the power, but he cannot find any authorization for it in the law. I find that he has power to appoint probation officers, and must approve the naming of humane officers outside of corporations. Is that correct, and is that the extent of his authority?"

The humane society is covered by sections 10062 to 10084, General Code.

Section 10070, General Code, provides for appointment of agents of the humane society, commonly known as humane officers. Said section reads:

> "Such societies may appoint agents who are residents of the county or municipality for which the appointment is made, for the purpose of prosecuting any person guilty of an act of cruelty to persons or animals, who may arrest any person found violating any provision of this chapter, or any other law for protecting persons or animals or preventing acts of cruelty thereto. Upon making such arrest, such agent shall convey the person so arrested before some court or magistrate having jurisdiction of the offense, and there forthwith make complaint on oath or affirmation of the offense."

Such appointment is to be approved by the probate judge if the society exists outside of a city or village, by virtue of section 10071, General Code, which reads:

> "All appointments by such societies under the next preceding section shall have the approval of the mayor of the city or village for which they are made. If the society exists outside of a city or village, appointments shall be approved by the probate judge of the county for which they are made. The mayor or probate judge shall keep a record of such appointments."

Section 10072, General Code, provides the manner in which the salary of such officer shall be fixed and paid.

The foregoing sections were not amended at the recent session of the legislature.

By virtue of section 1662, General Code, as amended in 103 Ohio Laws 874, the officer who acts as judge of the juvenile court may appoint probation officers. Said section provides in part:

"The judge designated to exercise jurisdiction may appoint one or more discreet persons of good moral character, one or more of whom may be women, to serve as probation officers, during the pleasure of the judge. One of such officers shall be known as chief probation officer and there may be first, second and third assistants. * * *"

These probation officers are not humane officers.

The new statutes to which you refer are no doubt found in the act of 103 Ohio Law 864, et seq., pertaining to the board of state charities and the juvenile court, and other charitable institutions.

I find no authority in this act which permits the probate judge to appoint the humane officer.

The judge of the juvenile court may appoint probation officers, and the probate judge may approve the appointment of a humane officer, and that is the extent of his power.

Respectfully,
TIMOTHY S. HOGAN.
Attorney General.

COUNTY SEALER OF WEIGHTS AND MEASURES—DEPUTY COUNTY SEALER OF WEIGHTS AND MEASURES—CIVIL SERVICE.

The county auditor is the county sealer of weights and measures by virtue of section 2615, General Code. The deputy county sealer of weights and measures was not protected by the civil service act prior to January 1, 1914.

COLUMBUS, OHIO, December 29, 1913.

HON. C. P. VENUS, Member of the House of Representatives, Norwalk, Ohio.

DEAR SIR:—Under date of September 29, 1913, you inquire of this department:

"Are county sealers of weights and measures now holding office, protected by the civil service law, or does this protection go into effect January 1, 1914?"

An answer to your inquiry has been held in abeyance until an opinion could be rendered to the state civil service commission covering various phases of the new civil service law.

Prior to the enactment of the civil service act of 103 Ohio Laws 698, there was no civil service law for county positions or offices.

By virtue of section 2 of the civil service law, section 486-2, General Code, appointments are not to be made under the new law until January 1, 1914. The deputy county sealer of weights and measures was not protected by the civil service act prior to January 1, 1914. The county auditor is the county sealer of weights and measures by virtue of section 2615, General Code.

The meaning of the word "incumbents" as used in the new civil service law, and when persons are to be considered as incumbents has been considered in an opinion to the state civil service commission. We would suggest that you confer with this commission as to any further inquiries about the new civil service law, as this department has deemed it advisable to address all opinions as to the civil service law to this commission.

Respectfully,
TIMOTHY S. HOGAN,
Attorney General.

BOARD OF ELECTIONS—MAY COMPENSATE PRINTING COMPANY FOR CHANGE MADE IN PLANS AND SPECIFICATIONS BY ORAL AUTHORIZATION, WHEN MISTAKE OF LAW MADE IN GOOD FAITH, CAUSES FAILURE OF PLANS TO COMPLY WITH AMENDED STATUTE—CONTRACTS.

When a deputy state board of election, through inadvertance, fails to apprehend the requirements of an amendment to the statutes, submits plans and specifications, contract for which is duly awarded, which plans fail to specify an additional requirement of such amendment, and compliance with the law requires that the printing company be authorized to provide such additional printing of registration lists without the submission of further plans and bids and the company consents to perform such additional work upon such oral authorization, held:

That inasmuch as there was no indication of any intent to violate or ignore the provisions of the statute and as emergency requires such action to be taken, the proceedings being entirely in good faith, the board should compensate such company for the additional work so performed.

COLUMBUS, OHIO, August 12, 1913.

HON. CHARLES H. GRAVES, Secretary of State, Columbus, Ohio.

DEAR SIR:—Since rendering to you the opinion, on July 12, 1912, in reference to the claim of The Britton Printing Company of Cleveland, Ohio, against the board of deputy state supervisors and inspectors of elections of said city, additional facts have been submitted to this department, which require a further consideration of the question.

It is urged on behalf of The Britton Printing Company, that the specifications upon which its bid was made, were drawn in accordance with the terms of section 4917, General Code, as said section existed prior to the amendment thereof, as shown in 102 Ohio Laws, 181, and as approved on May 29, 1912.

It is contended on behalf of the printing company as follows:

> "The first intimation The Britton Printing Company had of any greater requirements in connection with the execution of the work was when the board demanded a sufficient number of 'press proofs' to enable the board to place two copies at each polling place. It was at that time The Britton Printing Company informed the board that such requirements were not within the specifications upon which the bid was based, and that they would be unable to do the work demanded at the price bid. They were instructed to go ahead and comply with the requirements, and were informed that adjustment would be made on the basis of the work done."

The specifications called for proof copies, as follows:

> "Two proof copies of the first and second days and two proof copies of the last two days must be furnished as soon as possible after receiving copy."

Under the amendatory act of section 4917, General Code, the requirements for printed lists of registered voters is greater than in the former provisions of said section.

Section 4917, General Code, prior to the amendment, provided:

"The board of deputy state supervisors shall immediately cause at least three copies of such list for each precinct in such city respectively to be printed on broadside sheets of thick paper and in plain type, two of which lists they shall cause to be securely posted at the polling place in such precinct three days or more before the November election each year and also before every other election. The third copy from each precinct shall be retained by the board of deputy state supervisors, and each year bound together in a volume and preserved in its office. They shall cause at least fifty additional copies of such list respectively to be printed in pamphlet form for immediate distribution."

As amended in 102 Ohio Laws 181, said section 4917, reads:

"The board of deputy state supervisors shall immediately cause a number of copies of such list for each precinct in such city respectively to be printed on broadside sheets of thick paper and in plain type, two of which lists they shall cause to be securely posted at the polling place of such precinct, within five days after they receive such lists from the registrars, and one of which shall be delivered to the controlling committee of each political party or authorized committee of each set of candidates nominated by petition. Each list printed shall include all the names theretofore received, and when a new list is posted, the preceding list may be removed. After the close of any registration of electors held prior to any primary or special election, the new names shall be underscored.

"A copy of the complete registration prior to a November election from each precinct shall be retained by the board of deputy state supervisors, and each year, after the close of the annual registration, bound together in a volume and preserved in its office. They shall cause at least fifty additional copies of such list respectively to be printed in pamphlet form for immediate distribution."

The time for receiving the lists from the registrars is provided for in section 4916, General Code, as amended in 102 Ohio Laws 181, which reads:

"On the day following each registration day, unless such day be Sunday or a registration day, in which event on the next succeeding day, each year, the registrars of each election precinct shall make and deliver to the board of deputy state supervisors at its office in such city a true list of the names of all the electors registered by them in their respective precincts on the preceding day or days, arranged in alphabetical order of their surnames, followed by their full Christian names and residences, and having the registry number of each prefixed."

Then follows provisions as to the heading and certificate of said lists and copy thereof.

Under the original section it was only necessary to have the list of registered voters printed and posted at the polling places three days or more before the election. This list consisted of all the registered voters in the precinct.

Under the amendatory act a printed list of the registered voters must be made and posted after each registration day, except when two registration days are held on consecutive days, and then after the last of said consecutive days. Each new list must include all voters theretofore registered. That is, the printed list after the second day's registration must include those registered on the second day as well as those registered on the first day.

Specification No. 1 calls for the printed lists which are to be posted at the polling places, as follows:

> "For each election precinct in the city of Cleveland ten (10) copies of the list of registered voters in said precinct, printed in small pica type with headings and footings, on sheets 22x28 inches; the paper to be used to be white book paper eighty (80) pounds to the ream."

A fair construction of this specification would mean the printing of the total registered vote of each precinct. It does not call for the printing of such list after each registration day or days, as provided in the amendatory act of May 29, 1911.

The specifications further provide that the printed lists provided for in specification No. 1 should be delivered before 8 o'clock a. m. of October 25, 1911. This would indicate that the specifications were not drawn in compliance with the provisions of the amendatory act.

The specifications call for:

It is urged that the printing company was required to furnish a sufficient number of "press proofs" to enable the board to place two copies at each polling place. The facts submitted are not sufficient to enable this department to determine whether the furnishing of "press proofs" is different from the requirements of the specifications to furnish "two proof copies." This must be determined from the facts. It is not shown what, if any, extra work was done by The Britton Printing Company. They were bound by the specifications upon which their bid was based. As held in the opinion of July 12, 1912, they cannot be allowed extra compensation for work which was covered by the specifications and their bid.

In order that this department may pass upon the legal question involved, it will be assumed that The Britton Priting Company was required by the board of deputy supervisors to perform more work than was covered by the specifications and bid.

The date of the specifications does not appear. The bid, however, was submitted on September 1, 1911, and the specifications were, no doubt, submitted in August preceding. The act in question was amended on May 29, 1911, three months before the bid was submitted. The board evidently overlooked the requirements of the amendatory act, at the time the specifications were drawn. It appears by the letter of The Britton Printing Company that on or before October 10, 1911, a request was made for the delivery of registration names after each registration day. The company then objected to the furnishing of the names in that manner.

Section 5050, General Code, provides the manner in which the contract for printing must be let, as follows:

> "The printing provided for in this chapter, except poll books and tally sheets, shall be let by the board of deputy state supervisors to the lowest responsible bidder in the county, upon ten days' notice published not more than three times in two leading newspapers of opposite politics published in such county. In case of special elections, the board may give notice by mail, addressed to all the printing offices within the county instead of publishing such notice.

Section 4917, General Code, is not found in the same chapter as section 5050, supra. But the original act, as found in 97 Ohio Laws 181, et seq., as shown on page 229, read, "The printing as provided for in this act" instead of "in this chapter" as now found in section 5050, General Code. The provision of section 4917, General Code, as to the printing of the registered voters, were found in the act of 97 Ohio Laws 185, et seq. The provisions of section 5050, General Code, then covered the printing provided for in section 4917, General Code, and in my opinion it still covers such printing.

The contract for the printing in question should be let at competitive bidding. It was in compliance with this provision that the board asked for bids. After the bids were received and the contract awarded, it was discovered that the specifications did not comply with the requirements of the amended act as to printing the list of voters after each registration day or days. It does not appear when this discovery was made. It is evident, however, that it was made at a time when it was too late to secure other bids.

A contract had been entered into in accordance with the specifications, and instead of asking for new bids the board of elections requested the company with whom the contract had been entered into, to do the extra work. It would not have been practicable at that time to have asked for bids for the additional work to be done. In that event The Britton Printing Company would have occupied a position of decided advantage.

In the case of Mueller vs. Board of Education, 11 Nisi Prius, N. S. 113, it is held:

> "Failure of a board of education to advertise for 'extras,' which have become necessary for the completion of a high school building under a contract theretofore awarded, renders void a contract for the supplying of such extras, unless an urgent necessity existed for completion of the work without the delay incident to advertising for the submission of bids.
> "Whether failure to comply with a statutory requirement with reference to public work may be excused by 'urgent necessity' for an early completion of the work must be determined from the circumstances of the particular case."

This decision was based upon the provisions of section 7623, General Code, which specifically excepted cases of "urgent necessity" from the requirement for competitive bidding. The statutes providing for the printing of election supplies do not make any such exception.

The case presented is one in which, I believe, strict rules of law should not be applied. There is no indication of any intent to violate or ignore the provisions of the statutes. An attempt was made to comply with the statutes as to competitive bidding. Through a mistake, evidently caused by overlooking a recent amendment of the statute, the contract for the printing did not include all the printing required. In order to comply with the provisions of section 4917, General Code, as to the posting of the list of registered voters after each registration day, the board of elections was compelled to require the additional work without asking for bids therefor.

The Britton Printing Company complied with this request and performed the extra work. Under such circumstances the company should receive a reasonable compensation for the extra work. And I am of the opinion that the board of deputy state supervisors and inspectors of elections will be authorized to allow a reasonable compensation for the extra work, if any, that was performed by The Britton Printing Company, under the circumstances as herein set forth. This conclusion is based upon the assumption that the mistake was not discovered in time to ask for new bids as required by the statutes.

Respectfully,
TIMOTHY S. HOGAN,
Attorney General.

FOREIGN CORPORATIONS—BUSINESS WHICH MAY BE ENGAGED IN IN OHIO.

Under sections 178 and 179, General Code, a foreign corporation for profit may not transact business in this state until it procures from the secretary of state, a certificate that it has complied with the requirements of law to authorize it to do business in this state and that the business of such corporation is such as may be transacted in this state by corporations organized under the laws of this state. Under these statutes a foreign corporation may not be permitted, in this state, to act under a purpose clause which reads: "(1) To act as agent, trustee or attorney in fact;" "(2) To contract for the services of attorneys-at-law for the prosecution or defense of any matter or proceeding before any court of law or chancery, or other tribunal; to collect, adjust and settle claims on commercial or other accounts and for damages for breach of contract or personal injuries, or any demand of any nature whatever;" "(3) To enter into contracts with attorneys-at-law, physicians, dentists, merchants, professional and business men of all kinds for mutual services;" "(4) To buy, own and sell shares of capital stock in incorporated companies, including its own stock;" "(5) To engage in and transact any and every business which a corporation organized under the general incorporation laws of Michigan may lawfully transact."

Such corporation may operate under the purpose clause reading: "To furnish commercial reports of, to investigate and furnish information upon any and all matters as required," "to buy, own and sell patent rights, bonds, mortgages and other securities;" "to buy and forward goods and merchandise of every description and to engage in the mail-order business."

COLUMBUS, OHIO, October 30, 1913.

HON. CHARLES H. GRAVES, Secretary of State, Columbus, Ohio.

DEAR SIR:—I beg to acknowledge receipt of your letter of October 22nd, requesting my opinion as to whether a foreign corporation desiring to engage in business in Ohio may exercise in this state all or any portion of the following corporate powers:

> "To act as agent, trustee or attorney in fact; to contract for the services of attorney-at-law for the prosecution or defense of any matter or proceeding before any court of law or chancery, or other tribunal; to collect, adjust and settle claims on commercial or other accounts, and for damages for breach of contract or personal injuries, or any demand of any nature whatever; to furnish commercial reports, so-called; to investigate and furnish information upon any and all matters as required; to buy, own and sell shares of capital stock in incorporated companies, including its own stock; to buy, own and sell patent rights, bonds, mortgages, notes and other securities; to enter into contracts with attorneys-at-law, physicians, dentists, merchants, professional and business men of all kinds for mutual service; to buy and forward goods and merchandise of every description and to engage in the mail-order business, and to engage in and transact any and every business which a corporation organized under the general incorporation laws of Michigan may lawfully transact."

Correspondence accompanying the letter discloses that the company is desirous of engaging in as many of these different lines of business as may be permissible under the laws of the state of Ohio, if such laws permit the entrance of the corporation into the state for any purpose whatsoever.

The inquiry as submitted, therefore, involves an interpretation of section 178 of the General Code, which, in part, is as follows:

"Before a foreign corporation for profit transacts business in this state, it shall procure from the secretary of state a certificate that it has complied with the requirements of law to authorize it to do business in this state, and that the business of such corporation to be transacted in this state, is such as may be lawfully carried on by a corporation, organized under the laws of this state for such or similar business, or if more than one kind of business, by two or more corporations so incorporated for such kinds of business exclusively. * * *"

In connection with this section, section 179 must also be considered. It provides, in part, as follows:

"Before granting such certificate, the secretary of state shall require such foreign corporation to file in his office a sworn copy of its charter or certificate of incorporation, and a statement under its corporate seal setting forth the following: The amount of capital stock of the corporation, the business in which it proposes to engage within this state; and the name of a person designated as provided by law, upon whom process against the corporation may be served within this state. * * *"

As I understand the meaning of these two related sections, they permit a foreign corporation to enter the state for the transaction of some of its authorized businesses only. That is to say, if the foreign corporation desires to do in Ohio a business permitted by the laws of its own state, it may secure a certificate under these sections from the secretary of state authorizing it to transact that business, although under its charter of incorporation it may possess, in the state of its origin, the power to transact other business not permitted under the laws of Ohio. As already stated, I understand it to be the purpose of the corporation, the application of which has given rise to your question, to exercise in Ohio such corporate powers of those above enumerated, as may be lawfully exercised by it in this state.

Clearly, the corporation could not be permitted in Ohio to transact all of the different businesses enumerated in the above clause, which, I take it, is taken from its charter. The following activities of the corporation are not such as "May be lawfully carried on by a corporation, or organized under the laws of this state for such or similar business, or * * * by two or more corporations so incorporated for such kinds of business exclusively * * *"

"1. To act as agent, trustee or attorney in fact." This recital is not sufficiently definite to afford evidence of the kind of business proposed to be carried on, and would not be permissible in the articles of incorporation of an Ohio company.

"2. To contract for the services of attorney-at-law for the prosecution or defense of any matter or proceeding before any court of law or chancery, or other tribunal; to collect, adjust and settle claims on commercial or other accounts, and for damages for breach of contract or personal injuries, or any demand of any nature whatever." This clause, without some qualification might be regarded as describing the doing of a "professional business," as determined in State, ex rel., Physicians' Defense Company vs. Laylin, 73 O. S. 90, which I have commented upon in other opinions to you. The doing of such "professional business" is prohibited to Ohio corporations by section 8623 of the General Code, and upon the authority of the above cited case, cannot be undertaken by a foreign corporation in this state.

"3. To enter into contracts with attorneys-at-law, physicians, dentists, merchants, professional and business men of all kinds for mutual services." This clause is subject to the same objections as the last one commented upon.

"4. To buy, own and sell shares of capital stock in incorporated companies, including its own stock." As you have been heretofore advised, an Ohio corporation may not be authorized to exercise the full ownership of shares of stock of other corporations or of its own shares of stock, and by virtue of section 178, above quoted, a foreign corporation may not be admitted to transact such business in Ohio.

"5. And to engage in and transact any and every business which a corporation organized under the general incorporation laws of Michigan may lawfully transact." A foreign corporation may not be permitted to enter Ohio to transact all business that may be transacted under the laws of another state. The express language of section 178, supra, is sufficient authority for this statement.

In my opinion, a corporation may lawfully transact in Ohio the business described by the following purpose clauses constituting a portion of the above paragraph, not condemned by the application of rules which I have mentioned:

"To furnish commercial reports, so-called; to investigate and furnish information upon any and all matters as required; to buy, own and sell patent rights, bonds, mortgages, notes and other securities" (this phrase "other securities" does not refer to the shares of capital stock of incorporated companies which seems to be reasonably clear by the construction of this clause in connection with that which immediately precedes it in the original); "to buy and forward goods and merchandise of every description and to engage in the mail-order business."

I might also add that as to the second and third clauses to which objection has been made in particular and perhaps in lesser degree to the other clauses objected to, if some disclaimer or qualification were added to the language of the articles of incorporation so as to make it clear that the things which cannot be done under the laws of Ohio were not intended to be engaged in, the application as to such matters might be accepted. That is to say, it is my opinion that a corporation cannot be admitted into Ohio for the purpose of doing all of the things which might be done under the language to which objection has been made. It does not, however, follow that some of the things which might be done thereunder cannot lawfully be undertaken by a corporation in Ohio. Yours very truly,

TIMOTHY S. HOGAN,
Attorney General.

ARTICLES OF INCORPORATION—INSURANCE—MUTUAL PROTECTIVE ASSOCIATION—GUERNSEY COUNTY SLAVISH SOCIETY.

A purposed corporation, whose purpose clause provides for "promoting friendship, charity and benevolence, and to assist its members in sickness or distress and aid the families of deceased members, by voluntary contributions, under regulations and by-laws to be adopted," is not such a mutual protective company as comes within the terms of section 9427, General Code, as such is not the doing of business on the assessment plan for stipulated sums of money.

Such business constitutes an insurance business, however, and may not, therefore, be carried on in Ohio, except by a corporation which complies with the statutes of this state. Such a corporation is not included within the terms of section 5409, General Code, which provides for certain exceptions from the requirements of the statutes providing for a mutual protective association, nor does such business come within the exceptions specified by section 9491, General Code, from the fraternal benefits society requirements. Inasmuch, therefore, as such a company does not come within any of the exceptions to the rule requiring insurance companies to comply with the insurance laws of this state, and as it cannot be incorporated as a mutual protective company, it necessarily follows that it constitutes none of the corporations referred to in any of the paragraphs of section 176, General Code, which provides a schedule of fees for the secretary of state for filing the articles of incorporation of such companies as may be lawfully organized under the laws of this state.

COLUMBUS, OHIO, January 31, 1913.

HON. CHARLES H. GRAVES, Secretary of State, Columbus, Ohio.

DEAR SIR:—I beg to acknowledge receipt of your letter of January 3, 1913, requesting my opinion as to the legality of the articles of incorporation of The Guernsey County Slavish Society, a proposed corporation, not for profit, for the following purpose:

> "Promoting friendship, charity and benevolence, and to assist its members in sickness or distress, and aid the families of deceased members, by voluntary contributions, under regulations and by-laws to be adopted."

I note the fact that a check for $25.00 is attached to these articles as a filing fee, and your request for advice as to whether or not the company is one described in paragraph 5 of section 176, General Code; I also note the specific request for an opinion as to whether or not this company constitutes a mutual protective company as described by section 9427, General Code.

Unless this company does constitute a mutual protective company as suggested by the section last named it cannot be admitted to do business in Ohio for reasons already recounted to you in other opinions. That section authorizes the formation of companies or associations,

> "To transact the business of life or accident or life and accident insurance on the assessment plan, for the purpose of mutual protection and relief of its members, and for the payment of stipulated sums of money to the families, heirs, executors, administrators, or assigns of the deceased members of such company or association, as the member may direct, in the manner provided in the by-laws."

I am of the opinion that the method of doing business as disclosed by the purpose clause above quoted is not in conformity to section 9427, General Code. The acceptance of voluntary contributions under regulations and by-laws is not the same thing as the doing of life insurance business on the assessment plan for the payment of stipulated sums of money, yet the assistance of members in sickness and distress and in the aiding of families of members in case of death are activities which substantially amount to the business of insurance, and which, therefore, may not be carried on in Ohio except by a corporation formed under one of the statutes of this state.

I deem it proper here to state that the various opinions of this department relating to the organization of mutual associations for purposes substantially amounting to insurance are not to be read in an absolute and general sense. Section 9459, General Code, for example, provides with clearness certain exceptions to the provisions of the preceding chapter from which the inference may be drawn that there are certain companies which otherwise would have to be organized under section 9427, General Code, and be governed by the succeeding sections which are withdrawn from the application thereof. Such associations are "any association of religious or secret societies * * * any class of mechanics, express, telegraph or railroad employes or ex-union soldiers, formed for the mutual benefit of the members thereof and their families or blood relatives exclusively or for purely charitable purposes."

Similarly, in section 9491, General Code, are found certain exceptions from the fraternal benefit society act passed in 1911. The corporation under consideration at present, however, is not limited as to membership by any express provisions in the articles of incorporations. Even the name of the society indicates merely a limitation ascertained by the race of the members and a territorial limitation to a certain county. Neither of these limitations is sufficient to bring the association within either of the saving qualities above referred to.

I am, therefore, of the opinion not only that the Guernsey County Slavish Society is not, properly speaking, a mutual protective company, such as may be organized under section 9427, General Code, but also that it is not an association which by the force of the statutes last above cited may be permitted to engage in the activities defined in its proposed articles of incorporation without complying with the insurance laws of this state.

Inasmuch as the society cannot lawfully be incorporated for the purposes mentioned in its articles of incorporation it necessarily follows that it constitutes none of the corporations referred to in any of the paragraphs of section 176, General Code, as that section merely provides a schedule of fees to be accepted by the secretary of state for filing the articles of incorporations of such companies as may lawfully be organized under the laws of this state.

Yours very truly,
TIMOTHY S. HOGAN,
Attorney General.

102.

FOREIGN CORPORATION—TRUSTEE FOR OHIO CORPORATION—QUALIFICATION UNDER OHIO LAWS—DEPOSIT OF SECURITIES—TAXATION OF BONDS DEPOSITED.

The statutes of Ohio recognize the right of a foreign trust company to act as trustee of an Ohio corporation, and such service would not constitute such "doing of business in this state" as is contemplated by section 178, General Code, requiring the payment of an initial or an annual fee based upon the property owned and business transacted in Ohio by it, and measured by its authorized capital stock.

Such a corporation is, however, subject to sections 9778, 9779 and 9780, General Code, requiring the deposit of securities with the treasurer of state as a condition precedent to its action as trustee of a mortgage security loan to an Ohio corporation.

The bonds so deposited have their situs in Ohio and are subject to tax therein. Such securities in the form of bonds of the United States or any district or territory thereof, however, are not subject to state tax. Bonds of any state or any municipality, issued subsequent to January 1, 1913, are subject to taxation under article 12, section 2 of the constitution.

COLUMBUS, OHIO, February 20, 1913.

HON. CHARLES H. GRAVES, Secretary of State, Columbus, Ohio.

DEAR SIR:—I beg to acknowledge receipt of your letter of February 6, 1913, which I hasten to answer at the earliest opportunity. In it you request my opinion upon the following questions:

> "1st. May a foreign trust company act as trustee for an Ohio corporation?
> "2nd. Is the service proposed in the first paragraph of the letter of the Detroit Trust Company such a 'doing business in this state' as is contemplated by section 178 of the General Code?
> "3rd. If, for the purpose set forth—executing a trust—you determine that a foreign corporation must qualify under the laws of Ohio, then must it qualify in this department, or in the department of banks and banking?
> "4th. In case it is held that such a foreign trust company is required to deposit securities with the treasurer of state in order to accept the trust in question, would such securities be subject to taxation in Ohio?"

Answering your first question I beg to state that there is no doubt that a foreign trust company may act as trustee of an Ohio corporation. No statute of this state prohibits such a course, and there is no principle of public policy which is opposed to it; in fact, by inference from statutes which will be hereinafter quoted, it necessarily follows that the state has recognized the right of foreign trust companies to accept such trusts.

Answering your second question I beg to state that in my opinion the acceptance of a trust by a foreign corporation for the purpose of securing an issue of bonds by an Ohio corporation upon property partly located in Ohio, does not constitute "doing business in this state" as is contemplated by section 178 of the General Code.

(See opinion of attorney general to the secretary of state under date of May 4, 1906, annual report, page 49, and Judson on Taxation, sections 175, et seq.)

to take out a certificate of compliance with the laws of Ohio in the office of the secretary of state, nor to pay an initial fee or an annual fee based upon the property owned and business transacted by it in Ohio, and measured by its total authorized capital stock.

Answering your third question I am of the opinion that while, as already stated, the execution of a trust covering Ohio property by a foreign trust company does not subject such company to the general corporation franchise tax laws of this state, such an act is subject to the regulatory power of the state under section 9778 to 9780, inclusive, and similar sections of the General Code. These sections were enacted in 1908 as a part of the Thomas banking act and in full are as follows:

> "Sec. 9778. No such corporation either foreign or domestic shall accept trusts which may be vested in, transferred or committed to it by an individual, or court, until its paid in capital is at least one hundred thousand dollars, and until such corporation has deposited with the treasurer of state in cash fifty thousand dollars if its capital is two hundred thousand dollars or less, and one hundred thousand dollars if its capital is more than two hundred thousand dollars, except that, the full amount of such deposit by such corporation may be in bonds of the United States, or of this state, or any municipality or county therein, or in any other state, or in the first mortgage bonds of any railroad corporation that for five years last past paid dividends of at least three per cent. on its common stock.
> "Sec. 9779. The treasurer of state shall hold such fund or securities deposited with him as security for the faithful performance of the trusts assumed by such corporation, but so long as it continues solvent he shall permit it to collect the interest on its securities so deposited. From time to time said treasurer shall permit withdrawals of such securities or cash, or part thereof, on the deposit with him of cash, or other securities of the kind heretofore named, so as to maintain the value of such deposit as herein provided.
> "Sec. 9780. No such corporation, foreign or domestic, authorized to accept and execute trusts, either directly or indirectly through any officer, agent or employe thereof, shall certify to any bond, note or other obligation to evidence debt, secured by any trust, deed or mortgage upon, or accept any trust concerning property located wholly or in part in this state without complying with the provisions of this and the two preceding sections. Any trust, deed or mortgage given or taken in violation of the provisions thereof shall be null and void."

The language here employed is explicit, and its effect cannot be doubted. The requirement is that no mortgage executed to a foreign trust company covering Ohio property is valid unless a foreign trust company has made the required deposit of securities with the treasurer of state.

Answering your fourth question it is, of course, apparent that if the securities deposited be bonds of the United States or any district or territory thereof, they are not taxable for the reason that the state has no power to tax such securities.

If however, the securities deposited under the sections last above quoted are bonds of another state than Ohio, or bonds of a municipality of another state or of a municipality of Ohio issued after (but not prior to) January 1, 1913 (see article 12, section 2 of the constitution, as amended in 1912), or first mortgage bonds of a railroad corporation as authorized under section 9778, the securities themselves, if properly located within this state, are subject to its taxing power; so that if the laws of this state provide for the taxation of such bonds so held on deposit by the treasurer of state they may be and should be taxed.

It was held in the case of Assurance Co. vs. Halliday, 126 Fed. 257, 110 Fed. 259, that bonds and stock deposited by a foreign fire insurance company with the superintendent of insurance under section 9565, General Code, have a taxable situs in Ohio and may be taxed here.

Upon the authority of this decision I am constrained to hold that bonds and other securities deposited by a foreign trust company in Ohio to secure the performance of a trust accepted by it relating to property situated in Ohio, as required by section 9778, General Code, are taxable in this state.

Yours very truly,
TIMOTHY S. HOGAN.
Attorney General.

ARTICLES OF INCORPORATION—BENEFICIAL SHARES COMPANY—PURPOSE OF LOANING TO SHAREHOLDERS TO EXTENT OF AMOUNT SUBSCRIBED, LAWFUL.

COLUMBUS, OHIO, January 30, 1913.

HON. CHARLES H. GRAVES, Secretary of State, Columbus, Ohio.

DEAR SIR:—I acknowledge receipt of your letter of January 20th, requesting my opinion as to the legality of the purpose clause of The Beneficial Shares Company a proposed corporation for profit. The clause in question is as follows:

> "Said corporation is formed for the purpose of extending the business credit of its shareholders, by the granting of loans to the extent of the sum paid in by such shareholders for their stock, without collateral security, such loans to be made upon notes signed by such shareholder and two other shareholders in said company; with power and authority to maintain and conduct an office and place of business suitable to the said purposes and doing all things necessary and incident thereto authorized by the laws of the state of Ohio."

I confess that the business described by this clause is novel and that the question presented is unusual. The business partakes in a measure of the character of that transacted by a building and loan association and is somewhat similar in other respects to the business authorized to be transacted by other kinds of companies which require special incorporation and are subject by law to special regulations. Nevertheless, I have been unable to reach the conclusion that the corporation is one of those for which a special form of organization is required by law, so that within the rule which has been laid down in other opinions addressed to your department it might not be incorporated under the general laws of the state.

The sole question, therefore, is as to whether or not the purpose, as defined in the foregoing clause, is one for which individuals lawfully may associate themselves within the meaning of section 8623, General Code.

On this point I have reached the conclusion that although the business is, as already described, an unusual one, and although it would seem that such business ought not to be undertaken save under the sanction of some special regulations and supervision by the state, yet it is not unlawful. In the absence of statutory enactment I know of no reason of public policy which would preclude the association of individuals for the purpose defined.

I am, therefore, of the opinion that you may lawfully file and record the articles of incorporation tendered to you by The Beneficial Shares Company.

Yours very truly,
TIMOTHY S. HOGAN,
Attorney General.

OFFICES COMPATIBLE—ASSISTANT SECRETARY OF STATE AND CLERK OF BOARD OF COMMISSIONERS FOR ERECTION OF LIMA STATE HOSPITAL.

Inasmuch as the duties connected with the office of assistant secretary of state and clerk of the board of commissioners for the erection of a state hospital, act in no way as a check upon one another or are in no way subordinate to one another, and as it is physically possible for one person to discharge the duties of both, a single individual may serve as incumbent of both offices at the same time.

COLUMBUS, OHIO, April 2, 1913.

HON. J. H. SECREST, Assistant Secretary of State, Columbus, Ohio.

DEAR SIR:—I am in receipt of your letter of March 20th, in which you request me to confirm in a written opinion the oral opinion rendered you on the 9th day of January, 1911, in which I officially advised you that it was lawful for you to serve as assistant secretary of state, and at the same time serve as clerk of the board of commissioners for the erection of the Lima state hospital, and receive from the state the salaries attached to both positions.

I herewith give you the following written opinion, which will confirm my verbal opinion given you on the date mentioned in your communication.

There is no constitutional or statutory inhibition making the two positions held by you incompatible. Under the most substantial rule, laid down in the case of State, ex rel., Attorney General vs. Frank Gebert, 12 O. C. C. n. s., by our supreme court, without report, it was held that:

> "Offices are considered incompatible when one is subordinate to, or in any way a check upon the other; or when it is physically impossible for one person to discharge the duties of both."

The two positions held by you, namely: Assistant secretary of state and clerk of the commission for the erection of the Lima state hospital, do not become incompatible under either of the two reasons set forth in the above rule; neither is subordinate to or in any way a check upon the other; nor is it physically impossible for you to discharge the duties of both positions.

I am, therefore, of the opinion that I was on January 9, 1911, when I gave you my verbal opinion, that you could hold both positions and receive the salaries attached to each office; and you may take this opinion as confirming said verbal opinion.

Very truly yours,
TIMOTHY S. HOGAN,
Attorney General.

DEPUTY STATE SUPERVISORS OF ELECTIONS—MAY NOT EMPLOY LEGAL COUNSEL—DUTY OF ATTORNEY GENERAL.

Inasmuch as members of the board of deputy state supervisors of elections have been stated by the courts to be state officers, the attorney general, under section 333, General Code, is required to serve as legal adviser for such board. A contract by such board, therefore, for legal service with a city solicitor is null and void and recovery may not be had for such services, when a city solicitor has been employed by the board to conduct a mandamus suit in behalf of its clerk.

COLUMBUS, OHIO, April 3, 1913.

HON. CHARLES H. GRAVES, Secretary of State, Columbus, Ohio.

DEAR SIR:—I am in receipt of your inquiry under date of February 15, 1913, enclosing a letter from Mr. J. C. Crisp, deputy clerk state supervisors and inspectors of elections for Lorain county, Ohio, requesting an opinion on the question asked in that letter. Mr. Crisp states:

> "The city auditor of Lorain refused payment of voucher issued by this board to pay a portion of the salary of the deputy clerk.
> "The board took no action until there were seven months' salary due, and on November 14th, passed a resolution employing F. M. Stevens, attorney, who at the time was prosecuting attorney, his term expiring December 31st, to mandamus the auditor of the city of Lorain to issue voucher in favor of the said deputy clerk for the salary due. The case was heard before Judge Washburn, after being delayed several times at the request of the city solicitor of Lorain, final decision having been rendered early in January in favor of the board.
> "Mr. Stevens rendered a bill for services and advised the board that in his opinion the payment for same should be made from county funds by the county commissioner the same as other bills contracted by the board are paid. The new prosecuting attorney, Mr. Adams, and the commissioners seem to be unable to determine the validity of the charge.
> "Will you please advise this board from what funds, in your opinion, the attorney's fees should be charged."

Attention is called to the following sections of the General Code which provide for the election machinery of the state.

Section 4786 provides for the office of state supervisor, and state supervisor and inspector.

Sections 4788 and 4789 provide for a board of deputy state supervisors and inspectors of elections in certain counties and for their appointment.

These provisions apply to the board of deputy state supervisors and inspectors of elections for Lorain county.

As stated in State of Ohio, ex rel., vs. Board of County Commissioners of Cuyahoga Co., 8 Nisi Prius, 148-150:

> "From an examination of the election laws of this state it seems apparent that the legislature intended that the conduct of elections should belong to the state and be under the control of state officers."

The court further points out the fact that the secretary of state is the principal election officer, and the deputy state supervisors, as subordinate officers for carrying out the agencies of the state, conduct all elections. The deputies do not act in an independent capacity. They are responsible to their principal, the state supervisor and inspector of elections.

Section 333, General Code, provides:

> "The attorney general shall be the chief law officer of the state and all its departments. No state officer, board or the head of a department or institution of the state shall employ, or be represented by, other counsel or attorneys-at-law * * *."

In view of the foregoing it is my opinion that the deputy state supervisors of elections of Lorain county were without authority to employ an attorney-at-law since they were without power to act in any independent matter as expressly authorized by statute or except under the orders of their principal, the state supervisor and inspector of elections, and since section 333, supra, prohibits any state officer, board or head of a department or institution of the state from employing or to be represented by other counsel or attorney-at-law than the attorney general, the employment of Mr. Stevens was illegal.

I am not unmindful of the case of State vs. Boyden, reported in the 18 C. C., at page 82, wherein it was held that the board of elections of Cincinnati was authorized to employ an attorney-at-law in a matter in which they were interested, but that case was decided upon the authority of Yaple vs. Morgan, 2 C. C. 406 (subsequently affirmed without report by the supreme court), but at the time of the decision in the case of Yaple vs. Morgan, supra, there was no statute prohibiting state officers, boards or heads of departments or institutions of the state from employing counsel. The statute was amended so as to include such prohibition April 19, 1898, 93 O. L. 127.

In view of the statutes as we find them, while this department is not reaching out for more work, still it is my opinion that all matters wherein legal counsel or assistance is needed by the board of deputy state supervisors and inspectors of elections, the same must be obtained through their chief, the state supervisor and inspector of elections.

Yours very truly,
TIMOTHY S. HOGAN,
Attorney General.

ARTICLES OF INCORPORATION—INSURANCE BUSINESS—MUTUAL PROTECTIVE ASSOCIATION—ASSESSMENT PLAN NOT POSSIBLE WHEN ASSESSMENT DEFINITE AND BENEFITS INDEFINITE.

In this state, mutual protective associations may not be organized where, in an attempted pursuance of the assessment plan, the assessment is made certain and the benefits made contingent and uncertain. The assessments may be uncertain and indefinite, but the benefits must be certain and definite.

COLUMBUS, OHIO, April 21, 1913.

HON. CHARLES H. GRAVES, Secretary of State, Columbus, Ohio.

DEAR SIR:—I return to you herewith the proposed articles of incorporation of The First Magyar Young Men's Insurance Society of Lorain, Ohio, which have been submitted to me for consideration and action as provided by law, without having approved the same. My reasons for withholding approval are similar to those expressed by me in the matter of the articles of incorporation of The First Greek Catholic Russian Union of St. George in the state of Ohio, an opinion concerning which was handed you on October 26, 1912.

Repeating the reason, without discussion, I may say that I cannot approve the articles now submitted to me because they authorize the transaction of an insurance business upon a basis purporting to be the assessment plan but upon which the amount of each assessment is definite and the amount of benefits payable, apparently, is contingent and unascertained. While it is true that under the statute, section 9427, General Code, a mutual protective association may not bind itself unequivocally for the payment of stipulated sums as death benefits without the reservation that the benefit payable shall be made, so to speak, out of the assessments, yet, it is clearly the intention of the statute and related sections, which I refrain from citing, that the insurance contract shall be for a stipulated death benefit, and that the assessments made, whatever the limits upon the amounts, shall be contingent and uncertain.

In short, the law does not authorize the incorporation of an association for the purpose specified in these articles of incorporation.

Very truly yours,
TIMOTHY S. HOGAN,
Attorney General.

ARTICLES OF AGREEMENT OF CONSOLIDATION OF THE LORAIN, ASHLAND AND SOUTHERN RAILROAD COMPANY AND THE ASHLAND AND WESTERN RAILWAY COMPANY—AUTHORIZATION TO ISSUE BONDS INSTEAD OF PREFERRED STOCK DOES NOT JUSTIFY CLASSIFICATION OF SUCH BONDS AS CAPITAL.

The fact that under section 8801, General Code, a railroad company in process of consolidation with other companies may issue bonds instead of preferred stock, does not entitle bonds so issued to be designated as capital, and since the fifth article of the proposed agreement of consolidation includes such indebtedness within its statement of capital stock, the same is misleading and should be corrected.

COLUMBUS, OHIO, May 13, 1913.

HON CHAS. H. GRAVES, Secretary of State, Columbus, Ohio.

DEAR SIR:—I beg to acknowledge receipt of your letter of even date herewith, transmitting the proposed articles of agreement of consolidation of The Lorain, Ashland & Southern Railroad Company and The Ashland & Western Railway Company, under the proposed name of The Lorain, Ashland & Southern Railroad Company; and requesting my opinion as to legality of said proposed articles of agreement, and particularly of paragraph five thereof; and also as to the amount of fees it is the duty of the secretary of state to collect for filing the proposed articles of agreement.

The articles, in their entirety, are very lengthy, and in the limited time which has been afforded to me for their consideration I have not attempted to consider all of their provisions, but only those which bear upon the subject-matter of the fifth article, to which you particularly refer, The following recitals and provisions have attracted my attention in this connection:

"WHEREAS, The public service commission of Ohio, by its two several orders, numbered 383, the first bearing date December 5, 1912, and the second December 28, 1912, authorized said The Lorain, Ashland & Southern Rail-Road Company, in addition to the two hundred and fifty thousand ($250,000.00) dollars par value of its stock now issued and outstanding to issue capital stock and first and second mortgage bonds, as follows, to wit:

"'ORDERED, That said The Lorain, Ashland & Southern Railroad Company be, and it hereby is authorized to issue, transfer and deliver to The West Virginia & Ohio Construction Company, its capital stock of the par value of one million five hundred and fifty thousand dollars ($1,550,-000.00), its first mortgage five per cent. fifty year bonds of the par value of one million five hundred thousand dollars ($1,500,000.00), and its second mortgage five per cent. fifty year bonds of the par value of one million two hundred thousand dollars ($1,200,000.00), it being the opinion and finding of the commission that the issue of said capital stock and said bonds is reasonably required for the proper purposes of said corporation.'

"Fifth. The capital of the consolidated and merged company, the new corporation, organized by virtue of and in pursuance of these presents, shall be at the date of the approval thereof, by the stockholders of the constituent companies thereof, and when these presents shall have been duly filed and recorded according to law, four million, five hundred thousand ($4,500,000.00) dollars, the amount and character thereof as authorized by the public service commission of Ohio, by its two several orders, numbered 383, and bearing date December 5 and December 28, 1912, respectively, and as hereby fixed, as follows, to wit:

"(a). Capital stock which shall be issued as general common stock of an aggregate face value of one million eight hundred thousand ($1,800,000.00) dollars.

(b). Indebtedness secured by mortgages, which shall be first and second liens upon the properties, real and personal, rights and franchises of the company organized hereby, of an aggregate face value of two million seven hundred thousand ($2,700,000.00) dollars, represented by first and second morfgage bonds to the amounts and of the character as follows:"

The consolidation of railroad companies is provided for and governed by section 9028, General Code, which is in part as follows:

"Consolidation shall be made under the conditions and restrictions following:

"1. The directors of the several companies may enter into a joint agreement, under the corporate seal of each company, for the consolidation of the companies, prescribing the terms, and conditions thereof, the mode of carrying into effect, the name of the new company, the number of directors and other officers thereof, their places of residence, the amount of the capital stock of the new company agreed upon, the number of shares thereof, the amount of each share, and the manner of converting the capital stock of each constituent company into that of the new company, with such other details as they deem necessary to perfect the new organization and consolidation of the companies."

The authority of the secretary of state to charge and collect fees for filing articles of agreement of this sort is prescribed by section 176, General Code, by paragraph three thereof, which is as follows:

"The secretary of state shall charge and collect the following fees for official services:

"3. For filing articles of agreements of consolidation of corporations having a capital stock, one-tenth of one per cent. upon the authorized capital stock of the new corporation, created by such articles of agreement of consolidation, but not less than ten dollars in any case; but no credit shall be allowed for fees previously paid by any of the constituent corporations, parties to such consolidation. * * *"

The order of the public service commission of Ohio, referred to in the preamble, and in the fifth article, as above quoted, was evidently issued under sections 614-53 to 614-55, inclusive, General Code.

Whether the power of the commission to authorize the issuance of bonds can be exercised in derogation of sections 8793 and 8794, General Code, which impose a limitation upon the borrowing power of railroad corporations, is an interesting question, which is suggested by the facts apparent upon the face of the certificate. Inasmuch, however, as the commission has already acted, I do not deem it appropriate to consider the question which has arisen in my mind, except to remark that it seems a little extraordinary that a corporation having a capital stock of $250,000.00 should, without increasing that capital stock, receive authority to borrow money to the extent of $2,700,000.00—more than ten times its original capital. This may be accounted for, however, upon the assumption that the $250,000.00 represented issued and outstanding capital stock as distinguished from authorized capital stock.

It is clear, however, from the recitals of the preamble and the reference thereto in the fifth article of the agreement of consolidation, that the $2,700,000.00 which the consolidated company is to have authority to borrow is that which the former company, of the same name, was authorized by the order of the public service commission to borrow.

By providing for the incurring of this indebtedness the consolidated company would appear to be violating the provisions of sections 8793 and 8794, General Code, were it not for the provisions of sections 8802 and 8803, General Code. I do not quote these sections as they are lengthy. Suffice it to state that they authorize railroad companies formed by consolidation to issue bonds in excess of the capital stock, at such rates of interest as may be agreed upon by the respective parties, I find no special difficulty, therefore, to arise out of the fact that the borrowing power of the proposed consolidated corporation is to be exerted, as to amount, in excess of the amount of the authorized capital stock.

Section 8801, General Code, which is in pari materia with the other two sections just referred to, provides that the bonds which may be issued under special power by a railroad company, in process of consolidation with other companies, may be so issued "instead of issuing preferred stock." I call attention to this provision because it has occurred to me that it may have inspired the draftsman of the articles of agreement to refer to the indebtedness represented by bonds to be issued as a kind of "capital."

In my opinion the mere fact that the bonds of a consolidated company, or of a company which is about to consolidate with another, or has so consolidated, may be issued in lieu of preferred stock, does not have the effect of constituting such bonds a part of the "capital" of the consolidated company within the meaning of the word as used in section 9028, supra. It may be that by virture of this section a corporation authorized to issue a certain amount of preferred stock may exercise that power by issuing bonds instead of preferred stock; it does not follow, however, that a corporation authorized to issue bonds by virtue of one of the articles of the agreement of consolidation thereby acquires what is technically known as "capital stock," to the extent of that authority.

The fifth article of the proposed agreement of consolidation is misleading, in that it speaks of "the capital of the consolidated and merged company" as including its "capital stock" and its "indebtedness." Without quibbling as to exact definitions, I am clearly of the opinion that for the purpose of an agreement of consolidation the authorized indebtedness of a company is not a part of its authorized capital stock.

Section 9028, General Code, requires that the amount of the capital stock of the company agreed upon, the number of shares thereof and the amount of each share be specified in the articles of agreement. The fifth article, which relates to this subject-matter, does not with certainty designate the amount of the capital stock, nor does it expressly stipulate the number of the shares thereof, and the par value of each. For this reason, it is, in my opinion, insufficient in law to effect a valid consolidation; and the articles, as a whole, should not be accepted and filed by you until the necessary corrections are made.

I confess that it seems to me that by liberal interpretation of the proposed articles the intent of the contracting parties may be ascertained with a fair degree of certainty. I believe that the intent was to form a corporation with a "capital stock" of $1,800,000.00, upon the basis of which the fee would be, of course, $1,-800.00. The reference to the indebtedness of the corporation as "capital," however, is not entirely consistent with this interpretation, and inasmuch as the articles are defective, in that they do not specify the par value of the shares and the number thereof, I am of the opinion that while the necessary corrections therein are being made, the misleading and inconsistent use of the word "capital," as found in the first line of the fifth article, should be eliminated therefrom.

Very truly yours,
TIMOTHY S. HOGAN,
Attorney General.

ARTICLES OF INCORPORATION—FARMERS LIGHTNING PROTECTED INSURANCE COMPANY—MUTUAL PROTECTIVE ASSOCIATION—MAY NOT INSURE EXTRA HAZARDOUS PROPERTY.

Since the proposed articles of incorporation of The Farmers Lightning Protected Insurance Company provide for the insurance of agricultural societies' buildings, which buildings under common usage are classed as extra hazardous, such articles must be disapproved by virtue of the prohibition against such companies insuring extra hazardous property in section 9593, General Code.

COLUMBUS, OHIO, May 16, 1913.

HON. CHARLES H. GRAVES, Secretary of State, Columbus, Ohio.

DEAR SIR:—I return to you herewith proposed articles of incorporation of "The Farmers Lightning Protected Insurance Company" without my approval.

These articles, under another name, however, have already been once disapproved by me and I regret that I am obliged to again pass unfavorably upon them.

The purpose for which the company is formed is stated in the articles as follows:

> "Of enabling its members to insure each other against loss or damage, by fire or lightning, and to enforce any contract, not inconsistent with the insurance laws of Ohio, which may be by them entered into, by which those entering therein shall agree to be specifically assessed for incidental purposes, and for the payment of losses, which may occur to its members. Its territory for insurance shall be the state of Ohio and the property that may be insured by this company, which shall be properly equipped with lightning rods, may embrace school houses, churches, agricultural societies' buildings, dwelling houses, barns, accompanying out buildings and their contents, farm machinery and implements, vehicles, automobiles, farm produce, wool and other products, live stock and poultry, household goods, wearing apparel, provisions, musical instruments, libraries and other articles being upon farms as farm property."

So far as purely formal requirements are concerned, this clause is consistent with the statutes referred to in my previous letter in the same matter. The clause seems to me, however, to violate the provision of section 9593 of the General Code, which applies to companies of this kind and provides in part as follows:

> "Such associations may only insure farm buildings, detached dwellings, school houses, churches, township buildings, grange buildings, farm implements, farm products, live stock, household goods, furniture, and other property not classed as extra hazardous. * * * Provided that an association whose membership is restricted to persons engaged in any particular trade or occupation and its insurance confined to any particular kind or description of property may insure property classed as extra hazardous."

Two of the kinds of property which the company seeks authority to insure have invited my attention with reference to the question as to whether or not they represent "property classes as extra hazardous," viz.: "Agricultural societies' buildings" and "automobiles."

I am unable to find any judicial interpretation of the phrase now under discussion. It seems to be a term, the meaning of which is technical and the use of which is limited to the insurance business. That being the case, I consulted the superintendent of insurance, who informed me that the term "classed as extra hazardous" really lacked an exact definition in the fire insurance business, although it is by no means infrequently used in a broad and somewhat loose sense.

The superintendent was of the opinion that automobiles would not be classed as extra hazardous, but that agricultural societies' buildings would be so classed. The reason assigned for such a conclusion was that such buildings, on account of their lack of tenancy and care during long periods of time, their situation, lacking fire protection, and the generally inflammable type of construction exemplified in them, were in point of fact, treated by the fire insurance companies generally, as not only an extra hazardous risk but even a forbidden one.

The customs and usages of the fire insurance business being as represented to be and the term in question being one which is to be defined as I have pointed out by such customs and usages, I am of the opinion that agricultural societies' buildings constitute property "classed as extra hazardous" within the meaning of section 9593 of the General Code. For this reason I have found myself unable to indorse my approval upon the articles of incorporation.

Yours very truly,
TIMOTHY S. HOGAN,
Attorney General.

INDIANA CORPORATION FORMED FOR HOLDING REAL ESTATE IN TRUST HAVING A CAPITAL STOCK DIVISIBLE INTO SHARES CANNOT DO BUSINESS IN OHIO WITHOUT COMPLIANCE WITH SECTIONS 178, 182 AND 183, GENERAL CODE.

An Indiana corporation formed for the purpose of holding real estate in trust, whose capital stock is divisible into shares cannot do business in this state without compliance with sections 178, 182 and 183, General Code. If such company has a business office in this state exercising therein management over any of its concerns, it is to be considered doing business in this state. Since its capital stock is divisible into shares and it has the power to declare a dividend, it must be deemed a corporation for profit, notwithstanding an extraneous agreement to the effect that the corporation shall profit in no way from its business.

COLUMBUS, OHIO, June 26, 1913.

HON. CHARLES H. GRAVES, Secretary of State, Columbus, Ohio.

DEAR SIR:—I beg to acknowledge receipt of your letter of May 29th, setting forth a copy of a letter addressed to you by Mr. W. F. North, attorney-at-law, Cincinnati, Ohio, which, in full, is as follows:

> "A corporation organized under the laws of the state of Indiana has the following among its articles of association.
> "'Article II. The capital stock of this association shall be $1,500.00, to be divided in fifteen shares of $100.00 each.
> "'Article III. The object of this association shall be the buying, holding and selling of real estate.
> "'Article V. The principal office of this association shall be in the city of Indianapolis, Marion county, Indiana.
> "'Article VI. The term of existence of this corporation shall be fifty years.'
> "The corporation in question was in fact organized for the express purpose of taking, holding and conveying real estate in a purely trust capacity, largely as a matter of convenience for the actual owners of the real estate who are individuals.
> "Under an agreement in writing between the individual owners and the corporation the manner and purpose of the holding of this real estate by the corporation is fully set forth, and it is further agreed that the corporation shall profit in no way whatever from such holding, either by way of any fees, charge or compensation of any kind.
> "I should like advice from your department as to whether or not this corporation is one coming under sections 178 and 183, General Code, requiring non-resident corporations for profit to obtain a certificate showing it to be entitled to do business in this state. An early response will be greatly appreciated."

You request my opinion upon the question submitted by Mr. North. The letter does not clearly state the exact nature of the company's proposed operations in Ohio. If the company were actually to have a business office in this state, and here to exercise management over any of its concerns, I should be of the opinion that it would be liable for compliance with section 178 of the General Code, which is as follows:

"Before a foreign corporation for profit transacts business in this state, it shall procure from the secretary of state a certificate that it has complied with the requirements of law to authorize it to do business in this state, and that the business of such corporation to be transacted in this state, is such as may be lawfully carried on by a corporation, organized under the laws of this state for such or similar business, or if more than one kind of business, by two or more corporations so incorporated for such kinds of business exclusively. No such foreign corporation doing business in this state without such certificate shall maintain an action in this state upon a contract made by it in this state until it has procured such certificate. This section shall not apply to foreign banking, insurance, building and loan, or bond investment corporations."

And in the event of its non-compliance with this section, its agents actually soliciting business in this state would be subject to the penalties of section 182, General Code, which is as follows:

"Whoever solicits or transacts business in this state for a foreign corporation which is subject to the provisions of the preceding four sections, before it has complied with the provisions of such sections, shall be fined not less than ten dollars nor more than five hundred dollars, or imprisoned not less than ten days nor more than six months, or both. Upon direction of the attorney general, the prosecuting attorney shall prosecute any person charged with a violation of the provision of such sections."

In that event, also, the corporation, if it owned property in Ohio, would be liable, in my opinion, for compliance with section 183, General Code, which provides as follows:

"Before doing business in this state, a foreign corporation organized for profit and owning or using a part or all of its capital or plant in this state shall make and file with the secretary of state, in such form as he may prescribe, a statement under oath of its president, secretary, treasurer, superintendent or managing agent in this state, containing the following facts:

"1. The number of shares of authorized capital stock of the corporation and the par value of each share.

"2. The name and location of the office or offices of the corporation in Ohio and the names and addresses of the officers or agents of the corporation in charge of its business in Ohio.

"3. The value of the property owned and used by the corporation in Ohio, where situated, and the value of the property of the corporation owned and used outside of Ohio.

"4. The proportion of the capital stock of the corporation represented by property owned and used and by business transacted in Ohio."

In the event, however, that the concerns of the company are all managed from its principal office and that its sole activity consisted of owning property situated here, the purchase and sale of such property being consummated in the state of Indiana, I would be of the opinion that the company need not comply with either of these provisions. As to section 178, and succeeding sections, it is sufficient to remark that under such circumstances there would be no representative of the company transacting business in Ohio. As to section 183, I may state that the courts have repeatedly held that the mere ownership of property on the part of a foreign corporation does not constitute "doing business in the state in which the property is located," even though the ownership of the property be among the principal activities of the corporation. Judson on Taxation, section 176; citing, in particular, United States vs. American Bell Telephone Company, 29 Fed. 17, a case arising under these sections.

On account of the failure of Mr. North's letter to specify more particularly the manner in which the company expects to do business I have been obliged to answer in the alternative.

It occurs to me that Mr. North may have in mind the question as to whether or not the company is a corporation "for profit." In other opinions, addressed to you, I have tried to define the distinction between such a corporation and one not for profit under the laws of this state. In my opinion the same principles apply to foreign corporations. The question whether or not a corporation is one for profit is to be solved by consideration of the charter powers of the corporation. If it has the power to distribute dividends to its stockholders it is to be regarded as a corporation for profit. Furthermore, if the articles of incorporation of the company or its charter fail to specify whether or not it is a corporation for profit, but do require or authorize the division of its capital stock into shares, I am of the opinion that the necessary implication would be that the corporation had power to distribute dividends on such shares.

In any event, the precise manner in which the corporation elects to use its powers in doing business would be immaterial. I do not find any authorities directly in point upon the question, and while there is some authority for holding that that is not "business" which is not carried on with a view to gain, such definitions, however, will be found to have been framed with a view to the meaning of specific statutes. In this state the meanings of the words "for profit" and "not for profit," as applied to domestic corporations, have received a certain technical definition. That definition, in my opinion, is to be given to the same terms when used with reference to a foreign corporation.

Of course, as I have already remarked in another connection, the question as to whether or not the making of a particular contract constitutes "doing business" is a separate one from that as to whether or not the corporation is "for profit." Nevertheless, I am of the opinion that the making of a contract which contains an express stipulation to the effect that the corporation is not to profit in any way from the transaction amounts to the doing of business within the meaning of the statute, if the subject-matter of the contract is located in Ohio, and the transaction is consummated by the officers of the corporation in this state.

Still another question is suggested by the latter, namely: as to whether or not it is permissible to admit to Ohio a corporation formed for the purpose of dealing in real estate, whose articles of incorporation authorize it to continue in existence for a period of fifty years, in the face of the fact that a corporation cannot be organized under the laws of this state for a similar purpose, having an existence of longer than twenty-five years.

With respect to this possible question, I beg to state that section 178, which, of the two sections above quoted, alone imposes any limitation upon the issuance of a certificate growing out of the kind of business to be transacted in this state, provides that if "the business of such corporation to be transacted in this state is such as may be lawfully carried on by a corporation organized under the laws of this state" the certificate may be issued. In my opinion there is a clear distinction between an inquiry into the kind of business to be transacted and one into the period of time during which that business may be transacted. The legislature not having provided, expressly or by inference, that the secretary of state may not admit a corporation for a longer period of time than a domestic corporation would be permitted to live, I am of the opinion that such authority cannot be constructed by inference.

If the question last raised would ever become material it would be after the foreign corporation had existed in this state and here transacted business for a period of twenty-four years. Even in such event, in the absence of any statutory provision, I should be of the opinion that the corporation could not be ousted from its privileges.

I am of the opinion, therefore, as to the last question above suggested, that the duration of a corporation fixed by its articles of incorporation should not be an obstruction to its admission to do business in Ohio.

Very truly yours,
TIMOTHY S. HOGAN,
Attorney General.

ARTICLES OF INCORPORATION—INSURANCE AGAINST BURGLARY AND ROBBERY.

The articles of incorporation of The Ohio Mutual Liability and Casualty Company, returned to the secretary of state unapproved, for the reason that paragraph 2 of section 9510, General Code, and related sections, do not authorize companies formed thereunder to insure against loss by theft.

Companies insuring against burglary and robbery must incorporate under sections 9634 to 9642, General Code, inclusive. These sections especially provide for such insurance.

COLUMBUS, OHIO, June 25, 1913.

HON. CHARLES H. GRAVES, Secretary of State, Columbus, Ohio.

DEAR SIR:—I return to you herewith the proposed articles of incorporation of The Ohio Mutual Liability and Casualty Company, unapproved by me for the reason that paragraph 2 of section 9510, and related sections, do not authorize companies formed thereunder to insure against loss by theft.

Insurance against burglary and robbery is especially provided for by sections 9634 to 9642, inclusive; and upon familiar principles of law the power to make such insurance cannot be by implication conferred upon a company incorporated under another section. From another angle of view "loss or damage resulting from accident to property" does not embrace loss of property by theft.

In all other respects the articles of incorporation of the proposed company comply fully with the law.

Very truly yours,
TIMOTHY S. HOGAN,
Attorney General.

CHURCH ORGANIZED UNDER SPECIAL CHARTER—CHANGE IN NUMBER OF TRUSTEES—PROCEDURE TO BE FOLLOWED.

When a church that is organized under special charter wishes to change the number of its trustees, it must first divest itself of its special charter and conform to the special provisions of the statutes. After such act it will continue to be a body corporate, made up of members of good standing. These members can, at a meeting called for that purpose, adopt a code of regulations, which code of regulations may provide for any number of trustees and fix their term of office.

The proper procedure to be followed by this corporation would be for it, at a regular meeting, or one called for that purpose to accept all of the provisions of the general laws or such of the provisions as it may wish to avail itself of, and file a certificate of such action with the secretary of state, under section 3882, General Code.

COLUMBUS, OHIO, June 30, 1913.

HON. CHARLES H. GRAVES, Secretary of State, Columbus, Ohio.

DEAR SIR:—I beg to acknowledge receipt of your letter of April 5th, enclosing a letter addressed to you by Oliver H. Miller, attorney at law, and requesting my opinion upon the question which he submits. The question is raised by the following statement of fact:

> "The First Presbyterian Society, of Springfield, Ohio, was incorporated by a special act of the legislature of 1829, and the society continued to exist as a corporation under its original charter for over 20 years.
> "In 1849 the legislature passed an act changing the name of the society to 'the president and trustees of the First Presbyterian church of the city of Springfield,' and directing the election of five trustees, one of whom should be the president, instead of the president and five trustees; two classes of trustees were provided for for the purpose of the first election under the amendment to the charter; and the date of the first election was fixed for a day certain.
> "The election was not held upon the day fixed in the amendatory act, but no meeting was held for that purpose until May 31, 1852; at that time the constitution of 1851 and the acts passed in pursuance thereof were in force. One of these acts was the act of May 1, 1852, 50 O. L., 274, entitled, 'An act to provide for the creation and regulation of incorporated companies in the state of Ohio,' which seems to be the parent of our present general incorporation laws.
> "The last section of this act, being section 82, on page 296 of the session laws, seems to have been passed with reference to cases like the one of the president and trustees of the First Presbyterian church of Springfield, Ohio. It provided, in part, as follows:
> "'Whenever any company, association or society, heretofore * * * incorporated, shall have failed to elect its officers at the time designated, it shall be lawful for such company, association or society, to call a meeting and elect its officers, who shall hold their respective offices until the time specified for the annual, * * * election.'
> "In electing the new officers on May 13, 1852, the corporation acted under this section. This is apparent because the section is expressly referred to in the minutes of the meeting.

"No other acts have been done by the corporation since this date inconsistent with the terms of its original charter. May the number of trustees be increased from five to seven? If so, what proceeding is necessary?

"Section 66 and the succeeding sections of the same act provide for the organization of religious and other societies not for profit, and among the other provisions authorized is the election of such number of trustees or directors, not fewer than a certain minimum number, as the corporation might desire to have.

"Section 71 of the same act provided for the acceptance of the provisions of the general incorporation act by previously existing corporations organized under special acts of the legislature. It provided as follows:

"'All companies now incorporated in this state, and actually doing business, may accept any of the provisions of this act, and when so accepted, and a certified copy of the acceptance filed with the secretary to state, that portion of their charters inconsistent with the provisions of this act, is hereby repealed.'"

This was the only way under the general laws then in force that a corporation organized by a special act of the legislature might accept the general laws of the state and avail itself of any of the provisions thereof.

The first question which arises, then is this: The corporation not having acted as required in section 71 of the original act, but having limited its action under the general incorporation laws to availing itself of the authority contained in section 82 thereof, could it have availed itself of the privilege conferred upon other religious societies by section 66 of the general laws, i. e., the privilege of electing as many trustees as they might choose?

In my opinion, the answer to this question is in the negative. Action under section 82 by a corporation incorporated under a special act could not be construed as an acceptance of the remaining provisions of the general laws, because this section was intended particularly for the benefit of certain specially incorporated companies, and was not intended as an amendment to their charters any more extensive than its own terms would require. In order to become subject to the general laws at the time when the act of 1852 was passed it would have been required to comply with section 71 and to file a formal certificate of acceptance with the secretary of state.

The next question which arises is as to whether or not any action which the church had taken since the date last mentioned might have made it subject to the general laws and may have resulted in an implied amendment to its original charter.

Section 8736 of the General Code, which was passed originally in 83 O. L., 201, provided in part that:

"Corporations created before the adoption of the present constitution, which take any action under or in pursuance of this title, shall thereafter and thereby be deemed to have consented, and shall be held to be a corporation, and to have and exercise all and singular its franchises under the present constitution and the laws passed in pursuance thereof, and not otherwise;"

This section also contained a proviso that fire insurance companies subjecting themselves to the police regulations of the state shall not be deemed to have acted under the title. While this proviso is confined to insurance companies, I am of the opinion that its reason applies to all corporations, and that a corporation which merely subjects itself to the visitorial power of the state and its policy with respect to all of its corporation whether organized under general or special laws, and exerted either by way of taxation or of regulation, cannot be regarded as "taking action under" the general incorporation laws of the state. While I do not find that the point has been definitely decided in Ohio, I am clearly of the opinion that the "taking of action" which the section contemplates is the exercising of some power conferred upon the corporation of the same class by the general laws of the state, which power was not conferred upon the particular corporation by its special charter.

I have assumed that the church society in question never did exert any such power, but has confined its corporate activities exclusively to the scope of its original charter. I may be erroneous in making this assumption, as the letter submitted with your inquiry does not fully justify it. If I am in error and if the corporation has acted under the general laws so as to become subject to them, then, of course, further discussion would be unnecessary.

Upon the assumption that I have made, however, I would have to conclude that insofar as nothing has been done up to the present time by the church it is still subject to its original charter and that only with respect to the matters and things set forth therein. One of these things is the restriction upon the number of trustees. So long as the original charter of the corporation continues to constitute its organic law that corporation can have but five, and so long as this situation exists, there is no way to change the number of such trustees.

The present general laws of the state provide for the election of trustees of corporations not for profit as follows: (Sec. 8664, G. C.)

> "* * * A majority of the directors of a corporation for profit and such a number of the trustees as the regulations of a corporation not for profit may provide, shall form a board."

Section 8665 provides a special method of increasing the number of directors, but is silent as to the trustees of a corporation not for profit. No other provision of the General Code in any way affects the number of trustees of a corporation not for profit. The reference in section 8664 to the regulations of a corporation not for profit is not the only provision of the code relating to such trustees, however. Section 8656 provides that:

> "Except as otherwise provided, a majority of subscribers to articles of incorporation not for profit, may elect not less than five trustees for such corporation, to hold their offices until the next annual meeting, or until their successors are elected and qualified."

Section 8656 provides, inter alia, that the number of years of the terms of the trustees of such corporation shall not exceed the number of trustees. However, the number of trustees is not fixed by law, but as provided in section 8664 it may be fixed by regulation.

Other provisions concerning the regulation of corporations are found in sections 8701 et seq. I need not quote these provisions as they do not directly relate to the present question. None of these sections expressly authorize the number of trustees to be fixed by regulation, but section 8644, supra, is sufficient for this purpose.

Section 8703 provides that regulations may be adopted or changed at a meeting of the members of a corporation not for profit, notice of which must be given in a certain manner.

The membership of a corporation not for profit organized under the general laws is fixed as to church and religious societies by section 8654 of the General Code as follows:

> "When the incorporators of such a corporation now or hereafter formed, are or become members of a church, religious, secret or benevolent society, and have signed or sign articles to incorporate either thereof, any person who is or becomes a member of such church, religious, secret or benevolent society, in good standing, thereby shall be a member of such corporation, with the right to vote at all of its meetings for the election of officers or for any other purpose."

I have quoted all of this section for the purpose of making clear the practicability of a suggestion I am about to make. If the First Presbyterian church of Springfield desires to change the number of its trustees, it must in some way divest itself of its ancient special charter and accept the provisions of the general laws; after taking such an action it will continue to be a body corporate made up of those who are in good standing as members of the church. These members can, at a meeting called for that purpose, notice whereof is duly given, adopt a code of regulations, which code of regulations may provide for seven or any other number of trustees and fix their terms of office. Thus the end proposed will be accomplished.

As to the method of complying with the general laws, it might be held that if the society simply proceeds as I have outlined, without any other formalities, this would constitute "an action under" their corporate title and would of itself constitute the corporation one organized under the general laws.

The safer proceeding, however, and one which would raise no question whatever as to its regularity would be for the corporation at a regular meeting, or one called for that purpose, to accept all of the provisions of the general laws, or such of the provisions as I have quoted as of which it desires to avail itself and file a certificate of such action with the secretary of state under section 71 of the original corporation act which I have already referred to, which has now become section 8732 of the General Code. In this way the corporation could preserve as much of its original charter as it might desire to preserve and yet might amend the same by accepting portions of the general laws of the state.

I trust that the advice which I have given you will be of service to the society which has raised this question.

Very truly yours,
TIMOTHY S. HOGAN,
Attorney General.

ELECTIONS—COUNTY TO PAY EXPENSES OF—APPORTIONMENT OF EXPENSES AMONG POLITICAL DIVISIONS.

Under the provisions of section 5052, General Code, expenses of general and special elections shall be paid by the county.

Section 5053, General Code, provides that the board of elections shall certify to the auditor the expenses of elections held in odd years. The auditor shall apportion the expenses among the election precincts and deduct the amount from the semi-annual settlement.

COLUMBUS, OHIO, July 23, 1913.

HON. CHARLES H. GRAVES, Secretary of State, Columbus, Ohio.

DEAR SIR:—In reply to the question propounded to you by the clerk of the board of elections of Hamilton, Ohio, as to the duty of such board in certifying expenses where the city council of Hamilton refuses to make an appropriation for the coming six months, I desire to say:

Section 5052, General Code, provides that the payment of expenses for general and special elections shall be paid by the county, as other expenses, while section 5053, General Code, provides that the expenses of elections in the odd numbered years shall be ascertained by the board of elections, apportioned to the several political divisions and certified to the auditor, who withholds the amount thereof from the sum due such political division on the next semi-annual settlement.

I think this latter section in plain terms and without explanation answers the query presented and points out the duty of the board of elections, under the circumstances mentioned, which seemingly can have no effect, as the money applicable to election expenses never reaches the city treasury, under the provisions of section 5053, General Code.

Yours very truly,
TIMOTHY S. HOGAN,
Attorney General.

HOME PROCURING ASSOCIATION MAY NOT INCORPORATE UNDER THE LAWS OF OHIO.

Where an association is formed for the purpose of buying for its members building lots in cities, towns or places in close proximity thereto, and of building thereon dwelling houses for said members on a payment combining plan that eliminates from the cost of said houses and lots, both profit and interest so far as the association is concerned, such an association may not be incorporated under the laws of Ohio.

COLUMBUS, OHIO, July 23, 1913.

HON. CHARLES H. GRAVES, Secretary of State, Columbus, Ohio.

DEAR SIR:—I beg to acknowledge receipt of your letter of July 15th, enclosing proposed articles of incorporation of The Home Procuring Association, and requesting my opinion as to the legality thereof and as to the proper fee to be collected by your department, for filing the same, if legal. The articles of incorporation, insofar as the provisions thereof are material in connection with the questions, are as follows:

"These Articles of Incorporation of The Home Procuring Association:

WITNESSETH, That we, the undersigned, all citizens of the state of Ohio, desiring to form a corporation, benevolent in its nature, not mutual and not for profit, under the general corporation laws of said state, do hereby certify:

"1. That the name of said corporation is to be The Home Procuring Association.

"3. That said corporation is formed for the purpose of buying for its members building lots in cities or places in close proximity thereto and of building thereon dwelling houses for said members on a payment combining plan that eliminates from the cost of said houses and lots both profit and interest so far as the association is concerned, the plan being such that All Members of said association are enabled To Procure and Own Homes."

If it could be said to be legal to form a corporation not for profit for a purpose like that described in the foregoing articles of incorporation, the corporation thus formed would certainly not be "benevolent in its nature" and "not mutual," as the prologue of the articles describing the proposed corporation. A corporation is not "benevolent" the benefits of which are to be limited to the members of the corporation. A corporation is "mutual" if it is formed for the benefit of its members and if, in addition thereto, the members are to share mutually and ratably in the obligations, liabilities and losses of the corporation. It is at least fairly inferable from the purpose clause of the proposed articles of incorporation that the company which it is designed to incorporate is to possess these characteristics in its practical operation.

The reasons for the general conclusions of law above expressed have been defined in other opinions to your department.

It is clear, then, that if the corporation is properly organized as "not for profit" it is a "mutual corporation not organized strictly for benevolent or charitable purposes and having no capital stock," for filing the articles of which a fee of $25.00 is required to be paid, by paragraph 4 of section 176, General Code.

I am of the opinion, however, that the proposed corporation cannot be organized "not for profit," as will be apparent from what I am about to state. I am not certain that I have correctly apprehended the nature of the proposed business, and for that reason I have also expressed an opinion upon the question of the fee. If I do correctly understand the design of the incorporators, however, it is that the proposed corporation is to have a membership, doubtless selected under regulations and by-laws to be adopted, and that the result of the joint investment of the members is to be the financial benefit of the members. That is to say, the several members of the corporation are to contribute to its assets, with a view to reaping direct financial benefit from its operation. To be sure, the corporation itself is not to derive profits from the use of this fund, but inasmuch as any profits which a corporation might reap would, after the satisfaction of any creditors, belong to its members, this recital of the proposed articles of incorporation can have no great bearing upon the solution of the question as to whether or not the real purpose of the incorporators is to conduct a business "for profit." The statutes of this state expressly authorize the formation of certain particular kinds of mutual profit sharing corporations, such as mutual insurance companies and building and loan associations. This corporation, however, cannot be classified as belonging to any one of these kinds of authorized organizations.

In other opinions to your department I have more elaborately discussed my reasons for being of the opinion that a corporation, the object of which is to save money for its members by combining their investments and securing more favorable terms therefor, or otherwise, is no less a corporation "for profit" than one the object of which is to make money for its members, so that its profits may be ratably distributed to them.

This general principle applies to the above articles of incorporation. Indeed the suspicion arises that the business in which the company proposes to engage is substantially that of a building and loan association. If that be the case, its formation under the general statutes would be prohibited upon principles laid down in State vs. Livestock Company, 38 O. S., 347.

I may be mistaken in my surmise as to the method of doing business which is designed by the incorporators of this company, but if it is that suggested in the foregoing general discussion it follows, for the reasons therein set forth, that a simple corporation, not for profit, may not lawfully be formed for the purpose therein stated, and that a corporation for profit may not be lawfully formed for said purpose under the general laws of the state; but such business may only be carried on by a building and loan association organized under the special statutes applicable to such associations.

Very truly yours,
TIMOTHY S. HOGAN,
Attorney General.

JUSTICE OF THE PEACE TO BE ELECTED IN ODD NUMBERED YEARS.

All justices of the peace must be elected in the odd numbered years, unless provision is made for a special election in some particular township or precinct, as provided by sections 1712 and 1713, General Code.

COLUMBUS, OHIO, September 4, 1913.

HON. CHARLES H. GRAVES, Secretary of State, Columbus, Ohio.

DEAR SIR:—I have your letter of August 26, 1913, in which you inquire:

> "Please advise me if justices of the peace should be elected at the next general election.
> "I am having various inquiries on this matter, and would be pleased to have your early consideration of the same."

Section 1, of article XVII, of the constitution, provides:

> "Elections for state and county officers shall be held on the first Tuesday after the first Monday in November in the even numbered years; and all elections for all other elective officers shall be held on the first Tuesday after the first Monday in November in the odd numbered years."

From this, it being now conceded that a justice of the peace must come within the time of "other elective officers," it follows that justices of the peace must be elected in the odd numbered years.

Section 1715, reads:

"At the next regular election for such office, a justice of the peace shall be elected in the manner provided by law, for the term of four years commencing on the first day of January next following his election."

From a consideration of this section and the foregoing constitutional provision, I think it clear that all justices must be elected in the odd numbered years, unless provision is made for a special election in some particular township or precinct, as may be provided under sections 1712 and 1713, General Code.

Very truly yours,
TIMOTHY S. HOGAN,
Attorney General.

FRATERNAL BENEFIT ASSOCIATION INCORPORATED PRIOR TO THE PASSAGE OF SECTION 9474, GENERAL CODE, MAY DETERMINE IN ITS CONSTITUTION, THE METHOD OF MAKING AMENDMENTS TO ITS ARTICLES OF INCORPORATION.

Section 9474, General Code, clearly authorizes a fraternal benefit association, incorporated prior to the passage of this statute, to determine in its constitution the method of making amendments to its articles of incorporation, in so far as the internal operations of the association are concerned. Such amendments may be filed with the secretary of state, when properly adopted according to the constitution of the organization. Copies of these amendments should be filed in the office of the superintendent of banks.

COLUMBUS, OHIO, September 17, 1913.

HON. CHARLES H. GRAVES, Secretary of State, Columbus, Ohio.

DEAR SIR:—Without formally requesting my opinion thereon you have transmitted to me a letter addressed to you by Mr. Harry L. Doud, supreme attorney for the Order of United Commercial Travelers of America, enclosing a draft of a proposed certificate of amendment of the articles of incorporation of said order, which said amendment appears, by the certificate, to have been adopted by the supreme council of the order, and not by the members thereof as such.

It appears from Mr. Doud's letter that the Order of United Commercial Travelers of America was incorporated on September 25, 1890, by the filing of articles of incorporation in the office of the secretary of state. Subsequently to this act of organization, and while the order was engaged, as it still is, in the transaction of its business and activities in this state and elsewhere, the general assembly enacted the first of a series of statutes for the organization, government and regulation of that particular type of association or company, variously known as "fraternal beneficiary associations" and "fraternal benefit societies." The Order of United Commercial Travelers of America is assumed by Mr. Doud, and I have no doubt correctly, to be a fraternal benefit society within the meaning of the present statutes on the subject, which constitute sections 9462 to 9509, inclusive, General Code; it is stated in this connection that the order has been licensed by the superintendent of insurance as a fraternal benefit society, and that the license has been renewed from year to year, and is now in effect.

Mr. Doud, calling attention specifically to the provisions of section 9474, General Code, asks the following questions, upon which I assume you desire my advice:

> "1. May the articles of incorporation of the Order of United Commercial Travelers of America be amended by the action of its supreme council, that being the method provided for in the constitution thereof, but this method being inconsistent with the method prescribed by the general corporation laws of the state for the amendment of articles of incorporation of associations formed under said laws, not for profit?
> "2. Should a certificate of amendment to the articles of incorporation of the Order of United Commercial Travelers of America be filed in the office of the secretary of state only; in the office of the superintendent of insurance only, or in both offices?"

Mr. Doud also asks you to state whether or not the form of certificate enclosed in his letter is satisfactory to you. The conclusion which I have reached on the other two questions, above stated, however, will make it unnecessary for me to consider the sufficiency of the certificate of amendment, from the point of view of the secretary of state.

Said section 9474, General Code, referred to by Mr. Doud, provides in part as follows:

> "No society already organized shall be required to incorporate hereunder, and any such society may amend its articles of incorporation from time to time in the manner provided therein, or in its constitution and laws, and all such amendments shall be filed with the superintendent of insurance and shall become operative upon such filing, unless a later time be provided in such amendments or in its articles of incorporation, constitution or laws."

This section comprises the same subject-matter as that formerly found in the 13th section of the original fraternal beneficiary association act, 97 O. L. 426, which subsequently became section 3631-23, Revised Statutes and section 9482, General Code. The precise language of that section in this connection is as follows:

> "Such an association may amend its articles of association from time to time in the manner provided herein, or in its constitution or laws. All such amendments shall be filed with the superintendent of insurance and become operative upon the filing, unless a later time be provided in the amendments, or in its articles of association, constitution or laws."

There is a single substantial difference between these two sections, arising out of the use of the word "herein," which evidently refers to the act of the general assembly in old section 9482, as against the use of the word "therein," which evidently refers to the provisions of the articles of incorporation of the society, as used in present section 9474, General Code. It is sufficient, however, for the present purposes, to state that at the time the original "fraternal beneficiary society" act was passed, the general assembly evinced an evident intention to confer upon the existing and theretofore incorporated associations the power, presumably exclusive, of amending their articles of incorporation in the special method therein provided; and that, in revising the law upon the subject-matter, it retained substantially the same provisions.

The effect of this legislative action, in my opinion, was to amend what may, for convenience and with some accuracy, be termed the "charters" of the theretofore organized associations of this class, in this particular; whereas these associations had been subject to the general law of the state providing for the amendment of articles of incorporation of all corporations not for profit, the application of that general law to the existing associations, by virtue of this legislation, was ended, and the organic law of each of them was changed with respect to the subject-matter of the amendment of their articles of incorporation.

The general assembly, in so acting, was exercising a specially reserved legislative power, namely: That to "alter or repeal a general law for the formation of corporations," and to "alter, revoke or repeal" a special privilege or immunity. See article XIII, section 2, and article I, section 2, constitution of 1851. So that, although the provisions of the general law, under which the associations organized prior to the passage of the amendatory legislation above referred to, became, upon familiar principles, a part of the organic law of each one of them, these amendments, clearly intended to apply to such associations, had the effect of altering that organic law.

As a conclusion from these considerations, it follows that the provisions of the general law relating to amendments of articles of incorporation need not be taken into account at all in connection with Mr. Doud's question. That is to say, if it clearly appears that section 9474, General Code, and its predecessors, constitute a provision for the amendment of articles of incorporation, of associations of the designated class, this provision may, with propriety, be regarded as exclusive. There is every reason for so regarding it. It is impossible, in my judgment, to read section 9474 consistently with the provisions of the general law relating to the method of making amendments, except upon the hypothesis that a corporation subject to the provisions of section 9474 may choose to act either under that section or under the general law. This hypothesis is, in my judgment, untenable. In the first place, the principle that a special provision inconsistent with a general provision is to be regarded as an exception to the latter applies here. Again, when there is a grant of power in a statute, the same is construed, by the application of the rule that the expression of one thing is the exclusion of all others. Section 9474, then, constituting a grant of corporate power to act in a certain way, implies the denial of such power to accomplish the same end by acting in any other manner.

In the third place there is the provision of section 8737, General Code, which is as follows:

> "This chapter does not apply when special provision is made in subsequent chapters of this title, but the special provision shall govern unless it clearly appears that the provision is cumulative."

It does not, in my judgment, "clearly appear" that the provision of section 9474 is cumulative to that provided by the general law. On the contrary, I have stated reasons for regarding the method provided by the section as exclusive.

Finally, while on this point, and for the purpose of illustration, I may say that I regard the language, "All such amendments shall be filed with the superintendent of insurance and become operative upon the filing" as necessarily inconsistent with the provisions of the general corporation law which require amendments to articles of incorporation to be filed with the secretary of state, and that by no process of interpretation can this positive requirement be regarded as cumulative. This being clear as to a portion of the statute the principle becomes operative as to the whole statute.

Answering Mr. Doud's question specifically, I am of the opinion that section 9474, General Code, clearly authorizes a fraternal benefit society, incorporated prior to the passage of the statute, to determine by its constitution the method of making amendments to its articles of incorporation, insofar as the internal operation of the association is concerned. The word "laws," as used in the immediate context in section 9474, offers no difficulty when the section is compared with old section 9482. Consideration of both sections leads to the conclusion that the word is synonymous with "by-laws," or laws of the society, i. e., of its own adoption or enactment, and is not equivalent to "the laws of the state under which it was organized."

Furthermore, if the word "laws" be given the second of the two suggested meanings, then, the clause of which it is a part is absolutely inconsistent with what immediately follows, in that, under the general laws of the state, as already pointed out, amendments to articles of incorporation must be filed with the secretary of state, whereas the section requires such amendments to be filed with the superintendent of insurance, and makes them operative upon such filing, unless otherwise provided, etc.

It must be acknowledged, in passing, however, that the word "manner," as used in the first of the two clauses now under consideration, might refer merely to the internal operation of the society. Nevertheless, it seems clear to me that the general assembly actually intended to designate the by-laws of the association, and not the laws of the state, in speaking of "its constitution and laws."

For the foregoing reasons, then, I am of the opinion that if the constitution of the Order of United Commercial Travelers of America provides that amendments to the articles of incorporation, before being filed with the proper state authorities, be adopted by the supreme council, and not otherwise, such amendments, so far as the internal operation of the association is concerned, may be so filed, when adopted in this manner.

Answering Mr. Doud's second question, I am clearly of the opinion that the certificate of amendment, a copy of which he encloses, should be filed in the office of the superintendent of insurance, and in that department only. As already stated, I cannot reach any other conclusion, in the light of the precise language used in section 9474, from which it is evident that the general assembly intended that the act of filing amendments to articles of incorporation, of societies "already organized," with the superintendent of insurance should make such amendments operative.

I herewith return for your files the correspondence submitted to me.

Very truly yours,
TIMOTHY S. HOGAN,
Attorney General.

ARTICLES OF INCORPORATION OF THE ROUMANIAN-AMERICAN LEAGUE NOT TO BE FILED UNLESS REVISED.

In order to authorize the secretary of state to accept the articles of incorporation of the Roumanian-American League, an institution formed for the purpose of mutual assistance and benefit socially, financially and cultural, it must be determined either that the association is not to have a lodge system with ritualistic form of work and representative for, of government, or that the death benefits to be provided for shall not exceed $100.00, or the disability benefits more than $150.00, to any one person in any one year, and that certificates are not to be issued. These things must be stated in the articles of incorporation in order to authorize the secretary of state to accept such articles for filing.

COLUMBUS, OHIO, September 19, 1913.

HON. CHARLES H. GRAVES, Secretary of State, Columbus, Ohio.

DEAR SIR:—I enclose herewith the proposed articles of incorporation of The Roumanian-American League, submitted to me for my consideration and approval. I am unable to approve these articles of incorporation in their present form. The purpose clause thereof is as follows:

> "Third. Said corporation is formed for the purpose of mutual assistance and benefit socially, financially and cultural. It is to be the principal and ruling organization over subordinate organizations, not for profit. To aid and assist financially the distressed and wanting families of deceased members or those disabled; to promote the educational, intellectual and social improvement of its members and render them eligible for useful citizenship. To acquire and to hold real estate to be used for the erection of society halls or buildings for like social uses and for the sole benefit of its members."

The third sentence of this clause, taken in connection with the use of the words "mutual assistance and benefit," in the first sentence thereof, seems to evidence an intention to conduct the activities referred to in section 9427, General Code, the application of which to societies exempted from some of the remaining provisions of the same chapter is fully discussed in an opinion, of even date herewith, in the matter of the articles of incorporation of The Employes Protective Association of the Haven Malleable Castings Company, of Cincinnati, Ohio.

I need only to add to this opinion, in order to make it applicable to the articles of incorporation of The Roumanian-American League, the statement that, from the legislative history involved, I am clearly of the opinion that a corporation organized under the general laws of the state as a supreme or governing body of subordinate lodges or societies, with power to engage in the activity of aiding and assisting the families of deceased members of the general organization, must conform such portion of its articles of incorporation as purports to grant power to do this to the provisions of section 9427, General Code.

There is one particular, however, in which the articles of incorporation of The Roumanian-American League are deficient, which is peculiar to these articles. This corporation, being the controlling or ruling body, with jurisdiction over subordinate and local lodges, would, of course, naturally fall within the class of organizations subject to the "fraternal benefit society" act, were it not for the provisions of section 9491, referred to in the other opinion. The particular language of that section which exempts this association, if at all, from the operation of that act, is as follows:

> "Nothing contained in this act shall be construed to affect or apply to * * * domestic lodges, orders or associations, of a purely religious, charitable and benevolent description, which do not provide for a death benefit of more than one hundred dollars, or disability benefits of more than one hundred and fifty dollars to any one person in any one year; provided always, that any such * * * domestic lodge, order or society which issues to any person a certificate providing for the payment of benefits, shall not be exempt by the provisions of this section, but shall comply with all the requirements of this act * * *"

One of the "provisions of this act," as referred to in the section just quoted from, is section 9473, General Code, which is very lengthy and need not be quoted here in full. Suffice it to state that it requires that a fraternal benefit society, as defined by the act, being, "any corporation, society, order or voluntary association, without capital stock, organized and carried on solely for the mutual benefit of its members and their beneficiaries, and not for profit, and having a lodge system with ritualistic form of work and representative form of government, and which shall make provision for the payment of benefits in accordance with section 5 (G. C., 9466) hereof" be organized by the filing of articles of incorporation in a specified form with the superintendent of insurance instead of the secretary of state.

These provisions, therefore, differ from those with respect to the class of corporations to which The Employes Protective Association of the Haven Malleable Castings Company, of Cincinnati, Ohio, belongs. Accordingly, the remarks made in the opinion referred to, as to the method of incorporation of such societies, do not apply here. Instead, I am of the opinion that a corporation purporting to be, as is The Roumanian-American League, "the principal and ruling organization over subordinate organizations, not for profit" must either negative the definition of section 9466, General Code, on the face of its articles of incorporation or bring itself within the purview of the exemption of section 9491, General Code. That is to say, it must be explicitly stated in the articles, either that the association is not to have a lodge system, with ritualistic form of work and representative form of government, or that the death benefits to be provided for shall not exceed $100, nor the disability benefits more than $150, to any one person, in any one year, and that certificates are not to be issued. These things must be stated in the articles of incorporation, in order to authorize the secretary of state to accept such articles for filing.

Very truly yours,
TIMOTHY S. HOGAN,
Attorney General.

ARTICLES OF INCORPORATION OF EMPLOYES PROTECTIVE ASSOCIATION OF THE HAVEN MALLEABLE CASTINGS COMPANY OF CINCINNATI, OHIO, SHOULD COMPLY WITH SECTION 9427, GENERAL CODE, BEFORE THE SECRETARY OF STATE SHOULD RECEIVE THEM FOR FILING.

Articles of incorporation of the employes protective association of the Haven Malleable Castings Company of Cincinnati, Ohio, an association formed for the purpose of securing to the iron moulders of the Haven Malleable Castings Company, mutual protection and relief for themselves and their families in case of sickness, disability or death, should not be filed until they comply with the provisions of section 9427, General Code, which provides for the organization of companies or associations for the purpose of transacting relief and accident insurance on the assessment plan for the mutual protection and relief of the community.

COLUMBUS, OHIO, September 19, 1913.

HON. CHARLES H. GRAVES, Secretary of State, Columbus, Ohio.

DEAR SIR:—In your letter of September 2nd, receipt whereof is acknowledged, you submit to me for my consideration and action, if required by law, the proposed articles of incorporation of The Employes' Protective Association of the Haven Malleable Castings Company, of Cincinnati, Ohio. The purpose clause thereof is as follows:

> "The purpose for which said corporation is formed, is to secure to iron molders of the Haven Malleable Castings Company, of Cincinnati, Ohio, of which the membership shall be exclusively composed, mutual protection and relief, for themselves and their families exclusively, in case of sickness, disability or death."

The filing fee tendered therewith is two dollars. That this is proper is evidenced by paragraph five of section 176, General Code, which expressly provides that the secretary of state shall charge and collect "for filing articles of incorporation * * * of * * * associations composed exclusively of any class of mechanics * * * or other employes, and formed exclusively for the mutual protection and relief of members thereof and their families, two dollars."

An association of this sort is not affected by the fraternal benefit act. Section 9491 thereof provides that:

> "Nothing in this act shall be construed to affect or apply to * * * domestic societies which limit their membership to the employes of a * * * designated firm, business house or corporation * * *; provided always, that any such domestic order or society which has more than five hundred members, and provides for death or disability benefits * * * shall not be by the provisions of this section, but shall comply with all the requirements of this act.
> "The superintendent of insurance may require from any society such information as will enable him to determine whether such society is exempt from the provisions of this act."

Under this provision I am of the opinion that a corporation may be organized other than under the fraternal benefit society act, but may, by fulfilling the conditions specified in the section quoted, and elsewhere in the related sections, subsequently become subject to that act; the superintendent of insurance being vested with authority at any time to determine in the first instance whether or not the society has become so subject to said act. That is to say, upon the incorporation of a society it is not required by its articles to negative the proviso of section 9491, General Code.

Section 9459 is a part of the provisions of law relating to the organization and government of what are known as mutual protective associations. It exempts from certain provisions of the chapter of which it is a part, viz: sections 9430 to 9458, both inclusive, "any class of mechanics * * * formed for the mutual benefit of the members thereof and their families or blood relatives exclusively."

The section in question, however, does not exempt the associations mentioned therein from the requirements of any of the remaining sections of the chapter. One of these sections is section 9427, General Code, which provides as follows:

> "A company or association may be organized to transact the business of life or accident or life and accident insurance on the assessment plan, for the purpose of mutual protection and relief of its members, and for the payment of stipulated sums of money to the families, heirs, executors, administrators, or assigns of the deceased members of such company or association, as the member may direct, in the manner provided by law."

In State vs. Pioneer Livestock Company, 38 O. S. 347, it was held that corporations may not be organized under the general corporation laws of the state providing for the incorporation of companies for profit and not for profit for the purpose of conducting an insurance business, but that, in order to obtain corporate authority to transact such business, or to carry on such activities, individuals desiring to form a corporation must associate themselves in accordance with the provisions of the specific statutes relating to insurance companies as such.

Now, the phraseology of the purpose clause of the articles of incorporation submitted to me is not exactly consistent with section 9427, General Code. The inconsistencies lie in the fact that the proposed articles do not specifically state that the business of the association is to be conducted on the assessment plan; in the fact that the protection and relief to be afforded to its members is not, by explicit provision, to be by way of the payment of stipulated sums of money, in the event of the death of a member; and in the fact that the relief which the proposed association is to extend is to be given to the families of the members exclusively, whereas the statute provides that beneficiaries may be "the families, heirs, executors, administrators or assigns of the deceased members * * * as the members may direct." In the face of this inconsistency between the statute and the articles, and the decision to which I have referred, I have felt impelled to consider the question as to whether or not an association of this sort is subject to the rule of the decision.

Several perplexing factors enter into the question involved. In the first place, section 9459, General Code, as already pointed out, does not exempt the class of associations referred to therein from all the provisions of the chapter, but by specific mention restricts the force of its exemption to certain sections of the chapter, thus giving rise to the inference that the associations mentioned therein are subject to the remaining sections thereof. If this be a proper inference, then, no association of employes, nor other association mentioned in the section under consideration, could be formed for the purpose of transacting business in any other way than the precise method described by section 9427, General Code.

9459, General Code, extends whatever exemption it offers to certain associations and "classes" when "formed for the mutual benefit of the members thereof and their families or blood relatives exclusively." There is here a direct conflict between the language of this section and the language of section 9427, in that the former speaks of societies organized for the relief of members, their families and blood relatives exclusively, while the latter seems to require that a death benefit be payable as well to administrators, executors and assigns. So that if the suggested construction be given to section 9459, it would never be lawful for any association formed for mutual protection and relief to limit its death benefits to families and blood relatives, and, hence, there could not be any such thing as a society such as is described by the section. The proposition is thus reduced to an absurdity, and it must be acknowledged that the existence of this absurdity indicates the view that the general assembly did not contemplate that societies of mechanics, etc.—in short, the societies mentioned in section 9459, General Code, should be organized exclusively under section 9427, General Code, or, on the other hand, that it is lawful for an association organized under section 9427 to provide in its articles of incorporation that death benefits shall be payable to a class of beneficiaries more restricted than that defined in the statute.

If the legislative intention evinced in the enactment of these two sections was the first one imagined, then, of course, the rule in State vs. Livestock Company, supra, does not apply to the formation of associations composed of mechanics, etc.; if, on the other hand, the other intention be imputed to the legislature, then, such associations, though permitted to restrict the class of beneficiaries, and indeed required to do so, in order to claim the benefit of the exemption of section 9459, General Code, would nevertheless be required to conform their articles of incorporation otherwise than with respect to the class of beneficiaries to the provisions of section 9427.

The legislative history of the two sections in question must, I think, be consulted in order to reach a decision as to the choice between the two hypothetical legislative intentions. I konw of no better guide to statutory interpretation, in a case of this sort, then the one suggested. The statutes are themselves ambiguous on their face, and well recognized canons of statutory interpretation permit recourse to the state of the pre-existing law, with a view to discovering what evil was intended to be remedied by its amendment and, hence, to shedding light upon the meaning of the statutes as amended.

Section 9427, General Code, was originally passed April 20, 1872, 60 Ohio Laws, 82. Section 1 of this act provided as follows:

> "Any number of persons, not less than five, may associate themselves together as provided in the first section of the act entitled 'an act to provide for the creation and regulation of incorporated companies in the state of Ohio,' passed May 1, 1852, for the purpose of mutual protection and relief of its members, and for the payment of stipulated sums of money to the families or heirs of the deceased members of such associations."

Section 3 of the same act provided that the persons thus incorporated should have general corporate powers, and, in addition, "power to receive money, either by voluntary donation or contribution, or to collect the same by assessment on its members; and to distribute, invest and appropriate the same in such manner as such association may deem proper * * *."

It will be observed that these two sections, together, are substantially similar to the first two sentences of section 9427, General Code, except that the class of beneficiaries in case of the death of a member is limited to the "families or heirs of the deceased members."

The substance of the act just cited was incorporated in sections 3630 and 3631 of the Revised Statutes of 1880.

Thereafter, to wit: April 12, 1880, the general assembly passed an act, found in 77 Ohio Laws, 178, in form supplementary to sections 3630 and 3631, and consisting in the original of sections 3630-a to 3630-f, inclusive, amended section 3631, and a section designated as "section 8" of the act.

Sections 3630-a to 3630-f were regulatory in scope and required corporations "organized in pursuance of sections 3236 and 3238 of the act to revise and consolidate the general statutes of Ohio * * * or any other law of this state, for the purpose of doing business under the provisions of section 3630 of said act, or for the purpose of doing such business as is contemplated by said section" to file annual statements with the superintendent of insurance, for the purpose of submitting to the regulatory power of his department. (Section 3630-a.)

I pause here to point out that section 3236, Revised Statutes, expressly referred to in original section 3630-a thereof, expressly provided, inter alia, for the formation of "any association of five or more persons * * * not for profit," and as the principal or ruling organization over subordinate organizations, associated, not for profit, which, as is apparent at a glance, appropriately describes one of the kind of associations referred to in present section 9459.

It was further provided in these regulatory provisions that no corporation or association organized under the laws of any other state should be permitted to do business in Ohio without obtaining a certificate of compliance from the superintendent of insurance. (Section 3630-e.)

Section 8 of the original act was as follows:

> "This act shall not apply to any association of religious or secret societies or to any class of mechanics, express, telegraph or railroad employes, formed for the mutual benefit of the members thereof and their families exclusively."

It will be noticed that the words "or heirs," found in section 1 of original section 3630, are not found in the foregoing "section 8." It will also be observed that this "section 8" is the predecessor of present section 9459, General Code.

It will also be observed that the thing which was "not to apply" to the classes of associations mentioned in original "section 8" was "this act," i. e. sections 3630-a et seq, Revised Statutes.

At this stage of the legislation it seems clear to me that the decision in State vs. Livestock Association, supra, as applied to the statutes which I have cited, might result in the conclusion that the classes of associations referred to in "section 8," supra, if incorporated, would have to be organized in conformity to the provisions of section 3630.

Now, section 3630, of course, was not in reality an "organization" provision. Corporations organized under it were nevertheless organized under the general laws of the state, but the powers which they might have were those defined in section 3630, or something less. That is to say, an association might be organized under the general corporation laws of the state for the purpose of mutual protection and relief of its members and their families, and if coming within the class designated by said "section 8," would not be subject to the regulatory provisions of sections 3630-a et seq., Revised Statutes; but, though coming within the class of those designated by that section, if such an association should attempt to issue death benefits payable to the heirs of a deceased member, in distinction to the family of such member, then, the exemption would not apply. The implication, then, is that a corporation or association might be organized under the general laws of the state for the mutual protection and relief of its members and their families, in case of death, without extending the death benefits to the heirs.

See, in general, the case of State ex rel. vs. Central Ohio Mutual Relief Association, 29 O. S. 399, decided under the original statutes and prior to the passage of sections 3630-a et seq., Revised Statutes.

After the passage of the sections last above referred to and hereinbefore discussed is was held, in State ex rel. vs. Moore, 38 O. S. 7, that a company of another state could not be admitted to do business in Ohio, by virtue of the provisions of section 3630-e, which paid death benefits other than to the restricted class of beneficiaries provided for by section 3630. The second branch of the syllabus sheds light upon the meaning of original sections 3630-a et seq., as follows:

> "The supplementary act of April 12, 1880, (70 O. L. 178) does not enlarge the class of companies provided for in said section (3630) but merely prescribes the regulations under which such companies, whether domestic or foreign, may do business in the state, and subjects them to additional supervision."

In other words, the supreme court held in this case that the act found in 77 Ohio Laws, 178, was merely a regulation of associations organized for the purpose of doing business contemplated by section 3630, and no other business.

Undoubtedly, this decision led to the subsequent amendments of the statutes, involved, found in 83 Ohio Laws, 61, and 88 Ohio Laws 251. These amendments need not be specifically set out here. Suffice it to say that the phrase "to transact the business of life or accident or life and accident insurance on the assessment plan" and the words "executors, administrators or assigns" were, among other things, added to original section 3630, Revised Statutes, now section 9427, General Code. The purpose of the legislature in so amending section 3630 was to make it possible for foreign insurance companies not calling themselves "mutual protection associations," but rather "assessment insurance companies," to be admitted to the state. Similarly, the legislature entertained the purpose of permitting the admission of foreign companies whose business contemplates the payment of death benefits to persons other than the families and heirs.

In amending section 3630, Revised Statutes, however, the general assembly did not see fit to amend original "section 8" of the act found in 77 Ohio Laws, 178. It had received the section number "3631-a" in the Revised Statutes, and has since become section 9459, General Code. Nevertheless, the conflict between the provisions of the two sections, with respect to the class of beneficiaries, has already been explained, and the legislative history of section 9427 merely makes plainer what already appears, namely: that the legislature contemplates the possibility of the formation of a company for the purpose of mutual protection and relief of its members, under section 3630, Revised Statutes, now section 9427, General Code, the payment of whose death benefits, however, should be to a class of persons more restricted than that defined therein. In other words, while the death benefits could not be made payable to a larger class of beneficiaries, they might lawfully be made payable to a smaller class thereof than the statute defines. And when the legislature, in deference doubtless to the wishes of foreign companies, amended section 3630, Revised. Statutes, it did so for the purpose of making it possible for such foreign companies to enter the state, and it did not contemplate that all domestic companies, or even all foreign companies, should be organized with all the powers defined in section 3630. So it was not necessary, in order that a corporation be organized under section 3630, that it should do the business of life or life and accident insurance on the assessment plan as a technical "business," nor that it pay its death benefits to all the classes of beneficiaries to which a company organized under that section might be authorized to pay such benefits. A company organized for mutual protection and relief and disclaiming the intention of doing business on the assessment plan has a business, and a company declaring its intention to pay its death benefits to a class of beneficiaries more restricted than that referred to in section 3630 might, nevertheless, be regarded as one organized under that section.

These considerations, then, explain the verbal differences between present sections 9427 and 9459, General Code. They remove all obstacles to the operation of the doctrine announced in State vs. Livestock Association, supra, which I believe applies, with all its force, to the organization of mutual protection societies of whatever kind. This was the opinion of my distinguished predecessor, Hon. James Lawrence, who advised the then secretary of state, in an opinion found in "Opinions of the Attorney General of Ohio, 1813-1888," volume 3, page 504, that:

> "In my opinion all corporations formed for the purpose specified in section 3630, Revised Statutes, must be organized under and in pursuance thereof, and are governed by that section and the sections supplementary thereto, except that said supplementary sections do not apply to any association of religious or secret societies, or to any class of mechanics, express, telegraph or railroad employes formed for the mutual benefit of the members thereof and their families exclusively. This exception in respect to the class of associations last named, it will be seen, extends only to the provisions relating to their conduct and management. Corporations of the excepted class must nevertheless be organized and created under the authority of section 3630, and possess all the powers thereby conferred."

This opinion was rendered February 25, 1885. There has been no subsequent legislation in any way changing the principles upon which it was founded.

I concur substantially in Judge Lawrence's opinion and I am satisfied that it applies to the statutes as they exist today.

As a conclusion from these principles, it follows that a corporation, formed for the mutual protection and relief of the members thereof and their families, the membership of which is exclusively confined to the employes of a designated firm, which employes are and constitute a class of mechanics, though exempted by the statutes above quoted from the provisions of the fraternal benefit society act, and though further exempted by the provisions of section 9459, General Code, from the regulatory statutes pertaining to mutual protective societies in general, nevertheless, must be organized in conformity to section 9427, General Code. To say that they must be so organized means that they may possess no powers inconsistent with that section and must show by their articles of incorporation that the business or acivity in which the association proposes to engage is one consistent with the provisions thereof.

The conclusion just stated assumes that the decision in State vs. Pioneer Livestock Company, supra, applies to companies or associations organized for the mutual protection and relief of their members. It might be objected at this point that the precise holding in that case was that a corporation may not lawfully be organized under the laws of this state for the purpose of conducting an insurance business, except under the sections pertaining to insurance companies as such and that the business of mutual protection and relief of the members of an association is not an "insurance business" in the technical sense, so that the decision has no application in such cases. That is to say, it might be asserted that, while it is unlawful by virtue of this decision to permit the organization of a corporation for the purpose of conducting an insurance business under the general corporation laws of the state, it is not necessarily unlawful to permit the organization of a corporation for the purpose of carrying on activities which do not amount to the insurance business; so that, unless it be established that the purpose for which the employes' protective association, etc., the articles of incorporation of which are now under consideration, is formed amounts technically to the doing of an insurance business, it may be organized with such powers as its incorporators please to confer upon it, provided they are lawful otherwise, and need not be conformed, with respect to its purposes, to the provisions of section 9427, General Code.

An argument of this sort would, I apprehend, depend for its validity upon a strict construction of the decision in State ex rel. vs. Pioneer Livestock Company, on the one hand, and a liberal interpretation of the decision in State ex rel. vs. Railroad Company, 68 O. S. 9, on the other hand. In the case last cited, it is held, in the language of the syllabus, as follows:

> "1. An association established by a railway company, composed of some or all of its employes and the company, for the purpose of accumulating and maintaining a relief fund created by the voluntary contributions from their wages by employes who apply for membership in said fund and are admitted, the railway company to take charge of and be responsible for the funds, make up deficiencies in the same, supply facilities for conducting the business and pay the operating expenses, supply surgical attendance for injuries received in its service, and to pay the members or their designated beneficiaries the stated share of the benefit fund so raised from the wages retained by the company, is not an insurance company or association; and in agreeing to perform, and in performing each and all of said acts, such railway company is not engaged in the transaction of insurance business.
> "2. The said acts of the railway company are within the implied powers of a railway corporation and are not ultra vires.
> "3. Nor are they contrary to public policy."

It may be pointed out as to this decision that the kind of business or activity conducted by the railroad company, and which was involved in the case, differs essentially from the kind of business proposed to be conducted by the association, the articles of incorporation of which are presented to you, in that, for example, the railroad company, as such, was to bear all contingent expenses of the relief department maintained by it, and was to guarantee the integrity of the relief fund, in the sense that it would make up deficiencies therein whenever the necessity might arise. In other words, the relief department was not an independent business concern, but the railroad, as such, was the undertaker of the activities comprised within the scope of its relief department . That this point was not without weight in the mind of the court is apparent from consideration of what is said by Judge Price in delivering its opinion, at pages 32 to 34, inclusive, of the report to which you are referred. I forbear to quote his remarks on this point, but it may be stated, as a fair summary thereof, that the right of the railroad company to maintain the relief department in quesion was sustained, at least partly, on the ground that the peculiar manner of conducting said department deprived the activity of the character of a business, and, as against the attorney general's compaint, that the company was conducting an "insurance business."

The distinction here lies in the fact that, whatever be the exact definition of the phrase "insurance business," the status of an association dependent upon its own means of raising revenue for the payment of the benefits which it holds out to those desiring to become its members is entirely different from that of the relief department of a railroad, behind which the assets of the railroad company are placed, so as to insure its successful operation.

On the other hand, there are points of similarity between the facts passed upon in State vs. Railway Company and the facts presented by the proposed articles of incorporation of the association now under consideration. The decision in the case cited was not upon the ground which I have discussed, alone, but upon the further and broader ground stated at page 37 of the opinion, in the language of Justice Clark of the supreme court of Pennsylvania, in Commonwealth vs. Equitable Beneficial Association,, 137 Pa. St. 412-419. I forbear to quote the exact language of the opinion and syllabus in that case; but it appears from careful reading thereof that it was the holding of the Pennsylvania court, approved by our own supreme court, that an association formed for the purpose of accumulating a fund to be used in the aid or relief of the members of the association and their families, in the misfortunes of sickness, injury, or death, does not, in the pursuit of that purpose, make contracts, which amount technically to contracts of insurance. The court distinguishes between "indemnity" and "security against loss," as motives, so to speak, for entering into the relation of member or policy holder of an association, on the one hand, and "protective relief in case of sickness or injury, or to provide the means of a decent burial in the event of death," as such motive, on the other hand. I confess that the disinction appears somewhat ephemeral to me. Nevertheless, it has become adjudicated law, not only in this state, but in many other states, as evidenced by the decisions cited in State ex rel. vs. Railway Co., supra.

This being the case, then, it must be admitted that an association, formed for the purpose of the mutual protection and relief of its members and their familes, in case of sickness, accident or death, without further stipulation, is not an association formed for the purpose of doing an insurance business; so that, if the principle of the case of Sate ex rel. vs. Pioneer Livestock Co. be limited strictly to its application to insurance companies, as such, it would have to be held inapplicable to the question now under discussion.

But the considerations already discussed lie on the surface merely of the cases involved. When the supreme court of this state applied the reasoning of the Pennsylvania decision above cited, in holding that the relief department of the Pennsylvania railroad was not doing an insurance business, it, in fact, held that membership, under rules providing for the payment of stipulated death benefits to designated beneficiaries, did not create a contract of insurance. For, as will be apparent from a careful examination of the facts in State vs. Railway Company, as stated in the opinion of the court, pages 28 to 32, inclusive, this was the precise nature of the plan of operation of the relief department therein involved. That is to say, in the language of the third regulation of the relief department, found quoted on page 32 of the report of the case,

> "The object of this department is the establishment and management of a fund * * * for the payment of definite amounts to employes contributing to the fund * * * when they are disabled by accident or sickness, and in the event of their death, to the relatives or other beneficiaries specified in the application."

That is to say, a member of the relief department had, by virtue of his membership therein, precisely the same rights as would arise out of a policy of life and accident insurance, so far as the right to receive a stipulated sum by way of benefits was concerned, and so far, further, as the right to designate beneficiaries was concerned.

Yet, the court held that the activities of the relief department did not constitute the "insurance business." Ignoring for the moment the other grounds upon which the decision was based, one of which has already been discussed, and another of which will hereinafter be pointed out, and having regard to this one feature only, it seems to me that the conclusion can logically be drawn therefrom that the business of accumulating a fund for the mutual protection and relief of the members of a voluntary society or association, and designated beneficiaries in case of death, does not amount to an insurance business.

The importance of this point will be understood when the legislative history of present section 9427, General Code, as hereinbefore outlined by me, is taken into consideration. Let it be noted that in its original form, section 3630, Revised Statutes, the predecessor of present section 9427, General Code, provided for the organization of associations under the general laws of the state "for the purpose of mutual protection and relief of its members, and for the payment of stipulated sums of money to the families or heirs of the deceased members."

At that time there was in the section no mention of the "business of life or life and accident insurance on the assessment plan," such as is now found in the section.

I am clearly convinced that the application of the reasoning of our supreme court, in the case of State ex rel. vs. Railway Company, to original section 3630, Revised Statutes, would result necessarily in the holding that the business to be done by associations authorized to be incorporated under section 3630, Revised Statutes, in its original form, was not the insurance business.

Now, the case of State ex rel. vs. Railway Company might be distinguished upon a ground different from that already stated, viz: that as a part of the contract resulting from membership in the relief department the member agreed that in the event of injury or death he, or his beneficiary, was to have either the benefits provided by the relief department or his right of action against the company arising out of such injury or death (page 31 of the report). That is to say, one of the elements of the contract of membership was the waiver of the unaccrued right of action ex delicto, and the creation of the right of election between that right of section when it should arise and the right to the benefits provided.

This element, of itself, might be regarded as sufficient to distinguish the business of the relief department from the technical "insurance business." I have preferred, however, to take the court at its word with respect to one of the grounds upon which the case in 68 O. S. 9 was decided. At least, there is presented by the decision the following dilemma: either the ground of the decision must be found in the peculiar relation of the railroad company to the activities of the relief department, and in the waiver and election which constituted an element in the contract of membership in such department, just commented upon; in which event the case is to be regarded as completely inapplicable to the question at hand; or the decision must be regarded as establishing the principle that a mutual protection association, formed for the relief and benefit of its members and the payment of stipulated sums to them, and in case of death to their families or designated beneficiaries, is not in any sense an "insurance company;" in which event it would have to be held that original section 3630, Revised Statutes, providing for the organization of mutual protection associations, did not provide for the organization of a kind of insurance company.

If the first horn of the dilemma be accepted, then, the case of State vs. Railroad Company is no obstacle to the exact application of the decision in State ex rel. vs. Livestock Association.

If the second horn of the dilemma be accepted, then, the further question arises as to whether or not the principle involved in State ex rel. vs. Livestock Association is limited to insurance companies as such.

On this point I am clearly of the opinion that the decision is not limited in its application to the technical business of insurance as such. The syllabus in the case is as follows:

> "Section 3235, chapter 1, title 2, Revised Statutes, which reads: 'corporations may be formed in the manner provided in this chapter, for any purpose for which individuals may lawfully associate themselves together, except for dealing in real estate or carrying on professional business' must be construed as not authorizing the incorporation of insurance companies, as the organization of such companies is specially provided for in chapters X and XI of same title."

It was said by Judge McIlvaine, in the opinion, page 348, that:

> "The defendant claims the right to insure the owners of horses and cattle against loss by theft or death, under its articles of incorporation and by virtue of section 3235 of Revised Statutes, which provides: 'corporations may be formed in the manner provided in this chapter, for any purpose for which individuals may lawfully associate themselves together, except for dealing in real estate or carrying on professional business; and if the organization is for profit it must have a capital stock.'
> "Undoubtedly the broad terms of this section would be sufficient warrant for the exercise by defendant of the franchises and privileges claimed; but, on the other hand, it is claimed that section 3235 must be construed in connection with chapters 10 and 11, title 2 of Revised Statutes, wherein, it is claimed that the whole subject of insurance by incorporated companies in this state is regulated, and that defendant is not within the provisions or protection of either of these chapters.
> "We agree with the attorney general in the opinion that the whole subject of insurance by companies incorporated under the laws of this state is regulated by these chapters, and that no insurance company can be incorporated under the general provisions of section 3235. The special provisions made in these chapters in relation to the organization of insurance incorporations withdraws such corporations from the general provisions in section 3235, which relate to corporations generally."

It seems very clear to me that while the court is speaking, because of the facts before it, of the "subject of insurance by incorporated companies in this state," the reason for the decision applies to all companies for the organization of which provision is made in the later chapters of the corporation code. In other words, the court was merely applying the express provisions of section 8737, General Code, at that time section 3269, Revised Statutes, which is as follows:

> "This chapter does not apply when special provision is made in subsequent chapters of this title, but the special provision shall govern, unless it clearly appears that the provision is cumulative."

The holding of the court (although the section is not mentioned) was, in effect, that the non-application of the preceding sections extended to what is at present section 8623, General Code, as well as to other sections in the general corporation laws. The resultant principle, it seems to me, is that wherever the general assembly has, by particular provisions, authorized the formation of corporations or associations for designated purposes, and prescribed their corporate powers, it is unlawful for individuals to associate themselves under section 8623, General Code, for a purpose essentially like the designated purpose but with powers, in essential respects, different from those prescribed by the particular provisions. In other words, while the court was speaking merely of the "subject of insurance," it might just as well have spoken of the subject of railroads, that of street and interurban railroads, that of turnpike or plank road operation, that of the operation of telegraph and telephone lines, that of banking, that of agricultural societies, that of educational societies; in short, any of the subjects, the formation of corporations to deal with which is specifically regulated by any of the special chapters of the corporation code.

Now, it seems to me that the true principle involved in the decision is very succinctly stated in section 8737, above quoted; so that, in every instance, the question arises as to whether or not the special provisions found later in the code are cumulative to the general provisions, or exclusive of them. In the case now under consideration I can reach no conclusion other than that the special provisions respecting mutual protection associations are exclusive of the general provisions of section 8623, General Code. To hold otherwise would be to hold that the legislature of the state enacted a vain and meaningless law when it passed original section 3630, Revised Statutes, and the acts amendatory thereto; for if any kind of a mutual protection association could, after the enactment of those laws, have been organized under section 8623, General Code, then, there was no conceivable reason for ever passing them. The legislature must be presumed to have contemplated a real and substantial act of legislation. The only conclusion which will effectuate such an intention is that which holds that section 9427, General Code, is one of the "special provisions" referred to in section 8737, which is not "cumulative" to the provisions of section 8623, General Code.

From all these considerations, then, I am of the opinion that whether or not the purpose for which the employes' protective association, etc., the articles of incorporation of which are submitted to me, is formed be regarded as contemplating the carrying on of a technical "insurance business," it is one of the purposes within the purview of section 9427, General Code, so that its articles of incorporation must conform thereto.

I have already referred to certain inconsistencies between section 9427, General Code, and the purpose clause of the employes' protective association, etc., now under consideration. One of these inconsistencies is, in my judgment, immaterial. That is to say, it is not necessary, in order that the association may conform its business to the statute, that the beneficiaries of its death benefits be all of the classes referred to in the statute. I am of the opinion, therefore, that the restrictions in the articles to the families of the members, as a class of beneficiaries, is lawful.

I also pointed out that it is not expressly stated in the articles that the method of business shall be what is known as the "assessment plan." The legislative history of the sections already commented upon makes it a very doubtful question as to whether or not an association of the kind typified by the proposed articles in question must make this declaration. For a discussion of the nature of what is known as the "assessment plan" see State ex rel. vs. Insurance Company, 58 O. S. 1. It is essential to the conduct of business upon this plan that, in theory at least, specific losses be met by assessment on the members, within the limits defined by the rules of the association. It is not essential that actual payments, on account of assessments, be deferred until the assessment is actually called. That is to say, the organization having the right, as it does under section 9427, to receive donations and voluntary contributions, may extend to its members the privilege of paying specified sums, weekly, to apply on assessments when made.

Nor is the method of doing business on the assessment plan necessarily inconsistent with accumulation of a fund. Section 9427 expressly authorizes this, in the following manner:

"The company also may receive money, either by voluntary donation or contribution, or collected by assessments on its own members, and may accumulate, invest, distribute and appropriate such money in such manner as it deems proper. All accumulations and accretions thereon shall be held and used as the property of the members and in the interest of the members. * * *"

While the provisions which I have been discussing were, as already pointed out, incorporated in the section by legislation subsequent to its original enactment, thus giving rise to the only doubtful question involved, I am of the opinion that the section as a whole is not susceptible to any interpretation other than that the manner in which the "purpose of mutual protection and relief of its members" is to be achieved is by the application, in theory at least, of what is known as the "assessment plan." That is to say, I am willing to concede that when the new language was inserted at the beginning of the section, to wit: "to transact the business of life or accident and life insurance on the assessment plan," the general assembly may have had in mind the description of a different class of corporations from that described by the earlier form of the section, viz: for the purpose of mutual protection and relief of its members. But, obviously, the subsequent sentences of the section, those already quoted, as well as one not yet quoted, viz:

"No company or association shall issue a certificate for a greater amount than it is able to pay from the proceeds of one assessment."

were intended to refer to associations formed "for the mutual protection and relief of their members," etc., as well as to companies formed "to transact the business of life * * * insurance on the assessment plan," if those two be separate classes.

I am led to this conclusion by consideration of the fact that any other would render the meaning of the section, and particularly the last sentences thereof, hopelessly involved and ambiguous. Support is also lent to the conclusion by the fact hereinafter to be commented upon, that a mutual protection and relief society must nevertheless agree to pay "stipulated sums" in the event of death. If the obligation to pay such stipulated sums is a "mutual" one, as the section clearly implies; and if, also, the protection and relief to be afforded to the members themselves in case of accident or sickness, etc., is to be "mutual," in the exact sense, then, the beneficiaries in case of death, or the individual members in case of accident, should be vested with some enforceable right as against the remaining members, or, more accurately, as against the association itself.

If, then, the corporation is to deny itself the power to make assessment, it has left under the section only the power to "receive money by voluntary donation or contribution." It is obvious that there could be no "mutual" obligation to pay, a "stipulated sum" in the event of the death of one member, as against the association or the remaining members, if the assets of the association were to be collected by voluntary contribution only. Such a contract might be entered into, but it would lack the element of mutuality. The "stipulation" as to a sum of money to be paid in the event of death would be unenforceable.

From all these considerations, I am of the opinion that an association, formed, as the one whose articles of incorporation are presented to me, for the "mutual protection and relief of its members," etc., must specifically claim in its articles of incorporation the right, at least, to make assessments on its members. I would not hold that the association must recite that it proposes to do a technical assessment insurance business; and perhaps once that it is certain that the company is governed by section 9427, General Code, the power to assess follows without specified recital. But I am clearly of the opinion that it is at least preferable that the association recite in its articles of incorporation, either that it is to possess the powers mentioned in section 9427, General Code, referring to the section as such, or that it is to have, among other things, the power to collect funds for the payment of death benefits "by assessment on its members."

There is another inconsistency between the articles and the statute, which I regard as necessary fatal to the former. Whatever be the nature of the manner in which an association of this sort is to receive support from its members, it is clear, I think, that death benefits must be by way of "stipulated sums," that is to say, a mutual protection association cannot receive authority to grant merely general relief to the families of members in case of the death of such members. The relief must be by way of a "stipulated sum."

For the reasons suggested, I return the proposed articles of incorporation of the employes' protective association of the Haven Malleable Castings Company, of Cincinnati, Ohio, and advise you not to file the same until they are made to conform to section 9427, General Code.

Very truly yours,
TIMOTHY S. HOGAN,
Attorney General.

ARTICLES OF INCORPORATION OF THE NATIONAL METAL TRAFFIC ASSOCIATION SHOULD NOT BE FILED BY THE SECRETARY OF STATE.

A corporation may not lawfully be formed for the purpose of maintaining supervision over the traffic and transportation work of the American metal-trades interests, in all its branches, including the representation of such interests in matters and proceedings before the interstate commerce commission, state railroad commission, and state and federal courts, and the performance of any and all duties necessary, incidental and appertaining thereto.

COLUMBUS, OHIO, September 17, 1913.

HON. CHARLES H. GRAVES, Secretary of State, Columbus, Ohio.

DEAR SIR:—I acknowledge receipt of your letter of September 12th, requesting my opinion as to the legality of the purpose for which The National Metal-Trades Traffic Association was formed, as evidenced by the proposed articles of incorporation of said association, enclosed therewith, and particularly by the following article, thereof, to wit:

> "Third. Said corporation is formed for the purpose of maintaining supervision over the traffic and tranportation work of the American metal-trades interests, in all its branches, including the representation of such interests in matters and proceedings before the interstate commerce commission, state railroad commission, and state and federal courts, and the performance of any and all duties necessary, incidental and appertaining thereto."

It is provided by Section 8623, General Code, that,

> "Except for carrying on professional business, a corporation may be formed for any purpose for which natural persons lawfully may associate themselves."

The italicized portion of the above quoted section has been construed in State, ex rel., vs. Laylin, 73 O. S. 90, as precluding the formation of a corporation for the conduct of a business which amounts to the practice of the profession of law. Tests for determining whether or not the proposed business activity amounts to the practice of this profession are suggested by the court in the decision cited, but it occurs to me that the above quoted articles of incorporation so clearly evince an intention to engage in the practice of this profession that the application of these tests, designed for use in doubtful cases only, is scarcely necessary. The representation of interests in matters and proceedings before the state and federal courts is a function peculiarly pertaining to the practice of law as a profession; and it matters not that the interests to be represented are limited to any particular designated kind.

I am, therefore, of the opinion that a corporation may not lawfully be formed for the purpose stated in the articles of incorporation of The National Metal-Trades Traffic Association, and that the said articles, therefore, may not lawfully be received and filed by you.

Very truly yours,
TIMOTHY S. HOGAN,
Attorney General.

THE CHASE-HACKLEY PIANO CO., A CORPORATION ORGANIZED UNDER THE LAWS OF MICHIGAN IS NOT REQUIRED TO COMPLY WITH THE PROVISIONS OF SECTION 183, ET SEQ., GENERAL CODE.

The Chase-Hackley Piano Co., a corporation organized under the laws of Michigan, is not required, in order to do business in Ohio in the manner described in its application filed with the secretary of state, to comply with the provisions of section 183, et seq., General Code.

COLUMBUS, OHIO, October 10, 1913.

HON. CHARLES H. GRAVES, Secretary of State, Columbus, Ohio.

DEAR SIR:—I beg to acknowledge receipt of your letter of September 17th, enclosing application of the Chase-Hackley Piano Company, a corporation organized under the laws of the state of Michigan, for a certificate entitling it to transact business in Ohio, and requesting my opinion upon the question as to whether or not this corporation is required to comply with section 178, et seq., or section 183, et seq., General Code, in order to do in this state the things described in the application.

The application in question states the business or objects of the corporation, which it purposes to engage in or carry on in the state of Ohio, as follows:

> "Consigning and wholesaling only and collecting in when necessary to take over dealers' accounts, in connection with, and as part and parcel of, the manufacture and marketing of pianos and other musical instruments in accordance with the articles of incorporation, copy whereof is hereto attached.

"Said consigning and wholesaling and collecting will at all times be done by the corporation at and from its office in the city of Muskegon in the state of Michigan, by and through the mail and traveling agents and salesmen, and not otherwise. The corporation will at no time have or own any merchandise or property situate in the state of Ohio except and unless the same be temporarily from time to time in case the corporation must and does retake property theretofore consigned or wholesaled by it in part payment of a sum or sums due to the corporation and unpaid, or for default of payment, pursuant to conditional sale, contract or chattel mortgage or like security. The corporation will at no time have or keep an office or place of business unless, and except as, the office and place of business of the person named in the fourth paragraph hereof for service of process be such office or place of business."

The corporation itself is organized for the following stated purpose, quoted from its articles of incorporation:

"The purposes of this corporation are as follows: The manufacture and sale of pianos and other musical instruments and the purchase and sale of musical merchandise."

Section 178, General Code, provides as follows:

"Before a corporation for profit transacts business in this state, it shall procure from the secretary of state a certificate that it has complied with the requirements of law to authorize it to do business in this state, and that the business of such corporation to be transacted in this state, is such as may be lawfully carried on by a corporation, organized under the laws of this state for such or similar business, or if more than one kind of business, by two or more corporations so incorporated for such kinds of business exclusively. No such foreign corporation doing business in this state without such certificate shall maintain an action in this state upon a contract made by it in this state until it has procured such certificate. This section shall not apply to foreign banking, insurance, building and loan, or bond investment corporations."

Under this section it was held, in Toledo Commercial Company vs. The Glen Manufacturing Company, 55 O. S. 217, that the same does not apply to a foreign corporation whose business within the state consists merely of selling through traveling agents and delivering goods manufactured outside of the state. The ground upon which the decision is based is illustrated by the following excerpt from the opinion of Spear, J., on page 221:

"The holdings are numerous that it is the right of persons and of corporations residing in one state to contract and sell their commodities in another, unrestrained except where restraint is justified under the police power. This rule does not deny the right of any state to impose conditions upon the power of foreign corporations to establish themselves within its boundaries for the performance generally of their business, involving the exercise of corporate franchises and powers, but does hold that the selling through traveling agents and delivering of goods manufactured outside of the state, does not fall directly within the purview of their corporate powers. The pertinent provision of the federal constitution is that 'the citizens of each state shall be entitled to all the privileges and immunities of citizens in the several states' and that instrument gives to congress power 'to regulate commerce * * * among the several states.' The distinction to be noted is that the sale and delivery of merchandise is a right possessed in common by all the citizens of the state; the ex-exercise of corporate franchises and powers, is not—it is a special privilege conferred only on corporations. And the sale and delivery in one state of goods manufactured in another state, by a citizen of that state, is interstate commerce. Amid a score of authorities it is sufficient to cite Cooper Manufacturing Co. vs. Ferguson, 113 U. S. 727; Robbins vs. Shelby County, etc., 120 U. S. 489; Horn Silver Mining Co., vs. New York, 143 U. S. 314; Brennan vs. Titusville, 153 U. S. 289, and Coit vs. Sutton, 102 Mich. 324. The decisions of the supreme court of the United States are controlling. They forbid the exercise by the legislature of the power claimed by the plaintiff-in-error, and hence its construction of the statute cannot be maintained, because it would result in a conflict upon a question, as to which question the authority of the general government is paramount to the government of the states."

The above stated objects of the Chase-Hackley Piano Company come squarely within the rule laid down in the case from which quotation has just been made. I am, therefore, of the opinion that in order to engage in or carry on the business or objects therein described, the corporation would not be required to comply with section 178, General Code.

As to section 183, et seq., General Code, it may be stated that section 188 thereof expressly excludes from the operation of this group of statutes "foreign corporations entirely non-resident soliciting business or making sales in this state by correspondence or by traveling salesmen." I am therefore of the opinion that the corporation is not required, in order to do as intended, in the manner described in the application filed with you, to comply with the provisions of section 183, et seq., General Code.

Very truly yours,
TIMOTHY S. HOGAN,
Attorney General.

UNDER THE CORRUPT PRACTICES ACT PERSONS MAY BE EMPLOYED FOR THE DISTRIBUTION OF POSTERS, ETC., BY EITHER THE CANDIDATE OR THE COMMITTEE.

Under the provisions of section 5175-26, General Code, persons may be employed for the distribution of posters by either the candidate or the committee. The expenditure is limited by the provisions of 5125-29 and following sections. The fact that a person is a committeeman does not prevent his being paid for any service that one is permitted to perform under the corrupt practices act.

COLUMBUS, OHIO, October 20, 1913.

HON. CHARLES H. GRAVES, Secretary of State, Columbus, Ohio.

DEAR SIR:—I am in receipt of a communication addressed to you, which has been referred for answer to this department, and which reads as follows:

> "Does the preparation, printing and publication of posters, lithographs, banners, notices and literary material, reading matter, cards and pamphlets permit of the employment of persons for the distribution of same by candidates or committees? 'Can a committeeman be compensated for the duties he performs except for reasonable traveling expenses?'"

Section 5175-26, General Code, as amended by the last legislature, reads as follows:

> "Any person is guilty of a corrupt practice if he, directly or indirectly, by himself or through any other person, in connection with, or in respect to any election, pays, lends or contributes, or offers or promises to pay, lend or contribute any money or other valuable consideration, for any other purpose than the following matters and services, at their reasonable, bona fide and customary value; * * * The preparation, printing and publication of posters, lithographs, banners, notices and literary material, reading matter, cards and pamphlets; * * * the preparation and circulation of letters, pamphlets and literature bearing on election. * * * Compensation of such clerks and agents as shall be required to manage the necessary and reasonable business of the election * * *; the reasonable traveling expenses of the committeemen, agents, clerks and speakers; * * *.
> "Any payment, contribution or expenditure or agreement or offer to pay, contribute or expend any money or thing of value for any purpose whatsoever except as herein provided is hereby declared to be corrupt practice and invalidates the election of any person guilty thereof. (103 O. L. 579.)"

If I understand the questions propounded they are as follows:

> "First. Does the phrase, 'preparation, printing and publication of posters, etc.,' permit of the employment of persons by candidates or committees for distribution of the same?
> "Second. Can a committeeman be compensated for the duties he performs other than for 'reasonable traveling expenses?'"

I have heretofore held, in construing the corrupt practices act that unless the thing or service is expressly contained in the enumerated list of permitted matters and things found in section 1575-26, or could be fairly implied therein, any expenditure for any such matter or service would be a corrupt practice.

Answering your first question, the permission of the statute is for not only the preparation and printing but also the publication of posters, etc.

"Publication" is defined by the Century dictionary as:

> "The act of publishing or bringing to public notice; notification to the people at large by speech, writing or printing. The act of offering a book, map, piece of music or the like to the public for sale or gratuitous distribution."

To my mind it is permissible to pay one person for the preparation, another for the printing, and still another for the publication of the posters, etc., enumerated in the section, or one person could be paid for the entire work of preparation, printing and publishing. So long as the payment was at the reasonable, bona fide and customary value for the same it would not be a violation of the act no matter to whom said payment might be made.

I am of the opinion, therefore, that section 5175-26 permits the employment of persons for the distribution of posters, etc., by either the candidates or the committees. It is to be noted, however, that this, like all expenditures, is limited by the provisions of section 5175-29 and following sections.

In answer to your second question I can only repeat that expenditures in connection with an election are limited to the matters and things enumerated in section 5275-26. The fact that a person may be a committeeman does not prevent his being paid for any service that any one is permitted to perform under the act, but he can only be paid for the particular matters and things enumerated, and for them at their reasonable, bona fide and customary value. While the section specifically enumerates "the reasonable traveling expenses of the committeemen" this is not a limitation of all the matters and things for which a committeeman may be compensated, but it is not permitted under the guise of paying him for matters and things that are allowed by the statute, to give him extra compensation for duties or services rendered which are wholly without the list of enumerated matters and things in section 5175-26.

Trusting that this answers your inquiries, I am,

Yours very truly,

TIMOTHY S. HOGAN,

Attorney General.

THE PROPOSED ARTICLES OF INCORPORATION OF THE FIREMEN'S RELIEF ASSOCIATION OF NORWOOD, OHIO, SHOULD BE MADE TO COMPLY WITH SECTION 10176, GENERAL CODE.

The firemen's relief association of Norwood, Ohio, is an association formed to provide a fund for the relief of the active firemen of Norwood fire department who may become sick or injured through any accident not caused by any illegal or unlawful act of his own, and also a fund in case of death of any member for the relief of his widow, children or heirs, and the articles of incorporation of this association may not be filed. Such firemen's relief association must be formed under sections 10176 et seq., General Code.

COLUMBUS, OHIO, November 7, 1913.

HON. CHARLES H. GRAVES, Secretary of State, Columbus, Ohio.

DEAR SIR:—I beg to acknowledge receipt of your letter of October 30th, transmitting, for my approval and advice as to the proper filing fee therefor, the proposed articles of incorporation of The Firemen's Relief Association of Norwood, Ohio.

The declared purpose of the association is as follows:

> "to provide a fund for the relief of the active firemen of the Norwood fire department who may become sick or injured from any accident not caused by any illegal or unlawful act of his own, to be known as the 'benevolent fund.'
> "Also a fund in case of death of any member for the relief of his widow, children or heirs to be known as the 'inheritance fund.'"

The formation of such associations is authorized by sections 10176 to 10178, inclusive, General Code. True, none of these sections contain express statement that associations may be formed for any given purpose, but, assuming the existence or formation of such associations, proceed to set forth regulations as to the election of trustees and officers, and the making of periodical assessments upon members, and to confer upon such associations certain incidental powers.

The confusion which seems to exist in these sections appears to have arisen out of the codification of 1880. Originally, the act relating to firemen's relief associations contained the following provision:

> "* * * from and after the passage of this act, it shall be lawful for any number of active firemen, not less than ten, being members of any regular fire company, or hose or hook and ladder company, in this state, to associate themselves together as a firemen's general relief association, having for its principal object the relief of firemen disabled while on duty, with the power also of donating as it may deem proper under such rules as may be established, to poor, sick firemen, and to the widows and orphans of deceased firemen."

This was the act of March 13, 1861, 58 Ohio Laws 37, entitled "an act supplementary to an 'act to provide for the creation and regulation of incorporated companies in the state of Ohio,' passed May 1, 1852."

The old act was repealed by subsection 492, of section 7437 of the code of 1880. The codifiers as that time attempted to, and presumably did, incorporate the entire substance of this act in sections 3850 to 3852, inclusive, Revised Statutes, which are found without change in sections 10176 to 10178, General Code, supra.

It follows, as a conclusion from what has been said that the right to form corporations of this sort still exists as a separate right, except that the method of forming them is to be regulated by the general incorporation laws of the state, instead of by the special provisions formerly in force.

This right also seems to exist as a separate and distinct means of providing for firemen's relief, in addition to the provisions of sections 4600 to 4615, General Code, which provide for the formation of municipal firemen's pension funds by action of council.

In other words, should council fail to provide for the formation of a pension fund, the members of the fire department, nevertheless, have the right to incorporate a relief association, under the sections above referred to.

Such associations are not governed by any of the laws of the state relating to mutual protection associations and the like.

Therefore, in my opinion, if the purpose of the proposed association conform to the provisions of section 10176 they are lawful. They do not, however, so conform, in that the articles of incorporation purport to confer upon the association authority to extend relief to firemen injured "from any accident not caused by any illegal or unlawful act of his own," while section 10176 limits the extent of the relief to that on account of disability while on duty.

Again, the death benefit under the proposed articles of incorporation may be paid to the "heirs" of the deceased members, whereas the section limits the payment of such benefits to "the widows and orphans thereof."

I am, therefore, of the opinion that the proposed articles of incorporation may not lawfully be filed by you, being of the opinion that firemen's relief associations must be formed under sections 10176 et seq., General Code, or not at all.

The reasons for this opinion have been fully discussed in other communications to your department.

Of course, if the promoters of the association desire to organize a mutual benefit association, under section 9427, General Code, this may be done.

This conclusion renders it perhaps unnecessary for me to consider the question relative to the fee. I shall do so, however, upon the assumption that the articles of incorporation may be presented to you in proper form.

The fees which the secretary of state must charge and collect are specified in section 176, General Code. In the schedule of fees therein containd, no express mention is found of associations of this character. Obviously, the fee charged must be either that prescribed by subsection 4, or that prescribed by subsection 5 thereof. The subsections are, in full, as follows:

> "4. For filing articles of incorporation of a mutual life insurance corporation having no capital stock, or of other mutual corporations not organized strictly for benevolent or charitable purposes and having no capital stock, twenty-five dollars, except as hereinafter provided.
> "5. For filing articles of incorporation formed for religious, benevolent or literary purposes; or of corporations not organized for profit and not mutual in their character, or of religious or secret societies; or societies or associations composed exclusively of any class of mechanics, express, telegraph, railroad or other employes, and formed exclusively for the mutual protection and relief of members thereof and their families, two dollars."

In my opinion the association is "mutual" within the meaning of subsection 4, and unless included within the exceptions found in subsection 5 the association must pay a filing fee of $25.00. I am of the opinion, however, that the phrase "other employes," as used in subsection 5, has a meaning sufficiently broad to include employes of a fire department. It is true that the word "other" used in this context must be read "other like;" so that the class of employes designated is limited to such employes as are similar to mechanics, express, telegraph and railroad employes. I believe, however, that the test of similarity here is furnished by the hazardous nature of the occupation; and that firemen's relief associations are within the intendment of the exception.

I would, therefore, be of the opinion, if the purpose clause of the articles of incorporation were proper, that the filing fee to be charged would be two dollars.

Very truly yours,
TIMOTHY S. HOGAN,
Attorney General.

THE ARTICLES OF INCORPORATION OF THE "SOCIETY ST. ANTONIO DI PADOVO" SHOULD NOT BE FILED BY THE SECRETARY OF STATE.

The articles of incorporation of the "society of St. Antonio Di Padovo" should not be filed by the secretary of state for the reason that a society of this character must conform its articles of incorporation to the provisions of section 9427, General Code.

COLUMBUS, OHIO, November 3, 1913.

HON. CHARLES H. GRAVES, Secretary of State, Columbus, Ohio.

DEAR SIR:—The proposed articles of incorporation of the society of St. Antonio Di Padovo enclosed in your letter of October 30th, receipt whereof is acknowledged, differ from those of other similar societies concerning which opinions have recently been rendered to you only in the fact that the purpose clause thereof does not employ the technical terms "mutual benefit and protection" but instead uses the following language:

> "To assist its members in sickness or distress, and aid the families of deceased members, by voluntary contributions under regulations and by-laws to be adopted."

You inform me that the company tenders the sum of $25.00 as a filing fee, this being the sum required to be paid for the filing of articles of incorporation of mutual societies.

On the language of the articles of incorporation alone the question as to whether or not the enterprise witnessed thereby is a mutual one is not free from doubt. I incline to the belief, however, that it is such an enterprise and that in view of the tender of the sum of $25.00 by the incorporators it may safely be assumed that the intention is to conduct a business which is in the proper sense "mutual."

This being the case, then, the opinion already expressed would apply, viz.:

that a society of this character must conform its articles of incorporation to the provisions of section 9427, General Code. In the opinion in the matter of the employes' protective association of the Haven Malleable Iron Works I pointed out what were in my opinion the essential requirements of this section.

Applying the reasons therein stated to the enclosed articles of incorporation, I am of the opinion that they should not be filed by you.

Yours very truly,
TIMOTHY S. HOGAN,
Attorney General.

THE JUDGE-ELECT OF THE MUNICIPAL COURT OF THE CITY OF MIDDLETOWN, OHIO, MAY ASSUME HIS OFFICE WITHOUT FIRST SECURING A COMMISSION FROM THE GOVERNOR.

The judge-elect of a municipal court of the city of Middletown, Ohio, may discharge the duties pertaining to his office without first securing a commission from the governor.

COLUMBUS, OHIO, November 21, 1913.

HON. CHARLES H. GRAVES, Secretary of State, Columbus, Ohio.

DEAR SIR:—I acknowledge receipt of your letter of November 21st requesting my opinion as to whether or not the judge-elect of the municipal court of the city of Middletown, Ohio, must secure a commission from the governor of the state under section 138, General Code, before entering upon the discharge of his duties as such judge.

You enclose with your letter a copy of the charter of the city of Middletown and call my attention to section 1, article 5 of said charter, which said section purports to establish a court in the city of Middletown to be known as the "municipal court," and which shall be a court of record.

Section 138, General Code, referred to by you, provides in part:

> "A judge of a court of record, * * * shall be ineligible to perform any duty pertaining to his office until he presents to the proper officer or authority a legal certificate of his election or appointment, and receives from the governor a commission to fill such office."

In my opinion, section 138, General Code, applies to and governs officers whose election is provided for by a law of the state, and such officers only. Assuming, therefore, the validity of so much of the charter of the city of Middletown, which deals with the subject of the municipal court, and assuming, further, the de jure existence of the court as such and the right of the judge-elect, at the proper time, to assume and discharge the duties pertaining to the office, I am, nevertheless, of the opinion that he may do so without securing a commission from the governor, and, of course, without paying to the secretary of state for the issuance of such commission the fees provided for by section 139, General Code.

Very truly yours,
TIMOTHY S. HOGAN,
Attorney General.

ARTICLES OF INCORPORATION—NOT SPECIFIC.

The articles of incorporation of the Glenville training school for nurses, should be returned to the incorporators, with the request that they be made more specific. Articles should not be filed by the secretary of state until they are made more specific.

COLUMBUS, OHIO, November 20, 1913.

HON. CHARLES H. GRAVES, Secretary of State, Columbus, Ohio.

DEAR SIR:—I beg to acknowledge receipt of your letter of November 13th, requesting my opinion as to the legality of the purpose clause of the Glenville training school for nurses, a proposed corporation not for profit. Said purpose clause is as follows:

> "Said corporation is formed for the purpose of fostering and encouraging the union of graduates for mutual help and protection.
> "To advance the standing and best interests of trained nurses, to cooperate in sustaining the rules of the directory, to place the profession of nursing on the highest plain attainable, and to uphold our code of ethics.
> "To create, establish, and to further the interests of the Glenville training school for nurses by giving our hearty support to all efforts to make it the foremost among such institutions."

You also request my opinion as to the correct filing fee for said articles of incorporation, in case they may lawfully be filed by you.

The creation and establishment of a training school for nurses is an enterprise which, in my judgment, may lawfully be undertaken by a corporation not for profit. So also is the encouragement and fostering of the standards of a given profession, such as that of nursing.

There are certain peculiarities present in these articles, however, which in my judgment makes it advisable for you to refuse to file them until certain questions are satisfactorily cleared up. In the first place, the corporation desires, primarily, authority to foster and encourage the union of graduate nurses for mutual help and protection. That is to say, this purpose is stated first, as if it were the paramount one in the minds of the incorporators. If this is the case, then, the articles should specify the nature of the mutual help and protection which is to be given to graduate nurses, and whether such help and protection is to be extended to those not members of the organization, or not. In case the design of the incorporators is to conduct what is technically known as a mutual protection business, then, the articles must be rejected for failure to comply with section 9427, General Code. If the design of the incorporators is not such, then, it should be more clearly stated than it is. Again, if the mutual help and protection which is to be accorded to graduate nurses is to be limited to the members of the society, whether financial or not, then, the filing fee, under the statute with which you are familiar, would be twenty-five dollars; otherwise, the corporation would probably not be technically a mutual one, and would be liable only to a filing fee of two dollars.

In the second place, the creation and establishment of a training school seems to be stated as an object separate and distinct from that of fostering and encouraging the union of graduates, etc. This being the case, the suspicion at once arises that a multiplicity of purposes is contemplated by the incorporators, which, of course, cannot be sanctioned, under the rule laid down in State ex rel. vs. Taylor, 55 O. S. 67.

Again, the articles are of singular import, in that they seem to authorize the creation and establishment of a training school, but not the conduct and maintenance thereof.

For all of these reasons, while I cannot say that the incorporators intend an unlawful enterprise, yet, I am unable to arrive at the conclusion that their purpose is lawful. I suggest that the articles be returned to the incorporators, with the request that they be made more specific, so that you may be fully advised as to exactly what is desired to be done under the corporate charter. Until this is done I would advise against the acceptance and filing of the articles.

I would also be unable to advise you as to the proper filing fee for the articles, the exact nature of the company not being apparent from the language used.

Very truly yours,
TIMOTHY S. HOGAN,
Attorney General.

SHERIFF—EXPENSE OF PURSUING PRISONER OUT OF STATE WITHOUT EXTRADITION PAPERS NOT ALLOWED.

The statutes of Ohio, when a warrant is issued to the sheriff, authorize him only to pursue and arrest the accused in any county of this state. The sheriff, therefore, may not be allowed expenses incurred in pursuing a prisoner for whom he has a warrant outside of this state, in the absence of a requisition from the governor or from the president of the United States.

COLUMBUS, OHIO, January 28, 1913.

HON. A. V. DONAHEY, Auditor of State, Columbus, Ohio.

DEAR SIR:—Your letter of January 23rd is at hand in which you make the following inquiry:

> "The cost bill contains an item of fees for the sheriff of Ross county for serving the warrant to arrest the defendant at Braddock, Pa., and a charge of 525 miles at eight cents per mile, amounting to $42.00 is made. You are requested to furnish this department with your opinion as to the legality of the mileage charge.
> "There were no requisition papers issued by the governor of Ohio but the prisoner was arrested upon the warrant from the common pleas court of Ross county"

Section 13597, General Code, provides as follows:

> "A warrant may be issued, in term time or in vacation of the court, on an indictment found, and when directed to the sheriff of the county where such indictment was found or presentment made, he may pursue and arrest the accused in any county and commit him to the jail or hold him to bail, as provided in this title."

The authority found here is to pursue and arrest the accused in any county, and as the territorial jurisdiction of the court issuing the warrant is limited to the state, the word county must be held to refer to any county within this state and not outside of it.

This conclusion is fortified by section 13500 and 13501, the first of which provides for the issuing of warrants by magistrates, and the second for the form thereof in which will be found this language, "or if he has fled that you pursue after him into any other county in this state," and further by section 2491 of the General Code which reads:

> "When any person charged with a felony has fled to any other state, territory or country, and the governor has issued a requisition for such person, or has requested the president of the United States to issue extradition papers, the commissioners may pay from the county treasury to the agent designated in such requisition to execute them, all necessary expenses of pursuing and returning such person so charged, or so much thereof as to them seems just."

From this it will be seen that if the sheriff had a warrant from the governor to go to Pennsylvania to make the arrest he would be entitled to expenses, or so much thereof as to the commissioners might seem just, but not to mileage as such.

I am of the opinion that inasmuch as the warrant held by the sheriff did not give him authority to go outside the state to make the arrest, and as expenses and not mileage is the compensation for an arrest on an extradition warrant, that the sheriff is not entitled to the mileage charged, and it is not a proper charge against the state as part of the costs in the case mentioned.

Yours very truly,
TIMOTHY S. HOGAN,
Attorney General.

INTOXICATING LIQUORS—AUDITOR MAY NOT ALLOW REFUNDER WHEN RETAIL LIQUOR BUSINESS SUSPENDED ON ACCOUNT OF FLOODS—DOW-AIKEN TAX.

Statutory provisions permitting an allowance of a refunder of a tax, are to be construed strictly. Section 6074 of the General Code provides the only permission for refunds of payments made under Dow-Aiken tax provisions and refunds may be allowed, therefore, only in strict accordance with its terms. Under this statute, only two classes or persons may obtain a refunder, to wit: (a) one who voluntarily discontinues such business after he has been assessed and paid the full amount, in which event he may receive a proportionate refund for the balance of the year, subject to the provision that at least $200.00 must be retained by the auditor; (b) one who has been compelled to discontinue business by reason of a local option election or a residence election, in which case the total proportionate amount may be refunded.

When business is interrupted, therefore, on account of floods, the dealer can obtain a refunder only by voluntarily discontinuing business, and the auditor is obliged to retain $200.00. If such dealer again desires to commence business he can only do so by paying the tax required from all commencing in the business, without regard to the $200.00 retained by the auditor.

COLUMBUS, OHIO, April 3, 1913.

HON. A. V. DONAHEY, Auditor of State, Columbus, Ohio.

DEAR SIR:—In your communication of February 17th you ask an opinion upon the following question:

> "In the city of Cincinnati, Ohio, a number of dealers in intoxicating liquor were compelled by the high water in the Ohio river, to temporarily discontinue their business. May the county auditor, under such circumstances, issue a refunder to such dealers, the amount of the same to be computed upon the basis of the number of days which such dealers were not conducting such business, or should the auditor issue refunders under section 6074, General Code, based upon the time remaining in the tax year and when such dealers again commence the business, charge them under section 6073 with assessment proportionate in amount to the remainder of the assessment year."

Attention is respectfully called to the following sections:

"Section 6071. Upon the business of trafficking in spirituous, vinous, malt or other intoxicating liquor there shall be assessed yearly, and paid into the county treasury, as hereinafter provided, by each person, corporation or co-partnership engaged therein, and for each place where such business is carried on by or for such person, corporation or co-partnership, the sum of one thousand dollars."

"Section 6073. When such business is commenced after the fourth Monday in May in any year, such assessment shall be proportionate in amount to the remainder of the assessment year, except that it shall not be less than two hundred dollars, and such assessment shall attach and operate as a lien as provided in the next preceding section and be payable upon the date of such commencement.

"Section 6074. When a person, company, corporation or co-partnership, engaged in such business, has been assessed and has paid the full amount of such assessment and afterward discontinues such business, the county auditor, upon being satisfied thereof, shall issue to such person, corporation or co-partnership a refunding order for a proportionate amount of such assessment so paid, but the amount of such assessment so retained shall not be less than two hundred dollars unless such discontinuance of business has been caused by an election under a local option law or a lawful finding of a mayor or judge on a petition filed in a residence district as provided in this chapter, in which case the proportionate amount of such tax shall be refunded in full."

It is evident from a cursory reading of section 6071 that the tax spoken of is a yearly tax upon the business, and the provision of 6072 which makes the tax payable, one-half on or before the 20th day of June and one-half on or before the 20th day of December, is merely a matter of convenience.

Were there no provision for a refunder none could be had, as it is almost elementary that when a tax has been paid and there is no provision made for a refunder, there is no power to refund such tax lodged in the executive or administrative officers of the state or municipality. The supreme court of New York in the case of People vs. Roberts, 157 N. Y. 677, lays down the above principle, and the same court in a case reported in 130 N. Y. 699 holds that if a power to refund is given by law it must be strictly followed.

So the only provision and authority for a refund of the Dow-Aiken tax must be found in section 6074. Under this section two classes of persons may obtain a refunder—one class, one who voluntarily "discontinues such business" after he has been "assessed and has paid the full amount of such assessment," and the other, one who has been compelled to discontinue business by reason of an election under a local option law or a lawful finding of a mayor or judge on petition filed in a residence district, as provided by law.

In the case of a voluntary discontinuance, provision is made that at least $200.00 must be retained; while in the case of what may be termed an involuntary discontinuance a proportionate amount of the tax must be refunded.

In the question submitted by the auditor it is said that "a number of dealers in intoxicating liquors were compelled by the high water in the Ohio river to temporarily discontinue their business * * *."

While it may be claimed that it is inequitable to retain a tax upon a business which, by reason of circumstances over which the person in the business has no control, he must temporarily discontinue, still if an injustice results from the law it is the part of the legislature to provide a remedy, and not of this department which must construe the law as it appears on the statute books.

In such places where the business of trafficking in intoxicating liquors are temporarily closed on Sundays, election days and possibly at times to convenience the proprietors thereof, no one would be heard to insist that for the days thus temporarily closed a refunder pro rata of the tax could be demanded.

It is my opinion, from all the foregoing, that no refunder can be given to such dealers who temporarily discontinue their business, the amount to be paid upon the basis of the number of days which such dealers were not conducting such business. Refunders should issue only under the provisions of section 6074, General Code, and if the auditor is satisfied, that any person entitled to a refunder under the provisions of this section, has actually discontinued such business he may issue a refunder for the amount of the tax which would be coming to such person upon such discontinuance for the balance of the year. Should the same person again desire to go into the business he would occupy the same position as if he had not been in business theretofore, and if the business was commenced after the fourth Monday in any year, then under the provisions of section 6073 he would pay in an assessment proportionate in amount to the remainder of the assessment year, except that it shall not be less than $200.00.

In response to the inquiry propounded in the latter part of your letter, wherein you state, "if the latter procedure is the correct one under the law, in case one such dealer commenced the business originally at a time shortly before he was compelled to discontinue such business in the manner above described so that the provision of section 6074, General Code, that the amount of said assessment so retained shall, in no case be less than $200.00 would apply, would the auditor be required to retain in the treasury $200.00 of the original assessment and upon recommencing such business would the dealer be required to pay the full assessment for the remainder of the year," would say that while this holding seems to work an injustice in particular cases, yet to my mind the law is very plain, and one commencing such business after having recently discontinued it, occupies no better position by reason of having been in the business theretofore. He comes in as a new man, and while it may result in the particular place paying more than the $1,000.00 tax by reason of the necessity of retaining not less than $200.00 in the one instance, and paying in not less than $200.00 in the other instance, I cannot come to any other conclusion but that the statute would require this to be done.

As stated above the matter is one that the legislature has not seen fit to make any provision for, and it is without the power of this department to read into the law something that the legislature has either overlooked or for which it has not seen fit to make provision.

Yours very truly,
TIMOTHY S. HOGAN,
Attorney General.

TAXES AND TAXATION—ACT PROVIDING FOR LICENSE TAX ON AUTOMOBILE NOT INVALIDATED BY REQUIREMENT THAT SAME BE PAID INTO THE STATE TREASURY, NOR BY FACT THAT TAX PROVIDES INCIDENTAL REVENUE.

The imposition of a license proper by the state comprehends only such return as is necessary to administer the license. The state is empowered, however, to impose a combined license and excise tax if it so desires, and the fact that revenue is obtained in excess of the amount required to administer a license does not invalidate the statute. The legislative act, therefore, requiring that all funds received from licenses of automobiles, should be paid into the state treasury, thereby requiring the legislature to make a special appropriation for the purpose of administering a license, is not unconstitutional.

COLUMBUS, OHIO, March 25, 1913.

HON. A. V. DONAHEY, Auditor of State, Columbus, Ohio.

DEAR SIR:—I beg to acknowledge receipt of your letter of March 20th, requesting my opinion upon certain questions which have been raised concerning a proposed amendment to section 24 of the General Code, the bill to accomplish which, in its present form, provides in effect that all collections made by any state department, other statutes to the contrary notwithsanding, shall be paid monthly into the state treasury. Your questions are as follows:

"1. Would the passage of senate bill No. 224, hereto attached, amended in line 3, to read 'week' instead of 'month' endanger the constitutionality of the law, providing an annual tax on automobiles?

"2. Do you consider the automobile license law constitutional, without of passage of the attached law?

"3. Does the mere method of handling funds affect the constitutionality of the automobile license law?

"4. Would the appropriation of funds to pay the operating expenses of the automobile department affect the constitutionality of the law?"

Referring to your first question, I may say that the present automobile license law provides in section 6309 thereof, in effect, that the revenues derived from automobile license fees shall be applied by the secretary of state to the expenses of the administration of the law, and the surplus, if any, shall be paid monthly into the state treasury, there to constitute a fund for the improvement, maintenance and repair of public highways.

Assuming the constitutionality of section 6309, General Code, in its present form, I am unable to understand how it could be regarded as unconstitutional if the periodical payments into the state treasury were required to be weekly instead of monthly. This would, of course, be the effect of the proposed amendment to the bill amending section 24 of the Code. Such a provision might result in rendering the department of automobile licenses not self-sustaining, and might require the general revenue fund of the state to be drawn upon for the purpose of bearing a portion or all of the current expenses of that department, while giving to the highway fund the benefit of the entire revenue of the department. I do not believe that this would render the law unconstitutional. Of course, it must be admitted that the automobile license law is, so to speak, a joint exercise of the police power and the taxing power of the state. Being such, it must be measured by standards applicable to both of these kinds of legislation. There is a principle which applies to the exercise of the police power by the exaction of licenses which is to effect that under this power the amount of license fees must be so computed as by a fair approximation to defray the cost of administering the license law and exorting the regulatory power, so that if the purpose to create an excess of income over expenditure and thus to contribute to the general revenue can be discovered the police power is transcended. In Mays vs. Cincinnati, 1 O. S. 268, will be found a lucid discussion of this prinicple, as applied to the exercise by a municipal corporation of the power to license occupation. It is there held that inasmuch as municipal corporations do not possess the general taxing power, except to the extent of making levies upon the property made subject to taxation by the law of the state, a license ordinance evidently designated to create general revenue must be held to constitute an attempt to exert the taxing power, and is therefore void.

This case, however, does not apply to an instance of state legislation. It has become perfectly well settled that the state has power to levy occupation, privilege or excise taxes. In fact, the familiar instance of the initial fee payable by corporations filing articles of incorporation in the office of the secretary of state may be cited; such fees have been held to constitute taxes upon the privilege of being a corporation. Ashley vs. Ryan, 49 O. S. 504; 153 U. S. 436. Clearly, however, the holding that this exaction constituted a tax was not based upon the essential nature of the power exerted by the state, but rather because of the fact that an incidental revenue was created. See pages 525 and 526 of the opinion in Ashley vs. Ryan. The primary object of authorizing the creation of corporations has nothing whatever to do with the subject of taxation, and the relation of the state to the corporation which it creates through the continued exercise of its visitorial power is that of police regulation rather than taxation.

It is clear, therefore, that in this state a privilege created by the state may be taxed by the exaction a fee which enhances the general revenue of the state, while at the same time the state may be regulating the use of the privilege through its police power.

I have cited the corporation fee cases because of another bearing which they have upon the question now under consideration. It is customary in this state to provide that the proceeds of license fees, inspection fees, etc., if paid into the state treasury shall be credited to a fund for the use of the board or officer issuing the license, making the inspection, etc. The corporation fee cases seem to me to establish the conclusion that such a provision is not essential to the constitutionality of such a law. The moneys received by the secretary of state from initial fees of corporations were not to be paid out for the use of his department, but directly enhanced the general revenues of the state. Therefore, the constitutionality of such a law having been under review in the cases cited, I am of the opinion that it is now the established law of this state that it is not essential to the constitutionality of the license law that the revenues derived from license fees be devoted to the maintenance of the license department.

For all the above reasons I am of the opinion that your first question should be answered in the negative.

It is also apparent from what I have stated that I would have to answer your second question in the affirmative.

Your third question has been fully discussed in answering your first question.

Your fourth question I would answer in the negative, for the same reason that I have answered your first question in the negative. That is to say, it does not seem to affect the constitutionality of the law providing for the incorporation of companies that the fees derived therefrom are not devoted especially to the department of the secretary of state; therefore, in my judgment, it would not affect the constitutionality of the automobile law if the fees derived from the issuance of automobile licenses were paid into the state treasury to the credit of the general revenue fund, or any other fund, and the automobile department in the office of the secretary of state were supported by appropriations made from the general revenue fund.

Very truly yours,
TIMOTHY S. HOGAN,
Attorney General.

TRUSTEES OF OHIO SOLDIERS' AND SAILORS' HOME—HOLDING OF OFFICE VALID, THOUGH ACT PROVIDING FOR SAME NOT YET EFFECTIVE.

Although the act providing for trustees for the Ohio soldiers' and sailors' home has been repealed, and although such act was omitted accidentally from the control given the board of administration, and although the new act providing for the appointment of such trustees is not yet effective, nevertheless since the act of the legislature to provide for such board is conclusive of the legislative intent to maintain such government, the old board should hold over until the governor appoints a new board, under authority of the new act.

COLUMBUS, OHIO, May 14, 1913.

HON. A. V. DONAHEY, Auditor of State, Columbus, Ohio.

DEAR SIR:—I have your letter of April 22nd, in which you inquire:

> "We are advised that the present general assembly enacted a law bearing upon the government of the Ohio soldiers' and sailors' orphans' home at Xenia, and that the governor signed the act on Friday, April 18th. The act provides that a board of trustees shall be appointed by the governor. The governor has not yet appointed a board, and the old board which has been acting for the past two years under a statute which was repealed by the 79th General Assembly, met on Saturday, April 19th, and approved a requisition upon this office for money to pay salaries and other expenses for one month.
> "Under these circumstances, should we recognize the requisition of the board and issue a warrant in payment of the same?"

If the situation presented is understood, it grows out of the fact that the act of May 11, 1911, creating the board of administration, repealed section 1833, General Code, under which trustees for the Ohio soldiers' and sailors' home at Xenia were appointed, but did not place that institution in charge of the board of administration, or otherwise provide for its management and control. As a result of this the trustees in office on May 11, 1911, have continued to act, but legislative action was not taken until a bill was passed providing that the governor should appoint a board of trustees for that institution, and the same was signed by the governor on Friday, April 18, 1913. On April 19, 1913, the "old board," as you properly designate it, approved a requisition upon your office to pay salaries and other expenses for one month.

The passage of the act mentioned is conclusive evidence of the legislative intention to keep the Ohio soldiers' and sailors' orphans' home as one of the state institutions and not to place it under the control of the board of administration. Therefore, as the power of the old board has not been questioned, and should not be, I am of the opinion that until the governor appoints a new board, under the new act, and such board qualifies, you should honor requisitions of the old board for all legitimate current expenses; which, of course, includes the requisition in question, or at least all items of the same as are proper and lawful charges for the conduct and management of that institution.

Yours very truly,
TIMOTHY S. HOGAN,
Attorney General.

ALTERATIONS IN BUILDING OF STATE BUILDING—PROCEDURE—POWER OF GOVERNOR, SECRETARY OF STATE, AUDITOR OF STATE TO RATIFY CHANGE MADE WITHOUT THEIR PREVIOUS CONSENT AND APPROVAL.

Under section 2320, General Code, changes in a contract of a state building involving more than one thousand dollars, may not be made unless approved by the governor, auditor, secretary of state, and under section 2322, changes involving less than one thousand dollars may not exceed in the aggregate two and one-half per cent. of the original contract price, must be in writing with full specifications and estimates, shall become part of the original contract and shall be filed with the auditor of state.

All contracts for such change, in accordance with these statutes, must be entered in writing before the work is performed and the contract finished, and such contract must be approved by the attorney general, in accordance with section 2321, General Code.

When such changes are made, however, without the approval of the aforementioned authorities, the contracts may be ratified but should be subjected to the closest scrutiny.

COLUMBUS, OHIO, May 21, 1913.

HON. A. V. DONAHEY, Auditor of State, Columbus, Ohio.

DEAR SIR:—I beg to acknowledge the receipt of your letter of inquiry of the date of April 22, 1913, wherein you inquire as follows:

> "The board of trustees of the Kent Normal School has approved an estimate in favor of Robert H. Evans & Company, contractors for the construction of buildings, which estimate contains extras amounting in the aggregate to $3,379.13, and reductions amounting to $778.49. This office has refused to issue a warrant in payment of the estimate, by reason of the provisions of sections 2320, 2321 and 2322 of the General Code.
> "We are enclosing herewith the correspondence with the architect and contractors, together with an itemized statement of the extras, submitted by the architect; also the estimate upon which payment was refused. This estimate has been cancelled and another filed without the extras, so that the contractor has received his entire compensation under the contract, with the exception of the charges for extras.

"The exact question at issue is, whether each extra, being less in amount than $1,000.00, is in compliance with section 2322, or whether the aggregate of the extras, being in excess of $1,000.00 is contrary to the provisions of section 2320."

In reply thereto I desire to say that section 2314 of the General Code provides for the making of plans and specifications and for erecting, altering or improving state buildings except the penitentiary when the costs thereof exceed $3,000.00 as follows:

"Section 2314. Before entering into contract for the erection, alteration or improvement of a state institution or building or addition thereto, excepting the penitentiary, or for the supply of materials therefor, the aggregate cost of which exceeds three thousand dollars, each officer, board, or other authority by law charged with the supervision thereof, shall make or cause to be made the following: full and accurate plans, showing all necessary details of the work, with working plans suitable for the use of mechanics and other builders in such construction, so drawn and represented as to be plain and easily understood; accurate bills showing the exact amount of different kinds of material necessary to the construction to accompany such plans; full and complete specifications of the work to be performed, showing the manner and style required with such directions as will enable a competent mechanic or other builder to carry them out and afford bidders all needful information; a full and accurate estimate of each item of expense and of the aggregate cost thereof."

Sections 2315, 2316, 2317 and 2318 of the General Code respectively provide:

First, that the plans, drawings, representatives, bills of material, specifications of work and estimates of cost in detail and in the aggregate shall be submitted to the governor, auditor of state and secretary of state for their approval.

Second, that the officer or board or other authority having such work in charge shall give public notice of the time when, and place where sealed proposals will be received for performing labor and furnishing materials of such construction.

Third, that the notice shall be published four consecutive weeks next preceding the day named for awarding such contract, and in the paper having the largest circulation in the county where the work is to be let, and in one or more dailies having the largest circulation and published in each of the cities of Cincinnati, Cleveland, Columbus and Toledo.

Fourth, that on the day named in the notice such officer, board or other authority shall open the proposals and award the contract to the lowest bidder.

Section 2319 of the General Code provides in part as follows:

"* * * All contracts shall provide that such officer, board or other authority may make any change in work or materials on the condition and in the manner hereinafter provided."

Two methods are provided by statute whereby changes can be made in the plans, descriptions, material and specifications.

First. If the change increases or decreases the cost to exceed one thousand dollars, then the proposed change in the plans, descriptions, material and specifications must be approved by the governor, auditor of state and secretary of state and filed in the office of the auditor of state as provided by section 2320 of the General Code as follows:

> "After they are so approved and filed with the auditor of state, no change of plans, descriptions, bills of material or specifications, which increases or decreases the cost to exceed one thousand dollars, shall be made or allowed unless approved by the governor, auditor and secretary of state. When so approved, the plans of the proposed change, with descriptions thereof, specifications of work and bills of material shall be filed with the auditor of state as required with original plans."

Second. If all changes in the contract, plans, descriptions, bills of material or specifications involve less than one thousand dollars, and does not exceed in the aggregate two and one-half per cent. of the original contract price, then such changes shall be in writing with full specifications and estimates and shall become part of the original contract, and shall be filed with the auditor of state as provided by section 2322 of the General Code as follows:

> "All changes in a contract of less than one thousand dollars shall be in writing with full specifications and estimates, become part of the original contract and be filed with the auditor of state. The aggregate of such changes in the contract, plans, descriptions, bills of material or specifications shall not increase the cost of the construction more than two and one-half per cent. of the original contract price."

Regardless of the method whereby changes are made in the plans, descriptions, specifications or bills of material as called for in the original contract for the erection, alteration or improvement of state buildings, nevertheless no allowance shall be made for work performed or material furnished under the changed plans, descriptions and specifications unless a contract has been entered into in writing before the work is performed or the materials furnished, and such contract must be approved by the attorney general as provided by section 2321 of the General Code as follows:

> "No allowance shall be made for work performed or materials furnished under the changed plans, descriptions, specifications or bills of material unless a contract therefor is made in writing before the labor is performed or materials furnished, showing distinctly the change. Such contract shall be subject to the conditions and provisions imposed upon original contracts, and approved by the attorney general."

It appears from additional information received from your department that a contract was not made in writing, showing distinctly the changed plans, descriptions, specifications or bills of material, and it does not appear furthermore that such contract was approved by the attorney general, as required by section 2321 of the General Code.

In view of that fact, it is the opinion of this department that no allowance can be made for the extras amounting to $3,379.13 less the amount of the reductions as stated in your letter of inquiry, and that the auditor of state's department is without authority of law to issue a warrant in payment of said extras, less the amount of the reductions.

The foregoing is the condition of affairs now presenting itself to your department and you were correct in refusing to issue voucher in payment of the bill for extras, because the change made was so made without the approval of the governor, the auditor of state and the secretary of state, the same being required when the amount of the expenditure is in excess of one thousand dollars.

The matter of change requiring the approval of the chief executive, the secretary of state and the auditor of state is important not only in respect to the cost but in respect to the character of the alterations. It is intended that the party erecting the building should have the approval of these three state officials in respect to the character of the change. Public contractors should have learned before this that it is necessary to conform to the statutes of this state. Time and time again have the courts spoken upon this subject. Notwithstanding the statutes provide along liberal lines for changes in plans, yet experience has demonstrated that interested parties will still take chances, and those affected pass up to the auditor of state and to the attorney general the hard proposition of denying them pay for services actually rendered or hunting out some way whereby the payment of an honest bill may not be ignored. Interested parties owe a duty to the officials who have to pass upon these questions, and continual neglect and disregard of these duties invite an official to apply the hard and fast rule. Assuming that all parties concerned do not intend to disregard the law in this case, I invite your attention to section 2320 of the General Code, which is as follows:

> "After they are so approved and filed with the auditor of state, no change of plans, descriptions, bills of material or specifications, which increases or decreases the cost to exceed one thousand dollars, shall be made or allowed unless approved by the governor, auditor and secretary of state. When so approved, the plans of the proposed change, with descriptions thereof, specifications of work and bills of material shall be filed with the auditor of state as required with original plans."

Had the contractor in this case procured the approval of the governor, the auditor of state and the secretary of state before making the changes, no question would have been before you. Now the question is, may they legally make the approval at this time? I think they can; but contractors better take no risks of this kind, because unquestionably the wisdom of the changes and the cost thereof will be most carefully scrutinized by the governor, the auditor and the secretary of state.

I suggest, therefore, that you have the contractor who presents this bill to make application to the governor, the auditor of state and the secretary of state and the other proper officials—that is, the trustees of the Kent Normal School—for approval of the plans, description, bills of material and specifications, and if these officials approve the change, you may lawfully issue the voucher.

Very truly yours,
TIMOTHY S. HOGAN,
Attorney General.

PEDDLER EMPLOYING AUTOMOBILE TRUCK MUST PAY LICENSE REQUIRED FOR PEDDLING IN TWO-HORSE VEHICLE.

Section 6347, General Code, requires compliance with section 6349, General Code, for the obtaining of a peddler's license, and said section 6349, General Code, provides only for peddlers on foot or with a one-horse vehicle or a two-horse vehicle, or a boat, watercraft or railroad car, and prescribes a specific fee for each mode of peddling. Section 6355, General Code, provides a penalty for peddling without a license.

Since an automobile truck resembles more closely a two-horse vehicle than it does any of the other modes of locomotion, unless the principle that a law becomes applicable to new inventions as new inventions come into use, without special application thereto, a peddler intending to travel on an automobile truck, shall be required to pay the license provided for a two-horse vehicle.

COLUMBUS, OHIO, June 4, 1913.

HON. A. V. DONAHEY, Auditor of State, Columbus, Ohio.

DEAR SIR:—Under favor of May 2nd, you requested my opinion upon a letter referred to by you. This letter is as follows:

> "Referring to section 6349, General Code, in regard to peddler's license. We have an application for a peddler's license to travel with a motor truck. How shall we handle this? As I can find no law in regard to motor trucks, do you think the same charge should govern as with two-horse wagon?"

The statutes for the General Code, relative to your inquiry, providing for a peddler's license, are 6347, 6349, 6353 and 6355. They are as follows:

> "Section 6347. When a person files with the auditor of a county, under oath, which may be administered by such auditor, a statement of his stock in trade in conformity with the law requirig the listing of such stock for taxation by merchants or others, and pays to the treasurer of such county the proportionate amount of taxes on such stock in trade in conformity with law, and complies with the terms set forth in section sixty-three hundred and forty-nine. Such auditor shall issue to him a license to peddle such stock anywhere in this state.
> "Section 6349. Before receiving such license, the applicant if intending to travel on foot, shall file with the county auditor the county treasurer's receipt for twelve dollars; if intending to travel on horseback or in a one-horse vehicle, he shall file such receipt for twenty dollars; if intending to travel in a two-horse vehicle, he shall file the receipt for twenty-eight dollars; or, if intending to travel in a boat, watercraft or on a railroad car, he shall file it for sixty dollars. He shall also pay to the auditor the sum of fifty cents as the auditor's fee for granting the license.
> "Section 6353. A license granted in conformity with this chapter shall authorize the person named therein to sell goods, wares and merchandise for one year from the date of the receipt of the treasurer, as a peddler or traveling merchant. Such person may take out a license to peddle for three months or six months, and pay for it proportionately in accordance with the provisions of section sixty-three hundred and forty-nine.

"Section 6355. If a peddler or traveling merchant sells goods, wares or merchandise, except such as are manufactured within this state by himself or employer, without having obtained a peddler's license so to do, he shall forfeit and pay for each offense the sum of fifty dollars to be recovered in a civil action before any justice of the peace of the county where the offender is found. Such sum shall be paid into the treasury of the township in which the judgment is rendered, for the use of the township school fund, except ten per cent. thereof, which shall be paid to the informer."

Under section 6347 above quoted, the auditor is authorized to issue a peddler's license only upon compliance with the provisions therein contained, one of which is that the terms of section 6349 be followed by the applicant. Section 6349 authorizes the issuance of a license to persons (first) intending to travel on foot; (second) intending to travel on horseback or in a one-horse vehicle; (third) intending to travel in a two-horse vehicle; (fourth) intending to travel in a boat, watercraft or in a railroad car. It is clear in the terms of these two sections a license may not be issued in the absence of compliance therewith.

It appears that if a peddler or traveling merchant, sells goods, wares or merchandise, except such as are manufactured within this state by himself or employer, without having obtained a peddler's license so to do, he shall forfeit and pay for each offense the sum of fifty dollars to be recovered in a proper civil action, so that if one attempts to peddle without a license he is liable to a fine.

At the time the above statutes were passed ordinary motor trucks were unknown and the legislature undertook to provide so that peddlers all might be accommodated with a license. It is not to be assumed that it was intended to limit licenses to certain classes of persons; on he other hand is was evidently intended that the descriptions given were ample to accommodate all who might wish to peddle; for instance, if one intended to travel on muleback and peddle, he would come within the description of one intending to travel on horseback; likewise a two-horse vehicle might be drawn by two mules or by two oxen; or it might be necessary to use three horses to pull a heavy wagon. A wagon drawn by three or four horses was quite commonly in use in the hilly counties of southeastern Ohio a quarter of a century ago, although it must be confessed that the writer did not know many peddlers whose possessions were of such extent as that it required a double team to transport them over even the indescribable roads of Vinton and Jackson counties, yet I apprehend that if a peddler found it necessary to use four horses in those days to draw his wagon, his license would not be automatically forfeited.

It would seem that the intention was to grade the amount to be paid for a license according to the business done. The foot man should pay $12.00, the man on horseback or in a one-horse vehicle, $20.00, a two-horse vehicle, $28.00, railroad car, $60.00.

Now, it must be admitted that a motor truck is neither a one-horse vehicle, a two-horse vehicle, a boat, watercraft or a railroad car. In many respects it resembles neither, but in some respects it resembles a vehicle and in some respects it resembles a railroad car. It resembles a railroad car in that it is propelled by power made available by the use of machinery. It resembles a vehicle in that it is operated on a public highway or cart way and may be driven with convenience from place to place as a vehicle and business may be done at any point as conveniently as if it were conducted in a horse-drawn vehicle.

The common pleas court of this county, in a somewhat recent decision, held that an automobile was, in relation to the livery business, a vehicle; for similar reasons a motor truck may be regarded as a vehicle used on public highways.

Without going into detail, there would seem to be more reasons for putting a motor truck in the class of public highway vehicles than in the class of railroad cars; it would be classed as a railroad vehicle on account of its being propelled by power; railroad car transportation is usually considered transporation under the law of common carriers, while the motor truck is not yet in the class of common carriers. It is a means of transportation more rapid than that of the ordinary public highway vehicle and ordinarily more may be transported upon it than a two-horse vehicle; it usually operates within limited territory, as the two-horse vehicle, while the railroad car operates over larger areas. In one sense there is no more reason for placing it in the class of vehicles drawn by two horses than in the class of vehicles drawn by one horse except as to the extent of business that may be conducted with its use.

It is a well known principle of law that the law becomes applicable to new inventions as new inventions come into use without the same being especially applied. It is not within the province of this department to make laws, but rather to interpret them and to explain the statutes so as that absurd conclusions may not be arrived at. It certainly is not intended to excuse any peddler from the payment of license; it would hardly be fair to exact a license fee from a motor truck man as if he were peddling in a railroad car, but there is no doubt that the state is on fair and safe ground in exacting the same license fee from the motor truck man as from the man who peddles in a two-horse vehicle.

While the question is indeed novel, my conclusion is that it is your duty to collect from the motor truck peddler the same amount as from the man who peddles in a two-horse vehicle and the license should be issued to the licensee as for a motor truck.

Very respectfully yours,
TIMOTHY S. HOGAN,
Attorney General.

LIABILITIES INCURRED PRIOR TO DATE OF LAPSE OF APPROPRIATION MAY BE PAID AFTER SUCH DATE.

Although the proper procedure would be for the legislature to appropriate receipts and balances for such contingency, nevertheless, the established custom of the auditor's office, and principles of propriety and justice should permit the payment of liabilities incurred prior to the date of lapse of an appropriation to be made out of such appropriation subsequently to such date.

COLUMBUS, OHIO, June 17, 1913.

HON. A. V. DONAHEY, Auditor of State, Columbus, Ohio.

DEAR SIR:—You have asked for my advice in reference to the issuing of warrants for liabilities incurred prior to the date of the lapsing of the appropriation.

In reply thereto I beg to advise that I am informed by the cashier and secretary of the auditor of state that it has been the practice for years past to issue warrants in favor of such liabilities incurred prior to the date at which such appropriation would undoubtedly lapse were liabilities not previously incurred.

While, undoubtedly, the better practice for the general assembly to follow would be to reappropriate receipts and balances wherever any part of them were intended to be expended after the date at which the appropriation would otherwise lapse, yet the general assembly doubtless in failing to reappropriate expressly acted in the light of the then well known practice.

I think it your duty as auditor of state to issue vouchers in payment of liabilities referred to. This department will call the governor's attention to the fact that the general assembly should be specifically advised hereafter with reference to the necessity of reappropriating receipts and balances where it is intended the same may be used after the two years' period provided in the constitution. This will prevent any confusion.

Should you decline to issue warrants under the circumstances, doubtless injury would result to the state institutions, and no possible criticism can attach to you in issuing your warrants under these circumstances, because many of the boards did not ask for reappropriations of the receipts and balances to meet liabilities of the kind in question, for the reason that in the light of the practice theretofore they did not deem it necessary to do so.

Very truly yours,
TIMOTHY S. HOGAN,
Attorney General.

RAILROAD COMPANY ENGAGED IN SELLING STEAMSHIP OR RAILROAD TICKETS FOR TRANSPORTATION TO OR FROM FOREIGN COUNTRIES WITHOUT FURNISHING BOND TO THE STATE.

There being no statutory provision therefor, a railroad company which is under bond to another corporation is not exempted from the requirements of section 295, General Code, providing that persons, firms or corporations which engage in selling steamship or railroad tickets for transportation to or from a foreign country must furnish bond to the state of Ohio.

COLUMBUS, OHIO, June 18, 1913.

HON. A. V. DONAHEY, Auditor of State, Columbus, Ohio.

DEAR SIR:—Under favor of June 9th, you request the opinion of this department as follows:

> "I am enclosing herewith the following:
> "Exhibit No. 1. Copy of the law governing transportation agents.
> "Exhibit No. 2. Copy of notice mailed to a Mr. Blaisdell.
> "Exhibit No. 3. Statement of Mr. H. E. Malone in reply to same.
> "In connection with the above I desire to submit for your consideration and advice the position of the railroad companies operating in Ohio and who sell steamship tickets. None of them so far have filed bonds. Is it necessary under the law that they should?
> "We are awaiting your decision in this matter before replying to the enclosed and similar letters, therefore, an early reply would be appreciated."

The notice referred to by you is as follows:

> "I am enclosing herewith a copy of the law governing foreign ticket agents and transmitters of money in this state; also a blank bond.

"I am reliably informed that you are engaged in such business, and not finding your bond on file in this department, I have concluded that you are not aware of the existence of this law. Now that you are, I trust that I will experience no difficulty in having you comply with the provisions of same.

"Kindly accept this as a notice that I will expect you to do so within the next fifteen days."

The statement of Mr. Malone in reply to your notice is as follows:

"Replying to your letter of May 27th, to Mr. Blaisdell, wish to advise, that we are under the impression that railroad agents under bond are not required to take out state bond, as requested in your letter. Will you kindly give us full information regarding same?

"All accounts in this office are handled by City Passenger Agent K. A. Cook, who is now under bond to the Canadian Pacific Railway and Soo line.

"We will be pleased to hear from you in connection with the above."

Sections 290 to 295 of the General Code provide as follows:

"Section 290. No person, firm or corporation shall engage in selling steamship or railroad tickets for transportation to or from foreign countries, or in the business of receiving deposits of money for the purpose of transmitting the same, or the equivalent thereof, to foreign countries, until it has obtained from the auditor of state a certificate of compliance with the provisions of the two sections next following. The certificate shall be conspicuously displayed in the place of business of such person, firm or corporation.

"Section 291. Such person, firm or corporation shall make, execute and deliver a bond to the state of Ohio in the sum of five thousand dollars, conditioned for the faithful holding and transmission of any money, or the equivalent thereof, delivered to it for transmission to a foreign country, or conditioned for the selling of genuine and valid steamship or railroad tickets for transportation to or from foreign countries, or for both if to be engaged in both of such businesses.

"Section 292. The bond shall be executed by such person, firm or corporation as principal, with at least two good and sufficient sureties, who shall be responsible and owners of real estate within the state. The bond of a surety company may be received, if approved by the auditor of state and filed in his office. Upon the relation of any party aggrieved, a suit to recover on such bond may be brought in a court of competent jurisdiction.

"Section 293. The auditor of state shall keep a book to be known as a 'bond book' wherein he shall place in alphabetical order all such bonds received by him, the date of receipt, the name or names of the principals and place or places of residence, and place or places for transacting their business, the names of the surety upon the bond, and the name of the office before whom the bond was executed or acknowledged. Such record shall be open to public inspection. The auditor of state shall collect a fee of five dollars for each bond so filed.

"Section 294. A person, firm or corporation which engages in such business, contrary to the provisions of the second and third preceding sections, shall be fined not more than five hundred dollars or imprisoned not more than six months, or both.

"Section 295. Nothing herein shall apply to drafts, money orders or travelers' checks issued by trans-Atlantic steamship companies or their duly authorized agents or to national banks, express companies, state banks or trust companies."

These statutes make it necessary for any person, firm or corporation who engages in selling steamship or railroad tickets for transportation to or from foreign countries to execute a bond to the state of Ohio, in the sum of five thousand dollars.

From the statement of facts, it is clear that the company in question is engaged in such business.

I am not able to find any provision in the statutes which excepts from compliance with this requirement, a railroad agent under bond to his company, and therefore, I am of the opinion that this company is obliged to furnish the bond referred to in the above quoted statutes, or become subject to the penalty prescribed by section 294 of the General Code.

Very truly yours,
TIMOTHY S. HOGAN,
Attorney General.

P. S. I am returning correspondence submitted with reference to the question.
T. S. H.

SURETY COMPANY—BONDS—EFFECT ON SALE OF A BONDSMAN'S PROPERTY ON THE LIABILITY OF HIS BOND—CERTIFICATE OF RENEWAL OF BOND—PLACE OF BUSINESS—SALE OF RAILROAD AND STEAMBOAT TICKETS—PENALTY.

1. The liability of a surety company on a bond for an indefinite period may be terminated by notice being given to the obligee, and a reasonable time must be given so that the obligee may acquire a new bond.

2. Where a personal surety sells his property and ceases to be longer qualified as a surety, the bond is not invalidated. The bond is still a binding obligation although execution may not be made upon a judgment.

3. Where a bond is given for an indefinite period, a certificate of renewal from the principal is unnecessary.

4. The statutes do not require a separate bond for each place of business run by a principal engaged in selling transportation to foreign countries. One bond may be made large enough to cover two or more places of business, or separate bonds may be made for each place of business. The auditor is required to issue one certificate, although he may issue more than one.

5. A person engaged in selling railroad or steamboat tickets without a license may be prosecuted under section 2904, General Code.

6. When a bond is invalidated and no collection can be made, the party should be notified that his certificate has been cancelled and demand its return. If he continues to transact business he may be prosecuted under section 2904, General Code.

COLUMBUS, OHIO, July 12, 1913.

HON. A. V. DONAHEY, Auditor of State, Columbus, Ohio.

DEAR SIR:—Your favor of May 8, 1913, through Hon. W. E. Baker, deputy auditor of state, is received, in which you inquire:

"1. I respectfully direct your attention to the enclosure marked 'A.' You will note that under date of May 5th, the Cincinnati agent of the F. & D. Co. of M. requests that they be relieved from responsibility on the bond of G. P. A. P. Acting upon the advice of a member of your department, we refused to relieve them, but suggested to Mr. P. that he substitute another bond, per carbon copies of correspondence attached to enclosure. We do not question the soundness of the advice given us, but would be thankful for an explanation thereof for our future guidance in such matters, why a surety company or a personal surety cannot be relieved at their request, and by what procedure can they secure relief? Also can we compel the principal in question to substitute another bond?

"2. Recently we discovered one or two personal bonds, where one of the sureties had previously disposed of their property and no longer qualified. By disposing of their property, did they invalidate the bond? If after the property was disposed of and before a new bond had been substituted it became necessary to sue, at whom would a suit to recover be directed?

"3. It has been the custom with the bond of a surety company to request the principal to certify every year that he renew the bond. It is necessary that we do this?

"4. Some operate two places of business, a certificate being issued for each, under one bond only. Is that permissible, or should we require a separate bond for each place?

"5. We have names of some operating without a bond. Should we report these to the chief of police in the locality in which they operate or to the county prosecutor?

"6. In the event that a bond is invalidated and we are unable to collect, by what procedure can we cancel the certificate so as to thoroughly protect the state?"

The enclosure marked "A" above referred to is a written request of the surety company to be relieved from further liability on the bond and is in words as follows:

"We desire to be relieved from responsibility on the bond of one G. P. A. P., operating foreign exchange business under certificate No. 272.

"Kindly advise us of your acceptance of this cancellation."

The several questions submitted by your inquiry require a consideration of the principles of law applicable to the parties to a surety bond such as was given in the case submitted.

In the first instance the bond inself must be looked to in order to ascertain its provisions.

The bond, omitting the signatures and acknowledgement, is in words as follows:

"Know all men by these presents:

"That we, G. P. A. P., Cincinnati, Ohio, as principal, and F. & D. Co. of M., a corporation, Baltimore, Maryland, as surety, are hereby held and firmly bound unto the state of Ohio, in the just and full sum of five thousand dollars, for the payment whereof well and truly to be made, we bind ourselves, and each of us, said G. P. A. P. for himself, his heirs, executors, administrators, successors and assigns, and said F. & D. Co. of M., for itself, its successors and assigns, and each of them firmly by these presents.

"The condition of the above obligation is such, That, whereas, the said G. P. A. P. is engaged in the business of selling steamship or railroad tickets for transportation to or from foreign countries and in the business of receiving deposits of money for the purpose of transmitting the same, or the equivalent thereof, to foreign countries.

"Now, therefore, if the said G. P. A. P. shall faithfully and honestly hold and transmit any money, or the equivalent thereof, which shall be delivered to him for transportation to a foreign country, or if such steamship or railroad tickets for transportation to or from foreign countries, so sold or offered for sale by him shall be genuine and valid, or if he shall faithfully and honestly perform both such obligations, if engaged in both businesses, then this obligation shall be void, otherwise to be and remain in full force and effect.

"Witness our hands and seals this 3rd day of October, 1911."

This is a written bond and it is given to secure future transactions. It is a continuing security. It is not limited as to the time it shall run. The bond is a complete obligation and does not refer to any other paper or instrument, as for example, the application. This latter statement is important when we come to consider the decision of the supreme court of Ohio hereinafter referred to.

The provisions of the statutes governing this bond and the business secured, are found in sections 290 to 295, inclusive, of the General Code.

Section 290, General Code, provides:

"No person, firm or corporation shall engage in selling steamship or railroad tickets for transportation to or from foreign countries, or in the business of receiving deposits of money for the purpose of transmitting the same, or the equivalent thereof, to foreign countries, until it has obtained from the auditor of state a certificate of compliance with the provisions of the two sections next following. The certificate shall be conspicuously displayed in the place of business of such person, firm or corporation."

Section 291, General Code, provides:

"Such person, firm or corporation shall make, execute and deliver a bond to the state of Ohio in the sum of five thousand dollars, conditioned for the faithful holding and transmission of any money, or the equivalent thereof, delivered to it for transmission to a foreign country, or conditioned for the selling of genuine and valid steamship or railroad tickets for transportation to or from foreign countries, or both if to be engaged in both of such businesses."

Section 292, General Code, provides:

"The bond shall be executed by such person, firm or corporation as principal, with at least two good and sufficient sureties. who shall be responsible and owners of real estate within the state. The bond of a surety company may be received, if approved, or cash may be accepted in place of surety. The bond shall be approved by the auditor of state, and filed in his office. Upon the relation of any party aggrieved, a suit to recover on such bond may be brought in a court of competent jurisdiction."

Section 293, General Code, provides:

"The auditor of state shall keep a book to be known as a 'bond book' wherein he shall place in alphabetical order all such bonds received by him, the date of receipt, the name or names of the principals and place or places of residence, and place or places for transacting their business, the names of the surety upon the bond, and the name of the officer before whom the bond was executed or acknowledged. Such record shall be open to public inspection. The auditor of state shall collect a fee of five dollars for each bond so filed."

By virtue of these sections the person, firm or corporation that engages in the business of selling transportation to or from foreign countries, must give a bond, and thereupon the auditor of state is authorized to grant a certificate to such person, firm or corporation that it has complied with the law governing such business.

The statutes do not prescribe the length of time for which such certificate shall be issued. The bond required by sections 291 and 292, General Code, is to secure the faithful holding and transmission of money to be received from time to time in the future and to secure the validity of the foreign transportation tickets.

First as to the right of the surety to be relieved upon notice to the obligee.

It is stated on page 75 of volume 32 of Cyc.:

"A surety bond for the fidelity and honesty of his principal, and so for an indefinite and contingent liability and not for a sum fixed and certain to become due, may revoke and end his future liability in either of two cases: (1) Where the guaranteed contract has no definite time to run; and (2) where it has such definite time, but the principal has so violated it and is so in default that the creditor may safely and lawfully terminate it on account of the breach."

Also on page 76 of 32 Cyc. it is further said:

"If an employe is appointed to hold office at the pleasure of his employer, sureties on his bond, in the absence of any reservation on their part, will be liable indefinitely; but if the employment is for a fixed time, the sureties will not be liable for any default occurring after that time; or if the principal has been employed to accomplish certain work, his sureties are not liable after that work has been accomplished."

The right to terminate an indefinite bond by notice is set forth on page 85 of 32 Cyc., as follows:

"If the consideration for the contract of a surety is executory—if his liability is to arise or to be increased by future acts of the obligee or creditor, and no time has been prescribed in the contract, the surety can terminate his liability by notifying the creditor or obligee that he withdraws, remaining liable, however, for any rights the creditor or obligee previously may have acquired; but, if the consideration for the surety's contract is entire, and has been executed fully, as in the case of a bond for the payment of a sum certain, or for the performances of services, the surety is bound indefinitely, and cannot terminate his liability by notice, even though by death or insolvency of cosureties he is the only responsible party remaining; and the personal representative of a surety has no greater right, in this respect, than the surety had. The right to terminate his contract is sometimes given to a surety by statute; and of course a surety may expressly reserve that right in his contract. Where such right is reserved, notice by the surety cannot operate instantly, but the right must be exercised reasonably, so as to enable the obligee to procure new security from the principal."

It will be observed that the foregoing rule applies to the future acts of the obligee or creditor. In the case submitted the future acts are done by the principal, that is he sells the transportation and receives the money for transmission.

In construing the terms of a contract of surety, the surety has occupied a favorite position because he is usually a volunteer and assumes the obligation without consideration.

Surety companies give bonds as a business proposition and for a consideration. They do not occupy the favorite position of a surety who acts without consideration.

The rule is stated in 32 Cyc. at pages 306-307:

"Generally speaking, a contract of suretyship by a surety company is governed by the same rules as the contracts of other sureties, but some distinctions are made by the courts in construing such contracts. The doctrine that a surety is a favorite of the law, and that a claim against him is strictissimi juris, does not apply where the bond or undertaking is executed upon a consideration by a corporation organized to make such bonds or undertakings for profit. While such corporations may call themselves "surety companies," their business is in all essential particulars that of insurers. Their contracts are usually in the terms prescribed by themselves, and should be construed most strongly in favor of the obligee."

This same principle is stated by Spear, J., in case of Bryant, vs. Bonding Company, 77 Ohio State 90, on page 99 of the opinion as hereinafter quoted.

In accordance with this rule surety companies are bound by the terms of their contract, and such contracts will be construed according to the principles of law applicable to contracts founded on valuable consideration.

As to the right of discontinuing the bond as to future transactions, Brandt on Suretyship and Guaranty 3rd Ed., says at section 184:

"Where no time is specified for which a continuing guaranty is to remain in force, it is held to be limited to a reasonable time, and in determining what is a reasonable time, all the attendant facts and circumstances are taken into consideration. It has already been stated that a continuing guaranty may be revoked at any time by the guarantor. Unless the terms of a continuing guaranty forbid it, the law writes into it a power on the part of each guarantor to revoke it by giving notice as to liability thereafter arising."

At section 153 he further says as to the time when such notice become effective:

> "Where the surety on the bond of a bank cashier notified one of the directors and vice-president, that he wished no longer to be the cashier's surety and that he had so notified the cashier, it was held that whatever might be the effect of such notice, it could not operate instantaneously, for the directors must have a reasonable time to give notice to the cashier and the other sureties, and to procure a new bond. The court say: 'If the effect of the notice is to be such as is now claimed on the part of the appellant, that is, if it discharged Haight (the surety), and, in consequence thereof discharged all the other sureties, the instant it was communicated to the bank, it might be quite embarrassing and damaging to the bank. The cashier might be so situated that the directors could not immediately arrest his discharge of duty or his ability to bind the bank, and hence reasonable time at least must be given to the bank in such case to act after receiving the notice.' What is a reasonable time depends upon the facts of each case. In one case thirty days was held too short a time."

The case referred to wherein thirty days was held as being too short was as to the surety of a deputy sheriff.

In case of La Rose vs. The Logansport National Bank, 102 Ind. 332, it is held:

> "A continuing contract, guaranteeing the fidelity of a bank cashier, may be revoked by the guarantors without cause, upon proper notice, but the right must be exercised reasonably."

These authorities consider the right of the creditor, the obligee and the employer to be given time in which to adjust themselves to the changed conditions which occur not because of their fault but because of the inability or failure of the principal, the risk, to give bond or to continue a bond already given.

In the present case the state of Ohio is not concerned as to whether a particular person shall engage in the business of selling foreign transportation. That is the concern of the principal and it is his duty to see that a sufficient bond is given. The state of Ohio is concerned in seeing that those who trust such person are protected.

In case of Jeudevine vs. Rose 36 Mich. 54, it is held:

> "Sureties in a bond given to secure performance by their principal of future mercantile engagements, and in which no period of limitation of liability is fixed, who have notified the obligees that they will no longer be bound for future transactions are held discharged from liability for transactions thereafter entered upon, where no change in circumstances by the obligees has occurred on the faith of a longer continuance of the suretyship, and they are not prejudiced by such withdrawal."

The court, however, say that a very slight difference in facts might require a different opinion.

This last quoted case comes nearer the present situation than the other authorities above cited. There is a difference, however, which is material.

Where a bond is given to secure the payment of the purchase price of future sales, the notice of release is given to the person who makes the sale and he can protect himself as to future sales.

In the present case the state has issued a certificate that a certain person is authorized to engage in a certain business and has given a bond. The certificate is outstanding and imports verity. The state cannot revoke or recall such certificate at will and without cause. It requires time to adjust the rights of the parties. The state does not buy foreign transportation or deposit money with such person. This is done by people who have no knowledge of the desire of the surety company to be relieved from further liability under its bond. It is the purpose of the state to protect the people who deal with such person and the bond is required for that purpose.

Before answering your specific questions it will be necessary to consider the opinion in the case of Bryant vs. The American Bonding Company, 77 Ohio St. 90, wherein it is held:

> "A bond procured by a state officer to be issued by a bonding company to the state guaranteeing the faithful performance of duty by such officer, which is in terms indefinite as to duration, will, in the absence of any stipulation to the contrary, be regarded as remaining in force during the incumbency of such officer on his present term, and where the consideration for such bond moving from the officer to the company is the payment in advance by the officer of a special annual premium, he will be liable to the company for such payment during the term for which the company is liable to the state on the bond.
> "But where, in a trial to recover against the officer for an annual premium, the application is introduced in evidence by the company as constituting in part its right of recovery, that instrument becomes a part of the bond, and if its language, taken in connection with that of the bond, imports that the bond is to run indefinitely, one year at a time, providing payment of the annual premium is made, the contract will be treated as continuing only upon the condition of mutual assent by the parties, and if such assent is not had, the officer will not be liable to the company in such action.
> "Because of the refusal by the officer to assent to a renewal and his refusal to pay an annual premium, the obligation of the company under the bond to the state for future conduct of the officer does not attach."

This was an action by the surety company to recover the premium for a renewal of the bond. The officer had notified the company that he did not desire a renewal of the bond. The right of the state as obligee under the bond were not in question, but the obligation of the company to the state was considered for the purpose of determining whether a consideration had passed from the company to the officer as a basis for recovery of the annual premium.

The company itself introduced in evidence the application as a part of its contract, although the written terms of the bond did not refer to such application or make it a part of the bond.

Spear, J., says on pages 98 and 99:

> "The question presented, therefore, is: What is the legal effect of the bond, taken in connection with the application, each paper being an essential part of the transaction between the parties? Both having been introduced in evidence by the company, we are relieved of consideration of the query, which might otherwise arise, whether or not the application is part of the bond, for the act of the company in basing its right of recovery in part upon that instrument, incorporates it for all the purposes of the case. * * * The contention of counsel in support of the judgment of the circuit court is, in brief, that this being a surety bond guaranteeing the faithful discharge of his duties by an officer, of necessity must be coextensive with the duration of such office. Hence, as Colonel Bryant has been, and still remains such officer, the company is bound to the state to make good its guaranty, and this continuing obligation implies necessarily the yearly payment of the premium by the officer; otherwise the company would be subject to loss without corresponding consideration or benefit accruing to it. As a proposition at large, this statement will be assented to, because if the contract, when properly construed, imposes a continuing liability, the duty to pay premiums would seem to follow. But the question remains, What is the proper construction of this contract? And first, what is the nature of the contract? Is it one simply of suretyship, one of those known as voluntary contracts, or is it rather one of the class issued for a money consideration and because of a pecuniary gain? If the former, then it is one wherein the surety is regarded as a favorite of the law, and all doubtful questions to be resolved in his favor; if the latter, then he is regarded as an insurer, whose contract, being drawn by the surety himself, and for a money consideration, is, if ambiguity exists in the language, to be resolved most strongly against the surety."

Also on pages 101 and 102 he further says:

"It will be noted that there is no definite term stated for the duration or life of the obligation. That feature is left entirely to inference. It therefore cannot be determined in this case, except by reference to the application. * * * The state, under these facts, being a party to the contract, reaping advantage from it, should be held to have had knowledge of the entire contract, and to have accepted the indemnity subject to any infirmities attaching to the transaction. In other words, it would take cum onere. Then what follows? The applicant, the 'risk,' could not be heard to claim that the bond would remain in force after his refusal to pay the premium, and it is difficult to see how the beneficiary, the state, could successfully make that claim. One thing is certain: The contract is, as to duration, at least ambiguous."

He further says on page 103, in making his conclusion:

"We are of opinion, therefore, that a bond of this character, indefinite as to duration, will, standing alone, be held to remain in force during the incumbency of the officer on his present term, and the officer will remain liable for the payment of annual premiums so long as liability to the state on the bond continues. But where the application has been made a part of the bond, as in this case, and its language taken in connection with that of the bond imports that while the bond may run indefinitely, but one year at a time, and continued providing the annual premium is paid, the contract should be regarded as continuing only upon the condition of mutual assent, and if such assent is not had, the officer will not be liable for the premiums. And, further, that in case the officer refuses to assent to a continuance of the contract, liability for future conduct of the officer does not attach."

It will be observed that the conclusion of the court is based upon the fact that the application has been made a part of the bond. Whether the application has been rightly made part of the bond as against the obligee is not determined. But the company having introduced the application in evidence as a part of its contract, the application was therefore considered a part of the bond for the purposes of the case decided.

This decision, therefore, is not to be construed as changing the rule of law that a written contract, complete in itself, cannot be modified or varied by parol evidence or by a written instrument outside of said contract and not referred to in the contract.

In the present case, therefore, it is not necessary for the state to look to the application to explain the terms of the bond. Nor is the state required to take notice that the premium is paid for one year. If the company desires the application to be made a part of the contract, the bond, it should be so stated in the bond. Also if the company desires to limit its liability to a definite period that also should be stipulated in the bond. The same is true as to the payment of the premium.

Coming now to answer your specific questions:

The bond in the present case is a continuing obligation. It is an executory contract given to secure faithful performance of future acts. The bond is not limited as to its duration. It will therefore run for an indefinite period.

The liability of the surety company under such a bond may be terminated upon notice given to the obligee. Its liability will not cease instantaneously with the giving of the notice. A reasonable time must be given so that the state may require a new bond, and in the event that such new bond is not given so that the certificate may be cancelled and the rights of the persons dealing with such agent be protected.

What is a reasonable time will depend upon the circumstances of each case. The time should be shorter where default has been made by the principal, than where no default has been made.

Under ordinary circumstances thirty days would be considered a reasonable time in which to secure a new bond.

The company would be liable on its bond upon all transactions made up to the time of giving a new bond, or the cancellation of the certificate if a new bond is not given. If a new bond is not given the certificate should be cancelled at the expiration of the time given to secure a new bond.

The rights which may exist as between the surety company and the principal should be determined by them and not by the state.

In answering your third inquiry:

Under a bond such as submitted it is not necessary to require a certificate, each year, that it has been renewed. The bond is silent as to the time it shall run and it will continue for an indefinite period. A certificate of renewal from the principal, if any was required, would be of little avail. The notice of renewal, if any, should be received from the surety.

If the bond is given for a definite period, a notice of renewal would then be required and this should be from the surety. If a bond limited in time is given the certificate should be issued only for the time the bond runs.

Answering your second question:

Section 292, General Code, provides that the bond shall be executed "with at least two good and sufficient sureties, who shall be responsible and owners of real estate within the state."

This provision applies to personal bonds and not to bonds given by a surety company. A personal bond must be signed by two good and sufficient sureties, and each of them must be owners of real estate within the state.

This is a continuing qualification and the sureties must own real estate and be good and sufficient sureties during the continuance of the bond, or the bond will not be sufficient.

If the surety sells his property and he is no longer a good and sufficient surety the principal should be required to give a new bond and upon failure to do so within a reasonable time, his certificate should be cancelled. In such case a reasonable time would be shorter than where a good and sufficient surety desires to be relieved from further liability.

Where a personal surety sells his property and ceases to be longer qualified as a surety the bond is not invalidated. The bond is still a binding obligation, although execution may not be made upon a judgment.

Generally in case of default suit should be directed against each of the sureties and the principal, even though one of the sureties has no property. The circumstances of a particular case may not make this desirable. That can be considered when such case arises.

As to your fourth inquiry:

The statute does not require a separate bond for each place of business run by the principal. It does require that "the certificate shall be conspicuously displayed in the place of business of such person, firm or corporation."

One bond could be made to cover two places of business, but if in the opinion of the auditor of state a bond of five thousand dollars is not sufficient to secure the public, where a person is running two or more places of business, he could require a bond for each place of business or require a larger single bond. The auditor is not required to issue more than one certificate upon one bond, but he may do so.

Section 293, General Code, contemplates that one bond may be made to cover two places of business when it requires the auditor of state to place in the "bond book" the "place or places for transacting their business."

In your fifth inquiry you ask as to your duty when persons operate such business without a bond and certificate.

The penalty is prescribed in section 294, General Code, as follows:

> "A person, firm or corporation which engages in such business, contrary to the provisions of the second and third preceding sections, shall be fined not more than five hundred dollars or imprisoned not more than six months, or both."

The procedure to follow in case of violations of the law will depend upon the locality.

In cities which have a police court with jurisdiction to imprison, an affidavit should be filed therein and the facts presented to the police prosecutor.

In other places, the facts should be submitted to the prosecuting attorney for presentation to the grand jury, or an affidavit could be filed before a justice of the peace or mayor and a preliminary hearing had.

In your sixth inquiry you state:

> "In the event that a bond is invalidated and we are unable to collect, by what procedure can we cancel the certificate so as to thoroughly protect the state?"

The simplest process and probably the most effective would be to notify the person that his certificate has been cancelled and demand its return. If he continues to transact business after such notice has been given him, prosecution should be entered under section 294, General Code.

The return of the certificate might be enforced, if this is deemed desirable, in a court of equity.

Respectfully,
TIMOTHY S. HOGAN,
Attorney General.

AN OFFICIAL WHOSE SALARY IS PRESCRIBED UNDER SECTION 2259, GENERAL CODE, MAY RECEIVE ADDITIONAL COMPENSATION FROM STATE INSTITUTION FOR SERVICES RENDERED, PROVIDED THE RENDERING OF SUCH SERVICES DOES NOT CONFLICT WITH HIS OFFICIAL DUTY.

An officer whose salary is prescribed by section 2259, General Code, may receive further compensation for services rendered an institution of the state at such times as do not conflict with his official duties, and when the work is not required to be done as a part of his official duty, but is done in an individual capacity.

COLUMBUS, OHIO, August 8, 1913.

HON. A. V. DONAHEY, Auditor of State. Columbus, Ohio.

DEAR SIR:—I have your letter of August 6, 1913, in which you ask:

> "1st. May an official whose salary is prescribed under section 2251 of the General Code receive further compensation for services rendered an institution of the state, and paid from the state treasury?
> "2nd. May a person drawing an annual salary as provided by sections 2249 and 2253 of the General Code, receive from the state treasury further compensation for services rendered other state departments? In this connection I would also respectfully refer you to section 2259 of the General Code."

In reply thereto I desire to advise you that your first question was asked in slightly different form by Hon. W. O. Thompson, and on January 8, 1908, Hon. Wade H. Ellis, the then attorney general of Ohio, rendered an opinion in which he construed section 2 of the act of April 2, 1906, 98 O. L., 368, which then read as follows:

> "Provided, further, that no fees whatever, in addition to the above salaries, shall be allowed to such officers; and provided, further, that no additional remuneration whatever shall be given any such officer under any other title than the title by which such officer was elected or duly appointed. The salaries herein provided for shall be in full compensation for any and all services rendered by said officers and employes, payment for which is made from the state treasury."

and which finds its way into the General Code as section 2259, to which you refer (section 1, Page and Adams, section 2259) "History," R. S. 1284-d: 98 v. 368, section 2.

Mr. Ellis there held:

> "There is nothing in this act to prevent an officer named therein from teaching in the university at such times as do not conflict with the proper performance of his official duties. Since the statute refers to services required by law or rendered by such officers in their official capacity, and since such teaching is not so required and is done in an individual capacity, compensation may be made to persons holding the offices named in this act for services as instructors in the university."

Attorney General Denman, in an opinion given to Hon. E. O. Randell on January 5, 1909, construed the same section as not prohibiting his receiving compensation as secretary of the Ohio archeological society while serving and being paid as reporter for the supreme court.

In answer to Mr. Randall I have given out an opinion confirmatory of and following the opinions of my predecessors, of which I enclose you a copy.

Yours very truly,
TIMOTHY S. HOGAN,
Attorney General.

SALARIES AND DUTIES OF OFFICIALS AND EMPLOYES OF SOLDIERS' AND SAILORS' ORPHAN HOME—LAWS REGULATING CONTROL OF THE SOLDIERS' AND SAILORS' ORPHAN HOME ARE RATHER UNCERTAIN AND AMBIGUOUS IN MANY INSTANCES.

The answers to the ten submitted questions in the following opinion contain the rules regulating employment and compensation in the soldiers' and sailors' orphan home.

COLUMBUS, OHIO, September 19, 1913.

HON. A. V. DONAHEY, Auditor of State, Columbus, Ohio.

DEAR SIR:—In your letter of September 15, 1913, you propound the following ten questions, relating to the soldiers' and sailors' orphan home:

> "1. Please designate the officers whose salaries must be approved by the governor under the provisions of section 1842, General Code, as it appears in the 1912 edition.
> "2. Who should appoint and discharge the employes?
> "3. Who should fix the compensation of employes?
> "4 Are the teachers referred to in section 1936 governed by the compensation fixed for 'school teachers' in section 1946, General Code?
> "To explain the fourth question: Industrial departments have been established as follows: house keeping, cooking, baking, sewing, tailoring, laundrying, shoemaking, carpentering, printing, painting, tinning, plumbing, butchering, blacksmithing, nursing, farming and gardening, stationary engineering, electrical engineering and machinist.

"Trained persons have been placed in charge of all these departments. Said departments do all the work necessary for the institution while instructing the children in the various avocations, and the fourth question pertains to their compensation.

"5. May seamstresses and tailoresses, who act as instructors, receive the pay of teachers or must they be confined to the pay particularly designated for them in section 1946, General Code?

"6. Should the board of trustees purchase all the supplies needed for the institution from the Ohio board of administration, or only such articles as are manufactured by the institutions under its control?

"7. Do the salaries fixed by section 1946, General Code, include board, room and laundry for any one except the physician?

"8. Does the compensation of the military instructor come under the provisions of section 1496, General Code, as fixed therein for school teachers?

"9. Is the compensation fixed in section 1946, General Code, to be taken as a basis for fixing the compensation of other employes not therein designated?

"10. What is the status of the superintendent of instruction mentioned in section 1946, General Code, that is, does his authority extend to the industrial schools as well as the elementary and high schools?"

Some of these questions cannot be answered by reference to the statutes, as they are not provided for or referred to therein.

The law relating to this institution is uncertain and ambiguous in many instances. You refer me to sections 1840, 1844 and 2256 of the General Code, edition of 1910.

Sections 1840 and 2256, aforesaid, were repealed in 102 O. L., page 223, and said section 1844, now constitutes section 1844 of the General Code of 1912.

Chapter 6 title 5, division 2, being sections 1931 to 1946-2, General Code, inclusive, contained the law applicable to this institution until section 1931-1 was enacted, as found in 103 O. L., 159. This section was enacted as a compromise, between the advocates and opponents of placing this particular home under the control of the board of administration, along with the other state institutions. This act provides for a board of five trustees to have charge and control of said home. The important provision of the new act is as follows:

"Such board shall govern, conduct and care for such home, the property thereof and the inmates therein as provided in the laws governing 'the Ohio board of administration' so far as the provisions are not inapplicable and are not inconsistent with the provisions of the laws governing such home."

This indefinite and unsatisfactory provision at once incorporates into the orphans' home law all provisions of the board or administration act, which "are not inapplicable" and "not inconsistent" with the laws governing said home.

This home is not under the control of the board of administration. Yet instead of providing in clear, explicit language, the manner of conducting, controlling and managing it, the legislature has driven us to search the law pertaining to the board of administration; and by comparison, adoption, and other means, to formulate a set of rules which are not inapplicable or inconsistent.

The board of administration act covers fifteen pages of the statutes, from section 1832 to 1871-1, General Code, inclusive. In the light of all the laws on the subject, I will take up your questions in their order and give you the benefit of my best judgment under the perplexing circumstances.

I. In my opinion the superintendent, steward, matron, clerk and physicians, are officers whose salaries are to be approved by the governor. The others are employes whose salaries are fixed as hereafter set forth.

2. The superintendent appoints and discharges the employes, under section 1842, General Code; and the trustees may, in writing, order the discharge of any employes. Under section 1935, General Code, the board of trustees on the nomination of the superintendent, appoint the clerk. This is why I have called him an officer in answer to your first question. The superintendent employs and discharges teachers under section 1936, General Code.

3. Under the provisions of section 1842, General Code, the board of trustees of the institution fixes the salaries and wages of all employes, subject to those specifically fixed by section 1946, General Code.

4. Your fourth question presents some complications. I am of opinion that the words "school teachers" as used in section 1946 have reference to those who teach the same, or similar branches of education, as are taught in the public schools of the state. I also think that those who instruct in the twenty callings and occupations named by you in your explanation to query 4 fairly fall within the title of "school teachers" as those words are commonly used and understood, and applied at said institution. The departments mentioned in section 1936 are called "schools;" and the employes are called "teachers."

These instructors and heads of these departments give instruction and training in these trades, occupations and callings and each of them can be called a "school teacher." Therefore, the instructors or teachers referred to in section 1936 are governed by the compensation mentioned in section 1946.

5 Until further legislation or rules are adopted by the board of trustees of said home, seamstresses and tailoresses cannot receive school teachers' wages.

6. The trustees of this home are only required to purchase such supplies from the Ohio board of administration as are manufactured by the state institutions under its control. The latter board is not a dealer in any commodities other than those so, as aforesaid, manufactured or produced.

7. Section 1844, General Code, says: "Superintendents, stewards and matrons shall reside in the institution with which they are connected, and devote their entire time to its interests." Section 1946, General Code, says the same of the physician. From the very nature of his employment, the clerk, appointed under section 1935, must be at the institution at all times. Therefore, I am of the opinion that the superintendent, matrons, steward, clerk and physician, all being officers of the institution are entitled to board, room and laundry at the institution. I am unable to find any provision of law that entitles teachers, instructors or other employes (other than the above named officers), to enjoy the privileges you speak of at the expense of the state.

8. The military instructor is in no sense a school teacher, and his compensation is not fixed in section 1946.

9. The compensation fixed in section 1946, cannot be taken as a basis for fixing compensation of other employes not therein designated. Said statute in the beginning says: "the compensation of the officers and employes herein named shall be as follows:" So it applies to none others.

10. The words "superintendent of instruction" as used in section 1946, General Code are broad enough to include and extend to all the schools of the institution, industrial, elementary and high. Therefore his jurisdiction covers them all.

Yours very truly,

TIMOTHY S. HOGAN,

Attorney General.

IN THE CONSTRUCTION OF PUBLIC BUILDINGS THE BOARD OF ADMINISTRATION MUST LIMIT ITSELF TO THE AMOUNT OF THE APPROPRIATION, AND THE MONEY MUST BE SPENT FOR THE PURPOSE FOR WHICH IT WAS APPROPRIATED.

1. If the legislature appropriates a specific amount for the erection of a building at a state institution the board of administration must limit itself to the expenditure of the sum specifically appropriated, and the money must be used for the purpose for which it is appropriated.

2. The language in the appropriation act under the Ohio board of administration exempts it from the provisions of section 2314, General Code, but does not nullify the section. By the provision of house bill No. 616 found in 102 O. L. 408, the exception of the Ohio penitentiary from the provisions of section 2314 shall apply to the institution for the feeble minded. This provision does not amend section 2314, General Code.

COLUMBUS, OHIO, October 13, 1913.

HON. A. V. DONAHEY, Auditor of State, Columbus, Ohio.

DEAR SIR:—Under date of October 9, 1913, you ask:

"1. May the Ohio board of administration erect, alter, or improve a state institutional building, the cost of which exceeds $3,000.00, other than in accordance with the provisions of sections 2314 et seq., of the General Code? (See sections 1838 and 1839, General Code, also section 1858.)

"2. May the board of administration legally expend a greater amount of money for any purpose than the legislature specifically appropriates for said purpose?

"Example: An appropriation of $22,000.00 is made for the erection of a laundry and industrial building; may the board spend more than this amount and pay the excess out of the appropriation for ordinary repairs and improvements?"

Under date of October 10, 1913, you inquire:

"1. Does the language in the appropriation act under 'Ohio board of administration' nullify the provisions of section 2314, General Code, so far as the appropriation for ordinary repairs and improvements is concerned?

"2. Does the language in the appropriation act under 'the institution for feeble minded' amend section 2314 (see O. L. 102, page 408), and if not, how does it affect the $10,000.00 appropriation which it immediately follows?"

First. Section 1838, General Code, provides that:

"The board, in addition to the powers expressly conferred, shall have all power and authority necessary for the full and efficient exercise of the executive, administrative and fiscal supervision over all said institutions."

Section 1839, General Code reads thus:

> "The board on its organization shall succeed to and be vested with the title and all rights of the present boards of trustees, boards of managers, and commissions of and for said several institutions in and to land, money or other property, real and personal, held for the benefit of their respective institutions, or for other public use, without further process of law, but in trust for the state of Ohio. Said several board of trustees, boards of managers, and commissions now charged with duties respecting the institutions above named shall on and after August 15, 1911, have no further legal existence and the board is hereby authorized and directed to assume and continue, as successor thereof, the construction, control and management of said institutions, subject to the provisions of this act."

Section 1858, General Code, authorizes the board to detail temporarily from a correctional or penal institution any inmates under its control, to perform specified labor.

In answering this question regard must be had to the manner in which the appropriation of funds to the Ohio board of administration has been made. In the absence of any exception in such appropriation act, sections 2314 et seq., of the General Code, obtain and govern the erection, alteration and improvement of state institutional buildings, the cost of which work exceeds $3,000.00. You will note, however, that this section, last cited, does not govern the erection, alteration or improvement of the penitentiary. This statute is very clear and I assume that you do not desire any construction thereof, but merely wish to know whether it is applicable to a state of facts suggested by your question.

Section 1838 does not have any effect upon section 2314, as it is merely designed to confer certain powers upon the board of administration in order to enable that body fully and efficiently to supervise said institutions.

Second. Article 2, section 22 of the constitution of Ohio provides that no money shall be drawn from the treasury except in pursuance of a specific appropriation made by law, no appropriation to be for a longer period than two years.

If the legislature appropriates a specific amount for the erection of a building, the board of administration must, in the erection of such building, limit itself to the expenditure of the sum specifically appropriated. When the legislature, by an appropriation act, specifically sets apart a certain sum of money for a designated purpose, it excludes the idea that this expenditure is to be made for an ordinary repair or improvement, because if the work to be done were that of ordinary repairs and improvements, the act would not have appropriated the money for a special purpose, but would have included it within the appropriation for ordinary repairs and improvements without concrete designation.

The expression of one purpose effectually excludes the idea of any other purpose. If this were not true there would be no reason for designating a specific amount for a particular object. Besides this, the expenditure of additional money is not consonant with the letter and spirit of sections 2314 et seq., which require estimates of the cost of the doing of the work and the approval thereof by the governor, auditor of state and secretary of state, the statutes just referred to having for their object the keeping of the cost of buildings,etc., within a specified and definite amount. Strict adherence to these statutes will completely obviate any possibility of expenditures exceeding an appropriation, as the board knows exactly what it will have to expend for a certain purpose, and, with this in mind, can and should see that the estimates do not exceed this sum. If the bids exceed the estimates they may be rejected, and the plans so altered as to bring the expenditure within the amount set apart for the purpose for which such money is to be used.

Under section 2313-2 (103 O. L. 445) it is expressly provided that no board shall have authority to create any deficiency or incur any indebtedness except as provided by sections 2312, 2313, 2313-1, consequently, the board of administration cannot create a deficiency by making an expenditure for a specific purpose in an amount in excess of the sum appropriated for that purpose, unless the exceptional sections just referred to permit this to be done. These sections provide for the creation of an emergency board; and section 2313, General Code, provides:

> "In case of any deficiency in any of the appropriations for the expenses of an institution, department or commission of the state for any biennial period, which may lawfully and by any unforeseen emergency happen when the general assembly is not in session, the trustees, managers, directors or superintendent of such institution, or the officers of such department or commission, may make application to the board for authority to create obligations within the scope of the purpose for which such appropriations were made. Such applicant shall fully set forth to the secretary in writing the facts in connection with the case. As soon as can be done conveniently, the secretary shall arrange for a meeting of the board, and shall notify the applicant of the time and place of the meeting, and request his presence. No authority shall be granted with the approval of less than four members of the board, who shall sign it."

The language last quoted only authorizes the creation of obligations for the expenses of an institution, which may lawfully and by any unforeseen emergency happen. I think that the finding of the emergency board as to what is an "unforeseen emergency" would be conclusive; but it is impossible for me to conceive how the expenditure in excess of an appropriation for the erection of a building could be any such unforeseen emergency. The board knows what it has to expend for the erection of the building, and by expending this amount for the partial construction of the building most assuredly cannot call for a further expenditure on the ground that an unforeseen emergency arises for the completion of the building. If the board follows the provisions of sections 2314 et seq., it can foresee whether the building may be finished for the amount specified, and it should see that a contract for the completion of the work does not call for a greater expenditure than the amount set aside for that purpose. The emergency board is to deal with these cases wherein some unanticipated event necessitates the expenditure of money, by creating a deficiency in an appropriation for the expenses of an institution, department or commission, when the legislature is not in session.

An inspection of section 2323 of the General Code adds force to the foregoing argument. This statute reads as follows:

> "No contract shall be made for labor or materials at a price in excess of the entire estimate thereof. The entire contract or contracts, including estimates of expenses for architects and otherwise, shall not exceed in the aggregate the amount authorized by law for such institution, building or improvement, addition thereto or alteration thereof."

This indicates, not only that no unforeseen emergency would occur in the case suggested by you but also that the deficiency was not lawfully created.

Answering your question submitted in your second letter, I would say:

1. In house bill No. 590, making general appropriations to the various departments, the following language appears in the Ohio board of administration appropriation:

"Ordinary repairs and improvements; balance and * * * $326,000.00. Expenditures from the appropriation for ordinary repairs and improvements to be exempt from section 2314 of the General Code of Ohio * * *."

I think that under the language last quoted the expenditures for ordinary repairs and improvements form a temporary exception to the provisions of section 2314 of the General Code. This appropriation act, however, does not nullify the provisions of the general statute just cited, but merely holds it in abeyance during the life of the appropriation act, which is two years.

2. In the appropriation made for the "institution for feeble minded" in house bill No. 616 (102 O. L. 408) it is provided that the exception of the Ohio penitentiary from the provisions of section 2314 of the General Code shall be extended to the institution for feeble minded. This language does not amend section 2314, because it is a sound and fundamental rule of statutory construction that any special provisions in a temporary appropriation act must be restricted in their operation to the subject-matter of the act and may not be treated as permanent regulations unless there is a clearly expressed intention so to make them. Here there is no such intent and the exception expires with the appropriation act. (2 Lewis Sutherland Statutory Construction p. 663.)

This provision does, however, except all appropriations made for the institution for feeble minded from the provisions of section 2314 of the General Code of Ohio, and, consequently in the expenditure of the money therein appropriated for this institution the board of administration need not comply with the provisions of section 2314.

Trusting that I have fully answered your questions, I am,

Yours very truly,
TIMOTHY S. HOGAN,
Attorney General.

THE AUDITOR OF STATE MAY NOT CHARGE BACK AGAINST STATE INSTITUTIONS EXPENSES OF EXAMINATION MADE BY EXAMINERS FROM THE AUDITOR'S DEPARTMENT.

There is no statutory authority for the auditor of state to charge back against state institutions the cost of examinations made by examiners from the auditor of state's office, as is done in the examination of taxing districts. Section 288 General Code refers to taxing districts, and no state institution can be considered a taxing district.

COLUMBUS, OHIO, October 18, 1913.

HON. A. V. DONAHEY, Auditor of State, Columbus, Ohio.

DEAR SIR:—Under date of September 25th you submitted for my consideration the following:

"Attached you will find a statement directed to the emergency board of Ohio, and I trust you will, at your earliest convenience, answer the following questions:

"First. Would the evidence hereto attached constitute an emergency under the recent emergency act, page 445 volume 103 Sessions Laws?

"Second. Taking into consideration sections 271 to 273-4, General Code, and sections 274,277, 279, 284, 287 and especially note 288, General Code.

"Would it be proper for the auditor of state to render a bill to institutions and departments of the state for actual expenses of the examiners making the audit of such department or institution, the examiners' expenses, of course, to be paid first from the public audit fund, and when paid by the department or institution, credited back to the public audit expense fund, as is done in other political subdivisions of the state?

"Many institutions and universities now do this, pay for their examinations from their funds. If this could be generally done in the state, it would be fair to all departments, and would not necessitate a direct appropriation for the departmental examiners of the state. Emergencies would not arise under this system, but what could be met, and the law could, at all times, be complied with by this department."

The state emergency board has since granted you the amount that you desired and, therefore, I do not undertake to pass upon the question as to whether the evidence attached to your inquiry would constitute an emergency, under the recent emergency act 103 O. L. 445.

Section 274, General Code, as amended 103 O. L. 246, provided as follows:

"There shall be a bureau of inspection and supervision of public offices in the department of auditor of state which shall have power as hereinafter provided in sections two hundred and seventy-five to two hundred and eighty-nine, inclusive, to inspect and supervise the accounts and reports of all state officers, including every state educational, benevolent, penal and reformatory institution, public institution and the offices of each taxing district or public institution in the state of Ohio. Said bureau shall have the power to examine the accounts of every private institution, association, board or corporation receiving public money for its use and purpose, and may require of them annual reports in such form as it may prescribe. The expense of such examinations shall be borne by the taxing district providing such public money. By virtue of his office the auditor of state shall be the chief inspector and supervisor of public offices, and as such appoint not exceeding three deputy inspectors and supervisors, and a clerk. No more than two deputy inspectors and supervisors shall belong to the same political party."

Section 288, General Code, to which you call my special atttention provides as follows:

"The expenses of the inspection and auditing of the public accounts and reports of a taxing district shall be borne by the districts, and the auditor of state shall certify the amount of such expenses to the auditor of the county in which the district is situated. The county auditor shall forthwith issue his warrant in favor of the auditor of state on the county treasurer, who shall pay it from the general fund of the county, and the county auditor shall charge the amount so paid to the taxing district at the next semi-annual settlement. Moneys so received by the auditor of state shall be paid into the state treasury to the credit of the public audit expense fund."

In your inquiry you request my opinion as to whether or not your department can render a bill to institutions and departments of the state for actual expenses of examiners in making the audit. Section 274, General Code, as amended, provides in part that "expenses of such examinations shall be borne by the taxing district provided such public money," but as I construe said sentence so used in said act it refers to the sentence just preceding it relative to the right of the bureau to examine public institutions, etc., receiving public money for its uses and purposes, but even if this were not so I assume that the institutions to which you refer are those which receive appropriations from the legislature.

Unless the two sections above quoted give the authority for your department to charge back against a particular institution the cost and expense of examinations made by your examiners there is no authority for you to make such a charge, and from a careful consideration of said sections I cannot find any such authority. The only authority to charge back is that found in section 288, General Code, which refers to the expense of inspection and auditing of public accounts and reports of a taxing district and no institution or university can be considered as a taxing district.

Very truly yours,
TIMOTHY S. HOGAN,
Attorney General.

THE STATE ARMORY BOARD IS NOT REQUIRED TO COMPLY WITH SECTIONS 2314, ETC., GENERAL CODE—DEEDS FOR ARMORY SITES SHOULD BE FILED WITH THE AUDITOR OF STATE AFTER BEING PROPERLY RECORDED.

1. Sections 2314, 2315, 2320 and 2326, General Code, do not apply to the state armory board, and the state armory board is not required to comply with them.

2. Deeds for armory sites should be filed with the auditor of state after they have been properly recorded in the counties wherein property is located as provided by section 267, General Code.

COLUMBUS, OHIO, October 18, 1913.

HON. A. V. DONAHEY, Auditor of State, Columbus, Ohio.

DEAR SIR:—I acknowledge the receipt of your letter of July 17th, which reads in part as follows:

> "Sections 5255-5258 of the General Code provide that the state armory board shall prepare plans, specifications, etc.
> "Should not the state armory board comply with sections 2314, 2315, 2320 and 2326 of the General Code?
> "Should the state armory board file with the auditor of state deeds for armory sites?"

Sections 5255-5258 are special statutes relating solely to the construction of armories, and sections 2314 et seq., are a part of the general statutes governing the subject of "erection, alteration or improvement of a state institution or building, except the penitentiary."

Without quoting from these statutes, it is sufficient to say that the sections of the general statutes you mention contain provisions upon matters not included in the armory statutes, and you wish to be advised whether the armory board must comply with those sections of the general statutes.

According to a well established principle of statutory construction, a special statute is to be read and construed as an exception to a general statute.

There was no authority for the erection of armories by the state until the passage of the act of 1909, (100 O. L., p. 25).

The first paragraph of section 3 of said act, provides:

> "When the state armory board deems it to the best interests of the state and advisable to erect an armory for any of the organizations of the national guard, it shall cause plans, specifications and estimates to be prepared for an armory at the place it has so directed, and proceed to erect such armory as hereinafter provided in this act."

The foregoing appears in the General Code as section 5257, the only change being to substitute the word "chapter" for the word "act," found in said section three.

From this provision, it is clearly manifest that the legislature intended the procedure for building armories, as outlined by the statutes on that subject, to be exclusive.

If it were the intention that the general statutes should apply in a case where no specific provision was made in the armory statutes, the legislature doubtless would have inserted in the latter a provision to that effect.

I am therefore of the opinion, in answer to your first question, that sections 2314 etc., do not apply to armories and that the state armory board is not obliged to follow the same.

Section 267 of the General Code, provides:

> "The evidence of title of lands other than public lands, belonging to or hereafter acquired by the state shall be recorded in the office of the recorder of the counties in which they are situated, and when so recorded such evidence of title shall be deposited with the auditor of state and kept in his office. He shall make an abstract of the title of all lands acquired by the state in a book prepared for that purpose and open for inspection by all persons interested."

Section 5256, General Code, provides:

> "The board may receive gifts or donations of land, money or other property for the purpose of aiding in the purchase, building, furnishing or maintaining of an armory building. All lands so acquired shall be deeded to the state of Ohio, and all property received under the provisions of this section from any source, shall become the property of the state."

It will be observed that under section 267, the evidence of title of lands belonging to the state or hereafter acquired by it, except public lands, shall be recorded in the office of the county recorder of the counties in which they are situated, and when recorded, deposited and kept in the office of the auditor of state. While land acquired by the state for armory sites is in a sense public land, it cannot be regarded as such public land, the evidence of title whereof would not have to be recorded and deposited in the office of the auditor of state. The public lands coming within the exception, are lands ceded to the state by the United States government for school purposes, canal lands and the like.

I am clearly of the opinion, in answer to your second question, that deeds for armory sites should be filed with your department after they have been duly recorded as required by section 267, supra.

Very truly yours,
TIMOTHY S. HOGAN,
Attorney General.

THE STATE MEDICAL BOARD HAS NO AUTHORITY TO PASS A RESOLUTION AUTHORIZING PAYMENT TO THEMSELVES of 50 CENTS EACH FOR GRADING EXAMINATION PAPERS—VOUCHERS THAT HAVE BEEN PAID UNDER A RESOLUTION OF THIS KIND CANNOT BE CHANGED, BUT THE PRACTICE SHOULD BE DISCONTINUED.

1. Under the provisions of section 1264, General Code, the state medical board is not authorized to pass a resolution authorizing the payment to themselves of 50 cents each for grading examination papers.

2. Members of the state medical board should not be required to pay back fees which they received under the former auditor of state, but the honoring of such vouchers for such fees should be discontinued.

COLUMBUS, OHIO, October 23, 1913.

HON. A. V. DONAHEY, Auditor of State, Columbus, Ohio.

DEAR SIR:—I desire to acknowledge the receipt of your letter of inquiry of the date of August 6, 1913, wherein you inquire in regard to the state medical board as follows:

> "1st. Under the provisions of section 1264, General Code, is it legal for the board to pass a resolution authorizing the payment to themselves of 50 cents each for grading examination papers?
> "2nd. If the passage of such a resolution is illegal, could the several vouchers on file in this department be corrected to show per diem instead of fees charged for grading papers; excess fees over the per diem to be paid back into the treasury?
> "The former state auditor permitted a charge of 50 cents per paper for grading examination papers in lieu of per diem."

In reply thereto I desire to say that section 1264 of the General Code provides as follows:

> "Each member of the state medical board shall receive ten dollars for each day employed in the discharge of his official duties and his necessary expenses so incurred."

Under the provisions of said section, the state medical board would not have authority to pass a resolution, authorizing payment to themselves of 50 cents each for grading examination papers, for the reason that said section provides that members of the said board shall receive $10.00 for each day employed in the discharge of their official duties and their necessary expenses so incurred. The payment to themselves of 50 cents each for grading examination papers could not be considered as coming within the term "necessary expenses." Such fee, therefore, not being "necessary expenses," could not legally be paid to the members of said board and the section in question specifically limits them to $10.00 a day for their services in the discharge of their official duties, and does not provide for the payment of 50 cents each for grading examination papers.

In answer to your second question, I desire to say that there is no legal authority which gives you the right to correct vouchers on file in your department in order that said voucher may show per diem instead of the fees, charged for grading papers. I take it from the wording of your inquiry that the said excess fees over and above the per diem, which were charged for the grading of papers, were so charged because of the policy of the former administration of the state auditor's department in permitting the same. This being the case, it is my opinion that the members of the state medical board ought not to be required to pay back the fees which they received under the former auditor of state, but the honoring of such vouchers for said fees should be discontinued.

Yours very truly,
TIMOTHY S. HOGAN,
Attorney General.

THE AUDITOR OF STATE HAS POWER TO EXAMINE TITLE GUARANTEE AND TRUST COMPANIES—THE SUPERINTENDENT OF BANKS HAS POWER TO EXAMINE SAFETY DEPOSIT AND TRUST COMPANIES—THE REPORTS OF THESE COMPANIES ARE TO BE MADE RESPECTIVELY TO THE AUDITOR OF STATE'S OFFICE AND TO THE SUPERINTENDENT OF BANKS—THE EXPENSE OF SUCH EXAMINATION BY THE AUDITOR'S DEPARTMENT MAY BE PAID OUT OF THE CONTINGENT FUND OR OUT OF FUNDS CREATED BY THE APPROPRIATION FOR THE AUDITOR OF STATE AND HIS OFFICE.

The superintendent of banks has no power with reference to the examination of title guarantee and trust companies. The auditor of state has power to examine such companies, and the reports of such companies should be made to the auditor of state. Safety deposit and trust companies should make their reports to the superintendent of banks, who has the power to examine such companies. The payment for expenses of such examinations by the auditor of state may be made out of the fund created by the appropriation for the auditor of state and his office staff for the conduct of the office, or out of the fund appropriated for contingent expenses of the office.

COLUMBUS, OHIO, December 1, 1913.

HON. A. V. DONAHEY, Auditor of State, Columbus, Ohio.

DEAR SIR:—Under date of June 12, 1913, you requested opinion of me as follows:

> "1. Has the auditor of state authority to at any time order an examination of the business of any safe deposit and trust company of Ohio?
> "2. Does the act creating the superintendent of banks, passed in 1908 sections 79 and 91, and the last paragraph of section 119, pages 287, 288 and 296, (99 O. L.), abrogate by implication the authority conferred on the auditor by the law passed in 1886 and found in section 9835 of the General Code?
> "3. Are such companies required to make annual reports to the auditor (section 9834, General Code), in addition to the regular reports required to be made to the superintendent of banks?

"4. The superintendent of banks does not make regular examination of title guarantee and trust companies and no examinations of such companies have been made by the auditor of state for a dozen of years. If the auditor has no authority to make examinations of state deposit and trust companies how under section 9856 of the General Code can he have authority to make examinations of title guarantee and trust companies?

"5. If the auditor has no such authority, is it the duty of the superintendent of banks to regularly examine title guarantee and trust companies?

"6. If the auditor of state is authorized to examine guarantee title and trust companies by whom should the expense of such examination be paid?"

Section 9834 and 9835, General Code, making provision respectively as to reports by safe deposit and trust companies and their examination by the auditor of state, were originally enacted in 1882 (79 O. L. 101, 103) and are as follows:

"Sec. 9834. Within six months after the incorporation of such company, its trustees must notify the auditor of state of the date of the organization. Within ten days after the annual meeting thereof in each year, under oath, such trustee shall make a complete statement of the condition of the company, in which they shall specify the different kinds of its liabilities and assets, stating the amount of each kind, which statement shall be filed with the auditor of state, and published in his annual report. The trustees also shall publish it in a newspaper of general circulation in the county in which the principal office of the company is located.

"Section 9835. Such auditor, at any time, through an expert appointed by him, may make a full examination of the affairs and condition of every such company."

Section 9856, General Code, covering the same subject-matters with reference to title guarantee and trust companies was originally enacted in 1902, and is as follows:

"Title guarantee and trust companies shall make such reports to the auditor of state as are required of safe deposit and trust companies and be subject to like examinations and penalties."

In 1908 the legislature passed the Thomas act, a comprehensive act relating to the organization of banking companies including safe deposit and trust companies and providing for inspection and supervision thereof by a superintendent of banks, the office of which was created by the act (99 O. L. 269-296).

Section 79 of the act just noted was carried into the General Code as section 711, which reads as follows:

"The superintendent of banks shall execute the laws in relation to banking companies, savings banks, savings societies, societies for savings, savings and loan associations, savings and trust companies, safe deposit and trust companies and every other corporation or association having the power to receive, and receiving money on deposit, chartered or incorporated under the laws of this state. Nothing in this chapter shall apply to building and loan associations."

Sections 720 and 721, being parts of the same act, provide for examinations by the superintendent of banks of any of such banking companies on the request of such company, its directors or stockholders, and section 730 makes provision for the examination of any such company by the superintendent of banks when he has reason to believe that the capital has been impaired, while section 724, General Code, provides as follows:

> "At least twice each year, and also when requested by the board of directors or trustees thereof, the superintendent of banks or an examiner appointed for that purpose shall thoroughly examine the cash, bills, collaterals or securities, books of account and affairs of each bank, savings bank, safe deposit and trust company, savings and loan society or association incorporated under any law in this state. Such examination shall be made in the presence of the members of the executive committee or a majority thereof. He shall also ascertain if any such corporation, company, society or association is conducting its business in the manner prescribed by law and at the place designated in its articles of incorporation."

Comprehensive powers with reference to the examination authorized by the sections just noted are given to the superintendent of banks by the provisions of this act. (Secs. 725-729, G. C.)

Sections 108 and 109 of the Thomas banking act are now sections 737 and 738 of the General Code and read as follows:

> "Sec. 737. Not less than four times during each calendar year each banking company, savings bank, savings and trust company, chartered or incorporated under any law of this state, and every person or copartnership doing a banking business shall make a report to the superintendent of banks required by the superintendent on forms prescribed and furnished by him, and, so far as possible, they shall be made on the same day on which reports are required from national banking associations by the comptroller of the currency.
> "Sec. 738. Such reports shall be verified by the oath of affirmation of the president, vice-president, cashier, secretary or treasurer thereof, and shall exhibit in detail, and under appropriate heads, a true statement of the resources, assets and liabilities, of such banking company, savings bank, society or association, at the close of business of any past day by him specified, which day shall be the same for all corporations required to make such reports."

Section 739 provides for newspaper publication of the reports called for by the sections just before noted while sections 740 and 741 provide respectively for special reports on request of the superintendent of banks, and for penalties imposed on such companies for failure to meet the requirements of the law as to the reports required of them.

The act of 1908 does not in terms repeal the statutory provisions now in the General Code as sections 9834 and 9835 above noted providing for reports to be made by safe deposit and trust companies to the auditor of state and providing for the examination of such companies by him. The question remains whether the provisions of sections 9834 and 9835 are repealed by implication by force of the provisions of the later act providing for the examination of safe deposit and trust companies by the superintendent of banks and providing for reports by such companies to him, which provision as carried into the General Code have been herein noted. The Thomas banking act of 1908, creating the office of superintendent of banks, is comprehensive and complete in its provisions with reference to the examination of banking companies including safe deposit and trust companies by such officer, and in the provisions with reference to reports by such companies to him, and it is fair to assume that such provisions were intended to furnish the sole requirements as to the examination of such companies and as to reports by them, and to be a substitute for previous legislation on the subject.

> Goff vs. Gates, 87 O. S. 142, 149.
> Ritter vs. Ry. Co., 6 N. P. (n. s.) 161, 168.

On the consideration just noted I am of the opinion that the provision of sections 9834 and 9835, General Code, have been repealed by implication by force of the provisions of the Thomas banking act covering the subject-matter of these two sections, and that the authority of the auditor of state with reference to the examination of safe deposit and trust companies has been abrogated, and this is likewise true with reference to the obligation and duty of such companies to make reports to him.

As has been noted, section 9856, General Code, provides that title guarantee and trust companies shall make such reports to the auditor of state as are required of safe deposit and trust companies and be subject to like examinations and penalties. In the enactment of the provisions of this section prescribing the duties of title guarantee and trust companies with respect to reports to the auditor of state and prescribing the authority of such officer with respect to the examination of such companies, the legislature, by necessary intendment, had reference to the provisions covering the same subject-matter with reference to safe deposit and trust companies, now contained within sections 9834 and 9835, General Code. The effect of this reference was to adopt and incorporate the provisions as to reports and examinations applying to safe deposit and trust companies into the act applying to title guarantee and trust companies the same as if such provisions had been in terms re-enacted in the latter act.

> "When in one statute a reference is made to an existing law, in prescribing the rule or manner in which a particular thing shall be done, or for the purpose of ascertaining powers with which persons named in the referring statute shall be clothed, the effect, generally, is not to revive or continue in force the statute referred to, for the purpose for which it was originally enacted, but merely for the purpose of carrying into execution the statute in which the reference is made. For this purpose, the law referred to, is, in effect, incorporated with, and becomes a part of the one in which the reference is made, and, so long as that statute continues, will remain a part of it, although the one referred to, should be repealed, such repeal would no more effect the referring statute, than a repeal of this latter, would the one to which reference is made."

Ludlow vs. Johnson, 3 Ohio 533, 572.

Shull vs. Barton, 58 Neb. 741, 743.

Sika vs. C. & N. Co., 21 Wis. 370.
In re Heath, 144 U. S. 92, 94.

Applying the principle of construction just noted, it follows that the provisions of sections 9834 and 9835 adopted by reference by the provisions of section 9856 and by legal intendment incorporated in the latter section as applying to the title guarantee and trust companies, are not effected in their application to such companies by the fact that they have been impliedly repealed and abrogated in their application to safe deposit and trust companies by the later provisions of the Thomas banking act.

The next question is whether there is anything in the act last mentioned which in any wise affects the powers, duties and requirements of section 9856 with reference to title guarantee and trust companies. An examination of the sections of the General Code carried into the same from the Thomas act and before noted herein making provision for examination by the superintendent of banks of the companies therein mentioned, and making provision for reports by such companies, fails to disclose any legislative intention to cover title guarantee and trust companies within the provisions of the same. No specific authority is given to the superintendent of banks with reference to the examination of title guarantee and trust companies, and if such authority is given at all, or if such companies are within the jurisdiction of the superintendent of banks for any purpose, such authority and such jurisdiction must be found in the more general provisions of the act. I note that section 711, General Code, provides that the superintendent of banks shall execute the laws in relation to the particular companies therein named, "and every other corporation or association having the power to receive, and receiving money on deposit, chartered or incorporated under the laws of this state."

Section 91 of the Thomas act, carried into the General Code as section 9793, provided:

> "Every banking company, savings bank, savings and loan association, savings and trust company, safe deposit and trust companies, society for savings, savings society and every other corporation or association except building and loan associations, having the power to receive, and receiving money on deposit, now existing and chartered or incorporated, or which may hereafter become incorporated shall be subject to the provisions of this act."

In carrying the same into the General Code, the provisions of section 91 of the act were changed so as to provide that the companies therein specified and every other corporation or association except building and loan associations empowered to receive, and receiving deposits should be subject to the provisions of the chapter of which section 9793 is a part. Ordinarily, mere changes of phraseology in carrying a statute into a revision of the statutes of the state is not to be considered as changing or otherwise affecting the meaning of the statute as enacted (110 S. I.; 36 O. S. 326); while on the other hand, it seems to be the rule that where in the course of a revision of the statutes, language is added to a particular section, the plain and obvious effect of which is to qualify the former operation of such section, this effect should not be denied on the ground that the language was added in the course of the revision; on the contrary, the new section should receive the construction required by the natural import of the language it contains.

If the latter view as to the construction of section 9793 obtains, this section passes out of view with reference to the question at hand, for there is nothing in the chapter of which this section is a part, relative to examination by the superintendent of banks or otherwise.

However, whatever may be the proper construction of section 9793 with respect to the question as to the jurisdiction of the superintendent of banks over title guarantee and trust companies, it is apparent that as to both sections 711 and 9793, General Code, any claim of jurisdiction over title guarantee and trust companies must rest on the general language and provision therein contained, as follows:

> "And every other corporation or association having the power to receive and receiving money on deposit, chartered or incorporated under the laws of this state."

It is a general rule of construction however, to be observed as an aid in ascertaining the meaning of statutes, that general words following the enumeration of particular classes of things are to be limited and confined in their operation to things of the same kind or nature as those enumerated.

> "General words, following particular and specific words must, as a general rule, be confined to things of the same kind as those specified."

Shultz vs. Cambridge, 38 O. S., 659.
Rutheford vs. Ry Co., 35 O. S. 559, 563.
State vs. Liffring, 61 O. S. 39, 50.
State vs. Gravatt O. S. 289, 306.

All of the companies specifically enumerated in both the sections noted are classed as banking companies (see section 9702, G. C.); and the language above noted is to be limited as applying to such corporations and associations, having the power to receive and receiving deposits as can fairly be said to be banking companies within the purview of the Thomas act as indicated by its title and manifest scope.

State vs. Gibbs, 7 N. P. (n. s.) 335.
Burgett vs. Burgett, 1 Ohio, 469, 480.
Terrill vs. Anchaauer, 14 O. S. 80.

This conclusion follows as well from the rule that general words as used in a statute should be limited to the objects to which it is apparent the legislature intended to apply them.

Board of Education vs. Board of Education 46 O. S. 595, 599.
Brigel vs. Starbuck, 34 O. S., 280, 285.
Steamboat vs. Pressler, 13 O. S. 255, 262.
Tracy vs. Card, 2 O. S. 431, 441.

I do not deem it necessary to express any opinion here with reference to the power of title guarantee and trust companies to receive deposits. Certainly no express power to that end is given by the section defining the power of such companies (9850, G. C.).

Were it to be conceded that the language of section 711 and section 9793, General Code, is broad enough and specific enough to bring title guarantee and trust companies under the jurisdiction and supervision of the superintendent of banks for any purpose, yet as it appears that specific provision has been made with reference to the examination of such companies by the auditor of state, such specific provision so made will prevail as against the general language and provision of the section just noted, and operate as an exception thereto.

Fosdick vs. Perrysburg, 14 O. S. 473.
Shunk vs. Bank, 22 O. S. 508, 515.
Commissioners vs. Board, 390 S. 628, 632.
Cincinnati vs. Holmes, 56 O. S. 104, 114.

Moreover, the immediate question at hand is with reference to the power of the superintendent of banks to examine title guarantee and trust companies, and as it appears that the particular companies subject to this power are specifically named and designated in the section granting this power to the superintendent of banks (section 724, G. C.) a familiar rule of construction suggests the legislative intent to exclude all other companies than those named therein from the operation of the section and the power therein named.

Telephone Co. vs. Cincinnati, 73 O. S. 64, 80.

On the consideration above noted, I am of the opinion that the superintendent of banks has no power with reference to the examination of title guarantee and trust companies, but that the sole power to examine such companies is in the auditor of state, to whom likewise the reports of such companies should be made. As before noted, however, I find that since the enactment of the Thomas act, safe deposit and trust companies are subject solely to the examinations made by the superintendent of banks, and the reports of such companies must be made to him.

The question as to how the expenses of examinations of title guarantee and trust companies is to be met and paid is one of difficulty on which the statutes throw no satisfactory light. This question, however, it is evident, is governed by the same considerations which governed the question of expenses in the examination of safe deposit and trust companies by the auditor of state before the enactment of the Thomas act which by implication abrogated his power and duty with respect to the examination of such companies. I know of no provision casting the burden of such expense upon the company examined by the auditor of state, nor is there any special fund out of which payment for the services of the examiner is to be made. It seems to follow that payment for services and expenses in making such examinations can be made only out of the fund created by the appropriation for the auditor of state and his office staff for the conduct of the office, or out of the fund appropriated for contingent expenses of the office.

Very truly yours,
TIMOTHY S. HOGAN,
Attorney General.

COLUMBUS, OHIO, December 26, 1913.

HON. A. V. DONAHEY, Auditor of State, Columbus, Ohio.

DEAR SIR:—Under date of December 11, 1913, you urgently request an early answer to certain questions.

As these questions arise under the workmen's compensation act, which is now in the supreme court, by virtue of a petition in mandamus filed by the Ohio equity association and Charles Gongwer, to compel the secretary of state to submit this law to the electors, I am in doubt as to what course to take. If it should be held that the law should be submitted to the electors it would probably be held in abeyance, and consequently the answer to your questions would be a moot matter. Should the supreme court decide that the secretary of state was correct in rejecting the referendum petition, I can readily see that it is important for you to know just what course to pursue in regard to the law, and consequently I shall give you my opinion upon the questions suggested. They are as follows:

"1. 103 O. L., p. 77, section 14. Does this section include,

"(a) School teachers who have access to pension funds in cities?

"(b) Employes on township road work?

"(c) Physicians employed to care for township poor?

"(d) Road superintendents?

"(e) Are all elective officers exempt?

"2. From what funds shall money be paid out under the provisions of sections 16 and 17 of said act?

"3. How shall the county auditor determine from what funds to pay out money in compliance with section 19?

"4. From what shall the auditor of state draw funds to comply with section 17?

"5. Is it necessary for the political subdivisions of the state to levy or appropriate sufficient funds to comply with this act?

"6. Would the county auditor be authorized to withhold from the several political subdivisions, funds in his February, 1914; settlement to comply with this act?

"7. Has the state auditor authority, under sections 12888-283, to require county auditors to furnish the data required in sections 17, 18 and 19?"

1. (a) Section 13 of the act in question, 103 O. L. p. 77, expressly designates as an employer the state and each county, city, township, incorporated village and school district therein, while the term employe is construed to mean every person in the service of such school district, with certain exceptions, among which are not mentioned school teachers who contribute or have access to pension funds; hence, I hold school teachers come within the provisions of the act whether or not they contribute or receive payments out of pension funds maintained by the school districts. This construction receives added force from the fact that the act in express terms does not apply to policemen or firemen where pension funds for them are now or may hereafter be established. The exclusion of them carries with it the implication of inclusion of others who have not been expressly excluded.

(b) Employes on township road work are in the service of the township, and consequently are included within the act. It will be observed that this act applies generally to all employes of townships, while it does not include persons casually employed by a private individual, or one who is not in the usual course of occupation of such employer, No such exception is to be found regarding those serving the state or its political subdivisions.

(c) Under sections 3490 and 3491 of the General Code, township trustees may contract with physicians to furnish medical relief to persons coming under their charge under the poor laws, no contract to extend beyond one year. This contract is to be awarded to the lowest competent bidder. Under an arrangement of this kind, I do not think that the physician is in the service of the township, and, therefore, is not within the provisions of the act.

(d) The statute providing for the employment of road superintendents, viz.: section 3370 of the General Code, authorizes the trustees to "employ and hire a suitable person." Section 3371 refers to his "employment" which is subject to the will of the township trustees. Section 3373 provides for compensation for his "services" for time actually employed in the care of the roads, and all of the sections quoted clearly place him under the direction of the trustees. Section 7137, also providing for powers and duties of a road superintendent, authorizes him to remove encroachments, enter upon lands and carry away timber, dig gravel, sand and stone necessary to make, improve or repair an adjoining road, but section 7139 clearly states that he shall at all times be under the direct control and supervision of the township trustees and perform only such work as is directed by them. It is true that in some sections he is referred to as an officer and is required to give bond and take oath before entering upon "the duties of his office," to use the words of the statute; but the character of an office cannot be attached to a position merely by the name, as its existence must be determined by the nature of the duties attached to it. It is the function and not the designation that controls.

State vs. Jennings, 57 O. S., 415.
Bender vs. Cushing, 14 O. D. N. P. 65, 70.

Its distinguishing characteristic is that the incumbent is clothed in an independent capacity with some part of the sovereignty of the state, and those sovereign functions should be performed continuously and not transiently or incidentally. With these considerations in mind, I very much doubt if a road superintendent may be said to be an official of the township, and, therefore, hold that he comes within the spirit and letter of the statute. In this connection it must be noted that the purpose and object of this law was to include rather than exclude persons in the service of the political subdivisions of the state, and consequently doubts should be resolved in favor of inclusion.

(e) All elective officers are excluded from the provisions of this act by virtue of the exception of officials.

2. Sections 16 and 17 of the act in question read as follows:

> "Section 16. The amount of money to be contributed by the state itself, and by each county, city, incorporated village, school district or other taxing district of the state shall be, unless otherwise provided by law, a sum equal to one percentum of the amount of money expended by the state and for each county, city, incorporated village, school district or other taxing district respectively during the next preceding fiscal year for the service of persons described in subdivision one of section fourteen hereof.
> "Section 17. In the month of January in the years 1914 and 1915, the auditor of state shall draw his warrant on the treasurer of state, in favor of said treasurer as custodian of the state insurance fund, and for deposit to the credit of said fund, for a sum equal to one percentum of the amount of money expended by the state during the last preceding fiscal year, for the service of persons described in subdivision one of section fourteen hereof, which said sums are hereby appropriated and made available for such payment; and thereafter in the month of January of each year, such sums of money shall in like manner be paid into the state insurance fund as may be provided by law; and it shall be the duty of the state liability board of awards to communicate to the general assembly on the first day of each regular session thereof, an estimate of the aggregate amount of money necessary to be contributed by the state during the two years next ensuing as its proper portion of the state insurance fund."

In my judgment the following language from section 17:

> "which said sums are hereby appropriated and made available for such payments" justifies your payment of the sums required out of the general revenue fund of the state. You understand that the amount to be paid is one per cent. of the sum expended by the state for the service of those persons described in subdivision one of section 14 of the act. You should enter on your appropriation book the amount computed by compliance with section 17, and place this sum to the credit of the treasurer of state as an appropriation account.

3. Section 19 reads thus:

> "In January of each year following the filing with him of the lists mentioned in the last preceding section hereof, beginning with January, 1914, the auditor of each county shall issue his warrant in favor of the treasurer of state of Ohio on the county treasurer of his county, for the aggregate amount due from such county and from the taxing districts therein, to the state insurance fund, and the county treasurer shall pay the amount called for by such warrant from the county treasury, and the county auditor shall charge the amount so paid to the county itself and the several taxing districts therein as shown by such lists; and the treasurer of state shall immediately upon receiving such money, convert the same into the state insurance fund."

Under the provisions of this section it is the duty of the county auditor to issue his warrant on the county treasurer, in favor of the treasurer of state, for the aggregate amount due from the county and its taxing districts. The county treasurer shall pay this amount from the county treasury, and out of the undivided tax fund. The county auditor shall charge this amount to the county and the several taxing districts in proportion to the sums that should be contributed by them under the provisions of section 18. It is not necessary that the county auditor specify out of what particular fund of the political subdivision the money should come, as it should be deducted from the aggregate of all taxes collected for such taxing district, and should not be apportioned to the taxing district in question. In other words, it never reaches the treasury of the political subdivision, and is not intended so to do.

4. The funds should be drawn out of appropriation of the general fund referred to in the answer to your second question.

5. From the foregoing answer you will see that it is not necessary for the political subdivisions to appropriate funds for compliance with this act, as this money is not to be paid out by them and never reaches their treasury. In making up their budget, they should take into consideration the fact that this money must be deducted from the funds coming to them, and, therefore, that it will not ever reach their treasury.

6. It is the duty of the county auditor to withhold from the several political subdivisions funds in his February settlement in order to comply with this act. Section 19 expressly calls for the beginning of the operation of this act in January, 1914, in this regard.

7. Section 257 of the General Code reads thus:

"The auditor of state shall prepare and transmit to the auditors of the several counties such forms of returns to be made by them to his office, and such instructions as he deems conducive to the best interests of the state upon a subject affecting the state finances, or the construction of any statute the execution of which devolves in part upon county auditors, and affects the interests of the state. County auditors and all local officers shall observe and use such forms and obey such instructions."

It would seem that the proper collection of moneys for the state insurance fund is a matter affecting the state finances, and so vitally affects the interests of the state, that the state auditor would be empowered under this section to require from the county auditors such returns as will enable him to comply with the provisions of the act in question.

Section 277 of the General Code reads thus:

"The auditor of state, as chief inspector and supervisor, shall prescribe and install a system of accounting and reporting for public offices, (named in section 274). Such system * * * shall prescribe * * * form of reports and statements required for the administration of such offices, or for the information of the public."

Section 278 provides that this system shall provide forms of accounts showing the sources from which the public revenue is received, the amount collected, the amount expended for each purpose, etc.

Section 279 prescribes that a separate account shall be kept of each fund created by each taxing body, showing date and manner of payment therefrom, the name of person or organization paid, and for what purpose paid. These sections provide for the inspection and supervision of public offices and are applicable to all taxing districts. This being true, it is manifest that the auditor of state may require public officers and employes to furnish him with the data necessary to enable him to make up the lists required by the workmen's compensation act.

Very truly yours,
TIMOTHY S. HOGAN,
Attorney General.

EXPENSES OF THE PRESIDENT OF THE BOARD OF TRUSTEES OF BOWLING GREEN NORMAL SCHOOL MAY BE PAID OUT OF THE FUNDS APPROPRIATED FOR THE EXPENSES OF THE BOARD OF TRUSTEES.

The president of the board of trustees of the Bowling Green normal school may legally be paid a per diem for services as president, payment to be charged against the appropriation for the expenses of the trustees.

Where the president incurred traveling expenses outside the state, they should also be paid out of the same fund if they were incurred at the request and under the direction of the board and in the interest of the school.

COLUMBUS, OHIO, July 23, 1913.

DEAR SIR:—I have your letter of June 11, 1913, in which you inquire:

> "We hand you herewith two vouchers approved by the president and secretary of the board of trustees of the Bowling Green Normal School, and beg to submit the following questions for your opinion:
> "1. Are both vouchers payable from appropriation for expenses board of trustees?
> "2. Is either one of the two payable from said appropriation?"

The accounts are very long and for that reason are not copied here, and I content myself by saying the one is for $35.00 for per diem of H. B. Williams, president of said normal college and the other for $178.43 for Mr. Wililams' expenses to Columbus, Toledo, Sandusky, New York and other points from March 21, 1912, to April 14, 1913.

The act of May 10, 1910, 101 Ohio Laws, 320-321, provides:

> "Section 2. * * * The members of said commission shall serve without compensation but shall be paid their reasonable and necessary expenses while in the discharge of their official duties and shall serve until appointment and organization of the boards of trustees, hereinafter provided.
> "Section 4. * * * Before adopting plans for the buildings of said normal schools each board shall elect a president of known ability for the school under its control, who shall have advisory power in determining said plans. In planning said buildings, ample provisions shall be made for the establishment of a well equipped department for the preparation of teachers in the subject of agriculture.
> "They shall serve without compensation other than their reasonable and necessary expenses while engaged in the discharge of their official duties. Not more than three members of each board shall be selected from any one political party."

From this it will be seen—the trustees are not entitled to compensation, but are entitled to their "reasonable and necessary expenses." It is their duty to "elect a president" and there is no provision as to his salary nor prohibition as to his receiving compensation. He is not an "officer" in the sense that where no compensation is provided he must serve without, and cannot be compelled to serve without pay, under the rule laid down in State vs. Boone, 85 O. S. 313.

Such being the law we consider what is meant by the word elect.

> "Chosen to an office, as by vote, but not yet inaugurated, consecrated, or invested with office; in this sense usually after the noun: as governor or mayor elect. Of such a nature as to merit choice or preference; noble; exaulted."

The authority to elect must be construed as part of the duties of the trustees and if in the exercise of such power, and the securing of a proper person, expenses are incurred, the same, if reasonable, become a proper charge against the appropriation for expenses of the trustees. This conclusion results in advising you that the $35.00 item is a proper charge to be paid from said appropriation for expenses of trustees.

When the other bill is considered, another question arises in regard to certain of the items presented. The expenses of President Williams for attending meeting of said board of trustees to Columbus and other points within the state is answered above—the question above suggested being as to the items of expense to New York City, Albany, New York, other places outside the state, and expenses while away from the state.

Under the act mentioned, provision is made for the creation and establiment of two normal schools; the appointment of a commission to select sites for the same, and as soon after the report of said commission as the general assembly shall appropriate money to purchase said sites and the erection of suitable buildings; the appointment of five trustees for each school, who before adopting plans for such building shall elect "a president of known ability" for the school, who shall have advisory power in determining said plans. This has been done. Mr. Williams has been elected; he has accepted and is acting, and if the entire board felt that it was their duty and in the best interest of their trust to visit normal schools and buildings, erected and used therefor, located outside of Ohio, in order that they might best determine upon plans for said buildings, there can be no question but their reasonable and necessary expenses in so doing would be payable out of an appropriation for their expenses under said act.

However, the railroad fare, hotel bills and the like paid by President Williams are not expenses paid out by the trustees and technically speaking are not their expenses, yet, the expenses of one man are not so great as that of two, three or five, and if, in the opinion of the board it was concluded best to send Mr. Williams and not go themselves, as they had the right, I can see no legal reason why his expenses in the interest of said school, and in performing duties to better qualify him to act in his advisory capacity, under said act, may not also be considered as expenses of said trustees and paid from said appropriation, the same as the other. If you have reason to think the expenses outside the state were not incurred at the request and under the direction of the board or not for the purpose mentioned, you have the right and it is your duty to secure full information on this subject.

Very truly yours,
TIMOTHY S. HOGAN,
Attorney General.

INFIRMARY DIRECTOR—COUNTY COMMISSIONERS—TERMS OF INFIRMARY SUPERINTENDENTS EXPIRE JANUARY 1, 1913, UNLESS CONTRACT OR APPOINTMENT MADE FOR A REASONABLE TIME, EXTENDS BEYOND SUCH DATE.

Section 2523, General Code, which formerly provided that infirmary directors could not remove the superintendent of the infirmary except for good and sufficient cause, and which now places the same limitation upon the county commissioners, must be construed to place its inhibition only upon the officers making the appointment and does not in any way abrogate the established rule of law that the term of a deputy expires with the term of the officers or board making the appointment. It is well established, however, that an officer or board may, when necessity demands, contract with a deputy for a term extending beyond his own term, providing such contract is made in good faith and for a reasonable time.

With the exception of cases where such contracts or appointments are made, therefore, the terms of superintendents of infirmaries will expire with the abolition of the board of infirmary directors, to wit: January 1, 1913.

COLUMBUS, OHIO, December 28, 1912.

The Bureau of Inspection and Supervision of Public Offices, Department of Auditor of State, Columbus, Ohio.

GENTLEMEN:—Under date of December 12th, you requested my opinion as follows:

> "The office of infirmary director was abolished to take effect January 1, 1913, at which time their duties devolve in part upon the infirmary superintendents and in part upon the county commissioners. Do the terms of the present infirmary superintendents expire January 1, 1913? What authority, if any, have the county commissioners to discharge the present infirmary superintendents after January 1, 1913?"

and under date of December 17th, you sent the following further communication which is so closely related to the first that it would seem advisable to take up both inquiries together:

> "If you should hold that the county commissioners, after that date, will not be authorized to remove a superintendent of an infirmary without good and sufficient cause, then in that case, where the infirmary directors have contracted with a superintendent of an infirmary for a stipulated term expiring after January 1, 1913, will the county commissioners have authority to employ anyone else at the expiration of such contract without showing good and sufficient cause?"

Prior to the abolition of the board of infirmary directors, section 2523, General Code, reads as follows:

> "The infirmary directors shall appoint a superintendent, who shall reside in some apartment of the infirmary or other building contiguous thereto, and shall receive such compensation for his services as they determine. The superintendent shall perform such duties as the directors impose upon him, and be governed in all respects by their rules and regulations. He shall not be removed by them except for good and sufficient cause. The directors shall not appoint one of their own number superintendent, nor shall any director be eligible to any other office in the infirmary or receive any compensation as physician, or otherwise, directly or indirectly wherein the appointing power is vested in such board."

Under the present law, however, that section now reads:

"The county commissioners shall appoint a superintendent, who shall reside in some apartment of the infirmary or other building contiguous thereto, and shall receive such compensation for his services as they determine. The superintendent shall perform such duties as the commissioners impose upon him, and be governed in all respects by their rules and regulations. He shall not be removed by them except for good and sufficient cause. The commissioners shall not appoint one of their own number superintendent, nor shall any commissioner be eligible to any other office in the infirmary or receive any compensation as physician, or otherwise, directly or indirectly wherein the appointing power is vested in such board."

The ordinary rule applicable in the absence of contrary statutes with reference to the time of incumbency for deputies and subordinates of officers, is stated in 29 Cyc., page 1395, as follows:

"Rights and duties: Deputies, whether common law or statute, are, where their terms are not fixed by statute, supposed to be appointed at the pleasure of the appointing power and their deputation expires with the office on which it depends."

That the word deputies, as stated in this rule, must be construed to include subordinates of a county officer, such as the superintendent of an infirmary, authority is presented in 13 Cyc. 1043. In Ohio, the case of Brady vs. French 6 Nisi Prius, supports the above rule. The fourth syllabus of this case is as follows:

"The employment of a collector by the treasurer for a period of two years does not bind the successor of the treasurer making the appointment, but the appointment expires with the power that gave it. The appointee assumes the peril of the death of the treasurer appointing him, and the law affords him no remedy."

On page 126, the court says:

"Having determined that the collector is a deputy treasurer, the question remains to what extent may one treasurer contract for the employment of a deputy so that such contract shall be binding upon his successor. The answer is found in the language of section 9, which declares that 'a deputy or clerk, appointed in pursuance of law shall hold the appointment during the pleasure of the officer appointing him;' but an officer can have no legal or official 'pleasure' after his term expired, because with the expiration of his term of office he is functus officio and a private citizen. His appointments expire necessarily with the power which gave him life."

It will be observed that this rule contains two distinct elements:

"First. The incumbency of a deputy or subordinate ceases with the authority appointing him.

"Second. Such deputy or subordinate is removable at the will of the appointing power."

At one time the statute providing for the appointment of a superintendent of the infirmary by the infirmary directors, expressly permitted the superintendent of the infirmary to be removed, by the board at its pleasure. This statute was subsequently changed, however, so as to read as above quoted, providing that the infirmary directors could only remove the superintendent for good and sufficient cause.

The question arises, therefore, as to whether the effect of this change was to do away with both of the elements of the rule above stated, and to practically thereby give the superintendent a life position; or whether the effect was merely to remove one element, that is, the right to dismiss at pleasure. The effect of this change of the statute has, to a limited extent, been subjected to the interpretation of the courts. Thus, in the case of Ziegler vs. Palmer, 10 N. P. 545, the superintendent, P., had been appointed for a term of two years, and the infirmary directors attempted to dismiss him and appoint a substitute on the date of the expiration of said term. P. claimed the right to retain the position against the contested claim of the new appointee to office, on the ground that he could be dismissed only for good and sufficient cause. The court, however, on page 547, said:

> "In the opinion of the majority of the court, the amendment simply changed the statute so that into any contract of employment that might thereafter be made for any definite term there would be written, as one of its terms, the law of the state, that he should not be removed during said term of employment without cause, and the majority of the court are of the opinion that he having accepted employment, and by the terms of his employment the contract ceased and determined on April 1st, and he had no longer any right to be and remain on said premises, or in any wise to interfere or obstruct the plaintiff who was then the incumbent and superintendent of the Richland county infirmary."

This case was affirmed in 76 Ohio State, 219.

During the present term of the supreme court, the case of board of infirmary directors of Ross county, Ohio, vs. George Parrett, was decided. In that case the defendant in error had been employed by the infirmary directors for a period of one year; said period extending beyond the term of the infirmary directors making the appointment. Their successors dismissed the superintendent in March, although by its terms, his appointment was to extend to December. The supreme court sustained the appointment and held that the petition of the superintendent for salary from the time intervening the date of his dismissal and the date upon which his appointment was to terminate, by its terms was not subject to demurrer. This case established that when a superintendent of the infirmary has been appointed by the infirmary directors for a definite term, he may not be dismissed during that term even though the personnel of the board may have changed.

In the case of County Commissioners vs. Ranck, 9 O. C. C., 301, it was established that an officer or a board may not make a contract extending beyond their term, unless the same be for a reasonable time and unless made in good faith on the ground of public expediency.

In both of the above cases pertaining to the superintendent of the infirmary, however, it will be observed that the appointment was for a reasonable time, and the question of their good faith did not arise.

I am of the opinion, therefore, that the cases above cited, with reference to the appointment of the superintendent of the infirmary, cannot be said to have established more than that a contract made by a board of infirmary directors for a superintendent, to extend beyond their own term will hold good when such contract is made in good faith and for a reasonable time.

These cases do not throw any direct light, therefore, on the question of the right of a superintendent of the infirmary, who has been appointed without a specification of any definite time, to remain in office after the board making the appointment goes out of office.

The true import of the words "may be removed only for good and sufficient cause" remains to be determined. In very rare instances do we find provision made by statute for the maintenance of a life position and where the long established incident to appointment (to wit a cessation of office with the termination of the appointing power) has been dispensed with, the statutes invariably provide the machinery of the civil service or like safeguards. Under the further policy that statutes conferring rights and powers upon the officers should be construed strictly against the exercise of the right or power, I am of the opinion that we cannot read into the statute in question, the intention to vest the superintendent of the infirmary with the right to his position for life, and I, therefore, conclude that the effect of the words "shall be removed by them only for good and sufficient cause" is to deprive the board making the appointment of the right of removal at pleasure and that the further incident of appointive power, to wit: the cessation of the appointee's term with the termination of the term of office of the appointing power, has not in any way been limited by these words. In other words, this clause places a limitation with respect to power of removal upon the officers making the appointment and does not extend its limitation to their successors in office.

Coming then to your questions which are made with reference to the powers of the county commissioners in this connection, under the change recently made in these statutes, the board of infirmary directors which formerly constituted a body corporate with perpetual succession, has been abolished, and I am of the opinion that this fact further supports the rule adopted in the premises that all appointments made by the board shall cease with the expiration of the board, where no contract has been entered into or no definite time of appointment made.

Where a contract has been made, however, or the term of appointment fixed for a reasonable time, and as to which there is no question of good faith, I am of the opinion that the rule established in the case of Commissioners vs. Ranck should be observed and the superintendent so appointed should be allowed to retain his position until the expiration of such specific term.

Very truly yours,
TIMOTHY S. HOGAN,
Attorney General.

INFIRMARY SUPERINTENDENT—CONTRACTS—POWER OF SUPERINTENDENT TO CONTRACT IN EMERGENCY—EMPLOYMENT OF HELP.

The term superintendent implies the power to control and manage, and therefore, although section 2522, General Code, provides that the county commissioners shall make all contracts and purchases necessary for the county infirmary, nevertheless when emergencies arise, requiring temporary appointments or purchases for county supplies which the commissioners themselves cannot care for, the superintendent may be authorized by the county commissioners by general regulations to act. The county commissioners are without power, however, to delegate the discretionary duties imposed upon them by section 2522 to make permanent contracts.

COLUMBUS, OHIO, January 7, 1913.

The Bureau of Inspection and Supervision of Public Offices, Department of Auditor of State, Columbus, Ohio.

GENTLEMEN:—Under favor of December 16th you request my opinion as follows:

"Section 2522, G. C., as approved June 8, 1911, provides that the county commissioners shall make all contracts and purchases necessary for the county infirmary.

"Section 2523 of the same act provides that the superintendent shall perform such duties as the commissioners impose upon him.

"Question 1. May the county commissioners delegate to the infirmary superintendent the authority to employ any necessary help needed at the infirmary? If this should be held in the negative, would the commissioners have the authority to authorize the superintendent to make temporary employment until the next regular meeting of the board?

"Question 2. In view of the provision in section 2522 that the commissioners shall make all purchases necessary for the county infirmary, what is the effect or limitation of section 2528 providing for a reserve fund to be expended by the superintendent for current supplies and expenses?"

Sections 2522, 2523 and 2528 of the General Code provide as follows:

"Section 2522. The board of county commissioners shall make all contracts and purchases necessary for the county infirmary and prescribe such rules and regulations as it deems proper for its management and good government, and to promote sobriety, morality and industry among inmates. The commissioners shall keep a separate book in which the clerk, or if there is no commissioners' clerk, the county auditor, shall keep a separate record of their transactions respecting the county infirmary, which book shall at all times be open to public inspection.

"Section 2523. The county commissioners shall appoint a superintendent, who shall reside in some apartment of the infirmary or other building contiguous thereto, and shall receive such compensation for his services as they determine. The superintendent shall perform such duties as the commissioners impose upon him, and be governed in all respects by their rules and regulations. He shall not be removed by them except for good and sufficient cause. The commissioners shall not appoint one of their number superintendent, nor shall any commissioner be eligible to any other office in the infirmary or receive any compensation as physician, or otherwise, directly or indirectly, wherein the appointing power is vested in such board.

"Section 2528. At the request of the superintendent, the county commissioners shall set apart from the poor fund a reserve fund not to exceed at any time two hundred dollars, which upon their order shall be paid to the superintendent and expended by him as needed for current supplies and expenses. The superintendent shall keep an accurate account of such fund, and all expenditures therefrom shall be audited by the board. When, and as often as such amount is entirely disbursed, on the order of the commissioners, the county auditor shall pay to the superintendent the amount so appropriated."

The rule as to the power of an officer to delegate his powers is set out in Mechem on Public Officers, section 567, as follows:

"It is a well settled rule, in the case of private agents, that where the execution of the trust requires, upon the part of the agent, the exercise of judgment and discretion, its performance cannot, in the absence of express or implied authority, be delegated to another."

Power to contract involves a discretion, and, in view of the rule that grants of power to an officer must be strictly construed against the existence of the power, I am constrained to hold that the power of making contracts with reference to the infirmary, in view of section 2522, General Code, should be left to the county commissioners as far as it is possible to so do, without defeating the intents and purposes of the act.

A statute, however, must be interpreted with a view to the whole act, to the effect that its purposes shall not be defeated. When the present act was enacted, providing for the abolition of the infirmary directors, the powers of the superintendent of the infirmary were extended; and when the duties of the infirmary directors were transferred to the county commissioners the county commissioners were not given duties as extensive as those which formerly rested upon the infirmary directors.

The word "superintendent" is defined in the Century dictionary as,

"One who superintends or has the oversight and charge of something, with the power of direction. * * *"

The superintendent, therefore, has charge and direction of the infirmary, and, as you suggest in your letter, circumstances may arise in connection therewith which would require the exercise of powers in the nature of contract, which it would be impossible for the county commissioners to exercise in emergencies; as where a fireman or engineer, or an employe whose services are indispensable, should resign without notice. Inasmuch as it would be impossible, in such cases, for the county commissioners to take the necessary action, I am of the opinion that the proper person to perform such duties is the superintendent; and, under section 2522, the county commissioners may make such regulations as would permit the infirmary superintendent to act in such cases.

The act itself, in section 2525, General Code, recognizes that the superintendent, at times, shall be required to purchase certain articles for the infirmary, by providing that he shall require itemized bills for all articles so purchased by him.

Also, section 2526, General Code, provides that the superintendent shall sell all products of the infirmary farm, not necessary for its use, and section 2528, cited by you, provides that the county commissioners shall set apart a certain sum, which may be expended by the superintendent for current supplies and expenses.

All of these duties partake, in a sense, in the nature of a contract and clearly show a recognition of the fact that the power of contract cannot be left absolutely to the county commissioners.

Having in mind these principles, in answer to your second question, I am of the opinion that the effect of section 2528, General Code, therein referred to by you, is to enable the superintendent to make use of the funds allotted by such section for the purpose of meeting current needs, which cannot, conveniently, be met by the county commissioners.

In direct answer to your questions, therefore, I am of the opinion that the county commissioners alone can make contracts of permanent employment; but, in cases of emergency, wherein it is impossible for the county commissioners to act, the superintendent may be authorized by them, through general regulations, to act.

Very truly yours,
TIMOTHY S. HOGAN,
Attorney General.

PROSECUTING ATTORNEYS—TERM OF OFFICE—OFFICER HOLDING OVER UNTIL SUCCESSOR ELECTED AND QUALIFIED, ENTITLED TO PROPORTIONATE COMPENSATION—NEW BOND RECOMMENDED.

When by virtue of prosecution, under the corrupt practice act, a prosecuting attorney-elect withholds from qualifying, the former incumbent, under section 8 of the General Code, holds his office until the officer-elect is qualified. The former incumbent retains his term to all intents and purposes and is entitled, therefore, to the proportionate compensation pertinent to the position.

It is recommended that the officer holding over provide a new bond.

COLUMBUS, OHIO, January 9, 1913.

The Bureau of Inspection and Supervision of Public Offices, Department of Auditor of State, Columbus, Ohio.

GENTLEMEN:—Under favor of December 31st, you requested my opinion as follows:

> "A prosecuting attorney was elected November 5, 1912. Subsequent to his election investigation was made based upon the corrupt practices act made a law in 1911. As a result of the investigation the prosecuting attorney-elect was indicted by the grand jury on December 13, 1912.
> "By legal advise the officers empowered to issue the certificate of election and commission have refused to grant the prosecuting attorney-elect his proper credentials and it is quite apparent that said prosecuting attorney-elect will not be qualified on the 6th of January, 1913, when the term of his predecessor expires.

"Query. Does the law authorize the present incumbent to hold over until the qualification of his successor and can he legally continue to draw his salary as prosecuting attorney; or should there be an apopintment by the court of common pleas? In case the prosecuting attorney holds over, should he again qualify?"

Section 2909 of the General Code provides as follows:

"There shall be elected biennially, in each county, a prosecuting attorney, who shall hold his office for two years, beginning on the first Monday of January next after his election."

Section 2911 provides as follows:

"Before entering upon the discharge of his duties, the prosecuting attorney shall give bond to the state in a sum not less than one thousand dollars, to be fixed by the court of common pleas or the probate court, with sureties to be approved by either of such courts, conditioned that he will faithfully discharge all the duties enjoined upon him by law, and pay over, according to law, all moneys by him received in his official capacity. Such bond, with the approval of such court of the amount thereof and sureties thereon, shall be deposited with the county treasurer."

Section 8 of the General Code provides as follows:

"A person holding an office of public trust shall continue therein until his successor is elected or appointed and qualified, unless otherwise provided in the constitution or laws."

Inasmuch as it is not otherwise provided as to prosecuting attorneys, the provisions of section 8, supra, are controlling, and the officer at present holding the office will continue as incumbent until his successor is elected and qaulified. In the present case his successor has been elected, but he had not qualified, and the present incumbent will retain his office until the officer elected has qualified.

The third paragraph of syllabus in the case of State vs. Metcalfe, 80 O. S., 245, provides that when the term of an officer is extended until a successor is elected and qualified, the period between the expiration of his original term and the election and qualification of his successor is as much a part of the incumbent's term of office as the fixed statutory period. On page 264 the court says:

"The potential capacity to hold over on the part of Judge Borrows then became an actuality and accomplished fact, the effect of which was to extend Judge Burrows' term to all intents and purposes as completely as would have been the case had he originally been elected for such extended term, or as it would have been extended had the general assembly, acting under the constitutional warrant, made provision by statute for its extension."

Under this principle, an officer holding over possesses to all intents and purposes the rights, powers and authorities of a regular incumbent with a fixed term and would therefore be entitled to draw the proportionate salary for the actual time of his incumbency.

As to the necessity for the prosecuting attorney holding over to file a new bond, under section 2911 of the General Code above quoted it is provided:

"The prosecuting attorney is required to file a bond before entering upon the discharge of his duties in the sum of ($1,000.00) one thousand dollars conditioned that he will faithfully discharge all the duties enjoined upon him by law and pay over, according to law, all money received by him in his official capacity."

Under this provision it would seem that the bond of one thousand dollars required of him covered his entire term of office, and the fact that the term has been extended under the circumstances herein presented appears to be contemplated by the bond. Inasmuch as the condition of the bond provides for the performance of all the duties required by law, and there is no period of time fixed for its duration, it would seem that the bond first provided for the prosecuting attorney would continue for the time of his extended term. However, the court in the case of State ex rel. Monen vs. Killits, 8 O. C. C., 34, in considering a question very similar to the one at hand, used the following language:

"For myself I have pretty distinct views upon that question. But it is a very important question, and one that we have not ourselves been able to give our full attention to; and inasmuch as it is a question of doubt, and this is a matter that affects the public, the public welfare, and those who do business with the courts in the clerk's office, it has seemed to us the safer and more prudent course will be for the clerk to give a new bond."

I would, therefore, suggest that the present officer pursue the safer and more prudent course of filing a new bond.

Very truly yours,
TIMOTHY S. HOGAN,
Attorney General.

INFIRMARY—CONTRACTS WITH PHYSICIANS INCLUDE BOTH MEDICAL SERVICES AND MEDICINES.

The provisions of section 2546, General Code, disclose the intention that the county commissioners in their contracts with physicians as therein provided, should include both medical relief and medicines necessary within the jurisdiction of their work.

COLUMBUS, OHIO, December 30, 1912.

The Bureau of Inspection and Supervision of Public Offices, Department of Auditor of State, Columbus, Ohio.

GENTLEMEN:—Under date of December 17th, you requested my opinion upon the following:

"Must contracts with infirmary physicians made under section 2546. G. C., include medicines, or should separate bills be submitted for medicines and professional services and separate contracts entered into?"

Section 2546, General Code, is as follows:

> "County commissioners may contract with one or more competent physicians, to furnish medical relief and medicines necessary for the persons of their respective townships to come under their charge, but no contract shall extend beyond one year. Such contract shall be given to the lowest competent bidder, the county commissioners reserving the right to reject any or all bids. The physicians shall report quarterly to the county commissioners on blanks furnished by the commissioners, the names of all persons to whom they have furnished medical relief or medicines, the number of visits made in attending such persons, the character of the disease, and such other information as may be required by the commissioners. The commissioners may discharge any such physician for proper cause."

If the above statute is to be construed to permit or require county commissioners to enter into separate contracts for medical services and for medicines, it would be necessary to read the word "and" as "or" as it appears in the statute.

The rule pertaining to the interchange of the words "and" and "or" is stated in Southerland on Statutory Construction, section 397, as follows:

> "Use of the words 'or' and 'and'—The popular use of 'or' and 'and' is so loose and so frequently inaccurate that it has infected statutory enactments. While they are not treated as interchangeable, and should be followed when their accurate reading does not render the sense dubious, their strict meaning is more readily departed from than that of other words, and one read in place of the other in deference to the meaning of the context. In People vs. Rice it is said that the words 'and' and 'or' when used in a statute are convertible as the sense may require. The word 'or' in a statute may have the meaning of 'that is to say,' 'to wit,' etc."

In accordance with this rule the words should be read as they appear when the statute gives a clear meaning without interchange. In the above statute, "and" may be read as it appears without detriment to clearness of meaning. The statute authorizes the county commissioners to enter into a contract with one physician to furnish medical relief and medicines, if it is deemed advisable. It would not seem consistent or necessary to require a separate contract for each purpose, with one contractor.

I am of the opinion that the medicines referred to are such as are directly connected with and incidental to the work of furthering medical relief contracted for. If the legislature had intended that separate contracts should be entered into for each purpose, it would not have compelled a contract to be made for medicines with physicians alone; it would have authorized such contract to be made with druggists, dealers or other persons able to furnish the same, if it had not been intended that the same contract was to include both medicines and medical relief.

The matter of furnishing medicines is so closely connected with the administering of medical relief, that it is unquestionable that economy and efficiency are clearly best to be conserved by placing both matters in the hands of a single individual.

I am of the opinion, therefore, that the statute authorizes but one contract to be entered into for both medical relief and medicines.

Very truly yours,
TIMOTHY S. HOGAN,
Attorney General.

OFFICES COMPATIBLE—DEPUTY CITY AUDITOR AND OFFICE IN STATE MILITIA.

Inasmuch as an office in the state militia is not incompatible with the office of deputy city auditor, an incumbent of the latter office, who is also an officer in the state militia, may draw a salary from the municipality and from the United States government, while on special duty for the United States for the same period, being absent from duty as deputy city auditor for a period of two weeks.

COLUMBUS, OHIO, January 9, 1913.

Bureau of Inspection and Supervision of Public Offices, Department of Auditor of State, Columbus, Ohio.

GENTLEMEN:—On December 30, 1912, you requested my opinion as follows:

> "May a deputy city auditor, who is an officer in the state militia, draw a salary from a municipality and from the U. S. government, while on special duty for the United States for the same period, being absent from deputy city auditor for a period of two weeks?"

I am of the opinion that an office in the state militia does not bear such a relation to the office of deputy city auditor as to bring them within the rule of incompatibility. "One is in no sense subordinate to or interfering with the other," nor are their "nature and duties such as to render it impossible from conditions of public policy for one incumbent to retain both;" nor does either office in any way act as a "check upon the other," and the absence of two weeks on military duty is not such a circumstance as would make it "physically impossible to perform the duties of both offices."

The rule is well settled that where two public offices are not incompatible in their nature under the rule of common law, and where the holding of both contemporaneously by one individual is not expressly prohibited they may be occupied and their compensation drawn by a single incumbent.

I am, therefore, of the opinion that a deputy city auditor may draw his salary both from the municipality and from the United States government while on special duty for the United tSates for the same period, being absent from duty as deputy city auditor for a period of two weeks.

Yours very truly,
TIMOTHY S. HOGAN,
Attorney General.

FEES OF OFFICER CONDUCTING PRISONER TO WORKHOUSE, PAID FROM COUNTY AND MUNICIPAL TREASURY IN ACCORDANCE WITH LAST STATUTE—REPEAL OF FORMER STATUTE BY IMPLICATION.

Inasmuch as section 12385, General Code, providing that the fees of an officer transporting a prisoner to the workhouse, shall in state cases be paid from the county treasury and in city cases from the municipal treasury, completely covers the problem of the payment of such fees, and as this statute was enacted subsequent to section 4132, General Code, which provides for the payment of such fees from the county and township treasury, the former statute must be construed to repeal the latter. The payment of such fees will be governed exclusively by section 12385, General Code.

COLUMBUS, OHIO, January 6, 1913.

Bureau of Inspection and Supervision of Public Offices, Department of Auditor of State, Columbus, Ohio.

GENTLEMEN:—I beg to acknowledge receipt of your letter of December 14, 1912, in which you state:

> "Please construe and harmonize, if possible, sections 4132 and 12385 of the General Code."

The sections of the General Code referred to in your communication are as follows:

> "Section 4132. The officer having the execution of the final sentence of a court, magistrate, or mayor, shall cause the convict to be conveyed to the workhouse as soon as practicable after the sentence is pronounced, and all officers shall be paid the fees therefor allowed by law for similar services in other cases. Such fees shall be paid, when the sentence is by the court, from the county treasury, and when by the magistrate, from the township treasury.
> "Section 12385, Sheriff or other officer, transporting a person to such workhouse shall have the following fees therefor: six cents per mile for himself, going and returning, and five cents per mile for transporting each convict, and five cents per mile going and coming for the services of each guard, to be allowed as in penitentiary cases, the number of miles to be computed by the usual routes of travel, to be paid in state cases out of the general revenue fund of the county on the allowance of the county commissioners, and, in cases for the violation of the ordinance of a municipality, by such municipality on the order of the council thereof."

The conflict between these two sections has reference to the source from which the payment of the fees allowed to transporting officers is to come. The former provides that such fees, when the sentence is by the court, shall be paid from the county treasury, and when the sentence is by the magistrate from the township treasury. The latter provides that such fees shall be paid in state cases out of the general revenue fund of the county on the allowance of the county commissioners, and in cases involving the violation of municipal ordinance, by the municipality on the order of the council thereof.

The legislative history of these statutes discloses that what is now section 4132 of the General Code was formerly section 2101 of the Revised Statutes (Bates 1536-372), It is first found in volume 66 O. L. at page 196, being section 277 and has remained substantially in the same form from the date of its enactment to the present time.

Section 12385 was originally enacted in 1883, 80 O. L. 220 and amended in 1884, 81 O. L. 84. It was carried into the Revised Statutes as section 6801a.

It is clearly apparent that these statutes are directly in conflict with one another in respect to the source of payment of the fees of officers transporting prisoners to the workhouse. Neither section was expressly repealed by the legislature and therefore both cannot stand.

On the subject of repeals by implication our supreme court in the recent case of Goff et al. vs. Gates et al. Com., and Gates et al. Com. vs Granger to be reported in 87 O. S., held:

> "An act of the legislature that fails to repeal in terms an existing statute on the same subject-matter must be held to repeal the former statute by implication if the later act is in direct conflict with the former, or if the subsequent act revises the whole subject-matter of the former act and is evidently intended as a substitute for it."

Donahue, J., in rendering the opinion of the court says:

> "Repeals by implication are never favored. On the contrary, a court will endeavor to make such reasonable construction of the new legislation so that effect may be given to both. Thorniley, Auditor vs. State ex rel. Dickey, 81 O. S. 108; Eggleston et al. vs. Harrington, Assignee, 61 O. S. 397-404.
> "If, however, a statute is in clear conflict with existing legislation upon the same subject-matter, effect must be given to the later act even if the result is to repeal by implication the older statute. It is also a well known rule of construction that where a statute purports to revise the whole subject-matter of a former act and thereby evidences the fact that it is intended as a substitute for the former, although it contains no express words to that effect, it operates as a repeal of the former law."

Section 12385 fully covers the subject of payment of fees to officers transporting prisoners to workhouses, and was, in my judgment, intended by the legislature as a substitute for section 4132, although the latter was not expressly repealed. Inasmuch as section 12385 was passed after section 4132, I am of the opinion that the former section repeals the latter by implication. In other words, section 4132 is ineffective. The source from which the fees of such officers are to come is governed by section 12385 rather than by section 4132. In all state cases such fees are to be paid from the county treasury and in cases involving the violation of a municipal ordinance from the municipal treasury. In no event can the township become liable for the payment thereof.

Yours very truly,
TIMOTHY S. HOGAN,
Attorney General.

CONTRACTS—BIDS FOR CONTRACTS IN EXCESS OF $500.00 ISSUED BY DIRECTOR OF PUBLIC SERVICE WITHOUT AUTHORIZATION OF COUNCIL, VOID—REISSUE OF BIDS NECESSARY.

When a director of public service advertises for bids for a contract in excess of $500.00, without authorization of council, in accordance with section 4328, General Code, such bids are illegal and void. The subsequent authorization of council for such contracts does not remedy the defect; bids must be reissued.

COLUMBUS, OHIO, December 16, 1912.

Bureau of Inspection and Supervision of Public Offices, Columbus, Ohio.

GENTLEMEN:—Your favor of November 22, 1912, is received in which you inquire:

> "A director of public service advertised for bids for water meters involving an expenditure of over $500.00 without first obtaining the authority of council to contract in such sum. The bids submitted as the result of such advertisement were opened on November 7th. Thereupon, the city auditor notified the director that he could not enter into contract for the reason that no authority had been granted by council. On November 11, 1912, the council passed a resolution authorizing and directing the director of public service to enter into a contract, a copy of which resolution is enclosed.
> "Query. May the director of public service, acting upon the bids submitted on November 7th, make award to the lowest and best bidder and enter into a contract which would be a valid and legal obligation, or would said director be required to readvertise and make award on bids subsequently submitted in order to make such contract legal."

This question involves the construction of section 4328, General Code, which reads:

> "The director of public service may make any contract or purchase supplies or material or provide labor for any work under the supervision of that department not involving more than five hundred dollars. When an expenditure within the department, other than the compensation of persons employed therein, exceeds five hundred dollars, such expenditure shall first be authorized and directed by ordinance of council. When so authorized and directed, the director of public service shall make a written contract with the lowest and best bidder after advertisement for not less than two nor more than four consecutive weeks in a newspaper of general circulation within the city."

This section requires that the expenditure in question "shall first be authorized and directed by ordinance of council," and that "when so authorized and directed" the director of public service may enter into a contract after advertisement.

The first step to be taken is to secure the authorization of council to make the expenditure. If the council so authorizes the expenditure the director may enter into the contract after advertising for bids.

If the council fails to authorize the expenditure at all the advertisement for bids, if made before council has acted, would be a useless expense.

The director of public service should first secure the authorization of council and thereafter he may proceed to advertise for bids.

It is my opinion that council must first authorize the expenditure and that the advertisement for bids must be made thereafter.

It will be necessary, therefore, in the case in question to readvertise for bids. The contract cannot be let upon the bids which were received before council authorized the expenditure.

Respectfully,
TIMOTHY S. HOGAN,
Attorney General.

PUBLICATIONS—COUNCIL MAY BY ORDINANCE PROVIDE FOR PUBLICATION OF SEMI-ANNUAL APPROPRIATION ORDINANCES.

Under the decisions of Ohio, when council is authorized to publish in a specified manner, the power of council to make further publication is not restricted. There is no express provision for the publication of a semi-annual appropriation ordinance.

Under section 4229, General Code, however, the right of council to require its ordinances to be published is recognized and the construction is, therefore, justified that it was the legislative intent to permit council, by ordinance, to provide for the publication of any ordinance which it may in its discretion desire to publish.

Newspapers may, therefore, be paid for publication of semi-annual appropriation ordinances, when the ordinance expressly states that the clerk of council shall make publication thereof and the publication is made in accordance with section 4229, General Code.

COLUMBUS, OHIO, December 7, 1912.

Bureau of Inspection and Supervision of Public Offices, Columbus, Ohio.

GENTLEMEN:—I am in receipt of your letter of October 7th wherein you inquire as follows:

> "We respectfully request your written opinion as to the payments made to newspapers for publication of the semi-annual appropriation ordinances, provided that the ordinance expressly states that the clerk of council shall make publication of said ordinance."

Section 4227, General Code, provides that ordinances of a general nature, or providing for improvements shall be published before going into operation and that no ordinance shall take effect until the expiration of ten days after first publication of such notice.

Section 4228, General Code, provides:

> "Ordinances and resolutions requiring publication shall be published in two newspapers of opposite politics, published and of general circulation in such municipality, if such there be, and shall be published in a newspaper printed in the German language if there is in such municipality such a paper having a bona fide paid circulation within such municipality of not less than one thousand copies. Proof of such circulation shall be made by the affidavit of the proprietor or editor of such paper, and shall be filed with the clerk of the council."

Section 4229, General Code, provides:

"Except as otherwise provided in this title, in all municipal corporations the statements, ordinances, resolutions, orders, proclamations, notices and reports required by this title, or the ordinances of a municipality to be published, shall be published in two newspapers of opposite politics of general circulation therein, if there are such in the municipality, and for the following times: The statement of receipt of disbursements required shall be published once; the ordinances and resolutions once a week for two weeks consecutive weeks; proclamations of elections once a week for two consecutive weeks; notices of contracts and of sale of bonds once a week for four consecutive weeks; all other matters shall be published once."

Under section 4227, General Code, the only ordinances that require publication are those of a general nature or providing for improvement. It has been held by this department, following the decision of State ex rel. Transcript Printing Co. vs. City of Wellston, decided by the circuit court of Jackson county, Ohio, that a semi-annual appropriation ordinance did not require publication as it was not an ordinance of a general nature or providing for an improvement. Therefore, as far as section 4227, General Code, is concerned there is no requirement upon a village council to publish such an ordinance, and there being no requirement of law in that regard there would be no power in council to publish such an ordinance under said section.

In Wasem vs. Cincinnati, 2 Cincinnati superior court reports page 84, decided in 1871, it was held:

"Section 100 of the Municipal Code, which requires the publication of ordinances in some newspaper of general circulation, does not preclude the publication of ordinances by other means, in the discretion of the city council, and the court will not by injunction restrain that discretion, even though the ordinances should be published in newspapers which have not a general circulation in the city; provided, they are also published in some newspaper which has such general circulation."

Storer, J., on page 86 says:

"Does, then, the language of section 100 of the Municipal Code expressly or impliedly limit the power of the city council in that particular? It requires that the ordinance shall be published in some newspaper of general circulation in the corporation. But it does not expressly, nor impliedly, say that that is all the publication that shall be permitted or procured. Nor is there any such limitation of power expressed or implied in section 562 of the Municipal Code. That section requires the publication of the notice of all improvements to be contracted for in some newspaper of general circulation, and in two if there are so many in the corporation. There is no language of restriction in either section. The council has as much power to publish it as it would have had under the general powers in section 8, if there had been no provisions like that in section 100. It may give such additional publicity to an ordinance as it may deem expedient, and it may employ other means than newspapers in general circulation, if in its discretion such other means are deemed useful. It may publish in a newspaper which is printed in the German language; but the publication must be made in at least one paper of general circulation in the corporation."

"As to the claim that the advertising, amounting to $300.00, was excessive: We do not understand that it is claimed, that the amount paid any particular paper was excessive—the claim is that the advertising in each particular instance was in more newspapers than required by law. The statute does not limit the number of papers in which the advertising shall be made. It simply is that, in each instance, the advertisement shall be in 'some newspaper.' But this is not saying that it shall be in no more than one. The board seems to be given a discretion in this matter; and when there is nothing to show an abuse of its discretion, exception cannot be taken to the amount paid for advertising the various steps in the proceeding as required by law."

It would appear from the two cases foregoing cited that it is the opinion of the courts that where authority is given for publication a municipal council may cause additional publication to be made of the particular ordinance as in their discretion they deem advisable. This rule, however, does not seem to be borne out in the case of county officers as is shown by the case of The Vindicator Printing Co., vs State 68 O. S. 362, the first syllabus of which is as follows:

"Where the number of publications of a sheriff's election proclamation or other public notice, is fixed by statute, there is no authority in the board of county commissioners, or other county officer, to contract for publications in excess of the number directed by statute. The board is also without authority to allow a claim for such excessive publications, and the allowance of such claim does not bind the county. Nor is authority to adjudicate and allow such claim given by the fact that with the charge for unauthorized publications there is, on the same paper, a charge for a publication which is authorized by statute."

I believe that the rule as expressed in 68 O. S. above referred to is the better rule in this: That wherever it is definitely provided by law for publication a municipality or other public body is not authorized to go beyond the express provisions of the statute.

In the case in question there is no provision whatever for the publication of the ordinance for the reason that it is not one of a general nature or providing for an improvement, and even though the cases of Wasem vs. Cincinnati supra, and Cincinnati vs Davis supra were considered as stating the proper rule of law, yet in each of those cases the municipality was authorized to publish a particular ordinance or notice.

Section 4229, General Code, however, provides in part as follows:

"Except as otherwise provided in this title, in all municipal corporations, the * * * ordinances * * * required by this title, or the ordinances of a municipality to be published, shall be published in two newspapers of opposite politics of general circulation therein, if there are such in the municipality, and for the following times; * * * ordinances and resolutions once a week for two consecutive weeks * * *."

As it is not otherwise provided in the title in which section 4229, G. C., is found that ordinance other than those of a general nature or providing for improvements shall be published, and as it is provided in said section 4229 that ordinances required by the ordinances of a municipality to be published shall be published in a specific manner, and as the ordinance in question in itself provides that it should be published, I am of the opinion that the legislature intended to leave it discretionary with the council of the municipality to decide what ordinance other than those of a general nature or providing for an improvement should be published.

I am, therefore, of the opinion that it is proper to pay newspapers for publication of semi-annual appropriation ordinances providing the ordinance expressly states that the clerk of council shall make publication thereof and the publication is made in accordance with section 4229, General Code.

Very truly yours,
TIMOTHY S. HOGAN,
Attorney General.

MUNICIPAL CORPORATIONS MAY NOT EXPEND MONEY FOR PURPOSE OF MUNICIPAL BUDGET EXHIBITION.

A municipal corporation does not possess the power to expend moneys for the purpose of conducting a municipal budget exhibition; furthermore, even though such power exists, where an amount for such purpose had not been set forth in the annual budget and had therefore not been included by the budget commission, it could not be allowed by virtue of the Smith one per cent. law.

COLUMBUS, OHIO, December 13, 1912.

Bureau of Inspection and Supervision of Public Offices, Department of Auditor of State, Columbus, Ohio.

GENTLEMEN:—I have your letter of October 28, 1912, in which you inquire as follows:

"The city of Cincinnati has recently held a municipal budget exhibition, the principal object of which was to show the citizens how their money is being expended and how the various departments are operated. This was a new undertaking not contemplated by council when the appropriation ordinance was drawn, and no provision therein was made for such expenses. It was operated mainly by the bureau of municipal research and the bulk of the expenses was paid from private funds, but the city auditor is now receiving vouchers from various departments to cover expenses undergone in preparing this exhibit and the city desires to know if said expenses are a legal charge against the city funds. We are informed that no provision for such expenses was made in the annual budget for the municipal expenses of 1912.

"Should the city auditor honor such vouchers and draw his warrant on the city treasurer?"

In answer thereto permit me to say that there are two reasons to my mind which preclude the payment out of city funds for expenses in connection with the municipal budget exhibition. They are,

"1. This exhibit does not come within the provision of any of the legislative grants of power to municipalities, and,

"2. The act of May 31, 1911, (Smith one per cent. law) provides:

" 'But no appropriation shall be made for any purpose not set forth in the annual budget nor for a greater amount for such purpose than the total amount fixed by the budget commission exclusive of receipts and balances.' "

It necessarily follows that if appropriations are to be limited as stated, the payments cannot be made to satisfy a claim not provided for in the budget.

Yours very truly,
TIMOTHY S. HOGAN,
Attorney General.

CONSTITUTIONAL AMENDMENT — EIGHT-HOUR LAW NOT SELF-EXECUTING—ABSENCE OF PENALTY.

Inasmuch as proposal 13 of the constitutional amendment, providing that eight hours will constitute a day's work in public affairs, does not provide any penalty for violation thereof, it is to be presumed that is left to the legislature to determine whether or not such law shall apply to municipal corporations in their governmental, as well as private capacity, and also to provide for its proper enforcement.

Until, therefore, the legislature has made such provision, it cannot be considered illegal for a city to employ an engineer in the operation of the municipal waterworks or electirc light plant for more than eight hours in any one day.

COLUMBUS, OHIO, December 13, 1912.

Bureau of Inspection and Supervision of Public Offices, Department of Auditor of State, Columbus, Ohio.

GENTLEMEN:—In your letter of October 17, 1912, you ask:

"We respectfully request your written opinion upon the following question, construing the amendment to article 2, section 37 of the constitution: Is it a violation of the provisions of said constitutional amendment for a city to employ engineers in the operation of a municipal waterworks or electric light plant for more than eight hours in any one day? If so, what is the penalty?"

Proposal 13, as adopted September 3, 1912, reads as follows:

"Section 37. Except in cases of extraordinary emergency, not to exceed eight hours shall constitute a day's work, and not to exceed forty-eight hours a week's work, for workmen engaged on any public work carried on or aided by the state, or any political sub-division thereof, whether done by contract, or otherwise."

The only question is whether the expression "any public work carried on" is to be limited to construction work such as public buildings, pikes and the like or shall be held to include operatives of utilities when owned and operated by the state or a municipality.

Inasmuch as section 37 does not enforce itself automatically, so to speak, I feel that until the legislature takes action, which it will doubtless do at its coming session, a specific answer to your inquiry cannot be made as the legislature may or may not include the employes you mention in its action.

However, no penalty can attach until one is prescribed by the legislature, and it must be remembered that this section does not go into effect until January 1, 1913.

Yours very truly,

TIMOTHY S. HOGAN,

Attorney General.

COUNTY COMMISSIONERS—CLERK SHALL KEEP BUT ONE RECORD OF OFFICIAL ACTS EXCEPT WITH REFERENCE TO INFIRMARY AFFAIRS.

Section 2406, General Code, providing that the clerk of the county commissioners shall keep a full and complete record of the proceedings of the board, provides but one book for that purpose. In view of the language of this statute, therefore, and of the further fact that the keeping of separate records of separate departments of work would require either a duplication of records in two books or would result in a part of the proceedings of each particular session being found in separate books, the clerk cannot be required, in contemplation of this statute, to maintain records in regard to county ditches and turnpikes.

With respect to infirmary affairs, however, section 2522, General Code, expressly requires the county commissioners to keep separate books in which the clerk shall keep a separate record of the transactions respecting the county infirmary.

COLUMBUS, OHIO, January 16, 1913.

Bureau of Inspection and Supervision of Public Offices, Columbus, Ohio.

GENTLEMEN:—Your favor of November 22, 1912, is received in which you inquire:

"May the clerk of the board of county commissioners legally record the official acts of said board in regard to county ditches, turnpikes and infirmary affairs in a record book separate from the record giving the action of said board upon the allowance of bills and other general duties devolving upon them?"

Section 2406, General Code, provides:

"The clerk shall keep a full record of the proceedings of the board, and a general index thereof, in a suitable book provided for that purpose, entering each motion with the name of the person making it on the record.

He shall call and record the yeas and nays on each motion which involves the levying of taxes or the appropriation or payment of money. He shall state fully and clearly in the record any question relating to the power and duties of the board which is raised for its consideration by any person having an interest therein, together with the decision thereon, and shall call and record the yeas and nays by which the decision was made. When requested by a party interested in the proceedings or by his counsel, he shall record any legal proposition decided by the board, the decision thereon and the votes by which the decision was reached. If either party, in person or by counsel, except to such decision, the clerk shall record the exceptions with the record of the decision."

It will be observed that in this section the word "book" is used in the singular. There is a special provision of statute in reference to the recording of the acts of the commissioners in reference to infirmary matters.

Section 2522, General Code, provides:

"The board of county commissioners shall make all contracts and purchases necessary for the county infirmary and prescribe such rules and regulations as it deems proper for its management and good government, and to promote sobriety, morality and industry among inmates. The commissioners shall keep a separate book in which the clerk, or if there is no commissioners' clerk, the county auditor, shall keep a separate record of their transactions respecting the county infirmary, which book shall at all times be open to public inspection."

By virtue of this section the county commissioners are not only authorized, but they are required to keep a separate book in which to record their transactions respecting the county infirmary. This section was placed in its present form by the act of 102 Ohio Laws 433, which act abolished the position of infirmary director and placed the infirmary in charge of the county commissioners.

Section 2407, General Code, provides:

"Immediately upon the opening of each day's session of the board, the records of the proceedings of the session of the previous day shall be read by the clerk, and, if correct, approved and signed by the commissioners. When the board is not in session, the record book shall be kept in the auditor's office, and open at all proper times to public inspection. It shall be duly certified by the president and clerk, and shall be received as evidence in every court in the state."

By virtue of this section the first order of business is the reading and approval of the record of the proceedings of the session of the previous day. The clerk of the county commissioners is required to keep a full and complete record of the proceedings of the board.

Section 2401, General Code, provides:

"There shall be four regular sessions of the board of county commissioners each year, at the office of the commissioners at the county seat, commencing, respectively, on the first Monday of March, June, September and December. At each meeting the board shall transact such business as required by law,"

Section 2402, General Code, provides:

> "Special sessions of the board may be held as often as the commissioners deem it necessary. At a regular or special session, the board may make any necessary order or contract in relation to the building, furnishing, repairing or insuring the public buildings or bridges, the employment of janitors, the improvement or inclosure of public grounds, the maintenance or support of idiots or lunatics, the expenditure of any fund, or provide for the reconstruction or repair of any bridge destroyed by fire, flood or otherwise, and do any other official act not, by law, restricted to a particular regular session."

By these sections it appears that the commissioners, at a regular or special session, may transact the general business of the board. At any session it may act upon county ditches, turnpikes, or upon other matters.

There is no statutory provision requiring separate books for the record of the commissioners, other than that pertaining to the county infirmary.

If separate books were kept for the recording of the proceedings of the county commissioners as to particular matters, you would be confronted with one or the other of two situations:

First. A part of the proceedings of a particular session would be found in one book and another part thereof in some other book, or Second. In order to obviate this difficulty and at the same time to have the proceedings pertaining to a particular matter in its proper book, it would be necessary to make a complete record of the proceedings of a particular session in two or more books. This would mean a duplication of record.

If it were desired to keep separate books, it would be necessary to limit the business of a particular session to matters which could all be properly recorded in a particular book. This separation of business would be hard to carry out in practice. The county infirmary is a separate institution which has but recently come under the control of the county commissioners, and they can easily separate the business of the infirmary from their other duties.

The statutes contemplate that a full and complete record of the proceedings of each session of the commissioners shall be made. It does not contemplate that a record of part shall be kept in one book and another part in another, except as to the county infirmary.

The record should show the business as transacted and should be complete.

It is my opinion that a record of the proceedings of a particular session of the board of county commissioners should be made consecutively and that the records of the sessions should follow each other in order of date. In this way a continuous record of the proceedings will be obtained and it is this kind of record that the statute contemplates.

It is my conclusion, therefore, that the county commissioners are not authorized to provide separate books in which to have their proceedings on particular matters recorded, except as to their transactions in reference to the county infirmary, for which they are required by statute to keep a separate record.

Respectfully,

TIMOTHY S. HOGAN,

Attorney General.

BUREAU—FINDING AGAINST COUNTY AUDITOR AND OTHER OFFICERS FOR PAYMENT OF CLERK HIRE IN EXCESS OF AMOUNT ALLOWED BY COUNTY COMMISSIONERS.

It is the official duty of the county auditor to know the manner of drawing, and the statutory restrictions relating to vouchers for payment of county expenses. Furthermore, in the case of the allowance of clerk hire in the office of county officers, the auditor has notice of the proceedings of the commissioners when he serves as their clerk, under the provisions of section 2566, General Code; if he does not serve as their clerk, he has notice of their proceedings by virtue of section 2407, General Code, which provides that the record book of the county commissioners' work shall be kept in the auditor's office. The county auditor, therefore, is charged with actual or constructive notice of the allowance made by the county commissioners, for clerk hire in excess of which no payment can be made, by virtue of sections 2980 and 2981, General Code.

When a county auditor, therefore, allows a voucher for the payment of clerk hire, in excess of the county commissioners' allowance, he is liable for such payment.

By virtue of section 2981, General Code, the various officers are required to limit the salaries of their clerks to the aggregate amount allowed by the commissioners. If such officer, therefore, employs help and certifies to the county auditor, compensation in excess of the aggregate amount allowed his office by the commissioners, he violates his official duty and is liable to the county for such excess payment. The county treasurer is not given any official or formal notice of the action of the county commissioners in fixing such an allowance, nor has he in his possession any records of such proceedings. He is not, therefore, liable for overpaying the annual allowance made by the county commissioners for such clerk hire.

Under section 2980-1, General Code, however, the aggregate sum, fixed by the county commissioners to be expended in any one year for compensation of any assistants of any employes shall not exceed a certain percentage of the fees, costs and allowances, etc. When in making their allowances, therefore, the county commissioners violate this statute, they and all other county officers are charged with knowledge of this limitation and are liable for payment made in contravention thereto, the county treasurer as well as the others.

Deputies and clerks are not required to take notice of these statutory limitations and they have the right to presume that the officers will perform their duties as prescribed by statute. They are not liable, therefore, for excess amounts paid to them when they have received money in good faith for services performed.

COLUMBUS, OHIO, December 10, 1912.

Bureau of Inspection and Supervision of Public Offices, Columbus, Ohio.

GENTLEMEN:—Under date of August 28, 1912, you inquire:

> "What should be the finding of this department wherein amount allowed by the county commissioners for clerk hire in the office of county officers under the salary law, is exceeded, the excess being paid out of the fee fund of the respective officers upon the signing of a receipt by the clerk receiving the excess compensation, such compensation being paid at the rate fixed by the county officer, and certified to the county auditor."

You further call attention to the opinion of May 10, 1911, in which it was held that the county treasurer was liable for overpaying the allowance made by the county commissioners for the compensation of the deputies and clerks in the various county offices subject to the salary law, and ask for a reconsideration of such finding.

Your inquiry involves the financial liability of various officials, to wit, the county auditor, the county treasurer, the officer who employed the deputy or clerk to whom the excess amount was paid, and also the liability of such deputy or clerk.

In fixing the liability of the various officers the provisions of the county salary law must be considered.

Section 2980, General Code, provides:

> "On the twentieth of each November such officer shall prepare and file with the county commissioners a detailed statement of the probable amount necessary to be expended for deputies, assistants, bookkeepers, clerks and other employes, except court constables, of their respective offices, showing in detail the requirements of their offices for the year beginning January 1st next thereafter with the sworn statement of the amount expended by them for such assistants for the preceding year. Not later than five days after the filing of such statement, the county commissioners shall fix an aggregate sum to be expended for such period for the compensation of such deputies, assistants, bookkeepers, clerks or other employes of such officer, except constables, which sum shall be reasonable and proper, and shall enter such finding upon their journal."

This section requires the commissioners to enter their allowance upon their journal. It does not require that notice shall be given to the county auditor or to the county treasurer of the amount of such allowance. I find on statutory requirement that either the county auditor or the county treasurer shall be officially or formally notified of the action of the county commissioners.

Section 2981, General Code, provides:

> "Such officers may appoint and employ necessary deputies, assistants, clerks, bookkeepers or other employes for their respective offices, fix their compensation and discharge them, and shall file with the county auditor certificates of such action. Such compensation shall not exceed in the aggregate for each office the amount fixed by the commissioners for such office. When so fixed, the compensation of each duly appointed or employed deputy, assistant, bookkeeper, clerk and other employe shall be paid monthly from the county treasury."

By virtue of this section the various officers are authorized to employ the necessary deputies, clerks and other help in their offices and to fix their compensation. They are required to certify such action to the county auditor, and when the compensation is so fixed and certified the county auditor is authorized to draw a warrant monthly for such compensation upon receiving a receipt such as is provided in section 2988, infra, General Code.

Section 2983, General Code, provides:

> "On the first business day of April, July, October and January, and at the end of his term of office, each such officer shall pay into the county treasury on the warrant of the county auditor, all fees, costs, penalties, percentages, allowances and perquisites of whatever kind collected by his office during the preceding quarter or part thereof for official services, which money shall be kept in separate funds and credited to the office from which received; and he shall also at the end of each calendar year, make and file a sworn statement with the county commissioners of all fees, costs, penalties, percentages, allowances and perquisites of whatever kind which has been due his office and unpaid for more than one year prior to the date such statement is required to be made.

By virtue of this section both the county auditor and the county treasurer have official notice of the amount of fees collected by each office, and such fees are required to be kept in separate funds and credited to the office from which received.

Section 2987, General Code, provides:

"The deputies, assistants, clerks, bookkeepers and other employes of such offices shall be paid upon the warrant of the county auditor, from the fees, costs, percentages, penalties, allowances, or other perquisites or sums of whatever kind collected and paid into the county treasury and credited by the treasurer to the fee fund of such offices."

Section 2460, General Code, provides:

"No claims against the county shall be paid otherwise than upon the allowance of the county commissioners, upon the warrant of the county auditor, except in those cases in which the amount due is fixed by law, or is authorized to be fixed by some other person or tribunal, in which case it shall be paid upon the warrant of the county auditor, upon the proper certificate of the person or tribunal allowing the claim. No public money shall be disbursed by the county commissioners, or any of them, but shall be disbursed by the county treasurer, upon the warrant of the county auditor, specifying the name of the party entitled thereto, on what account, and upon whose allowance, if not fixed by law."

By virtue of this section each voucher drawn by the county auditor must show the account or fund from which it is to be paid, and upon whose allowance the payment is made, if the same is not fixed by law. This applies to all payments made for compensation of deputies and clerks in the various offices. It is the official duty of the county auditor to know the manner in which vouchers for such compensation should be drawn.

In the case of paying salaries to the deputies, clerks and other employes in county offices under the salary law, the auditor is required to act in accordance with the provisions of the statutes. Specific duties are placed upon him and he is presumed to know those duties and the manner in which they are to be performed. It is made his official duty to pay such deputies and clerks upon the fixing of their compensation by the county officer in charge and upon the proper certificate having been filed with him.

By virtue of section 2981, General Code, the various officers are required to limit the salaries of their deputies, clerks and other employes in their offices to the aggregate amount allowed by the commissioners. Each officer in fixing the compensation of his deputies, clerks and employes must take notice of the amount allowed such officer by the county commissioners. If he employs help and certifies to the county auditor compensation in excess of the aggregate amount allowed his office by the commissioners he violates an official duty and is liable to the county for any excess payment made by reason of such illegal act.

In many counties the county auditor is clerk to the board of county commissioners. Where he is such clerk he has actual knowledge of the proceedings of the commissioners.

Section 2566, General Code, provides:

> "By virtue of his office, the county auditor shall be the secretary of the county commissioners, except as otherwise provided by law. When so requested, he shall aid them in the performance of their duties. He shall keep an accurate record of their proceedings, and carefully preserve all documents, books, records, maps and papers required to be deposited and kept in his office."

Section 2409, General Code, provides:

> "If such board finds it necessary for the clerk to devote his entire time to the discharge of the duties of such position, it may appoint a clerk in place of the county auditor and such necessary assistants to such clerk as the board deems necessary. Such clerk shall perform the duties required by law and by the board."

In many instances the county auditor is not the clerk of the county commissioners.

Section 2407, General Code, provides:

> "Immediately upon the opening of each day's session of the board, the records of the proceedings of the session of the previous day shall be read by the clerk, and, if correct, approved and signed by the commissioners. When the board is not in session, the record book shall be kept in the auditor's office, and open at all proper times to public inspection. It shall be duly certified by the president and clerk, and shall be received as evidence in every court in the state."

By virtue of this section the record of the proceedings of the county commissioners is left in charge of the county auditor, when the board is not in session. So, even though the county auditor is not the clerk of the commissioners, the means of informing himself of the action of the commissioners is in his office and under his care. The statute fixes the time when commissioners shall make the annual allowance for clerk hire. This is fixed by statute and all officers are presumed to know the provisions of the statutes.

The county auditor, therefore, has notice, either actual or constructive, of the action of the commissioners in making the annual allowance for clerk and deputy hire. Furthermore the several officers certify to the auditor the compensation of their help and the appointment thereof. All the facts necessary to inform himself as to the limitations placed upon the amount to be paid for such compensation are in his possession. He is bound to take notice of the statutory provisions as to the limit of the amount to be paid for each office and of the amount fixed by the commissioners.

The county auditor, therefore, would be liable for any payment made upon a voucher drawn by him in excess of the amount allowed by the county commissioners for deputy and clerk hire in a county office which comes within the provisions of the county salary law.

It has been seen that it is not required that the county treasurer shall be given any official or formal notice of the action of the county commissioners in fixing the allowance for clerk hire in the various offices. Neither has he possession of the records of the county commissioners so that he may inform himself of such allowance.

The county treasurer is required to keep a separate account of the fee fund of each office. The compensation of the deputies and clerks of an office is paid from the fee fund of such office.

The county auditor is required to certify all moneys, except that collected on the tax duplicate, into the county treasury. He is also required to keep accurate accounts of all funds, showing the amount paid in and the amount paid out.

Section 2567, General Code, provides:

> "Except moneys collected on the tax duplicate the auditor shall certify all moneys into the county treasury, specifying by whom to be paid and what fund to be credited, charge the treasurer therewith and preserve a duplicate of the certificate in his office. Costs collected in penitentiary cases which have been paid by the state or to be so paid, shall be certified into the treasury as belonging to the state."

Section 2568, General Code, provides:

> "The county auditor shall keep an accurate account current with the treasurer of the county, showing all moneys paid into the treasury, the amount thereof, the time when, by whom, from what source and to what fund paid, and of all moneys paid out, showing the amount thereof, the time when, to whom, for what purpose and from what fund paid. Upon the receipt of the daily statement of the county treasury required by law, the auditor shall enter on his account current as a charge to the treasurer the amount of tax collected as shown by such statement, in the following manner: Collections of liquor taxes, to be credited to the 'undivided liquor tax fund,' collections of cigarette tax, to be credited to 'the cigarette tax fund,' collections of inheritance tax to be credited to the 'undivided inheritance tax fund;' and collections of other taxes and assessments of whatever kind to be credited to the 'undivided general tax fund.'"

Section 2569, General Code, provides:

> "On the first business day of each month, the county auditor shall prepare in duplicate a statement of the finances of the county for the preceding month, showing the amount of money received to the credit of each fund and account, the amount disbursed from each, the balance remaining to the credit of each, and the balance of money in the treasury and depository. After careful comparison with the treasurer's balances, he shall submit such statement to the commissioners, who shall place it on file and forthwith post one copy thereof in the auditor's office, to remain so posted for at least thirty days for the inspection of the public."

Section 2640, General Code, prescribes the duty of the county treasurer as to the accounts to be kept by him. Said section reads:

"The county treasurer shall keep an accurate account of all moneys by him received, showing the amount, the time, from whom and from what source received, and of all disbursements by him made, showing the amount thereof, the time, to whom and for what purpose paid. He shall so arrange his accounts that the amount received and paid on account of each separate and distinct fund, shall be exhibited in a separate and distinct account."

Section 2674, General Code, provides the manner of paying money from the county treasury as follows:

"No money shall be paid from the county treasury, or transferred to any person for disbursement, except on the warrant of the county auditor, but money paid over by the county treasurer to the state treasurer shall be on the warrant of the auditor of state."

Section 2675, General Code, provides:

"When a warrant drawn on him as treasurer by the auditor of the county is presented for payment, if there is money in the treasury or depository to the credit of the fund on which it is drawn, and the warrant is endorsed by the payee thereof, the county treasurer shall redeem it by payment of cash or by check on the depository, and shall stamp on the face of such warrant, 'Redeemed,' and the date of redemption."

While the county treasurer is required to keep a separate and distinct account of each distinct fund, yet he is not required to keep such accounts and funds in such detail as is required of the county auditor. He has not the same notice as the county auditor as to the allowance made by the county commissioners for compensation of deputies and clerks. Neither has he official notice of the compensation fixed for each deputy, clerk or other employe, or of their appointment.

For these reasons the county treasurer is not liable for overpaying the annual allowance made by the county commissioners for the clerk hire of a county office, where such payment is made in good faith upon a voucher of the county auditor.

In fixing the liability of the various officers another statute must be considered.

Section 2980-1, General Code, provides in part:

"The aggregate sum so fixed by the county commissioners to be expended in any year for the compensation of such deputies, assistants, bookkeepers, clerks or other employes, except court constables, shall not exceed for any county auditor's office, county treasurer's office, probate judge's office, county recorder's office, sheriff's office, or office of the clerk of courts, an aggregate amount to be ascertained by computing thirty per cent. on the first two thousand dollars or fractional part thereof, forty per cent. on the next eight thousand dollars or fractional part thereof and eighty-five per cent. on all over ten thousand dollars, of the fees, costs, percentages, penalties, allowances and other perquisites collected for the use of the county in any such office for official services during the year ending September thirtieth next preceding the time of fixing such aggregate sum; * * *"

This section prescribes certain percentage limitations upon the amount that may be allowed by the county commissioners for the compensation of deputies, clerks or other employes in the several county offices. This is a statutory limitation of which all county officials are presumed to know and of which they must take notice. In this respect this limitation is different from the order made by the county commissioners for the annual allowance.

The county commissioners in making the annual allowance must take notice of this percentage limitation and they will be liable for any loss to the county by reason of their making an allowance in excess of such percentage limitation.

The various officers who employ the deputies and clerks and fix their compensation must also take notice of this statutory limitation and they will be liable for any payment made to employes of their office, who have been appointed and certified to by them, in excess of such limitation. The county auditor is also required to take notice of such limitation and will be liable for payments made in excess thereof, if he draws a voucher therefor.

The county treasurer has at his command in his office records the amount of the fees collected for and by each office and he also is required to know the statutory limitations and will be liable for payments made by him in excess of such limitation.

There is a further question of the liability of the clerk or deputy who receives the excess payment.

The deputies and clerks are not required to take notice that their compensation is certified to the auditor, or to the amount of the allowance, or that such allowance has been exceeded. This is the duty of the respective elective officers. The deputies and clerks would have a right to presume that these officers will perform their duties as prescribed by statute. If the excess has been discovered before payment the clerk or employe could not hold the county liable for his compensation. But where payment has been made and the services performed in good faith the clerk and deputy are not liable to an action by the county for the recovery of the amount paid in excess of the annual allowance. The county looks to the county officer to protect it from loss. This is also true of the percentage limitation.

In cases of overpayment of an annual allowance a question would arise, where there is more than one employe, as to which one actually received the excess.

The deputies and other employes are required to sign a receipt before a warrant is drawn in their favor by virtue of section 2988, General Code, which reads:

> "Before the auditor issues a warrant upon the county treasurer to any such deputy, assistant, clerk, bookkeeper, or other employe, for his compensation, such person shall sign a receipt which shall be in the following form:
> "No _____19____
> "Received of the (here recite the county, or officer, as the case may be) by (here insert the name of the party receiving compensation) _____ dollars in full for services as (here insert services) for _____ ending _____ 19____.
> "I hereby certify that I have rendered the services as herein stated, and that I have received the full sum set forth in the above receipt for my own use and benefit, and that I have not paid, deposited or assigned, nor contracted to pay, deposit or assign, any part of such compensation for the use of any other person, nor in any way directly or indirectly, paid, or given nor contracted to pay or give, any reward or compensation for such position or the emoluments thereof _____.
> "Such receipts shall be preserved and filed by the auditor."

This is a receipt for payment of his compensation and a certificate that he has performed the services. There is no provision as to the annual allowance.

I am of the opinion that no finding can be made against a deputy or clerk for any payment made to him over and above the amount allowed by the county commissioners for the compensation of deputies and clerks in a county office under the salary law, where the services are performed and the money received in good faith. Such deputy or clerk is not liable for payment to him in excess of the statutory limitation prescribed in section 2988, General Code, supra.

Respectfully,
TIMOTHY S. HOGAN,
Attorney General.

SINKING FUND TRUSTEES—PREMIUMS AND ACCRUED INTEREST RECEIVED FROM SALE OF BONDS NOT ISSUED FOR SPECIAL ASSESSMENTS SHALL BE APPLIED GENERALLY ON BONDED DEBT AND INTEREST ACCOUNT OF MUNICIPAL CORPORATION.

By section 3932, General Code, it is expressly provided that premiums received from the sale of bonds issued for purposes other than special assessments, shall be applied by the sinking fund trustees on the bonded debt and interest account of the municipal corporation. Premiums, therefore, received from the sale of bonds issued for the extension of the distrubution lines of a municipal water works plant, which bonds are to be paid from the general revenues of the municipality, may be applied by the sinking fund trustees to the general bonded debt and interest account of the corporation, instead of the payment of water works bonds.

COLUMBUS, OHIO, January 30, 1913.

Bureau of Inspection and Supervision of Public Offices, Columbus, Ohio.

GENTLEMEN:—Your favor of January 3, 1913, is received in which you inquire:

> "May the premium received from the sale of bonds issued for the extension of the distribution lines of a municipal water works plant and turned over to the sinking fund trustees be applied by said board in meeting other debt obligations of the municipality, or are such moneys required to be held by the trustees and applied on the water works debt (see section 3932, General Code)?"

I assume that the bonds in question are to be paid by means of general taxation upon the taxable property of the municipality, or from the general revenues thereof and are not to be paid by special assessments upon certain property.

Section 3932, General Code, provides:

> "Premiums and accrued interest received by the corporation from a sale of its bonds shall be transferred to the trustees of the sinking fund to be by them applied on the bonded debt and interest account of the corporation, but the premiums and accrued interest upon bonds issued for special assessments shall be applied by the trustees of the sinking fund to the payment of the principal and interest of those bonds and no others."

This section provides that when bonds are issued for special assessments, the premium and accrued interest upon such bonds shall be applied "to the payment of the principal and interest of those bonds, and no others." This provision does not apply to the case submitted as the bonds in question are not to be paid by means of special assessments. By virtue of section 3932, General Code, the premium and accrued interest on such bonds are to be paid to the sinking fund trustees "to be by them applied on the bonded debt and interest account of the corporation." This does not refer to any particular bonded debt or interest account. It means the general bonded debt and interest account of the corporation.

I am, therefore, of the opinion that the premium and accrued interest secured upon the sale of bonds for the extension of the lines of the waterworks which are to be paid for by general taxation, or from the general revenues, may be applied by the trustees of the sinking fund to the payment of the general bonded indebtedness and interest account of the corporation and they are not required to apply such premium and accrued interest to the payment of the waterworks bonds.

Respectfully,
TIMOTHY S. HOGAN,
Attorney General.

MEMORIAL TRUSTEES—FUNDS EXPENDED BY, MAY ONLY BE PAID UPON ORDER OF BOARD AND WARRANT OF COUNTY AUDITOR.

Section 3063, General Code, provides that the fund arising from the sale of bonds for a memorial building shall be placed in the county treasury to the credit of a fund to be known as the memorial building fund; the same section provides that such fund shall be paid out upon the order of the board of trustees, certified by the chairman and the secretary. This statute must be read in connection with section 2460; which provides that no claim against the county shall be paid otherwise than upon the warrant of the county auditor, and with other statutes which disclose the scheme of finance in counties.

Such fund, therefore, must be paid upon the order of the board of trustees, certified to the county auditor, by the warrant of the county auditor upon the county treasury.

COLUMBUS, OHIO, January 21, 1913.

Bureau of Inspection and Supervision Public Offices, Department of Auditor of State, Columbus, Ohio.

GENTLEMEN:—I take pleasure in replying to yours of January 4, 1913, which is as follows:

> "Clark county is about to erect a memorial building in accordance with the provisions of sections 3095, et seq.
> "Section 3063 provides that 'such funds shall be paid out upon the order of the board of trustees, certified by the chairman and secretary.' Please render this department your written opinion as to whether or not such funds may be paid out direct upon the order of the board of trustees or whether the county auditor should issue his warrant upon the order of the board of trustees, certified by the chairman and secretary."

I do not see much difficulty in answering your inquiry. The logical way of disposing of the question, is to trace the history of this particular fund, from its inception to its ultimate disbursement. The matter of "memorial buildings" is provided for in title 10, division 4, chapter 2, (sections 3059 to 3069 inclusive) General Code.

The governor appoints a board of five memorial trustees, who organize, certify these facts to the county election board, which, in turn, causes the proposition to issue bonds to be submitted to the voters of the county. If a majority favors the issuance of bonds, the same are issued as "the bonds of the county." They are advertised and sold, for not less than par, with accrued interest. Sections 3059, 3060, 3061 and 3062, General Code.

Section 3063, General Code, then provides as follows:

> "The funds arising from the sale of the bonds shall be placed in the county treasury to the credit of a fund to be known as 'the memorial building fund.'"

This same section makes it mandatory on the county commissioners, to levy annually, a sufficient amount to meet the interest on these bonds, and create a sinking fund for their redemption at maturity.

All of the above provisions, in chronological order, result in this fund becoming part of the county's money, the same as the various other apportioned sums, of which the county treasurer is the custodian.

In section 3063, General Code, occurs the language which forms the basis of your inquiry, and is as follows.

> "Such fund shall be paid out upon the order of the board of trustees, certified by the chairman and secretary."

This language, standing alone, might give rise to the impression that the certificate of the chairman and secretary, when presented directly to the county treasurer, would authorize the latter to honor the same, and pay out the money thereon, without further action by any one. But it must be remembered, that when there is more than one statute on a given subject, (as for instance payment of money out of the county treasury) the true sense can only be obtained by reading and construing all such statutes together.

Section 2460, General Code, says:

> "No claim against the county shall be paid otherwise than upon the allowance of the county commissioners, upon the warrant of the county auditor, except in those cases in which the amount is fixed by law, or is authorized to be fixed by some other person or tribunal, in which case it shall be paid upon the warrant of the county auditor, upon the proper certificate of the person or tribunal allowing the claim."

The tribunal fixing and allowing the claims, in the matter under consideration, is the board of trustees of the memorial association of Clark county, Ohio.

The matter of drawing money from the county treasury, is further safeguarded by section 2570, General Code, which says:

> "Except moneys due the state, which shall be paid out upon the warrant of the auditor of state, the county auditor shall issue warrants on the county treasurer for all moneys payable from such treasury, upon presentation of the proper order or voucher therefor, and keep a record of all such warrants showing the number, date of issue, amount for which drawn, in whose favor, for what purpose and on what fund."

This section further provides that the county auditor shall not issue such warrant unless allowed by the county commissioners, "except where the amount due is fixed by law, or is allowed by an officer or tribunal authorized by law so to do."

Section 2567, General Code, provides:

"Except moneys collected on the tax duplicate, the auditor shall certify all moneys into the county treasury, certifying by whom to be paid and what fund to be credited, charge the treasurer therewith and preserve a duplicate of the certificate in his office."

Section 2568, General Code, says:

"The county auditor shall keep an accurate account current with the treasurer of the county, showing all moneys paid into the treasury, the amount thereof, the time when, by whom, from what source and to what fund paid, and of all moneys paid out, showing the amount thereof, the time when, to whom, for what purpose and from what fund paid."

A monthly statement is required of the auditor in duplicate, showing the amount of money received to the credit of each fund, the amount disbursed therefrom and the balance remaining. Section 2569, General Code.

If any doubt should remain as to the only means of drawing money from the county treasury, it is settled in section 2674, General Code, which reads:

"No money shall be paid from the county treasury, or transferred to any person for disbursement, except on the warrant of the county auditor, but money paid over by the county treasurer to the state treasurer shall be on the warrant of the auditor of state."

The statutes provide for settlements between the auditor and treasurer. The various records and books kept by each are a check on each other. Through these books of the auditor and treasurer can be ascertained, daily, monthly, etc., the exact amount of money in each fund in the treasury. If the treasurer could pay out money directly, to parties presenting vouchers, without the warrant therefor of the auditor, there would be no means of checking up and comparing the status of the various funds which ought to be in the treasury. The books and records of the auditor and treasurer are preserved from year to year, and if either officer goes wrong it can be ferreted out by means of the records of the other. So it is with payments out of school, municipal and state treasuries. There must always be an authority to issue an order or voucher, generally known as auditor or clerk.

In this mutuality of accounting and keeping records, lies the safety of the public funds.

A commission, such as a memorial commission, may only last a short time, and furthermore their records are not required by law to be kept permanently, or safely, for future reference.

Official salaries, expenses, witness fees, clerk hire, jury fees, stenographers, court constables, and the like, are all paid out of the county treasury on the certificate of the proper officer; but before any one can realize the cash thereon, he must repair to the auditor, and get his warrant on the treasurer therefor. Furthermore, if a voucher from an officer or board is presented to the auditor, and he has reason to believe it incorrect, or unjust, he may hold it up until he investigates it, or the commissioners pass upon it, or allow what is just thereon. On this line see 34 O. S. 137.

I am therefore of the opinion that the county treasurer is without authority to pay out, directly, any part of such memorial funds, upon the order of the trustees; and that he can only disburse the same or any part thereof, on the warrant of the county auditor, based upon the certificate of the chairman and secretary of said memorial board.

Yours very truly,
TIMOTHY S. HOGAN,
Attorney General.

FINDING AGAINST OFFICERS FOR ALLOWANCE BY COUNTY COMMISSIONERS OF BILL PRESENTED BY COUNTY SURVEYOR FOR RECORDING PLATS IN RECORDER'S OFFICE—PROCEDURE FOR ALLOWANCE OF SUCH CLAIM—LIABILITY OF COUNTY COMMISSIONERS, AUDITOR AND SURVEYOR.

The work of recording plats in the office of the county recorder is a part of the duty of the county recorder and his assistant. Under section 2981, General Code, an assistant performing such work, must be appointed and his compensation, fixed by the recorder and certification of such action made by him to the county auditor; and such compensation allowed such assistant shall not exceed the amount so fixed. When, therefore, the county commissioners allow a claim for recording plats to a county surveyor, who was not appointed by the county recorder to do the work and whose compensation was not fixed and certified by that official, the county commissioners exceed their authority and are liable for such payment. The county auditor is charged with knowledge of this limitation and is also liable.

The assistant surveyor who presents a claim is presumed to know the statutory limitation of the powers of the county commissioners to allow the same and is personally liable for repayment of the amount so illegally received.

COLUMBUS, OHIO, December 31, 1912.

GENTLEMEN:—Under date of August 28, 1912, you inquire as follows:

"The allowance for clerk hire in the office of the recorder of Guernsey county, as fixed by the commissioners in 1910 for the calendar year 1911, was exceeded by the payment of $24.00 to a surveyor for recording plats. The bill was not approved by the recorder, but was allowed by the county commissioners.

"The amount was paid to an assistant county surveyor out of county funds upon the allowance of the county commissioners, and was included in a voucher covering other services of said assistant for the month of April, 1911. The voucher was not approved or certified in any manner by the county recorder, nor did the recorder file with the county auditor any certificate appointing the assistant county surveyor a clerk in his office.

"The question is, what findings should be made by this department under these circumstances."

The claim as approved by the commissioners was submitted to them in itemized form, as follows:

"CAMBRIDGE, OHIO, May 1, 1911.

"Guernsey County to H. H. W., Assistant County Surveyor.

"April 1, Platting new county tax map	$3 00.
"April 3, Platting new county tax map	3 00.

"April 18, Platting new county tax map	3 00.
"April 19, Platting new county tax map	3 00.
"April 20, Platting new county tax map	3 00.

"April 22, Platting map of Woodland ad. recorder's plat book	3 00.
"April 24, Platting map of Woodland ad. recorder's plat book	3 00.
"April 25, Platting map of Westview ad. recorder's plat book	3 00.
"April 26, Platting map of Westview ad. recorder's plat book	3 00.
"April 27, Platting map of Buckeye and Needland's ad. recorder's plat book	3 00.
"April 28, Platting map Hall's ad. to Q City recorder's plat book	3 00.
"April 29, Platting map Oakland ad. to Cambridge, recorder's plat book	3 00."

This claim was approved and ordered paid by two of the county commissioners on May 2, 1911, in words endorsed thereon as follows:

"Examined, approved and ordered paid, $75.00 from the county fund."

The items submitted for opinion are the eight items dated April 21, 22, 24, 25, 26, 27, 27 and 29. These items are for services performed in recording plats in the county recorder's office. This is a part of the work of the county recorder.

Section 2757, General Code, provides:

"The recorder shall keep four separate sets of records, namely: first, a record of deeds, in which shall be recorded all deeds, powers of attorney, and other instruments of writing for the absolute and unconditional sale or conveyance of lands, tenements and hereditaments; second, a record of mortgages, in which shall be recorded all mortgages, powers of attorney, or other instruments of writing by which lands, tenements, or hereditaments are or may be mortgaged or otherwise conditionally sold, conveyed, affected, or incumbered in law; third, a record of plats, in which shall be recorded all plats and maps of town lots, and of subdivisions thereof, and of other divisions or surveys or lands; fourth, a record of leases, in which shall be recorded all leases and powers of attorney for the execution of leases. All instruments entitled to record shall be recorded in the proper record in the order in which they are presented for record."

The claim in question was allowed and paid from the county funds upon order of the county commissioners and not upon allowance or certificate of the county recorder.

Section 2460, General Code, gives the board of county commissioners authority to allow claims against the county, as follows:

"No claims against the county shall be paid otherwise than upon the allowance of the county commissioners, upon the warrant of the county auditor, except in those cases in which the amount due is fixed by law, or is authorized to be fixed by some other person or tribunal, in which case it shall be paid upon the warrant of the county auditor, upon the proper certificate of the person or tribunal allowing the same. No public money shall be disbursed by the county commissioners, or any of them, but shall be disbursed by the county treasurer, upon the warrant of the county auditor, specifying the name of the party entitled thereto, on what account, and upon whose allowance, if not fixed by law."

The county commissioners are not authorized to allow claims which are "authorized to be fixed by some other person or tribunal."

The amount in question was paid for work performed in recording plats in the office of the county recorder, which is a part of the duty of the county recorder and his assistants.

Section 2981, General Code, provides:

"Such officers may appoint and employ necessary deputies, assistants, clerks, bookkeepers or other employes for their respective offices, fix their compensation and discharge them, and shall file with the county auditor certificates of such action. Such compensation shall not exceed in the aggregate for each office the amount fixed by the commissioners for such office. When so fixed, the compensation of each duly appointed or employed deputy, assistant, bookkeeper, clerk and other employe shall be paid monthly from the county treasury, upon the warrant of the county auditor."

By virtue of this section the county recorder is authorized to employ the necessary assistants in his office and to fix their compensation. The county commissioners, therefore, have no authority to allow a claim for services performed in the recording of plats in the recorder's office. They had no authority to allow the eight items in question in the above bill.

The county recorder did not certify the items in question to the county auditor for payment, nor did he fix the compensation of the person who performed the services and certify that fact to the county auditor. Authough the county recorder may have authorized the person in question to perform the services, yet the payment from the county treasury was not made upon his certificate and he cannot be held liable for such wrongful payment.

The voucher shows that it was to be paid from the county fund. The compensation of the deputies, clerks and other employes of the various county offices, within the salary law, is to be paid from the fee fund of such officers, as required by section 2987, General Code, which reads:

> "The deputies, assistants, clerks, bookkeepers and other employes of such officers shall be paid upon the warrant of the county auditor, from the fees, costs, percentages, penalties, allowances, or other perquisites or sums of whatever kind collected and paid into the county treasury and credited by the treasurer to the fee fund of such offices."

The allowance by the county commissioners would not authorize the auditor to draw a warrant for payment of such services from the fee fund of the recorder. The county auditor did not authorize this payment from his fee fund and the auditor was not authorized to make the payment therefrom.

The county auditor is presmued to know the provisions of the statutes pertaining to his official duties. An examination of the bill in quiestion would have shown him that part of the services for which bill was rendered should have been paid from the fee fund of the county recorder and upon the certificate of the recorder. It was his duty to know that he could not draw a warrant for services in the recorder's office, without the certificate of the county recorder appointing such employe and fixing his compensation. It was his duty, also, to know that the county commissioners had no authority to allow a claim for services performed by an assistant or employe in the recorder's office. The services were performed by an assistant surveyor, but when he was recording the plats in the recorder's office he was acting in the capacity of an assistant to the recorder.

In drawing a warrant for payment of the eight items in question by virtue of the approval of the county commissioners, the auditor violated his official duty and is liable for such illegal payment.

The county commissioners in allowing the eight items in question acted beyond their authority. They also must know the statutory limitation upon their powers.

It might be urged that as the county commissioners had no jurisdiction to allow the items in question, that therefore they would not be liable. This argument is effectively disposed of in case of Drolesbaugh vs. Hill, 64 Ohio St., 257, wherein Minshall, C. J., says at pages 265 and 266:

> "In the case of Clancy vs. Kenworthy, 74 Iowa 740, the facts were much the same as in this case, and the same argument was made against the sufficiency of the petition. In answer to the argument the court said:
> "'If in exercising the functions of this office, defendant is not liable for acts because they are illegal or forbidden by law, and for that reason are trespasses or wrongs, he cannot be held liable on the bond at all, for the reason that all violations of duty and acts of oppression result in trespasses or wrongs. For lawful acts in the discharge of his duty he of course is not liable. It follows that if defendant's position be sound, no action can be maintained on the bond in any case.'
> "It would seem that the public have as much interest, if not more, in the duty of an officer not to colorably exercise the powers with which he is clothed, as not to use unnecessary violence, where he is otherwise clearly within the duties of his office. It is by virtue of the office he holds that he may exercise its duties to the injury of another. It is not probable that any individual, not an officer, would have attempted to do what the marshal is charged with doing."

The allowance made by the county commissioners was made by them as commissioners. it was done by color of their office. They would not have attempted to act as they did if they had not been the acting commissioners. The commissioners are liable for any loss occasioned by the county because of their illegal act in making the allowance in question.

As to the liability of the person receiving the money, the items in question present a different situation from that of overpaying the annual allowance of a county officer. In the case of overdrawing the annual allowance made for clerk hire of a county officer, it has been held by this department that the employe who performs the services and receives the excess amount in good faith would not be liable therefor.

In the present case the assistant surveyor presented his bill to the county commissioners for allowance. He is presumed to know the statutory limitations upon the powers of the county commissioners to allow this claim. In accepting the money which was paid upon the illegal allowance of the county commissioners, he participated in the illegal act, and he would be personally liable for repayment to the amount so illegally received by him.

A finding should be made against the county auditor, the two commissioners who approved the claim and against the assistant surveyor who received the money.

Respectfully,

TIMOTHY S. HOGAN,

Attorney General.

BRIDGE—PRIVATE CORPORATION MUST CONSTRUCT AND MAINTAIN, WHEN IT CONSTRUCTS DITCH OVER PUBLIC ROAD OR ENLARGES EXISTING PUBLIC DITCH OR NATURAL WATERCOURSE.

Money raised by taxation may be expended only for public purposes, and in accordance with this rule, county commissioners are not empowered to construct or maintain a bridge which is made necessary by virtue of the fact that a private corporation has located a ditch across a public road. A contrary rule applies, however, where a highway is laid over an existing private ditch or drain.

In using a public ditch or natural watercourse, a land owner or corporation who increases the flow of water therein, cannot interfere with the natural capacity of the stream, or in any way conflict with the lower land owner's right to the original flow of water therein. Such owner or corporation increases the capacity beyond its existing limits, he is bound to protect the public and the lower land owner from any damage therefrom. In accordance with the above rule, therefore, when the enlargement of bridges is made necessary by the enlargemnt of a public ditch or natural watercourse, the expense of enlarging such bridge and maintaining the same be borne by the private person or by the corporation making such enlargement necessary.

COLUMBUS, OHIO, January 6, 1913.

Bureau of Inspection and Supervision of Public Offices, Columbus, Ohio.

GENTLEMEN:—Your favor of December 19, 1912, is received in which you inquire:

> "If a corporation owning a large tract of swampy land drains the same by the construction of large ditches or canals which cross county roads at points where it has not been required heretofore to construct and maintain bridges, may the county commissioners legally construct and maintain bridges over such canals or ditches, or should such corporation construct the same at its own expense?

"Upon whom should the expense of the construction and maintenance of bridges in such case devolve, where the same are necessary at points in the public roads where bridges have heretofore been maintained but where larger bridges are now necessary on account of the enlargement of the watercourse?"

Your inquiry involves two propositions:

First. The right and duty of the county commissioners to construct bridges over artificial ditches or canals constructed by private persons or corporations, where such ditches or canals cross public highways.

Second. The duty and right of the county commissioners to enlarge bridges on public highways crossing natural streams, where such watercourses are increased beyond their natural capacity because of their drainage therein of water from swamp lands by a private corporation.

The statutes prescribes the duties of the county commissioners as to the construction, maintenance and repair of bridges.

Section 2421, General Code, provides:

"The commissioners shall construct and keep in repair necessary bridges over streams and public canals on state and county roads, free turnpikes, improved roads, abandoned turnpikes and plank roads in common public use, except only such bridges as are wholly in cities and villages having by law the right to demand, and do demand and receive part of the bridge fund levied upon property therein. If they do not demand and receive a portion of the bridge tax, the commissioners shall construct and keep in repair all bridges in such cities and villages. The granting of the demand, made by any city or village for its portion of the bridge tax, shall be optional with the board of commissioners."

This section covers bridges over streams and public canals. The canals constructed to drain the swamp land in question are private canals constructed for a private purpose. They are not public canals. The word "streams" in the above statute would include natural water courses. It is the duty, therefore, of the county commissioners to construct bridges over public canals and over natural water courses. Your question does not involve the construction of bridges over artificial ditches constructed by the county or other public agency.

Section 7554, General Code, provides:

"No person possessed of the right to a water privilege shall be required to erect a bridge over a mill race or water course, excavated or constructed by him across a public road or highway for hydraulic purposes; nor shall any person be required to keep in repair a bridge erected over a mill race or water course so excavated or constructed."

The canals or ditches constructed to drain the swamp land are not used for hydraulic purposes and section 7554, General Code, does not apply.

Section 7555, General Code, provides:

> "The commissioners of a county through which a canal or feeder thereof passes, except such as are built by incorporated companies, shall keep in good repair all bridges, where a state or county road crosses such canals."

The ditches and canals now in question are constructed by an incorporated company and section 7555, General Code, does not apply, even though said section may be held to apply to canals other than those used for carrying freight and passengers by boat. It is not necessary to decide that question.

The above section 7555, General Code, by excepting canals built by incorporated companies, tends to show that it is the duty of said incorporated company to construct and maintain bridges on highways where such highways cross its canal.

Section 6518, General Code, provides:

> "The county commissioners, at a regular or called session when necessary to the public health, convenience or welfare, in the manner provided in this chapter, so far as applicable, may cause to be located, constructed, deepened, widened or enlarged a bridge or culvert, made necessary by the crossing of a ditch, drain, water course or stream of water, by a railroad, turnpike, plank road, or other road of a corporation, at the expense of said corporation. The necessity for making an improvement herein provided for, may be heard and determined at a like time and under a like petition as provided for the location and construction of single county ditches."

This section does not apply to your questions, but it shows the tendency to require private corporations to enlarge bridges where such enlargement is made necessary by their works.

The statutes have prescribed a method of draining marsh lands by the county commissioners.

Section 6535-1, General Code, provides:

> "The commissioners of any county at a regular or called session may, in manner provided in this act, cause to be drained, protected, improved and reclaimed any marsh land, or land in any marsh, or land which is covered with water, or which is too low or too wet for agricultural pursuits thereon and cannot be efficiently drained by ditches or drains on account of insufficient fall to water level, or which is subject to overflow from any cause, so as to make and maintain such land available and suitable for agricultural purposes, if in the opinion of the commissioners such improvement will be conducive to public health, convenience or welfare."

The power granted by this section can be exercised "if in the opinion of the commissioners such improvement will be conducive to public health, convenience or welfare."

The cost of such improvement, however, is to be levied against the land benefited thereby.

Section 6535-9, General Code, reads:

> "The engineer appointed by the commissioners shall go upon the land and make the necessary surveys, plans, specifications, maps, plats, profiles and estimates, showing in detail the amount and kind of ditches, dredge-cuts, dikes, kind of pumps or other devices to be installed to remove the water from such lands, machinery and other material and the location of the same, and labor required for the completion of said improvement and the estimated cost of the same, together with a schedule of all the lands and the owners thereof, that, in his opinion, would be benefited by the improvement, and apportion the cost thereof among such land owners according to the benefits, and he shall make his report to the commissioners within thirty days after said order, unless the commissioners shall extend the time for the filing of said report."

Section 6535-21, General Code, provides:

> "The commissioners shall each year while said improvement is being carried on levy such assessments on all the lands benefited by the operation, as will in their opinion, pay all the expenses and outlays of the improvement for the following year, together with any unpaid costs and expenses and collect such assessments for maintenance and improvements as is provided by law for collecting special assessments, and all assessments shall be made according to benefits, and shall be a lien on the lands benefited. The commissioners shall have the power to issue certificates of indebtedness in anticipation of the collection of the assessments."

The drainage now in question has not been done by virtue of the foregoing power. These sections show, however, that the land benefited is required to pay for such improvement.

In McQuillen vs. Hatton, 42 Ohio St., 202, it is held:

> "The facts being ascertained, the question whether or not a ditch will conduce to the public health, convenience or welfare, within the meaning of Revised Statutes, section 4511, so that it will be of public use, is a question of law; and the mere fact that larger and better crops may be raised on two farms sought to be drained, does not authorize the establishment of the ditch."

It is apparent from this decision that the mere fact of a benefit to the land is not sufficient to make the improvement a public use or a public benefit. There must be a benefit to the public in addition to the private benefit.

In the case submitted, the means of drainage are constructed by a private corporation and evidently for private purposes and not for a public purpose. If the county commissioners should construct a bridge over such ditches or canals it would be necessary for them to pay therefor by means of taxation. It is a well established rule that needs no citation of authorities, that taxes can be levied only for public purposes.

I assume that the highways in question were constructed before said ditches or canals were established. In that case the necessity of the bridges would be caused by reason of the artificial drains. They would not be required because of any public use.

In 5th Cyc. at page 1083, the rule is stated:

"An individual liability to repair a public bridge may arise by express agreement, by prescription, or by the pursuit or assumption of a business necessitating the maintenance of a bridge in the public highway, which, aside from such individual interest, would be unnecessary."

At page 661 of 40 Cyc., it is said:

"The owner of a canal or other artificial waterway is bound at common law to build and keep in repair suitable bridge where it crosses a public highway and to fence it off where it runs so near the highway as to be dangerous to travelers."

In 6 Cyc. at page 272, the rule is stated:

"Where a canal is constructed under a charter it must be bridged where it crosses an existing public highway and the duty to build and maintain bridges at such points exists whether it is specifically imposed by the charter or not."

The bridges in highways over artificial drains which are constructed for private purposes, are not necessary because of a public purpose and the county commissioners are not required to construct or to maintain such bridges where the highways exist prior to the construction of such artificial drains. The county commisisoners cannot legally construct or maintain such bridges. That duty devolves upon the corporation or person who maintains such canals.

Where a highway is laid out over a private drain a different rule will apply. This is not involved in your question.

In your second inquiry, I assume that the water courses which are enlarged are natural water courses, or are artificial water courses constructed by or through the public for the drainage of the land in the neighborhood.

Section 6504, General Code, prescribes when a public ditch shall become a natural water course, as follows:

"When a ditch has been established and constructed for the public health, convenience, or welfare, by private agreement between two or more individuals, whose real property has been affected thereby, or by the township trustees, or the county commissioners, and such ditch has been used for the drainage of private lands or public highways for seven years or more, without obstruction or interruption, it shall be a public water course, notwithstanding errors, defects or irregularities in the location, establishment, or construction thereof. Such public water course shall be considered a natural water course and the public shall have and possess, in and to such public water course, like rights and privileges which pertain and relate to natural water courses."

Each land owner has a right to the natural drainage of the surface water from his land.

Surface water is defined at page 639 of 40 Cyc. as follows:

"Surface waters are such as diffuse themselves over the surface of the ground, following no defined course or channel, and not gathering into or forming any more definite body of water than a mere bog or marsh. * * * Surface water ceases to be such when it empties into and becomes part of a natural stream or lake, but it does not become a water course by being gathered into an artificial ditch and led away."

In the case of Crawford vs. Rambo, 44 Ohio St. 279, Owen, C. J., defines surface water at page 282, where he says:

"Surface water is that which is diffused over the surface of the ground, derived from falling rains and melting snows, and continues to be such until it reaches some well defined channel in which it is accustomed to, and does flow with other waters, whether derived from the surface or springs; and it then becomes the running water of a stream, and ceases to be surface water."

The right of the owner of the land to the drainage of the surface water must be exercised within certain limitations.

On page 646 of 40 Cyc. it is said:

"An upper owner has no right to increase materially the volume of water discharged upon the lower estate. Nor can he artifically drain a swamp, bog, pond, or marsh upon his land and discharge the water in a body on the lower estate, cast upon the lower land water which would not have reached it if the natural drainage conditions had not been disturbed, divert the water from the courses it would naturally have followed and discharge it through new artificial channels, or cause it to discharge upon the lower estate at a point which would not have been its natural destination; but a mere acceleration of the flow is not an actionable injury."

On page 648 of 40 Cyc. the rule as to the discharge into a natural water course is stated as follows:

"The owner of land has the right to collect the surface water and the natural drainage of his land into ditches, drains, or artificial streams and discharge it into a natural water course on his own land, which is the natural outlet of the waters so collected, and is not liable to lower proprietors although, by this arrangement, the flow of the waters is accelerated and increased, provided the discharge is not beyond the natural capacity of the water course. And the same rule is applied in some cases where the conduit thus made use of is not a water course in the sense of a running stream, but is a ravine or gully or a natural depression in the soil, having a fixed and determinate course, and which forms the natural and usual channel for the escape of surface water."

In The Pontifical College vs. Kleeli, 5 Nisi Prius N. S., 241, it is held:

"An upper proprietor has a legal right to a reasonable use of a natural water course flowing through his land; and in furtherance of such use he may change and control the natural flow of surface water, and by ditches or otherwise accelerate its flow, deepen, widen or straighten the stream, or cut a new channel for it in his own land, provided he allows the stream to pass off his land and upon the servient lands of lower proprietors substantially as before and without increasing the volume of water beyond the natural capacity of the stream.

"Surface water includes water that has collected in basins or depressions which will not drain into the natural water course except by artificial means, and an upper proprietor has the right to make connections which will promote the drainage of such depressions, provided they are within the general watershed and the capacity of the stream is not thereby increased to such an extent as to substantially injure lower proprietors."

The right, therefore, of the corporation in question to flow the swamp water of his land into the natural water course is limited to the natural capacity of the water course. The water course must also be the natural watershed of his land. The same conditions will apply to an artificial public water course.

In using the natural water course the land owner who increases the flow of water therein must take into consideration the natural capacity of the water course. He has no right to increase that capacity to the damage of another. If he increases the capacity beyond its limit he is bound to protect the public and the lower land owner from any damage therefrom.

The enlargement of the bridges is not made necessary from natural causes but from the increased flow of the water caused by the drainage of the swamp land.

For the same reasons as above stated in answer to your first question the county commissioners cannot legally enlarge the bridges to take care of the increased flow of water. It devolves upon the corporation to take care of the increased flow.

Respectfully,
TIMOTHY S. HOGAN,
Attorney General.

COUNCIL OF CITY—COMPENSATION MAY NOT BE FIXED AT PER DIEM RATE—SALARY.

Under section 4209, General Code, the compensation of councilmen is to be fixed in accordance with the population of the city. This section speaks of the compensation as a salary and requires that a proportionate reduction of the same shall be made for non-attendance at special and regular meetings.

Inasmuch as the fixing of such compensation at a per diem rate per meeting could defeat the requirement of the constitution by permitting an incumbent to receive the full amount allowed in payment for special meetings, prior to the end of the year, so that subsequent absence would not receive that proportionate reduction, this statute must be construed to permit the fixing of such compensation only upon a salary basis.

COLUMBUS, OHIO, February 27, 1913.

GENTLEMEN:—Under date of December 14, 1912, you submitted the following inquiry:

"The council of a city, acting under the provisions of section 4209, G. C., fixed their compensation at $8.50 per night, payable semi-monthly, for each regular or special session, with the restriction that the total amount for attendance received by any member of council should not exceed the limitations contained in said section. Does this method of fixing the salary and compensation of members of council comply with the provisions of the law?"

Section 4209, General Code, in relation to the fixing of compensation of members of a city council provides as follows:

> "The compensation of members of council, if any is fixed, shall be in accordance with the time actually consumed in the discharge of their official duties, but shall not exceed one hundred and fifty dollars per year, each, in cities having a population according to the last preceding federal census, of twenty-five thousand, or less. For every thirty thousand additional inhabitants so determined, such compensation may be, but shall not exceed, and additional one hundred dollars, per year, each, but the salary shall not exceed twelve hundred dollars per annum, and shall be paid semi-monthly. A proportionate reduction in his salary shall be made for the non-attendance of any member upon any regular or special meeting of council."

The above section provides that the compensation shall not exceed one hundred and fifty dollars per year for each councilman in cities having a population of twenty-five thousand or less, and a further compensation for every thirty thousand additional inhabitants not to exceed one hundred dollars per year, but that the salary shall not exceed twelve hundred dollars per year payable semi-monthly. It further provides that a proportionate reduction in the salary of each councilman shall be made for non-attendance upon any regular or special meeting of council.

The word "compensation" as used in the first sentence of section 4209 is a general term and would embrace not only a salary but would also embrace a per diem. However, since in the second sentence of said section where it speaks of the additional one hundred dollars for every thirty thousand above the original twenty-five thousand, the word salary is used, and such word is also used in the third sentence of such section.

As I construe said section it is the intent thereof that the compensation of members of a city council shall be fixed on an annual salary basis, payable semi-monthly and that if in any half month a meeting of council is held, either regular or special and a member fails to attend such meeting the amount which would be paid to him semi-monthly would be proportionately reduced.

The city concerning which you inquire has fixed the compensation of its councilmen at a per diem and not on the annual salary basis, and I am of the opinion that that method of fixing the salary and compensation of members of council does not comply with the provisions of the law. This is more clearly shown by the fact that a councilman might attend a sufficient number of meetings to entitle him at the per diem rate to the total amount of the salary to which he would be entitled to by law and then fail to attend any of the subsequent meetings; in this way he would receive the full salary to which he would have been entitled by law had he attended the entire meetings throughout the year and at the same time absent himself from certain of such meetings. This would be directly in conflict with the third sentence of said section 4209, General Code.

Very truly yours,
TIMOTHY S. HOGAN,
Attorney General.

INTEREST OF PUBLIC OFFICER IN PUBLIC EXPENDITURE—CITY SOLICITOR MAY NOT RECEIVE COMPENSATION FOR TAKING ACKNOWLEDGMENT OF CEMETERY DEEDS AS NOTARY PUBLIC.

Under section 3808, General Code, which prohibits any officer of a corporation from having any interest in the expenditure of money on the part of the corporation other than his fixed compensation, under penalty of dismissal from office; and also under section 12912, General Code, which prohibits an officer from being interested in the profits of any services for such corporation, under penalty of fine or imprisonment and forfeiture of office, a city solicitor may not receive compensation in addition to his salary for taking acknowledgment of cemetery deeds as notary public.

COLUMBUS, OHIO, February 12, 1913.

Bureau of Inspection and Supervision of Public Offices, Department of Auditor of State, Columbus, Ohio.

GENTLEMEN:—I beg to acknowledge receipt of your letter of December 24, 1912, wherein you inquire as follows:

> "May the city solicitor, taking acknowledgment of cemetery deeds as notary public, receive compensation from the city treasury (see sections 3808 and 12912)?"

In answer to your question I desire to say that section 4305 of the General Code prescribes the duties of city solicitors in respect to drawing contracts, bonds and other instruments in writing in which the city is concerned as follows:

> "Section 4305. The solicitor shall prepare all contracts, bonds and other instruments in writing in which the city is concerned, and shall serve the several directors and officers mentioned in this title as legal counsel and attorney."

Section 4306 of the General Code provides that the city solicitor shall be the prosecuting attorney of the police or mayor's court as follows:

> "Section 4306. The solicitor shall also be prosecuting attorney of the police or mayor's court. When council allows an assistant or assistants to the solicitor, he may designate an assistant or assistants to act as prosecuting attorney or attorneys of the police or mayor's court. The person thus designated shall be subject to the approval of the city council."

Section 4308 of the General Code prescribes the duties of city solicitors in respect to suits, etc., as follows:

> "Section 4308. When required so to do by resolution of the council, the solicitor shall prosecute or defend, as the case may be, for and in behalf of the corporation, all complaints, suits and controversies in which the corporation is a party, and such other suits, matters and controversies as he shall, by resolution or ordinance, be directed to prosecute, but shall not be required to prosecute any action before the mayor for the violation of an ordinance without first advising such action."

For the performance of his respective duties section 4307 of the General Code prescribes that the compensation of city solicitors shall be such as the council shall prescribe as follows:

> "Section 4307. The prosecuting attorney of the police or mayor's court shall prosecute all cases brought before such court, and perform the same duties as far as they are applicable thereto, as required of the prosecuting attorney of the county. The city solicitor or the assistant or assistants whom he may designate to act as prosecuting attorney or attorneys of the police or mayor's court shall receive for this service such compensation as council may prescribe, and such additional compensation as the county commissioners shall allow."

Section 3808 of the General Code provides that the respective officers, members of boards, etc., of municipal corporations shall not have any interest in the expenditures of money on the part of the corporation other than their fixed compensation as follows:

> "Section 3808. No member of the council, board, officer or commissioner of the corporation, shall have any interest in the expenditure of money on the part of the corporation other than his fixed compensation. A violation of any provision of this or the preceding two sections shall disqualify the party violating it from holding any office of trust or profit in the corporation, and shall render him liable to the corporation for all sums of money or other thing he may receive contrary to the provisions of such sections, and if in office he shall be dismissed therefrom."

The provisions of the last quoted section are broad and sweeping in their terms, and I take it were enacted for the purpose of providing all officers of municipal corporations from acquiring any interest in the expenditure of money made on the part of the municipality other than their compensation as fixed by the municipality, thereby preventing municipal officers from having any possible pecuniary interest other than their stated salary.

Inasmuch as the municipal corporation in question, to wit, the city of Piqua, pays the fees to the notary public for the taking of acknowledgments of deeds to lots in its city cemetery I am of the opinion, therefore, that the payment of such notary fees to the city solicitor for the taking of such acknowledgments constitutes an "interest in the expenditure of money on the part of the corporation other than his fixed compensation," and, therefore, comes within the prohibition of said section 3808 of the General Code as above quoted.

Furthermore, such solicitor by taking acknowledgments of such cemetery deeds and charging a fee therefor becomes "interested in the profits of the job, work or service," in contravention of section 12912 of the General Code which provides as follows:

> "Section 12912. Whoever, being an officer of a municipal corporation or member of the council thereof or the trustee of a township, is interested in the profits of a contract, job, work or services for such corporation or township, or acts as commissioner, architect, superintendent or engineer, in work undertaken or prosecuted by such corporation or township during the term for which he was elected or appointed, or for one year thereafter, or becomes the employe of the contractor of such contract, job, work or services while in office, shall be fined not less than fifty dollars nor more than one thousand dollars or imprisoned not less than thirty days nor more than six months, or both, and forfeit his office."

However, inasmuch as the city solicitor in this particular instance has taken such notarial fees under and by virtue of an opinion of the former attorney general I would, therefore, suggest that he be not required to pay back into the city treasury such notary fees heretofore paid to him by the city, but that from now on he refrain from taking such notary fee for the acknowledgment of such cemetery deeds as he shall hereafter take for the reasons as above stated.

Yours very truly,
TIMOTHY S. HOGAN,
Attorney General.

LEGAL ADVERTISING—ADVERTISEMENT IN EIGHT POINT TYPE ENTITLED TO LESS COMPENSATION THAN THE SAME IN SIX POINT TYPE.

Inasmuch as under section 6254, General Code, advertising measurements are to be calculated upon the number of ems rather than upon the actual space occupied in the paper, and inasmuch as an advertisement in eight point type contains a less number of ems than the same advertisement in six point type, an advertisement in the former may not be accorded the same amount as an adevrtisement in the latter form type.

COLUMBUS, OHIO, February 11, 1913.

Bureau of Inspection and Supervision of Public Offices, Department of Auditor of State, Columbus, Ohio.

GENTLEMEN:—Under date of January 8, 1913, you inquired of me as follows:

> "If a legal advertisement required to be published in two papers is set by both in compact form by one in six point and by the other in eight point type—may the latter legally receive the same amount for the publication as the former?"

Section 6254 of the General Code provides:

> "A square shall be a space occupied by two hundred and forty ems of the type used in printing such advertisements. Legal advertising shall be set up in compact form, without unnecessary spaces, blanks or head lines, and printed in type not smaller than nonpareil."

It will be observed from the foregoing that the space occupied by two hundred and forty ems of type used in printing legal advertisements shall constitute a square, and that no such advertisements shall be printed in less than nonpareil—that is six point type. A publisher may print such advertisements in type larger than nonpareil, but if he does so the measurement must be upon the basis of the type used. Standard nonpareil type contains twenty-six ems to the line and eight point or brevier type contains nineteen and one-half ems to the line of standard newspaper column.

I am informed by practical printers that a given advertisement when printed in eight point type will not contain as many ems as if the same were printed in six point type. Assuming this to be true, and as the measurement is to be calculated upon the number of ems rather than upon the actual space occupied in the paper, I am of the opinion that the publisher is not entitled to as much money for printing a legal advertisement in eight point type as he is when the same is printed in six point type.

Yours very truly,
TIMOTHY S. HOGAN,
Attorney General.

APPROPRIATION—UNEXPENDED APPROPRIATION MEANS SUCH AS CLERK'S CERTIFICATE HAS NOT BEEN ISSUED AGAINST—CERTIFIED APPROPRIATON MAY NOT REVERT TO GENERAL FUND.

Section 3798, General Code, requiring that unexpended appropriations or balances of apropriations, remaining over at the end of the year, or after a fixed charge has been terminated, shall revert to funds from which they were taken, and section 5649-3e, providing that such funds shall revert to the general fund, have substantially the same meaning and effect.

In view of the provisions of section 3806, General Code, to the effect that sums certified by the auditor to be sufficient for a specific appropriation as a condition precedent to a contract or expenditure, shall not thereafter be considered unappropriated until the obligation is discharged, the word unexpended in these statutes must be construed to mean only such appropriations and balances as have not been certified in accordance with section 3806, General Code, by the auditor to be in the fund.

COLUMBUS, OHIO, March 31, 1913.

Bureau of Inspection and Supervision of Public Offices, Department of Auditor of State, Columbus, Ohio.

GENTLEMEN:—I beg to acknowledge receipt of your letter of December 24th, and to apologize for my failure to answer sooner, which has been due to the unusual pressure of business in this department arising out of the legislative session. You request my opinion upon the following question:

> "Does the phrase 'unexpended appropriations or balances of appropriations remaining over at the end of the year,' etc., as found in section 3798, G. C., relate to the balances remaining in the appropriation accounts obtained by deducting the amount of warrants issued at the close of business on December 31st from the total amount appropriated for the several purposes, or does it relate to the uncertified balances of appropriations?"

The sections of the General Code to be considered in this connection are as follows:

> "Section 3798. Unexpended appropriations or balances of appropriations remaining over at the end of the year and balances remaining over at any time after a fixed charge shall have been terminated, by reason of the object of the appropriation having been satisfied or abandoned, shall revert to the general fund and shall then be subject to other authorized to such other authorized uses as council determines.

"Section 3806. No contract, agreement or other obligation involving the expenditure of money shall be entered into, nor shall any ordinance, resolution or order for the expenditure of money, be passed by the council or by any board or officer of a municipal corporation, unless the auditor or clerk thereof, first certifies to council or to the proper board, as the case may be, that the money required for such contract, agreement or other obligation, or to pay such appropriation or expenditure, is in the treasury to the credit of the fund from which it is to be drawn, and not appropriated for any other purpose, which certificate shall be filed and immediately recorded. The sum so certified shall not thereafter be considered unappropriated until the corporation is discharged from the contract, agreement or obligation, or so long as the ordinance, resolution or order is in force.

"Section 5649-3e. Unexpected appropriations or balances of appropriations remaining over at the end of the year, and the balances remaining over at any time after a fixed charge shall have been terminated, by reason of the object of the appropriation having been satisfied or abandoned, shall revert to the general fund and shall then be subject to other authorized uses, as such board or officers may determine."

I have quoted section 5649-3e merely for the purpose of pointing out that whether or not this section, which is a part of the Smith one per cent. law, so called, and is in terms applicable to all subdivisions of the state, supplants section 3798, which is a special provision applicable to municipal corporations only, there is nevertheless no inconsistency between the two sections, which, as I have heretofore held in an opinion to the bureau, mean substantially the same thing. In my opinion the last sentence of section 3806 furnishes a complete answer to the question which you have submitted. It is true there seems to be an inconsistency in logic between the scheme of that section and that of the series of sections, of which section 3798, General Code, is one. That is to say, it would seem at first blush that both of these sections or groups of sections have the same general object, namely: to require that municipal corporations live within their annual revenue and thus to discharge extravagance. In a sense they are both "appropriation" provisions.

Upon reflection, however, it will appear that the precise object sought to be attained by section 3806 is somewhat different from the general object sought to be achieved by section 3798. A municipal corporation might be required to live within an allowance appropriated at certain periods and yet, if the officers of the corporation were permitted to make contracts payable out of such appropriations without some such check as is incorporated in section 3806, the object of such a general appropriation provision as is found in section 3798 would be defeated. Upon reflection, then, it appears that the only inconsistency, if any, between the two sections is that section 3806, in order to be perfectly harmonious with section 3798, should require that the certificate be to the effect that the money required for the contract is not only credited to the fund from which it should be drawn, but also that there is a sufficient amount in the current appropriation account to cover it. Indeed, this is the construction of section 3806 which has been adopted by this department, and I believe by the bureau.

The legislative history of the two sections confirms the opinion that they are not inconsistent, as it shows that the two provisions were simultaneously incorporated in the Municipal Code of 1902, and therefore must be intended to operate together.

It is apparent therefore that the only question is as to the meaning of the word "unexpended" in section 3798, in the light of the last sentence of section 3806, already referred to.

This question has not been passed upon by the courts. I am of the opinion, however, that for the purposes of section 3798 money is "expended" from an appropriation account when the auditor's or clerk's certificate is issued against the account. Any other interpretation would nullify the express provisions of section 3806 to the effect that the sum certified "shall not thereafter be considered unappropriated," etc. I am, therefore, of the opinion that the balance of an appropriation which reverts, under section 3798, at the end of the year to the fund from which it was taken is such balance only as has not been "appropriated" within the sense of that term as used in section 3806.

In reaching this conclusion it is necessary to give to the word "appropriated," in section 3806, a meaning somewhat different from that of the noun "appropriation" in section 3798, and to make the former mean something more nearly equivalent to the word "unexpended." I am satisfied however the sense requires this distinction to be made.

Very truly yours,
TIMOTHY S. HOGAN,
Attorney General.

MUNICIPAL CORPORATION—BOND FOR CONTRACTING FOR LIGHTING SERVICES UNAUTHORIZED—STATUTORY ACT LAST SIGNED BY GOVERNOR REPEALS LAW PASSED SUBSEQUENTLY TO FIRST LAW BUT SIGNED PRIOR THERETO.

Sections 3939 and 3939-1, as they appear in the General Code, cover the same subject-matter, with slight variations of detail. The later statute was passed prior to the first statute, but signed by the governor subsequent to his signing the first statute. Section 3939-1, General Code, was given its number by the attorney general, and in express terms repealed section 3939, General Code.

Section 3939-1, General Code, therefore, being the last signed by the governor and having by its terms repealed section 3939, formerly signed by the governor, is the existing law upon the subject.

In either statute the provision for the issuing of bonds supplying lights to the corporation and the inhabitants thereof, must be construed as incidental and directly connected with the provision for the erection or purchase of gas works or electric light works for the supplying of electricity, and cannot be held to authorize the purposes of raising money for paying contractors for the supplying of gas or electricity, but only for the purpose of supplying gas and electricity by means of gas works or electric light works erected by the municipality itself.

COLUMBUS, OHIO, April 3, 1913.

Bureau of Inspection and Supervision of Public Offices, Columbus, Ohio.

GENTLEMEN:—Your favor of October 28, 1912, is received in which you inquire as follows:

> "The council of a city on August 22, 1911, authorized the issuance of bonds, and also on January 9, 1912, authorized a further issue of bonds, said bonds being issued for the purpose of supplying light to the city and purport to be issued under authority of section 3939, General Code. Lighting bills, since November, 1911, have been paid to a light, heat and power company from the proceeds of said bonds, for lighting the streets with electricity. Said bonds were not issued through authority of a vote of the people, such as is required for the issue of deficiency bonds.

"Question. Were the bonds legally issued and if not, what kind of a finding or recommendation should be made, particularly as to further disbursement of the proceeds of said bonds for the current expenses of the city in lighting its streets?"

The provisions of section 3939, General Code, which authorize the issue of bonds for electric light purposes is found in subdivision 12 thereof, which reads:

"When it deems it necessary, the council of a municipal corporation, by affirmative vote of not less than two-thirds of the members elected or appointed thereto, by resolution or ordinance, may issue and sell bonds in such amounts and denominations, for such period of time, at such rate of interest, not exceeding six per cent., and in the manner as provided by law, for any of the following specific purposes:

"12. For erecting or purchasing gas works or electric light works, and for supplying light to the corporation and the inhabitants thereof."

Page and Adams' Annotated General Code, gives two sections 3939, General Code. In 102 Ohio Laws this section was amended by two bills as shown at pages 153 and 268 thereof. Both acts were passed on May 15, 1911. The one in 102 Ohio Laws 153 was approved by the governor on May 22, 1911. The one in 102 Ohio Laws 262 was approved by the governor on May 26, 1911, four days later than the approval of the first.

The above quotation from said section is taken from the amendment in 102 Ohio Laws 153. The same part of said section reads as follows in the amendment of 102 Ohio Laws 262:

"When it deems it necessary, the council of a municipal corporation, by an affirmative vote of not less than two-thirds of the members elected or appointed thereto, by ordinance, may issue and sell bonds in such amounts and denominations, for such period of time, and at such rate of interest, not exceeding six per cent. per annum, as said council may determine and in the manner provided by law, for any of the following specific purposes:

"12. For erecting or purchasing gas works or works for the generation and transmission of electricity, for the supplying of gas or electricity to the corporation and the inhabitants thereof."

In section 2835 of the Revised Statutes and in section 3939 as first inserted in the General Code, said subdivision 12 reads the same as the provision in 102 Ohio Laws 153, which is first herein quoted.

There is a difference in these provisions which makes it necessary to determine which act is not in operation.

In each of the amendatory acts original section 3939, General Code, is specifically repealed. In the note to said section in Page and Adams' Annotated General Code, it is said:

"This section was amended by senate bill 281, 102 vs. 153, which passed May 15, 1911, and was approved May 22, 1911. It was also amended by senate bill 131, 102 vs. 262, which passed May 15, 1911, and was approved May 26, 1911. It appears from the record of the senate that senate bill 131, was signed in the senate immediately before senate bill 281, but at the same session. Because of doubt as to which statute is in force, both are given."

It appears, therefore, that both bills were signed at the same session of the senate. The act of 102 Ohio Laws 153 was signed in the senate last, but was approved by the governor first. The act of 102 Ohio Laws 262 was signed first but was approved by the governor at a later date than the other. Neither bill became a law until signed and approved by the governor. His act in approving the bills was the last act required to make the bills effective.

Article 2, section 16 of the constitution of Ohio of 1851, reads in part:

"Every bill passed by both houses of the general assembly shall, before said bill can become a law, be presented to the governor. If he approves he shall sign said bill and thereupon said bill shall be a law."

By virtue of this provision of the constitution the bills in question became effective when signed by the governor. The act of 102 Ohio Laws 153 was approved by the governor on May 22, 1911. It became effective on that date and by virtue of the repealing clause thereof, it repealed on that date the former section 3939, General Code. The act of 102 Ohio Laws, 262, was signed by the governor on May 26, 1911, and became effective on that date. This act also contained a clause which specifically repealed section 3939, General Code. At the time the act of 102 Ohio Laws 262 was approved by the governor, the act of 102 Ohio Laws 153, approved on May 22, 1911, was effective. The repealing clause of the act of 102 Ohio Laws 262, at the time of its approval, applied to section 3939 as amended in 102 Ohio Laws 153. At that time there was no other section 3939, General Code, in effect.

Another feature of the two bills in question should be taken into consideration. In the act of 102 Ohio Laws 262 the legislature did not number the sections thereof in accordance with the numbering of the General Code. The sections of this act were numbered from one to sixteen inclusive and these sections were given numbers by the attorney general by virtue of the authority granted to him by section 342-1 of the General Code, which reads:

"The attorney general shall be the codifier of the laws of the state. When an act of a general and permanent nature is passed by the general assembly and has been enrolled and signed by the necessary officers and before it is filed with the secretary of state, the attorney general shall examine the same. If there is no sectional numbering in the act or such numbering is not in conformity to the General Code he shall give each section of the act so passed its proper sectional or supplemental sectional number by writing or printing on the left hand margin of the enrolled bill such proper number or numbers, and the numbers so designated by him shall be the official number. Such numbers so placed shall be published in the session laws and in any publication of the General Code. It shall be a sufficient reference to any section to refer to it by such official number."

The act of 102 Ohio Laws 153, however, contained the sectional numbering of the General Code, to wit, section 3939.

The act of 102 Ohio Laws 153, however, contained the sectional numbering of repealed former section 3939, General Code. When the act of 102 Ohio Laws, 262, was approved on May 26, 1911, it then specifically repealed section 3939, General Code, which at that time was the amendment of said section as found in 102 Ohio Laws, 153. At the time, therefore, when the attorney general gave to the act of 102 Ohio Laws, 262, its sectional numbers there was no section 3939, General Code, in existence, except the act of 102 Ohio Laws, 262, to which the attorney general gave the sectional number of 3939.

While I have gone into the preliminary part at considerable length in the foregoing, I am of the opinion that the question as to which of the two statutes is in force, insofar as the same may be contradictory or irreconcilable, is clearly determined by the case of State ex rel. Guilbert vs. Halliday, Auditor, 63 O. S., 165, the syllabus of which is as follows:

> "Two statutes irreconcilable—Effect given to later—Bill not law until signed by presiding officer—Order of signatures prevail.
> "1. In so far as two statutes are irreconcilable. effect must be given to the one which is the later.
> "2. A bill cannot become a law until it has been signed by the presiding officer of each house; and when one bill was so signed after another bill so signed on the same day, the former is the later enactment."

At the time this case was decided the governor did not have the veto power, nor was he required to approve. Under our present constitution, article 2, section 16, "if he (the governor) approves he shall sign it and thereupon it shall become a law and be filed with the secretary of state."

So, therefore, section 3939, as indicated by 102 Ohio Laws, 153, became a law May 22, 1911; section 3939-1, as found in 102 O. L., 262, became a law May 26, 1911.

The first syllabus in the case of the City of Cincinnati vs. Holmes, Administrator, 56 O. L., 104, is as follows:

> "Where the general provisions of a statute and those of a later one on the same subject are incompatible, the provisions of the latter statute must be read as an exception to the provisions of the earlier statute."

Now, then, if there be any conflict between subdivision 12 of the act found in 102 Ohio Laws, 262, and subdivision 12 in the act found in 102 O. L., 153, the latter must yield to the former.

In the case of Ex Parte William M. Roach, 104 California Reports, 272, the syllabus reads:

> "1. Constitutional grant of municipal power—construction of ordinance. Where the constitution grants legislative power to municipal corporations, the source of the power is the same as is that exercised by the legislature, and an ordinance within the exercise of the legislative power of the municipal corporation is to be construed with the same effect as if it had been adopted by the legislative power itself, and will be deemed to contain in the legislative will for the municipal corporation.
> "2. Construction of constitution—Local police regulations. Section 2 of article 11 of the constitution, which provides that 'any county, city, town or township may make and enforce within its limits all such local, police, sanitary and other regulations as are not in conflict with general laws,' confers the power to make these regulations upon cities as well as upon counties, and must be held to be equally authoritative in each, and the only limitation upon the exercise of the power is that the regulations to be made shall not be in conflict with general laws."

It is my judgment that there is no conflict between sections 12 in either act so far as relates to the present question, and that under either the council was without power under favor of the section under which it acted, and without the vote of the people, to issue bonds for the purpose of supplying light for the corporation. The purpose under section 3939, subdivision 12 is for erecting or purchasing gas works or electric light works, which works are intended to supply light to corporations and to the inhabitants thereof. The expression "and for supplying light to the corporation and the inhabitants thereof" is a limitation upon what precedes: erecting gas works and electric light works, and is not an additional grant of power.

A careful reading of section 3939 of the General Code discloses that the bond issue is not only for specific purposes, but for purposes of a permanent as distinguished from a temporary character. Subdivision 12 is not intended to confer power to issue bonds for the mere purpose of supplying light by contracting with a lighting company. It would seem strange that while all of the other purposes in the section are of a permanent nature, if it were the intention of the legislature to switch something into subdivision 12 of a temporary nature.

Coming now to subdivision 12—Is section 3939-1 the last act on the question? I am clearly of the opinion that the language "for supplying gas or electricity to the corporation or the inhabitants thereof" is likewise a limitation upon what precedes and is not a separate and additional grant of power.

My conclusion, therefore, is that the municipality corporation has clearly exceeded its authority.

Very truly yours,
TIMOTHY S. HOGAN,
Attorney General.

COUNTY SURVEYOR — COMPENSATION — FEES FOR RECORDING PLATS OF OTHER SURVEYORS AND FOR HIMSELF WHEN MADE FOR PRIVATE PARTY—APPROVAL OF COUNTY COMMISSIONERS.

Under section 2803, General Code, when a county surveyor is not given a per diem compensation, he is to be allowed the fees therein specified for recording plats made by him in the course of his official duties. He is to be allowed the same fees for recording plats made by other surveyors or by himself for private parties, when they are recorded by him upon the order of the county commissioners.

COLUMBUS, OHIO, March 26, 1913.

Bureau of Inspection and Supervision of Public Offices, Department of Auditor of State, Columbus, Ohio.

GENTLEMEN:—I beg to acknowledge receipt of your letter of January 25, 1913, wherein you inquire as follows:

"Section 2803, G. C., makes it the duty of the county surveyor to make an accurate record of all surveys made by himself or his deputies for certain purposes and also provides that surveys made by other competent surveyors may, by order of the commissioners, be recorded by the county surveyor.

"Section 2822 provides fees for recording plats. May the county surveyor receive compensation out of the county treasury for recording plats of other surveyors when ordered by the commissioners?"

"May the county surveyor receive such compensation for recording plats of other surveys when ordered by the commissioner?"

In reply to your inquiry I desire to say that section 2803 of the General Code provides that a record shall be kept by the county surveyor as follows:

> "The county surveyor shall make and keep in a book provided for that purpose an accurate record of all surveys made by himself or his deputies for the purpose of locating any land or road lines, or fixing any corner or monument by which it may be determined whether official or otherwise. Such surveys shall include corners, distances, azimuths, angles, calculations, plats and a description of the monuments set up, with such references thereto as will aid in finding the names of the parties for whom made, and the date of making such surveys. Such book shall be kept as a public record by the county surveyor at his office, and shall be at all proper times open to inspection and examination by all persons interested therein. Any other surveys made in the county by competent surveyors, duly certified by such surveyors to be correct and deemed worthy of preservation, may, by order of the commissioners, be recorded by the county surveyor."

Section 2822 of the General Code provides for the compensation the county surveyor shall receive if employed by the day, and if not, that fee he shall receive as follows:

> "When employed by the day, the surveyor shall receive five dollars for each day and his necessary actual expenses. When not so employed, he shall be entitled to charge and receive the following fees: For each rod run, not exceeding one mile, three-fourths of one cent, and for each rod over one mile, one-half of one cent; for making out or recording a plat not exceeding six lines, seventy-five cents, and for each line in addition, five cents; for each one hundred words or figures therein, six cents; for calculating the contents of a tract not exceeding four sides, six cents, and for each additional line, ten cents; for mileage, going and returning, five cents per mile; and for all other services, the same fees as those of other officers for like services. Chain carriers and markers are entitled, each, to two dollars."

By virtue of section 2803 of the General Code, the county surveyor is legally bound to make and keep, in a book provided for that purpose, an accurate record of all surveys, whether official or otherwise, and such survey shall include corners, distances, azimuths, angles, calculations, plats, etc. Under section 2822 of the General Code the county surveyor may be employed by the day, or if not so employed by the day, then he is to receive certain prescribed fees. The fee prescribed for making out and recording a plat not exceeding six lines, seventy-five cents; and for each line in addition, five cents. If the surveyor is employed by the day, as provided in said section, then he is not legally entitled to fees for the making and recording of such plats. If, on the other hand, the surveyor is not so employed by the day, but is paid for his services by fees in accordance with said section, then he is entitled to the fees prescribed therein for making and recording plats of his own official surveys. If such surveys are not official, but have been made by the county surveyor for private parties and such surveyor's record records the survey without its being submitted to the county commissioners and found by them to be worthy of preservation, then he is not entitled to such fees as has been held by the court in construing said section in the case of Strong vs. Commissioners, 47 O. S., 404, the first syllabus of which is as follows:

> "A county surveyor who makes a survey for a private individual, upon an employment by him, and records the same without its being submitted to the county commissioners and found by them to be worthy of preservation, does not thereby acquire a valid claim against the county, to be paid for making such record."

However, I am of the opinion that if he submitted such private survey to the county commissioners and it met their approval as being worthy of preservation, then he would be entitled to the fees prescribed for making and recording the plats of such surveys, likewise such county surveyor may receive compensation for making and recording plats of surveys made by other surveyors, provided same has been ordered by the county commissioners after having been submitted to them and deemed worthy of preservation by the commissioners.

Very truly yours,
TIMOTHY S. HOGAN,
Attorney General.

AGRICULTURAL SOCIETIES — SPECIAL PROVISION AUTHORIZING PAYMENT OF $800 TO CUYAHOGA COUNTY SOCIETY REPEALED.

By action of the codifying commission and by adoption of the General Code by the legislature, the legislative provision of section 3697, Revised Statutes, authorizing the payment of not over $800.00 to the two agricultural societies of Cuyahoga county has been repealed.

COLUMBUS, OHIO, March 28, 1913.

Bureau of Inspection and Supervision of Public Offices, Department of Auditor of State, Columbus, Ohio.

GENTLEMEN:—I desire to acknowledge receipt of your letter of March 17, 1913, wherein you inquire as follows:

> "Section 3697, Revised Statutes, contains a special provision applicable only to Cuyahoga county, authorizing the payment of not over $800 to two agricultural societies in that county. By the adoption of the General Code this section was repealed, apparently without saving the special provision, and was re-enacted as section 9880 of the General Code.
> "Please advise us whether or not in your opinion payment to two agricultural societies may now be legally made."

In reply thereto, section 3697 of Bates' Revised Statutes, prior to the adoption of the General Code, provides as follows:

> "When thirty or more persons residents of any county of the state, or of a district embracing one or more counties, organize themselves into an agricultural society, and adopt a constitution and by-laws and select the usual and proper officers, and otherwise conducts its affairs in conformity to the statutes of Ohio and to the rules of the state board of agriculture, and when such county or district agricultural society shall have held an annual exhibition in accordance with section 3698 of the Revised Statutes of Ohio, and made proper report to the state board of agriculture, then, upon presentation to the county auditor of a certificate from the president of the state board of agriculture, attested by the secretary of said board, that the laws of the state and the rules of the state board of agriculture have been complied with, the county auditor of each county wherein such agricultural societies are organized, shall annually draw an order on the treasurer of the county in favor of the president of the county or district agricultural society for a sum equal to two cents for each inhabitant of the county, upon the basis of the last previous national census, but the total amount thereof shall not exceed in any county the sum of eight hundred dollars ($800.00); and the treasurer of the county shall pay the same.
> "(Cuyahoga county) Provided, that where in any county containing a city of the second grade of the first class, the site for holding county fairs is situated so far from the geographical center of said county that, in the opinion of the commissioners of said county the agricultural interests of said county will best be promoted by the establishment of another and additional society and site whereon to hold fairs; upon the organization of such additional society in the manner provided herein, said additional society shall be entitled to receive out of the county treasury the sum provided in this section and also be entitled to the provisions of other sections of the statutes in reference to county agricultural societies."

In the case of Lawrence County Commissioners vs. Brown, Auditor, 14 Ohio Decisions, 241, 1 Ohio Nisi Prius, n. s., 357, the court held that all of said statute was constitutional except that portion of said statute which applied only to Cuyahoga county, as follows:

> "2. Rule of construction where original act valid and amendatory act void: The Ohio rule of construction is that if a portion only of a statute is unconstitutional, the rest may be allowed to stand if the constitutional part will accomplish the substantial purpose desired by the legislature if separated from the unconstitutional part. Thus section 3691, Revised Statutes, providing for the organization of district or county agricultural societies, insofar as it has a uniform operation throughout the state is valid, notwithstanding the amendment thereto of May 6, 1903, (95 O. L. 403) inasmuch as it applies to only one county, violates section 26, article 2 of the constitution and is void."

and at pages 243 and 244 of the opinion the court holds:

> "The elementary rule of construction that where a portion of the statute only is unconstitutional, the rest may be allowed to stand if the unconstitutional portion does not so far affect the whole statute as that it must be said the legislature would not have passed the law except in the form and substance as it did pass it, has received frequent approval and application in this state. Minshall, J., on this subject, in Gager vs. Prout, 48 Ohio St., 89, 108 (26 N. E. Rep. 1013) shows that there is 'a rule of construction that has been firmly established by repeated decisions of this court. By this rule a statute may be invalid in part, by reason of some provision being repugnant to the constitution, and valid as to the residue, where it appears that the invalid part is an independent provision, not in its nature and connection essential to the other parts of the statute, not so related to the general purpose of the statute as to warrant the conclusion that the legislature would have refused to adopt it with the invalid part stricken out.' So it was announced in Gibbons vs Catholic Institute, 34 Ohio St. 289, that:

"'The validity of section 8 of the act of May 1876, is not affected by the fact that the remainder of the act is unconstitutional. That section is separable from the remainder of the act.'

"But it will be remembered that the objectionable portion of this statute is added by amendment to a section.

"The rule, however, is not limited in its operation to the rejection or acceptance of an entire section; but any portion of a section, as I understand, may be rejected as unconstitutional, and the remainder allowed to stand, if it comes within the rule of construction.

"In the case of Treasurer vs. Bank, 47 Ohio St. 503, 504 (25 N. E. Rep. 697), it is adjudicated:

"' One part of a section of a statute may be void for want of conformity to the constitution, without affecting the validity of the remainder, unless the objectionable and unobjectionable portions are essentially and inseparably connected in substance, or are so interdependent, that the general assembly would not have enacted the one without the other.'

"It seems to me that the case in hand comes palpably and clearly within the rule just announced. The original section as it stood provided for assistance to agricultural societies throughout the state. It was part of the policy of the state, and there is nothing to indicate that the legislature ever intended to depart from it, but meant for it to stand as it had stood for many years; but they undertook in addition thereto to make a special provision applicable to Cuyahoga county alone, and which additional provision, by the recent holding of the supreme court (if, indeed, any holding was necessary), is clearly inimical to the provision requiring uniform operation. It seems to me quite clear that the provision as to Cuyahoga county can be rejected without affecting the substance or in any wise defeating the legislative will as to the remainder of the section, and that it can be very well said that the legislative purpose, in passing the law, was in no wise affected by the acceptance or non-acceptance of this particular provision."

On April 2, 1906, (98 O. L. 221). the 77th general assembly passed an act entitled "An act to provide for the revision and consolidation of the statute laws of Ohio." Said act required the governor to appoint three commissioners to revise and consolidate the general statute laws of Ohio. Section 2 of said act provides that in performing this duty the said commissioners shall bring together all the statutes and parts of statutes relating to the same matter, making alterations to harmonize the statutes with the constitution as construed by the courts. As above provided the codification commission had the power, by virtue of legislative enactments, to harmonize the statutes with the constitution as construed by the courts, and as above set forth the court in the case of Lawrence county commissioners vs. Brown, supra, has declared all that part of section 3697, Bates' Revised Statutes, which applied only to Cuyahoga county was unconstitutional, and hence the same was left out of section 9880 of the General Code by the codifying commission, so as to read as follows:

> "When thirty or more persons, residents of a county, or of a district embracing one or more counties, organize themselves into an agricultural society, which adopts a constitution and by-laws, selects the usual and proper officers, and otherwise conducts its affairs in conformity to law, and the rules of the state board of agriculture, and when such county or district society has held an annual exhibition in accordance with the three following sections, and made proper report to the state board, then, upon presentation to the county auditor, of a certificate from the president of the state board attested by the secretary thereof, that the laws of the state and the rules of the board have been complied with, the county auditor of each county wherein such agricultural societies are organized, annually shall draw an order on the treasurer of the county in favor of the president of the county or district agricultural society for a sum equal to two cents to each inhabitant thereof, on the basis of the last previous national census. The total amount of such order shall not in any county exceed eight hundred dollars and the treasurer of the county shall pay it."

The legislature, on February 14, 1910, adopted the General Code as submitted by the codifying commission by enacting section 13765 of the General Code, which provides as follows:

> "The general statutes herein revised and consolidated, with the parts, titles, divisions, subdivisions, chapters and sections herein designated, shall be known and recognized as 'The General Code' (codifying commission)."

Section 13767 of the General Code provides as follows:

> "The following section of the Revised Statutes and acts, and parts, of acts, of the general assembly are hereby repealed."

and among the sections of the Revised tSatutes as being repealed appears section 3697 of Bates' Revised Statutes. As a net result, therefore, the legislature by enactment of section 13765 of the General Code, supra, adopted the General Code and thereby adopted section 9880 of the General Code, supra, as the same now appears therein, and at the same time repealed section 3697 Bates' Revised Statutes, thereby eliminating the provisions which related solely to Cuyahoga county.

Therefore, in direct answer to your inquiry, this department for the foregoing reasons is constrained to hold the payment to the agricultural societies cannot be made legally.

Very truly yours,
TIMOTHY S. HOGAN,
Attorney General.

CITY NOT ESTOPPED TO COLLECT UNIFORM RATE FROM WATER CONSUMER BY ACCEPTANCE OF A LESS RATE BY A DULY QUALIFIED COLLECTOR.

A city is not bound by unauthorized acts of a water rent collector who accepts from a water consumer, rent less than that uniformly charged by the city, and is entitled to receive the difference, from said consumer, between the amount as paid such collector and the proper amount to which the city is entitled.

COLUMBUS, OHIO, April 11, 1913.

Bureau of Inspection and Supervision of Public Offices, Department of Auditor of State, Columbus, Ohio.

GENTLEMEN:—I take pleasure in replying to your letter of March 11, 1913, which is as follows:

> "Is a city estopped from instituting action in court to recover of a consumer who has been supplied service from a municipal waterworks plant, by reason of the fact that an insignificant sum, much below the actual value of the service rendered, had been previously accepted by a duly qualified collector of said plant?
> "In the absence of fraud would the acceptance of said payment by the collector and the giving of a receipt to the consumer be binding upon the city?"

I am of the opinion that the facts stated in your inquiry, standing alone, are insufficient in law to estop the city from collecting of the customer the actual value of services rendered him in the supplyof water. Conceding that no fraud, corruption, or collusion tainted the transaction, yet the matter might have arisen through a mistake on the part of the city, the consumer, or both.

In such event, the city is entitled to recover from the customer the full fair value of the services rendered, less the amount heretofore received by it thereon. No matter if the collector was duly qualified to collect—he was an agent of the city, and as such he held no power to sacrifice the city's interests by gift, remission, or otherwise. As an individual owning the water, he might do as he pleased, but not so with city property. He must collect what is the fair value of the services rendered, and anyone dealing with him is chargeable, as a matter of law, with knowledge of these facts, and cannot avail himself of such circumstances.

If the city had a schedule of prices for such services, such schedule must apply equally to all customers; and no collecting agent could suspend or modify the universality of its application, without express authority. If the city had no schedule of prices, then the collector must treat all alike, make no discriminations, and collect of each patron an amount commensurate with the services accepted by him.

Any other course would be detrimental to the city, unfair to other consumers, and against public policy in dealing with a municipal utility. The consumer will not be permitted to intrench himself behind such circumstances, and should be made to respond fully for what he has enjoyed.

Very truly yours,
TIMOTHY S. HOGAN,
Attorney General.

BOARD OF EDUCATION—POWER TO PAY EXPENSES OF SUPERINTENDENT OF CITY SCHOOLS AT INSTITUTE OF NATIONAL ASSOCIATION OF SCHOOL SUPERINTENDENTS AT PHILADELPHIA —PURPOSE OF INSTRUCTING TEACHERS.

Under section 7872, General Code, a city board of education is empowered to expend, not to exceed $500.00 for instructing teachers in an institute or in such other manner as it prescribes. The discretion conferred upon the board, by this statute, would empower it when it sees fit, to pay the expenses of its superintendent, incurred in attending a national association of school superintendents for the purpose of conveying information obtained to its teachers.

COLUMBUS, OHIO, April 24, 1913.

Bureau of Inspection and Supervision of Public Offices, Department of Auditor of State, Columbus, Ohio.

GENTLEMEN:—Under date of March 4th you request my opinion as follows:

"Can a city board of education, under section 7872, General Code, pay from school funds the expenses incurred by superintendents in attending the institute of the national association of school superintendents at Philadelphia?

"Does your opinion of November 22, 1911, apply to city boards of education?"

Section 7872 of the General Code is as follows:

"The expenses of such institute shall be paid from the city institute fund hereinbefore provided for. In addition to this fund the board of education of any district annually may expend for the instruction of the teachers thereof, in an institute or in such other manner as it prescribes, a sum not to exceed five hundred dollars, to be paid from its contingent fund."

This statute would in no sense empower a board of education to allow the expenses incurred by a superintendent in attending such institute for his own personal benefit, or for the mere purpose of maintaining his membership in such an association, or of providing a representation for the city board at such a meeting. The statute, however, in providing that the board of education may expend school funds for the instruction of its teachers in such other manner as it prescribes confers upon such board a broad and controlling discretion as to the methods which it may desire to pursue in obtaining the end of instructing its teachers; and I am of the opinion that if such board sends its superintendent to the meeting of this national association in pursuance of a well-defined plan for providing instruction for its teachers, by enabling the superintendent to carry the information obtained from such meeting to the teachers, the same would be authorized under the terms of this section.

In brief, I see no reason why the board may not make the superintendent an instrument for the purpose of conveying to its teachers the benefits of the meeting. In the letter enclosed by you, which is signed by the president of the board of education in question, that official says:

"We desire to pay the necessary expenses of our superintendent for we consider such visitation on his part is instruction which will be of material benefit to him in the administration of our public schools."

From the terms of this letter I take it that the meeting is one whereby modern methods of instruction are discussed, and wherein it is designed that each board of education be able to partake of the benefits of innovations and advanced methods which may have been installed in other schools throughout the country. Such is manifestly a valuable instruction, which it may well benefit any school to keep its teachers in touch with.

I am therefore of the opinion that if the board of education is of the opinion that the meeting is such as will afford valuable instruction to its teachers, and if they send their superintendent to such meeting for the purpose of conveying the information acquired therein to its teachers, they may allow the expenses of travel incurred by the superintendent in making such trip.

In answer to your second question, with reference to my opinion of November 22, 1911, I beg to say that, taking the language of that opinion strictly, it would have application only to village boards of education. The facts of that opinion, however, were very indefinitely stated, and I may well say that it should be read with reference to city boards of education in the light of the modification stated herein.

Very truly yours,
TIMOTHY S. HOGAN,
Attorney General.

CIVIL SERVICE IN CITIES—RIGHT OF APPOINTING POWER TO DEMAND LIST OF NAMES FROM COMMISSION—INVALIDITY OF RULE OF COMMISSION REQUIRING PROMOTION TO FILL VACANCY.

Under section 4480, General Code, the civil service commission may make rules and regulations permitting the filling of offices and positions in the higher grades as far as practicable through promotion. It is the intention of this act, however, to vest the power of appointment to positions in the specified officials of the municipality, and therefore, since the rule adopted by the commission compelling a vacancy to be filled by promotion would be an exercise of the appointing power, such a rule would be invalid.

In its discretion, therefore, when a vacancy exists, the appointing power is entitled on demand to have three names presented for the examination list from which to select an appointee.

COLUMBUS, OHIO, April 29, 1913.

GENTLEMEN:—Under date of March 26, 1913, you inquire as follows:

"First. May the civil service commission by adoption of rules and regulations provide for the filling of vacancies in the classified service of the city by promotion from the next lower grade, or has the appointing authority of the city a right to demand of the commission three names from which to make his selection in the case of a vacancy in the classified service?

"Second. Is the discretion lodged in the appointing authority to determine whether or not such vacancies are to be filled by promotion or by recourse to the eligible list, or may the civil service commission, by its rules, deny to the appointing authority such recourse to the eligible list, and by said rules provide that certain positions in the classified service in case of vacancies shall be filled by promotion?"

In an opinion given to Hon. Allen G. Aigler, city solicitor of Bellevue, Ohio, under date of April 29, 1912, this department held that the appointing power was not required to make an appointment to a position in the classified service, unless three names were submitted to it by the civil service commission as being eligible for appointment. It was further held in that opinion that the civil service commission had no power of appointment under our statutes.

In that opinion no question of the right to fill positions through promotion was considered.

Section 4480, General Code, provides:

"Applicants for admission into the classified service shall be subjected to examination which shall be competitive, public and open to residents of the city, with such limitations as to age, residence, health, habits and moral character as the commission prescribes. The commission shall prepare rules and regulations adapted to carry out these purposes with reference to the classified service of the city, which rules and regulations shall provide for the grading of offices and positions similar in character in groups and divisions so as to permit the filling of offices and positions in the higher grades as far as practicable through promotions, and for public examinations to ascertain the fitness of applicants for appointment in the classified service. Such applicants shall take rank upon the register as candidates in the order of their relative standing without reference to priority of examination. The result of the examination shall be accessible to all persons."

This section requires that "applicants for admission into the classified service shall be subject to examination." It then authorizes the civil service commission to prepare rules and regulations to carry out the purposes of the civil service act, and specifically requires the commission to make rules and regulations,

"for the grading of positions similar in character in groups and divisions so as to permit the filling of offices and positions in the higher grades as far as practicable through promotions."

Under this power the civil service commission is authorized to group positions so as to "permit" the filling of the higher positions through promotions. This power will authorize the filling of positions through promotion from a lower to a higher office without requiring the employe to take an examination for the higher position. But the civil service commission cannot make a rule which will require the appointing officer to fill a higher position through promotion. The commission can only make such rules and regulations as will permit the filling of positions through promotions.

The civil service commission has no power of appointment. That power rests in some other officer or board. If the civil service commission could make a rule requiring the filling of positions through promotions, they could in fact make the rule so as to virtually make the appointment. This would be encroaching upon the right of the appointing power. The rules should be made so as to permit the appointing power to fill positions through promotions if he so desires.

The statute does not require the higher positions to be filled through promotions. It only permits such filling of the offices. It is left to the appointing power to determine whether positions of a higher grade shall be filled through promotions or by selection from the eligible list, as provided in section 4481, General Code, which reads:

> "Appointments shall be made in the following manner: The appointing board or officer shall notify the commission of any vacancy to be filled. The commission shall thereupon certify to such board or officer the three candidates graded highest in the respective lists as shown by the result of such examination. Such board or officer shall thereupon appoint one of the three so certified. Grades and standings so established shall remain the grades for a persiod of six months, or longer if the commission so determines, and in succeeding notifications of vacancies, candidates not selected may be dropped by the commission after having been certified a total of three times."

By virtue of this section the appointing power is entitled to three names from which to make the selection.

The civil service commission may make rules and regulations to permit the filling of positions through promotions from a lower grade, but it cannot require the appointing power to fill the positions through promotion. The appointing power may fill the higher positions through promotions as provided by the rules of the civil service commission, or he may demand three names of the civil service commission from the eligible list from which to make his selection.

The appointing power has the discretion to either fill a higher position through promotion or from the eligible list.

Respectfully,
TIMOTHY S. HOGAN,
Attorney General.

TOWNSHIP TRUSTEES—DUTIES WITH REFERENCE TO SALE OF CEMETERY LOTS—COLLECTION OF FEES—LIABILITY OF PARTIES FOR MONEY PAID TO AND DONE AWAY WITH BY SEXTON—CLERK, TREASURER AND PRIVATE PARTIES.

Under section 3448, General Code, it is the duty of township trustees to sell cemetery lots, but it is not made their duties to collect the money therefor.

Under sections 3457, 3458 and 3459, General Code, the township treasurer is the proper custodian of funds received by the trustees, by way of gift, request, etc., and it is the duty of that official to receive all moneys secured by the sale of lots, digging of graves and from other sources of the township cemetery.

The clerk of the township is not authorized to receive any money on behalf of the township and when money from the sale of cemetery lots is paid to him and not turned over by him, the bondsman of the clerk cannot be held for such defalcation, under the terms of the bond required of him. Under section 3300, General Code, he is personally liable for money so misappropriated.

Private parties are presumed to know the limitations placed upon public officers and when the clerk and sexton are made by them agents for the payment of moneys given for cemetery lots to the township treasurer, said sexton and clerk are liable to their prinicpals and the prinicpals are liable to the township. If the trustees did not authorize a sexton or clerk to collect the money, they may not be held for its loss. They may, however, be liable for any loss to the township, resulting from the sale by them of deeds without making provision for the payment of the money to the township treasurer. When the money is not received by the township, the deed is voidable for want of consideration, but would be good in the hands of an innocent purchaser for value.

The township trustees not having the duty to collect money for lots sold, they may not delegate that power to a sexton. The township treasurer having such duty, may delegate the power and if he does so and it is abused, he may be held personally liable.

COLUMBUS, OHIO, April 30, 1913.

Bureau of Inspection and Supervision of Public Offices, Columbus, Ohio.

GENTLEMEN:—Under date of February 3, 1913, you inquire of this department as follows:

> "Under section 3451, General Code, township trustees are given control of certain cemeteries. Section 3448, General Code, makes it the duty of township trustees to sell cemetery lots. Is it the duty of the trustees to collect money for lots sold and work done on cemeteries in their charge and if so, can said trustees delegate this authority to a cemetery sexton or superintendent?
> "If the sexton or superintendent of a township cemetery, drawing a salary as such, with no record of his employment or official duties appearing in the minutes of the proceedings of the trustees, collects money from patrons of the cemetery for cemetery lots, digging of graves and other work done by him and pays said money to the township clerk instead of the township treasurer and a loss results from the mispayment, the money never reaching the township treasury, can the township trustees be held for the amount thus lost? If not, can the clerk and his bondsmen be held for the amount lost?

"Is it the duty of the township treasurer to collect money due his township for cemetery lots, digging graves and other cemetery receipts? If so, can he delegate that power to another?"

The law pertaining to township cemeteries is found in sections 3441 to 3475, General Code.

Section 3447, General Code, prescribes certain duties of the township trustees in reference to such cemeteries, as follows:

"The trustees shall have such cemetery laid out in lots, avenues and paths, number the lots and have a suitable plat thereof made, which shall be carefully kept by the township clerk. They shall make and enforce all needful rules and regulations for its division into lots, and the allotment thereof to families or individuals, and for the care, supervision and improvement thereof, and they shall require the grass and weeds to be cut and destroyed at least twice each year in all such cemeteries. Suitable provision shall be made therein for persons whose burial is at the expense of the township."

Section 3448, General Code, provides for the sale of lots in the cemetery as follows:

"Upon application the township trustees shall sell at a reasonable price such number of lots as the public wants demand for burial purposes. Upon complying with the terms of sale, purchasers of lots shall be entitled to receive a deed or deeds therefor which the trustees shall execute, and which shall be recorded by the township clerk in a book for that purpose, the expense of recording to be paid by the person receiving the deed. Upon the application of a head of a family living in the township, the trustees shall make and deliver to such applicant a deed for a suitable lot for the burial of his or her family without charge, if in the opinion of the trustees, by reason of the circumstances of such family, payment therefor would be oppressive."

This section authorizes the trustees to sell the lots; but it does not provide that the trustees shall collect the money therefor.

Section 3449, General Code, provides:

"The proceeds arising from the sale of such lots shall be used in improving and embellishing such grounds, and the trustees shall build and maintain proper and secure fences around all such cemeteries, to be paid for from the township funds."

Section 3457, General Code, authorizes the trustees to receive funds by gifts for the care of such cemetery, and reads:

"The township trustees may receive by gift, devise, bequest, or otherwise, any money, securities or other property in trust, as a permanent fund to be held and invested by them and their successors in office, the income therefrom to be used and expended under their direction, in the care, improvement and beautifying of any burial lot designated and named by the person making such gift, devise or bequest, in any township cemetery over which such trustees have jurisdiction."

Section 3458, General Code, provides for the investment of such fund, as follows:

> "Such trustees shall invest such fund, in their names as such trustees, in interest-bearing securities, with interest payable annually or semi-anually, and the principal as it becomes due, to the treasurer of such township, change the investment as the interest of the trust demands and collect the interest dividends, or other income, as they become due and payable. From such income the trustees shall first pay the cost and expense connected with the trust, and the balance shall be expended, under their direction, in the proper care and beautifying of such burial lot, and draw warrants on the township treasurer to pay therefor, which shall be paid only from such income funds. Such gift, devise or bequest and income therefrom shall be exempt from taxation, the same as other cemetery property."

Section 3459, General Code, provides:

> "The township treasurer shall keep accurate and separate accounts of such investments, the income therefrom, and of all disbursements, thereof, which shall be open to inspection at all reasonable times, and shall be approved by the trustees at each annual meeting. All moneys, securities and other property shall be and remain in the care and custody of the township treasurer and his successors in office, and he and his sureties shall be liable upon the official bond for the safe keeping and proper accounting, as for other money coming into his hands as such treasurer, belonging to the township. For any purpose connected with such trust, the trustees and their successors may commence any action at law, or in equity, in any court, or make any defense therein necessary to the execution of the trust."

It appears from these sections that the treasurer of the township is the proper custodian of the funds received by the trustees by virtue of section 3457, General Code.

The general duties of a township treasurer are prescribed by sections 3309, et seq. of the General Code.

Section 3310, General Code, provides:

> "Before entering upon the discharge of his duties the township treasurer shall give a bond payable to the trustees, with sureties approved by them, in such sum as they determine, conditioned for the faithful discharge of his duties as treasurer and the paying over according to law of all moneys that come into his hands by virtue of his office. Such bond shall be deposited with the clerk."

Section 3316, General Code, provides:

> "No money belonging to the township shall be paid out by the treasurer, except upon an order signed personally by at least two of the township trustees and countersigned personally by the township clerk."

These sections contemplate that the township treasurer shall receive, pay out and be the custodian of all moneys belonging to the township, and it is the duty of the township treasurer to receive all such funds.

The trustees are given certain duties in reference to receiving gifts, and paying out moneys for repairs and improvement of cemeteries. They receive and pay out this money through the treasurer of the township who is the treasurer of the board of township trustees.

It is the duty of the township treasurer to receive all money secured in the sale of lots, digging of graves and from other sources from the township cemetery.

It appears in your case that the funds were received by the clerk and were misappropriated by him. You ask as to the liability of the clerk and his bondsmen for such misapplication.

Section 3300, General Code, provides for the giving of a bond by the township clerk, as follows:

> "Before entering upon the discharge of his duties, the township clerk shall give bond payable to the trustees with sureties approved by them, in such sum as they determine, conditioned for the faithful performance of his duties as clerk. Such bond shall be recorded by the clerk, filed with the township treasurer and carefully preserved."

Section 3301, General Code, prescribes the duties of the clerk and reads:

> "The clerk shall keep an accurate account of the proceedings of the trustees at all their meetings, including their acceptance of the bonds of township officers. He shall record all township roads that are established by the trustees. He shall record the earmarks of cattle, sheep and hogs, used by the owners, and such other marks and brands as any person may wish to have recorded, but he shall not record the same mark or brand to two persons."

The statutes give the clerk other duties, but I find no statute which authorizes the clerk to receive any money on behalf of the township.

In State of Ohio vs. Griffith, 74 Ohio St., 80, it is held:

> "A public officer is personally, and may be even criminally, liable for malfeasance in office; but the sureties on his official bond are answerable only within the letter of their contract for the unfaithful performance of his official duties and not for dereliction outside of the limits of his official duties. State vs. Carter, 67 Ohio St., 422, distinguished.
> "The clerk of a board of education is not authorized, nor is it made his duty by statute, to receive and become the custodian of tuition funds belonging to such board, and such board is not empowered by section 3985, Revised Statutes, to make a rule conferring such authority or imposing such duty on the clerk of the board; and where pursuant to such a rule, the clerk of the board was permitted to and did receive and have the custody of tuition funds which he failed to safely keep and account for, the sureties on his statutory bond are not liable therefor."

This rule applies to the case now in question. It was not the duty of the clerk to receive this money, and the statutory bond given by him would not cover such money.

The bondsmen of the clerk cannot, therefore, be held for the defalcation of the clerk as to this money.

The clerk, however, received this money and he has not properly accounted for it. He is, therefore, personally liable for refunding the money so received. The question arises; to whom is he liable, also who must stand the loss if the clerk is unable to account for it?

It has been seen that neither the sexton nor the clerk have been authorized to receive this money for the township. The money never reached an officer of the township who was chargeable with the collection thereof.

A person who deals with an officer, and an officer is in fact but an agent of the public, must take notice of the authority and powers of the officer at his peril.

At section 551 of Throop on Public Officers, the rule is stated.

> "But the rule is different when an officer exceeds his powers; in such a case, the body for which he acts, whether it is the state, a municipal corporation or other public organization, is not bound by his acts; and every person dealing with an officer must, at his peril, ascertain the extent of his powers. In this respect the rule is more stringent respecting public officers and agents, than it is respecting private agents; the former are held more strictly within the limits of their prescribed powers, than the latter; and a contract, made by a public agent, relating to a subject within the general scope of his powers, does not bind his principals, if there was a want of specific power to make it."

The sexton had no right to receive the money on behalf of the township. The failure of the sexton to pay to the treasurer of the township money entrusted to him could not be charged against the township. The same is true as to the money received by the clerk. Neither of them had any authority to receive money for the township.

When a purchaser of a lot paid the sexton, such purchaser made the sexton his agent to remit the money for him. When the sexton gave the money to the clerk, the clerk thereby became the agent of the purchaser. The clerk was not the agent of the township for the purpose of collecting money.

The money was lost through the defalcation of the agent of the purchaser of the lot. The agent is responsible to his principal and the principal must stand the loss if the agent is unable to make it good.

The clerk, therefore, is personally liable to the persons from whom the money is received and is not liable to the township therefor.

You ask further as to the liability of the trustees for such defalcation.

It does not appear that the trustees authorized the sexton to collect this money, or that the trustees authorized the sexton to pay the money to the clerk. The trustees, therefore, would not be liable for the money thus collected and lost.

They may, however, be liable for any loss to the township if they gave a deed for a cemetery lot which was paid for to the clerk, but which money never reached the township treasury.

Section 3448, General Code, supra, provides:

> "Upon complying with the terms of sale, purchasers of lots shall be entitled to receive a deed or deeds therefor which the trustees shall execute."

One of the terms of the sale would be payment of the purchase price. The trustees are not authorized to execute a deed for a cemetery lot, except to an indigent family, without receiving pay therefor.

If, therefore, the trustees have executed deeds for lots the purchase price of which was paid to the clerk or sexton but the same did not get to the township treasury, and a loss to the township is occasioned thereby, such trustees would be liable for such loss.

If the purchase money never reached the township treasury there was no consideration to the township for the deed and the title of the purchaser would be invalid. Such deed would be good in the hands of a bona fide purchaser for value without notice. In such case there would be a double liability; first, the trustees would be liable; second, the original purchaser would be liable to the township for the purchase price of the lot.

In City of Tiffin vs. Shawhan, 43 Ohio St., 178, it is held:

> "The execution of a special power to convey lands by a public officer must be in strict pursuance of the power, or no title is conveyed."

At page 1158, volume 37 of Cyc., the rule is stated:

> "A payment of taxes, in order to be effective in relieving the person and his property from liability, must be made to the officer primarily authorized to receive them, or at least to some one legally delegated to act in his behalf in receiving and receipting for the taxes."

Also at page 1368 of 31 Cyc. it is said:

> "Authority to collect, like all authority of an agent, must be traced to the principal. Moreover it is not to be inferred from mere employment as agent. To bind the principal the collection must be made by one who is not only his agent but who has been clothed with authority to make such collection."

The rule of recovery against a bona fide purchaser is stated at page 1057, volume 32 of Cyc. as follows:

> "The government cannot repudiate a patent on the ground of fraud and recover the land as against an innocent purchaser for value from the patentee, and the fact that a person purchased from an entryman before the issuance of the patent does not deprive him of the character and rights of a bona fide purchaser for value."

As the purchaser of the lot has not paid the money to the proper officer the debt is not discharged and he is still liable to pay the debt. As the trustees executed deeds for lots before the township was paid therefor, they are liable for all loss occasioned thereby.

It does not appear that the trustees performed any act in reference to the money received for digging graves and the other work. Unless it can be shown that they participated in this loss the trustees would not be liable.

The statutes do not authorize the township treasurer to appoint a deputy. If the township treasurer directed some one to receive the money of the township for him, such person would not be an official of the township, but would be the private agent of the treasurer, and the treasurer would make himself liable for a misapplication of funds received by such person.

It is not the duty of the township trustees to collect money for lots sold in a cemetery and they cannot delegate that power to a sexton. The treasurer is required to receive and collect such money under the direction of the trustees.

Respectfully,

TIMOTHY S. HOGAN,

Attorney General.

CITY HEALTH OFFICER NOT AN OFFICER—MAY BE PAID BY CITY FOR SERVICES TO INJURED FIREMEN.

Since none of the indicia usually connected with a public officer are present in the case of a health officer; since the incumbent of that position is subject to the will of the board of health, as to the nature of his duties, as to his term of office, and to his salary, he is not to be considered a public officer and therefore does not come within the terms of either section 3808 or section 12912, General Code, prohibiting the allowance of compensation to municipal officers for work, services or materials furnished in addition to those required by the office.

COLUMBUS, OHIO, April 30, 1913.

Bureau of Inspection and Supervision of Public Offices, Department of Auditor of State, Columbus, Ohio.

GENTLEMEN:—Under date of April 19th you request my opinion as follows:

"Is the health officer of a city such an officer as would make it illegal for him to be paid from the city treasury for services for professional attendance upon injured firemen, it not being one of his official duties as health officer to render such services?"

Sections 3808, 12912 and 4408 of the General Code are as follows:

"Section 3808. No member of the council, board, officer or commissioner of the corporation, shall have any interest in the expenditure of money on the part of the corporation other than his fixed compensation. A violation of any provision of this or the preceding two sections shall disqualify the party violating it from holding any office of trust or profit in the corporation, and shall render him liable to the corporation for all sums of money or other thing he may receive contrary to the provisions of such section, and if in office he shall be dismissed therefrom.

"Section 12912. Whoever, being an officer of a municipal corporation or member of the council thereof or the trustee of a township, is interested in the profits of a contract, job, work or services for such corporation or township, or acts as commissioner, architect, superintendent or engineer, in work undertaken or prosecuted by such corporation or township during the term for which he was elected or appointed, or for one year thereafter, or becomes the employe of the contractor of such contract, job, work or services while in office, shall be fined not less than fifty dollars nor more than one thousand dollars, or imprisoned not less than thirty days nor more than six months, or both, and forfeit his office.

"Section 4408. The board of health shall appoint a health officer, who shall be the executive officer. He shall furnish his name, address and other information required by the state board of health. The board may appoint a clerk, and with the consent of council, as many ward or district physicians or one ward physician for each ward in the city as it deems necessary."

The answer to your question depends upon whether or not the health officer is an officer of the corporation within the meaning of sections 3808 and 12912, above quoted. The only reference to the duties of the health officer are the words of section 4408, which state that he shall be the executive officer.

I am able to find but two decisions in this state which passed upon the nature of this position. The first is State vs. Craig, 69 O. S. 236, which held that a health officer is not an employe as that word is used in section 189 of the Municipal Code. The decision in this case, however, was confined solely to the language of the respective statutes and simply held, as is disclosed by the language of the court on page 246, that a health officer is not such an employe as is comprised within the terms of section 189 of the Municipal Code. The other decision is that of State ex rel. Miller vs. Council of Massillon, 2 O. C. C. R. page 167, wherein the court says, no page 169:

> "It will be observed that the duties of the appointee or health officer are not prescribed by statute. He is the servant of the board of health that makes the appointment. He is under their absolute control and direction; and in addition to that, they fix his salary. His salary is at the will of the board of health. His term of office is at their will; they may terminate it at their pleasure. * * * Now, that being the nature of the employment, perhaps it is a misnomer here to call him officer at all. He is more like an employe or servant of the board of health."

In substance, this decision held that a health officer did not come within the terms of section 1717 of the Revised Statutes prohibiting an increase of salary of an officer during his term. The decision was based rather upon the fact that the health officer did not have a definite term of office than upon the circumstances that he was not a public officer. The language of this case, above quoted, therefore, is merely dicta and cannot be considered controlling.

It is well understood that the question whether or note a certain office is properly a public office is a very vague and difficult one at times to decide. It is well settled that the mere designation of the term "office" or "officer" does not of itself constitute a public office. State vs. Jennings, 57 O. S. 415; State vs. Kennon, 7 O. S. 557.

The indicia of a public office are enumerated in State vs. Wilson, 29 O. S. 349:

> "He is appointed for a definite term. He must take the oath prescribed by the constitution. He must reside in the institution that he superintends. His duties are prescribed by law and not by contract. He is clothed with the right and correspondent duty to execute a public trust. He has a right to the salary attached to the office. The office is continuing. If it becomes vacant, it may be filled by a successor, upon whom the duties will be cast."

From a review of the decisions, however, it is clear that the existence or non-existence of one or several of these indicia is not controlling.

In State vs. Halliday, 61 O. S. 171, the court said:

> "The distinguishing characteristics of a public officer is that the incumbent, in an independent capacity, is clothed with some part of the sovereignty of the state, to be exercised in the interest of the public as required by law."

This principle is borne out by a host of decisions cited in 11 Encyc. Digest of Ohio Reports, 214. In the case of a health officer none of the indicia set out in these authorities are present unless it be that he is clothed with authority to execute a public trust. The decisions substantially bear out the proposition, however, that this authority must be extended to the officer in an independent capacity. Thus, in State vs. Mason, 61 O. S. 62, the court said:

> "One who performs no duties except such as by law are charged upon a superior does not hold an office but merely an employment."

It is a well settled principle of common law that the office of superior and deputy constituted one office; that the deputy was not looked upon as a public officer.

I am unable to see how, in the present case, the health officer can be accorded any greater dignity than a deputy. Since, therefore, none of the indicia usually attendant upon a public office seem to be present in this case; since the health officer is subject to the will of the board, as to the nature of his duties, as to his term of office and as to his salary, I am of the opinion that the dicta of the court in State vs. Council of Massillon, above quoted, should be accorded deference as the only existing Ohio authority.

I therefore hold that the health officer is not such an officer of the municipal corporation as is comprehended by the terms of either section 3808 or section 12912, General Code, and that he may properly be allowed compensation for professional attendance upon injured firemen.

Very truly yours,
TIMOTHY S. HOGAN,
Attorney General.

APPORTIONMENT OF PERCENTAGES TO COUNTY AUDITOR ON FEBRUARY SETTLEMENT, 1907, AS AFFECTED BY THE ENACTMENT OF COUNTY OFFICERS' SALARY LAW—CLAIMS BARRED BY STATUTE OF LIMITATIONS.

Although the decision of the supreme court providing a method of apportioning fees to the county auditor at the semi-annual settlements, under the fee system law, in accordance with the year extending from settlement to settlement, is contrary to the former custom of allowing such fees, in accordance with the official year of the auditor, nevertheless, the lapse of six years from the date of accrual of any claims with reference thereto, will bar recovery at this time by county auditors of any differences in payments which may be shown to have been made by reason of the adoption of this custom.

COLUMBUS, OHIO, May 2, 1913.

GENTLEMEN:—Under date of January 4, 1913, you requested my opinion as follows:

> "The supreme court recently held in the case of Will R. Lewis vs. the State ex rel. Stilwell, Case No. 12881, that the fees accruing to the auditor on the February settlement, 1907, compensated such auditor for the six months from August 15, 1906, to February 15, 1907, and decided how the fees accruing on said settlement should be divided as between the county auditor personally and the fee fund due the county.

"Applying this principle, would the fees accruing on any preceding February settlement, and February, 1905, belong to the auditor who entered upon his first term the third Monday of October, 1904, or should such fees be divided pro rata between him and his predecessor as the time from the 15th of August to the third Monday of October, 1904, is to the time from the third Monday of October, 1904, to the 15th of February, 1905?

"Is a county auditor whose term expired the third Monday of October, 1904, now entited to receive from the county treasury any part of the settlement fees accruing at the February settlement, 1905? If so has the county a claim in the same amount against the county auditor who entered upon his first term the third Monday of October, 1904?

"P. S. The custom in the several counties of the state for a great many years past, prior to the enactment of the salary law, was to consider the February settlement fees as compensation for the first half of the official year beginning the third Monday of October and the August settlement fees as compensation for the last half of the official year ending the day preceding the third Monday of the following October. The supreme court took a different view and it seems to us that if it should be held that any part of the fees of the February, 1905, settlement are due to the auditor whose term expired the third Monday of October, 1904, there would be due from this last mentioned county auditor to the county or his predecessor a similar division of the fees of February settlement next following his entering upon his first term of office. This case arises in Noble county, where Mr. Hastings (now a member of the general assembly) has filed a bill with the county commissioners claiming a compensation from the 15th day of August, 1904, to October 17, 1904. Mr. Hastings was succeeded by J. W. Shinely, who was in office when the salary law took effect, January 1, 1907, and to whom there is now due the sum of $247.89 under the supreme court decision, less a finding made by this department on account of overcharges for indexing. The present auditor of Noble county will not pay any money to either of the claimants until he has written authority of this department under the instruction of the attorney general's department."

Your statement in brief is that the supreme court in the recent case of Lewis vs. State ex rel. Stilwell, held that an auditor holding office on January 1, 1907, (the date upon which section 1069, Revised Statutes, providing for the allowance upon a monthly estimate to the auditor of certain percentages of the moneys shown to have been collected by the county treasurer, upon the February semi-annual settlement, was repealed and substituted by the statue providing for a salary in lieu of said percentages) was entitled to the portion of such percentages, represented by that part of the six months immediatey preceding said semi-annual settlement, which was served by the auditor up to the time of the taking effect of the salary law.

In substance the court allowed the auditor payment from August 15th, to January 1st, such payment being three-fourths of the percentages allowed upon the collections of the treasurer as shown by the February semi-annual settlement.

This decision of the supreme court was contrary to the former custom of allowing such percentages according to which custom the percentages allowed at the semi-annual settlements were apportioned to the first and second six months respectively of the auditor's official year. Had the auditor, therefore, been paid in accordance with the former custom, he would have been paid that portion of the percentages allowed at the February semi-annual settlement, in accordance with section 1609, Revised Statutes, which the period from the third Monday in October to the first day of January, bore to the period of six months intervening the third Monday of October and the third Monday of April.

It is clear, therefore, that when the auditor in question, (that is Mr. S.) took office, he was allowed his percentages on the February settlement from October, 1904, to April, 1905, on the basis of the former custom; and his predecessor was allowed his percentages on the August settlement, 1904, in accordance with this same custom, on the basis of the August settlement. Had the rule of the supreme court been applied when the predecessor was in office, his percentages from August, 1904, to the third Monday in October of the same year would have been based upon the settlement of the following February, instead of the settlement of August, 1904, as was the case.

The settlement of the question involved in your inquiry would involve a complete reaccounting and reapportioning of all payments made to each auditor and after the same had been determined, the probable result would be a finding to the effect that the predecessor (Mr. H.) would have had a claim against the county for the difference between the amount actually received by him and the amount which would have been received had he been paid in accordance with the supreme court's ruling; and the successor (Mr. S.) would probably owe the county the difference between the amount actually received by him and the amount which would have been paid in accordance with the court's ruling.

It is well settled, that the statute of limitations may be employed as a defense against a claim in behalf of counties, townships and municipalities.

Oxford Township vs. Columbia, 38 O. S. 87.
State vs. Blake, 2 O. S. 148.
Williams vs. First Presbyterian Society, Cin. 1 O. S. 478.

Section 12222, General Code, provides as follows:

> "An action upon a contract not in writing, express or implied, or upon a liability created by statute other than a forfeiture or penalty, shall be brought within six years after the cause thereof accrued."

The claims under consideration in the present case are claims for money had and received, and therefore, come within the terms of section 12222, General Code, implied contracts.

Mount vs. Lakeman, 21 O. S. 643.
Commissioners vs. McClure, 7 O. N. P. 187.

Since Mr. S. received compensation in accordance with the supreme court's ruling, from August, 1906, the causes of action against him would not have accrued subsequent to that date, and I am, therefore, of the opinion that the county is barred, by this statute of limitations, from pursuing any action thereon. The claim of Mr. H. who went out of office in 1904 a fortiori is also clearly barred by this statute.

In conclusion, therefore, I am of the opinion that whatever claims may be shown, by a reapportionment of the percentages to have been due to or owed by the county by reason of the supreme court's ruling in this matter at some prior time, these claims are now all barred by reason of lapse of time.

Very truly yours,
TIMOTHY S. HOGAN,
Attorney General.

SHERIFF ENTITLED TO JAIL FEES FROM CITY FOR PRISONERS COMMITTED FOR VIOLATIONS OF ORDINANCES—RIGHT OF CITY TO CHARGE SUCH FEES AS COSTS AGAINST INDIVIDUALS—PAYMENT OF FEES INTO COUNTY FEE FUND.

Under section 2845, General Code, a sheriff is entitled to receive jail fees for all prisoners under his charge, and when the prisoners are committed to a county jail for violations of ordinances, in accordance with section 4564, General Code, the sheriff is entitled to receive from the city the proper fees.

It is well settled that costs are governed by statutory provisions and that in the absence thereof, costs may not be charged a criminal proceeding.

The authority of a municipal council to fix fees in ordinance cases, is provided by section 4581, General Code, and in accordance therewith, council may charge similar fees for sheriffs' services to those prescribed by section 2845, General Code, and charge the same as costs in the case.

Inasmuch as these fees were received by the sheriff in his official capacity, they must be paid by the sheriff, into his fee fund, under the county officers' salary law.

COLUMBUS, OHIO, May 14, 1913.

Bureau of Inspection and Supervision of Public Offices, Department of Auditor of State, Columbus, Ohio.

GENTLEMEN:—I beg to acknowledge receipt of your letter of March 17th, wherein you request my opinion upon the following questions, arising under sections 4564 and 2845, General Code:

"1. May sheriffs' jail fees be charged against and collected of a city making use of the county jail: (a) When the ordinance under which the prisoners are confined in the county jail makes no provision for jail fees and (b) when the ordinance makes provision for such fees?

"2. If the sheriff legally collects such jail fees from a city shall the same accure to the benefit of the sheriff's fee fund or to his personal profit?

"3. May a city legally tax such jail fees in the cost bill against the defendants, and if so, and the costs are collected from the defendant, shall the same accrue to the sheriff's fee fund or to his profit?"

The sections which you cite, insofar as they are applicable, are as follows:

"Section 4564. * * * Any (municipal) corporation not provided with a workhouse, or other jail, shall be allowed, for the purpose of imprisonment, the use of the jail of the county, at the expense of the corporation. * * * Persons, so imprisoned in the county jail shall be under the charge of the sheriff of the county, who shall receive and hold such persons in the manner prescribed by the ordinances of the corporation, until discharged by due course of law.

"Section 2845. For the services hereinafter specified, when rendered, the sheriff shall charge and collect the following fees and no more: * * * jail fees for receiving, discharging or surrendering each prisoner, to be charged but once in each case, fifty cents * * *. When any of the foregoing services are rendered by an officer or employe whose salary or per diem compensation is paid by the county other than from the sheriff's fee fund, the legal fees provided for such services in this section shall be taxed in the costs in the case and when collected shall be paid into the general fund of the county."

Your question relates, of course, to prisoners received under convictions of violations of city ordinances. In this connection I call your attention to section 4556, General Code, which provides as follows:

"The costs of the mayor and other officers, in all cases, shall be fixed by ordinance, but in no case greater than the fees for similar services before justices of the peace. In case of conviction the fees of officers, jurors and witnesses shall be taxed against the parties convicted, and in case of acquittal of the violation of an ordinance, the costs, except the fees of the mayor and marshal, shall be taxed against the corporation."

and also to section 4581, General Code, which provides as follows:

"Other fees in the police court shall be the same * * * in cases for violation of ordinances * * * as the council, by ordinance, prescribes, not exceeding the fees for like services in state cases."

It seems to me that the questions which you ask may be approached from two angles of view; first, as to the right of the sheriff to receive the sum of fifty cents in each case. I am of the opinion that this right exists in the sheriff as jailer. The source from which his fees are paid is, in my opinion, immaterial, so far as the sheriff is concerned. As jailer he deals with the city in the capacity of a contracting party, by virtue of the statute (section 4564) above quoted. Therefore, I am of the opinion that the sheriff must look to the city in the first instance for his fees; and that it not incumbent upon the sheriff to make his costs, so to speak, out of the costs in any case.

The other angle from which I have suggested the question may be viewed is that of the authority of the city to fix by ordinance the fees of the sheriff. This is suggested by your first question. In my opinion, however, the city council has no authority to fix or remit the fee of the sheriff in his capacity as jailer, that being fixed by the statute itself. Council does have authority, however, to determine what fees of officers shall be included in the costs chargeable in ordinance cases. This distinction must be observed. In fixing the costs the municipal corporation is not in any way limited in determining the right of the sheriff to fees, but is only limited in determining the amount which it will authorize the mayor or police judge to tax against the defendant in case of conviction under a penal ordinance. That is, if the ordinance of the city should fail to provide that the jail fees of the sheriff should be taxed as costs in case of conviction, the defendant could not be held for them, because, as has been often decided, liability for costs is entirely statutory, there being no common law on the subject in Ohio. A fortiori, then, it must follow that liability for costs in proceedings under municipal ordinances is entirely a matter of ordinance, so long as the legislature has not determined the question itself, but has specifically delegated the power to fix costs in ordinance cases.

I am of the opinion that the sheriff may charge against and collect from a city making use of the county jail the fees to which he is entitled under section 2845, General Code, regardless of the provisions of the ordinance under which the prisoners are confined in the county jail. This constitutes an answer to both branches of your first question.

Answering your second question, I am clearly of the opinion that inasmuch as the sheriff receives these fees in his capacity as an officer of the county they must be turned into his fee fund under the county officers' salary law, the language of which, in this particular, is, as you know, very comprehensive.

Answering your third question, I am of the opinion that the city may legally tax such jail fees in the cost bill against the defendant, provided such fees are made costs by an ordinance passed under section 4556 or section 4581, as the case may be. However, if the costs are collected from a convicted defendant they do not accrue to the sheriff's fee fund, but, in my opinion, must be paid into the treasury of the municipality. This follows, I think, not alone because of the provisions of section 4231, General Code (seemingly applicable only to cities), which might not be regarded as applicable to the fees of the sheriff, but also because of the fact, which I have already pointed out, that under the statute which requires that the use of the jail shall be at the expense of the city, the city is itself primarily liable for the sheriff's jail fees. This being the case, the city cannot shift this liability by providing by ordinance for taxing such fees in the costs of an ordinance case. Inasmuch, then, as the city is the responsible party, so far as the sheriff is concerned, it must pay him his fees, and if it chooses to reimburse itself by providing for their taxation as costs, that is a matter with which the sheriff has no concern whatever.

Very truly yours,
TIMOTHY S. HOGAN,
Attorney General.

CITY COUNCIL MAY PROVIDE COMPENSATION FOR SERVICES OF A JUSTICE OF THE PEACE APPOINTED TO ACT DURING ABSENCE OR DISABILITY OF MAYOR—FEES IN STATE CASES MAY BE RETAINED—FEES IN ORDINANCE CASES PAID INTO CITY TREASURY.

Under section 4549, General Code, a justice of the peace appointed by the mayor in cities having no police judge, to act during the absence or disability of the executive, has the same authority and power as the mayor and is, therefore, entitled to collect the same fees in state ordinance cases as the mayor.

Under section 4213, General Code, fees collected in ordinance cases, must be turned into the city treasury, but in accordance with the decision of Portsmouth vs. Millstead, fees pertaining to state cases may be retained.

Under section 4214, General Code, council may fix the compensation of officers in the city government, and thereunder may allow such justice of the peace a fixed compensation for services performed by him in ordinance cases.

COLUMBUS, OHIO, April 11, 1913.

Bureau of Inspection and Supervision of Public Offices, Department of Auditor of State, Columbus, Ohio.

GENTLEMEN:—Under date of October 5, 1912, you requested my opinion as follows:

> "Is it legal for the city council to provide a salary for the services of a justice of the peace designated by the mayor to perform his duties in criminal matters in the absence of the mayor from the city? If the compensation of such justice of the peace cannot be legally paid from the city treasury, may he be allowed to retain his fees in ordinance cases, as well as those in state cases?"

In cities having no police court, the justices of the peace may be appointed to act in the mayor's stead under section 4549, which follows:

> "In cities having no police judge, in the absence or during the disability of the mayor, he may designate a justice of the peace to perform his duties in criminal matters, which justice shall, during the time, have the same power and authority as the mayor."

Under this statute such justice succeeds, during the time of his service in the place of the mayor, to the same powers and authority in criminal procedures. The following sections provide for fees allowed to a mayor in criminal cases for violation of state statutes:

> "Section 4534. * * * The fees of the mayor in all cases, excepting those arising out of violation of ordinances, shall be the same as those allowed justice of the peace for similar services."
> "Section 4550. He (the mayor) shall keep a docket, and shall be entitled to receive the same fees allowed justices of the peace for similar services."

Section 4556 of the General Code provides for the fixing of his fees in cases tried by him for violation of city ordinances, as follows:

> "The costs of the mayor and other officers, in all cases, shall be fixed by ordinance, but in no case greater than the fees for similar services before justices of the peace. In case of conviction the fees of officers, jurors and witnesses shall be taxed against the parties convicted, and in case of acquittal of the violation of an ordinance, the costs, except the fees of the mayor and marshal, shall be taxed against the corporation."

Until council has fixed fees for such cases, none can be assessed by the mayor. (City of Bellefontaine vs. Haviland, 3 N. P. n. s., 79.) Section 4213 of the General Code is as follows:

> "The salary of any officer, clerk or employe shall not be increased or diminished during the term for which he was elected or appointed, and, excepting as otherwise provided in this title, all fees pertaining to any office shall be paid into the city treasury."

This provision is interpreted in the syllabus of the case of Portsmouth vs. Millstead, and the case of Portsmouth vs. Baucus, 18 C. C. decisions, 384, as follows:

> "The provision of 96 O. L., (section 126 Rev. Stat. 1536-633) requiring 'that all fees pertaining to any office shall be paid into the city treasury' has reference to municipal fees solely or such fees as may be fixed by municipal authorities. This section does not authorize the city to interfere with the fees of mayors or chiefs of police in state criminal cases. Whether such authority can be delegated to such municipalities—query."

In view of this decision, therefore, the mayor is entitled to retain the fees assessed by him in state cases, which are the same as those provided for justices of the peace, under section 4550 of the General Code, but he must pay all fees received by him, as provided by ordinances of council, into the city treasury under section 4213 of the General Code quoted above.

Under section 4549 of the General Code above quoted, the justices of the peace appointed by the provisions therein, succeed to the power and authority of the mayor. The question, therefore, arises as to whether or not such justices of the peace are entitled to any compensation for their services in cases for the violation of city ordinances.

Section 4214 of the General Code provides as follows:

> "Except as otherwise provided in this title, council, by ordinance or resolution, shall determine the number of officers, clerks and employes in each department of the city government, and shall fix by ordinance or resolution their respective salaries and compensation, and the amount of bond to be given for each officer * * *."

In the case of State ex rel. Smith vs. Lotschuetz, Auditor, 10 Nisi Prius, n. s., on page 263, the court says of this statute:

> "This section clearly confers upon council, except as otherwise provided in that act, the right to determine the number of officers, clerks and employes in any department of the city government, and also confers upon council the right to fix, by ordinance or resolution, their respective salaries and compensation. Here is an express declaration upon the part of the legislature that the council shall have the right to fix the salaries and compensation of all officers, clerks and employes in any department of the city government, except as otherwise provided in that act."

A justice of the peace appointed by the mayor under section 4549, General Code, renders service in behalf of a municipality, when hearing and disposing of ordinance cases, and when acting in these cases, he charges the same fees which are prescribed for hearing by the mayor, by virtue of section 4549, General Code, which fees, in accordance with section 4213, General Code, above quoted, which prescribes that all fees pertaining to any office shall be paid into the city treasury, must beyond question of doubt be paid into the municipal treasury.

I am of the opinion that there is nothing expressly provided or which could justify the implication anywhere in these statutes, that when a mayor is obliged to appoint a substitute in these cases by reason of necessary absence or disability, he is obliged to compensate such substitute from his own funds. On the other hand, I do not think it plausible that the statutes intended a justice of the peace so serving to act without compensation in ordinance cases.

In the 11th volume of Encyc. Digest of Ohio Reports, page 215, it is said:

"Any man is a public officer who hath any duty concerning the public, and he is not the less a public officer when his authority is confined to narrow limits; for it is the duty of his office and the nature of that duty which makes him an officer and not the extent of his authority. Shaw vs. Jones, 4 N. P., 372. State vs. Rust, 4 O. C. C., 329."

In view of this authority, therefore, I am of the opinion that a justice of the peace, supplanting a mayor to this extent is an officer in a department of the city government, whose compensation may be fixed by council in the exercise of a reasonable discretion by authority of section 4214, General Code, above quoted.

It would seem well to state in this connection, however, that section 4549, General Code, above quoted, must not be construed to authorize a mayor to appoint a substitute justice of the peace at random, for it clearly seems to be the intention of the statute, that when a police court has not been provided, the duty of hearing ordinance cases must be shouldered by the mayor as part of his official duties. This statute authorizes the appointment of a substitute only in cases of necessary absence or disability.

As to the fees of such justices in state cases, the case of Portsmouth vs. Millstead, above quoted, is decisive upon the point that such justices may retain their fees in state cases.

With your communication you enclose a copy of an ordinance of the city of Mansfield, providing for the compensation of such justices to be paid out of the city treasury, for services in both state and city cases; and you inquire whether such ordinance is legal. As to the allowance in state cases, since the statutes provide the compensation to which a justice is entitled therein, and since he is entitled to retain such compensation and since, furthermore, such services are determined to be rendered in behalf of the state instead of the municipality, I am of the opinion that an ordinance of council allowing further compensation is illegal and void. As to the compensation permitted in said ordinance for services in ordinance cases, I am of the opinion, for the reasons aforesaid, that the same is legal and proper, provided such services were rendered on account of absence or disability of the mayor.

Very truly yours,

TIMOTHY S. HOGAN,

Attorney General.

BOARD OF COMMISSIONERS OF SINKING FUND OF SCHOOL DISTRICT HAS CONTROL OF SINKING FUND, BUT CUSTODY REMAINS IN THE TREASURY OF THE BOARD OF EDUCATION.

Under section 7604, General Code, and the following statutes which provide for the deposit of all moneys coming into the hands of the treasurer of the board of education of a school district and the following statutes which provide the mode of procedure for deposit of funds; and under section 4768, which provides that no money shall be withdrawn from depositories except upon an order signed by the treasurer and by the president or vice-president, and counter-signed by the clerk of the board of education; and under section 7613, and related statutes, which require the board of education to set aside and appropriate funds for the use of the sinking fund commission, the custody of such funds must reside with the board and its treasurer, whilst the control of the same is vested in the sinking fund commission.

The commission of the sinking fund may withdraw for its own purpose from such funds, therefore, only by requisition directed to the board.

COLUMBUS, OHIO, May 14, 1913.

Bureau of Inspection and Supervision of Public Offices, Department of Auditor of State, Columbus, Ohio.

GENTLEMEN:—Under date of April 24th you request my opinion as follows:

"We respectfully request your written opinion upon the following questions:

"Section 7614, G. C., provides for the appointment of a board of commissioners of the sinking fund for school districts.

"Section 7615, G. C., makes it the duty of the commissioners of the sinking fund to invest such fund.

"Section 7617, G. C., requires that the commissioners of the sinking fund make an annual report to the board of education, giving a detailed statement of the funds in their charge for each year, ending April 31.

"Is the board of commissioners of the sinking fund made custodian of the money in such fund? If so, would a depository contract made between a board of education and a bank, provided for in sections 7604 to 7608, General Code, cover funds separately deposited by the board of commissioners of the sinking fund of the district?"

Sections 7613 to 7619, General Code, are the statutes which provide for a sinking fund and a commission for its management and control in school districts. They are as follows:

"Section 7613. In any school district having a bonded indebtedness, for the payment of which, with interest, no provision has been made by a special tax levy for that particular purpose, the board of education of such district annually, on or before the thirty-first day of August, shall set aside from its revenue a sum equal to not less than one-fortieth of such indebtedness together with a sum sufficient to pay the annual interest thereon.

"Section 7614. The board of education of every district shall provide a sinking fund for the extinguishment of all its bonded indebtedness, which fund shall be managed and controlled by a board of commissioners designated as the 'board of commissioners of the sinking fund of _____" (inserting the name of the district), which shall be composed of five electors thereof, and be appointed by the common pleas court of the county in which such district is chiefly located, except that, in city or village districts the board of commissioners of the sinking fund of the city or village may be the board of the school district. Such commissioners shall serve without compensation and give such bond as the board of education requires and approves. Any surety company authorized to sign such bonds may be accepted by such board of education as surety. The cost thereof, together with all necessary expenses of such commissioners shall be paid by them out of the funds under their control.

"Section 7615. The board of commissioners of the sinking fund shall invest that fund in bonds of the United States, of the state of Ohio, of any municipal corporation, county, township or school district of any state or in bonds of its own issue. All interest received from such investments shall be deposited as other funds of such sinking fund, and reinvested in like maner. For the extinguishment of any bonded indebtedness included in such fund, the board of commissioners may sell or use any of the securities or money of such fund.

"Section 7616. The board of commissioners of the sinking fund may refund, extend or renew the bonded debt of the school district or any part thereof, existing April 25, 1904, by issuing the bonds of such school district for such periods, not exceeding twenty years, in such denomination, payable at such place and at a rate of interest not to exceed the rate previous to such refunding, extension or renewal. But the aggregate amount of the refunding, extending or renewing bonds so issued shall not exceed that of the bonds so refunded, extended or renewed.

"Section 7617. The board of commissioners of the sinking fund shall make an annual report to the board of education giving a detailed statement of the sinking fund for each year ending with August 31st. Such report must be filed with the board of education on or before September 30th of each year and other reports may be required by such board of education when deemed necessary.

"Section 7618. The board of education shall appropriate to the use of such sinking fund any taxes levied for the payment of interest on its bonded indebtedness, together with the sum provided for in sections seventy-six hundred and thirteen and seventy-six hundred and fourteen. Sums so appropriated shall be applied to no other purpose than the payment of such bonds, interest thereon and necessary expenses of such sinking fund commission.

"Section 7619. When a board of education issued (issues) bonds for any purposes, such issue first shall be offered for sale to the board of commissioners of the sinking fund, who may buy any or all of such bonds at par. Within five days of the time when notice is given, the board shall notify the board of education of its action upon the proposed purchase. After that time the board of education shall issue any portion not purchased by such commission according to law."

Section 7604, General Code, provides that the board of education of any school district, by resolution, shall provide for the deposit of any or all moneys coming into the hands of its treasurer.

The following sections, to wit: Sections 7605 to 7608, inclusive, provide for advertising and bids, and the method of contracting with banks for such deposits:

"Section 7605. In school districts containing two or more banks such deposit shall be made in the bank or banks, situated therein, that at competitive bidding offer the highest rate of interest which must be at least two per cent. for the full time funds or any part thereof are on deposit. Such bank or banks shall give a good and sufficient bond, or shall deposit bonds of the United States, the state of Ohio, or county, municipal, township or school bonds issued by the authority of the state of Ohio, at the option of the board of education, in a sum not less than the amount deposited. The treasurer of the school district must see that a greater sum than that contained in the bond is not deposited in such bank or banks, and he and his bondsmen shall be liable for any loss occasioned by deposits in excess of such bond.

"Section 7606. The board shall determine in such resolution the method by which bids shall be received, the authority which is to receive them, the time for which such deposits shall be made and all details for carrying into effect the authority herein given. All proceedings in connection with such competitive bidding and deposit of moneys must be so conducted as to insure full publicity and shall be open at all times to public inspection. If in the opinion of a board of education there has been any collusion between the bidders, it may reject any or all bids and arrange for the deposit of funds in a bank or banks without the district as hereinafter provided for in districts not having two or more banks located therein.

"Section 7607. In all school districts containing less than two banks, after the adoption of a resolution providing for the deposit of its funds, the board of education may enter into a contract with one or more banks that are conveniently located and offer the highest rate of interest, which shall not be less than two per cent. for the full time and funds or any part thereof are on deposit. Such bank or banks shall give good and sufficient bond, or shall deposit bonds of the United States, the state of Ohio, or county, municipal, township or school bonds issued by the authority of the state of Ohio, at the option of the board of education, in a sum at least equal to the amount deposited. The treasurer of the school district must see that a greater sum than that contained in the bond is not deposited in such bank or banks, and he and his bondsmen shall be liable for any loss occasioned by deposits in excess of such bond.

"Section 7608. The resolution and contract in the next four preceding sections provided for, shall set forth fully all details necessary to carry into effect the authority therein given. All proceedings connected with the adoption of such resolution and the making of such contract must be conducted in such a manner as to insure full publicity and shall be open at all times to public inspection."

Prior to their amendment in 98 Ohio Laws, page 45, sections 7615, 7617, 7618 and 7619, General Code, appeared in 97 Ohio Laws, 353:

"(3970-2) Section 2. The board of commissioners of the sinking fund shall invest the sinking fund in bonds of the United States, of the state of Ohio, of any municipal corporation, county, township or school district within the state of Ohio or in bonds of its own issue. All interest received from such investments shall be deposited in the treasury to the credit of said sinking fund, and reinvested in a like manner; at no time shall there be over one thousand dollars kept on deposit if investment can be made without jeopardizing the prompt redemption of bonds falling due. For the extinguishment of any bonded indebtedness included in said sinking fund, the board of commissioners of the sinking fund is authorized to sell or use any of the securities or money in said fund.

"(3970-4) Section 4. The clerk of the board of commissioners of the sinking fund shall make an annual report to the board of commissioners of the sinking fund, giving a detailed statement of the sinking fund, such report shall be filed at such time as the board shall designate and other reports may be required by the board when the same shall be deemed necessary. Orders on the sinking fund shall be drawn by the same authority and in the same manner as other orders for the payment of money from the school funds."

With reference to these statutes, the court, in the case of State vs. Board of Education, 3 O. N. P. page 404, said:

"In the light of these provisions of the statute and in the absence of some provision of statute for the transfer or turning over of the sinking fund to this commission, and in the absence of some statutory authority for them to provide a depository for themselves, or even to elect a treasurer, and in the face of specific statutory provisions, made by section 3968, Revised Statutes, (97 O. L. 351), allowing the board of education to provide a depository by public letting for 'all moneys coming into the hands of the treasurer of the board.' I think the conclusion is irresistible that this sinking fund must remain with the treasurer of the board of education in until paid out upon the order of its president and clerk to the person entitled thereto upon requisition therefor made by said commission, stating the amount and purpose thereof in each case."

In taking this view the court laid particular stress upon the provision of the former law requiring that "orders on the sinking fund shall be drawn by the same authority and in the same manner as other orders for the payment of money from the school funds." This provision has been stricken out, as it now appears. The other reasons mentioned by the court in that case, however, still exists for holding that the moneys themselves must remain in the possession of the board.

The statutes providing for trustees of a sinking fund in cities expressly provide, in section 4512, General Code, for the turning over to such trustees of all moneys under their control and management. In the statutes providing for a sinking fund commission for the state, section 388, General Code, requires money from the state treasury to the credit of the sinking fund to be paid out by the treasurer of state on the warrant of the auditor of state, upon the requisition of the commissioners of the sinking fund.

In view of the fact in these statutes the legislature has taken pains to specifically say whether or not the sinking fund commission shall have possession of moneys under its control, I am of the opinion that such possession cannot be allowed to them in the absence of specific provision therefor.

Section 4768, General Code, provides as follows:

"No treasurer of a school district shall pay out any school money except on an order signed by the president or vice-president and countersigned by the clerk of the board of education, and when such school moneys have been deposited as provided by sections 7604-7608, inclusive, no money shall be withdrawn from any such depository, except upon an order signed by the treasurer and by the president or vice-president and countersigned by the clerk of the board of education; and no money shall be paid to the treasurer of the district other than that received from the county treasurer, except upon the order of the clerk of the board who shall report the amount of such miscellaneous receipts to the county auditor each year immediately preceding such treasurer's settlement with the auditor."

In construing the intent of these statutes providing for a sinking fund for school districts, permit me to call attention to the fact that section 7604, General Code, provides that the board of education shall provide for the deposit of any or all moneys coming into the hands of its treasurer; that section 7613, General Code, requires the board of education to set aside a certain sum for sinking fund purposes; and section 7618, General Code, provides that the board of education shall appropriate to the use of the sinking fund moneys therein stated to be for sinking fund purposes.

Section 4768 provides that no treasurer shall pay out any school money except upon an order signed by the president or vice-president and countersigned by the clerk of the board of education, when such school moneys have been deposited as provided by sections 7604 to 7608, inclusive, and that no moneys may be withdrawn from any such depository except in accordance with similar procedure.

Inasmuch as all these provisions very pointedly place the control of all school moneys in the board and its treasurer and clerk; and as the provisions relating to sinking funds only provide for their setting aside an appropriation, and as there is no reason to believe that the safeguards provided for deposits by the board of education should not be observed, as respecting sinking funds, I am of the opinion that the funds must remain in the possession of the board of education; and no moneys may be drawn for sinking purposes except by requisition of the sinking fund commissioners upon the board, and a consequent order signed by the treasurer and president and countersigned by the clerk of the board.

Section 7604, General Code, and the following sections, alone provide the regulations for deposit of the funds of the board of education; and since these statutes govern any or all moneys coming into the hands of the treasurer of the board, I am of the opinion that moneys may be deposited in accordance with these sections, and that the commissioners of the sinking fund have no such power.

Very truly yours,
TIMOTHY S. HOGAN,
Attorney General.

POWER OF COUNTY TREASURER TO DEDUCT DELINQUENT PERSONAL TAXES WHEN PAYING WARRANT PRESENTED BY TAXPAYER.

There are no special provisions permitting the county treasurer to deduct delinquent personal taxes when paying a warrant to a taxpayer.

Under 2656, General Code, however, which permits the county treasurer to collect delinquent personal taxes by distress or otherwise, and under section 2665, General Code, which permits the treasurer to garnishee a delinquent taxpayer for such purpose, the treasurer may, when rendering a check upon a depository in payment of such warrant, give notice to the depository to retain the amount of the delinquent taxes.

Whether or not the treasury may retain from specific moneys given to him in payment of such warrant, the amount of such delinquent taxes depends on whether or not the power to distrain sufficient goods and chattels, under section 2658, includes the power to distrain moneys.

COLUMBUS, OHIO, April 23, 1913.

Bureau of Inspection and Supervision of Public Offices, Department of Auditor of State, Columbus, Ohio.

GENTLEMEN:—I beg to acknowledge receipt of your letter of March 20th, requesting my opinion as follows:

> "Will you please give us your written opinion whether or not a county treasurer, in paying a warrant due to a party from whom there is due to the county uncollected delinquent personal taxes, may retain the amount of such taxes?
> "Would the fact that the warrant issued by the county auditor bears written or stamped across its face the words 'subject to delinquent personal taxes' authorize such proceeding on the part of the county treasurer?"

I find no express authority of law for the procedure described by you; nor is there any provision authorizing the county auditor to stamp his warrants with a statement to the effect that they are issued subject to set-off or counterclaim for delinquent taxes. Obviously, therefore, whatever may be the implied rights and powers of the county treasurer, such a statement cannot enlarge them.

The general powers and duties of the county treasurer in collecting delinquent taxes are described by various sections, of which the first in numerical order is section 2656, General Code. This provides in part as follows:

> "When one-half of the taxes charged against any entry * * * is not paid on or before the twentieth day of December * * * or when the remainder of such tax is not paid on or before the twentieth day of June next thereafter, the county treasurer shall proceed to collect it by distress or otherwise together with the penalty of * * *"

Section 2658, General Code, gives the treasurer express authority to "distrain sufficient goods and chattels belonging to the person charged with such taxes" for the payment of taxes. This section certainly applies to the collection of delinquent personal taxes, whether it applies to the collection of taxes assessed upon real estate or not.

Section 2660, General Code, provides in part that,

> "If a county treasurer is unable to collect by distress taxes assessed upon a person or corporation or an executor, etc., shall apply to the clerk of the court of common pleas * * * at any time after his semi-annual settlement with the county auditor, and the clerk shall cause notice to be served upon such corporation, executor, etc., requiring him forthwith to show cause why he should not pay such taxes. If he fails to show sufficient cause, the court * * * shall enter a rule against him * * * which rule shall have the same force and effect as a judgment * * *."

Section 2665 of the General Code provides another method which the treasurer may pursue in the event that distraint is ineffectual. In effect it provides that the treasurer may in such case garnishee any property, moneys or credits due or coming due to the taxpayer. Procedure for this purpose is completely outlined in the section.

Section 2675 prescribes the duty of the county treasurer with respect to the payment of warrants drawn on him. It is in full as follows:

> "When a warrant drawn on him as treasurer by the auditor of the county is presented for payment, if there is money in the treasury or depository to the credit of the fund on which it is drawn, and the warrant is endorsed by the payee thereof, the county treasurer shall redeem it by payment of cash or by check on the depository, and shall stamp on the face of such warrant, 'redeemed,' and the date of redemption."

This duty is a ministerial one and performance of it may be enforced by mandamus. If the treasurer should refuse to pay the amount of a warrant to the holder thereof he might be sued in such a proceeding and would have therein no right of set-off on account of any claim for taxes which he might hold as collector of public revenue against the owner of the warrant. This is because a set-off cannot be pleaded and made available in an action in mandamus.

Viewing the question from this angle discloses what is obvious, viz.: that the capacity in which the treasurer acts as a collector of public revenue is quite different from that in which he acts in paying a warrant. His duty in the latter capacity is in no sense connected with or related to his power and duty in the former capacity.

It seems to me that the treasurer's substantive rights and powers in this instance can be best worked out through consideration of the remedial aspect of the case. I am of the opinion that, as a technical proposition of law, the treasurer has no right to withhold from one who presents a warrant to him (regardless, of course, of what may be unofficially stamped on its face) any sum of money on account of delinquent personal taxes due from such holder.

Practically, however, the question is not completely answered by this technical proposition. When personal taxes become delinquent it is the duty of the treasurer, under section 2656, supra, to collect them "by distress or otherwise," together with the penalty. Whether or not the word "otherwise" as here used enlarges the express authority of the county treasurer, contained in any of the sections above quoted, might be an interesting question. Before that question is raised, however, the meaning and application of the statutes pertaining to collection by distress may be considered.

Section 2658, above quoted, provides in effect that the treasurer may distrain "sufficient goods and chattels" to pay the taxes, and requires him, upon seizure of goods and chattels, to "immediately advertise * * * the time and the place it will be sold." The question which arises here is as to whether or not money (assuming the payment to be made in money) is included within the term "goods and chattels." This question has never been directly passed upon in this state. The term itself is capable of a very wide variety of meanings, depending upon the context in which it is employed. It may be so restricted in meaning as to be the equivalent of wares and merchandise, or it may be so broad in its meaning as to include choses in action. It will not do, therefore, to cite authorities containing definitions of the term; but, having established the possibility of its including both moneys and checks (for I take it that if payment of a warrant were not made in cash it would be made by check on the depository), it remains, having regard to the inter-relation of taxing statutes, to ascertain the sense in which it is here used.

On the one hand, section 5671 provides in part that, "all personal property subject to taxation shall be liable to be seized and sold for taxes;" and sections 5325 and 5326, read together, exclude moneys from the meaning of the term "personal property" as used in the title relating to taxation. However, the sections found in the chapter relating to the duties of the county treasurer are not in that title, and the mere failure of section 5671 expressly to provide that moneys and credits shall be liable to be seized for taxes is not sufficient to establish the conclusion that they are not so liable.

In my opinion section 2658 must be construed in reference to the underlying theory of tax collections. Taxes on real estate are liens on the specific real estate taxed, and it is not the intention of section 2658, which relates to the collection of personal property taxes, to enlarge the remedy for the collection of real estate taxes by affording a direct personal execution upon the taxpayer himself and his personal property. It would seem reasonable to suppose, therefore, that section 2658 is intended to afford a remedy for the collection of personal taxes by distraint of all property which is not real. If this be true construction of the section, then, the term "goods and chattels" might be held to include moneys and the treasurer would be authorized to seize moneys found by him in the possession of a delinquent personal taxpayer for the satisfaction of the tax. If this were the case, then, while the treasurer would be obliged to pay the full sum of the warrant presented to him by a delinquent taxpayer he could, immediately upon delivering to him cash in payment thereof, seize enough of the money to satisfy the delinquent taxes and penalty.

This would not necessarily follow, however, if payment were made, as is usual, by means of a check on the depository of the county. In such event the procedure outlined in section 2665, General Code, might be appropriately followed. The first portion of this section provides for garnishee process which can be issued against the property, moneys or credits due or coming due to a delinquent personal taxpayer who has not sufficient property which the treasurer can find to distrain. The last sentence of the section, which I have heretofore quoted, provides as follows:

> "If the treasurer serves upon any person indebted to such taxpayer a notice, stating the amount of delinquent tax and penalty due, such debtor may, after the service of such notice, pay such tax and penalty to the treasurer, whose receipt therefor shall be a full discharge of so much of the indebtedness, as equals the tax and penalty so paid."

Under this section it would be possible for the treasurer, immediately upon honoring a warrant presented to him by a delinquent personal taxpayer, by the issuance of a check upon the county depository, to notify the depository in writing, as therein provided, if the treasurer were satisfied that the tax could not be made in any other way (and the discretion of the treasurer in this connection is undoubtedly broad). Then, it would be the duty of the depository to pay the check, less the amount in the notice, which should be paid to the county treasurer in satisfaction of the delinquent tax and penalty.

It seems to me that by virtue of the statutes which I have quoted the treasurer might, in practice, take the money necessary for the satisfaction of the delinquent tax and penalty from the delinquent taxpayer to whom payment of a county warrant is due. The theory of the proceedings or proceedings necessary to accomplish this purpose seems somewhat involved and laborious. Possibly, however, in practice, more summary methods might be adopted. Thus, the treasurer, if he had an understanding with the depository, might arrange to stop payment on depository checks upon the giving of verbal notice, so as to afford time within which the written notice might be prepared and transmitted to the depository; or, the treasurer might assume that the term "goods and chattels" includes moneys, and, electing to pay the warrant in cash, immediately seize enough cash to satisfy the delinquent taxes and penalty, and thus place the burden upon the taxpayer to establish the illegality of the proceedings.

The whole question is far from clear, and the proceedings I have suggested are rather to be characterized as proceedings of convenience than to be positively recommended as regular in all particulars. It would be best, of course, to have the statutes amended so as to provide explicitly for the retention by the treasurer of the amount of delinquent taxes in cases like that submitted by you.

Very truly yours,

TIMOTHY S. HOGAN,

Attorney General.

VILLAGE TREASURER MAY PAY BILLS ALLOWED BY BOARD OF PUBLIC AFFAIRS ONLY UPON WARRANT OR ORDER OF THE VILLAGE CLERK.

Since the enactment of sections 3960, 4285, 4286 and 3795, General Code, placing upon the village clerk the duty of keeping account of all receipts and expenditures of the board of public affairs and the amounts in each appropriation of the municipal corporation, it is now necessary that bills allowed by the board of trustees of public affairs must be paid through order of the village clerk upon the treasurer.

COLUMBUS, OHIO, May 22, 1913.

GENTLEMEN:—Under date of February 20, 1913, you inquire as follows:

> "Should the village treasurer make payment of bills allowed by the board of public affairs upon orders signed by the members of said board and their secretary or clerk, or should such bills be paid upon allowance of said board of public affairs by issue of warrant or order by the village clerk, designating the appropriation against which such claim is chargeable?"

You call attention to the opinion of this department given to Hon. Earl D. Bloom, as solicitor of Bradner, Ohio, under date of October 5, 1911, and in effect ask a reconsideration of a conclusion therein reached. In that opinion it was held that it was not necessary for the clerk of the village to sign vouchers upon the treasurer of the village upon bills allowed by the board of public affairs.

That conclusion was based upon the decisions of State vs. Corzilius, 35 Ohio St. 69, and State vs. Griffin, 4 Cir. Ct. 156. These two decisions construed the law as contained in the municipal code of 1878, as set forth in 75 Ohio Laws, pages 160, et seq. The supreme court case was decided in 1878 and the circuit court case was decided in 1888.

The statutes under construction were the same in each case, and these provisions were substantially the same up to the time of the adoption of the municipal code of 1902.

The municipal code of 1902 made some radical changes in the methods of making appropriations and of drawing vouchers upon the treasurer of a municipal corporation. It materially increased the duties of the village clerk and of the city auditor in references to the receipts and expenditures of the corporation.

The municipal code of 1878, 75 Ohio Laws, 342, contained the two following sections which were afterwards placed in the Revised Statutes of 1880, as sections 2413 and 2414.

Section 2413, Revised Statutes, provided:

> "The trustees or board shall make monthly reports to the council of the receipts and disbursements of money belonging to the waterworks, and an annual report of the conditions of the same, which report the council may cause to be published in some newspaper of general circulation in the corporation; and all money collected for waterworks purposes shall be deposited weekly, by the collectors thereof, with the treasurer of the corporation, and one of the receipts therefor shall be by such collectors deposited with the trustees, board or authorized agent.

Section 2414, Revised Statutes, provided:

> "Money so deposited shall be kept as a separate and distinct fund, subject to the order of the trustees or board; and all orders drawn by the trustees or board, on the treasurer of the corporation, shall be signed by one of the trustees or board, and countersigned by the clerk of the waterworks, or of the board of public works."

These were the statutes that were construed in 35 Ohio St. 69 and 4 Cir. Ct. 156, supra. Section 2414, Revised Statutes, was the authority to the treasurer to pay out money upon a voucher signed by one of the trustees, or by the board, countersigned by the clerk of the waterworks.

The duties of the clerk of the municipal corporation, as set forth in sections 1755, et seq., Revised Statutes, and the duties of the auditor as set forth in sections 1765 and 1766, Revised Statutes (75 Ohio Laws 214, 215 and 216) did not require them to sign vouchers upon the treasurer. Neither of them were required to see that the appropriations were not overdrawn. These with other important duties were given to the clerk of the village and the auditor of the city by the municipal code of 1902. Some of the added duties will be referred to specifically when the present provisions of the General Code are quoted.

The duties of the clerk and auditor as prescribed in the municipal code of 1902 were materially different than those prescribed for officers of the same name in the municipal code of 1878.

The difficulty in the question under consideration arises from the provisions of section 4361, General Code, which refers to the trustees of the waterworks.

Said section reads:

> "The board of trustees of public affairs shall have all the powers and perform all the duties provided in this title to be exercised and performed by the trustees of waterworks, and such other duties as may be prescribed by law or ordinances not inconsistent herewith.

The office of trustee of waterworks has been abolished, and at present the director of public service performs the duties formerly devolving upon the trustees of the waterworks. This department has held that the words "trustees of waterworks," as contained in section 4361, General Code, must be read as "director of public service."

The provisions of sections 2413 and 2414, Revised Statutes, which authorized the treasurer to pay out money upon order of the trustees of the waterworks, when countersigned by their clerk, were not repealed by the municipal code of 1902, and became known as sections 1536-524 and 1536-525, Bates' Revised Statutes of 1904. These two sections were consolidated into one section by the codifying commission and materially changed. This section is known as 3960, General Code, and reads:

> "Money collected for waterworks purposes shall be deposited weekly with the treasurer of the corporation. Money so deposited shall be kept as a separate and distinct fund. When appropriated by council, it shall be subject to the order of the director of public service. Such director shall sign all orders drawn on the treasurer of the corporation against such fund."

The provision "when appropriated by council" is new.
The provision:

"Such director shall sign all orders drawn on the treasurer of the corporation against such fund."

is different from that contained in section 1536-525 (2414) Revised Statutes, which reads:

"And all orders drawn by the trustees or board, on the treasurer of the corporation, shall be signed by one of the trustees or board, and countersigned by the clerk of the waterworks, or of the board of public works."

The provision that the clerk must countersign the orders has been omitted. This omission is fully explained when the duties of the clerk of a village and the auditor of a city are examined.

It will be observed that section 3960, General Code, does not authorize the payment of the money solely upon the authority of the director of public service, but makes his approval one of the requisites. Other requisites and approvals may be required.

Section 4283, General Code, provides:

"In the following provisions of this chapter, the word 'city' shall include 'village' and the word 'auditor' shall include 'clerk.' "

Section 4285, General Code, provides:

"The auditor shall not allow the amount set aside for any appropriation to be overdrawn, or the amount appropriated for one item of expense to be drawn upon for any other purpose, or unless sufficient funds shall actually be in the treasury to the credit of the fund upon which such voucher is drawn. When any claim is presented to him, he may require evidence that such amount is due, and for this purpose may summon any agent, clerk or employe of the city, or any other person, and examine him upon oath or affirmation concerning such voucher or claim."

The duties prescribed in section 4285, General Code, were not prescribed for the clerk or auditor by the municipal code of 1878.

Section 4286, General Code, provides:

"On the first Monday of each month, detailed statements of the receipts and expenditures of the several officers and departments for the preceding month shall be made to the auditor by the heads thereof. The auditor shall countersign each receipt given by the treasurer before it is delivered to the person entitled to receive it, and shall charge the treasurer with the amount thereof. If the auditor approves any voucher contrary to the provisions of this title, he and his sureties shall be individually liable for the amount thereof."

These duties were also not prescribed in the municipal code of 1878. It will be observed that the auditor is required to sign all receipts given by the treasurer. This is done in order that the auditor or clerk as the case may be, may keep an accurate account of all moneys received by the treasurer. This is one side of the account. There must be another side of the account, and that is the expenditures. If the clerk or auditor is to keep an account and is also required to see that no appropriations are overdrawn, he must also have an account of the expenditures.

Section 3795, General Code, provides:

> "The taxes of the corporation shall be collected by the county treasurer and paid into the treasury of the corporation in the same manner and under the same laws, rules and regulations as are prescribed for the collection and paying over of state and county taxes. The corporation treasurer shall keep a separate account with each fund for which taxes are assessed, which account shall be at all times open to public inspection. Unless expressly otherwise provided by law, all money collected or received on behalf of the corporation shall be promptly deposited in the corporation treasury in the appropriate fund, and the treasurer shall thereupon give notice of such deposit to the auditor or clerk. Unless otherwise provided by law, no money shall be drawn from the treasury except upon the warrant of the auditor or clerk pursuant to the appropriation by council."

The last sentence of this section is a direct prohibition against the paying out of money from the treasury of the municipal corporation without the warrant of the auditor or clerk, "unless otherwise provided by law." This provision was not in the municipal code of 1878, as construed in 35 Ohio St. 69 and 4 Cir. Ct. 156, supra.

The provision of section 3960, General Code, that the director of public service shall sign all orders upon the waterworks fund does not authorize payment therefrom upon the signature of the director of public service alone. Sections 3795 and 3960, General Code, must be read together and vouchers upon the waterworks fund require the approval of both the auditor and the director of public service.

In view of the material changes in the statutes herein referred to the decisions of State vs. Corzilius, 35 Ohio St., 69, and State vs. Griffin, 4 circuit court, 156, supra, are not controlling of the question under consideration. They are not in any way a guide to a solution of the present inquiry.

The statutes contemplate that the clerk of the village and the auditor of a city shall have complete and accurate accounts of the receipts and expenditures of the municipal corporation and that they shall be a check upon the acts of their respective treasurers. In order to keep such accounts and to have such a check, the clerk or the auditor must know of all receipts and expenditures. Their knowledge of receipts is acquired by virtue of section 4286, General Code, which requires one or the other of them to sign all receipts given by the treasurer, and their knowledge of expenditures is secured by section 3795, General Code, which requires them to sign all vouchers.

I am, therefore, of the opinion that the clerk of a village is required to sign all vouchers for bills allowed by the board of public affairs and that the treasurer is not authorized to pay out money from the waterworks fund solely upon the order of the board of public affairs and its clerk or secretary.

Respectfully,
TIMOTHY S. HOGAN,
Attorney General.

TOWNSHIP DITCHES—NO PROVISION FOR ENFORCEMENT OF RECLEANING OF SECTIONS APPORTIONED BY TOWNSHIP DITCH SUPERVISOR—NO POWER TO RESTORE LOST RECORDS—TIME FOR RESPECTIVE NOTICES FOR DITCH PROCEEDINGS AND GRADING AND BRIDGE WORK.

The statutes providing for the cleaning of township ditches and for their apportionment into sections for this purpose, are useful only to the extent of accomplishing a general cleaning, after notice of apportionment. There being no provision for the enforcement of the duty to reclean such sections, the recleaning must be considered to be merely directory, and there is no power given to the township ditch supervisor to at any time reapportion such ditches, except in accordance with these statutes, providing for their division into sections for the purpose of a general cleaning as therein provided for.

The language of the statutes seems to convey the intent that the duties of recleaning and keeping ditches free from obstructions are to rest in the owners of the land in which the obstructions or a part of the ditch to be cleaned exists.

Where the bench marks or records of any sections so apportioned are lost, the statutes provide no power for their restoration so far as the procedure relating to cleaning of ditches is concerned.

The township trustees, however, under sections 6618 to 6643, General Code, for the purpose of locating, establishing, deepening, widening or repairing a ditch, when the records, proceedings and papers pertaining to such ditch have been lost or destroyed, may reapportion and make a full record of the proceedings.

Under sections 6618, 6622, 6625 and 6635, General Code, when the trustees have apportioned parts of the ditches to be cleaned by owners and prescribed the time in which the work shall be completed, and the provisions have been complied with as to extension of time and as to stay of action upon their decisions, the trustees must sell unfinished work forthwith.

Under section 2354, General Code, no notice is required for grading or bridge work, involving less than $200.00. Under section 2353, General Code, fifteen days' notice is required for grading or bridge work between $200.00 and $1,000.00. Under section 2352, General Code, for grading or bridge work, involving more than $1,000.00, notice shall be published weekly for four consecutive weeks next preceding the day named for making the contract.

COLUMBUS, OHIO, February 4, 1913.

Bureau of Inspection and Supervision of Public Offices, Department of Auditor of State, Columbus, Ohio.

GENTLEMEN:—Under favor of January 8th, you wrote as follows:

> "We enclose herewith letter from Clyde Harveym surveyor of Medina county, and request that you render us your opinion as to the law upon the questions therein asked."

The letter referred to is, in part, as follows:

> "1. When the ditch supervisor of any township apportions off a ditch, either township or county, and sets stakes at the various points of divisions calling them sections does the same necessarily have to remain as apportioned and staked off until a new petition is given out, and the ditch recleaned, deepened, widened or straightened under said petition before the changes of another division of sections is made by any such ditch supervisor; or can such ditch supervisor have the full power either by, or without the consent of the respective township trustees to change any apportionments made by him or his predecessors at any time that he deems it necessary, or when so ordered by the trustees?

"2. When any bench-marks of any ditch, whether county or township, are lost so that the apportionment of any such ditches in relation to the depth to be cleaned and the last grade as was laid out cannot be determined what is the necessary course to be taken by the trustees and supervisor of any such township? Please explain same in detail.

"3. What is the minimum length of time of giving notice either by poster, serving notices, or by publication of the following kinds of work:

"a. Time for hearing of ditch petition.

"b. Time for viewing ditch.

"c. Time for engineer's report of ditches.

"d. Time for sale of ditches.

"e. Time for giving notice for grading or bridge work under $200.00.

"f. Time for giving notice for grading or bridge work over $200.00 and under $1,000.00.

"g. Time for giving notice for grading or bridge work over $1,000.00."

Answering question number one: The statutes now providing for the cleaning of township, county and joint ditches are comprised within the chapter entitled, "cleaning and repair of drains and water courses," to wit: section 6691 to section 6726, General Code.

The following statutes are material to your inquiry:

"Section 6691. For the cleaning and keeping in repair of township, county and joint county ditches, the township ditch supervisor or supervisors of the township or townships through which such ditch runs, shall divide them into working sections and apportion such sections to the land owners, corporate roads, railroads, township and county according to the benefits received. Owners of land not contiguous to the ditch but the water from whose lands is carried into it by means of tile or by passing over the land of others, must assist in cleaning and keeping such ditch in repair, and all working sections allotted to each land owner shall be on or as near as practicable to his premises.

"Section 6693. When an established ditch or water course is located in two or more townships, the township ditch supervisors of the townships in which such improvement is located shall jointly make the apportionment provided for in the next two preceding sections.

"Section 6694. When the apportionment of a ditch provided for in the next three preceding sections is completed, the ditch supervisor, within ten days thereafter shall notify in writing each of the lot land owners, corporate roads, railroads, township and county, assessed thereon, of the portion assigned to them and of the date of the completion thereof.

"Section 6695. Each lot and owner, corporate road, railroad, township and county, so notified, shall clean the portion or section of the ditch or water course, as fixed by such apportionment, or if changed by the township trustees, as fixed by them, to its full depth and capacity as originally constructed, and when necessary to reclean such portion without further notice. The parties assessed, as provided in the next preceding section, shall mark the terminus of their respective working sections by planting a substantial post or marker, on which shall be cut or painted the number of the sections."

then, follow a series of provisions for the review and possible change of the apportionment by the township trustees, and for an appeal by parties objecting to the apportionment to the township trustees or probate court.

Section 6706 then provides as follows:

"If a land owner, corporate road, railroad, township, or county notified to clean the ditch or water course under the provisions of this chapter, neglects or refuses to comply therewith within thirty days, the ditch supervisor, after giving ten days' notice by posting notices in three conspicuous places in said township, shall sell the work of cleaning said section or sections to the lowest responsible bidder, take a bond as provided in the next preceding section, and certify the cost thereof to the county auditor, as provided therein. The ditch supervisor shall certify the amount due the contractors, for the work done, to the township trustees, who shall order it paid out of the township fund."

It will be observed that section 6691 speaks of the cleaning and keeping in repair of township, county and joint county ditches, and section 6695 provides that when a land owner, corporate road, railroad, township and county are notified as provided by section 6694, of the apportionment, they shall clean the section apportioned to them respectively, and when necessary reclean such portion without further notice.

Under section 6706, when a person, notified to clean a ditch or water course, under the provisions of this chapter, neglects to comply therewith within thirty days, the ditch supervisor is required to sell the work of cleaning such ditch to the lowest bidder. This statute provides for the enforcement of the provisions for a general cleaning of a ditch within thirty days after the notice within ten days of the apportionment required by section 6694, General Code.

There are no provisions anywhere in this chapter, however, which I am able to find, after careful investigation, that in any way provide for the enforcement of the duty to reclean when necessary, the sections apportioned, as seems to be intended by section 6695, General Code, nor to keep in repair such sections as seems to be comprehended by section 6691, General Code. In short, while these statutes provide for the apportionment, into sections, of ditches for the purpose of cleaning them and in furtherance of this provision, require the land owners to clean the section apportioned to them within thirty days after notice is given to them of the apportionment, there are no provisions for notice to reclean at any subsequent time, the proportionate section allotted, under section 6691, General Code.

This distinction is made clearer by a review of the following statutes, which expressly provide in this chapter for the keeping of such ditches free from obstructions.

"Section 6710. A person or corporation, through whose lands a ditch improvement is constructed, must keep it free and clear of fallen timber, tree tops, logs or other obstructions upon his or its premises. Upon failure to do so, a person or corporation, aggrieved by such obstructions, may notify the ditch supervisor thereof, in writing, who must at once examine the premises and inquire into the truth of the statement. If he finds the statement to be true, he must forthwith notify the owner of the land, on which such obstruction exists, to remove it within a reasonable time, not exceeding ten days.

"Section 6712. If the owner or owners, so found liable by the township trustees, fail to remove the obstructions, the ditch supervisor must forthwith cause them to be removed at the expense of the land owners in proportion to the benefits received by them, and certify such expense to the auditor, who shall place it upon the tax duplicate, as an assessment upon the lands of such person or corporation.

"Section 6715. The ditch supervisor may also enter upon improved or unimproved lands, drained by ditch improvements, for the purpose of cleaning or repairing a ditch, if he gives notice, written or printed, to land owners whose addresses are known, at least six weeks before, that he intends at such time to clean said ditch.

"Section 6717. The ditch supervisor shall go over said ditch improvement, at least once in the spring of each year, for determining upon actual view the condition of the ditch, and, on sight or information at any other time of year, shall remove, or cause to be removed, driftwood, fallen timber, rails, crossings, watergaps or other obstructions, which he finds in or upon the ditch, and which, in his opinion, does or may obstruct the free flow of water. Such removal shall be made by the supervisor, without notice to land owners, and if he finds that such obstructions were placed in or upon the ditch by the land owners upon whose lands they are found, they shall be removed by the supervisor at the expense of the land owners.

"Section 6719. The ditch supervisor shall keep a separate and accurate account with each land owner along the line of his ditch whose lands are taxed for such township ditch fund, and shall enter therein to each of them the sum expended by him in removing such obstructions. He shall present to each of said land owners a true account of the sums so expended and demand payment thereof, and if payment is not made within thirty days, he shall so report to the county auditor, who shall place such amounts upon the duplicate to be collected as other taxes."

It will be observed that under section 6710, General Code, a person or corporation, through whose lands a ditch improvement is constructed, must keep it free from fallen timber, tree tops, and logs, upon his or its premises. This section further requires a ditch supervisor to inspect for such obstruction, upon complaint of the person aggrieved, and requires him, upon ascertainment of the truth of of the complaint, to notify the owner of the land upon which such obstruction exists to remove it.

Under section 6712, General Code, if the land owner or owners, so found liable, fail to remove the obstructions, the ditch supervisor shall cause them to be removed at the expense of the land owners in proportion to the benefits received.

Under section 6715, General Code, the ditch supervisor may enter upon lands drained by ditch improvements and clean the same, after giving six weeks' notice to land owners.

Under section 6717, General Code, the ditch supervisor, once a year, is obliged to examine said ditch and remove obstructions on sight or information, and if he finds that such obstructions were placed in or upon the ditch by the land owners, upon whose lands they are found, he shall charge the expense of their removal to the land owners.

In none of these statutes is there any mention made of section apportioned, but the controlling idea seems to be, as will be readily conceived, by an observance of the language in these statutes which I have italicized, that the land owners are responsible, so far as keeping the ditches clean is concerned, for that portion of the ditch which is upon their own premises.

Answering your question directly, therefore, inasmuch as there is no provision made in this chapter for the enforcement of a duty to keep clean sections apportioned, under section 6691, General Code, and as furthermore, the statutes seem to present a well defined intention that land owners shall be responsible for the keeping clean of that portion of the ditch which is on their own premises, rather than for the sections apportioned to them, I am of the opinion that the apportionment is useful only to the extent of enforcing a general cleaning, when notice of the apportionment is given by the ditch supervisor within ten days after the apportionment is made, as provided by section 6694, General Code. In no other place in this chapter is mention made of such apportionment and no provision is made for recleaning or of the enforcement of the keeping clean of the section so apportioned.

The ditch supervisor is empowered, therefore, to make such apportionment only as provided by section 6691, General Code, and when such apportionment is made, all the procedures outlined by the statutes following must be observed. There is nothing in the statutes which gives him power to summarily change such apportionment, and in fact, no change can be made, except by compliance with the procedure set out.

Coming then to your second question as regards the chapter considered in answering your first question, the answer to the first question makes unnecessary the answer to your second question, for there is no need of maintaining such apportionment in view thereof.

Sections 6618, 6641 and 6643, General Code, of another chapter, however, are as follows:

> "Section 6618. The trustees, in locating and establishing a ditch, shall divide it into suitable sections, not less in number than the number of owners of the land through which it may be located. They shall apportion such sections equitably to the persons benefited, according to the benefits derived therefrom, prescribe the time within which the work shall be completed and by whom done, and order that each working section, beginning at the mouth of the ditch, shall be completed at least two days earlier than the section next above it. The day upon which the trustees conclude their proceedings on the petition shall be deemed the date of their decision thereon.
> "Section 6641. If a person fails or refuses to pay his apportionment of costs of locating and establishing the ditch, or of the cleaning, deepening, widening or repairing thereof, by the time specified by the trustees for the payment of such costs, the trustees shall certify it to the auditor of the county, giving a correct description of each piece of land upon which such cost is assessed, and the auditor shall place it on the tax duplicate to be collected as other state and county taxes are collected. The county treasurer shall pay such amount to the township treasurer as other township funds, specifying the purpose thereof, and the trustees shall pay it out in conformity with the record on the ditch journal.
> "Section 6643. Where the records, proceedings, or papers pertaining to a ditch under the provisions of this chapter, have been lost or destroyed, the trustees may reestablish the ditch on the original route, determine the depth, width and flare, divide it into suitable sections, apportion it as provided in this chapter, and make a full record of such proceedings. Such record shall be conclusive evidence of the original capacity and apportionment of of the ditch."

While section 6641, speaks of the cleaning of ditches by the township trustees, I am of the opinion that this reference has no longer any application; it formerly pointed to the powers of the township trustees to clean ditches prior to the passage of the act 94 O. L., page 144, which for the first time repealed these powers and instituted the procedure for apportionment by the ditch supervisor, substantially similar to that now provided for under section 6691, and following, as considered in the answer to your first question.

The township trustees, by the act of 95 O. L. 154, were again given certain powers to clean ditches when the act 94 O. L. was repealed. By the act of 98 O. L. 280, however, the jurisdiction of the township trustees was placed in the hands of the ditch supervisor and the plan set out in section 6691 and following again instituted. This change in the statute makes it clear that the procedure set out in section 6691 and following, is intended to be exclusive, and I am of the opinion that powers of township trustees as to the cleaning of ditches are only such as are included in this chapter.

Sections 6618 and 6643, General Code, therefore, providing for the apportionment of ditches and for the restoration of lost records, proceedings or papers, apply only to proceedings in the location, establishment, alteration, repair, etc., of ditches as provided by the chapter entitled "township trustees," to wit: section 6603 and following. These sections have no application to the procedure of cleaning ditches which is set out in section 6691 and following.

In direct answer to your second question, therefore, I am of the opinion that so far as the procedure of cleaning ditches is concerned, there is no provision for the restoration of lost bench-marks or other records, and that furthermore, the restoration of the same is altogether unnecessary, under the present state of the statutes relating thereto. So far as the restoration of such records may be desired for the purpose of deepening, widening, enlarging, boxing, tiling, etc., of a ditch, however, I am of the opinion that under section 6643, in compliance with the conditions therein stated, the township trustees may reestablish a ditch on the original route and make full record of such proceedings.

This conclusion is furthermore supported when it is noted that in the act of 94 O. L. 142, which for the first time placed upon the township ditch supervisor, the duty of making the apportionment for the purpose of constructing and cleaning ditches, provision was expressly made for the restoration of records which had been lost or destroyed, by requiring the township trustees to reapportion. The present act, however, contains no such provision, and the omission of the same implies that it was not intended to be provided for, or at least, that in the absence of specific provision, the power would not be anticipated.

In subdivision (a) of your third question you inquire as to the time of giving notice for hearing of a ditch petition. This notice is provided for in section 6607, General Code, which follows:

> "Upon the filing of such petition and bond, the township clerk shall prepare the necessary number of notices for the petitioner, who shall cause one thereof to be given to the owner of each tract of land sought to be affected by the proceeding. Such notice shall state substantially the prayer of the petition, and when and where it will be for hearing by the trustees. If a person, owning lands sought to be affected by the proceeding, is a non-resident of the county, like notice shall be sent by mail, if such residence is known by the clerk, otherwise it shall be published for two consecutive weeks in a newspaper of general circulation in the county."

It is well established that when a statute requires notice to be given, but does not specify the length of time, it will be construed to mean a reasonable time.

(29 Cyc. 118). This rule will have to be applied in construing section 6607, above quoted. It must be noted, however, that if a person owning land sought to be affected by the proceeding, is a non-resident of the county, such notice must be published for two consecutive weeks in a newspaper of the county. Where such non-resident exists, therefore, the statute will have to be observed. As to residents of a county, however, reasonable notice can only be construed to mean such time as will give the property holders affected a fair opportunity to be present at the time of the hearing of the petition.

In subdivision (b) of your third question, you inquire as to the time for viewing a ditch. This matter is covered by section 6612, General Code, as follows:

> "If the trustees find that the bond has been filed and notice given as provided in this chapter, they shall proceed to hear and determine the petition and view the premises along the proposed route. If they find such ditch is necessary, and that it will be conducive to the public health, convenience or general welfare, they shall locate and establish it in substantial conformity with the route described in the petition, or as near thereto as, in their opinion, will best answer the purpose. The trustees may employ an engineer to locate, level and measure the course of such ditch, and such other assistance as they need, and may adjourn from day to day to complete their report and finding. When their finding is in favor of such ditch, and their report is filed with the township clerk, they shall fix a day of hearing within ten days thereafter at the clerk's office in said township, and then and there determine the complaints of any persons affected by reason of the location and construction of said ditch."

Here, as in the former statute, no specific time is established by the statute. They are subject to no specific limitations in this respect, therefore, and the best that can be said is that the time for viewing a ditch shall be as close as possible to the time set for hearing the petition. In this connection, the trustees in the performance of such duty, can be charged with no further limitation than the requirement that they exercise the due precaution and diligence incumbent upon them in the performance of their general duties.

In subdivision (c) you inquire as to the time for engineer's report of the ditches. Here also no specific time is fixed and the same rule must apply; the trustees and engineer being charged with the duty of exercising reasonable dispatch and diligence in the completion of their report and finding.

In subdivision (d) you inquire as to the time for sale of ditches. With reference, thereto, section 6635, General Code is as follows:

> "As soon as an appeal is perfected from the decision of the township trustees, further proceedings before them on the petition shall be stayed. If no appeal is taken, the trustees, upon the expiration of the time specified by them for the opening of the ditch, shall forthwith inspect it, and if a section or part thereof has not been completed, they shall accept a bond with sufficient surety from the person having such unfinished work to perform, conditioned for the faithful completion of such work within the time they specify therein. If such person fails or refuses to give bond for the completion of the work the trustees shall forthwith sell the unfinished work by sections to the lowest bidders, by posting notices of the sale in a least three of the most public places in the township, for at least ten days before the day of sale, specifying the time when the work shall be completed. The trustees shall take such bond or other security for the performance of the work as they deem proper."

Under section 6618, General Code, the trustees are obliged to apportion equitably to the persons benefited and prescribe the time in which the work shall be completed and by whom done.

Under section 6622, General Code, at the expiration of the time specified for the completion of such work, the trustees, if they deem it necessary and proper, may extend the time for the completion thereof, to a time not exceeding four months from the time previously specified.

Section 6625, General Code, and following, provide for appeal to the probate court, which proceedings, in accordance with said section 6635, operate to stay any further action on the petition.

Section 6635, General Code, above quoted, provides that at the expiration of the time specified by the trustees for the completion of the work, they shall forthwith inspect it and, if upon such inspection, they find the work uncompleted, they may grant a further extension of time, providing the person who should have completed the same files a bond conditioned for the faithful performance of the work within the time so allowed by the trustees. The section further provides that if the person fails to give such bond, the trustees shall forthwith sell the unfinished work by sections to the lowest bidder, by posting notices of the same for at least ten days before the day of sale. This, I think, answers subdivision (d).

Under subdivision (e) you inquire as to the time for giving notice for grading or bridge work under $200.00. The answer to this question is comprised within the terms of section 2354, General Code, which is as follows:

"When the estimated cost of a public building, bridge or bridge substructure or of making an addition thereto or repair thereof does not exceed two hundred dollars, it may be let at private contract without publication or notice."

In accordance therewith, such grading of bridge work may be contracted for without any notice whatever.

Under subdivision (f) you inquire as to the time for giving notices for grading or bridge work over $200.00 and under $1,000.00. The answer thereto is covered by section 2353, General Code:

"When the estimated cost of a public building, bridge or bridge substructure or of making an addition to or repair thereof does not exceed one thousand dollars, it shall be let as heretofore provided, but notice of the letting need be given for only fifteen days, by posting on a bulletin board or by writing on a blackboard in a conspicuous place in the county commissioners' or auditor's office, showing the nature of the letting and when and where proposals in writing will be received. Plans or specifications, or both as hereinbefore provided shall be kept on file during the fifteen days and open to public inspection."

In accordance therewith, the notice required for this work is the fifteen days as prescribed by this statute.

Under subdivision (g) you inquire as to the time of giving notice for grading or bridge work over $1,000.00. Sections 2344 and 2352, General Code, are as follows:

"When it becomes necessary to erect a bridge, the county commissioners shall determine the length and width of the superstructure whether it shall be single or double track, and advertise for proposals for performing the labor and furnishing the materials necessary to the erection thereof. In their discretion, the commissioners may cause to be prepared, plans, descriptions and specifications, for such superstructure, which shall be kept on file in the auditor's office for inspection by bidders and persons interested, and invite bids or proposals in accordance therewith.

"Section 2352. When plans, drawing, representations, bill of material, specifications and estimates are so made and approved, the county commissioners shall give public notice in two of the principal papers in the county having the largest circulation therein, of the time when and the place where sealed proposals will be received for performing the labor and furnishing the materials necessary to the erection of such building, bridge or bridge substructure, or addition to or alteration thereof, and a contract based on such proposals will be awarded. If there is only one paper published in the county, it shall be published in such paper. The notice shall be published weekly for four consecutive weeks next preceding the day named for making the contract, and state when and where such plan or plans, descriptions, bills and specifications can be seen. They shall be open to public inspection at all reasonable hours, between the date of such notice and the making of such contract."

In accordance with section 2352, General Code, notice for such work shall be published weekly for four consecutive weeks next preceding the day named for making the contract.

Very truly yours,
TIMOTHY S. HOGAN,
Attorney General.

WOMAN MAY BE APPOINTED DEPUTY COUNTY AUDITOR, DEPUTY COUNTY TREASURER, DEPUTY COUNTY RECORDER, DEPUTY CLERK OF PROBATE COURT OR DEPUTY OF COMMON PLEAS COURT.

Inasmuch as a deputy is not to be considered a public officer in the absence of special provisions or the existence of special powers, a woman is not prohibited by the constitution or statutes of this state from being appointed to serve in the position of deputy county auditor, deputy county treasurer, deputy county recorder, deputy clerk of probate court or deputy of the common pleas court.

COLUMBUS, OHIO, May 22, 1913.

Bureau of Inspection and Supervision of Public Offices, Department of Auditor of State, Columbus, Ohio.

GENTLEMEN:—In your favor of May 17th, you inquire as follows:

"Please render us your written opinion as to whether or not a woman may legally be appointed and serve as deputy county auditor, deputy county treasurer, deputy county recorder, deputy clerk of probate court, or deputy of the common pleas court."

Article 15, section 4 and article 5, section 1, of the constitution provides as follows:

> "No person shall be elected or appointed to any office in this state, unless he possesses the qualifications of an elector."
> "Every white male citizen of the United States, of the age of twenty-one years, who shall have been a resident of the state one year next preceding the election, and of the county, township or ward, in which he resides, such time as may be provided by law, shall have the qualifications of an elector and be entitled to vote at all elections."

The question presented, therefore, in view of these constitutional provisions, is whether or not the positions mentioned by you constitute such an office as is contemplated by article 15, section 4, providing that none other than an elector shall be appointed or elected thereto.

The following appears in volume 9, page 369 of the American and English Encyclopaedia of Law:

> "It has been held that a special deputy is in no sense a public officer, but merely the private agent or officer of the principal.
> "And it has been held that in the common law even a general deputy is not a public officer where he is not appointed by the public nor by virtue of any special public authority, and does not give bond or take the oath of office, but his appointment is made by the principal by virtue of the general legal power in all ministerial officers of deputing their powers. But in several jurisdictions certain classes of general deputies have been recognized as officers by statute."

The rule in Ohio is set forth on page 214, vol. 2 of the Encyclopaedia Digest of Ohio Reports and I beg to quote the following statements therefrom, which are supported by numerous authorities therein cited.

> "A mere deputy or assistant is not a public officer.
> "One who performs no duties except such as by law are charged upon his superior, does not hold an office but merely an employment."

I may also refer to the 1911 supplement of this work, page 343, wherein it is said that:

> "A deputy assistant and other employes of a public officer are not officers within the meaning of the constitution."

These authorities seem to well establish the fact that in the absence of contrary provisions of statute, a deputy is not a public officer.

Referring to the several statutes which provide for the positions referred to by you, and taking them up in order, permit me to cite, first, the general statute which provides for the appointment of all of them in connection with the county salary law. This is as follows

> "Section 2981. Such officers may appoint and employ necessary deputies, assistants, clerks, bookkeepers or other employes for their respective offices, fix their compensation and discharge them, and shall file with the county auditor certificates of such action. Such compensation shall not exceed in the aggregate for each office the amounts fixed by the commissioners for such office. When so fixed, the compensation of each duly appointed or employed deputy, assistant, bookkeeper, clerk and other employe shall be paid monthly from the county treasury, upon the warrant of the county auditor."

With reference to the deputy county auditor, the following is provided:

"Section 2563. The county auditor may appoint one or more deputies to aid him in the performance of his duties, The auditor and his sureties shall be liable for the acts and conduct of such deputy or deputies. When a county auditor appoints a deputy, he shall make a record thereof in his office and file a certificate thereof with the county treasurer, who shall record and preserve it. When a county auditor removes a deputy, he shall record such removal in his office, and file a certificate thereof with the county treasurer, who shall record and preserve it."

With reference to the deputy county treasurer, the following is provided:

"Section 2657. Each county treasurer may appoint one or more deputies, and he shall be liable and accountable for their proceedings and misconduct in office."

With reference to a deputy county recorder:

"Section 2754. The county recorder may appoint a deputy approved by the court of common pleas. The appointment shall be in writing and filed with the clerk of such court. The recorder shall be responsible for his deputy's neglect of duty or misconduct in office. Before entering upon the discharge of his duties, the deputy shall take an oath of office."

With reference to the deputy county clerk:

"Section 1584. Each probate judge shall have the care and custody of the files, papers, books and records belonging to the probate office. He is authorized to perform the duties of clerk of his own court. He may appoint a deputy clerk or clerks, each of whom shall take an oath of office before entering upon the duties of his appointment, and when so qualified, may perform the duties appertaining to the office of clerk of the court. Each deputy clerk may administer oaths in all cases when necessary, in the discharge of his duties. Each probate judge may take a bond with such surety from his deputy as he deems necessary to secure the faithful performance of the duties of his appointment."

In reference to the deputy clerk of common pleas:

"Section 2871. The clerk may appoint one or more deputies to be approved by the court of common pleas if in session, or by one of the judges thereof, if not in session. Such appointment shall be by certificate, signed by the clerk, which, with the approval of the court or judge, shall be entered on the journal."

In none of these statutes is it expressly provided, as is the case with section 3830 of the General Code, providing for a deputy sheriff, that such positions must be filled by a qualified elector, and therefore in view of the authorities above quoted,

I am of the opinion that a woman may be legally appointed to and may serve in any of the capacities mentioned by you.

I might further refer to the case of Warwick vs. State 25 O. S. page 21, wherein it was expressly held that a woman might serve as deputy clerk of the probate court, and also to the case of State vs. Myers, 56 O. S., wherein on page 348 appears the dictum of the court to the effect that a deputy county treasurer is in no sense a public officer.

Very truly yours,
TIMOTHY S. HOGAN,
Attorney General.

OFFICES COMPATIBLE—MAYOR AND JUSTICE OF THE PEACE.

COLUMBUS, OHIO, June 5, 1913.

Bureau of Inspection and Supervision of Public Offices, Department of Auditor of State, Columbus, Ohio.

GENTLEMEN:—Under favor of May 31st, you inquire as follows:

> "If a justice of the peace is an elector of a village situated within the township in which he is serving as justice of the peace, may he also serve the village as its mayor?
> "Can he legally hold these two elective offices at the same time?
> "If he cannot legally hold both of said positions and the mayor persistently refuses to recognize a petition of at least two-thirds of the resident taxpayers, what action may be taken by the residents of the village to enforce the law?"

A careful investigation of the statutes has enabled me to find nothing therein providing any duties as to either of these offices which would in any way compel the incumbent of one to supervise or act as a check upon the other. Nor have I been able to find any such conflicting duties attached to these offices as would cause the holding of both by one individual to contravene public policy.

I am, therefore, of the opinion that if, in the present case, the duties of neither of these offices are so numerous as to make it impossible to faithfully discharge the obligations of both at the same time, they may be held simultaneously by one individual.

Since I conclude that both of said positions may be held at the same time an answer to your second inquiry would seem to be unnecessary.

Very truly yours,
TIMOTHY S. HOGAN,
Attorney General.

DUTY OF COUNCIL TO FURNISH JUSTICE OF THE PEACE WITH CIVIL DOCKET WHEN LIMITS OF TOWNSHIP AND MUNICIPALITY BECOME IDENTICAL—RIGHT OF JUSTICE TO RETAIN MONEYS FROM FINES FOR CRIMINAL DOCKET—DESK AND STATIONERY.

Under section 1724, General Code, providing that township trustees shall provide a docket for justices of the peace, and under section 3512, General Code, providing that the corresponding officers of a municipality shall perform the duties formerly resting upon the officers of the township, when the municipal township lines become identical, council for such municipality succeeds to the duties of township trustees to furnish a civil docket for justices.

Under section 1742, General Code, a justice of the peace in such municipality, whose office and compensation have not been provided for by council, may retain out of fines or other county moneys coming into his hands in criminal proceedings, the amount paid for a criminal docket and such necessary papers, and a desk if the same has not been provided for by his predecessor.

COLUMBUS, OHIO, May 27, 1913.

Bureau of Inspection and Supervision of Public Offices, Department of Auditor of State, Columbus, Ohio.

GENTLEMEN:—Under date of May 8th you request my opinion as follows:

> "In cities wherein the township offices have been abolished by reason of the fact that the lines of the municipal corporation are co-extensive with the lines of the township and the council of the city has not legislated upon the compensation or disposition of fees or maintenance of offices of justices of the peace, may the funds of said city be legally expended in providing offices, law books, civil dockets or blanks (to the extent of more than $5.00 per year) for the justices of the peace of said township, or should such expense or any item thereof be borne by the justice who retains for his own use all the fees accruing to the office?"

On April 19, 1913, I rendered an opinion to Hon. R. Clint Cole, city solicitor of Findlay, Ohio, copy of which I am enclosing herewith, and wherein I held that under section 3512, General Code, when the corporate limits of a city or village become identical with those of a township, all township offices are abolished except those of justices of the peace and constables; and that the duties formerly performed by the holder of the offices abolished become incumbent upon the corresponding officers of the city or village.

Upon this reasoning I further held that the duty formerly devolving upon the township trustees under section 1724, General Code, to provide a civil docket for a justice of the peace, was transferred to the council of the municipality when the limits of the same became identical with those of the township. The mere fact that council had failed to legislate upon the compensation or disposition of fees, or the maintenance of the office of the justice of the peace, does not, in my opinion, in any way operate to interfere with this duty of council to furnish his docket.

I find no further authorities in the Code making it necessary for the council to supply the justice with anything more than a civil docket, in the absence of legislation passed by council upon this subject, under section 3512, General Code.

I must therefore conclude that in the present case the council is obliged to furnish a justice with a civil docket, but is not empowered to furnish him with any further supplies.

In conection with your further inquiry, as to whether the expense of any of the items enumerated should be borne by the justice, who retains for his own use all the fees accruing to the officer, permit me to cite section 1742, General Code, which provides as follows:

> "A justice of the peace may retain out of fines or other moneys belonging to the county coming into his hands in criminal proceedings, the amount paid for a criminal docket, and each justice of the peace, except those receiving a salary, may retain out of such fines or other moneys an amount not exceeding twenty dollars for a suitable desk in which to keep the docket, files, papers, books and documents of his office, which desk shall be the property of the county and shall be turned over by each justice of the peace to his successor. Such justice may expend of such fines and other moneys not exceeding five dollars per annum, for necessary paper, blanks and other stationery for his office, but a justice shall not purchase such desk if he has received a suitable desk from his predecessor. A justice of the peace paying out money for such purposes shall file with the county auditor, at the expiration of his term of office, a sworn itemized statement thereof. In making the annual statement to the auditor as required by law, a justice of the peace, having made such expenditures or having moneys in his hands contemplated for such purposes, shall include therein the moneys so paid or held by him."

Except, therefore, with reference to the civil docket provided by the council, and as is specifically provided in this statute with reference to moneys to be retained from fines for the purchase of a criminal docket and a desk, when the same has not been purchased by a predecessor, and the necessary paper, blanks and other stationery for his office, the justice in the situation presented by you must pay his expenses from his own funds.

Very truly yours,
TIMOTHY S. HOGAN,
Attorney General.

SHERIFF WHO POSSESSES A PASS NOT ENTITLED TO ALLOWANCE FOR RAILROAD FARE—ALLOWANCE TO SHERIFF OF EXPENSES INCURRED IN PURSUING FELON OUTSIDE OF OHIO—"FLED THE COUNTRY."

Under the terms of section 2997, General Code, a sheriff is entitled to only his necessary expenses incurred and expended, and since when a sheriff possesses a pass, railroad fare is not a necessary expense, and the same may not be allowed to him by the county commissioners.

Under section 2997, a sheriff may be allowed actual and necessary expenses incurred by him in pursuing a fugitive criminal for the purpose of putting in motion the machinery for extradition procedure or for the purpose of receiving a criminal not a fugitive surrendered up by authorities of another state.

The term "fled the country" in section 3015, General Code, must be interpreted to mean "fled the state," and under this statute, a sheriff may also be allowed expenses incurred in pursuing a criminal outside of this state.

COLUMBUS, OHIO, May 20, 1913.

Bureau of Inspection and Supervision of Public Offices, Department of Auditor of State, Columbus, Ohio.

GENTLEMEN:—Under date of May 7th you request my opinion as follows:

"1. A sheriff by reason of being a railroad policeman commissioned by the governor, is provided with passes for the steam and electric roads of his county. Is he entitled to charge and collect from the county railroad fare under Sec. 2997 in cases in which he uses a pass?

"2. May a sheriff, under section 2997, charge and collect from the county expenses incurred while pursuing outside of this state a person accused of crime or offense?

"3. Under section 3015, may a sheriff be paid from the county treasury expenses incurred outside of the state of Ohio in the pursuit of a person charged with a felony?

"4. What interpretation should be given to the words "fled the country?"

Section 2997, General Code, provides as follows:

"In addition to the compensation and salary herein provided, the county commissioners shall make allowances quarterly to each sheriff for keeping and feeding prisoners, as provided by law, for his actual and necessary expenses incurred and expended in pursuing or transporting persons accused or convicted of crimes and offenses, in conveying and transferring persons to and from any state hospital for the insane, the institution for feeble-minded youth, Ohio hospital for epileptics, boys' industrial school, girls' industrial home, county homes for the friendless, houses of refuge, children's homes, sanitariums, convents, orphan asylums or homes, county infirmaries, and all institutions for the care, cure, correction, reformation and protection of unfortunates, and all expenses of maintaining horses and vehicles necessary to the proper administration of the duties of his office. The county commissioners shall allow the sheriff his actual railroad fare and street car fare expended in serving civil processes and subpoenaing witnesses in civil and criminal cases, and may allow his necessary livery hire for the proper administration of the duties of his office. Each sheriff shall file under oath with the quarterly report herein provided a full, accurate and itemized account of all his actual and necessary expenses, including railroad fare, street car fare and livery hire mentioned in this section before they shall be allowed by the commissioners."

Section 3015, General Code, provides as follows:

"The county commissioners may allow and pay the necessary expense incurred by an officer in the pursuit of a person charged with felony, who has fled the country."

Answering your questions in order, under section 2997 the sheriff is allowed by the county commissioners for his actual and necessary expenses, under the circumstances therein contemplated; and, inasmuch as when he is provided with a railroad pass it is not necessary for him to pay railroad fare, I am of the opinion, in answer to your first question, that the county commissioners may not allow him such expense when he has a pass.

Answering your second question, it is a well settled principle of law that a sheriff or other police officer is not authorized to make an arrest without this state. The warrant issued by the court is, as a general rule, available for the purpose of making an arrest only within the jurisdiction of the court issuing the same. In this state, however, the statutes permit a sheriff armed with a warrant to arrest in any county of the state. Sections 13502, 13597 and 13718, General Code; 2 American and English Encyc. 862; 3 Cyc. 890; Smith vs. Commissioners, 9 Ohio, 26.

In answering your second question, therefore, it is necessary to bear in mind that a sheriff is not authorized to pursue a criminal outside this state for the purpose of making an arrest. There are certain circumstances, however, under which a sheriff may be legitimately engaged in pursuing a criminal outside of this state.

When extradition procedure is instituted for the purpose of procuring a fugitive criminal from this state, it is necessary that someone file an affidavit before the court of the other state, in order that he may be held therein until such time as the proper machinery for executive demand for such criminal may be put in motion. Or, if the criminal in another state be not technically a fugitive from justice, the laws of that state may permit his surrender to an officer of this state without extradition procedure. 19 Cyc. page 85; State vs. Hall, 28 L. R. A. 289.

Under such circumstances, therefore, when a sheriff is properly engaged in either pursuing a fugitive or following up a criminal for the purpose of taking the preliminary steps necessary in another state for apprehension, I am of the opinion that under section 2997, General Code, the county commissioners should allow his actual and necessary expenses so incurred. The duty is most assuredly a necessary one, and one readily contemplated by the nature of his office.

Answering your third and fourth questions together, the interpretation requested by you for the term "fled the country" is necessary for a proper understanding of section 3015. The term "country" is defined in 7 Am. & Eng. Encyc. of law, page 972, as follows:

"The term 'country' in its primary meaning signifies place, and, in a larger sense, the territory or dominions occupied by a community, or even waste and unpeopled sections or regions of the earth; but its metaphorical meaning is no less definite and well understood; and in common parlance, in historical and geographical writings, in diplomacy, legislation, treaties and international codes, not to refer to sacred writ, the term 'country' is employed to denote the population, the nation, the state, the government, having possession and dominion over the country. The word 'country,' in the revenue laws of the United States, has always been construed to embrace all the possessions of a foreign state, however, widely separated, which are subject to the same supreme executive and legislative control.

"A state, however, may with propriety be called a country; and in certain cases, when the legislature uses the expression 'the country,' it is natural to suppose that they mean the country for which they are legislating.

"The word is used also to signify a jury, as in the expressions, 'trial by the country,' 'conclusion to the country,' 'puts himself upon the country,' etc."

and in 11 Cyc. page 616, it is said:

"In extradition proceedings, under an international convention, the term has been defined as the special political jurisdiction that has cognizance of the crime."

Since throughout the statutes ample provision is made for the payment of expenses of any officer incurred in performing the duties of pursuing and transporting criminals within this state, I am of the opinion that the term 'fled the country,' in section 3215, General Code, is intended to extend the allowance of expenses to those necessarily incurred in pursuit made outside of the state, by either a detective of the prosecuting attorney or a sheriff.

I therefore hold that the term 'country' in this section is intended to mean 'state,' and conclude that when a sheriff is engaged in pursuing outside of this state a person charged with a felony, for the purpose of taking the necessary preliminary steps for the institution of extradition proceedings, or for the purpose of receiving a criminal surrendered up in another state, who is not such a fugitive as to come within the requirement of the extradition provision in the United States constitution, he may be allowed, under section 3015, General Code, his actual and necessary traveling expenses.

Very truly yours,
TIMOTHY S. HOGAN,
Attorney General.

CITY BOARD OF HEALTH GIVEN CONTROL AND MANAGEMENT OF PEST HOUSES OR DETENTION HOSPITALS IN CITY.

Although section 4370, General Code, gives the director of public safety the power to manage and make all contracts in reference to pest houses in cities, nevertheless this provision when viewed in the light of sections 4452 and following of the General Code, must be considered a general provision to which the latter statutes are special and exceptional. Under these latter statutes, the control and management of pest houses and detention hospitals is vested in the board of health of a city.

COLUMBUS, OHIO, June 30, 1913.

Bureau of Inspection and Supervision of Public Offices, Columbus, Ohio.

GENTLEMEN:—In your letter of June 13, 1913, you say:

> "We respectfully request your written opinion upon the following question:
> "What, if any, powers over the management and control of the pest houses or detention hospitals may be exercised by a city board of health?"

Your question probably arose on account of an apparent conflict in the language found in section 4370, G. C., relating to the duties and powers of the director of public safety, and that found in section 4454, G. C., applying to boards of health and quarantine hospitals.

Section 4370 reads as follows:

> "The director of public safety shall manage, and make all contracts in reference to the police station, fire houses, reform schools, houses of correction, infirmaries, hospitals, workhouses, farms, pest houses, and all other charitable and reformatory institutions. In the control and supervision of such institutions, the director shall be governed by the provisions of this title relating to such institutions."

The title referred to is title 12 of the General Code. This is a general section, covering quite a number of subjects; and if there were no other statute on any subject contained therein, the director of public safety would have the management of all of the institutions, including pest houses.

But further along, in the same title, under the head of "board of health," subdivision—"quarantine hospitals," section 4452, G. C., provides as follows:

> "The council of a municipality may purchase land within or without its boundaries and erect thereon suitable hospital buildings for the isolation, care and treatment of persons suffering from dangerous contagious disease, and providing for the maintenance thereof. The plans and specifications for such buildings shall be approved by the board of health."

It will be noticed that "the plans and specifications for such buildings shall be approved by the board of health;" so that, in the very incipiency of all this class of structures, the board of health assumes supervisory control and direction.

Section 4454, G. C., then provides:

"Such buildings shall be under the care and control of the board of health. The board shall appoint all employes or other persons necessary to the use, care and maintenance thereof and regulate the entrance of patients thereto and their care and treatment."

Section 4456 then says:

"A municipality may establish a quarantine hospital within or without its limits. If without its limits, the consent of the municipality or township shall be first obtained, but such consent shall not be necessary if the hospital is more than eight hundred feet from any occupied house or public highway. When great emergency exists, the board of health may seize, occupy and temporarily use for a quarantine hospital, a suitable vacant house or building within its jurisdiction. The board of health of a municipality, having a quarantine hospital, shall have exclusive control thereof."

Section 4457 provides for temporary buildings, along this line and for the employment by the board of health of all necessary physicians, police, etc., to operate them. The words "pest houses" are fairly a part of, and interchangeable with ordinary quarantine arrangements of any description, temporary or permanent; and any such places for the detention of persons who are dangerous, or a menace to the public health, by virtue of contagious or dangerous diseases fall fairly within the jurisdiction of boards of health. This is the doctrine laid down in Judge Hohler's opinion, in the case of Rillings vs. Lorain, 13 Ohio Decisions, page 87, et seq.

All the sections, above quoted, are part of the same title of the statutes. They relate to the public health and the organization of cities and villages as a matter of public good and should be construed rationally together in pari materia.

In view of the provisions of all the statutes above quoted, I am of the opinion that boards of health in cities, have, by virtue thereof, control of the institutions named by you.

Yours very truly,
TIMOTHY S. HOGAN,
Attorney General.

POLICEMEN AND FIREMEN—ANNUAL COMPENSATION—WORKING OVERTIME—HEALTH OFFICER MAY BE SPECIAL AGENT FOR VACCINATIONS.

The annual compensation fixed by council for policemen and firemen, unless otherwise provided by ordinance, is to cover all their services as such policemen or firemen, and they cannot draw pay for overtime. If any have been paid overtime, such payments are illegal and may be recovered.

The health officer of a city may be appointed as special agent for vaccinations, under section 4449, General Code, and he may draw the compensation fixed for each position.

COLUMBUS, OHIO, July 8, 1913.

Bureau of Inspection and Supervision of Public Offices, Columbus, Ohio.

GENTLEMEN:—Under date of April 7, 1913, you inquire as follows:

> "First. May policemen employed regularly by a city at an annual salary fixed by council be legally paid, in addition to said salary, for overtime; the rules of the department of public safety specifying the number of hours per day said policemen shall serve regularly? Can the amount paid for overtime be recovered?
> "Second: May firemen employed regularly by a city and annual salary fixed by council be legally paid, in addition to said salary, for overtime when held for duty on regular day off, provided for in the rules of the department of public safety?
> "Third. May a health officer who is also a practicing physician legally be paid for vaccinations from the city treasury in addition to his compensation as health officer fixed by council?"

The policemen and firement receive an annual salary which is usually payable in monthly installments. I assume that the salary ordinance says nothing about receiving pay for overtime. These officers are not paid by the day or hour as are common laborers. Their salary is full compensation for all services performed in the line of their duty.

Section 4382, General Code, provides:

> "The director of public safety shall classify the services in the police and fire departments in conformity with the ordinance of council determining the number of persons to be employed therein, and shall make all rules for the regulation and discipline of such departments, except as otherwise provided in this subdivision."

Section 4393, General Code, provides:

> "The council may establish all necessary regulations to guard against the occurrence of fires, protect the property and lives of the citizens against damages and accidents resulting therefrom and for such purpose may establish and maintain a fire department, provide for the establishment and organization of fire engine and hose companies, establish the hours of labor of the members of its fire department, but after the first day of January, nineteen hundred and eleven, council shall not require any fireman to be on duty continuously more than six days in every seven, and provide such by-laws and regulations for their government as is deemed necessary and proper."

It is proper that rules and regulations be made to fix the time of service of policemen and firemen. In the case of firemen they must not be required to work continuously for a longer period than that provided in section 4393, General Code.

The fact that a regular time of service is fixed for these positions does not mean that the occupants may not be required to be on duty at other times. They may be required to be on duty on other than their regular time. Their annual salary would cover this service.

The decisions in other states are not controlling, as charters are different, but such decisions may be a guide.

In Tyrrell vs. Mayor, etc., 159 N. Y. 239, it is held:

"A public officer who receives an annual salary for his services, cannot recover extra compensation for services rendered on Sunday, unless some statute allows it."

The position in that case was that of section foreman with an annual salary of $1,000.00.

In Lemoine vs. City of St. Louis, 120 M. 419, it is held:

"The principal deputy recorder of voters of the city of St. Louis, appointed by the recorder of voters at a fixed annual salary (Laws 1883, p. 38), is not entitled to extra pay for work for time over seven hours a day allowed to the clerks and deputies paid by the day."

The annual compensation fixed by council for policemen and firemen, unless otherwise provided in the ordinance, is to cover all their services as such policemen or firemen and they cannot draw pay for overtime. If payments have been made for overtime such payments are illegal and may be recovered.

Your next inquiry is as to a health officer drawing additional compensation for vaccinations.

Section 4404, General Code, provides:

"The council of each municipality shall establish a board of health, composed of five members to be appointed by the mayor and confirmed by council who shall serve without compensation and a majority of whom shall be a quorum. The mayor shall be president by virtue of his office. But in villages the council, if it deems advisable, may appoint a health officer, to be approved by the state board of health who shall act instead of a board of health, and fix his salary and term of office. Such appointee shall have the powers and perform the duties granted to or imposed upon boards of health, except that rules, regulations or orders of a general character and required to be published, made by such health officer, shall be approved by the state board of health."

Section 4408, General Code, provides:

"The board of health shall appoint a health officer, who shall be the executive officer. He shall furnish his name, address and other information required by the state board of health. The board may appoint a clerk, and with the consent of council, as many ward or district physicians, or one ward physician for each ward in the city as it deems necessary."

Your inquiry is in reference to the health officer of a city. He is not, therefore, acting instead of a board of health as he may be doing in villages.

It does not appear in what capacity the health officer acted when making the vaccinations. By virtue of section 4408, General Code, the board of health may appoint a health officer, and also ward or district physicians.

Section 4410, General Code, provides:

"Each ward or district physician shall care for the sick poor and each person quarantined in his ward or district when such person is unable to pay for medical attendance, and for all persons sent from his ward or district to the municipal pest house when such persons are unable to pay for medical attendance."

Section 4412, General Code, provides:

"The board shall have exclusive control of its appointees, define their duties and fix their salaries, but no member of the board of health shall be appointed as health officer nor shall a member of the board of health not the health officer be appointed as one of the ward physicians. The board may suspend, but not remove, any member of the sanitary police now serving or hereafter appointed for cause authorizing the dismissal of any person in the classified service, and shall certify such fact together with the cause of such suspension, to the civil service commission, who, within five days from the receipt thereof, shall proceed to inquire into the cause of such suspension and render judgment thereon and such judgment in the matter shall be final."

It appears by section 4410, General Code, that the district or ward physician is to care for the sick who are unable to pay for medical attendance. This duty is not a statutory duty of the health officer.

Section 4412 impliedly permits the health officer to also act as a ward physician when it provides that no member of the board of health "not the health officer" shall be appointed as one of the ward physicians.

The two positions are under the direction of the board of health and the duties of each are not inconsistent or conflicting.

The health officer of a city may also be a ward or district physician and draw the compensation of each position. If the health officer in question has been legally appointed as a ward or district physician he may draw pay as such health officer and also as a ward physician.

There is a special statute in reference to vaccinations.

Section 4449, General Code, provides:

"The board of health may take measures and supply agents and afford inducements and facilities for gratuitous vaccination."

This section would authorize the board of health to appoint special agents for vaccinations and by virtue of section 4412, General Code, supra, could fix the compensation of such special agents.

Making vaccinations are not a part of the duty of the health officer. The duties of such special agent for vaccinations are not inconsistent with the duties of a health officer.

The vaccinations would not when made by virtue of section 4449, General Code, necessarily be a part of the duties of the ward or district physician.

A health officer of a city may be appointed as special agent for vaccinations under section 4449, General Code, and draw the compensation fixed for each position.

Respectfully,
TIMOTHY S. HOGAN,
Attorney General.

REGISTRATION CITIES—ELECTION EQUIPMENT—EXPENSES IN CONNECTION WITH ELECTION EQUIPMENT.

Registration cities and not the counties in which said cities are located must furnish election equipments, such as voting booths, shelves and other furnishings and supplies, which are of a permanent nature, and they must pay all the expense in connection therewith, such as the delivering and setting up of the same.

COLUMBUS, OHIO, May 24, 1913.

Bureau of Inspection and Supervision of Public Offices, Columbus, Ohio.

GENTLEMEN:—Your letter of April 12, 1913, is received, in which you inquire:

> "The city of Hamilton is a registration city. Should the city of Hamilton or Butler county pay for the storage of the election equipment in the city of Hamilton and the delivery and setting up of the same in the several election precincts of the city of Hamilton? We call your attention to schedule D and schedule E, paragraph 5-a in said opinion."

The opinion referred to is the one given to your department under date of July 12, 1912, in reference to the division of election expenses.

Schedule D, to which you call attention is headed:

> "Expenses to be paid by registration cities.
> "Direct in both even and odd numbered years."

One of the items in said schedue to be paid by the city is:

> "Rent of voting places for registration and elections in such city. Held to include the cost of portable voting houses or any expenditure for the general maintenance or upkeep thereof such as repairs, cleaning, hauling, erecting, watching, displaying of signals, lots for storage.
> "Chairs, tables, fuel, lights for voting places in city."

Schedule E, to which you call attention, is headed:

"Expenses to be paid by county in even numbered years—Not charged back.

"Expenses to be paid by county in odd numbered years—Charged back."

Paragraph 5-a of said schedule E, reads:

"Other proper and necessary expenses of any general or special election.

"a. This is held to include expenses incurred in setting up and returning voting equipment under section 5046, General Code."

Section 5046, General Code, provides:

"After each election, the judges of elections of each precinct shall see that the booths, guard rails and other equipments are returned to the clerk of the township, or clerk or auditor of the corporation, in which the precinct is situated, for safekeeping. Such clerk or auditor shall have such booths and equipment on hand and in place at the polling place in each precinct, before the time for opening the polls on election day, and for this service the board of deputy state supervisors may allow the necessary expenses incurred. In registration cities, this duty shall devolve on the board of deputy state supervisors."

This section does not determine whether this expense shall be paid by the county or by the registration city when the precincts are located in a registration city.

Section 4946, General Code, provides:

"The additional compensation of members of the board of deputy state supervisors and of its clerk in such city hereinbefore specified, the lawful compensation of the deputy clerk and his assistants and all registrars of electors in such city, the necessary cost of the registers, books, blanks, forms, stationery and supplies provided by the board for the purposes herein authorized, including poll books for special elections, and the cost of the rent, furnishings and supplies for rooms hired by the board for its offices and as places for registration of electors and the holding of elections in such city, shall be paid by such city from its general fund. Such expense shall be paid by the treasurer of such city upon vouchers of the board, certified by its chief deputy and clerk and the warrant of the city auditor. Each such voucher shall specify the actual services rendered, the items of supplies furnished and the price or rates charged in detail."

In construing this section in the opinion given to your department under date of February 27, 1912, it was held:

"In registration cities the expenses of supplying voting places with chairs, tables, lights, fuel and other furnishings is paid by the city by virtue of the above provision."

The provision referred to is the one italicized above in section 4946, General Code.

The equipment in question is not described but I take it that it is equipment for voting booths or rooms, such as voting shelves and the smaller booths for voting, furnishings and supplies for the same which are of a permanent nature.

Such equipment must be furnished by registration cities and they must pay all expenses in connection therewith, such as the delivery and setting up of the same.

The provisions in the above quoted parts of the schedules referred to are not inconsistent. There is special provision for payment of such expense in registration cities and this is covered by schedule D. The expense covered by schedule E, paragraph 5-a, is for precincts outside of registration cities. By adding at the end of paragraph 5-a, the words "except in registration cities," the clause would be cleared of all possible question or doubt.

Respectfully,
TIMOTHY S. HOGAN,
Attorney General.

CLERK OF COURTS—SALARY—COMMISSIONERS WITHOUT AUTHORITY TO MAKE TRANSFER TO THE FEE FUND FOR THE CLERK OF COURT DURING THE LAST QUARTER OF 1909, FOR THE PURPOSE OF COVERING DEFICIENCY IN THE CLERK'S FEE FUND FOR THE FIRST QUARTER OF 1910—FEE FUND.

Under the provision of section 2984, and the amendments thereto from December 31, 1909, to April 1, 1910, there was no authority given for transferring to the fee fund of county officers. This section conferred no authority upon the commissioners to make a transfer during the last quarter of 1909 for the purpose of covering deficiencies during the first quarter of 1910.

The county commissioners had authority to make transfers to the fee fund during the last quarter of 1909 for the last quarter of 1909, but were not legally obliged to make this transfer. County commissioners were not authorized to make transfer to the fee fund during the first quarter of 1910.

COLUMBUS, OHIO, July 24, 1913.

Bureau of Inspection and Supervision of Public Offices, Department of Auditor of State, Columbus, Ohio.

GENTLEMEN:—I have your letter of April 19, 1913, in which you ask my opinion upon the facts stated therein as follows:

"The legal salary of a clerk of courts for the term ending the first Monday of August, 1911, was $2,175.00 per annum, or $181.25 per month.

"Total amount for two years' term		$4,350 00
"Total amount drawn:
"20 months @ $181 25	$3,625 00
"1 month, November, 1909	175 21
"2 months, January and February, 1910	200 00
"1 month, March, 1910	174 34
"7 days, August, 1911	35 75
"Total		4,210 30
"Amount apparently due clerk		$139 70

"This amount was not paid the clerk for the reason that the fee fund was exhausted. Transfers to the clerk's fee fund were made in the last quarter of 1909 as follows: Nov. 29, $700.00; Dec. 31, $104.10; but the aggregate of all the fees collected for the clerk's fee fund, and the transfers made to said fund was just equal to the aggregate amount paid for the salary of the clerk and his deputies to Dec. 31, 1910.

"It will be noted that the clerk did not receive his full salary for November, 1909, by the amount of $6.04, and that he drew $33.75 as pay for extra seven days in August, 1911, (thus drawing compensation for the day on which his successor's term began) by reason of the fiscal year being longer than the calendar year. Under the above statement of facts, does the county owe the clerk any balance of salary, and if so, how much? Or, on the other hand, does the clerk owe the county, and if so how much?"

Section 799 O. L. 208, carried into the General Code section 2984, provided as follows:

"As soon after the passage of this act as the aggregate compensation of the deputies, assistants, bookkeepers, clerks and employes of the various officers is fixed by the commissioners as provided in section 3, and on the first Monday of April, July, October and January, whenever necessary during three years after said original act took effect, but not thereafter, the said commissioners shall enter an order on their journal transferring to the county officers' fee funds from any other fund or funds of the county in their discretion, such sums as may be necessary to make good any deficiencies in said funds, found by them likely to arise during the next ensuing quarter in consequence of the payment of the respective officers, deputies, assistants, bookkeepers, clerks or other employes during such period, from the amounts then in or estimated to come into said funds for said period, derived from said respective offices."

This section was later amended so as to extend the time within which county commissioners might make transfers to county officers' fee funds from April 1, 1910 to April 1, 1911 (101 O. L. 199), but has since been repealed (102 O. L. 136).

This section authorized the commissioners to meet deficiencies in the clerk's fee fund arising during the last quarter of 1909, by making transfers to the fund whenever necessary during said quarter, the statutory provision as to the time of such act being merely directory. It is apparent from a reading of section 2984, and the amendment thereto before noted, that there was an interval of time between December 31, 1909, and April 1, 1910, in which there was no authority whatever given for transfers to the fee funds of county officers. And I am of the opinion that this section conferred no authority on the commissioners to make a transfer during the last quarter of 1909 for the purpose of covering deficiencies in the clerk's fee fund for the first quarter of 1910. Though the time designated by the statute for transfers in the last quarter of 1909, to wit: the first Monday in October was directory only, yet the authority granted as to such transfers was only to make good deficiencies arising during such ensuing quarter, to wit: the months of October, November and December, 1909. This is the only possible construction of the section as respects this question, and moreover, as before noted there was no legislative recognition whatever of deficiencies in the fee funds of county officers during the first quarter of 1910.

It clearly follows from the above that the clerk has no legal claim against the county on account of the shortage in his salary for the months of January, February and March, 1910. I am of the opinion that the same is true as to the shortage in his salary for November, 1909. As to this, shortage, though the commissioners had power during the last quarter of 1909 to provide by transfer for fee fund deficiencies then occurring, and in a sense it was their duty to do so, yet the statute made no provision for enforcing the exercise of this power or duty on the part of the commissioners by the sanction of liability in case of their failure to transfer to the fee fund enough to provide for the deficiency, or even in case of failure on their part to make transfer to such deficiency fund at all. The statute not having created such liability, it does not exist. (7 O. S. 109, 124.)

As to the other question embraced in your inquiry I am of the opinion that the salary of the clerk was measured by his official term regardless of whether it was a few days more or less than two calendar years, and therefore in this case he was not entitled to collect salary for the excess days mentioned.

Very truly yours,
TIMOTHY S. HOGAN,
Attorney General.

CIVIL SERVICE—INCUMBENT AT TIME POSITION PASSED INTO CLASSIFIED SERVICE NOT REQUIRED TO TAKE EXAMINATION—REAPPOINTMENT—CLASSIFIED LIST—MAJORITY OF MEMBERS OF BOARD OF HEALTH CONSTITUTE A QUORUM.

Incumbents at the time when positions passed into the classified service are not required to take an examination or to be reappointed from the eligible list.

A plumbing inspector legally in the classified list cannot be discharged except in accordance with the provisions of the civil service act.

Under the provisions of section 4404, a majority of the members of a board of health constitute a quorum. In a board consisting of five members, three members constitute a quorum. A vote of a majority of the members constituting a quorum would be sufficient to carry a proposition.

COLUMBUS, OHIO, July 21, 1913.

Bureau of Inspection and Supervision of Public Offices, Columbus, Ohio.

GENTLEMEN:—Under date of April 19, 1913, you submit the following inquiries:

> "First. Is a plumbing inspector, as an employe of the board of health of a city, entitled to the protection of the civil service law if not appointed from the eligible list, provided that such inspector has been employed since April, 1895?
> "Second. The board of health consists of five members. If three be present at a meeting, may two of said members voting in the affirmative, discharge or remove a former inspector, or does it require the affirmative vote of three to legally enact the orders of a board of health?
> "Third. If said plumbing inspector reports from day to day for duty should the city auditor upon demand, make payment of his salary?"

The questions in this case arose before the amendment and repeal of the civil service law by the recent session of the legislature.

Section 4479, General Code, prior to said repeal, provided:

> "The civil service shall be divided into classified and unclassified service. The unclassified service shall include the positions of officers elected by the people or appointed to fill vacancies in offices filled by popular election, or whose appointment is subject to confirmation by the council, or who are appointed by any state officer or by any court, employes of the council, persons who by law are to serve without remuneration, persons who are appointed to positions requiring professional or technical skill as may be determined by the civil service commission; persons appointed or employed to give instruction in any educational institution, persons appointed by any board or officers supervising elections, persons who as members of a board or otherwise, have charge of any principal department of the government of any city, the head or chief of any division or principal department relating to engineering, waterworks, street cleaning, or health, the chief of the police department, the chief of the fire department, the superintendent of any workhouse, house of refuge, infirmary, or hospital, the librarian of any public library, private secretaries, deputies in the office of the city auditor and city treasurer, unskilled laborers, and such appointees of the civil service commission as they may by rule determine. The classified service shall comprise officers and places not included in the unclassified service."

This section placed in the unclassified service the "head or chief of any division or principal department relating to health."

It appears from the letter attached to your inquiry that the position of plumbing inspector has been established under the board of health. The plumbing inspector is not therefore the head or chief of any division or principal department relating to health.

The department of health came under the provisions of the civil service act by virtue of the Payne law which became effective August 1, 1909, as to parts thereof, but the civil service provisions became effective January 1, 1910.

The position of plumbing inspector is not placed in the unclassified service by section 4479, General Code, and it is therefore in the classified service.

The plumbing inspector in question was appointed before the Payne law became effective and he held the position at the time it came under the classified service.

The courts, and this department, have held that incumbents at the time when a position passed into the classified service are not required to take an examination or be reappointed from the eligible list. Such incumbents passed into the classified service without examination. It was not necessary that the plumbing inspector in question be appointed from the eligible list. He is legally in the classified service and cannot be discharged except in accordance with the provisions of the civil service act, and he is entitled to the protection of the provisions of said act.

Answering your second inquiry:

Section 4404, General Code, provides:

"The council of each municipality shall establish a board of health, composed of five members to be appointed by the mayor and confirmed by council who shall serve without compensation and a majority of whom shall be a quorum. .The mayor shall be president by virtue of his office. But in villages the council, if it deems advisable, may appoint a health officer, to be approved by the state board of health who shall act instead of a board of health, and fix his salary and term of office. Such appointee shall have the powers and perform the duties granted to or imposed upon boards of health, except that rules, regulations or orders of a general character and required to be published, made by such health officer, shall be approved by the state board of health."

This section makes a majority of the board of health a quorum. There are five members and three is a majority. If three members are present they may transact the business of the board and a vote of the majority of those present would be sufficient to carry a proposition.

The rule is stated at page 335 of 28 Cyc.:

"In the absence of charter or statutory provision to the contrary the rule is well established that a majority of a quorum is all that is required for the adoption or passage of any ordinance, resolution, or order properly arising for the action of a municipal council or other municipal body."

The statute does not prescribe that a majority of the members of the board of health shall be required to pass a resolution or order.

At a meeting of the board of health of a city, consisting of five members, at which meeting three members are present, a vote of two members is sufficient to pass a resolution, such as a resolution to discharge an employe.

You ask if said plumbing inspector is entitled to his pay if he reports from day to day.

It appears that the board of health has just voted to discharge this employe when the above inquiry was submitted. His right to compensation would depend upon the future acts of the board of health and of the civil service commission. These facts are not given. It is seen that the employe has the protection of the civil service law. As a general rule an officer or employe who is wrongfully discharged is entitled to his pay if he reports for duty. Each case, however, must depend upon its particular facts.

The facts given in this case are not sufficient to answer this question. Upon submission of other facts it will be further considered.

Respectfully,

TIMOTHY S. HOGAN,

Attorney General.

ORDINANCE—FIXING THE SALARY OF THE CITY CLERK—EXTRA COMPENSATION FOR SERVING NOTICES—SALARY SHOULD NOT BE FIXED BY ORDINANCE.

Where it is the intention of the city council to give their clerk certain fees in addition to his salary, and an ordinance is passed on the same date on which the council elects its clerk, increasing his compensation by providing additional fees for serving notices, in view of the fact that the members had not undertaken to provide their clerk with compensation for performing his ordinary duties by reason of custom having grown up to permit preceding members of council to provide the same in the salary ordinance, the members of the present council should be considered as adopting such compensation for their clerk and in addition providing him compensation for serving notices. This would be fixing the salary of such clerk and would not be increasing his salary while in office.

COLUMBUS, OHIO, July 14, 1913.

Bureau of Inspection and Supervision of Public Offices, Columbus, Ohio.

GENTLEMEN:—Under date of December 7, 1912, you requested my written opinion upon the following question:

> "If an ordinance be passed on the same date on which the council of a city elects its clerk, increasing his compensation by providing additional fees for serving notices, when would such ordinance go into effect? The question is, would it apply to the incumbent of said office during his present term or would the inhibition contained in section 4213 control?"

The provisions relative to the fixing of compensation of the clerk of council is provided for in section 4210, General Code. Such section reads as follows:

> "Within ten days from the commencement of their term, the members of council shall elect a president pro tem., a clerk and such other employes of council as may be necessary, and fix their duties, bonds and compensation. The officers and employes of council shall serve for two years, but may be removed at any time for cause, at a regular meeting by a vote of two-thirds of the members elected to council."

Section 4214, General Code, provides as follows:

> "Except as otherwise provided in this title, council, by ordinance or resolution, shall determine the number of officers, clerks and employes in each department of the city government, and shall fix by ordinance or resolution their respective salaries and compensation, and the amount of the bond to be given for each officer, clerk or employe in each department of the government, if any be required. Such bond shall be made by such officer, clerk or employe, with surety subject to the approval of the mayor."

There is a clear distinction between the provisions of section 4214, General Code, and 4210, General Code. Section 4214, General Code, provides that except as otherwise provided in this title council by ordinance or resolution shall determine the number of officers, clerks and employes and fix their salaries, whereas section 4210, General Code, which is found in the same title provides that the members of council shall elect a clerk of council.

In regard to fixing the salary of the clerk of council the legislature intended that such action should be taken by the members of council as individuals and not by such members sitting as a deliberative body. While it is true that the term "members of council" might be construed to mean council sitting as a deliberative body yet such is not the interpretation placed upon such words by the supreme court. In the case of State vs. Miller 62 O. S. 436 is clearly recognized the distinction between an action to be taken by the members of council as individuals and an action to be taken by council as a deliberative body. On page 445 Davis J., says in reference to section 1676 of the Revised Statutes which is in language similar to section 4210, General Code:

> "The council was engaged in the duty of electing officers, a duty imposed on the members therof, not on the body as a council. They were not engaged in the deliberative business which is the ordinary work of the council; but in the election of a city officer."

The provision of section 4210, General Code, is that within ten days from the commencement of their term, the members of council shall elect a clerk and fix his duties, bond and compensation. The time limit stated in the statute I do not believe to be mandatory but merely directory, and if the members of council do not act within the ten days mentioned in the statute they may still act although the ten days limitation has expired. If, however, council does not act at all until a payment period has arrived and the clerk of council has accepted the amount fixed for the salary of a former clerk I am of the opinion that the members of council would be considered as having adopted the compensation which was fixed for the prior clerk as the compensation which should be paid to the clerk which they have elected. The provisions of section 4210, General Code, as I view it, make it the duty of the members of each succeeding new council to fix the compensation, bond and duties of the clerk elected by them, and, consequently, such members should act each two years. I am aware that it has been the custom to fix the salary of the clerk in the manner as that provided in section 4214, General Code, by ordinance or resolution. However, I am of the opinion that since an ordinance or resolution as understood pertains solely to the legislative action of council as a deliberative body and subject to the veto of the mayor the action of the members of council in fixing the compensation of their clerk should be by motion rather than by resolution or ordinance.

As, however, it has heretofore been customary to fix the salary of the clerk in accordance with section 4214, General Code, I do not believe that any findings should be made against any clerk who has accepted a salary so fixed.

In your question you state that an ordinance has been passed on the same date on which the council of a city elected its clerk increasing his compensation by providing additional fees for serving notices. From your question I assume the members of council did not undertake on the date on which they elected their clerk to fix his ordinary salary relying on an ordinance theretofore passed under the provisions of section 4214, General Code, as providing for such compensation. In this I think the members of council were in error as it was their duty to fix such salary on said date, but having proceeded in a manner that had been customary I would assume that the members of council had thereby adopted the salary which had been received by the preceding clerk. Having, however, on the same date on which they elected their clerk provided a further compensation for serving notices I am of the opinion that such additional compensation fixed on the date mentioned would not be considered as within the inhibition of section 4213, General Code, to the effect that "the salary of any clerk, officer or employe shall not be increased or diminished during the term for which he was elected or appointed." Although I do not undertake in this opinion to pass upon the question of whether or not the clerk of council would be within the inhibition of said section if the members of council in the future should undertake to increase or diminish the salary of such clerk, the members of council in the case in which you state were acting entirely within their statutory authority in providing compensation to their clerk for serving notices, and since I have held that not having fixed a compensation for the clerk in the performance of his ordinary duties they are to be assumed to have adopted the same rate of compensation as that paid to the preceding clerk, the compensation of the clerk would be the sum of the two compensations above mentioned.

The next question which arises would be in regard to whether or not such action of the members of council were within the initiative and referendum act, section 4227-2.

Section 4227-2, General Code, prior to amendment, 103 O. L. 211, provides that no ordinance, resolution or measure of any municipal corporation involving the expenditure of money shall become effective in less than sixty days after its passage. As I view section 4227-2, General Code, taken in connection with the entire act it refers to the action of council as a deliberative body and not to the action of the members of council as provided in section 4210, and therefore, that the referendum act would not apply.

In conclusion, therefore, I would state that the ordinance passed by council on the day it elected its city clerk should be considered by reason of the customary method of fixing the salary of the clerk of council to be the action of the members of council individually, and, therefore, although not properly speaking an ordinance is at least the action of such members of council, and would apply to the incumbent of said office during the term for which he was elected, and that since said action was taken on the same day on which said clerk was elected the inhibition of section 4213, General Code, even if it were to be considered as applying to a clerk of council would not control. In other words, as I view the situation, it is the duty of the members of the incoming council under section 4210, General Code, to provide the clerk with compensation. In view of the fact that they had not undertaken to provide their clerk with compensation for performing his ordinary duties by reason of the custom having grown up to permit the preceding members of council to provide the same in the salary ordinance the members of the present council should be considered as adopting such compensation for their clerk and in addition providing him compensation for serving notices. This would not be increasing the salary of the clerk during his term but would be fixing a salary for such clerk, no salary having been previously fixed or authorized to be fixed.

Very truly yours,
TIMOTHY S. HOGAN,
Attorney General.

REVENUES—WATER WORKS—FIRE HYDRANTS—TAXES AND TAXATION—APPROPRIATION—INCOME FROM WATER WORKS MAY NOT BE USED TO PURCHASE FIRE HYDRANTS.

Revenues resulting from the operation of a municipal waterworks plant may not be legally used to purchase fire hydrants to be installed for fire protection purposes. Such expense must be borne by funds raised by taxation and appropriated from the safety fund for that particular purpose.

COLUMBUS, OHIO, July 25, 1913.

Bureau of Inspection and Supervision of Public Offices, Department of Auditor of State, Columbus, Ohio.

GENTLEMEN:—I beg to acknowledge receipt of your letter of April 12th, requesting my opinion upon the following question:

> "May the revenues resulting from the operation of a municipal waterworks plant be legally used in payment of the purchase price of fire hydrants to be installed for fire protection purposes, or is such expense required to be borne by the funds raised by taxation and appropriation from the safety fund for that particular purpose? See sections 3961 and 4371 of the General Code."

The two sections of the General Code which you cite are as follows:

> "Sec. 3961. Subject to the provisions of this title, the director of public service may make contracts for * * * the furnishing and supplying with connections all necessary fire hydrants for fire department purposes * * *.
> "Sec. 4371. The director of public safety may make all contracts and expenditures of money for acquiring * * * fire cisterns, and plugs, that may be required, * * *"

Of course, if section 3961 governs the matter concerning which you inquire, money resulting from the operation of the municipal waterworks plant may properly be used for the purpose mentioned by you, under the provisions of sections 3959 and 3960, General Code. These sections are as follows:

> "Sec. 3959. After paying the expenses of conducting and managing the waterworks, any surplus therefrom may be applied to the repairs, enlargement or extension of the works or of the reservoirs, the payment of the interest of any loan made for their construction or for the creation of a sinking fund for the liquidation of the debt. The amount authorized to be levied and assessed for waterworks purposes shall be applied by the council to the creation of the sinking fund for the payment of the indebtedness incurred for the construction and extension of waterworks and for no other purpose whatever.
> "Sec. 3960. Money collected for waterworks purposes shall be deposited weekly with the treasurer of the corporation. Money so deposited shall be kept as a separate and distinct fund. When appropriated by council, it shall be subject to the order of the director of public service. Such director shall sign all orders drawn on the treasurer of the corporation against such fund."

It seems to me to be equally obvious that if section 4371 controls, the waterworks funds may not be used for the purpose you mention. Upon that assumption the expenditure, as well as the contract, by virtue of which it is made, must be made by the director of public safety, whereas, under section 3960, waterworks moneys may only be expended upon the order of the director of public service.

Nor could council, in my judgment, alter the case by attempting to appropriate any waterworks moneys to the order of the director of public safety. I think it may safely be stated, as a general principle, that an appropriation from a fund can only be made to a purpose within the general object of the fund itself. Furthermore, council could not lawfully transfer any part of the money collected for waterworks purposes to any other fund of the city, because, under section 3799, the power to tranfer is limited to funds raised by taxation.

Even the proceeding to transfer through the agency of the common pleas court, under section 2296 et seq., General Code, would, in my judgment, not be available. There is no express check upon the power of the court to order a transfer under these sections, but it seems to me that, in the face of the unequivocal declaration of section 3960, supra, which constitutes the waterworks moneys a trust fund, a court would not authorize a transfer of any part of such moneys to any purpose not within the contemplation of the trust.

It is thus seen that the question ultimately resolves itself, from any angle of view, to that of the joint effect of sections 3961 and 4371, General Code.

Is there, then a conflict between these two sections? It must be borne in mind that every presumption is against such a conflict, and that the two will be harmonized if possible. However, I have been unable to harmonize them insofar as the matter of fire hydrants is concerned. It is true that the words used in one section is "hydrants," and that used in the other is "plugs." However, I take it that there is no doubt that these two terms are synonymous. I am, therefore, of the opinion that the two sections are in sharp conflict, and that one of them must control to the exclusion of the other.

A practical ambiguity thus arises, which may be, upon familiar principles, resolved by consideration of the legislative history of both of them. It appears that section 3961 was section 2415, Revised Statutes, and has not been amended since its original enactment. (70 O. L. page 11, section 342.) It was left undisturbed when the Municipal Code of 1902 was enacted, being indeed adopted by reference therein. It was carried into the General Code of 1910 in practically its original form.

Section 4371 was originally section 154 of the Municipal Code of 1902 and, so far as the use of the term now under discussion is concerned, it has not been since amended.

It appears, therefore, that when the Municipal Code of 1902 was adopted it contained two inconsistent sections affecting the matter of the installation of fire hydrants; but that one of these sections was simply reenacted from the previously existing law, while the other was in every respect the act of the legislature of that year. Both sections contain numerous other provisions, and it is only upon one point that they clash.

Under these circumstances I am of the opinion that section 4371, General Code, controls, to the exclusion of section 3961; and that it is the duty of the director of public safety to make contracts for the installation of fire hydrants, and to pay for the same out of the funds subject to his order. Inasmuch as the waterworks funds can, under no circumstances, be made subject to the order of the director of public safety, it follows that they may not be used for this purpose.

I may add that there are obvious reasons of policy which, while not exactly admissible in support of the view which I have taken, may properly be mentioned. In the first place, it is necessary that fire hydrants, in order to be utilized, be capable of being fitted to the fire apparatus used and managed by the department of public safety. In fact, these hydrants are essentially a part of the fire apparatus of the city and not a part of its water works.

Again, the expense of maintaining the fire department of the city and all of its proper appurtenances is one that ought to be borne by the taxpayers of the city. This is a governmental activity clearly to be distinguished from the proprietary functions of the municipality. It would not be, to say the least, fair to tax the users of water for the acquisition of apparatus intended to protect all the inhabitants of the municipality alike.

The legislation, the history of which I have described in a general way, seems to have been founded upon these reasons of policy.

I am, therefore, of the opinion that revenues resulting from the operation of a municipal waterworks plant may not be legally used to purchase fire hydrants to be installed for fire protection purposes; but that such expense must be borne by funds raised by taxation and appropriated from the safety fund for that particular purpose.

Very truly yours,
TIMOTHY S. HOGAN,
Attorney General.

JUSTICE OF THE PEACE AND CONSTABLE—FEES—DEFENSE MUST BE MADE BEFORE THEY ARE ENTITLED TO FEES FOR HEARING OF CASE.

Neither a justice of the peace nor a constable is entitled to the fee of $1.00 for sitting in the trial of a case, where no defense is made, or in a case where the person pleads guilty. There is no trial where no defense is interposed. This rule also applies to mayors of cities and villages and police judges.

COLUMBUS, OHIO, July 28, 1913.

Bureau of Inspection and Supervision of Public Offices, Department of Auditor of State, Columbus, Ohio.

GENTLEMEN:—Your communication of May 28th, is received in which you request my opinion upon the following questions:

> "1. If a prisoner is arrainged before a justice of the peace on a misdemeanor charge and pleads guilty, is the justice entitled to the fee of $1.00 for sitting in trial, as provided by section 1746, G. C.?
> "2. In such case, is a constable entitled to the fee of $1.00 for attendance at criminal trial, as provided by section 3347, G. C.?
> "3. Whether or not the same questions are applicable to the cases mentioned in section 13423?"

In answer to your first question I desire to say that section 1746, General Code, provides in part as follows:

> "* * * sitting in the trial of a case, civil or criminal, where a defense is interposed, whether tried to the justice or to a jury, one dollar."

In an opinion rendered to your department on November 27, 1911, I answered your first question and now desire to call your attention to that opinion and in addition would say that in order to properly answer your question it is necessary to decide what a trial is, and in said opinion I cited the supreme court case of Palmer vs. State, 42 O. S. 596 in which it was held that:

> "A trial is a judicial examination of the issues, whether of law or of facts, in an action or proceeding."

Under the provisions of the General Code, above quoted, specifying the fees which a justice of the peace would be entitled to, as set forth in your question, it must be in a trial where a defense is interposed, and where a prisoner arraigned pleads guilty there is no trial where a defense is interposed, and, therefore, a justice of the peace would not be entitled to the fee of $1.00 for sitting in trial as provided in section 1756, General Code.

In reply to your second question I desire to say that section 3347, General Code, provides as to the fees of a constable in part as follows:

> "For each day's attendance before a justice of the peace on criminal trial, one dollar."

Under the authority above set forth there has been no trial where a prisoner is arraigned before a justice of the peace and pleads guilty, and the constable, therefore, would not be entitled to the fee of one dollar under said section 3347, General Code.

In answer to your third question relative to the same questions being applicable to cases mentioned in section 13423, I am of the opinion that the same sections of the code apply as to the fees to which justices of the peace, police judges and mayors of cities and villages and constables serving the writs of said courts in the cases specified in said section 13423, and that the same rule would apply as in the first two cases as to whether or not the fee of one dollar should be paid to a justice of the peace, police judge, mayor of a city or village and constables for sitting in trial as set forth in the rules laid down in the answer to your first two questions, and that unless there was a defense interposed they would not be entitled to said fee of one dollar referred to in your inquiry.

Yours very truly,
TIMOTHY S. HOGAN,
Attorney General.

STATE AID COMMISSION—STATE AID TO WEAK SCHOOL DISTRICT—AMOUNT THAT MAY BE RECEIVED FROM THE STATE MAY COVER TEACHERS' INSTITUTE FEES AND ALSO PUPILS' TUITION.

A weak school district may not only receive enough money in the way of state aid to pay its required number of teachers $40.00 per month for eight months, but it may also pay teachers for attending institutes and also the tuition of high school pupils and the tuition of other pupils, if the same has been paid from the tuition fund and not from the contingent fund.

COLUMBUS, OHIO, July 22, 1913.

Bureau of Inspection and Supervision of Public Offices, Columbus, Ohio.

GENTLEMEN:—You have submitted to me my opinion of Feb. 26, 1912, to the Hon. E. M. Fullington, auditor of state, and desire to know whether or not teachers' pay for attending institutes, the tuition of high school pupils, and the tuition of other pupils may be considered in determining the amount to which a school district would be entitled under section 7595, General Code, as a "weak school district."

Section 7595, General Code, reads in part:

> "When a school district has not sufficient money to pay its teachers forty dollars per month for eight months of the year, after the board of education of such district has made a maximum legal school levy, three-fourths of which shall be for the tuition fund, then such school district may receive from the state treasurer sufficient money to make up the deficiency."

In an opinion to the Hon. E. M. Fullington, auditor of state, under date of January 17, 1912, I considered the question under the so-called Smith one per cent. law whether the auditor of state is authorized to issue his warrant for state aid provided in section 7595, General Code, and secondly, if so, what the maximum levy (three-fourths of which shall be for tuition purposes) is to qualify a school district to receive state aid. I hold therein that the so-called Smith one per cent. law did not repeal by implication the state aid law for weak school districts, and that if three-fourths of the amount raised by taxation for all local school purposes went into the tuition fund and a deficit should occur the school district would be entitled to aid from the state.

In the opinion to Mr. Fullington referred to as having been rendered on February 26, 1912, I stated the sources from which the tuition fund of a school district were received, and also the purposes for which such tuition fund could be used. As for example, for the payment of teachers for attending institutes, for the payment of tuition of high school pupils, and for the payment of tuition of other pupils. I stated in said opinion in part as follows:

> "It does not mean, as it seems to me, that the board of education cannot pay other obligations which are placed either primarily or secondarily upon the tuition fund from such tuition fund, nor does it mean that it is restricted to the payment of the minimum salary to the various teachers of the school district, but merely that the state will only pay to such school district the difference between the total amount of the tuition fund received and the amount which would have been necessary to pay its teachers the minimum salary.

In such opinion I was considering only the question of whether the board of education may use the tuition fund to pay teachers in excess of forty dollars per month and still be able to qualify for state aid. When I used the words "the state will only pay to such school district the difference between the total amount of the tuition fund received and the amount which would have been necessary to pay its teachers the minimum salary" I should have further stated that I was not considering then the question of payment of obligations other than the payment of teachers' salaries which were placed either primarily or secondarily upon the tuition fund. The payment of tuition of high school pupils (section 7751, General Code) and of the tuition of elementary pupils (sections 7735-7736, General Code) are chargeable either upon the tuition or contingent fund and the payment of teachers for attending institutes (section 7870, General Code) is in addition to the regular salary of the teacher. The payment for attending teachers' institutes is made obligatory upon the board of education from the tuition fund, and the payment of the tuition of high school pupils and elementary school pupils can be made from either the tuition or contingent fund, but if the contingent fund has not money sufficient therein with which to pay and the tuition fund has the payment would have to be made from the tuition fund.

Section 7595, General Code, simply provides that after the proper amount has been paid into the tuition fund if the school district has not then sufficient money to pay its teachers forty dollars a month for eight months the district may receive state aid. There is no provision of law that the entire amount must be used solely for the payment of teachers, and from the sections mentioned it is made obligatory upon the board of education to either primarily or secondarily pay the amounts from the tuition fund for tuition and for teachers' institutes.

I would give it as my opinion as supplementary to the opinion heretofore rendered and to explain the language in such opinion herein set out, that in order to arrive at the amount to which a weak school district would be entitled not only may the amount necessary to pay the requisite number of teachers forty dollars a month for eight months or $320.00 per annum, be deducted from the tuition fund, but also the pay of teachers for attending the institutes, and also the tuition of high school pupils and the tuition of other pupils if the same have been paid from the tuition fund and not the contingent fund.

Yours truly,
TIMOTHY S. HOGAN,
Attorney General.

SALE OF DELINQUENT LANDS—COST OF ADVERTISING SAME SHALL NOT EXCEED ONE-HALF THE TAXES AND PENALTIES THEREON.

The total amount that may be expended in advertising delinquent lands for sale, in order to collect the taxes due thereon shall not exceed on any tract, lot or part of a lot more than one-half of the taxes and penalties thereon.

COLUMBUS, OHIO, July 29, 1913.

Bureau of Inspection and Supervision of Public Offices, Columbus, Ohio.

GENTLEMEN:—I beg to acknowledge receipt of your letter of February 13, 1913, requesting my opinion on the following question:

> "Shall the provisions of section 5706, General Code, which provides that for the advertising of delinquent lands, there shall not be paid for any one tract, lot or part of lot, a greater sum than one-half the taxes and penalties thereon, be construed to mean that each newspaper in which such advertising is published may receive from each of such contracts one-half of the amount of taxes and penalties thereon, or that the aggregate sum paid to all newspapers in which such advertisement appears shall not be greater than one-half of the sum of the taxes and penalties thereon.
> "Section 5704, General Code, as amended in volume 101, page 164, Ohio laws, requires the auditor of each county to publish the list of delinquent taxes in his county weekly for two weeks between the 20th day of December and the second Tuesday in February, next ensuing, in one newspaper in the English language printed and of general circulation in the county and one newspaper of the German language, if there is such newspaper printed, published and of general circulation therein."

It is obvious that the question you propound could only arise in the county wherein a newspaper of the German language is printed, published and of general circulation, otherwise, publication would be required only in one newspaper.

Section 5706 which specifies the amounts to be paid for advertising delinquent lands is as follows:

> "The publishers of newspapers, for advertising delinquent and forfeited list of the several counties, and the notice of sale shall be entitled to receive a sum not exceeding the following rates: for the notice of sale, ten dollars; for designating the several school districts, townships, villages and cities, and the several wards in a city, fifty cents each; and for each tract of land, city or town lot, or part of lot, contained in each of such lists, thirty cents. A greater sum than one-half of the taxes and penalties, due on any tract, lot or part of lot shall not be allowed for advertising such tract, lot or part of lot. Such property shall not be published in a list, as delinquent, if the taxes and penalty thereon had been paid on or before the twentieth day of December."

The object of the advertisement and sale of delinquent lands is to collect into the county treasury the taxes due thereon.

By the provisions of section 5706, it is plain that no newspaper is to be paid more than thirty cents for advertising any one tract, lot or part of lot. I take it that it is not the intention of the legislature to cause to be expended in advertising delinquent lands, all the taxes and penalties thereon, thus leaving no part of said taxes to be paid into the county treasury, for such a policy would defeat the very purpose for which the law regulating the advertising and sale of delinquent lands was enacted.

That part of section 5706 to which you refer, is intended as a limitation upon the amounts which may be expended in advertising delinquent lands and I am of the opinion that it would be construed to mean that the total amount paid for advertising any tract, lot or part of lot, shall not exceed one-half of the taxes and penalties thereon.

Very truly yours,
TIMOTHY S. HOGAN,
Attorney General.

JUSTICE OF THE PEACE FEES—TREASURER OF CLEVELAND MAY RETAIN TEN PER CENT. OF FEES RECEIVED FROM JUSTICES OF OF THE PEACE AS HIS COMPENSATION FOR HANDLING SAME.

The treasurer of the city of Cleveland, under section 1752, is entitled to retain ten per cent. of fees received from each justice of the peace in the city, as his compensation for handling same. Such treasurer is not entitled to such per cent. on delinquent fees collected through county officers.

COLUMBUS, OHIO, July 24, 1913.

Bureau of Inspection and Supervision of Public Offices, Department of Auditor of State, Columbus, Ohio.

GENTLEMEN:—Under date of May 16, 1913, you requested my opinion as follows:

> "May the treasurer of the city of Cleveland, Ohio, legally retain the ten per cent. allowed under section 1752 of the General Code, or must he pay some into the treasury of said city as a fee 'pertaining to his office?'
> "Is said treasurer entitled to retain the percentage on such delinquent justices' fees when collected through the county offices?"

Section 1752, General Code, provides as follows:

> "Each justice of the peace mentioned in the preceding section shall collected all fees of his office as provided by law and make return and payment thereof to the city treasurer, quarterly, beginning on the first Saturday of each year. At the same time he shall make return to the city treasurer of all fees due and uncollected. Within five days after the expiration of his term of office, such justice shall make under oath, an itemized statement to the city treasurer of fees uncollected by him, and the treasurer shall collect them, retain ten per cent. of the amount collected as his compensation therefor, and account for the balance as other funds of the city coming into his hands as treasurer."

Section 4214 provides:

> "Except as otherwise provided in this title, council, by ordinance or resolution, shall determine the number of officers, clerks and employes in each department of the city government, and shall fix by ordinance or resolution their respective salaries and compensation."

Section 4213, General Code, provides as follows:

"The salary of any officer, clerk or employe shall not be increased or diminished during the term for which he was elected or appointed, and, except as otherwise provided in this title, all fees pertaining to any office shall be paid into the city treasury."

The two sections last noted were originally a part of section 126, Municipal Code, 1902 (96 O. L. 20, 61). Said section as enacted provided:

"Council shall fix the salaries of all officers * * * and, except as otherwise provided in this act, all fees pertaining to any office shall be paid into the city treasury."

Section 231 of the Municipal Code of 1902 (96 O. L. 106) provided:

"This act shall supersede all acts and parts of acts, not herein expressly repealed, which are in consistent herewith."

Section 1752 is a part of an act originally passed in 1886 (83 O. L. 168), making certain provisions as to justices of the peace in the city of Cleveland.

Giving effect to the language of section 4213, it is certain there is no provision anywhere in the "title" of which section 4213 is a part allowing a city treasurer to retain for himself fees or commissions on moneys collected by him as such and if the ten per cent. fee on moneys collected by the treasurer of the city of Cleveland under the provisions of section 1752 is to be construed as a fee pertaining to his office under section 4213, it may follow that section 1752 in so far as it authorizes such city treasurer to retain ten per cent. of the money collected by him under its provisions, must give way to the later statute, and all money so collected by him is to be paid into the treasury of the city.

"City of Cambridge vs. Smallwood, 6 C. C. (N. S.) 230, 232.
"Smallwood vs. City of Cambridge, 75 O. S. 339."

In the case of Portsmouth vs. Milstead, 28 C. C. 384 [8 C. C. (N. S.) 114]. The court held:

"The provision of 96 O. L. 61, section 126 requiring 'that all fees pertaining to any office shall be paid into the city treasury' has reference to municipal fees solely, or such fees as may be fixed by municipal authority."

If the syllabus above quoted correctly states the scope and effect of said section 126, Municipal Code (section 4213, G. C.), it follows that this section in nowise limits the operation and effect of section 1752, for the reason that the allowance to the treasurer of the city of Cleveland for making collections under its provisions is not fixed by municipal authority, but by the terms of the statute itself. The case of Portsmouth vs. Milstead, was one in which the city sought to recover of its mayor fees or costs in state cases taxed in his name and by him collected and retained; and the judgment of the circuit court denying the right of the city to recover was affirmed by the supreme court without report.

Now, whatever may have been the grounds upon which the supreme court affirmed the case of Portsmouth vs. Baucus, decided by the circuit court in the same report with the case of Portsmouth vs. Milstead, I am of the opinion that the latter case could have been affirmed only on the grounds stated by the circuit court; namely, that the mayor was entitled to have fees in state cases taxed in his name; and that for the reasons stated by the circuit court, section 126, Municipal Code (secion 4213, G. C.), did not require him to turn them into the city treasury when collected.

The construction given section 126, Municipal Code (section 4213, G. C.) seems clearly to control the question here presented and to require the conclusion that the provisions of section 1752 authorizing the treasurer of the city of Cleveland to retain a fee of ten per cent. on moneys collected under its provisions, are in nowise affected by the provisions of section 4213, and that he may still retain such fee. Possibly, the underlying reasons that might be advanced in support of the grounds taken by the circuit court in its decision in the Milstead case do not apply in their entirety to the question here presented, but on the other hand the conclusion reached on the question made in your inquiry is supported by considerations not pertinent to the circuit court case cited. As before noted, section 1752 is part of a special act applying only to the city of Cleveland, while section 4213 is a general law operating within its scope throughout the state. In the case of Fosdick vs. Village of Perrysburg, 14 O. S. 472 it was held:

> "It is an established rule in the construction of statutes that a subsequent statute, treating a subject in general terms, and not expressly contradicting the provisions of a prior act, shall not be considered as intended to affect more particular and positive provisions of the prior act, unless it be absolutely necessary to do so in order to give its words any meaning."

In its opinion in this case the court says:

> "It is against reason to suppose that the legislature, in framing a general system for the organization and ordinary government of municipal corporations, intended to repeal, wholly or in part, pre-existing special acts which had been passed in view of the supposed interests and wants of particular localities, in respect to a subject matter not connected with their organization or ordinary government."

The rule of statutory construction recognized and applied in the case just cited has been followed whenever occasion for its consideration has been found.

> "Shunk vs. Bank 22 O. S. 508, 515.
> "State vs. Newton, 26 O. S. 200, 206.
> "Commissioners vs. Board, 39 O. S. 628, 632.
> "People vs. Quigg, 59 N. Y. 83.
> "McKenna vs. Edmundstone, 91 N. Y. 231."

As pointed out by the circuit court in the Milstead case full meaning can be given to the provisions of section 4213 requiring all fees pertaining to any office to be paid into the city treasury, by confining their operation to fees strictly municipal, or such as may be fixed by municipal authority. This being true, regard for the rule of construction laid down in the case of Fosdick vs. Village of Perrysburg and other cases cited, supra, leads to the conclusion that it was not the legislative intent in the enactment of section 4213 to repeal or otherwise affect the provisions of section 1752 allowing the treasurer of this particular city to retain the fee therein provided.

I am not unmindful that the opinion of the supreme court in the case of Smallwood vs. City of Cambridge, supra, contains language that might suggest a different conclusion as to the scope of section 4213 with reference to the questions made here and in the Milstead case. But this opinion is to be read in the light of the facts of the case which presented, as the only matter for determination, the question whether or not the mayor of a city was entitled to fees in prosecutions for violations of penal ordinances of the city. The supreme court held that he was not entitled to such fees, but by force of the provisions of section 126, Municipal Code, the same were payable into the city treasury. Manifestly, this decision is consistent with the decisions in the Milstead case and with the conclusion here reached on the question presented by your inquiry; for the fees to be taxed in prosecutions for the violation of penal ordinances of a city are fixed by such municipality. (Sections 4555, 4556, G. C.) Moreover, the fact that the supreme court affirmed Milstead case after its decision in the Smallwood case is persuasive to the point that the language of the opinion in the latter case is to be confined to the precise question then before the court.

I am, therefore, of the opinion that the treasurer of the city of Cleveland is entitled to retain the ten per cent. allowed him by section 1752.

As to the second question submitted by you, I am of the opinion that the treasurer of said city is entitled to said ten per cent. allowance only on delinquent justices' fees returned or stated to him by such justice of the peace, and by him collected; and that he is not entitled to such allowance on justice of the peace fees collected through county offices.

Very truly yours,
TIMOTHY S. HOGAN,
Attorney General.

COUNTY NOT LIABLE FOR THE EXPENSES INCURRED BY SHERIFF PROTECTING PRIVATE PROPERTY—COUNTY IS LIABLE FOR EXPENSES OF SHERIFF IN SERVING WARRANTS IN ARRESTING PERSONS WHO HAVE VIOLATED THE LAWS OF OHIO.

The county is not liable for the expenses incurred by the sheriff of Lorain county and his deputies in protecting the property of a certain stone quarry company in that county.

The county is liable for the expenses of the sheriff and his deputies, including fees of his deputies, in serving warrants upon and arresting persons who have violated the laws of Ohio. The expenses of the deputies who assisted the sheriff in making arrests and serving warrants may be met either by an allowance of the county commissioners or by the court making an allowance as provided by section 2980-1, General Code.

The expenses of the sheriff for transportation, automobile hire, etc., can be paid by the county only when application is made to the common pleas court for an additional allowance and the granting of such allowance by the court.

COLUMBUS, OHIO, July 2, 1913.

Bureau of Inspection and Supervision of Public Offices, Columbus, Ohio.

GENTLEMEN:—I desire to acknowledge the receipt of your letter of June 14th, wherein you inquire as follows:

"Enclosed please find letter from C. B. Biven, sheriff, of Lorain county, under date of May 27th, copy of our reply thereto and copy of a letter from this department to the prosecuting attorney of said county, June 3, his answer thereto, dated June 4, and another letter from the sheriff dated June 11. Kindly give us your written opinion in solution of the questions herein presented."

In the letter received by your department from Hon. C. B. Biven, sheriff of Lorain county, under date of May 27, 1913, to which you refer in the above inquiry, and which you enclose therewith, it appears that on the 9th day of April, the said sheriff received a call from South Amherst, from a certain quarry or stone company, notifying the sheriff that several of the employes of said company, who were then on a strike, were interfering with the electricians and the power house of said company and that said strikers succeeded in shutting off the steam and power. The sheriff further states in said correspondence, that he, together with two deputies went to the plant of the said quarry company, but that when they arrived at the plant, everything was quiet. The correspondence further states that on the following day the quarry company again called for protection and thereupon the sheriff took the matter up with the prosecuting attorney of Lorain county. In addition to the foregoing, the sheriff states that he had warrants for the arrest of several men, one for breaking open the door to the power house, one for shutting off the air or steam, one for pointing a pistol or revolver at one of the electrician foremen and several for other charges; that the sheriff and eleven deputies arrested all the men for whom they held warrants and that all who were so arrested were found guilty except one, who was bound over to the grand jury. The sheriff and his deputies continued to go to the plant every day until the 30th of April, upon which day the strike ended.

The foregoing contains a substantial statement of the facts disclosed in the letter of the sheriff above referred to, and I desire to say that I have made quite a complete statement of the facts stated in said letter so as to herein set forth all the facts upon which your inquiry is based. The questions presented by the above statement of facts are as follows:

First. Under the above circumstances, is the county liable for the entire or any part of the expenses incurred by the sheriff and his deputies in rendering protection to the property of the said quarry or stone company during the strike?

Second. Is the county liable for the expenses of the sheriff and his deputies, including the fees of the deputies in arresting several of the strikers for violating the laws of the state of Ohio?

There is no statutory provision authorizing the sheriff to appoint deputies to protect private property as in the case of the appointment of special counsel * * * * * * * * * * * * freeholders, as provided by section 1738, General Code, which provides as follows:

"Upon the written application of three freeholders of the township in which a justice resides, he may appoint one or more electors of the township special constables, who shall guard and protect the property of such freeholders, designated in general terms in such application from all unlawful acts, and so far as necessary for that purpose, a constable so appointed shall have the same authority and be subject to the same obligations as other constables."

The general powers of a sheriff are defined in section 2833 of the General Code, as follows:

"Each sheriff shall preserve the public peace and cause all persons guilty of breach thereof, within his knowledge or view, to enter into recognizance with sureties to keep the peace and to appear at the succeeding term of the common pleas court of the proper county and commit them to jail in case of refusal. He shall return a transcript of all his proceedings with the recognizance so taken to such court and shall execute all warrants, writs and other process to him directed by proper and lawful authority. He shall attend upon the common pleas court and the circuit court during their sessions, and, when required, upon the probate court. In the execution of the duties required of him by law, the sheriff may call to his aid such person or persons or power of a county as may be necessary. Under the direction and control of the county commissioners, he shall have charge of the court house."

Section 2485 of the General Code provides that the county commissioners may allow a reasonable compensation to any person who is summoned to aid a sheriff in the execution of any writ or process in favor of the state, as follows:

"The county commissioners shall audit and allow a reasonable compensation to any person who is summoned to aid a sheriff or constable or other officer in the execution of any writ or process in favor of the state, but such compensation shall not exceed one dollar per day, and shall be allowed only upon certificate of such officer."

Although section 2830 of the General Code provides that with the approval of the judge of the court of common pleas, the sheriff may appoint in writing one or more deputies, as follows:

"The sheriff may appoint in writing one or more deputies. If such appointment is approved by a judge of the court of common pleas of the subdivision in which the county of the sheriff is situated, such approval at the time it is made, shall be endorsed on such writing by the judge. Thereupon such writing and endorsement shall be filed by the sheriff with the clerk of his county, who shall duly enter it upon the journal of such court. The clerk's fees therefore shall be paid by the sheriff. Each deputy so appointed shall be a qualified elector of such county. No justice of the peace or mayor shall be appointed such deputy."

nevertheless, if it was necessary for the purpose of performing the duties of his office, such as service of writs or warrants upon the violators of the law of this state, as in this case, then the sheriff may call to his aid such person or persons or power of the county as may be necessary, as provided by section 2833 of the General Code, supra, without the approval of the court of common pleas, as provided by section 2830 of the General Code, supra. In all probability it was necessary for the sheriff to call to his aid deputies in serving the warrants upon the violators of the law, as set forth in the above statement of facts as contained in the sheriff's letter to your department.

Therefore, it is the opinion of this department, in answer to the first question, that the county is not liable for the expenses incurred by the sheriff and his deputies in rendering protection to the property of the said stone or quarry company during the strike. In answer to the second question, it is my opinion that the county is liable for the expenses of the sheriff and his deputies, including the fees of his deputies, in serving warrants upon and in arresting parties who had violated the laws of the state of Ohio.

It is furthermore disclosed by the enclosed correspondence that there are insufficient funds in the fee fund by which to satisfy such liability, and the third question, therefore, arises as to how such liability can be satisfied.

Section 2980-1 of the General Code, provides as follows:

"The aggregate sum so fixed by the county commissioners to be expended in any year for the compensation of such deputies, assistants, bookkeepers, clerks or other employes, except court constables, shall not exceed for any county auditor's office, county treasurer's office, probate judge's office, county recorder's office, sheriff's office or office of the clerk of courts, an aggregate amount to be ascertained by computing thirty per cent. on the first two thousand dollars or fractional part thereof, forty per cent. on the next eight thousand dollars or fractional part thereof and eighty-five per cent. on all over ten thousand dollars, of the fees, costs, percentages, penalties, allowances and other perquisites collected for the use of the county in any such office for official services during the year ending September thirtieth next preceding the time of fixing such aggregate sum; provided, however, that if at any time any one of such officers require additional allowance in order to carry on the business of his office, said officer may make application to a judge of the court of common pleas, of the county wherein such officer was elected; and thereupon such judge shall hear said application and if, upon hearing the same, said judge shall find that such necessity exists, he may allow such a sum of money as he deemed necessary to pay the salary of such deputy, deputies, assistants, bookkeepers, clerks or other employes, as may be required, and thereupon the board of county commissioners shall transfer from the general county fund, to such officers' fee fund, such sum of money as may be necessary to pay said salary or salaries.

"When the term of an incumbent of any such office shall expire within the year for which an aggregate sum is to be fixed, the county commissioners at the time of fixing the same, shall designate the amount of such aggregate sum which may be expended by the incumbent and the amount aggregate sum which may be expended by his successor for the fractional parts of such year."

It is the opinion of this department that compensation to the deputies who assisted the sheriff in serving the warrants upon and in arresting the said violators of the law, can be made only in one of two ways, to wit, either by the county commissioners making a reasonable allowance as compensation to the persons who were summoned to aid the sheriff in the execution and service of said writs, in accordance with section 2485, supra, or, by the court making an additional allowance for such compensation of the deputies so incurred in the service of the warrants, as above set forth, in accordance with section 2980-1, of the General Code, supra.

It is further the opinion of this department that the expense of the sheriff for transportation, automobile hire, etc., in serving said warrants upon and in arresting said violators; can be paid by the county, only upon application to the court of common pleas for an additional allowance and the granting of such additional allowance by said court as provided by section 29801-1, General Code, supra, there not being sufficient funds in the fee fund to pay such expense, as disclosed by the correspondence attached to your inquiry.

Very truly yours,
TIMOTHY S. HOGAN,
Attorney General.

RAILROAD POLICEMAN AN OFFICER IN SOME RESPECTS—CANNOT DRAW COMPENSATION UNDER SECTION 12385, GENERAL CODE.

A railroad policeman is an officer in so far as he has power to make arrests in the discharge of his duties for the railroad company for which he was appointed, and his compensation is paid by the railroad company which employs him. A railroad policeman cannot draw compensation from the public treasury under the provisions of section 12385, General Code.

COLUMBUS, OHIO, June 30, 1913.

Bureau of Inspection and Supervision of Public Offices, Columbus, Ohio.

GENTLEMEN:—Under date of January 8, 1913, you inquire:

> "Is a railroad policeman employed under the provisions of section 9150, General Code, such an officer as may receive the fees provided by section 12385, General Code, for transporting a prisoner to a workhouse?"

You call attention to the opinion of Hon. U. G. Denmann, attorney general, as given in report for 1909, at page 222. It was held in that opinion, after quoting section 3431, Revised Statutes:

> "I am unable to find any other provision in the statute relating to fees and compensation of railroad policemen, and I am of the opinion that the only compensation or fees to which a railroad policemen is entitled is that mentioned in section 3431."

Section 3431, Revised Statutes, is now known as section 9154, General Code, and reads:

> "The compensation of such policeman shall be paid by the company for which they respectively are appointed, and at such rates as may be agreed upon by the parties."

Section 12385, General Code, to which you refer, provides:

> "The sheriff, or other officer, transporting a person to such workhouse shall have the following fees therefor: six cents per mile for himself, going and returning, and five cents per mile for transporting each convict, and five cents per mile going and coming for the services of each guard, to be allowed as in penitentiary cases, the number of miles to be computed by the usual routes of travel, to be paid in state cases out of the general revenue fund of the county on the allowance of the county commissioners, and, in cases for the violation of the ordinances of a municipality, by such municipality on the order of the council thereof."

The question arises, do the words, "or other officer" in this section, include a railroad policeman.

Railroad policemen are appointed by virtue of sections 9150, et seq., General Code.

Section 9150, General Code, provides:

"Upon the application of a company, owning or using a railroad, street railroad, suburban or interurban railroad in this state, the governor may appoint and commission such person as the company designates or as many thereof as he may deem proper, to act as policemen for and on the premises of such railroad or elsewhere, when directly in the discharge of their duties for such railroad. Policemen so appointed shall be citizens of this state and men of good character. They shall hold office for three years, unless for good cause shown, their commission is revoked by the governor, or by the railroad company, as provided by law. Not more than one such policeman shall be appointed for each five miles of a street, suburban, or interurban railroad."

Section 9150, General Code, provides:

"Before entering upon the duties of his office, each policeman so appointed shall take and subscribe an oath of office, which shall be endorsed on his commission. A certified copy of such commission, with the oath shall be recorded in the office of the clerk of the common pleas court in each county through or into which the railroad runs for which such policeman is appointed, and intended to act. Policemen so appointed and commissioned severally shall possess and exercise the powers and be subject to the liabilities of policemen of cities in the several counties in which they are authorized to act while discharging the duties for which they are appointed."

It appears from these sections that a railroad policeman is appointed by the governor and takes an oath of office. They are given the powers of policemen of cities "while discharging the duties for which they are appointed."

By virtue of section 9150, General Code, a railroad policeman is appointed "to act as policeman for and on the premises of such railroad or elsewhere, when directly in the discharge of their duties for such railroad."

Therefore, a railroad policeman is an officer in so far as he has power to arrest in the discharge of his duties for the railroad for which he was appointed. His compensation is paid by the railroad and not by the public.

He is not an officer in contemplation of section 12385, General Code, which would authorize a railroad policeman to draw compensation from the public treasury.

I, therefore, concur in the opinion of Hon. U. G. Denman.

A railroad policeman is not entitled to compensation from the public treasury under section 12385, General Code.

Respectfully,
TIMOTHY S. HOGAN,
Attorney General.

PER DIEM COMPENSATION TO BE PAID ONLY FOR DAYS SERVICE IS PERFORMED—A PERSON ACTING IN TWO CAPACITIES MUST ELECT ON WHICH PER DIEM HE WILL RECEIVE PAY.

Per diem compensation is intended to cover payment for days on which work is performed. A court constable hired at two and one-half dollars per day may receive pay only for such days as he is actually employed.

When an infirmary director acts as a court constable he may only receive his per diem in one capacity on the same day. A person acting in both capacities must elect on which per diem he will receive pay.

COLUMBUS, OHIO, August 7, 1913.

Bureau of Inspection and Supervision of Public Offices, Department of Auditor of State, Columbus, Ohio.

GENTLEMEN:—Under favor of July 30th you request my opinion as follows:

> "May court constables in counties where only one holds court be legally paid the per diem compensation fixed by section 1693 for days on which the court is not in session?
> "An infirmary director was appointed court constable and received per diem compensation as such for the same days on which he also received per diem compensation as infirmary director. What finding should be made by this department?"

The Century dictionary defined "per diem" as follows:

> "By the day; in each day; daily; used of the fees of officers when computed by the number of days of service."

This department has always followed the well settled rule that a per diem compensation is intended to cover payment for days on which work is performed.

Section 1693, General Code, has been amended slightly as it appears in 103 O. L. I quote the section, however, as it appeared prior to its change, that undoubtedly being the act under which your findings are to be made.

> "Section 1693. Each constable shall receive the compensation fixed by the judge or judges of the court making the appointment. In counties where four or more judges regularly hold court, such compensation shall not exceed twelve hundred and fifty dollars each year, in counties where more than one judge and not more than three judges hold court at the same time, not to exceed one thousand dollars each year, and in counties where one judge holds court, two and one-half dollars each day, and shall be paid monthly from the county treasury on the order of the court. Such court constable, when placed by the court in charge of the assignment of cases, may be allowed further compensation not to exceed one thousand dollars as the court by its order entered on the journal determines."

Under the act in this form and also under its present form the court constables referred to by you was to receive two and one-half dollars each day. "Each day" being but the English translation of the term "per diem," I hold in accordance with the rule universally adopted by this department and by the courts that the constable may receive his two and one-half dollars for only those days upon which he performs work required by his position. Should he be required to perform any duties when the court is not in session he, of course, would be allowed his per diem for the days on which work is performed.

Answering your second question, permit me to refer you to section 496 of Throop on public officers and section 859 of Mechem on public officers, both of which authorities uphold the rule that where the compensation is a per diem allowance, the officer cannot have such an allowance for the same day's service in each of two or more offices held by him.

It seems well settled, therefore, that he may not receive a per diem on the same day for work in both the capacity of court constables and in the capacity of infirmary director. It is equally well settled, however, that the law disregards fractions of a day, and an individual is entitled to his per diem in one or the other of these capacities where he has substantially performed the duties of the position. An individual who is acting in both capacities must be required to elect which of the per diem he will retain, and a finding should be made against him for the other if he has received both.

Yours very truly,
TIMOTHY S. HOGAN,
Attorney General.

TAXES AND TAXATION—CONTRACTS PAYABLE FROM PROCEEDS OF BOND SALES—OBLIGATIONS AGAINST WATERWORKS FUND PRODUCED BY OPERATION OF THE PLANT.

1. Contracts payable from the proceeds of bonds sold for a specific purpose must be certified to by the city auditor before the same become a legal charge against said fund, but in the present state of the law such contracts are an equitable obligation of the city, payable from said fund in the sense that if the department having charge of the work approves a final estimate, and the city auditor is willing to issue his warrant thereon the city solicitor, or a taxpayer in his stead, cannot successfully enjoin the payment of the money.

2. Contracts payable from the waterworks fund arising from the revenue produced by the operation of the plant need not be certified to by the city auditor in order to become valid and enforceable obligations against said fund.

COLUMBUS, OHIO, July 15, 1913.

Bureau of Inspection and Supervision of Public Offices, Department of Auditor of State, Columbus, Ohio.

GENTLEMEN:—In your letter of May 28th, receipt whereof is acknowledged, you request my opinion upon the following questions:

> "Must contracts payable from the proceeds of bonds sold for a specific purpose be certified to by the city auditor before the same becomes a legal charge against said fund?
> "Must contracts payable from waterworks fund arising from the revenue produced by the operation of the plant be certified to by the city auditor in order to become valid and enforceable obligations against said fund?"

These questions obviously concern municipal corporations, as such, and involve, therefore, the interpretation of sections 3806, 3807, 3809 and 3810 of the General Code, which I quote in full:

"Section 3806. No contract, agreement or other obligation involving the expenditure of money shall be entered into, nor shall any ordinance, resolution or order for the expenditure of money, be passed by the council or by any board or officer of a municipal corporation, unless the auditor or clerk thereof, first certifies to council or to the proper board, as the case may be, that the money required for such contract, agreement or other obligation, or to pay such appropriation or expenditure, is in the treasury to the credit of the fund from which it is to be drawn, and not appropriated for any other purpose, which certificate shall be filed and immediately recorded. The sum so certified shall not thereafter be considered unappropriated until the corporation is discharged from the contract, agreement or obligation, or so long as the ordinance, resolution or order is in force.

"Section 3807. All contracts, agreements or other obligations, and all ordinances, resolutions and orders entered into or passed, contrary to the provisions of the preceding section shall be void, and no person whatever shall have any claim or demand against the corporation thereunder, nor shall the council, or a board, officer, or commissioner of any municipal corporation, waive or qualify the limits fixed by such ordinance, resolution or order, or fasten upon the corporation any liability whatever for any excess of such limits, or release any party from an exact compliance with his contract under such ordinance, resolution or order.

"Section 3808. No member of the council, board, officer or commissioner of the corporation shall have any interest in the expenditure of money on the part of the corporation other than his fixed compensation. A violation of any provision of this or the preceding two sections shall disqualify the party violating it from holding any office of trust or profit in the corporation, and shall render him liable to the corporation for all sums of money or other thing he may receive contrary to the provisions of such sections, and if in office he shall be dismissed therefrom.

"Section 3809. The council of the city may authorize, and the council of a village may make, a contract with any person, firm or company for lighting the streets, alleys, lands, lanes, squares and public places in the municipal corporation, or for furnishing water to such corporation, or for the collection and disposal of garbage in such corporation, or for the leasing of the electric light plant and equipment, or the waterworks plant, or both, of any person, firm or company therein situated, for a period not exceeding ten years, and the requirement of a certificate that the necessary money is in the treasury shall not apply to such contract, and such requirement shall not apply to street improvement contracts extending for one year or more, nor to contracts made by the board of health, nor to contracts made by a village for the employment of legal counsel.

"Section 3810. Money to be derived from lawfully authorized bonds or notes and in process of delivery, shall for the purpose of the certificate that money for the specific purpose is in the treasury, be deemed in the treasury and in the appropriate fund."

These statutes seem to me to be perfectly clear on their face, but their application has become doubtful by reason of three seemingly inconsistent decisions of the supreme court, viz.: Emmert vs. Elyria, 74 O. S., 185; Carthage vs Deik-meier, 79 O. S., 323 and Akron vs. Dobson, 81 O. S., 66, and similar decisions of lower courts, in Bridge Co. vs. Toledo, 10 C. C. n. s. 137, and Conneaut vs. Strauss, 11 N. P. n. s. 277. As both the latter decisions, however, were rendered solely upon the authority of Emmert vs. Elyria, supra, it will be sufficient to discuss the three decisions of the supreme court to which I have referred.

As the supreme court is required by its rule to state its conclusions of law in the syllabi of its decisions, I shall first quote the head notes of each one of these three cases insofar as they relate to this question:

"2. Sections 45 and 45a of the Municipal Code (1526-205 and 1536-205a, Revised Statutes, Bates 5th ed.) providing in substance that no contract involving the expenditure of money shall be entered into unless the auditor of the corporation shall first certify to council that the money required for the contract is in the treasury to the credit of the fund from which it is to be drawn and not appropriated for any other purpose, and that a contract entered into contrary to such provision shall be void and that the money to be derived from lawfully authorized bonds or notes sold and in process of delivery shall be deemed in the treasury and in the appropriate fund, do not apply to contracts for street improvements, when bonds have been authorized by the municipality to be issued to pay the entire estimated cost and expense of the improvement. Emmert vs. Elyria, 74 O. S. 185.

"1 Where a municipal corporation, by sale of its bonds, creates a fund for the improving of certain streets, and takes the necessary steps to receive and accept bids and to contract separately for the improvement of each of said streets, the following certificate filed by the clerk of the corporation at the time the bid is accepted and contract executed, to wit: 'I hereby certify that there is money in the village treasury in the fund from which the above fund is proposed to be drawn for payment of the village portion of the improvement and not appropriated for any other purpose sufficient to pay for the same. L. Hall, village clerk,' is not in compliance with section 2702 (old number), Revised Statutes, in that it is not certified that a special sum of money required for the contract to improve the street 'is in the treasury to the credit of the fund from which it is to be drawn, and not appropriated for any other purpose.'

"2. Where the above defect in the certificate is discovered before the execution of the contract, and the clerk of the corporation, in the presence of the municipal council and with its knowledge and consent, amends the certificate by inserting therein, although in figures, the sum of money required for the tract and the certificate so amended is filed and recorded as required by said section, and the contract then executed, said certificate is a limitation on the amount to be paid on the contract for that street, beyond which the corporation is not liable to the contractor. Carthage vs. Deikeimer, 79 O. S. 323.

"3. Section 1536-205, Revised Statutes, providing that no contract, agreement or other obligation involving the expenditure of money shall be entered into, nor shall any ordinance, resolution or other order for the expenditure of money, be passed by the council or by any board or officer of the municipal corporation, unless the auditor of the corporation shall first certify to the council that the money required for the contract, agreement or other obligation, or to pay the appropriation or expenditure, is in the treasury to the credit of the fund from which it is to be drawn and not appropriated for any other purpose does not apply to an ordinance ap-propriationg the money obtained by council, from a sale of bonds made by it, to the purpose for which the bonds were sold. Akron vs. Dobson, 81 O. S. 66."

As I have already remarked, the three decisions, the law determined in which is supposed to be incorporated in the above quoted syllabi, seem at first blush, to be inconsistent.

In Emmert vs. Elyria, supra, the supreme court, lays down the broad proposition that money to be derived from the sale of bonds may be expended, and contracts let for this purpose, without the issuance of the auditor's certificate. The statement is simply made that sections 45 and 45a of the municipal code of 1902, now embodied in the General Code sections above quoted, does not apply to contracts expending the proceeds of a bond issue for specific purposes. Yet in Carthage vs. Deikmeier, supra, it appears on the face of the syllabus that the court had before it a case of this very sort, i. e., the expenditure, under contract, of the proceeds of an issue of bonds for a specific purpose. It was held by necessary inference that the issuance of the certificate was required, because the recovery of the contractor was limited to the amount certified to.

In Akron vs. Dobson, supra, the holding, so far as the syllabus discloses, was to the effect that the provisions now under consideration do not apply to an ordinance appropriating the proceeds of a bond issue for a specific purpose to one or more detailed purposes. Of course the distinction between the question as to whether or not the certificate must be issued as a prerequisite to the passage of such an appropriation ordinance, and the question as to whether or not its issuance is required before a contract is entered into, is perfectly obvious (although as I shall hereafter point out this distinction does not seem to have been clearly in the mind of the court in deciding the Dobson case).

So far, however, as the syllabus in the Dobson case is concerned it does not amount to a reversal of the court's position as indicated by the syllabus in the Deikmeier case; because the earlier case dealt with the contract and the later case with the appropriation ordinance.

On the face of the respective syllabi, the Deikmeier decision seems to be wholly inconsistent with the Emmert case. I would be unwilling, however, to state that the one case amounted to a reversal of the other upon such an inference as may be drawn from the syllabi. It is obvious, therefore, that in order to determine precisely what was decided in the Emmert case and in the Diekmeier case respectively recourse must be had to sources of information other than the syllabi.

In the effort to ascertain precisely what has been decided by the supreme court in these cases I have turned, first to the facts as stated in the respective reports.

In Emmert vs. Elyria, supra, the circuit court made a findings of fact which appear at pages 188-9. I shall quote sufficiently from these findings of fact to illustrate their bearing upon the question now under consideration:

"That * * *the certificate of the auditor of said city, that the money necessary for said improvement was in the treasury to the credit of the proper fund and unappropriated for any other purpose was filed with the clerk of the council and also in the office of the board of public service of said city * * * immediately before said contract was let, and not before that time, and that on the day of said filing * * * all proceedings of council with respect to said improvement had already been had * * *.

"III. At the time said certificate was filed there was no cash in the proper fund and unappropriated in said treasury for said improvement, but bonds of said city wherewith to provide such cash had been duly authorized. Said bonds had not been sold nor were there any notes of said city then sold and in process of delivery, and said facts were all well known to all the defendants; who, however, in good faith, and pursuant to the advice of the solicitor of said city, proceeded with said improvement * * *."

It further appeared (pages 186-187 of the report) that there was a single improvement involved which was to be paid for partly by assessment upon abutting property and partly by general tax levy, and that the city's portion was provided for by the issue of bonds referred to in the circuit court's finding of fact. It still further appeared that the contract had been fully performed and that the city officials were willing to pay it, so that the city itself was not resisting the claim of the contractor. The action was in form of a taxpayer's action to enjoin the proposed payment.

The foregoing statement of facts will be sufficient to illustrate the case before the court in Emmert vs. Elyria.

In the case of Carthage vs. Deikmeier, supra, the action was quite different from that in Emmert vs. Elyria in that the village was there resisting payment to the contractor. In other words, the forum was a court of law and not a court of equity as in the Emmert case. The village defended solely on the ground of the Burns law, and, the case having been submitted to a jury, a special verdict was returned which is found on page 325 of the report, and which incorporates the following facts:

"No. 2. The defendant prior to June 7, 1900, took the necessary action for the issuing of bonds of the village in the sum of $40,000 for the improvement of the streets, which said action resulted in the creation of a fund in the treasury of said village on June 7, 1900, amounting to $40,480. Said fund of $40,480 was on August 10, 1900, and up to and including the date of the filing of the petition in this case on February 21, 1903, the only fund in the treasury of the said village raised for the purposes and available for the payment of any portion of the street improvements in said village.

"No. 3. Between April 9, 1900, and August 10, 1900, the council * * * took the necessary action and passed the necessary proceedings for the improvement of eighteen streets of the village. * * * It was provided in the proceedings for such improvement that the cost of the cement curb and gutters in each instance should be assessed against the abutting property owners.

"No. 4. Between the ninth day of April, 1900, and the tenth day of August, 1900, the council * * * took the necessary steps * * * to improve Linden street * * *.

"No. 5. On Tuesday evening, August 7, the council passed eighteen resolutions awarding the various street improvements to the lowest bidder in each instance, and among others was the resolution awarding the contract for the improvement of Linden avenue to the plaintiff, * * *. None of said resolutions including the Linden avenue resolution, had any certificate attached thereto * * *.

* * * * *

"No. 7. On Friday night, August 10, a special meeting of the council of defendant village was held, at which time the action of the council on Tuesday night, August 7, * * * was rescinded. Eignteen new resolutions to contract were presented. (Here follows a copy of the resolution awarding the plaintiff Diekmeier the contract for Linden avenue, to which is attached in the general form the certificate of the village clerk.)

"(The 8th special verdict is to the effect that the certificate as first executed was corrected by inserting a specific amount as being the amount for the Linden avenue improvement.)"

It was further found that the principal contract was entered into for the amount covered by the certificate, and that subsequently a supplementary contract was entered into in all respects in the manner provided by the statute, excepting that no certificate was issued in connection with such supplementary contract. It was also found that the work was performed in accordance with the plans and specifications, and that the city engineer made a final estimate in favor of the contractor for an amount greatly in excess of the amount certified to.

The common pleas court had rendered judgment for the plaintiff on this contract and the circuit court on error modified the judgment so as to allow recovery upon the principal contract and in the amount certified to, but so as to exclude compensation for the work done and material furnished under the supplementary contract.

With these facts in mind the interpretation of the syllabus in the Deikmeier case, as above quoted becomes very clear. I will first point out the particulars in which the Emmert case and the Deikmeier case are similar to each other. They are as follows:

1. In both cases there was an issue of bonds to pay for the entire cost and expense of the improvement; and in both cases the bonds were to be met partly by special assessments and partly by the general tax levies of the corporation.

2. In both cases the contractor had fully performed his contract at the time the suit was instituted.

3. In both cases the question was as to the necessity of the issuance of the certificate as a condition precedent to the making of a valid contract; no question being made as to the necessity of such action as a condition precedent to the passage of an ordinance providing for the issuance of bonds or appropriating the proceeds of such bonds when issued.

On the other hand there are certain points of dissimilarity between the two cases as follows:

1. The Emmert case was a taxpayer's injunction suit, the object of which was to restrain the city officers from paying from the city treasury the amount claimed by the contractor and conceded to be due him by the city authorities, in the Dickmeier case the village authorities refused to pay the contractor the amount of his final estimate and he brought suit at law to compel payment.

2. In the Emmert case was involved, apparently a single improvement, although evidently there were, or must have been two issues of bonds, one to pay the city's portion and the other in anticipation of the special assessment. This appears, however, only by inference. In the Deikmeier case, on the other hand, there were eighteen street improvements, all of which were to be paid for out of one or two issues of bonds.

3. In the Emmert case a certificate had been actually issued before the contract was entered into, but its recitals were false in that there was actually no money in the treasury, and the bonds, though authorized, were not sold and in process of delivery. Nevertheless, the contractor, though cognizant of the actual facts, claimed the protection of the certificate and the opinion of the city solicitor as to the legality of the proceeding. This claim was set up as a defense in a suit in equity and not as a part of a cause of action in a suit at law.

In the Deikmeier case there was also a certificate which had not been issued until the contract was about to be awarded. This certificate was held to be valid and to render the part of the contract covered by it enforceable. There was no certificate at all, however, upon the supplementary contract entered into subsequently between the parties. The lack of this certificate was held to be fatal to the claim of the contractor for work done and materials furnished under the supplementary contract, although the village had received the benefits of such work and material.

These points of similarity and distinction suggest the possibility of reconciling the two cases on more than one ground. In order, however, that this possibility may be further weighed it is necessary, in my judgment, to have regard to the opinion in each case. That in the Emmert case was delivered by Summers, J. He first traces the legislative history of the so-called Burns law and cites the leading case of Lancaster vs. Miller, 58 O. S. 558; Bridge Co. vs. Campbell, 60 O. S. 410; Comstock vs. Nelsonville, 61 O. S. 288 and Wellston vs. Morgan 65 O. S. 219. Then in the course of the opinion comes an observation which seems to attach some importance to the form of the particular action which is in the following language:

> "But, because a municipality is not legally liable to pay for a public improvement, it does not follow that it is not under a moral obligation to do so or that a court because it will not enforce payment will enjoin it. The contract for paving this street is not ultra vires. If invalid it is so merely because the contract was made before the bonds to provide the money to pay for it were sold. Now that the work has been done in accordance with the contract and the bonds have been sold and the money to pay for it is in the treasury, it is right that it should be paid for and a court of equity ought not, unless its failure to do so would defeat the purpose of the law, prevent the municipality from doing what equity and fair dealing would exact from an individual."

It will be observed that the judge who wrote the opinion was not unmindful of the peculiar nature of the case before him. The principle which he suggests is analogous to that announced in Fronizer vs. State, 77 O. S. 7. In its particular application it is that a court of equity will not enjoin the payment of a technically void obligation, where to do so would result in an unjust enrichment.

This portion of the opinion, then, does seem to lay some stress upon the difference between the two cases already pointed out, which grows out of the fact that one is a suit in equity and the other an action at law. However, the judge who wrote the opinion in the Emmert case did not reach his conclusion upon the ground just discussed, but upon the reasons stated in the syllabus which has already been quoted. The language of the opinion on this point is as follows:

> "But in the view taken of the statutes a disposition of the case upon these considerations is not necessary.
> "In Comstock vs. The Incorporated Village of Nelsonville, supra, it is held that, in the absence of an exception, section 2702 applied to so much of the cost of the street improvement as was to be paid by the city out of a levy and that it did not apply to so much as was to be paid by special assessment, for the reason that the payment that was to be made by the city was included in the general levy which was subject to limitation. As the general law then was, the city was not authorized to provide for its part by a levy extending over a number of years and by bonds issued in anticipation of the collection of the levy. Section 51 of the code provides that bonds may be issued in anticipation of the collection of assessments and that the assessment may be payable in one to ten installments, and section 53 provides that any city or village is authorized to issue and sell its bonds as other bonds are sold to pay the corporation's part of any improvement and may levy taxes in addition to all other taxes authorized by law to pay such bonds and the interest thereon, and in section 95 it is provided that municipalities shall 'have power to issue bonds in anticipation of special assessments, and such bonds may be in sufficient amount to pay the estimated cost and expense of the improvement,' so that it would seem to follow now that a municipality may issue bonds in sufficient amount to pay the estimated cost and expense of the improvement and may levy taxes in addition to all other taxes authorized by law, to pay the bonds issued and sold to pay its part of the cost of the improvement, that sections 45 and 45a do not apply to improvements for which the city has authorized bonds to be issued to pay the entire estimated cost and expense.

"Having found that these sections are not applicable, their interpretation is not necessary."

It is easy to follow Judge Summers' reasoning here if certain qualifications are read into his language. He proceeds on the premise that the object of the Burns law is to prevent the incurring of floating indebtedness beyond the ability of the corporation to pay out of its current levies. He then reaches the conclusion quite easily that, when prior to the making of a contract a funded indebtedness has already been authorized to be created and funds thus provided, for the specific purpose, the statute, founded as it is upon such a public policy, has no application.

How this conclusion could have been reached in the face of what was section 45a, M. C., and is now section 3810, G. C., above quoted, I have been unable to apprehend. It seems very clear to me that whatever the court may have deemed to be the policy of the statute, the legislature evidently did not regard that policy as being one, the necessity for which ceased to exist when bonds had been authorized or issued. To say that section 45a, M. C., now section 3810 does not apply when bonds have been authorized or issued to pay the corporation's part of the improvement as is explicitly stated in the syllabus of Emmert vs. Elyria, is to say that the section means nothing. If it does not apply when bonds are lawfully authorized and issued, it does not apply at all. This may be merely a use of unfortunate terminology. It will be observed that section 3810 is capable of two meanings which can be easily seen in the section by reading it in two different ways, thus; (1) "money to be derived from lawfully authorized bonds, or (from) notes sold and in process of delivery, shall, etc." (2) "money to be derived from lawfully authorized bonds or notes (when bonds or notes are) sold and in process of delivery shall, etc."

Now, in the Emmert case, as it will be apparent from consulting the statement of facts as I have abstracted them, a certificate had actually been issued before the contract was entered into and after the bonds had been authorized, but before they were sold and in process of delivery. The court below had mooted the question as to the proper construction of the statute. See 6 circuit court (N. S..) 381.

If the court really meant, then, to hold upon this question, which was directly involved in the case, that a certificate may be lawfully issued against an issue of bonds which has been authorized, before the bonds are actually sold and in process of delivery, the court's judgment would have been that which was actually rendered, it would have decided a point which was directly raised in the case, and the decision would be less difficult to reconcile with the plain provisions of section 3810, General Code, then section 45a, M. C.

I feel that I would be unwarranted, however, in taking such liberties with the language which the court has actually used, both in the syllabus and in the opinion. The court lays down the broad principle that sections 45 and 45a, M. C., do not apply when a municipality has authorized its bonds to be issued and there is thus in potential existence a fund from which the improvement can be paid for, so that the danger of exceeding limited revenues in any one year, and thus incurring a floating indebtedness is obviated. That the court in so doing, and in thus applying to the application of the statute the maxim cessat ratio, cessat ipso lex, ignores a plain and unequivocal legislative declaration which is inconsistent with the assumed policy of the law, is unfortunate and puzzling, but it does not explain a way this express language in the syllabus and in the opinion.

In passing, it might be remarked that it is difficult also to understand why the reason of the statute fails when bonds have been authorized to be issued for a specific improvement any more than it would fail when the design was to meet the corporation's portion of the cost of the improvement out of current levies under rate limitations. It would be just as possible for a floating indebtedness to be incurred when bonds have been issued in the absence of statutes like those under discussion by simply making the contract to call for the expenditure of an amount greater than the proceeds of the bonds when sold; just as it would be possible, as the court points out, for the floating indebtedness to be incurred by making a contract to be discharged out of general levies subject to limitation. It will be observed also, in passing, that while it is true in point of fact, that the bond issue involved in the Emmert case was for the purpose of making a single improvement, this fact is nowhere commented upon by the judge who delivered the opinion, nor by the court in the syllabus. When I speak of a single improvement in this connection, I mean that the entire issue of bonds was to be expended in paying a single contractor, yet, as will be seen it is possible to distinguish this case from the Deikmeier case on this ground.

In conclusion, then, as to the Emmert case, it may be stated that it might have been decided on the ground that it was a taxpayer's injunction suit and not an action on a contract or for work and labor; it might have been decided on the ground that a single contract was to be discharged by payment out of the proceeds of a single issue of bonds, or rather two issues of bonds, one for the city's portion, and one for that of the assessed property; it might have been decided on the interpretation of section 3810, and by holding that the word "or" as therein used is completely disjunctive, but it was not decided upon any of these grounds, but upon the announced ground that the sections to which your question relates do not apply at all to any step in the making of an improvement for which bonds have been issued—whether the suit it at law or in equity, and whether the proceeds of the bonds are to be expended under one contract or several.

The opinion in the Deikmeier case was written by Price, J. He first notices the fact that at the time the contract was entered into with Deikmeier the money derived from the sale of the bonds intended to provide for his contract and the seventeen other contracts involved was actually in the treasury. It seems pertinent for me here to remark that if the money was actually in the treasury and it had been provided by a sale of bonds, then on the theory of Emmert vs. Elyria, the danger of incurring a floating indebtedness was past and the statute would have to be held totally inapplicable. This, however, was not the conclusion of the court as expressed in the syllabus, nor did Judge Price employ any such reasoning. He proceeds to construe the statute, making use of the unmistakable terms found on its face, and reached the conclusion that on the facts as I have already abstracted them, the original certificate was not sufficient but the amended certificate as corrected by the clerk was proper. Then follows language, by the use of which, it is possible to distinguish the Deikmeier case from the Emmert case, which is as follows:

> "But we are dealing with the meaning of the section requiring the certificate. After the words of prohibition and the duty of filing and recording the certificate, and their effect, it provided: 'and the sum so certified shall not thereafter be considered unappropriated until the corporation is discharged from the contract, agreement or obligation, or so long as the ordinance, resolution or order is in force; and all contracts agreements or other obligations, and all ordinances, resolutions and orders entered into or passed, contrary to the provisions of this section shall be void.'

"Whatever may be the correct view as to the meaning of this statute where a single contract is let, it seems to be a reasonable construction that there be a definite sum certified for each contract where there are several of the same species entered into at the same time to be paid from a theretofore gross fund. It would seem conducive, if not necessary to the safety of each contractor, that a definite sum be certified, because it is on the performance of that act by the village clerk that money to discharge the obligation is set apart and appropriated, and which 'shall not thereafter be considered unappropriated, etc.' The two branches of the section must be construed together and when so construed, the entire section given its proper operation. Governed by this rule, we cannot say that the original certificate in question was drawn in compliance with said statute, and while in case of a single contract in contemplation, to be satisfied from a single fund, such a certificate might be sufficient, (but we do not so decide), it is quite clear to us that when the statute is to be applied to the subject-matter where several different streets are to be improved for which purpose separate contracts are let on different separate bids, the certificate should contain a specified sum set apart for each of such contracts."

Holding that the certificate, as corrected, was valid as to the principal contract Judge Price then proceeds to discuss the claim of the contractor under the supplementary agreement. After discussing other phases of the question makes use of the following language on page 345:

"Moreover, it was not within the power of the council or the village engineer to increase the liability of the corporation beyond the amount for which the certificate had been filed and thereby nullify section 2792. That would be striking down rather than obeying the statute. No mere final estimate of the engineer, no matter if it is correct in its terms, can increase the corporate liability, neither did the acceptance of the work by the public authorities accomplish that result. If the contractor found that he was deceived by the estimate as to quantities and work, and that the improvement could not be made on such terms, he should have acted promptly and had legal and proper action taken to relieve the dilemma rather than blindly or willingly, expecting that the law and action of council would be relaxed so he could get full compensation by putting another and unexpected burden upon the taxpayers."

On this point he cites Bridge Co. vs. Campbell, supra, Comstock vs. Nelsonville, supra and Wellston vs. Morgan, supra. Thereupon he makes use of the following language:

"If there was anything left in doubt or obscure in the former cases, it surely has been made plain and emphasized in the latter case. There are other decisions, but these are sufficient to establish the law of this jurisdiction. It seems to us that the present is a proper case for the application of the doctrine of the above cases. To hold otherwise would put it in the power of a contractor to exhaust the people's money on a few streets, and leave the others wholly unimproved."

Can the Deikmeier case be distinguished from the Emmert case on the ground that several improvements instead of one improvement were involved therein, as already suggested?

Certainly there is this difference between the two cases, yet when Judge Price is discussing the interpretation of the statute and speaking of the case of a single contract to be satisfied from a single fund, he is discussing the form of the certificate required in such case, and not the question whether any certificate is required at all or not. Certainly it seems never to have occurred to Judge Price in spite of the decision Emmert vs. Elyria, in which he concurred, that no certificate would be required in the case of a single improvement to be paid for out of a single issue of bonds. One would suppose that in discussing the prior case decided under the section, reference would have been made to Emmert vs. Elyria; but while other cases are cited no mention is made of that decision in the opinion in the Deikmeier case.

I conclude, then, that while it is possible to distinguish the two cases upon the ground just discussed, the court certainly does not so distinguish them, but the unanimous court in each case has reached its conclusion upon grounds which, as announced, are quite inconsistent with each other.

If the distinction be drawn along lines other than those expressed by the court itself, then it is fair and reasonable to distinguish the two cases upon either of the two grounds already suggested, viz.: that the Emmert case was a taxpayer's injunction suit, while the Deikmeier case was an action at law; and that in the Emmert case, the certificate, as issued, may have been proper because the bonds had actually been authorized though not sold and in process of delivery; while in the Deikmeier case there had been no certificate whatever issued as to the supplementary contract.

As between these two cases then, I can only say that the Deikmeier case certainly limits the doctrine of the Emmert case; to the extent that it limits it, it must be regarded as falsifying the declaration that the Burns law "does not apply" to cases where the corporation has provided for the total cost of the improvement or contract by authorizing the issuance of bonds. Whether or not the latter case reverses the earlier case in its entirety might be an open question, were it not for the later decision in Akron vs. Dobson, supra, to which I am about to refer. If the question were an open one I might say, in passing, that I should certainly prefer the doctrine in the Deikmeier case to that of the Emmert case for reason which I have already pointed out.

I come now to a discussion of the Dobson case and its relation to the two decisions already discussed in detail. The syllabus has already been quoted. The facts are not abstracted by the reporter but are stated in the opinion of the court, which was rendered by Judge Summers, who also wrote the opinion in the Emmert case. I quote sufficiently from the opinion to show what the facts were:

> "In March, 1908, the council of the city of Akron passed an ordinance providing for a bond issue of thirty thousand dollars, for the purpose 'of purchasing real estate for public purposes, to wit, for erecting thereon and equipping a building necessary for the fire department, and for purchasing a fire engine, and for improving and equipping fire stations 2, 3, 5 and 7, all of said fire stations being buildings used for public purposes, to wit, for the fire department of said city.'"

I pause here to remark that this bond issue was like that in the Deikmeier case, and unlike that in the Emmert case in that it was for several distinct purposes, and not for the purpose of meeting the expense of a single improvement. The funds produced thereby were to be used for the following distinct and separate objects: 1. purchasing real estate; 2. erecting a fire department building; 3. equipping a fire department building with miscellaneous apparatus; 4. purchasing a fire engine; 5. improving and equipping fire stations other than that to be erected on the real estate to be purchased. There were four separate stations to be equipped, just as there were eighteen streets to be improved in the Deikmeier case. The case, therefore, was directly on all fours, so far as this question is concerned, with the Deikmeier case, and if the Deikmeier case is to be distinguished from the Emmert case on the ground of plurality of improvements, then by a parity of reasoning the Dobson case might be distinguished from the Emmert case and likened to the Deikmeier case.

Judge Summers proceeds in the Dobson case to state the facts as follows:

> "Prior to the 6th day of April, 1908, the bonds were duly issued and sold, and the proceeds paid into the treasury of the city. Upon the 6th day of April, 1908, the council passed an ordinance authorizing and empowering the directors of public safety to expend the sum of thirty thousand dollars, realized from the sale of said bonds, for the purpose stated in the first mentioned ordinance. The last mentioned ordinance further authorized the directors to enter into contracts 'with the lowest and best bidder,' after advertisment according to law."

Various steps are then recited showing the acceptance of a bid from a certain motor fire apparatus company for furnishing a part of the equipment to be purchased out of the proceeds of the bond issue. In the course of these recitals, the statement is made that the defendant in error, the plaintiff below, was a taxpayer who had requested the city solicitor to enjoin the payment of any money to the motor fire apparatus company, and the solicitor failing to sue, the plaintiff brought suit in his own name, as provided by statute, to enjoin such payment.

In this respect, then, the case is like the Emmert case and unlike the Deikmeier case. That is to say, Dobson, like Emmert, was a taxpayer seeking to enjoin the payment of funds under a contract executed without a certificate having been issued, and was not like Deikmeier, who was a contractor seeking to recover from the municipal authorities, who were themselves resisting his claim. The statement is then made in the course of the opinion that:

> "It is contended, first, that the city council neither authorized nor approved the contract; second, that the city auditor did not certify to the council that the money was in the city treasury to meet the contract, and third, that the Municipal Code does not authorize the issuing of bonds for the purchase of such apparatus."

Speaking, at the end of the opinion, of the contention which is of interest in conection with your question, Judge Summers says:

> "It is also contended that the contract is void because the auditor did not certify to the council that the money required for the contract was in the city treasury as prescribed by section 1536-205, Revised Statutes. The supplemental petition avers that the auditor did not so certify. This is denied by the answer in the circuit court, and that court does not make any finding upon that issue. This contract cannot create an obligation against the city in the nature of a debt, to meet which no funds have been provided. The council issued and sold the bonds and appropriated the proceeds to meet the expenditure it authorized, and any obligations incurred by the ordinance, under the authority conferred are payable only out of the appropriations, so that the section can have no application to such a case."

This confused language leaves the question more in doubt than ever. In the same paragraph Judge Summers speaks of the inapplicability of the Burns law to the ordinance appropriating the proceeds of the bonds, and states facts which show that the only question which could have been involved was the applicability of the statute to the contract. This confusion of ideas is carried into the syllabus, which speaks of the ordinance and says nothing whatever about the act of the directors of public service in entering into the contract as affected by the absence of a certificate.

Yet, although both the opinion and the syllabus speak of the ordinance, it is apparent that the court's judgment must have been predicated upon the assumption that the certificate was not required as a condition precedent to the making of the contract, for it appears that whether or not there was any certificate issued before the contract was entered into did not appear in the record, no finding of fact having been made thereon by the circuit court. If the supreme court had regarded that as a material fact it would not have given judgment for plaintiff in error as it did, but would have remanded the case to the circuit court for further proceedings. Therefore, by rendering final judgment, the supreme court, in effect, decided that the total lack of a certificate is not a fatal defect. The same language is used here as was used in the Emmert case, viz., that the section "can have no application to such a case."

The dilemma presented, then, is as follows; in the Emmert case the court declared that where payment for a single improvement, under a single contract was to be made from a single issue of bonds, the Burns law did not apply at all, although a certificate had been issued after the bonds were authorized, and before the contract was entered into, but before the bonds were sold and in process of delivery; in the Deikmeier case the court held that the issuance of the certificate was necessary and that, therefore, the statute did apply in a case where no certificate had been issued and there were several improvements to be made under different contracts and to be paid out of a single bond issue.

In the Dobson case the court declared that the statute "could have no application" in a case where the record did not show whether or not a certificate had been issued, but where there were several improvements to be made under separate contracts and to be paid for out of a single bond issue, and that, therefore, the question as to whether or not the certificate had been issued was immaterial, but when the syllabus was prepared the declaration was that the statute did not apply to the "ordinance" nothing being said about the making of the contract by the directors of public service.

So far as any of the elements referred to in the foregoing discussion are concerned it is absolutely impossible to reconcile these three cases. If it be urged that the Deikmeier case is distinguishable from the Emmert case on account of the number of separate contracts involved, then it must be answered that a multiplicity of contracts was also involved in the Dobson case, although a conclusion opposite to that reached in the Deikmeier case was announced in the Dobson case.

If it be urged that the Dobson case cannot be regarded as inconsistent with the Deikmeier case, because the syllabus refers only to the necessity of a certificate as a prerequisite to the passage of an appropriation ordinance, it must be answered that the facts in the cases show that no certificate whatever was issued, either before the contract was entered into or before the ordinance was passed.

Now it must be borne in mind that the supreme court has never expressly reversed itself in the course of this judicial history. The opinion in the Deikmeier case does not refer to that in the Emmert case; neither does the opinion in the Dobson case refer to the Deikmeier case, nor, for that matter, to the Emmert case.

The supreme court being presumed to know what it has itself decided, I take it that an effort ought to be made to reconcile these cases so conflicting when the elements to which I have just adverted are alone taken into consideration, upon some other ground if possible. The suggested ground of distinction as between the Emmert case and the Deikmeier case, based upon the possibility of giving a certain construction to what is now section 3810, General Code, will not serve for this purpose, because in the Dobson case the court regarded the question as to whether or not any certificate had been issued at any time as perfectly immaterial.

Although Emmert vs. Elyria is not referred to in the Dobson case, it is cited in one of the briefs, and it is to be presumed from the similarity of the language used in the two opinions that in applying the rule announced in Akron vs. Dobson to the facts before the court, the court interpreted its own decision in Emmert vs. Elyria to have been based upon the total inapplicability of the section of the statutes, as it purported to be and not upon the interpretation of section 45a, M. C., now 3410, G. C.

There remains, then, but one ground of reconciliation—I refer, of course, to the fact that the Emmert and Dobson cases respectively were taxpayers' injunction suits, while the Deikmeier case was an action at law on the part of the contractor against the village. If this be regarded as a true distinction, then the cases are perfectly reconciled. Unfortunately, however, though the distinction does exist in fact it was not referred to either in the Deikmeier case or in the Dobson case, and the distinction between an action at law and a suit in equity to enjoin, while referred to in the opinion in the Emmert case, was expressly not relied upon as a ground of decision.

Whatever might be the propriety of an attempt to rely upon the distinction which I have just discussed, the distinction itself insofar as your first question is concerned is not of great practical importance. That is to say, your first question is evidently asked from the standpoint, so to speak, of the city auditor and is, first, as to whether or not he should issue a certificate in the case of a contract, payable from the proceeds of bonds issued for a specific purpose, and, second, whether or not when he is not asked to issue any such certificate and none is issued before such a contract is entered into, the auditor should issue warrants on the treasurer upon estimates furnished to such contractor?

In my opinion the auditor, in order to create a valid obligation against the city and against a particular fund produced by the sale of bonds for a specific purpose, should issue his certificate that the money required for the contract is in the treasury, etc., as provided by section 3806. Said certificate should be issued as a condition precedent to entering into the contract. It is not required as a condition precedent to the passage of the ordinance. In so deciding I have given cognizance of the case of Cincinnati vs. Holmes, 56 O. S. 104 in which, in the course of the opinion, in holding that the Burns law did not apply to special preceedings authorized by a special act, Judge Minshall expressed the view that if the issuance of a certificate is necessary at all it must take place when the council passes the ordinance determining to proceed with the street improvement. Inasmuch, however, as this holding was not necessary to a decision of the case, and inasmuch as the reasoning is clearly faulty, and inasmuch too as the decision was rendered under old statutes, I have seen fit to ignore the dictum. It is certainly the uniform practice to issue the certificate as a part of the contract, so to speak, and this practice, in my mind, is justified by a fair reading of the statutes.

If no certificate is issued before a contract, payable from the proceeds of the bonds for the specific purpose, is entered into, and the contractor upon performance receives an estimate and presents the same for the issuance of a warrant to the city auditor, in my opinion he should refuse to issue the warrant. This opinion is stated as a strict conclusion of law and ignores any equitable considerations that may enter into such a situation. The supreme court has held in State ex rel. vs. Fronizer, supra, that failure to issue a certificate, while it renders the contract technically void, and deprives the contractor of any right of recovery upon the common counts for work done and material furnished, yet the city (or in that case the county) having received and utilized the efforts of the contractor's labor and the materials which he has furnished, is under a species of moral obligation. No such doctrine will be found to be explicitly stated in the Fronizer case, but it is believed that it follows as a fair inference from the conclusion therein reached.

Nevertheless, the city auditor, whose duty it is under the statutes to scrutinize every claim presented to him for payment and to allow such claims only as constitute legal charges against the funds subject to disbursement upon his warrant, will be acting in strict accordance with his powers and duties if he should refuse to issue a warrant under the circumstances stated in your first question.

In reaching this conclusion I have followed the Deikmeier case which, as before stated, was a case wherein suit was brought against the city by the contractor, and have regarded the other two cases discussed as inapplicable.

I have already pointed out that the other two cases are cases in which a willing city auditor was sought to be enjoined from paying claims under these circumstances. These cases would perhaps be in point and would govern if the action were brought by the city solicitor, under the statutes regulating his powers and duties, for the purpose of restraining the misapplication of the public funds, for it is clear that a taxpayer, upon the refusal of the solicitor to act, succeeds to whatever cause of action the solicitor might have had if he had used on his behalf; so that if the auditor should determine to issue the warrant under the circumstances which I have imagined and the solicitor should attempt to restrain him from so doing, it is possible that the Emmert case and the Dobson case would prevent him from prevailing in such an action; but if the auditor should refuse to issue the warrant, and should stand upon his legal rights so that an action at law would have to be brought against him then apparently the principles of the Deikmeier case would control and the auditor would prevail.

The answer which I have given is one of three possible answers, which are as follows, viz.:

1. The absence of a certificate enables the city auditor to resist the contractor's claim (the theory which I have taken); 2. the absence of a certificate compels the city auditor to refuse to pay the contractor's claim, and if he undertakes to pay it he may be enjoined; 3. the absence of a certificate is of no consequence whatever when bonds have been issued for the specific purpose of the improvement for which the contract has been let, and the city auditor is neither compelled nor enabled to refuse to honor an estimate presented by the contractor under these circumstances.

The second of the two possible answers must be rejected on account of the decisions in the Emmert and Dobson cases, although these decisions, and the reasoning upon which they are based are very unsatisfactory.

The third of these answers must be rejected on account of the decision in the Deikmeier case, which, to my mind, is well and conclusively reasoned. Only by regarding the Deikmeier case as reversed by the Dobson case could this hypothesis be sustained.

I find myself, therefore, in the last analysis confronted with the necessity of deciding whether or not the Dobson case reverses the Deikmeier case, because, for reasons already pointed out the two cases cannot be distinguished except upon the first theory above laid down.

I cannot bring myself to the conclusion that the court in deciding the Dobson case intended to overrule the Deikmeier case. The two cases were decided in close temporal sequence. The same judges participated in both decisions. The Dobson case does not expressly reverse the Deikmeier case. Therefore, propriety demands that the two cases both be regarded as stating adjudicated law and that they be reconciled if possible. I have pointed out one ground of possible reconciliation. That this ground is not relied upon by the court in deciding the subsequent case is a point entitled to great weight; but as between giving this point controlling weight and giving such controlling weight to the presumption that the court did not intend to reverse itself in so short a space of time without at least expressly referring to the prior case, I have chosen the latter alternative.

I realize that the state of the law upon your first question is very unsatisfactory and confused. I feel even impelled to state that if the court should have the entire question under review again it might, on account of the conflict in decisions, ignore all three of these cases and consider the question de novo. If the questions were so considered it seems to me that the court would be obliged, in reason, to draw the distinction where I have drawn it as between injunction suits and actions at law or to reverse expressly the Emmert and Dobson decisions. I think the alternative lies between these two possible conclusions because of the express language of section 3810 which certainly, to my mind, removes the foundation from under the logic employed by the court in deciding the Emmert and Dobson cases on the grounds upon which they were said to have been decided.

Answering your first question then categorically, I am of the opinion that contracts payable from the proceeds of bonds sold for a specific purpose must be certified to by the city auditor before the same become a legal charge against said fund; but that in the present state of the law such contracts are an equitable obligation of the city, payable from said fund in the sense that if the department having charge of the work approves a final estimate, and the city auditor is willing to issue his warrant thereon the city solicitor, or a taxpayer in his stead, cannot successfully enjoin the payment of the money.

Your second question must be answered in the negative. The earliest decisions under the statutes, which were the predecessors of the present code sections, laid down the principle that because what was then section 2702, R. S., was a part of the machinery of taxation and the expenditure of money to be raised by tax levies under defined limits, it was to be given a narrow construction in the sense that its application was to be limited to contracts and other obligations payable from the proceeds of general taxation.

In Kerr vs. Bellefontaine, 58 O. S. 446, the question being as to whether or not section 2702, R. S., applied to contracts made by the trustees of gas works and payable from a fund derived from the operation of such works, Shauck J., delivering the opinion of the court, and reaching the conclusion that the section did not apply, used the following language on page 464:

> "Not only was this requirement of the statute designed to place a restriction upon the increase of municipal indebtedness but its terms are inapplicable to a contract of this character. The requirement is that the certificate must show that the money required for the contract is in the treasury to the credit of the fund and not appropriated for any other purpose. The fund from which the plaintiff is entitled to satisfaction of his demand is not raised by taxation. It is derived from the operation of the gas works and made subject to the order of the board whose authority is so limited that they can make valid contracts only for appliances and supplies for the gas works to which the fund is devoted. The fund can be appropriated to no other purpose, and the trustees can contract for no other purpose."

In Comstock vs. Nelsonville, 61 O. S., 288 the following illuminating discussion of section 2702, R. S., was indulged in by Burket, J., in delivering an opinion on the question as to whether a certificate was required as to so much of the cost and expense of a street improvement as was to be paid by assessment upon the abutting property:

"The section is general in its terms, but the object of the general assembly evidently was to compel municipalities to have the money in the treasury before appropriating or spending it. This can only apply to money raised, or to be raised, by a levy on the general tax list of the municipality. If the money is to be provided, in the first instance, by taxation, it must be collected and in the treasury before it can be appropriated or expended either by ordinance, resolution, order, contract, agreement or other obligation. If bonds are issued and sold, and the money provided in that manner, the bonds to be paid by a levy on the general tax list, money arising from the sale of such bonds must be in the treasury before it can be expended, the same as if it had been raised by taxation in the first instance.

"In all such cases said section 2702 is applicable, unless there is an exception by some other provision of the statute; and then the section is applicable to any particular case, no liability can arise as against the municipality, unless the certificate required by the section shall be first filed and recorded; and whether the same has been so filed and recorded must be ascertained by all contractors for themselves at their peril. Lancaster vs. Miller, 58 O. S. 558; McCloud and Ceigle vs. Columbus, 54 Ohio St. 439; Buchanan Bridge Co. vs. Campbell et al., 60 Ohio St. 406. A municipality is not estopped from availing itself of the provisions of this section to defeat a claim brought against it, when the section has been violated, even though the contractor has performed his work. In such cases the contract as well as what is done thereunder, is void as against the municipality.

"In cases of street improvements the course of procedure is usually about as follows: A resolution is passed by the council to the effect that it deems it necessary that a certain named street should be improved in a certain manner, the cost and expense to be assessed in whole or in part upon the property bounding and abutting thereon, or adjacent thereto. After notice and other proceedings, an ordinance is passed to the effect that the improvement be made as provided in the resolution, plans, specifications, etc. The improvement is then advertised, bids received, and a contract made for the completion of the improvement. This bid, and the contract made thereunder, for the first time enables the council to ascertain the cost and expense of the improvement. With the cost and expense thus fixed, the council at the proper time makes an assessment of the amount to be paid by the property holders upon their property, and pays the balance out of money in the treasury raised by taxation, or by sale of its bonds, the bonds to be paid by a levy on the general tax list. Some of the property owners pay their whole assessment at once, and that money is paid over to the contractor. Others fail to pay, and for the amounts of their assessments with the interest thereon, the municipality issues and sells its bonds and pays the money to the contractor and pays the bonds out of the assessments when collected.

"In such a transaction the only money which the municipality pays out of its treasury of money raised by levy on the general tax list, is so much of the cost and expense of the improvement as is not assessed against the property holders, and as to that part said section 2702 is applicable, and must be complied with in order to make the municipality liable for such part of the cost and expense.

"As to the part of the cost and expense to be assessed against the bounding, abutting or adjacent property, said section does not apply, and in the nature of the case cannot apply, because it is impossible for the council to ascertain the amount of money required, until after it knows who has paid and who has failed to pay his assessment, and by that time a large part, if not all, of the cost and expense will have been incurred.

"It does not apply for the further reasons, that by necessary implication said section has reference to money of the municipality, that is, money, raised, or ultimately to be raised, by a levy on the general tax list, and does not cover or refer to money of individuals, that is money to be raised by an assessment upon the property along the improvement. The municipality is limited and restrained by this section, as to the expenditure of its own money, but not as to the money of others. As to such assessments, it is competent for the contractor to agree to take the assessments in payment for his labor and materials, and collect the same as provided by law; and if he does so, the money never goes into the treasury, and no certificate can be filed as to the same.

"It is therefore clear, that as to the expenditure of money to be raised by such assessments, section 2702 is not applicable.

"This holding protects the treasury and the general taxpayer, and at the same time enables needed local improvements to be made without detriment to the municipality, and is in accordance with the intention of the general assembly in passing the Burns law."

The principles announced in these two decisions have become well settled and necessitate a negative answer to your second question. That is to say, contracts payable from revenues produced by the operation of a waterworks plant and which under statutes, which need not here be quoted, constitute a separate fund, subject to the disbursement of the director of public service, need not be certified to by the city auditor in order to become valid and enforceable obligations against said fund.

In passing I call attention to the first paragraph above quoted from Judge Burket's opinion and especially to the last sentence thereof which I have italicized. Comparison of this sentence with the subsequent decisions in the Emmert and Dobson cases is very interesting.

Yours very truly,
TIMOTHY S. HOGAN,
Attorney General.

AUDITOR OF STATE MAY PAY AMOUNT ASKED FOR BY BOARD OF EDUCATION TO MAKE GOOD DEFICIENCIES DURING PAST YEAR—UNDER AMENDED LAW AS SOON AS THE AMOUNT OF THE DEFICIENCY IS ANTICIPATED, THE AUDITOR OF STATE SHALL ISSUE HIS VOUCHER.

The auditor of state may legally pay upon application dated after the amendment to section 7596, General Code, became a law, the amounts asked for by boards of education, to make good deficiencies in tuition funds for the past year.

The voucher of the auditor of state, under amended section 7596, must be issued upon the fact and information disclosed by the county auditor's certificate to him for the amount of an anticipated deficiency in the tuition fund of a school district for the current year. As soon as the auditor ascertains the amount of such deficiency, he shall issue his voucher for the amount.

COLUMBUS, OHIO, August 27, 1913.

Bureau of Inspection and Supervision of Public Offices, Department of Auditor of State, Columbus, Ohio.

GENTLEMEN:—I beg to acknowledge receipt of your letter of July 28th, the urgency of the request embodied in which was appreciated. I must apologize for my failure to answer sooner, the delay being due, however, to the importance of the question involved and the pressure of business in this office.

You ask for my opinion as to the effect of the amendment of section 7596, General Code, by the last session of the general assembly. This section provides for state aid to weak school districts, and in particular defines the duty of the auditor of state respecting the payment of deficiency applications. The change in the law is such, as will hereinafter be pointed out, as to require boards of education to anticipate deficiencies for the current year instead of permitting them to wait until the year is over and to make application for deficiencies incurred during the year. In this state of the law, and having regard especially to the date when the amendment became effective, you inquire whether the auditor of state can legally pay, on application dated after the amendment became effective, the amounts asked for by boards of education to make good deficiencies in tuition funds for the past year.

You also ask for a construction of the amended section, with a view to ascertaining whether the auditor of state should draw his warrant thereunder when the application is made, or after the deficiencies anticipated have actually been created.

Section 7596 of the General Code is amended, 103 Ohio laws, 267, so as to read as follows:

> "Whenever any board of education finds that it will have such a deficit for the current school year, such board shall on the first day of October, or any time prior to the first day of January of said year, make affidavit to the county auditor, who shall send a certified statement of the facts to the state auditor. The state auditor shall issue a voucher on the state treasurer in favor of the treasurer of such school district for the amount of such deficit in the tuition fund."

The same section in the original law reads as follows:

> "A board of education having such a deficit must make affidavits to the county auditor, who shall send a certified statement of the facts to the state auditor. The state auditor shall issue a voucher on the state treasurer in favor of the treasurer of such school district for the amount of the deficit in the tuition fund."

The difference between the two sections is obvious. As already stated, the original section did not permit a board of education to make the affidavit to the county auditor until the deficit actually existed. The new section, however, permits the board, any time between the first day of October and the first day of January—that is to say, in the first half of the school year—to anticipate a probable deficiency in the tuition fund.

In this connection, however, I observe that section 7595, General Code, which is the actual operative section, remains unamended. That section provides as follows:

> "No person shall be employed to teach in any public school in Ohio for less than forty dollars a month. Where a school district has not sufficient money to pay its teachers forty dollars per month for eight months of the year, after the board of education of such district has made the maximum school levy, three-fourths of which shall be for the tuition fund, then such school district may receive from the state treasurer sufficient money to make up the deficiency."

I characterize this section as the "operative section" because it, and not section 7596, creates the right in the school district to "receive from the state treasurer sufficient money to make up the deficiency. The function of section 7596 is to provide the machinery for the exercise of this right.

So long, then, as section 7595 remains in force, it is obvious that, in the academic sense at least, school districts lacking sufficient money in any year to pay their teachers the required amount for the specified period of service, under the necessary conditions, have the right to state aid, which could not be taken away by any change in the mere machinery provided by section 7596, although it might, in a strict view of the case, be rendered practically ineffective thereby.

It must also be observed that the old act providing for state aid, and consisting of sections 7595 and 7597, inclusive, General Code, is itself practically inoperative, in whatever form it may appear, in the absence of an appropriation by the general assembly. That is to say, section 7596, either in its original or in its amended form, is not sufficient to authorize the state auditor to issue his voucher on the state treasurer unless there has been an appropriation upon which the "voucher" can be drawn.

Such appropriations have been made from time to time, and the one now in force is found in 103 Ohio laws 261, which provides as follows:

> "Be it enacted by the general assembly of the state of Ohio:
> "Section 1. That there be and is hereby appropriated from any moneys raised or coming into the state treasury for the support of the common schools and not otherwise appropriated, to assist in the maintenance of weak school districts, the balance of former appropriation and the sum of seventy-five thousand dollars which shall be distributed by the auditor of state in accordance with the provisions of the act passed April 2, 1906."

This appropriation, being one for the current expenses of a department of the state government, to wit: the department of the auditor of state, in the discharge of the duties imposed upon that department by the statutes referred to, went into immediate effect under section 1d of article 2 of the constitution, as amended. Accordingly it became effective on May 2, 1913. The legislature evidently assumed as much when it used the language "the balance of former appropriation;" because, if the effectiveness of this appropriation was postponed until ninety days after the date when the law providing therefor was filed in the office of the secretary of state, which would be August 1, 1913, there would, on that date, have been no "balance of former appropriation" subject to reappropriation, because the "former appropriation" referred to is that found in 102 Ohio laws, page 10, approved February 20, 1911, and which, under the constitution, lapsed on February 20, 1913. It might be argued that the phrase "the balance of former appropriation," as used in 103 Ohio laws, 261, is simply of no effect whatsoever, inasmuch as on the day on which the appropriation law was passed there was no such "balance," the old appropriation having lapsed.

Nevertheless, this use of language, whether or not of itself of no effect, indicates with fair certainty the legislative understanding that it was appropriating as of the date when the bill was passed and not as of a date ninety days subsequently thereto. Language which is itself void may, nevertheless, indicate the legislative intention. Friend vs. Levy, 76 Ohio State 26.

From all these considerations, I am of the opinion that the appropriation fund in 103 Ohio laws, 261, although passed on the same date on which the amendment to section 7596 was passed, was intended to relate as well to the administration of the law providing for state aid to weak school districts as it originally existed; as to the same thing under the law, changed with respect to its machinery by the amendment to section 7596.

This conclusion is further strengthened by the fact that the appropriation directs the auditor of state to distribute the moneys set aside "in accordance with the provisions of the act passed April 2, 1906," without referring to any amendments thereto. I do not hold that it would be necessary to refer to such amendments in order to permit the moneys therein appropriated to be disbursed in accordance with the law as amended. But I am clearly of the opinion that there should be understood, in connection with the phraseology used by the general assembly, the additional verbiage "and its amendments," so as to permit the auditor of state to disburse the moneys appropriated for his use in accordance with the original act, so long as that remained in force, and thereafter in accordance with the amendment thereto. In other words, I am clearly of the opinion that the appropriation does not relate exclusively to the administration of the state aid law in accordance with the exact scheme embodied in amended section 7596, but authorizes the auditor of state to distribute the moneys at his disposal under the original act as well as under the amended act.

Now, section 7596, General Code, as amended, took effect on August 1, 1913. On that date, presumably, there were numerous school districts in the state fulfilling the requirements of section 7595, General Code, as above quoted, which had not yet acted in accordance with the provisions of original section 7596. That is to say, the right to state aid existed in such school districts by virtue of the provisions of section 7595. If this right was in any way affected by the amendment to section 7596 it was made ineffective and nugatory, because of the fact that the amended section, taking effect on August 1st, no longer authorized the boards of education to make affidavits as to past deficiencies.

I am of the opinion that the amendment to section 7596 did not have the effect of terminating the right of the school district to state aid for the relief of a previously incurred deficiency.

Section 26 of the General Code provides:

> "Whenever a statute is repealed or amended, such repeal or amendment shall in no manner affect pending actions, prosecutions, or proceedings, civil or criminal, and when the repeal or amendment relates to the remedy, it shall not affect pending actions, prosecutions, or proceedings, unless so expressed, nor shall any repeal or amendment affect causes of such action, prosecution, or proceeding, existing at the time of such amendment or repeal, unless otherwise expressly provided in the amending or repealing act."

Now, because section 7595 remained in force on August 1, 1913, a board of education of a school district answering the description therein contained possessed on that date a right which, though statutory, nevertheless, was vested. For the satisfaction of this vested right, the machinery originally provided by former section 7596 was effective. The amendment to this section, then, if it be given effect as to such unsatisfied right to state aid would "affect pending causes of proceedings existing at the time of such amendment," within the meaning of section 26.

I am, therefore, of the opinion that as to school districts which had created deficiencies lawfully by virtue of section 7595, General Code, and had failed to initiate the necessary proceedings to receive state aid for their relief, on August 1, 1913, the provisions of original section 7596 were saved. The amendment expresses no intention to the contrary and, therefore, section 26 governs.

There being an appropriation, then, which is adequate to authorize the auditor of state to proceed under original section 7596, as to the school districts just referred to, I am of the opinion, in answer to your first question, that the auditor of state may legally pay, on application dated after the amendment to section 7596 became a law, the amounts asked for by boards of education to make good deficits in tuition funds for the past year.

Your second question calls for an interpretation of section 7596 as amended. Some difficulty arises here because the portion of the section directing the auditor to draw his "voucher" was not changed when the section was amended. The only change made therein was as to the date when the affidavit should be made, and the school year to which it should relate.

The choice is between two obvious alternatives in the interpretation of this section, viz.:

1. The state auditor is to draw his deficiency "voucher" for the amount shown to be necessary, in anticipation, by the facts set forth in the certificate made to him by the county auditor. That is to say, he is to pay the state aid money to the school district immediately.

2. The auditor of state is not to act upon the application made to him until the year is completed and the precise amount of the deficiency is ascertained.

In my opinion the second of these two possible constructions must be rejected. To hold otherwise would necessarily read into the statute something which is not there. That is to say, if the auditor of state is required to wait until the end of the school year and to verify the amount of the deficiency before issuing his "voucher," then, it would be necessary for him to receive other reports from the county auditor, or from the school districts, or to make inspection in order to verify the amounts of deficiency existing at the end of the school year in the tuition funds of the various weak school districts. There is no machinery provided for this. Obviously, the auditor of state can act only upon the information furnished him by the county auditor. If that information relates, as it must relate under the amended section, to anticipate needs of the tuition fund, then, the voucher must cover these anticipated needs and not the actual needs subsequently appearing.

Looking at the amended section from the viewpoint of the evil probably intended to be remedied thereby, the choice of the first of the two suggested constructions becomes imperative. The obvious inconvenience to a board of education and its teachers in requiring the board to wait until the end of the school year to get its state aid money need not be more than suggested. It seems clear to me that it was the intention of the general assembly to obviate this inconvenience and to provide the means whereby the weak school districts might have the state aid money in their treasuries at the time at which it is needed.

Other considerations might be brought to the support of my conclusion; but space forbids an exhaustive discussion of the subject. I am of the opinion, in answer to your second question, that the voucher of the auditor of state, under amended section 7596, must be issued upon the facts and information disclosed by the county auditor's certificate to him, for the amount of an anticipated deficiency in the tuition fund of a school district for the current year; and must be issued as soon as the auditor of state has satisfied himself as to the amount of such anticipated deficiency.

Very truly yours,
TIMOTHY S. HOGAN,
Attorney General

DEPUTY STATE SUPERVISOR OF ELECTIONS MAY RECEIVE COMPENSATION FOR ONLY SUCH PRECINCTS AS HOLD PRIMARIES.

Under the provisions of section 4990, General Code, members of the boards of deputy state supervisors of elections may receive compensation only for the precincts that hold primaries and not for all precincts.

COLUMBUS, OHIO, September 15, 1913.

Bureau of Inspection and Supervision of Public Offices, Department of Auditor of State, Columbus, Ohio.

GENTLEMEN:—Under date of July 30, 1913, you inquire:

> "It develops that in many counties of the state primaries will be held this year only in part of the precincts of the county. Under section 4990, are the members of the boards of deputy state supervisors entitled to receive the compensation per precinct therein provided, on the basis of the number of precincts in which primaries are actually held?"

This matter was under consideration by the Hon. Edward C. Turner, prosecuting attorney of Franklin county, and the conclusion at which he arrived, as well as his reasoning, so thoroughly meets my views that I am hereby adopting it. It reads as follows:

> "It seems clear to me that the basis of compensation under this statute is the amount of services performed. The intention of the legislature is to pay according to the amount of work. If this were work in a factory it would be called piece work system. If election work is required in a hundred precincts each deputy would be entitled to receive $200.00, while if the work were confirmed to fifty precincts the compensation would be but a hundred dollars.

"If the legislature abolishes part of the work, I fail to see on what ground it can be maintained that election officers can still demand pay for work not performed.

"If the election authorities were paid so much a year based upon the number of precincts in their respective counties for all work done, then it would be clear that their salary would not be reduced by implication upon reducing the amount of their work. But where they are paid upon the basis of piece work they cannot claim compensation for anything except the work they actually perform. The statute does not authorize a contract to maintain a given number of precincts in any county * * * they may be increased or diminished at the will of the legislature.

"The statute does not say simply that each deputy shall receive two dollars each for each election precinct in his respective county, but that he shall receive such compensation for services in conducting primary elections. If by a subsequent law services in all or any portion of the precincts are dispensed with, the total compensation which is based upon the amount of work done is automatically reduced pro rata. The officer would still be entitled to claim compensation at the same rate but only for the precincts in which primary elections were held."

Yours very truly,
TIMOTHY S. HOGAN,
Attorney General.

UNDER INITIATIVE AND REFERENDUM, ORDINANCES GO INTO EFFECT SIXTY DAYS FROM THE TIME OF APPROVAL BY MAYOR OR THE PASSAGE OF SUCH LAW OVER MAYOR'S VETO—A FINDING MAY BE MADE FOR SALARY DRAWN, AGAINST A PERSON WHO ASSUMES HIS DUTIES IN A NEWLY CREATED POSITION BEFORE SIXTY DAYS HAVE EXPIRED BEFORE THE PASSAGE OF THE ORDINANCE—WHERE A SALARY ORDINANCE PROVIDES SO MUCH PER WEEK, A PERSON SHOULD WORK THE NUMBER OF DAYS CONTEMPLATED BY THE ORDINANCE.

Under the provisions of the initiative and referendum law, sections 4227-1 to 4227-6, General Code, as they existed before amendment, in computing the sixty days under said law, count should be made from the time an ordinance is approved by the mayor, or from the time of the passing of such ordinance over the mayor's veto.

When a new position is created in a city government, by ordinance of council and the salary is fixed, in said ordinance, and the officer assumes his duties immediately upon the passing of the ordinance and received compensation at the rate fixed by ordinance, a finding may be made against him for the first sixty days' salary, as the ordinance does not go into effect until sixty days after its passage.

When a salary ordinance provides compensation at a stated salary per week, the person should work the number of days contemplated by the ordinance, and a reduction in the salary should be made for any days missed that he is supposed to work.

COLUMBUS, OHIO, September 15, 1913.

Bureau of Inspection and Supervision of Public Offices, Columbus, Ohio.

GENTLEMEN:—Under date of June 5, 1913, you submitted to this department three questions on the I. and R. act (sections 4227-1 to 4227-6, General Code as they existed prior to amendment 103 Ohio Laws 211) upon which you requested my written opinion. I will take the questions up in the order stated by you:

First. Your first question is as follows:

> "In computing the sixty days under said law, should count be made from the date of passage by council, from date of approval by the mayor, or from date of passage over the mayor's veto in case an ordinance be vetoed and the council passes the legislation over the mayor's veto?"

Since ordinances passed by a village council are not subject to any power of the mayor I assume that you ask your question in reference to ordinances passed by a city council.

Section 4224, General Code, reads as follows:

> "The action of council shall be by ordinance or resolution, and on the passage of each ordinance or resolution the vote shall be taken by "yeas" and "nays" and entered upon the journal, but this shall not apply to the ordering of an election, or direction by council to any board or officer to furnish council with information as to the affairs of any department or office. No by-law, ordinance or resolution of a general or permanent nature, or granting a franchise, or creating a right, or involving the expenditure of money, or the levying of a tax, or for the purchase, lease, sale or transfer of property, shall be passed unless it has been fully and distinctly read on three different days, and with respect to any such by-laws, ordinance or resolution, there shall be no authority to dispense with this rule, except by a three-fourths vote of all members elected thereto, taken by yeas and nays, on each by-law, resolution or ordinance, and entered on the journal. No ordinance shall be passed by council without the concurrence of a majority of all members elected thereto."

Section 4234, General Code reads as follows:

> "Every ordinance or resolution of council shall, before it goes into effect, be presented to the mayor for approval. The mayor, if he approves it, shall sign and return it forthwith to council. If he does not approve it, he shall within ten days after its passage or adoption return it with his objections to council, or if council is not in session, to the next regular meeting thereof, which objections council shall cause to be entered upon its journal. The mayor may approve or disapprove the whole or any item of an ordinance appropriating money. If he does not return such ordinance or resolution within the time limited in this same manner as if he had signed it, unless council by adjournment prevents its return. When the mayor disapproves an ordinance or resolution, or any part thereof, and returns it to the council with his objections, council may, after ten days, reconsider it, and if such ordinance, resolution or item, upon such reconsideration is approved by the votes of two-thirds of all the members elected to council, it shall then taken effect as if signed by the mayor. The provisions of this section shall apply only in cities."

The second paragraph of section 4227-2, General Code, provides in part as follows:

"No resolution, ordinance or measure of any municipal corporation, creating a right, involving the expenditure of money, granting a franchise, conferring, extending or renewing a right to the use of the streets, or regulating the use of the streets for water, gas, electricity, telephone, telegraph, power or street railways, or other public or quasi-public utility shall become effective in less than sixty days after its passage."

Section 4224, General Code, specifies how ordinances shall be passed by council, but section 4234, General Code provides for the veto power of mayors in cities. It would, therefore, appear that the mayor of a city is as stated in McQuillan on municipal ordinances, section 149, "a constituent part of the legislative power" and that "his concurrence is essential to complete any given legislative act. This is as necessary to its validity as its passage by the council or governing body, unless it should be passed over his veto in accordance with the law governing the corporation."

The question which arises, of course is as to the meaning of the word "passage" as used in the second paragraph of section 4227-2, General Code; that it to say, as to whether such word "passage" as so used refers to the passing of ordinances by the council solely or whether it refers to the completed act necessary to give such ordinances validity.

Section 4227-3, General Code, provides that certain ordinances "may go into effect immediately." It would hardly be contended as far as cities were concerned that such a provision as is found in section 4227-3, General Code, intended to operate so as to not require presentation of such ordinance to the mayor under the provision of section 4234, General Code, yet if it were solely the action of council to which this matter referred such would be the case.

Since in cities the mayor is a part of the legislative power I am of the opinion that the word "passage" as used in the second paragraph of section 4227-2, General Code, refers to the completed legislative act which would include, of course, the provision of section 4234, General Code, and that, therefore, in computing the sixty days count should be made of the time such ordinance becomes a complete legislative act which would be after the action provided for in section 4234, General Code. That is to say, answering your question as stated count should not be made from the time of the passage of the ordinance by council but from the time of the approval by the mayor, or from the time of the passage of such ordinance over the mayor's veto in case an ordinance be vetoed, and council passes the legislation over the mayor's veto.

Second. Your next inquiry is as follows:

"If a new position in the city government is created by ordinance of council and compensation fixed in said ordinance, and the incumbent immediately enters upon his duties and receives compensation at the rate fixed in the ordinance, could a finding for recovery be made against said incumbent and his bondsmen?"

It has been held by this department and also by various courts of common pleas of this state that an ordinance creating a new position and fixing the compensation is an ordinance which involves the expenditure of money, and such being the case it must, of course, under the provisions of section 4227-2, General Code, remain inoperative until sixty days after its passage. Consequently, there was no authority for any person who was appointed to such a position to enter upon the duties thereof and receive the compensation therefor until the ordinance became operative. As I view it, any duties that were performed by one who was to take the position at the time the ordinance went into effect but does so prior to the going into effect of such an ordinance would be considered as gratuitous upon his part and for which he would not be entitled to compensation. He is presumed to be familiar with the law and it is his duty to see to it that there is a valid ordinance which would entitle him to his money. Consequently, he having assumed his position before the ordinance goes into effect would not be entitled to the compensation which was provided by such ordinance until such ordinance would become operative, and any money received by him before the ordinance becomes operative was so received without authority. Consequently a recovery may be had against him for the money so received. But I do not think that the bondsmen of such a person could be held for the money so received for the reason that he not being at the time of the receipt of such money legally within the employe of the city government his bondsmen would not be bound.

The position in which the person finds himself in this instance it seems to me is clearly distinguishable from the case of State vs. Fronizer 77 O. S. 7, for in that case it appears that the bridge company therein had erected a bridge in Sandusky county and had received the money called for by the contract. It was objected, however, that because of the lack, through inadvertence, of the county auditor's certificate as required by section 2834b, Revised Statutes, the bridge company was not entitled to the money so received and that suit would be brought to recover it back. The court refused to allow such a recovery on the ground as stated in the opinion that "a county should not be permitted to retain both the consideration and the bridge," and left the parties where it found them.

In the Fronizer case, however, the county commissioners, had full authority to enter into the contract and it was only through inadvertence in not obtaining the auditor's certificate that the recovery was sought. In the facts stated by your request for opinion it would appear that there was not authority originally for the appointment of the incumbent to the new position fixed by council immediately. By reason of section 4227-2, General Code, there was no authority in anyone to appoint to the position at that time, and consequently, any act done by the incumbent so appointed prior to the ordinance going into effect was gratuitous and in contemplation of law of no value to the city until the ordinance went into effect. Furthermore, in the Fronizer case the money that was paid out of the county treasury to the bridge company in payment of the bridge in question was so paid by allowance of the county commissioners who are given authority to pass upon and allow claims against the county. It does not appear from your inquiry how the money was paid out which was received by the person in question, but I assume that it was not paid out through any action of the city council which could, if anybody, authorize the payment of such a claim.

Third. Your third inquiry is as follows:

> "If the salary ordinance provides compensation at a stated price per week, what deduction should be made if the employe only works five days?"

This is a matter which depends entirely upon the facts in each instance. When council provides in an ordinance compensation at a stated price per week it must have understood that the price so fixed is in reference to the amount of labor which is usually required for such a position. If it can be considered that it was intended that the employe should work six days out of each week and he only works five a proportionate reduction should be made, but if the ordinance contemplates that he should work only five days in the week no reduction should be made.

Your question, therefore, is as to how many days in each week it is contemplated that the employes should work and I have not facts before me sufficient to determine the particular question.

Very truly yours,
TIMOTHY S. HOGAN,
Attorney General.

COUNTY COMMISSIONER ACTING IN DITCH MATTERS IS TO RECEIVE COMPENSATION AT THE RATE OF $3.00 PER DAY UNTIL THE SUM OF $300.00 IS EXPENDED; $300.00 BEING THE SALARY ALLOWED BY LAW.

Where a county commissioner, after having rendered services to the county in ditch matters for nearly one hundred days, died, and a successor was appointed, of the $300.00 per year allowed for such services, the first commissioner or the one who died would be allowed compensation at the rate of $3.00 per day for the number of days' service performed, and his successor would be allowed compensation at the rate of $3.00 per day until the remainder of the $300.00 allowed by law had been expended. .

COLUMBUS, OHIO September 23, 1913.

Bureau of Inspection and Supervision of Public Offices, Department of Auditor of State, Columbus, Ohio.

GENTLEMEN:—Under favor of September 13, 1913, you request my opinion as follows:

> "After a county commissioner had rendered services to the county in ditch matters for nearly one hundred days in the official year, but had drawn no compensation therefor under section 3001, he died and his successor, up to the 1st of September, was required to render services in ditch matters for more than enough days to amount to one hundred days for the year. The total compensation for ditch services in any one year seems to be limited by said section to $300.00 and services have been rendered in this case amounting to more than that sum. How should the compensation be drawn? Can the appointee legally receive pay at the rate of $3.00 per day for the full number of days' services rendered by him in ditch matters?"

The question is a novel one and though I have made a careful investigation, I have been unable to uncover any authorities in point.

In the case of William Lawrence, Ex-parte, I Ohio St., 431, it was held:

> "Where the duties of an office are specified and limited in their character, and not continuous during the year, an annual salary prescribed by law, as the compensation, will be payable and apportioned with reference to the duties performed, and not to the lapse of time."

The second paragraph of the syllabus of the case of Trumbell vs. Campbell, 8 Ill. reports, page 502, is as follows:

> "The legislature made an appropriation for certain services to be rendered by the secretary of state. Having performed, as he alleged, two-thirds of the services, he claimed and received, on retiring from office, two-thirds of the amount of the appropriation. His successor completed the services, claiming that his predecessor had performed but one-third of the service, and brought an action for money had and received against him to recover back the alleged excess: Held, that the successor had no right of action against his predecessor to recover the money; that if too much had been received, the state might recover back the excess; and if the former had not received his due proportion, that he had a valid claim against the state therefor."

These authorities establish that an apportionment between predecessor and successor in office will be declared where the salary is fixed for a definite time for services or for a definite amount of work.

The case of Iowa vs. Dyer, 106 Iowa reports, page 640, bears in more definite relation your inquiry. The opinion in this case, is as follows:

"The very point in controversy is whether an officer who is paid, in fees collected, a salary not exceeding a fixed sum, and whose entire time belongs to the state, in event there is work to do. shall receive a month's salary for a half month's service. The number of deputy oil inspectors must be approved by the board of health, and their compensation is fixed for each calendar month. The deputy is allowed certain expenses, and must report under oath to the state inspector 'at the beginning of each month for the calendar month preceding.' Acts twenty-fourth general assembly, chapter 52. Section 3 of that chapter is in part as follows: 'Each deputy inspector shall collect all fees and commissions, now or hereafter provided by law for inspecting products of petroleum, earned by him, and each deputy inspector may retain for his services actually rendered, all fees and commissions earned by him until the same amount to fifty dollars per month; also twenty-five per cent. therafter: provided, that no deputy inspector shall be allowed to receive as salary, fees or commissions exceeding one hundred dollars per month. It is plain that the legislature intended the maximum salary for a full month's labor. But Morris was prevented by death from working longer than one-half month. He was entitled, then, at the most, to no more than one-half a month's salary. The same rule applies to defendant. The intention was that all fees received during the month in excess of the maximum salary fixed should go to the state. And the fact that the fee collected during the half month would warrant the full salary would not relieve the officers from giving the entire month to the inspection of oils. If two performing services during part of the same month may each receive the entire salary for that month, then any number may accomplish the same end. The number of these officers is limited, and one simply succeeds his predecessor in the work. Men change, but the office continues. And to this office is attached a defined compensation for a calendar month. Each was only entitled to the pro rata share of the maximum salary. See State vs. Frizzell, 31 Minn. 460 (18 N. W. Rep. 316), and Ex-parte Lawrence, 1 Ohio St. 431. We do not find it necessary to determine whether, after payment under protest, the defendant could insist upon his right to retain this money.—Affirmed."

In this case, the predecessor died in the middle of the month, after having made sufficient collections to entitle him to the maximum salary for his month's services, under the statutes, and the successor who assumed office upon the death of the predecessor made sufficient collections between that time and the end of the month to entitle him also to the maximum monthly salary. I am of the opinion, however, that this case is clearly distinguished from the question presented in your letter.

Section 3001, General Code, upon which your inquiry based, is as follows:

> "The annual compensation of each county commissioner shall be determined as follows:
> "In each county in which on the twentieth day of December, 1911, the aggregate of the tax duplicate for real estate and personal property is five million dollars or less, such compensation shall be nine hundred dollars, and in addition thereto, in each county in which such aggregate is more than five million dollars, three dollars on each full one hundred thousand dollars of the amount of such duplicate in excess of five million dollars. That the compensation of each county commissioner for the year 1912, and each year thereafter, shall not in the aggregate exceed 115 per cent. of the compensation paid to each county commissioner for the year 1911. In counties where ditch work is carried on by the commissioners, in addition to the salary herein provided, each commissioner shall receive three dollars for each day of time he is actually employed in ditch work; the total amount so received for such ditch work not to exceed three hundred dollars in any one year. Such compensation shall be in full payment of all services rendered as such commissioner and shall not in any case exceed four thousand dollars per annum. Such compensation shall be in equal monthly installments from the county treasury upon the warrant of the county auditor."

In this statute the limitation expressly extends not to the amount which shall be received by any special officer, but to the amount which may be expended in one year.

In the Iowa case the limitation was upon the amount which was received by a deputy inspector. The principal distinction, however, lies in the fact that in the Iowa case, the maximum salary fixed by the statute was intended by the legislature as the court construed the statue, to fix a monthly salary, as is evident from the italicized portion of the opinion, above quoted. And the opinion of Judge Ladd hinges upon the fact that the maximum salary permitted was intended by the legislature to cover services for the period of an entire month. Such is not the case with the provisions of section 3001, General Code. The services required are indefinite as well as the amount which may be earned within any year by a county commissioner performing the same. The only definite thing about this provision is the limitation of expenditures to $300.00, within any year and the provision of $3.00 payment for each day's work performed.

The compensation takes the form of a per diem payment. Per diem is defined in the Century dictionary, as follows:

> "By the day; by each day; daily; used of the fees of office when computing by the number of days at service."

The term per diem is but the Latin translation for each day, and this definition may be applied to the case at hand. The only distinction is presented by the fact that in the Iowa case, the salary was paid in lump sum after the period of performance which it was intended to cover. In the case here presented, however, the money is to be paid as earned.

Inasmuch, therefore, as the compensation of the county commissioner is fixed at a per diem, and as under the plan presented by the statutes, the same may be allowed as earned, recovery could not in any event be justified against an official after he had received the same for actual services performed. The plan presented by the statutes, therefore, though not followed in the present instance, since the commissioner has not yet received his pay, indicates a legislative intent which militates against any apportionment of fees, for the reason that there would be no legal ground for recovery from any official who had received his per diem under the statute as earned.

The language of the statute limiting the amount of the expenditures for any year is clear and the successor accepted the office with knowledge of the limitations. I am, therefore, of the opinion that the predecessor is entitled to full compensation for each day's service performed in ditch work, as provided by this act, and that only the difference between that amount and $300.00 for the year in question, is available to the successor in office.

Very truly yours,
TIMOTHY S. HOGAN,
Attorney General.

SURPLUS REVENUES DERIVED FROM A MUNICIPAL ELECTRIC LIGHT PLANT OR GAS WORKS SHOULD BE TRANSFERRED TO THE SINKING FUND OF THE CITY.

Surplus revenues derived from the operation of a munipical electric light plant and gas works of Hamilton, Ohio, should be transferred over to the sinking fund. The funds may then be used for the retirement of any indebtedness of any public utility, or for the retirement of the general indebtedness of the municipal corporation.

COLUMBUS, OHIO, September 23, 1913.

Bureau of Inspection and Supervision of Public Offices, Department of Auditor of State, Columbus, Ohio.

GENTLEMEN:—I beg to acknowledge receipt of your letter of June 27th, requesting my opinion upon the following question:

> "The city of Hamilton, Ohio, owns and operates a municipal electric light plant and a municipal gas works. May the surplus revenues resulting from the operation of the electric light plant be used by the sinking fund trustees, to meet the bonded indebtedness, and interest obligations thereon, created by the construction of the municipal gas works?"

The right of the city of Hamilton, as a municipal corporation, directly to reap a surplus profit from the operation of its electric light works, meaning thereby the collection of service charges in excess of an amount necessary to pay all expenses of the operation of the plant, and to retire any outstanding indebtedness of the city created by its construction, is of itself a very interesting legal problem. Your question does not, however, necessarily involve the answer to this question. The city is actually deriving surplus profits from the operation of its electric light plant, and so long as no user of its service is complaining, on account of being called upon to submit to this form of taxation, the activities of your department are not invoked.

The General Code will be searched in vain for any specific authority to appropriate surplus revenue arising from the operation of any public utility, other than the waterworks, to the payment of any of the city's bonded indebtedness, even that incurred in the construction or extension of the utility itself. As to the waterworks there is a special provision found in section 3959, General Code. As to all other utilities, however, the statutes are silent.

There is no principle of law requiring the reading into the statutes of any provision for the automatic transfer of surplus profits from the operation of a utility to the sinking fund, for the retirement of outstanding bonds or other indebtedness created in the construction of that utility.

On the contrary, the silence of the statutes in this particular gives rise to an entirely different inference, namely: that in the contemplation of the legislature it is the policy of the state that the taxpayers shall bear the entire cost of the construction of a municipally owned public utility, including the interest which the municipality has to pay in order to secure the necessary funds for its construction.

This inference arises, not alone from the mere silence of the statute upon the subject, but from the peculiar provisions respecting the maintenance of a sinking fund. I do not quote these statutes. Suffice it to state that their purport is that all bonded indebtedness of a municipal corporation shall be retired and the interest thereon paid through the agency of the sinking fund, administered by the board of trustees of the sinking fund. These trustees, for this purpose, are to command certain specific sources of revenue, which are defined in section 4512, General Code, as follows:

> "Upon demand of the board, the city auditor or village clerk shall report to it balances belonging to the city or village, to the credit of the sinking fund, interest accounts, or for any bonds issued for or by the corporation, and all officers or persons having them shall immediately pay them over to the trustees of the sinking fund, who shall deposit them in such place or places as the majority of such board shall select."

This statute of itself does not define in turn the sources of the "sinking fund and interest accounts," of which it speaks. These must be sought for elsewhere in the statutes. In the case of waterworks bonds, as I have already pointed out, one source of the funds which the city auditor is to turn over to the sinking fund trustees is the surplus profits from the operation of the plant. The only other sources enumerated in the statutes are those of tax levies for the specific purpose and special assessments. In other words, the statutes on their face—and they are unambiguous—authorize the city auditor to turn over to the sinking fund trustees the proceeds of any and all levies for sinking fund and interest purposes, the proceeds of any and all assessments when there are bonds issued in anticipation of special assessments, and the surplus revenues produced by the operation of a municipal waterworks, and these moneys only.

The legislation of the state is found to be consistent, in that in the Longworth act, so-called, and in particular in section 39449 thereof, there are exempted from certain of the limitations imposed by law upon the bonded indebtedness of a municipal corporation "bonds issued for the purpose of purchasing, constructing, improving and extending waterworks, when the income from such waterworks is sufficient to cover the cost of all operating expenses, interest charges, and to pass a sufficient amount to a sinking fund to retire such bonds when they gecome due." This statute—the last enacted, in point of time—confirms the supposition that the legislature has intended that the waterworks bonds shall be primarily the obligation of the plant, and that all other public utility bonds of a municipal corporation shall be the general obligation of the corporation as such.

In strict law, therefore, it would have to be held, in the case submitted by you, that not only could not the city of Hamilton directly use the surplus revenue resulting from the operation of its electric light plant in the retirement of the bonded indebtedness created by the construction of the municipal gas works, but could not even use any surplus revenues produced by the operation of the gas works itself for that purpose.

Reduced to the final analysis, the question is one of funds. A fund is the proceeds of a tax levy for a specific purpose, or the income from any special source of revenues. The contents, so to speak, of the sinking fund, out of which all bonds must be retired, are specifically defined by statute; therefore, no other moneys than those included within the definition belong in that fund.

Now, an appropriation and an expenditure from a fund can only be made out of the moneys to the credit of that fund. Conversely, moneys in one fund cannot be directly used for the purposes of another fund.

Considerations of equity and sound business management, however, induce search for some method of lawfully circumventing the strict rule just laid down. The general assembly has not been unmindful of the occasional propriety of using the proceeds of one fund for a purpose within the purview of another fund, and to that end has provided for methods of transferring moneys from one fund to another. One of these methods is that found in section 3799, General Code; but this method is only available to transfer "among funds raised by taxation." In the instance stated by you the sinking fund might be regarded as one raised by taxation, but the moneys produced by the operation of the electric light plant do not constitute such a fund; therefore, in my opinion, this method of transfer is not available, to accomplish the end sought.

In my judgment the only lawful method of making the surplus profits referred to in your available for sinking fund purposes, in the retirement of the debt in question, is to the common pleas court under favor of sections 2296, et seq., General Code, with which you are familiar. Such application, however could only be made periodically, as to the moneys then actually in the fund produced by the surplus revenues, and the process would have to be repeated from time to time.

In my judgment, not only is this the only method whereby the revenues in question may be transferred to the sinking fund, but when so transferred the moneys thus derived may be used for any purpose of the sinking fund, if the court so orders. That is to say, not only may the surplus revenues of a municipal public utility, when so transferred to the sinking fund, be used for the purpose of retiring bonds issued on account of the construction of that particular utility, but the same may also be used for the retirement of indebtedness incurred on account of any other public utility, or even for the retirement of the general indebtedness of the municipal corporation as such.

Very truly yours,
TIMOTHY S. HOGAN,
Attorney General.

CONTRACTS FOR LIGHTING STREETS AND FURNISHING WATER TO MUNICIPAL CORPORATION ARE EXEMPT FROM THE REQUIREMENT OF CERTIFICATES THAT MONEY IS IN THE TREASURY, AND SUCH CONTRACTS MAY BE ENFORCED BY PROCEEDING IN COURT IF THEY ARE NOT COMPLIED WITH.

Contracts for lighting streets and for furnishing water to corporation for fire protection are exempt from the requirement of certificates that the money is in the treasury, and may be enforced by proceedings in court if they are not paid. Unless contracts come within the exception provided in section 3809, General Code, there is no authority in the court to render judgment against a municipal corporation upon contracts entered in violation of section 3906, General Code.

COLUMBUS, OHIO, September 13, 1913.

Bureau of Inspection and Supervision of Public Offices, Columbus, Ohio.

GENTLEMEN:—Under date of April 7, 1913, you inquire:

> Is it a legal use of moneys collected under levy for sinking fund purposes of a city to be used in payment of final judgment taken in the common pleas court for amounts due and unpaid on contracts for lighting the streets of the city or in payment of like judgments taken in said court on contract for furnishing water supply for fire protection?
> "The question is, may the proceeds of a levy for general sinking fund purposes be legally used for current expenses of operation and maintenance of the city government in case final judgment is taken in court?"

Final judgments against a municipal corporation are paid from the sinking fund by virtue of the provisions of sections 4506, 4513 and 4517, General Code.

Section 4506, General Code, provides:

> "Municipal corporations having outstanding bonds or funded debts shall, through their councils, and in addition to all other taxes authorized by law, levy and collect annually a tax upon all the real and personal property in the corporation sufficient to pay the interest and provide a sinking fund for the extinguishment of all bonds and funded debts and for the payment of all judgments final except in condemnation of property cases, and the taxes so raised shall be used for no other purpose whatever."

Section 4513, General Code, provides:

> "On or before the first Monday in May of each year, the trustees of the sinking fund shall certify to council the rate of tax necessary to provide a sinking fund for the future payment of bonds issued by the corporation for the payment of final judgments, except in condemnation of property cases, for the payment of interest on bonded indebtedness, and the rents due on perpetual leaseholds of the corporation not payable from a special fund, and the expense incident to the management of the sinking fund. The council shall place the several amounts so certified in the tax ordinance before and in preference to any other item and for the full amount certified. Such taxes shall be in addition to all other taxes authorized by law."

Section 4517, General Code, provides:

"The trustees of the sinking fund shall have charge of and provide for the payment of all bonds issued by the corporation, the interest maturing thereon and the payment of all judgments final against the corporation, except in condemnation of property cases. They shall receive from the auditor of the city or clerk of the village all taxes, assessments and moneys collected for such purposes and invest and disburse them in the manner provided by law. For the satisfaction of any obligation under their supervision, the trustees of the sinking fund may sell or use any of the securities or money in their possession.

By virtue of these sections the trustees of the sinking fund are authorized to pay from the sinking fund "all judgments final against the corporation, except in condemnation of property cases." It would appear, therefore, that if the judgments in question are final they may be legally paid from the sinking fund.

The purpose of a sinking fund is to provide means for payment of the indebtedness and interest thereon as it matures and not to pay current expenses.

The statutes provide a method for the issue of deficiency bonds. Section 3931, General Code, provides:

"Council may issue deficiency bonds in such amount and denominations, for such periods of time, not to exceed fifty years and such rate of interest not to exceed six per cent. as it deems best when in the opinion of council it is necessary to supply a deficiency in the revenues of the corporation. The total amount of deficiency bonds issued by a corporation, outstanding at any time, shall not exceed one per cent. of the total value of all property in the corporation as listed and assessed for taxation. The issuance of such bonds shall be approved by the votes of two-thirds of all the members elected to council, and approved by the votes of two-thirds of all the electors of the corporation voting upon such question at a regular or special election to be provided for by council."

This section should be followed when the revenues are not sufficient to meet current expenses.

It is apparent from the nature of your inquiry that the money to pay the consideration of these contracts was not in the treasury at the time the obligaion was entered into, or it has been otherwise expended. The statutes which require a certificate of the auditor or clerk that the money is in the treasury and not otherwise appropriated before a contract may be entered into for the expenditure of money should be considered in this connection.

Section 3806, General Code, provides:

"No contract, agreement or other obligation involving the expenditure of money shall be entered into, nor shall any ordinance, resolution or order for the expenditue of money, be passed by the council or by any board or officer of a municipal corporation, unless the auditor or clerk thereof, first certifies to council or to the proper board, as the case may be, that the money required for such contract, agreement or other obligation, or to pay such appropriation or expenditure, is in the treasury to the credit of the fund from which it is to be drawn and not appropriated for any other purpose, which certificate shall be filed and immediately recorded. The sum so certified shall not thereafter be considered unappropriated until the corporation is discharged from the contract, agreement, or obligation, or so long as the ordinance, resolution or order is in force."

Section 3807, General Code, provides:

"All contracts, agreements or other obligations, and all ordinances, resolutions and orders entered into or passed, contrary to the provisions of the preceding section shall be void, and no person whatever shall have any claim or demand against the corporation thereunder, nor shall the council, or a board, officer or commissioner of any municipal corporation, waive or qualify the limits fixed by such ordinance, resolution or order, or fasten upon the corporation any liability whatever for any excess of such limits, or release any party from an exact compliance with his contract under such ordinance, resolution or order."

Section 3806, General Code, prohibits the creation of an obligation for the expenditure of money without first securing a certificate of the auditor or clerk that the money is in the treasury and section 3807, General Code, makes a contract entered into in violation of the provisions of section 3806, General Code, void.

Section 3809, General Code, exempts certain contracts from the requirement of such certificate. Said section reads:

"The council of a city may authorize, and the council of a village may make, a contract with any person, firm or company for lighting the streets, alleys, lands, lanes, squares and public places in the municipal corporation, or for furnishing water to such corporation, or for the collection and disposal of garbage in such corporation, or for the leasing of the electric light plant and equipment, or the waterworks plant, or both, of any person, firm or company therein situated, for a period not exceeding ten years, and the requirement of a certificate that the necessary money is in the treasury shall not apply to such contract, and such requirement shall not apply to street improvement contracts extending for one year or more, nor to contracts made by the board of health, nor to contracts made by a village for the employment of legal counsel."

Contracts "for lighting the streets" of a municipal corporation and "for furnishing water to such corporation" may be entered into without such certificate. There are other exceptions.

It appears, therefore, that valid contracts may be entered into when the money to pay the obligation thereof is not in the treasury. If the municipality fails to pay such obligation when due, judgment may be had against it and such judgment, when final, could be paid from the sinking fund.

Your specific inquiry is as to contracts for lighting the streets and for furnishing water to the corporation. Such contracts are exempt from the requirement of a certificate that the money is in the treasury, and they may be enforced, if not paid, by proceedings in court.

You also make a general inquiry as to the legality of payment of current expenses for operation and maintenance from the sinking fund where final judgment is secured. Unless the contracts come within the exceptions provided in section 3809, General Code, there would be no authority in a court to render judgment against a municipal corporation upon contracts entered into in violation of section 3806, General Code. It is to be presumed that the courts will render judgments only upon valid claims. Cases may arise in which judgments may be rendered upon an invalid claim, by reason of default in making defense by the officers of the corporation. Until such a question is presented it need not be further considered.

Respectfully,
TIMOTHY S. HOGAN,
Attorney General.

LEGAL ADVERTISING TO BE SET UP IN COMPACT FORM—EXPENSES OF ADVERTISING TO BE PAID OUT OF THE GENERAL FUND OF CITY.

Legal advertising shall be done according to section 6254, General Code, which provides that advertising shall be set up in compact form. Display ads. not complying with this section are unlawful.

The rates for advertising as provided in section 6251, General Code, are the maximum rates, and work may be contracted for at a lower rate.

The expenses for advertising the sale of bonds should be met from the appropriation for legal advertising for the city generally, which should be paid from the general fund.

In case of the sale of special assessment bonds, the expenses of advertising may be met out of the proceeds of the sale.

COLUMBUS, OHIO, September 24, 1913.

Bureau of Inspection and Supervision of Public Offices, Department of Auditor of State, Columbus, Ohio.

GENTLEMEN:—I beg to acknowledge receipt of your letter of August 20th requesting my opinion upon the following questions:

> "1. May city officials insert display ads. in a local paper, advertising the sale of municipal bonds at popular sale, said bonds to be sold at par and accrued interest?
> "2. If such display ads. are legal, are the newspapers required to carry same at the regular legal rates provided by section 6251, G. C.?
> "3. May the expense of such display ads. be paid from the general funds of the city raised by taxation or must such expense be paid from the proceeds arising from the sale of the bonds?
> "4. May the proceeds arising from the sale of municipal bonds be depleted by charging the cost of advertising and other preliminary expenses to the issue, or is the administrative officer to be given the full par value authorized by the ordinance of council for the particular improvement without any depletion whatsoever?"

That the sale of municipal bonds by popular subscription must be advertised in the same manner that the sale of municipal bonds in the regular way is required by law to be advertised is explicitly provided by section 3926, General Code.

Section 3924, General Code, then governs such advertisement and its provision is as follows:

"After thirty days' notice in at least two newspapers of general circulation in the county * * * additional notice may be published outside of such county by order of the council."

I do not understand your question to involve the expression of an opinion upon what newspaper may be employed by the city officials in making the advertisement, nor do I understand you to inquire what the procedure of entering into an advertisement contract is. I assume that your question involves particular consideration, then, of section 6254, General Code, which provides in part as follows:

"Legal advertising shall be set up in compact form, without unnecessary spaces, blanks or head lines, and printed in type not smaller than nonpareil."

This section is part of the chapter of the General Code relating to legal advertising in general. By explicit provision in section 6251, which is in pari materia with section 6254, the chapter as a whole excepting where otherwise provided, applies as well to the officers of a municipal corporation as to those of any other political subdivision. As the meaning of section 6251 is involved in answering one of your questions I quote it in full:

"Publishers of newspapers may charge and receive for the publication of advertisements, notices and proclamations required to be published by a public officer of the state, county, city village, township, school, benevolent or other public institution, or by trustee, assignee, executor or administrator, the following sums, except where the rate is otherwise fixed by law, to wit: For the first insertion, one dollar for each square, and for each additional insertion authorized by law or the person ordering the insertion, fifty cents for each square. Fractional squares shall be estimated at a like rate for space occupied. In advertisements containing tabular or rule work, fifty per cent. may be charged in addition to the foregoing rates."

Returning to section 6254, I am of the opinion that this statute is directory merely, in the sense that the determination of what form is "compact," what spaces, blanks or head lines are "necessary" and what type larger than "nonpareil" shall be employed must be lodged somewhere, and is presumably lodged in the municipal authorities having power to make the contract with the newspaper. The power being discretionary its exercise will not be disturbed by the courts unless it has been clearly abused. This proposition is elementary.

I do not find in the statutes relating to the powers and duties of the bureau of inspection and supervision of public offices any provision expressly, or by inference, authorizing your department to prescribe forms of legal advertisement which shall be followed by the authorities of the various subdivisions to the exclusion of all others.

I do not know, of course, what constitutes, in the technical sense, a "display ad." I assume, however, that it means an advertisement set up in large type with heavy head lines, blank spaces and otherwise than in compact form. That is in form not as compact as a regular advertisement would be set up in. If, as a matter of fact, the display features of the advertisement are so pronounced as to constitute a complete deviation from the required compactness, such an advertisement would seem to involve necessarily an abuse of whatever discretion is imposed in the local authorities by section 6254 above quoted.

The question as to the necessity of the use of head lines and blank spaces would have to be similarly determined. In short, the question in each instance would be one of fact and not one of law. The fact to be determined would be whether or not a given form of advertisement were "compact," and whether or not any blanks, spaces or head lines were, under the circumstances, "necessary." If, as a matter of fact, a "display ad." could under no circumstances be "compact," that is if the idea of compactness is foreign to the very nature of a "display ad.," as such, then as to this feature, the question would no longer be one of fact, but the conclusion of law would follow that the advertisement is unauthorized and unlawful.

I do not answer your first question more directly because of lack of knowledge as to what constitutes a "display ad."

Assuming, for the purpose of your second question, an affirmative answer to your first question I beg to state that in my opinion section 6251, General Code, controls the rates at which such "display ad." may be inserted. It was decided in McCormick vs. Niles, 81 O. S. 246, that these are maximum rates and that the municipal authorities may lawfully contract for advertising at smaller prices.

Your third and fourth questions really involve the same proposition of law and will be considered together. The Municipal Code is silent upon the question which you here submit.

Section 2295, General Code, contains the following provision which, however, does not apply to municipal corporations:

> "All moneys from both principal and premiums on the sale of such bonds, shall be credited to the fund on account of which the bonds are issued and sold."

The only similar provision in the Municipal Code is that of section 3932, General Code, which, however, relates to the disposition of premiums and accrued interest only.

I am of the opinion that the silence of the Municipal Code upon the subject at hand is to be interpreted in the light of the express provisions of closely related statutes. The purposes for which a municipal corporation may issue bonds are specifically set forth in the statutes. Thus section 3939, General Code, mentions a large number of specific objects for the accomplishment of which bonds may be issued. The whole subject is fully treated of in the chapter of the Municipal Code which is entitled "Borrowing Money." This chapter will be searched in vain for any provisions expressly authorizing a municipal corporation to borrow money for the purpose of paying the expenses of legal advertising. In each instance, for example, in which a specific improvement is contemplated, the thing for which the money is borrowed, is the making of the improvement. When bonds are sold their proceeds constitute one of the funds of the municipality. This fund is available only for the purposes properly within the purview of the improvement itself. Similarly, when money is borrowed and bonds are issued for an object other than the making of a specific improvement, a fund is thereby created which is available only for the object stated. Unless, therefore, the payment of the expense of advertising the sale of the bonds can be regarded as one of the purposes of the improvement, or as related to and a part of the object for which the money is borrowed, such an expenditure is not a proper one to be made from such a fund.

Furthermore, there are statutes specifically disposing of balances of such funds when the object for which they were created is satisfied without the expenditure of the total amount borrowed. I refer to section 3915, General Code, which disposes of unexpended balances in a fund created by the issuance of bonds in anticipation of special assessments and to section 3804 which makes similar disposition of the unexpended balances of a fund created by the issuance of general bonds of the municipality.

Section 3896, General Code, provides what may be included in the cost of an improvement for which special assessments are to be levied and specifically authorizes the inclusion therein of "the expense of * * * printing and publishing the notices and ordinances required," together with "any other necessary expenditure." Under this language it would seem that the expense of advertising special assessment bonds may be included in the assessment.

Inasmuch, then, as the bonds themselves are issued in anticipation of the assessment, such bonds are not required to be limited in amount to the cost of construction alone, but the amount thereof may include all the items of expense mentioned in said section 3896. In other words, special assessment bonds are not bonds issued for the purpose of a specific improvement in the technical sense; but they are bonds issued in anticipation of the assessment.

The inference then to be drawn from the provisions of section 3896, considered in connection with the other sections referred to, is that in the case of the issuance of the general bonds of the municipality, the expense incident to their issuance are not a proper charge against the fund created thereby. The conclusion which I have reached, then, is that the expense of advertising the sale of the general bonds of a municipal corporation, as distinguished from its special assessment bonds, is not an item chargeable against the fund created by the sale of such bonds. The obligation to advertise the sale of the bonds is one imposed upon the municipality as such by the provisions of the statutes and is a general current expense of the municipality, the same as the making of any and all other legal publications except those connected with the making of improvements by special assessments. It is no part of any improvement for which a municipal corporation is authorized to borrow money, nor is it an object within the scope of the other purposes for which bonds may be issued by a municipal corporation. All such expenses should be paid from the appropriation for legal advertising of the city generally which I think should be met from the general fund. That is to say, the advertisement of the sale of municipal bonds is not an expense of the service department or safety department as such, but an expense of the city generally. The proceeds of the bonds when sold, however, for a purpose within the purview of the service department, for example constitute a trust fund which can under no circumstances be used for the general purposes of the city. Whether or not the further action of the council, appropriating the proceeds of such bonds is necessary, the fund created by their sale can be used only by the department of public service. Council is even without power to transfer the unexpended balance of any such fund, as that must go into the sinking fund. The care taken by the general assembly to safeguard the proceeds of bonds issued for any specific purpose is such as to indicate clearly the legislative intention that no such money should ever be used for any other purpose. Therefore, it being established—as I think it must be—that the advertisement of the sale of bonds is a general municipal duty, and not one pertaining to a particular department, it follows as a matter of course that the payment of such expense, in the case of bonds issued for the purpose of a department cannot be made from such a fund. The principle thus established by consideration of the case of bonds issued for a purpose within the purview of a given department holds good, in my opinion, when applied to any and all bond issues.

For all the foregoing reasons, then, I am of the opinion that your last two questions must be answered by the general statement that the expense of advertising the sale of an issue of bonds is not legally chargeable against the fund created by their sale; and council is without discretion in the matter, and must pay such expense out of the general revenues of the municipality.

In case of the sale of special assessment bonds, however, the advertising expenses may, in my opinion, lawfully be paid out of the proceeds of the bonds, which are, in theory, issued, not for the use of a particular department or the purpose of a particular improvement as such, but in anticipation of special assessments which in turn are made to compensate the municipal corporation as a public entity for all expenses incurred by it in connection with the making of the improvement.

Yours very truly,
TIMOTHY S. HOGAN,
Attorney General.

A PERSON EMPLOYED IN THE CITY AUDITOR'S OFFICE IS NOT PERMITTED TO ENGAGE IN THE BUSINESS OF FURNISHING SUPPLIES TO THE CITY.

An employe in the city auditor's office who is interested in a private business to sell supplies to the city would come within the provisions of section 12910, General Code, which provides a penalty for such employes engaging in such business.

COLUMBUS, OHIO, September 25, 1913.

Bureau of Inspection and Supervision of Public Offices, Department of Auditor of State, Columbus, Ohio.

GENTLEMEN:—Under date of June 13th, you request my opinion as follows:

> "We ask an interpretation of the provision of section 12910, General Code, which is expressed by the words 'or as agent, servant or employe of such officer or of the board of such officers.' Does this make it a penal offense for an employe (clerk) in the city auditor's office who is interested in a private business to sell supplies to the city of which he is an employe, or does it relate only to agents, servants or employes in the private employment of a public official?"

Section 12910, General Code, is as follows:

> "Whoever, holding an office of trust, or profit by election or appointment, or as agent, servant or employe of such officer or of a board of such officers, is interested in a contract for the purchase of property, supplies or fire insurance for the use of the county, township, city, village, board of education or a public institution with which he is connected, shall be imprisoned in the penitentiary not less than one year nor more than ten years."

It is evident that the unlimited scope which this statute would be afforded by an interpretation extending its terms to private agents, servants or employes would not be within the bounds of reason. Such a construction would necessarily include every person who, in any capacity, performs service or in any way acts for a public official. In brief, a servant in a household, or even a lawyer, or a doctor, who is accustomed to be retained by a public official, would come within the prohibition of the statute.

I am of the opinion that such an intent could not have existed in the legislative mind. These words evidently refer to agents, servants or employes of such officer in his official capacity. The fact that the statute speaks of agents, servants or employes of a board of officers, further supports this conclusion.

I am, therefore, of the opinion that an employe in a city auditor's office, who is interested in a private business to sell supplies to the city, would come within the terms of this statute.

Very truly yours,
TIMOTHY S. HOGAN,
Attorney General.

A MEMBER OF THE SINKING FUND TRUSTEES MAY RECEIVE PAY FOR FURNISHING BALLOTS FOR A MUNICIPAL ELECTION AS THESE SUPPLIES ARE FOR THE USE OF THE STATE.

Where a member of the sinking fund trustees of a city was the lowest bidder for the furnishing of ballots at a primary election, it would not be a violation of section 12910, General Code, for him to receive payment for same from the city treasury, as said supplies are not for the use of a municipality, but for the use of the state.

COLUMBUS, OHIO, September 25, 1913,

Bureau of Inspection and Supervision of Public Offices, Department of Auditor of State, Columbus, Ohio.

GENTLEMEN:—Under date of September 20th you request my opinion as follows:

> "A member of the sinking fund trustees of a city was the lowest bidder for the furnishing of ballots at the recent primary election for municipal officers. Is it a violation of section 12910 for him to receive payment for such supplies from the city treasury?
> "Inasmuch as this contract was awarded by state officials, viz.: the board of deputy state supervisors of elections, and payment is originally made from the county treasury and afterwards deducted from the amount due to the city, would such payment be legal under those circumstances?"

Section 12910, General Code, is as follows:

> "Whoever, holding an office of trust or profit by election or appointment, or as agent, servant or employe of such officer or of a board of such officers, is interested in a contract for the purchase of property, supplies or fire insurance for the use of the county, township, city, village, board of education or a public institution with which he is connected, shall be imprisoned in the penitentiary not less than one year nor more than ten years."

Under date of February 27, 1913, I rendered an opinion to your board, in which I concluded:

> "The expense of printing and distributing ballots, cards of explanation to officers of the election and voters, and blanks for general, primary and special elections shall be paid from the county treasury, and in odd-numbered years, such expenses for the November and primary elections shall be charged to the political subdivision in which such election is held."

Section 12910 and the section immediately following are given a very broad scope in their effect by the legislature; the one prohibiting officers from being interested in contracts involving the political subdivision with which the officer is connected, and the other prohibiting such contracts with any other political subdivision of the state. Contracts on behalf of the state itself, or rather to be more definite, contracts for the purchase of property, supplies or fire insurance, for the use of the state, are not comprised within the terms of either statute.

In State vs. Craig, 8 O. N. P. 148, the court said (at page 150):

> "From an examination of the election laws in this state it seems apparent that the legislature intended that the conduct of elections should belong to the state and be under the control of state officers. Section 2966-2 (Revised Statutes) provides that: 'By virtue of his office the secretary of state shall be the state supervisor of elections, and in addition to the duties now imposed upon him by law shall perform the duties of such office as defined therein.' We have then the secretary of state as the principal election officer and the deputy state supervisors, as subordinate officers, for carrying out the agencies of the state for the conduct of elections."

The question presented, therefore, is whether or not the supplies purchased in this case, which are used for municipal purposes, their use being managed and controlled by state agencies, and payment made in the first instance by the county, reimbursement being made therefor by the municipality, are supplies for the use of the municipality as is comprehended by the language of section 12910, General Code.

I am of the opinion that these supplies are for the use of the state, in the conduct of its general duties with reference to election matters. It is true they are used in behalf of the municipality. The municipality, however, has nothing to do with the actual use, conduct and management of these supplies. The control of their use is vested in state agencies. Were it not for the statutory provision providing for a reimbursement of the county from the municipal treasury, this question would not have arisen; and I am of the opinion that the mere fact that reimbursement from the municipal treasury, is provided for the service of the state, administered in a case of municipal benefits, does not afford sufficient ground for holding that such supplies are for the use of the municipality as is intended by section 12910, General Code.

Very truly yours,
TIMOTHY S. HOGAN,
Attorney General.

THE PROCEEDS OF THE AUGUST DISTRIBUTION FOR WEAK SCHOOL DISTRICT ARE NOT AVAILABLE FOR THE USE OF THE YEAR CLOSING AUGUST 31st, BUT ARE ALL TO BE APPLIED FOR THE USE OF SUCH DISTRICTS DURING THE YEAR FOR WHICH THE APPROPRIATION IS MADE.

Under the weak school district law the proceeds of the August distribution are intended by the law to be used to operate the school for the succeeding half year, and are not available for the use and purpose of the year closing on the 31st of the same month. Such proceeds should not be taken into consideration in determining the existence or amount of a deficiency in the tuition fund when the amount therein available for payment of teachers' salaries during the year ending on August 31st is compared with the needs of the fund for the same period of time under the requirements of section 7595, General Code.

COLUMBUS, OHIO, September 25, 1913.

Bureau of Inspection and Supervision of Public Offices, Department of Auditor of State, Columbus, Ohio.

GENTLEMEN:—I beg to acknowledge receipt of your letter of September 20th requesting my opinion upon the following question:

> "In estimating the amount due a school district for the years ending August 31, 1913, under the weak school district laws, section 7595 to 7597, as they were before the last amendment, is it proper to include in the receipts in the tuition fund the August, 1913, distribution of said common school funds and the August, 1913, distribution of local taxes?"

The original sections referred to by you provided as in part as follows:

> "Section 7595. No person shall be employed to teach in any public school in Ohio for less than forty dollars a month. When a school district has not sufficient money to pay its teachers forty dollars per month for eight months of the year, after the board of education of such district has made the maximum legal school levy, three-fourths of which shall be for the tuition fund, then such school district may receive from the state treasurer sufficient to make up the deficiency.
> "Section 7596. A board of education having such a deficit must make affidavits to the county auditor, who shall send a certified statement of the facts to the state auditor. The state auditor shall issue a voucher on the state treasurer in favor of the treasurer of such school district for the amount of the deficit in the tuition fund."

Clearly, under these provisions, the amount of a deficiency in the tuition fund of a given school district is ascertained annually. The question is as to whether or not the tuition fund is sufficient to meet the year's requirements if salaries had been paid as therein provided.

The first question which suggests itself, then, in this connection is as to what year is indicated by the statute. I think it is reasonably obvious that the answer to this question must be that the school year beginning on the first of September constitutes the year for and as of which the deficiency is to be ascertained; that is to say, the question for the annual determination of the authorities authorized to act under the sections just quoted is as to whether or not the tuition funds, available for expenditure during the year beginning on September 1st and ending on the succeeding August 1st, are sufficient to pay the requisite number of teachers the minimum salary of $40.00 per month for eight months during that period.

I do not think this conclusion is sufficiently doubtful to require citation of specific statutes upon which it is based. The question, then, simply is as to whether the proceeds of an August distribution are considered a part of the funds available for the use of the year ending August 31st, or whether such moneys, when received, are to be used for the purpose of the year beginning on the first of September following.

This question might have been, and doubtless was, an interesting and difficult one under the provisions of the taxing laws of the state applicable to boards of education as they existed prior to the enactment of the so-called Smith one per cent. law, being section 5649-1 to section 5649-5b inclusive of the General Code. By the enactment of that law, however, and in particular by that of section 5649-3d thereof the question became greatly clarified. Said section provides as follows:

> "At the beginning of each fiscal half year the various boards mentioned in section 5649-3a of this act shall make appropriations for each of the several objects for which money has to be provided, from the moneys known to be in the treasury from the collection of taxes and all other sources of revenue, and all expenditures within the following six months shall be made from and within such appropriations and balances thereof, but no appropriation shall be made for any purpose not set forth in the annual budget for a greater amount for such purpose than the total amount fixed by the budget commissioners, exclusive of receipts and balances."

Collateral to the main question here involved there are a number of very difficult questions which, however, may be avoided as not necessarily material to the solution of the main question which is presented by consideration of the situation of a board of education meeting at the beginning of its school and fiscal year for the purpose of making appropriations. Such appropriations can only be made from the moneys known to be in the treasury, and when made must provide for all the expenditures of the succeeding six months. Now at a given September appropriation period the moneys in the treasury must consist solely of the proceeds of the August distribution of state and local taxes with any balances remaining over from the last semi-annual distribution. Such moneys when so appropriated must be used to run the schools or rather to provide for the needs of the tuition fund for the next succeeding six months.

The converse of this proposition is illustrated by imagining a case of a school board meeting in March for the purpose of appropriating for the needs of the last half of the school year. The appropriation may only be made from the moneys known to be in the treasury. Therefore, it cannot include the proceeds of the August distribution which are not in the treasury when the March appropriation is made.

I think that when the considerations which I have mentioned are taken into account by themselves, the conclusion clearly follows that it is not lawful to anticipate the proceeds of the August settlement in appropriating for the needs of the last half of the school year, but that such proceeds under the Smith law must be used for the needs of the first half of the year beginning on September 1st.

The collateral questions to which I have referred earlier in this opinion need not all be mentioned, but their character can be understood by reference to one of them, which is that the conclusion which I have reached creates a seeming incongruity in that the first half of the school year is required to be provided for by the last half of the taxes, thus running counter to the seeming requirements of section 5649-3a, General Code, which I do not quote, and making it a very difficult matter to adjust the transition from the old law to the new law embodied in the Smith law as applied to school districts.

For the purposes of your question, however, I have preferred to ignor these technicalities and to consider the necessary operation of section 5649-3c by itself.

For the reasons stated I am of the opinion that inasmuch as the proceeds of the August distribution are intended by the law, to be used to operate the schools for the succeeding half year and are not available for the use and purpose of the year closing on the 31st of the same month, such proceeds should not be taken into consideration in determining the existence or amount of a deficiency in the tuition fund when the amount therein, available for the payment of teachers' salaries during the year ending on August 31st is compared with the needs of the fund for the same period of time under the requirements of section 7595, General Code.

Yours very truly,
TIMOTHY S. HOGAN,
Attorney General.

NOTICE OF AN ELECTION FOR THE SUBMISSION OF A PROPOSED LAW OR CONSTITUTIONAL AMENDMENT SHALL BE MAILED OR DELIVERED TO EACH VOTER.

The sheriff is not authorized to issue a proclamation for an election for the submission of a proposed law or constitutional amendment, to a vote of the electors of the state. The constitution and statutes provide that notice of such election shall be given by mailing or delivering a copy of the proposed law or amendment to be submitted to each voter of the state.

COLUMBUS, OHIO, October 7, 1913.

Bureau of Inspection and Supervision of Public Offices, Columbus, Ohio.

GENTLEMEN:—You submit to this department for opinion the following inquiry:

> "Shall the sheriffs of the counties of the state give public notice by proclamation of an election at which a proposed constitutional amendment or a proposed law, either by the initiative or by referendum, is to be voted upon by the electors?"

Your inquiry calls in question the method of giving notice to the public of the submission to a vote of such proposed laws and constitutional amendments, as provided for in the recent constitutional amendments.

Article two section 1g, of the constitution of Ohio, provides a method of giving notice as follows:

"* * * The secretary of state shall cause to be printed the law, or proposed law, or proposed amendment to the constitution, together with the arguments and explanations, not exceeding a total of three hundred words for each, and also the arguments and explanations, not exceeding a total of three hundred words against each, and shall mail, or otherwise distribute, a copy of such law, or proposed law, or proposed amendment to the constitution, together with such arguments and explanations for and against the same to each of the electors of the state, as far as may be reasonably possible. * * *"

The legislature at its recent session passed an act in accordance with the above provision as set forth in 103 Ohio Laws 831.

Section 1 of said act, to be known as section 5018-1, General Code, provides:

"The secretary of state, at least thirty days before any election at which any proposed amendment to the constitution or proposed law is to be submitted to the people, shall cause to be printed in pamphlet form a copy of the title and text of each measure to be submitted, with the form in which the ballot title thereof will be printed on the official ballot. Such pamphlet shall also contain an explanation of any proposed measure, not exceeding a total of three hundred words for each, to be filed as hereinafter provided."

Section 5 thereof to be known as section 5018-5, General Code, reads:

"The secretary of state shall, at least twenty days before any such election, transmit one copy of such pamphlet to every voter in the state by mail with postage fully prepaid. If the secretary of state shall at or about the same time be mailing any other pamphlets to voters, he may, if practicable, bind the matter herein provided for and enclose any and all pamphlets under one cover. For the purpose of securing a mailing list of voters outside of cities having a registration of voters, the secretary of state shall prescribe the forms of books to be used by all local election officials in keeping a record of the postoffice address of all voters residing outside of such cities. The latest available registration lists shall be used in such cities."

Section 6 of said act to be known as section 5018-6, General Code, provides:

"When more copy is offered to the secretary of state than herein provided for, the secretary of state shall cause such additional copy to be incorporated in the pamphlet provided for in section 1 of this act, if the parties submitting such additional copy deposit with it a sum of money sufficient to pay for the printing thereof. When any constitutional amendment or other measure has been published in pamphlet form in accordance with the provisions of this act, the same shall be in lieu of any other method of advertising provided by law."

The notice given by the pamphlet as provided for in the foregoing sections "shall be in lieu of any other method of advertising provided by law."

Is the notice given by the proclamation of the sheriff to be considered as "advertising" such proposed measure or amendment?

The sheriff's proclamation of an election, such as he is authorized to make, is provided by law and not by the constitution.

Section 4824, General Code, provides:

"On the first Tuesday after the first Monday in November in the year 1912, and every four years thereafter, the qualified electors shall elect a number of electors of president and vice president of the United States equal to the number of senators and representatives this state may be entitled to in the congress of the United States. No senator or representative in congress or other person holding an office of trust or profit under the United States or any law thereof shall be eligible as elector of president or vice president."

Section 4825, General Code, provides:

"At least fifteen days before the time for holding the election provided for in the preceding section, the sheriff shall give public notice by proclamation through his county of the time and place of holding such election and the number of electors to be chosen. A copy of such proclamation shall be posted at each of the places where elections are appointed to be held and inserted in a newspaper published in the county."

These sections authorize the sheriff to issue a proclamation for the election of presidential electors. It does not apply to the present question.

Section 4826, General Code, as amended in 103 Ohio Laws, 23, provides:

"All general elections for elective state and county offices and for the office of judge of the court of appeals shall be held on the first Tuesday after the first Monday of November in the even numbered years. All votes for any judge for an elective office except a judicial office, under the authority of this state, given by the general assembly, or by the people, shall be void."

Section 4827, General Code, provides:

"At least fifteen days before the holding of any such general election, the sheriff of each county shall give notice by proclamation throughout his county of the time and place of holding such election and the officers at that time to be chosen. One copy of the proclamation shall be posted at each place where elections are appointed to be held, and such proclamation shall also be inserted in a newspaper published in the county."

These sections apply to elections of officers. They do not apply where a question is submitted to the electors.

Sections 4828 and 4829, General Code, provide for the election of congressmen and the proclamation therefor.

None of the foregoing sections authorize the sheriff to issue a proclamation in the case now in question.

Section 4840, General Code, provides:

"Unless a statute providing for the submission of a question to the voters of a county, township, city or village provides for the calling of a special election for that purpose, no special election shall be called.

> The question so to be voted upon shall be submitted at a regular election in such county, township, city or village, and notice that such question is to be voted upon shall be embodied in the proclamation for such election."

This section applies when a question is submitted to the voters of a "county, township, city or village."

The questions to be submitted under your inquiry are to be submitted to the voters of the state. They are submitted, it is true, to the voters of the county, for the counties make up the state. They are not, however, county questions which are submitted.

Section 4840, General Code, was passed before the provisions for the initiative and referendum as contained in the constitution were adopted. These questions were not in contemplation when this section was enacted.

It will be observed that by virtue of section 4840, General Code, notice of the submission of such questions as therein provided for is to be contained in the sheriff's proclamation for such election, and by section 4827, General Code, such proclamation is to be published in a newspaper in addition to being posted at each voting place.

Does this constitute advertising under section 6 of act of 103 Ohio Laws 831?

In case of Montford vs. Allen, 111 Ga., 18, Cobb, J., in delivering the opinion, on page 19, quotes from Webster's international dictionary and defines the word "advertise," as follows:

> "'Advertise' means 'to give public notice of; to announce publicly, especially by a printed notice."

This definition is quoted in volume 1, page 235, of words and phrases.

At page 1155, volume 1 of cyc., the words "advertise" and "advertisement" are defined:

> "Advertise. To publish notice of; to publish a written or printed account of.
> "Advertisement. A notice published in handbills or a newspaper."

In case of Murray vs. Auglaize county, 13 Low. Dec. 723, Mathers, J., says on page 726:

> "The court was at first inclined to believe that the publication of the commissioners' annual report was not an 'advertisement' within the meaning of that section, but that it was a notice; but upon a thorough investigation the court is satisfied that the term 'advertisement' is a generic term, and includes 'notice,' Anderson's law dictionary confirming this view, so that the legislature, in using the word 'advertisement' here, probably meant to include notice."

The sheriff's proclamation of an election has the characteristics of an advertisement. It is put up in posters and is also published in a newspaper.

The purpose of the sheriff's proclamation is to give public notice of the election. This is stated in volume 15 of cyc. at page 320:

> "The object of a proclamation is to give notice to the electors that an election will be held, and this notice lies at the foundation of any public elective system and must be given in some form in order to hold a valid election."

Also on page 321, it is said:

> "The purpose of the prescribed notice is to give greater publicity to the election, but the authority to hold it comes directly from the statute; * * *"

The constitution and the statutes required the proposed law or proposed constitutional amendment to be printed in pamphlet form and mailed or sent to each elector as far as possible. This is a method of giving notice that such law or amendment will be submitted to a vote of such electors. In fact it is a far more complete and comprehensive means of giving notice than a notice by proclamation of a sheriff.

This method of giving notice is to be in lieu of all other advertising provided by law. The notice given by the sheriff is "advertising" of such election and it is provided by law.

I am of the opinion, therefore, that the sheriff is not authorized to issue a proclamation for an election for the submission of a proposed law or constitutional amendment to a vote of the electors of the state.

Respectfully,
TIMOTHY S. HOGAN,
Attorney General.

Section 1259, Bates Revised Statutes, as it now exists, as sections 5697 and 5698 of the General Code, passed March 31, 1877 (74 O. L. 69) and which was in force at the time the transaction occurred about which you inquire, provides that the county treasurer may enforce the collection of personal taxes by instituting suits therefor, as follows:

"That when any personal taxes heretofore or hereafter levied, shall stand charged against any person or corporation, upon the tax duplicate of any county in this state, for state, county, city or any other purposes, authorized by law, and the same shall not be paid within the time prescribed by law for the payment of such taxes, the treasurer of such county, in addition to any other remedy providing by law for the collection of such personal taxes, is hereby specially authorized and empowered to enforce the lien of such taxes by commencing in any of the courts of the state having jurisdiction of the subject matter, a civil action in the name of the treasurer of such county against such person or corporation, for the recovery of such unpaid taxes; and it shall be sufficient, having made proper parties to the suit, for such treasurer to allege in his petition, that the said taxes stand charged upon the said duplicate of said county against such person or corporation, that the same are due and unpaid thereon, and that such person or corporation is indebted in the amount appearing to be due on said duplicate, and such treasurer shall not be required to set forth in this said petition, any other or further special matter relating thereto, and said tax duplicate shall be received as prima facie evidence on the trial of said suit, of the amount and the validity of such taxes appearing due and unpaid thereon, and of the nonpayment of the same, witout setting forth in his said petition any other or further special matter relating thereto; and if, on the trial of said action, it shall be found that such person or corporation is so indebted, judgment shall be rendered in favor of such treasurer so prosecuting said action as in other cases; and the judgment debtor shall not be entitled to the benefit of the laws for stay of execution or exemption of homestead, or any other property from levy or sale or execution in the enforcement of any such judgment."

Section 2862, Bates Revised Statutes, now sections 5700 and 5701 of the General Code, enacted on April 8, 1881 (78 O. L. 120), provides as follows:

"Whenever an action has been commenced, or may hereafter be commenced, against any person holding the office of county treasurer or county auditor, or other county office, for performing or attempting to perform, any duty authorized by or directed by any statutes of this state for the collection of the public revenue, such treasurer, auditor or other officer shall be allowed and paid out of the county treasury reasonable fees of counsel and other expenses for defending such action or suit, and the amount of any damages and costs adjudged against him, which said fees, expenses, damages and the costs shall be apportioned ratably by the county auditor among all the parties entitled to share the revenue so collected, and by the said auditor shall be deducted from the shares or portions of revenue at any time payable to each, including, as one of the said parties, the state itself, as well as the counties, townships, cities, villages and school districts and organizations entitled as aforesaid: provided, that in every county in which there is a county solicitor or a board of control having a solicitor to said board, it shall be the duty of the county solicitor and of the solicitor of said board of control, to take charge of and attend to all actions against any of the officers above named in such county for performing, or attempting to perform, any of the duties aforesaid; and it shall be unlawful for any of said officers in such county to employ any other counsel to defend such action or suit."

Section 2907 of Bates Revised Statutes, as it existed at the time the transaction herein inquired about occurred, and as the same now exists in sections 5756, 5757 and 5758 of the General Code, provides as follows:

"Whenever any tract or parcel of land shall be hereafter sold, under the provisions of this chapter, at forfeited sale, any person desiring to do so, may redeem the same at any time within six months from the sale thereof, by depositing with the county treasurer, as is provided in chapter seven of this title, with reference to the redemption of lands sold as delinquent, the amount of said sale, together with fifty per centum thereon, and by paying all other expenses incidental to, and arising from said sale: provided, however, that if any of said forfeited lands shall be sold for a greater sum than the tax, interest, penalty and costs, it shall be the duty of the auditor to charge said treasurer separately in each case, in the name of the supposed owner, with the excess above said tax, interest, penalty and costs; and such treasurer shall retain in the treasury of his county the said excess for the proper owner of said forfeited lands, and upon demand by such former owner, within six years from the day of such sale, pay such excess to said former owner; and in case said treasurer, upon such demand, shall not be fully satisfied as to the right of the person demanding the same to receive it or in case of different claimants, it shall be the duty of said treasurer to commence a civil action by filing a petition of interpleader, in the court of common pleas of the county where such land was sold, wherein he shall make the person or persons claiming such excess, and the state, defendants and such action shall be proceeded in as other civil actions; and, in all cases, the costs of such proceedings shall be paid by the person or persons claiming said excess, as the court shall order; and it shall be the duty of the prosecuting attorney of the county to attend to the same, in behalf of the treasury."

Said section 2907 of Bates Revised Statutes specifically requires the prosecuting attorney, in case the purchase price paid for lands sold at a forfeited land sale exceeds the accrued taxes, interest, penalty and costs—to bring the action for or on behalf of the county treasurer to determine to whom such excess shall be paid, if the treasurer is in doubt as to whom such excess should be paid.

Likewise, the county treasurer is required to collect all personal taxes even to the extent of filing suit if necessary, for the recovery of such taxes, as provided by section 2859, Bates Revised Statutes, supra, but in the last mentioned statute there is an absence of any specific provision, requiring the county treasurer to employ the prosecuting attorney, which is similar to the provision contained in section 2907, Bates Revised Statutes, supra. In construing the statutes similar to and which were in force prior to the passage of section 2859 of Bates Revised Statutes above quoted, the court in the case of state ex rel. vs. board of commissioners of Hamilton county, 26 O. S. 364, at pages 367 and 368 of the opinion, says:

"This proceeding is instituted against the board of commissioners of Hamilton county, to compel the allowance of a claim of the relator against the county for expenses incurred as attorney's fees in prosecuting sundry suits for the collection of taxes. The relator was treasurer of Hamilton county for two years, commencing September 5, 1872, and these expenses were incurred by him as treasurer, during his term.

"The first question arising in the case is, whether the allowance of a claim of this character is authorized by law.

"By section thirty-eight of the tax law of April 5, 1859 (S. & C. 1454), it is made the duty of the treasurer, when he shall be unable otherwise to collect certain taxes, to institute legal proceedings for their collection. The services in question were rendered in prosecuting proceedings under this section.

"By section four of this act of April 2, 1859, (S. & C. 1476), in case of default in the payment of taxes, it is provided, that 'the county treasurer shall proceed to collect the same by distress or otherwise, as may at the time be prescribed by law, together with a penalty of five per centum on the amount of taxes so delinquent, which penalty shall be for the use of the treasurer as a compensation for such collections.'

On the 6th of April, 1870, an act was passed limiting the compensation of certain officers in Hamilton county, and, among others, the treasurer,

"Section one declares that the fees, costs, percentages, penalties, allowances, and all other perquisites, which the officers therein named may by authorized to charge, receive and collect for official services, shall thereafter be received and collected by them respectively, to and for the sole use of the county treasury, as public moneys belonging to the county, and not otherwise, and shall be accounted for and paid over in the manner therein provided.

"The third section, after providing for the number and compensation of all deputies, clerks, bookkeepers and all other assistants employed by the several officers, declares as follows: 'The county commissioners shall allow and order to be paid as other claims against the county all other reasonable expenses necessary to the proper discharge of the duties of any of the above named officers.* * *'

"Section five prescribes the maximum annual compensation to be allowed to the several officers. This compensation is to be paid out of the county treasury, from the cost, fees, percentages, allowances, perquisites and penalties by them respectively collected, after having first deducted therefrom the amounts allowed for the payment of deputies, clerks, bookkeepers and other assistants, and the 'other necessary expenses of said officers.'

"Section seven provides, that the act shall not be construed so as to make the county or the county commissioners liable to any of the officers, of their deputies or other assistants named, 'for the payment of any salary or compensation, except out of the fees, costs, etc.' collected by such officers respectively.'

"In view of this statute and the change in the former law which it was designed to effect, we are satisfied that expenses reasonably incurred by the treasurer in employing attorneys for prosecuting suits which it is his duty to bring for the collection of taxes, come within the reasonable expenses which the commissioners are required to allow him under the act."

In the above instituted cases, the court holds in the first syllabus thereof, as follows:

"Expenses reasonably incurred as attorney fees by the county treasurer, in prosecuting suits which it is his duty to bring for the collection of taxes, come within the expenses which the county commissioners are required to allow undersection 3 of the act of April 6, 1870, limiting the compensation of certain officers in Hamilton county (67 Ohio Laws 37)."

Section 845, Bates Revised Statutes, as amended April 22, 1904 (97 O. L. page 305) provides as follows:

"(Legal counsel) Whenever the board of county commissioners of any county deems it advisable, it may employ legal counsel and the necessary assistants upon such terms as it may deem for the best interests of the county, for the performance of the duties herein enumerated. Such counsel shall be the legal advisor of the board of county commissioners and the board of control, where there is such board, and of all other county officers, of the annual county board of equalization, the decennial county board of equalization, the decennial county board of revision, and the board of review; and any of said boards and officers may require of him written opinions or instructions in any matters connected with their official duties. He shall prosecute and defend all suits and actions, which any of the boards above named direct, or, to which it or any of said officers may be a party, and shall also perform such duties and services as are now required to be performed by prosecuting attorneys under sections 799, 1277, 1278a and 3977 of the Revised Statutes, and as may at any be required by said board of county commissioners."

Section 1247, Bates Revised Statutes (now sections 2917 and 2918 of the General Code, prior to its amendment on March 31, 1906) provided as follows:

"The prosecuting attorney shall be the legal advisor of the county commissioners and other county officers, and any of them may require of him written opinions or instructions in any matters connected with their official duties; and for these services the county commissioners shall, annually, at their December session, make him such allowance as they think proper; but this section shall not apply to any county having a county solicitor."

It is to be noted that both of said sections 845 and 1274 of Bates Revised Statutes, as above quoted, were in full force and effect at the time the contract between the county commissioners of Jefferson county and the Hon. Henry Gregg was entered into on August 19, 1905. In the case of State of Ohio ex rel. vs. Commissioners of Hamilton County, 8 N. P., N. S. 281, beginning at page 285 of the opinion, the court traces the history of said sections 845 and 1274 of Bates Revised Statutes, as follows:

"The history of section 845 during such time as can possibly pertain to the present case is as follows:

"March 12, 1853, 51 vs. 422, section 7, the county commissioners were authorized to sue and be sued, and were required to demand and recover by suit or otherwise, money or property due the county. (There was no express provision for the employment of legal counsel.)

"March 30, 1868, 65 vs. 35, amendment immaterial.

"April 27, 1877, 74 vs. 133, amendment expressly authorizes county commissioners to employ legal counsel.

"The revision of 1880, section 845, amendment limits legal counsel to two and limits compensation thereof to $250.00 in any one case.

"April 8, 1881, 78 vs. 120, amendment immaterial.

"April 13, 1894, 91 vs. 142, amendment immaterial.

"April 22, 1904, 97 vs. 304, amendment provides for the employment of clerks, engineers, etc., and legal counsel who shall be the legal advisor of county commissioners and other county officers, and shall prosecute and defend all suits to which the commissioners or county officers are parties, and perform the duties of prosecuting attorneys provided in sections 799, 1277, 1278a, and 3977. (No referance to 1274.)

"May 9, 1908, 99 vs. 337, amendment provides that 'upon written request of the prosecuting attorney legal counsel may be employed' with same duties as above.

"As so amended, section 845 is now in force as follows:

"'The board of county commissioners shall be capable of suing and being sued, pleading and being impleaded, in any court of judicature; and of bringing, maintaining and defending all suits either in law or in equity involving,' etc. * * *"

"(Legal counsel) Whenever upon the written request of the prosecuting attorney, the board of county commissioners of any county deems it advisable, it may employ legal counsel and the necessary assistants upon such terms as it may deem for the best interests of the county, for the performance of the duties herein enumerated. Such counsel shall be the legal advisor of the board of county commissioners and of all other county officers, of the annual county board of equalization, the decennial county board of equalization, the decennial county board of revision, and the board of review; and any of said boards and officers may require of him written opinions or instructions in any matter connected with their official duties.

He shall prosecute and defend all suits and actions, which any of the board above named may direct, or, to which it or any of said officers may be a party, and shall also perform such duties and services as are now required to be performed by prosecuting attorneys, under sections 799, 1277, 1278a and 3977 of the Revised Statutes, and as may at any time be required by said board of county commissioners."

The history of section 1274 is as follows:

"Prior to 1880, there was no statute making the prosecuting attorney either legal advisor or legal counsel of county officers.

"The revision of 1880, section 1274: The prosecuting attorney was made the legal advisor of county commissioners and other county officers and his compensation therefor was provided.

"March 31, 1906, 98 vs. 160, amendment—prosecuting attorney shall be the legal advisor, etc., and shall perform the duties of legal counsel under section 845, and 'no county or township officer shall have authority to employ any other counsel or attorney at law at the expense of the county, except,' etc.

"As so amended section 1274 is now in force as follows:

"'Section 1274. The prosecuting attorney shall be the legal advisor of the county commissioners and all other county officers and any and all of them may require of him written opinions or instructions in any matters connected with their official duties; he shall also perform all duties and service as are required to be performed by legal counsel under section 845 and he shall further be the legal advisor for all township officers, and no county or township officer shall have authority to employ any other counsel or attorney at law at the expense of the county except on the order of the county commissioners or township trustees according as the services engaged are to be rendered for a county or township board or officer, duly entered upon its journal, in which order the compensation to be paid for legal services shall be fixed; but this section shall not be construed to affect the provisions of sections 1271 and 7196 nor to prevent any board of township trustees or any school board from employing counsel to represent them; and such counsel if employed by the township trustees shall be paid from the township fund, and if employed by the school baord, shall be paid from the school fund. * * * The statutes seem to have always recognized a differance between legal advisor and legal counsel; the former being charged with the giving of opinions and the latter with the prosecution and the defense of action. This distinction was recognized in the earliest form of sections 845,1274, 3862 and 3977, and is judicially recognized in the cases of State of Ohio vs. Stafford, 11 D., 720 (8 N. P. 470); State ex rel. vs. Taylor, 3 N. P., n. s., 505.* * *

"In order to asertain the legislative intent expressed in section 1274 as now amended and in force, it is necessary to understand the relative rights and duties of the county commissioners and prosecuting attorney, when such section was amended by making the prosecuting attorney the legal counsel of the commissioners and adding the inhibitory clause.

"Prior to that time; to-wit March 31, 1906, as will be seen from the history of sections 845 and 1274, the prosecuting attorney was the legal advisor of the county commissioners and not their legal counsel. The com- missioners had the express power unconditionally to employ and compensate legal counsel and such legal counsel if employed then became their legal advisor with many of the duties of the prosecuting attorney."

It therefore follows, under section 2859 of Bates Revised Statutes, as above quoted, that the county treasurer in case No. 7245 was within his legal rights in employing counsel other than the prosecuting attorney, and in accordance with the provisions of section 2862 B. R. S., as above quoted, such treasurer is entitled to counsel fees therefor, the same to be paid out of the county treasury. I am furthermore of the opinion, under provisions of sections 845 and 1274 of Bates Revised Statutes as they existed at the time the contract between the said county commissioners and the said Henry Gregg was entered into on August 19, 1905, that the said contract for such legal services so entered into by the said Henry Gregg and the commissioners of Jefferson county—is legal, and that the bill for the same ought to be paid by the commissioners of Jefferson county, provided they are of opinion that the amount thereof is reasonable.

Yours very truly,
TIMOTHY S. HOGAN,
Attorney General.

AN OFFICER SERVING WRITS IS ENTITLED TO MILEAGE FOR THE ACTUAL NUMBER OF MILES TRAVELED IN SERVING EACH WRIT.

Where an officer serves more than one writ in either civil or criminal cases on the same trip, he is entitled to receive mileage for the actual number of miles traveled and is to receive this mileage on each writ served.

COLUMBUS, OHIO, October 8, 1913.

HON. SAM A. HUDSON, Bureau of Inspection and Supervision of Publice Offices, Columbus, Ohio.

DEAR SIR:—I have your letter of August 12, 1913, in which you inquire:

"May a sheriff serve two writs such as subpoenas, summonses, writs of conveyance to workhouse, either in civil or criminal cases, on the same trip and charge mileage upon each of such writs?

"If you hold that mileage is limited to the distance actually traveled, how should it be taxed?

"May it be apportioned to the several writs in taxing costs?

"Bureau of Inspection and Supervision of Public Offices,
By Sam A. Hudson.

"P. S. We call attention to opinion rendered to the auditor of state, February 2, 1905, page 51, of the attorney general's report January 1905-6."

In your postscript, you refer to an opinion given by my predecessor, Hon. Wade H. Ellis, on February 2, 1905, which reads:

"HON. E. M. FULLINGTON, Deputy Auditor of State, Columbus, Ohio.

"Dear Sir:—Your communication dated January 30, 1905, in which you request a construction of section 1230b R. S., relative to the right of the sheriff of Champaign county to charge mileage on each of two writs served on William Wooley in the Ohio state reformatory at Mansfield, when both writs were served at the same time, is received. In reply I beg leave to say that while the supreme court has held in the case of Richardson vs. The State, 66 O. S., p. 111, that the 'mileage' allowed a public officer is intended to compensate him for the expense of his travel on official business and that where mileage is provided the officer is not entitled to any other compensation for personal expenses, yet there has been no decision of the court touching the question you submit. Section 1230b contains this provision:

"'For the service of every writ or summons and return therof * * * when only one defendant is named therein twenty-five cents; * * * and mileage as in other cases.'

"If mileage is claimed by the officer on both these writs it must be based upon this language contained in this provision, viz.: 'every writ or summons.' While it is true the officer makes but one trip for the service of both writs, yet if mileage is to be allowed on only one writ, we are met with the pertinent query upon which writ is it to be allowed?

"Take the instance where two subpoenas are issued in a criminal case and served upon the same person and at the same time, one on behalf of the state, and the other on behalf of the defendant. If mileage is to be allowed only for the one trip actually taken by the officer, upon which subpoena shall the milage be allowed? Manifestly, under the language of the statute just quoted the claim for mileage attaches to the one as strongly as the other and were it sought to compensate for only the miles actually traveled, it could only be accomplished by reducing the milage to one-half upon each subpoena. This, Ithink, the law would not permit. I am, therefore, of the opinion that the only construction to be placed upon the language of section 1230b, as above quoted, is to allow the statutory mileage upon both writs."

I think the conclusion reached by Mr. Ellis is correct, especially in light of the fact that the part of section 2845, G. C., applicable to your question, reads:

"In addition for the fee for service and return the sheriff shall be authorized to charge on each summons, writ, order or notice, except as otherwise specifically provided by law, a fee of eight cents per mile going and returning, provided, that where more than one person is named in such writ, mileage shall be charged for the shortest distance necessary to be traveled.

Consequently, the rule laid down by Mr. Ellis should be followed until otherwise provided by law.

Yours very truly,
TIMOTHY S. HOGAN,
Attorney General.

THE RULES AND ORDERS OF THE BOARD OF HEALTH ARE NOT WITHIN THE PROVISIONS OF THE INITIATIVE AND REFERENDUM.

The rules and orders of the board of health enacted increasing the compensation of their employes or creating positions which will involve the expenditure of public money do not come within the provisions of the initiative and referendum act.

COLUMBUS, OHIO, October 21, 1913.

Bureau of Inspection and Supervision of Public Offices, Columbus, Ohio.

GENTLEMEN:—Under date of August 6th you inquire:

> "Do rules or orders of board of health enacted previous to the recent amendment, increasing the compensation of their employes or creating positions which will involve an expenditure of public money, come under the provisions of the I. and R. law?"

I assume that you ask your question with reference to section 4227-2, General Code as found in 102 Ohio Laws 521. As you are well aware the entire initiative and referendum act as found in 102 Ohio Laws 521, was repealed and a substitute therefor enacted in 103 Ohio Laws 211.

Section 4227-2, General Code, (102 O. L. 521) provides in part as follows:

> "Any ordinance, resolution or other measure of a municipal corporation, granting a franchise, creating a right, involving the expenditure of money or exercising any other power delegated to such municipal corporation by the general assembly, shall be submitted to the qualified electors for their approval or rejection in the manner herein provided, if within thirty days after the passage or adoption of such ordinance, resolution or measure by the council, there be filed with the clerk, etc."

The second paragraph of said section provides that:

> "No resolution, ordinance or measure of any municipal corporation, creating a right, involving the expenditure of money, granting a franchise, conferring, extending or renewing a right to the use of the streets, or regulating the use of the streets for water, gas, electricity, telephone, telegraph, power or street railways, or other public or quasi-public utility shall become effective in less than sixty days after its passage, etc."

In both paragraphs of said section it is provided that a petition for referendum shall be filed with the clerk of the municipal corporation, and I have heretofore held that the person designated by "clerk" in such section means the clerk of council in cities; in villages the clerk of council is also the clerk of the corporation.

While the language "ordinance or resolution of a municipal corporation" might if given its broadest scope refer to such an order of the board of health as referred to in your question, yet the section goes on to speak of the time within which the referendum petition may be filed, to wit within thirty days after the passage or adoption of an ordinance, resolution or measure by the council. The use of such language clearly shows that the intention of the act is to apply the referendum solely to actions of council and not to those of other bodies or officers which might be considered as a part of the municipal corporation. Furthermore, the filing of a referendum petition is with the clerk of the council. For the reasons above given, I am of the opinion that the rules and orders of a board of health are not within the provisions of the initiative and referendum.

Very truly yours,
TIMOTHY S. HOGAN,
Attorney General.

A MATRON OF A COUNTY CHILDREN'S HOME OR OF AN INFIRMARY MAY NOT BE REIMBURSED FOR EXPENSES INCURRED IN ATTENDING THE CONFERENCE OF STATE OFFICIALS OF BENEVOLENT INSTITUTIONS.

Matrons are not responsible for the distribution of public funds used for the relief and maintenance of the poor, their responsibility being for the care and welfare of the inmates, and they are not within the list of those subject to invitation to the state conference of officers of benevolent institutions, and if invited, are not entitled to reimbursement for expenses.

COLUMBUS, OHIO, October 30, 1913.

Bureau of Inspection and Supervision of Public Offices, Columbus, Ohio.

GENTLEMEN:—I have your letter of June 27, 1913, in which you inquire:

> "Section 656a, R. S., provided for state conferences of officials of benevolent institutions, etc., and provided that all officers duly invited thereto should be entitled to actual expenses incurred while in actual attendance at the sessions of such conferences.
> "The codifiers carried this section into the General Code as sections 1356 and 1357, and changed the language of the last paragraph of the original section somewhat.
> "Query. May a matron of a county children's home or a county infirmary be reimbursed for expenses actually incurred under those two sections?
> "Does section 1357 authorize the state board of charities to invite to such conferences any persons or officials other than those mentioned in original section 656a, R. S.?"

Section 656a, Revised Statutes reads as follows:

> "The board of state charities may, at such times and places as they deem advisable, hold conferences of officers of state, county and municipal benevolent, penal and reformatory institutions, officials responsible for the administration of public funds used for the relief and maintenance of the poor, and boards of county visitors to consider in detail questions of management, the methods to be pursued and adopted to secure the economical and efficient conduct of such institution, the most effective plan for granting public relief to the poor, and similar subjects. All officials duly invited to such conference shall be entitled to actual necessary expenses, payable from any funds available for their respective boards and institutions, provided they procure a certificate from the secretary of the board of state charities that they were invited to and were in actual attendance at the sessions of such conferences."

Sections 1356 and 1357, General Code, read:

"Section 1356. At such times and places as it deems advisable, the board of state charities may hold conferences of the officers of state, county and municipal benevolent and correctional institutions, officials responsible for the administration of public funds used for the relief and maintenance of the poor, and members of boards of county visitors. Such conferences shall consider in detail questions of management of such institutions, the methods to secure their economical and efficient conduct, the most effective plans for granting public relief to the poor, and similar subjects.

"Section 1357. The necessary expenses of all the persons invited to such conferences shall be paid from any fund available for their respective boards and institutions provided they shall first procure a certificate from the secretary of the board of state charities that they were invited to and were in attendance at the sessions of such conferences."

The rule of construction of revised statutes is that in the absence of any change of language necessarily evincing a change of meaning or of legislative intent, the revision shall receive the same construction as the acts carried into it.

State ex rel. vs. Commissions, 36 O. S. 326.
Inst. Co. vs. McBee 85 O. S. 173.

and numerous other cases, including State vs. Toney, 81 O. S. 130, which furnishes an illustration of what may be considered a material change in a statute.

It cannot be claimed that the difference in language found in sections 1356 and 1357, from that in 656a can be held to call for a change of meaning. Consequently I think the only question left is whether the matron of a children's home is entitled to an invitation and reimbursement of expenses. This can only be solved by a construction of sections 1356 and 1357 of the General Code.

The language used as descriptive of the persons who may be invited for conference is "the officers of state, county and municipal benevolent and correctional institutions, officials responsible for the administration of public funds used for the relief and maintenance of the poor and members of boards of county visitors" which, it must be conceded does not, in terms, include matrons of children's homes.

The duties of matrons of children's home, are prescribed in section 3085 as follows:

"Section 3085, General Code. Subject to such rules and regulations as the trustees prescribed, the superintendent shall have entire charge and control of such home and the inmates therein. Upon the recommendation of the superintendent, the trustees may appoint a matron, assistant matron, and teacher, whose duties shall be the care of the inmates of the home and to direct their employment, giving suitable physical, mental and moral training to them. Under the direction of the superintendent, the matron shall have the control, general management and supervision of the household duties of the home, and the matron, assistant matron and teacher shall perform such other duties, and receive for their services such compensation as the trustees may by by-laws from time to time direct. They may be removed at the pleasure of the trustees, or a majority of them."

That this does not bring the matrons within the descriptive part of section 1356 is not debatable and I am therefore of the opinion, that because matrons are not responsible for the administration of public funds used for the relief and maintenance of the poor, their responsibility being for the care and welfare of the inmates, they are not within the list of those subject to invitation, and if invited are not entitled to reimbursement of expenses.

Very truly yours,
TIMOTHY S. HOGAN,
Attorney General.

TOWNSHIP TRUSTEES MAY NOT PAY JUSTICES OF THE PEACE, TOWNSHIP CLERKS, ETC., A REASONABLE AMOUNT FOR THE USE OF THEIR DWELLINGS AS OFFICES—NOR MAY THEY PAY RENT FOR SUCH OFFICES FROM TOWNSHIP FUNDS.

Township trustees have no statute authority to pay office rent for township clerks, justices of the peace or treasurers.

COLUMBUS, OHIO, October 29, 1913.

Bureau of Inspection and Supervision of Public Offices, Department of Auditor of State, Columbus, Ohio.

GENTLEMEN:—In yours of August 5, 1913, you ask:

"May township trustees pay justices of the peace, township clerks or township treasurers a reasonable amount for the use of their dwelling as offices?

"May said trustees pay rental charges for offices, for use of justices of the peace and other township officers, from the township funds?"

The answers to your questions are determined by an examination of the statutes relative to the subject concerning which you inquire.

If there are no express provisions of law covering such matters, and the statutes are silent thereon, then such payments cannot be made.

There is no implied authority in this state, for any person or officer to draw money from a public treasury. It is illegal to pay out or receive public funds in Ohio, unless the same is expressly provided for, or authorized, by statute. I have carefully examined the General Code relative to justice of the peace chapter 11, title 4, sections 1712, et seq.; chapters 2, 3 and 4 of division 2, title 11, sections 3268 to 3326, inclusive, relative to township trustees, clerk and treasurer; also chapter 1 of the same division and title, containing general provisions as to civil townships.

I find no authority in any statute on these subjects, authorizing the trustees to pay rent for offices for any township officers. In certain cities, the law provides that offices, fuel, etc., shall be furnished justices of the peace. They, however, are paid a salary and turn their fees into the treasury, through their clerks. The other justices receive, outside of their fees, only copies of the laws, dockets and a desk, all of which go to their successors in office. Clerks are paid a salary and fees, and nothing else. Treasurers receive a percentage on the funds paid out, and no more.

Until additional legislation is enacted, permitting township trustees to pay said rents for township officers, the same cannot lawfully be done.

Yours very truly,
TIMOTHY S. HOGAN,
Attorney General.

WHERE A VILLAGE CLERK RECEIVES COMPENSATION IN ADDITION TO HIS SALARY RECOVERY MAY BE HAD AGAINST HIM AND HIS BONDSMEN.

Where a village council in fixing the salary of the village clerk provided for an annual salary and then later council during the term for which said clerk has been elected passed a motion to allow said clerk compensation of $25.00 for each special improvement, thus compensating him in addition to his regular salary for what was considered to be extra clerical work, the amounts paid beyond the annual salary were paid without authority of law and are proper subjects of recovery against the clerk and his bondsmen.

COLUMBUS, OHIO, November 6, 1913.

Bureau of Inspection and Supervision of Public Offices, Columbus, Ohio.

GENTLEMEN:—I have your letter of October 13, 1913, in which you inquire:

> "A council of a village in fixing the salary of the village clerk, who is ex-officio clerk of council, simply provided for an annual salary, which has been paid monthly or quarterly. Council later, and during the term for which said clerk had been elected, passed a motion to allow said clerk a compensation of $25.00 for each special improvement. Thus compensating him, in addition to his regular salary, for what they considered to be extra clerical work in recording the minutes and ordinances authorizing such improvement, preparing the bonds, and serving necessary notices. Quite a large sum of money has been paid to said clerk under said motion of council. Can a finding for recovery be maintained against said clerk and his bondsmen for the public funds thus received by him?"

In reply to which I desire to say:

Section 4279, General Code, provides for the election of a village clerk as follows:

> "The clerk shall be elected for a term of two years, commencing on the first day of January next after his election, and shall serve until his successor is elected and qualified. He shall be an elector of a corporation."

The compensation of the clerk and his bond is fixed by council under authority of section 4219.

> "Section 4219. Council shall fix the compensation and bonds of all officers, clerks and employes in the village government, except as otherwise provided by law. All bonds shall be made with sureties subject to the approval of the mayor. The compensation so fixed shall not be increased or diminished during the term for which any officer, clerk or employe may have been elected or appointed. Members of council may receive as compensation the sum of two dollars for each meeting, not to exceed twenty-four meetings in any one year."

The language here used—"The compensation so fixed shall not be increased nor diminished during the term for which any officer, clerk or employe may have been elected or appointed," is plain and unequivocal.

In view of this provision, I am of opinion that the addition of $25.00 for each special improvement, to the salary of the clerk, is without authority of law, and that the amounts received by him in virtue thereof, are proper subjects of recovery against him, and his bondsmen.

Very truly yours,
TIMOTHY S. HOGAN,
Attorney General.

IT IS NOT LEGAL TO PAY THAT PART OF THE SHERIFF'S PROCLAMATION WHICH FOLLOWS THE HEADING "NOTICE TO JUDGES AND CLERKS OF ELECTIONS"—THAT PART OF THE PROCLAMATION WHICH DESIGNATES THE COUNTIES OF THE SEVERAL JUDICIAL, SENATORIAL AND CONGRESSIONAL DISTRICTS MAY BE PAID FOR—WHERE THE SHERIFF DOES NOT FURNISH A COPY OF HIS PROCLAMATION BUT AUTHORIZING THE MAKING AND PUBLICATION OF SUCH PROCLAMATION, THIS WOULD BE REGARDED AS HIS OWN ACT AND WOULD NOT IN ANY WAY AFFECT THE ELECTION.

1. The sheriff of Greene county in making his proclamation has exceeded his authority. and the payment for that part thereof which follows the said heading "Notice to judges and clerks of elections" will not be legal.

2. While that part of the proclamation which designates the counties of the several judicial, senatorial and congressional districts, and the repetition of the phrase "the state of Ohio" and "Greene county, Ohio," are undoubtedly superfluous and unnecessary, it would not be illegal to pay for their publication.

3. Where the sheriff does not furnish a copy of his proclamation for publication, but authorizes the making of such copy and adopts it as his own, this would be regarded as his own act and would not affect the election of which it gives notice.

COLUMBUS, OHIO, July 18, 1913.

Bureau of Inspection and Supervision of Public Offices, Columbus, Ohio.

GENTLEMEN:—I beg to acknowledge receipt of your letter of November 2, 1912, enclosing sheriff's proclamation of election, as published in Greene county, Ohio, and requesting my opinion upon the following questions:

"1. Is it legal to pay for that part of the said proclamation which follows the heading "notice to judges and clerks of elections," being the second column thereof?

"2. Also, whether it is legal to pay for that part of the proclamation which designates the counties of the several judicial, senatorial and congressional districts.

"3. Whether it is legal to pay for repeating the phrase 'the state of Ohio' after each officer on the state ticket, and the phrase 'Greene county, Ohio," after each officer of the county ticket.

"4. What would be the effect if in fact, it should develop that the sheriff did not furnish the copy for this proclamation, but that the same was made up by one of the newspapers?"

Answering your first question, I beg to state that the authority for the sheriff's proclamation of elections is found in sections 4825 and 4827, General Code. Section 4825 relates to the election of electors of the president and vice president of the United States, and section 4827 relates to any general election within the state, and except for these distinctions, are substantially the same. Section 4827 provides that "at least 15 days before the holding of any such general election the sheriff of each county shall give notice by proclamation throughout his county of the time and place of holding such election and the officer at that time to be chosen. One copy of the proclamation shall be posted at each place where elections are appointed to be held and such proclamation shall also be inserted in a newspaper published in the county."

Section 6252, General Code, which is to be read in connection with sections 4825 and 4827, although a consideration of that section is not necessary to a determination of the question presented here, provides that:

"Such publication shall be published in two newspapers of opposite politics at the county seat, if there be such newspaper published thereat, and in counties having cities of 8,000 inhabitants or more, not the county seat of such counties, additional publication of such notices shall be made in two newspapers of opposite politics in such counties."

Sections 4825 and 4827 make the publication of the proclamation of elections mandatory upon the sheriff of each county and expressly prescribe what such proclamation shall contain. That part of said proclamation which follows that heading "notice to judges and clerks of elections" is clearly not within the provisions of either sections 4825 and 4827, and unless included therein by implication, the payment therefor would not be legal.

I take it that the only object of the legislature in requiring the sheriff to make a proclamation of the time and place of holding elections and the officers at that time to be chosen, was to give to every elector notice of the time and places that elections are to be held and the officers to be elected, and not to instruct the clerks and judges of elections in their duties.

That part of said proclamation which follows the heading "notice to judges and clerks of elections" is merely for the purpose of instructing said judges and clerks in their duties and includes therein nearly exact copies of section 5082 to section 5091, General Code, inclusive.

The judges and clerks of elections, both in precincts where the voters are and are not registered, are appointed by the deputy state supervisors and are under their control.

Sections 4875 and 4876 provide that, the board of deputy state supervisors shall instruct the judges and clerks of elections in their duties and said sections are as follows:

"Section 4875. From time to time the board of deputy state supervisors may make and issue such rules, regulations and instructions not inconsistent with law as it deems necessary for governing and guiding the clerk, his deputies and assistants and the registrars of electors, judges and clerks of elections or other persons under the control of the board in the proper discharge of their respective offices and duties. No order, resolution or action of the board shall be valid without the vote of three of the four members.

"Section 4876. Subject to the control of the board, the clerk shall keep a full and true record of the proceedings of the board, file and preserve in its office all orders, rules and regulations pertaining to the adminstration of registration and elections, prepare and furnish, under the orders of the board, the registers, lists, books, maps, forms, oaths, certificates, instructions and blanks for the use and guidance of registrars, judges and clerks of elections and the board of canvassers; provide for timely furnishing of such officers therewith, and with the necessary supplies provided for them; to receive and keep close custody of the registers and copies returned to such office, as herein provided, of records, papers and certificates of every kind, relating to the offices or administration of the board. He shall have the care of the ballot boxes while deposited at the office of the board, and perform such other or further duties pertaining to such office and affairs as are prescribed by the board."

Although the law does not require the publication of notices to the judges and clerks of elections and of instructions relating to the duties of their office, I am of the opinion that if such publication were necessary it would be the duty of the deputy state supervisors of elections and not of the sheriff to make it, and that the sheriff of Greene county, in making the publication referred to in your letter, has exceeded his authority and that the payment for that part thereof which follows the said heading "notice to judges and clerks of election," would not be legal.

Questions number two and three are similar and can be answered together. While that part of the proclamation which designates the counties of the several judicial, senatorial and congressional districts and the repetition of the phrases "the state of Ohio" and "Greene county, Ohio," are undoubtedly superfluous and unnecessary, I am of the opinion that it would not be illegal to pay for their publication.

While it would be the wise course for every sheriff in his official publications to follow closely the forms prescribed by your bureau, it is not mandatory for him to do so. No two persons would employ the same language in stating the same thing, and since the legislature has not made it mandatory upon the sheriff to follow any prescribed forms, it has undoubtedly intended to leave to him some discretion in these matters. That part of the proclamation referred to in question No. 2 and the phrases referred to in question No. 3 undoubtedly can be said to be within the limits of section 4827 in that they make definite what officers are to be elected; and although they may be said to be superfluous and unnecessary, I do not believe that payment for their publication would be illegal.

Answering your fourth question, I will say that although it develops that the sheriff did not furnish the copy for this proclamation and that the same was made up by one of the newspapers, if he authorized the making of such copy and adopted it as his own, I am of the opinion it would be regarded as his own act, and would not in any way affect the election of which it gave notice.

Yours very truly,

TIMOTHY S. HOGAN,

Attorney General.

THE STATE IS NOT LIABLE FOR ANY PART OF THE COST OF ADVERTISING DELINQUENT LAND FOR SALE.

Under the provisions of the General Code, the state is not liable for any part of the cost of advertising for the sale of delinquent land. The same may not be charged against the proper subdivision of the county, nor is the county entitled to any reimbursement therefor from the taxing district. The county alone is obliged to bear the expense of this advertising.

COLUMBUS, OHIO, August 15, 1913.

Bureau of Inspection and Supervision of Public Offices, Department of Auditor of State, Columbus, Ohio.

GENTLEMEN:—Under date of July 9, 1913, you request my opinion as follows:

> "In accordance with the form of semi-annual settlement prescribed by the auditor of state, county auditors have, for many years past, been appropriating the cost of advertising delinquent and forfeited lands to all the funds entitled to share in the distribution of taxes collected thereon, including the state."

You then ask:

> "Is the state liable for any part of the cost in such advertising? If not, should the same be charged against the proper civil subdivisions of the county, or should it be charged to the county fund and not reimbursed by the taxing district?"

Under sections 2596, a list of the delinquent lands is taken by the county auditor from the county treasurer and returned to the duplicate to be collected by the treasurer under 2608, with their penalty, as other taxes are collected.

Under 5704, 5705 and 5706, General Code, the auditor is authorized to cause a list of delinquent lands to be advertised as therein provided, preparatory to their sale by the county treasurer, under 5711, General Code.

No where in the statute can I find any express direction with regard to the payment of the cost of advertising of such delinquent lands. The general scheme provided for the collection of such taxes, is the same as that provided for the collection of ordinary taxes. Such collection being a county activity, however, and there being an undisputed duty on the part of the county auditor to provide for such advertisement, it is clear that such expense must be borne by the county. I have been unable further to find any provision in the statute for the apportionment of this expense, either as regards the state or with respect to any of the subdivisions of the county which receive portions of the fund accruing from the sale of delinquent lands.

The procedure for the sale of forfeited lands is somewhat different. Forfeited lands are advertised for sale by the auditor, under section 5751, General Code and under section 5752, General Code, the auditor himself is required to make the sale. Section 5771, General Code, is of material interest as regards forfeited lands, to the inquiry as presented by you. This section provides as follows:

> "The county auditors shall apportion to their several funds, and pay over to the county treasurer of the proper county, the amount of moneys received from the sale of lands and town lots forfeited to the state for the non-payment of taxes."

This statute, as it now appears and as it was enacted in 102 O. L. page 280, presents a marked departure from the language of the statute as it appeared prior to this enactment. As it formerly appeared, the statute read as follows:

> "The county auditor shall apportion to their several funds and pay over to the county treasurer of the proper county, the amount of moneys received from the sale of lands and town lots forfeited to the state for the non-payment of taxes, after deducting the expense of advertising and distributing the amount to the several funds for which the taxes were originally levied. * * *"

In the statute prior to its amendment, 102 O. L., as above stated, provision was made for the deduction of the expenses of advertising. This fact probably accounts for the long established custom referred to by you with reference to forfeited lands. While this language would justify the custom as regards forfeited lands, there is not, nor can I find that there ever has been, any provisions in the statutes for such a deduction and consequent apportionment of these expenses among the state and subdivisions of the county with reference to taxes received from the sale of delinquent lands. The change in this statute with respect to forfeited lands is clear and its import unmistakable, and since this change there now exists no authority for the apportionment of such expenses in this manner.

As I have held in reference to delinquent lands, so I must conclude with respect to taxes received from the sale of forfeited lands. Both being duties incumbent upon the auditor of the county and there being no other direction prescribed by the statutes, it is clear that the expense of such advertisement must be paid from the county treasury, and since there is no provision for the apportionment of this expense to either the state or to any of the subdivisions which receive apportionments of the fund accruing from either the sale of delinquent or forfeited lands, I am of the opinion that such apportionment must not be made and that the county alone is obliged to bear the expense of advertising.

The statutes throughout these chapters, setting forth the duties of the county auditor and county treasurer and other officials having to do with the collection of taxes and the handling of funds accruing therefrom expressly provide for each step taken in the procedure and nowhere is there any authority which commits to the discretion of the auditor of state the power to describe any method of apportionment of funds in this respect.

In many instances, the legislature has taken pains to set forth that a certain deduction of collected taxes shall be apportioned to the funds entitled to receive therefrom. Thus, under section 2590, General Code, when taxes are refunded, a portion of the amount of the refunder must be deducted from the amount due the state.

Under section 2597, General Code, prior to the auditor's apportionment to the respective subdivisions of the amount due them, the fees due the treasurer must be deducted.

Under section 2624, General Code, the fees allowed to the auditor on semi-annual settlements must be apportioned and deducted accordingly from the amounts due the state and subdivisions.

Under section 2672, General Code, the expense of paying collectors of tax, employed by the county treasurer, must be apportioned ratably by the county auditor among the funds entitled to share in the distribution of such taxes. The same is true, under section 2685, General Code, of the fees apportioned upon semi-annual settlements to the county treasurer.

Since the legislature has taken the precaution to expressly provide the instances when expenses incurred in the collection of taxes are to be borne ratably by the state and other funds entitled to benefit therefrom, and since such express provision is not made as regards the cost of advertising with reference to which you inquire, it seems unquestionably that such expense is to be borne by the county, and that reimbursement therefor is not to be charged ratably against the shares of the state and the subdivisions of the county.

This view is supported by a consideration of section 2648, General Code, which requires the treasurer to publish notice of rates of taxation prior to the collection of ordinary taxes. There is no provision for the apportionment of this expense and no question has arisen as to the right of the county to expect payment of respective shares of such expense from the state and county subdivisions. I see no difference in principle between the practice of requiring the county to bear the expense of advertisement prior to the collection of ordinary taxes and the practice of requiring the county to bear a kindred expense in the collection of delinquent taxes.

I do not attempt to set forth the reasons for this policy adopted by the legislature, but a consideration of the fact that the county officials receive fees for their duties in the collection of taxes, which fees accrue to the county treasury, would seem to go some length in explaining the practice of requiring the county to bear the expense of certain parts of the procedure of collection.

I am of the opinion, therefore, that the state is not liable for any part of the cost of such advertisement and that the same may not be charged against the proper subdivisions of the county, nor is the county entitled to any reimbursement therefor from the taxation district.

Your next question is as follows:

"May a person desiring to redeem real estate (sold at delinquent or forfeited land sale) as provided in sections 5734, 5735 and 5756, be required to pay a pro rata share of the cost of advertising as 'costs' (sections 5734-5) or as 'other expenses incidental to and arising from the sale' (section 5756)?"

Sections 5734, 5735 and 5756, General Code, are as follows:

"Section 5734. A person desiring to redeem land or town lots sold at a delinquent tax sale within the year after the sale thereof, or within one year after the expiration of any of the disabilities named in the next preceding section, may deposit with the county treasurer, upon the certificate of the county auditor particularly describing and specifying such land or town lot, an amount of money equal to that for which such land or town lot was sold, and the taxes subsequently paid thereon by the purchaser, or those claiming under him, together with interest, and fifteen per cent. penalty on the whole amount paid, including costs, and one dollar to pay the expenses of advertising as hereinafter provided.

"Section 5735. A person desiring to redeem any land or town lot at a delinquent tax sale, after the expiration of one year from the sale thereof, and within the time limited by law for such redemption, may deposit with the county treasurer, upon the certificate of the county auditor, particularly describing and specifying such land or town lot, an amount of money equal to that for which such land lot was sold, and the taxes subsequently paid thereon by such purchaser, or those claiming under him, together with interest and twenty-five per cent. penalty on the whole amount paid, including costs, and one dollar to pay the expense of advertising, as hereinafter provided.

"Section 5756. When a tract or parcel of land is sold, under the provisions of this chapter, at forfeited sale, any person, desiring to do so, may redeem it, at any time within six months from the sale thereof, by depositing with the county treasurer as provided in the next preceding chapter of this title, the amount of such sale with fifty per cent. penalty thereon, and paying all other expenses incidental to, and arising from the sale."

For a proper understanding of the import of these statutes, a view of sections 5737 and 5738, providing for the reimbursement to the original purchaser by the person redeeming of the amount paid by the purchaser, is necessary.

Under said section 5737, General Code, when a party desiring to redeem, has deposited, the funds specified by said sections 5734 and 5735, with the county treasurer upon the surrender of the tax certificate by the original purchaser, said original purchaser, under section 5738, General Code, is entitled to receive all of the funds so deposited with the exception of course of the one dollar prescribed "to pay the expense of advertising as hereinafter provided," such advertisement being the notice of redemption in section 5737, General Code.

There can be no dispute that under these sections the amount of money deposited is to be received by the original purchaser and is intended to reimburse that party for the expense incurred by him in connection with the purchase and the tax sale. I can find no provision in the statutes requiring such purchaser to bear any part of the expense of advertisement of delinquent or forfeited lands as above stated and since that expense is to be borne by the county, it is clear that costs intended to reimburse the purchaser cannot by any means be presumed to include expenses borne by the county.

The procedure of section 5756, General Code, with reference to the redemption of forfeited lands is by express reference to that section patterned after the procedure with reference to the sale of delinquent lands, to wit; sections 5737 and 5738, General Code.

For the same reason, therefore, advanced with respect to the procedure of redemption of delinquent lands, I am of the opinion that the terms "all other expenses resulting to and arising from the sale" as they appear in section 5756, General Code, comprise expenses incurred by the purchaser, and by no means can be attributed to the expenses borne by the county, as I have held is the case with the advertisement of forfeited lands.

It would scarcely seem necessary to add that the expenses so incurred by the purchaser are the costs of the deed and the cost of the transfer on the books of the auditor, as prescribed by sections 2626, 5731 and 5762, General Code.

Very truly yours,
TIMOTHY S. HOGAN,
Attorney General.

WHERE THE COUNTY COMMISSIONERS HAVE CONTRACTED WITH THE CLERK OF COURTS AND PAID HIM FOR REARRANGING AND REFILING PAPERS, AND FINDINGS HAVE BEEN MADE AGAINST SUCH PERSONS, THE MONEY PAID OUT ON SUCH CONTRACTS CANNOT BE RECOVERED.

Where the commissioners of Erie county have entered into contracts with the clerk of courts for indexing certain records, and renumbering, rearranging and refiling certain papers, records, and cases in the common pleas court, and under orders from such court, and findings have been made against said parties for recovery, the money paid out on such contracts may not be recovered.

COLUMBUS, OHIO, November 14, 1913.

Bureau of Inspection and Supervision of Public Offices, Columbus, Ohio.

GENTLEMEN:—I have your letter of September 10, 1913, in which you inquire as to the validity of the contracts made between John F. Hertlein, as clerk of courts, with the commissioners of Erie county, Ohio, on July 25, 1906, and Jerome J. Stoll, also clerk of courts, with said commissioners, on July 31, 1909, for indexing certain records, and renumbering, rearranging and refiling certain papers, records and cases in the common pleas court, and under orders from such court, findings having been made against said Hertlein & Stoll for recovery, and whether recovery could be had under said findings.

Dustin J., in Stloz vs. Selz, treas., 12 O. D., 664, holds:

> "* * * The commissioners did not in fact order the clerk to do the work, but by removing the old wooden file cases and putting metal cases in their stead, they were bound, therefore, to refile them in at least as good order as they were before the change. They decided to go further and thoroughly overhaul, arrange and classify all the old records and papers. In this way, therefore, it became competent for them to contract for the work. They were obliged to rebuild what they had torn down. * * *"

This explicitly recognizes the right of the commissioners to make such contract, at least when, as in these cases, it appears to have been done in pursuance of an order of the court. Says Judge Dustin, "It was not the province of the commissioners to order it done, but the duty of the court upon its attention being called to the matter."

However, it does not appear that concurrently with the making of these contracts, or either of them, a certificate was filed that there was money in the treasury applicable to their satisfaction. This, if true, would render both contracts invalid, and the right to recover would be relegated to a consideration of the Fronizer case, and whether is was controlling or not.

In the Fronizer case a contract was made for the furnishing of material and construction of certain bridges, but no certificate as to money being in the treasury was made or filed. The claim was made that the contract was secretly made, fraudulent, for an excessive price (double value) and made by two members of the board who concealed the same from the other members and that no minute or record of the contract was made. The contracts were fully performed and the money paid thereon, $1,931.00, and suit was brought to recover the amount thereof.

The defense claimed the county had received, accepted and was still using the bridges and should not be permitted to recover the money and keep the bridges.

At the close of said opinion, 77 O. S., 18, Spear, J., says:

> "* * * Buchanan Bridge Company vs. Campbell, 60 Ohio St., 406, is cited. That case simply holds that a contract for a bridge made in violation or disregard of the statutes on the subject, is void, and no recovery can be had against the county for its value. Courts will leave parties where they have placed themselves and refuse relief. It is difficult to see that this case aids the plaintiff's contention.
> "The county should not be permitted to retain both the consideration and the bridges. And as in the case above cited, the court left the bridge company where it found it, so in this case the court leaves the county of Sandusky where it finds it."

I feel that this case precludes a recovery back of the amount paid under either of said contracts, conceding their invalidity for the reason controlling in Stolz vs. Selz, treas., and if they are not invalid for that reason, then I can see no reason for their invalidity, and in that event, no recovery might be had.

Very truly yours,
TIMOTHY S. HOGAN,
Attorney General.

THE CLERK OF COURTS MAY NOT REQUIRE PAYMENT FOR OFFICIAL SERVICES IN CIVIL CASES BEFORE SUCH SERVICE IS RENDERED. HE MAY CHARGE IN ADVANCE FOR TRANSCRIPTS MADE FOR TAKING CASES ON ERROR TO A HIGHER COURT AND FOR TRANSCRIPTS MADE FOR THIRD PERSONS.

Clerks of courts may not demand prepayment of costs in cases, as they are made or as the litigation proceeds, nor can they insist upon prepayment for transcripts for appeals in civil cases, but may do so for transcripts made for taking cases on error to a higher court, or for transcripts made for third persons.

COLUMBUS, OHIO, November 15, 1913.

Bureau of Inspection and Supervision of Public Offices, Columbus, Ohio.

GENTLEMEN:—I have your letter of November 4, 1913, in which you inquire;

> "May clerk of courts require payment for official services in civil cases before they are rendered, or as soon as they are rendered, and may he refuse to render further services until such fees are paid?
> "May the clerk of courts require the payment of fees for transcripts before delivering the same, (a) in an appeal case; (b) in a case carried to the higher court on error?"

Section 2900, General Code, formerly section 1260, Revised Statutes, insofar as applicable here, reads:

"For services hereinafter specified, when rendered, the clerk shall charge and collect the fees provided in this and the next following section and no more."

Judge Bigger in Franklin county, Ohio, common pleas court holds that the words "when rendered" cannot be construed to mean "before rendered." See State ev rel. vs. McCafferty, 6 N. P. N. S. 558, and Judge McIlvaine in Abbey vs. Fish, 23 O. S. 413 has used this language:

"It is said in argument, that officers and others entitled to taxable fees may, in all instances, demand payment in advance, and therefore it should be inferred that the legislature did not intend to secure to them any interest or equity in the judgment for costs. Whether the premise in this argument be correct, is a question of some doubt; but whether it be or not, it is quite clear that it never has been the policy of the legislature to compel prepayment in all cases, as is manifest from the many provisions made for their collection after credit given."

From the language of Judge McIlvaine, the decision of Judge Bigger, and the fact that it has been held that prepayment of costs could not be imposed as a condition precedent to entering a decree in a divorce case, it must be held to be the law of Ohio, that a clerk cannot require payment for official service in civil cases before they are rendered.

Section 12236, General Code, reads:

"Forthwith, upon the perfecting of an appeal, the clerk of the common pleas court shall make a true transcript of docket and journal entries, including the final judgment in the cause, which, with the original pleadings and other papers he shall deliver at the office of the clerk of the circuit court, not later than the first day of its next term thereafter. At his own costs, either party may require a full record of the case in the court below, to be made."

This, to my mind, places the making of transcripts for appeals in the same category with other costs in the case, and prepayment for the same may not be demanded.

Section 12264, General Code, reads:

"Probate judges, justices of the peace, and other judicial tribunals having no clerk, and the clerks of every court of record, upon request, and being paid the lawful fees therefor, shall furnish an authenticated transcript of the proceedings, containing the judgment or final order in such courts, to either of the parties or to any person interested in procuring such transcript."

This section, as I construe it, compels the clerk to furnish the transcript upon request, and upon "being paid the lawful fees" which gives him the right to demand prepayment, and to make it a condition precedent to his delivering the transcript.

To summarize, my answer is: Clerks of courts cannot demand prepayment of costs in cases, as they are made or as the litigation proceeds, nor can they insist upon prepayment for transcripts for appeals in civil cases, but may do so for transcripts made for taking cases on error to a higher court, or for transcripts made for third persons.

Very truly yours,

TIMOTHY S. HOGAN,

Attorney General.

A PERSON HOLDING AN OFFICE OF TRUST OR PROFIT BY ELECTION OR APPOINTMENT, OR AS AGENT, SERVANT OR EMPLOYE OF SUCH OFFICER OR OF A BOARD OF SUCH OFFICERS, MUST NOT BE INTERESTED IN CONTRACTS FOR FURNISHING SUPPLIES FOR THE USE OF THE MUNICIPALITY.

Where a man has been employed by a park commission of a city to look after the improvement of city parks, at a salary paid from the park fund, and is a member of a firm in the city from whom the commission desires to purchase materials for the park, it would be illegal for the commission to make purchases from this firm.

COLUMBUS, OHIO, November 6, 1913.

Bureau of Inspection and Supervision of Public Offices, Columbus, Ohio.

GENTLEMEN:—Under favor of July 11, 1913, you inquire whether when a man has been employed by a park commission of a municipality to look after the improvement of city parks, at a salary paid from the park fund, and who is a member of a firm in the city, from whom the commission desires to purchase materials for the parks, it would be legal for the commission to make purchases from such firm.

Section 12910 of the General Code, is as follows:

> "Whoever, holding an office of trust or profit by election or appointment, or as agent, servant, or employe of such officer or of a board of such officers, is interested in a contract for the purchase of property, supplies or fire insurance for the use of the county, township, city, village, board of education or a public institution with which he is connected, shall be imprisoned in the penitentiary not less than one year nor more than ten years."

I have heretofore ruled that the prohibitions of this statute extend to any agent, servant or employe who acts for such board of officers in a public capacity. The contemplated purchase would, therefore, be a clear violation of the terms of this statute and a contract so entered into would be void.

THE LORAIN COUNTY LAW LIBRARY ASSOCIATION IS NOT ENTITLED TO FINES ASSESSED AND COLLECTED IN THE CRIMINAL COURT OF LORAIN, OHIO.

Where a criminal court is established in the city of Lorain, Ohio, under special act 101 O. L., 385, and was constituted a court of record and was given jurisdiction of offense and misdemeanors under the state law, the Lorain county law library association is not entitled to the fines assessed and collected in said court, and such fines should be credited to the general revenue fund.

COLUMBUS, OHIO, November 5, 1913.

Bureau of Inspection and Supervision of Public Offices, Columbus, Ohio.

GENTLEMEN:—I have your letter of October 2nd in which you ask:

> "Under special act 101 O. L. 385, a criminal court was established in the city of Lorain, Ohio, which court was styled the criminal court, and was constituted a court of record and gave jurisdiction of offenses under city ordinances and misdemeanors under the state law.
> "Query. Is the Lorain county law library association entitled to the fines assessed and collected in said cases in prosecutions made in said criminal court? Or should said fines be deposited in the county treasury to the credit of the general fund of the county?"

The organization of police courts is provided for in sections 4567 et seq., General Code. The powers and jurisdiction thereof are specifically set forth in the statutes, but it is not believed necessary to a solution of your question to fully set them out. However, it is thought best to call attention to section 4577 which reads:

> "The police court shall have jurisdiction of, and to hear, finally determine, and to impose the prescribed penalty for, any offense under any ordinance of the city, and of any misdemeanor committed within the limits of the city, or within four miles thereof. The jurisdiction of such courts to make inquiry in criminal cases shall be the same as that of a justice of the peace. Cases in which the accused is entitled to a jury trial, shall be so tried, unless a jury be waived."

The act to which you call attention is entitled "an act to establish a criminal court in the city of Lorain, Lorain county, Ohio," and the first section thereof reads:

> "Section 1, 101 O. L. p. 385. There is hereby established in the city of Lorain, Lorain count, Ohio, a criminal court held by a judge, which court shall be styled the criminal court and be a court of record, and shall have jurisdiction of any offense under any ordinance of the said city of Lorain and of any misdemeanor committed within the limits of said city, to hear and finally determine the same and impose the prescribed penalty; but cases in which the accused is entitled to a trial by a jury, shall be so tried unless a jury is waived in writing by the accused."

Section 3056, General Code, reads:

"All fines and penalties assessed and collected by the police court for offenses and misdemeanors prosecuted in the name of the state, except a portion thereof equal to the compensation allowed by the county commissioners to the judges, clerk and prosecuting attorney of such court, in state cases, shall be retained by the clerk, and be paid by him quarterly to the trustees of such law library association, but the sums so paid shall not be less than five hundred dollars per annum, if there be such an amount. The moneys so paid shall be expended in the purchase of law books and the maintenance of such association."

It will be observed that it is "fines and penalties assessed and collected by the police court for offenses and misdemeanors prosecuted in the name of the state, except, etc." and "fines and penalties assessed and collected by the common pleas court and probate court for offenses and misdemeanors prosecuted in the name of the state," are included as those going to support of libraries.

That the court created in 101 O. L. 385, is neither a police, common pleas or probate court, and is not possessed of all the jurisdiction of either; requires neither argument nor citation; it is a different court from either of them, and cannot come within the definition of either. In fact, if it had been intended to organize this court with a view to keep it out of the provisions of section 3056, it is difficult to imagine how a better mode could have been selected, or how it could be more clearly expressed except by an exclusion in apt and unmistakable language.

In my opinion there is no right to pay fines and the like collected by the Lorain criminal court into the library fund, and they must, therefore, go into the general fund.

Very truly yours,
TIMOTHY S. HOGAN,
Attorney General.

A CITY COUNCIL MAY NOT ENACT A SUPPLEMENTARY APPROPRIATION INCREASING THE AMOUNT APPROPRIATED IN THE REGULAR SEMI-ANNUAL APPROPRIATING ORDINANCE—WHERE AN APPROPRIATION FOR FURNITURE AND FIXTURES BECOMES EXHAUSTED, THE AMOUNT APPROPRIATED IN THE REGULAR ORDINANCE FOR SUCH PURPOSE MAY NOT BE INCREASED.

1. The city council may not legally enact supplementary appropriations increasing the amount appropriated in the regular semi-annual appropriating ordinance.

2. If the particular subject is not contained in the regular appropriating ordinance, council may with certain restrictions legally pass a supplementary ordinance making specific appropriations for such subject.

3. The mere fact that an item may not have been provided for in the budget of the administrative officer, as revised by council for its own purposes, at the time of making up the tax levying ordinance, does not of itself preclude council from making a subsequent appropriation for that purpose, either at the time of making the regular semi-annual appropriation or at a subsequent date.

4. If an appropriation for furniture and fixtures becomes exhausted, council may not legally pass a supplementary appropriation for a desk for such office, thus indirectly increasing the amount appropriated in the regular ordinance for furniture and fixtures.

COLUMBUS, OHIO, September 19, 1913.

Bureau of Inspection and Supervision of Public Offices, Department of Auditor of State, Columbus, Ohio.

GENTLEMEN:—Your letter of August 7th, receipt whereof is acknowledged, is in full as follows:

> "1. May city councils legally enact supplementary appropriations increasing the amount appropriated in the regular semi-annual appropriating ordinance?
> "2. If the particular subject is not contained in the regular appropriating ordinance may council legally pass a supplementary ordinance making specific appropriation for said subject?
> "3. If said item so provided for in the supplementary ordinance had been included in the estimate of the administrative officer and refused by council may council later in the period make specific appropriation for the particular subject not appropriated for in the regular ordinance?
> "4. If an appropriation for furniture and fixtures has become exhausted, may council legally pass supplementary appropriation for desk for said office, thus indirectly increasing the amount previously appropriated in the regular ordinance for furniture and fixtures? (See attorney general's opinions dated March 2, 1910 and May 24, 1911.)"

I have considered the opinion of my predecessor, to which you refer, and that of my own, and have reached the conclusion that both of them ought to be modified in certain respects. In them the broad conclusion is stated that no appropriation can be made by a municipal council after the passage of what is known as the semi-annual appropriating ordinance. This conclusion is, in my judgment too broad and requires qualification.

The sections of the General Code, the interpretation of which is involved in each of your four questions are as follows:

> "Section 3787. On or before the first Monday in March of each year the several officers, boards and departments in each municipal corporation, shall report an estimate, in itemized form, to the mayor and auditor, or clerk, of the corporation, stating the amount of money needed for their wants for the incoming year and for each month thereof.
> "Section 3790. To enable the mayor to make up his annual budget, each director or board and each officer, provided for in this title, on or before the last Monday in March of each year, shall make and file with the mayor, and also with the auditor, a carefully prepared and itemized estimate of the amount of money needed in such department or office for all purposes for the ensuing fiscal year, such estimate to be given for each month.
> "Section 3791. On the first day of April of each year the mayor shall submit to council the annual budget of current expenses of the municipality, any item of which may be reduced or omitted by council, but the council shall not increase the total of such budget. In the making of the annual budget, the mayor may revise and change any and all items in the annual estimates furnished for him by the directors and officers as herein prescribed, but shall not increase the total of any such estimate when including it in his annual budget to council. On such date, and at such other times as he deems expedient, he shall report to council concerning the affairs of the corporation, and make such recommendations to council as he deems proper for the welfare of the municipality.

"Section 3793. The council shall examine and revise each annual budget submitted by the mayor. After it has determined by ordinance the percentage to be levied for the several purposes allowed by law upon the real and personal property in the corporation returned on the grand duplicate the levies shall be submitted by the council to the board of tax commissioners, which board shall examine and return them, as provided by law, with such suggestions and recommendations as it deems proper.

"Section 3794. On or before the first Monday in July, each year, council shall cause to be certified to the auditor of the county, the rate of taxes levied by it on the real and personal property in the corporation returned on the grand duplicate, who shall place it on the tax list of the county in the same manner as township taxes are by law placed thereon. The ordinance prescribing the levy shall specify distinctly each and every purpose for which the levy is made and the per cent. thereof, and if he finds that the tax levy so certified to him exceeds the aggregate limit allowed by law, the county auditor shall not place it on the tax list, and the levy for such municipal corporation shall not be valid or collectible against any real or personal property in the corporation. * * *

"Section 3795. The taxes of the corporation shall be collected by the county treasurer and paid into the treasury of the corporation in the same manner and under the same laws, rules and regulations as are prescribed for the collection and paying over of state and county taxes. The corporation treasurer shall keep a separate account with each fund for which taxes are assessed, which account shall be at all times open to public inspection. * * * Unless otherwise provided by law, no money shall be drawn from the treasury except upon the warrant of the auditor or clerk pursuant to the appropriation by council.

"Section 3797. At the beginning of each fiscal half year, the council shall make appropriations for each of the several objects for which the corporation has to provide, or from the moneys known to be in the treasury, or estimated to come into it during the six months next ensuing from the collection of taxes and all other sources of revenue. All expenditures within the following six months shall be made from and within such appropriations and balances thereof.

"Section 3800. In making the semi-annual appropriations and apportionment herein required, council may deduct and set apart from any moneys, not otherwise appropriated, such sum as it deems proper as a contingent fund to provide for any deficiency in any of the detailed appropriations, which may lawfully and by any unforeseen emergency happen. Such contingent fund or any part thereof may be expended for any such emergency only by ordinance passed by two-thirds of all the members elected to council, and approved by the mayor. Any balance remaining in such contingent fund at the end of the fiscal year shall thereupon become a part of the general fund, to be again appropriated as other moneys belonging to the corporation. This section shall not interfere with the provisions of law authorizing the transfer of funds by the court of common pleas.

"Section 5649-3d. At the beginning of each fiscal half year the various boards mentioned in section 5649-3a of this act shall make appropriations for each of the several objects for which money has to be provided, from the moneys known to be in the treasury from the collection of taxes and all other sources of revenue, and all expenditures within the following six months shall be made from and within such appropriations and balances thereof, but no appropriation shall be made for any purpose not set forth in the annual budget nor for a greater amount for such purpose than the total amount fixed by the budget commissioners, exclusive of receipts and balances."

(As to the application of the last quoted section, which is one of those constituting the so-called Smith one per cent. law, there may be a question whether the council of a municipal corporation, which is mentioned in section 5649-3a, is a "board" within the meaning of section 5649-3d. However, this question is only indirectly involved in the answer to your specific question, and in previous opinions of this department, and in general practice, the application of the appropriation provisions of the Smith law to municipal corporations has been generally conceded. Therefore, for the purpose of this opinion section 5649-3d will be assumed to be applicable to the council municipal corporations.)

It seems to me that your third question is the most fundamental of those which you ask, in that it involves the operation and effect of the first group of sections above quoted to the exclusion of the other questions asked by you. Therefore, I shall consider it first.

A fundamental question is here presented involving the theory of the separation of powers into legislative and executive or administrative. It is to be observed that in the machinery of government under our Municipal Code, the executive department thereof, which may be termed the administration, prepares, as the first step in the operation of its fiscal machinery, a budget. This budget is made up by the mayor or head of the administration with the assistance of all his subordinates and the other elective officers of the municipality. These other officers are required to submit estimates to the mayor, setting forth in detailed form their probable needs for the next succeeding year which is to begin, say, ten months after the date of the estimate. The mayor is given authority to revise these estimates in making up his budget and may increase the amounts asked for specific purposes, just so he does not increase the total of an estimate submitted by any one officer. Thus, if the director of public safety estimates that in the succeeding year his department will need ten thousand dollars for the compensation of all members of the police force, itemizing each salary item, and ten thousand dollars for salaries of the fire department, and five thousand dollars for general salaries of the department of public safety, then an aggregate of twenty-five thousand dollars for contingent expenses, materials, apparatus, repairs, etc., for the department, making a total of fifty thousand dollars for all, the mayor may increase any salary of any position in the police department, or he may increase the item of police department salaries as an entirety. He may decrease any item anywhere in the estimate. In fact he may change the figures as he pleases, provided he does not change the total of fifty thousand dollars, which is the "total of any such estimate" referred to in section 3719, supra.

In this manner, then, the mayor makes up his "annual budget." For what purpose then, is this done? The answer is suggested by the provisions of section 3793, General Code. Council is to "examine and revise" the annual budget, and under section 3791 may take any liberties with it excepting to increase its total. Council then proceeds to determine the rates of levy for the different funds of the corporation, and in so levying it is not limited by any provision of law save as to the aggregate amount of the budget. In fact the "examination and revision" of the budget by council is with this exception a mere formality. Council might, if it chooses, ignore the mayor's budget entirely, save as to the total in estimating the rate of tax necessary to provide for the corporation's needs during the ensuing year.

I realize that this is a radical statement in view of the underlying spirit of the Municipal Code. Nevertheless, I believe it to be strictly accurate. The right to levy taxes is of the essence of legislative power. While it would be perfectly constitutional, perhaps, for the general assembly to vest local functions connected with levying taxes in administrative officers as it does in the case of township trustees and county commissioners who are in no sense legislative functionaries, yet under a code or plan of government providing as to sections 4206 and 4215, General Code, that the legislative power of a municipality shall be vested in and exercised by council; and further providing by sections 4246 and 4248, General Code, for the vesting of executive power in other designated officers, it must be assumed that the makers of the Code used these words in their exact sense. Therefore, in the fundamental view of the case the power to determine what taxes shall be levied is prima facie vested in council as the legislative body. This impression is in no wise weakened by consideration of the sections above quoted and discussed.

Section 3793, General Code, which provides for council's part in the scheme of levying taxes, does limit the council by express words to the gross amount of the mayor's budget as the amount which may be made the basis of the tax levy, but not otherwise.

In short, I am of the opinion that the duties of the mayor and his subordinates, in the preparation of the so-called "budget" are largely advisory. Council is entitled to the discharge of these duties in order to be possessed of the necessary information upon which to act in the exercise of its legislative power, but the detailed conclusions of the mayor are not binding upon the council in levying by O. K., for its own convenience merely. If in "revising" the budgets it eliminates an item therefrom, that is a mere matter of convenience which is not binding upon council itself with respect to its final action. The revision is merely for the purpose of enabling council to compute what the net result would be, for example, if more money than allowed by the mayor were raised for one purpose and perhaps less for another.

All of this so-called "budget machinery" has nothing whatever to do directly with the matter of appropriation. It all relates to the levying of taxes. Council is to determine the rate necessary for each of the purposes allowed by law. There may be as many purposes in logic as there are different estimates in the mayor's budget, for example, and as council may, in its wisdom, determine within the scope of the objects allowed by law. I understand, however, that your bureau has prescribed a general form of tax levy for municipal corporations contemplating the making of five specific levies, viz.: service, safety, health, general and sinking fund. This is a mere matter of convenient accounting. The result of it, however, is to provide five "funds" in the manner described in section 3795. That is to say, if council levies a rate of one mill for "service," the proceeds of that levy, together with the miscellaneous revenues of the service department, become the "service fund."

Now the council passes its levying ordinance sometime between the first day of April and the first Monday in July, having submitted it in the meantime to the board of tax commissioners—except that by virtue of section 5649-3a this ordinance probably must be certified to the auditor of the county on or before the first Monday in June instead of on or before the first Monday in July as prescribed by section 3794.

After such revision of the levies is made effective through the agency of the budget commission, which also has such revisionary power in order to enforce, if necessary, the limitation of the Smith one per cent. law, without power, however, to increase the amount of any item, the rates specified in the ordinance or, conversely, the amounts produced by such rates as revised by the budget commission, are again certified to the county auditor, whose duty it is to compute the rate necessary to produce the amounts as so revised, and to extend them on the duplicate of the property of the city. This act may take place at any time after the convening of the budget commission and up to the first of October, when the duplicate is supposed to be delivered to the county treasurer for collection of taxes. The first half of the taxes is collected in the succeeding December and distributed at the next February settlement.

In the meantime the fiscal year for which the taxes were levied, and for which the mayor's budget was made up, has begun, and on the first of January, that being the "beginning of the fiscal year," council is ready to appropriate. In making this appropriation at this time council is subject to such checks upon the exercise of its general legislative power as are set forth in the statutes and no other. These checks are as follows:

1. The appropriation must be limited to the money actually in the treasury from the proceeds of taxation and all other sources of revenue. That is to say, if there is in the treasury to the credit of the service fund, for example, a certain gross amount of money, the aggregate appropriation for purposes within the purview of the service fund must not exceed that sum.

2. If the "budget" of council, i. e. the thing certified by it to the county auditor, is particularized by items, then the appropriation of moneys raised by taxation may not exceed, as to such items, singly or in the aggregate, the amount so specified. That is to say, if council instead of certifying to the county auditor an estimate for the service fund as such, chooses to itemize the needs of the service fund (which is not the practice) then no single appropriation or aggregate of appropriation on any such item as fixed by council may be made in excess thereof from the proceeds of the levy for that purpose. But if there are available in the service fund moneys arising from other sources of revenue than taxation, such other moneys if available for the specific purpose may be appropriated in addition to the returns from taxation.

These are all the limitations upon the power of council to appropriate, save only the general limitation that the appropriation must be for some object for which the municipal corporation may lawfully provide money, and that an appropriation from a fund must be for a purpose within the proper purview of that fund. The word "budget," as used in the Smith one per cent. law does not mean the same thing as the "mayor's budget" referred to in the sections of the Municipal Code now under consideration.

When council passes its levying ordinance it adopts a new budget, presumably based upon the mayor's budget, but in nowise limited by it. But the budget of council consists merely of an estimate of the needs of the various funds in the aggregate. The particular items within these funds which will eventually become appropriation accounts need not be specified.

It follows, therefore, that when council is appropriating at the "beginning of the semi-annual period" it may, subject to the limitation hereinbefore described, set aside money from the proceeds of taxation and other sources of revenue at the time available for any lawful purpose within the purview of a particular fund, whether or not that purpose is one specified in the mayor's budget, and regardless of the action of council at the time the mayor's budget was presented to it by way of "revising" the same. In short, though council may have rejected an item in the mayor's budget for its own purpose in making up the levy, yet it has not thereby precluded itself from subsequently, at the time of making the semi-annual appropriation, providing for the rejected purpose.

The conclusion thus reached is strengthened by consideration of the provisions of section 4526, General Code, relating to the powers and duties of the trustees of the sinking fund as a board of tax commissioners. The section in full is as follows:

> "Upon receipt of the levies made by the council, as provided by law, the board of tax commissioners shall consider them and within ten days after such receipt shall return them to the council with its approval or rejection, and, in case of rejection giving its reasons therefor. It may approve or reject any part or parts thereof, and the parts rejected by such board shall not become valid unless the council of such municipality shall thereafter, by three-fourths vote of all members elected thereto, adopt such levy or part thereof. If the board of tax commissioners approve such levies, or if it neglects to return them with its approval or rejection within such ten days, they shall be valid and legal. In no case shall the board of tax commissioners have authority to increase such levy."

So far as I have been able to ascertain this is the only section in which any positive check upon the full exercise of the legislative power of council in making tax levies is imposed. The section expressly states the consequences of the rejection by the board of any part of any levy. Even in the event of such rejection council it not deprived of such authority to levy as to such purpose except that the authority must be exercised by a three-fourths vote of all members elected to the council.

If it had been the intention of the general assembly in enacting the Municipal Code to give to the mayor's budget an effect similar to the action of the board of tax commissioners, such intention would have been expressed, in my judgment, in language as direct as that found in the section last above quoted.

What has been said thus far relates only to the power of council to ignore the determination of the administration in its budget and its own prior action in connection with the levying of taxes at the time it makes the appropriation. My opinion is that the power exists. From this point the answer to your third question is to be developed along lines identical with those involved in answering your first two questions.

The question now arises as to what is meant by the phrase "at the beginning of each fiscal half year" as used both in section 3797 and section 5649-3d, General Code.

In my opinion this provision is directory merely. In the first place it is not definite—that is to say, there is no time limit fixed by law, after which, in any fiscal half year, an appropriation for that half year may not be made. Therefore, I am of the opinion that the word "beginning" is of no mandatory effect whatever, and that council may at any time within the fiscal half year appropriate for the needs of that period in a given particular.

In the second place there is nowhere in the statutes found any provision from which it can be inferred or implied that the appropriations of council must all be included in a single ordinance. Council may pass one, two or a dozen appropriating ordinances without violating any of the provisions of the related statutes, and in strict execution of the power therein conferred upon it. This seems to be clear. Council is required and authorized merely to "make appropriations." Each appropriation may be a separate and distinct legislative act if it is so desired.

From this it naturally follows that the various "appropriations" may be made at different times. The mere fact that council has made one appropriation at its first meeting in the half yearly period does not, in my judgment, so fix the "beginning" of that period as to preclude council from making another appropriation at a subsequent date.

As at matter of course, however, the later one made is operative only for the remainder of the half yearly period, or if that period be the remainder of the first half of the year, for the remainder of the whole year.

Both of the sections pertaining to the making of appropriations require that all expenditures shall be made from and within the appropriations and balances thereof. This is equivalent to a limitation to the effect that no expenditure shall be made in excess of the appropriations and their balances. In the light of what has already been said this language requires some interpretation.

I am of the opinion that it means that no expenditure for a purpose within the purview of a given appropriation may be made in excess of the sum appropriated. That is to say, if council has exercised its legislative discretion in setting aside from a certain fund an amount for a definite purpose then all expenditures within the purview of that purpose must be made from that appropriation account, and the balance remaining over at the end of the half yearly period. But if council has failed to make any appropriation, the purpose of which includes a given expenditure, and there is money in the fund, then at a date subsequent to the making of other appropriations council may lawfully appropriate for the payment of obligations of this sort.

In this connection it is perhaps necessary to consider the meaning of the statute relating to the setting aside of a contingent fund. It is not necessary to quote this statute. Suffice it to say that it authorizes council to set aside an amount for the purpose of meeting deficiencies in the detailed appropriation which may by any unforeseen emergency arise. It will be observed that under this provision it is essential to the lawful expenditure of the contingent fund in the manner provided in the statute, that the deficiency exists in an appropriation account already created. If the required expenditure is of such a nature as to not be included within the purview of any of the appropriations theretofore made it is not a deficiency in a detailed appropriation account and, therefore, cannot be met out of the contingent account.

While, therefore, all of the related sections must be liberally construed as an expression of the legislative will that the public moneys belonging to the municipal corporation shall be appropriated in advance and expended with extreme care, and under strict limitations, it is apparent that if it be held that council has no authority to make appropriations for objects not included in the detailed appropriations already made, there being money in the fund at the time, such objects though lawful in the sense that the municipal corporation as such may provide for them, cannot be met at all during the half yearly period.

For, by virtue of section 3806, General Code, construed in connection with the appropriation sections, no contract involving the expenditure of money can be entered into by the municipal authorities unless there is money to the credit of the fund from which the expenditure is to be made, appropriated for that purpose, or for a general purpose inclusive of that specific purpose. Hence, the municipal officers would be without authority to enter into a contract for the making of the proposed expenditure, however necessary, in the absence of an appropriation.

Furthermore the statutes relating to the power to borrow money by a municipal corporation, while very liberal, do not authorize the exercise of the power for the purpose of meeting the current expenses of the municipality, save by vote of the people. All of these considerations make it apparent that unless council be held to have authority to make an appropriation for an overlooked object at a date subsequent to the making of the usual semi-annual appropriation ordinance no expenditures within the purview of that object may lawfully be made or contracted for until the new half yearly period. So to hold might, in a conceivable case, seriously interfere with the operation of the municipal government.

These considerations, then, though not admissible by themselves to support the conclusion which I have reached, may properly be taken into account in connection with the more direct reasons already adverted to, as supporting the conclusion already stated. That is to say, a fair construction of the sections already quoted on their face indicates that council is not bound by the details of the so-called "budget" submitted to it by the administrative officers of the city in making its appropriations; that council is not bound by the budget which it submits to the county auditor save with respect to the purposes therein mentioned, which in practice are likely to be very general in their nature; that council is not bound to make its appropriation for a half yearly period in one ordinance, nor to pass the appropriating ordinances on the same day.

The conclusion reached by consideration of the primary meaning of the statutes involved is not militated against by any considerations of inconvenience or public policy, but on the contrary all such considerations support it.

Your particular questions, then, may be answered as follows:

Your first question must be answered in the negative. I interpret your question as meaning an inquiry as to whether or not a city council having appropriated a definite sum for a specific purpose may, at a subsequent date, appropriate another sum for the same purpose. For reasons already pointed out, I am of the opinion that this may not be done.

Your second question must be answered in the affirmative, with certain qualifications. That is to say, if the detailed appropriations made by council in one or more so-called "regular appropriating ordinances" fail to include within their scope all of the objects for which the corporation lawfully may provide money, then the council, at a date subsequent to the passage of such "regular appropriating ordinance" may legally make an appropriation for this purpose, provided the purpose itself is within the purview of the purposes of the fund from which it is to be set aside; the purview of the fund, in turn, being determined, not by the provisions of the "budget" prepared by the administrative officers and submitted to council for its revision but by the terms of the thing of the same name, viz.: the "budget" submitted by council to the county auditor for the use of the budget commission. For illustration, if the council submits to the auditor a statement merely of the amounts deemed by it necessary to be levied for the sinking fund and interest, service, safety, health and general purposes of the municipality, there being no other details, then the amounts allowed by the budget commission are separable into these funds and these only, and any specific purpose within the fair purview of the general fund may become the subject of a subsequent appropriation. But if the estimate submitted by the council to the budget commission is in greater detail and mentions a specific purposes instead of the general purposes of the various "funds" created for the sake of convenience, then any such specific purpose in order to be the subject of a lawful appropriation, must, so far as the returns from taxation are concerned, be within the purview of one of the objects mentioned in the council's budget. This does not, of course, apply to the expenditure of revenues other than those received from taxation.

With the qualifications just made, then, I am of the opinion that if a particular subject is not contained in the "regular appropriating ordinance" council may legally pass another ordinance of subsequent date (whether the same be designated as "supplementary" or not) making a specific appropriation for that subject.

The answer to your third question has already been suggested by the discussion in which I have indulged myself. The mere fact that an item may not have been provided for in the budget of the administrative officer, as revised by council for its own purposes, at the time of making up the tax levying ordinance, does not of itself preclude council from making a subsequent appropriation for that purpose, either at the time of making the regular semi-annual appropriation or at a subsequent date.

Your fourth question is clearly a specific application of your first question. An appropriation for "furniture and fixtures" amounts to a legislative determination by the council that all expenditures for furniture and fixtures for the particular office designated shall be made from and within the amount set aside. If council were subsequent to pass another appropriation for a desk for the same office, such action would not constitute appropriating for an object omitted from the earlier ordinance, but would constitute an attempt to increase a specific or detailed appropriation already made, which, for reasons already stated cannot lawfully be done.

Yours very truly,
TIMOTHY S. HOGAN,
Attorney General.

JUDGES OF ELECTIONS IN THE CITY OF CINCINNATI ARE NOT ENTITLED TO MILEAGE IN MAKING RETURNS OF THE ELECTION—DEPUTY CLERK AND ASSISTANTS ARE NOT ENTITLED TO EXTRA COMPENSATION IF THEY ARE RECEIVING THE MAXIMUM COMPENSATION ALLOWED BY LAW.

1. The presiding judges in the city of Cincinnati, which is also the county seat, are not entitled to mileage in delivering election returns under section 5043, General Code.

2. Where a deputy clerk of elections and assistant clerks are receiving the maximum compensation allowed by law, there is no authority to exceed this maximum. The compensation is fixed by the month and not on a per diem basis, and extra work done cannot be taken into consideration. Extra allowances are not authorized by law.

COLUMBUS, OHIO, November 6, 1913.

Bureau of Inspection and Supervision of Public Offices, Columbus, Ohio.

GENTLEMEN:—Under date of October 29, 1913, you state:

> "Enclosed please find copy of letter from state examiners, C. E. Brotten and M. Blau, making certain inquiries as to the mileage of judges of elections in registration cities, also payment of extra salary to certain deputy and assistant clerks of the board."

In the letter enclosed it is stated:

> "In regard to the mileage and fees paid to presiding judges of elections, in the city of Cincinnati.
>
> "The question arises as to whether or not judges of election in registration cities may legally be paid a fee of five cents per mile for delivering returns.
> "In going over the accounts of the board, I find that F. A. R., deputy clerk, J. K., E. A., and J. E. J., assistant clerks are each paid the sum of $50.00 for an allowance to cover work done at night, and to reimburse them for meals while performing such extra services.
> "In the case of Mr. R., I know personally that ten times this amount would not compensate him for the extra work performed, but we are up against the proposition how an extra allowance can be made when he is receiving the maximum fixed by statutes for such services, the same thing applies to the assistant clerks."

Section 5043, General Code, to which reference is made in the letter attached, provides:

"The judge of elections called by the deputy state supervisors to receive and deliver ballots, poll books, tally sheets and other required papers, shall receive two dollars for such services, and, in addition thereto, mileage at the rate of five cents per mile to and from the county seat, if he lives one mile or more therefrom.

"The judge of elections carrying the returns to the deputy state supervisors, and the judge carrying the returns to the county or township clerk, or clerk or auditor of the municipality, shall receive like compensation.

"In cities where registration is required, the chairman selected at the meeting for organization shall receive one dollar for calling for the sealed package of ballots."

The question has been raised as to what constitutes a "county seat" as used in the foregoing section.

Attention has been called to the citation in 7 Am. and Eng. Enc. of Law, second ed., page 1013, wherein a county seat is defined, as follows:

"A county seat may be defined as the seat of government of a county; the town or municipality in which the county and other courts are held, and where the county officers have their offices, and where the county business is transacted.

"When a city or town is selected as the county seat, the boundaries of such city or town, as they then exist, become the boundaries of the county seat, and the subsequent inclusion of more territory in such city or town does not enlarge the county seat."

In support of the second proposition contained in the above citation, three cases are cited, to wit: State vs. Smith, 46 Mo. 60; State vs. Harwi, 36 Kan. 588 and State vs. Atchison County, 44 Kan. 186.

These cases have been examined. The leading case is that of State vs. Smith, 46 Mo. 60, which is cited and followed in State vs. Harwi, 36 Kan. 588.

In the Missouri case the question was as to the right of the county court to remove the clerk's office, or the "seat of justice" from the territory originally selected as the county seat to a subsequent addition to the municipality wherein the county seat was located.

On page 64, the court says:

"The commissioners are then to make report of their proceedings, accompanied by such deeds and abstracts, to the circuit court of the county at its next term; and if the court approve the title, it shall cause the decision to be certified to the tribunal transacting county business, and the title of the land so conveyed vests in the county, and the place selected shall be the permanent seat of justice thereof. (Wagn. Stat. 395-6, secs. 6-8.)"

It appears therefore that this case was decided upon the terms of the statutes of Missouri.

This case was decided in 1870 and in 1875 a new constitution was adopted, and it was specifically provided in section 2 of article 9, thereof, that "all additions to a town which is a county seat shall be included, considered and regarded as part of the county seat."

This was a modification of the former constitution and it is fair to assume that this provision was inserted to annul the effect of the decision in State vs. Smith, supra.

In the two Kansas cases the question was as to the right of the county commissioners to remove the county buildings from the original site selected as the county seat, to a subsequent addition thereto. The selection of the county seat in these cases was made by vote of the electors. In each of the three cases cited the business section of the town had changed to the new additions.

In each of the above cases the court held that the removal could be made in the manner provided by statute.

The foregoing cases are not in point as to the present question. We are not now concerned with the removal of county buildings or county offices.

It appears from the letter enclosed that the county seat of Hamilton county was established by Alexander Hamilton in 1790 at Losantiville, which cite is now but a few squares in the city of Cincinnati.

Section 5043, General Code, was first enacted in 89 Ohio Laws 452, which was considerably later than 1790. When this section was first enacted the legislature evidently had reference to the municipality wherein the business of the county was carried on and generally known as the county seat. The term "county seat" as used in section 5043, General Code, still has reference to the territory of such municipality and any additions thereto.

The right to draw mileage should be clearly expressed and should not be founded upon a technical construction of the term "county seat."

Therefore, any person living within the boundaries of the municipality known as the county seat, is not entitled to mileage under section 5043, General Code.

In connection with this question it might be well to call attention to the following provision of section 4944, General Code:

> "* * * In registration cities having a population of three hundred thousand or more by the last preceding federal census, the judges of election, including the registrars as judges and clerks of election, shall each be allowed and paid ten dollars for each general election and five dollars for each special election, at which they serve and no more, either from the city or county."

In the second question it appears that the deputy clerk and the several assistant clerks are receiving the maximum compensation allowed by law and that $50.00 in addition has been paid them for extra work and meals.

Section 4877, General Code, as amended in 103 Ohio Laws, 544, provides; in part:

> "When necessary, the board may employ a deputy clerk and one or more clerks as temporary assistants of the clerk at a salary of not to exceed the rate of one hundred dollars per month each and prescribe their duties. * * *"

This section fixes the maximum amount to be paid the deputy clerk and the assistant clerks. There is no authority to exceed this maximum. The compensation is fixed by the month and not upon a per diem basis. So extra work done at night cannot be taken into consideration.

A part of the excess payment is for meals. The amount for meals is not specified. It is not good policy to charge the public for meals which are taken in the place of an employe's regular employment. In the present case it is presumed that the meals were taken in the employe's home town.

I am of opinion, therefore, that the extra allowance to the deputy clerk and assistant clerks was not authorized by law.

Respectfully,
TIMOTHY S. HOGAN,
Attorney General.

WHERE A COUNTY TREASURER'S TERM EXPIRED ON LABOR DAY, AND HE HOLDS OVER UNTIL THE FOLLOWING DAY, THE SALARY OF EITHER THE TREASURER OR HIS SUCCESSOR WOULD NOT BE AFFECTED BY THE FACT THAT THE OUTGOING TREASURER HELD THAT OFFICE ONE DAY AFTER HIS TERM HAD EXPIRED.

An outgoing county treasurer's term expired on Labor Day and the change was made the day after. The holding over for one day under the circumstances must have been done with the tacit consent of both officers, and the compensation for this office being an annual salary, the manner in which the change was made would not affect the salary of either the outgoing or the incoming treasurer.

COLUMBUS, OHIO, November 5, 1913.

Bureau of Inspection and Supervision of Public Offices, Columbus, Ohio.

GENTLEMEN:—I have your letter of October 21, 1913, in which you state:

> "The term of a county treasurer expired the first Monday of September, 1906. He was elected to succeed himself, and received the appointment as treasurer for the year ending September 1, 1907, when he began his second term, which ended the day preceding the first Monday of September, 1909. That being Labor Day the county commissioners did not appear to perform their duties under sections 2404, 2684 and 2700, and therefore the treasurer did not surrender his office until the following day. The treasurer elected had given bond which had been accepted by the board of county commissioners, and had taken the oath of office, and presented himself at the office of the county treasurer prepared to assume his duties.
> "Under the foregoing conditions was the retiring treasurer entitled to pay in addition to his full annual salary for serving the first Monday of September, 1909?
> "Was his successor entitled to his full annual salary for the first year of his term?"

In reply to which I desire to say:

As I understand, the outgoing treasurer was ready to surrender, and the incoming one was qualified, ready to accept and presented himself at the office to assume his duties, but it being a legal holiday, the law closed the office, and for that reason alone the exchange was not made.

There is neither wrong, neglect nor failure to comply with the law here, and in the light of the decision of our supreme court that it is lawful to hold court on Labor Day, and that a grand jury may be impanelled on Labor Day.

(State vs. Thomas, 61 O. S. 444.)

and that a court may meet and adjourn on Sunday. (Jones vs. State, 14 C. C. R. 357, C. D. 305.) I must conclude that the fact that the outgoing treasurer's term expired on Labor Day, did not prevent the making of the change, but that the holding over for one day, under the circumstances mentioned, must be held to have been done with the tacit consent (at least) of both officers, which cannot be held to add to the compensation of the one or deduct from that of the other; the compensation being by an annual salary under section 2991.

Very truly yours,
TIMOTHY S. HOGAN,
Attorney General.

GARNISHMENT PROCEEDINGS CANNOT BE INSTITUTED AGAINST A DEBTOR WHO HAS GIVEN AN ORDER IN GOOD FAITH FOR TEN PER CENT. OF HIS WAGES TO A CREDITOR, UNTIL AFTER A PERIOD OF THIRTY DAYS HAS ELAPSED.

If a debtor, upon the receipt of or upon being served with notice or demand for ten per cent. of his personal earnings, thereupon gives an order to a creditor for ten per cent. of such wages or earnings due such debtor, other creditors are thereby barred from filing attachment and garnishment proceedings within thirty days after the date of such order, provided the debtor acts in good faith in giving the said order.

COLUMBUS, OHIO, November 21, 1913.

Bureau of Inspection and Supervision of Public Offices, Columbus, Ohio.

GENTLEMEN:—On October 23, 1913, your department submitted to this department a request for an opinion, as follows:

> "If a debtor, upon receipt of notice, gives order to a creditor for ten per cent. of wages due said debtor, are other creditors estopped from filing attachement and granishee within thirty days after the date of said order?"

In reply thereto, section 10253 of the General Code provides that personal earnings can be attached for necessaries, as follows:

> "* * * If attachment of the personal earnings of the defendant be sought, the affidavit also must state that he is not the head or support of a family nor in good faith the support of a widowed mother wholly dependent upon him for support; or that such earnings are not for services rendered within three months before the action was begun, or that, if earned within that time, they amount to more than one hundred and fifty dollars, and only the excess over that sum is sought to be attached; or that the claim sued on is for work, labor or necessaries, * * *."

Section 10271 of the General Code, as amended April 11, 1913, (103 O. L. 567) provides that personal earnings now exempted by statute, in addition to the 10 per cent. for necessaries, shall be further liable to the plaintiff for the actual costs, as follows:

"The personal earnings now exempted by law, in addition to the ten per cent. for necessaries, shall be further liable to the plaintiff for the actual costs of any proceeding brought to recover a judgment for such necessaries, in any sum not to exceed two dollars, and the necessary garnishee fee. Such garnishee may pay to such debtor an amount equal to ninety per cent. of such personal earnings, less the sum of two dollars and the necessary garnishee of fee not to exceed fifty cents, if the same is demanded by the garnishee, for actual costs as herein provided, due at the time of the service of process or which may become due thereafter and before trial and be released from any further liability to such creditor, or to the court or any officers thereof, in such proceeding, or in any other proceeding, brought for the purpose of enforcing the payment of the balance of the costs due in said original action. Both the debtor and the creditor shall likewise be released from any further liability to the court or any officers thereof in such proceedings or in any other proceeding brought for the purpose of enforcing the payment of the balance of the costs due in said original action."

Section 10272 of the General Code provides that any person bringing an action for necessaries, must first make a demand in writing for 10 per cent. of the personal earnings of the debtor, as follows:

"The person bringing an action for necessaries first must make a demand in writing for the excess over and above ninety per cent. of the personal earnings of the debtor, and such demand shall be made at least three days and not more than thirty days before such action is brought by delivering such demand to the debtor personally, or by leaving it at the debtor's usual place of residence. No cost or expense shall be chargeable to the defendant debtor in such action if upon such demand he tenders payment in money or duly accepted order, within three days after such demand, for the excess of his personal earnings above ninety per cent. thereof."

Section 10273 of the General Code, provides that more than one such demand shall not be made by the same creditor and that the amount demanded may be for the excess above ninety per cent. earned during the interval of thirty days, as follows:

"More than one such demand by the same creditor shall not be made at closer periods than thirty days. The amount demanded may be for the excess above ninety per cent. earned during the interval of thirty days. Any voluntary payment or payments made by the debtor during such interval shall be deducted from the amount which might be demanded had no payment or payments been made."

By virtue of the procedure provided by said sections 10271, 10272 and 10273 of the General Code, ten per cent. of the personal earnings of the head of a family can be attached, plus the actual cost of such procedure.

The first step in such procedure is the serving of the demand in accordance with section 10271 of the General Code, supra. If such debtor upon whom such demand is served, gives an order in accordance with said section 10271, supra, then the personal earnings of such debtor are thereby subjected to the claim for necessaries of the creditor by the first step in the procedure, for such attachment of ten per cent. of the personal earnings of such debtor. The provisions of the said sections 10271, 10272 and 10273 of the General Code, supra, are exceptions to the exemption of personal earnings, which are given to the heads of families by section 11725 of the General Code, which provides as follows:

> "Every person, who has a family, and every widow, may hold property exempt from execution, attachment or sale, for debt, fine or amercement, as follows:
> "* * * The personal earnings of the debtor, and the personal earnings of his or her minor child or children, for three months, when it is made to appear by affidavits of the debtor, or otherwise, that such earnings are necessary to the support of the debtor or of his or her family. Such period of three months shall date from the time of issuing an attachment or other process, the rendition of a judgment, or the making of an order, under which the attempt may be made to subject such earnings to the payment of a debt. If the claim, debt or demand for the payment of which it is sought to subject personal earnings, is one for necessaries furnished to the debtor, his wife or family, only ninety per cent. of such earnings shall be so exempt, as against such claim, debt or demand. Nothing herein contained shall render the personal earnings of such debtor's minor child or children, for three months subject to its payment; * * *."

The attachment proceeding of ten per cent. of the personal earnings of a debtor for necessaries, who is the head and support of a family, is an exception to the general exemptions provided by section 11725. In this connection I desire to cite the case of King vs. Laws, 5 Ohio N. P. Rep., N. S., page 414, wherein the court held as follows:

> "An order given against his wages by a debtor to a creditor for necessaries furnished, does not, where the order is for a period longer than thirty days, defeat an attachment for necessaries against wages earned after the thirty day period."

The facts in the last cited case are stated as follows:

> "This is a proceeding in error from a justice of the peace. The case below was one in attachment of wages under the provisions of Revised Statutes, section 6501, known as the ten per cent. law. On February 22, 1906, the plaintiff, King, brought suit against the defendant on a bill for necessaries furnished, and sued out an attachment and garnisheed his wages due from the board of education of Union township. The defendant moved the court to dissolve said attachment upon the ground that ten per cent. of his wages was then and at that time being retained by said board in payment of an order for necessaries given to another.
> "Upon the hearing of this motion, it appeared that the defendant was a married man, etc., and that theretofore on January 3, 1906, he had given an order on said board for necessaries to one L. B. May for the sum of $53.40, payable in four equal monthly installments of $13,35 each, two of which had already been paid. Upon this showing, the justice granted said motion and dissolved said attachment. Was this right?"

At page 414 of the opinion, the court says:

"Section 6489, Revised Statutes, sets forth the several grounds of attachment in actions before justices of the peace. By this section it is provided that, for any claim for which judgment is sought for work or labor or for necessaries, an attachment may issue without specifying any other ground (K. B. Co. vs. Batie, 2 C. C.—N. S., 358). The question then is simply one of exemption. In this behalf it is provided by Revised Statutes, section 5430, 5441, that the personal earnings of the debtor, head of a family, for three months prior to the attachment are exempt, if necessary for the support of himself and family, except where the claim sued on is also for necessaries; in which case ninety per cent. only is exempt. It may be conceded to be the law, that the general exemptions provided by said last two sections are exemptions which apply in favor of the debtor as against any and all creditors against whom the debtor may wish to claim them. And as the ten per cent. of the debtor's personal earnings made liable to attachment under the provisions of said Revised Statutes, section 6501, on a claim for necessaries is merely an exception to the amount of the general exemption in favor of a claim of this character, it must follow that the ninety per cent. remaining is also exempt as to any and all creditors against whom this claim is made."

In the case of Mitchell vs. Bradshaw, 15 Ohio Decisions 353 (2 O. L. R. 353), it was held that personal earnings are not exempt from garnishment under Revised Statutes 6501 (sections 10271, 10272 and 10273 of the General Code), by the debtor making voluntary payments to another creditor as follows:

"A proceeding in attachment to reach and subject ten per cent. of the personal earnings of the head of a family to the payment of a claim against him for necessaries, cannot be defeated by the debtor paying ten per cent. of his earnings to another creditor who had previously, but without commencing proceedings in attachment, made a written demand upon him therefor under Lan. R. I. 10078, (R. S. 6591); to have such effect it is essential that the payments should follow a prior action in attachment."

The case of Walt vs. Kant, 15 O. D., 643 (2 O. L. R. 493), holds to the same effect as follows:

"The voluntary payment of 10 per cent. of a debtor's monthly earnings to a creditor who had obtained judgment against him for 10 per cent. of his salary for a previous month will not operate to exempt his wages from the lien of a garnishment under the provisions of Lan. R. L. 10078 (R. S. 6501), sued out by another creditor prior to such voluntary payment."

It will be noted, however, that in both of said cases, the debtor made a voluntary payment of 10 per cent. of his personal earnings, and that he did not sign an order upon his employer for such 10 per cent., thereby assigning the ten per cent. of his personal earnings to his creditor. Such order undoubtedly operates as an assignment of 10 per cent. of such personal earnings which is accomplished by the first step in the procedure provided by said sections 10271, 10272 and 10273, for the attachment and garnishment of 10 per cent. of a debtor's personal earnings, who is the head and support of a family.

In the case of Hackett vs. Zuendel, 15 O. D. 498, it has been held that only 10 per cent. of such personal earnings are subject to attachment at any one time, as follows:

> "Under favor of Lan. R. L. 8958 and 10078 (R. S. 5430 and 6501), 90 per cent. of the personal earnings of a head of a family are absolutely exempt from attachment, garnishment or execution, except that certain costs may be taxed against him for resisting a claim for necessaries. Hence, when 10 per cent. of the personal earnings of the head of a family have been set aside for, and are being applied toward the payment of certain claims against him for necessaries, an attachment, garnishment or execution to reach and subject an additional 10 per cent. of such personal earnings towards the payment of other claims for necessaries, cannot be had."

In the statement of facts in the above case, it appears that the defendant had made an assignment of ten per cent. of his personal earnings in order to satisfy claims against him for necessaries, as follows:

> "This suit was commenced in the court of a justice of the peace to recover $18.75 for necessaries sold and delivered, to wit, groceries. The plaintiff recovered a judgment for the full amount, and in attachment issued for 10 per cent. of the personal earnings of the defendant in possession of the Akron Brewing Company. The case was appealed to this court, and a motion has been filed to dissolve the attachment.
> "It appears that Zuendel, the defendant, is the head and support of a family, and that on August 6, 1904, in order to avoid process of garnishment and to comply with the demands of creditors, who were urging claims against him for necessaries, he made an assignment to J. H. Adams of 10 per cent. of his earnings then due him from the Akron Brewing Company for services rendered and to be rendered for the period of fifty weeks."

At page 499 of the opinion, the court says:

> "Under Lan. R. L. 8958 and 10078 (R. S. 5430 and 6501), 90 per cent. of the personal earnings of the head of a family are expressly exempt from attachment, except the costs that may be taxed to him through his own resistance of a claim for necessaries. Therefore, while 10 per cent. of the defendant's earnings is being subjected to the payment of claims for necessaries, no attachment can issue. If it were not so, then successive attachments might issue and earnings necessary for the support of the family which are declared exempt, might be entirely subjected. The motion to dissolve the attachment is sustained and judgment is entered for defendant."

In the case of King vs. Laws, supra, at page 416 of the opinion, the court says.

> "Again, it may be said that the statute itself, Revised Statutes, section 6501, provides that no demand or attachment shall be made by the same creditor at closer periods than thirty days, and then only for ten per cent. of wages earned during the interval of thirty days. This, we have seen, excludes all other creditors for the same period, * * *."

If several creditors of a debtor, who is the head and support of a family, were all entitled to an order for ten per cent. of the personal earnings of such debtor, then it might follow that such debtor, of the head and support of a family, would be entirely deprived of the exemption of his personal earnings, which are reserved to him by the exemptions provided by section 10271 of the General Code.

By virtue of the provisions contained in said section 10271, 10272 and 10273 of the General Code, 10 per cent, of such personal earnings are subject to attachment for the purpose of being applied on a claim for necessaries, and that purpose being accomplished by the first step in the procedure provided by section 10271, supra, it therefore follows as my opinion, in direct answer to your inquiry, that if a debtor, upon the receipt of or upon being served with notice or demand for ten per cent. of his personal earnings, thereupon gives an order to a creditor for ten per cent. of such wages or earnings due said debtor—other creditors are thereby barred from filing attachment and garnishment proceedings within thirty days after the date of such order, provided that such order for said ten per cent. is given by the debtor in good faith and not merely to enable such debtor to defeat his creditors, and without any collusion between said debtor and creditors to evade attachment by other creditors.

Yours very truly,
TIMOTHY S. HOGAN,
Attorney General.

THE EXPENSES OF TEACHERS, MEMBERS OF THE BOARD OF EDUCATION, OR PERSONS NOT MEMBERS OF THE BOARD OF EDUCATION, INCURRED IN ATTENDING THE EDUCATIONAL CONGRESS HELD IN COLUMBUS, DEC. 5, 1913, MAY NOT BE PAID FROM SCHOOL FUNDS.

1. The expenses of a teacher, appointed by the board of education as delegate to the educational congress at Columbus, December 5, 1913, may not legally be paid out of the township, village, or special school district treasury.

2. When a teacher is appointed by a board of education of a city district, such expense may not be paid from the school treasury, nor can the expenses of members of a board of education to such convention be paid out of the city fund. The expenses of persons not members of a board of education or teachers, incurred in attending the above named congress, may not be paid from the school fund. Before such expenses can be paid, an appropriation for this purpose must be made by the legislature.

COLUMBUS, OHIO, December 17, 1913.

Bureau of Inspection and Supervision of Public Offices, Department of Auditor of State, Columbus, Ohio.

GENTLEMEN:—I herewith acknowledge the receipt of your communication of December 5, 1913, wherein you inquire:

> "1. Can the expense of a teacher, appointed by a board of education as delegate to the educational congress at Columbus, December 5 and 6, 1913, held under recommendation made in the proclamation of Gov. Jas. M. Cox, under date of October 21, 1913, legally be paid out of a township, village or special school district treasury?

"2. When the teacher is appointed by a board of education of a city district, can such expenses be paid from the school treasury?

"3. Can the expenses of a member of the board of education of a township, village or special school district, incurred in attending the above mentioned congress, be paid out of the treasury of the district?

"4. Can the expenses of a member of a board of education from a city district attending the above mentioned congress be paid out of the city school treasury?

"5. Can the expenses of persons, not members of boards of education or teachers, incurred in attending the above mentioned congress, be paid out of school funds?

"6. Can the expenses of a delegate not appointed by the board of education, incurred in attending the above mentioned congress, be paid out of the school funds?"

In reply thereto, section 3 of article 6 of the newly adopted constitution, provides as follows:

"Provision shall be made by law for the organization, administration and control of the public school system of the state supported by public funds; provided, that each school district embraced wholly or in part within any city shall have the power by referendum vote to determine for itself the number of members and the organization of the district board of education, and provision shall be made by law for the exercise of this power by such school districts."

Before making provision by law under the above amendment for the organization, administration and control of the public school system of the state supported by public funds; the legislature deemed it advisable to make a thorough study and survey of the existing conditions of the schools of the state, and accordingly on February 26, 1913, (103 O. L. p., 69) passed an act entitled—"An act to create a commission to conduct a survey of the public schools, normal schools, and the agricultural schools of the state, defining its powers, and providing appropriations therefor."

Section 1 of said act provides as follows:

"That the governor be and is hereby authorized to appoint a commission of three members to make a survey of the public schools, the normal schools, and the agricultural schools of the state, and the state administration of the same, to determine with what efficiency they are being conducted, and to report to the governor with recommendations. Such report shall be transmitted by the governor to the present general assembly of Ohio."

It is apparent to every one that this action on the part of the legislature was commendable, for it discloses that the legislature was sincerely trying to formulate the best legislation possible for the government of the schools and for the improvement of the school system of the state. By learning the actual conditions and needs of the schools and defects existing in the present laws governing the school system of the state, through a commission appointed for that purpose— the legislature thereby would be better enabled to intelligently and efficiently enact legislation, to the end that existing defects could be cured; furnish better school facilities; and provide a better code of laws for the government of the school system of the state. To further aid this very commendable purpose of the legislature, the governor of the state of Ohio, the Hon. James M. Cox, on October 24, 1913, issued a proclamation wherein he suggested that:

> "Friday, November 14, 1913, be observed by every school district in Ohio as School Survey Day, and that teachers, pupils, parents and patrons assemble during the afternoon and particularly the evening. Speakers will be supplied and literature prepared, with such general supervision by the superintendent of public instruction and the school survey commission that conditions throughout the state will be known and remedies can be suggested."

and further suggested that:

> "An educational congress be held in Columbus on December 5 and 6, 1913, and that the community meetings select lay delegates to the congress. The teachers' institute organizations will designate delegates from the teaching forces within the counties."

The reason for so designating a school survey day and the holding of an educational congress is well expressed in the proclamation of the governor, as follows:

> "The opinion was expressed that there was disorder and incongruity in our present archaic school structure, and that it would be useless to attempt to make laws intelligently and efficiently without first having the most comprehensive appreciation of the conditions existent."

The holding of such school survey day and the holding of the educational congress, in accordance with the suggestions contained in the governor's proclamation, and the knowledge thereby acquired, undoubtedly will greatly aid the legislature in its endeavor to enact better and more efficient laws for the government of the schools of the state.

Prior to the holding of the congress above referred to, the commission to conduct a survey of the public schools, as provided by the act above referred to, has prepared a partial report of tentative, constructive suggestions, which said report was subject to change upon suggestions that might be made by the said congress recently held at Columbus, Ohio, December 5 and 6, 1913. I am informed upon verbal advice received from the state supervisor of public instruction, that the suggestions so made by said commission met with the general approval of the delegates attending said congress. Said report in substance recommends and suggests the following provisions:

> "Provision for agricultural supervision.
> "Provision for the publishing of statistics by the state department of public instruction.
> "Provision for high and elementary school inspection.
> "Provision for the administration of the office of the state superintendent of public instruction.
> "Provision for school supervision.
> "Provision for the certification of teachers.
> "Provision for the academic training of teachers.
> "Provision for teaching experience, and the tenure of office of teachers now in service.

"Provision for the professional training of teachers now in service.
"Provision for the administration of school laws in Ohio.
"Provision for the consolidation and centralization of schools.
"Provision for the standardization of schools rather than of pupils and students."

From all that precedes, and as gathered from the provision contained in section 3 of article 6 of the Ohio constitution, supra: and as gathered from the provisions contained in the act passed February 26, 1913, entitled, "an act to create a commission to conduct a survey of the public schools, normal schools and the agricultural schools of the state, defining its powers and providing appropriations therefor," supra; and as gathered from the proclamation of the governor, and from the tentative constructive suggestions contained in the report of the school survey commission; it is at once apparent that the sole and only purpose thereof is to provide better and more adequate laws for the organization, administration and control of the public schools of the state.

In some instances this department has held, that a board of education may pay transportation and the expenses of the teachers in visiting schools of other cities, provided such visitation is for the instruction of the teachers and that a city board of education, under section 7872 of the General Code, may pay from the school funds of such school district, the expenses incurred by superintendents in attending the institute of the national association of school superintendents, provided that such board of education is of the opinion that the meeting is such that will afford valuable instruction to its teachers and provided that such superintendents attend such institute for the purpose of conveying the information therein, to the treasurers of their respective districts.

Section 7872 of the General Code, supra, provides as follows:

"The expenses of such institute shall be paid from the city institute fund hereinbefore provided for. In addition to this fund the board of education of any district annually may expend for the instruction of the teachers thereof. In an institute or in such other manner as it prescribes, a sum not to exceed five hundred dollars, to be paid from its contingent fund."

The first opinion above referred to, was rendered on June 20, 1911, to your honorable bureau, and in construing said section 7872 of the General Code, said opinion holds as follows:

"By the authority vested in the respective boards of education of the state, as prescribed in the above section, I am of the opinion that a board of education may pay the transportation of teachers in visiting schools of other cities, provided such visitation is for the instruction of the teachers."

The second opinion above referred to was rendered to the bureau of inspection and supervision of public offices on April 24, 1913, and in construing said section 7872 of the General Code, the opinion holds as follows:

"This statute would in no sense empower a board of education to allow the expenses incurred by a superintendent in attending such institute for his own personal benefit, or for the mere purpose of maintaining his membership in such an association, or of providing a representative for the city board at such a meeting. This statute, however, in providing that the board of education may expend school funds for the instruction of its teachers in such other manner as it prescribes confers upon such board a broad and controlling discretion as to the methods which it may desire to pursue in obtaining the end of instructing its teachers; and I am of the opinion that if such board sends its superintendent to the meeting of this national association, in pursuance of a well-defined plan for providing instruction for its teachers, by enabling the superintendent to carry the information obtained from such meeting to the teachers, the same would be authorized under the terms of this section.

"In brief, I see no reason why the board may not make the superintendent an instrument for the purpose of conveying to its teachers the benefits of the meeting. In the letter enclosed by you, which is signed by the president of the board of education in question, that official says:

" 'We desire to pay the necessary expenses of our superintendent for we consider such visitation on his part is instruction which will be of material benefit to him in administration of our public schools.'

"From the terms of this letter I take it that the meeting is one whereby modern methods of instruction are discussed, and wherein it is designed that each board of education be able to partake of the benefits of innovations and advanced methods which may have been installed in other schools throughout the country. Such is manifestly a valuable instruction, which it may well benefit any school to keep its teachers in touch with.

"I am therefore of the opinion, that if the board of education is of the opinion that the meeting is such as will afford valuable instruction to its teachers, and if they send their superintendent to such meeting for the purpose of conveying the information acquired therein to its teachers, they may allow the expense of travel incurred by the superintendent in making such trip."

It is to be noted, as hereinbefore pointed out, that when the holding of the said educational congress was for the purpose of suggesting and approving better and more adequate laws for the organization, administration and control of the public school system of the state supported by public funds, and was not for the instruction of the teachers who attended said congress and was not for the instruction of the teachers who did not attend such congress, by having such instruction transmitted to the said teachers remaining at home by those who did so attend said educational congress.

Therefore, in answer to your first two questions, I am of the opinion that the expenses of the teacher appointed by the board of education, as a delegate to the educational congress, at Columbus, December 5 and 6, 1913, held or special school district treasury and that the expense of a teacher appointed by a board of education of a city district, cannot legally be paid from the school treasury of such district.

In this opinion which this department rendered to the bureau of inspection and supervision of public offices, of the date of November 22, 1911, I held that there was no statutory authority for paying the expenses of a member of the board of education or its clerk, for attending a meeting of the state association of school boards.

In accordance, with, and for the same reason as expressed in said opinion, I am of the opinion, in answer to your third and fourth questions, that the expenses of a member of a board of education of a township, village, special or city school district, incurred in attending the above mentioned congress, cannot legally be paid out of the treasury of the district.

Certainly if the expenses of superintendents, teachers and members of boards of education, incurred in attending such convention, cannot legally be paid out of the treasury of their respective school districts, therefore in answer to your fifth and sixth questions, it follows upon like reasoning, and the further facts that there is no statutory authority therefor, that the expenses of persons not members of boards of education or teachers, and expenses of a delegate not appointed by the board of education, incurred in attending the above mentioned congress, cannot legally be paid out of the school funds.

In conclusion, I desire to say, that before such expenses referred to in your inquiry can be paid, it will be necessary for the legislature to provide for the same by further legislative enactment.

Yours very truly,
TIMOTHY S. HOGAN,
Attorney General.

A CHIEF OF POLICE OF A CITY MAY NOT LEGALLY SERVE AS A DEPUTY SHERIFF.

The chief of police of a city may not serve as a deputy sheriff, as the duties of the chief of police are such as to require all his time, or to require him to be in readiness to respond to call at any time.

COLUMBUS, OHIO, December 18, 1913.

Bureau of Inspection and Supervision of Public Offices, Columbus, Ohio.

GENTLEMEN:—I have your letter of November 21, 1913, in which you inquire:

> "May the chief of police of a city legally serve as deputy sheriff of a county?"

In reply to which I desire to say:

The duties of chief of police of a city are such as to require all his time, or if not, require that he hold himself in readiness to respond to call of duty at any time during night or day, which, of necessity, precludes him from accepting appointment to the position of deputy sheriff or devoting any of his time thereto, which even possibly might interfere with the lawful performance of his duties as chief of police.

Very truly yours,
TIMOTHY S. HOGAN,
Attorney General.

CONSTITUTIONALITY OF VONDERHEIDE BILL PROVIDING FOR DEPOSIT OF STATE FUNDS IN BUILDING AND LOAN ASSOCIATIONS ON ACCOUNT OF FLOOD EMERGENCY—DUTIES OF STATE TREASURER IN CONNECTION THEREWITH.

COLUMBUS, OHIO, May 7, 1913.

HON. JOHN P. BRENNAN, Treasurer of State, Columbus, Ohio.

DEAR SIR:—On April 12, 1913, you made the following request for my opinion:

> "Will you be kind enough at your earliest opportunity to advise me as to the constitutionality of the Vonderheide bill (better known as H. B. 650), and as to my duty under said bill. Also please advise me as to the proper procedure to follow in the matter of the approval of the governor as to deposits made under said bill."

House bill 650, to which you refer, is entitled as follows:

> "A bill to make building and loan associations, organized under the laws of the state of Ohio and located in those portions of the state of Ohio affected by the floods of March, 1913, depositories of state funds for a period not to exceed two years."

This title, together with the first section of the bill, which is as follows:

> "That in order to meet the emergency arising from the devastation caused by the unprecedented floods of March, 1913, in portions of the state of Ohio, and in order to conserve and preserve the life, health and peace of the people of those portions of the state of Ohio, the state treasurer of the state of Ohio, with the approval of the governor, is hereby authorized to deposit funds of the state of Ohio, not exceeding in the aggregate three million dollars, with building and loan associations organized under the laws of the state of Ohio and located in those portions of the state of Ohio so affected by the said floods, said sums to be deposited with said associations for a period not to exceed two years from the passage of this act."

clearly expresses the object of the bill.

Answering your inquiry, first, as to the constitutional question—upon this point I do not think you need to give yourself any concern; as long as you follow strictly and carefully the provisions of the act you will be protected. Some constitutional objections might possibly be raised to the bill, but it is my policy to assume that all acts of the legislature are constitutional unless such acts, upon their face, are beyond doubt contrary to the provisions of our constitution. If there is any doubt at all, the matter should be left to the court. Therefore, as all of your acts, so long as you follow the requirements of the bill, cannot be questioned, I deem it unnecessary at this time to enter into a discussion of hypothetical constitutional objections that might be raised to the bill, but which, on account of the great public emergency which it is intended to partially meet by this bill, will probably never be raised.

Now, outlining briefly the course which you are to follow in making the deposits authorized by this bill, I would suggest the following:

1. Building and loan associations desiring to obtain deposits of money of the state must apply to be designated as state depositories.

2. The state board of deposits must, in writing, designate such associations as it deems to be proper depositories.

3. Before any money whatever is deposited you should obtain from the governor his approval of the same. This approval need not be obtained for each specific deposit, but if the governor simply gives his approval to your depositing a certain lump amount, not to exceed the sum of three million dollars, with building and loan associations approved by the state board of deposits in compliance with said act, such approval would be sufficient.

4. As to the amount to be awarded to the different building and loan associations, that is a matter which is left to your discretion, under the bill, except that no such association shall have on deposit at any one time more than the amount of its paid-in capital stock, and in no event more than three hundred thousand dollars.

5. All such deposits must be in the form of inactive deposits, bearing interest at the rate of four per cent. per annum, payable quarterly, and must be secured by surety company bonds acceptable to you, which bonds must be in amount equal to the amount deposited plus five per cent.; or such deposits may be secured by deposits of state, county, or municipal bonds of the state of Ohio, or United States government bonds, acceptable to you as state treasurer. The value of such bonds must be equal to the amount deposited plus five per cent.; and such bonds must be conditioned as provided in the act.

6. Such deposits must be evidenced by certificates of deposit made by such building and loan associations to you as state treasurer, in amount equal to the total amount deposited. These certificates of deposit must specify the payment of interest as provided in the act, and must be signed by the secretary or some other officer of such association duly authorized. Such associations must have the option of redeeming said certificates of deposit at any interest paying period, by repaying into the state treasury the amount so deposited, or any part thereof, in sums of not less than one thousand dollars, with interest thereon to the date of such payment.

7. You are authorized by the act, for the purpose of making such deposits with building and loan associations, and you are also directed, to withdraw from the inactive depositories of state funds the funds therein deposited in an amount not exceeding three million dollars. Such withdrawals must be made, as far as possible, from inactive depositories not located in territories affected by the floods of March, 1913; but in all other respects such withdrawals shall be made in conformity with the provisions of section 330-2, General Code of Ohio, which is as follows:

> "The treasurer of state may withdraw any or all of the state funds on deposit for the purpose of paying the appropriations and the obligations of the state; when necessary to withdraw funds from the inactive depositories it shall be withdrawn from the banks and trust companies paying the lowest rates of interest and in proportional amounts as near as practicable."

This act does not limit in any way the authority and power given you in the matter of the withdrawal of funds from inactive depositories by the above quoted section; and banks located in the districts affected by the floods, as well as in other districts, are all still subject to have funds withdrawn as provided by said section 330-2. This provision of house bill No. 650 is in a large measure directory, and it directs you that the withdrawing of funds from inactive depositories, in order to redeposit in building and loan associations as provided by the act, is to be made by you, so far as possible, from banks not located in territories affected by the floods of 1913.

8. This act is an emergency act and went into effect as soon as it was filed with the secretary of state, after being signed by the governor.

I have examined and approved the applications, bonds and certificates of deposit to be used by you in carrying into effect the provisions of this act.

Very truly yours,

TIMOTHY S. HOGAN,

Attorney General.

SALE OF ABANDONED CANAL LANDS IN EXCESS OF $500.00 BY SUPERINTENDENT OF PUBLIC WORKS AT PRIVATE SALE.

Under the act of 102, Ohio Laws, canal lands therein described may be sold in accordance with this act, and under section 218-231 of the Revised Statutes, since the superintendent of public works is now clothed with all the powers of the old board of public works, by virtue of the constitutional amendment, lands coming within the description of these statutes exceeding $500.00 in value may be sold at private sale by said superintendent.

COLUMBUS, OHIO, February 21, 1913.

Department of Public Works, Columbus Ohio.

GENTLEMEN:—I have your inquiry of February 19th in which you ask:

> "Under the act of May 31, 1911, the board of public works and the chief engineer of public works, under the provisions of section 3 of said act, were authorized to sell certain portions of the abandoned Ohio canal in 'strict conformity with the various provisions of the statutes relating to the leasing and selling of state canal lands.' The statute referred to was sections 218-231 of the Revised Statutes, which is not included in the General Code, but like all the statutes relating to the work of the canal commission was to have been included in a supplementary volume, but the work of the code commission was terminated before this supplementary volume was even commenced. This statute, however, was not repealed, and we would respectfully request an opinion as to whether or not portions of this abandoned canal the value of which does not exceed $500.00 can be sold at private sale by the superintendent of public works, as provided for in section 218-231. If this can be done it will save a great deal of expense and the state will obtain one-fourth more for the land in most cases, as when the lands are appraised and offered for sale at public vendue a three-fourths bid usually secures the tract."

The act of May 31, 1911, 102 Ohio Laws, provides:

> "Section 3. As soon as such surveys and plats have been completed, the state board of public works and the chief engineer of public works, acting as a joint board, shall proceed to appraise, and lease or sell, as they may deem for the best interest of the state, subject to the approval of the governor and attorney general, said canal lands, except as hereinafter noted, in strict conformity with the various provisions of the statutes of Ohio relating to the leasing and selling of state canal lands, except that the grant of such leases shall be for a term of not less than fifteen nor more than twenty-five years, and that the bed and banks of said abandoned canal property may be included in any lease of such canal lands."

This specifically authorizes a sale (subject to the approval of the governor and attorney general) of canal lands, except as "hereinafter noted 'in strict conformity with the provisions of the statutes of Ohio relating to the leasing and selling of state canal lands, etc.'"

The exceptions referred to are:

That portion of the canal between Raccoon creek and Buckeye lake in Licking county which is reserved for hydraulic purposes. (Section 4.) That portion between the flume at Buckeye lake and a short distance south of Lockbourne. Certain reservations of rights of way, road and street crossings and the like as made in section 6.

Section 218-231 to which you refer provides: (See 88 Ohio Laws 507 for original act).

> "Any land or lands belonging to the state of Ohio near or remote from the line of any canal in this state that cannot be leased so as to yield six per cent. on the valuation thereof as determined by said commission may be sold by said commission at not less than three-fourths of such valuation, upon such terms of payment as may be fixed by the commissioners of the sinking fund and such land shall be offered for sale. * * *; provided, however, that said commission together with the governor and attorney general of the state of Ohio, shall have power to sell any of said lands which are appraised af five hundred dollars or less at private sale at a price not less than the appraised value thereof; the governor executes deeds, etc."

The act of March 28, 1888, 86 Ohio Laws 127 provided for the appointment of a canal commission, but I take it that the purposes of the same have been accomplished, or if not that the powers and duties of the same have been abrogated by legislative act, and the late constitutional amendment, so that it might well be concluded that the "strict conformity with the various provisions of the statutes relating to the leasing and selling of canal lands" does not imply any act on the part of that commission after the passage of the act as a condition precedent to a sale.

My opinion is that under the act of May 31, 1911, the superintendent of public works, who now possesses all the powers of the former board of public works, may sell any land answering the description found in section 218-231 where valued at $500.00 or less at private sale, upon such terms and conditions as he deems best, reporting such sale, terms and conditions, together with any other facts necessary to a complete understanding of the transaction to the governor and attorney general for their approval.

Great care, of course, in making the sale should be exercised in determining whether the lands come within the description of lands authorized to be sold, that they do not fall within any of the reservations, and the report should present these conditions to the governor and attorney general, briefly, but clearly.

Very truly yours,
TIMOTHY S. HOGAN,
Attorney General.

DAMAGES FROM OVERFLOW AND BREACHES IN CANAL BANK—SPECIAL APPROPRIATION NECESSARY FOR COMPENSATION OF COMMISSION AND FOR DAMAGES.

Under section 457, and following, General Code, the damages awarded by the commission to ascertain damages resulting from the overflow and breaches in canal banks, and also the expenses of such commission, are to be paid from moneys specifically appropriated for that purpose. Such appropriation may be made after the damages are awarded and the services have been performed. Such moneys may not be paid from any other fund.

COLUMBUS, OHIO, March 24, 1913.

HON. JOHN I. MILLER, Superintendent of Public Works, Columbus, Ohio.

DEAR SIR:—Your favor of March 22, 1913, is received, in which you inquire:

> "In sections 457 and following, of the General Code of Ohio, provision is made for the appointment of a commission consisting of three persons to arbitrate damages which arise from overflow and other causes due to breaches in the canal banks, etc.
> "Provision is made in this connection for the payment of certain compensation to these commissioners and other expenses which are incurred in the course of their duties. The act provides also that 'if no damages are awarded the complainant shall pay the costs of the hearing.'
> "In section 461 it states—'the board of public works shall cause each decision of commissioners upon an application for damages to be recorded in a book kept for that purpose. The award of the commissioners together with all records pertaining thereto, shall be submitted to the general assembly at their next regular session. Payments of compensation for damages so awarded shall be made from moneys specifically appropriated for that purpose.'
> "We have had a commission to file a report recently on certain damage claims arising in Mercer county. Later there will be another such report filed in this office, which will doubtless be after legislature has adjourned.
> "I wish you to notice that there are two different accounts to be settled by the state in the recommendations of such commissions, viz., the expense account of the commission itself, including all the necessary costs of the hearing, office rent, etc., and the award that the commission recommends to be paid to the complainants for the settlement of the damages. It is clear that this latter account can be paid only 'from moneys specifically appropriated for that purpose.'
> "Now, my query is this: Has the appropriation committee of the house the authority to set aside an approximate sum for the purpose of paying the expenses of such commissions? If we cannot have such an appropriation made, it will work hardships on persons who will be deprived of their money for two years, or until the next legislature meets. Again, we would have trouble often in securing a proper commission, if they knew that they were to be deprived of their pay for so long a time."

The act to which you refer is a special provision of statute by means of which claims for damages caused by the negligent management of the public works may be inquired into by a special commission to be appointed by the superintendent of public works. The provisions under which a commission is appointed and acts, are found in sections 455 to 461, inclusive, of the General Code.

Section 455, General Code, provides:

"When private property is injured by a break, leakage or overflow of a canal, slack water, pool, reservoir or other public work, or by the insufficiency or filling up of a culvert thereof, or by the washing away of earth caused by a dam under the control of the board of public works, the owner of such property may apply in writing to the board for damages, within one year from the occurrence of the injury, but no such application shall be received after such period."

Section 457, General Code, provides:

"Upon the filing of such application, the board of public works may appoint three disinterested persons as commissioners to consider the claim. If the board fails to agree in the selection of commissioners, it may apply to the governor, who shall appoint them. Before entering upon the discharge of his duties, each commissioner shall take an oath faithfully and impartially to discharge the duties of his appointment. A majority of the commissioners shall be necessary to a decision upon a matter before them. They may summon and qualify witnesses, issue subpoenas and direct the service and return thereof in the manner provided by law for like service in the probate court."

Section 460, General Code, provides:

"Each commissioner shall receive three dollars for each day of service and mileage at the rate of three cents per mile. The costs incurred by the commissioners shall be paid after the presentation of their award and report, upon the approval of the board of public works from moneys appropriated for that purpose, but if the damages awarded do not exceed the costs of the hearing, no payment of such damages shall be made. If no damages are awarded, the complainant shall pay the costs of the hearing. At any time before the decision of the commissioners, the board of public works may tender a claimant such sum of money as it deems him entitled to, and if he accepts it, his claim shall be discharged. If he refuses to accept the tender, the applicant shall pay the costs incurred thereafter unless a larger sum is awarded him by the commissioners as damages."

Section 461, General Code, provides:

"The board of public works shall cause each decision of commissioners upon an application for damages to be recorded in a book kept for that purpose. The award of the commissioners together with all records pertaining thereto, shall be submitted to the general assembly at their next regular session. Payments of compensation for damages so awarded shall be made from moneys specifically appropriated for that purpose."

The statute fixes the compensation of the commission which is appointed by the superintendent of public works. The commission is authorized to subpoena witnesses and it must necessarily create some expense in order to perform its duties.

Section 460, General Code, contains this provision:

> "The costs incurred by the commissioners shall be paid after the presentation of their award and report upon the approval of the board of public works from moneys appropriated for that purpose."

This provision specifies that payment shall be made after the presentation of the report of the commissioners and the award. It does not limit the time when an appropriation shall be made.

Section 22 of article 2 of the constitution of Ohio, reads:

> "No money shall be drawn from the treasury, except in pursuance of a specific appropriation, made by law; and no appropriation shall be made for a longer period than two years."

This provision of the constitution does not limit the legislature to making appropriations after the bills are incurred, but on the contrary it contemplates that appropriations may be made for bills to be incurred in the future, provided that such appropriations shall not be made for a longer period than two years.

The commission now in question acts in the nature of a court of inquiry and the legislature would have the same right to appropriate a fund to pay the expenses of such a commission as it has to appropriate a fund to pay the expenses of the supreme court, or any other department of the state.

The legislature has full power to appropriate an approximate sum to pay the expenses of a commission appointed by virtue of sections 455, et seq., General Code. No money could be paid from such fund for the purpose and in the manner provided by said sections of the General Code, or as may be provided by the provision making such appropriation.

Respectfully,
TIMOTHY S. HOGAN,
Attorney General.

CANAL LANDS—RIGHT OF PROPERTY HOLDERS ABUTTING ON RACEWAY ON NORTH SIDE OF EGGLESTON AVENUE IN CINCINNATI TO CONSTRUCT ARCH OVER SAME—ADDITIONAL BURDEN —RIGHTS OF CITY AND STATE—UNIVERSITY OF CINCINNATI.

The courts have decided that the grant of canal lands in Eggleston avenue to the city of Cincinnati by the state of Ohio, reserved the fee title to the same in the state of Ohio, subject to the right of the city of Cincinnati to use the same for a public highway and for sewerage purposes.

One of the conditions provided in the grant was that the use made of the strip should not obstruct the flow of water through said canal, nor destroy water supply for milling purposes.

Under the right which a city has to use state property for highway purposes, an abutting property holder may be granted leave to construct an archway over said raceway, when the conditions of the grant are safeguarded and the approval of the board of public works is obtained.

The use of any part of the proposed arch for buildings, swithches, overhead projections or similar structures would constitute an additional burden of said premises and such use could not be made, therefore, without the consent of the state of Ohio.

COLUMBUS, OHIO, April 2, 1913.

Department of Public Works.

GENTLEMEN:—Under date of March 22, 1913, you submit the following to this department for opinion:

"Mr. Smith Hickenlooper, as attorney for the University of Cincinnati, has filed an application with the superintendent of public works requesting permission to arch over the hydraulic raceway in front of its property on the north side of Eggleston avenue in the city of Cincinnati.

"In order that you may thoroughly understand the question which we submit for your consideration, we relate a portion of the history of the canal property that is now occupied by Eggleston avenue.

"As originally constructed the Miami and Erie canal terminated at the Ohio river on the site now occupied by the Pennsylvania depot at the foot of Eggleston avenue, the descent of 110 feet between Broadway, at the end of the main level of the canal through the city, and the Ohio river was effected by a series of ten locks.

"By the act of the general assembly of Ohio, passed March 24, 1963, (see Ohio Laws Vol. 60, page 44) the portion of the canal between Broadway and the Ohio river, without any formal abandonment, was turned over to the city of Cincinnati to improve and occupy forever as a public highway and for sewerage purposes.

"One of the conditions provided in section two of the act was that the use to be made of the strip should not obstruct the flow of water through said canal nor destroy the supply of water for milling purposes.

"The intention was to enable the state to get rid of the surplus water in the canal when it reached the new terminal at Broadway, and at the same time provide a supply of water for lessees of the state who operated water power mills along the line of the canal prior to its abandonment. This was a very important condition, and in connection with the stipulation in section one of the act that required the city authorities to first obtain the approval of the board of public works for any plan of improvements before commencing the same, furnished the basis for the plans of improvement that were subsequently carried out.

"This plan provided for carrying the water in underground conduits and sewers for the greater portion of the distance, but between Third and Fifth streets, an open conduit about 14 feet in width, and walled with stone on each side, was adopted.

"Instead of the city filling, grading and providing the means for conveying the water from Broadway to the river, the city granted the Little Miami Railway Company a perpetual easement in the canal strip for railway purposes on condition that it fill the canal bed and construct a public highway thereon. The rights of the railway company subsequently passed into the hands of the P. C. C. & St. L. Co., and in 1894 the canal commission became convinced that the railway company had no legal rights in the street, and through the attorney general, commenced an action in quo warranto in the supreme court to recover the property for the state. The court decided that the location, maintenance and operation of a railroad upon the lands granted to the city was an additional burden not contemplated by the act and ordered the company to either remove its tracks within 130 days or make a satisfactory arrangement with the state for continuing the use of the premises.

"The company purchased a portion of the ground and leased the remainder. This brings us to the consideration of the question raised by Mr. Hickenlooper viz.: Has an abutting property owner the right to arch over the race with or without the consent of the city authorities?

"The questions upon which an opinion is desired are:

"First. Can an abutting property owner, with the approval of the superintendent of public works, make such an improvement either with or without the consent of the city?

"Second. In case such an improvement is made, either with or without the consent of the city, and either with or without the approval of the superintendent of public works, and any portion of the same is used for commercial purposes by the construction or buildings or the laying of switch tracks thereon or the extension of overhead projections from building on adjacent lots, would not the state be entitled to remuneration for the additional burden imposed on the ground?"

Said act of 60 Ohio laws 44, under which that part of the canal lands now known as Eggleston avenue was granted to the city of Cincinnati, provided:

"Section 1. Be it enacted by the general assembly of the state of Ohio, that authority and permission shall be granted, in the manner hereinafter pointed out, to the city of Cincinnati, to enter upon, improve and occupy forever, as a public highway and for sewerage purposes, all or any of that part of the Miami and Erie canal which extends from the east side of Broadway, in said city, to the Ohio river, including the width thereof, as owned or held by the state.

"But the said grant shall be made subject to all outstanding rights or claims, if any, with which it may conflict: Provided, that no work shall be done by said city authorities on the premises hereby granted until the plan of improvement shall be approved of by the board of public works."

"Section 2. The said grant shall not extend to the revenues derived from the water privileges in said canal, which are hereby expressly reserved; and the said grant shall be made upon the further condition that the said city, in the use as aforesaid of all or any of said portion of said canal, shall not obstruct the flow of water through said canal, nor destroy nor injure the present supply of said water for milling purposes, and that said city shall be liable for all damages that may accrue from such obstruction or injury; but it is not intended hereby to relieve the lessees of said canal, or their assignees, from any responsibilities imposed upon them by 'an act to provide for leasing the public works of the state, passed May 8, 1861, or by the instrument of lease executed in pursuance of said act, except as and to the extent that they may be interfered with as said city may, from time to time, enter upon, improve and occupy any part of said grant.

"Section 3. Whenever the council of said city by a vote of not less than two-thirds of the whole number of members thereof, shall decide to use said canal as herein authorized, the said council shall make known its decision to the governor, and thereupon the governor, in behalf of the state, shall execute and deliver to the city of Cincinnati a grant of the part of said canal herein described for the uses and purposes before mentioned, and upon the terms and conditions specified in this act. The attorney general shall prepare the form of said grant.

"Section 4. This act shall not be construed to confer upon said city any new power of taxation, or to borrow money, or to contract debts in the use as aforesaid of said canal.

"Section 5. This act shall take effect from and after its passage."

The council of the city of Cincinnati duly accepted said grant and on the 28th day of April, 1863, the governor of Ohio executed a deed therefor on behalf of the state.

The above act was under consideration by the supreme court in case of Ohio ex rel. vs. Railway Company, 53 Ohio St., 189, wherein it is held:

"By force of the provision of section 8 of the act to provide for 'the internal improvement of the state of Ohio by navigable canals,' 23 O. L., 57, whenever the state actually occupied a parcel of land for canal purposes, a fee simple title thereto at once and by virtue alone, of such occupancy, vested in the state.

"By the act of March 24, 1863, 60 Ohio laws, and the conveyance afterwards executed by the governor pursuant thereto, the only right granted to the city of Cincinnati was to enter upon, improve and occupy the land described therein forever as a public highway and for sewerage purposes, the title to the lands remaining in the state subjected only to such use. The city acquired no right or interest that it could transfer to another; and if the city, after entering upon the occupancy of such lands under the deed, abandoned them in respect to either of the uses specified, the right of the city to that extent became forfeited."

In this case the court has decided that the title to the canal lands in Eggleston avenue is in the state of Ohio, subject to the right of the city of Cincinnati to use the same as a public highway and for sewerage purposes.

Under this act the city of Cincinnati was required to provide a means of carrying the water of the state. The open raceway now in question is used for that purpose and was provided in accordance with plans approved by the board of public works.

Both the city of Cincinnati and the state of Ohio have rights and interests in this raceway, and in order to alter the same or to make further improvement thereof, the rights and interests of the state and of the city must be taken into consideration and protected.

It appears from the plat attached that there is no direct means of ingress and egress from Eggleston avenue to the lots which border on this raceway. The lots, however, have an outlet upon another street.

The application to build an arch over this raceway is made by an owner of abutting property. Such owner has no right or interest in the raceway except insofar as it may be a lessee of water to be secured therefrom.

At the time Eggleston avenue was opened and improved as a street, the city of Cincinnati could have covered this raceway and dedicated the entire width of the street to public use as a highway. That right has not been taken from the city of Cincinnati, provided it does the work in a manner approved by the superintendent of public works, and so as to fulfill the obligations of the city to the state of Ohio.

No private person or corporation would have a right to cover this raceway, without first securing the consent of the city of Cincinnati. If such approval is secured, the plan to cover the raceway must be approved by the superintendent of public works as required by section one of said act.

This land is granted to Cincinnati for highway and sewerage purposes. The state could not, therefore, grant any right in said strip of land or any part thereof which would interfere with the above rights of the city of Cincinnati to use the same for highway or sewerage purposes.

The fee to this land is in the state of Ohio, subject to the right of the city of Cincinnati to use it for highway and sewerage purposes, and the city of Cincinnati has no power to use said land for any other purpose.

Your specific questions are answered:

First. The abutting property owners can, with the approval of the superintendent of public works and with the consent of the city of Cincinnati, arch over the raceway in question so as to make it a part of the public highway.

Second. The abutting porperty owners cannot use said raceway or the proposed arch for private purposes without first securing the consent of the state of Ohio and the city of Cincinnati. They may use the covering of the raceway for purposes of ingress and egress to and from their property.

The use of any part of the proposed arch for buildings, switches, overhead projections or similar structures would constitute an additional burden on said premises and such use could not be made thereof without a grant from the state of Ohio.

Respectfully,
TIMOTHY S. HOGAN,
Attorney General.

OFFICES COMPATIBLE—PATROLMAN UPON PUBLIC WORKS AND FOREMAN ON REPAIRS.

Since the duties incumbent upon either officers are not incompatible, a person appointed patrolman on public works may also be legally appointed to serve as foreman on repairs and receive an added compensation therefor.

COLUMBUS, OHIO, May 24, 1913.

HON. JOHN I. MILLER, Superintendent of Public Works, Columbus, Ohio.

DEAR SIR:—Under date of May 1, 1913, you inquire as follows:

> "Is it legal to engage a man for the position of patrolman at say $60.00 per month and then allow the same man an extra compensation per month for acting as foreman on repairs? The duties of such a position are further extended by the fact that our patrolmen at the various reservoirs grant the boat licenses and keep the account of moneys collected and report the same into this department. He is required to give a bond of $500.00."

You call attention to sections 472 and 475 of the General Code as amended by amended senate bill No. 29 of the 80th general assembly. All of the sections herein quoted are as they were amended by said bill.

Section 420, General Code, provides:

> "The superintendent of public works of Ohio shall appoint such foremen, patrolmen, lock tenders, inspectors, engineers and all other employes as may be necessary for the improvement, maintenance and operation of the public works. They shall be assigned to duty under the supervision of the superintendent of public works, under rules and regulations prescribed by him. Any such employes, when deemed necessary by the superintendent of public works, shall be required to give proper bond to the state of Ohio, conditioned for the faithful performance of his duties. The salary and compensation of such employes shall be fixed by the superintendent of public works and paid from money appropriated for the maintenance of canals."

The duties of the foremen are not fixed by statute but are to be prescribed by the superintendent of public works.

Section 472, General Code, provides:

> "All lakes, reservoirs and state lands heretofore or that may hereafter be dedicated and set apart for the use of the public for park or pleasure resort purposes shall be under the control and management of the superintendent of public works. The superintendent of public works shall maintain such police regulations and enforce all needed rules for the government of the public parks, as shall be prescribed by law."

Section 475, General Code, provides:

"The superintendent of public works may appoint police patrolmen to preserve order and protect the public at any such reservoir and adjacent state land and prescribe their compensation not to exceed sixty dollars per month, and such police patrolmen shall have the same power and authority as constables in the discharge of their official duties, and their jurisdiction shall be coextensive with the counties touching or including any portion of such public park or pleasure resort."

Section 476, General Code, provides:

Before entering upon the duties of his office, each police patrolman shall give bonds to the state of not less than five hundred dollars, nor more than one thousand dollars, to be fixed by the superintendent of public works and approved by him, conditioned for the faithful and diligent discharge of his duties, and take an oath of office, which oath shall be endorsed on the back of the bond. Such bond shall be filed and safely kept in the office of the treasurer of state."

Section 482, General Code, provides:

"Every police patrolman appointed by the superintendent of public works to preserve order and protect the public, in accordance with these provisions may arrest on view or warrant and bring to justice a person violating any of the foregoing provisions, and if, in making an arrest, it is necessary for such patrolman to take possession of and hold a boat or boats or other property, he shall not be held liable for the loss of or any damage done such boat or boats or other property taken and held by reason of the failure of the owner or owners thereof to comply with the provisions hereof, provided ordinary care is exercised in the handling of such property, and no person shall take possession of a boat or other property which has been taken in charge by a police patrolman or other officer as herein provided, until such patrolman or officer has released it. Any person violating any of the provisions of this section shall be fined in any sum not less than five dollars nor more than twenty-five dollars, and shall stand committed until such fine and costs are paid."

The foregoing are the statutory duties of a police patrolman, such as you desire to appoint. As the duties of a foreman are not fixed by statute there can be no conflict in the respective duties of the two positions as prescribed by statute.

The rule of incompatibility of public office or employment is stated by Dustin, J., on page 276 of the opinion in case of State vs. Gebert, 12 Cir. Ct. N. S. 274, where he says:

"Offices are considered incompatible when one is subordinate to, or in any way a check upon the other; or when it is physically impossible for one person to discharge the duties of both."

Neither of the positions in question is a check upon the other nor is one subordinate to the other.

The other ground of incompatibility is that of physical impossibility for one person to perform the duties of both positions.

The rule is stated at page 1381 of 29th Cyc., as follows:

> "Holding other office or employment. It may be laid down as a rule of the common law that the holding of one office does not in and of itself disqualify the incumbent from holding another office at the same time, provided there is no inconsistency in the functions of the two offices in question."

From the statement of the duties of each position as given by you it appears that it is physically possible for one person to perform the duties of both offices.

A question of public policy might arise as to the propriety of appointing the same person to two distinct positions. In the situation presented I know of no principle of public policy that may be violated in appointing the same person as foreman and as police patrolman, so long as such person is able to, and does, perform the duties of both positions. In order to draw the compensation fixed for him as foreman he must perform the duties thereof. The same is true as to the position of police patrolman. He cannot draw pay twice for the same work.

The statute, section 475, General Code, limits the amount of compensation to be paid a police patrolman. This limit is as to the position of police patrolman and would not be a limitation upon the aggregate amount to be paid a person who holds two positions, provided he is not paid more than the amount fixed by statute for a police patrolman, as such police patrolman.

The positions in question are not incompatible, and if one person can physically perform the duties of both positions, he can fill both positions. In such case it would be legal to pay such person a salary as foreman and a salary as police patrolman. The salary as police patrolman must not exceed sixty dollars, per month, but the combined salaries of the two positions may exceed sixty dollars per month.

Respectfully,
TIMOTHY S. HOGAN,
Attorney General.

REPAIRING AND DREDGING CANALS—SPECIAL APPROPRIATION FOR SUCH WORK—CONTRACT MUST BE LET.

The superintendent of public works may employ laborers to dredge canals and keep them in repair, even though the cost exceeds $500.00 provided that the cost of such labor is to be paid out of money appropriated for the maintenance of canals. This is also true of all cement work to be done on canals. When a special appropriation is made for such work, then it must be let on contract by competitive bidding if the cost exceeds $500.00.

COLUMBUS, OHIO July 9, 1913.

HON. JOHN L. MILLER, Superintendent of Public Works, Columbus, Ohio.

DEAR SIR:—You have requested an opinion of this department as to the construction of section 428, General Code, as amended in 103 Ohio Laws 121. You inquire:

> "Can this department employ laborers to dredge the canal, where needed, when the cost of such dredging will exceed five hundred dollars?

"Can this department employ laborers and construct a cement wall, or other work, when such improvement or repair will cost to exceed five hundred dollars?

"For example, we have certain dredging to be done at Akron, the cost of which will exceed five hundred dollars. The state has at Akron a dredge suitable for this work and this department is in a position to do this dredging without contract and at a less cost and in better time.

"The state also has a concrete mixer and the necessary apparatus to do cement work more economically than may be done by contract.

"This kind of work has heretofore been done by this department."

Section 428, General Code, as amended in 103 Ohio Laws, 121, provides:

"The superintendent of public works of Ohio may enter into contracts with proper persons for the performance of labor, or for the furnishing of materials, or for the construction of any or all structures and buildings necessary to the maintenance, control and management of the public works of the state or any part thereof. The superintendent of public works shall require bonds, of not less than one-half the contract price, from said contractors, payable to the state of Ohio, and conditioned on the faithful performance of said contract. Except in cases of extreme public exigency or emergency and when the cost of any proposed improvement or repair exceeds five hundred dollars, the superintendent of public works shall cause notice to be given in a newspaper of general circulation in or contiguous to the county where the contract is to be let and where the work is to be done and may also advertise in such trade journals as will afford full information to the public of the terms of the contract and the nature of the work to be performed and the character of materials required, together with the time of letting and place and manner of receiving proposals. Such contracts shall be awarded to the lowest and best bidder, and shall be in writing, and shall contain specific prices for each kind of work to be performed, and for materials to be furnished by the parties thereto."

Section 420, General Code, as amended in 103 Ohio Laws 121, reads:

"The superintendent of public works of Ohio shall appoint such foremen, patrolmen, lock tenders, inspectors, engineers and all other employes as may be necessary for the improvement, maintenance and operation of the public works. They shall be assigned to duty under the supervision of the superintendent of public works, under rules and regulations prescribed by him. Any such employes when deemed necessary by the superintendent of public works, shall be required to give proper bond to the state of Ohio, conditioned for the faithful performance of his duties. The salary and compensation of such employes shall be fixed by the superintendent of public works and paid from money appropriated for the maintenance of canals."

Section 428, General Code, prior to the passage of the above amendatory act provided:

"When the board of public works deems it necessary to let a contract for the performance of labor or the furnishing of materials, or for the construction of feeders, dikes, reservoirs, locks, dams and other work for the repair of the public works, it shall cause notice thereof to be given by publication in such newspapers and for such time as it deems necessary. Such notice shall contain a statement of the time, place and manner of receiving proposals, the character of the work to be performed and the materials to be furnished. Such contracts shall be awarded to the lowest responsible bidder, shall be in writing, and contain specific prices for each kind of work to be performed or articles to be furnished by the parties thereto."

Under the former law it was left to the board of public works to determine whether an improvement or repair should be made by contract or otherwise.

The provisions of section 428, General Code, as amended should be read in connection with those of section 420, General Code.

Section 420, General Code, authorizes the superintendent of public works to "appoint such foremen, patrolmen, lock tenders, inspectors, engineers and all other employes as may be necessary for the improvement and operation of the public works."

It is further provided in said section that the compensation of such employes, shall be "paid from money appropriated for the maintenance of canals."

The dredging of the canals would be a part of the maintenance and operation of the public works. And under the above provision the superintendent of public works would be authorized to employ foremen and employes to do such dredging, provided their compensation may be paid "from money appropriated for the maintenance of canals."

Section 428, General Code, provides that "the superintendent of public works of Ohio may enter into contracts" "for the performance of labor, or for furnishing of materials, or for the construction of any or all structures and buildings * * *."

This provision standing alone would leave it to the superintendent of public works to determine whether he should have the labor performed directly under his charge, or whether he should secure the same by contract.

The legislature has seen fit, however, to further provide:

"Except in case of extreme public exigency or emergency, and when the cost of any proposed improvement or repair exceeds five hundred dollars, the superintendent of public works shall cause notice to be given in a newspaper * * *. Such contract shall be awarded to the lowest and best bidder * * *."

This provision was inserted to secure competitive bids on all contracts which exceed five hundred dollars. It was not intended to, nor does it, deprive the superintendent of public works of the right given him under section 420, General Code, to appoint foremen and employ laborers to improve, maintain and operate the public works.

The right, however, of the superintendent of public works to employ laborers under section 420, General Code, is limited to the work which may be paid for from the appropriations for the maintenance of the canals. It does not apply to an appropriation made for a specific improvement or repair.

Where an appropriation has been made for a specific improvement, and the cost thereof exceeds five hundred dollars, it must be let on competitive bids.

I am therefore of the opinion that the superintendent of public works may employ laborers to dredge the canals, or any part thereof and keep them in repair, even though such dredging and repairs cost to exceed five hundred dollars, if the cost of such labor is to be paid from money appropriated for the maintenance of the canals. This will also be true as to any cement work to be done.

But if such improvement, repair, dredging, or cement work is to be paid for by a specific appropriation for the particular work, then it must be let on contract by competitive bidding, if the cost exceeds five hundred dollars.

Respectfully,
TIMOTHY S. HOGAN,
Attorney General.

THE SUPERINTENDENT OF PUBLIC WORKS IS NOT OBLIGED TO ENTER INTO THE CONTRACT FOR LABOR IN MAINTENANCE OF PUBLIC WORKS, BUT HE MAY USE MACHINERY AND EMPLOYES OF THE STATE DOING THE WORK REQUIRED.

Under the provisions of section 428, General Code, the superintendent of public works is not required to enter into contracts for the construction, management or control of public works of the state, but he may do so. The superintendent of public works may enter into contracts for dredging the canal at Akron, or he may at his discretion use the machinery of the state and the force employed under his charge and do the work under his direct supervision.

The cost of such work can be paid out of the appropriation made especially therefor.

COLUMBUS, OHIO, September 5, 1913.

HON. JOHN I. MILLER, Superintendent of Public Works, Columbus, Ohio.

DEAR SIR:—Under date of September 4, 1913, you inquire:

> "Concerning proposed improvement on the Summit Level of the Ohio canal through the city of Akron, an appropriation of $25,000.00 was made by the 80th general assembly for the dredging of this level and the building of a protection wall along the towing path bank.
> "After preparing plans and estimates for this improvement, the same was advertised for the receipt of proposals August 19, 1913. On that day we received two bids for the work, one of which, on tabulation, was found to be irregular in form and the other bid was considered excessive in price. Therefore, all the bids were rejected and the work was re-advertised to be let on Tuesday, September 2, 1913. Upon the latter date but one bid was received for the work, which did not include a proposal for doing the dredging. The bid received was for the construction of a protection wall and alternate prices were made for concrete construction and timber construction, as per the advertisement. The bid for the timber wall, received on the date set for the last letting, is excessive in price. If the contract is awarded it will be for the concrete wall.
> "The work contemplated in this improvement is of so important a nature that if not done it will prevent the state performing its contracts with a number of important water consumers and it will also jeopardize the city of Akron because the sand bars and fills of various kinds, which have accumulated in the aforsaid Summit Level, have almost excluded the water from passing down through the city of Akron, and if not removed, will entirely shut off the water supply.

It is an emergency and I wish to know if we cannot proceed with our own machinery and forces to remove the deposits from this canal level at once, since time has become the most important element in the consideration of this improvement."

The appropriation for this work is set forth in 103 Ohio Laws 614, in these words:

"Repairs and improvements on Summit Level of Northern Division, Ohio Canal ---------- $25,000.00."

This appropriation is not made "for the maintenance of canals." While the repairs and improvements are not specified, it is nevertheless made for a special purpose, though general in character.

Appropriations for maintenance are made in these terms at page 614 of 103 Ohio Laws:

"Miami and Erie canal maintenance---------- $20,000.00.
"Ohio and Erie canal maintenance---------- 15,000.00."

Section 420, General Code, as amended in 103 Ohio Laws 121, provides:

"The superintendent of public works of Ohio shall appoint such foremen, patrolmen, lock tenders, inspectors, engineers and all other employes as may be necessary for the improvement, maintenance and operation of the public works. They shall be assigned to duty under the supervision of the superintendent of public works, under rules and regulations prescribed by him. Any such employes, when deemed necessary by the superintendent of public works, shall be required to give proper bonds to the state of Ohio, conditioned for the faithful performance of his duties. The salary and compensation of such employes shall be fixed by the superintendent of public works and paid from money appropriated for the maintenance of canals."

The appropriation in the present case does not come within the provisions of section 420, General Code, as it is not made "for the maintenance of canals."

Section 428, General Code, as amended 103 Ohio Laws 121, reads:

"The superintendent of public works of Ohio may enter into contracts with proper persons for the performance of labor, or for the furnishing of materials, or for the construction of any or all structures and buildings necessary to the maintenance, control and management of the public works of the state or any part thereof. The superintendent of public works shall require bonds, of not less than one-half the contract price, from said contractors, payable to the state of Ohio, and conditioned on the faithful performance of said contract. Except in cases of extreme public exigency or emergency, and when the cost of any proposed improvement or repair exceeds five hundred dollars, the superintendent of public works shall cause notice to be given in a newspaper of general circulation in or contiguous to the county where the contract is to be let and where the work is to be done and may also advertise in such trade journals as will afford full information to the public of the terms of the contract and the nature of the work to be performed and the character of materials required, together with the time of the letting and place and manner of receiving proposals. Such contracts shall be awarded to the lowest and best bidder, and shall be in writing, and shall contain specific prices for each kind of work to be performed, and for materials to be furnished by the parties thereto."

The cost of doing the dredging in question will exceed five hundred dollars and it comes within the terms of this section requiring the letting of a contract on competitive bids, unless it may be considered a case of "extreme public exigency" or an "emergency."

You state that two attempts have been made to secure bids for this work. On the first attempt, only two bids were received, one was irregular, and the other was excessive in price. It is the duty of a public officer to protect the interests of the public and if he is satisfied that a bid, though the lowest and best, is excessive in price, it is his duty to reject it. The purpose of asking for bids is to secure a fair price upon competition. This purpose would be nullified if the officer was required to let a contract upon a bid which he knew to be excessive.

On the second attempt to secure bids, none were received for the dredging, and the time is now late to readvertise and complete the work before winter. Then there would be no assurance of securing bids.

It appears to me that a reasonable effort has been made to let this work after advertising for bids.

You state that if the work is not done the water supply for the city of Akron may be shut off. The waterworks of the city of Akron gets its water from the state under a lease.

The failure to secure bids after two efforts, and the possiblity of shutting off the water supply of a large community, create in my opinion an emergency and the repairs are urgent. Such an emergency will be sufficient to except such work from the requirements of section 428, General Code, supra, that the work be done by contract let on competitive bids.

In such case the letting of a contract of the doing of the work would be governed by the first part of section 428, which reads:

"The superintendent of public works of Ohio may enter into contracts with proper persons for the performance of labor, or for the furnishing of materials, or for the construction of any or all structures and buildings necessary to the maintenance, control and management of the public works of the state or any part thereof."

This provision states that the superintendent of public works "may enter into contracts." He is not required to enter into contract, but he may do so.

The superintendent of public works may, therefore, enter into a contract for this dredging, without asking for additional bids, or new bids, or he may, at his discretion use the machinery of the state and the force employed under his charge and do the work under his direct supervision. The state, I understand, has a dredge on the Summit Level and that you can proceed with the work without delay.

Under the circumstances presented the compensation of the employes and the cost of such work can be paid out of the appropriation specially made therefor.

Respectfully,

TIMOTHY S. HOGAN,

Attorney General.

IN CASE OF AN EMERGENCY THE SUPERINTENDENT OF PUBLIC WORKS MAY TAKE PRIVATE PROPERTY FOR THE USE OF THE STATE WITHOUT CONDEMNATION PROCEEDINGS.

Where because of the March floods, the condition of the Miami river, north of Middletown is such as to jeopardize the city, the superintendent of public works, because of the necessity of quick action, may proceed with the work of repair without entering proceedings to appropriate the property needed. The superintendent of public works may subscribe the certificate provided for in section 437, General Code, and deliver a copy thereof to the owner or owners of the property as prescribed by section 438, General Code.

COLUMBUS, OHIO, September 3, 1913.

HON. JOHN I. MILLER, Superintendent of Public Works, Columbus, Ohio.

DEAR SIR:—Your favor of August 28, 1913, through Mr. E. E. Booton, engineer land department, is received, in which you inquire:

> "May the department of public works immediately proceed with the construction of the extension of the Middletown dam, the levee embankment and other improvements contemplated in the vicinity of the dam across the Miami river about two miles above Middletown, Ohio, without waiting to condemn the land upon which these improvements must be made?
> "The March floods washed away most of the old levee embankment, a portion of the dam, and the head gates to the hydraulic, so as to jeopardize the city of Middletown should a rise of six feet occur in the river. Emergency repairs have been made, but we have been advised that the owner of the land where these improvements are to be made is expecting extravagant prices for the land.
> "We do not want to submit to extortion, but we cannot afford to jeopardize the lives and property of the citizens of Middletown by waiting on condemnation suits.
> "Can we proceed on the theory that an emergency exists and permit him to collect his damages whenever he desires to take the initiative?"

Article 1, section 19 of the constitution of Ohio, provides:

> "Private property shall ever be held inviolate, but subservient to the public welfare. When taken in time of war or other public exigency, imperatively requiring its immediate seizure or for the purpose of making or repairing roads, which shall be open to the public, without charge, a compensation shall be made to the owner, in money, and in all other cases where private property shall be taken for public use, a compensation therefor shall first be made in money, or first secured by a deposit of money; and such compensation shall be assessed by a jury, without deduction for benefits to any property of the owner."

This section of the constitution generally requires compensation to be made first in money, or secured by deposit of money before private property can be taken for a public use. There are three exceptions to this rule.

First. When taken in time of war.

Second. When taken in "other public exigency, imperatively requiring its immediate seizure."

Third. When taken for the purpose of "making or repairing roads which shall be open to the public, without charge."

The situation now presented must come under the second exception if any. It does not come under either the first or third exceptions.

Is your situation a "public exigency, imperatively requiring" the "immediate seizure" of the property in question?

The general assembly has defined a "public exigency" in reference to the public works.

Section 435, General Code, as amended in 103 Ohio Laws 123, provides:

> "A public exigency shall be deemed to exist if an injury or obstruction occurs in any of the public works which materially impairs their immediate use, or places in jeopardy property adjacent thereto, or there is immediate danger of such occurrence, or such injury, obstruction or danger occurs during the process of construction of such public works."

The words "or places in jeopardy property adjacent thereto," were inserted by the above amendatory act of said section 435.

In the case presented an injury occurred to the public works by reason of the floods of last March. This injury has placed in jeopardy not only property adjacent thereto, but the lives of the residents as well. This would be especially true if a sudden rise of the river should occur at night.

Black in his law dictionary defines, "exigence, or exigency,"

> "Demand, want, need, imperativeness."

In Webster's dictionary, "exigency" is defined:

> "State or quality of being exigent; urgent or exacting want; pressing necessity; need; a case demanding immediate action, supply or remedy; as, an unforeseen exigency."

Also "exigent" is defined.

> "Exacting or requiring immediate aid or action; pressing, critical."

There is a demand, a need for this property. The imperativeness or urgency of the need arises from the fact that the winter season is now fast approaching with resultant floods of winter and spring. The danger should be averted before the winter season sets in.

A proceeding to appropriate this property before beginning the improvements would mean considerable delay, and if the case should be taken to a higher court on error, would mean that the improvement could not be commenced this fall.

This situation creates an imperative and immediate need for this property. It is in my opinion an exigency.

The exigency must be public. The welfare of a considerable community is placed in jeopardy. The construction of levees has been held to be a public use.

At page 594 of 15 Cyc, it is said:

> "Drains and levees necessary for public health, convenience, and welfare are a public use, for which private property may be taken."

This property is therefore wanted for a public use. It is needed to protect a large community from the danger of flood, and this makes it a public need.

The situation is, therefore, a "public exigency." It needs immediate remedy.

It might be urged that the flood occurred four months ago and that with reasonable diligence appropriation proceedings could have been terminated by this time. That might be true if it had been known in March what property would be needed to make the improvements.

The flood occurred the latter part of March and paralyzed business for a considerable time. Temporary repairs had to be made. An appropriation of money had to be secured from the general assembly for permanent repairs. The nature of the improvement had to be determined and plans and specifications prepared. All this was necessary to be done before it could be determined what property would be needed.

The time which has elapsed since the flood is but a reasonable time in which to do these things. It cannot be successfully urged that due diligence has not been made.

I am of opinion, therefore, that a public exigency exists which imperatively requires the immediate seizure of this property.

The statutes prescribe the manner in which this property may be taken and compensation made in case of public exigency. The sections herein quoted are as amended in 103 Ohio Laws 123:

Section 436, General Code, provides:

> "When a public exigency exists, the superintendent of public works, or his representative, may take possession of lands and use them, or materials and other property necessary for the maintenance, protection or repair of the public works. The superintendent of public works or any officer or employe in his service may enter upon lands for the purpose of taking levels or making surveys, when necessary in the discharge of the duties of his office."

Section 437, General Code, provides:

> "If the superintendent of public works and the owner of the property taken or used under the preceding section are unable to agree upon the amount of the compensation to be paid therefor, the superintendent of public works shall immediately make and subscribe a certificate containing the following:
> "1. A description of the property, date when it was taken, name of the owner or owners, and whether taken absolutely or for temporary use; if for temporary use, the extent thereof.
> "2. An offer of such compensation as the superintendent deems reasonable as compensation for the property taken."

Section 438, General Code, provides:

> "A copy of such certificate shall be delivered to each owner of the property taken, or left at his usual place of residence within the state. If such owner is a minor, idiot or insane person, such certificate may be delivered to his guardian. If the owner or guardian is not a resident of the state, or his place of business is unknown, notice may be given him by the publication of the certificate for four consecutive weeks in a newspaper of general circulation in the county in which the property is situated. The original certificate, with the date, and proof of service of a copy thereof shall be filed in the office of the superintendent of public works."

Section 439, General Code, provides:

"The owner of the property, or his guardian, may elect to take the compensation named in the certificate, or his portion thereof, within one year from the service or last publication of such certificate. If he so elect, the superintendent of public works shall pay him the amount of such compensation and take his receipt therefor."

Section 440, General Code, provides:

"If the owner or guardian is unwilling to accept the compensation named in the certificate, he must notify the superintendent of public works within one year and file the copy of the certificate served on him in the probate court of the county in which the property is situated. If the property is situated in two or more counties, he may file such copy in the probate court of either county."

The provisions of these statutes are to be followed. The superintendent of public works must subscribe the certificate provided for in section 437, General Code, and deliver a copy thereof to the owner or owners of the property as prescribed in section 438, General Code. It is then up to the property owner to accept or reject the offer.

It is my opinion that the superintendent of public works may proceed with the work in question without first entering proceedings to appropriate the property needed. A remedy is provided by which the owner may secure proper compensation for his property so taken.

Respectfully,
TIMOTHY S. HOGAN,
Attorney General.

IF RAILROADS HAVE COMPLIED WITH THE STATUTES REGULATING THEIR CROSSING OF CANALS, THEY HAVE AN EASEMENT WHICH WILL CONTINUE SO LONG AS THE ROADS CONTINUE TO CROSS THE CANALS.

The state, having the fee simple title to canal lands has the right to sell the canal for railroad purposes and to grant a continuous right of way, subject to the right of the crossing railroad to cross the canal on the land in the manner provided by sections 8775 and 8776, General Code. The fee would be in the grantee of the state subject to the easement of the crossing road.

COLUMBUS, OHIO, August 26, 1913.

HON. JOHN I. MILLER, Superintendent of Public Works, Columbus, Ohio.

DEAR SIR:—Your inquiry of April 3, 1913, through Mr. E. E. Booton, engineer canal land department, is received in which you state:

"Since the abandonment of portions of the Ohio canal, an important question has arisen as to the rights of railway companies to occupy and use the rights of way occupied by the bridges prior to the abandonment of the canal for purposes of navigation.

"Upon one of the short sections of the canal property in Newark sold by the state to A. H. H., a railway company has a bridge carrying a double track that it has occupied for at least thirty years. When this tract was advertised for sale, it was expected that the railway company would bid on it, but H., on the day of sale, was the only bidder, the property selling for three-fourths the appraisement.

"Mr. H. has asked the railway company to reimburse him for the proportion of the ground occupied by the railway company and the latter has refused to comply with the request, stating that the company has an easement for crossing purposes.

"Section 4 of the act of May 1, 1852, (1 S. C. 318 and 319), provided the method by which railroads could cross canals. One of the principal restrictions was that the board of public works or acting commissioners should approve the plan of any proposed bridge before the construction of the same was commenced, and no plan was to be approved that did not provide at least ten feet clearance above the top water line of the canal, and that abutments should not interfere with the navigation of the canal.

"The state never received a cent for the use of the ground occupied and as the railroads were often competitors with the canal, the state suffered by this competition, while the railroads actually were exempted from taxation so far as the ground occupied by the railroad crossings were concerned.

"In selling these abandoned canal strips, the best bidders for much of the property are likely to come from railway corporations desiring to acquire them for rights of way for railway purposes, but if these rights of way are not continuous for considerable distances, they are of no practical value for railway purposes, and must be sold for one-third what they would otherwise bring.

"Under the statutes the railway company might have used à draw bridge, instead of an overhead structure, but the plans approved were for a crossing with ten feet clearance above the top water line of the canal. Can the company now change the style of bridge, or going further, fill in the prism of the canal so as to have a solid earth roadbed as is now proposed by some of the railroads?"

The acts to which you refer and under which railroads secured the right to cross the canals of the state were first passed in 50 Ohio Laws 274, section 20, and 50 Ohio Laws, 205, sections 4 and 5. The provisions of these acts to be considered in the present inquiry were carried into the Revised Statutes as sections 3317 and 3318. These sections were carried into the General Code as sections 8775, 8776 and 8777. In these revisions there has been no substantial change in the provisions of the acts. The sections as now found in the General Code will be quoted.

Section 8775, General Code, provides:

"When the line of the road crosses a canal or any navigable water, the company shall file with the board of public works, the plan of the bridge, and other fixtures therefor, which shall designate the place of crossing. If the board approves such plan, it shall notify the company, in writing, of such approval. If the board disapproves such plan, or fails to approve it within twenty days from the filing thereof, the company may apply to the court of common pleas, or a judge thereof in vacation, and upon reasonable notice being given to the members of the board, upon good cause shown, the court or judge shall appoint a competent, disinterested engineer, not a resident of a county through which the road passes, to examine such crossing, and prescribe the plan and conditions thereof, so as not to impede navigation. Within twenty days from his appointment, such engineer shall make his returns to the common pleas court of the county wherein such crossing is to be made, subject to exceptions by either party. At the next term after filing the return, the court shall examine, approve, and confirm it, unless good cause be shown against such approval. Its order of confirmation shall be sufficient authority for the erection, use, and occupancy of such bridge, in accordance with such plans."

Section 8776, General Code, provides:

"No company shall construct over a canal any permanent bridge less than ten feet in the clear above the top water line of the canal, and the piers and abutments of such bridge must be placed so as not in any manner to contract the width of the canal, or interfere with free passage on the tow path. This section shall not prevent the construction or continuance of draw bridges which do not interrupt navigation."

Section 8777, General Code, provides:

"All railroad bridges erected prior to May 1, 1852, over any navigable canal, feeder, slack water improvement, river, stream, lake or reservoir, not less than ten feet in the clear above the top water line, shall remain undisturbed by the board of public works."

The road referred to in these sections is that of a railroad as is shown by section 8774, General Code, and also by the title under which these sections are placed.

The railroad secured its right to cross the canal by virtue of the foregoing provisions and at a time when the canal was maintained for the purposes of navigation.

In State ex rel. vs. The Cincinnati Central Railway Company, 37 Ohio St., 157, Johnson, J., on page 173, after referring to the original act and to the provisions of section 1, 2 and 3 thereof, says as to section 4 of said act:

"Section 4 provided that all bridges that had therefore been erected across the canals, etc., which did not obstruct or impair navigation, and were not less than ten feet above top water line, should be permitted to stand. By section 3317 of the Revised Statutes the right of railroads to cross the canal is restricted so as not to impair navigation thereon. The plan of the bridge and other fixtures for crossing the canal, and the location, must be approved by the board or acting commissioner, but if they disapprove it, then application must be made to the court of common pleas or judge thereof for such approval but even the court has no power to approve the plan, where the bridge is less than ten feet above the top water line of the canal, or where the piers or abutments interfere with navigation.

"These provisions clearly show the care the legislature has taken to preserve the canals.

"They show further, that as between the two public uses, that for purposes of navigation is paramount over public uses for railroads, even as against the right to cross."

The state of Ohio granted by the foregoing acts to a railroad company, the right to cross the canals of the state in a certain manner. The railroad company had the right to cross either by draw bridge, or by a stationary bridge. In the present case a stationary bridge was constructed. Such a bridge was to be constructed upon plans approved by the board of public works, or by court order if the board failed to approve.

The statute fixes certain restrictions. Such bridge must be at least ten feet in the clear above the top water line of the canal. The abutments must be constructed so as "not in any manner to contract the width of the canal, or to interfere with the free passage on the tow path. These were the conditions upon which the railroad company constructed its bridge. So long as the canal is open for navigation, the railroad company can cross the canal with its railroad only in accordance with the above restrictions.

The canal in question has been abandoned for navigation purposes and the state has sold the fee simple title to a part of the land. It is conceded that the state had the fee simple title.

The act abandoning the canal in question is found in 102 Ohio Laws 293, and is known as sections 14203-12 to 14203-19, inclusive, appendix to the General Code.

Section 14203-17, General Code, (section 6 act 102 Ohio Laws 293), provides:

"The county commissioners of any county, likewise the council of any municipality, through which said abandoned canal passes, shall have the right to remove all existing bridges crossing any portion of said abandoned canal over which public highways or the streets of any municipality pass, and to grade such highways and streets by filling and grading across the channel and banks thereof, but must provide for all necessary drainage underneath the same; there is, however, reserved to the state of Ohio, its lessees, grantees, and their assigns, an unobstructed right-of-way, for any and all purposes, across the land occupied by the highways and streets extending across said abandoned canal, as provided for above."

This section grants to counties and municipalities the right to remove bridges and to fill in the channel of the canal where the same is crossed by highways and streets. No such right is granted to a railroad company and this omission is significant.

This section further reserves to the state, its lessees, its grantees, and their assigns "an unobstructed right of way, for any and all purposes," across that part of the canal occupied by highways and streets. It might be urged that no such unobstructed right-of-way is reserved as against a railroad. As railroads are not granted the privilege to remove bridges and to fill in the channel, no such reservation was necessary.

Section 14203-19, General Code, (section 8 of 102 Ohio Laws 293), provides:

"Nothing in this act shall interfere with any leases, rights or privileges heretofore granted by the state of Ohio and in force at the date of approval of this act."

By virtue of this section the right of the railroad company to continue its track across the canal is preserved. It will be observed that the rights retained by this section are those which are "in force at the date of the approval of this act."

The right which the railroad company had when the act was approved and which was then in force was to cross the canal by a bridge constructed upon plans approved by the board of public works, said bridge to be at least ten feet in the clear of the top water line, and the abutments to be so constructed as not to contract width of the canal, or to interfere with free passage on the tow path.

This was the right which the railroad had when the canal was abandoned. The abandonment of the canal and the sale of the canal land by the state has neither diminished, nor increased the right of the railroad company to cross the same with its tracks. The right to cross, and the conditions thereof, attached when the railroad first crossed the canal, and it will continue so long as the railroad crosses the same. In other words, the railroad company has an easement to cross the canal, or the land in which the canal was constructed, in the manner prescribed by sections 8775 and 8776, General Code, and in no other manner.

The purchaser of this land took it subject to the easement of the railroad company. The railroad company was in possession and that is notice as to its rights, and the purchaser was thereby put upon his inquiry.

The fact that the railroad company received this easement without compensation does not affect the situation. The grant was made by act of the legislature and the railroad has acted upon said grant.

In answer to your specific questions:

The purchaser has no right of reimbursement against the railroad company for the land occupied by it at the time of his purchase.

The railroad company has no right to fill in the prism of the canal at its crossing. It has an easement to cross only in the manner prescribed by sections 8775 and 8776, General Code.

The railroad company cannot change the style of its bridge so as to take more of the canal land. It cannot now change the style of its bridge so as to leave less than ten feet in the clear.

The state, having the fee simple title to the canal land, has the right to sell the canal for railroad purposes and to grant a continuous right-of-way, subject only to the right of the crossing railroad to cross the canal, or the land, in the manner provided by sections 8775 and 8776, General Code. The fee would be in the grantee of the state, subject to the easement of the crossing railroad.

Respectfully,

TIMOTHY S. HOGAN,

Attorney General.

THE STATE MAY REGULATE THE CONSTRUCTHION OF BRIDGES OVER NAVIGABLE STREAMS, SUBJECT TO THE APPROVAL OF THE SECRETARY OF WAR.

The state has the right to regulate the construction of bridges across navigable rivers in Ohio. Such bridges must, in addition, have the approval of the secretary of war, by virtue of section 10 of the act of congress, March 3, 1889.

The right of the state to regulate such structures does not apply to bridges authorized by acts of congress, but applies to all other structures.

COLUMBUS, OHIO, September 16, 1913.

HON. JOHN I. MILLER, Superintendent of Public Works, Columbus, Ohio.

DEAR SIR:—Under date of May 27, 1913, you submit the following inquiries to this department:

"In matters pertaining to the proper action to be taken for the prevention of floods along and down the Miami river in this state, the question has been raised as to whether that stream is a navigable river, under the control of the national government, or whether it is a stream belonging to and under the absolute authority of the state of Ohio. This proposition has been the cause of considerable division in the matter of planning for flood prevention. It leads to a waste of energy and the crossing of purposes in dealing with the most complete surveys and investigations necessary to a perfect solution of the problem.

"The following questions have arisen and I should like to have your opinion on the same at your earliest convenience:

"First. When original plats show that government patents for land conveyed only to low water mark and not to the middle of the stream, will usage or prescription and claiming to the middle of the stream in later conveyances give title as against the original grantor?

"Second. When the grants of land were made to the state of Ohio by the national government of lands adjacent to the Miami river, did the grant include the river?

"Third. If the national government owns the Miami river, should it not regulate by law all structures which are placed across it, such as railroad bridges, piers, abutments and levees or embankments which approach such piers and abutments?

"Fourth. If the state of Ohio owns the Miami river, then to what extent, if any, has it the power under the law to regulate the construction of bridges, piers, abutments and embankments approaching said structures?

"Fifth. The state of Ohio has built dams across the Miami river at various points. The slack water, which is formed by said dams, may extend several miles upon this stream in various parts. Has the state only an easement for so much water as it may desire to take from the various slack waters thus created, or does the erection of these dams and the forming of slack waters give to the state in fee so much of the land as forms the bed and sides of the river, thus within the precincts of the various dams and slack waters?"

Your fifth question has been answered in an opinion given to you under date of February 8, 1912, in reference to the state dam in the Scioto river near Circleville. In that opinion it was held that the state had only an easement in the land covered by the back water. The nature of the right of the state will depend, in a measure, upon what was taken when the dam was built. This is considered in the opinion above referred to and covers the matter.

Your other questions arise as to navigable and non-navigable streams.

In Ohio, the rule is that navigability of a stream is determined by the fact of its use, or capability of being used, for useful navigation.

In Hickok, et al., vs. Hine, 23 Ohio St., 523, it is held:

> "The rivers of this state, to the extent that they are in fact navigable, are public highways.
>
> "A river is regarded navigable which is capable of transporting the products of the country, or upon which commerce may be conducted; and its character as a highway is determined by its navigable capacity rather than by the frequency of its use for navigation."

Day, J., says on page 527:

> "Having no tidal waters in the state, the word 'navigable,' as applied to our rivers, is not used in the technical sense of the common law; but it is applied, as in the popular sense, to all rivers that are navigable in fact.
> "A river is regarded as navigable which is capable of floating to market the products of the country through which it passes, or upon which commerce may be conducted; and, from the fact of its being so navigable, it becomes in law a public river or highway. The character of a river, as such highway, is not so much determined by the frequency of its use for that purpose as it is by its capacity of being used by the public for purposes of transportation and commerce."

The foregoing authority follows the rule generally held in the United States.

In 29 Cyc at page 289, it is said:

> "Water is navigable in law, although not tidal, where navigable in fact, and is navigable in fact where it is of sufficient capacity to be capable of being used for useful purposes of navigation, that is, for trade and travel in the usual and ordinary modes. This rule is not only the one which prevails in nearly all of the states in this country but was also the rule under the civil law."

A stream is to be considered navigable when it is capable of being used for useful purposes of navigation. The manner of making government surveys does not determine the navigability of a stream.

In Ohio the rule is well established that the owners of the land bordering a navigable river own the thread or middle of the river, subject to the rights of the public in the waters thereof.

The leading case in Ohio is that of Gavit vs. Chambers, 3 Ohio, 496, wherein it is held:

"In Ohio, owners of lands situate on the banks of navigable streams running through the state, are also owners of the beds of the rivers to the middle of the stream, as at common law."

This case is followed in a number of later decisions. The decisions of different states, however, are in conflict upon this proposition.

In June vs. Purcell, 36 Ohio St., 396, it was held:

The principle decided in Gavit vs. Chambers (3 Ohio, 496), that the owners of lands situate on the banks of navigable streams running through the state are also owners of the beds of the rivers to the middle of the stream, as at common law, has become a rule of property, and, irrespective of the question of its original correctness, ought not to be disturbed."

The government survey of the land in controversy in the above case was made to points on the bank and was meandered on the bank of the river.

White, J., says on page 407 of June vs. Purcell, supra:

"It is admitted in the agreed statement that 'none of the subdivisional lines of the survey extend to, or embraced the bed of the river, but that, on the contrary, all of the subdivisional lines approaching the river were so run as to extend only to certain points on the bank of the river, at greater or less distances from the margin of the water, which points are designated by the survey as corners to the respective subdivisions of the reservation. And also that the river was meandered on the bank thereof, to and from said respective corners.

"That the meandering lines run in surveying portions of the public lands bordering upon navigable rivers, are run, not as boundaries of the tract, but as a means of ascertaining the quantity of land to be paid for by the purchaser, was decided in Railroad Company vs. Schurmeir, supra. The meander line, therefore, in the present instance, not being a boundary line, the only boundary was the river; and the question is when the boundary line of a riparian owner is thus described, where is it to be located? Gavit vs. Chambers answers, at the middle of the stream, as at common law."

In Railroad Company vs. Platt, et al., 53 Ohio St., 254 it is held:

"A conveyance of lands situated upon a navigable stream, the description being by courses and distances from a fixed monument and establishing a boundary line coincident with the line of navigation, conveys the grantor's title as far as the central thread of the stream."

In Walker vs. Board of Public Works, 16 Ohio, 540, it is held:

"The legislature cannot, by declaring a river navigable which is not so in fact, deprive the riparian proprietors of their rights to the use of the water for hydraulic and other purposes, without rendering them compensation.

"He who owns the land on both banks of a navigable river, owns the entire river, subject only to the easement of navigation; and he who owns the land upon one bank only, owns to the middle of the main channel, subject to the same easement."

The rule in Ohio is that the owner of land on the banks of a navigable river owns to the thread of the stream. This rule applies to lands owned by the state as well as to lands owned by private persons.

There are cases where the title to the bed of the river is separate from the title to the bank. In these cases special reservation has been made, or the bed of the river has been sold by the owner of the bank. It follows from this that the national government could reserve the bed of the river when making a grant of the land. It does not appear that any reservation has been made and this will not be further considered.

The rule as to non-navigable streams is stated in 5 Cyc. at page 897, as follows:

> "A grant or conveyance of land bounded by a non-navigable stream carries with it the bed of the stream to its center, unless a contrary intention is manifest from the grant or conveyance itself."

In case of Benner's Lessee vs. Platter, et al., 6 Ohio, it is held:

> "A call in a survey, for a stream not navigable, is a call for the main branch of such stream, and the boundary is the middle of the stream."

In Ohio, therefore, in both navigable and non-navigable streams, the owners of the banks own to the middle of the stream.

The national government has reserved the right to regulate the construction of bridges, piers, and other obstructions in navigable streams. This right is exercised under its power to regulate interstate and foreign commerce.

Section 10 of the act of congress of March 3, 1899, 30 Statutes at Large 1121, 1151, provides:

> "That the creation of any obstruction not affirmatively authorized by congress, to the navigable capacity of any of the waters of the United States is hereby prohibited; and it shall not be lawful to build or commence the building of any wharf, pier, dolphin, boom, wier, breakwater, bulkhead, jetty or other structures in any port, roadstead, haven, harbor, canal, navigable river or other water of the United States, outside established harbor lines, or where no harbor lines have been established, except on plans recommended by the chief of engineers and authorized by the secretary of war; and it shall not be lawful to excavate or fill, or in any manner to alter or modify the course, location, condition or capacity of any port, roadstead, haven, harbor, canal, lake, harbor of refuge, or inclosure within the limits of any breakwater, or of the channel of any navigable water of the United States, unless the work has been recommended by the chief of engineers and authorized by the secretary of war prior to beginning the same."

This section is considered and authorities cited in the opinion rendered by this department to Hon. E. K. Wilcox, city solicitor of Cleveland, under date of April 16, 1912. However this section will now be considered in reference to navigable rivers. In the above opinion it was considered in reference to its application to Lake Erie.

The section above quoted is an amendment of a similar provision contained in an act of congress passed September 19, 1890. The provisions of the act of 1899, supra, are substantially the same as similar provisions contained in the act of 1890.

The act of 1890 was construed by the supreme court of the United States in a case coming to it on error from the supreme court of Ohio, in Lake Shore & Michigan Southern Ry. Co. vs. Ohio, 165 U. S. 365, wherein it was held:

> "The provisions in sections 4, 5 and 7, of the act of September 19, 1890, c. 907, conferring upon the secretary of war authority concerning bridges over navigable waterways, do not deprive the states of authority to bridge such streams, but simply create an additional and cumulative remedy to prevent such structures, although lawfully authorized, from interfering with commerce."

The court through Mr. Justice White, discusses the statutes of the United States and their application, and then says in conclusion on page 369 of the opinion:

> "It follows, therefore, that even conceding arguendo that the words 'navigable waters' as used in the act were intended to apply to streams wholly within a state, its obvious purpose was not to deprive the states of authority to grant power to bridge such streams, or to render lawful all bridges previously built without authority, but simply to create an additional and cumulative remedy to prevent such structures, although lawfully authorized, from interfering with commerce."

The supreme court of Ohio did not report its decision but the ruling of the circuit court is referred to in 33 Bull. at page 169.

In construing the act of 1890, the attorney general of the United States, said:

> "The statute is revisory and defensive in its nature, it clears the way for interstate and foreign commerce, but does not assume the police power or local control. (1891) 20 Op. attorney General 101."

The provisions of the act of 1890, construed in the foregoing authorities are substantially the same as those of the later act of 1899, above quoted.

The purpose of this act is to grant to the secretary of war a supervisory power over structures in navigable waters, to prevent such structures from interfering with commerce. The power granted to the secretary of war is not exclusive, but is "an additional and cumulative remedy to prevent such structures—from interfering with commerce."

The state still has the right to regulate and authorize such structures, and in addition to the authority of the state the approval of the secretary of war must be secured.

The state of Ohio has made provision in reference to the construction of railroad bridges:

Section 8775, General Code, provides:

> "When the line of the road crosses a canal or any navigable water, the company shall file with the board of public works, the plan of the bridge, and other fixtures therefor, which shall designate the place of crossing. If the board approves such plan, it shall notify the company, in writing, of such approval. If the board disapproves such plan, or fails to approve it within twenty days from the filing thereof, the company may apply to the court of common pleas, or a judge thereof in vacation, and upon reasonable notice being given to the members of the board, upon good causes shown, the court or judge shall appoint a competent, disinterested engineer, not a resident of a county through which the road passes, to examine such crossing, and prescribe the plan and conditions thereof, so as not to impede navigation. Within twenty days from his appointment, such engineer shall make his returns to the common pleas court of the county wherein such crossing is to be made subject to exceptions by either party. At the next term after filing the return, the court shall examine, approve, and confirm it, unless good cause be shown against such approval. Its order of confirmation shall be sufficient authority for the erection, use, and occupancy of such bridge, in accordance with such plans."

This section covers railroad bridges over navigable waters which must be approved by the board of public works, which is now the department of public works. If such approval of the plans is not secured, provision is made to determine the matter in the court of common pleas.

The general rule as to building bridges across navigable streams is stated in 29 Cyc. at page 311:

"A bridge across a navigable stream is an obstruction to navigation tolerated only because of necessity and the convenience of commerce on land, the right of navigation of the stream being paramount. Unless authorized by congress or the state, or the officer or board to whom the federal or state power has been delegated, a person or corporation has no right to build a bridge across navigable waters. And this rule applies equally well to a riparian owner. Likewise, neither county commissioners nor supervisors nor town boards, in the absence of a statute authorizing it, have power to construct a bridge over navigable waters; although there are cases holding that statutory power to lay out highways includes the power to construct bridges necessary for crossing navigable streams."

Also at page 307 it is said:

"Obstructions not materially injuring free navigation, which are temporary and reasonable, are not nuisances. On the other hand, except where authorized by statute, any 'material' obstruction is unlawful and a nuisance; and this rule applies not only to obstructions by the public but also by riparian owners, or by a city. It applies to waters navigable in fact as well as to tidal waters, although it has been held that it does not apply to streams valuable only for floatage of logs."

The state, therefore, has a right to regulate the constrution of bridges across navigable streams. Such bridegs must in addition, have the approval of the secretary of war by virtue of section 10 of the act of congress of March 3, 1899, supra. The right of the state to regulate such structures would not apply to bridges authorized by act of congress, but it applies to all other structures.

I find no statute in Ohio, except section 8775, General Code, supra, regulating the construction of bridges across navigable streams. The right to cross navigable streams by means of a bridge must first be secured from the state, unless authorized by congress, as laid down in 29 Cyc. 311, supra. When such right is granted the method of exercising it can be determined.

The foregoing, I believe, covers your specific inquiries. If it does not I will gladly give the matter further consideration upon further submission.

Respectfully,

TIMOTHY S. HOGAN,

Attorney General.

IN LEASING OF ABANDONED CANAL LANDS, THE AUDITOR OF STATE IS ALLOWED TO CREDIT BACK A SUM NOT EXCEEDING $5,000.00 TO THE FUND FROM WHICH THE MONEY HAS BEEN SPENT TO PREPARE THIS LAND FOR LEASING.

Where a portion of the abandoned Hocking canal has been leased, and the sum of $6,000.00 has been spent in surveying, platting and monumenting said abandoned canal, and also in advertising, selling and leasing said canal, the auditor of state is authorized to credit the sum of $5,000.00 back to the fund or funds from which such payment has been made.

COLUMBUS, OHIO, December 17, 1913.

DEAR SIR:—Under date of November 6, 1913, you inquire:

"A lease has been granted to James Sharp and James M. Dollison for the portion of the abandoned Hocking canal between Main street in Lancaster and the south end of the lower lock in Nelsonville, Ohio.

"Section 5 of the act abandoning the Hocking canal (see O. L. 102, p. 491) provided that the expenses of surveying, platting and monumenting said abandoned canal lands. together with the necessary expenses of advertising and selling and leasing the same should be verified and approved by the chief engineer and the board of public works (succeeded by the superintendent of public works), and paid out of the canal funds, or other funds provided for the survey of canal lands.

"Approximately $6,000.00 has been expended from the appropriations accredited to the land department in carrying on this work. The act directs that the auditor of state credit back to the fund or funds from which such payments were made, a like sum not to exceed $5,000.00 from the receipts derived from the sales and leases of said lands.

"Since the act of May 31, 1911, was passed, the department has been entirely reorganized under the act of March 6, 1913, (See O. L. 103 p. 119).

"The lease to Sharp and Dollison provides for an advance payment of $5,000.00, and we would like to be in a position to have this accredited to the land department."

Section 5 of act of 102 Ohio Laws 491, provides:

"All accounts of expenses, incident to surveying, platting and monumenting said abandoned canal lands, together with the necessary expenses of advertising, selling or leasing the same, shall be verified and approved by the chief engineer and the board of public works, and paid out of the canal funds, or other funds provided for the survey of canal lands, and the auditor of state is hereby directed to credit back to the fund or funds from which such payments are made, a like amount in any sum not to exceed five thousand ($5,000.00) dollars from the receipts derived from the sales and leases of said lands.".

This section authorizes the auditor of state to credit back to the canal funds a sum not to exceed five thousand dollars from the receipts derived from the sale or lease of said lands.

It appears that a lease has been entered into, or is to be entered into, for a part of this land and that the sum of five thousand dollars is to be paid thereon. Approximately six thousand dollars has been expended in the survey of this land.

When the foreging act was passed the public works were in charge of a board known as the board of public works. The superintendent of public works, by constitutional amendment has succeeded this board.

Section 464, General Code, as amended in 103 Ohio Laws 127, provides:

> "The superintendent of public works shall exercise all the powers and duties heretofore conferred by law upon the board of public works and the Ohio canal commission in the selling or leasing of canal or state lands, but no land lease, or sale of canal or state lands, shall be made except upon the written approval of the governor and the attorney general."

The reorganization of the department of public works did not repeal or modify the provisions of section 5 of 102 Ohio Laws 491, supra. This section is still in force, and by its provisions the auditor of state is directed to credit back to the fund or funds from which the expenses enumerated therein have been paid, "a like amount in any sum not to exceed five thousand dollars from the receipts derived from the sales and leases of said lands."

Approximately six thousand dollars has been paid from the funds and the sum of five thousand dollars is to be received from a lease of a part of said lands. I am of the opinion that the auditor of state would be authorized to credit said sum of five thousand dollars back to the fund or funds from which such payments have been made.

Respectfully,
TIMOTHY S. HOGAN,
Attorney General.

BOARD OF EDUCATION—PAROCHIAL PUPILS MAY NOT RECEIVE DIPLOMAS FOR PASSING OF BOXWELL-PATTERSON EXAMINATIONS—SUCH PUPILS MAY BE ADMITTED TO HIGH SCHOOL WITHOUT DIPLOMAS—EXAMINATION REQUIRED OF BOARD.

Inasmuch as parochial pupils are not pupils of township, special or village districts, they do not come within the terms of sections 7740 and 7744, General Code, providing for the examination of pupils of such district and the presentation of the successful applicants with a diploma which shall entitle its holder to enter any high school in the state.

Under section 7681, General Code, which provides that schools of each district shall be free to all youth of the district, pupils of parochial schools are entitled to admission in to the high school of the city in which they live, upon compliance with such examination requirements as the school authorities may provide.

COLUMBUS, OHIO, February 1, 1913.

HON. FRANK W. MILLER, State Commissioner of Common Schools, Columbus, Ohio.

DEAR SIR:—I desire to acknowledge receipt of your letter of September 10, 1912, wherein you inquire as follows:

> "In the city of Cambridge, pupils from a parochial school of that city and who live in that city took the Boxwell-Patterson examination, made passing grades and were given diplomas by the county examiners. Have the county examiners legal authority to grant such diplomas and must the board of education of Cambridge admit the holders of these diplomas to their high school?"

In reply thereto I desire to say that section 7740 of the General Code provides for an examination of the pupils of the township, special and village districts as follows:

> "Each board of county school examiners shall hold examinations of pupils of township and special districts, and of village districts in the subjects of orthography, reading, writing, arithmetic, English grammer and compensation, geography, history of the United States, including civil government, and physiology. Two such examinations must be held annually, on the third Saturday of April, and one on the third Saturday of May, at such place or places as such board designates."

Section 7744 of the General Code provides for a county commencement and granting of diplomas, as follows:

> "The board of county school examiners shall provide for the holding of a county commencement not later than August 15th, at such place as it determines. At this commencement an annual address must be delivered, at the conclusion of which a diploma shall be presented to each successful applicant who has complied with the provisions hereof. Such diploma shall entitle its holder to enter any high school in the state."

Section 7747 of the General Code provides that the tuition of pupils holding such diplomas and residing in the township and special district in which no high school is maintained shall be paid by the board of education of such district, as follows:

> "The tuition of pupils holding diplomas and residing in township or special districts, in which no high school is maintained, shall be paid by the board of education of the school district in which they have legal school residence, such tuition to be computed by the month. An attendance any part of the month shall create a liability for the entire month; but a board of education maintaining a high school shall not charge more tuition than it charges for other nonresident pupils."

In your inquiry you state that the pupils in question live in the city of Cambridge and are therefore pupils who live in the Cambridge city school district. Section 7681, General Code, provides that the schools of each respective school district shall be free to all the youth between six and twenty-one years of age who live therein, subject to the rules and regulations of the local boards of education, as follows:

> "The schools of each district shall be free to all youth between six and twenty-one years of age, who are children, wards or apprentices of actual residents of the district, including children of proper age who are inmates of a county or district children's home located in such a school district, at the discretion of its board of education, but the time in the school year at which beginners may enter upon the first year's work of the elementary schools shall be subject to the rules and regulations of the local boards of education. But all youth of school age living apart from their parents or guardians and who work to support themselves by their own labor, shall be entitled to attend school free in the district in which they are employed."

The provision of the said statute in and of itself gives them the undoubted right to attend the Cambridge high school without any other qualification, excepting to take and successfully pass such entrance examination for entering the said Cambridge high school as may be required by the school authorities. Usually the school authorities and those in charge of the parochial schools have an arrangement whereby the pupils of parochial schools are admitted to the high school without further examination, and in some cases as a matter of comity between the high school and parochial school the courses of study in the respective schools are made similar so that the pupils from such parochial schools can become qualified to take the high school entrance examination, if any such examination is required, or at least that the high school entrance examination of parochial school pupils shall be similar to and not more difficult than the examination given to pupils who pass from the lower grades of the public schools to the high school. As I have before stated these arrangements between the high school and parochial school authorities are usually entered into as a matter of comity between those in charge of the respective schools. It is not necessary for them to take the so-called Boxwell-Patterson examination for the purpose of attending the Cambridge city high school. This follows by virtue of section 7681, General Code.

Furthermore, the county examiners are without authority to grant such diplomas to such pupils for the reason they do not come within the provisions of section

7740 of the General Code, supra, not being pupils of the township, special or village districts, and for the further reason that such pupils do not come within the provisions of section 7747 of the General Code, supra, inasmuch as they are not residents of the township or special districts in which no high school is maintained.

Very truly yours,
TIMOTHY S. HOGAN,
Attorney General.

BOARD OF EDUCATION—VILLAGE AND SPECIAL DISTRICT—SPECIAL ELECTION FOR BOARD OF EDUCATION IN NEWLY INCORPORATED VILLAGE UNAUTHORIZED—THE FILLING OF VACANCY WHEN ALL BUT TWO MEMBERS OF BOARD ARE DISQUALIFIED BY FORMATION OF SPECIAL DISTRICT—MANDAMUS UNAVAILABLE TO ENFORCE CORPORATION TO ORGANIZE AS A VILLAGE DISTRICT.

When a newly incorporated village is formed with a tax duplicate of more than $100,000, such village becomes ipso facto a village school district, but when such village fails to elect a board of education when the village officers are elected, a special election for members of such board of education is not authorized by law. Such members can only be elected in the odd numbered years.

When in a township there exists two or more districts unconnected and the village school district and the further special district is organized, the two subdistricts and the part of the township not included in the village district or the special district, will all comprise parts of the township school district and will still remain under the jurisdiction of the township board of education. The village district also will remain under the control of the township board of education until such time as it is properly organized after its members are elected.

Under section 4748, General Code, when three out of five members of a township board of education become disqualified for that office by reason of the formation of a special school district, the two remaining members may fill such vacancies in the township board.

Inasmuch as there are no officers upon whom rests the ministerial duty to organize the village district or to call an election for members of its board of education, such election may not be enforced by mandamus. The organization may be brought about by a sufficient number of electors taking steps to become candidates for the village board of education at the November election and the board of elections would be required to place their names upon the ballots and hold an election therefor.

COLUMBUS, OHIO, February 24, 1913.

HON. FRANK W. MILLER, State Commissioner of Common Schools, Columbus, Ohio.

DEAR SIR:—Under date of February 5, 1913, you submit the following facts and questions to this department for opinion:

> "Kirkersville, Licking county, is located in the southern part of Harrison township. The B. & O. and Pennsylvania railroads pass through the entire length of Harrison township cutting it into about equal parts. The people on either side of these railroads have petitioned the probate judge to grant them a special district, excluding Kirkersville on the south and a subdistrict in the northeastern corner of the township, and a subdistrict in the northwestern corner of the township. Also a small portion of land surrounding the corporations of Kirkersville.

"Kirkersville is an incorporated village and has been such for at least three years, but has failed to elect a board of education up to this time. The entire township has been considered a township district and a township board has maintained the school at Kirkersville the same as its township schools. The people of the proposed special district are opposed to maintaining the Kirkersville school longer than this school year.

"Questions:

"First. If the special district is allowed, under whose jurisdiction will the remaining schools of the township be? (Three members of the township board of education live in the special district). Is it possible for two members of the township board to appoint the other three members of the board if three vacancies should occur at the same time?

"Second. Is it possible to hold a special election for the election of the members of the board of education in a village district, when the village district has been previously incorporated and the officers of the incorporation have been elected previously?

"Third. It is possible to enforce the corporation of Kirkersville to organize as a village district?"

It appears further that the village of Kirkersville has a tax duplicate of more than one hundred thousand dollars and it is therefore, by virtue of section 4681, General Code, as construed in Buckman vs. State, 81 Ohio St. 171, a village school district by operation of law.

Said section 4681, General Code, provides:

"Each village, together with the territory attached to it for school purposes, and excluding the territory within its corporate limits detached for school purposes, and having in the district thus formed a total tax valuation of not less than one hundred thousand dollars, shall constitute a village school district."

This is fully discussed and determined in an opinion given to Hon. James E. Bell, prosecuting attorney, London, Ohio, under date of April 18, 1912, of which opinion your department has a copy.

In that opinion it was held, as shown on page 5 thereof, that:

"There is no provision of statute which authorizes the holding of a special election, for the election of the members of a board of education for a village school district, when such village school district comes into existence by reason of its increase in tax valuation which requires it under section 4681, General Code, to become a village school district. In the absence of such provision no special election could be held for such purpose, even at the general election in the even numbered years. Such members can only be elected in the odd numbered years."

Attention has been called to the provisions of sections 4709 and 4710, General Code.

Section 4709, General Code, provides:

"At the first election in such district, a board of education shall be elected, two members to serve for two years and three to serve for four years. At the proper municipal election held thereafter, their successors shall be elected for a term of four years."

Section 4710, General Code, provides:

"In villages hereafter created, a board of education shall be elected as provided in the preceding section. If such election is a special election, the members elected shall serve for the term indicated in such section from the first Monday in January after the last preceding election for members of the board of education, and the board shall organize on the second Monday after the special election."

The special election referred to in section 4710, General Code, is the special election authorized by section 3536, General Code, which may be called for the election of the first officers of a newly created village. There is no authority in any officer or board to call a special election for the purpose of electing members of a board of education for a village school district.

Said section 3536, General Code, provides:

"The first election of officers of such corporation shall be at the first municipal election after its creation, and the place of holding the election shall be fixed by the agent of the petitioners. Notice thereof, printed or plainly written, shall be posted by him in three or more public places within the limits of the corporation, at least ten days before the election. The election shall be conducted, and the officers chosen and qualified, in the manner prescribed for the election of township officers, and the first election may be a special election held at any time not exceeding six months after the incorporation, and the time and place of holding it shall be fixed by such agent, and notice thereof shall be given as is required herein for the municipal election."

The village has already elected its officers and the time for holding such special election has passed.

A special election cannot be held for the election of the members of a board of education of a village school district where the village has been previously incorporated and the officers of the village have been elected, and where such village school district failed to elect a board of education at such municipal election. This is in answer to your second inquiry.

It appears in the case you submit that if the formation of the special school district is allowed by the probate judge it will leave three separate and distinct parts of the township remaining in the township district. None of these parts are contiguous to any of the others. This part of the township would not be under the jurisdiction of a properly organized board of education of a city, village or special district.

The statutes provide for four classes of school districts known as city, village, township and special school districts, as shown by section 4679, General Code, which reads:

"The school districts of the state shall be styled, respectively, city school districts, village school districts, township school districts and special school districts."

The territory remaining in the township, after the formation of the proposed special school district would still remain under the jurisdiction of the township board of education.

Section 4683, General Code, provides:

> "Each civil township, together with the territory attached to it for school purposes, and excluding the territory within its established limits detached for school purposes, shall constitute a township school district."

This section takes care of all the territory in a township which has not been taken to form a city, village or special school district.

While the village of Kirkersville is in contemplation of the statute, now a village school district, it has not yet been organized as a village school district. It is a village school district in name but not in fact. Until it becomes a village school district by the proper election and organization of a board of education for such village school district, it remains under the jurisdiction of the township board of education.

This matter is also considered in the opinion to Hon. James E. Bell, referred to above. In that opinion it was held on page 9 thereof:

> "It is my conclusion that the village became a village school district at the time it reached the required tax valuation, but that it remains a part of the township school district and is under the jurisdiction of the township board of education until the village school district can be properly organized after the election in November, 1913."

This conclusion applies directly to your case.

It appears further that of the five members of the present board of education of the township school district, three of them reside in the territory which is to become a part of the proposed special school district, which would leave only two members of the township board eligible to act for the township district.

Section 4748, General Code, provides:

> "A vacancy in any board of education may be caused by death, non-residence, resignation, removal from office, failure of a person elected or appointed to qualify within ten days after the oganization of the board or of his appointment, removal from the district or absence from meetings of the board for a period of ninety days, if such absence is caused by reasons declared insufficient by a two-thirds vote of the remaining members of the board, which vote must be taken and entered upon the records of the board not less than thirty days after such absence. Any such vacancy shall be filled by the board at its next regular or special meeting, or as soon thereafter as possible, by election for the unexpired term. A majority vote of all the remaining members of the board may fill any such vacancy."

By virtue of this section the three members who reside in the special school district will be ineligible to act as members of the township board of education upon the proper organization of the proposed special district. This would cause three vacancies in the township board and such vacancies would occur at the same time.

Section 4748, General Code, authorizes the board of education to fill a vacancy at its next meeting. And in order to obviate all doubt as to how many members shall constitute a quorum for the purpose of filling such vacancy, or vacancies, said section further provides that > "A majority of all the remaining members of the board may fill any such vacancy."

In your case there would be but two remaining members of the township board and these two members may fill the three vacancies.

In your third inquiry you ask:

> "Is it possible to enforce the corporation of Kirkersville to organize as a village district?"

The usual and proper remedy to enforce the performance of a duty by a corporation or an officer is by mandamus.

Mandamus is defined by section 12283, General Code, which reads:

> "Mandamus is a writ issued, in the name of the state, to an inferior tribunal, a corporation, board or person, commanding the performance of an act, which the law specially enjoins as a duty resulting from an office, trust or station."

A school district can act only through its officers, and in order to enforce a duty of the school district, the writ of mandamus must be issued against the officer or board of the school district that has failed in the performance of some duty enjoined by law.

The village school district of Kirkersville has no officer or officers upon whom a writ of mandamus could be issued.

The first step necessary in the organization of the village school district is the election of a board of education. This election cannot take place until the coming November election.

The statutes provide for notices of elections to be given. Section 4839, General Code, provides for notices of election for school districts as follows:

> "The clerk of each board of education shall publish a notice of all school elections in a newspaper of general circulation in the district or post written or printed notices thereof in five public places in the district at least ten days before the holding of such election. Such notices shall specify the time and place of the election, the number of members of the board of education to be elected, and the term for which they are to be elected, or the nature of the question to be voted upon."

The duty of giving notice devolves upon the clerk of the board of education. The only clerk now having jurisdiction over this territory is the clerk of the township board of education. The clerk of the township board is not authorized to give notice of an election for members of a village board of education.

As seen by section 3536, General Code, supra, provision is made for notice of an election for the municipal officers of a newly created village.

Section 4739, General Code, provides for notices when a special school district holds its first election, as follows:

"When a special district is created, a mass meeting of the electors of such district shall be called by the posting of notices in five public places in the district, setting forth the time and place of such meeting, and signed by at least three electors of the district. The electors assembled at such meeting shall elect a chairman and secretary and fix the time of holding the first election for members of the board of education. The time so fixed shall not be within twenty-five days of the time of holding such mass meeting. The chairman and secretary of the meeting shall immediately post notices in five public places within the district, giving the date of election, and shall notify the deputy state supervisors of elections of the county or counties of the names of the voting precincts having territory in such special school district and the probable number of electors in each precinct, in order that such deputy state supervisors may prepare ballots, poll books and tally sheets at the time and in the manner provided by law."

A writ of mandamus will not lie in the absence of any provision of statute making it the duty of some officer to give notice of an election for members of a board of education of a newly created village school district.

The statute contemplates that each village with a tax duplicate in excess of one hundred thousand dollars shall constitute a village school district, but it does not provide a means by which this duty can be enforced, if the residents of such district refuse to act.

The situation can be met by a sufficient number of electors of the village taking proper steps to become candidates for the village board of education at the coming November election.

For example, if five electors of the village desired the organization of the village school district, they could present themselves as candidates for members of the board of education to the proper election officials, and the board of elections would be required to place their names upon the ballots and hold an election therefor. This would bring the question at issue and some one would necessarily be elected as members of the board even though a large majority of the electors refused to vote for members of the board of education. The persons elected could proceed to organize the village district.

The organization of the village school district and of the special school district would leave three pieces of territory in the township school district. If the township district would be so scattered as not to make it feasible to continue the township district, the territory could be attached to some adjacent school district for school purposes.

Respectfully,
TIMOTHY S. HOGAN,
Attorney General.

BOARD OF EDUCATION—POWER OF WOMAN TO SERVE AS CLERK OR TREASURER IN TOWNSHIP AND OTHER DISTRICTS.

Under article 15, section 4 of the constitution, a woman may not be elected to or appointed to any office in this state. Under article 6, section 2 and article 1, section 7 of the constitution, however, through the powers therein conferred upon the general assembly to secure a thorough and efficient system of common schools and to encourage schools and the means of instruction, the provision of section 4862, General Code, permitting a woman to serve as member of a board of education and to vote for members thereof, is held to be valid and constitutional.

Since, therefore, women may serve on the board of education and since, furthermore, section 4747, General Code, provides that in any district other than the township school district, a member of a board of education may be elected clerk of the board, a woman in this district may be so elected clerk, under authority of this statute.

The statutes do not confer the right, however, of a woman to serve as clerk of a township, and since the statutes require such clerk to act as clerk to the school board, a woman may not serve in the latter capacity. The statutes, furthermore, have not made provision for service as treasurer of a school board by a woman and she may, therefore, not serve in that capacity.

COLUMBUS, OHIO, April 3, 1913.

HON. FRANK W. MILLER, State Commissioner Common Schools, Columbus, Ohio.

DEAR SIR:—In your letter of March 4, 1913, you inquire as follows:

> "First—Can the wife of the president of the board of education be chosen to the office of clerk of that board of education?
> "Second—Can the wife of a member of a board of education be chosen to the office of treasurer of that board?"

In reply thereto would say article 5, section 1 of the constitution prescribes the qualifications of an elector as follows:

> "Every white male citizen of the United States, of the age of twenty-one years, who shall have been a resident of the state one year next preceding the election, and of the county, township, or ward, in which he resides, such time as may be provided by law, shall have the qualifications of an elector and be entitled to vote at all elections."

Article 15, secion 4 of the constitution provides who are eligible to be elected or appointed to office as follows:

> "No person shall be elected or appointed to any office in this state, unless he possess the qualifications of an elector."

By virtue of the above quoted sections of the constitution women are not entitled to be electors at school board elections, or to be elected as members of school boards or to hold the offices of clerk and treasurer of school boards, unless it is found that they can be put in possession of such qualifications by virtue of legislative enactment in accordance with the constitutional provisions of article 6, section 2, and article 1, section 7 of the constitution of Ohio. Article 6, section 2 of the constitution provides as follows:

"The general assembly shall make such provisions, by taxation, or otherwise, as, with the income arising from the school trust fund, will secure a thorough and efficient system of common schools throughout the state; but no religious or other sect, or sects, shall ever have any exclusive right to, or control of, any part of the school funds of this state."

Article 1, section 7 of the constitution provides as follows:

"All men have a natural and indefeasible right to worship Almighty God according to the dictates of their own conscience. No person shall be compelled to attend, erect or support any place of worship, or maintain any form of worship against his consent; and no preference shall be given by law, to any religious society; nor shall any interference with the rights of conscience be permitted. No religious test shall be required, as a qualification for office, nor shall any person be incompetent to be a witness on account of his religious belief; * * *. Religion, morality and knowledge, however, being essential to good government, it shall be the duty of the general assembly to pass suitable laws to protect every religious denomination in the peaceable enjoyment of his own mode of public worship, and to encourage schools and the means of instruction."

Section 4862 of the General Code as originally enacted by the legislature, April 24, 1894 (91 O. L. 182), and as subsequently amended April 24, 1904 (97 O. L. 354) provides that women may not only vote for members of the board of education but also provides that women may be voted for for members of the board of education as follows:

"Section 4862. Every woman born in the United States or who is the wife or daughter of a citizen of the United States, who is over twenty-one years of age and possesses the necessary qualifications in regard to residence hereinafter provided for men shall be entitled to vote and to be voted for for member of the board of education and upon no other question."

In the case of State ex rel. Mills vs. Board of Elections, et al., 9 Circuit Court Rep. page 134, which was an action in mandamus against the board to test the constitutional right of women to vote for members of the school board, the court held as follows:

"The act of April 24, 1894, conferring upon women the right to vote and be voted for at any election held for the purpose of choosing any school director, member of the board of education or school council under the general or special laws of the state is valid, it being within the power to provide for the establishment and maintenance of common schools which the constitution confers upon the general assembly, and not within the limitation contained in section one of article five."

At pages 138 and 139 of the opinion the court says:

"In none of the state constitutions to which our attention has been called is there a broader grant of power to provide for public schools than in ours. Section 1, article 2, contains a grant of all legislative power. Section 7, article 1, provides that 'it shall be the duty of the general assembly to pass suitable laws * * * to encourage schools and means of instruction.' Section 2, article 6, enjoins upon the general assembly the duty of making such provisions 'as will secure a thorough and efficient system of common schools throughout the state.' In the provisions relating to the subject of schools, there is neither limitation upon the powers conferred, nor direction as to the modes of its exercise. The offices to be filled at the election contemplated in this act, and the districts in which such elections are to be held are alike unknown in the constitution."

If the legislature by virtue of article 6, section 2 and article 1, section 7 of the constitution has the power, as held by the court in the case of State ex rel. Miles vs. Board of Elections, et al., supra, to grant to women the right to vote and to be voted for for members of the board of education, then it clearly follows by analogy that the legislature can by legislative enactment grant the right to women to hold the offices of clerk and treasurer of school boards.

In regard to the office of clerk of the board of education, the legislature enacted section 4747 which provides as follows:

"The board of education of each school district shall organize on the first Monday of January after the election of members of such board. One member of the board shall be elected president, one as vice-president and in township school districts the clerk of the township shall be clerk of the board. The president and vice-president shall serve for a term not to exceed two years. In all other districts a person who may or may not be a member of the board shall be elected clerk. The board shall fix the time of holding its regular meetings."

It is to be noted that said section provides that in township school districts the township clerk shall be the clerk of the board. Such township clerk being elected as a township officer must be an elector as required by article 15, section 4 of the constitution, and must possess the qualifications prescribed by article 5, section 1, supra, which said qualifications are limited so as to include only white male citizens of the United States. Not being qualified to be elected township clerk it follows that women are not eligible to the office of clerk of the school board of township school districts, and furthermore, women being electors only for the purpose of voting for members of school boards, and for no other purpose as provided by section 4862, supra, it necessarily follows that a woman cannot legally be elected township clerk and therefore is disqualified to hold the office of clerk of a township school board. Therefore, the wife of the president of a township school board could in no event be chosen to the office of clerk of such township school board of education under the present status of the constitution and laws.

Said section 4747 of the General Code further provides that in all other districts "a person who may or may not be a member of the board shall be elected clerk."

As above stated, under section 4862 of the General Code, and by virtue of the holding of the court in the case of State ex rel. Mills vs. Board of Education, supra, a woman has the legal right to vote for and to be voted for for member of the board of education provided, of course, she possesses the other requisite qualifications as set forth in said section 4862.

In other words, in all school districts, a woman, if she possesses the qualifications enumerated in section 4862, can be elected as and become a member of the board of education of her respective school district.

By virtue of section 4747, General Code, boards of education in all districts, except in township districts, may elect one of their own members as clerk of said board of education. It follows, therefore, that if a woman is a member of such board she can be elected clerk thereof by virtue of said section. There is no statutory provision whereby a woman other than a member of such board of education can be elected clerk thereof, and inasmuch as the legislature has not yet seen fit by legislative enactment to grant the right to women to be elected clerk other than to such women as happen to be elected as members of school boards of village, city and special school districts, it is my opinion that a woman who is not a member of such board of education cannot be elected clerk thereof. The statute is to be strictly construed in this regard, and goes no further than its plain terms purport.

Therefore, in direct answer to your first question for the reasons above given this department is constrained to hold that the wife of the president of a school board, other than a township board of education, cannot be elected clerk thereof unless she is a member of such board of education, and for the reasons above stated she could in no event be elected clerk of the township school board.

In answer to your second question I desire to say that section 4763 of the General Code provides as follows:

> "In each city, village and township school district, the treasurer of the city, village and township funds, respectively, shall be the treasurer of the school funds. In each special district the board of education shall choose its own treasurer, whose term of office shall be for one year beginning on the first day of September."

The treasurer of a city, village or township is an officer of the respective city, village or township wherein he is elected and in order to qualify as such treasurer he must be an elector as provided by article 15, section 4, supra, and must possess the qualifications prescribed by article 5, section 1, supra, which said qualifications are limited so as to include only the white male citizens of the United States. Not being qualified to be elected treasurer of a city, village or township who is made treasurer of the school funds of the board of education of the city, village or township school district respectively by virtue of section 4763, supra, it follows that women are not eligible to the office of treasurer of boards of education of city, village or township school districts. And as heretofore suggested women being electors only for the purpose of voting for members of school boards, and for no other purpose as provided by section 4862, supra, it necessarily follows that a woman cannot legally be elected to the office of city, village or township treasurer. Said section specifically provides that a "special district board of education shall choose its own treasurer," etc.

Although it is stated in the opinion in the case of State ex rel. Mills vs. Board of Education, supra, that "in the provisions (constitutional) relating to the subject of schools there is neither limitation upon the power conferred nor direction as to the modes of its exercise," nevertheless the legislature has not as yet seen fit to grant authority to boards of education of special school districts to elect women as treasurers of such boards by virtue of the said constitutional provisions contained in article 6, section 2 and article 1, section 7 to which said provisions the court had reference in the above cited case.

Said section 4763 General Code, supra, does not, nor does any other section of the General Code, grant the right or authority to school boards of special school districts to elect women as treasurers of their respective boards.

Therefore, this department is constrained to hold that the wife of a member of a board of education cannot be elected to the office of treasurer of that board under the law as it exists at the present time.

Yours very truly,
TIMOTHY S. HOGAN,
Attorney General.

TAXES AND TAXATION—TEACHERS' PENSION FUND TECHNICALLY LIABLE FOR TAXATION.

The provision of the statutes providing for exemption from taxation of insitutions of purely public charity, is intended to apply to private institutions as distinguished from an official or public agency. Inasmuch as the board of trustees of a teachers' pension fund constitutes a public agency rather than a private corporation, pension funds may not be exempted from taxation under this head.

Under article 12, section 2, of the constitution, the legislature would be empowered to exempt such funds under the provision for the exemption of "public property used exclusively for any public purpose." Not having done so, however, such pension funds must be held to be technically subject to taxation.

COLUMBUS, OHIO, March 24, 1913.

HON. FRANK W. MILLER, State School Commissioner of Common Schools, Columbus, Ohio.

DEAR SIR:—I beg to acknowledge receipt of your letter of March 4th, requesting my opinion upon the following question:

> "Are the funds of the pension fund taxable if deposited in a bank drawing interest, or if invested in taxable bonds?"

It would be burdening this letter to an undue extent to quote all the tax exemption statutes and constitutional provisions of this state. You are aware, of course, that the rule in this state is that all property is subject to taxation, except only that which is expressly exempted therefrom. It is necessary, therefore, in order to sustain an exemption of moneys and investments such as those inquired about, to find some express provision authorizing such exemption.

Without quoting all the sections and constitutional provisions which enumerate the exemptions from taxation, suffice it to say that if the teachers' pension fund may be regarded as an "institution of purely public charity," the exemption may be sustained, it being the rule in this state that moneys and credits appropriated solely to sustain and belonging exclusively to such institutions are exempt from taxation. Section 5353, General Code, paragraph 6, Revised Statutes, section 2732, Little vs. Seminary, 72 O. S., 417.

Having established the principle, its application must be made through an examination of section 7875, General Code, et seq., which provide for teachers' pension.

Section 7875, General Code, already referred to, provides in effect that the board of education may provide for a school teachers' pension fund "under the management and control of a board to be known as 'the board of trustees of the school teachers' pension fund.'" The same section provides for the personnel of this board and the manner of the election of the members thereof.

Section 7876 provides for the manner of electing members and for their term of office. The provision is that such members shall "serve not less than one nor more than three years." They shall serve until their successors are elected and qualified and without compensation."

Section 7877 provides for the contribution to the pension fund. It appears that the acceptance or rejection of the provisions of the pension fund law is optional with teachers who were in employment on the day when the law went into effect, but becomes an element of the contract of all those subsequently accepting employment, so that, virtually, as to such teachers, it is compulsory.

Section 7878, General Code, authorizes the acceptance of donations, legacies, gifts, bequests, etc., by the board of trustees.

Section 7879, General Code, provides the manner of investing the funds of the board of trustees and vests in the board the power to make and establish rules and regulations for the administration of the fund.

Sections 7880 to 7884, inclusive, provide for the retirement of teachers.

Section 7889 makes the treasurer of the school district the custodian of the pension fund, and the previous section provides the manner in which he shall pay out orders against it.

Section 7895 provides for the partial support of the pension fund by general taxation.

The word "institution," as used in the phrases "institution of purely public charity," has obtained a very definite meaning. That meaning has not been worked out as thoroughly in the decisions of the courts of this state as it has in some other jurisdictions, but I think I may venture, without citing numerous authorities, to state that the word means a private corporation or organization of some kind as distinguished from an official or public agency. This must have been what the framers of the constitution of 1851 and of the legislation thereunder had in mind, because, in all cases, they have separately provided for the exemption of property belonging to the public itself as distinguished from that belonging to some private organization.

On careful consideration of the sections which I have just outlined, I am of the opinion that the board of trustees thereby created is a public agency and not a private organization. The funds themselves are in the custody of a public officer, the treasurer of the district. I am, therefore, of the opinion that the board of trustees of the teachers' pension fund does not constitute an "institution" within the meaning of that term as used in the exemption statute.

A further serious question might be raised as to whether or not the charitable purposes of the teachers' pension fund are "purely public" within the meaning of the constitutional provision. The conclusion which I have reached as to the meaning of the term "institution" precludes the necessity of considering this question.

In conclusion I may state that probably the legislature of this state has the power to exempt teachers' pension funds from taxation under that portion of article XII, section 2, of the constitution, which authorizes the exemption of "public property used exclusively for any public purpose." It is true that in State ex rel. vs. Hubbard, 22 C. C., 252-265, the question is mooted as to whether or not the purpose of providing pensions for retired teachers is a public one. Inasmuch, however, as the policy of the state has continued to favor teachers' pensions, I think it may now be regarded as settled that the object of such laws is public in its nature and, therefore, it would follow that such property might with propriety be regarded as "public property used exclusively for a public purpose," within the meaning of the constitution.

However, it does not follow that because the legislature is authorized to exempt such property from taxation, it is therefore exempt. This provision of the constitution is not self-executing and, in fact, is in form permissive only. Certain other public property used exclusively for public purposes has been expressly exempted. Teachers' pension funds have not been so exempted; until the legislature acts they must be regarded as technically subject to taxation.

I may add that there are other kinds of public property used exclusively for public purposes which have never been expressly exempted from taxation but which, in practice, have never been taxed. The truth is that our tax exemption statutes are archaic and should be overhauled. As the law stands at present, for example, the furniture in a city hall, and the moneys and investments in the custody of the sinking fund trustees of a city district are technically subject to taxation; no effort has ever been made to tax such property nor should an effort be made to tax it, from the standpoint of policy. While, therefore, I can return but one answer to the question which you have asked, from the standpoint of technical law, I do not anticipate there will be any attempt on the part of the taxing officers to place property of the kind mentioned in your letter upon the tax duplicate.

Very truly yours,
TIMOTHY S. HOGAN,
Attorney General.

CENTRALIZATION OF SCHOOLS DOES NOT BEGIN UNTIL SCHOOLS ARE READY FOR BUSINESS—DOES NOT DATE FROM TIME OF ELECTION.

Under section 4726, General Code, when a township election has been held upon the question of centralization of schools and the result is in favor of such centralization, the board of education is required at once to proceed to the centralization of schools of the township and such centralization is not to be deemed accomplished until the schools are ready for business.

Until such centralization has been effected, under section 4716 and 4717, General Code, the subdistricts of the township shall continue to exist and a director shall be elected for each subdistrict.

The centralization dates from the time the buildings are completed and the time the schools are first in actual operation as centralized schools, and therefore under section 4727, General Code, such centralization may not be discontinued until three years after the full accomplishment of the same.

COLUMBUS, OHIO, June 9, 1913.

HONORABLE FRANK W. MILLER, State Commissioner of Common Schools, Columbus, Ohio.

DEAR SIR:—I desire to acknowledge receipt of your letter of the date of April 2, 1913, wherein you inquire as follows:

"We desire your opinion on the following point. The facts are as follows:

"'GOOD HOPE, FAYETTE COUNTY, O., March 24, 1913.

"'FRANK W. MILLER, State Superintendent of Public Instruction, Columbus, Ohio.

"'DEAR SIR:—The president of our board of education has asked me to put the situation that exists here up to you and ask your opinion of a question now before us.

"'1. Three years ago, this coming May, this township (Wayne) voted to centralize.

"'2. Then followed a two years' battle in the courts with the standpatters.

"'3. The last year has been spent in building school houses. Now the question arises, can another vote be forced in May? The buildings are not yet completed, let alone having a chance to centralize the schools.

"'The question in another form might read: Does centralization begin when the election is certified or when the schools are ready for business?

"'HENRY HUGHES, Good Hope, Ohio.'

"Further facts in addition to those stated in the above quoted request are as follows:

"The question of the centralization of the schools of Wayne township, Fayette county, Ohio, was submitted to the electors of said township on May 31, 1910, the majority of the electors voting in favor of centralization, the returns of said elections being certified to the clerk of the board of education. On January 11, 1911, some of the electors opposed to the centralization of said township schools, filed a petition in the common pleas court of Fayette county, asking that the board of education be enjoined from issuing or selling bonds for the construction of the school buildings. The common pleas court sustained a demurrer to said petition. The case was then carried on appeal, to the circuit court and then on error to the supreme court, where on March 19, 1912, it was decided against those opposed to the centralization of said schools. As stated in the above quoted request, the school buildings are not yet completed and consequently the schools are not yet in operation, as centralized schools. Under the above statement of facts, does the above centralization of said schools date from the time the result of the election was certified to the board of education, or does the centralization date from the time the case in the supreme court was decided, to wit, on March 19, 1912, or from the time the buildings are completed and the said schools are in actual operation as centralized schools? Also, when do the three years expire, after which another election can be held under section 4727 of the General Code."

In reply thereto section 4726 of the General Code provides as follows:

"A township board of education may submit the question of centralization, and, upon the petition of not less than one-fourth of the qualified electors of such township districts, must submit such question to the vote of the qualified electors of such township district, at a general election or a special election called for that purpose. If more votes are cast in favor of centralization than against it, at such election, such board of education shall proceed at once to the centralization of schools of the township, and, if necessary purchase a site or sites and erect a suitable building or buildings thereon.

"If, at such election, more votes are cast against the proposition of centralization than for it, the question shall not again be submitted to the electors of such township district for a period of two years."

Section 4727 of the General Code provides as follows:

"When the schools of a township have been centralized, such centralization shall not be discontinued within three years, and then only by petition and election, as herein required. If at such election more votes are cast against centralization than for it, the division into subdistricts as they existed prior to centralization, shall thereby be reestablished at the next regular election and subdistrict directors shall be elected as herein provided."

It is to be noted that said section 4726 of the General Code above quoted, provides, first, that the township board of education may submit the question of centralization and upon petition of not less than one-fourth of the qualified electors of said township, the board of education must submit such question to the vote of the qualified electors of such township, at a general or special election. Second, if the majority of the votes are in favor of centralization, then such "board of education shall proceed at once to the centralization of the schools of such township." Said section 4726, by the language therein employed, seems to indicate that the election therein provided for was intended merely for the purpose of determining the will of the majority of the electors, upon the question of centralization, and even though a majority of the electors vote in favor of centralization, such result or the certifying thereof to the board of education, does not accomplish such centralization, for section 4726 of the General Code clearly indicates that something further must be done to complete such centralization, even after the majority of the electors have voted for it, when it provides that thereupon "such board of education shall proceed at once to the centralization of the schools of the townships." The supreme court record in the case of Garinger, et al., plaintiff in error, vs. Board of Education of Wayne township, Fayette county, Ohio, et al., defendant in error, which said case you mention in your inquiry, discloses the fact that after a majority of the electors in said Wayne township had voted in favor of said centralization, the board of education of said township at once proceeded to the centralization of the schools thereof and to that end proceeded to issue bonds to raise the necessary funds with which to build the necessary buildings and secure the necessary equipment for the accomplishment of such centralization, when a suit to enjoin the issuing and selling of said bonds was interposed by those opposed to centralization, in the manner as set forth in your inquiry. On March 19, 1912, said suit was finally decided by the state supreme court against those so opposed to centralization. During all the time said suit, to so enjoin, was pending, the board of education was delayed in performing the duty enjoined upon it by said section "to at once proceed to the centralization of the schools of said Wayne township." Upon the termination of said suit in its favor, the said board of education again proceeded to the accomplishment of the centralization of said schools and to date the buildings are not yet completed. The suit referred to above served only to delay the accomplishment of centralization and it can hardly be said that the termination of said suit, in favor of the board of education, on March 19, 1912, could be construed as meaning that centralization had thereby been accomplished and completed on that date, when, as aforesaid, such suit only delayed and hindered the board in its attempt to proceed at once to the centralization of the schools of said township.

Section 4716 provides that the subdistricts of a township shall continue as they exist, etc., as follows:

> "Sec. 4716. The division of township school districts into subdistricts as they exist, shall continue and be recognized for the purpose of school attendance, but the board of education may increase or diminish the number or change the boundaries of the subdistricts at any regular meeting. A map designating such changes shall be entered upon the records of the board."

Section 4717 of the General Code provides that so long as townships are divided into subdistricts, a director shall be elected by each subdistrict as follows:

> "In all township districts, the schools of which are not centralized or consolidated, there shall be elected on the second Monday of April each year by ballot, in each subdistrict by the qualified electors thereof one competent person having the qualifications of an elector therein, who shall be styled director."

Further, it is to be noted that said section 4716, supra, says "the division of township school districts into subdistricts, as they exist shall continue," so that all subdistricts into which townships are divided, shall continue as such until centralization is effected, as provided by section 4726, supra.

A subdistrict school can be discontinued only in one of two ways, i. e., by consolidation or centralization, and as we are only concerned with centralization of all the subdistrict schools of the particular township involved, we will not, therefore, go further into the subject of consolidation of the subdistricts than to merely mention it in passing.

It follows, therefore, that subdistrict schools continue up to the very time that the schools have actually been centralized and until all of the subdistrict schools are actually merged into and become part of the centralized schools. This is necessarily true so that the pupils of such townships can attend the subdistrict schools during the interim that the board of education is engaged in its statutory duty "to proceed at once to the centralization of the schools of the township," after a majority of the electors of such township have voted in favor of such centralization.

Webster defines "centralization" as follows:

> "An act or process of combining or reducing several parts to a whole."

Century dictionary defines "centralization" as follows:

> "The act of centralizing or bring to one center."

Under the above definitions of the term "centralization," it can hardly be said that the centralization of the subdistrict schools is accomplished until they are "combined together as a whole" or "brought to one center."

Such subdistricts are surely not "combined together," "reduced to a whole" or "brought to one center" so long as each school continues to operate as a separate subdistrict school.

Therefore, in direct answer to your inquiry, it is the opinion of this department that centralization of said schools does not date from the time the result of the election was certified to the board of education, nor from the time the case you refer to was decided in the supreme court, to wit, March 19, 1912, but that such centralization should date from the time the buildings are completed and the time that the schools are first in actual operation as centralized schools. Therefore, it follows that the three years after which another election can be held, expires three years after that time.

Yours very truly,
TIMOTHY S. HOGAN,
Attorney General.

BEFORE A SPECIAL SCHOOL DISTRICT CAN BE MADE FROM PARTS OF THREE SPECIAL SCHOOL DISTRICTS, THE FIRST SPECIAL SCHOOL DISTRICT MUST BE ABANDONED. THE PROPERTY WILL THEN REVERT TO THE TOWNSHIP SCHOOL DISTRICTS FROM WHICH THE SPECIAL SCHOOL DISTRICT MAY BE FORMED. THE STATUTES ALSO PROVIDE A MEANS OF TRANSFERRING TERRITORY FROM ONE SCHOOL DISTRICT TO ANOTHER.

The village of Loveland is located in three counties and is a part of three special school districts. In order to make the village of Loveland a special school district it will be necessary to get the approval of the three special school districts in the transfer of territory. The statutes provide a method whereby the three special school districts could be abandoned, and then the formation of one special school district would become an easy matter. The problem may be worked out either by abandoning the special school districts and organizing a village district, or by means of transferring the territory of the village from one district to another, so as to get the territory of the village in one school district.

COLUMBUS, OHIO, September 26, 1913.

HON. FRANK W. MILLER, State Commissioner of Common Schools, Columbus, Ohio.

DEAR SIR:—Under date of February 7, 1913, you submit the following to this department for opinion:

> "The village of Loveland, Ohio, is located in three counties, Clermont, Hamilton and Warren. It is a part of three special school districts at this time with three different boards of education and three different school systems. It has never been regularly organized as a village school district in compliance with section 4687.
> "The board of education of the largest district within the village has asked that they be combined into one village school district.
> "Can the three special school districts with the territory which is attached to them for school purposes be compelled to form one village school district? If so, how shall they proceed?"

Section 4687, General Code, to which you refer, provides:

> "Upon the creation of a village, it shall thereby become a village school district, as herein provided, and, if the territory of such village previous to its creation was included within the boundaries of a special school district and such special school district included more territory than is included within the village, such territory shall thereby be attached to such village school district for school purposes."

This section applies to newly created villages. It does not cover a case where a village, or even a newly created village, has within its territorial limits parts of three special school districts.

The words of this section, "as herein provided," refer to the provisions of section 4681, General Code. This section as amended in 103 Ohio Laws, 545, reads:

> "Each village, together with the territory attached to it for school purposes, and excluding the territory within its corporate limits detached for school purposes, and having in the district thus formed a total tax valuation of not less than five hundred thousand dollars, shall constitute a village school district."

The only change made in this section by this amendment was to increase the required tax valuation to five hundred thousand dollars.

This section was construed in Buckman vs. State, 81 Ohio Stat., 171, where it is held:

> "By force of the provisions of section 3888, Revised Statutes, as amended April 2, 1906, and in effect April 15, 1906 (98 O. L., 217), each incorporated village then existing—April 16, 1906—or since created, 'together with the territory attached to it for school purposes, and excluding the territory within its corporate limits detached for school purposes, and having in the district thus formed a total tax valuation of not less than one hundred thousand dollars,' constitutes and is a village school district, no vote of electors of such village being necessary to the creation or establishment of such district."

In considering whether or not a village becomes a village school district, the territory of such village which is detached for school purposes must be excluded, and the territory which is attached thereto for school purposes must be included.

In the village of Loveland there are parts of three special school districts. Your direct question is whether or not these three special school districts may be compelled to form one village school district.

This raises a question as to whether the territory of a special school district may be taken to form a village school district.

In an opinion given to Hon. Jay S. Paiseley, prosecuting attorney, Steubenville, Ohio, by this department, it was held that a part of one village school district could not be taken to form another village school district. This conclusion was based upon the opinions of the supreme court of Ohio in Scott vs. McCullough, 72 Ohio St., 538, and Fulks vs. Wright, 72 Ohio St., 547.

In Scott vs. McCullough, the syllabus reads:

> "No part of the territory of a special school district is subject to be taken to form another special school district."

In Fulks vs. Wright, it is held:

> "When the schools of a township have been centralized, no part of the territory comprised in such centralization is subject to be taken to form a special school district."

In this last cited case, Summers, J., says on pages 548 and 549:

> "But we are of opinion, for the reasons stated in the opinion in that case (Scott vs. McCullough, supra), that the words 'contiguous territory' are to be limited to such territory as the legislature manifestly had in contemplation when the section was enacted, and that is, to territory that had not been pre-empted by being taken to form some other district, but such as remained a township district or a part thereof."

The court, in effect, states the rule to be that only territory which remains in a township school district, or a part thereof, can be taken to form another school district.

This rule will apply to the territory of a special school district where it is proposed to take such territory to form a part of a village school district. The only means, provided by statute, by which the territory of a special school district may be taken to form a village school district, is when such territory comes within the terms of section 4687, General Code. We here refer to the formation of a new school district and not to the transfer of territory from one school district to another district. This will be considered later.

Section 4728, General Code, provides for the formation of a special school district, as follows:

> "A special school district may be formed of any contiguous territory, not included within the limits of a city or village, which has a total tax valuation of not less than one hundred thousand dollars."

When a special district is formed it must have a tax valuation of not less than one hundred thousand dollars. It is safe to assume, therefore, that each of the three special school districts which take in part of the territory of the village of Loveland, has a tax valuation of one hundred thousand dollars.

Section 4687, General Code, provides that upon the creation of a village, it shall become a village school district, as provided in section 4681, General Code. It then specifically provides for the territory of the special school district if such village is a part of a special school district.

In determining the tax valuation under section 4681, General Code, the territory in such village which is detached for school purposes must be excluded, and the territory which is attached for school purposes, must be included.

The attached and detached territory therein referred to applies to territory which has been taken, or pre-empted as it were, to form a school district other than a township district.

By operation of section 4687, General Code, the territory of the special school district becomes attached to the village school district for school purposes. In fact the special school district becomes the new village school district upon the creation of the village.

Even though this section would apply to the village of Loveland and would require one of the special school districts to become a village school district, it would not solve the present difficulty. The territory of the other two special school districts would remain intact, and would be detached from the village school district for school purposes. Another difficulty would arise in the application of section 4687, General Code. There are three special school districts in the village of Loveland, and section 4687, General Code, does not provide which one shall become the village school district, or how such a case shall be determined.

The rule of law, as laid down in Scott vs. McCullough, supra, applies, that the territory of one special school district cannot be taken to form another special school district, or any other school district. In other words, the whole territory of the village of Loveland, under the present law, cannot be formed into one village school district, without the approval of the three special school districts in the transfer of territory. There is no provision of statute by which it can be compelled to form a village school district, or by which the three special school districts may be required to consolidate and form one school district.

The statutes provide a means of abandoning special school districts, and upon such abandonment the territory of such special school district reverts to the township school district or districts from which it was originally taken.

Section 4741, General Code, provides:

> "When a petition is signed by not less than one-third of the electors residing within the territory constituting a special school district, praying for the abandonment or continuance of such special district, is presented to the board of education of such district, or when such board, by a majority vote of the full membership thereof, shall decide to submit the question of abandoning or continuing the special school district, the board shall fix the time of holding such election at a special or general election. The clerk of the board shall notify the deputy state supervisors of elections as herein provided in case of first election, of the date of such election and the purposes thereof, and such deputy state supervisors shall provide therefor. The clerk of the board of education shall post notices thereof in five public places within the district."

Section 4743, General Code, provides in part:

> "If more votes are cast for abandonment than against it, or against continuance than for it, such board shall certify the result to the board or boards of education of the township or townships having territory in the special district, and the territory of the special district shall thereby revert to the township school district or districts from which it was originally taken, except as hereinafter provided in case of indebtedness of the special district."

The proceedings to abandon the special school district must be started either by the board of education of the district, or by the electors thereof. There is no way of compelling them to take such action. Even after such action is taken, the question of abandonment must be submitted to a vote of the electors. If all three special school districts should be abandoned, it would then become an easy matter to organize the village school district.

The statutes also provide a means of transferring territory from one school district to another district. The situation might be worked out under these sections, but there is no way of compelling such action.

The situation presented is a peculiar one which is not covered by statute. There is no way to compel the people of Loveland to combine their school districts. They themselves can, if they so desire, solve the difficulties which are presented, either by abandoning the special school districts and then organizing the village district, or by means of transferring the territory of the village from one district to another so as to get the territory of the village in one school district. Either of these plans will require some thought so as to properly take care of all the territory affected.

A further question has been raised as to the legality of the organization of the special school districts. It being contended that they were organized by special act of the legislature and that such acts are unconstitutional.

It appears that the district which takes in the larger part of the territory of the village of Loveland is located in Miami township of Clermont county, and is known as the "Loveland Village School District." The district in Warren county is known as the "Smith Special School District," and is located in Hamilton township. The third district is known as the "West Loveland Special School District, and is located in Symmes township of Hamilton county. This information has been kindly furnished by Hon. Earl E. Ertel, member of the house of representatives.

An examination has been made of the year books since 1880, but no act has been found for the organization of the "West Loveland Special School District" or of the "Loveland Village School District." No records of proceedings have been submitted by which these districts were organized. It must be assumed until otherwise shown, that these districts have been legally organized.

It appears that the third district, the "Smith Special School District," was organized by special act of the legislature as set forth in 92 Ohio Laws, 532. This act was passed April 1, 1896, and section 1 thereof provides:

"Be it enacted by the General Assembly of the State of Ohio:

> "That the territory comprising the sub-district number 4 of Hamilton township, Warren county, Ohio, be and the same is hereby made a special school district to be known as the 'Smith Special School District,' of Hamilton township, Warren county, Ohio."

The school laws were revised by a general act in 97 Ohio Laws, 334, et seq., and the manner of organizing special districts changed in view of the decisions of the supreme court holding special acts unconstitutional, as to municipal corporations.

In the above act an attempt was made to continue in existence all special school districts created by special act of the legislature.

Section 3891, Revised Statutes, as amended in said act, provided:

> "Any school district, now existing, other than a city, village or township school district, and any school district organized under the provisions of chapter 5 of this title, shall constitute a special school district."

In carrying this section into the General Code as section 4684, the words "now existing" were taken out. Otherwise the section remains the same.

This section was considered in case of Bartlett vs. State of Ohio, 73 Ohio St., 54, wherein it was held:

> "It is not within the power conferred on the general assembly by the constitution, to declare that things done and created under and by virtue of unconstitutional acts of the general assembly, nevertheless 'shall continue to be and remain and be recognized and regarded as legal.'
> "Section 3891, of the Revised Statutes and sections 3891 and 3928, of the Revised Statutes as amended and supplemented by 'An act to provide for the organization of the common schools of the state of Ohio, and to amend, repeal and supplement certain sections of the Revised Statutes and laws of Ohio herein named,' passed April 25, 1904 (97 O. L., 77), are unconstitutional and void, in so far as they declare to be legal and valid special school districts, all special school districts which have been created under the provisions of special acts of the general assembly."

In the case of State of Ohio vs. Spellmire, 67 Ohio St., 77, it is held:

> "The subject matter of schools, including school districts, and establishing and changing the same, is of a general nature; and all legislation as to them must be general, having a uniform operation throughout the state. State ex rel. vs. Shearer, et al., 46 Ohio St., 275, overruled, and State vs. Powers, 33 Ohio St., 54, reaffirmed.
> "The act of April 2, 1903, entitled 'An act to create a special school district in Springfield and Sycamore townships, in Hamilton county, and Union township, Butler county,' 95 Ohio Laws, 743, is in conflict with that part of section 26, article II of the constitution which provides that: 'All laws of a general nature, shall have a uniform operation throughout the state,' and is therefore unconstitutional and void."

In view of the foregoing decisions by the supreme court, the special act which created the "Smith Special School District" is unconstitutional, and the provision of section 3891, Revised Statutes, which attempted to continue such district in existence is also unconstitutional.

Therefore, if the "Smith Special School District," rests its organization upon the act of 92 Ohio Laws, 533, it is not a legally organized special school district. It may be that since the above decisions this district has been properly organized under the general laws. Nothing, however, has been presented in that regard.

The territory of this district, if it has not been legally organized since its first organization by special act, would revert to the district or districts from which it was created.

If this territory should revert to a township, not having centralized schools, it would not be pre-empted territory, and could be taken to form a village school district, or some other school district.

Respectfully,
TIMOTHY S. HOGAN,
Attorney General.

CLERK OF SUPREME COURT—LAW STUDENT FUND FOR WHICH CERTIFICATE OF DEPOSIT IS OBTAINED FROM A BANK NOW DEFUNCT IS A TRUST FUND AND A PREFERRED CLAIM—EFFECT OF INTEREST PAYMENT—TREASURER'S CHECK NOT PRESENTED IN REASONABLE TIME NOT A PREFERRED CLAIM.

By the decision of Smith et al. Trustees vs. Fuller et al., 86 O. S. 57, it is established that the trustees have no right to create a relation of debtor and creditor, that is, to loan out trust funds, and that in the absence of a clear showing, that a deposit of a trust fund with a bank was made as a loan by way of a general deposit, such purpose would not be attributed to the trustee.

When, therefore, the clerk of the supreme court receives a certificate of deposit, for a deposit by him, of law student funds, which certificate of deposit showed on its face a recognition of the fact that the amount was a trust fund, such deposit will be regarded as a special and not a general deposit, and must, therefore, be treated as a preferred claim against the trustees of a bank when the latter is undergoing liquidation. The fact that the certificate of deposit bears interest is not sufficient to change the deposit from a special to a general deposit.

When the clerk has received a check for a definite amount from the bank for interest upon the funds so deposited, and such check is not presented within a reasonable time, the same must be considered as a general claim against the bank and in no way preferred.

COLUMBUS, OHIO, January 14, 1913.

HON. FRANK E. MCKEAN, Clerk of the Supreme Court of Ohio, Columbus, Ohio.

DEAR SIR:—In your letter of April 11, 1912, you make the following request for my opinion:

> "At the time the Columbus Savings and Trust Company suspended business the supreme court of Ohio had on deposit, in my name, as clerk of the court, certificate of deposit for $1,200.00, and a treasurer's check for interest, making a total of $1,248. This represented what is known as the 'Law student fund.' The aggregate of this fund, less the $48.00, was a surplus remaining after paying the expenses incident to holding said bar examinations and was subject to use in defraying the expenses of subsequent examinations, providing the amount paid by the students would not equal the amount of an examination.
> "I am presenting this matter to you by request of Honorable William Z. Davis, chief justice of the supreme court of Ohio, for the purpose of having you advise me whether or not this claim would not likely be considered a preferred claim, in view of the fact that it substantially is a trust fund, and might possibly be analogous to case No. 12996, E. B. Smith, et al., Trustees, vs. Rathbun Fuller et al., decided by this court on Tuesday, April 2, 1912, on which an opinion was rendered."

Rule 14 of the Rules of Practice in the supreme court of Ohio, governing the admission to the bar, provides, among other requirements, for certain fees to be paid by persons who register as law students, and also for fees to be paid by persons taking the examination for admission to the bar, and by persons admitted without examination.

Section 16 of rule 14 provides for the administration of this fund, which, as you state, is called the "Law student fund," and is as follows:

> "The clerk shall enter the date of the filing of all papers under this rule, with a pertinent description of the same, in a record provided for that purpose, and shall enter all sums received under this rule in a cash book, showing the date, from whom and for what received, and shall pay the same out upon the order of the chief justice in payment of the expenses of the examinations, and for no other purpose. That is to say: costs of necessary printing and stationery; necessary janitor or messenger service; necessary hall rent, postage and express charges and other necessary expenses; to the clerk for each certificate of admission issued to an applicant, $1.00, and also the registration fees paid under this rule; to each member of the standing committee $50.00, for each examination, and to each member of the committee on general learning $10.00 for each session, and his necessary traveling expenses, actually incurred in the work of the committee.
> "If the funds are not sufficient, such pro rata distribution shall be made as the funds will warrant."

It will be noted, from the above rule, that this fund is essentially a trust fund in the hands of the clerk, and can only be expended by the clerk on the order of the chief justice of the supreme court, for the items specified in the rule. There seems to be no provision as to the disposition the clerk shall make, from time to time, of the surplus remaining in his hands but, of course, under the rule and well settled principles of law, the clerk is required to hold and safely keep said fund at all times, and to only use the same for the purposes specified.

It appears, from your letter and from your books, that this deposit was not originally made by you. There was an accumulation in the "Law student fund" of twelve hundred dollars which was, by one of your predecessors in the officer of clerk of the supreme court, deposited in the Columbus Savings and Trust Company, and a certificate of deposit taken for that amount. When you assumed office this certificate of deposit was transferred to you and, on February 5, 1912, the certificate then outstanding became due; it was cancelled by the bank and a new certificate for twelve hundred dollars was issued, an exact copy of which is as follows:

"CERTIFICATE OF DEPOSIT.

"THE COLUMBUS SAVINGS AND TRUST CO.

"Law Student Fund. "COLUMBUS, OHIO, February 5, 1912.

"This certifies that Frank E. McKean, clerk supreme court of Ohio, has deposited with this company twelve hundred dollars $1,200.00 payable to the order of self on surrender of this certificate six or twelve months after February 3, 1912, with interest at the rate of 4 per cent. per annum.

"Interest ceases at maturity.

"NOT MORE THAN TWELVE HUNDRED $1,200

"No. 12656. H. W. BACHUS, Treasurer."

From appearance, the certificate, as originally drawn, called simply for $1,200, that amount being written and also expressed in figures; apparently, someone has placed the figures $24 immediately under the figures $1,200, on the certificate, drawn a line and then placed the figures $1,224. Your books show that the amount due on the certificate of deposit was $1,200 even, and there is nothing to show for what purpose the additional $24 was added, or that it is really a part of the certificate; therefore, the rule that where the sum written in the body of the check differs from the sum expressed in figures, in the corner or margin, the written words will control the figures, would govern, and the amount of this certificate must be taken as twelve hundred dollars.

On the same date, February 5, 1912, a treasurer's check, amounting to $48, was issued by the Columbus Savings and Trust Company to you as clerk. This check represented four per cent interest on the certificate of deposit, surrendered by you on February 5, 1912. An exact copy of this check is as follows:

"THE COLUMBUS SAVINGS AND TRUST CO.

"COLUMBUS, O., Feb. 5, 1912. No. 9681.

"Pay to the order of Frank E. McKean, clerk $48.00
"Forty-eight dollars.

"NOT MORE THAN FIFTY DOLLARS $50.

"TREASURER'S CHECK. H. W. BACHUS, Treasurer."

From the above facts, and from sections 16 of rule 14, above quoted, it must be conceded that you, as clerk of the supreme court, were a trustee, with powers strictly limited, for this fund. This being true, it seems to me that the case of Smith et al., Trustees, vs. Fuller et al., Assignees, 86 O. S. 57, as reported in the Ohio Law Bulletin, in the issue of June 24, 1912 (which is the case referred to by you in your request), certainly covers this transaction. The facts in that case, as stated by Judge Spear, were as follows:

> "The plantiffs in error are trustees for the Imperial Savings Company, an insolvent concern * * *. The defendants in error are assignees of the East Side Banking Company, an insolvent banking corporation * * *.
> "The suit * * * was by the plaintiffs in error against the defendants in error to have a trust impressed upon moneys that remained in the vaults of the bank at the time of the assignment. It is shown by the record that upon two separate occasions the trustees * * * deposited with the bank trust money coming into their hands * * * taking in each instance a certificate of deposit expressing that a deposit was made by E. B. Smith and A. B. Baumann, trustees; that the same was not subject to check, and the money payable on return of the certificate properly endorsed. No interest was promised. It further appears by the record that the bank failed before the money was withdrawn, having funds in its vaults * * * in amount and value more than sufficient to pay the sum * * * so deposited by said trustees. The assignees refused to allow the claim of the trustees as a preferred claim but did accept it as a claim against the general assets of the bank.
> "The cause was heard on a demurrer to the petition and amendment thereto. The demurrer was sustained, both courts holding that the facts alleged presented only the usual case of a general deposit, thus holding that the relation of debtor and creditor arose between the trustees and the bank and therefore no trust was established.

* * * * * * * * * * * *

"We are thus required to determine whether, upon the foregoing facts, the trustees are entitled to payment of their claim out of the assets of the insolvent bank in the hands of the assignees before any distribution to other creditors, or whether the character of their claim is such that they are merely general creditors of the estate, entitled only to their pro rata share of the fund for distribution. In determining this final question the first query presented is whether or not the deposit by the trustees was, in the eyes of the law, in the nature of a special deposit, or a mere general deposit. If the former, then, a second question arises which is, has the fund been kept in such a way as to permit a court of equity to engraft a trust upon it?"

After stating the facts, as above, the opinion of the court is, in brief, as follows:

That the duty of a trustee is to protect the trust property in every reasonable manner, to use diligence in obtaining possession of it, and to retain it securely under his own control; and that a trustee has, in the proper discharge of his duties as such, no right or power, by express contract, to create the relation merely of debtor and creditor, that is, to loan out the trust funds; that such an act, in the absence of authority from the court, would clearly be inconsistent with and a violation of his plain duty; that if he has no right to make such loan generally, it is clear that a loan to a bank, by way of a general deposit, would be equally beyond his power; and that in the absence of a clear showing that the deposit was made as a loan to a bank by way of a general deposit such purpose would not be attributed to the trustee.

The court further says the fact that the account was not subject to check indicates that the deposit lacked one feature usually to be found in the case of a general deposit, and the fact that no interest was to be paid negatives the idea that it was the purpose of the trustees to loan out the money; that the certificates of deposit themselves showed that the bank knew that the money deposited was not the money of the trustees, but was the money of the trust which they represented; that the bank must be held to have been put upon inquiry and should be held bound by the legal effect of knowledge which might have been so acquired; and that, therefore, the bank is charged with knowledge of the rule which forbids a trust from loaning out the trust funds generally, or making a mere general deposit.

The court decides that this was a special and not a general deposit and that the trustees were entitled to have their claim allowed as a preferred claim.

I have given simply a rough summary of this opinion. It is written by Judge Spear and is most clear and comprehensive; it undoubtedly covers exactly the case we have before us, except for the fact that the certificate of deposit for $1,200, issued to you, specifies that it bears interest at four per cent. I take, it however, that this fact would not be sufficient to change the deposit so made from a special to a general deposit, for, at the present time, it is a matter of common knowledge that practically all certificates of deposit bear interest. The certificate on its face shows not only that this deposit was made by you as clerk of the supreme court of Ohio, and not individually, but shows that it was a special fund so deposited, namely, the law student fund. As stated above, the rule of the supreme court prescribed, however, that this fund should be accounted for by you and how it should be paid, and, of course, as trustee and custodian of the fund, without being so directed by the court, you were utterly without authority to loan the fund or any part of it, or, as the court says in the case above referred to, to make a general deposit and thus create the relation of debtor and creditor with the bank. It seems to me, therefore, from this opinion, that this deposit must be treated as a special deposit and that your claim against the Columbus Savings and Trust Company, for the amount of the certificate of deposit, namely, twelve hundred dollars, should be allowed as a preferred claim and paid by the receiver.

As stated above, there is no provision made in the rule for you to loan or invest this fund. The check for forty-eight dollars, which I take it represents interest, is simply in the form of a treasurer's check, made payable to your order as clerk. Not being specified, there is nothing to signify in what capacity the check is given to you except the word "clerk." This check, I take it, would be governed by the usual rules and should have been presented at the bank for payment within a reasonable time; if the bank failed before the check was presented and the same was not presented within a reasonable time, then, it would be only a general claim against the bank and not a preferred claim.

The rule as to presentment of checks for payment, as stated in Morse on Banks and Banking, section 421, is:

> "In the absence of agreement or special circumstances it is the right of the drawer of a check to expect it to be presented for payment at latest within banking hours on the day following the day of its delivery to the payee, if the bank on which it is drawn be in the same place where the payee lives or does business; if the bank be not in such place, then the check must, within the same time, be put in due course for presentment, either by being sent by mail to the drawee, or by being deposited for collection with a banker, according to the ordinary custom of such business in that place. * * *"

The check was dated February 5, 1912; the bank was taken in charge by the state banking department and closed on the twenty-sixth day of February, 1912; there is nothing upon the face of the check itself to show that it was in any sense drawn against a special deposit—in fact, it was not; it was the increment upon a trust fund; was payable out of the general funds of the bank; and as it was not presented within a reasonable time it must be considered as a general claim against the bank, and in no way preferred.

Very truly yours,
TIMOTHY S. HOGAN,
Attorney General.

SUPREME COURT REPORTER MAY RECEIVE COMPENSATION FOR ACTING AS SECRETARY OF OHIO STATE ARCHAEOLOGICAL SOCIETY.

A person may be reporter for the supreme court and secretary of the Ohio state archaeological society, and be paid for his service for both positions from state funds or out of the state treasury.

COLUMBUS, OHIO, August 7, 1913.

HON. E. O. RANDALL, Supreme Court Reporter, Columbus, Ohio.

DEAR SIR:—In regard to your inquiry as to whether you may be paid for your services as secretary of the Ohio state archaeological society, and at the same time draw your salary as reporter of the supreme court, permit me to say:

My immediate predecessor, Hon. U. G. Denman, on January 5, 1909, in an opinion of which you have a copy, says:

> "My opinion is * * * that you are entitled to perform the service of secretary to the Ohio state archaeological society and receive compensation therefor out of the public treasury notwithstanding the fact that you are the duly appointed and acting supreme court reporter."

This is directly applicable and meets my approval.

I also beg to advise you that Hon. Wade H. Ellis, the then attorney general of Ohio, on January 8, 1908, in an opinion to Hon. W. O. Thompson, wherein it was asked:

> "Whether section 2 of an act passed April 2, 1906, 98 O. L. 368, makes it illegal for the trustees of the Ohio state university to enter into a contract with persons named as officers in the above act for their services as teachers in the university, and whether this act prohibits such persons therein named as officers of the state from receiving remuneration for such services?"

Section 2 of the act passed April 2, 1906 (98 O. L. 365), is as follows:

> "Provided, further, that no fees whatever in addition to the above named salaries shall be allowed to such officers; and provided, further, that no additional remuneration whatever shall be given any such officer under any other title than the title by which such officer was elected or duly appointed. The salaries herein provided for shall be in full compensation for any and all services rendered by said officers and employes, payment of which is made from the state treasury."

The conclusion reached by Mr. Ellis in his opinion to Hon. W. O. Thompson, above referred to, is as follows:

> "There is nothing in this act to prevent an officer named therein from teaching in the university at such times as do not conflict with the proper performance of his official duties. Since the statute refers to services required by law or rendered by such officers in their official capacity, and since such teaching is not so required and is done in an individual capacity, compensation may be made to persons holding the offices named in this act for services as instructors in the university."

Upon principle there is no difference between the conclusions of Messrs. Denman and Ellis. I only desire to add that since the rendition of Mr. Denman's opinion annual appropriations have been made to cover the current expenses of said society, which current expenses in each case included an allowance for the payment of its secretary, with the knowledge on the part of the legislature that the secretary of said society was reporter for the supreme court and being compensated out of the state treasury for his services as such. This, to my mind, can only be regarded as a legislative approval of the opinion referred to.

Concurring in the conclusions of my predecessors, Ellis and Denman, I beg to advise you that in my opinion you are entitled to be compensated out of the state treasury for your services as secretary of the Ohio state archaeological society, notwithstanding the fact that you are reporter for the supreme court of Ohio, and being paid therefor from the same source.

Very truly yours,
TIMOTHY S. HOGAN,
Attorney General.

OATHS—OFFICERS WHO MAY ADMINISTER TO MEMBERS OF MILITIA.

Regulations of the Ohio national guard provide that judge advocates general, officers of summary courts, and officers detailed to conduct investigation or the presiding officers of any board appointed for such purpose, are the proper officers to administer oaths.

Section 14862, General Code, provides that certain officers may administer oaths to members of the militia, when they are outside of the state, engaged in the service of the United States.

COLUMBUS, OHIO, November 27, 1913.

HON. CHAS. C. WEYBRECHT, Adjutant General of Ohio, Columbus, Ohio.

DEAR SIR:—Under date of November 9th, you wrote this department as follows:

> "Please note enclosed letter from the war department, in which the secretary of war requests a list of all officials who are authorized by the laws of Ohio to administer oaths, other than the usual notaries public, justices of the peace, clerks of courts, etc."

The letter to which you refer is as follows:

> "1. The war department frequently receives affidavits pertaining to the administration of militia affairs, sworn and subscribed to before an officer of the organized militia. Militia officers, as such, are not in general authorized to administer oaths, and the return of papers in such cases for citation of authority involves delay.
> "2. The secretary of war has directed me to request you to furnish this office with a list of all officials who are authorized by the laws of your state to administer oaths, other than the usual notaries public, justices of the peace, clerks of courts, etc., with an extract copy of the law covering each case."

Just what the secretary of war has meant by a list of all officials who are authorized by the laws of this state to administer oaths other than the usual notaries public, justices of the peace, clerks of court, etc., is not altogether clear.

I have made a thorough investigation of the statutes pertaining to the administering of oaths and I find innumerable officers and boards who are authorized to administer oaths in certain instances, within range of their special duties. I take it to be the meaning of your letter, however, that you are not interested in any powers to administer oaths other than those which would extend to military affairs.

It would seem scarcely necessary to set out the authority appearing on page 29 of your "regulations for the Ohio national guard," which states "that judge advocates of courts martial, and the trial officers of summary courts, are hereby authorized to administer oaths for the purpose of the administration of military justice, and for other purposes of military administration." (Act of congress of July 27, 1892.) The same may be said of the power given to any commissioned officer of the Ohio national guard, to administer the oath of enlistment, the authority for which appears on page 98 of the same work, as paragraph 276.

Paragraph 602 of said code of regulations provides generally, as follows:

> "The proper officers to administer oaths are judge advocates general, judge advocates of courts martial, the trial officers of summary courts, and, in cases of investigation, the officer detailed to conduct the investigation, or the recorder, and if there be none, the presiding officer of any board appointed for such purpose. When none of these are within reach and available, recourse must be had to a notary public or other civil officer competent to administer oaths for general purposes."

I take it that the authority which properly answers your question is section 14862, General Code, which is as follows:

> "Section 14862 (3107-55 Bates). The colonel, lieutenant colonel, major, or adjutant of any regiment or battalion, which has been or may hereafter be raised in this state, and now is or may hereafter be in the service of the United States, or of this state, whether regular or volunteer, shall be and is hereby authorized to administer oaths, and take depositions, affidavits and acknowledgments of deeds, mortgages, leases and other conveyances of lands, and all powers of attorney relating thereto, to be used or recorded in this state, of any person without this state, who for the time being shall be in the service of the United States, or of this state, in any regiment or battalion raised in this state or connected therewith, in the same manner as a justice of the peace or commissioner of this state might do."

I have been unable to disclose anything further which I feel would be material to your inquiry.

I trust that this will prove satisfactory.

Very truly yours,
TIMOTHY S. HOGAN,
Attorney General.

MILITIA—PERSON SENTENCED BY COMMANDING OFFICER TO COUNTY JAIL—ARRANGEMENT WITH SHERIFF FOR BOARD.

Section 2850, General Code, authorizes the county commissioners to pay to the sheriff not less than forty-five, nor more than seventy-five cents per day for keeping and feeding prisoners. This statute cannot be held to apply, however, to any prisoners other than those expressly provided for in the statutes. There is no provision in the statutes for the commitment of a military prisoner to the county jail, nor for the payment of the board of such prisoner. In the case of McGorray vs. Murphy, however, the court recognized the right of military authorities to commit to a county jail, and intimated that the expense of the board of such prisoner must be provided for by arrangement with the sheriff.

When a prisoner is so committed to the county jail, therefore, the county commissioners may not allow a sheriff for his board.

COLUMBUS, OHIO, January 30, 1913.

HON. CHARLES C. WEYBRECHT, Adjutant General, Columbus, Ohio.

DEAR SIR:—I acknowledge receipt of your request for an opinion upon the facts stated in a letter addressed to me by Capt. H. S. Dyar, of company B, 7th Ohio infantry, which letter is, in part, as follows:

> "Section 3067, Revised Statutes, gives the commanding officer of a military company the authority to arrest and confine any member of his command, for violation of any order, regulation or law for the government of the Ohio national guard. I arrested a member of my company and tried him by a summary court and he was sentenced to ten days in the county jail, and served the time. Now, the sheriff informs me that he cannot charge the man's board to the county as he does for other prisoners. What I desire is your opinion as to who has to pay that board bill. Can the sheriff charge it to the county as he does for other prisoners? The man was arrested and tried for violation of the 33d article of war."

Section 5251, General Code, formerly section 3067, Revised Statutes, provides as follows:

> "The commanding officer of a regiment, battalion, company, troop or battery, may arrest any member of his command for the violation of an order, regulation or law for the government of the national guard, and may authorize, in writing, any constable or police officer of the city, village or township where such violation occurs, to so arrest such delinquent member. Such commanding officer may turn over, to any constable or police officer, a member of his command so arrested by him. Such constable or police officer shall hold such man, so arrested, in the custody, not exceeding five days, until he has been tried by the proper court-marshal, or has been discharged by proper authority."

It will be observed that the foregoing only authorizes a commanding officer of a regiment to arrest any member of his command for the violation of an order, regulation or law for the government of the national guard, and may authorize certain officers, named in the statute, to detain such member, not exceeding five days, until he has been tried by court-martial or discharged by the proper authority. The thirty-third article of war is one of the regulations for the government of the Ohio national guard, and a violation thereof comes within the provisions of section 5251, General Code. This section, however, is not broad enough to provide a place of detention after conviction, and I have not found any other statute of this state which authorizes the commitment of a prisoner, found guilty of violating military law, to a county jail.

Our supreme court, however, in the case of McGorray vs. Murphy, 80 O. S., 413, upheld the commitment to the county jail of a man found guilty of violating a provision of such law. The court, in rendering the opinion, on page 416, uses the following significant language:

> "Nor can it avail anything to the defendant in error that a sheriff is a civil officer and ordinarily acts in that capacity, and that when receiving prisoners sentenced by civil courts his authority ordinarily is evidenced by a formal commitment, because in this instance he was acting as the instrument of a military court and in such case a commitment is not necessary. In field service the offender is taken to the guardhouse without ceremony or preliminaries. In the absence of a military prison he is delivered to a sheriff or jailer upon arrangement with the latter."

The court intimated, but did not expressly decide, that a prisoner violating military law may not be committed to the jail of a county except upon arrangement between the officer committing him and the sheriff of the county.

Section 2850, General Code, authorizes the county commissioners to pay to the sheriff not less than forty-five, nor more than seventy-five cents, per day, for keeping and feeding prisoners. Other statutes provide in express terms the classes of prisoners who may be committed to the county jail.

It is my opinion that the board of only such prisoners as are committed to jail pursuant to some statute of this state can be charged to the county. The commitment of a military prisoner to a county jail, not being expressly authorized by statute, can only be done when arrangements are made between the officer committing him and the sheriff. Such arrangements should be made on the authority of your department, so as to include a provision as to the payment of a board for such prisoner.

I am of the opinion that you should make arrangements for the payment of the board of this particular prisoner, during the time that he was confined in the county jail; and if there is not already a regulation on this subject, I would suggest that you adopt one for future guidance.

Very truly yours,

TIMOTHY S. HOGAN,

Attorney General.

MILITIA—OFFICERS OF OHIO NATIONAL GUARD MAY NOT BE REIMBURSED FOR TIPS WHEN TRAVELING.

Under sections 5292, 5293 and 5296, General Code, officers of the Ohio national guard, when engaged upon inspection or other duties, on order of the commander-in-chief, are entitled to the same pay as is allowed commissioned officers of like grade in the army of the United States, together with the necessary transportation. Their allowance for necessary transportation, must be governed by the rule as it exists with reference to the allowance for such transportation to public officers in Ohio, and as it is well established in this state, that tips may not be made a public expense, nor porters' fees, when they are in fact donated as a gratuity, officers of the national guard may not be reimbursed from the public treasury for either of these expenses.

COLUMBUS, OHIO, January 28, 1913.

HON. GEORGE WOOD, Adjutant General, Columbus, Ohio.

DEAR SIR:—Under date of January 23d, you request my opinion as follows:

> "Kindly let us have an opinion as to whether or not tips and porter fees by officers of the Ohio national guard are permissible. This department holds that they are, and cites authority section 5296 of the Code, which provides that pay of officers of the organized militia shall be the same as of like grade in the army. Paragraph 346, pay manual of the U. S. army, provides for certain expenditures to officers of the army."

Section 5296, General Code, provides as follows:

> "For service and attendance upon general courts-martial, courts of inquiry, and boards appointed by the commander-in-chief, as member, judge, advocate, recorder or witness, or upon inspection or other duty when ordered by the commander-in-chief, officers shall receive as pay the amount allowed by law for duty at annual encampments, together with transportation in kind and actual necessary expenses for each day's service and the time actually employed in going to and returning from such duty, courts or boards."

Under this section, officers shall receive as pay the amount allowed by law for duty at annual encampments, together with transportation in kind and actual necessary expenses.

The section providing for pay at annual encampments is 5293, General Code, which provides:

> "Officers and enlisted men shall receive pay for each day actually spent by them on duty at annual encampments, ordered by the commander-in-chief, at the following rate, together with all necessary transportation, quartermaster stores and medical supplies. Each commissioned officer shall receive pay as provided in the next preceding section. For each day's service performed, each enlisted man shall receive one dollar and rations at a rate not to exceed forty cents a day."

Under this section, each commissioned officer receives pay as provided by section 5292, General Code, which follows:

> "Officers and enlisted men of the national guard shall receive pay for their services at the following rates: When in actual service, in case of riot or insurrection, or when called upon in aid of the civil authorities, each commissioned officer shall receive such sum per day for each day's service performed as is allowed commissioned officers of like grade in the army of the United States, together with the necessary transportation, and each enlisted man shall receive two dollars for each day's service performed, together with the necessary transportation, commissary and quartermaster stores, and medical supplies. For all horses of enlisted men there shall be paid two dollars per day for each horse necessarily used by them for each day's service performed."

The statute which governs, therefore, is the latter statute and this statute provides that each commissioned officer shall receive such sum per day for each day's service as is allowed commissioned officers of like grade in the army of the United States, together with the necessary transportation.

It is clear that the effect of this statute is to provide that the pay of the officers in the Ohio militia shall be the same as that allowed officers of like grade in the army of the United States. As to expenses, however, special provision is made, and it is provided that actual necessary expenses shall be allowed in each case. There is nothing in this statute to justify the conclusion that the expenses allowed officers in the Ohio militia shall be the same as that allowed officers in the army of the United States. It is, therefore, unnecessary to determine what the manner of paying such expenses is in the regulations pertaining to United States army officers. Whatever the rule may be as to the allowance of tips and porters' fees to officers in the United States army, the rule followed with reference to the Ohio militia under these statutes, must be that which governs in Ohio.

Under date of March 22, 1912, I rendered an opinion to the Honorable E. M. Fullington, auditor of state, in which I said:

> " * * * that a 'tip' is defined as a gift or gratuity, and the Century Dictionary defines it as a donation to one for some service or pretended service while in the employ of another and for which the employer makes payment. In any light it is a gratuity or donation to one who is ready and willing to receive but who confessedly has no right to demand, and therefore cannot be considered as an expense chargeable to the state as other expenses may be.
> "Money paid to a porter may or may not be legal expense, depending upon the character of service rendered and whether the doing of that for which the money was given was, or was not, a part of his duties under his employment."

I regret to be obliged to differ with the opinion of your department, but in consistency with the rule as I saw it in the former opinion, and which I have no reason to overrule, I am compelled to conclude that tips may not be allowed as actual necessary expenses and porters' fees may not be allowed under this head, when they are rendered, in fact, as a gratuity, and not as a payment for some particular service, to which the officer is entitled without payment.

Very truly yours,

TIMOTHY S. HOGAN,
Attorney General.

ENGINEER'S NEGLIGENCE—EMPLOYER NOT LIABLE FOR INJURY TO EMPLOYE NOT OCCURRING WITHIN SCOPE OF EMPLOYMENT.

An employer cannot be held liable for an injury resulting to an employe, whilst said employe was not acting within the scope of his employment.

COLUMBUS, OHIO, April 9, 1913.

GEN. GEORGE H. WOOD, Adjutant General, Columbus, Ohio.

DEAR SIR:—Your letter in regard to suit of Nickels, Admr., vs. Murray, for damages on account of the death of Nickels, caused by a premature explosion of a blast on May 26, 1912, together with statement of facts and testimony is at hand.

Murray's liability rests upon the question whether the decedent Nickels was in Murray's employment at the time of his death, and if he was, whether the death of Nickels was occasioned by a preventable accident or is to be charged to any wrong, default or neglect of Murray.

While one of the circuit courts of the state has undertaken to construe the act of April 30, 1910, and has held that an employer is liable, not under the old rule of negligence of the employer, which was the proximate cause of the accident, but for any wrong, neglect or default, which caused the accident, yet I feel that said construction will be much more difficult of application than the definition I would prefer—which is that an employer is liable for "preventable accidents."

I will therefore consider the question of liability under both constructions. At all events the person injured must be an employe, and must when injured be engaged in the line of his duty under his contract of employment.

That Nickels was in the employ of Murray will have to be considered; that he was engaged in labor of like character with that for which he was hired will not be questioned. But Murray was not employed to make demonstration of explosives (see Murray's statement); nor was Nickels employed to do this demonstrating (Ibid).

Murray says: "I accordingly stated the situation to one of our workmen, Anthony Nickels, and asked him if he would volunteer to take my place on Sunday for a couple of hours and show the men from company D how to blast. He readily agreed," etc.

Accepting this as a correct statement of the facts, Nickels was not engaged in the line of his duty when injured.

Section 6242, General Code, as amended April 30, 1910, defines employers' liabilities and enlarges the definition of superior servants as follows:

> "Section 6242. That in all actions brought to recover from an employer for personal injuries suffered by his employe or for death resulting to such employe from such personal injuries, while in the employ of such employer, arising from the negligence of such employer or any of such employer's officers, agents, or employes, it shall be held in addition to the liability now existing by law that any person in the employ of such employer, in any way having power or authority in directing or controlling any other employe of such employer, is not the fellow servant, but superior to such other employe; any person in the employ of such employer in any way having charge or control of employes in any separate branch or department, shall be held to be the superior and not fellow servant of all employes in any other branch or department in which they are employed; any person in the employ of such employer whose duty it is to repair or inspect the ways, works, boats, wharves, plant, machinery, appliances or tools, in any way connected with or in any way used in the business of the employer or to receive, give or transmit any signal, instruction, or warning to or for such employes shall be held to be the superior and not fellow servant to such other employes of such employer."

Section 6243, General Code, was amended at the same time and now reads:

"That if the employe of any such employer shall receive any personal injury by reason of any defect or unsafe condition in any ways, works, boats, wharves, plant, machinery, appliances or tools, except simple tools, in any way connected with or in any way used in the business of the employer, such employer shall be deemed to have had knowledge of such defect, before and at the time such injury was so sustained, and when the fact of such defect shall be made to appear upon trial of an action brought by such employe or his personal or legal representatives, against any such employer for damages, on account of such injuries so received, the same shall be prima facie evidence of neglect on the part of such employer; but the employer may show by way of defense such defect was not discoverable in the exercise of ordinary care."

Section 6244, General Code, eliminates the defense of "fellow servant." Section 6245, General Code, eliminates assumption of risk.

It will be observed that section 6242 is intended to add to the rights of recovery by an employe; that section 6243 provides for recovery where the injury was by reason of any defect or unsafe condition in any way, works, boats, appliances or tools except simple tools, in any way connected with or used in the business of the employer, but nowhere in this act can be found any expression tending to change the rule that the injured employe, to recover, must have been, when injured, engaged in the business of the employer, and in the line of his duty, as marked out or measured by the terms of his employment.

A careful reading of the exhibits attached to your letter fails to disclose the fact that Nickels was either engaged in the line of his duty or in the business of his employer, whether we hold that to be Mr. Murray, the Murray Stone Company or anyone else.

I feel that this case is clearly distinguishable from the line of cases where it is held that liability attaches in favor of one who joins with an employe in the work of the master, at the solicitation of an employe who had no right to hire, and that in no event can liability be found to attach against Murray, the company for which he was superintendent and on whose grounds the demonstration was made, or to the national guard at whose request, and for the benefit of which the same was made.

Very truly yours,
TIMOTHY S. HOGAN,
Attorney General.

APPROPRIATIONS—POWERS AND DUTIES OF ADJUTANT GENERAL WITH REFERENCE TO EXPENDITURE OF $13,000. APPROPRIATION FOR REMODELING AND REFURNISHING OFFICES OF BOARD OF PARDONS, GOVERNOR, ADJUTANT GENERAL, AUDITOR OF STATE AND THE DAIRY AND FOOD COMMISSIONER.

The work of moving, remodeling and refurnishing offices in the state house does not come within the terms of section 2314, General Code, requiring contracts for erection, alteration or improvement of state institutions or buildings, to be contracted for only after plans, specifications and estimates are prepared, when the amount of each contract let for work does not exceed $3,000. The remodeling of such office when the contract exceeds $3,000 would come within said statute.

Since the legislature has appropriated the lump sum of $13,000 for this work, it is discretionary with the adjutant general whether he will make separate contracts for the work or enter into one contract for all work.

It would also be legal for the separate departments, each to make its own contract for remodeling and refurnishing in the manner provided by law.

COLUMBUS, OHIO, May 20, 1913.

GENERAL GEORGE H. WOOD, Adjutant General of Ohio, Columbus, Ohio.

DEAR SIR:—I am in receipt of your letter of May 20, 1913, in which you make the following request for my opinion:

> "In the appropriation bill passed by the recent legislature, there is an item of $13,000 for remodeling and refurnishing the offices of the board of pardons, governor of Ohio, the adjutant general, auditor of state and dairy and food commissioner. As these various offices will have to be improved separately, I write to ask you whether this appropriation can be treated in independent amounts for the improvement of the various departments and handled in this way, each one of the items running under $3.000."

House bill No. 674 entitled "An act to make sundry appropriations, and to amend house bill No. 381, passed February 27, 1913, entitled an act 'To make partial appropriations for the last three-quarters of the fiscal year ending November 15, 1913, and the first quarter of the fiscal year ending February 15, 1914,' and to amend house bill No. 500, passed April 14, 1913, entitled an act 'To make general appropriations,'" passed April 28, 1913, carried among others, the following appropriation:

"STATE HOUSE AND GROUNDS.

"Roof repairs and replacement of skylights of capitol building..	$2,000.00
"Remodeling press room and rebuilding stairway, including material and labor required.....	1,500.00
"Moving, remodeling and refurnishing offices of the governor, adjutant general, auditor of state and dairy and food commissioner	13,000.00
"Repairs and improvement of wash room and toilets of the senate and house of representatives.....	1,500.00"

By the provisions of section 146 et seq., of the General Code, you are made the superintendent of the state house and grounds, and given supervision of all work or material required in or about the state house and grounds and the power to make contracts for such work and material. The sections bearing upon this are as follows:

"Sec. 146. By virtue of his office, the adjutant general shall be superintendent of the state house. He shall have supervision and control of the state house and heating plant therein, materials and persons employed in and about the state house, the grounds and appurtenances thereof and all work or materials required in or about them.

"Sec. 147. Each contract for such work and materials shall be in writing, signed by the superintendent on behalf of the state. A copy thereof shall be deposited in the office of the secretary of state within ten days after the contract is executed. No contract shall exceed the amount appropriated by law applicable to such purpose.

"Sec. 149. The superintendent shall keep a record of all contracts made by him, and of all accounts for labor and material, and certify such accounts to the auditor of state, as payments thereon shall become due."

The contracts for the erection, alteration or improvements of state institutions or buildings, or additions thereto, excepting the penitentiary, the aggregate cost of which exceeds $3,000 are regulated by sections 2314 to 2332 inclusive of the General Code, and it has been suggested that possibly sections 2314 and 2323 of said building code would apply to the contracts to be entered into in pursuance of the appropriation to which you refer, and as the aggregate of the appropriation is $13,000, and all of the work to be done is confined to the state house proper, it would be necessary for you to advertise for these separate contracts as is provided by said sections as to contracts for the erection, alteration or improvement of a state institution, or building or addition thereto. Said sections are as follows:

"Sec. 2314. Before entering into contracts for the erection, alteration or improvement of a state institution or building or addition thereto, excepting the penitentiary, or for the supply of materials therefor, the aggregate cost of which exceeds three thousand dollars, each officer, board, or other authority by law charged with the supervision thereof, shall make or cause to be made the following: full and accurate plans, showing all necessary details of the work, with working plans suitable for the use of mechanics and other builders in such construction, so drawn and represented as to be plain and easily understood; accurate bills showing the exact amount of different kinds of material necessary to the construction to accompany such plans; full and complete specifications of the work to be performed, showing the manner and style required with such directions as will enable a competent mechanic or other builder to carry them out, and afford bidders all needful information; a full and accurate estimate of each item of expense and of the aggregate cost thereof.

"Sec. 2323. No contract shall be made for labor or materials at a price in excess of the entire estimate thereof. The entire contract or contracts, including estimates of expenses for architects and otherwise, shall not exceed in the aggregate the amount authorized by law for such institution, building or improvement, addition thereto or alteration thereof."

While it is not stated in your letter, I am advised that separate and distinct estimates were made for moving, remodeling and refurnishing, first, the office of the governor; second, the adjutant general; third, the auditor of state, and fourth, the dairy and food commissioner; that these separate estimates were filed with the finance committee of the legislature, and that the finance committee instead of making a separate appropriation for each department simply made one lump appropriation to cover the entire matter. This appropriation, of course, being the total of the separate estimates.

It is further to be borne in mind that while these different offices are each and all situated in the state house proper, yet they are separate and distinct departments, and the repairs or alterations made in one department do not necessarily have any connection whatever with any other department or with the state house as a whole. The items given in the appropriation, "moving and refurnishing," do not come under the building code at all, and the item of "remodeling" is the only one to which the building regulations could apply in any respect. By section 2314, above quoted, these provisions essentially apply to contracts for the erection, alteration or improvement of a state institution or building or addition thereto, and it is necessary to consider remodeling as an improvement in order to come under the regulations at all.

Now in the matter of making contracts for the remodeling feature of this work, it seems to me that the matter is disposed of by the language of the section itself. If you deem it best, and it is feasible and practicable to enter into one contract for remodeling all of the four separate offices, then such contract if it exceed in amount three thousand dollars would have to be let as provided by section 2314 et seq., but bearing in mind the manner in which this appropriation was made, that is, that separate estimates were furnished the legislature by the separate departments, and also the fact that this remodeling is a series of internal improvements which, except for the fact that the different offices were to be remodeled at practically the same time, have no connection whatever with each other, it seems to me that the practical and common sense method in which to transact the matter is to treat the contract for each department as a separate contract; if this is done, so long as each separate contract does not exceed three thousand dollars, then the same can be let by you as provided in section 146 et seq. In addition to the above it does not seem to me that the fact that this appropriation comes under the head of "state house and grounds" gives you exclusive control over these alterations and repairs. I think that if the separate departments each made its contract for remodeling in the manner provided by law, the contracts would be valid and the contract price could be paid out of this appropriation, provided, of course, the aggregate of all such contracts did not exceed the amount of the appropriation.

Yours very truly,
TIMOTHY S. HOGAN,
Attorney General.

PROPERTY OF STATE NOT SUBJECT TO ASSESSMENT—ASSESSMENT AGAINST STATE MAY BE PAID BY APPROPRIATION OF THE LEGISLATURE.

The property of the state is not subject to assessment for local improvement, and there is no provision for the payment of assessments against the state. These assessments would have to be met by an appropriation of the legislature.

Where the city of Columbus has a bill against the state for cluster lights around the state house, the city should, through its proper officers, bring the matter to the attention of the general assembly, to obtain an appropriation to cover the cost of placing these lights.

COLUMBUS, OHIO, July 17, 1913,

HON. GEORGE H. WOOD, Adjutant General of Ohio, Columbus, Ohio.

DEAR SIR:—Under date of July 16th you enclose two assessment notices for construction of central district cluster lights which were placed upon streets surrounding the state house, and you inquire whether the state is liable for the bill, and if so, from what fund the same should be paid.

The lands of the state of Ohio are exempt from taxation under section 5351, General Code.

An exemption from taxation is not an exemption from assessment for local improvement.

Sec. 42 O. S. 128.

An examination, however, of such assessment statutes disclose that there is no provision in such statutes for the making of collection of assessments on property belonging to the state, and it is decided by the various authorities that unless the state provides for assessments to be made against it, especially property belonging to it, no assessment can be made against the state for the improvement of such property, and furthermore, there has been no provision made for the collection of any such assessment. I do not believe, therefore, that the property of the state is subject to assessment for local improvements, but even if it were so subject there is no provision made for the payment of such assessment, and therefore, the collection thereof since there is no provision of law that the state may be sued, would have to be made by appropriation by the general assembly.

The general assembly has not made any appropriation for the payment of such assessments nor are there any funds in your hands available for such purpose. I am, therefore, of the opinion that the state of Ohio is not liable for the payment of the assessment charged against it for the construction of the central district cluster lights, and even if liable there would be no fund from which the same could be paid, nor do I feel that it is your duty to call the attention of the general assembly to the matter. If the city of Columbus is desirous of obtaining from the legislature a sum sufficient to cover what has been estimated to be the state's share of the cost of such improvement, said city should through its proper officers, bring the matter to the attention of the general assembly.

Very truly yours,
TIMOTHY S. HOGAN,
Attorney General.

MONEY APPROPRIATED BY LEGISLATURE FOR FURNISHING STATE OFFICES IN COLUMBUS MAY NOT BE USED TO FURNISH STATE OFFICES OUTSIDE OF COLUMBUS.

When an appropriation is made for furniture and carpets necessary for the departments of government located in the city of Columbus, this money may not be used to pay for office furniture in a state office outside of the city of Columbus.

COLUMBUS, OHIO, August 14, 1913.

HON. GEORGE H. WOOD, Adjutant General of Ohio, Columbus, Ohio.

DEAR SIR:—I beg to acknowledge the receipt of your letter of August 7th, enclosing a bill rendered by the Ohio state reformatory to the bureau of labor statistics, which shows on its face that certain furniture was furnished, presumably at the request of the bureau of labor statistics, for use in the Dayton office, or rather, branch office of the bureau, and you call my attention to the appropriations made by the last general assembly for the use of your department, and request my opinion as to whether or not you may lawfully pay the bill in question which has been presented to you from this appropriation.

The general appropriation bill for the year 1913, 102 O. L. 611, contains the following item:

"ADJUTANT GENERAL'S DEPARTMENT.

* * * * * * * * * * *

"For furniture and carpets necessary for use in the department(s) of government located in the city of Columbus, Ohio .....$5,000.00"

In passing I may remark that the bureau of labor statistics received no appropriation for furniture and carpets, and that section 3 of the appropriation bill expressly prohibits the payment of bills for furniture and carpets out of appropriations for contingent expenses, so that if the bill attached to your letter cannot be paid out of the appropriations above quoted it cannot be paid at all.

In my opinion the bill cannot be so paid. Whatever may have been in the mind of the legislature in using the language which I have quoted, it is impossible to avoid the conclusion that the appropriation is not available to pay for furniture and carpets to be used elsewhere than in offices located at Columbus.

Of course, the bureau of labor statistics is a "department of government located in the city of Columbus" in the sense that its principal office is there located. If the appropriation be given an excessively liberal interpretation, then the furniture and carpets for its use, whether in the city of Columbus or elsewhere, should be payable therefrom. Such a liberal interpretation, however, would, in my opinion, defeat the purpose of the limitation in the appropriation. Obviously this limitation is inserted because it was conceived that the adjutant general, being the custodian of the state house, was in a position to better supply the needs of the offices located in Columbus than the several heads of the departments themselves. This consideration, however, would not apply to the offices of state departments located in other cities, about the needs of which the adjutant general would not be in a position to be advised.

It appears that the general assembly has, doubtless by inference, failed to provide for furniture and carpets for offices located elsewhere than in the city of Columbus. Such an oversight, however, can be remedied only by the legislature itself.

I, therefore, advise you to refuse payment of the bill tendered, and I enclose the same herewith.

Yours very truly,
TIMOTHY S. HOGAN,
Attorney General.

CONVICT LABOR MAY BE EMPLOYED TO CONSTRUCT AN ADDITION TO THE STATE ARSENAL.

Where $3,000.00 has been appropriated for the construction of an addition to the state arsenal the work may be done by convict labor. The convict labor so required may be secured by the state armory board on the requisition and authority of the board of administration.

COLUMBUS, OHIO, October 10, 1913.

HON. GEORGE H. WOOD, Adjutant General, Columbus, Ohio.

DEAR SIR:—I am in receipt of your communication of October 8, 1913, in which you ask opinion of me as follows:

> "At the last session of the legislature an appropriation was made for building an addition to the state arsenal. This is on property owned by the state and the building to be the property of the state.
> "It would be a matter of economy to the state of Ohio if convict labor could be secured in doing this work. Application has been made to Dr. Shepherd, state board of administration, and he has stated that if the opinion of the attorney general is that this can be done, he will furnish the labor."

Section 5278 General Code provides as follows:

> "The adjutant general shall have general direction over the state arsenal, state camp grounds and other military property of the state. He shall employ such labor thereat, as the governor deems the necessities and best interests of the state require."

The appropriation referred to is one made to the adjutant general's department by the legislature (103 O. L. 611) and reads as follows:

"Magazine and ambulance sheds state arsenal.....$3,000.00"

I assume that it is not questioned but the state arsenal is a state institution or building, as much so as any other institution or building owned and controlled by the state.

The amount of the appropriation indicates that the addition or improvement in question does not come within the provisions of section 2314 and succeeding sections of the General Code which provide that the construction, alteration or improvement of a state institution or building, other than the penitentiary, the aggregate cost of which exceeds three thousand dollars shall be on contract let on competitive bids as therein provided, and it only remains to ascertain whether the statutes permit the employment of convict labor on the work in question.

Sections 2228, 2229 and 2230, General Code, provide as follows:

> "Sec. 2228. The board of managers of the Ohio penitentiary, the board of managers of the Ohio state reformatory, or other authority, shall make no contract by which the labor or time of a prisoner in the penitentiary or reformatory, or the product or profit of his work, shall be let, farmed out, given or sold to any person, firm, association or corporation. Convicts in such institution may work for, and the products of their labor may be disposed of, to the state or a political division thereof, or for or to a public institution owned or managed and under the control of the state or a political division thereof, for the purposes and according to the provisions of this chapter.
> "Sec. 2229. The board of managers of the penitentiary and the board of managers of the reformatory, so far as practicable, shall cause all prisoners serving sentences in such institutions, physically capable, to be employed at hard labor for not to exceed nine hours of each day other than Sundays and public holidays.
> "Sec. 2230. Such labor shall be for the purpose of the manufacture and production of supplies for such institutions, the state or political divisions thereof; for a public institution owned, managed and controlled by the state or a political division thereof; for the preparation and manufacture of building material for the construction or repair of a state institution, or in the work of such construction or repair; for the purpose of industrial training and instruction, or partly for one and partly for the other of such purposes; in the manufacture and production of crushed stone, brick, tile and culvert pipe, suitable for draining wagon roads of the state, or in the preparation of road building and ballasting material."

These sections are part of an act passed March 29, 1906 (98 O. L. 177), the primary purpose of which was to withdraw convict labor from competition with free labor in the manufacture of trade commodities, and to confine the labor of such convicts to work for the state and other public agencies or institutions, or in the production of commodities to be used by such public agencies or institutions.

As I see it the only question presented on a construction of the sections of the General Code above set out is whether it is the intent of their provisions to confine the work and labor of convicts therein authorized to such as can be done and performed at the institution wherein they are confined. Aside from a consideration of the manifest purpose of the enactment of which the sections are a part, the cardinal rules of construction pertinent to a consideration of the provisions of these statutes with respect to the question suggested are, first, that the intent of the legislature is to be sought first of all in the language employed; and second, the statutory provisions are to be so construed as to give meaning and effect to every part and word (66 O. S. 621; 73 O. S. 159).

I am of the opinion that the words "in the penitentiary or reformatory" in section 2228 limit the word "prisoner" rather than the words "labor or time," and that it is the intent of the statute to prohibit the work or labor of convicts on private contracts either in or out of the penal institutions therein mentioned. As pertinent to the question at hand I am of the opinion by reason of the provisions of sections 2228 and 2230 that convicts in the penitentiary or the state reformatory may work for the state or a public institution owned and managed by it, and the products of their labor may be disposed of to the state or to such public institution; and further, that their labor may be for the preparation and manufacture of building material for the construction or repair of a state institution or such labor may be in the work of the construction or repair of such state institution.

Convict labor may therefore be used in the construction of the addition to the state arsenal contemplated by the appropriation, and such labor may be employed either in the preparation and manufacture of the building material necessary to the construction of said addition, or, such labor may be employed at the building in the construction and erection of the same.

Section 2206, General Code, provides as follows:

> "Work, labor or service shall not be performed by a convict within the penitentiary unless it be expressly authorized by the board of managers."

By section 1839, General Code, the Ohio board of administration has succeeded to all the rights of the boards of managers of the penitentiary and the state reformatory, and the convict labor you may desire in the construction of the improvement in question can be furnished only on the requisition and authority of said board of administration.

Very truly yours,
TIMOTHY S. HOGAN,
Attorney General.

THE ORGANIZATION AND SERVICE OF THE MEDICAL DEPARTMENT OF THE OHIO NATIONAL GUARD SHOULD BE FASHIONED AFTER THAT AS PRESCRIBED FOR THE MEDICAL DEPARTMENT IN THE REGULAR SERVICE.

The designation of officers of the medical corps as staff officers would attempt an arrangement contrary to the intention of section 5190, General Code, requiring the national guard to be organized in a like manner as prescribed for the regular and volunteer armies of the United States.

COLUMBUS, OHIO, November 6, 1913.

HONORABLE GEORGE H. WOOD, Adjutant General of Ohio, Columbus, Ohio.

DEAR SIR:—Under favor of October 28th you request my opinion as to whether the officers of the medical department are staff officers under the purview of section 5192, General Code, which provides that:

> "permanent commanders of divisions, brigades, regiments and separate battalions shall nominate the staff officers therefor for appointment by the governor."

Section 3, article IX of the constitution of Ohio, is as follows:

"the governor shall appoint the adjutant general, quartermaster general and such other staff officers as may be provided for by law. Majors general, brigadiers general, colonels or commandants of regiments, battalions or squadrons, shall severally appoint their staff and captains shall appoint their non-commissioned officers and musicians."

Section 5190, General Code, provides:

"* * * the national guard shall be organized in a like manner as prescribed for the regular and volunteer armies of the United States."

Section 5189 of the Ohio Code provides as follows:

"the Ohio national guard shall consist of not more than one hundred companies of infantry; four batteries of artillery; four troops of cavalry; one band for each organized regiment and separate battalion; a medical corps; a signal corps; a corps of engineers; the governor's staff and staff officers and non-commissioned staff officers provided in section 5991."

In the regular service, the medical department is a separate department and served by proper assignment with the various organizations in the service.

United States Compiled Statutes 1901.
Supplement 1911.
Pages 299 to 305 inclusive.

Act April 23, 1908, c. 150.
Sections 7 and 8.
35 Stat. 68.

Nowhere can I find any provisions designating officers of the medical corps as such staff officers of the commanders of divisions, brigades, regiments and separate battalions, as is comprehended by section 5192 of the General Code. I am of opinion that such a designation would attempt an arrangement contrary to the intention of section 5190, General Code, requiring the national guard to be organized in a like manner, as prescribed for the regular and volunteer armies of the United States.

I am, therefore, of the opinion that the organization and service of the medical department should be fashioned after that as prescribed for the medical department in the regular service, as prescribed by the United States statutes above cited.

Very truly yours,
TIMOTHY S. HOGAN,
Attorney General.

ARMORY—STATE ARMORY BOARD MAY NOT ADVERTISE AND ENTER INTO CONTRACT FOR BUILDING OF ARMORY UPON PLEDGES OF DONATIONS—MUST HAVE MONEY.

The state armory board is not authorized to enter into a contract until funds are available to pay the obligations created thereby. When citizens, therefore, have pledged $50,000.00, in contributions for the erection of an armory, the board may not enter into a contract for the same, until the money has been received by it.

COLUMBUS, OHIO, February 11, 1913.

COLONEL BYRON L. BARGAR, Secretary Ohio State Armory Board, Columbus, Ohio.

DEAR SIR:—I beg to acknowledge receipt of your letter of December 30, 1912, as follows:

> "The armory board met with the Akron chamber of commerce at Akron, Ohio, on December 27th. This chamber, acting for the city of Akron, proposes to donate a site and fifty thousand dollars towards the erection of an Akron armory. The site would be a part of the civic center and this donation is conditioned on the state using fifty thousand dollars of its money in the armory. In this way the state would acquire a valuable tract of ground and an armory costing one hundred thousand dollars.
> "The city's contribution of fifty thousand dollars is represented by pledges, payable twenty-five thousand dollars about February 1st, and twenty-five thousand dollars about July 1st. The armory board informed the chamber of commerce that it could not enter into contracts for building the armory until all of this fifty thousand dollars had been paid to the state's credit. The chamber of commerce wishes the building begun prior to July 1st and requested that I write you to ascertain if this could be done under the above detailed circumstances."

Section 5256 of the General Code provides:

> "The board may receive gifts or donations of land, money or other property for the purpose of aiding in the purchase, building, furnishing or maintaining of an armory building. All lands so acquired shall be deeded to the state of Ohio, and all property received under the provisions of this section from any source, shall become the property of the state."

Sections 5258 and 5259, General Code, provide the method of advertising for bids for the erection of armories, the execution of contracts and bonds for the faithful performance thereof. The state armory board is not authorized to enter into contracts until the funds are available to pay the obligations created thereby. To do so would establish a bad precedent and might result in needless delay and confusion and lead to useless litigation.

I, therefore, advise that no steps be taken toward the erection of an armory at Akron until the funds needed therefor are available to your board.

Yours very truly,

TIMOTHY S. HOGAN,

Attorney General.

ABSTRACT OF TITLE—LAND IN CITY OF WARREN, OHIO—DEFECTS AND OMISSIONS.

COLUMBUS, OHIO, February 15, 1913.

HON. BYRON L. BARGAR, Secretary Ohio State Armory Board, Columbus, Ohio.

DEAR SIR:—I have your letter of January 29th enclosing abstract of title and non-executed deed for the following described premises, which it is proposed to donate to the state of Ohio for an armory site, to wit:

"Situate in the city of Warren, county of Trumbull and state of Ohio, and known as being part of lot number fifty-four (54) in the original town plat of Warren and is bounded and described as follows: Beginning at a stake in the south line of High street and in the north line of said lot number fifty-four (54) and seven rods east from the northeast corner of lot number fifty-three in said town plat, said stake being at the northeast corner of lands conveyed by James Scott to Isaac Fithian by deed dated October 29, 1827, and recorded in Trumbull county Records of Deeds, Book V, page 131; thence south along the east line of lands conveyed to Isaac Fithian as aforesaid thirteen (13) rods to the south line of lot number fifty-nine (59) in said original town plat; thence east along the north line of said lot number fifty-nine (59) about six and one-half (6½) rods to the southwest corner of lands conveyed by Joel F. Asper to the wardens and vestry of Christ's church of Warren by deed dated September 9, 1861, and recorded in Trumbull county Records of Deeds, Book 85, page 18; thence north along the west line of said lands conveyed to the wardens and vestry of Christ's church as aforesaid thirteen (13) rods to the south line of High street; thence west along the south line of said street about six and one-half (6½) rods to the place of beginning, and being further known as city lot number seven hundred ninety-two (792), according to the revised map of the city of Warren, as recorded in Trumbull County Records of Maps, Book 5, pages 27 and 28."

I have carefully examined said abstract and deed, together with the transcript of the proceedings of council of the city of Warren in relation to the purchase of said land, and I find no defects therein which would prevent the state from acquiring a good title. There are no liens against said real estate as disclosed by the abstract, except a mortgage for $2,000.00 given by Olive M. Adams and husband to Mrs. Emeline McKee, and taxes for the last half of 1912 amounting to $52.59. A certificate of the clerk of the United States district court for the southern district of Ohio, eastern division, as to suits, judgments and bankruptcy proceedings in said court against the present owner of said land should be attached to the abstract.

Subject to the foregoing, I am of the opinion that upon the execution and delivery of a deed the state of Ohio will acquire a good and indefeasible title to said premises in fee simple.

I am herewith returning the abstract, deed, transcript of council proceedings and correspondence had between you and the owner of said land.

Very truly yours,

TIMOTHY S. HOGAN,

Attorney General.

CONTRACT—DUTY OF ARMORY BOARD TO SUBMIT DISPUTED CLAIM TO COURT FOR SETTLEMENT WHEN SURETY COMPANY PERFORMS ABANDONED CONTRACT.

When by reason of the death of a contractor, who had entered into the performance of a contract made by the state armory board, a surety company enters into the completion of such contract and numerous conflicting and confused claims are presented, it is the duty of the board to submit the matter to the court for settlement.

COLUMBUS, OHIO, April 1, 1913.

HON. BYRON L. BARGAR, Secretary Ohio State Armory Board, Columbus, Ohio.

DEAR SIR:—I beg to acknowledge receipt of your letter of January 24th enclosing the correspondence carried on between your board and Citizens Trust & Guaranty Company, of West Virginia, in reference to the payment of claims arising out of the construction of an armory at Batavia, Ohio. The correspondence is quite extensive and I will not attempt to quote it here. The facts are substantially as follows:

> "The armory board entered into a contract with one J. L. H. Barr for the construction of said armory. Said contractor gave a bond for the faithful performance of said contract, with Citizens Trust & Guaranty Company, of West Virginia, as surety, which bond was approved by your board. The contractor commenced the work of construction and the same was proceeding toward completion until the death of the contractor on November 16, 1912. Thereafter it was discovered that he owed various persons and firms who had performed labor or furnished material for the construction of said armory the sum of about $9,400.00. Estimates had been allowed from time to time, aggregating $10,228.00 during the progress of the work, and on completion the contractor would have been entitled to an additional sum of about $7,665.00. Most, if not all of those who had performed labor or furnished materials, as stated above, attempted to perfect liens. Under date of December 4, 1912, in response to your request of November 24th, I advised that no liens could be effective as against the funds remaining in your possession after the completion of the Batavia armory, and requested you to give immediate notice to the surety on the contractor's bond to complete said contract. This notice was duly given and the surety company, within a reasonable time, undertook the work and completed said armory to the satisfaction of the state armory board, and the same was duly accepted by said board on the first day of February, 1913. The surety company presented a claim for labor and materials alleged to have been furnished by it after assuming the completion of this contract, amounting to $1,369.00. In addition to this, the surety company claims the sum of $2,390.00 for some features of the work which the contractor had ordered, the payment of which said surety company guaranteed, for the purpose, as it claims, of expediting the work."

Under the foregoing facts you desire my advice as to how you should proceed to settle these various claims.

On account of the great difficulty of determining to whom the balance in the Batavia armory building fund legally belongs, in view of the many conflicting claims thereto and some dispute as to the validity of certain claims, I am of the opinion that it is not within the province of your board to assume the responsibility of determining to whom this money legally belongs, as that is the functon of a court.

I, therefore, advise that you deposit said money with the clerk of the court of common pleas of Clermont county, Ohio, and file a petition in said court making all known claimants to said money, parties, and ask the court to determine to whom said money belongs, and to order the distribution thereof, and relieve the state of Ohio from liability on account thereof.

The correspondence discloses the names of a number of these claimants, but as I am not certain that the list is complete, I will await your further advice in this respect before proceeding to prepare the petition.

Very truly yours,

TIMOTHY S. HOGAN,

Attorney General.

ABSTRACT OF TITLE—PROPERTY SITUATED IN VILLAGE OF OTTAWA.

COLUMBUS, OHIO, May 19, 1913.

The Ohio State Armory Board, Columbus, Ohio.

GENTLEMEN:—Messrs. Bailey & Leasure, attorneys at law, Ottawa, Ohio, have forwarded to this office for examination and approval, an abstract of title and deed from the trustees of Ottawa lodge No. 565, Knights of Pythias, for the following described real estate, upon which it proposed to erect an armory, to wit:

> "Situated in the village of Ottawa, county of Putnam and state of Ohio, and known as inlot number two hundred fifty-seven (257) and inlot number two hundred fifty-six (256), except twenty-five feet off of the east side of said inlot number two hundred fifty-six (256)."

I have carefully examined said abstract and find from such examination that there is no break in the chain of title from the United States government to the trustees of Ottawa lodge, number five hundred sixty-five (565), Knights of Pythias.

The will of Henry Ayres devises all of his property to his wife Sarah A. Ayres for life, and at her death provides that the same shall descend to John Dean Adams and Emma Harman, in equal shares. An affidavit should be attached to the abstract as to whether the wife of said Henry Ayres was dead at the time of the execution of the deed from said Adams and wife, to Emma Harman, and from the latter to the trustees of Ottawa lodge, number five hundred sixty-five (565), Knights of Pythias.

The abstract discloses the existence of a mortgage on said premises from the present owner to Emma Harman, for the sum of thirty-five hundred dollars ($3,500). The last half of the 1912 taxes and some street assessments, against said property are unpaid, and the undetermined taxes for the year 1913 are a lien. No examination of the United States court records appears to have been made. A certificate of the clerk of said court, as to the pendency of suits therein, against the present owner of this property, should be attached to the abstracts.

Subject to the foregoing, I am of the opinion that the state of Ohio will acquire a good and sufficient title to said property, in fee simple.

The abstract and deed are herewith enclosed.

Yours very truly,
TIMOTHY S. HOGAN,
Attorney General.

ABSTRACT OF TITLE—PROPERTY SITUATED IN NAPOLEON, OHIO.

COLUMBUS, OHIO, June 11, 1913.

The Ohio State Armory Board, Columbus, Ohio.

GENTLEMEN:—I am transmitting to you herewith, abstract of title and deed from the village of Napoleon to the state of Ohio, for lot number 100 in said village, which is to be donated to the state for the use as an armory site.

I am of the opinion, after careful examination of said abstract and deed, that the grantee will acquire thereby a good and marketable title to said premises, in fee simple.

Very truly yours,
TIMOTHY S. HOGAN,
Attorney General.

ABSTRACT OF TITLE—PROPERTY SITUATED IN CITY OF GALION, CRAWFORD COUNTY, OHIO.

COLUMBUS, OHIO, July 30, 1913.

COL. BYRON L. BARGAR, Secretary Ohio State Armory Board, Columbus, Ohio.

DEAR SIR:—Under date of July 16th you submitted to me for examination and approval, abstracts of title to the following described real estate for an armory site, to wit:

> "Situated in the city of Galion, county of Crawford, and state of Ohio, and known as being inlot No. 115 and the north half of inlot No. 117 of the new or revised inlots in the city of Galion, Ohio, as same are consecutively numbered, excepting a strip 45 feet in width off the east end of each of the aforesaid inlots."

A careful examination disclosed no defects therein that would prevent the state of Ohio from acquiring a fee simple title. There appears to be several uncancelled mortgages on said premises, but as they were executed a great many years ago, action upon them has been barred by the statute of limitations.

Lot No. 117 was formerly owned by the Evangelical Lutheran Peace Congregation of Galion, Ohio, but was conveyed by the trustees thereof to John Jacob Schaefer, as shown on page 13 of the abstract. The court proceedings, authorizing such sale, should be incorporated in the abstract and also proceedings leading up to the execution of the sheriff's deed, noted on page 11.

There are no liens against said real estate except the undetermined taxes for the year 1913.

The deed from the city of Galion to the state of Ohio is in proper form and when the same is executed, will be sufficient to convey to the state of Ohio a good and marketable title in fee simple.

A resolution authorizing the mayor and director of public service to convey said real estate to the state of Ohio was passed by the council of the city of Galion on July 8, 1913. The same was approved by the mayor and attested by the clerk on the same day.

The question has been raised as to whether such resolution is subject to the provisions of the municipal, initiative and referendum statutes (sections 4227-1 to 4227-6, General Code, inclusive), as amended by the last session of the general assembly (103 Ohio Laws 211).

Section 4227-2 provides in part:

> "An ordinance, or other measure passed by the council of any municipal corporation shall be subject to the referendum except as hereinafter provided. No ordinance or other measure shall go into effect until thirty days after it shall have been filed with the mayor of such municipal corporation, except as hereinafter provided.
> "When a petition signed by ten per cent. of the electors of any municipal corporation shall have been filed with the election officer, officers or board having control of elections in such municipal corporation, within thirty days after any ordinance, or other measure shall have been filed with the mayor, ordering that such ordinance or measure, be submitted to the electors of such municipal corporation for their approval or rejection, such election officer, officers or board shall cause to be submitted to the electors of such municipal corporation for their approval or rejection, such ordinance, or measure at the next succeeding regular or general election, in any year, occurring subsequent to thirty days after the filing of such petition. * * *
> "No such ordinance or measure shall go into effect until and unless approved by the majority of those voting upon the same."

The other related sections have no bearing upon this question and need not be considered.

I am of the opinion that the provisions of section 4227-2 apply to resolutions authorizing the conveyance of real estate owned by a municipal corporation to the state for armory purposes. The deed from the city of Galion to the state of Ohio should not be executed until the expiration of 30 days from the signing of the aforesaid resolution by the mayor, unless a referendum petition is filed in the meantime. In that event, the deed should not be executed until the resolution is duly approved at the next succeeding, regular or general election, as provided by section 4227-2. The abstracts and deed are herewith enclosed.

Yours very truly,
TIMOTHY S. HOGAN,
Attorney General.

STATE ARMORY BOARD — BILLS CHARGED TO ARMORY COMPANY SHOULD NOT BE PAID BY STATE—CONTRACT SHOULD BE ENTERED INTO BY STATE ARMORY BOARD.

Where in the construction of the armory at Pomeroy, after the statutory allowance of $20,000 had been exhausted, extra amounts had been expended and charged to the armory company, said amounts may not be legally paid by the state armory board. Where bills of this nature are intended to be paid by the state, the contract should be duly entered into by the state armory board.

COLUMBUS, OHIO, July 28, 1913.

HON. BYRON L. BARGAR, Secretary Ohio State Armory Board, Columbus, Ohio.

DEAR SIR:—On July 15th you requested my opinion on the following:

> "I herewith have the honor to enclose a copy of a resolution passed July 12th by the armory board together with a copy of the account therein referred to.
> "In completing the armory at Pomeroy, several difficulties were encountered which increased the estimated cost and the board finished its work of original construction when it had exhausted the maximum statutory allowance of twenty thousand dollars. But at that time several items were required in order to maintain the armory and several items were furnished by contractor and charged to the local company which has not paid same, being probably unable to do so. It seemed to the board that it should take care of this account under its statutory duty to maintain the armory but the board thought best to obtain your advice before doing so."

Section 5261, General Code, limits the amount that may be expended by the state in the building or lease of an armory, and reads as follows:

> "The maximum amount to be expended by the state for the building or purchase of an armory for a company or single organization, shall not exceed twenty thousand dollars, and ten thousand dollars additional thereto for each organization or headquarters provided for. In no city or village shall more than one building be erected or purchased until provisions have been made for all organizations therein, nor shall a building be leased or rented for the use of a company or single organization in excess of six hundred dollars per year for each organization provided for."

The state armory board is required by section 5255 to provide armories and maintain the same. That section reads:

> "The board shall provide armories for the purpose of drill and for the safe keeping of arms, clothing, equipments and other military property issued to the several organizations of organized militia, and may purchase or build suitable buildings for armory purposes when, in its judgment, it is for the best interests of the state so to do. The board shall provide for the management, care and maintenance of armories and may adopt and prescribe such rules and regulations for the management, government and guidance of the organizations occupying them as may be necessary and desirable."

The question for determination is whether the items of said account come under the head of new construction or maintenance.

Maintenance is defined by the Century dictionary as "an act of maintaining, keeping up, supporting or upholding; preservation; sustentation."

From this definition it is clear that the word "maintenance" is not broad enough to include new construction.

If the items of said account were necessary in order to complete the armory and place it in a condition suitable for occupancy in the first instance, the account cannot be allowed under the head of maintenance.

Without discussing the various items constituting said account, I think the fact is apparent on the face of the bill rendered, that the account was for work done as a part of the original construction of said armory. That such was the understanding of the contractor when the work was performed is very evident. Although the account purports to be charged to the Ohio state armory board, it appears that it was for "extra work to be charged to O. N. G., Pomeroy, Ohio," and the following notation is found at the bottom of the bill:

"This amount was to have been paid by O. N. G. at Pomeroy, O."

If said account were a proper charge for maintenance, it ought not to have been rendered, for extras, as was done.

The duty of maintaining said armories is conferred by law upon the Ohio state armory board and not upon local companies of the state militia. There is no authority vested by the statutes in the latter to enter into contracts, either for construction or maintenance of armories so as to be binding upon the state.

If this bill were originally intended to be charged against the state, a contract should have been duly entered into by the Ohio state armory board. Nowhere does it appear that this has been done; in fact, your letter discloses that the contrary is true.

The work seems to have been performed by virtue of an arrangement between the local company and the contractor and he must look to the company for payment.

It is, therefore, my opinion that said account may not legally be paid by the Ohio state armory board out of the funds at its disposal for the maintenance of armories.

Very truly yours,
TIMOTHY S. HOGAN,
Attorney General.

STATE ARMORY BOARD MAY PAY INCREASED EXPENSE OF MAINTAINING ARMORY CAUSED BY THE RECENT FLOODS.

Where because of flood damages, the expenses of maintaining an armory were greatly increased, the state armory board may pay such increased expense, since there is no statute limiting the amount that may be expended by the board for the maintenance of armories.

COLUMBUS, OHIO, June 26, 1913.

HON. BYRON L. BARGAR, Secretary Ohio State Armory Board, Columbus, Ohio.

DEAR SIR:—I am in receipt of your letter of April 21st, in which you state:

> "In Delaware, Ohio, the state leases an armory from the county commissioners. During recent flood this armory was damaged to some extent by the water.
>
> "Heretofore the expenses of regular maintenance of this armory has been just six hundred dollars per year, and the company commander now wants the armory board to repair the flood damages and cause the state to pay for same. Such payment would be in excess of the six hundred dollars for maintenance of this armory for this year.
> "The armory law is silent as to how much the board should pay for maintenance; but specifically provides that only six hundred dollars may be spent for rentals of each armory.
> "The board therefore requests an opinion as to whether or not extraordinary maintenance expense may be paid in cases where rentals and regular maintenance of armory cost six hundred dollars per year."

Under date of May 19th you submitted another communication, enclosing certified copy of the account for labor and material, amounting to $132.09, together with affidavit of the company commander that the expenditure of said amount was necessary to restore the Delaware armory to a condition suitable for occupancy.

Section 5255, General Code, provides:

> "The board shall provide armories for the purpose of drill and for the safe keeping of arms, clothing, equipments, and other military property issued to the several organized militia, and may purchase or build suitable buildings for armory purposes when, in its judgment, it is for the best interests of the state so to do. The board shall provide for the management, care and maintenance of armories and may adopt and prescribe such rules and regulations for the management, government and guidance of the organizations occupying them as may be necessary and desirable."

Section 5261, General Code, provides in part as follows:

> "* * * nor shall a building be leased or rented for the use of a company or single organization in excess of six hundred dollars per year for each organization provided for."

From these quoted provisions of statute, it is clear that the state armory board is charged with the duty of maintaining armories and that, as stated in your first communication, the rental of the armory may not exceed six hundred dollars per annum. No limit is placed by the statutes upon the amount that the armory board may expend for the maintenance of an armory, whether the same is leased or owned by the state.

You have advised me orally, that the armory board allows six hundred dollars per annum for the maintenance of each armory in the state, and when an armory is leased, said sum of six hundred dollars is required to cover both rental and maintenance. The amount that may be paid for rent is limited by the statute, but the limitation upon the amount that may be spent for maintenance derives its authority from a rule of the armory board and not by virtue of any statute. I know of no reason why such rule may not be so modified as to permit the payment of extraordinary maintenance expenses in cases where the same is necessary and especially in view of the fact that the statutes do not limit the amount that the armory board may expend for maintenance, I am of the opinion that said board may legally pay said accounts out of the state armory fund.

Very truly yours,
TIMOTHY S. HOGAN,
Attorney General.

NEW MECHANICS' LIEN LAW DOES NOT AFFECT CONTRACTS ENTERED INTO BY THE STATE.

The new mechanics' lien law, 103 O. L., 369-379, does not affect contracts entered into by the state, consequently no change is necessary in the printed form submitted by the state armory board.

COLUMBUS, OHIO, August 25, 1913.

HON. BYRON L. BARGAR, Secretary Ohio State Armory Board, Columbus, Ohio.

DEAR SIR:—Under date of June 23, 1913, you write and ask opinion of me, as follows:

> "The state armory board has been using the form of builders' proposal hereto attached in securing bids for construction of state armories. We are about to have a new lot of forms printed with minor changes.
> "Before doing so we have the honor to request that you approve the printed form making such changes as you may consider necessary under any recent amendment to the mechanic lien law which affect a contract made under such proposal."

Sections 8324 and 8325, General Code, provide as follows:

> "Section 8324. Any sub-contractor, material man, laborer or mechanic, who has performed labor or furnished material, fuel, or machinery, who is performing labor or furnishing material, fuel or machinery, or is about to perform labor or furnish material, fuel or machinery, for the construction, alteration, removal or repair of any property, appurtenance or structure, described in sections eighty-three hundred and eight and eighty-three hundred and sixteen, or for the construction, improvement or repair of any turnpike, road improvement, sewer, street or other public improvement, or public building provided for in a contract between the owner, or the board officer or public authority and a principal contractor and under a contract between such sub-contractor, material man, laborer or mechanic, and a principal contractor or sub-contractor, at the time of beginning to perform such labor or the delivery of the fuel or machinery, or at any time, not to exceed four months from the performance of the labor or the delivery of the machinery, fuel or material, may file with the owner, board or officer, or the authorized clerk or agent thereof, a sworn and itemized statement of the amount and value of such labor performed, and to be performed, material, fuel or machinery furnished, containing a description of any promissory note or notes that have been given by the principal contractor or sub-contractor on account of the labor, machinery or material, or any part thereof, with all credits and set-offs thereon, and proof that the sworn and itemized statement above provided for was mailed by registered letter to the address of the owner, board or officer, shall be taken as prima facie evidence of the filing thereof with the owner, board or officer, as herein provided.

"Section 8325. Upon receiving the notice required by the next preceding section, such owner, board or officer or public authority or authorized clerk, agent or attorney thereof, shall detain in his hands all subseuent payment from the principal or sub-contractor to secure such claims and the claims and estimates of other sub-contractors. material men, laborers, mechanics or persons furnishing materials to or performing labor for any contractor or sub-contractors who intervene before the next subsequent payment under the contract, or within ten days thereafter."

These sections were a part of our statutory law long before the recent act creating a lien in favor of contractors, sub-contractors, laborers and material men (103 O. L., 369), and before the adoption of the recent constitutional amendment authorizing its enactment. Under these sections above noted it has been held that although they were effective, within the limitations of the constitution as to public buildings or improvements erected or made by officers or boards of political sub-divisions of the state, they had no application to buildings or improvements erected or made by the state itself.

"Clark vs. Haggerty, 5 C. C., 235, 238; Merrit vs. Morrow, 10 N. P. (N. S.) 279."

This conclusion of the courts is conformable to the fundamental principle obtaining in constructions of statutes that a state is not bound by the terms of a general statute, unless it be so expressly indicated, and conformable also to the cardinal principle that a state cannot be sued at the instance of a citizen without its consent.

"Merritt vs. Morrow, supra;
State ex rel. vs. Board of Public Works, 36 O. S., 409;
State ex rel. vs. Cappeler, 39 O. S., 207, 213."

The purpose and effect of the constitutional amendment as to mechanics' liens adopted September 3, 1912 (Art. II, Sec. 33), was to authorize the enactment of appropriate laws granting to sub-contractors—using that term in its comprehensive sense—a direct lien on buildings or improvements to which they may have contributed material or labor and which, by decision of the supreme court, was denied them under the constitution as it stood before the amendment. And the legislation enacted in pursuance to his constitutional amendment (103 O. L., 369-379) is in its purpose appropriate to this end.

An examination of this legislation as to mechanics' liens enacted at the last session of the legislature discloses that no provisions were made therein with reference to liens on public buildings or improvements of any kind, or against public funds that may become due and payable on account of their erection or construction. Sections 8324 and 8325, General Code, still stand as the sole authority for liens or claims against public funds on account of material or labor furnished in the erection or construction of public buildings or improvements. As before noted, these sections have no application to buildings or improvements erected or constructed by the state, and it follows in answer to your inquiry, that no changes are necessary in the printed form of builders' proposal submitted by you, on account of the recent legislation as to mechanics' liens.

In arriving at this conclusion I have not overlooked the fact pertinent to the reasoning upon which the courts have proceeded in holding legislation of this kind not applicable to or against the state, that by amendment to the constitution "suits may be brought against the state in such courts and in such manner as may be provided by law" (Art. I, Sec. 16). This provision is as yet without importance, however, for the reason that no legislative provisions have been made as to such suits. Furthermore, the principle of construction before noted, that the state is not bound by the terms of a general statute unless it be so expressly provided, is of itself full and sufficient support for the conclusion that the mechanics' lien laws do not affect the state as to buildings or improvements erected or constructed by it.

Very truly yours,

TIMOTHY S. HOGAN,
Attorney General.

JOINT ARMORY AND MEMORIAL BUILDING MAY BE ERECTED—FUNDS FOR THE CONSTRUCTION OF SUCH BUILDING MAY BE ACCEPTED BY ARMORY BOARD FROM CLARK COUNTY MEMORIAL ASSOCIATION.

The state armory board may receive the money derived from the sale of bonds from the Clark County Memorial Association, for the construction of the Clark county memorial building, and this money, together with an appropriation of its own funds, may erect an armory and memorial building combined.

COLUMBUS, OHIO, September 10, 1913.

HON. BYRON L. BARGAR, Secretary Ohio State Armory Board, Columbus, Ohio.

DEAR SIR:—On August 16th you wrote me that the Clark County Memorial Association proposed to transfer to the state armory board the sum of $250,000, this being the amount derived from a bond issue voted for by the electors of Clark county, for the purpose of constructing a memorial building. The object of the transfer was to provide for the construction of a joint memorial building and armory. Mr. Frank L. Packard, an architect of Columbus, Ohio, had been selected by the memorial association as architect for its building, and the association desired to retain him as a representative of the memorial features of the joint building.

In addition to this you furnish me with copy of a resolution adopted by the said memorial association, in which it is provided that its tentative proposal for the construction of a joint memorial-armory building at Springfield be referred to the attorney general for his opinion as to the proper method of procedure in such joint construction, and the legal feasibility thereof. The resolution stipulates that Architects Packard and Best be requested to prepare, without cost to the state, sketch of such proposed joint building; the said sketch to be submitted to both boards before further action.

Sections 3059-3069, exclusive of sections 3063-1 to 3063-3, inclusive, provide that upon certification by the county commissioners that it is desirable to erect, furnish and maintain a county memorial building to commemorate the services of the soldiers, sailors, marines and pioneers of the county, and to expend for that purpose not to exceed $250,000, the governor shall appoint a board of trustees of five citizens of the county, which shall be known as the "Memorial Association of ..... County, Ohio." This board shall receive no compensation, and is to be paid its necessary expenses. Immediately upon their appointment these trustees shall notify the deputy state supervisors of elections of their appointment and organization, direct the submission to popular vote, at the next county election, of the question of the issue of bonds, in the amount fixed in the resolution passed by the commissioners, and also of the erection and maintenance of the memorial building. If the majority of votes cast be in favor of such bond issue and the erection of a memorial building, the county commissioners shall issue and sell the county bonds in an amount not to exceed the sum provided for in the resolution. The fund so created shall be placed in the county treasury to the credit of the "memorial building fund" and shall be paid out on the order of the trustees, certified to by the chairman and secretary thereof.

The trustees are authorized to employ an assistant secretary and such architects, clerks, laborers and other employes as may be necessary, and may acquire lands necessary for their use, as well as prepare plans, specifications and make contracts for the construction of the memorial building.

Upon its completion the building is to be turned over to the county commissioners, who are to maintain, equip, decorate and furnish it, at a cost not to exceed $250,000. For the purpose of caring for and improving such building, they are authorized to levy an annual tax.

I gather from your question that all of these statutes have been complied with, and the money is now in the county treasury of Clark county.

Subsequent to the passage of the statutes just referred to, and supplementary thereto, the legislature passed an act relating to the expenditure of money in the "memorial building fund." This act is embodied in sections 3063-1 to 3063-3, inclusive, which substantially provide that the "memorial building fund" may, upon the order of the trustees, be turned over to the state armory fund, to be expended by the state armory board, in connection with money in the latter fund, for the purpose of erecting an armory, which shall also be a memorial building, for the purpose hereinbefore defined, and which shall be under the control of the state armory board, which may, upon completion of the building, turn over a designated portion thereof to the county commissioners, upon such terms as may be agreed upon by the commissioners and the armory board. Such commissioners are to provide for the equipment thereof, as before specified.

To be read in connection with the foregoing statutes are sections 5253-5271,

General Code, which, in so far as they are here pertinent, provide for the appointment of a state armory board, which shall provide for the management, care and maintenance of armories, and is authorized to receive donations for the purpose of purchasing, building, furnishing or maintaining armories. This board is empowered to erect an armory in the manner prescribed, the amount to be expended by it not to exceed $20,000, for a company or single organization, and $10,000 for each organization or headquarters provided. These armories are for the use of the permanently organized militia quartered therein, although a suitable room or rooms must be provided for the Grand Army of the Republic and the United Spanish War Veterans, unless such room is provided by the erection of a county memorial building, or otherwise by the county or state. A board of control governs such armories. The armory board has power to condemn land as a site for an armory.

From these statutes it is clear that the state armory board may receive the money derived from the sale of bonds for the construction of the Clark county memorial building, and with the money so received, together with an appropriation from its own funds, may erect an armory, which shall also be "a memorial building to commemorate the services of the soldiers, sailors, marines and pioneers of the county." It is the clear and manifest intention of the statutes that this building shall be so constructed that these two purposes are to be kept distinct, i. e., the building is to be so constructed as to permit the turning over of part of it so the county commissioners, under such conditions of control as the two boards may agree upon.

A further indication of the legislative intent that the money paid by the county, through the trustees, shall give the county an interest therein is apparent from the fact that in case of sale by the armory board the commissioners are entitled to a proportionate share of the selling price. The bonds were issued for a designated purpose, namely, the construction of a memorial building to commemorate, etc., and it would be a deviation of such funds and a regrettable imposition upon those who so generously voted a tax upon themselves for this purpose to have the money raised by them used for another purpose. This the legislature did not intend.

Therefore, in case this money is accepted by your board, while it will be your duty to erect the armory, you must make provision for its use as a memorial building, and upon its completion it would be proper for your board to turn over to the commissioners a designated portion thereof, upon such terms of control as your two boards may agree upon.

While, in the erection of the building, the armory board is to have full supervision and control, and the statutes governing it are those which control in the erection of armories, nevertheless, the state must expend from the state armory fund the amount it would have expended for an armory had it been building no memorial building.

As I understand it, the Clark County Memorial Association has already employed Mr. Frank L. Packard as architect for the memorial building, and wishes him retained for the purpose of designing the memorial features of the joint building. This memorial association had power, under sections 3064-3066, General Code, to employ him and cause plans to be prepared, and consequently I think that you should recognize this contract and have your architect co-operate with him in designing the joint building, should you decide to accept the memorial building fund.

It would also be perfectly proper for Mr. Packard to prepare the plans for the memorial feature of the building and be paid for this service out of the fund turned over to you. Your own architect can design the armory portion; but the two architects should work together in order that harmony of design may result. I would suggest that the two architects jointly prepare a sketch embodying the outlines of the proposed joint building, without cost to the state as suggested in the resolution, and have this approved by both the memorial association and your board before further action is taken. There should be no difficulty in thus arriving at a plan that would be satisfactory to all concerned.

Very truly yours,

TIMOTHY S. HOGAN,
Attorney General.

STATE ARMORY BOARD SHALL AWARD ITS CONTRACTS TO THE LOWEST RESPONSIBLE BIDDER WHO SUBSTANTIALLY COMPLIES WITH THE RULES UNDER WHICH SUCH CONTRACTS ARE MADE.

The state armory board shall award its contracts to the lowest responsible bidder who substantially complies with the provisions of section 5228.

Where a responsible bidder complies with the statute in every way except that the deposit made by him does not quite equal two per cent. of the aggregate amount required by law to be deposited, the fact that the certified check deposited by him would not equal the two per cent. required by law would not bar him from receiving the work.

COLUMBUS, OHIO, September 22, 1913.

HON. BYRON L. BARGAR, Secretary Ohio State Armory Board, Columbus, Ohio.

DEAR SIR:—I am in receipt of your communication of August 16th, which is as follows:

> "I herewith transmit three bids and an incomplete bid received today for the Ottawa armory. The following is a tabulation of said bids:
> "(1) Meyers Bros. (W. R. & C. L. Meyers) of Leipsic—
> Building complete, tile roof, steel roof trusses.....$18,299 49
> Building complete 'wooden roof'..... 18,000 00
> Certified check for..... 350 00
> Cash 14 00
> Short $1.98 of being 2%.
> "(2) Chas. A. Meyers, agreeing to build, not stating the building $18,300 00
> No certified check.
> "(3) Clemmer & Johnson, Hicksville—
> Building complete, tile roof, steel roof trusses.....$18,393 00
> Building complete, composition roof..... 18,093 00
> Certified check 400 00
> 'Will construct sewer for the sum of $175.00 additional.'
>
> "(4) Loudenback & Sieverling, Sidney—
> Building complete, tile roof, steel roof trusses.....$18,317 91
> Certified check 370 00
> Check made to order of 'state armory board.'

"You will note that the Meyers Bros.' bid has an incomplete certified check and also that the check of Loudenback & Sieverling has a certified check made to order of 'state armory board.'

"The advertisement for bids is also herewith transmitted. It requires the certified check to be made to the order of the secretary. As two biddrs did not furnish proper certified checks, the board passed a resolution of which the following is a copy:

> "'Resolved, That the bid of Clemmer & Johnson is the lowest bid which conforms to the advertisement therefor and to the plans and specifications and that a contract be awarded to said Clemmer & Johnson for construction of said Ottawa armory complete for the sum of $18,393.00 upon the said contractors Clemmer & Johnson, giving bond in the sum of nine thousand, two hundred ($9,200.00) dollars to the satisfaction of the attorney general of Ohio, and upon the further condition that said attorney general approves this award for which purpose the secretary will transmit all bids to him.'

"If the award made by the board is approved, please draw the contract and bond as required by law. If one of the other bids should have been accepted, please so advise and also advise if we may still accept same by rescission of above resolution."

Section 5258, General Code, provides for advertisement for bids for the construction of a state armory and reads as follows:

> "The board shall advertise for sealed bids for the erection of such armory, and publish such advertisement in at least one newspaper in the city or county in which the armory is to be erected. All bids received shall be filed in the office of the adjutant general, and must be accompanied by a forfeit consisting of a deposit of cash or certified check equivalent to two per cent. of the estimate on the building, conditioned upon the bidder entering into a contract, if his bid is accepted. All money so forfeited shall be covered into the state treasury to the credit of the 'state armory fund' hereinafter provided for. Upon the day specified in the advertisement, the bids received shall be opened by the board, and the lowest bid which complies with the plans and specifications submitted, may be accepted. The board may reject any and all bids and readvertise for bids."

The bid of Meyers Brothers was the lowest bid received, but the certified check and cash deposited by them amounted in the aggregate to less than two per cent. of the amount of the bid.

The question for determination is whether this irregularity would be a sufficient reason for refusing to award the contract to Meyers Brothers. I have not found any Ohio authorities directly in point, but the decision of the common pleas court of Philadelphia, in the case of Smith vs. The City of Philadelphia, 2 Brewsters Reports, 443, fully covers the present situation. The court held:

> "An injunction will not be granted to restrain municipal authorities from awarding a contract to the lowest bidder, although he did not file a bond prior to the award as required by ordinance."

The facts of the case were that the lowest bidder failed to file with the city solicitor any bond prior to the award of the contract to him, as was required by the ordinance under which the improvement was to be made.

On page 444 of the opinion the court says:

> "The bond required by the ordinance of May 25, 1860, is not the security to be exacted for the faithful performance of the contract, but simply a guaranty that the lowest bidder will come forward, give the required security, and sign the formal agreement. This is clearly a stipulation which the city authorities might in the exercise of an honest discretion insist upon or waive at their pleasure. No corruption or fraud is suggested, nor is it pretended that the city has been or can be injured by the award of the contract to defendant McGlue."

The deposit made by Meyers Brothers was in my judgment in substantial compliance with the requirements of section 5258, and the fact that it did not amount to two per cent. of their bid would not be a sufficient reason for refusing to award the contract to them.

Section 5258 requires that contracts for the construction of armories shall be awarded to the lowest bidder whose bid complies with the plans and specifications.

As the bid of Meyers Bros. was the lowest bid submitted and as the same is in substantial compliance with the requirements of the statute and the plans and specifications, I am of the opinion that your board should rescind its resolution awarding the contract to Clemmer & Johnson and adopt another resolution awarding it to Meyers Bros.

Yours very truly,
TIMOTHY S. HOGAN,
Attorney General.

STATE ARMORY BOARD MAY PAY MONEY TO THE ASSIGNEE OF A HOLDER OF A CLAIM FOR EXTRAS.

Where a contractor assigns a claim which he holds against the state armory board, the assignment will absolve the state armory board and the state of Ohio from further liability to the contractor on his claim for extras, and the money may be paid to the assignee.

COLUMBUS, OHIO, October 2, 1913.

COL. BYRON L. BARGAR, Secretary Ohio State Armory Board, Columbus, Ohio.

DEAR SIR:—I am in receipt of your letter of September 23, which is as follows:

> "I herewith enclose, for your approval, duplicate certified accounts for $550.00, to Edward Vollrath, attorney for all armory creditors, Bucyrus. This account was allowed by the armory board at its meeting September 20, 1913."

Prior to the date of your letter, the contractor made a claim for extras in the construction of the Bucyrus armory and your board offered him $550.00 in settlement of his claim, which he refused to accept, contending that he was entitled to more money.

Thereafter he made an assignment of his claim for extras to Col. Edward Vollrath, for the benefit of his creditors, of which assignment the following is a copy:

> "I hereby assign to Edward Vollrath, of Bucyrus, Ohio, the entire amount, including extras that may be still due me from the state of Ohio on account of the Bucyrus armory. This assignment is made in consideration and for the purpose of distributing said amount among the creditors which I am still owing on account of said armory, and you are authorized to pay any and all amounts so owing to me on account of said Bucyrus armory, including extras, to said Edward Vollrath, who represents said creditors, to be so applied.
> "A detailed and correct statement of the balances due said creditors is hereto attached and made a part thereof.
> "[Signed] E. E. BOPE."

I am of the opinion that the above assignment will absolve the state armory board and the state of Ohio from further liability to Mr. Bope on his claim for extras and you may safely pay the said sum of $550.00 to the assignee.

The two copies of certified account enclosed in your letter are herewith returned, with my approval duly endorsed thereon.

Very truly yours,
TIMOTHY S. HOGAN,
Attorney General.

CONTRACTS FOR ARMORY PURPOSES MUST BE ENTERED INTO BY THE STATE ARMORY BOARD.

Local officials of the national guard company have no authority to bind the state armory board by contract unless such authority is expressly granted by statute. A lease entered into by a captain of the national guard is not binding on the state armory board.

COLUMBUS, OHIO, October 3, 1913.

COL. BYRON L. BARGAR, Secretary Ohio State Armory Board, Columbus, Ohio.

DEAR SIR:—I am in receipt of your letter of August 16th, with enclosure of two leases, for certain real estate in the village of Clyde, which was used for armory purposes, together with certain correspondence relating thereto. You request advice as to whether the state armory board should pay the rent for said armory.

It appears that S. S. Richards and Mrs. W. C. Terry, on the twenty-seventh day of July, 1910, leased to company I, sixth infantry, Ohio national guards, by A. H. Wicks, captain, certain real estate in the village of Clyde, for a period of three years from August 1, 1910.

During the term of this lease, the state of Ohio erected an armory at Clyde and the same has been occupied by company I since December 1, 1912. Rent has been paid by the lessee to June 30, 1912, and there is due to the lessors rent from that time for the remainder of the period named in the lease —one year and one month.

The lessors claim to have made diligent efforts to secure other tenants after company I had vacated the premises but were unsuccessful. They also claim that the leased property was never surrendered to them and the lessees say that some time in September, 1912, they offered to surrender the property but that the lessors refused to accept the same.

We are not at present concerned with these disputed questions of fact. The sole question here is one of law, that is, whether the state of Ohio is liable, in any event, for the payment of said rent.

At the time of the execution of these leases, the state armory board was vested with authority "to provide armories by lease, purchase or construction." 100 O. L., p. 27—2d paragraph, section 4.

It was the manifest purpose and intention of this statute that the duty of leasing armories was to be performed by the state armory board and not by separate organizations of the state militia.

I am informed that the armory board knew nothing whatever of the existence of these leases until this controversy arose.

My immediate predecessor in office, on June 10, 1909, rendered to your board an opinion to the effect that leases of armories could not be made for a longer term than two years from the time of the appropriation by the legislature of the state armory fund.

See annual report of attorney general for 1909, p. 425.

If the leases in question had been made by the armory board, as required by law, instead of by the local company, the opinion of my predecessor doubtless would have been followed and the present difficulty would have been avoided.

Local officers or companies of the state militia are without legal authority to bind the state or the armory board by contract unless such authority is expressly granted by the statutes. The authority to lease armories being expressly conferred by statute on the Ohio state armory board, I am constrained to hold that such power cannot be exercised by any other officer or body.

I am, therefore, of the opinion that said leases created no obligation against the state and that your board may not legally pay the claim made for rent thereunder.

Leases and correspondence are herewith enclosed.

Yours very truly,

TIMOTHY S. HOGAN,

Attorney General.

ABSTRACT OF TITLE.

Deed from John G. Reeves to the state of Ohio.

COLUMBUS, OHIO, December 31, 1913.

HON. BYRON L. BARGAR, Secretary Ohio State Armory Board, Columbus Ohio.

DEAR SIR:—I beg to acknowledge the receipt of your letter of December 31st, wherein you enclose abstract of title and deed from John G. Reeves to the state of Ohio, for the following described premises, to be used as a site for an armory in the city of Lancaster, to wit:

> "Situate in the said city of Lancaster, in the county of Fairfield, and state of Ohio, and is known and distinguished by being seventy-one (71) feet off of the north ends of lots numbered seventy-five (75) and seventy-six (76) in said city, and is bounded and described as follows:
> "Beginning at the northeast corner of said lot number seventy-six (76), at the intersection of Broad and Wheeling streets in said city, thence south with the east line of said lot number seventy-six, along Broad street, seventy-one (71) feet to the northeast corner of the lot sold and conveyed by said J. G. Reeves to Frank Beck by deed dated April 1, A. D. 1897, and recorded in Book No. 82, page 588 of the Deed Records of said Fairfield county, thence west on the north line of said F. Beck lot to the west line of said lot number seventy-five (75), thence north along the west line of said lot number seventy-five (75) to the northwest corner of said lot, at Wheeling street, thence east along the north lines of said lots number seventy-five (75) and seventy-six (76) to the place of beginning, one hundred and sixty-five (165) feet."

I have carefully examined the abstract of title, and from such examination I am of the opinion that the present owner has a good and indefeasible title to said real estate, subject only to a mortgage for $6,350.00 given by said Reeves to C. B. Whiley, taxes for the year 1913 and a special assessment for a street improvement. All of these, I understand, will be paid before the deed is turned over to your board.

The deed is duly signed, acknowledged and witnessed, and is sufficient in form to convey to the state of Ohio a fee simple title, and I advise that you accept the same.

Yours very truly,

TIMOTHY S. HOGAN,

Attorney General.

TAXES AND TAXATION—TAX COMMISSION MAY NOT REMIT PENALTIES AGAINST CORPORATIONS AND PUBLIC UTILITIES ASSESSED UPON THE DUPLICATE OF THE TREASURER OF STATE—POWER OF ATTORNEY GENERAL WITH CONSENT OF TAX COMMISSION TO COMPROMISE AND SETTLE SAME—EFFECT OF OMISSION BY STATE TREASURER TO NOTIFY CORPORATIONS OF TAXES DUE.

Section 6617-4, General Code, which authorizes the tax commission to remit such tax penalties as accrue by reason of negligence or error of an officer, required to perform the duties relating to the collection of taxes, must be read in connection with section 6617-5, General Code, which discloses that these sections were intended to apply to simple taxes only, assessed upon the duplicate of the county, by virtue of the provisions of the later section, providing for a notice to the prosecuting attorney and county auditor before such remission is allowed.

Under these sections, therefore, the tax commission is not empowered to remit a penalty assessed upon the duplicate of the treasurer of state, on the ground that said treasurer failed to notify the corporation of the date when the tax was due, in accordance with section 5488, General Code.

Under section 5524, General Code, however, the attorney general is authorized, with the advice and consent of the tax commission, to compromise or settle any claim for delinquent taxes, fees or penalties. The use of the term "settle" in this statute justifies the construction that the attorney general, in accordance therewith, may remit or reduce penalties for any good and sufficient reason. The terms and condition of such settlement must be set out in detail in the annual report of the tax commission to the general assembly and governor.

When it is settled therefore, that the corporation had no actual notice of the fact that such tax was due, the penalty may be compromised or settled under this statute, and the fact that such tax appeared upon the duplicate, need not necessarily be construed to charge said corporation with notice of the fact that the tax was due.

COLUMBUS, OHIO, December 17, 1912.

The Tax Commission of Ohio, Columbus, Ohio.

GENTLEMEN:—I beg to acknowledge receipt of your letter of November 25th in which you request my opinion as to the power of the tax commission of Ohio, under section 5617-4, General Code, to remit penalties which have accrued against corporations and public utilities, especially the former, for failure to pay the annual fees or taxes assessed against them on the books of the treasurer of state as such, because of the failure of the corporations or public utilities to receive notice which the treasurer of state is directed to send them of the amount of the fee or tax.

You also request my opinion in the same letter as to the power of the attorney general and the commission under section 5524, General Code, to compromise claims for fees or taxes under such circumstances, and also in cases in which the failure to pay the fee or tax when due arose out of an oversight on the part of some officer or employe of the corporation or public utility.

In connection with these requests you call my attention in particular to the large number of corporations for profit, domestic and foreign, required to file reports with the tax commission, and pay fees to the treasurer of state upon the basis of their capital stock, and to the expense of administering the law under which those reports and fees are exacted, consisting of items for postage and clerk hire. You also compare the laws providing for penalties for failure to pay such taxes with those to pay simple taxes collected through the office of the county treasurer, which latter penalties are imposed automatically without reference to the cause of failure to pay.

So much of the statutory law which is involved in your inquiry as is necessary to be considered may be first quoted:

Section 5488, General Code:

"After determining the amount of taxes or fees payable to the state as provided in this act, the auditor of state shall thereupon prepare proper duplicates and reports, and certify them to the treasurer of state for collection.

"Upon the receipt of such duplicate the treasurer shall notify each company charged with taxes or fees thereon, of the amount due from it."

Section 5491, General Code:

"All taxes received by the treasurer of state under the provisions of this act, shall be credited to the general revenue fund. If any public utility fails or refuses to pay, on or before the fifteenth day of December, the tax assessed against it, or if any corporation fails or refuses to pay, on or before the dates fixed, in this act, the fee charged against it, the treasurer of state shall certify the list of such utilities or corporations, so delinquent, to the auditor of state, who shall add to the tax or fee due, a penalty of fifteen per cent. thereon." * * *

Section 5498, General Code:

"Upon the filing of the report, provided for in the last three preceding sections (as to domestic corporations for profit) the commission, after finding such report to be correct, shall, on the first Monday of July, determine the amount of the subscribed or issued and outstanding capital stock of each such corporation. On the first Monday in August, the commission shall certify the amount so determined by it to the auditor of state, who shall charge for collection, on or before August fifteenth, as herein provided, from such corporation, a fee of three-twentieths of one per cent. upon its subscribed or issued and outstanding capital stock, which fee shall not be less than ten dollars in any case. Such fee shall be payable to the treasurer of state on or before the first day of the following October."

Section 5503, General Code:

"On or before October fifteenth, the auditor of state shall charge for collection, as herein provided, annually, from such company (foreign corporation for profit) in addition to the initial fees otherwise provided for by law, for the privilege of exercising franchises in this state, a fee of three-twentieths of one per cent. upon the proportion of the authorized capital stock of the corporation represented by the property owned and used and business transacted in this state, which fee shall not be less than ten dollars in any case. Such fee shall be payable to the treasurer of state on or before the first day of the following December."

Section 5617-4, General Code:

"The commission may remit * * * such penalties as have accrued, or may accrue, in consequence of the negligence or error of an officer required to perform a duty relating to the * * * collection of taxes. * * * but its power under this section, shall not extend to taxes levied under the provisions of subdivision two of chapter fifteen of title two, part second, of the General Code." (So-called Dow-Aiken liquor tax.)

Section 5617-5, General Code:

"No such taxes, assessments or penalties in excess of one hundred dollars, shall in any case be remitted until after at least ten days' notice of the application to have them remitted shall have been served upon the prosecuting attorney and the county auditor of the county where such taxes or assessments were levied, and proof of such service has been filed with the commission. When any taxes or penalties have been remitted as provided in this and the next preceding section, the commission shall make a report thereof to the auditor of state."

Section 5524, General Code:

"With the advice and consent of the commission, the attorney general may, before or after any action for the recovery of fees, taxes or penalties certified to him as delinquent, under the provisions of this act, compromise or settle any claim for delinquent taxes, fees or penalties so certified.

"And all claims compromised or settled as herein provided shall be set forth in the annual report of the tax commission to the general assembly and governor, giving in detail the terms and conditions of such compromise or settlement."

The question as to the application of section 5617-4 to the subject matter involved in your inquiry will be first considered.

While the language of section 5617-4 is on its face broad enough to include penalties assessed in consequence of the negligence of the treasurer of state, who is an officer required to perform a duty relating to the collection of taxes, viz., excise taxes from public utilities and franchise taxes from corporations for profit, I am of the opinion that properly construed this section does not authorize the remission of penalties which have accrued by reason of any such negligence.

Section 5617-5 must be read in connection with this section as the legislative history thereof shows it to be a part of the same legislative idea. That section, above quoted, provides that no penalties in excess of one hundred dollars shall be remitted in any case except upon notice to the prosecuting attorney and the county auditor of the county where such taxes or assessments are levied. By necessary implication this section, therefore, limits the scope of the preceding section to simple taxes and penalties thereon. Indeed, the entire subject matter of these two sections is found in section 167, of the Revised Statutes, the only difference between the two statutes or group of statutes being that the auditor of state instead of the tax commission was authorized to exercise the power under the former law.

It is true that the former law was held, in State ex rel. vs. Jones, Auditor, 51 O. S., 492-515, to apply to the remission of penalties and assessments against express, telegraph and telephone companies under the Nichols law. However, the result of the Nichols law assessment was a charge upon the general duplicate of a county, and this decision did not establish a principle upon which it could be held that any tax which was to be collected through the office of the treasurer of state, or any penalty thereon, could be remitted through this machinery.

I am, therefore, of the opinion that the tax commission has no power to remit any taxes assessed upon the duplicate of the treasurer of state or any penalties thereon under this section just discussed.

Section 5524, General Code, however, applies directly and solely to taxes collected through the office of the treasurer of state. It is only such taxes or fees as are certified to the attorney general for collection, and it is only such taxes or fees as are certified to that officer which may be compromised or settled under this section.

The primary meaning of this section is bound up with the significance of the two terms, "compromise" and "settle." The following definitions are those of the Century Dictionary:

> "Compromise. A settlement of differences by mutual concessions; * * * * a bargain or arrangement involving mutual concessions * * * *."

The verb which is the form of the root used in this statute takes its meaning from the noun as above defined.

> "Settle. To change from a disturbed and troubled state to one of tranquility, repose or security."

The following definitions are found in Bouvier's Law Dictionary:

> "Compromise. An agreement made between two or more parties, as a settlement of matters in dispute between them. (The verb of course takes its meaning as above defined.)
> "Settle. To adjust or ascertain, to pay."

It will be noted that the term "compromise" involves the idea of mutual concessions, while that of "settle" does not necessarily involve such an idea, and I am of the opinion that if it were not for the use of the latter term, there would be no power in the tax commission and the attorney general, under this section to accept payment of the fee or tax due from a corporation or public utility without the payment of any penalty whatever, nor to accept any sum less than that technically charged against any corporation or public utility in satisfaction of a claim except in consideration of the withdrawal of some defense or because of the failure of assets of the corporation or public utility or for some other like reason. Having, however, the power not only to compromise a claim for taxes or penalties, but also to settle such a claim, I am of the opinion that the attorney general and the tax commission may accept payment of a claim against a corporation or public utility of taxes or penalties or either for less than the total sum certified, or for the tax without the penalty as the case may be. The statute makes it clear, however, that this may not be done so as to bind the state arbitrarily, but that in each such case there must exist some good and sufficient reason, such as may be set forth in the annual report of the tax commission to the general assembly and governor.

It is true that some doubt is thrown upon this interpretation of the section because of the requirement that the terms or conditions of such compromise or settlement be set forth in the report. I do not interpret this clause, however, as requiring that all compromises and settlements be upon terms and conditions to be observed by the corporation or public utility in the sense that no compromise or settlement could be made without mutual concession. It is sufficient, in my judgment, to satisfy this portion of the statute, that the statement made by the tax commission should set forth fully the circumstances under which the action was taken and the reasons actuating the commission in the approval of the settlement.

Coming now to the specific causes of complaints for remission or compromise described by you in your letter, I beg to state that in my judgment the failure of the treasurer of state to notify the public utility or corporation of the amount of taxes due, as specifically required by section 5588, General Code, if found by the attorney general and the tax commission to be actually the cause of the delinquency of the corporation or utility, would constitute sufficient ground for the settlement of a claim for taxes and penalties by the receipt of the tax alone, or at least by the receipt of a small part of the penalty.

For reasons already stated, I do not regard such a failure of the treasurer of state to notify the taxpayer of the amount of the tax due as an act of negligence or an error within the meaning of section 5617-4. The statute, however, does require that the treasurer of state send out these notices and the corporations and utilities are therefore in law entitled to rely upon such notice. It is true that some of the sections above quoted specifically provide the dates at which the taxes and fees shall become due and payable. It is also true that the amount of the charge on the books of the treasurer is a matter of public record which could be ascertained by any person upon inquiry. However, it is not true that the amount of the tax or fee in a given case would necessarily be known to the public utility or corporation without its receiving such a notice as that designated in section 5588, or without actual investigation at the office of the treasurer of state. While, therefore, the law puts the corporation or public utility upon its notice as to the date of payment it does not accomplish the same result as to the amount due unless the making of the public record in the office of the treasurer of state be so construed. In my opinion the mere fact that the duplicate is made up and in the possession of the treasurer of state is not sufficient to constitute constructive notice to the corporations and public utilities of the amount due from them. This is because section 5588 expressly requires another kind of notice; so that it was evidently the intention of the statute that the taxpayer should have the right to rely upon some form of notice other than the mere record in the office of the treasurer.

As I have already indicated, however, I do not believe that the failure to receive notice from the treasurer of state ought to be regarded as final and conclusive in all cases as an incontestable ground for compromise of a claim for taxes or fees without the payment of the penalty. This is the notice which the law requires. There may, however, be actual notice of the amount due other than that which might be given by the sending of such a letter by the treasurer of state.

If it should develop in the case of any delinquent corporation or utility that an officer thereof actually knew the amount of the fee assessed against the corporation or utility but chose to take refuge behind a technicality in order to excuse willful failure to pay the tax within the time limited by law, I do not believe that in such a case a settlement should be made upon the basis of the tax without the penalty.

I do not believe that an oversight on the part of some officer of a corporation is, excepting in some exceptional cases, a ground which ought to be relied upon by the attorney general and the tax commission in support of a settlement of any claim for taxes and penalties for less than the entire aggregate sum of both. The oversight of an officer or clerk of a corporation is, so far as the state is concerned, the oversight of the corporation itself. Nevertheless I can conceive of an exceptional case, such as where the treasurer's notice was sent to a person who no longer was an officer of the corporation, and on this account and through the negligence of the ex-officer failed to reach the proper officers of the corporation in time to afford them an opportunity to pay the tax; or, again, I can imagine a change of accounting officers on the part of the corporation made at such a time as to make it difficult for the incoming officer to ascertain whether or not the tax or fee had been paid until too late to pay it when due. Each case of this exceptional nature would have to rest upon its own foundation and equities. The general rule in such matters, however, is as I have already stated, viz., that the attorney general and the tax commission ought not to compromise, or more properly speaking, settle the claim for taxes or penalties for the amount of the tax without the penalty where the corporation seeks to excuse itself for failure to pay the tax or fee at the time specified by law, on the ground that some officer or employe thereof had been negligent.

In conclusion, I may say that I am aware that the statute providing for the collection of taxes through the office of the county treasurer is much less expensive of operation and much more hard and fast in the matter of penalties than the sections which I have been discussing. The state's expense, however, is no valid reason for refusing to settle penalty claims in the face of the statute which expressly requires the treasurer of state to send out notices. If this statute were fully and effectively complied with no corporation could claim that it was justifiably ignorant of the time, place and amount of payment due from it. In this connection I believe hat so long as this provision remains a part of our law it ought to be complied with to the fullest extent, and I would recommend that the notices to be sent by the treasurer of state be sent by first-class post.

Yours very truly,

TIMOTHY S. HOGAN,

Attorney General.

TAXES AND TAXATION—BANKS AND BANKING—POWER OF TAXATION OF SHARES OF STOCK IN NATIONAL BANK—NOT EXCEEDING TAX ON OTHER MONEYED CAPITAL—POWER OF TAX COMMISSION TO REMIT TAX ASSESSED IN STOCK WHICH WAS FRAUDULENTLY VALUED BY OFFICIALS OF A BANK MAKING TAX RETURN.

The officers of the Second national bank, after unlawfully speculating and dissipating the assets of said bank, in their report to the auditor, fraudulently overvalued the assets of said bank, and falsely stated the data upon which the auditor valued the shares of stock of said bank, and in accordance with which value the assessment for taxation was made and paid by the said officers of the bank. The condition of the bank at the time the tax return was made, was evidenced by a letter of the deputy and acting comptroller of the currency, requiring an assessment against the stockholders for the benefit of creditors to the extent of the full par value of their shares of stock, held:

The power of the state to tax shares of stock in national banks is permissive only and the permission is set out to its full extent in section 5219, Revised Statutes of the United States, which statute requires that taxation of such shares of stock shall not be assessed at a greater rate than on other moneyed capital in the hands of individuals of the state.

The finding of the comptroller of currency is a quasi judicial determination, which may not be attached collaterally, and which must be deemed conclusive evidence of the fact that such shares of stock were valueless at the time return for tax was made. The action of the cashier of the bank in making a false return was fraudulent and the assessment of the tax based thereon must be deemed to have been illegal and vitiated by the fraud.

Since the tax upon shares of stock in a national bank may not exceed the tax upon other moneyed capital within the state, and since also the transaction is false by reason of the fraud on the part of the cashier, therefore, under section 5617-4, General Code, which empowers the commission to remit taxes and penalties thereon, found it to be illegally assessed, the commission may remit the tax assessment which was based upon this fraudulent return.

Since the cashier of the bank, under section 5411, General Code, is appointed to make the return by the statute, without any assent upon the part of the stockholders, he acts without the will of the principal, and is, therefore, not an agent of the stockholders. He is not an agent created by law for the reason that the state's jurisdiction is permissive only and the relations which exist are only those between the stockholders and the federal government. The stockholders, therefore, cannot be deemed to be estopped by the action of the cashier, as their presumed agent in making the return.

COLUMBUS, OHIO, February 26, 1913.

The Tax Commission of Ohio, Columbus, Ohio.

GENTLEMEN:—You request my opinion as to whether you have jurisdiction to entertain the application for remission of tax on behalf of the Second national bank of Cincinnati and the stockholders thereof. You have submitted to me the application, which is as follows:

"Now come the Second national bank, of Cincinnati, Ohio, and Ferdinand Jelke, Jr., trustee, one of the stockholders thereof, who presents this matter on his own behalf and on behalf of all the other stockholders of said banking association, and represent as follows, viz:

"1. That the Second national bank, of Cincinnati, Ohio, is a duly incorporated banking association organized under the laws of the United States, having numerous shareholders, of whom said Ferdinand Jelke, Jr., trustee, is one.

"2. That on May 3, 1911, the officers of the Second national bank, of Cincinnati, made a certain tax return for the purpose of having a valuation put upon the shares of its capital stock for taxation, a true copy of which tax return is filed herewith. That subsequently, proceedings were had thereon, so that a valuation of 10,000 shares of the capital stock of said the Second national bank was put upon the tax duplicate of Hamilton county, Ohio, at $1,607,530.00, upon which taxes for the year 1911 were assessed in the sum of $24,112.96, one-half, to wit: $12,056.48 payable in December, 1911, and the second half, $12,056.48, payable in June, 1912. That the half payable in December, 1911, was paid on its shares and for the shareholders of said bank by said banking association.

"3. Your petitioners further show that between January 1, 1912, and April 1, 1912, an examination and investigation of the condition and affairs were instituted and had by the clearing house association, of Cincinnati, and the comptroller of the currency of the department of the treasury of the United States, and that it was then discovered that said banking association had, through injudicious investments, speculation and dissipation of the bank's funds by its officers, suffered losses to the entire amount of its capital, surplus and undivided profits, and that there was no value whatever to said stock, and that an assessment of one hundred per cent. (100%), or the full amount of its capital, was necessary in order to restore its impaired capital and permit it to do business.

"Upon such examination, the comptroller of the currency ordered charged off as worthless and without value, a large amount of paper, notes, bills, stocks, bonds, securities and assets, all of which stood upon the books of the bank in April, 1911, at the time of the tax return aforesaid, and were then worthless and without value. That the officers of said bank had been unlawfully speculating and promoting enterprises of their own which were failures, and by injudicious investment the funds and assets of said bank had been dissipated and lost, and that this had transpired and been committed by the said officers prior to the tax return aforesaid, and said tax return as made by them was false and deceitful, and was made for the purpose of deceiving the national bank examiners, the comptroller of the currency, the clearing house association, of Cincinnati, all of the stockholders of said bank, and the public, and for the purpose of concealing their improvident and unlawful acts, and said tax return was untrue in that on its face it showed a taxable value as hereinabove set out, whereas in April, 1911, the shares of said bank, by reason of such conduct and dissipation of the funds on the part of its officers, were valueless and said shares had no taxable value whatever and should not have been listed as having value, all of which these complainants stand ready and offer to prove to your honorable commission.

"4. Complainants further say that already taxes in the sum of $12,056.48 have been paid by said banking association for its shareholders on account of its shares in excess of what ought to have been paid.

"Wherefore, complainants pray your honorable commission that the taxes for the last half of the year, 1911, viz: $12,056.48, which were due and payable in June, 1912, but which have not been paid, be remitted, and that your honorable body fix a time for hearing of this application, and that in the meantime the treasurer of Hamilton county, Ohio, be ordered to refrain from adding any penalty for non-payment thereof, and that upon final hearing all of the unpaid portions of the tax upon the shares of said bank for the year 1911 be remitted."

With the application is a brief filed by Hon. Ferdinand Jelke, Jr., Hon. Thomas K. Schmuck and Hon. James R. Clark. On my own motion I requested the views of Hon. Charles A. Groom, first assistant prosecuting attorney of Hamilton county, as to the authority of the tax commission to reduce the valuation of the shares of stock of said bank upon the complaint filed with the tax commission on September 20, 1912. The briefs have been of the greatest possible aid in enabling me to arrive at the conclusion hereinafter stated.

Counsel for the applicant state the facts in the case to be as follows:

"On May 3, 1911, pursuant to the provisions of section 5411 of the General Code of Ohio, the cashier of the Second national bank, of Cincinnati, Ohio, made a return to the auditor of Hamilton county, Ohio, of the resources and liabilities of the bank, and the number and value of shares of stock therein. Upon receiving such report, the auditor of Hamilton county, Ohio, put a total value of $1,607,530.00 upon the ten thousand (10,000) shares of stock in said bank, and assessed taxes thereof for the year 1911, in the sum of $24,112.96. In December, 1911, the taxes then due and payable were paid by the bank, so there now remains due and unpaid taxes in the amount of $12,056.48.

"The taxes thus levied were taxes to which the stockholders, and the stockholders alone, were subject (Owensboro National Bank vs. Owensboro, 173 U. S., 664; United States Revised Statutes, section 5219), but which the state, acting within the scope of its delegated powers (5 Thompson on Corporations, section 5938; National Bank vs. Commonwealth, 9 Wall., 553) requires the bank to pay and reimburse itself from the stockholders thereof (Ohio General Code, section 5655).

"In January, 1912, the clearing house association of Cincinnati, and the comptroller of the currency of the department of the treasury of the United States instituted an examination of the affairs of the Second national bank.

"This examination disclosed the fact that the mismanagement, speculation and misappropriation of the funds by bank officials had dissipated the entire capital stock, surplus and undivided profits. The comptroller of the currency thereupon ordered charged off as worthless, notes, bills, stocks, bonds and securities of great face value, which were upon the books of the company at the date of the return for taxation in May, 1911, and which formed the basis thereof. The comptroller, within the scope of his authority, issued an order binding upon all persons and all courts (Thomas vs. Gilbert, 101 Pacific, 393), requiring the levy of 100 per cent. assessment upon each share of stock in order to restore the impaired and dissipated capital. The condition of the bank at this time and prior thereto, as evidenced by the letter of the deputy and acting comptroller of the currency, dated March 4, 1911 (appendix), makes clear the fact that at the date of the report for taxation, the assets of the bank had been entirely wiped out, and consequently the shares of stock therein had no value whatsoever. The affairs of the bank disclosed the fact that the misstatement as to the financial condition of the bank was wilfully false and fraudulent, and was a part of a long continued scheme of fraud, the intended victims of which were the public. the stockholders and the federal government.

"In August, 1912, the stockholders of the bank, who are the real parties in interest, and the reorganized bank, filed an application for the remission of the unpaid taxes which had been assessed upon the fictitious and inflated value contained in the false and fraudulent report. In August, 1912, on this identical statement, the government of the United States, acting through the commissioner of internal revenue under the secretary of the treasury by and with the advice of the solicitor, department of justice, abated the excise tax and remitted all taxes due the federal government."

Counsel for the applicant say that:

"The state of Ohio surely has power to grant relief in a tax matter appealing so strongly to equity and justice. All the powers of the sovereign state for the equitable adjustment, revision and remission of taxes have been combined, consolidated and vested in your honorable board."

They quote section 1465-33 of the General Code, as follows:

"All powers, duties and privileges imposed and conferred upon any state board, which board was abolished, or its powers in whole or in part conferred upon the tax commission of Ohio, by an act of the general assembly, passed May 10, 1910, or any power or duty theretofore conferred upon any state or county officer or board, which power and duty by such act was conferred upon such commission, is hereby imposed and conferred upon the commission created by such act." Ohio General Code, section 1465-33. (Sec. 35, 102 O. L. 229.)

Quoting from brief of applicant, under heading number two:

"The tax commission of Ohio has power to remit taxes illegally assessed, and, therefore, may abate the taxes in question.

"Section 149. (Remission of taxes and penalties.) The commission may remit taxes and penalties thereon, found by it to have been illegally assessed, and such penalties as have accrued, or may accrue, in consequence of the negligence or error of an officer required to perform a duty relating to the assessment of property for taxation, or the levy or collection of taxes. It may correct an error in an assessment of property for taxation or in the duplicate of taxes in a county, but its power, under this section, shall not extend to taxes levied under the provisions of subdivision two of chapter fifteen of title two, part second, of the General Code." Ohio General Code, section 5617-4. Sec. 149 (102 O. L. p. 257.)

Quoting again from brief of applicant's counsel, page 10:

> "The commission may raise or lower the assessed value of any real or personal property, first giving notice to the owner or owners thereof fixing a time and place for hearing any person or persons interested to the end that the assessment laws of the state may be equitably administered." Ohio General Code, section 5617-2. Sec. 147 (102 O. L. p. 257).

The applicant bases its claim upon the jurisdiction and power of the tax commission to remit taxes and penalties thereon, found by it to have been illegally assessed. The contention of Mr. Groom is that the facts presented, if true, do not disclose that the taxes against the Second national bank have been illegally assessed. Mr. Groom's position is that the only remedy of the Second national bank was under paragraph 147, Ohio General Code, section 5617-2, 102 O. L. 257, wherein it is provided that the commission must first give notice to the owner or owners of real or personal property, fixing a time and place for hearing any person or persons interested, to the end that the assessment laws of the state may be equitably administered. It is argued by Mr. Groom, and of course is conceded by Judge Jelke and his associates, that the time had gone by before the application was filed for any relief under paragraph 147 aforesaid. So that the question in its last analysis is this: If the facts set forth in the application be true does it legally follow that the assessment was illegal? Applicant's counsel say "yes" to this question, and Mr. Groom says "no." The former say the bank officials were the agents of the stockholders for the purposes of taxation; the latter say that the bank officials were the agents of the state for the purposes of taxation.

In People vs. Weaver, 100 U. S., 539, the first syllabus is: .

> "The provision in section 5219 of the Revised Statutes of the United States, that the state taxes on the shares of any national banking association shall not be at a greater rate than is assessed on other moneyed capital in the hands of individuals of the state has reference to the entire process of the assessment, and includes the valuation of shares as well as the rate of percentage charged thereon."

Construing this section under consideration, Waite, C. J., in Hepburn vs. The School Directors, 23 Wallace, 480, at page 484, said:

> "Therefore, some plan must be devised to ascertain what amount of money at interest is actually represented by a share of stock. * * * It is not the amount of money invested that is wanted for taxation, but the amount of moneyed capital which the investment represents for the time being. If the value set upon the share does not exceed this amount, it will not be assessed at a greater rate than other money at interest."

Applicant's counsel, commenting on this, say, at page 19 of their brief:

> "From this it follows that if the tax value exceeds the amount of moneyed capital which the share represents for the time being, taxation based thereon is at a greater rate than other money at interest. Since this is the case, the tax thus levied is, therefore, unauthorized by section 5219 of the United States Revised Statutes, and since it is unauthorized, that is to say, since the levy is not in exercise of the power delegated by congress, it is void, as an interference with the federal agency.

"In the case at bar, the amount invested in the shares was probably accurately represented by the cashier's return. But the amount of moneyed capital which the investment represented for the time being was nil.

"The whole capital, and each proportional part thereof, as represented by each individual share, had been utterly wiped out. It follows, therefore, that the taxation of these worthless shares calculated upon a valuation of $200 per share, is taxation at a greater rate than on other money at interest. Since this is the case, the taxes under consideration are illegal and void.

"We have found that the taxes under consideration were not only unauthorized by statute, but were prohibited by the fundamental law of the land. Hence it is clear that taxes thus levied are illegal as that term is universally defined, and since such taxes are illegal, it is within the power of the board of tax commissioners as enumerated in the statute to remit them."

It might further be added that—to use a common but expressive phrase—it is up to the state to see that its scheme of taxation conforms not only to the letter but to the spirit of section 5219, Revised Statutes of the United States. The state must see that the state taxes on the shares of any national banking association shall not be at a greater rate than is assessed on other moneyed capital in the hands of individuals of the state, and that this includes the valuation of shares as well as the rate of percentage charged thereon. Keeping in mind now that the right to assess the shares of national banks is permissive and that the character and scope of the permission is defined by federal statutes, which are interpreted by federal decisions, we come pretty quickly to the conclusion that it is the duty of the state to conform strictly to the federal requirements, else the state itself is outside of the permission granted by the federal statute; and if the state itself is without the permission there can be no question that the tax has been illegally assessed, if there was fraud on behalf of the officials of the bank and the stockholders were in no wise parties thereunto.

Section 5411 of the General Code is as follows:

"The cashier of each incorporated bank, and the cashier, manager or owner of each unincorporated bank, shall return to the auditor of the county in which such bank is located, between the first and second Mondays of May, annually, a report in duplicate under oath, exhibiting in detail, and under appropriate heads, the resources and liabilities of such bank at the close of business on the Wednesday next preceding the said second Monday, with a full statement of the names and residences of the stockholders therein, the number of shares held by each and the par value of each share, and of the amount of capital employed by unincorporated banks, not divided into shares, and the name, residence and proportional interest of each owner of such bank."

Is the cashier of the bank the agent of the stockholders for purposes of taxation? It will be kept in mind that national banks are the creatures of the federal government; that the stockholders proceed in conformity to federal requirements, that they select such officers as the federal laws demand, and in conformity thereto. By the selection of such officers, which are for all executive purposes in connection with the bank, they do not empower the cashier of the bank or any other executive officer to report for taxes and to report in a manner binding upon them. Suppose the stockholders were of opinion, and so voted at a meeting, that their stock was worth a certain amount and the same was true; and suppose the cashier reported a higher amount to the county auditor; the action of the stockholders would not be binding upon the state government—the stockholders, in fact, have nothing to do with the matter; they are without power to act, and the doctrine of estoppel could in no wise apply to them.

Judge Day, in Lander, Treasurer, vs. Mercantile National Bank, 118 Fed., 785, at page 789, said:

> "The stockholder in banks, as we have already seen, is not required to return his shares; that duty devolves upon the cashier."

Judge Jelke well says in his brief:

> "Where a man does that which he, and he alone, is required to do, he cannot be said to act for one whose duty he has not undertaken and whose instructions he does not obey. Since the cashier in the present case did not act for the stockholders, it is clear that he was not their agent."

It is further observed in the brief:

> "In the second place, the existence of agency presupposes the right of selection on the part of the person represented or served.
>
> "It is a fundamental principle that agency can exist only by the will of the principal, and with the consent of the agent. It is, therefore, essential to the formation of the relation that the principal shall in some manner, either expressly or by implication from conduct for which he is responsible, appoint the agent, and that the agent shall in some way accept the appointment."
> 31 Cyc. 1215.

Nor is the case one wherein the relation of principal and agent can be created by operation of law, because the collection of the taxes upon the stock through the instrumentality of the corporation itself is merely permissive again, and it is not to be thought for a moment that the federal statute would permit the state to resort to any scheme of taxation which would work inequity and injustice upon innocent stockholders. If the corporation were an Ohio one it is conceded that the relation of principal and agent could be created by operation of the Ohio statute; but when it is kept in mind that the relations which exist are solely relations between the stockholders and the federal government, the state being without any jurisdiction whatever, save of a permissive character, and that being to assess the stock when the state adopts means and agencies for the assessment of that stock, leaving out of view the will of the stockholders, the means, agencies and instrumentalities selected by the state are the state's, by which it is bound and not the stockholders.

As before said—and it can be said again at the expense of repetition—it is the duty of the state to see that no fraud is perpetrated upon an innocent stockholder in a national bank. The entrance of fraud into the transaction leading up to the assessment vitiates the entire assessment and, in my judgment, makes the same illegal, and gives to the tax commission full jurisdiction to correct the return just as fully as if the tax commission or the county auditor themselves had made the error.

Quoting again from applicant's brief, under heading ten:

"However, the federal government has conferred upon the state the power to tax the shares of stock in national banks in the hands of the shareholders thereof. Under this grant, the state may require the bank to pay the taxes on the shares when it can reimburse itself from dividends on the stock."

"Section 5219, Revised Statutes of the United States, provides:

"'STATE TAXATION. Nothing herein shall prevent all the shares in any association from being included in the valuation of the personal property of the owner or holder of such shares, in assessing taxes imposed by authority of the state within which the association is located; but the legislature of each state may determine and direct the manner and place of taxing all the shares of national banking associations located within the state, subject only to the two restrictions, that the taxation shall not be at a greater rate than is assessed upon other moneyed capital in the hands of individual citizens of such state, and that the shares of any national banking association owned by non-residents of any state shall be taxed in the city or town where the bank is located, and not elsewhere. Nothing herein shall be construed to exempt the real property of associations from either state, county or municipal taxes, to the same extent, according to its value, as other real property is taxed.'

"The general rule as to the right of the state to exact from the bank the payment of taxes assessed pursuant to the statute is thus stated in 5 Thompson on Corporations, section 5938:

"'The state has power by express statute to that effect, to require national banks to pay the taxes lawfully assessed against the shareholders and reimburse themselves from dividends due such shareholders or otherwise, but this must be done by express authority.'

"Accord:

"National Bank vs. Commonwealth, 9 Wall, 353.

"Pursuant to this grant of power as thus construed, the state of Ohio has provided that the bank shall pay the taxes upon such shares and recoup the amount from dividends which are then due or which may thereafter become due upon such stock.

"Ohio General Code, section 5672:

"'Taxes assessed on shares of stock, or the value thereof, of a bank or banking association, shall be a lien on such shares from the first Monday of May in each year until they are paid. It shall be the duty of every bank or banking association to collect the taxes due upon its shares of stock from the several owners of such shares, and to pay the same to the treasurer of the county in which such bank or banking association is located, as other taxes are paid, and any bank or banking association failing to pay the said taxes as herein provided, shall be liable by way of penalty for the gross amount of the taxes due from all the owners of the shares of stock, and for an additional amount of one hundred dollars for every day of delay in the payment of said taxes.'

"Section 5673, of the Ohio General Code:

"'Such bank or banking association paying to the treasurer of the county in which it is located, the taxes assessed upon its shares, in the hands of its shareholders, respectively, as provided in the next preceding section, may deduct the amount thereof from dividends that are due or thereafter become due on such shares, and shall have a lien upon the shares of stock and on all funds in its possession belonging to such shareholders, or which may at any time come into its possession, for reimbursement of the taxes so paid on account of the several shareholders, with legal interest; and such lien may be enforced in any appropriate manner.'

"Construing these sections, the circuit court of Ohio, in the case of the National Trust Company vs. M. A. Lander, 19 O. C. C., 271, as treasurer, etc., has said:

"'(2) Taxation is on stock, not on bank. The tax against the shareholder, and the provision for the banks paying it, is not a provision for the bank paying its own tax, but a mere method of collecting the tax from the stockholders, and the lien is upon no property of the bank, but entirely upon that of the stockholder.

"'(4) Bank pays tax for the stockholders. Requiring the bank to pay the treasurer is but another method of requiring the stockholder to pay his tax.'"

Quoting from applicant's brief, under heading twelve:

"Notice to shareholders of impairment of capital of the bank is a quasi-judicial determination that cannot be questioned collaterally.

"Section 5205, United States Revised Statutes, provides that:

"'Every association which shall have failed to pay up its capital stock, as required by law, and every association whose capital stock shall have become impaired by losses or otherwise, shall, within three months after receiving notice thereof from the comptroller of the currency, pay the dificiency in the capital stock, by assessment upon the shareholders pro rata for the amount of capital stock held by each; and the treasurer of the United States shall withhold the interest upon all bonds held by him in trust for any such association, upon notification from the comptroller of the currency, until otherwise notified by him. If any such association shall fail to pay up its capital stock, and shall refuse to go into liquidation, as provided by law, for three months after receiving notice from the comptroller, a receiver may be appointed to close up the business of the association, according to the provisions of section 5234.'

"This section was amended by section 4, act of June 30, 1876, as follows:

"That the last clause of section 5205 of said statutes is hereby amended by adding to the said section the following proviso:

"'And provided, that if any shareholder, or shareholders, of such bank shall neglect or refuse, after three months' notice, to pay the assessment, as provided in this section, it shall be the duty of the board of directors to cause a sufficient amount of the capital stock of such shareholder or shareholders to be sold at public auction (after thirty days' notice shall be given by posting such notice of sale in the office of the bank, and by publishing such notice in a newspaper of the city or town in which the bank is located, or in a newspaper published nearest thereto), to make good the deficiency; and the balance, if any, shall be returned to such delinquent shareholder or shareholders.

The situation disclosed by what is contained under heading twelve in the brief of applicant's counsel is unusual indeed and discloses a state of facts which in no wise makes it a dangerous precedent for your commission to accord relief in the present case, because, as is therein said, you have a quasi-judicial determination that cannot be questioned collaterally of the fact that at the time when the second half of the taxes in question became payable there was no fund out of which to pay them. If the second half of the taxes were to paid the payments would unquestionably affect the 100% assessment required by the federal authorities. This assessment was unquestionably ordered for the protection of creditors and depositors and those having a conscionable claim, a claim not resting upon the fraudulent act of an officer. I do not believe that the federal instrumentality would permit itself to be used in the way of raising a fund to pay an obligation inequitable. For your board to refuse to entertain this application would mean to put at a discount the opportunity held out by the federal government to the stockholders to put up their capital stock twice. The honor of the stockholders of the bank in coming forward and saving the depositors and creditors from loss is to be encouraged and commended by the state and not placed at a discount.

I have given most careful consideration to the lucid brief of Mr. Groom and I concur fully in his conclusions, if the case were one wherein there was no fraud on the part of the bank officials. If it were a case of mere over-valuation by error of judgment I would unhesitatingly suggest to your commission not to assume jurisdiction but in my judgment this is a splendid illustration of fraud vitiating the whole transaction.

Mr. McGhee, first assistant attorney general, was present in the grand jury room at the recent investigation of The Cincinnati Trust Company and heard the testimony with reference to the value of the Ford-Johnson securities, which are the securities, as I understand it, upon which face value was returned by the bank officials in the case of the Second National Bank. He informs me, and likewise the prosecuting attorney of Hamilton county has informed me that the securities of the Ford-Johnson Company were almost worthless, and that the same was well known to the bank officials in April, 1911. I went over the testimony myself personally as to the value of the Ford-Johnson stock and securities, and such was my own conclusion. I agree with Judge Jelke in his statement that,

"The old shares never had the reported value, never had any value properly subject to tax in the year 1911, and whatever contingent value they might have had was entirely wiped out by the comptroller's action, like the total destruction of a chattel by fire or other catastrophe.

"Hence, any effort to make the restored or rehabilitated shares liable for this tax would be an assault to weaken or destroy a federal instrumentality."

If you find the facts to be as stated in the application it is my judgment that if the state of Ohio were to enforce the collection of the second half of the taxes and cognizance thereof were taken by the federal government, it would not be unlikely that the federal government would take away from the state the convenient right which it has heretofore enjoyed of collecting taxes on bank shares through the instrumenality of the bank itself.

I concur in the conclusion reached by Judge Jelke, that there is every legal and equitable reason for the remission of this tax; to insist upon its payment would be equivalent to assessing the innocent and unfortunate shareholders upon their loss, because:

1. The tax was based upon a valuation reported in bad faith by an agent designated by the state.
2. The tax was illegally assessed.
3. An attempt to collect it would be vain and fruitless in many instances, and, in all, work a hardship without profit to the state.
4. An attempt to collect it would embarrass and tend to weaken and destroy a federal instrumentality.
5. The law and the public and private conscience demand it.

It has been my constant aim, during my incumbency in office, to allow no point on behalf of the state if there was any doubt whatever about it. The same principle applies to your honorable board; if either of us have doubts we should submit the matter to court. On the other hand, I take it that no public officer should permit fraud to stand as a shield between him and the discharge of his duty. I cannot conceive that any wrong will be done anybody by your assuming jurisdiction to hear and determine this case; and if you find that the officials of the bank acted fraudulently, and that taxes have been imposed two or three times greater than should have been imposed, that the cashier of the bank knew it at the time, you have a right to correct the returns as if listing the property de novo, and afford such relief as equity and good conscience demand.

Very truly yours,
TIMOTHY S. HOGAN,
Attorney General.

113.

TAXES AND TAXATION—PUBLIC UTILITY—APPLICATION OF EXCISE TAX AND PROPERTY TAX TO PUBLIC UTILITY COMPANIES—MANUFACTURING COMPANIES, REAL ESTATE COMPANIES AND CLEVELAND TRUST COMPANY, WHEN ENGAGED INCIDENTALLY IN THE BUSINESS OF FURNISHING ELECTRIC LIGHT AND POWER TO CONSUMERS—WHEN THE EXERCISE OF POWER ULTRA VIRES AND ILLEGAL.

Section 5414, General Code, specifies that the term "public utility" shall embrace electric light companies, and that the term also includes any plant or property owned or operated, or both, by such company.

Section 5416, General Code, specifies that any person, persons, firm, firms, copartnership, voluntary association, joint stock association, or corporation, wherever organized or incorporated, when engaged in the business of supplying electricity for light, heat or power purposes is an electric light company; and section 5483, General Code, requires the auditor to charge for collection from each electric light company, an excise tax for the privilege of carrying on its intrastate business. The term business as it is used these statutes, includes an incidental as well as the primary activity of a corporation.

Excise taxes are two sorts; those imposed upon the manufacture or sale of commodities; and those imposed upon pursuits or occupations. The latter is the form comprehended by these statutes. Excise taxes are imposed either by reason of a special privilege enjoyed, or because of an enhanced value attached to the business by reason of its nature, or by reason of the fact that the business is a natural monopoly.

The foundation of the excise tax, under these statutes, is based partly on each of these incidents. These incidents attach to a business, whether or not the same is pursued as an incident to the primary activity of a person, firm or corporation, or whether such business is itself the principal pursuit engaged in.

License taxes which are imposed in the carrying out of the police power have for their foundation, practically the same reasons which justify the imposition of excise taxes, and therefore, decisions construing the exercise of the power to impose license taxes may be applied in interpreting the right to impose excise taxes. The decisions relating to license taxes endorse the rule that an incidental business may be subject to a separate license or excise tax, upon the value thereof. When a corporation, therefore, is incidentally engaged in a manner not even independent of the primary purposes for which it was formed, such incidental activity may be taxed by reason of the fact that it is devoted to a public use and therefore charged with a public interest, under the above statutes, providing for the imposiion of an excise tax.

This rule is supported by the principle that the legislature is not presumed to have left open the question, whether or not, the business of supplying electric light and power was in reality an incidental or an independent activity.

Under the rule of State ex rel. vs. Taylor, where specific provision is not otherwise made, a corporation may be formed for the carrying on of but one specific primary purpose. Manufacturing companies, therefore, may not be authorized to pursue, in addition to the power to manufacure, the further independent power to dispose of electric light and power to consumers. The same is true as to corporations organized to construct and operate a public building; and the rule is also applicable to the Cleveland Trust Company, organized primarily for the purpose of conducting a banking business.

Under section 10212, General Code, however, natural or artificial gas companies, gas light or coke companies, companies for supplying water for public or private consumption; electric light companies, or any electric light and power company, or any water company; or any heating company, or any incline, movable or rolling road company, doing business in the same municipal corporation, may consolidate into a single corporation, and this statute is construed to give the implied power to form a corporation for the carrying on of any one or several of these businesses in the first instance. These rules do not apply to foreign corporations, which may be admitted to do business in this state in the performance of any number of purposes for which any one corporation may be organized to conduct within this state.

Any of these companies, however, may be engaged in the production of electric light and power for purposes incidental to their primary activities, and if when producing the same within these limitation, to prevent economic waste they dispose of their surplus current to outside consumers, such business may be authorized as incidental to their primary activity. Under these rules, therefore, when a corporation is authorized to pursue but one purpose, within the limitations aforesaid, it is not prevented from pursuing several businesses, providing that all businesses, not authorized by their primary purpose clauses, are indulged in as merely incidental to their principal business or purpose.

Inasmuch as the legislature cannot be presumed to have intended that the question, whether or not a business is or is not a public utility business, shall be left to the discretionary determination of the taxing power, and in view of the clean cut definitions comprehensive of the term public utility, as set out in the above statutes, the question as to whether or not such business constitutes a public utility, must be left to the determination of the court in a quo warranto or injunction proceeding, and therefore, when a corporation is supplying electric light or power to consumers, as set out in section 5416, General Code, whether incidental or primary, such business shall be subjected, by the taxing authorities, to the taxes provided for public utilities, even though it is supposed that the powers, in so conducting such business, are ultra vires. Regardless of the extent, therefore, to which a corporation may be engaged, in the business of furnishing electricity to consumers, regardless of the fact that it may be engaged in some other principal enterprise, to which the furnishing of electricity is subordinate, regardless of whether the furnishing of electricity is properly incidental to such other enterprise, or is virtually independent thereof, regardless of the declared purpose of the corporation, and regardless of the question of ultra vires, such company is, if it habitually and customarily furnishes electric current to consumers, an electric light company within the meaning of section 5416, General Code.

Such corporation, therefore, must make reports to the tax commission and pay excise tax on its gross receipts. Its property must also be valued for tax on a unit basis by the tax commission, upon property reports made to the commission. Such corporation is not required to make annual reports to the commission as a domestic corporation for profit, or as a foreign corporation for profit, doing business in Ohio.

The gross receipts required to be reported to the tax commission, upon which the excise tax is to be computed, under section 5417, General Code, are all the interstate receipts of the corporation so engaged in the operation of a public utility.

Under section 5419, General Code, all the real estate, personal property, moneys and credits, owned and held by such corporation, within this state, in the exercise of its corporate powers, or as incidental thereto, whether such property or any portion thereof is used in connection with such public utility business or not, must be reported and valued upon the unit basis by the tax commission.

COLUMBUS, OHIO, March 13, 1913.

Tax Commission of Ohio, Columbus, Ohio.

GENTLEMEN:—I beg to acknowledge receipt of your letter of August 20th, enclosing copies of the respective purpose clauses of the articles of incorporation of some fourteen corporations, and of your subsequent letter of August 21st, enclosing similar copies of purpose clauses of two other corporations. Your letters advise me that all of these corporations are supplying electricity, for light, heat or power purposes, to consumers within this state, and that in the case of each one of them this activity is subordinate or incidental to the principal business carried on by the company. You request my opinion upon the question as to whether the supplying of electricity, for light, heat or power purposes to consumers in Ohio, under these circumstances, constitutes these companies, or any of them, "electric light companies" or "public utilities," as defined in sections 40 and 39, respectively, of the act of June 2, 1911, 102 O. L., 224; and, specifically, as to whether or not, as such electric light companies or public utilities, these companies, or any of them, are required to make property returns to the tax commission, under section 46 of said act, and to have their plants or properties valued for simple taxation by the commission; and whether, also, such companies are liable, on the one hand, for reports to the commission, under section 81 of said act, and excise taxes, under section 92 thereof, or, on the other hand, for reports to the commission, under section 106 or section 110, as the case may be, of said act, and franchise taxes, under section 109 or section 113 thereof.

I may anticipate slightly by saying that the question is not necessarily the same as to all of these companies; that is to say, it is not a single legal problem that is involved, but, perhaps, several. These corporations, according to the provisions of their respective articles of incorporation, fall into, at least five classes; and the questions involved ought to be separately considered and determined as to each one of these five classes.

In the first class of corporations enumerated by you in your letters may be placed those corporations which are given, by their articles of incorporation, express power to furnish, supply or sell electricity. The corporations falling into this class, with the purpose clauses of their respective articles of incorporation, as quoted by you, are as follows:

"Bedford Electric Light & Power Company.

"Maintaining and operating an electric light plant, an electric power plant, and a water power plant in and about Bedford, Cuyahoga county, Ohio, and the doing of any and all things necessary and incident thereto."

"Mantua Light, Heat & Power Co.

"Manufacturing, producing, furnishing, selling gas and electricity, or either, for heat, light, power and other purposes, and for doing all things incident to said purpose."

I do not place in this class those corporations whose charters attempt to authorize them to carry on, jointly, the business of some form of manufacturing and that of furnishing electric current. Such corporations will be placed in a separate classification, which I will next define, and the members of which I will now enumerate.

The second class, at the nature of which I have already hinted, consists of those corporations, the purpose clause of whose articles of incorporation attempt to authorize the business of furnishing electric current for light, heat or power purposes, in connection with some distinct enterprise other than the furnishing of water, gas or other similar utilities. In most instances, as will be observed by the purpose clauses quoted, this distinct activity is that of manufacturing in some form or another. The members of this class, with the purpose clauses of their respective articles of incorporation, as quoted by you, are as follows:

"Operating a steam and water power plant to create power sufficient to run a mill for the grinding of grain, and to run electric motors and dynamos for the furnishing of light and power, and to do all other things incidental thereto."

"Elyria Milling & Power Company.

"Owning, controlling and operating flour and grist mills and for buying and selling at wholesale and retail and dealing in grain, seed, flour, feed and kindred merchandise, and for the purpose of producing, marketing and supplying heat, power and light generally, and of owning all machinery, privileges, real estate and other property needed in carrying on such business, and for doing all things incident to such purposes and business."

"The Long Manufacturing Company.

"Owning and operating mills for the manufacture of flour, feed and all kindred products; dealing in flour, grain, feed, cement, concrete blocks, bricks, coal, salt, lime and kindred products, and for the production of electricity by and with the power used in said milling business to light and heat said mills and premises, and of disposing of and selling the surplus current, and do all things necessary and incident to the supplying of said current for lighting streets and heating, lighting and furnishing power to business places and dwellings."

"Sheriff Street Market and Storage Company.

"July 31*st*, 1890.

"The business of the storage and sale of provisions, goods and merchandise on behalf of the company or others; the constructing, owning and operating buildings adapted to such business, and the leasing of the same or parts thereof or rights thereunder to others, for use in the sale of meats, fish, poultry, flowers, vegetables and fruit; all kinds of personal property, food substances and marketable commodities.

"Amendment to the above signed June 6, 1895.

"Adding to the third clause thereof relating to the purpose for which the corporation is formed, the following clause to wit:

"Also the manufacture and sale of ice, and the production by suitable machinery and appliances, of refrigeration, steam and electric power, and electric light, and the furnishing of same to persons and corporations for their use in connection with heating, lighting or refrigeration of buildings or operation of machinery."

In the third class I would place those corporations which are simply organized as manufacturing companies, without express authority or attempted authority to engage in the business of selling electric current. These corporations are as follows:

"The Ohio Pail Company.

"Changed September 6th, 1898, from 'Udall-Shillito Co.'

"Manufacturing, purchasing and dealing in wooden ware, including pails, tubs, material for same, and all things incident thereto."

"Pickering Hardware Company.

"The manufacture and sale of general hardware of every kind and description, including hoop iron, cotton duck and other goods and merchandise and everything connected with or incidental to the carrying on of a general hardware business."

"The Smith Gas Power Co.

"Manufacturing purchasing, selling and dealing in any and all kinds of gas engines and gas producers, and in any and all tools, machinery, devices, appliances and supplies used in manufacturing the same, and all things incident thereto."

"Stockport Milling Company.

"Erecting and operating a flour and feed mill."

In the fourth class may be grouped together certain corporations organized for the purpose of dealing in real estate and erecting buildings. The members of this class are as follows:

"The Caxton Building Company.

"Acquiring and holding real estate, erecting buildings and furnishing to tenants and others space, power, light and other facilities."

(It will be observed that this purpose clause is like those of the second class of companies, above defined and enumerated, in that the furnishing of light to "others" is specifically enumerated as a purpose of the corporation. It is deemed better, however, to include this company with the other building companies.)

"Commercial Tribune Building Co.

"Copy of purpose clause in charter.

"For the purpose of acquiring by lease or purchase land in the city of Cincinnati fronting on Walnut street and on Government place and erecting thereon a building and maintaining and renting said building and for purposes incidental thereto."

"The Dayton Arcade Company.

"Constructing and maintaining buildings to be used for hotels, store rooms, offices, warehouses and factories."

"The Ely Realty Company.

"Leasing, buying, selling and dealing in real estate, and the constructing and maintaining buildings and improvements thereon, together with all things incident and necessary thereto, and is to exist for a period of twenty-five years."

"The Palace Hotel Company.

"For the purpose of constructing, purchasing or leasing, using and maintaining a building or buildings with the necessary land to be used as a hotel and for stores, store rooms, offices or apartments, with all appendages and accessories connected therewith."

In the fifth class I would place, alone, the Cleveland Trust Company, which is a consolidation of a corporation of that name and one known as The Western Reserve Trust Company. It will not be necessary to quote these articles of incorporation, as neither of them contain any recital of power either to hold real estate for the use of the company, or to dispose of electric current. In short, the enumerated powers of both of the original companies, now consolidated into the one corporation, are simply those of "safe deposit and trust companies" as defined by statute.

Before proceeding to discuss the several questions, which it seems to me are thus raised, I deem it proper to refer to the fact that you call attention, in your letter of August 20th, to two opinions of this department, one rendered by my predecessor, Hon. U. G. Denman, on June 25, 1910, and found on page 272 of the attorney general's report for the year 1910, and the other rendered by myself, to the commission, on February 11, 1911.

In the first of these opinions Mr. Denman held, in short, that a corporation, organized for the purpose of holding real estate and erecting buildings thereon, has no power to generate electricity and to sell a small portion, presumably the surplus thereof, to consumers other than the tenants of its own building; and that, because of this conclusion of law, a corporation, so organized, would not be subject to the then excise tax, measured by gross receipts, being the same tax above referred to, and being provided for by substantially the same statutory language as is incorporated in the present law, with certain exceptions hereinafter to be pointed out. The opinion also held, as a necessary corallary to this conclusion, that such a corporation would be liable to the franchise tax provided for by the then existing law, which said tax, and the exemptions therefrom are substantially the same under the present law, above referred to.

This opinion, if correct, would be of much assistance in the solution of some of the questions presented by your letter. At the outset of my investigation into these questions, then, I was confronted with the necessity of determining whether or not to follow this opinion. Upon careful consideration, I came to the conclusion that whatever might be the ultimate law of the case, the reasoning upon which the opinion was based is not sufficiently persuasive to permit me to give my unquestioning assent to the conclusions therein expressed I therefore determined to consider the question considered by Mr. Denman de novo.

The second opinion to which you refer, singularly enough, related to one of the companies above enumerated, to wit: The Ely Realty Company. In it I stated my view of what property, under the then existing law, to wit: the act of May 10, 1910, 101 O. L., 399, this corporation should report to the tax commission for valuation as a "public utility," assuming the corporation to be a public utility, or some of the property owned by it to be such. My opinion was not invited at that time upon the question as to whether or not this company was a public utility, the question submitted to me being as follows:

> "What property is to be considered in determining the value of the property of a public utility; is it only that part devoted to the public utility business, or is it the property of the company, where it is an incorporated company?"

In my opinion I used the following language:

> "It is, inferentially at least, acknowledged that such sale of surplus current constitutes the company a public utility within the meaning of the act of May 10, 1910, * * *."

So that I did not, at that time, consider the question now presented to me, with respect to The Ely Realty Company, or similar companies. I have no hesitancy in considering this question without reference to what I stated in my opinion of February 11, 1911.

I deem it proper, however, to point out that the statutory provisions upon which the opinion last above referred to was based have been materially amended, as I shall hereinafter more specifically show; so that, in any event, the former opinion, in the matter of The Ely Realty Company, is no longer to be taken as a statement of my views of the law, even as to the point upon which it was given.

Further, before taking up the several classes into which I have divided the corporations enumerated by you, I think it best to deal with a question which seems to be common to all of these cases, and the answer to which, if returned in a certain way, will render unnecessary consideration of any of the other questions which have suggested themselves to me.

It is expressly stated in your letter that each of the corporations which you mention is devoting its capital and efforts principally to some business or activity other than the furnishing of electric current to consumers. I take it that by this you mean that in point of fact this is so as to each corporation of which you speak; that is, that you have ascertained that the corporations in question are, each of them, engaged in such other principal business regardless of the "purpose" defined in their several articles of incorporation. I wish, specifically, to state that this is my understanding of your letter, for the reason that my first impression of your meaning was that you had determined the "principal business of the respective companies," of which you speak, by reference to the purpose clauses of their articles of incorporation. Upon examining some of these articles of incorporation, however, such as those of The Bedford Electric Light & Power Company and the Mantua Light, Heat and Power Company, for example, it became apparent to me that, at least in these instances, you could not have had the technical "purpose" of the incorporation in mind in speaking of the principal business "in which these corporations are engaged." I therefore, came to the conclusion, as I have already stated, that you desired me, first, to consider the effect, if any, of the fact that these companies supply electric current for light, heat or power purposes, to consumers incidentally to some other principal business, or, as common parlance has it, as a "side line." That being the case, I shall consider this question entirely separate from and unrelated to the question as to the bearing of the charter powers of the several corporations upon the ultimate answers to the several questions involved in your letter.

The following provisions of the General Code, consisting of certain sections of the act of June 2, 1911, above referred to, are quoted in this connection. The interpretation of their meaning is involved here, as well as in connection with other questions which will be hereafter discussed.

> "Section 5415. (Sec. 39.) The term 'public utility' as used in this act means and embraces each corporation, company, firm, individual and association, their lessees, trustees, or receivers elected or appointed by any authority whatsoever, and herein referred to as express company, telephone company, telegraph company, sleeping car company, freight line company, equipment company, electric light company, etc. * * * and such term 'public utility' shall include any plant or property owned or operated, or both, by any such companies, corporations, firms, individuals or associations.
> "Section 5416. (Sec. 40.) That any person or persons, firm or firms, co-partnership or voluntary association, joint stock association, company or corporation, wherever organized or incorporated:
> "* * * * * * * * * * * *
> "When engaged in the business of supplying electricity for light, heat or power purposes, to consumers within this state, is an electric light company. * * * *"
> "Section 5483. In the month of October, annually, the auditor of state shall charge, for collection from each electric light * * * company, a sum in the nature of an excise tax, for the privilege of carrying on its intrastate business, * * * *"

The ultimate question here is, of course, as to the meaning of the word "business," as repeatedly used in the above sections, and elsewhere in the act of 1911. Does this term contemplate an incidental activity, or is its meaning limited to the principal pursuit of the individual or company to which the law is intended to apply? Both meanings are possible from the etymological standpoint. Thus, Webster's definition of the word, when used in this sense, is as follows:

> "That which busies, or engages time, attention, or labor, as a principal serious concern or interest; specif.: (a) customary employment; regular occupation * * *; (b) any particular occupation or employment habitually engaged in, esp. for livelihood or gain * * *; (c) A particular subject of labor or attention; a temporary or special occupation or concern."

Three shades of meaning are apparent here, the third of which must, of course, be rejected, as it could not be supposed that the legislature intended to tax one only occasionally devoting his capital or energies to one of the ends mentioned in the statute quoted. The first and second meanings given by Webster, however, both denote continuity, habit or custom, and the question now under consideration necessitates choice between them. The lexicographer just quoted seems to regard the primary meaning of the word as that one which signifies principal activity as distinguished from secondary pursuit. The Century Dictionary agrees with the definition above given, as to the primary meaning; the authority of the Standard Dictionary is to the contrary. I think it probably true that, strictly speaking, the term does denote the principal activity of an individual or a corporation; yet, it is equally true that in common understanding it is possible for one to be engaged in more than one business at the same time.

We have, however, to deal, not with the meaning of the word used in ordinary parlance, but with the construction of a taxation statute considered as a single legislative act. I have quoted the three sections above referred to as containing other language which tends to shed light upon the meaning of the word "business," as used therein. For example, I have quoted section 5415, General Code, because your question relates, in part, to property taxation, and because it is made apparent by this section that the property tax and its definitions are dependent upon the meaning of the excise tax provisions of the law. Stated more explicitly, the definitions now found in section 5416, or at least most of them, have been in the law since 1896, when the forerunner of the present excise tax law was first enacted. It was not until 1910 that the scheme of property valuation, formerly embodied in what was known as the "Nichol's law," originally applicable only to telegraph and telephone companies, was extended to all the subjects of excise taxation; it was then, and not till then, that the purely artificial term "public utility" came into existence. It would, perhaps, be more accurate, in the development of this line of reasoning, to quote the exact language of the original excise tax law. This, however, would necessitate considerable repetition, and would add greatly to the length of this opinion. It will be sufficient, I think, to call attention to the fact that the definitions of section 5416 antedated those of section 5415, and that the scope and intent of the act of 1911, as a whole, in so far as it applies to so-called "public utilities," is to be determined ultimately by ascertaining, independently, the meaning of the definitions of said section 5416.

I have also quoted section 5483, because the subject matter of this section was a part of the original excise tax law, which I may here state, came to be known as the "Cole law." The phrase that has always been in that law is "a sum in the nature of an excise tax." In 1911 the qualifying phrase "for the privilege of carrying on its intrastate business" was introduced. I think that the fact that the definitions of section 5416 were originally enacted for the purpose of defining the subjects of excise tax is material, and that consideration of this fact is helpful in determining the meaning of the word "business," as used in that section. Cooley defines the term "excise" as follows:

> "Inland imposts levied upon articles of manufacture and sale, upon licenses to pursue certain trades, or deal in certain commodities, upon special privileges, etc." (Cooley on Taxation, page 6.)

This definition is quoted with approval in the federal income tax cases, sub nom Flint vs. Stone Tracy Company, 220 U. S., 107-151.

It at once appears, from this definition, that excises are really of two sorts; those imposed upon the manufacture or sale of commodities, and those imposed upon pursuits or occupations. It is obvious, of course, that the tax under consideration is of the latter class.

There seems to be in the mind of the author of the above quoted definition a further classification of occupation excises; into those laid upon license to pursue occupations, on the one hand, and those laid upon, or by virtue of, special privileges, on the other. This distinction is not of great practical importance, however, as is apparent from the following quotation, on page 31, of the same author's work:

> "A tax on the privilege of carrying on a business or employment will commonly be imposed in the form of an excise tax on the license to pursue the employment; and this may be a specific sum, or a sum whose amount is regulated by the business done or income or profits earned. Sometimes small license fees are required, mainly for the expense of regulation; but in other cases substantial taxes are demanded, because the persons upon whom they are laid would otherwise escape taxation in the main, if not entirely. Instances of hawkers, peddlers, auctioneers, etc., will readily occur to the mind. The form of a license, though not a necessary, is a convenient, form for such tax to assume, because it then becomes a condition to entering upon the business or employment and is collected without difficulty. But it is equally competent to impose and collect the tax by the usual methods."

Indeed, while "privilege" is a favorite theoretical foundation for excise taxation, and seems indeed to be the foundation for the tax in question, if the language of section 5483, supra, is to be taken as a guide, yet, it has seemed to me that, except in certain instances, the application of this principle is very elusive; that is, it is not every "company" referred to in section 5416 which is the recipient of special privileges from the state of Ohio, or from any government. No "messenger company," for example, enjoys any special privileges or immunities under the laws of Ohio. There are other "businesses" defined in the section which enjoy no special privileges in law; but, on the contrary, all of them are subjected to unusual restrictions.

Discussion of this sort is mainly academic, and without quotation of authorities or further elaboration I content myself with the statement of the opinion that the "privilege" of which the statute speaks is not one created by law, such as the right of eminent domain, but rather one arising from the peculiar facts and conditions surrounding the business in question. Thus, it will be found, I think, that each one of the numerous kinds of "companies" referred to in section 5416 present peculiar problems in taxation. It must be acknowledged that the ordinary property tax cannot be equitably applied to any of them, because of the added value inherent in the tangible property of all such companies, by virtue of its use, in connection with other property, as a part of a single plant or system, which said value was recognized and defined by the supreme court of the United States, in the case of Adams Express Company vs. Ohio State Auditor, 165 U. S., 683. The legislative motive for the enactment of the excise tax may be, in part, found in the effort to reach this enhancement of value. This, however could not have been the sole motive. Prior to the enactment of the act of 1910 some of the companies upon which excise taxes were imposed were also subject to property valuation upon the unit basis. I will not go deeply into this matter, as the commission is familiar with the history of legislation on this point. With the act of 1910, however, each one of these companies became subject to both kinds of taxation, as the above quoted sections in part show, and as your request for opinion itself demonstrates. So that, at the present time, it is reasonably clear that the imposition of the excise tax cannot be regarded solely as a legislative effort to reach the increment of value resulting from the use of tangible property, with other like property, as a part of a system or plant.

Rather, I think, must the legislative motive and the definition of the word "privilege" be found in the fact that practically all of the businesses enumerated in section 5416 are natural monopolies. This is not true, of course, of every one of them, but it is at least true of most of them. It is true, for example, of the business of supplying electric current to consumers; a consumer of this commodity cannot purchase in the open market. A change of custom from one source of supply to another is attended by considerable inconvenience and expense. This fact renders the person or corporation engaged in this business the recipient of a "privilege" which is owed, not to the law, but rather to economic facts.

But, whichever of these two ideas is found to be the foundation of the "privilege" which is the real subject of the "excise tax" in question, it is clear that neither of them is in any way related to or dependent upon, the fact that the business in question constitutes the principal activity of the one who carries it on. It is just as difficult, for example, to appraise, for simple taxation, the electric light plant of an individual or company which carries on another and paramount business, as it is to perform the same act with reference to the property of one exclusively engaged in the business of supplying electric current. Similarly, the economic advantages enjoyed by one who sells electric current incidentally to another occupation, arising out of the nature of the electric current business as such, are equally as great as those of one who does nothing excepting sell electric current.

In other words, because it is clear that the "privilege" upon which the excise tax is laid is a natural one and not a legal one, it seems reasonable to suppose that the legislature intended the tax to be exacted from those so using their property as to give rise to the privilege, whether such use constituted the principal pursuit of such person or not.

This being the case, it follows, I think, that the excise tax in question must be regarded as an ordinary business or occupation tax, just as if it were a tax laid on storekeepers, hucksters, or draymen; and the meaning of the word "business" may be determined by the authority of cases arising under such tax laws.

The following decisions have helped me to a conclusion upon the point now under discussion:

In Savannah vs. Feeley, 66 Ga., 31, it was held that:

> "Whether the right to run * * * vehicles to and from the railroad depots in the city of Savannah is a part of the business of * * * keeping public stables in said city, so as to make a tax upon the business of keeping such establishments include also a tax on the business of running such vehicles to and from the railroad, depends upon the custom of such trade or business in the city." (1st Syl.)

It will be observed that the court here holds that where there are separate license taxes imposed upon two different pursuits, one of which may be incidental to another, the payment of the tax on the principal business absolves from the payment of the similar tax on the incidental pursuit.

On the other hand, it is held, in Thibaut vs. Kearney, 45 La. Ann., 149, that a planter, keeping a store on his plantation, and selling goods and liquors to his employes, exclusively, falls under the terms of the law exacting a license from everyone "doing a business of selling at retail," although it was testified that the keeping of the store in question was purely incidental to the operation of the plantation.

It was also held in Thibaut vs. Hebert, 25 La. Ann., 838, that a planter who had already paid the license tax on the business of conducting a store incidentally to his plantation operations, and who regularly slaughtered cattle on his plantation, for the purpose of supplying meat to such store, was also liable for a license tax on "the business of slaughter-houses." It is clear, in this case, that the slaughtering of the cattle was purely incidental to the keeping of the store, and that the keeping of the store, in turn, was purely incidental to the operation of the plantation.

A case which follows the Savannah case, above cited, is Bell vs. Watson, 3 Lea, 328. But the same court, in Memphis & Little Rock Railroad Company vs. State, 9 Lea, 118, held in the language of the syllabus that:

> "A railroad company which organizes an express company and carries on a regular express business, as a part of the business of the railroad company, under the management and control of its officers, and by its own agents, is subject to pay a privilege tax imposed by statute upon express companies."

It is here to be noted that the reasons asserted by the court in deciding these two cases are not necessarily inconsistent. It was held, on the one hand, that station running was a part of the livery stable business; and, on the other, that the express business was not a necessary part of the railroad business. Thus the cases are reconciled, and the rule is established that two businesses may be separate and distinct as subjects of taxation, although one is carried on incidentally to another by the same person.

A case which follows the Louisiana plantation cases, although said cases are not cited in the opinion of the court, is Alcorn vs. State, 71 Miss., 464. Here the tax involved was not called a license tax but a "privilege tax," and was levied "on each store." It was held, in the language of the syllabus, that "the owner of a large plantation, having numerous tenants, who keeps a store, from which he furnishes supplies to tenants at the usual credit price, for profit, is liable to the tax, though he only keeps such goods as are necessary for the tenants and refuses to sell to any others."

Still another similar case is the Delaware & Hudson Canal Company case, 8 Pa. County Ct., 496, wherein it was held that:

> "Where a company, owning and operating mines, regularly sells a particular brand of powder, exclusively, to his own employes, for use in her mines, usually at a profit, but sometimes for less than cost, the company is a dealer and liable to assessment."

The tax involved in this case was called a "mercantile license tax" but, in fact, no license was issued and the assessment was an exercise of the power of taxation and not the police power. See Eastman taxation in Pennsylvania, section 1114, and cases cited.

In Brooklyn vs. Broslin, 57 N. Y., 591, it was held that an ordinance licensing and regulating cartmen "did not apply simply to those pursuing the separate and independent business of cartmen; but where one having carts for his own business lets them out for hire * * * without having obtained a license, he is liable for the penalty imposed by said ordinance for such violation thereon." As is apparent from this language of the syllabus, the contention was directly made in this case that the ordinance applied only to those carrying on a distinct and independent business and not to those letting carts for hire, incidentally to the carrying on of some other business. This contention was overruled.

In Laslie vs. District of Columbia, 14 App. Cases, D. C., 407, it was held that an act of the legislative assembly of the District of Columbia, requiring dealers in second-hand personal property to pay a license tax, applied to one whose principal business was that of a retail dealer in new bicycles, but who, in the usual course of that business, received second-hand bicycles as part payment for such new bicycles and resold them as second-hand machines.

On the other hand, it was held, in Eastman vs. Chicago, 79 Ill., 178, that one whose principal business consisted of keeping a retail bookstore, and who, in connection therewith, bought and sold second-hand books, was not liable to procure a license as a dealer in second-hand goods.

It will be observed that some of these cases, perhaps the majority of them, are license cases, and it would be proper to object that they are inapposite here, because the enactment and enforcement of license laws constitute an exercise rather of the police power than the taxing power. It might be sufficient, upon this point, to state that the underlying reasons for excise taxation are substantially the same as those for license. Consideration of this point, however, suggests another angle from which the use of the phrase "public utility," in the present law, may be viewed. While it is true, as already remarked, that the definitions of such terms as "electric light company," "railroad company," etc., found in the present law, were enacted long prior to the legislative recognition of such companies as "public utilities," yet, the choice of this latter term is not without weight as suggesting the true meaning of the word "business," now under discussion. With some exceptions, and by no means as a universal proposition, it may be stated, I think, that one basis for the adoption of the peculiar scheme of taxation applicable to such companies as are enumerated in the act is found in the fact that all of them, by devoting their capital and property to some public use, have invoked the exercise of the police power in such a way as to impose upon the state peculiar governmental burdens, for which the excise tax may be deemed a compensation. This idea is not expressed in Judge Cooley's definition, but judicial authority for it is not lacking.

In Southern Gum Company vs. Laylin, 66 O. S., 578, Burket, J., delivering the opinion of the court, and speculating upon the nature of the franchise tax upon corporations, used the following language (page 595):

> "An excise tax may also be imposed on corporations to compensate the state for the additional burden sustained by the state and the people by reason of property being held by artificial bodies * * *."

He cites, on this point, Adler vs. Whitbeck, 44 O. S., 539, which is a luminous decision, directly in point here. The question involved in that case was as to whether or not the tax levied on the business of trafficking in intoxicating liquors was a license and, therefore, prohibited by the constitution of 1851. In holding that it was not, the court, per Minshall, J., in the course of the opinion, at page 565, uses the following language:

> "Whenever the pursuit of any business is attended with such inconvenience and evils as to make it a source of burden to the general public, beyond what results from the pursuits of men in general, it is competent to the legislature to burden the business distinguished in this regard, with such taxes as will afford indemnity to the general taxpayer for the increased burden thus imposed upon him, and tend to repress the evils connected with the business itself."

It seems clear that if the inconvenience to society in general, resulting from the conduct of a particular business, is a proper ground for excise taxation, inconvenience and expense to government, necessitated by the making and enforcing of regulations pertaining to a business, is also a proper ground for such sense and not in the exact sense used in the statute, do engage the attention and powers of government to an increasingly large degree, by way of regulation and the enforcement of public rights, is a patent fact. In this connection, it is significant that the same general assembly which enacted the tax commission act of 1911 passed also the public utility law, so-called, in which a new and summary method of regulating such "public utilities" was created, involving the expenditure of much state revenue, and in which the very definitions incorporated in section 5416 are used to define the businesses subject to such control.

Now, the expense of governmental regulation is sometimes, and perhaps often, compensated by the exaction of license fees, as conditions precedent to engaging in business. As made clear, however, in the foregoing authorities, the same end may be attained by the imposition of simple business or occupation excise taxes. Therefore, it is proper, I think, to look to license tax cases for authority upon the construction of occupation tax laws.

Indeed, now that the test of what constitutes a public utility, for purposes of regulation, is substantially the same by express enactment as is the same test with reference to the exercise of the power of taxation, it would be proper, in my judgment, to apply the reasoning of the court in cases defining the extent of the police power, as such, in the regulation of such so-called public utilities. As is well known, the leading case establishing the foundations of this power is that of Munn vs. Illinois, 94 U. S., 113, in which Mr. Justice Waite, delivering the opinion of the supreme court of the United States, used the following language, on page 126:

> "Property does become clothed with a public interest when used in a manner to make it a public consequence, and affect the community at large. When, therefore, one devotes his property to a use in which the public has an interest, he, in effect, grants to the public an interest in that use, and must submit to be controlled by the public for the common good, to the extent of the interest he has thus granted."

What constitutes devotion to a public use is in itself an interesting study, which might, with profit, be pursued in this connection, but from which I refrain, because of the limitations of this opinion. For example, in Zanesville vs. Gas Light Company, 47 O. S. 1, natural monopoly is distinctly held to be the basis of a peculiar public interest in the business, which proposition has already been alluded to in this opinion. Minshall, C. J., speaking for the court, on page 33, used the following significant language, which is applicable to many phases of the question raised by your query:

> "It is also argued that a gas company does not come within the reasoning of the principle upon which these cases (meaning Munn vs.

Ill., supra, and State ex rel. vs. Gas Company, 34 O. S. 572) have been decided; that it does not devote the use of its property to the public; that it simply manufactures gas at its works, and then sells it to the consumers, as the manufacturer of any article; and that the public have no use of its property, as in the case of warehousemen * * *. It is true the public has not the use of the property of a gas company as it has of a ferry, nor probably as it has of a warehouse, yet a gas company controls and supplies a public want, in a position that gives it, or may do so, a virtual monopoly of the supply; and so far as the public is concerned, it is immaterial whether the manner in which the want is supplied is termed a letting or selling of property or service. It is the virtual monopoly of the supply of the want that gives to the public the right to regulate the price demanded for it."

In reason, there does not seem to be any distinction as to the interest of the public in a business that enjoys a virtual monopoly, or that is otherwise devoted to public use, as between one purely incidental to another principal activity and one which is a principal or independent pursuit of the person or corporation engaged in it. This question, has, however, been directly raised in New York Cement Company vs. C. R. Cement Company, 178 N. Y. 167. A corporation had purchased, by intermediate conveyance, a canal from the company which originally constructed and operated it. The principal business of the corporation was that of manufacturing cement; its works were located upon the bank of the canal, which it attempted to use, solely, for the purpose of conveying its own product to tide water. This, of course, was a mere incident to its principal business. A competing company, also engaged in the manufacture of cement, might, by bill in equity, to restrain this corporation from excluding its boats from the canal or from exacting tolls for the use of the canal in excess of those prescribed by law for canal companies. The court granted the relief prayed for, holding that so long as this canal was used for the purpose of transportation it should be regarded as a public highway.

The board of trade of the city of Chicago, a corporation under the laws of the state of Illinois, conducted as its principal activity an exchange hall, upon the floors of which, between certain prescribed hours of each business day, its members transacted the business of trading in grain and provisions. So extensive and so important did this business become, that, ultimately, the prices at which commodities exchanged on its floors virtually determined the market prices of such commodities in the extensive territory tributary to the city of Chicago, if not in the country at large, and indeed, to a certain extent, throughout the civilized world. For many years the board of trade permitted telegraph companies to collect and transmit reports of the dealings made on the floors of the exchange. Subsequently, the board of trade made certain rules governing the dissemination of such information. The appellant corporation was organized for the purpose of buying and selling grain on commission, and had been availing itself of the so-called "ticker service" of the telegraph company, under arrangement with the board of trade. The board of trade undertook to discontinue the service of appellant, though appellant offered to submit to all reasonable requirements adopted by the board. Appellant thereupon sought an injunction, which the court, on the authority of Munn vs. Illinois, granted. In discussing the reasons for the opinion, Baker, J., used the following language:

"If the statistics with reference to the individual business of the members of the association and the aggregate business of its members had, from the start, been gathered and compiled at the expense of its members, and for their sole use, it may be it would be strictly private property, held in trust by the board for the use and benefit of such members, and wholly free from any public interest therein. But the board did not so exercise its franchise and so conduct its business, but admitted the telegraph companies to the floor of its exchange, and permitted and encouraged them from day to day * * * to gather these statistics * * * and telegraph them * * * throughout the land, to whomsoever would pay for such information * * *

"The facts that the board of trade is a private corporation and that the statistics of these dealings, collected, as we have stated, are private property, are not conclusive that such statistics are not charged with a public interest, and that there is no duty due the public with respect thereto. * * *"

Although the question is not discussed as such, it is clear that the real issue in this case was as to whether or not a corporation, purely private in its principal aims, could incidentally devote a part of its business to public use and become subject to regulation thereof. The court's answer to this question was in the affirmative.

Indeed, many apt examples of such a state of affairs might be imagined. Thus, a lofty office building is a purely private institution, but the elevator service maintained therein is clearly charged with a public interest and subject to the regulatory power of the state, although it is purely incidental to the maintenance of the building itself.

I think it is clear, then, that a business activity, purely incidental to another enterprise, and not even independent of it, may become peculiarly charged with a public interest; that as such it may become the object of police regulation; that as the object of police regulation it may be licensed; and that instead of licensing such an occupation, a business or occupation excise tax may be laid down upon those engaged therein.

All the foregoing considerations, then, together with the weight of authority as disclosed by the decisions cited, tend to establish the conclusion that the phrase "the business," as used in section 5416, General Code, supra, means, not the principal activity of the individual or corporation, but rather that degree of activity along the lines defined, which, by reason of continuity, amounts to the doing of business within the second of the three meanings of the word "business" as defined by Webster, supra. There is still another reason for this conclusion. The whole "public utility" tax law applies as well to individuals, partnerships and voluntary associations as to corporations. It would, doubtless, be difficult to determine, in many instances, whether an individual, for example, were principally engaged in one occupation or another, and it would be difficult, in any event, to determine, either as to a corporation or an individual, whether the supplying of electric light, for example, were incidental to some other business, in the extreme sense, or had attained to such relative proportions in an individual case as to render it independent of, though subordinate to, the principal business in which the individual or corporation might be engaged. For example, a company whose principal business is mining coal might operate so extensively in that line of endeavor as to require the production of an enormous amount of electric current. The surplus of this current might be used to light the streets and private dwellings of a whole town, yet, in proportion to the total volume of business transacted by the corporation this activity might be purely incidental and clearly subordinate to the principal business of the corporation. Another corporation or individual might generate electric current enough to operate a manufacturing plant and, having surplus current to dispose of, might sell the same to a dozen consumers; yet, in proportion to the total amount of business done and capital invested, the furnishing of electric current to consumers would be more extensive in this case than in the other one imagined. The consideration of convenience, therefore, would support the view that the legislature did not intend that these questions of fact should be left open, and opportunity for injustice and unequal operation of the taxation laws be thus afforded, by using the phrase "the business" in a sense which would compel the ascertainment, in a given case, of whether or not the person or corporation engaged in one of the enumerated enterprises was so engaged as an incident to some other enterprise.

To summarize, then, because the excise tax law, which was the original act in which the definitions in question were found, whether founded upon practical difficulties of taxation, the existence of peculiar privileges, or the existence of special burdens and duties to the general public, growing out of the carrying on of the business, is founded upon conditions which have no relation to the question of incidental or principal occupation; and because, further, the conditions which made such businesses subjects of excise taxation, and even of property taxation, by peculiar rules of valuation, are such as to render impracticable and unjust, the application of any such test, I have reached my conclusion upon the first question suggested by your letter. That conclusion is that a person, partnership or corporation is "engaged in the business" defined by section 5416, when it is found doing any of the acts therein enumerated, as a continuous or habitual activity, whether as a principal pursuit, or an independent, though subordinate, undertaking, or as a purely incidental undertaking.

In laying down this broad principle, however, I deem it proper to state that it may be subject to certain exceptions. I have no such exceptions specifically in mind, but realize that the nature of the subject is such that it is unsafe to state rules too rigidly.

From your letter, therefore, it appears that each and every one of the corporations you mention, as being engaged in the business of supplying electricity, for light, heat or power purposes, within the meaning of section 5416, are presumptively to be regarded as "public utilities," both for excise tax and for simple taxation purposes, and hence, under the ruling given you in the matter of the Connecting Gas Company, in an opinion of recent date, must be regarded as exempt from the payment of the franchise tax. There must now be considered, however, certain suppositious reasons why these companies are, some of them, not to be regarded as such public utilities but, because of the operation of the law applicable to private corporations as such, as distinguished from individuals and others subject to the excise tax, are taken out of the rule just laid down.

Mr. Denman's opinion, already referred to, suggests one such reason. Applying the doctrine of State ex rel. vs. Taylor, 55 O. S. 67, to the purpose clause of the articles of incorporation of the company whose case was considered by him, he reached the conclusion that the sale of electric current was an undertaking ultra vires and, apparently, that the company, therefore, could not be considered as being engaged in the business of supplying electricity, but should discontinue this practice and pay franchise taxes upon its issued and outstanding capital stock.

Considering, now, the five classes of corporations referred to by me earlier in this opinion, I shall discuss as to each one of them, and the corporations therein, the question as to whether or not the furnishing of electric current, under the circumstances suggested by you, is beyond the corporate powers as defined in the articles of incorporation transmitted by you to me.

Before so doing, however, permit me to point out that whatever be the true doctrine in State ex rel. vs. Taylor, supra, it has no application to foreign corporations. The decision of the whole case is based, as I shall hereafter point out, upon the peculiar language of section 3235, Revised Statutes, now section 8623, General Code, which provides for the formation of corporations under the laws of Ohio. It is not every state, however, whose laws are so stringent as those of Ohio on this point. Many states authorize the formation of corporations for a diversity of purposes, and Ohio admits such foreign corporations to its borders, without limiting them as to the number of independent activities which they may carry on here. Section 178, General Code, which applies here, provides that before a corporation for profit transacts business in this state the secretary of state shall certify "that the business of such corporation, to be transacted in this state, is such as may be lawfully carried on by a corporation organized under the laws of this state, for such or similar business, or if more than one kind of business, by two or more corporations so incorporated for such kinds of business exclusively." Your letter does not state whether or not all the corporations you mention are domestic corporations; and from the names of some of them, I have suspected that they are foreign corporations. If that is the case, then, Mr. Denman's opinion, if correct, would not apply to such corporations at all.

Coming now to the first class of corporations mentioned by me, and assuming that both of them are domestic corporations, I beg to state that in my opinion the furnishing of electricity for light, heat and power purposes, to consumers, is not ultra vires as to either of them. The following provision is found in section 10212 of the General Code:

> "Any two or more electric lighting companies, natural or artificial gas companies, gas light or coke companies, companies for supplying water for public or private consumption; or any electric light and power company and any water company; or any heating company and any incline, movable or rolling road company; doing business in the same municipal corporation or which are incorporated and organized for the purpose of doing business in the same municipal corporation may consolidate into a single corporation in the manner and with the same effect as is provided for the consolidation of railroad companies."

It has been the opinion of this department, that where, as in this case, two corporations are authorized to be consolidated into one, such authority, by application, permits the original organization of a corporation for all the purposes which a consolidated company might be authorized to pursue. To hold otherwise would simply necessitate the original formation of two companies and immediate consolidation of the two into one, which would seem to be a useless formality.

As to the Bedford Electric Light & Power Company, therefore, the multiplicity of purposes expressed in its articles of incorporation would seem to be authorized by the provision that "any electric light and power company and any water company * * * incorporated * * * for the purpose of doing business in the same municipal corporation may consolidate into a single corporation * * *."

There is some doubt here, it must be admitted, as to whether the purpose of operating a "water power plant" is contemplated within the term "water company." It might be urged that the last mentioned phrase refers solely to companies maintaining and operating "waterworks." This is, at most, however, a doubtful question, and while the powers of a corporation are strictly construed as against the state, the evident intention of the incorporators of this company having been to comply with the section just quoted, I would not hold, in advance of an action in quo warranto at least, that the corporation, having elected to devote most of its capital to the water power business (which, I take it from your statement, is the case), is, therefore, acting ultra vires, because this purpose could not lawfully be joined with that of maintaining an electric light and power plant.

In this connection, also, permit me to point out that there are certain dicta in State ex rel. vs. Taylor, supra, which throw additional light upon the meaning of the court in laying down the strict rule of "singleness of purpose," in support of which the case is most often cited. The corporation concerned in that action was originally formed, prior to the enactment of the statute above quoted, "for the purpose of * * * organizing a manufacturing company * * * to engage in the business of manufacturing gas, electricity and furnishing natural gas for light, heat, power and other purposes as may be used by the citizens and corporations in Steubenville, Jefferson county, Ohio, and its vicinity." It was sought, by amendment, to add to this power that of operating a street railway by electricity, or other motive power, and the right to make this amendment was denied by the court. It was argued in behalf of the corporation seeking to make the amendment that, if it had been originally incorporated as a street railway company it might, under this power and incidentally thereto, have lawfully furnished light and power; so that the purpose of the amendment was simply to authorize the company to engage in a group of associated activities, which it might lawfully have engaged in if the language of its original purpose clause had been slightly different. Speaking of this contention the court, per Spear, J., uses the following language:

> "Though the major promise be conceded, do the conclusions follow? Full and due effect is to be given to all the words of the section. And this requires that we keep prominently in mind the words of the proviso, viz: 'nor shall any corporation by amendment, change substantially the original purposes of its organization.' That is, whatever may be done by way of enlarging the original objects, or adding to them, one thing cannot be done, viz.: the original purpose of the organization cannot be substantially changed. In this case, what is it? That purpose, as expressed, manifestly is to furnish light, heat and power. Gas, whether natural or artificial, is the source of light and heat. So, also, is electricity, and that agency possesses the further property of generating power. It would seem, therefore, not unnatural or improper to authorize a company to combine the business of furnishing natural gas for the purpose indicated with the business of manufacturing gas and electricity and furnishing those commodities for the same and a kindred purpose, to wit: power. Light and power being generated by the same agency, common results from the same cause or causes, the two objects sought are germane. The main purpose of this company seems to have been light and heat, an incidental purpose power, i. e., power induced by electricity. The incident would follow the principal purpose. So it would seem that a company organized for the principal purpose of acquiring and operating a street railway by electricity might naturally, having obtained authority to do so, join with the incidental purpose of furnishing light and power within the location where it is authorized to operate. And no substantial reason is perceived why, > if a company had been incorporated for either of the main purposes here indicated, it might not, by proper amendment, be also authorized to join the incidental purpose referred to."

While the court was discussing, in this case, a hypothesis suggested by counsel, I am disposed, in view of the somewhat explicit concessions embodied in the language quoted, to hold that the production of light and power, by whatever agency, constitutes a single purpose, within the meaning of the decision in State ex rel. vs. Taylor.

As to the Mantua Light, Heat & Power Company, it seems that it is clear that if this corporation is, in fact, furnishing gas and electricity in the same municipal corporation, it is within the provisions of section 10212. True, there are here, also, certain difficulties; that section authorizes electric lighting companies to consolidate with artificial gas companies; and seemingly it does not authorize the consolidated corporation to furnish electric power. For reasons apparent upon the face of the quotation from the decision in State ex rel. vs. Taylor, and because it is notoriously true that the furnishing of electric current for power is, in fact, a part of the "electric light business," I am of the opinion that this corporation is within its corporate power in furnishing electricity for light, heat or power purposes, and in so doing is, as is the Bedford Electric Light & Power Company, really engaged in one of its principal undertakings, authorized by statute, and not in an incidental pursuit.

The second class of corporations above referred to presents greater difficulties, assuming all of them to be Ohio corporations. As a general proposition, a manufacturing company may not be authorized to engage independently in the business of furnishing electric current. Certain extraordinary incidental powers are conferred upon such corporations by sections 10135 to 10143, inclusive, General Code. These sections are silent as to the power in question; and under the rule of State ex rel. vs. Taylor, which is to the effect that the word "purpose," as used in section 3235, Revised Statutes, now section 8623, General Code, is designedly employed in the singular number, it clearly follows that a manufacturing company cannot be formed for such purpose, and the additional and independent purpose of operating an electric current plant.

This, however, is not tantamount to holding that electric current may not be generated for the purpose of producing power sufficient to operate the manufacturing plant of the corporation, or that any surplus current generated for that purpose may not be sold to consumers. Sales of surplus power, as incidental to the principal business of manufacturing, will be treated of in connection with the third class of corporations defined by me. At the present it is sufficient to point out that while it may be unlawful for a manufacturing company, to engage in the business under discussion, as an independent activity, yet, if, in point of fact, in an individual instance, the corporation merely sells its surplus power or current, its acts in this direction could not be regarded as ultra vires, whatever the effect of the attempted authorization thereof in the articles of incorporation, unless such incidental activity is, as such, of itself, ultra vires.

The effect of express language in articles of incorporation, not permissible under section 8623, General Code, as construed in State ex rel. vs. Taylor, supra, must be considered. The rule here is succinctly stated in Thompson on Corporations, second edition, section 174, as follows:

> "The rule is well settled that when a corporation is organized under a general law the law itself limits the powers of the corporation and the nature and extent of the corporate privileges; and the powers, > privileges and immunities specified in the legislative act authorizing its organization cannot be added to or enlarged by the charter or other instruments. In all cases where there is conflict between the charter or articles of incorporation and the general law, the latter governs. But the mere fact that the power enumerated—in the regulations of the association, for example—are in excess of those conferred by the general law, will not entirely invalidate the charter; the charter is valid as to the legitimate powers of the corporation and the enumeration of unauthorized powers is treated as surplusage. * * *" (Citing numerous cases, of which see in particular People ex rel. Peabody vs. Chicago Gas Trust Company, 130 Ill. 268, 8 L. R. A. 497.)

This proposition of law is so well settled as to need no further discussion or elaboration. Applying it to the several purpose clauses of the corporations of the second class defined by me, it follows that if these corporations are organized under the laws of Ohio for the purpose of manufacturing the rule in State ex rel. vs. Taylor limits the independent activities of the corporation to that single purpose, and a recital of the additional power to generate and sell electric current is a mere nullity, and confers upon the corporation, at least as against the state, no power to engage in such business as a separate and independent activity. This is particularly true of the Elyria Milling & Power Company and the Long Manufacturing Company. As to the former the phrase "and for the purpose of producing, marketing and supplying heat, power and light generally" is mere surplusage. As to the latter, at least, all that follows the phrase "disposing of and selling of surplus current as therein found" is surplusage. The entire amendment of June 5, 1895, to the articles of incorporation of the Sheriff Street Market & Storage Company is, if this corporation be a domestic corporation, illegal and void. As in the case of manufacturing companies, corporations formed for the purpose of conducting market houses have certain specific powers which will be found defined in sections 10151 to 10156, inclusive, General Code; but the power to engage in the independent business of manufacturing and selling ice, and producing steam and electric power and current, for supplying consumers, is not included therein. This company, therefore, has no legal authority to engage in these businesses independently of its market house business, despite the language of the amendment.

The case of the Camden Electric Light and Milling Company is a peculiar one. The language of this purpose clause is very ambiguous. On its face, the corporation is not authorized to engage in the business of milling at all, but its authority is limited to the creation and disposition of power by steam, water and electricity, which, as already observed, constitutes a single purpose. It is true that this power is to be generated primarily for the purpose of running a mill, but the corporation is not authorized to run the mill, except by inference. If this company is principally engaged in the business of milling, and incidentally, or in a subordinate way, is in the business of selling electric current, it would seem that quo warranto would lie, not for the purpose of ousting the corporation from the sale of electricity, but rather for the purpose of ousting it from operating a mill. In the absence of more explicit information, I would be unable to hold that the Camden Electric Light and Milling Company is not authorized to supply electricity for light, heat and power purposes.

In conclusion, then, as to the second class of corporations, excepting the Camden Electric Light & Milling Company, I am of the opinion that none of them are authorized to carry on the business of supplying electric current for light, heat and power purposes, as an independent enterprise, whether paramount or subordinate to another activity. Your letter states, however, that the corporations enumerated by you are selling electric current, not as an independent business, but incidentally to some other business. In an effort to cover the whole field suggested by your letter, and, particularly, by your reference to former opinions of this department, I have heretofore discussed, and shall continue to discuss the status of these corporations for taxation purposes upon both assumptions, namely: first, upon the assumption that the electric current business of the corporations in question is more extensive than could properly be determined incidental to their other business; and, second, upon the assumption that such electric current business is carried on by each of these corporations in a manner purely incidental.

This question is virtually the same as to those corporations placed by me in the second class, and those in the third class, for reasons already pointed out. That is to say, the recital in the articles of incorporation of corporations of the second class of the power to manufacture and distribute electric current being void and mere surplusage, these manufacturing corporations are, in law, upon the same footing as those of the third class, whose articles authorize merely the conduct of some manufacturing enterprise, and are themselves open to no criticism.

As to both classes of corporations, then, always assuming all of those mentioned by you to be domestic corporations, the carrying on of an independent business of supplying electricity to consumers, in addition to the principal business of manufacturing, is clearly ultra vires. No argument is necessary upon this point. An action in quo warranto, or possibly one in injunction, upon relation of the attorney general, would undoubtedly lie to prevent a manufacturing corporation from engaging in such an independent enterprise. Under the law of ultra vires minority stockholders of the corporation might restrain the carrying on of such business, and various legal consequences might ensue. A corporation would be, in my judgment, carrying on an independent business within the meaning of this principle if its sales of electric current were not confined to the surplus current generated by its plant. That is to say, under modern conditions, almost every manufacturing operation necessitates the employment of mechanical power. One of the most convenient methods of supplying power for such purposes is by the generation of electric current. The installation and operation of an electric power plant is clearly a proper incident to the carrying on of the manufacturing business by a corporation organized for that principal purpose.

It is probably true, and I have assumed it to be true, that without the investment of additional capital, and at a very slight increase in operating expense, a power plant, reasonably adapted to the needs of the manufacturing plant, as such, can be made to generate more than sufficient electric current to supply such needs. For example, it may be, and in many instances doubtless is, true that the manufacturing plant, as such, is in operation only during the hours of the usual working day, whereas, without appreciable additional cost, the dynamos in the power plant could be kept running during the night season as well. So long as this is true it would be an economic waste not to make use of such apparatus during the idle hours of the plant if use can be made thereof.

Now, it is well known, of course, that the same electric current which generates power to operate a manufacturing plant is capable, by means of other apparatus, of producing light. I am of the opinion that, under circumstances like these, the use of the plant and equipment of manufacturing company, and the installation of necessary incidental equipment, like wires, poles, transformers and arc or incandescent lamps, for the purpose of avoiding economic waste, and in a manner such as not to interfere with the operation of the manufacturing plant, nor to require the enlargement, for that purpose, of the electric generating plant, as such, would be purely incidental to the manufacturing business, or at least would be a corporate activity incidental to the principal purpose of manufacturing; therefore, such an enterprise would not be ultra vires. On the other hand, if the power plant itself, meaning now the means of generating electric current, is designedly made greater than the necessities of the manufacturing plant require, for the purpose of selling current commercially, for light or power purposes, then, the carrying on of the commercial electric business would be an independent activity of the corporation, and clearly beyond its corporate powers. The difficulty of the case arises from the impossibility, as I see it, of drawing any distinct line between what constitutes an independent business and what constitutes an incidental activity. For reasons that will hereafter appear I shall not attempt such an undertaking, but, for convenience, prefer to discuss the case where the corporation is clearly acting ultra vires, separately from that in which the corporation's sales of electric current are purely incidental.

Let the latter of the two imagined cases be first considered. It will at once be suggested that the general discussion in which I have already indulged myself is in point here, and furnishes an answer to the question as to whether or not a corporation which, incidentally to its principal activity, supplies electricity for light, heat or power purposes, to consumers within this state, is "engaged in the business" of so doing, within the meaning of the excise tax law, and is, therefore, a "public utility" within the meaning of other provisions of the tax commission act of 1911. However, in the prior discussion I have not considered the question as affecting a corporation, as such, it being the rule, as laid down in State ex rel. vs. Taylor, that a corporation can be organized for but one purpose. Does it, therefore, follow that a corporation can have but one business, within the contemplation of the tax laws?

Mr. Denman's answer to this question seems to have been in the affirmative. Upon careful consideration I find that I cannot agree with him. In my opinion it does not follow that, because a corporation may have but one purpose of incorporation, it may not, in pursuance of that purpose, lawfully engage in more than one "business," as the word has been defined by me, provided such business is incidental to the purpose defined.

At the risk of repetition, permit me to point out that the word "business," as used in section 5416, General Code, includes within its meaning a customary or usual pursuit, purely incidental to some other principal undertaking. This definition was framed without regard to the rule of State ex rel. vs. Taylor. Considering it in the light of that decision, however, I am satisfied that it applies to corporations as well as to individuals. Some of the authorities cited by me in framing this definition are in point here, but I need not repeat their citation. In addition thereto, however, the case of State ex rel. vs. Taylor, itself, is authority for the proposition that the word "purpose," as used in the statute, does not mean "business," except as the latter word may be used in the first sense defined by Webster, as above quoted; that is to say, unless the word "business" be used as denoting the principal activity of the one engaged therein. I have already quoted the portion of the opinion of the court in the case cited, upon which I base the conclusion reached by me, but beg leave to repeat a part of that quotation in this connection:

> "It would seem, therefore, not unnatural or improper to authorize a company to combine the business of furnishing natural gas for the purpose indicated with the business of manufacturing gas and electricity, and furnishing those commodities for the same and a kindred purpose * * *." (Page 65.)

Here is a clear statement of the principle that was in the mind of Judge Spear when he wrote the opinion in State ex rel. vs. Taylor. That principle, is, if I understand it correctly, that several businesses, i. e., customary activities which may be differentiated, may be carried on by a corporation in furtherance of a single purpose of incorporation.

I have said enough, it seems to me, to demonstrate that a purely incidental corporate activity may be, for taxation purposes, regarded as a separate "business;" and also that it is in this sense that the word is used in section 5468, General Code, in so far as the same applies to corporations.

Coming now to the second imagined case, I beg to state that in my opinion the fact, when ultimately determined, that a manufacturing corporation is carrying on the business of supplying electricity for light, heat or power purposes, in a manner so extensive as to render such activity ultra vires, does not alter the case so far as the application of the taxation laws is concerned. In an action in quo warranto or injunction, for the purpose of restraining the corporation from exceeding the bounds of its granted power, and those powers incidental thereto, there would inevitably arise a question of fact. The court would have to receive evidence to determine whether or not, under the peculiar circumstances surrounding the business of the respondent or defendant, its electric current supply business was so conducted as to make it an enterprise independent of and unrelated to the principal purpose of incorporation. No two cases will be exactly similar, I apprehend, and the result of any one such action could not be forecasted by the application of any hard and fast rule. It seems unreasonable to suppose, therefore, that the general assembly would frame a tax law, the application of which would depend upon such an uncertain factor.

Furthermore, I have already suggested that in my opinion the test which is laid down for the application of the police power of the state to a public service business is the same test by which to determine the application of an excise tax laid upon public service occupations as such. If that be the case, there are decisions directly in point here.

In Arkansas & Louisiana Railway vs. Stroude, 77 Ark. 100, the action was brought under a statute rendering "all telegraph companies doing business in this state" liable in damages for mental anguish for neglect in transmitting messages. It appeared that the railroad company maintained, in connection with its railroad, a line of telegraph, and held itself out to the public as a telegraph company receiving and transmitting messages at commercial rates. The plea of ultra vires seems to have been directly made. At least the following is found in the opinion of the court, page 114.

> "The evidence shows that appellant, though organized as a railroad corporation, and operating a railroad, was also operating a telegraph line along the line of its railroad, and was engaged in the telegraph business, serving the public generally for pay, along its said line. It is estopped to assert that it was acting beyond its power in so doing."

So also, in New York Cement Company vs. C. R. Cement Company, supra, the plea of ultra vires was made, eliciting the following comment on the part of the court:

> "The defendant raises the further point that the exercise by the Consolidated Rosendale Cement Company of the franchise granted by the state to the Delaware & Hudson Canal Company would be ultra vires. This is a question between the defendant and the state of New > York, with which the former has no concern, as it is estopped from raising it by boldly assuming the position which it now occupied. So long as the state of New York raises no objection in the premises the defendant will not be heard to complain."

Manifestly, these cases would have had direct application to the question here involved if the same had been raised prior to the year 1902. That is to say, if the excise tax on the business done were the only tax exacted from public service corporations, surely, a corporation doing a public service business could not be heard, as a defense against liability to tax, to assert that it was without corporate power to engage in the business in question. I imagine, however, that Mr. Denman's opinion, for example, may have been inspired in part by the fact that since the date mentioned all, or rather nearly all, corporations doing business in Ohio are subject to one of two privilege taxes—the excise tax under consideration and the franchise or "Willis tax," also referred to by you. Prior, at least, to the amendment of the excise tax law, in 1911, the application of the rule, as I have defined it, would result in a loss of revenue to the state, as compared with the result if the ruling were opposite, because of the exemption clause now embodied in section 5518, General Code, section 129 of the act of June 1, 1911, and which has always been a part of the so-called Willis law. That section, in its present form, is in part as follows:

> "An incorporated company, whether foreign or domestic, owning or operating a public utility in this state, and as such required by law to file reports with the tax commission and to pay an excise tax upon its gross receipts or gross earnings as provided in this act * * * shall not be subject to the provisions of sections one hundred and six to one hundred and fifteen, inclusive, of this act."

It is obvious, of course, that a corporation engaged but incidentally in a public utility business, and producing for itself thereby but a small amount of gross receipts or gross earnings from such business, would, by virtue of this provision, escape franchise taxation entirely; and in many cases would probably pay less taxes to the state than if not considered to a public utility. As I shall hereinafter point out, I do not believe that this is the present state of the law, but inasmuch as it was at one time the law, it may be proper to consider whether or not the fact that the state might be put to a disadvantage in revenue because of the doing of a public utility business in an illegal manner, or even in a lawful incidental way, by a corporation not organized for that purpose, would give to the state the right to treat such a corporation as one other than a public utility company, without first determining the corporation's rights in the premises by appropriate ouster or injunction proceedings.

On this point Mr. Denman seems to hold in the affirmative; that is to say, he is of the opinion that, a corporation's electric light business being ultra vires, the state may, without intermediate action of any sort, treat the company as one liable for Willis law fees. Upon careful consideration, I have reached the opposite conclusion. I have been able to find no authority sustaining the right of the state to question the exercise of corporate franchises otherwise than by action in quo warranto or injunction. I am firmly of the opinion, in the absence of such authority, that while the state clearly has the right to restrain ultra vires acts of one of its corporations it must do so by one of these two means; and I am further of the opinion that until a question of this sort has been legally adjudicated, the acts of a corporation acquiesced in by its stockholders will be presumed, as against the state, to have been committed within the scope of its express or implied power. Society Perun vs. Cleveland, 43 O. S. 481. In short, I do not believe that it is within the power of the taxing officers of the state, simply because a greater revenue might be produced thereby than by some other course, to ignore the fact that a corporation is engaged in a public utility business, and subject to excise taxation and property valuation, as such, when it may be apparent that the corporation has no legal right to engage in such business.

Looking at this question from another point of view, I am of the opinion that the enactment of the Willis law of 1902, even though as a part of the same scheme of taxation as that embodied in the Cole law, did not change the scope and effect of the terms used in the latter, and adapted from an act already in effect for some six years prior to that date. Whatever corporations were, prior to that time, subject to the payment of excise taxes as "railroad companies," "electric light companies," etc., continued to be so subject to excise taxation, notwithstanding the enactment of the franchise tax law and of the proviso now incorporated in section 5518, as part thereof.

Coming now to the fourth class of corporations enumerated by me, it is apparent that a somewhat different question is presented thereby, in so far as a determination of what activities are properly incidental to the principal business of constructing and maintaining buildings for office and hotel purposes is concerned. Special provision as to this class of corporations is found in section 10210, General Code; but this section does not authorize such corporations to furnish light and heat, even to their own tenants. Application of strict rules of construction to this statute, as well as to others already spoken of in this opinion, would lead to the conclusion that such power, not having been enumerated in a statute providing for the special powers of such corporation, is to be excluded from the implied authority thereof. I do not believe, however, that this strict rule can prevail. Modern business methods do not sanction its application. In the case of a hotel, for example, it is well understood that the obligation of the keeper of a hotel is to furnish his guests with light and heat, and such furnishing is a part of his ordinary business. It is not otherwise with a modern office building; and, for sufficiently apparent reasons, I am of the opinion that the furnishing of electric light to the tenants of such a building is within the implied powers of a corporation organized for the purpose of maintaining the same. Sales of surplus current, by hotels and office buildings generating the same primarily for their own use, are upon the same foundation, and governed by the same rules as have been already discussed in this opinion with respect to similar sales from factories.

In the light of the plantation storekeeper cases, above cited, it might be asserted that although the furnishing of electric light to the tenants of an office building is a recognized and essential part of the business of maintaining an office building, yet, it constitutes a separate occupation within the meaning of the excise tax law. A little reflection, however, will show the error of any such supposition. It is not those who are engaged in the business of supplying electricity for light, heat and power purposes, who are subject to the tax, but those only who are engaged in the business of supplying electricity for such purposes "to consumers," who are so subject. I think it is clear that one who furnishes electricity which he himself "consumes" is not within the meaning of this definition. I am of the opinion, also, that a hotel keeper, or the owner of an office building, who supplies electric light for his guests or tenants, without separate charge therefor, would be, in effect, the "consumer" of the electricity so supplied. If the current were procured from someone else and paid for by the hotel or the office building this would be clearly true; and I do not believe that the generation of the current in the building itself by the proprietor thereof makes any material difference.

Where, however, the tenants of an office building are separately charged for the electric current that they actually consume, whoever furnishes them such current, is, in my opinion, an "electric light company" within the meaning of the statutes under consideration, even though he be the proprietor of the building itself, and even though no service outside of the building may be undertaken by him. I advise, therefore, that wherever it is made to appear that an individual or corporation, owning an office building, is charging his tenants for electricity furnished them, by so much per unit consumed and measured, such a person or corporation constitutes an "electric light company" within the meaning of an act under consideration.

In all respects other than those specifically mentioned the reasoning and conclusions heretofore expressed in this opinion apply fully to the fourth class of corporations, consisting of those organized for the principal purpose of constructing and maintaining a hotel or office building.

In this connection one other possible variation of facts has occurred to me. If a building company, organized for that purpose, should lease its building, when constructed, to another party, and should furnish to its lessee the electric current generated on the premises at so much per unit consumed, without, in addition thereto, furnishing any current to any other person or consumer, a very different question would arise. Inasmuch, however, as this is evidently not the case with any of the companies referred to by you, I need not pass upon this question.

I have set off by itself the case of the Cleveland Trust Company; not alone because it differs from many other of the corporations enumerated by you, but also because, if I am not mistaken, it affords an instance of a rather common practice. It appears that this corporation is organized with the powers of a safe deposit and trust company, which are found enumerated in section 9816 et seq., General Code. The section cited provides in part that:

> "Safe deposit and trust companies * * * may provide a proper and secure fireproof building or buildings * * *."

There is nothing in the statute expressly qualifying or explaining the meaning of the word "proper." It might be supposed that this meaning is limited to such buildings as are "proper" for the housing of the safe deposit vaults, which, in the same section, such corporations are authorized to maintain. It is a well known fact, however, that a large number of trust companies in this state have proceeded under this statute to erect large office buildings, and that, in many cases, the business of managing the office building has become as important as, if not more important than, that of doing a safe deposit and trust business, which such corporations are authorized to transact. It is generally for the purpose of conducting these buildings as office buildings, and furnishing light to the tenants thereof, that such companies operate electric light plants. Such an activity is, therefore, in a sense, incidental to the incidental power of the corporation, and is quite remotely connected with the business of receiving valuables on safe deposit, and accepting trusts. For reasons already stated, however, this condition is immaterial. Under the facts of the case corporations, like the Cleveland Trust Company, should be regarded as office building companies, and should be, regardless of the question of ultra vires, taxed as public utilities if current is furnished outside the building maintained by them, or if current is furnished to tenants of the building at rates based upon the amount of current consumed by such tenants, respectively.

One additional question has suggested itself to me. Inasmuch as the statutes uses the words "public utility," which is a phrase having a well understood meaning, is not this choice of terms to be given some weight, and would, therefore, so slight an embarkation into the business of supplying electricity to consumers as serving, say a half dozen, small consumers, by the use of surplus current, constitute a corporation or an individual, so far as that is concerned, a "public utility," within the meaning of the law? I have reached the conclusion, in answer to this question, that the extent of the service to consumers is immaterial as affecting the question as to whether or not an individual or corporation, supplying electricity to consumers, is a "public utility" within the meaning of the act. My reasons for reaching this conclusion have all been expressed in dealing with other points in the course of this opinion. I will enumerate them again in this connection:

In the first place the term "public utility" was unknown to our statute law until 1910, whereas, the definitions now found in section 5416, General Code, supra, were formulated for the most part in 1896, and have never been changed. Hence, as a proposition of logic, it follows that all "electric light companies" within the meaning of the original definition of such companies are "public utilities." That is, it follows that the term "public utility" is, after all, an artificial one.

In the second place, the definition of what constitutes a public utility, for purposes of regulation, as found in the public utilities act of 1911, and the definitions of the various kinds of public utilities therein enumerated and set forth, are copied verbatim, almost, from the old excise tax definitions. It is impossible to escape the conclusion that the legislature intended that whatever should be a "public utility" for excise tax purposes should be regarded as such for all state purposes. Particularly is this true as evidenced by the fact that in the so-called public utilities act of 1911 is found the following language:

> "Section 4. The term 'public utility' as used in this act shall mean every corporation * * * defined in the next preceding section (in which most of the definitions of the original excise tax law are enumerated), except such public utilities as operate their utilities not for profit."

If the term 'public utility' had an independent meaning of its own, this exception would not have been necessary, and its inclusion here is a rather convincing evidence of the legislative meaning and intent.

In the third place, if the determination of what constitutes a "public utility" should be made dependent upon the facts of each case the result would be a taxing law, incapable of just and exact enforcement. It might be easy to say that the furnishing of electric current to a single consumer is not a holding out of one's self to the public as engaged in the business of furnishing electricity; the same conclusion might easily be reached in the case of the furnishing of such current to a half dozen consumers; but there is no place where the line between what constitutes that which is not a public utility and what constitutes that which is a public utility can be drawn. Perhaps it is true, in the abstract sense, that the intention of the producer of electric current is the determining factor; but this intention is one that must be inferred from his acts and, in the last analysis, it becomes a different question in every individual case. Now, it is not customary for legislatures to draft occupation tax laws in such an impractical manner; the definitions of such laws have been, as I think the citations in this opinion will demonstrate, rather rigidly construed, for the very sufficient reason that there could have been no motive for enacting any such definitions, excepting for the purpose of the removing of doubtful questions and producing a law which could be easily understood and applied. If it had been the intention of the legislature to tax those individuals and corporations, and those only, who held themselves out to the public as "public service companies," within the broad meaning of the term, then, there would have been no use in adopting the rigid definitions found in section 5416, General Code. The best analogy which occurs to me here is that of our liquor tax law, wherein it is provided that "the phrase 'intoxicating liquor' as used in this chapter * * * means any distilled malt, vinous or any other intoxicating liquor." So long as the question as to whether or not liquor is "intoxicating" were left open each case arising under the laws pertaining to the traffic therein would be decided upon its own facts, and lack of uniformity in result was inevitable. There could, therefore, have been no motive for the adoption of this definition other than the elimination of this source of inequality, and of all question as to the "intoxicating" quality of distilled, malt and vinous liquor, as a question of fact. State ex rel. vs. Kauffman, 68 O. S. 635; LaFollette vs. Murray, 81 O. S. 474.

I think the same legislative motive may be found in the definitions of section 5416, and I believe that it is not a fact of any weight or materiality that an individual or corporation, found furnishing electricity to consumers, may be able to show that he or it was engaging in this activity in a purely private way, without holding himself or itself out to the public generally as being engaged therein.

I am of the opinion, therefore, with respect to each and every one of the corporations enumerated by you that, regardless of the extent (absolute) to which they may be engaged in the business of furnishing electricity to consumers, regardless of the fact that they may be engaged in some other principal enterprise, to which the furnishing of electricity is subordinate, regardless of whether the furnishing of electricity is properly incidental to such other enterprise, or is virtually independent thereof, regardless of the declared purpose of incorporation of these companies, and regardless of the question of ultra vires, each one of them, if habitually and customarily furnishing electric current to consumers, is "an electric light company," within the meaning of section 5416, General Code. It necessarily follows that each of said corporations must make reports to the commission and pay excise taxes on their gross receipts; it also follows that the property of such companies must be valued for taxation on the unit basis by the tax commission of Ohio, upon property reports made to the commission. These conclusions are self-evident. I think it is equally self-evident that such corporations are not required to make annual reports to the commission as domestic corporations for profit, or as foreign corporations for profit, doing business in Ohio. The language of section 5518, in this respect is so plain as to forbid discussion, and that section has already been quoted in this opinion.

Two questions now suggest themselves to me, without consideration of which this opinion would not be complete:

1. What are the "gross receipts" of these corporations, required to be reported to the tax commission, and upon which the excise tax is to be computed?

This question is sufficiently answered, I think, by the language of section 5417, General Code, which provides in part as follows:

> "* * * The gross receipts for business done by an incorporated company, engaged in the operation of a public utility, shall be held to mean and include the entire receipts for business done by such company under the exercise of its corporate powers, whether from the operation of the public utility itself or from any other business done whatsoever."

This language is sufficiently broad, it seems to me, to include within its application corporations not organized for a public utility purpose, as well as corporations organized principally for that purpose. The test here is the same as that in section 5416, to wit: that of being "engaged" in the operation of a "public utility." In the same connection I may say that in my opinion the phrase "under the exercise of its corporate powers" does not affect the question either way. It is simply inserted here for the purpose of making sure that all the intrastate receipts of a corporation engaged in the operation of a public utility shall be used in computing the excise tax.

2. What propertry must be reported and valued upon the unit basis by the tax commission?

This question, it seems to me, is answered by the following language of section 5419, General Code:

"* * * In the case of incorporated companies, all the real estate, personal property, moneys and credits owned and held by such corporation within this state in the exercise of its corporate powers, or as incidental thereto, whether such property, or any portion thereof, is used in connection with such public utility business or not, shall be conclusively deemed and held to be the property of such public utility."

The same observations may be made as to this section as have already been made respecting the meaning of the language quoted from section 5417.

Both of these sections disclose the same obvious legislative intent, which may be referred to as two-fold. In the first place, it is the evident purpose of the legislature to eliminate troublesome questions of fact, or rather of mixed fact and law, such as have already been discussed with respect to the definitions in section 5416, and such, for example, as are involved in the pending case of the State of Ohio vs. Ohio Traction Company, in the common pleas court of Franklin county, with which the commission is familiar. In the second place, it seems to be the aim of this section to equalize the taxation of corporations, so that a corporation having a large income producing investments, which it might claim to be disassociated from its public utility business, and, therefore, not subject to taxation as such, should, in no event, contribute to the revenues of the state a lesser amount, by virtue of its exemption from franchise taxes under section 5518, supra, than an ordinary corporation would have to contribute under the so-called Willis law provisions of the same act.

It is these sections, which have produced the change in the law, already referred to, which render my former opinion, in the matter of the Ely Realty Company, of no present service; they are, for reasons already suggested, of equal application to corporations organized for the principal purpose of operating a public utility, and to corporations engaged in a public utility business incidental to the furtherance of some other authorized purpose.

I do not wish to be understood, however, as expressing any definite opinion as to the full purport and meaning of section 5418, as above quoted, with reference to the method of valuing such property as has been discussed in this opinion for simple taxation.

In closing, I deem it proper to say that I have assumed that all of the enterprises discused in the foregoing opinion are conducted as business enterprises. The commission has submitted to me the question, arising in other cases, as to whether or not the sale of electric current, without a view to profit, constitutes a "business," within the meaning of section 5416. That question will be separately considered.

Very truly yours,
TIMOTHY S. HOGAN,
Attorney General.

TAXES AND TAXATION — PUBLIC UTILITY — LIABILITY OF OFFICE BUILDINGS, HOTEL, APARTMENT AND STORE-ROOM COMPANIES WHICH SUPPLY REFRIGERATION AND LIGHT, POWER AND HEAT TO TENANTS AND OTHERS, FOR EXCISE PROPERTY TAX.

The definition of "public utility" as intended by the tax statutes is that set out in section 5416, General Code, and does not depend upon any tax rights defined, or upon the general understanding of the term.

When persons or firms, therefore, who own an office building, hotel, apartment house or store room, are engaged in the business of supplying to two or more tenants or others, for a separate charge therefor, electricity for light, heat or power purposes, or water, steam or heat, through pipes or tubing, for the purpose of either heating or cooling, such persons or firms come within the term "public utility" as contemplated in this statute, regardless of whether or not they are holding themselves out to the public as producers or suppliers of these commodities. They must, therefore, make their reports and pay the property and excise tax required of public utilities in this statue.

COLUMBUS, OHIO, September 20, 1912.

The Tax Commission of Ohio, Columbus, Ohio.

GENTLEMEN:—I beg to acknowledge receipt of your letter of September 6th submitting the following statement of facts and request for opinion:

"Two individuals, brothers, during their lives erected in the city of Cincinnati certain buildings which, from the description given of them in the statement attached to your letter, I assume to be intended and used for offices, hotel, apartment and store-room purposes—at least each of these buildings is used for one of such purposes and some of them are used for more than one such purpose. In each of these buildings has been installed a steam heating system plant, designed primarily to supply the tenants of the building or the occupants of the apartments, as the case might be, with necessary heat.

"In one of the buildings a refrigeration plant has been installed primarily for the purpose of supplying cooling facilities to store-room tenants. In two of the buildings electric light plants have been installed, primarily for the purpose of lighting the rooms in the buildings themselves.

"Although such heating, cooling and electric light plants were designed merely for the accommodation and service of the buildings in connection with which they were constructed, they produce, in fact, an excess of product which, in the practice of economy, the managers of the buildings have disposed of to parties in the neighborhood of the buildings other than the tenants thereof. Furthermore some of the tenants in the buildings in which electric light plants have been installed have been charged for electricity consumed by them upon a quantity basis, i. e., light is not included in the accommodation furnished in consideration of the rent paid but is independently furnished and charged for at so much per unit consumed.

"In one instance a public library occupies a portion of an office building rent free under rights granted by a college which formerly had an interest in this building. Heat is furnished to this tenant without charge but electric light current consumed by the library is paid for by it according to the number of units.

"The original builders of these edifices are dead and the property is now owned and operated by the widow of one of them and a trust company as trustee under the will of the other decedent, and under a deed of trust from his widow, each of these parties owning an undivided one-half interest in said properties. Upon these facts the question submitted is as follows:

"Does the business done by these parties constitute them a public utility within the meaning of the provisions of the act of May 31, 1911, and should they be required to report to the commission and be assessed by it and pay an excise tax upon the gross receipts from such business?"

As I have pointed out in an opinion of even date herewith respecting the public utility character of a number of different corporations, all definitions in the tax commission act of 1911 are dependent upon the excise tax definitions found in section 5416, General Code. So much of it as is pertinent to the present question I may quote here.

"Section 5416. Any person or persons, firm or firms, co-partnership or voluntary associations, joint stock association, company or corporation wherever organized or incorporated; * * *

"When engaged in the business of supplying electricity for light, heat or power purposes, to consumers within this state, is an electric light company; * * *

"When engaged in the business of supplying water, steam or heat through pipes or tubing to consumers within this state for heating purposes is a heating company; * * *

"When engaged in the business of supplying water, steam or heat through pipes or tubing to consumers within this state for cooling purposes, is a cooling company; * * *"

As held in the other opinion to which I have referred the phrase "public utility" as applicable to enterprises of the kinds embraced within the above definitions is descriptive merely and adds no qualification to these definitions themselves. My reasons for this conclusion are fully set forth in the opinion to which I refer.

Indeed the discussion in that opinion furnishes a complete answer to the question now presented; for although the other opinion related solely to the definition of an "electric light company" it is apparent at a glance that there is no essential difference between that definition and those of a "heating company" and a "cooling company" as above set forth.

Without further discussion, therefore I shall, in a summary manner state my conclusions with respect to the question and an outline for my reasons therefor, all of which will be found more elaborately discussed in the other opinion.

Inasmuch as these persons are continuously and habitually engaged in furnishing the utilities mentioned, they are "in the business" of so doing within the meaning of these definitions, although as a mere incident to the transaction of other and paramount business.

The persons outside of the buildings owned by these parties who are furnished with electric current or heating or cooling facilities by them, are "consumers" within the meaning of the definition.

Tenants of said buildings who are furnished electric current under contracts requiring them to pay for the amount consumed by them in addition to their rent are "consumers" within the meaning of the definition of an "electric light company" as above quoted.

The number of consumers, as above defined, of each of the commodities in question is immaterial as affecting the question at hand excepting that seemingly a plurality of consumers of each of said commodities is necessary in order to constitute the parties a "public utility" as to such commodity.

That is to say, the general assembly has by its definition foreclosed inquiry into the question as to whether or not the parties are "holding themselves out to the public" in any particular.

I am, therefore, of the opinion that these parties constitute a "public utility" within the meaning of the provisions of the act of May 31, 1911, upon the facts submitted, and that under section 41 of said act (section 5417, General Code), they must report to the tax commission for imposition of excise tax measured thereby "the entire receipts for business done * * * from the operation of" the several electric light plants and heating and cooling plants owned by them and so operated as to be constituted such "public utility," "or incidental thereto or in connection therewith;" and that by virtue of section 43 of such act (section 5419, General Code), they must report to the tax commission for assessment and valuation for simple taxation by the commission, their several "plants and all real estate necessary to the daily operations" of the public utilities and "all other property, moneys and credits owned or operated, or both, by them wholly or in part within this state, used in connection with or incidental to the operation of the public utility whether the same be held in common or by the individuals operating such public utilities."

Very truly yours,

TIMOTHY S. HOGAN,

Attorney General.

115.

TAXES AND TAXATION—PUBLIC UTILITY—CORPORATION ORGANIZED BY CONSUMERS FOR SUPPLYING ELECTRIC POWER FOR THEMSELVES AT COST—CORPORATION ORGANIZED TO CONTRACT FOR ELECTRIC POWER FOR CONSUMERS—LIABILITY FOR EXCISE AND PROPERTY TAXES.

The term "public utility" as employed in the tax statutes, is an artificial term and is not used in the sense generally accorded it. Its definition is that set out in section 5416, General Code, and the businesses therein enumerated come within the term, regardless of whether or not they are capable of exercising the power of eminent domain or other powers usually considered incidental to public service corporations, and regardless also of whether or not such business is accompanied by the privileges usually considered as accompanying such companies.

The term "business," as employed in these statutes, does not necessarily contemplate only utilities for profit. This is shown by the fact that certain statutes have taken the precaution to exempt "public utilities not operated for profit" for certain purposes.

The Factory Power Company, therefore, which was especially incorporated by certain factories for the purpose of furnishing power, heat, light and water for themselves at cost, really operates to add to the profits of these concerns, and although the activity of this corporation does not extend to the conducting of the power generated to the consumer, it is to be considered a public utility for the purpose of the excise and property taxes required by these statutes.

Inasmuch as the National Power Company is engaged solely in the business of contracting with another electric power company for a supply of power to individual shareholders, this corporation does not possess a plant which is contemplated as a necessity by the tax statutes, and it cannot be intended that such corporation be classed as a "public utility" so as to become liable for these taxes.

COLUMBUS, OHIO, October 30, 1912.

The Tax Commission of Ohio, Columbus, Ohio.

GENTLEMEN:—I beg to acknowledge receipt of two letters from you under date of August 21, 1912, submitting similar questions with respect to the status, under the "public utility" provisions of the tax commission act of 1911, of the Factory Power Company and the National Power Company, both Ohio corporations.

The facts respecting the two corporations, as disclosed by the correspondence and briefs of counsel submitted with your letters, are as follows:

> "The Factory Power Company is incorporated for the purpose of furnishing power, heat, light and water to consumers located, or who may hereafter be located in or in the vicinity of what is known as the Factory Colony Company tract,' in Oakley, Hamilton county, Ohio, and of constructing, owning, maintaining and operating the plant and other property, real and personal, necessary for the carrying of said purpose into effect."

It appears that this corporation was formed by the proprietors of a number of factories located on a certain tract of land. All of the stock of the corporation is owned by these persons. The company operates a plant for the production of electric power which, when generated, is transmitted to conduits and wires owned by the companies and individuals who own and operate the factories referred to. The plan of operation is designed to be co-operative, i. e., the electric current while meted out and sold to the different factories upon the basis of the amount used by them is charged for, as nearly as possible, at cost, it not being the purpose of the proprietors of the corporation to produce dividends upon its capital stock. The company enjoys no franchise rights from any municipal corporation, and has never exercised, and does not deem itself capable of exercising the power of eminent domain.

The National Power Company was organized for the following purpose:

> "Manufacturing, purchasing, selling and furnishing electricity for light, heat or power, and to do all business incident thereto."

As a matter of fact this company does not produce electric current and owns no real property or tangible personal property whatever, although it does possess a certain amount of cash in the bank. It appears that subsequently to the formation of this company it was ascertained by promoters thereof that the object of the corporation could be attained through a contract with the Cleveland Electric Illuminating Company, an admitted public utility. Therefore the plan of operation is that electric current conducted through the wires and conduits of the Cleveland Electric Illuminating Company to the meters of five certain consumers, where the amount of current consumed by them respectively, is measured. The National Power Company is then charged for the current so used, presumably at a reduced rate, and is accountable to the Cleveland Electric Illuminating Company for the amount so charged. The National Power Company then collects from the five consumers in question proportionate amounts which always equal in the aggregate the gross amount paid by it to the Cleveland Electric Illuminating Company.

The contract between the National Power Company and the Cleveland Electric Illuminating Company does not authorize the sale of electric current in the manner above described to any consumers other than the five certain consumers above referred to. The same question is submitted by the commission, in my opinion, with respect to both of these companies, viz.:

> "Is this company a public utility within the meaning of the provisions of the act of May 31, 1911, and should it report as such and its property be assessed by the tax commission, and should it be required to pay an excise tax as an electric light company upon its gross receipts from intrastate business, or should it report as a domestic corporation for profit and pay an annual fee as such as required by law?"

Two questions of law seem to be involved here; at least counsel for the Factory Power Company, who have submitted a brief, rely upon two separate points as follows:

1. It is claimed that because of the purely private nature of the business conducted by these companies they cannot be regarded as "public utilities" within the meaning of the term as used in the act of 1911. As a corollary to this proposition it is pointed out that the method of operation used by these two companies is so restricted as to render them ineligible to exercise the power of eminent domain. Cases are cited in support of this point.

2. The claim is made that because the design of the proprietors of the two companies and their actual practice in pursuance thereof is not to produce a profit from the operation of the plant or business of the company, they are not "engaged in business" within the meaning of the phrase used in the tax commission act.

I shall discuss the meaning of the tax commission act of 1911 with respect to the two points mentioned before attempting to apply the law to the specific cases in question.

To the first point above described some consideration has been given in the course of the opinion recently rendered to the commission upon the question as to whether or not the incidental furnishing of electric current to a few consumers by a corporation generating such current, primarily for its own use, constitutes such a corporation a "public utility," or, more accurately, an "electric light company" within the meaning of the act in question. Repeating in the abstract the reasoning set forth therein, I may say that the legislative history of the law incorporated in the act of 1911 is such as to make it apparent that the term "public utility," as therein used, is an artificial one which was applied, for the first time in 1910, to a certain class of business which had long been subject to excise taxation under what was formerly known as the "Cole law." The use of the term in question, therefore, cannot be given very much weight; so that it does not necessarily follow that it is the intention of the legislature to include within the class of "public utilities" created by it, those businesses only which enjoy some special privilege like the exercise of the right of eminent domain or hold themselves out as public servants to any given degree. In fact, when the foundation for the excise and property taxes imposed by the act upon such "public utilities" is carefully examined, it is found to be certain considerations which have nothing whatever to do with either of these facts. The definition which must then be examined is not any text writer's definition of the term "public utility" as he conceives it, but that employed in section 40 of the act of 1911, which is in part as follows:

> "Any * * * corporation * * * when engaged in the business of supplying electricity for light, heat or power purposes to consumers within this state is an electric light company."

This also is an artificial term in a sense. It is evident that the legislature intended to avoid fine distinctions and troublesome questions of fact, and for that purpose adopted a definition which could easily be applied to any state of facts.

The sole question, then, as to any of these companies is: Is the company engaged in the business of supplying electricity for light, heat or power purposes to consumers? The fact that the number of consumers may be small; the fact that a contract between the company and each consumer may be in every sense of the word "private," and the fact that there is no intention on the part of the company to hold itself out to the general public as a "public service company" in furnishing electric current—all such facts are alike immaterial in this connection.

As heretofore stated, the reasoning in support of the construction which I have given the law will be found more fully stated in the other opinion to which I have referred.

Upon the second point above mentioned the following authorities are cited in the brief of counsel: State vs. Boston Club, 45 La. Annual, 585, and Live Stock Company vs. Range Stock Company, 16 Utah, 59.

I have examined both of these cases and am of the opinion that they do not support the contention upon which they are cited. The first case was an action by the taxing authorities against a social club for liquor license tax.

The ultimate conclusion of the court was that the defendant was liable for the tax even though it was claimed that each of the members of the club to whom the drinks of liquor were sold, was already a part owner of the stock of liquor kept in the club—an argument very much like that made by counsel in respect to the form of the organization of the Factory Power Company. Counsel quote the following language from the opinion of the court:

> "Business in a legislative sense is that which occupies the time, attention and labor of men for the purposes of livelihood or for profit, a calling for the purpose of a livelihood. This is its meaning in statutes relating to license taxes."

This remark was found on page 589 of the report, and in view of the decision in the case was really obiter dictum. However, it is preceded on the page cited by the following language:

> "The definition of business by the lexicographers is sufficiently broad and comprehensive to embrace every employment and occupation and all matters that engage a person's attenttion or require his care. * * *
> "The meaning of the legislators, as expressed in the statutes is not as extensive."

So that obviously, the court in using the language quoted in the brief was referring to the specific statutes before it for judicial interpretation, and did not intend to lay down any broad or general rule.

The case of Live Stock Co. vs. Range Stock Co., supra, is one which involves the interpretation of a state statute imposing license or compliance fees upon foreign corporations "doing business in the state." The exact point decided was that a foreign corporation is not doing business in a state within the meaning of such a statute when it maintains an action in the courts of the state. In this respect the case is in entire accord with the best authority; but it is difficult to understand the applicability of the definition quoted by counsel from that case to the point decided by the court.

In the former opinion to which I have referred, I held that the word "business" as used in section 40 of the act of 1911, has the second of the following two meanings given by Webster:

> "That which busies or engages time, attention or labor as a principal serious concern or interest. Specif.: a. Constant employment; regular occupation; * * * b. Any particular occupation or employment habitually engaged in, especially for livelihood or gain."

It is apparent from this definition that while the woord "business" is perhaps most appropriately used to define an activity which is pursued for a livelihood or gain, yet this idea is not essential in the meaning of the term. On the contrary, having regard to the underlying reasons for the two taxes imposed upon electric light companies by the act of 1911, as I have discussed them in the other opinion referred to, I am clearly of the opinion that the purpose of the proprietors of such a company to make or not to make a profit by the operation thereof, is immaterial as affecting liability for the taxes.

If I had any doubt upon this question I think the same would be dispelled by consideration of the so-called "public utility act" of 1911 passed by the general assembly with evident reference to the definitions embodied in the tax commission act already quoted. The section of that act, designated as section

614-2 contains in haec verba many of the definitions found in section 40 of the tax commission act. Section 4, thereof, however, which roughly corresponds to section 39 of the tax commission act, contains the following exception. "Except such public utilities as operate their utilities not for profit."

Now it is the purpose of the public utility act to exercise the regulatory powers of the state over the same subjects of legislation as those upon which the taxing power is exercised through the sections of the tax commission act now under consideration. The identity of definition could not be ascribed to any other motive. Therefore, when the legislature, in framing the public utilities act, took pains to exclude from its operation such "public utilities as operate their utilities not for profit," it is clear that it must have been its understanding that without this exception, the class of companies to which it related would have been included within the natural meaning of the phrase "public utilities."

I am, therefore, of the opinion that the fact that an electric light plant or company is not operated with a view to profit in the shape of dividends is immaterial as affecting the question of liability to excise taxation and to valuation for property taxation upon the unit basis under the act of 1911. As a matter of fact, it is perfectly apparent that both of the above described corporations are used by their stockholders with a view to ultimate profit. The law in question looks to the substance and not to the form of things and these are, therefore, in my opinion, none the less business corporations (if that be material at all) because the profits which they produce may be distributed through decreased cost of service rather than in the shape of dividends on the capital stock.

The foregoing comments, then, constitute my conclusions with respect to the points advanced by counsel and the officers of the company. They do not, however, entirely dispose of either of the cases in my mind. There still remains an element common to the case of both companies which must, in my judgment, be taken into consideration. I refer to the fact that the Factory Power Company does not conduct the electricity to the point of consumption or measurement, and that the National Power Company does not even produce electricity and has no wires, poles, meters or any equipment constituting an electric light plant in the popular sense of the word, but merely amounts to a contracting agency in behalf of certain consumers of electricity. The question which arises from these facts may be stated as follows:

Is an individual, partnership or corporation "engaged in the business of supplying electricity to consumers" when it does not perform all or any of the services usually involved in that business as commonly understood?

This question depends, it seems to me, largely upon the meaning of the word "supplying" as used in the statute. Webster gives the following definition of the word "supplying:"

> "To furnish with what is wanted; to afford or furnish with a sufficiency. * * *
> "To give or provide; to furnish."

(In strict accuracy the second of the above quoted meanings is that of the verb which takes as its object the thing supplied.)

The word "furnish" is defined by the same lexicographer as follows:

> "To provide; supply; give; afford; specif. * * * to supply * * * (something)."

It seems clear that there is not inherent in the meaning of the word "supply" itself the idea of delivery. It is just as accurate to speak of a thing as being "supplied" which is produced and made ready for transportation and delivery by another as it is to use the same word as referring to the production, transportation and delivery of a commodity. Yet the impression might arise that this was not the legislative intent, but that the general assembly had in mind in defining an electric light company a business which would not be complete without all of the attributes above referred to.

As evidence of this intention the significance of the word "consumers" may be considered. The meaning of this term is obvious and in itself offers no special difficulties. The point I have in mind is brought out by considering the different steps in a single transaction of the supplying of electric current; they are as follows:

In the first place the current is generated by the producer and becomes capable of transmission along wires designed for that purpose. In the second place the current is transported or transmitted to the place of consumption; in the third place the amount of current consumed is measured as it becomes subject to the control of the consumer.

Thinking of the matter in a natural way one would not suppose that a "consumer" would be purely such who engaged in all of these activities. That is to say, as pointed out in my opinion of recent date respecting the case of the sale of electric current from a power plant located in an office or hotel building, one who produces electric current for the purpose of supplying himself with this commodity is not a "consumer." It might also be urged that one who takes electric current at the place of production and conducts it over his own wires to the place of consumption is not, in the purest sense of the word at least, a "consumer." He has undertaken a part of the process of production, viz., that of transmission.

There is some internal evidence, however, in the act of 1911 which tends to emphasize the point now under discussion. I think it may be accepted as true that the intention of the act of 1911 is to impose the excise tax based upon gross earnings upon exactly the same subject of taxation, the property of which is to be valued upon the unit basis by the tax commission under section 46 et seq., of the act.

Section 44, which is one of the sections providing for the property tax, is in part as follows:

> "Each public utility as defined in this act * * * shall annually * * * make and deliver to the tax commission of Ohio * * * a statement with respect to such utility's plant or plants and property owned or operated or both by it wholly or partly within this state."

The italicized words are not of great importance in themselves, but they disclose in a measure what the legislature had in mind, viz., that a "public utility" and more specifically an "electric light company" is a company having a "plant." A mere collecting or contracting agency then cannot in the very nature of things be subject to property taxes on the unit basis, there being nothing to value in this way. Therefore, the case of the National Power Company is at once disposed of. It has no "plant" in any sense of the word; therefore, it is not within the meaning of the term as already discussed.

The case of the Factory Power Company is somewhat different. This company has a plant but not a complete once. This plant is capable of generating electric power but is not capable of delivering it to the consumers, who, if they would use the power so generated, must, so to speak, send and get it. Upon a very careful consideration I have come to the conclusion that the Factory Power Company, though not equipped to deliver electric current at the place of consumption, and not having a complete "plant," within the common acceptation of the term, is "engaged in the business of supplying electricity to consumers" within the meaning of section 40 of the tax commission act. If a company engages in any degree in the business, it is within the statute. To hold otherwise would deprive the law of any definite test as to what constitutes a "plant," or, conversely, the act of "supplying to consumers."

It follows, as a matter of course, that the National Power Company not being liable for excise taxes under the act in question must report to the tax commission as a domestic corporation for profit and pay franchise fees thereon; but that the Factory Power Company must pay excise taxes based upon its gross receipts, and submit to property valuation of its "plant and property" by the commission.

In conclusion, I may observe for reasons which I think are sufficiently disclosed by the discussion of similar questions in other opinions I have not deemed the language of the articles of incorporation of the two companies to which this opinion refers, of any importance.

Very truly yours,

TIMOTHY S. HOGAN,

Attorney General.

TAXES AND TAXATION—CORPORATION FILING REPORT AS PRIVATE CORPORATION FOR PROFIT IN MAY, AND SUBSEQUENTLY OPERATING PUBLIC UTILITY—NOT SUBJECT TO BOTH EXCISE AND FRANCHISE TAX—FIXED LIABILITY FOR FRANCHISE TAX NOT AFFECTED BY SUBSEQUENT EVENT.

The Cleveland, Alliance & Mahoning Valley Railroad Company was in existence more than six months prior to the month of May, 1912, but it did not during that period, operate its railroad, and during the month of May filed its report as a private corporation for profit. Between the first day of June and the thirtieth thereof, said corporation became engaged in the business of operating an interurban railroad, held: under section 5518, General Code, it is the intention of the legislature that a corporation in no event be subject to both franchise and excise tax for the same year.

The franchise tax is a tax upon the privilege of being a corporation during the month of May, when the report is due and this tax is not intended in any way to relate to prior or subsequent existence or activities. The excise tax is a tax upon the privilege of doing a public utility business during the year period preceding June 30th. Each tax is assessed for the same year and the funds received for each is appropriated for public purposes for the same period of time.

In accordance with the intention of section 5518, General Code, therefore, that a corporation should not be subject to both taxes for the same year, no corporation can be required to file a private corporation for profit report in May, and at the same time be required to file a public utilities report in September.

Under the decisions of this state, when a corporation for profit once becomes liable for the franchise tax, such liability cannot be removed by the withdrawal of the corporation from business subsequent to the time of making the report and prior to the time when the tax became a fixed charge. For the same reasons, the fact that a corporation becomes a public utility during such period cannot operate to dispense with the liability for the franchise tax.

The above corporation, therefore, is liable for its franchise tax, but not for its excise tax during the year 1912.

COLUMBUS, OHIO, March 22, 1913.

The Tax Commission of Ohio, Columbus, Ohio.

GENTLEMEN:—I acknowledge receipt of your letter of December 31st, enclosing reports for the year 1912 made by the Cleveland, Alliance & Mahoning Valley Railroad Company as a domestic corporation for profit and as an interurban railroad company.

It appears from the reports themselves, and from facts stated by you that a corporation of this name was in existence more than six months prior to the month of May, 1912, but it did not, during that period, operate its railroad, and hence, within the meaning of the excise tax statutes of this state as uniformly construed by this department and the commission, and by the courts, was in May, 1912, a domestic corporation for profit and not a public utility.

In the month of June, 1912, the corporation began the operation of its electric road, and between the date of commencing such operation and the end of the month acquired a small amount of gross earnings from intrastate business.

Having been engaged in the business of operating an interurban railroad during a few days of the year ending with the thirtieth day of June, 1912, the company became seemingly liable for excise tax for the year 1912.

The corporation desires to pay the excise taxes, which are small in amount, but resists payment of franchise taxes on the ground that the two charges are for the same year, and that under section 5518, General Code, the liability for excise taxes exempts the corporation from the payment of the franchise taxes.

You referred the reports to me for my collection of the proper fee, and without formal request for a written opinion upon the question presented. This question, however, is of such difficulty and general interest that I have deemed it advisable to prepare an opinion for the guidance of the commission in the future.

The facts as I have outlined them create a situation which seems to be anomalous, and yet one which might frequently occur under the statutes as they are at present drawn. I quote the provisions of the statutes, the meaning of which is involved, for the purpose of showing the possibilities under them which have been realized in the case submitted.

Section 5495, General Code (section 106 of the act of May 31, 1911, 102 O. L. 224), provides:

> "Between the first day of May and the first day of July, 1911, and annually thereafter during the month of May, each corporation, organized under the laws of this state, for profit, shall make a report, in writing, to the commission, in such form as the commission may prescribe."

Section 5498, General Code (section 109 of the act of May 31, 1911, 102 O. L. 224), provides:

> "Upon the filing of the report, provided for in the last preceding sections, the commission, after finding such report to be correct, shall on the first Monday of July, determine the amount of the subscribed or issued and outstanding capital stock of each such corporation. On the first Monday in August, the commission shall certify the amount so determined by it to the auditor of state, who shall charge for collection, on or before August fifteenth, as herein provided, from such corporation, a fee of three-twentieths of one per cent. upon its subscribed or issued and outstanding capital stock, which fee shall not be less than ten dollars in any case. Such fee shall be payable to the treasurer of state on or before the first day of the following October."

Section 5470, General Code (section 81 of the act of May 31, 1911, 102 O. L. 224), provides in part as follows:

> "* * * each street, suburban and interurban railroad and railroad company, shall, annually, on or before the first day of September, under the oath of the person constituting such company, if a person, or under the oath of the president, secretary, treasurer, superintendent or chief officer in this state, of such association or corporation, if an association or corporation, make and file with the commission a statement in such form as the commission may prescribe."

Section 5473, General Code (section 84 of the act of May 31, 1911, 102 O. L. 224), provides as follows:

"In the case of each street, suburban or interurban railroad company such statements shall also contain the entire gross earnings, including all sums earned or charged, whether actually received or not, for the year ending on the thirtieth day of June next preceding, from whatever source derived, for business done within this state, excluding therefrom all earnings derived wholly from interstate business or business done for the federal government. Such statement shall also contain the total gross earnings of such company for such period in this state from business done within this state."

Section 5478, General Code (section 89 of the act of May 31, 1911, 102 O. L. 224), provides as follows:

"On the first Monday of October, the commission shall ascertain and determine the gross earnings herein provided, of each street, suburban and interurban railroad company whose line is wholly or partially within this state, for the year ending on the thirtieth day of June next preceding, excluding therefrom, as to each of the companies named in this section, all earnings derived wholly from interstate business or business done for the federal government. The amount so ascertained by the commission shall be the gross earnings of such street, suburban or interurban railroad company for such year."

Section 5518, General Code (section 129 of the act of May 31, 1911, 102 O. L. 224), provides in part as follows:

"An incorporated company, whether foreign or domestic, owning or operating a public utility in this state, and as such required by law to file reports with the tax commission and to pay an excise tax upon its gross receipts or gross earnings as provided in this act, * * * shall not be subject to the provisions of sections one hundred and six to one hundred and fifteen."

The quotations of these sections makes it apparent at a glance that there is an overlapping of the tax years as between the franchise tax and the excise tax on interurban railroad companies.

The case of the Cleveland, Alliance & Mahoning Valley R. R. Co., illustrates then the possibility under these sections of a corporation being at least nominally liable for reports under both sets of provisions. That is to say, if a corporation theretofore not operating a public utility begins the operation of an interurban railroad any time during the month of June the following conclusions seem to result:

1. In the month of May it is a domestic corporation for profit, and is not an interurban railroad company operating a public utility, and, therefore, is within the terms of section 5518, supra.

2. On the first day of September it is an interurban railroad company within the meaning of section 5470, and an interurban company owning or operating a public utility within the meaning of section 5518; in this capacity it is to report under section 5473 some gross earnings for the year ending on the thirtieth day of June next preceding.

Section 5518, General Code, is the section which gives rise to the principal difficulty involved in this case; and it is also the section first to be looked to in an effort to ascertain the intention of the legislature with respect to such cases.

This section, which has already been quoted, evinces very clearly, it seems to me, the controlling intention of the legislature, which is that the corporation shall not be liable both to franchise and excise taxes, but that the liability for excise taxes shall suffice the state for the satisfaction of its power to tax the corporate franchise.

Unfortunately, however, the legislature has not in this case given any clue as to what would constitute subjecting a single corporation to both taxes, in the face of the obvious fact already pointed out, that it is possible for a corporation at any time to pass from the one class into the other. It is true that an ingenious argument might be constructed around the mere words of section 5518 which would lead to the conclusion contended for by the company, viz., that under the peculiar facts of its case it is liable for excise taxes, and for such taxes only. Such an argument would be as follows:

The last clause of section 5518 is to the effect that the corporations enumerated therein shall not be subject to the provisions "of sections 106 to 115." The corporation which has filed its annual report in May as a domestic corporation for profit would be liable in October to pay fees based thereon. This is by virtue of "the provisions of section 5498, General Code," one of the sections referred to in section 5518, being section 109 of the original act. Meanwhile, however, if the corporation had, in the month of June, commenced the operation of an interurban railroad it would have become liable in September to report to the tax commission its gross earnings from operation during the period of time within which it had been operating such a railroad preceding the thirtieth day of June. Being liable for the report it would, of course, be liable for the tax based thereon, and this liability would discharge it from any duty which would otherwise be imposed upon it by section 109, which duty would not accrue until a subsequent date; therefore, by such a course of reasoning it would be concluded that when in any given year a corporation becomes a public utility after it has filed its annual report as a corporation for profit but before any of the other steps provided for in the assessment and collection of the franchise tax have been taken, its change of status interrupts the machinery of the franchise tax and discharges the corporation's liability to such tax.

In other words, such an argument would be based upon the assumption that section 5518 means that a corporation may be subject to the provisions of section 106 of the act of 1911 but becoming a public utility before section 109 becomes operative as to it, thereby becomes not subject to the provisions of that and the succeeding sections in the group referred to in section 5518. I cannot lend my assent to this argument, believing that it is invalid. In my opinion the clause "the provisions of sections 106 to 115" cannot be construed distributively. The group of sections referred to therein must be considered as a single legislative idea. The thought of the general assembly evidently was, in referring to these sections by number, to designate the franchise tax as such.

I am of the opinion, therefore, that it is improper to separate any of the steps in the assessment of that tax for the purpose of determining the operation of section 5518 and that, in short, the last clause of that section might properly be paraphrased as follows: "Shall not be subject to a tax on the franchise of being a corporation."

Looking now for some index to the exact legislative intent, which is surrounded by some doubt because of the possibility of the transit of a corporation from one class to another at any time, it occurs to me that both the franchise tax and the excise tax are annual exactions. Now it would seem to follow that it being clearly the legislative intention that no one corporation should be subject to both of these taxes, the fact just referred to would lead to the conclusion that the intention was that no corporation should be liable to both taxes in any one year.

The establishment of this point, however, does not of itself solve the question presented by the facts under consideration. The word "year" must still be defined. It is possible to look at this question from various angles. The first point of view which suggests itself to me is that of the subject of taxation. It is very evident that the excise tax which is based upon the gross receipts for a certain year, and is assessed and collected after the expiration of that year must be regarded as levied upon the business of the year preceding the thirtieth of June. It is true that this is a privilege tax, and that its payment is enforced (as is the payment of the franchise tax) by certain penalties, among which is the revocation of the corporate charter. Because of these facts it might be urged that the privilege which is taxed is the privilege of being in business for another year. This does not necessarily follow however. It is perfectly competent for the general assembly to tax a privilege which has been enjoyed during a past year as well as to tax a privilege which is to be enjoyed during a succeeding year. In this case the former is clearly the subject of the tax. When the excise tax first went into effect it must, in the very logic of things, have fastened itself upon the receipts or earnings of the company liable therefor, for the preceding year. In fact the history of legislation will disclose that the receipts which were first taxed under the parent of the present excise tax law were those which were received during a period when there was no such law in force. From all this it follows, I think, that the excise tax is upon the business of the preceding year and the privilege of conducting the same, and not upon the privilege of remaining in business during the succeeding year.

The franchise tax is also an annual tax in every sense. In So. Gum Co. vs. Laylin, 66 O. S. 578, this tax was spoken of as being imposed upon "the continuing annual value" of the privilege originally conferred upon a corporation, i. e., the privilege of being a corporation.

It has been held by certain referees in bankruptcy that the Willis tax, so-called, of which I am now speaking, is a tax upon the right to do business during the year following the date when the report is made or the fees are paid. In re Emmerman vs. Specialty Co., 14 O. F. D. 289; In re Bank vs. Aultman, 14 O. F. D. 298.

While I yield due deference to these opinions I cannot agree with them. The better reasoning is that of the supreme court of New Jersey in the case of In re United States Car Co., 60 N. J. Eq., 514, and King vs. American Electric Vehicle Co., 70 N. J. Eq., 569, under a law substantially the same as ours. That court held that an annual franchise tax of the kind we have is simply a tax on the mere existence of the franchise at the time when it is levied precisely as the general property tax is a tax upon property in existence on the day preceding the second Monday in April.

This is the view of the case which has been taken by Sater, J., in the recently decided, but unreported case of Lathrop, Haskins & Co. vs. The Columbus Hocking Coal & Iron Co. (application of receivers for instructions). In other words the franchise tax is levied upon the right of a corporation to be as distinguished from its right to do. (So. Gum Co. vs. Laylin, supra; Lawrence, J., in State vs, C. & P. R. R. Co., Cuyahoga common pleas court, unreported.)

Now being does not import continuity. A tax upon mere existence is laid without reference to previous or subsequent existence; while an annual tax upon doing must have reference to what has been done prior to a given date or what is to be done thereafter.

Properly viewed, therefore, the excise tax is levied upon the business of a preceding year and the franchise tax is levied upon the existence of a franchise at a definite date, viz., the month of May.

It will be readily observed that no satisfaction for our purpose can be gotten out of viewing the two taxes from the standpoint of the real subject of taxation. What has been said with respect to that matter has but served to emphasize the overlapping of the dates of annual payment of the two taxes. It makes it apparent that a corporation for profit reporting in the month of May has simply laid a foundation for an annual exaction in the nature of a tax upon its existence during that month irrespective of its previous existence (except for the six months limitation in section 5519, General Code), and also irrespective of its continued existence during the succeeding year. Therefore, the same corporation which commenced the operation of a public utility after the month of May and before the thirtieth day of June would not in the philosophical sense be doubly taxed if it should also be required to pay the excise tax for the "year preceding the thirteenth day of June," yet the intention of the legislature, as evinced in section 5518 seems to be opposed to any such conclusion, and but for one view of the case, which I am about to present, a discussion from the standpoint of the subject of the taxes, serves only to confuse the question.

The consideration to which I have just alluded is this: While in the case presented by the Cleveland, Alliance and Mahoning Valley Railroad Company, the operation of a public utility did not commence until after the month of May, yet the "year preceding the thirtieth day of June" referred to in the excise tax law embraced that month of May. Therefore, it may be said that the two "years" are the same year which is all that it is necessary to establish at the present stage of the argument.

Looked at from another point of view, however, the two exactions are obviously made in the same year. The franchise tax becomes collectible on the fifteenth day of October (section 5503) and the excise tax on interurban railroads in the "month of November" (section 5484). These two dates are sufficiently close together to make it clear that the revenues derived from the two taxes are to be used for the support of the government of the state during practically the same period of time. I make this statement in face of the fact that the fiscal year of the state ends on November 15th, and it might be possible that the auditor of state would not make the necessary charge against an interurban railroad in a given calendar year until after the end of the fiscal year. It is well known, however, that in actual administration the fiscal year is virtually disregarded, appropriations being made for the period of time beginning and ending on February 15th. From this special point of view, therefore, the two taxes are levied for the support of the government of the state during a single year.

I am of the opinion, therefore, without looking at the question from every other viewpoint which might be suggested that the two taxes are levied and collected in and for a single year, and that it is the intention of the legislature, as evinced by section 5518, General Code, that no one corporation shall pay both a franchise tax and an excise tax during the period of time beginning with the fifteenth of October and ending with the fifteenth of December.

Having reached the conclusion just stated it becomes necessary further to consider which of the two taxes is to be charged and paid. I have already pointed out that there was no question as to the liability of the Cleveland, Alliance and Mahoning Valley Railroad Company to report as a domestic corporation for profit in the month of May; I have already pointed out that for the purpose of the discussion all of the provisions relating to franchise and excise taxation respectively, may be regarded as legislative units. From this it follows that the corporation having been liable for a report in the month of May, nothing could occur which would interrupt the succeeding steps in the assessment of the franchise tax. In fact a question somewhat similar to that under discussion was involved in the case decided by Judge Sater, and cited herein. It was his decision in that case that a corporation liable to report in the month of May could not be divested of liability for the tax based upon that report by ceasing to exist beyond the date of such report and the day when the tax became payable. If, then, a corporation cannot so discharge its liability, does it not necessarily follow by analogy that a corporation which was liable for a report in the month of May does not become discharged from this liability by reason of taking on the character of a public utility between the end of that month and the date of the payment of the franchise taxes? I think the analogy suggested here is perfect and I am of the opinion that a corporation which was liable for a report as such in the month of May remains liable therefor for that year and cannot become discharged therefrom by any subsequent act whatever.

This being the case, then, and it being the evident intention of the legislature that no corporation should pay both taxes for any one year it follows naturally that the Cleveland, Alliance and Mahoning Valley Railroad Company under the facts submitted, is liable for taxes for the year 1912 as a domestic corporation for profit, and is not liable for excise taxes for the same year as an interurban railroad.

I have reached this conclusion on what I have regarded as the broad and controlling intention of section 5518, General Code, and must acknowledge that there is no express language in the section to the effect which I have given to that section. I am convinced, however, that the conclusion which I have reached is the only one which is consistent with the purpose of the whole act of 1911, construed as a single act of legislation.

I am of the opinion, therefore, that a corporation which begins the operation of an interurban railroad during the month of June, and has been in existence as a corporation for more than six months preceding the month of May of the same year is liable for franchise taxes for that year, and not for excise taxes.

Yours very truly,
TIMOTHY S. HOGAN,
Attorney General.

TAXES AND TAXATION—EXCISE TAX—INTERSTATE AND INTRASTATE COMMERCE—STATE MAY NOT TAX DEMURRAGE AND STORAGE BUSINESS CHARGED FOR FREIGHT HELD BEFORE DELIVERY TO CONSIGNEE OF GOODS BROUGHT FROM OTHER STATES.

It is now definitely settled by the decisions that a state may impose no tax or other regulation upon interstate commerce as such, i. e., the transportation and transit of property, but that the state may impose such regulations or taxes upon mere aids in commerce, insofar as such state regulations do not conflict with the national regulations provided for the same subject-matter.

Under recent decisions it seems to be settled that the process of interstate commerce is not completed until actual delivery to the consignee, and that the state may not interpose any regulations whatever upon the transportation of the commodity until delivery to the consignee.

When a railroad, therefore, is engaged in the business of transporting a commodity from without the state to a consignee within this state, and charges for demurrage or storage for holding such commodity within this state, subject to directions of the consignee, the charge so made may not be regarded as earnings or intrastate business within the comprehension of sections 83 and 88 of the excise tax law: and this state may, therefore, not tax such earnings.

COLUMBUS, OHIO, April 14, 1913.

Tax Commission of Ohio, Columbus, Ohio.

GENTLEMEN:—There has been certified to me for collection a claim for four hundred and sixty-three dollars and seventy-two cents ($463.72) for excise taxes and penalty charged against the Louisville and Nashville Railroad Company on account of intrastate business done in Ohio during the year ending June 30, 1912. The collection of this claim is resisted by counsel for the railroad company upon the ground that the sum upon which the tax has been computed represents an amount made up exclusively of the earnings of the company derived from "car service" and "storage freight" on interstate shipments. That is to say, it is stated as a fact, supported by an affidavit of the comptroller of the company, that the Louisville and Nashville Railroad Company is and was during the year covered by the assessment engaged in Ohio exclusively in transporting interstate shipments, and that none of the shipments of freight or carriers of passengers made by it in Ohio are such as both originate and terminate within this state. It is also stated and deposed that car service, or "demurrage" and storage of freight charges are the only items comprised within the amount determined by the commisson as being the gross earnings of the railroad company from business done within this state for the year preceding the date above mentioned.

Because of the importance of the principle involved, I have deemed it proper to address an opinion to you upon the facts as presented by counsel for the railroad company. If the commission should have a different understanding of the actual facts in the case, the conclusion which I shall announce may not, of course, be regarded as finally disposing of the claim which is in my hands for collection.

Upon a careful investigation, I have come to the point that all the earnings of the Louisville and Nashville Railroad Company which, as stated by its counsel, comprise the amount upon which the excise tax for the year in question was computed, are "earnings derived wholly from interstate business" within the meaning of section 83 of the act of June 2, 1911, (102 O. L., 224), and conversely do not represent "intrastate business" within the meaning of section 97 thereof. The sections of the act just cited involved here are as follows:

> "Section 83. In the case of each railroad company, such statement shall also contain the entire gross earnings, including all sums earned or charged, whether actually received or not, for the year ending on the thirtieth day of June next preceding, from whatever source derived, for business done within this state, excluding therefrom all earnings derived wholly from interstate business or business done for the federal government. * * *"
> "Section 88. On the first Monday of October, the commission shall ascertain and determine the gross earnings as herein provided, of each railroad company whose line is wholly or partially within this state, for the year ending on the thirtieth day of June next preceding, excluding therefrom all earnings derived wholly from interstate business or business done for the federal government. * * *
> "Section 97. In the month of November, the auditor of state shall charge for collection, from each railroad company, a sum in the nature of an excise tax, for the privilege of carrying on its intrastate business, to be computed on the amount so fixed and reported to him by the commission, as the gross earnings of such company on its intrastate business for the year covered by its annual report to the commission, as required in this act, by taking four per cent. of all such gross earnings, which tax shall not be less than ten dollars in any case."

In a recent opinion in the matter of The Connecting Gas Company, I held, as the commission will recall, that all transportation services in connection with the journey of an article in commerce from a point in one state to a point in another state constitute the carrying on of interstate commerce, even though one or more of such services may be actually performed wholly within the territorial limits of a single state. I need not repeat the citation of authorities mentioned on that point, nor elaborate by discussion upon the statement of this principle, which is the starting point in the course of reasoning which I think must be followed for the solution of the question now under discussion.

It is, therefore, not conclusive in the present case that the service performed by a carrier in holding loaded cars on terminal tracks subject to the order of the consignee and the retention of unloaded freight in the warehouse of the carrier pending its delivery as the consignee demands are both performed wholly within the state; nor is it conclusive that each of the services is essentially separable and distinguishable from the principal service of actual transportation.

In the other opinion already referred to it was held also that a state may not by taxation burden—and therefore inferentially "regulate" the carrying on of any of the processes of interstate transportation, and I need cite no further authorities upon this proposition.

The precise point at issue is then as to whether or not car service and the storage of freight are services which constitute a part of the main service of transportation and are therefore a part of interstate commerce. If they are it would seem that the earnings derived from them would constitute earnings from interstate business within the meaning of the provisions above cited, for I take it that the legislature evidently intended to use the phrase "interstate commerce" in its established and customary sense.

Counsel for the railroad company have relied in their memorandum, with which they have courteously supplied me, upon a line of federal and state decisions construing and applying the provisions of the so-called Hepburn act relating to the power of the interstate commerce commission, (U. S. compiled statutes, 1911, page 1285). I have, however, rejected these authorities as inconclusive. The present case, and the citation of these authorities, illustrate a refinement of the rule respecting the distinction between interstate and intrastate commerce to which I have heretofore not been called upon to refer to in any opinion to the commission. It has become very definitely settled that, with respect to the relative powers of congress and the states there are two spheres of jurisdiction, so to speak, each comprising a definite kind of commercial service or regulation.

The congress of the United States is vested by the constitution with general power "to regulate commerce among the several states." In early cases, some of which I have cited in former opinions, it was held that this general power was exclusive, i. e., that the mere imposition of it in congress by the federal constitution operated to restrain the states from exercising any like power whether congress had legislated or not.

By later cases, however, it was held that as to certain matters the states do have regulatory powers, so that in the absence of legislation by congress, regulation by the states is permissible in such cases, and that such state regulations are merely supplanted by the subsequent acts of congress upon the same subject-matter.

These two spheres of activity which might be designated respectively as that within the exclusive jurisdiction of congress and that within the concurrent jurisdiction of congress and the states, or, more accurately, that within the optional jurisdiction of congress, were clearly defined in the case of Mobile County vs. Kimball, 102 U. S., 691. Mr. Justice Field, in delivering the opinion of the court in that case, discusses the line of authorities beginning with Gibbons vs. Ogden, 22 U. S. (9 Wheat. 1); extending through Colley vs. Port Wardens and Welton vs. Missouri, 91 U. S., 275, and concludes with the following general observations:

> "Perhaps some of the divergence of views upon this question among former judges may have arisen from not always bearing in mind the distinction between commerce as strictly defined, and its local aids or instruments, or measures taken for its improvement. Commerce with foreign countries and among the states, strictly considered, consists in intercourse and traffic, including in these terms navigation and the transportation and transit of persons and property, as well as the purchase, sale and exchange of commodities. For the regulation of commerce as above defined, there can be only one system of rules applicable alike to the whole country; and the authority which can act for the whole country can alone adopt such a system. Action upon it by separate states is not, therefore, permissible. Language affirming the exclusiveness of the grant of power over commerce as thus defined may not be inaccurate, when it would be if so applied to legislation upon subjects which are merely auxiliary to commerce."

Now, I apprehend that it must be conceded that insofar as taxation amounts to a regulation of commerce, the taxing power of a state does not extend at all to the subjects within the exclusive power of congress, but that it may extend perhaps to subjects within the other category above mentioned. Whether or not a state may impose a tax either directly or indirectly upon the doing of such acts as to which the state might enact regulations in the absence of congressional legislation, is perhaps a doubtful question; but it is one at least that need not even be considered in this opinion if it appears that the services in question are subject to the exclusive regulatory powers of congress.

The question which is then raised is as to whether within the language of Chief Justice Field what are known as car service and freight storage respectively are part of "the transportation and transit of property." If they are, they are clearly operations of interstate commerce within the meaning of the Ohio statutes now under consideration, and the fact that congress has legislated upon this subject-matter as shown by the statutes quoted in the memorandum of counsel is immaterial.

In Rhodes vs. Iowa, 170 U. S., 412, the supreme court of the United States held unconstitutional a statute of the state of Iowa prohibiting an express company or railroad company or any agent of either from transporting within the state intoxicating liquors intended for delivery in the state without receiving a certificate that the consignee or person to whom the liquor was to be delivered was authorized to sell intoxicating liquors in the county of delivery. The statute by an explicit provision declared it to be the intention of the legislature that the offense should be completed and be held to have been committed in any county, "through or to which intoxicating liquors are sold or transported or within which they are unloaded or transferred or in which such liquors are conveyed from place to place and delivered." The defendant was arrested and convicted under this statute for receiving, in his capacity as agent of a railroad whose line was entirely within the state of Iowa, a package shipped from without the state on the station platform and moving it into the freight warehouse of the railroad company—a distance of about six feet. It was claimed that a statute of congress which permitted a state to regulate the disposition of intoxicating liquors transported into its territory "upon arriving therein" sustained the constitutionality of the Iowa statute and convictions thereunder. The case turned upon the construction of the word "arrival." The court first held that this word did not mean "arrival at the state line." To state the court's conclusion as to the true meaning of the statute, Mr. Justice White used the following language.

> "The provisions of the act were intended by congress to cast the legislative authority of the respective states to attach to intoxicating liquors coming into the states by an interstate shipment only after the consummation of the shipment, but before the sale of the merchandise. * * *"

Referring to a consideration of the earlier case of Leisy vs. Hardin, 135 U. S., 100, Mr. Justice White points out that under that decision without the enabling act of Congress, the right of the consignee of freight shipped in interstate commerce to dispose of it in the original package, could not be impaired, but that the statute subsequently passed had the effect of permitting the state to regulate the exercise of hat right, and thereupon he uses the following language:

> "On the other hand, the right to contract for the transportation of merchandise from one state into or across another involved interstate commerce in its fundamental aspect, and imported in its very essence a relation which must be governed by laws apart from the laws of the several states, since it embraced a contract which must come under the laws of more than one state."

Concluding, he made use of the following language:

> "We think that, interpreting the statute by the light of all its provisions, it was not intended to and did not cause the power of the state to attach to an interstate commerce shipment, whilst the merchandise was in transit under such shipment, and until its arrival at the point of destination and delivery there to the consignee * * *."

"It follows from this conclusion that as the act for which the plaintiff in error was convicted, and which consisted in moving the goods from the platform to the freight warehouse, was a part of the interstate commerce transportation, and was done before the law of Iowa could constitutionally attach to the goods, the conviction was erroneous. * * *"

The significance of this opinion is best illustrated by the vigorous language used by Mr. Justice Gray in dissenting. I need not quote his language; suffice it to say that he insisted upon the point that the package had actually been deposited upon the soil of Iowa, and hence should be held to have "arrived" within the state within the meaning of the federal statute.

This decision is not as clear upon the point upon which I have cited as it might be desired; it seems to me, however, that it establishes the conclusion that the process of interstate commerce transportation of freight is not completed until actual delivery to the consignee is consummated. While the freight is in the car subject to the order of the consignee it is still in transit. Similarly, it remains in transit while at the freight warehouse of the carrier.

A somewhat clearer application of the principle here involved is found in the case of the Central Stockyards Company vs. The L. & N. Railroad Company, 55 C. C. A., 63. in the decision of the United States circuit court of appeals, per Day, circuit judge. The action was for a mandatory injunction to require the railroad company to deliver at the order of a consignor or consignee shipments of live stock at the plaintiff's stock yards, the railroad company having refused to deliver live stock elsewhere than at arrival stock yards. The court, held, in effect, after reviewing the authorities embodying the distinctions made in the case of Mobile County vs. Kimball, supra, that congress alone had the power to regulate the place of delivery of interstate shipments.

I may have overlooked some authorities bearing on the question, but I have been unable to find any relating directly to the subject-matter of taxation; while the meagerness of authorities relating to the extent of regulatory powers of the states may be explained by the fact that congress has legislated respecting the matters of car service and freight storage.

Upon the principles laid down in the authorities cited rather than upon any authorities directly in point, I have reached the conclusion that "the delivery" which is spoken of in this case means the actual and ultimate delivery to the consignee, and such delivery is not completed while the freight remains in the possession of the carrier, although it is subject to the consignee's orders. It seems reasonable to suppose that matters of this sort are within the principle upon which the exclusive power of congress is founded, being such as to which "there can be only one system of rules applicable alike to the whole country; and the authority which can act for the whole country can alone adopt such a system."

I am therefore of the opinion that those features of the business of transportation are interstate in character for the purposes of taxation when the transportation itself is interstate and that earnings arising from the performance of such services are "earnings derived wholly from interstate business" within the meaning of the tax commission act of 1911.

Pending the commission's vertification of the facts upon which this opinion is based, I shall make no effort to collect the claim which has been certified to me; and if the facts be correct, I recommend that the claim be compromised by remitting the entire tax and penalty.

Very truly yours,
TIMOTHY S. HOGAN,
Attorney General.

STATE MAY COLLECT EXCISE TAX ON BUSINESS OF STEAMER ON VOYAGE WHICH BEGINS AND ENDS IN THIS STATE, ALTHOUGH PART THEREOF MAY EXTEND OUT OF THIS STATE.

In the decisions of the supreme court, a distinction is made between the exercise of the taxing power and the police power of a state with reference to the journey made by a steamer, the beginning and end of which lies within this state, and a part of the course of which extends outside of this state.

The state is permitted to impose an excise tax on the receipts realized by such journey, but it may not impose police regulations upon the same.

COLUMBUS, OHIO, May 16, 1913.

The Tax Commission of Ohio, Columbus, Ohio.

GENTLEMEN:—On March 27, 1912, I wrote to the commission an informal letter, stating that in my judgment the steamer "Greyhound" was not liable for excise taxes as a "water transportation company" under the so-called "Cole law" provisions of the tax commission act of 1911.

On April 10, 1912, you replied to this letter, calling my attention to the fact that the owners of the steamer had themselves reported for the year 1911 certain receipts for excise tax purposes in the following language:

> "Intrastate business points in Ohio to points in Ohio on Ohio river, $4,027."

I did not at that time immediately take up and dispose of this matter for the reason that I had been convinced by an examination of the authorities submitted to me by Hon. A. R. Johnson, who then represented the owners of the vessel that inasmuch as the greater part of the route which the steamer would necessarily traverse in making its regular voyages from point to point along the Ohio river is located in the state of Kentucky. The entire business is necessarily interstate in character. The authorities which he cited are typified by Railroad Commission vs. Railway Co., 187 U. S. 617, in which it is held that:

> "Rates for the carriage of commerce by a road traversing more than one state, although the transportation begins and ends in the same state, are not subject to regulation by or under state laws, because this commerce for the purpose of regulation is 'interstate.'"

It seems to me at the time that the test of what constitutes "interstate commerce" for the purposes of the excise tax law must be precisely the same as that by which, on application of the same term to the public service commission act and legislation of like character, would be determined.

Upon a more extended research I have, since receiving your letter above referred to, discovered that I was in error in supposing that the authorities cited by Mr. Johnson were conclusive of the question. In fact, I find that the peculiar facts presented by the case of the steamer "Greyhound" illustrate one of the few exceptions to a general rule that the taxing power of a state with respect to commerce is co-extensive with its regulatory power with respect to the same subject matter.

The case of Lehigh Valley Railroad Co. vs. Pennsylvania, 145 U. S. 192, seems to be directly in point. This case arose under a law of the state of Pennsylvania exacting a tax upon the gross receipts of railroad companies from transportation in the state. The track of the plaintiff in error was located partly in Pennsylvania and partly in New York. A portion of the gross receipts upon which the auditor general of the state assessed a tax under this law was derived from transportation between points in the state of Pennsylvania over track which passed through a portion of the state of New York. That is to say, the transportation began and ended in Pennsylvania but traversed a portion of the other state en route. The court held that the tax as assessed should be sustained as not being in conflict with the federal constitution. In the case which Mr. Johnson cited, Railroad Commission vs. Railway Co., supra, the earlier case was distinguished as follows:

> "That was a case of a tax and was distinguished expressly from an attempt by a state directly to regulate the transportation while outside of its boundaries * * * and although it was intimated that, for the purposes before the court, to some extent commerce by transportation might have its character fixed by the relation between the two ends of the transit, the intimation was carefully confined to those purposes. Moreover the tax 'was determined in respect to the receipts for the proportion of the transportation within the state' * * *. Such a proportional tax had been sustained in the case of commerce admitted to be interstate. Maine vs. Grand Trunk Ry. Co., 142 U. S. 217 (p. 621)."

It is apparent, therefore, that the later decision does not by any means overrule the earlier decision. It might be intimated that the court in the subsequent case distinguishes the earlier case because of the fact that the tax therein was apportioned according to mileage within and without the state of Pennsylvania. Careful examination of the facts in the Pennsylvania case, however, will disclose that this distinction is inadmissible. The original tax was assessed upon the apportioned part of the entire receipts of the company whether in Pennsylvania or not and whether originating from transportation between points in Pennsylvania and points in other states or not. The courts of the state held that the tax could not constitutionally be assessed upon those items of receipts which arose from transportation between points in Pennsylvania and other states or between points both of which were outside of the state of Pennsylvania. If the court had had the point of apportionment in mind it would on the authority of Maine vs. Grand Trunk Ry. Co., cited in the above quotation, have held that receipts from transportation originating in Pennsylvania and ending in another state, and vice versa, would have been subject to the tax.

Upon careful consideration of both decisions I am unable to reach any conclusion other than that the supreme court of the United States holds that transportation between points in one state over a road partly located in another state is interstate for the purpose of rate regulation and intrastate for the purpose of taxation.

I accordingly am of the opinion that the portion of the receipts of the steamer "Greyhound" arising from business carried on between points in Ohio may be used for the purpose of computing the excise tax payable by it, and that, therefore, the company is liable for some excise tax.

I owe the commission an apology for so long delaying this opinion, and I can only assign as reasons for the delay, the fact that there was not a formal request for an opinion as such, and that when I had reached the conclusion which I have expressed the files relating to the matter were mislaid and lost sight of in the press of other business.

I am sending a copy of this opinion to Mr. Johnson and shall, without further certification, take up with him the matter of the excise tax for the year 1911, the collection of which has already been certified to this department, being our file No. 13724.

Yours very truly,
TIMOTHY S. HOGAN,
Attorney General.

HOUSE BILL No. 500 PROVIDING FOR AMENDMENT OF SMITH ONE PER CENT. LAW NOT A LAW PROVIDING FOR A TAX LEVY WITHIN THE MEANING OF SECTION 1-b, ARTICLE II OF THE CONSTITUTION, AND THEREFORE, SUBJECT TO INITIATIVE AND REFERENDUM.

The grammatical construction and the use of the term levy, and the intransitive form "providing for" in the phrase "laws providing for tax levies," section 1-b, article II, of the constitution, compel the conclusion that this section is intended to comprehend only such acts as provide for a specified levy and impose upon some office the mandatory duty of making the same at a defined rate on the grand duplicate of the state or some subdivision thereof.

A law, therefore, such as is House Bill 500, which merely provides for the making of tax levies generally and prescribes the machinery by which such levies are to be carried out, is not subject to the exception provided in this section of the constitution, and is therefore subject to the initiative and referendum.

COLUMBUS, OHIO, May 10, 1913.

The Tax Commission of Ohio, Columbus, Ohio.

GENTLEMEN:—I beg to acknowledge receipt of your letter of May 7th wherein you request my opinion upon the following question:

> House Bill No. 500, passed by the general assembly, approved by the governor and filed by him in the office of the secretary of state, amends certain portions of the so-called Smith one per cent. law, being sections 5649-2 and 5649-3b thereof and repeals section 5649-3 of the same measure. Does this act take effect immediately or is its effectiveness postponed for a period of ninety days?"

The question involves the operation of the referendum provisions of the constitution as recenly amended and in particular the following:

"Article II, section 1c. * * * No law passed by the general assembly shall go into effect until ninety days after it shall have been filed by the governor in the office of the secretary of state, except as herein provided. When a petition signed by six percentum of the electors of the state and verified as herein provided, shall have been filed with the secretary of state, ordering that such law, section of such law or any item in such law appropriating money be submitted to the electors of the state for their approval or rejection, the secretary of state shall submit to the electors of the state for their approval or rejection such law, section or item, in the manner herein provided, at the next succeeding regular or general election in any year occurring subsequent to sixty days after the filing of such petition, and no such law, section or item shall go into effect until and unless approved by a majority of those voting upon the same. * * *

"Section 1d. Laws providing for tax levies, * * * shall go into immediate effect. * * * The laws mentioned in this section shall not be subject to the referendum."

The question presented by your inquiry is a clear cut one. Is a law of the nature exemplified by House Bill No. 500 one of the class of laws described as laws providing for tax levies, and, therefore, under section 1d, as above quoted, not subject to the referendum; or is it not such a law, and, therefore, by virtue of the general provisions of section 1c does it remain ineffective for a period of ninety days so as to afford an opportunity for ordering a referendum?

In my opinion the law to which you refer does not belong to the class of laws "providing for tax levies" within the meaning of section 1d, and, therefore, there being no other provision of such section that could be regarded as applicable to it, is subject to the referendum under section 1c and must remain ineffective for a period of ninety days after it has been filed by the governor, with his approval, in the office of the secretary of state (not after its approval by the governor as you erroneously suppose.

No authority can be cited at this time in support of this conclusion. This portion of the amended Ohio constitution is modeled closely after the constitution of Oregon which has contained similar features for some years. I am unable to find, however, that the question has arisen in that state. In the absence of authority I have found it necessary to come to my conclusion by taking heed to what has impressed me as being the manifest purpose of the framers of the constitutional amendment.

Of course the intention of the framers of the constitution must be primarily ascertained from the language which they have used. In the clause now under consideration the operative words are "providing for tax levies." The term "providing for" is the participle of the verb "provide" used in the intransitive sense. The verb itself is capable of being used also in the transitive, and if it were so used in this clause the meaning would at once become clear. That is, if the phraseology were "laws providing tax levies" which is grammatically correct, it would at once become apparent that the phrase could refer only to such acts as in themselves had the effect of making specific tax levies. The fact that the verb is used in the intransitive somewhat weakens its force and broadens its meaning. To provide for a tax levy is not the same language as to provide a tax levy. The one is indirect, and the other direct, and the shade of meaning is by no means a slight one.

On the other hand, there is significance in the choice of the principal noun "levies." The choice of phraseology here was between this word and the related but not equivalent term "levying," or rather between the phrase as formulated and the phrase "laws providing for the levying of taxes." The constitutional convention's choice of nouns somewhat tends to confuse the question because it points in a different direction from that indicated by its choice of verbs. If "providing for" is a broader term than "providing" would have been, yet the noun "levies" is a narrower and more exact term than the participle substantive "levying." A "levy" is a completed thing; the word refers to an act which has already taken place. It would be incorrect to say "the levy of taxes" if the meaning of the speaker were to refer to the process by which taxes became levied: rather he should choose the participle "levying" if that were his meaning.

"Tax levies" then are not the same things as would be meant by the phrase "the levying of taxes." The latter refers to the process which is a part of the taxing machinery; the former refers to the act itself when completed by the use of such process. For example, the title of chapter XII, title I, part second, General Code, is "levying taxes." The whole subject-matter of the chapter, in which the sections amended by the bill of which you speak are found, relates to the process of making levies, and hence the term "levying" in the title of the chapter is used in its exact sense. On the other hand, in section 5649-2, one of the sections amended in this bill, is found a broader use of the word "levies" in the sense in which it is used in the constitution, viz., "the maximum rate of tax that may be levied for all purposes * * * shall not in any one year exceed ten mills on each dollar * * * and such levies in addition thereto for sinking fund and interest purposes as may be necessary to provide for any indebtedness * * *."

So also in section 5649-3*a* of the same group of sections is found the following: "The total tax levy for all school purposes shall not exceed in any one year five mills * * *. Such limits for county, township, municipal and school levies shall be exclusive of any special levy provided for by a vote of the electors * * * levies for road taxes that may be worked out, * * * and levies * * * in special districts created for road or ditch improvements."

Obviously the word "levy" as used in these connections means the rate or amount placed upon the duplicate of the subdivision through the act of levying. This, in my judgment, is the exact meaning of the word in the sense in which it is used in the constitution.

Having then some insight into the clause of the constitution now under discussion the meaning of the whole phrase becomes somewhat clearer. "Laws providing for tax levies" are laws relating to the completed act itself, and not to the process by which it is effected.

Perhaps this distinction is sufficient to afford ground for the conclusion which I have reached. However, I have looked into the question from still another angle, in which I have returned to a consideration of the word "providing." While the verb used in the intransitive has a broader meaning than it would have had, had it been used transitively, yet, in my opinion it is not equivalent in meaning to "authorizing" for example. We are dealing here with a word, the use of which in the statutes is almost notoriously common. I do not think that it can be seriously disputed that the word "provide" as used legislatively carries with its the significance of self-execution. That is to say the law does not "provide" for a tax levy unless it imposes upon some officer the mandatory duty of making a levy. If the law provides that some officer or board shall be authorized to levy, or even if it commands that some levy shall be made for a given purpose, and leaves the amount thereof subject to the discretion of the officer or board, then the law itself does not provide for the levy; it simply authorizes the levy which in its completeness is provided for by the act of the officer or board. Summarizing, then, I am of the opinion that the phrase "laws providing for tax levies" is restricted in its meaning to those laws which impose upon some officer the mandatory duty of levying a tax at a certain rate or at a rate to be determined otherwise than by the exercise of the officer's discretion, on the grand duplicate of the state or some subdivision thereof. Laws authorizing tax levies to be made and laws providing for the making of tax levies generally, i. e., prescribing the machinery by which the levying act shall be carried out are alike outside of the pale of the definition of the term.

This conclusion reached by considering what are perhaps fine shades of meaning of the operative terms used in the phrase under discussion, is supported by consideration of the consequences of a more liberal construction. There is a well recognized principle of statutory and constitutional construction, that exceptions in a statute to the general rules and provisions thereof, are to be strictly construed. Lewis Sutherland on Statutory Construction, 352.

This rule has an application in the present instance. The obvious intention of the constitution is that the great bulk of the laws passed by any session of the legislature shall be subject to a referendum and that a comparatively small number of legislative acts shall not be subject thereto. If the broad construction which is the only alternative to the one which I have adopted were given to section 1d, as above quoted, then its object would be very easily evaded. Practically all new policies of legislation require the raising of money to carry them into effect. Money is ordinarily raised for governmental purposes by taxation. A very large portion of the bills passed by any legislature will be found to contain authority to levy taxes in order to carry out their objects and purposes. Accordingly, if the mere fact that the law relates in some way to the levying of taxes is sufficient to exempt it from the referendum. The latter will have a very restricted application and most laws will be in the exempted class.

The obvious intention of the framers of the constitution was, I think, to limit the exempted class of legislation to such legislation as is necessary in order to enable the state itself to carry on the functions of government. The other exempted laws not quoted in the above quotation of section 1d, are "appropriations for the current expenses of the state government and state institutions, and emergency laws necessary for the immediate preservation of the public peace, health or safety * * *."

This context sheds light upon the meaning of the phrase "laws providing for tax levies" in that it evinces the single and controlling intention of the framers of the constitution, which is that which I have already referred to.

I am aware that it is somewhat difficult to express in exact language the distinctions which I have made, and in order that there may be no misunderstanding of my meaning I beg leave to cite certain examples of laws which I believe are within the meaning of this provision of "laws providing for tax levies."

> "Section 7575. For the purpose of affording the advantages of a free education to all the youth of the state, there shall be levied annually a tax of three hundred and thirty-five thousandths of one mill on the grand list of the taxable property of the state to be collected as are other state taxes and the proceeds of which shall constitute 'the state common school fund,' and for the payment of interest on the irreducible or trust fund debt for school purposes, three hundred and thirty-five thousandths of one mill, such fund to be styled 'the sinking fund.'
> "Section 7924. For the purpose of affording support to the Miami university, there shall be levied annually a tax on the grand list of the taxable property of the state, which tax shall be collected in the same manner as other state taxes and the proceeds of which shall constitute 'the Miami university fund.' The rate of such levy shall be eighty-five thousandths of one mill upon each dollar of valuation of such property. The sum raised by such levy, or its equivalent in money, in case the levy is abolished, shall be the sum total received either from the proceeds of the levy or from appropriations for the support of the college of liberal arts, and shall be used only for the purposes set forth in the next preceding section. This levy shall not hereafter be increased. But this shall not prevent such appropriations from time to time as may be necessary for apparatus for university purposes, exclusive of buildings."

A similar law was passed by the present session of the general assembly, and I believe signed by the governor and filed in the office of the secretary of state. I do not recall the number of the bill I have in mind; it "provides for the levy" of a certain rate annually on the grand duplicate of the state for the purpose of building inter-county highways and is known as the "Hite bill."

Such laws are clearly laws "providing for tax levies," so also would be in my judgment a law which would provide for a levy to be made by some officer such as the auditor of state or a county auditor, the amount or rate of which might be uncertain, and which would be ascertained and determined by mere computation, contingent upon the existence of facts and not subject to the discretion of the levying officer.

In short then, the law must itself provide for the tax levy; and a law does not do this if it merely authorizes the levying power to be exerted at the discretion of an executive or local legislative officer or tribunal.

The sections amended by the bill to which you refer relate to two subjects connected with taxation and with the levying of taxes, viz.: 1. Certain limitations upon the aggregate of all levies. 2. The machinery through which the levying process must be carried on in order to enforce these limitations.

A law providing for limitations on tax rates is not a law " providing for tax levies" as I have construed that phrase; neither is a law providing the machinery by and through which local levying authorities must exercise their levying power such a law.

I may add that I have attempted to examine the debates of the late constitutional convention for light upon the question which is presented by your letter. The publication of the debates is not, however, complete and the volumes now in print are not indexed so that within the time in which I was obliged to consider the question, I was unable to find anything bearing thereon.

I repeat, then, in conclusion that it is my opinion that house bill No. 500 to which you refer, will take effect ninety days after it was filed by the governor in the office of the secretary of state and not before that time.

Yours very truly,

TIMOTHY S. HOGAN,
Attorney General.

LIABILITY OF CORPORATION, AFTER VOLUNTARY DISSOLUTION, FOR TAXES UPON PROPERTY REPORTED PRIOR THERETO, BUT THE CLAIM OF WHICH ACCRUED SUBSEQUENTLY TO SAID DISSOLUTION.

Under sections 8740, 8741, 8742, 8743 and 11969, General Code, a corporation for profit after voluntary dissolution for the purpose of winding up its affairs is to be governed by the directors, trustees or manager of the affairs of such corporation acting last before the time of its dissolution, and such dissolved corporation may be sued upon all existing claims and liabilities existing at the time of dissolution, of which but for the dissolution, would have accrued against it in its corporate name, and in the same manner and to the same effect as if is were not dissolved.

All moneys and assets of such corporation coming into the hands of the persons acting as such trustees, represent a trust fund, which is liable for the payment of claims against a corporation which are unapproved at the time of the dissolution, and which except for the dissolution would have accrued against the corporation itself and the trustees may be personally liable when they distribute to the stockholders such assets without making provision for such unaccrued claims.

When a corporation prior to such dissolution has filed a report of its properties with the county auditor, but has so dissolved prior to the time of the accrual of the claim for taxes on the same, the county treasurer, under section 2658 may distrain sufficient goods and chattels remaining in the hands of such trustees as assets of the corporation. When there are no such properties within the hands of the trustees, the county treasurer may proceed, under section 2660, General Code, to have the court enter a judgment against the trustees for the amount of the taxes.

Against such judgment, the trustee may defend that the assets were insufficient to pay the taxes with other claims. When the assets are sufficient, however, and they have been distributed to stockholders without paying the claim for taxes, a judgment so obtained against such corporation will entitle the county treasurer to a proper action against the stockholders for the reason that such assets constitute a trust fund for the payment of existing creditors.

COLUMBUS, OHIO, May 26, 1913.

Tax Commission of Ohio, Columbus, Ohio.

GENTLEMEN:—I beg to acknowledge the receipt of your letter of April 17th, submitting for my opinion thereon the following question:

> "In the month of May, 1911, the W. E. Scott Company, of Montpelier, Ohio, a domestic corporation for profit, filed its annual report as an incorporated company with the county auditor of Williams county, who thereupon proceeded to ascertain and determine the value of the property of said company, which he found to be $18,400.00, all in personal property, and placed the same upon the tax duplicate, and taxes were levied thereon for the year 1911, in the manner provided by law. The taxes so levied amounted to $246.56, and the company having paid no part of the same, a penalty of ten per cent was added by the county treasurer, and there remains due and unpaid in the delinquent personal tax duplicate in the hands of the treasurer of Williams county the sum of $271.22.

"The W. E. Scott Company was incorporated February 7, 1908, and filed a certificate of voluntary dissolution with the secretary of state on September 19, 1911, and the county treasurer has been unable to collect such delinquent taxes. He now requests the advice of this commission as to whether such taxes are collectible and what his remedy, if any, is."

In the consideration of this question the following statutory provisions must be taken into account:

"Section 8738. When a majority of the directors, trustees, or other officers of a corporation not for profit desire to abandon its corporate existence and it has no debts, or in case of a corporation for profit when a majority of such officers become satisfied that the objects of the corporation cannot be accomplished, and no installment of its capital stock has been paid, no investments made, and that it has no debts, they, or the president of the board of directors, trustees, or other officers, may call a meeting of the members or stockholders of the corporation at such time and place as he or they designate by at least two weeks' publication in a newspaper published and of general circulation in the county wherein the principal office is located.

"Section 8739. If a majority of the members of such corporation not for profit present at such meeting desire such abandonment, or a majority in amount of the stockholders of such corporation for profit present in person or by proxy decide that the objects of such corporation cannot be accomplished then such corporation shall be abandoned or dissolved upon the filing of a certificate of such abandonment or dissolution with the secretary of state in the manner provided by law.

"Section 8740. When a majority of the directors or other officers having the management of the concerns of a corporation for profit, which has completely closed its business, and paid all the debts and liabilities incurred by it, desire to surrender its corporate authority and franchises, they, or the president of such board of directors, may call a meeting of the stockholders at such time or place as he or they designate by publication for four weeks in some newspaper published and of general circulation in the county wherein the principal office of the corporation is located and by written notices addressed to each of the stockholders whose residence is known, of the object, time and place of the meeting."

"Section 8741. If all the stockholders present at such meeting in person or by proxy decide to surrender and abandon its corporate authority the corporation shall be abandoned and dissolved upon the filing of a certificate of the abandonment or dissolution with the secretary of state in the manner provided by law.

"Section 8743. Upon the dissolution of a corporation by the expiration of the terms of its charter, or otherwise, and unless other persons be appointed by the legislature, or by the stockholders, directors, or trustees of the corporation, or by a court of competent authority, the directors, trustees, or managers of the affairs of such corporation, acting last before the time of its dissolution, by whatever name known in law, and their survivors, shall be the trustees of the creditors and stockholders of the dissolved corporation, and have full power to settle its affairs, collect and pay outstanding debts, and divide among the stockholders the money and other property remaining, in proportion to the stock of each stockholder paid up, after payment of debts and necessary expenses.

"Section 8743. The persons so constituted trustees, may sue for and recover the debts and property of the dissolved corporation, by the name of trustees of the corporation, describing it by its corporate name, and jointly and severally they shall be responsible to the creditors and stockholders of the corporation, to the extent of its property and effects coming into their hands. Such trustees may be made or become parties to any action, by or against the corporation. All liens of judgments existing at the time of the dissolution either in favor of or against the corporation, shall continue in force as if the dissolution had not taken place.

"Section 11969. Such dissolved corporation may be sued by its corporate name, for or upon a cause of action accrued, or which, but for the dissolution, would have accrued against it, in the same manner, and with the like effect, as if it were not dissolved. Process by which an action is instituted against it may be served by the sheriff, or other proper officer, by delivering a copy thereof to an assignee, trustee, receiver thereof, or person having charge of its assets, or by leaving such copy at his residence."

Although the section last quoted is widely separated in the present General Code from the other sections above quoted, yet by investigation of its legislative history it will be ascertained to be strictly in pari materia with the other sections, and it will appear that the reference in the first line of said section to "such dissolved corporation" means "any dissolved corporation.'

By virtue of the foregoing related provisions of law it is clear, I think, that a corporation cannot escape payment of an unaccrued liability merely by dissolving. It is true that if the corporation has dissipated or otherwise lost its assets before its dissolution, so that the property and effects coming into the hands of those upon whom the duty of acting as winding up trustees is cast by the above quoted provisions, is insufficient to discharge such unaccrued liabilities, they will not be personally liable therefor; and in case the liability of stockholders has been exhausted the creditor or other person holding a claim against the corporation will, upon its accrual, simply lose.

I am of the opinion, however, that the amount of property coming into the hands of the persons acting as the last board of directors or other persons acting in their stead as trustees of a dissolved corporation at the time of dissolution, represents a trust fund which is liable under the express provisions of the statute for the payment of claims against the corporation which are unaccrued at the time of the dissolution, which, except for the dissolution, would have accrued against the corporation itself.

The practical effect of such a holding is that if the trustees charged with the duty of winding up a corporation fail to provide for the payment of such unaccrued liability, and distribute to the stockholders the assets coming into their hands, they may be made personally liable at the suit of the owner of the unaccrued claim when it does ultimately accrue.

All the foregoing conclusions seem to me to follow without any special difficulty from the express language of the statute. Whether or not trustees could absolve themselves of liability on an unaccrued claim by paying bona fide debts that had accrued, and thus exhausting the fund coming into their possession, is a question not necessarily involved in your inquiry but one which I would answer in the affirmative, without full consideration, at least.

I am assuming, however, that in the case presented by you there may have been a fund existing at the date of dissolution which was more than sufficient to pay the debts of the concern, leaving a balance sufficient to pay the taxes. The case wherein such a balance, instead of being held to pay the taxes, is distributed to the stockholders, is the one which I am more particularly discussing.

The only confusion which arises from the statutes which are otherwise clear on their face, is caused by the fact that seemingly it is a condition precedent to the lawful voluntary dissolution of the corporation that it has paid all of its debts. Both the sections above quoted, which provide for the different methods of voluntary dissolution, require this. On the other hand, however, the sections providing for the board of winding up trustees explicitly authorizes and directs such trustees to pay all outstanding debts. These seeming inconsistencies may possibly be accounted for upon the assumption that the legislature supposed that the stockholders of a corporation might, in good faith, believe that all its debts were paid and so believing cause it to be dissolved; but that thereafter a forgotten liability would appear, or it may be supposed that while it is a condition precedent to the voluntary dissolution of a corporation that all debts be paid, yet there are different claims and demands other than those which are technically "debts" such as liabilities in tort, and perhaps taxes themselves, which need not be paid or discharged before the dissolution and are to be taken care of by the winding up trustees; or, again, it may be that the meaning of the word "debts" in the first two sections above quoted is to be interpreted as including accrued liabilities only, so that the legislative intent was to permit a corporation voluntarily to dissolve when all of its accrued liabilities had been discharged, leaving to the winding up trustees the duty of preserving the assets coming into their hands for the purpose of meeting the unaccrued demands when due.

Any one of these hypotheses affords a satisfactory explanation for the seeming paradox which is presented by the sections which I have quoted. At any rate it seems very clear to me that, as I have already stated, the winding up trustees are liable to "creditors" of the corporation to the amount of the assets coming into their hands upon all claims against a corporation which are unaccrued at the time of its dissolution.

This conclusion having been reached, the further question remains to be considered, viz.: Is the claim of the state for taxes one that can be so enforced?

In this connection I quote the following sections of the General Code which seem to have some bearing upon the subject:

> "Section 2658. When taxes are past due and unpaid, the county treasurer may distrain sufficient goods and chattels belonging to the person charged with such taxes, if found within the county, to pay the taxes so remaining due and the costs that have accrued. He shall immediately advertise in three public places in the township where the property was taken, the time and place it will be sold. If the taxes and costs accrued thereon are not paid before the day appointed for such sale, which shall be not less than ten days after the taking of the property, the treasurer shall sell it at public vendue or so much thereof as will pay such taxes and the costs.
> "Section 2660. If the county treasurer is unable to collect by distress taxes assessed upon a person or corporation or an executor, administrator, guardian, receiver, accounting officer, agent or factor, he shall apply to the clerk of the court of common pleas in his county at any time after his semi-annual settlement with the county auditor, and the clerk shall cause notice to be served upon such corporation, executor, administrator, guardian, receiver, accounting officer, agent or factor, requiring him forthwith to show cause why he should not pay such taxes. If he fails to show sufficient cause, the court at the term to which such notice is returnable shall enter a rule against him for such payment and the cost of the proceedings, which rule shall have the same force and effect as a judgment at law and shall be enforced by attachment or execution or such process as the court directs."

I am clearly of the opinion that under the first of the above quoted sections the county treasurer may distrain in specific cases the chattels which he may find in the possession of the winding up trustees. That is, if the property of the corporation has not been sold and the proceeds distributed but some of it remains in the possession of the last board of directors or any other agent of the company, it may be seized and sold for taxes against the corporation. In contemplation of law the property is still the property of the corporation, and the taxes having been charged against the corporation as such, they may be collected from such property even though the corporation for many purposes has ceased to exist.

If the tangible assets of the corporation have been dissipated or turned into money or other intangible things of value, then the proper proceeding, in my judgment, would be that provided for by section 2660. The proper party defendant in such a proceeding would be the corporation itself as provided by section 11969, General Code. Lareman vs. Insurance Co., 11 N. P. N. S. 58; Glass Co. vs. Stoehr, 54 O. S. 157.

Service of process, which in this case consists of the notice to show cause, should be made upon the trustees as therein provided. Treasurer vs. Dale, 60 O. S. 180.

It would, in my judgment, be a defense to this proceeding, on the part of the trustees representing the corporation, that on the dissolution of the corporation all of the assets of the corporation had been distributed or that an amount insufficient to pay the taxes had been left in their hands (in which latter case in all probability the judgment should be only for the amount left in the hands of the trustees and not paid out to bona fide creditors of the corporation prior to the service of the notice). This is because the claim of the state for personal taxes does not constitute a specific lien like that for taxes on real estate does constitute. If, however, the trustees are unable to show the facts which I have just mentioned, which in a proceeding like this would be matters of defense, in my judgment, then the judgment provided for in the section last above quoted should be entered against the corporation as such. The payment of this judgment could, in my opinion, be enforced against the trustees personally in the manner in which the payment of any other judgment is enforced; whether or not having obtained a judgment (which constitutes a technical debt for this purpose) the county treasurer would then stand in the relation of a "creditor" to the trustees, within the meaning of section 8743, supra, might be a difficult question. Yet, in my opinion, the question is to be answered in the affirmative. It is held in numerous authorities in this state and elsewhere that taxes are not debts within the meaning of that word as customarily used. Peter vs. Parkinson, 83 O. S. 36. However, they are enforceable claims and may be made the basis of a judgment even after the "person" liable has passed out of existence, if there is survivorship of the cause of action as against others standing in a representative capacity. Hopkins Treas. vs. Osborne, 14 N. P. N. S. 94.

A judgment, on the other hand, once obtained, is a debt, and although this judgment itself might have to be sued upon for the purpose of obtaining separate judgments against the trustees under section 8743, yet it could, in this way, I think, be enforced against them personally.

If it should develop that the assets of a corporation after its dissolution had been distributed among the stockholders, and that the surviving trustees, being the last board of directors, as aforesaid, were proof against execution under proceedings like those just discussed then, the judgment having been obtained against the corporation by service upon them as above described, the county treasurer would, in my opinion have a right of action against the stockholders as such to be enforced by proper proceedings. Compton vs. Railway, 45 O. S. 592-613-614.

That is to say, as stated in the case last cited the assets of a corporation remaining in existence at the time it is dissolved, constitute a trust fund for the payment of creditors, and for the discharge of legal demands whether accrued or not. Therefore, even though at the time of the dissolution, the county treasurer in his official capacity would not be a "creditor" of the corporation under the facts stated by you, yet he would have an equitable right in this trust fund which, upon the accrual of this claim and its reduction to judgment in the manner above referred to, he could enforce by the remedies which the statutes and courts of equity afford to those entitled to participate in a trust fund.

Some of the authorities which I have cited are closely analogous to different phases of the question stated by you. Others are perhaps more remotely analogous. The complete working out of the question upon various propositions that might be conceived involves the expression of an opinion upon many points which do not seem to have arisen under the laws of this state.

The language of section 2660, supra, especially that with relation to the enforcement of the judgment thereunder once obtained, is, however, so comprehensive as to afford to me considerable confidence that, at least under the direction of the court as therein provided, the treasurer might avail himself of all the ordinary remedies for such enforcement.

Yours very truly,

TIMOTHY S. HOGAN,

Attorney General.

PUBLIC UTILITIES—LIABILITIES OF FREIGHT LINE COMPANIES FOR TAX ON ROLLING STOCK IN NATURE OF EXCISE TAX—NOT SUBJECT TO PROPERTY TAX BY TAX COMMISSION—LIABILITY OF DOMESTIC FREIGHT LINE CORPORATION OR FRANCHISE TAX—NON-LIABILITY FOR SUCH OF FOREIGN FREIGHT LINE COMPANIES. EMERY CANDLE COMPANY; GRASCELLI CHEMICAL COMPANY; PROCTOR AND GAMBLE TRANSPORTATION COMPANY.

Under sections 5415 and 5416, General Code, freight line companies are included in the general use of the term "public utility."

Under sections 5462 and 5468, General Code, freight line companies are subjected to a tax in the nature of an excise tax, which tax is assessed upon the amount of rolling stock of such companies which is located in Ohio, and which amount is to be determined by the proportion of the capital stock of the company representing rolling stock which the miles of railroad over which the company runs cars or its cars are run in this state, bears to the entire number of miles in this state and elsewhere over which the company runs cars and its cars are run, and such other rules as may conduce to an equitable proportionment of value.

Although freight line companies would seem to be included within the terms of section 5420, General Code, requiring all public utilities to deliver before the first day of March to the tax commission a statement with respect to its property, nevertheless, no method of proportionment of value is provided for freight line companies as is the case with respect to other forms of public utilities, enumerated in section 5422, General Code.

From a legislative history of these statutes the intended plan is disclosed to make an assessment of the whole system of public utilities upon a unit basis as a going concern and to apportion the value so ascertained upon the mileage or some other similar basis to the state of Ohio and the various subdivisions therein.

A prescribed method of apportioning such value would seem to be a necessary part of the procedure and the omission of such prescribed plan with reference to freight line companies must be deemed significant.

Inasmuch as this tax stated to be in the nature of an excise tax operates equally upon the property of such freight line companies, whether they are engaged in the business of interstate commerce or intrastate commerce, such tax must not be seemed to be made upon the privilege of doing business and therefore not properly an excise tax, but rather a tax upon the instrumentalities of the business, i. e., the physical properties.

Under the rule of uniformity, therefore, prescribed by article 12, section 2 of the constitution the legislature could not well have intended that the physical properties of such company should be subjected in addition to this tax designated in the nature of an excise tax, but which is in reality a property tax, should also be subject to the general property tax upon its physical properties, which is applied to other forms of public utilities.

Inasmuch, therefore, as in the plan of procedure set out, no provision is made for a complete report of the properties of freight line companies and no plan of procedure is set forth for the apportionment of the value of such properties, and as a property tax is to all particular purposes imposed by the statutes and described as a tax in the nature of an excise tax upon the rolling stock of such companies, they are not to be deemed within the terms of the statutes prescribing a method of property tax for public utilities generally.

Although the statutes provide for a report of the gross receipts of public utilities generally, nevertheless freight line companies are not included in the provisions defining the duty of the tax commission in ascertaining the gross receipts and gross earnings of the public utilities for the regular excise tax purposes. A statement of gross receipts is, therefore, not required by the statutes of freight line companies.

The legislature has failed to affect, therefore, that freight line companies be made subject to the excise tax provisions of the Cole law.

Under section 5495, General Code, all corporations for profit, are subject to the Willis franchise tax unless excepted therefrom by section 5519, General Code, and therefore, domestic freight line companies are liable for this tax. Foreign freight line companies, however, not being subject to compliance with the provisions of both sections 179 and 183, are not liable for the franchise tax.

Under the terms of the statutes, only the rolling stock of freight line companies is to be assessed for taxation by the tax commission; the other property being returned locally.

COLUMBUS, OHIO, April 2, 1913.

Tax Commission of Ohio, Columbus, Ohio.

GENTLEMEN:—I beg to acknowledge receipt of your letter of August 21st enclosing a copy of the purpose clause of the Emery Candle Company, a domestic corporation, together with a copy of a statement contained in the annual report of the company, as a freight line company, for the year 1912, made under protest.

You advise as to this company that it is its contention that if it is required to report at all as a freight line company or "public utility" for any purpose, its report as such should treat only of the freight line business of the company, if any, and should not include a statement of tangible property used otherwise than in the transaction of such business or its gross receipts other than from that business; and that the company should also report annually as a domestic corporation for profit and pay franchise taxes. As to this company you submit in your letter of August 21st the following questions:

> "(1) Is the above named company a 'public utility' within the meaning of the provisions of the act of May 31, 1911, and as such required to report to the commission all its property, real and personal, to be assessed by the commission, and to pay an excise tax upon its entire gross receipts from all intrastate business? Or
> "(2) Should it report as a domestic corporation for profit?"

Subsequently you transmitted to me a brief prepared by Messrs. Squires Sanders and Dempsey on behalf of the American Tank Line, a freight line operated as a part of its business by the Graselli Chemical Company, evidently an Ohio corporation, and in connection with the facts respecting that company as disclosed by the brief as well as those arising out of the report made by the Emery Candle Company you submit in your letter of September 10th, the following questions:

> "(1) Whether the company is a freight line company?
> "(2) If so, should it be treated as a public utility and all of its property be assessed by the commission, and should it pay an excise tax upon its entire receipts from all business?
> "(3) Or pay an excise tax upon the proportion of its capital stock represented by the freight line business and a franchise tax as a domestic or foreign corporation for profit? And

"(4) A property tax upon the value of its property used in the freight line business in addition to its other property?"

On the last named date you also submitted to me a statement of facts and an argument submitted to you by Messrs. Paxton, Warrington and Seasongood, counsel for the Proctor & Gamble Transportation Company, a domestic corporation exclusively engaged in freight line business, raising the question as to what property of that company should be assessed by the tax commission of Ohio for local taxation, assuming that the company owns a large number of cars of which five are continuously in Ohio, and the remainder during the greater portion of a given year are operated entirely outside of the state of Ohio. The commission has submitted this question to me in connection with the other matters heretofore referred to and for my advice on the following specific question which relates solely to the Emery Candle Company:

"Whether the commission should assess the value of the moneys and credits and certify this value to the auditor of Hamilton county, and should it assess the value of any cars against the company for local taxation, and, if so, what proportion of the cars is taxable in Ohio?"

In the same connection and in the same letter you state that a partnership known as Isaac Winkler & Bro., domiciled in Ohio, operates some freight line cars and reports to the commission in addition to said cars some money and office furniture at its office. The statement is that the firm is also engaged in business other than the freight line business, and my opinion is requested upon the following question:

"Whether it is the duty of the commission to assess any of the property of the partnership other than the cars?"

Many specific questions are involved in the various queries thus submitted to me, and it would be confusing at this time to state these questions in detail. At the outset of any consideration of any one of these questions, or all of them together, a single fundamental question arises and must be answered, viz.:

What is the scheme of taxation of property and privileges of freight line companies in Ohio at the present time?

That this is a question by no means easy of determination becomes apparent upon consideration of the following sections of the General Code, enacted as sections of the tax commission act of 1911, 102 O. L. 224.

"Section 5415. The term 'public utility' as used in this act means and embraces each corporation, company, firm, individual and association, their lessees, trustees, or receivers elected or appointed by any authority whatsoever, and herein referred to as express company, telephone company, telegraph company, sleeping car company, freight line company, equipment company, electric light company, gas company, pipe line company, waterworks company, messenger company, signal company, messenger or signal company, union depot company, water transportation company, heating company, cooling company, street railroad company, railroad company, suburban railroad company, and interurban railroad company, and such term 'public utility' shall include any plant or property owned or operated, or both, by any such companies, corporations, firms, individuals or associations. (Sec. 39, 102 O. L. 230.)

"Section 5416. That any person or persons, firm or firms, co-partnership or voluntary association, joint stock association, company or corporation, wherever organized or incorporated:

* * * * * *

"When engaged in the business of operating cars for the transportation, accommodation, comfort, convenience or safety of passengers, on or over any railway line or lines, in whole or in part within this state, such line or lines not being owned, leased or operated by such company, whether such cars be termed sleeping, palace, parlor, chair, dining or buffet cars, or by another name, is a sleeping car company;

"When engaged in the business of operating cars for the transportation of freight, whether such freight is owned by such company, or any other person or company, over any railway line or lines in whole or part within this state, such line or lines not being owned, leased or operated, by such company, whether such cars be termed box, flat, coal, ore, tank, stock, gondola, furniture or refrigerator cars or by any other name, is a freight line company.

"When engaged in the business of furnishing or leasing cars, of whatsoever kind or description, to be used in the operation of any railway line or lines, wholly or partly within this state, such line or lines not being owned, leased or operated, by such company, is an equipment company. (Sec. 40, 102 O. L. 230.)

"Section 5417. Section 41. The term 'gross receipts' shall be held to mean and include the entire receipts for business done by any person or persons, firm or firms, co-partnership or voluntary association, joint stock association, company or corporation, wherever organized or incorporated, from the operation of any public utility, or incidental thereto or in connection therewith. The gross receipts for business done by an incorporated company, engaged in the operation of a public utility, shall be held to mean and include the entire receipts for business done by such company under the exercise of its corporate powers, whether from the operation of the public utility itself or from any other business done whatsoever.

"Section 5420. Section 44. Each public utility, as defined in this act, except express, telegraph and telephone companies, shall annually, on or before the first day of March, make and deliver to the tax commission of Ohio, in such form as the commission may prescribe, a statement with respect to such utility's plant or plants and all property owned or operated, or both, by it wholly or in part within this state.

"Section 5422. Section 46. Such statement shall contain: (here follow numerous items of general information, required to be included in such statement) * * *

"13. In the case of street, suburban or interurban railroad companies and railroad companies, such statements shall also give: (Here follows certain specific information exacted from such company) * * *.

"14. In the case of pipe line, gas, natural gas, waterworks and heating or cooling companies, such statement shall also show: (Here follows an enumeration of specific items of information exacted from such company).

"Section 5423. Section 47. On the second Monday of June of each year, the commission shall ascertain and assess, at its true value in money, all the property in the state of each such public utility, subject to the provisions of this act, other than express, telegraph and telephone companies.

"Section 5424. Section 48. In determining the value of the property of each such public utility to be assessed and taxed within the state, the commission shall be guided by the value of the property as determined by the information contained in the sworn statements made by the public utility to the commission and such other evidence and rules as will enable it to arrive at the true value in money of the entire property of such public utility within this state, in the proportion which the value of such property bears to the value of the entire property of such public utility.

"Section 5425. Section 49. The property of such public utilities to be so assessed by the commission shall be all the property thereof, as defined in section forty-three of this act.

"Section 5428. Section 52. The commission shall deduct from the total value of the property of each of such public utilities in this state, as assessed by it, the value of the real property owned by such public utilities, if any there be, as otherwise assessed for taxation in this state, and shall justly and equitably equalize the relative values thereof.

"Section 5446. Section 57. The commission shall apportion the value of the property of all other public utilities (than railroad and street suburban and interurban railroad companies) assessed according to the provisions of this act as follows:

"(a) When all the property of such public utility is located within the limits of a county, the assessed value thereof shall be apportioned by the commission between the several taxing districts therein, in the proportion which the property located within the taxing district in question, bears to the entire value of the property of each such public utility, as ascertained and valued as herein provided, so that, to each taxing district there shall be apportioned such part of the entire valuation as will fairly equalize the relative value of the property therein located, to the whole value thereof.

"(b) When the property of such public utility is located in more than one county in this state, the assessed value thereof shall be apportioned by the commission between the several counties and the taxing districts therein, in the proportion which the property located therein bears to the entire value of the property of such public utility as ascertained and valued, as herein provided, so that to each county and each taxing district therein, there shall be apportioned such part of the entire valuation as will fairly equalize the relative value of the property therein located to the whole value thereof.

"(c) When the property of such public utility, required to be assessed by the provisions of this act, is located in more than one state, the assessed value thereof shall be apportioned by the commission in such manner as will fairly and equitably determine the principal sum for the value thereof in this state, and after ascertaining such value it shall be apportioned by the commission, as herein provided.

"Section 5447. Section 58. On the second Monday of July, the commission shall certify such apportionment to the auditor of each county in which any of the property of the public utility is located.

"Section 5448. Section 59. The county auditor shall place the apportioned value on the tax list and duplicate and taxes shall be levied and collected thereon, in the same manner and at the same rate, as other personal property in the taxing district in question.

"Section 5460. Section 71. Public utilities shall not be required to make returns under, nor be governed by the provisions of sections fifty-four hundred and four, fifty-four hundred and five and fifty-four hundred and six of the General Code.

"Section 5462. Section 73. Annually, between the first and thirty-first days of May, every sleeping car, freight line and equipment company, doing business or owning cars which are operated in this state, shall under the oath of the person constituting such company, if a person, or under the oath of the president, secretary, treasurer, superintendent or chief officer in this state of such association or corporation, if an association or corporation, make and file with the commission a statement in such form as the commission may prescribe.

"Section 5463. Section 74. Such statement shall contain:

* * * * * * * * * *

"6. The number of shares of capital stock.

"7. The par and market value, or, if there is no market value, the actual value of the shares of stock on the first day of May.

"8. A detailed statement of the real estate owned by the company in this state, where situated, and the value thereof as assessed for taxation.

"9. The total value of the real estate owned by the company and situated outside of this state.

"10. The whole length of the lines of railway over which the company runs its cars, and the length of so much of such lines as is without and is within this state.

"11. The whole number and value of the cars owned or leased by the company classifying the cars according to kind, and the daily average number of cars operated in this state.

"Section 5465. Section 76. On the first Monday in July, the commission shall ascertain and determine the amount and value of the proportion of the capital stock of sleeping car, freight line and equipment companies, representing capital and property of such companies owned and used in this state, and in so determining shall be guided in each case by the proportion of the capital stock of the company representing rolling stock, which the miles of railroad over which such company runs cars, or its cars are run in this state, bear to the entire number of miles in this state and elsewhere over which such company runs cars, or its cars are run, and such other rules and evidence as will enable the commission to determine, fairly and equitably, the amount and value of the capital stock of such company representing capital and property owned and used in this state.

"Section 5468. Section 79. On the first Monday in August of each year, the commission shall certify such amount to the auditor of state, who shall charge a sum in the nature of an excise tax, to be collected from each sleeping car, freight line and equipment company, doing business or owning cars which are operated in this state, to be computed by taking one and two-thirds per cent. of the amount fixed by the commission as the value of the portion of the capital stock representing the capital and property of each company owned and used in this state.

"Section 5470. Section 81. Each public utility, except express, telegraph and telephone companies and street, suburban and interurban railroad and railroad companies, doing buines: in this state, shall, annually, on or before the first day of August, and each street, suburban and interurban railroad and railroad company, shall annually on or before the first day of September, under the oath of the person constituting such company, if a person, or under the oath of the president, secretary, treasurer, superintendent or chief officer in this state, of such association or corporation, if an association or corporation, make and file with the commission a statement in such form as the commission may prescribe.

"Section 5471. Section 82. (Provides for certain general information to be furnished by all public utilities in the statement provided for in the foregoing section.)

"Section 5474. Section 85. In the case of all such public utilities except railroad, street, suburban and interurban railroad companies, such statement shall also contain the entire gross receipts of the company, including all sums earned or charged, whether actually received, or not, from whatever source derived, for business done within this state for the year next preceding the first day of May, including the company's proportion of gross receipts for business done by it within this state in connection with other companies, firms, corporations, persons or associations, but this shall not apply to receipts from interstate business, or business done for the federal government. Such statement shall also contain the total gross receipts of such company for such period in this state from business done within this state.

"Section 5475. Section 86. On the first Monday of September, the commission shall ascertain and determine the entire gross receipts of each electric light, gas, natural gas, pipe line, waterworks, messenger or signal, union depot, heating, cooling and water transportation company for business done within this state for the year then next preceding the first day of May, and of each express, telegraph and telephone company for business done within this state for the year ending on the thirtieth day of June, excluding therefrom, as to each of the companies named in this section, all receipts derived wholly from interstate business or business done for the federal government.

"Section 5481. Section 92. On the first Monday of October, the commission shall certify to the auditor of state, the amount of the gross receipts so determined, of electric light, gas, natural gas, pipe line, waterworks, express, telegraph, telephone, messenger or signal, union depot, heating, cooling and water transportation companies, for the year covered by its annual report to the commission, as required in this act.

"Section 5483. Section 94. In the month of October, annually, the auditor of state shall charge, for collection from each electric light, gas, natural gas, waterworks, telephone, messenger or signal, union depot, heating, cooling and water transportation company, a sum in the nature of an excise tax, for the purpose of carrying on its intrastate business, to be computed on the amount so fixed and reported by the commission as the gross receipts of such company on its intrastate business for the year covered by its annual report to the commission, as required in this act, by taking one and two-thirds per cent. of all such gross receipts, which tax shall not be less than ten dollars in any case.

"Section 5490. Section 101. Nothing contained in this act shall exempt or relieve electric light, gas, natural gas, pipe line, waterworks, street, suburban or interurban railroad, express, telegraph, telephone, messenger or signal, union depot, railroad, heating, cooling, sleeping car, freight line, equipment and water transportation companies from the assessment and taxation of their property in the manner authorized and provided by law.

"Section 5495. Section 106. Between the first day of May and the first day of July, 1911, and annually thereafter during the month of May, each corporation, organized under the laws of this state, for profit, shall make a report, in writing to the commission, in such form as the commission may prescribe.

"Section 5498. Section 109. Upon the filing of the report, provided for in the last three preceding sections, the commission, after finding such report to be correct, shall on the first Monday of July, determine the amount of the subscribed or issued and outstanding capital stock of each such corporation. On the first Monday in August, the commission shall certify the amount so determined by it to the auditor of state, who shall charge for collection, on or before August fifteenth, as herein provided, from such corporation, a fee of three-twentieths of one per cent. upon its subscribed or issued and outstanding capital stock, which fee shall not be less than ten dollars in any case. Such fee shall be payable to the treasurer of state on or before the first day of the following October.

"Section 5499. Section 110. Annually, during the month of July, each foreign corporation for profit, doing business in this state, and owning or using a part or all of its capital or plant in this state, and subject to compliance with all other provisions of law, and in addition to all other statements required by law, shall make a report in writing to the commission in such form as the commission may prescribe.

"Section 5503. Section 114. On or before October fifteenth, the auditor of state shall charge for collection as herein provided, annually, from such company, in addition to the initial fees otherwise provided for by law, for the privilege of exercising its franchises in this state, a fee of three-twentieths of one per cent. upon the proportion of the authorized capital stock of the corporation represented by property owned and used and business transacted in this state, which fee shall not be less than ten dollars in any case. Such fee shall be payable to the treasurer of state on or before the first day of the following December.

"Section 5519. Section 129. An incorporated company, whether foreign or domestic, owning or operating a public utility in this state, and as such required by law to file reports with the tax commission and to pay an excise tax upon its gross receipts or gross earnings as provided in this act, * * * shall not be subject to the provisions of sections one hundred and six to one hundred and fifteen, inclusive, of this act."

A cursory reading of the foregoing sections discloses that there are therein provided for three special taxes and one special method of valuation for taxation, to wit:

1. A method of valuation of the properties of each public utility as defined in the act except express, telegraph and telephone companies, to be employed by the tax commission of Ohio (sections 44 to 59, inclusive, supra). As is apparent from sections 58 and 59 above quoted, the result of this method of valuation is the placing of the value so determined on the general duplicate of the counties in which such property is located, apportioned among the taxing districts thereof for the levy of taxes thereon by the state and by the local taxing authorities empowered to levy current rates.

2. A special tax denominated a "sum in the nature of an excise tax" upon sleeping car, freight line and equipment companies and based upon the proportion of the value of the capital stock of such companies representing property and business in Ohio, ascertained by comparison of the route mileage of such companies in Ohio with the entire route mileage. (Sections 73 to 79 inclusive, supra.)

3. A special excise tax, seemingly (section 81) exacted from each public utility as defined in the act and declared to be upon the privilege of carrying on intrastate business, the value of which is ascertained by the use of the gross receipts or earnings of such business. (Sections 81 to 94 inclusive, supra.)

4. A franchise tax exacted from domestic and foreign corporations, excepting the public utilities enumerated in section 129, supra, and based upon the amount of the subscribed or issued and outstanding capital stock of domestic corporations, and the portion of the authorized capital stock of foreign corporations represented by property owned and used and business done in Ohio by such corporations. (Sections 106 to 114, supra.)

To how many of these special taxes then, are sleeping car, freight line and equipment companies subject, and are such companies under obligation to make reports to the tax commission for the valuation of their property in Ohio by the special method above described?

I call attention to the following peculiarities in the legislation above quoted, the significance of which, in connection with this question will at once become apparent:

1. The general definitive sections being sections 39, 40 and 41 as above quoted when considered apart from the other sections of the act certainly establish the following points:

(a) Sleeping car, freight line and equipment companies are within the meaning of the term "public utilities" as used in the entire act from which all of the sections above quoted in full are taken. (Sections 39 to 140, supra.)

(b) The entire receipts for business done by a person, firm or corporation engaged in the operation of a sleeping car, freight line and equipment company constitute the "gross receipts" of such company within the meaning of that term wherever it may be used in the act. (Section 41, supra.)

2. The first point being established it follows as a matter of course that sleeping car, freight line and equipment companies are within the intendment of section 44, supra, and are required to have their property valued for simple taxation according to the special method provided in the succeeding sections by the tax commission.

Yet section 46, which provides in detail the contents of the statement which shall be made to the tax commission for this purpose, contains certain specific requirements as to street, suburban and interurban railroad companies, railroad companies, pipe line companies, gas companies, heating companies and cooling companies, and does not contain any such specific provision for special information to be furnished by sleeping car, freight line and equipment companies. In this connection I may be permitted to point out that express, telegraph and telephone companies are required to report to the tax commission for assessment of their property for local taxation under section 60 to 70 inclusive, which said sections contain explicit directions as to the nature of the information to be furnished to the tax commission by such companies similar to the explicit provisions of paragraphs 13 and 14 of section 46.

Therefore, it is apparent that as to all the "public utilities" enumerated in section 39 there is, either in paragraph 13 or 14 of section 46 of the act or in section 61 thereof explicit provision for the furnishing of particular information to the tax commission in the statement required to be made by such companies for valuation of property purposes, except the following: (a) Sleeping car, freight line and equipment companies. (b) Messenger and signal companies. (c) Union depot companies and (d) water transportation companies.

This fact can be ascertained by comparing the catalogue of section 39, supra, as repeated in section 40, with the provisions of paragraph 13 and 14 of section 46 and sections 13 to 17 inclusive of section 61 of the act.

What then is the nature of the special provisions as to other companies which are omitted with respect to the above mentioned public utilities?

I have quoted the provisions of paragraphs 13 and 14 of section 46 and 13 to 17 inclusive of section 61 to which I have referred in the quotation already made. In this connection, however, I think it would be well to consider these provisions in their entirety:

> "In the case of street, suburban or interurban railroad companies, and railroad companies, such statements shall also give:
> "(a) The whole length of their lines and the length of so much of their line as is without and is within this state, including branches in and out of the state, which shall include lines and branches such companies control and use under lease or otherwise.
> "(b) The railway track in each county in the state, through which it runs; giving the whole number of miles of road in the county, including the track and its branches and side and second tracks, switches, and turnouts therein and the true and actual value per mile of such railway in each county, stating the valuation of main track, second or other main track, branches, sides, switches and turnouts, separately.
> "(c) Such statement as to character, classes, number, amounts, values, locations, ownership or control and use of rolling stock, as the commission may require.
>
> "(d) The depots, station houses, section houses, freight houses, machine and repair shops and machinery therein and all other buildings, structures and appendages connected thereto or used therewith, including tool houses, and the tools usually kept therein, together with telegraph and telephone lines owned or used, and the true and actual value of all buildings and structures, and all such machinery, tools and appendages, including such telegraph and telephone lines; and the true and actual value thereof in each county in this state in which it is located.
> "(e) The gross earnings for the year, including earnings from telegraph lines, which shall be stated separately, on the whole length of the road, including the branches thereof, in and out of the state, and also such earnings within this state on way freight and passengers.
> "14. In the case of pipe line, gas, natural gas, waterworks and heating or cooling companies, such statement shall also show:
> "(a) The number of miles of pipe line owned, leased or operated within this state, the size or sizes of the pipe composing such line, and the material of which such pipe is made;
> "(b) If such pipe line be partly within and partly without this state, the whole number of miles thereof within this state and the whole number of miles without this state, including all branches and connecting lines in and out of this state.
> "(c) The length, size and true and actual value of such pipe line in each county of this state, including in such valuation the main line, branches and connecting lines, and stating the different value of the pipe separately;

"(d) Its pumping stations, machines and repair shops and machinery therein, tanks, storage tanks and all other buildings, structures and appendages connected or used therewith, including telegraph and telephone lines and wires, and the true and actual value of all such stations, shops, tanks, buildings, structures, machinery and appendages and of such telegraph and telephone lines, and the true and actual value thereof in each county in this state in which it is located; and the number and value of all the tank cars, tanks, barges, boats and barrels.

"Section 61. * * *

"13. In the case of telegraph and telephone companies, such statement shall also set forth, the whole length of their lines, and the length of so much of their lines as is without and is within this state, which shall include the lines such telegraph and telephone companies control and use under lease or otherwise and the miles of wire in each taxing district in this state.

"14. In the case of telegraph and telephone companies, such statement shall also contain the entire gross receipts, including all sums earned or charged, whether actually received or not, for the year ending the thirtieth day of June, from whatever source derived, whether messages, telephone tolls, rentals, or otherwise, for business done within this state including the company's proportion of gross receipts for business done by it within this state in connection with other companies, firms, corporations, persons or associations excluding therefrom all receipts derived wholly from interstate business or business done for the federal government. Such statement shall also contain the total gross receipts of such company, for such period, from business done within this state.

"15. In the case of express companies, such statement shall also contain the entire receipts, including all sums earned or charged whether actually received or not, from whatever source derived, for business done within this state, for the year ending the thirtieth day of June, for and on account of such company, including the company's proportion of gross receipts for business done by it within this state in connection with other companies, firms, corporations, persons or associations, excluding therefrom all receipts derived wholly from interstate business or business done for the federal government. Such statement shall also contain the total gross receipts of such company, for such period, from business done within this state.

"16. In the case of express companies, the gross receipts for the year ending the thirtieth day of June, from whatever source derived, of each office within this state, giving the name of each office in this state.

"17. In the case of express companies, such statement shall also contain the whole length of the lines of rail and water routes, over which the company did business on the thirtieth day of June, and the length of so much of such lines of land and water transportation as is without and within this state, naming the lines within this state."

A glance through the provisions just quoted will at once disclose their significance when it is realized that there is no like provision as to sleeping car, freight line and equipment companies. All of these provisions require statements of facts upon the basis of which the apportionment of value required by section 57, supra, can be made.

At this point it might be well to consider the legislative history of the idea embodied in the sections now under direct consideration; I refer, of course, to the sections providing a special method of assessment of property for local taxation. The commission is familiar with the fact that the act of 1911, the provisions of which have been quoted, is intended as a formal revision of the corresponding act of June 10, 1910, 101 O. L. 399, familiarly known as the "Langdon law." That act created the tax commission of Ohio and reposed in it various functions relating to taxation formerly exercised by numerous ex- officio boards and state officers. It also embodied one or two ideas in taxation not new in themselves, which were extended and made applicable to a larger group of subjects. In particular, it was the intention, I think I may say, as evinced by that act, to apply to the businesses formerly taxed on the excise basis by the so-called "Cole law," which was originally enacted in 1896, and was re-enacted under that name in 1902, the principles of the so-called "Nichols law," which related to the assessment for property taxation, of express, telegraph and telephone companies. Practically all of the latter law is found now in sections 60 to 70 inclusive of the act of 1911, some of which are above quoted. The idea of the Nichols law thus intended to be extended to other subjects of taxation than express, telegraph and telephone companies was described in a philosophical way by the supreme court of the United States, which sustained its constitutionality in the case of Adams Express Co. vs. Ohio State Auditor, 165 U. S. 195, and 166 U. S. 185 (rehearing).

Paraphasing the language of the court used in these two opinions (which I need not qoute), the scheme of that law was a method of assessing and apportioning the entire value of the property of such companies located in Ohio, considered with respect to the enhancement of value contributed to that property by reason of its use in connection with other property elsewhere located, as a part of a single plant or system. That is to say, the assessing body first ascertained the value of the entire plant or system wherever the parts thereof might be located, and then upon the mileage basis apportioned to Ohio and to the various counties and taxing districts in the state so much of that entire value as was properly attributable to the plant or system in this state, due allowances and deductions being made for property owned by the company but not used in connection with the system and property which for any other reason ought to contribute especially to the revenues of a given locality. Summarizing this statement then, the two essential elements of the legislative idea embodied in the "Nichols law" were:

(a) Assessment of the whole system on the unit basis as a going concern; and

(b) Apportionment of the value so ascertained upon the mileage or some similar basis to Ohio and to the various counties and taxing districts therein, in which the plant was located on the system operated.

I think I may say without fear contradiction that the legislative idea under discussion was not complete without either of these elements; and that it could not be effectively applied without machinery designed for carrying either of them into effect.

Before leaving this particular subject I call especial attention to paragraph 17 of section 61 which is quoted above. This paragraph provides for certain specific information to be furnished by express companies for assessment of their property under the "Nichols law." It requires a statement of "the whole length of the lines of rail and water routes, over which the company did business * * * and the length of so much of such lines of land and water transportation as is without and within this state, naming the lines within the state."

In connection with this provision I call attention also to paragraph 10 of section 74 of the act of 1911, and to section 76 thereof, above quoted. These provisions are found in the sections especially relating to sleeping car, freight line and equipment companies, and affording the machinery for the assessment of the so-called "excise tax" on such companies as already described.

For the purpose of apportioning the value of the capital stock of sleeping car, freight line and equipment companies information is required to be furnished the commission as to the routes of travel of such sleeping car, freight line and equipment companies within and without the state, and the apportionment is upon that basis. Why then is there, in section 46 of the act no provision of this sort as to sleeping car, freight line and equipment companies?

I have said that one of the ideas embodied in the "Langdon act" of 1910, was the extension to the subjects of the "Cole law" of the principles of the "Nichols law." In carrying this idea into effect the general assembly coined a new term—that is, one new at the time, to wit, "public utility." This term was applied to all the subjects of the "Cole law," to those of the "Nichols law" and, as I have pointed out, to sleeping car, freight line and equipment companies (although in the act of 1910, the definitions of sleeping car, freight line and equipment companies were not only found in a section other than that including the definitions of other public utilities, but also the definitions themselves were unlike, in an essential particular, the corresponding definitions of the act of 1911). See sections 121, 46 and 39 of the act of 1910, which I need not quote, and compare the same with sections 39 and 40 of the act of 1911.

With this legislative history in mind, and having regard to the fundamental idea of the "Nichols law" and the two essential elements thereof as above pointed out, it seems strange and yet by no means inexplicable that sleeping car, freight line and equipment companies doing a business in all essential respects similar to that transacted by express companies, which said business presents exactly the same difficulties of apportionment and localization of property values as are presented by express companies, and in a lesser degree, by railroad, street, suburban and interurban railroads, telegraph, telephone, pipe line, gas, natural gas, waterworks and heating and cooling companies have been treated in the act of 1911 (and in the act of 1910 as well) differently from these companies, and like such utilities as electric light companies, messenger companies, signal companies, union depot companies and water transportation companies. In short there is at least an incongruity in legislation which requires the value of the property of a railroad company or an express company for example to be apportioned upon a certain definite basis in the light of certain definite information required to be furnished to the tax commission, but which apparently while requiring the value of sleeping car, freight line and equipment companies to be ascertained upon the unit basis and "apportioned" (see section 67, supra), does not prescribe any method of apportionment nor afford any information by which any equitable apportionment whatever can be made (unless this matter is left to the discretion of the commission); and this too, in spite of the fact that a perfect mode of apportionment was before the legislature, not only in the case of express companies, but also in the case of sleeping car, freight line and equipment companies themselves, in the act providing for the excise tax upon such companies. The significance of this peculiar state of legislation will be hereafter considered.

3. The first point above noticed, viz., the sleeping car, freight line and equipment companies are apparently public utilities for all purposes of the act of 1911, by virtue of the provisions of section 39 and 40 thereof, seems also to establish the conclusion that the excise tax provisions, beginning with section 81, which provisions are sufficiently quoted above, apply to such companies. That is to say, section 81 taken in connection with section 60, and paragraphs

14 and 15 of section 61, supra, seems to exact reports of gross receipts or gross earnings from all "public utilities." Sleeping car, freight line and equipment companies being "public utilities" for the purposes of the whole act, by virtue of section 39, seem to be subject to this duty. Here, however, another incongruity asserts itself. Sections 86 to 91 inclusive of the act, which prescribe the duties of the tax commission in ascertaining the gross receipts and gross earnings of the different public utilities for excise tax purposes, enumerate the various utilities instead of using any general all-inclusive phrase to describe them. From this enumeration, sleeping car, freight line and equipment companies are omitted.

In like manner, sections 94 to 98 inclusive, which provide the different rates of excise taxation to be charged against the different public utilities, enumerate the various utilities to which they apply, and fail to mention sleeping car, freight line and equipment companies.

The provisions now under examination constitute the embodiment of the "Cole law" already referred to. This act in its original form, as it existed prior to the act of 1910, did not apply to sleeping car, freight line and equipment companies. I have already stated that seemingly from the language of sections 39, 40 and 41 of the act of 1911 (the subject-matter of which is all found, with certain differences, in the act of 1910) the legislature intended to make sleeping car, freight line and equipment companies subject to the excise tax. Obviously, however, it failed to effectuate this intention. The act while seemingly requiring a report for excise tax purposes from sleeping car, freight line and equipment companies, does not require that such report contain a statement of the gross receipts or gross earnings of such company; does not authorize the tax commission to determine the amount of such receipts or gross earnings, and does not provide any rate of excise taxation against such companies.

Therefore, it is very clear to me that sleeping car, freight line and equipment companies are not subject to the excise tax or "Cole law" provisions of the act of 1911.

4. Sleeping car, freight line and equipment companies incorporated under the laws of Ohio for profit, are subject to the franchise tax provisions of section 106, etc., unless they are exempted therefrom by section 129. That section, however, does not in terms exempt such companies. Only such companies are within the purview of section 129 and its exemptions as are "required by law to file reports with the tax commission and to pay an excise tax upon * * * gross receipts or gross earnings."

I have just pointed out my reasons for concluding that sleeping car, freight line and equipment companies, while required to file reports with the tax commission, and to pay a certain kind of an excise tax under the provisions of sections 73 et seq., are not required to pay an excise tax upon gross receipts or gross earnings; therefore, such domestic sleeping car, freight line and equipment companies are subject to the franchise or "Willis law" taxes.

In this particular section 129 differs from the corresponding section of the act of 1910, which was section 101 thereof. The public utilities exempted by that section from the franchise tax were those "required by law to file annual reports with the commission." The additional language, already commented upon, was added in the act of 1910, and for the reason just suggested has affected a change in the meaning of the law.

But while it is true that domestic sleeping car, freight line and equipment companies are subject to the franchise tax, the same is not true of foreign corporations organized for such purposes. In a recent opinion to the commission in the matter of the Detroit & Cleveland Navigation Co., I stated my opinion, based upon the legislative history involved as to the meaning of the phrase, "subject to compliance with all other provisions of law" as found in section 110 of the act of 1911, above quoted. Tracing this phrase back to its origin I showed that those foreign corporations, and those only are subject to franchise taxes in this state, which are required to comply with the provisions of both sections 179 and 183, General Code, formerly sections 148d and 148c, Revised Statutes, now section 183, General Code, did not apply to foreign corporations engaged in Ohio in interstate transportation.

Now sleeping car and freight line companies at least and possibly equipment companies are engaged in this kind of business. See Pullman Co. vs. Kansas ex rel., 216 U. S. 56.

Therefore, foreign sleeping car and freight line companies, and possibly foreign equipment companies are not subject to the franchise taxes upon foreign corporations, not because of the exemption of section 129 of the act of 1911, which does not apply to them, but because they are not "subject to compliance with all other provisions of law."

An anomalous situation exists here in that domestic freight line companies engaged in that business are the only class of corporations which are subject to an excise tax and a franchise tax both under the laws of Ohio. I do not believe that any constitutional difficulty is involved upon this exact point but I apprehend that this fact may have some bearing upon other and more puzzling questions which are encountered in connection with the general topic now under discussion.

5. It has been at least once demonstrated in the course of this opinion that sleeping car, freight line and equipment companies are not public utilities for all purposes of the act of 1911. An interesting question arises now as to the meaning of section 101 of the act of 1911 in this connection. I have quoted the section in full. It contains the solemn declaration that "nothing contained in this act" shall exempt the enumerated public utilities, consisting of each and every one of the companies mentioned in section 39, including sleeping car, freight line and equipment companies, from the assessment and taxation of their property in the manner authorized by law. This section perhaps does not add anything to the meaning of the act of 1911. It was brought over into the act of 1910, from the "Cole law" and inasmuch as there is explicit provision in the act of 1910, and that of 1911, for the assessment of the property of all public utilities for simple taxation, its inclusion here is an absurdity even if it be regarded as having been inserted through an abundance of caution. If, therefore, it be ascertained that the act of 1911 does contain a provision for the assessment of the property of sleeping car, freight line and equipment companies the importance of this section is reduced to nothing. If, however, it be ascertained that there is no method provided by the act of 1911 for the assessment of the property of sleeping car, freight line and equipment companies, while there is some other tax provided for by that act against companies, then the significance of this section must be taken into consideration.

This subject might as well be dismissed, however, with the statement that in my opinion "this act" as used in section 101, supra, refers not to the whole act but only to the sections immediately preceding, and beginning with section 81 thereof, heretofore referred to as the "Cole law" provisions thereof. I have already referred to the legislative history upon which this conclusion is based. That being the case, I am of the opinion that in spite of the fact that sleeping car, freight line and equipment companies are expressly mentioned in section 101, that section does not apply to them at all, because sections 81, et seq., for reasons already stated, do not apply to such companies, and because, further, section 101 applies only to the companies to which sections 81 to 100 inclusive, apply.

The points which have just been mentioned and discussed give rise to and make difficult of solution the fundamental question which I have already stated. You have evidently apprehended the existence of this question, for in your letter respecting the status of the "American Tank Line" you specifically ask what taxes the Graselli Chemical Company is subject to on account of this business. You have yourselves suggested some certain alternatives, which I thing are apparent upon the fact of the statutes as above outlined. Fundamentally, however, the question here presented resolves itself into a consideration of the applicability of the three special taxes, and the one special method of taxation already spoken of to freight line companies. The discussion in which I have indulged has eliminated, I think the excise tax based upon the gross receipts, from consideration in this connection. Sleeping car, freight line and equipment companies are not subject to this tax. This conclusion leaves three factors for further consideration, viz.: The so-called excise tax based upon the proportion of capital stock represented by property owned and used in Ohio, apportioned on the track mileage basis, the property tax upon the unit value basis, ascertained and apportioned by the tax commission without any definite or specific rules for the guidance of that body, and the franchise tax which, as already pointed out, applies only to domestic corporations engaged in these businesses.

It will simplify the discussion here, if, for the purpose of the argument, further consideration of the application of the franchise tax be deferred temporarily. In other words, let the issues of law involved be narrowed to the one specific question: Are sleeping car, freight line and equipment companies subject both to the capital stock excise tax above described, and to property taxation on the unit basis under the principles of the "Nichols law" as extended to public utilities?

The question here is more fundamental than one of mere legislative intent. Pursuasive reasons might be marshaled in support of both of an affirmative answer to the question just formulated, and of a negative one thereto, if the intention of the legislature, as deduced from the language used in the act of 1911 and that of 1910 were the only object of inquiry. That is to say, on the one hand the legislature must have had some motive in classifying sleeping car, freight line and equipment companies as "public utilities," it being apparent that the general assembly did not intend by the use of its definitions, and especially that in section 39 of the act of 1911, already commented upon, to make sleeping car, freight line and equipment companies subject to the excise tax based on gross receipts, formerly known as the "Cole law tax," and, there being no other portion of the entire act of 1911, than the sections which extend the principles of the "Nichols law" to which this term could have any application, it seems reasonable to suppose that the legislature did intend that such companies should be subject to valuation of their properties in Ohio upon unit basis under said sections. I am not sure that this was not the legislative intent, yet on the face of the statutes themselves there are reasons for denying the existence of any such intention. These reasons have already been discussed, and I shall do no more than to restate them in summary form. If the legislature did intend, by use of the definition contained in section 39, to make sleeping car, freight line and equipment companies subject to taxation on their property in Ohio upon the unit valuation by the tax commission, it certainly failed to provide adequate machinery for carrying that intention into effect. There being in the mind of the legislature an evident conviction that some definite basis of apportionment of the gross valuation of the properties of those public utilities which are most similar to sleeping car, freight line and equipment companies was an essential element of the scheme of valuation as to such other utilities. The failure of the legislature to provide any such definite basis of apportionment as to sleeping car, freight line and equipment companies argues strongly to the conclusion that it was not intended that such companies should be subject to taxation by this method. This argument is strengthened by the fact that, of all the subjects of taxation, the property of sleeping car, freight line and equipment companies undoubtedly offers the greatest difficulty, especially with respect to the apportionment of ascertained values to specific taxing districts. The nearest approach to the property of such companies, with respect to this difficulty is afforded by the case of express companies and the rolling stock of railroad and interurban railroad companies. These subjects of taxation, like the property of sleeping car, freight line and equipment companies are in a large part continuously in motion, passing not only across the boundaries of specific taxing districts but also beyond the boundaries of the state itself. Recognizing that fact and the difficulties arising therefrom, the legislature has provided adequate and appropriate rules for the equitable apportionment of the total valuation of rolling stock of railroad and interurban railroad companies and property of express companies, both to the state itself and among the various counties and subordinate taxing districts thereof. The statements required to be made to the taxing commission are to furnish the information to which these rules are to be applied. Not so, however, with respect to sleeping car, freight line and equipment companies if they be subject to this form of valuation. The statute does not require the statements to be filed with the tax commission by those companies for property valuation purposes (if any) to set forth any information upon the basis of which the commission may make any equitable apportionment whatever; and I am seriously in doubt as to whether or not the tax commission under the power to prescribe the form of the statement which it has by virtue of section 44 of the act, or under its general powers of investigation possessed by it under sections 14 to 24 inclusive thereof, has authority to compel sleeping car, freight line and equipment companies to furnish the kind of information which would be required by the commission in order that it might make the apportionment of which section 57 speaks. There are certain provisions, especially in section 20 of the act, which I need not quote, which would seem to indicate the existence of such power. My doubt arises from the fact that paragraph 15 of section 72 of the act of 1910, which specifically authorizes the commission to require other facts and information in addition to the facts and information therein specifically required to be given, was left out of section 46 of the act of 1911, which otherwise closely corresponds to said section 72. At the same time, however, section 19 of the act of 1910, which corresponds roughly to section 20 of the act of 1911, was not as comprehensive as the latter section in this particular. So that on the whole it seems that the commission itself has power to require other facts and information in the form of returns prescribed by it under the property valuation provisions of the law and to require the statement of facts and information not specifically required by the law itself. But if the law only inferentially authorizes the commission to acquire the necessary information upon which to base an apportionment of the value of the property of a sleeping car, freight line or equipment company, it clearly fails to furnish any rule by which such apportionment shall be made.

Section 57 of the act furnishes no such rule. To be sure it requires such an apportionment as will "fairly equalize the relative value of the property" located within the state or the county or the taxing district, as the case may be "to the whole value thereof" but it does not contain any statement of the legislative intention as to how this equitable apportionment shall be made, whereas sections 53 to 56 inclusive do contain such specific requirements as to railroad companies.

Section 68 (not above quoted) contains such an explicit direction as to express companies, which is different from those with respect to railroad companies, in that gross receipts and not mileage is the basis of apportionment, and section 46, paragraph 14, already commented upon, by inference at least, suggests the rule which is to be followed in the cases of pipe line, gas, natural gas, waterworks and heating and cooling companies.

Without pursuing the critical analysis of the sections involved further, I think it may be said that the legislature by its peculiar and anomalous treatment of sleeping car, freight line and equipment companies, has at least created a serious doubt as to whether or not it was intended that such companies should be subject to valuation of their properties upon a unit basis as a going concern, because it has failed clearly and adequately to provide for the apportionment of such unit value.

I should be inclined, I think, to resolve the doubt which exists here in favor of the inclusion of sleeping car, freight line and equipment companies within the so-called "Nichols law" scheme, although to do so would necessitate reading into the law authority on the part of the tax commission to choose one of several possible methods of apportionment as to such companies; that is to say, a holding to this effect would necessitate a further holding to the effect that the tax commission in valuing the properties of sleeping car, freight line and equipment companies upon the unit basis as going concerns, is authorized to apportion and distribute such valuation, when ascertained, to the state, the counties and the taxing districts therein on the basis of track mileage, car wheelage, gross receipts, the average number of cars therein during the year of such other basis as might be selected in its discretion for the purpose of applying the mandate of section 57. This would be a rather radical interpretation to place upon the law in view of the nature of the property in question, but I would be inclined to adopt it were it not for certain other considerations to which I shall now call attention.

It is a cardinal principle of statutory construction that laws will be interpreted so as to conform to the constitutional limitations. The question of legislative intent being doubtful, as it is here, that construction will be put upon a legislative act which does not violate any such limitation. There is a constitutional limitation upon the exercise of the taxing power with respect to property, as such, viz.: article 12, section 2, which provides that: "laws shall be passed, taxing by uniform rule all moneys, credits, investments in stocks, bonds, joint stock companies and otherwise; and also all real and personal property at its true value in money * * *."

The rule of uniformity thus enjoined has always been interpreted so as to preclude the imposition of more than one property tax upon the same property or subject of taxation. Telegraph Co. vs. Mayor, 23 O. S. 521; State ex rel. vs. Guilbert, 70 O. S. 229 and Railway vs. State 49 O. S. 189.

In the case last cited it was held that an act requiring a railroad company to pay a license fee of $1.00 for each mile of track operated within the state, imposed a tax upon the property of such company in addition to the tax assessed and levied against such property under the general statutes of the state, and it was, therefore, unconstitutional and void.

That is to say, the nature of the tax and the real subject thereof—i. e. the thing upon which the burden of the tax is laid, and which contributes to the revenues of the taxing corporation—is not to be ascertained wholly by reference to the name given thereto. The operation and effect thereof will govern courts in the determination of such questions.

If the tax in question be, properly and purely, an excise tax, it is, of course, not a tax on the property of the companies affected by it. I need not cite authority upon a proposition so elementary as that the subjects of excise taxation are privileges, franchises, businesses requiring governmental regulation and the like. The philosophy of such taxation was commented upon to a considerable extent in a recent opinion to your department in the matter of the status as to "public utilities" of corporations incidentally furnishing electricity to consumers.

It is also an elementary proposition that no state may lay a tax upon a subject of taxation not within its jurisdiction. In order that a privilege may be subject to the taxing jurisdiction of the state it must be one that exists by virtue of, or the exercise of, which, is protected by the laws of the state. In order that a franchise may be taxed by a state it must owe existence or recognition to the laws of the state. In order that a business may be taxed by a state it must either be carried on under privileges or franchises granted or protected by the state or its transaction in the state must give rise to governmental burdens upon the state. These propositions are self-evident.

There is one class of privileges, franchises and business, however that, whatever may be the degree of protection afforded to the exercise thereof by state laws, or the weight of the burden imposed thereby upon the regulatory power of the state, is not subject to state taxation. I refer to such privileges, franchises (other than those of the state's own creation) and businesses which are themselves the instrumentalities of carrying on commerce among the several states. The constitution of the United States vests in congress the power to regulate such commerce. It having been declared by the supreme court of the United States in the early case of McColloch vs. Maryland, 4 Wheat. 416, that "the power to tax is the power to destroy," it has followed logically that a state may not by taxation impose burdens upon commerce among the several states. I need not cite or quote from any of the multitude of authorities which establish this fundamental principle.

Equally well settled, on the other hand, is the principle that the physical instrumentalities of interstate commerce when within the taxing jurisdiction of the state or when enjoying the protection of its laws may be compelled to contribute to its revenues without violating the rule just defined. Putting it in another way, a state may tax the locomotive, cars and other equipment of a railroad doing an interstate business exclusively or, in part, as property; but the state may not by excise laws or otherwise tax the privilege of operating such a railroad in interstate commerce. Postal Telegraph Cable Co. vs. Adams, 155 U. S. 688; LeLoup vs. Mobile, 127 U. S. 640; Phil. & S. S. Co. vs. Pa., 122 U. S. 326; Gloucester Ferry Co. vs. Pa., 114 U. S., 196; Galveston H. & S. A. R. R. Co. vs. Texas, supra; Western Union Telegraph Co. vs. Kansas ex rel., supra, and numerous other authorities to the same effect.

Again, it is equally well settled that a state may impose an excise tax upon the business conducted by an individual, firm or corporation engaged in carrying on interstate commerce, to the extent that such business is confined within the territorial limits of the state or is "intrastate." That is to say, the mere fact that a company may be engaged in interstate commerce does not prohibit a state from taxing it upon the excise basis as to any business which it may carry or which is wholly intrastate. The application of the discussion here involved is perhaps very difficult in specific cases. The problem is as follows:

It being granted that a state may not by excise taxation lay a burden upon interstate commerce, and it being granted also that a state may by excise laws, tax intrastate business carried on by those who are also, and by the use of the same equipment, carrying on interstate commerce, what measure of the value of the privilege of carrying on intrastate business may be employed by the state without amounting to a regulation of interstate commerce.

The subjects of excise taxation are, of course, not susceptible to any accurate valuation. It is impossible, I think, for any court or taxing body to appraise the value of the franchise to be a corporation or of the privilege to carry on an intrastate railroad business or the like. Legislatures have, therefore, resorted to various devices in an endeavor to secure equitable results. Sometimes, the subject of the excise tax being considered of uniform value, regardless of the value of the property employed or its productivity, the tax has been assessed in bulk, as in the case of our own tax on the business of trafficking in intoxicating liquors; again, gross receipts or gross earnings of a business are used for the purpose of approximating the value of the privilege, as in the case of the so-called "Cole law" provisions of the act now under consideration; again, net income has been employed for the same purpose, as in the case of the federal corporation excise tax; and again the amount of capital stock employed has been used for this purpose, especially when the subject of taxation is the franchise to be a corporation, as in the case of our own "Willis law" so-called. The specific question which I have in mind here, then, is as to what receipts, earnings, income or property may be used by a state as an index of the value of the privilege enjoyed by the taxpayer when the latter is reaping receipts, earnings and income from, and using property in, the carrying on in a more or less indiscriminate manner, of both intrastate and interstate commerce.

I do not thing it is worth while to discuss this question further in this connection for the reason that before it may even be questioned whether or not a state may constitutionally employ the property of an interstate commerce carrier, located within the state, for the purpose of measuring a privilege, taxable by it, it must be ascertained that it is not the state's intention to assess a tax upon a privilege which is clearly not taxable by it.

If the tax be exacted from the taxpayer for the doing of a thing which amounts to interstate commerce purely, or, conversely, if the liability for the tax does not cease upon the discontinuance of the business of carrying on intrastate commerce without a corresponding withdrawal from the business of carrying on interstate commerce, then the tax must be adjudged to be unconstitutional as an attempt to tax the carrying on of commerce among the states.

How is it then with respect to the tax now under consideration? The privilege which is intended to be reached, if this be a privilege tax, is not defined; but the acts which give rise to liability for the tax are clearly defined in section 40 above quoted. I need not repeat the definitions of that section. Suffice it to say, that it is clear therefrom that the business which constitutes an individual, firm or corporation a "sleeping car, freight line or equipment company" within the meaning of that section, is not such business as is limited to intrastate commerce exclusively. Turning then, to sections 73 et seq., and especially to sections 76 and 79 already quoted, it is found that apparently the taxes therein provided for are due, as explicitly provided for in such sections from "each sleeping car, freight line and equipment company doing business or owning cars which are operated in this state."

If, therefore, a foreign corporation be engaged in the business of operating cars in Ohio, although wholly in interstate commerce, and not to any extent whatever in intrastate commerce, it would be liable for the tax unless a violently artificial construction be given to the statute.

If, then, sections 73 to 79 inclusive of the act are intended to impose a privilege tax they violate the constitution of the United States because no discrimination is made between companies engaged in interstate and intrastate business respectively, and because, therefore, these sections attempt, if regarded as imposing such tax, to lay a direct burden upon interstate commerce.

Looking at the question as to the nature of this tax from a positive rather than a negative standpoint there is ample authority for characterizing it as a property tax, or at least as a tax in commutation of all property taxes.

Sections 73 et seq., are almost identical in purport with an act of the state of Pennsylvania, passed upon by the supreme court of the United States in Pullman Palace Car Co. vs. Pa. 141 U. S. 613. I quote from the official report of the case to show that this is so:

> "This was an action brought by the state of Pennsylvania against the Pullman Palace Car Company, a corporation of Illinois * * * to recover the amount of a tax settled by the auditor general * * * on the defendant's capital stock, taking as the basis of assessment such proportion of its capital stock as the number of miles of railroad over which cars were run by the defendant in Pennsylvania bore to the whole number of miles in this and other states over which its cars were run."

This language compared with that of section 76 supra, not only establishes the essential similarity of the two laws but shows, if anything, that the Ohio law, which gives to the tax commission the right to reply upon such other "rules and evidence as will enable the commission to determine * * * the amount and value of the capital stock of such company representing capital and property owned and used in the state of Ohio" is a more palpable attempt to reach the property of the subject of taxation than was the Pennsylvania law itself.

Speaking of the act of Pennsylvania, Mr. Justice Gray, delivering the opinion of the court used the following language (page 617):

> "The tax now in question is not a license tax or a privilege tax; it is not a tax on business or occupation; it is not a tax on, or because of, the transportation, or the right of transit, of persons or property through the state or other states or countries. The tax is imposed equally on corporations doing business within the state, whether domestic or foreign, and whether engaged in interstate commerce or not. The tax on the capital of the corporation, on account of its property within the state, is, in substance and effect, a tax on that property. Gloucester Ferry Co. vs. Pennsylvania, 144 U. S. 196, 209 (29: 158, 164); Western U. Teleg. Co. vs. Massachusetts, 125 U. S. 530, 552 (31: 790, 794). This is not only admitted, but insisted on, by the plaintiff in error.
> "The cars of this company within the state of Pennsylvania are employed in interstate commerce; but their being so employed does not exempt them from taxation by the state; and the state has not taxed them because of their being so employed, but because of their being within its territory and jurisdiction. The cars were continuously and permanently employed in going to and fro upon certain routes of travel. If they had never passed beyond the limits of Pennsylvania, it could not be doubted that the state could tax them, like other property within its borders, notwithstanding they were employed in interstate commerce. The fact that, instead of stopping at the state boundary, they cross that boundary in going out and coming back, cannot effect the power of the state to levy a tax upon them. The state, having the right for the purposes of taxation, to tax any personal property found within its jurisdiction, without regard to the place of the owner's domicile, could tax the specific cars which at a given moment were within its borders. The route over which the cars travel extending beyond the limits of the state, particular cars may not remain within the state; but the company has at all times substantially the same number of cars within the state, and continuously and constantly uses there a portion of its property; and it is distinctly found, as a matter of fact, that the company continuously, throughout the periods for which these taxes were levied, carried on business in Pennsylvania and had about one hundred cars within the state.

"The mode which the state of Pennsylvania adopted, to ascertain the proportion of the company's property upon which it should be taxed in that state, was by taking as a basis of assessment such proportion of the capital stock of the company as the number of miles over which it ran cars within the state bore to the whole number of miles, in that and other states, over which its cars were run. This was a just and equitable method of assessment; and, if it were adopted by all the states through which these cars ran, the company would be assessed upon the whole value of its capital stock, and no more."

In addition to the authority of this decision section 79 of the act contains certain language which while not inconsistent with other portions of the act shows rather clearly what was in the legislative mind at the time of its enactment. That section provides that there shall be collected "from each sleeping car, freight line and equipment company doing business or owning cars which are operated in this state" a certain tax

Now manifestly the tax cannot be collected from those which merely own cars which are operated in this state because such a company would not be a "sleeping car, freight line or equipment company" as defined in section 40. Nevertheless the seemingly inadvertent use of this phrase (which may possibly be explained by the history of the legislation) does show that the legislature had in mind that the tax for which it was providing here embraced the property tax. In Flint vs. Stone, Tracey Co. 220 U. S. 126 will be found a very lucid explanation of the test by which a property tax may be distinguished from a privilege tax. In discussing the earlier case of Pollock vs. Farmers Loan & Trust Co., 157 U. S. 42, Mr. Justice Day pointed out that the principle therein decided was that,

> "A tax which was in itself direct because imposed upon property wholly by reason of its ownership could not be changed by affixing to it the qualification of excise or duty."

Such a principle, however, was held not applicable to the federal corporation income tax because that was "not payable unless there be a carrying on or doing of business in a designated capacity * * *. The requirement to pay such tax involves the exercise of privileges, and the element of absolute and unavoidable demand is lacking. If business is not done in the manner prescribed in the statute no tax is payable."

Of course this distinction is not applicable to the whole tax under consideration, but it would be perfectly applicable if it were possible to reconcile the language just quoted from section 79 with the rest of the related provisions. So that the significance of this portion of section 79 at once becomes apparent.

Now it is possible to characterize the tax in question, as the general assembly has characterized it. as an "excise tax" without depriving it of its characteristics a property tax. Courts have recognized that a state may properly impose what are sometimes called "commutation taxes" upon subjects of taxation most difficult of equitable assessment and valuation in a fair effort to reach all the value that inheres both in the property and in the business of the subject of taxation, which may be subject to the taxing power of the state. For example this principle was recognized in Maine vs. Grand Trunk R. R. Co., 142 U. S. 217 and Galveston, etc., R. R. Co. vs. Texas, supra. The practice of many states other than Ohio sustains this view. It is customary in many states to exact from railroads and other public utilities a stated proportion of gross receipts and gross earnings in lieu of all other taxes. Such a tax is in reality a hybrid; but it is clear that it includes the property tax and that its exaction precludes the imposition of any other property tax, upon the same property.

The only difficulty which I have apprehended in reaching the conclusion that the tax in question is inclusive of the property tax is one which might arise under the constitution of Ohio, article 12, section 2 already quoted whether or not any special difficulties of local taxation would justify the legislature in the face of the rule of uniformity therein prescribed, in commuting all local taxes by the assessment of a single tax for state revenue, by a single rate, ignoring the rates of taxation imposed upon other property in the various taxing districts of the state, is a doubtful question, and one which has never been passed upon in this state. However, if sections 73 to 79 inclusive of the act of 1910, construed as I have felt obliged to construe them in the light of the federal authorities cited and commented upon, and regarded as imposing a tax that it is part a property tax, are unconstitutional because of the implied limitations of section 2 of article 12 of the constitution of 1851, they are no more unconstitutional than the original acts applicable to sleeping car, freight line and equipment companies were and always have been. These acts may be found in 91 O. L. 408 (sleeping car companies) and 92 O. L. 89 (freight line and equipment companies). I shall not burden this opinion with extensive quotation from these acts. Sections 73 to 79 follow the language of the original laws so closely as to make this unnecessary. There is one fundamental difference however, between the old law and the new. The original definition of sleeping car, freight line and equipment companies containing the following clause, qualifying cars or equipment operated or furnished by the company, to wit, "not otherwise listed for taxation in Ohio."

Following the history of this legislation it appears that this qualifying clause was merged into the Langdon act of 1910, and was dropped when the act of 1911 was passed. The change in the meaning of the law which resulted from this verbal change is obvious. Nevertheless, this language clearly shows what the nature of the original tax on sleeping car, freight line and equipment companies was. It is a fact of common knowledge that the only sleeping car companies that now do business in Ohio or ever did business in Ohio were foreign corporations; and that these corporations never listed any of their property for taxation in Ohio, because it had no definite legal situs here. Therefore, as to such companies the designation of them as "engaged in the business of operating cars not otherwise listed for taxation in Ohio,, was merely descriptive. So also with freight line companies. If I am correctly informed, it is not until very recently that any freight line companies domiciled in Ohio have been discovered by the taxing officers, and it is not to be doubted that the legislators who passed the original law never thought of domestic companies at all. The original laws, then, were clearly passed to response to a feeling that valuable property subject to the taxing power of the state was escaping contribution to its revenues.

If, therefore, the question as to whether or not sections 73 to 79 of the act of 1911 impose a property tax is doubtful, it is, on the other hand, quite clear that the original tax on sleeping car, freight line and equipment companies was intended to be a property tax. That being the case light is shed upon the interpretation of the present law; that being the case too, it may be said that if the present law is unconstitutional because of the uniformity of rule applicable to the imposition of property taxes, the old law, which has been in force for many years, was equally unconstitutional. Acquiescence in the law by all concerned for so long a time would seem to me to foreclose further consideration of the constitutional question last suggested.

For all the foregoing reasons then I am of the opinion that the capital stock excise tax, so-called, imposed by sections 73 to 79 inclusive of the act of 1911 includes within its purview the assessment of all of the property, interests and privileges of sleeping car, freight line and equipment companies subject to taxation in Ohio with the possible single exception of the franchise to be a corporation in the case of domestic corporations.

I am further of the opinion, therefore, that this tax must be regarded as a "commutation tax," and that accordingly such companies are not subject to have their physical and specific property assessed by the tax commission under the provisions of sections 44 to 59 inclusive of the act.

This conclusion makes unnecessary consideration of many of the questions which you have submitted. Coming now to these specific questions I beg to state that in my opinion the Emery Candle Company, whether or not it is a "public utility" for any purpose within the meaning of the provisions of the act of May 31, 1911, is not, as such, required to report to the commission all its property, real and personal, to be assessed by the commission, nor to pay an excise tax upon its entire gross receipts from all intrastate commerce.

Answering your second question, I am of the opinion that the Emery Candle Company should report and pay fees as a domestic corporation for profit. I am somewhat in doubt upon this point, but in the absence of authority to the contrary I am of the opinion that the state may lawfully exact a franchise tax from one of its own corporations, although foreign corporations engaged in similar business are not subject to such taxes in this state. I am further of the opinion that because of the peculiar manner in which sleeping car, freight line and equipment companies are taxed there is no discrimination as to them in withholding from them the benefit of the exemption in section 121 of the act.

Answering the first question in your letter of September 10th respecting the Graselli Chemical Company and its "American Tank Line" I beg to advise that in my opinion the Graselli Chemical Company is a freight line company.

On this point an able brief is submitted by Messrs. Squire, Sanders and Dempsey which I have already mentioned. I have read this brief with considerable interest but it fails to convince me upon the point on which it is submitted because it does not explain away the phrase "whether such freight is owned by such company or any other person or company," as expressly included in the definition found in section 40. In other words, the statute itself destroys the force of the argument that one engaged in the business of operating cars for the transportation of his own freight cannot be considered a freight line company. Therefore, I am of the opinion that the fact that the freight line activities of a company or partnership may be limited to the transportation of freight belonging to the company or partnership is immaterial as determining whether or not the company or partnership is a "freight line company" and a "public utility" within the meaning of the law.

Upon the other point involved, viz.:

As to whether a corporation or individual which is only incidentally engaged in a freight line business in connection with some other and paramount activity, is within the scope of the definitions of section 40 of the act, and subject to the provisions thereof, I beg to state that my conclusion and reasoning on this point may be found in a somewhat lengthy opinion heretofore transmitted to the commission in the matter of certain corporations incidentally furnishing electric current to consumers. My conclusion was, as will be observed upon consulting that opinion, that the fact that one of the businesses defined in section 40 of the act may be carried on by a corporation in a subordinate or incidental way, the principal activity of the corporation being something other than the "public utility" business, is immaterial, and that a corporation so engaged in such business is a public utility within the meaning of the act.

Indeed, this conclusion is even clearer with respect to freight line companies than it is with respect to some of the other companies defined in the same section. It is perfectly obvious, I think, that if a corporation be engaged in the business of operating cars for the transportation owned by itself, the transportation must be, in the very nature of things, subordinate or incidental to the other business of the company.

Answering your second question submitted in this letter in accordance with what has already been said I am of the opinion that the tax commission is without power to assess all of the property of the Graselli Chemical Company as such or to accept from this company an excise tax upon its entire receipts from all business.

The third question asked in connection with the Graselli Chemical Company requires further examination and analysis of section 76 of the act. In order to facilitate such examination I again quote that section in this connection:

> "On the first Monday in July, the commission shall ascertain and determine the amount and value of the proportion of the capital stock of sleeping car, freight line and equipment companies, representing capital and property of such companies owned and used in this state, and in so determining shall be guided in each case by the proportion of the capital stock of the company representing rolling stock, which the miles of railroad over which such company runs cars, or its cars are run in this state, bear to the entire number of miles in this state and elsewhere over which such company runs cars, or its cars are run, and such other rules and evidence as will enable the commission to determine, fairly and equitably, the amount and value of the capital stock of such company representing capital and property owned and used in this state."

The question is at once presented as to whether or not, having ascertained the proportion of the capital stock of the company representing the rolling stock, the tax commission is to apportion this part of the property between Ohio and the rest of the world on the route mileage basis, and then to proceed to determine the value of the remaining property of the company in Ohio, and to assess the excise tax upon the basis of the amount of the capital stock represented by rolling stock assigned to Ohio and fixed property located in Ohio together; or on the other hand to content itself with the ascertainment of the capital stock represented by the rolling stock alone, leaving the fixed property to be assessed under the general laws.

This section suggests consideration of another section which has so far not been mentioned, viz., section 5419, General Code, section 43 of the act of 1911. That section provides in effect that the property owned or operated by a public utility "required to make return to the commission of its property to be assessed for taxation by the commission" shall be deemed to include all property used in connection with or as incidental to the operation of the public utility, or in case of incorporated companies all the property of whatever kind whether used in connection with the public utility or not.

It might be urged that this section makes clear the purpose of the legislature in defining freight line companies to be "public utilities;" so that although not public utilities, for excise tax purposes or for general property tax purposes, such companies must be regarded as public utilities within the intendment of the section which requires that all of the property be reported to the tax commission. The conclusion of such an argument would be that the thing to be ascertained by the tax commission under section 76 is all the property of the company located in Ohio and used in connection with the freight line business, and in the case of a corporation, all of its property whether so used or not. Upon carefully considering this hypothesis I have rejected it. The phrase which I have quoted from section 43 "required to make return to the commission of its property to be assessed for taxation by the commission" qualifies the entire section and discloses very clearly that it was not intended to refer to statements filed by sleeping car, freight line and equipment companies under sections 73 et seq., of the act of 1911. That is to say, it only relates to property which is to be assessed for general taxation by the commission and the statements thereof to be filed with the commission.

I have reached the conclusion, after careful consideration that, having regard to the history of the special excise tax on sleeping car, freight line and equipment companies, and its evident phylosophical nature, the thing which the tax commission must determine under section 76 is solely the capital stock, representing rolling stock, and the proportion thereof assessable by the excise method under the rule of apportionment adopted by the section. I do not base this conclusion solely upon the language of section 76, which I acknowledge is open to somewhat different construction. I take into consideration the language of paragraph 8 of section 74, which prescribes one of the items of the statement which shall be furnished by this class of companies to the tax commission in order to enable the commission to determine the basis for the assessment of the excise tax. The paragraph is as follows:

> "A detailed statement of the real estate owned by the company in this state, where situated, and the value thereof as assessed for taxation."

Evidently, then, the legislature contemplated that the real estate of the company (and no distinction is made as between such real estate used in daily operations, and that not so used) was to be taxed locally. Therefore, it does not seem that it could have been the intention of the legislature that all of the property of a freight line company, or even all of the property of such companies used in Ohio in the operations thereof, should constitute the basis for the assessment of the capital stock excise taxes.

In other words, I think it is the intention and meaning of the capital stock excise tax provisions of the act of January 1, 1911, relating to sleeping car, freight line and equipment companies, that the tax shall be laid upon and measured by the capital stock of such companies representing the rolling stock, which is a species of property having no permanent abiding place, and which in the customary use thereof is moved across state boundaries and by the laws of other states is subject to a kind of taxation therein. I do not believe that the reasons of these provisions extends further than this, and I believe further that the maxim which is to the effect that "the reason of the law is its life, "applies with peculiar force to the interpretation of these provisions.

I am aware that the conclusion at which I have arrived does not eliminate all inconsistencies. Thus it does not give any force whatever to the definition of sleeping car, freight line and equipment companies as "public utilities." As to this I can only say that whatever may have been the intention of the general assembly in changing the form of the statute from that in which it was enacted in the Langdon law of 1910 to that which it is found in the act of 1911, that purpose must avail because the legislature did not make any other changes than the two already pointed out, which for reasons already discussed are not sufficient to change the substance of the law except to the extent of subjecting Ohio sleeping car, freight line and equipment companies to the capital stock excise tax.

Another inconsistency which cannot be reconciled with the conclusion which I have reached is that section 76 viewed in one light seems to indicate that the "proportion of the capital stock of the company representing rolling stock" is not the ultimate thing to be ascertained, but is something which in connection with "other rules and evidence" is to be taken into consideration by the commission in determining "the amount and value of the capital stock * * * representing capital and property owned and used in this state." As to this it may be said that the language of the section is, in this respect, no different from what it always has been; yet it has never been the intention to withdraw from the general property tax, for example, the real estate of a sleeping car, freight line or equipment company located in Ohio, whether used in operations or not, item 8 of the statement being precisely the same under former laws as in present section 74. And if it never was the intention to withdraw real estate from general property taxation, then it cannot be said to have been the intention to incorporate the value of the real estate in the total value of property representing capital in Ohio because to do so would, for reasons already discussed be unconstitutional. Therefore, although there is an inconsistency here as between the conclusion I have reached and a possible interpretation of section 76, I believe that my conclusion is at least the safer one from the standpoint of the constitutionality of the tax.

I am, therefore, of the opinion that the phrase, "the amount and value of the capital stock of such company representing capital and property owned and used in this state" means the amount and value of the capital stock representing rolling stock property owned and used in this state under the rules provided for in the section.

Applying this conclusion to the question asked respecting the Graselli Chemical Company it follows that this corporation is required to pay excise taxes upon the proportion of its capital stock represented by rolling stock only; and that this company is also, if a domestic corporation, liable for franchise taxes as a domestic corporation for profit. If the corporation is a foreign one, however, and is engaged as it presumably is in transporting interstate commerce, it is not liable for franchise taxes as a foreign corporation for profit. My reasons for making this distinction between domestic and foreign corporations have already been stated.

Answering the fourth question submitted in your letter regarding the Graselli Chemical Company, I beg to state that in my opinion this company is liable for no specially assessed property tax whatever in the pure sense, either upon the value of its property used in the freight line business or upon its other property located in Ohio.

Coming now to the question submitted on September 10th with respect to the Emery Candle Co., I beg to state that in my opinion the moneys and credits of that company are not subject to assessment by the tax commission at all.

It is a logical corollary to what I have already stated as my opinion, that the capital and property representing things other than rolling stock of a sleeping car, freight line or equipment company are subject to local taxation. It is only the rolling stock which is withdrawn from that species of taxation by necessary inference.
