ABSTRACT OF TITLE—DEED OF STATE OF OHIO FROM THE GOVERNOR—CORRECTION OF ERRORS IN DEEDS BY DEEDS EXECUTED BY GOVERNOR—PROPERTY OF O. S. APPLEGATE IN PAULDING COUNTY, OHIO.

April 9, 1912.

HON. JUDSON HARMON, Governor of Ohio, Columbus, Ohio.

DEAR SIR:—I have carefully examined the enclosed letter of Messrs. Snook & Savage, Attorneys at Law, of Paulding, Ohio, together with the accompanying abstract and papers submitted therewith, and beg leave to submit my conclusions thereon as follows:

1. It appears from said abstract that cn November 23, 1888, the State of Ohio issued to one, O. S. Applegate of Paulding County, Ohio, a certificate of purchase of the following described real estate:

> "Situated in the county of Paulding and State of Ohio, and known as being the central part of the northeastern quarter of Section 31, Township 3 north, Range 2 east, containing thirty-five acres of land."

2. The abstract discloses that on the 21st day of July, A. D. 1892, said O. S. Applegate, in consideration of $200.40, by him paid, received a deed from the State of Ohio for the following described real estate, to-wit:

> "The south part of the west half of the northeast quarter of Section 31, Township 3 north, Range 2 east, containing sixty acres of land more or less." (Abstract, page 28)

3. The abstract further discloses that on the 23d day of January, 1855, the State of Ohio, for a consideration of twenty dollars executed to one, Joshua Davis, a deed for the following described lands, to-wit:

> "The south part of the east half of the northeast quarter (south of reservoir) of Section 31, Township 3 north, Range 2 east, containing sixty-five acres of land more or less." (Abstract, page 36)

4. The tract described in paragraph 3 finally became the property of Francis B. Dewitt, by virtue of a deed from the State of Ohio, dated March 12, 1892, for a consideration of $213.20. (Abstract, page 30)

5. Taking into consideration the sale of the tracts described in paragraphs 2 and 3 hereof, there could be but thirty-five acres remaining in the whole quarter section, to-wit: Fifteen acres off of the north end of the east half of said quarter section, and twenty acres off of the north end of the west half of said quarter section.

6. It is evident, therefore, that a mistake was made in the description of land sold to said O. S. Applegate, and that the same should have been described as fifteen acres off the north end of the east half of said northeast quarter of said Section 31, and the west half of said section, less sixty acres, off the south part of said Section 31.

7. The expressed consideration in said certificate of purchase was $583.45, to be paid in five equal installments, together with interest from date at six per cent. per annum, on deferred payments: of which amount there remains due and unpaid four installments, together with interest thereon at six per cent., from the 23d day of November, 1888, amounting in all to $_____.

8. On November 2, 1910, said O. S. Applegate duly sold and conveyed to one, Richard S. Woodrow, fifteen acres off the north side of the east half of the northeast quarter of said Section 31. (Abstract, page 33)

9. On March 1, 1911 said Woodrow sold and conveyed to one James C. Culbertson, all of the east half of the said northeast quarter, expecting one acre out of the northeast corner of said east half of said northeast quarter of said Section 31. (Abstract, page 35)

10. Said Woodrow, on the 5th day of November, 1911, quitclaimed to the Board of Education of Crane Township, Paulding County, Ohio, one acre out of the northeast corner of the east half of the northeast quarter of said Section 31. (Abstract, page 34)

11. Said land is now owned and held by the following persons, in parcels described as follows, to-wit:

Leona Dysinger, Ora Reeb, Elida Stiver, Verda Murphy and Ray Applegate, as heirs of said O. S. Applegate, deceased, own the west half of the northeast quarter of said Section 31, less sixty acres off the south end thereof; James C. Culbertson owns the east half of the northeast quarter of said Section 31, less sixty-five acres off the south end thereof, less one acre taken out of the northeast corner of said east half of said northeast quarter; the Board of Education of Crane Township, Paulding County, Ohio, owns one acre of land in the northeast corner of the northeast quarter of said Section 31, and particularly described as follows, to-wit:

> "Beginning at the northeast corner of said northeast quarter of said Section 31, thence south sixteen rods, thence west ten rods, thence north sixteen rods, thence east ten rods, to the place of beginning."

12. The heirs of said O. S. Applegate, have offered to execute and deliver to the State of Ohio a release, in due form, of the land described in said certificate of purchase, and pay the balance remaining due upon the purhase price, upon condition that the State of Ohio execute and deliver deeds to the several parties for the several tracts of lands described in parapraph 11 hereof.

13. In this connection, I desire to call your attention to the following pertinent provisions of the General Code of Ohio, to-wit:

> "Section 8527. When the purchaser has died before deed made, and the lands have passed to another, by descent or devise, and the title still remains in him, or when the person to whom the lands have so passed, has conveyed them, or his interest therein, to another person, by deed of general warranty or quitclaim, upon the proof of such facts being made to him and the attorney-general, the governor shall execute the deed directly to the person entitled to the lands, according to the true intent and meaning of this chapter, although he derives his title thereto through one or more successive conveyances from the person to whom the land passed by descent or devise.

"Section 8528. When, by satisfactory evidence, it appears to the governor and attorney general, that an error has occurred in a deed executed and delivered in the name of the state, under the laws thereof, or in the certificate of any public officer, upon which, if correct, a conveyance would be properly required from the state, the governor shall correct such error by the execution of a correct and proper title deed, according to the intent and object of the original purchase or conveyance, to the party entitled to it, his heirs, or legal assigns, as the case may require, and take from such party a release in due form, to the state, of the property erroneously conveyed."

14. I have prepared three deeds for the parties respectively entitled thereto, for the tracts of land described in paragraph 11 hereof, and submit the same herewith for your consideration and approval.

Very truly yours

TIMOTHY S. HOGAN,
Attorney General.

VACANCIES DO NOT EXIST IN OFFICES OF CHIEF JUSTICE OF SUPREME COURT, JUDGES OF SUPREME COURT AND JUDGES OF COURT OF APPEALS WHEN JUDICIAL REFORM GOES INTO EFFECT BY CONSTITUTIONAL AMENDMENT.

Inasmuch as there is no provision of law for the election, nor for the term of office, nor for the salary of the chief justice of the supreme court, authorized by Article IV., Section 2 of the Constitution as amended, such office cannot be deemed to have been created, and there is, therefore, no vacancy in that office which the governor at the present time is authorized to fill by appointment.

Under the provision of Article IV., Section 2, of the new Constitution, which prescribes that "the judges now in office" shall continue therein until the ends of the terms for which they were respectively elected, and the object of which is manifestly to make use of the machinery of the old Constitution and laws, until the new provisions could be set in motion, the judges elected this year who will take office on January 1, 1913, when the amendment goes into effect, will be properly in office and will remain therein until the ends of the terms for which they were elected.

There will be no vacancies on January 1, 1913, therefore in the offices of the Supreme Court Judges which will be required to be filled by appointment by the governor.

Inasmuch as under Article IV., Section 6, of the new Constitution, vacancies in the Court of Appeals are to be filled by the electors and as laws are to be passed to prescribe the time and mode of such elections, and in view of the fact that the new Constitution further provides that Court of Appeals districts, until otherwise provided by law, shall be the same as circuit court districts, and that circuit courts shall merge into the Court of Appeals, the intention is disclosed to use all the machinery of the circuit court until all the machinery of the new Constitution for Courts of Appeals may be put into operation. These provisions, therefore, disclose that no vacancies in the Court of Appeals were contemplated by the amendments.

The governor will therefore have no duty to perform in respect to the appointment of Judges of the Court of Appeals, February 9, 1913, when the present terms expire, and those judges elected to the circuit court in November, 1912, shall on said February 9, 1913, take their seats as Judges of the Court of Appeals.

November 18, 1912.

HON. JUDSON HARMON, Governor of Ohio, Columbus, Ohio.

DEAR SIR:—You asked me verbally for an opinion as to whether or not there would be a vacancy in the office of Chief Justice of the Supreme Court of Ohio on January 1, 1913, and whether it would be the duty of the Governor at that time or in due season thereafter to appoint a Chief Justice to fill such vacancy.

The investigation into this question brought into view a consideration of the jurisdiction of the Governor to appoint not only a Chief Justice of the Supreme Court, but also judges of the Supreme Court and judges of the Court of Appeals, and while your inquiry related only to the appointment of a Chief Justice, yet inasmuch as the Governor may have presented to him the question of vacancies in the Supreme Court in reference to the judges and vacancies in the Court of Appeals on account of the provisions of the new Constitution in relation to judges, I have deemed it advisable to assume the liberty of going beyond the scope of your inquiry and expressing an opinion on:

(a) Will there be a vacancy in the office of Chief Justice;
(b) Will there be a vacancy in the office of judges of the Supreme Court;
(c) Will there be a vacancy in the Court of Appeals?

FIRST:—As to vacancy in the office of Chief Justice. Section 2 of Article IV of the Constitution of Ohio as amended provides:

> "The supreme court shall, until otherwise provided by law, consist of a chief justice and six judges, and the judges now in office in that court shall continue therein until the end of the terms for which they were respectively elected, unless they are removed, die or resign. * * * It (the supreme court) shall hold at least one term in each year at the seat of government, and such other terms, there or elsewhere, as may be provided by law. The judges of the supreme court shall be elected by the electors of the state at large for such term, not less than six years, as may be prescribed by law, and they shall be elected, and their official terms shall begin, at such time as may now or hereafter be fixed by law."

Section 13, Artivle IV, Constitution of Ohio, in reference to vacancies in the office of any judges, provides as follows:

> "In case the office of any judge shall become vacant, before the expiration of the regular term for which he was elected, the vacancy shall be filled by appointment by the governor, until a successor is elected and qualified; and such successor shall be elected for the unexpired term, at the first annual election that occurs more than thirty days after the vacancy shall have happened."

Articles XVII, of the Constitution, provides in part, as follows:

> "Any vacancy which may occur in any elective state office other than that of a member of the general assembly or of governor, shall be filled by appointment by the governor until the disability is removed or a successor elected and qualified. Every such vacancy shall be filled by election at the first general election for the office which is vacant, that occurs more than thirty (30) days after the vacancy shall have occurred. The person elected shall fill the office for the unexpired term. All vacancies in other elective offices shall be filled for the unexpired term in such manner as may be prescribed by law." (As adopted November, 1905.)

At this point it may be observed that while Section 13 of Article IV is special and would ordinarily control with reference to the filling of a vancancy, yet it will be kept in mind that Article XVII is a late amendment, and undoubtedly is intended to embrace judges of the supreme court as well as other state officers, and is to be considered exclusive for the purposes of the present question. Sections 141 and 142 of the General Code bear out this idea, Section 141 being as follows:

> "A vacancy occurring in an elective state office, other than that of a member of the general assembly or of governor, shall be filled by appointment by the governor until the disability is removed, or a successor is elected and qualified. Such vacancies shall be filled by election at the first general election for the office which is vacant, that occurs more than thirty days after the vacancy shall have occurred. The person elected shall fill the office for the unexpired term."

Section 142, General Code, provides as follows:

"If the office of a judge becomes vacant by reason of the expiration of the term of the incumbent, and a failure to provide therefor at the preceding election, such vacancy shall be filled by appointment by the governor. The person so appointed shall hold the office until a successor is elected and qualified. Such successor shall be elected for the unexpired term at the first general election for the office which is vacant that occurs more than thirty days after such appointment."

Under Section 142, of the General Code, the Governor's power to appoint is limited to vacancies in the office of a judge by reason of the expiration of the term of the incumbent and a failure to provide therefor at the preceding election. The authority of the Governor ceases when these conditions do not exist. There being no such office as Chief Justice now there could be no expiration of the term of the incumbent, and the only possible provision authorizing the appointment of a Chief Justice by the Governor would arise under Section 141, General Code, and Article XVII of the Constitution afore quoted.

The question, therefore, to be determined is, Will there be on January 1, 1913, in Ohio, an elective state office legally known as the office of Chief Justice? In my opinion the answer should be in the negative. The first sentence of Section 2 of Article IV does not make the office of Chief Justice elective. If the Chief Justice is embraced in the following, which I doubt very much, to-wit: "Judges of the supreme court shall be elected by the electors of the state at large for such term, not less than six years, as may be prescribed by law, and they shall be elected, and their official term shall begin, at such time as may now or hereafter be fixed by law," it is by such provision alone, unaided by any other, made elective, and will come within the whole of the terms of the provisions and not part of them. In other words, if within its terms we could paraphrase the sentence as follows: "The Chief Justice of the supreme court shall be elected by the electors of the state at large for such term, not less than six years as may be prescribed by law (which means as may in the future be prescribed by law) and he shall be elected and his official term begin at such time as may now or hereafter be fixed by law," then there is no law now in existence providing for the election of a seventh judge.

We now have Section 1466, of the General Code, which provides as follows:

"The supreme court shall be composed of six judges, two of whom shall be chosen in each even numbered year. Each judge shall hold his office for a term of six years, commencing on the first day of January next after his election."

It appears, therefore, clearly that the law as it now exists and is prescribed provides only for terms of office and their election for six judges and no more, and it further appears from the Constitution itself making the office elective that the election shall be for such term as may be or as is prescribed by law and the elective feature presupposes a term and provision for election.

As to what is meant by the term "vacancy" in Ohio we will find the case of Attorney General vs. Heffner, 59 O. S., 368, instructive. The second syllabus of that case appears to be in point here; that is, vacancies in office refer to such vacancies as may occur fortuitously and not by creation.

The authorities seem clear that the Governor has no inherent power as Chief Executive to fill a vacancy. His power arises from the provisions of the law and the Constitution.

For the foregoing reason I am clearly of the opinion that no duty will devolve upon the Governor in the absence of legislation upon the subject to appoint a Chief Justice for the Supreme Court of Ohio January 1, 1913, or thereafter. It might be added further that it is not to be assumed that the appointment of a Chief Justice would be contemplated in the absence of any provision for salary or term of office. These two elements are proper subjects for legislation and are important elements in determining whether or not the office itself has been fully created. Should an appointment be made of a Chief Justice the appointee would either have to be one of the present incumbents in office or an entirely new judge. If one of the present incumbents in office his term would be governed by the law at present defining supreme court judges; if an entirely new appointee his term would be entirely undefined. This shows conclusively that as the term of office would be entirely dependent upon the person chosen for the office that there could not be in contemplation of law at the time when the new Constitution goes into effect such an office and such a vacancy as the Chief Justice of the Supreme Court.

SECOND:—Now as to the second question: This is discussed here only in relation to the Governor; it not being the intention to discuss this question at all in relation to the Court, because that would be improper and entirely outside of the jurisdiction of this department.

In the light of the provisions of Section 142, General Code, this is a very important matter because unless those elected to the supreme bench at the recent election under the provisions of the old Constitution are entitled to take their seats as judges of the supreme court for the term commencing on the first day of January, 1913, there would be three vacancies for the governor of this state to fill.

To determine this requires consideration of the meaning of the first sentence of Section 2, Article IV of the new Constitution, said section being as follows:

> "The supreme court shall until otherwise provided by law consist of the chief justice and six judges, and the judges now in office in that court shall continue therein until the end of the terms for which they were respectively elected, unless they are removed, die or resign."

It will be kept in mind that Section 2 of Article IV of the new Constitution takes effect on January 1, 1913, and the terms of office of the supreme judges commence on January 1, 1913. As the dates for the commencing of the term of office of the judges and the taking effect of the new Constitution are one it might be said without straining a point that the newly elected judge is in office in the "now" mentioned in the Constitution; but I do not believe we need to rely upon this reasoning. To meet a situation like the present one a liberal construction of both statutes and Constitution is certainly to be applied; a construction that will avoid and not lead to difficulty; a construction based on the common sense of the situation. It is apparent upon reading the provisions of the new Constitution with reference to the judiciary that it is intended to make use of the machinery of the old Constitution and the laws passed in pursuance thereto until the machinery of the new Constitution and the laws to be passed in pursuance thereto is set in motion in regular order. The law, like nature, abhors a vacuum, and to my mind the expression "judges now in office" as well embraces the judges of the supreme court elected at the recent election under the present Constitution, and who under it in the absence of the new Constitution would take their seats January 1, 1913, as those who are actually now in the bench and whose terms of office will not expire until the new Constitution is in effect. The very fact that no provision is made by the new Constitution for either the election or appointment of judges other than those elected and provided for under the present order of things is the strongest proof that it was intended that the newly elected judges should assume their places on the bench as well as the present ones should continue on the bench. There might be some narrowly logical and purely technical objections to this reasoning, but any other conclusion would seem to me to be only substituting shadow for substance. The people unquestionably elected the supreme judges-elect for a purpose and not in vain, and any interpretation that would deprive the people of their clearly expressed purpose, and these judges of a right that is clearly theirs, would seem to me to be not well founded.

Therefore, in respect to this it is my opinion that the Governor will have no duty to perform and that the rights of the newly elected judges to sit is one which the Court will determine for itself.

THIRD:—Coming now to the third question whether there will be a vacancy in the Court of Appeals warranting appointment by the Governor.

Section 6 of Article IV of the new Constitution provides:

> "The judges of the circuit court now residing in their respective districts shall be the judges of the respective courts of appeals in such districts and perform the duties thereof until the expiration of their respective terms of office. Vacancies caused by the expiration of the terms of office of the judges of the courts of appeals shall be filled by the electors of the respective appellate districts in which such vacancies shall arise."

Section 6 of Article IV of the present Constitution provides:

> "Such (circuit judges) shall be elected at such time and for such terms as may be prescribed by law."

The law by Section 1514, General Code, provides that circuit judges shall be elected "and shall hold his office for six years beginning on the 9th day of February next after his election."

The new amendment provides "The judges of the circuit court now residing (January 1, 1913) in their respective districts shall be the judges of the respective courts of appeals in such district and perform the duties thereof until the expiration of their terms of office."

Many of the circuit judges now in office in Ohio were re-elected on the 5th day of November, 1912. Technically, it might be said that by the language of "judges of the circuit court now residing in their respective districts shall be the judges of the respective courts of appeals in such district and perform the duties thereof until the expiration of their terms of office" would noly permit them to fill out the terms they are serving on January 1, 1913. For instance, the term of one of the judges of the Fourth Judicial Circuit will expire on February 9, 1913, and this same judge was re-elected at the recent election. It might be said that the provisions of the Constitution entitle him to serve only until February 9, 1913, but we think that the same reasoning applies in this case that applies with reference to the newly elected supreme judges. There is nothing in the expression "until the expiration of their respective terms of office" to conflict with this idea. There is nothing contrary to the conclusion that the circuit judges-elect at this time have the right to two fixed terms of office, one ending next February, and one given them by the aforesaid provisions of the Constitution and statutes fixed for the period of six years from the 9th of February "next after his election."

It seems to me that the rule of construction is not too far stretched by holding that the "respective terms of office" referred to in the recent amendment be applied to those two fixed terms which the circuit judges-elect now hold, nor is it necessary to refer to a long line of decisions which provide that in order to meet situations of this character liberal construction should be applied to Statutes and Constitutions.

Section 6 of Article IV provides that "Vacancies caused by the expiration of the terms of office of the judges of the courts of appeals shall be filled by the electors, etc.;" also "Laws may be passed to prescribe the time and mode of such election, etc." Now, therefore, as the vacancies in this particular instance would be caused, if there were such vacancies, by the expiration of the terms of office, and if such vacancies were to be filled by the electors under a form of election not as yet prescribed, it follows that no vacancies are contemplated on account of the expiration of the term of office until the machinery shall have been supplied for the holding of election to fill those vacancies, and as on the 9th of February, 1913, the present judges of the circuit court will be then judges of the court of appeals, and as that date will end the term of such judges of the court of appeals whose terms would expire as circuit judges on that day it is apparent that there will be no vacancies on the 9th day of February, 1913, by reason of the circuit judges-elect not being entitled to sit as judges of the courts of appeals.

The new Constitution further provides that the courts of appeals districts until otherwise provided by law shall be the same as the circuit court districts. It is further provided that the circuit courts shall merge into the courts of appeals this disclosing the intention to use all the machinery, as it were, of the circuit court until all the machinery of the new Constitution of courts of appeals may be put into operation.

For the foregoing reasons I am of the opinion that the Governor will have no duty to perform in respect to the appointment of either Chief Justice or Judges of the Supreme Court, or Judges of the Courts of Appeals under the laws as they now exist and under the present conditions.

It is not intended herein to express an opinion as to what would be the situation in case of action by the Legislature upon any of the above subjects, that question being reserved for investigation should a contingency arise.

Very respectfully yours,

TIMOTHY S. HOGAN,
Attorney General.

OFFICES INCOMPATIBLE—HEALTH OFFICER AND MEMBER OF THE GENERAL ASSEMBLY—SALARY—CONSTITUTIONAL PROHIBITION.

Under the inhibitions of Article II, Section 4, of the Constitution of Ohio, a person who accepts the appointment to the position of Health Officer in a Village is non-eligible as a Member of the General Assembly and may be refused his salary as such member.

COLUMBUS, OHIO, January 25, 1912.

HON. J. V. WINANS, Member House of Representatives, Madison, Ohio.

DEAR SIR:—I am in receipt of your letter of January 23, 1912, which is as follows:

> "Chas. Kempel, Clerk of the House of Representatives, writes that 'he (the Attorney General) has also ruled that if any member has accepted any other office * * * * such member shall forfeit his compensation for the year."
> "The mayor and council of our village have offered me the Health Officer of our village for the ensuing year. Would an acceptance of the office cause a forfeiture of the 1912 salary as a member of the legislature?"

Section 4404 and 4405 of the General Code are as follows:

Section 4404:

> "The council of each municipality shall establish a board of health, composed of five members to be appointed by the mayor and confirmed by council who shall serve without compensation and a majority of whom shall be a quorum. The mayor shall be president by virtue of his office. But in villages the council, if it deems advisable, may appoint a health officer, to be approved by the state board of health who shall act instead of a board of health, and fix his salary and term of office. Such appointee shall have the powers and perform the duties granted to or imposed upon boards of health except that rules, regulations or orders of a general character and required to be published, made by such health officer, shall be approved by the state board of health."

Section 4405:

> "If a municipality fails or refuses to establish a board of health or appoint a health officer, the state board of health may appoint a health officer therefor and fix his salary and term of office. Such health officer shall have the same powers and duties as health officers appointed in villages in place of a board of health, and his salary as fixed by the state board of health, and all necessary expenses incurred by him in performing the duties of a board of health shall be paid by and be a valid claim against such municipility."

Section 4 of Article II of the Constitution provides:

> "No person holding office under the authority of the United States, or any lucrative office under the authority of this state, shall be eligible to, or have a seat in, the general assembly; but this provision shall not extend to township officers, justices of the peace, notaries public or officers of the militia."

My opinion is that the office of health officer must be regarded as a lucrative office under the authority of the State of Ohio, and as it does not come under the exceptions provided in said Section 4, the fact that you held such office, should you accept the appointment, would make you non-eligible as a member of the General Assembly. That is you would lose your title to a seat in the General Assembly, and if the payment of salary for the year 1912 to you, as a member of such General Assembly, were resisted, you could not recover the same.

Very truly yours

TIMOTHY S. HOGAN,
Attorney General.

OFFICES INCOMPATIBLE—MEMBER GENERAL ASSEMBLY AND MEMBER OF TOWNSHIP BOARD OF EDUCATION.

Since the office of member of a township board of education is a lucrative office, held under authority of this state, under Article 2, Section 4, of the Constitution, a person holding such office cannot occupy a seat in the General Assembly at the same time, nor can he be elected to the General Assembly whilst holding the former position.

A person so elected, should resign from the board, however, and may hold his seat, pending the raising of the question of his eligibility.

Opinion to Van S. Deaton, M. D., Representative-elect, Alcony, Ohio.

November 20, 1912.

VAN S. DEATON, M. D., Representative-Elect, Alcony, Ohio.

DEAR SIR:—Under favor of November 18th, you request my opinion as follows:

> "Will you kindly give me your construction of Section 4, Article 11, of Constitution of Ohio, relating to eligibility of members of Legislature. I am a member of the Board of Education of Elizabeth Township, Miami County, Ohio. Am I a township officer under the provision? I have been elected member of Legislature for coming session."

Article 11, Section 4, of the Constitution is as follows:

> "No person holding office under the authority of the United States, or any lucrative office under the authority of this state, shall be eligible to, or have a seat in the general assembly; but this provision shall not extend to township officers, justices of the peace, notaries public, or officers of the militia."

I am of the opinion that there can be no question that townships and township school districts are independent divisions. The powers of township officers and of members of a township board of education are entirely separate and distinct, with reference to general administrative and taxing functions. There can be no doubt that a member of a township board of education is not a township officer within the meaning of the above constitutional provision.

Indeed, under Section 4723, General Code, which provides for the abolition of joint sub-districts and the annexation of territories actually within another township, the territorial jurisdiction of this office may differ. This principle is made clearer in Section 4712, which provides that the board of education of a township school districts are independent divisions. The powers of township officers and This section clearly evidences a distinction existing in the legislative mind, between members of a township board of education and township officers.

Since, therefore, a member of a township board of education is not a township officer, that office cannot be within the exception to Article 11, Section 4, as set out.

The term "eligible" is defined by the Century Dictionary, as follows:

> "1. Fit to be chosen; worthy of choice; desirable.
> "2. Qualified to be chosen; legally qualified for election or appointment."

It is clear, therefore, that since the position of member of township board of education is a lucrative office, held under the authority of this state, you cannot hold such position, and at the same time, occupy a seat in the General Assembly. Furthermore, in view of the above definition of the term "eligible," it is clear that under a technical construction of this constitutional provision, you could not have been elected to that position, whilst holding a position on the board.

Under date of September 30, 1911, however, I rendered an opinion to Mr. M. J. Jenkins, member of the House of Representatives, Plain City, Ohio, in which I held that, although Mr. Jenkins was a member of the board of public affairs of his village, and therefore not eligible to, nor entitled to have a seat in the General Assembly, I advised him, that he might resign as member of the board of trustees of public affairs at once, under the apprehension that no question would be raised about his membership in the General Assembly.

I feel that I can, therefore, adopt the policy of the former opinion, and advise you to resign immediately from your position as member of the board, in the belief that no question will be raised with reference to your eligibility for the General Assembly.

Very truly yours,
TIMOTHY S. HOGAN,
Attorney General.

OFFICES COMPATIBLE—MEMBER GENERAL ASSEMBLY AND MEMBER OF VILLAGE BOARD OF EDUCATION.

Since the office of member of a village board of education is not a lucrative office, a person holding such office is eligible to and may at the same time have a seat in the General Assembly.

November 19, 1912.

MR. CHAS. A. WHITE, Representative-Elect, Lisbon, Ohio.

DEAR SIR:—Under favor of November 14th, you wrote as follows:

> "Having been elected one of the State Representatives for Columbiana County at the election held on the 5th inst., I am writing you to know if I can serve as a member of the Board of Education of our village, of which I am at present a member, and also be a member of the Legislature?"

Article 11, Section 4 of the Constitution of Ohio is as follows:

> "No person holding office under the authority of the United States, or any lucrative office, under the authority of this state, shall be eligible to, or have a seat in the General Assembly; but this provision shall not extend to township officers, justices of the peace, notaries public, or officers of the militia."

I am of the opinion that this provision is not applicable to your case, inasmuch as the statutes do not provide compensation for the office of member of village board of education.

There are no other legal limitations which I can recall, which would prevent you from holding both of these positions. The office of member of village board of education is not a lucrative office, and you may, therefore, retain the same if you are able to perform its duties, while at the same time, occupying a seat in the General Assembly.

Very truly yours,

TIMOTHY S. HOGAN,

Attorney General.

ARTICLES OF INCORPORATION—RIGHT TO EMPLOY A NAME SIMILAR TO THAT OF AN EXISTING CORPORATION.

The Secretary of State shall not file Articles of Incorporation wherein the corporate name is similar to that of an existing corporation whose Articles have been filed according to law.

COLUMBUS, OHIO, January 6, 1912.

HON. CHARLES H. GRAVES, Secretary of State, Columbus, Ohio.

MY DEAR SIR:—I beg to acknowledge receipt of your letter of November 28th, enclosing a copy of letter addressed to you by Mr. Augustus B. Stoughton, and requesting my opinion upon the question presented in Mr. Stoughton's letter.

I have delayed answering your letter for the reason that Mr. Stoughton requested, and was given by me, the privilege of submitting authorities upon the question which he raised.

That question is as follows:

> "May the Secretary of State, lawfully file and record articles of incorporation where in the name of the proposed company is the same as that of a foreign corporation authorized to transact business in Ohio?"

Section 8628, General Code, provides as follows:

> "The secretary of state shall not file or record any articles of incorporation wherein the corporate name is likely to mislead the public as to the nature or purpose of the business its charter authorizes, or if such name is that of an existing corporation, or so similar thereto as to be likely to mislead the public, unless the written consent of the existing corporation signed by its president and secretary, be filed with such articles."

The statute does not provide that the Secretary of State shall not file or record articles of incorporation wherein the corporate name is that of an existing domestic corporation, but simply that he shall withhold official action in the premises of the corporate name is similar to that of an existing corporation.

Unless, therefore, there is some good reason for holding that the scope of the section is limited to domestic corporations in this particular, the primary meaning of its language, which is applicable as well to foreign as to domestic corporations, ought to be given effect.

This precise question must be answered, in my opinion, by a consideration of the purpose and intent of the entire section above quoted. It seems to me that the purpose of the statute is clearly disclosed by the repeated use of the phrase, "likely to mislead the public." The statute is not one passed primarily for the protection of any class of corporations, but for the protection of the public. The possibility of fraud upon the public is equally as great when a foreign and a domestic corporation having the same name are both engaged in business in the state at the same time as it would be when two domestic corporations having the same name were engaged in business in the state at the same time.

The duty of protecting the public from the possibility of fraud of this character is cast by the section upon the Secretary of State. That officer has the right to persume that no foreign corporations are or will be engaged in business in the State of Ohio excepting those which have complied with the provisions of the statutes of this State requiring the securing of a certificate of compliance from the Secretary of State as a condition precedent to the doing of business in Ohio.

From all the foregoing, it is my opinion that when proposed articles of incorporation of a domestic corporation are presented to the Secretary of State, it is his duty to examine not only the files and records of domestic corporations, but also those of foreign corporations authorized to transact business in Ohio, for the purpose of ascertaining whether the name proposed to be used by the incorporators of the new company is the same as or similar to a name of an existing corporation of either class; but that when the Secretary has conducted such an examination and has found no corporation having such a name, his duty in the premises is discharged, and he is not obliged to search beyond his own records, or to taken cognizance of any information as to the possession of the name by any corporation other than that disclosed to him by his own files and records.

I deem it proper to say in this connection that while in all other particulars the section under consideration imposes a sound discretion in the Secretary of State, it is otherwise with respect to the class of cases concerning which the present inquiry is made. That is to say, the question being as to whether a given name is likely to mislead the public as to the nature of the business to be transacted by the proposed corporation, the determination of this question rests in the discretion of the Secretary, so, also, when there is mere similarity of name, and the question is as to whether or not such similarity is likely to mislead the public. But when it appears that the name chosen by the incorporators of the proposed company is the same as that of any existing corporation, either domestic or foreign, licensed to do business in the State, the Secretary has no discretion whatever, and it is his mandatory duty to refuse to file or to record the articles of the proposed corporation until the name thereof is changed.

Very truly yours

TIMOTHY S. HOGAN,

Attorney General.

ARTICLES OF INCORPORATION OF THE HOCKING VALLEY BRICK COMPANY—PURPOSE CLAUSE—RIGHT TO PERFORM VARIOUS KINDS OF BUSINESS.

Articles of Incorporation containing a purpose clause disclosing an intention to conduct various kinds of business can be legally filed if the various kinds of business which the corporation proposes to carry on may be lawfully carried on by two or more corporations incorporated under the laws of this State for such kinds of business exclusively.

COLUMBUS, OHIO, January 5, 1912.

HON. CHARLES H. GRAVES, Secretary of State, Columbus, Ohio.

DEAR SIR:—I beg to acknowledge receipt of your letter of December 18th, enclosing application of the Hocking Valley Brick Company, a corporation organized under the laws of the State of Maine, for a certificate entitling it to transact business in this state. Attached to the application is a sworn copy of the certificate of organization of the corporation under the laws of the State of Maine. You request my opinion as to the legality of the purpose clause of said certificate of incorporation as bearing upon your duty with respect to the issuance of the certificate as requested in the application.

The purpose clause in question is very lengthy and I shall not burden this opinion with a complete quotation of it. Suffice it to say that it enumerates several unrelated business purposes. Unquestionably, under Section 8623 General Code as interpreted in the case of State ex rel vs. Taylor, 55 O. S., 67, the purpose clause of the certificate of incorporation is one which could not be used to define the powers of a domestic corporation for profit.

The duty of the Secretary of State in the premises, however, is defined by Section 178 of the General Code; the first sentence of that section is as follows:

> "Before a foreign corporation for profit transacts business in this state, it shall procure from the secretary of state a certificate that it has complied with the requirements of law to authorize it to do business in this state, and that the business of such corporation to be transacted in this state, is such as may be lawfully carried on by a corporation, organized under the laws of this state for such or similar business, or if more than one kind of business, by two or more corporations so incorporated for such kind of business exclusively. * * *"

While there is great multiplicity of purposes in the clause under consideration, I am unable to state in my opinion that any one of the various purposes is such a purpose as might not lawfully be carried on by a domestic corporation for profit; or, putting it in another way and in the language of the statute, I am of the opinion that the various kinds of business which the corporation proposes to carry on may be lawfully carried on by two or more corporations incorporated under the laws of this State for such kinds of business exclusively.

I am, therefore, of the opinion that the language of the purpose clause of the certificate of incorporation of The Hocking Valley Brick Company affords no obstacle to issuance by the Secretary of State of the certificate entitling the corporation to do business in the State of Ohio.

Very truly yours

TIMOTHY S. HOGAN,

Attorney General.

CORPORATIONS—CERTIFICATE OF WINDING UP THROUGH BANKRUPTCY—CERTIFICATE OF TAX COMMISSION—DISSOLUTION—REVOCATION OF CHARTER.

A certificate of the winding up of a corporation through bankruptcy proceedings is such a certificate as may not be permitted to be filed by the Secretary of State unless the Tax Commission shall certify that all reports required to be made to it have been filed by the corporation provided in Section 1321 of the Act of June 2, 1911, (102, O. L. 254)

Such certificate, however, cannot be accepted by the Secretary of State as in effect a certificate of dissolution or Revocation of the Charter of the Bankrupt Company as is contemplated by Section 11974 and 11975 of the General Code.

The winding up by proceedings in bankruptcy is in effect a dissolution of the Corporation rather than a revocation of its charter.

COLUMBUS, OHIO, December 25, 1911.

HON. CHARLES H. GRAVES, Secretary of State, Columbus, Ohio.

DEAR SIR:—I beg to acknowledge receipts of your letter of December 7th transmitting to me a certificate of H. D. Grindle, Referee in Bankruptcy of the District Court of the United States for the Northern District of Ohio, Western Division in the matter of the Anderson Piano Company, Bankrupt, setting forth that a voluntary petition was filed before him the said Referee; that the said Anderson Piano Company be adjudged a bankrupt and that the judgment of the Referee is that the said company be declared and adjudged a bankrupt accordingly. Also a certificate of the said H. D. Grindle discharging the trustee in bankruptcy in the matter of the Anderson Piano Company. You request my opinion upon the following questions:

1. Is a certificate of the winding up of a corporation through bankruptcy proceedings such a certificate as may not be permitted to be filed by the Secretary of State unless the Tax Commission shall certify that all reports required to be made to it have been filed by the corporation in pursuance of law, etc., as provided in Section 1321 of the act of June 2, 1911, 102 O. L. 254 therein designated as Section 5521 General Code?

2. Is the certificate submitted in effect a certificate of dissolution or revocation of the charter of the Anderson Piano Company as contemplated under Section 11974 General Code?

3. Is the winding up by proceedings in assignment or bankruptcy of a corporation, or rather the filing of a certificate thereof in the department of the Secretary of State in effect a dissolution of the company or the revocation of its charter?

Answering your first question I beg to state that the intention of Section 132 of the Act of June 2, 1911 is made clear by the first clause thereof which is as follows:

> "In case of dissolution or revocation of its charter, on the part of a domestic corporation, or of the retirement from business in this state, on the part of a foreign corporation, the secretary of state shall not permit a certificate of such action to be filed with him unless the commission shall certify etc."

The word "revocation" makes it clear that the General Assembly did not intend to limit the scope of the section to certificates of voluntary dissolution. This section applies to all cases of dissolution or retirement excepting to the case of the dissolution or revocation of the charter of a foreign corporation by a court of competent jurisdiction. The failure of the section to comprehend certificates of this sort seems to be accidental as Section 11975 requires a certificate of such action to be filed with the Secretary of State. If the Anderson Piano Company was a domestic corporation for profit then it is a corporation, a certificate of dissolution or revocation of the charter of which may not be filed by the Secretary of State unless the Tax Commission shall certify that all reports due it have been filed by the corporation and all taxes or fees thereon have been paid.

Your second question involves consideration of Section 11974 and 11975 General Code which provide in part as follows:

> "In case of dissolution or revocation of its charter, every domestic corporation shall file with the secretary of state a certificate thereof.* * *"

Section 11975:

> "In case of dissolution or revocation of charter by action of a competent court, or the winding up of a corporation either domestic or foreign, by proceedings in assignment or bankruptcy, such certificate shall be signed by the clerk of the court in which such proceedings were had. The fees for making and filing it, shall be taxed as costs in the preceding, be paid out of the corporate funds, and have the same priority as other costs."

It is significant that in Section 11975 the winding up of a corporation by proceedings in assignment or bankruptcy is treated separately from the dissolution or revocation of a charter by action of a competent court. They are clearly not the same thing. The effect of the discharge in bankruptcy is not necessarily the dissolution of the corporation nor, indeed, has the federal court jurisdiction to dissolve a corporation in the State of Ohio by proceedings in bankruptcy. No provision of the bankruptcy law attempts to impose such jurisdiction in the District Courts of the United States, and it has been expressly held wherever the question has been raised that neither an adjudication of nor a discharge in bankruptcy puts an end to the corporate existence. Holland vs. Heyman & Bros., 60 Ga. 174; National Surety Co. vs. Medlock, 58 S. E. (Ga.) 1131, 19 American Bankruptcy Reports 654).

As I have already stated Section 11975 seems to recognize a distinction, and at the same time to recognize that the administration of the assets of a bankrupt or insolvent corporation in all but the most exceptional of cases puts a practical end to the corporation and terminates the enterprise in furtherance of which the corporation was formed.

It is clear to me that a certificate of winding up as described in Section 11975 is to be regarded as in a sense a certificate of dissolution within the meaning of Section 11975. It is at least a certificate which must be filed with the Secretary of State and for which a fee must be paid to the Secretary. This is apparent upon the face of Section 11975.

Upon a careful consideration of the subject but without attempting to indicate or express an opinion as to what procedure ought to be followed in all cases in the federal courts—a matter which would seem to be outside of this department—I beg to state that in my opinion the "winding up" of a corporation, which under Section 11975 is to be certified to the Secretary of State, and evidently to have the effect of a dissolution of the corporation, is virtually a voluntary dissolution. That is to say, the court cannot, apparently against the will of the stockholders of the corporation, put an end to the corporate existence in bankruptcy proceedings but because of the express provisions of Section 11975 and the necessary implications flowing therefrom a court having jurisdiction in bankruptcy or insolvency may, with the consent of the stockholders of the bankrupt or insolvent corporation enter a decree declaring the corporation wound up. The certificate spoken of in Section 11975 should show a copy of such a journal entry.

From all the foregoing it follows that a referee in bankruptcy has no power whatever over the corporate existence by consent or otherwise, and for this reason as well as for the reason that neither of the certificates which you hand me are "signed by the clerk of the court in which the proceedings were had"—that is the clerk of the District Court of the United States for the Northern District of Ohio, Western Division—I am of the opinion that neither of the certificates in question complies with Section 11974 and 11975 or can be accepted by you as in effect a certificate of dissolution or revocation of the charter of the Anderson Piano Company.

The answer to your third question is suggested by what I have said in discussing your second question. The winding up by proceedings in assignment or bankruptcy of a corporation when evidenced by a certificate of the kind above described filed in the office of the Secretary of State, is in effect the dissolution of the company rather than a revocation of its charter. The difference, however is academic inasmuch as the law treats the winding up, the revocation and the dissolution alike for the purposes of record in the office of the Secretary of State. It must not be forgotten, however, that the certificate which the secretary is authorized to accept as a "certificate of dissolution" must be that of the clerk of the District Court of the United States, showing a judgment entry or decree, not only discharging the corporation as a bankrupt but also by consent winding up the existence of the corporation itself.

Very truly yours
TIMOTHY S. HOGAN,
Attorney General.

ARTICLES OF INCORPORATION—PURPOSE CLAUSE OF THE TRINITY MUTUAL FIRE INSURANCE ASSOCIATION—MUTUAL PROTECTIVE ASSOCIATIONS—NON-COMPLIANCE WITH STATUTORY REQUIREMENTS.

Not complying with the provisions of Section 9594, General Code.

The purpose clause of the Articles of Incorporation of the Trinity Mutual Fire Insurance Association is defective.

COLUMBUS, OHIO, January 20, 1912.

HON. CHARLES H. GRAVES, Secretary of State, Columbus, Ohio.

DEAR SIR:—I return herewith the proposed articles of incorporation of THE THINITY MUTUAL FIRE INSURANCE ASSOCIATION, unapproved by me. The purpose clause of said articles of incorporation is as follows:

> "Said corporation is formed for the purpose of assisting its members and protecting them against loss to buildings and personal property by fire."

This clause seems to evince an intention to engage in the business of a mutual protective association, as defined in Section 9593, General Code. Section 9594, General Code requires the articles of incorporation of such an association to define specifically one or more of the purposes enumerated in Section 9593, and to provide that the association shall enforce any contract entered into by its members whereby the parties thereto agree to be assessed specifically for incidental purposes and for the payment of losses. Measured by the requirements of these two sections, the purpose clause of THE TRINITY MUTUAL FIRE INSURANCE ASSOCIATION is defective.

Very truly yours
TIMOTHY S. HOGAN,
Attorney General.

ARTICLES OF INCORPORATION—PURPOSE CLAUS—THE MUTUAL MOTOR VEHICLE INSURANCE ASSOCIATION—AMBIGUITY AND DEFICIENCY.

COLUMBUS, OHIO, January 20, 1912.

HON. CHARLES H. GRAVES, Secretary of State, Columbus, Ohio.

DEAR SIR:—I return herewith the proposed articles of incorporation of THE MUTUAL MOTOR VEHICLE INSURANCE ASSOCIATION, unapproved by me, for the reason that the language of the purpose clause is ambiguous as to the kinds of losses proposed to be insured against and the property to be insured, and for the further reason that the articles do not state that the property to be insured shall be in this state, as required by Section 9593, General Code. In other respects, the purpose clause, while somewhat roughly drawn, is in compliance with the statutes.

Very truly yours
TIMOTHY S. HOGAN,
Attorney General.

ARTICLES OF INCORPORATION OF THE REFORM MEDICAL INSTITUTE—PROFESSIONAL BUSINESS—"SANITORIUM"—CONSTITUTIONAL RESTRICTIONS.

Articles of Incorporation disclosing the purpose of conducting a "Sanitorium" where medical services can be contracted for, shall not be filed.

If it is the intention of the Incorporators to conduct a "Sanitorium" in the statutory sense of the term i. e. a place where patients are to be received and cared for, such a business might be conducted if the purpose was clearly expressed.

If, on the other hand, the intention was that of arranging for medical and surgical treatment to all persons in general, such business could not be conducted.

COLUMBUS, OHIO, January 10, 1912.

HON. CHARLES H. GRAVES, Secretary of State, Columbus, Ohio.

DEAR SIR:—I beg to acknowledge receipt of your letter of January 5th, enclosing the proposed articles of incorporation of THE REFORM MEDICAL IN-STITUTE, and requesting my opinion as to the legality of the purpose clause thereof, which is as follows:

> "Said corporation is formed for the purpose of conducting an Institute and Sanatorium where medical service and attention can be contracted for by said corporation in behalf of patrons and patients applying for medical, surgical and hygenic treatment; said corporation furnishing under lawful contract the necessary medical services, aid, treatment and assistance; such medical services to be guaranteed and furnished through this corporation to people of humble means and others who may apply to said corporation for aid and assistance in having such service furnished under the supervision of this corporation; this corporation, however, not engaging professionally by itself in the art and science of healing but furnishing on demand and on contract the professional services and experience of medical practitioners, duly authorized by law to engage in their respective professions, such aid, treatment, assistance and advice as may be desired by the patrons of said corporation and its lawful business subscribers, agreeing to remunerate it under lawful contract."

Sections 8623 and 8624 of the General Code provide as follows:

> "Except for carrying on professional business, a corporation may be formed for any purpose for which natural persons lawfully may associate themselves."

> "Section 8624. Corporations for the erection, owing and conducting of sanatoriums for receiving and caring for patients, their medical, surgical and hygenic treatment, and the instruction of nurses in the treatment of diseases and of hygiene, are not forbidden by the next preceding section."

The exception of Section 8624 to the general rule announced in Section 8623 with respect to a carrying on of a professional business by a corporation should, in my judgment, be strictly construed. It is those corporations and those only described in Section 8624 of the General Code which are authorized to be formed for the purpose of carrying on a professional business as defined by the several decisions of the Supreme Court relating thereto.

In my opinion, Section 8624 does not relate to several different kinds of corporations, but to one kind of corporation only, namely, those corporations engaged in the conduct of sanatoriums.

The meaning of the word "sanatorium" as used in this connection is well understood. The term is defined by the Century Dictionary as follows:

> "1. A place to which people go for the sake of health; * * * * also a house, hotel, or medical institution * * designed to accommodate invalids * * *.
> "2. A hospital * * * *."

Thus, it appears that a sanatorium is in every sense of the word a place where patients are received and cared for. The name could not properly be applied to a mere office where persons desiring medical attention may come to enter into contracts entitling them to the services of medical men. The phrase, "their medical, surgical and hygienic treatment" as used in the statute refers to the word "patient" immediately preceding, and must be read in connection with what goes before it. Therefore Section 8624 does not authorize the formation of corporations for the purpose of the medical, surgical and hygenic treatment of any patients, but does authorize a corporation engaged in the business of conducting a sanatorium to provide the medical, surgical and hygenic treatment of the patients to be received and cared for therein.

While the language of the above quoted purpose clause is not exactly clear, it seems to authorize the proposed corporation to conduct a place—under the name of "Institute and Sanatorium" where medical services can be contracted for. It does not seem to be the intention of the incorporators that the company shall receive and care for patients, but merely enter into contracts with them for medical services. If it be the intention of the incorporators to conduct such a place of business without conducting a place where patients are to be received and cared for, as at a hospital, then, in my opinion, such intention cannot lawfully be carried into effect. If, on the other hand, it is the intention of the incorporators to conduct a sanatorium, in the exact sense of the word as used in the statutes, then they have used inappropriate language to express that intention.

For the above reasons I beg to advise that you do not file or record the articles of incorporation of THE REFORM MEDICAL INSTITUTE.

Very truly yours,

TIMOTHY S. HOGAN,
Attorney General.

ARTICLES OF INCORPORATION—NAME, IDENTICAL WITH THAT OF FOREIGN CORPORATION—CANNOT BE FILED.

The Secretary of State is vested with a controlling discretion in the matter of whether or not a corporate name is such as will mislead the Public as to the purpose or the nature of business etc.

In cases, however, where it appears that the name is the same as that of any existing corporation, either domestic or foreign, licensed to do business in the State, the Secretary has no discretion and must refuse to file the Articles.

COLUMBUS, OHIO, January 6, 1912.

HON. CHARLES H. GRAVES, Secretary of State, Columbus, Ohio.

MY DEAR SIR:—I beg to acknowledge receipt of your letter of November 28th, enclosing a copy of letter addressed to you by Mr. Augustus B. Stoughton, and requesting my opinion upon the question presented in Mr. Stroughton's letter.

I have delayed answering your letter for the reason that Mr. Stoughton requested, and was given by me, the privilege of submitting authorities upon the question which he raised.

That question is as follows:

> "May the Secretary of State lawfully file and record articles of incorporation wherein the name of the proposed company is the same as that of a foreign corporation authorized to transact business in Ohio?"

Section 8628, General Code, provides as follows:

> "The secretary of state shall not file or record any articles of incorporation wherein the corporate name is likely to mislead the public as to the nature or purpose of the business its charter authorizes, or if such name is that of an existing corporation, or so similar thereto as to be likely to mislead the public, unless the written consent of the existing corporation signed by its president and secretary, be filed with such articles."

The statute does not provide that the Secretary of State shall not file or record articles of incorporation wherein the corporate name is that of an existing domestic corporation, but simply that he shall withhold official action in the premises if the corporate name is similar to that of an existing corporation.

Unless, therefore, there is some good reason for holding that the scope of the section is limited to domestic corporations in this particular, the primary meaning of its language, which is applicable as well to foreign as to domestic corporations, ought to be given effect.

This precise question must be answered, in my opinion, by a consideration of the purpose and intent of the entire section above quoted. It seems to me that the purpose of the statute is clearly disclosed by the repeated use of the phrase, "likely to mislead the public." The statute is not one passed primarily for the protection of any class of corporations but for the protection of the public. The possibility of fraud upon the public is equally as great when a foreign and a domestic corporation having the same name are both engaged in business in the state at the same time as it would be when two domestic corporations having the same name were engaged in business in the state at the same time.

The duty of protecting the public from the possibility of fraud of this character is cast by the sections upon the Secretary of State. That officer has the right to presume that no foreign corporations are or will be engaged in business in the State of Ohio excepting those which have complied with the provisions of the statutes of this State requiring the securing of a certificate of compliance from the Secretary of State as a condition precedent to the doing of business in Ohio.

From all the foregoing, it is my opinion that when proposed articles of incorporation of a domestic corporation are presented to the Secretary of State, it is his duty to examine not only the files and records of domestic corporations, but also those of foreign corporations authorized to transact business in Ohio, for the purpose of ascertaining whether the name proposed to be used by the incorporators of the new company is the same as or similar to a name of an existing corporation of either class; but that when the Secretary has conducted such an examination and has found no corporation having such a name, his duty in the premises is discharged, and he is not obliged to search beyond his own records, or to take cognizance of any information as to the possession of the name by any corporation other than that disclosed to him by his own files and records.

I deem it proper to say in this connection that while in all other particulars the section under consideration imposes a sound discretion in the Secretary of State, it is otherwise with respect to the class of cases concerning which the present inquiry is made. That is to say, the question being as to whether a given name is likely to mislead the public as to the nature of the business to be transacted by the proposed corporation, the determination of this question rests in the discretion of the Secretary, so, also, when there is mere similarity of names, and the question is as to whether or not such similarity is likely to mislead the public. But when it appears that the name chosen by the incorporators of the proposed company is the same as that of any existing corporation, either domestic or foreign, licensed to do business in the state, the Secretary has no discretion whatever, and it is his mandatory duty to refuse to file or to record the articles of the proposed corporation until the name thereof is changed.

Very truly yours,
TIMOTHY S. HOGAN,
Attorney General.

CORPORATIONS—ARTICLES OF INCORPORATION OF THE BURIAL INSURANCE COMPANY—LEGAL RESERVE LIFE COMPANIES—INCREASE OF CAPITAL STOCK—INCREASE OF NUMBER AND DECREASE OF PAR VALUE OF SHARES—CERTIFICATES OF AMENDMENT—AMENDMENT OF ARTICLES OF INCORPORATION.

The certificate of Amendment to the Articles of Incorporation of the Ohio Burial Insurance Company should be filed, as it complies with the General provisions for such certificates which all Insurance Companies may avail themselves of.

The par value and the number of shares of capital stock is not required to be set forth in the charter of the Legal Reserve Life Company. These facts may be set out however, as among the "such other particulars as are necessary to explain and make manifest the objects and purposes of the Company and the manner in which it is to be conducted" as provided in Section 9340, General Code.

Section 9345 is exclusive and its provision for the increase of capital stock of Legal Reserve Life Ins. Companies by certificate of Amendment represents the only possible procedure for such action.

Such Companies are not authorized by either general or special provisions to increase the number of shares or to reduce the par value of each share by certificate.

Among the general amendment statutes however, Section 8719 General Code provides a means by which such results may be accomplished, that is, by amendment to the articles of incorporation.

COLUMBUS, OHIO, January 23, 1912.

HON. CHARLES H. GRAVES, Secretary of State, Columbus, Ohio.

DEAR SIR:—I beg to acknowledge receipt of your letter of January 5th, submitting to me for my opinion thereon, the proposed certificate of amendment of the articles of incorporation of "THE OHIO BURIAL INSURANCE COMPANY;" also a certificate of the increase of the capital stock and of the number of shares thereof of the same company; and of your further letter in the same matter advising me of the kind of business which this company is authorized by its charter to carry on.

The certificate of amendment is to the effect, in short, that the name of the company be changed, and shows complete compliance with the laws of this state respecting the manner in which general corporations may adopt amendments to their articles of incorporation. In my opinion, this certificate may be accepted and filed by you, as all insurance companies have the right, in my judgment, to avail themselves of the general provisions of the law respecting amendments to articles of incorporation. The fee to be charged by you for filing this certificate is the same as that to be charged for filing any other certificate of amendment.

The other certificate is perhaps sufficiently described above. It seeks to increase the authorized capital stock of the company from one hundred thousand dollars to five hundred thousand dollars and to reduce the par value of each share from twenty-five dollars to one dollar and to increase the number of shares from four thousand to five hundred thousand, so that the capital stock of the company shall hereafter consist of five hundred thousand dollars, divided into five hundred thousand shares of one dollar each. This certificate shows compliance with the provisions of Section 8698 and those of Section 8700, which prescribe the procedure whereby an ordinary corporation may increase the authorized capital stock and the number of shares into which the same is divided, and may reduce the par value of the shares of stock respectively.

Your letter of January 11th, which sets forth the purpose clause of the articles of incorporation of "THE OHIO BURIAL INSURANCE COMPANY," shows the company was organized as a legal reserve life insurance company, under Section 9340, General Code. That section provides in full as follows:

> "Such persons shall file in the office of the secretary of state articles of incorporation, signed by them, setting forth their intention to form a company for the purposes named in this chapter, which articles shall comprise a copy of the charter they propose to adopt. The charter shall set forth the name of the company, which shall not be the corporate name or title used to designate any fire, life, marine, or other insurance company existing under the laws of this state, the place where it is to be located, the kind of business to be undertaken, the manner in which its corporate powers are to be exercised, the number of directors or trustees, the manner of electing them and other officers, a majority of whom shall be citizens of this state, the time of such election, the manner of filling vacancies, the amount of capital to be employed and such other particulars as are necessary to explain and make manifest the objects and purposes of the company, and the manner in which it is to be conducted. Such directors and trustees must be stockholders or members, and the number thereof may be increased at the will of the stockholders representing a majority of the stock, or of a majority of the members, to not more than twenty-one."

This striking fact is to be noted in connection with the provisions of this section: The par value and number of shares of capital stock is not required to be set forth in the charter of the company. In this respect, articles of incorporation filed under this section are different from those of any other class of corporations which I can, at the present time, call to mind. In fact, this section is the only section which provides in complete detail for the formation of a corporation for profit by a method different from that by which ordinary corporations are to be organized.

The failure of the general assembly to provide that the charter of a legal reserve life insurance company should set forth the number of shares and the par value of each share of stock of the proposed corporation does not seem to be accidental. In Section 9342, General Code, which prescribes the duties of the incorporators of such a company, it is provided that, upon the closing of the books for subscription to the capital stock thereof, they shall > "Distribute the stock among the subscribers, if more than the necessary amount is subscribed."

If the incorporators were bound to allot to each subscriber a definite number of shares having a certain par value each, this provision can not be effective.

I am, therefore of the opinion that it is at least not required that the charter of a legal reserve life insurance company state the par value and the number of shares of capital stock thereof. I have ascertained by examining the records of your office that the articles of incorporation of "THE OHIO BURIAL INSURANCE COMPANY" do contain a statement of this sort. Such statement is not improper. Section 9340, above quoted, provides that the charter shall set forth, among other things,

> "Such other particulars as are necessary to explain and make manifest the objects and purposes of the company and the manner in which it is to be conducted."

Therefore, the recital in the articles of incorporation of this company as to the par value and the number of shares of its capital stock is to be regarded as properly a part of its charter. It is not, however, to be regarded as a part of the provision regarding the > "amount of capital to be employed."

Section 9345, General Code, authorizes a legal reserve life insurance company to increase the amount of its capital stock in the manner therein provided. I have heretofore advised you in other opinions that this statute is to be regarded as exclusive and that its effect is to deny to legal reserve life insurance companies the benefits of Section 8698 to 8700, inclusive, General Code, applicable to ordinary corporations, and providing for changes in the capital stock thereof. Accordingly, in my judgment, a legal reserve life insurance company is not authorized to use the procedure outlined in this section for the accomplishment of any result not there in contemplated. Said Section 9345 provides in full as follows:

> "When in the opinion of the board of directors thereof, a company organized under any law of this state, requires a larger amount of capital than that fixed by its articles of incorporation, if authorized by the holders of two-thirds of the stock, they shall file with the secretary of state a certificate setting forth the amount of the desired increase, and thereafter the company shall be entitled to have the increased amount of capital fixed by the certificate, which shall be invested as required by the preceding two sections."

It will be observed that the section does not authorize an increase in the number of shares in which the capital stock is divided, nor does it authorize a reduction in the par value of each share.

Because of the fact that stipulations regarding the par value and the number of shares of capital stock of legal reserve life insurance companies are not to be regarded as illegal when found in the charter of such companies, but are to be regarded as properly a part of the articles of incorporation, I have come to the conclusion that while changes in the par value and in the number of shares may not be made either under Section 9345, General Code, or under Sections 8698 to 8700, inclusive, General Code, they may be made by amendment to the articles of incorporation. I have already stated my opinion that the provisions of the general amendment statutes are available in proper cases to insurance companies. The fourth paragraph of Section 8719, General Code, provides that amendments may be made

> "So as to add to the articles of incorporation anything omitted from, or which lawfully might have been provided for originally, in such articles. But the capital stock of a corporation shall not be increased or diminished by such amendment, * * * ."

Paragraph 3 of the same section authorizes amendments to be made:

"So as to modify * * * the objects or purposes for which it was formed."

While the question is not free from doubt, I am of the opinion that this section authorizes a life insurance company to change, in unessential particulars, any recital of the charter of the company not made therein as a part of the recital respecting the amount of capital to be employed.

I am, therefore, of the opinion that you may lawfully receive and file the certificate "increase of capital stock" of THE OHIO BURIAL INSURANCE COMPANY, as an increase in the total authorized capital stock. The remaining part of the certificate is to be regarded as mere surplusage and does not confer upon the corporation power to change the par value of its shares or the number thereof. This must be done by amendment.

My opinion in this case must not be confused with that of The Republic Accident Insurance Company. That corporation was organized under Section 9510, General Code, and accordingly none of the reasoning above expressed applies to it.

Very truly yours,
TIMOTHY S. HOGAN,
Attorney General.

AMENDMENT OF THE ARTICLES OF INCORPORATION OF THE EAST UNION FIRE INSURANCE ASSOCIATION.

Resolution is legal and may be filed.

COLUMBUS, OHIO, January 24, 1912.

HON. CHARLES H .GRAVES, Secretary of State, Columbus, Ohio.

DEAR SIR:—Acknowledging receipt of your letter of January 15th, and its enclosures, I beg to state that in my opinion the resolution of the EAST UNION FIRE INSURANCE ASSOCIATION, amending its articles of incorporation (which said resolution is enclosed in your letter) is in all respects legal and may be filed and recorded by you as an amendment to the articles of incorporation of the said association.

Very truly yours,
TIMOTHY S. HOGAN,
Attorney General.

CERTIFICATE OF REDUCTION OF STOCK OF THE BANKERS SURETY COMPANY—ILLEGALITY—INSURANCE COMPANY OTHER THAN LIFE.

An Insurance Company other than Life organized under Section 9510, General Code, is wholly without authority to reduce the amount of its authorized capital stock.

COLUMBUS, OHIO, January 30, 1912.

HON. CHARLES H. GRAVES, Secretary of State, Columbus, Ohio.

DEAR SIR:—Acknowledging receipt of your letter of January 23d, in which you enclose proposed certificate of reduction of the capital stock of THE BANKERS SURETY COMPANY and request my opinion as to whether it is the duty of the Secretary of State to file and record such certificate, I beg to state, in my opinion, it is not the duty of the Secretary of State so to do. Assuming from the name of this company that it is an insurance company, other than life, organized under Section 9510, General Code, it follows at once that in accordance with opinions previously rendered by me to your department the company is wholly without authority to reduce the amount of its authorized capital stock.

Very truly yours,
TIMOTHY S. HOGAN,
Attorney General.

COLLECTION OF FEE FOR COMMISSION OF COMMISSIONER OF STATE OF OHIO—DUTY OF GOVERNOR'S OFFICE.

The statutory duty of collecting the fee of three dollars for the commission of a Commissioner of the State of Ohio provided for by Section 137, General Code, rests upon the office of the Governor and not upon the Secretary of State.

COLUMBUS, OHIO, February 8, 1912.

HON. CHARLES H. GRAVES, Secretary of State, Columbus, Ohio.

DEAR SIR:—I am in receipt of your letter of December 12, 1911, in which you inquire as follows:

> "Please submit an opinion in writing to this Department on the question as to whether it is the duty of the Secretary of State to collect the fee of $3.00 for a commission of a commissioner of the State of Ohio, provided for in Section 137 of the General Code of Ohio."

Section 137, General Code, provides as follows:

> "There shall be paid by each person receiving a commission as notary public, a fee of one dollar; and by each person receiving a commission as commissioner of the state of Ohio, a fee of three dollars."

Section 138, General Code, provides for the issuance of commissions to judges of courts of record, state and county officers, militia and justices of the peace, by the governor.

Section 139, General Code, provides that each of the officers named in Section 138 shall pay a fee to the secretary of state for the making, recording and forwarding of their commissions.

Section 132, General Code, provides for the appointment by the governor of commissioners of the state of Ohio. Section 132 et seq provide for their duties; and Section 137, above quoted, provides the fee to be paid for their commissions.

Sections 138 and 139, General Code, were formerly part of Section 83, Revised Statutes. Section 137, General Code, was formerly Section 126, Revised Statutes. Sections 138 and 139, General Code, formerly Section 83, Revised Statutes, especially provided that the Secretary of State should receive a fee of five dollars for the making out, recording and forwarding of all commissions of the offices enumerated in said section, commissions for the commissioners of the State of Ohio not being mentioned therein. Section 132, General Code, formerly Section 124, Revised Statutes, provided for the appointment of commissioners of the State of Ohio. Section 126, Revised Statutes, required a fee of one dollar to be paid by each person receiving a commission as notary, but by each person receiving a commission as commissioner of the State of Ohio, a fee of three dollars; and the statute was silent as to whom fees were to be paid.

Section 1288, Revised Statutes, repealed by implication by the enactment of Section 1284d, Revised Statutes, now Section 2249, General Code, provided that the Secretary of the Governor should be entitled to all fees paid into the office of the governor; and prior to the enactment of Section 1284b and 1284d, Revised Statutes, providing the salary for the secretary to the governor, the fees provided by Section 126, Revised Statutes, now Section 137, General Code, were paid to the governor's office and went to the secretary to the governor as perquisities of his office. While Section 160, General Code, makes it the duty of the secretary of state to keep a register of commissions issued, specific name of each person commissioned, office conferred, date and term of commission, except those of notaries public, yet, the secretary of state is only authorized by statute to accept only such fees for commissions as are enumerated in Section 139, General Code. While it is unimportant as to whose duty it is to collect the three dollars for the commission of a commissioner of state, it being a mere question of bookkeeping, both the governor and the secretary of state being required to turn over the fee to the treasurer of state, and account therefor; and since it has been the custom to pay such fees to the governor's office, I believe, under Section 126, Revised Statutes, now Section 137, General Code, it is the statutory duty of the Governor's office to collect such fee. I therefore hold that it is not the duty of the secretary of state to collect the fee of three dollars for the commission of a commissioner of the State of Ohio, provided by Section 137, General Code; but that such duty rests with the office of the Governor of Ohio.

Very truly yours,

TIMOTHY S. HOGAN,

Attorney General.

ARTICLES OF INCORPORATION—CORPORATIONS "NOT FOR PROFIT" —WOMAN'S BUILDING AND REST ROOM ASSOCIATION—NO PECUNIARY GAIN TO MEMBERS—TWO DOLLAR FEE OF SECRETARY OF STATE FOR FILING.

Inasmuch as the Articles of Incorporation of the "Women's Building and Rest Room Association" expressly provided that the members of the proposed corporation shall receive no pecuniary gain therefrom and that all accumulations shall be devoted to the specific charitable aims of the corporation, its Articles may be filed by the Secretary of State who shall be entitled to a fee of two dollars for filing the same.

COLUMBUS, OHIO, February 14, 1912.

HON. CHARLES H. GRAVES, Secretary of State, Columbus, Ohio.

DEAR SIR:—I beg to acknowledge receipt of your letter of February 3d, enclosing the proposed articles of incorporation of the WOMEN'S BUILDING AND REST ROOM ASSOCIATION, and requesting my opinion as to the legality thereof. You also ask me to state the legal distinction between corporations for profit, and those not for profit, and in case the particular articles submitted are in proper form, what is the proper fee to be exacted by the Secretary of State for filing and recording same.

The purpose clause of the articles of incorporation is as follows:

> "The purpose for which said corporation is formed is to establish and maintain rooms for the use, entertainment and instruction of girls and women and their clubs, societies and organizations, and for social functions and amusements; to employ teachers and instruct classes of girls and women in cookery, domestic science, sewing, dress-making, manual training, physical culture, arts and crafts; to prepare and serve to the public for pay, refreshments, lunches, meals and banquets, as a means of raising revenue for said purposes; and by lease, purchase or otherwise, to acquire and hold title to real estate, and erect, lease, purchase or otherwise acquire, and maintain, buildings suitable for said purposes, and furnish them with proper and suitable kitchen, diningroom and parlor furniture, fixtures, fittings and decorations; to receive, accept and apply to said purposes any endowments, gifts, donations, devises and bequests that may be made to said corporation; to dispose of any surplus fund that may thus accumulate, to such charitable and benevolent objects as said corporation, by vote of its members, may from time to time designate as beneficiaries thereof; but said fund shall not, nor shall any part thereof, be distributed as profits to the members of said corporation, or to any of them; and, pending final disposition thereof, to loan its funds at interest, upon real estate or other securities; and to do and perform any and all lawful acts and things in furtherance of the aforesaid purposes."

The corporation is designated as one "not for profit." Lexicographers define two meanings of the word "profit": (1) the original or primary meaning of the word in which sense it denotes any advantage or accession of good; (2) the derivative or commercial use of the word, in which sense it denotes "the advantage or gain resulting to the owner of capital from its employment in any undertaking; * * * acquisition beyond expenditure; pecuniary gain in any action or occupation; * * *." (Century Dictionary.)

I think it is obvious that in the statute pertaining to corporations the word "profit" is used in its derivative or commercial sense. Obviously it could not have been used in its original sense, for it is to be presumed that persons would not go to the trouble of incorporating companies unless some good or advantage were expected to accrue from their action.

The distinction between the two classes of corporations is recognized by the laws of many states. Those of other states, however, use in many instances the term "pecuniary profit" instead of simply "profit." In my opinion, however, the two terms are synonomous.

Whose pecuniary profit, then, is it, for the purpose of securing which a corporation of that class is to be formed? Does the reaping, or intended reaping, of a profit by the corporation for the accomplishment or purpose of the incorporation constitute the company one "for profit" of itself? Clearly not. No enterprise is capable of successful accomplishment without the use of money. The most familiar instance of a corporation for profit,—a church—has current expenses to meet, and for this purpose collects revenues from its members. So, also, an educational institution may charge tuition and may thus be able at the end of a year to show a balance in its favor, without altering the essential character of the corporation.

The test, in my opinion, is found in the right, in expectancy, of the members or stockholders of the corporation. If, under the charter or articles of incorporation, such members or stockholders are to have the right to participate individually in the pecuniary profits derived from the use of the funds or other assets of the corporation itself, the latter is organized "for profit." If, however, the corporation itself, while to be conducted in such a way as, if possible, to secure accretions to the fund which constitutes its capital, is to devote such accretions otherwise than to the pecuniary advantage of the members or stockholders, then the corporation is one "not for profit." In other words, if the profits of the corporation are to be distributed among the members or stockholders by way of dividends or otherwise, then the corporation is for profit; if, on the other hand, there are to be no dividends and no distribution of the surplus profits of the corporation while it remains a going concern, then the corporation is one "not for profit," especially when such surplus profits are by the express terms of the charter to be distributed to some charitable or eleemosynary object or end.

The exact question has never arisen in Ohio, and seldom under the laws of any other state. Authority for the foregoing distinction, however is found in the case of Saint Clara Female Academy vs. Sullivan, 116 Ill., 375. In this case it was held that an incorporated academy which declares no dividends and pays no money to its members, but is conducted solely for educational and charitable purposes, is not a corporation for "pecuniary profit" although it may charge fees for tution. (See Snyder vs. Chamber of Commerce, 53 O. S., 1-11; State ex rel, vs. Home Co-operative Union, 63 O. S., 547.

Applying these principles to the articles of incorporation now under consideration, it is clear, I think, that the incorporators of the WOMEN'S BUILDING AND REST ROOM ASSOCIATION have properly characterized the same as a corporation "not for profit." It is expressly provided, in the purpose clause of these articles, that any surplus fund that may be accumulated shall never be disturbed as profits to the members of the corporation or to any of them and that the revenues to be derived from the ordinary activities of the corporation are to be devoted to the furtherance of the principal purposes thereof, which are "to establish and maintain rooms for the use, entertainment and instruction of girls and women, and their clubs, societies and organizations, and for social functions and amusements; to employ teachers and instruct classes of girls and women in cookery, etc."

Nowhere in the articles of incorporation is authority sought for the conduct of a business which will be productive of dividends or profits to the members of the corporation, in the pecuniary sense. Accordingly, on the principles, above stated, it is my opinion that you may lawfully receive and file the said articles of incorporation, inasmuch, further, as the subsidiary purposes of the association are all ancillary, in my judgment, to the principal purpose thereof, which is single.

With respect to the fee to be charged, this corporation differs in no particular from other corporations not for profit. The Secretary of State is authorized to charge and collect the sum of two dollars for filing and recording these articles of incorporation.

Very truly yours,
TIMOTHY S. HOGAN,
Attorney General.

ARTICLES OF INCORPORATION OF THE REFORM MEDICAL INSTITUTE AND AID COMPANY—PURPOSE CLAUSE—CORPORATION CONDUCTING PROFESSIONAL BUSINESS THROUGH AGENTS.

A purpose clause which discloses the object of providing medical services for its subscribers, in reality would effect a corporation formed for the purpose of conducting a professional business carried on through the medium of professional Agents.

COLUMBUS, OHIO, February 23, 1912.

HON. CHAS. H. GRAVES, Secretary of State, Columbus, Ohio.

DEAR SIR:—I beg to acknowledge receipt of your letter of February 12th, enclosing the proposed Articles of Incorporation of The Reform Medical Institute and Aid Company, requesting my opinion as to the legality of the purpose clause thereof, which is as follows:

> "The purpose for which said corporation is formed is to engage in the business of contracting with applicants and subscribers at regular rates, to furnish them, the said subscribers, with the services of regularly admitted practicing physicians, to be paid as to their services by this company, who will hire such physicians as its servants for the use and benefit of its subscribers. And further to assist the poor, the improvident in maintaining such service for their benefit by reason of moderate subscription fees under their control to enable them to be taken care of in illness; this corporation by itself, however, not engaging in the practice of medicine or in any profession, being simply a purely business corporation to contract with its subscribers for the furnishing of medical services of physicians to them the said subscribers."

In the case of State, ex rel, Physicians' Defense Company, vs. Laylin, 73 O. S. 90, the Supreme Court of this state placed a construction upon the implied prohibition, found in Section 8623, General Code, upon the formation of corporations for the purpose of conducting a professional business. The court had before it the articles of incorporation of the plaintiff company (a foreign corporation) the purpose clause of which was as follows:

> "To aid and protect the medical profession in the practice of medicine and surgery by the defense of physicians and surgeons against civil prosecutions for malpractice."

and the proposed plan of conducting its business, as stated in its charter, which was in part as follows:

> "The association shall issue to physicians and surgeons, for stated and agreed compensation, contracts by which it will undertake and agree to defend the holder of the contract at its own expense against any action brought against him for damages for alleged malpractice * * * ."

Analyzing this clause and the proposed plan of business the court held, first (page 99) that "the plaintiff company is not on insurance company, nor the contract it issues an insurance contract."

This conclusion led the court to the following question, also stated on page 99 of the opinion: "Is the business in which the Physicians' Defense Company proposes to engage, if admitted to this state, professional business?" This question, the court answered in the affirmative, upon reasoning, of which the following quotation is fully illustrative:

> "The services necessary to be rendered by the company in the carrying out and performance of its said contract, being such, as in this state, may only be performed by a member of the legal profession, an attorney at law, who shall have been first duly authorized and licensed to perform the same, are professional services, and a business which in its conduct or transaction, requires and permits only that character of service, is essentially and certainly, a professional business. But it is said by counsel for plaintiff in error, that The Physicians' Defense Company, being a corporation, and impersonal entity, cannot and does not itself, engage in the practice of law * * * but in what it does, or obligates itself to do, it undertakes only 'to act as the agent of the contract holder in retaining legal counsel and in managing and maintaining the defense of the suit.' How else, we may ask, could the corporation, being an impersonal entity, discharge its contractual obligation, other than by the employment of natural persons as its authorized agents to carry out and perform its said contract.
> "The agents to be employed, are and must be, attorneys at law, and by the express terms of its contract they are to be employed and paid by the corporation. While, therefore, the services rendered by the persons thus employed are rendered to, and in defense of, the contract holder, they nevertheless are rendered for, and in legal contemplation are performed by, the corporation itself. If this be not the engaging in or carrying on of professional business, then it would be difficult to conceive how professional business could be engaged in or carried on by a corporation. We are of the opinion that the business proposed is professional business, and may not therefore be transacted or carried on by a corporation in the state of Ohio * * * *."

The reasoning of the Supreme Court, as above quoted, applies aptly to the purpose clause of The Reform Medical Institute and Aid Company. It is frankly stated therein that the company is to employ physicians as its servants and to furnish their services to its contract holders. This being the case, it is vain for the incorporators to disclaim that the corporation itself is not to engage in the practice of medicine, or of any profession. It is, of course, indisputable that the practice of medicine constitutes a profession within the meaning of that word, and its derivative, as used in Section 8623, General Code.

I am, therefore, of the opinion that the business proposed to be conducted by those who seek to incorporate The Reform Medical Institute and Aid Company is professional in its nature, and that, therefore, the articles of incorporation presented to you, and which are returned herewith, cannot lawfully be filed.

Very truly yours,

TIMOTHY S. HOGAN,
Attorney General.

ARTICLES OF INCORPORATION OF THE CENTRAL STORAGE COMPANY—PURPOSE CLAUSE—MULTIFARIOUS BUSINESS—STATEMENT OF POWER TO ACQUIRE STOCK OF KINDRED AND NON-COMPETING COMPANIES.

Inasmuch as all corporations in Ohio have the power to acquire stock in kindred but non-competing companies and as the setting out of such clause seems to authorize the dealing in stocks as an independent object, the power should not be set out in articles of incorporation.

A statement of a purpose "to do any and all other acts and things and to exercise any and all other powers which a co-partnership or natural person could do and exercise" is objectionable in that it seems to authorize a multifarious business.

COLUMBUS, OHIO, February 23, 1912.

HON. CHARLES H. GRAVES, Secretary of State, Columbus, Ohio.

DEAR SIR:—I am in receipt of your letter of February 12th, submitting for my consideration and opinion thereon the proposed Articles of Incorporation of The Central Storage Company. The purpose clause of these articles is as follows:

> "Said corporation is formed for the purpose of establishing and maintaining one or more warehouses for the storage of all kinds of property, obtaining insurance on the same and making advances when for the interest of the company, and purchasing and dealing in same if necessary to protect the company from loss, and also leasing lands or other premises to obtain storage for property which cannot be conveniently stored in the building; and said company will also issue negotiable warehouse receipts for any property in its possession or under its control. To acquire by purchase, exchange or otherwise and to hold and dispose of only such real estate as may be necessary and incidental to the conduct of the storage business. To acquire by purchase, exchange, subscription or otherwise and to hold and dispose of stocks, bonds or any other obligations, in other kindred but not competing private corporation, either domestic or foreign, but this shall not authorize the formation of any trust > or combination for the purpose of restricting trade or competition. To hold for investment or otherwise, to use, sell or dispose of any stock, bonds, or other obligations of any such other corporations; to aid in any manner any corporation whose stocks, bonds or other obligations are held or are in any manner guaranteed by the company, and to do any other acts or things for the preservation, protection, improvement or enhancement of the value of any such stocks bonds or other obligations, or to do any acts or things designed for any such purpose; and while owner of any such stocks, bonds or other obligations to exercise all the rights, powers and privileges of ownership thereof, and to exercise any and all voting powers thereon. Without in any particular limiting any of the objects and powers of the corporation it is hereby expressly declared and provided that the corporation shall have power to issue bonds, stocks and other obligations in payment of real estate or personal property purchased or acquired by it, or for any other object in or about its business; to mortgage or pledge any stocks, bonds or other obligations, or any real or other property which may be acquired by it, to secure any bonds or other obligations by it issued or incurred; to guarantee any dividend or bond, or contracts or other obligations; to make and perform contracts of any kind and description and in carrying on its business or for the purpose of attaining or furthering any of its objects, to do any and all other acts and things, and to exercise any and all other powers which a co-partnership or natural person could do and exercise, and which now and thereafter may be authorized by law."

These articles are subject to criticism for redundency, inasmuch as all of the powers which the incorporators of the company seek to have confered upon it would have existed by a mere recital to the effect that the corporation is formed for the purpose of establishing and maintaining warehouses, and engaging in the warehouse business. Having been empowered so to do, the corporation might, lawfully, have issued negotiable receipts under favor of Section 8457 et seq., General Code; might have purchased and dealt in the goods stored by it, if necessary to protect the company from loss; might have obtained insurance on goods and made advances when for the interest of the company etc.; all as incidental to the business of a warehouseman. The other recitals in the articles are all expressly made as incidental to the principal purpose, excepting those relating to the acquisition of stock of other kindred but not competing private corporations. Notwithstanding the restrictions placed upon this power, in the articles of incorporation it is stated as an independent one. There is no necessity for such statement. The power exists in all corporations, without express recital, under favor of Section 8683, General Code; and to state it as a separate purpose would seem to authorize a corporation to embark independently in the business of dealing in stocks, a thing forbidden by the rule of singleness of purpose, applied to Section 2683, General Code, by the decision of State v. Taylor, 55 O. S. 67.

I therefore recommend that that portion of the purpose clause commencing with the words, "To acquire by purchase, exchange, etc." and ending with the words "and to exercise any and all voting powers thereon" be stricken from the articles before they are filed and recorded by you.

Again, the last phrase of the purpose clause, namely:

> "to do any and all other acts and things, and to exercise any and all other powers which a co-partnership or natural person could do and exercise, and which now and thereafter may be authorized by law."

is objectionable, as it seems to embody an attempt to secure authority to engage in multifarious business, prohibited by the rule of State vs. Taylor, supra.

In connection with these articles of incorporation, I beg to point out that under Section 10210, General Code, there are certain restrictions as to the internal management of corporations formed for the purpose of constructing warehouses, and with respect to the right of such corporations to acquire real estate. With these provisions, of course, the state has nothing to do, unless the articles of incorporation are in conflict with them. Inasmuch, however, as the power to acquire real estate is expressly declared to be limited to that which is "necessary and incidental to the conduct of the storage business," I am of the opinion that this portion of the purpose clause is not objectionable.

For the reason above stated I beg to advise that the Articles of Incorporation of The Central Storage Company be not filed and recorded by you until modified as aforesaid.

Said Articles of Incorporation are herewith returned.

Very truly yours,

TIMOTHY S. HOGAN,
Attorney General.

ARTICLES OF INCORPORATION—PURPOSE CLAUSE OF THE DAYTON MOTION PICTURE EXHIBITORS LEAGUE—CORPORATION NOT FOR PROFIT—EVIDENCE OF PECUNIARY MOTIVE AND RESTRAINT OF COMPETITION.

The purpose clause of a contemplated corporation not for profit, which provides for promoting the "interests" of motion picture exhibitors and for furthering the welfare of that business, should be amended so as to make clear the absence of any pecuniary motives and to clearly negative any scheme of combination in restraint and competition.

COLUMBUS, OHIO, March 8, 1912.

HON. CHARLES H. GRAVES, Secretary of State, Columbus, Ohio.

DEAR SIR:—I beg to acknowledge receipt of your letter of February 21, requesting my opinion as to the legality of the purpose clause of the proposed articles of incorporation of THE DAYTON MOTION-PICTURE EXHIBITORS LEAGUE, enclosed therewith.

Said purpose clause is as follows:

> "The purpose for which said corporation is formed is for the promoting and furthering of the interests of motion picture exhibitors within the City of Dayton and vicinity.
> "(b) To provide such methods and ways as may be necessary for the welfare and elevation of the business of such exhibitors.
> "(c) And to protect this particular branch of exhibitors from imposters and others whose work may degenerate the business of legitimate motion-picture exhibitors.
> '(d) And for the purpose of creating a friendly and congenial sentiment between the members and their families of such motion-picture exhibitors."

In my opinion you should not file or record these articles of incorporation without amendment so as to more clearly define the nature of the business or corporate activities proposed to be conducted. The corporation is formed not for profit; yet, it is expressly declared that it proposes to engage in the "promoting and furthering of the interests of motion-picture exhibitors within the city of Dayton and vicinity." I suppose the presumption would be that the "interests" to be promoted and furthered would be some interests other than the pecuniary interests of such exhibitors. Nevertheless, to obviate the ambiguity which seems to arise here, I think it ought to be required that the nature of the interest to be furthered, and the manner of furthering the same, be more explicitly set forth in the purpose clause of the articles.

Again, the second paragraph of the purpose clause declares that the corporation is formed for the purpose of providing "methods and ways necessary for the welfare and elevation of the business of the exhibitors." A corporation, not for profit, may not, as I have already suggested, engage in the enterprise of promoting the pecuniary welfare of persons engaged in any particular business.

The word "welfare," therefore, should be qualified in such a way as to make it perfectly clear that it relates to the morale of the business from the standpoint of the public—a worthy object, or to some other matter quite disconnected from the pecuniary welfare of the business and those engaged therein.

The observations just made apply as well to sub-paragraph "(c)" of the purpose clause. Here, however, a very slight amplification of the phraseology would serve to make it clear, I think, that the purpose which the incorporators have in mind is the protection of the business from those who would by their acts degrade the business from the standpoint of the public. This, of course, would be entirely permissable.

No criticism whatever could be made as to the last sub-paragraph of the purpose clause.

In addition to the criticisms which I have already made respecting this purpose clause, it is open also to the objection that it does not clearly negative the idea of the formation of a combination in restraint of competition. In the making of the amendments suggested, the incorporators should be careful to avoid the use of language which might point to such a purpose on their part.

Very truly yours,

TIMOTHY S. HOGAN,

Attorney General.

ELECTION, PRIMARY—CANDIDATE MAY NOT SERVE ON BOARD OF DEPUTY STATE SUPERVISORS OF ELECTIONS.

By virtue of the provisions of Section 4967 which are declaratory of a well established principle of public policy, a candidate for nomination at a primary election cannot legally act as a Deputy State Supervisor at such election.

COLUMBUS, OHIO, March 25, 1912.

HON. CHARLES H. GRAVES, Secretary of State, Columbus, Ohio.

DEAR SIR:—Under date of March 23, 1912, you ask an opinion of this department upon the following:

> "I wish to have your opinion on the question as to whether or not a person may lawfully be a candidate for the nomination of an office at the primary election and at the same time serve as a deputy State Supervisor of Elections in the county wherein he is such candidate, and if when he was such candidate and did so serve he received the nomination for the office for which he was candidate, would such nomination be a lawful one?"

Section 5092, General Code, to which you refer, provides as follows:

"No person being a candidate for an office to be filled at an election shall serve as deputy state supervisor or clerk thereof, or as a judge or clerk of elections, in any precinct at such election. A person serving as deputy state supervisor or clerk thereof, judge or clerk of elections, contrary to this section shall be ineligible to any office to which he may be elected at such election."

Section 4967, General Code, referring to primary elections, provides:

"At all such elections the polls shall be opened between the hours of five-thirty o'clock forenoon and five-thirty o'clock afternoon. County boards of deputy state supervisors of elections shall have all the powers granted and perform all the duties imposed by the laws governing general elections, including furnishing materials and supplies, printing and distributing ballots, providing voting places, protecting electors, guarding the secrecy of the ballot, and making rules and regulations not inconsistent with law, for the guidance of election officiers. All statutory provosions relating to general elections, including the requirement that part of such election day shall be a legal holiday, shall, so far as applicable, apply to and govern primary elections.

The statute plainly provides that no candidate for office to be filled at any election can be a member of the board of deputy state supervisors of election. Any person acting as such member is ineligible to hold any office to which he may be elected at such election.

Section 4967, supra, makes the provisions for the governing of general elections applicable to primary elections. The board of deputy state supervisors has the same duties to perform in reference to a primary election that it has to perform at a general election. The same reasons that should prevent a candidate at a general election from acting as a deputy supervisor at such election, apply to primary elections and should prevent him from being both a candidate for nomination and a deputy supervisor.

It is my opinion that Section 4967, General Code, makes the provisions of Section 5092, General Code, applicable to primary elections and to candidates for nomination at such primary election. In any event it would be against public policy to permit a candidate for nomination at a primary election to canvass the returns; make an official count, and certify to his own nomination.

A candidate for nomination at a primary election cannot legally act as deputy state supervisor at such election. If a candidate so serves his nomination at such primary election would be illegal and void.

Respectfully,
TIMOTHY S. HOGAN.
Attorney General.

ARTICLES OF INCORPORATION—TOLEDO BENEVOLENT LOAN ASSOCIATION—CORPORATIONS FOR PROFIT—LOANS TO MEMBERS WITHOUT INTEREST.

A corporation formed to make loans to Members without interest, though the Members derive no direct profit, nevertheless provides a pecuniary benefit to its Members and is, therefore, a corporation for profit.

April 1, 1912.

HON. CHARLES H. GRAVES, Secretary of State, Columbus, Ohio.

DEAR SIR:—I beg to acknowledge receipt of your letter of March 21, submitting to me the proposed articles of Incorporation of THE TOLEDO BENEVOLENT LOAN ASSOCIATION, and requesting my opinion as to the legality of the same.

The articles of incorporation in question disclose that the proposed association is incorporated not for profit for the following purpose:

> "The purpose for which said corporation is formed is to provide and maintain a fund with which to make loans to members without interest and to do all things incident and appertaining thereto that may be lawfully done in carrying out such purpose."

These articles present a question somewhat different from any which you have heretofore referred to me. In this case the corporation itself evidently is not designed to engage in any profitable enterprise unless it should reap interest from an investment of its funds otherwise than in loans to its members. On the other hand, the members of the corporation are not to reap any direct profit, either pecuniary or otherwise. Nevertheless, the object of the corporation is in the full sense of the word a pecuniary one, and it is intended for the pecuniary benefit of its members. The old adage that "A penny saved is two pence earned" may be perhaps applied to this question.

While I have in a previous opinion advised you that the test of what constitutes a corporation for profit is the distribution of the increment of its funds among the members of the corporation by way of dividend or otherwise, I am disposed, in view of the question which has now arisen, to enlarge upon the former definition and to state that it should be broad enough to include all corporations the sole purpose of which is the direct or indirect pecuniary benefit of the members.

Measured by this definition, the purpose for which The Toledo Benevolent Loan Association is sought to be formed is one for profit and the articles are, therefore, not in proper form and should not be accepted by you.

Very truly yours,

TIMOTHY S. HOGAN.

Attorney General.

ARTICLES OF INCORPORATION—WILCOXTON WATER COMPANY—PURPOSE CLAUSE INDEFINITE.

April 12, 1912.

HON. CHARLES H. GRAVES, Secretary of State, Columbus, Ohio.

DEAR SIR:—I beg to acknowledge receipt of your letter of April 8th enclosing the proposed articles of incorporation of The Wilcoxton Water Company to be organized as a corporation not for profit for the following purpose:

> "acquiring, constructing, operating, maintaining and owning a water system; acquiring and holding real estate, rights of way, and all accessories and appliances, proper, necessary or incidental to carry out the purpose herein mentioned."

You request my opinion as to the legality of these articles of incorporation. In addition to the foregoing purpose clause the corporation is to have a capital stock divided into shares.

In accordance with previous opinion to you I beg to advise that you should not file or record these articles of incorporation, at least without full explanation of the real purpose of the incorporators. On the face of the articles the purpose of the company appears to be a business purpose in every sense of the word, and that being the case the corporation could not be organized except for profit.

Very truly yours,

TIMOTHY S. HOGAN.
Attorney General.

ARTICLES OF INCORPORATION—CLEVELAND FACE BRICK ASSOCIATION—CORPORATIONS NOT FOR PROFIT—SINGLE PURPOSE—PECUNIARY ADVANTAGE—COMBINATIONS IN RESTRAINT OF TRADE.

April 17, 1912.

HON. CHARLES H. GRAVES, Secretary of State, Columbus, Ohio.

DEAR SIR:—In accordance with the request in your favor of April 11th, I have considered the legality of the purpose clause of the Articles of Incorporation of The Cleveland Face Brick Association, a proposed corporation not for profit. Said purpose clause is as follows:

> "Said corporation is formed for the purpose of educating the public in the uses of face brick; acquiring and disseminating reliable information in relation to the building trades, among its members and others; to protect its members from unjust exactions and demands; to correct such abuses in the business as may be advisable; to promote uniformity in the customs and usages of the trade; to co-operate for mutual advantage with architects, builders, and other associations or persons for the purpose of increasing the use of face brick; for co-operation among its members and, by publicity and otherwise, advocating the use of face brick; and to promote the general welfare of the face brick business."

In my opinion the foregoing purpose, while variously stated, is in reality single, being the co-operation of persons engaged in the face brick business for the general uplift of that business; the purpose is legal; the idea of combination in restrain of trade, being, I think, sufficiently negated by the language used; the purpose is one which may lawfully be pursued by a corporation not for profit, as no direct pecuniary advantage to the members of the association seems to be contemplated. In this connection I beg to advise that in my opinion the reaping of such incidental and indirect pecuniary advantages as might accrue to the members of a corporation formed for the purpose of elevating and improving the conditions of a given business, trade or employment is not sufficient to characterize the corporation as one formed for profit.

Very truly yours,
TIMOTHY S. HOGAN.
Attorney General.

CORPORATIONS NOT FOR PROFIT—WILCOXTON WATER COMPANY PURPOSE OF ACCEPTING RIGHTS TO SPRING WATER FLOW TO SUPPLY PUBLIC AT COST—CHARITABLE TRUST.

A corporation, found solely for the purpose of carrying out a charitable trust, whose purpose clause expresses the object of accepting a donated right to certain spring water flows for the purpose of supplying water therefrom for public purposes at a charge not to exceed actual expenses, is a corporation not for profit. The Articles of The Wilcoxton Water Company may therefore, be filed by the Secretary of State.

April 22, 1912.

HON. CHAS. H. GRAVES, Secretary of State, Columbus, Ohio.

DEAR SIR:—I beg to acknowledge receipt of your letter of April 18th, enclosing redrafted articles of incorporation of The Wilcoxton Water Company, a proposed corporation not for profit, the purpose clause of which is as follows:

"Third. The purpose for which said corporation is formed is to meet the conditions of a gift of Celestia E. Wilcox of Twinsburg Township, Summit County, Ohio, under date of October 4th, 1911, by the terms whereof it is provided that, upon the formation of a corporation with a subscribed capital of not less than $2,000.00, having for its purpose the supplying of water to the people in and about the center of said township, said Celestia E. Wilcox agrees to grant and convey to such corporation a perpetual right in and to the water flowing from a large spring issuing from certain of her lands in said township situate, upon the conditions following to-wit:

"1. Sufficient water shall be left flowing from said spring to meet all requirements for watering farm animals in pasture on said 70 acres of land.

"2. Water shall be furnished to the dwelling houses now on said 70 acre tract and on the 10 acre tract now owned by me on the west side of the highway opposite said 70 acre tract and the watering trough in front thereof, in sufficient quantities for all domestic purposes, but not less than is now flowing at said places.

"3. The water taken from said spring shall be delivered and kept continually available for use at the Public Square and School House lot at said Twinsburg Center.

"4. As a condition precedent to the making of said grant and conveyance, the Board of Trustees and the Board of Education of said Township shall, respectively, by resolution, agree to provide and furnish within one year from the date of said grant and conveyance, suitable drinking founts at said locations.

"5. So much of the water as is not required for the purposes aforesaid may be used by the people living in and about said Center, upon such terms and conditions and subject to such rules, regulations and restrictions as may be fixed and imposed by said Water Company.

"6. Said grant and conveyance shall carry with it the right to said Water Company at any time to enter upon so much of said 70 acre tract as may be necessary to properly improve, safeguard and protect said spring, and to build and construct suitable reservoirs and housings, to lay and maintain water pipe lines from said spring to the said highway and to do all things incident thereto—provided that in the laying of such pipe lines, the same shall be placed at such depth as will not interfere with cultivation of the land.

"7. Said grant and conveyance shall also contain a provision that upon the incorporation of the territory in and about said center into a village, such village shall at any time have the right to acquire, take over and enjoy all the rights in said spring passing under said grant and all property of said Water Company, upon paying to such Water Company a sum equal to the value of all the property and improvements then owned by said Water Company, exclusive of the rights in said spring, and an agreement on the part of said village to furnish water to all persons then receiving water from said Water Company at the same rentals as will be charged by such village generally for like services.

"And for the purpose of doing only such things as are necessary or incidental to meet and carry out the purposes of said gift, with power to make regulations for the government of said corporation, and to make and enforce terms, rules and conditions for the use of said water,—said terms, rules and conditions to be such as to enable said corporation to be self-sustaining, to make repayment to its stockholders of its paid up capital and the payment of any indebtedness incurred by it,—but the utilities of said corporation shall not be operated for profit, nor shall any officer, director or stockholder at any time receive any compensation or profit from said corporation, or from the operation of said utilities."

As may be inferred from some of the foregoing provisions, the corporation is to have a capital stock, as further evidenced by the following clause of the proposed articles:

"The capital stock of said corporation shall be Five Thousand Dollars ($5,000.00), divided into fifty (50) shares of One Hundred Dollars ($100.00) each."

You request my opinion as to your duty to file and record these proposed articles.

It appears from the recitals of the purpose clause, as above quoted, that the sole purpose of the formation of this corporation is to carry into effect a gift, in the nature of a public grant or easement, in and to the water flowing from a certain spring on private property. Such water is to be supplied by the proposed corporation, first, to occupants of certain designated dwelling houses without charge; second, to the public square and school house lot at a certain community center; and third, to the people living in and about the center. The right to charge for the furnishing of water is limited to the individuals of this last named class. It is also expressly stipulated that the company shall make no greater charge than may be sufficient to reimburse its capital account and make it self-sustaining; and it may be at least broadly inferred from the articles that the purpose of the incorporators is simply to provide an organization for the development of the water rights for the benefit of the community until such time as the community may become incorporated as a village, at which time the property of the company is to be sold to the village and the company wound up.

These articles present a question of some technical difficulty. It is apparent that the incorporators do not desire to engage generally in the business of a water works company; the numerous restrictions upon the activities of the company are such as clearly to negative such an idea. Furthermore, the manifest object of the incorporators is to carry into effect a gift which is in no sense a private one, but rather a public one. In a broad sense at least, therefore, if not indeed in an exact sense, this corporation is formed for the purpose of carrying into effect a charitable trust; that being the case the mere fact that, in order to provide for the expense of its operation, it is authorized to promulgate rules and, presumably, to make and collect charges for services rendered, and the mere fact also that it has a capital stock and reserves the right to reimburse those who have invested in it for their outlay therein, are both alike immaterial. The broad and controlling purpose of the incorporators determines the propriety of its formation as a corporation not for profit.

Because, then, the corporation is to be formed for the purpose of carrying into effect a charitable trust, and acting as the trustee thereof, I am of the opinion that it may be regarded as a corporation not for profit, and that the articles tendered you may be accepted and filed by you.

Very truly yours,

TIMOTHY S. HOGAN.

Attorney General.

ELECTION ON BOND ISSUE FOR PARK IMPROVEMENTS—FAILURE TO PUBLISH NOTICE—DUTY OF BOARD OF DEPUTY STATE SUPERVISORS OF ELECTIONS.

When notice of election on bond issue for park improveemnts has not been made, the question of the effect of the omission is one with which the Board of Elections has no concern and said board cannot refuse to proceed with the election, after it has received the certificate of the resolution from the council.

May 18, 1912.

HON. C. H. GRAVES, Secretary of State, Columbus, Ohio.

DEAR SIR:—At your request I have considered a question submitted by the Board of Deputy State Supervisors of Elections of Springfield, Ohio, under date of May 15, 1912, wherein it is stated:

> "The city of Springfield is to vote on Tuesday next, on the issuing of bonds for park improvements. The resolution passed by council covering the same was duly certified to this board, who, in turn, complied with the requirements of law, advertised for bids on ballots, etc., and have made all arrangements to have the question submitted at the primary election to be held Tuesday, May 21, 1912. It now transpires that the provision relating to the publishing of a notice of same intention for four consecutive weeks, in two newspapers, has not been complied with. What action shall this board (Board of Elections) take; shall they submit or refuse to submit the question to a vote under the aforesaid circumstances?"

Without quoting the various statutes that might bear upon the subject, suffice it to say in all of the laws in reference to bond issues, submitted to a vote of the people, the usual provision of the particular law requires that the body authorized to make the bond issue shall cause a resolution to be duly ceritfied to the Board of Deputy State Supervisors of Elections, and thereupon it becomes the duty of the said board to prepare the necessary supplies for the election on said bond issue. This certificate is the authority to the Board of Elections for its action, and no duty devolves upon the board to investigate and determine whether or not all of the necessary regular steps leading up to the election have been complied with.

I am of the opinion, therefore, that a board of elections, under the state of facts set forth above, has no power to refuse to submit the question to a vote, but that it is its duty to have prepared the necessary ballots and other supplies for the conduct of the election. The question of whether or not some prior necessary step has been taken is one with which the election board has no concern.

Very truly yours,

TIMOTHY S. HOGAN
Attorney General.

CORPORATIONS—ARTICLES OF INCORPORATION OF LIBBY, McNEILL AND LIBBY, A FOREIGN CORPORATION—WAIVERS OF PROVISIONS CONTRARY TO OHIO LAW.

A foreign corporation licensed to perform certain acts which are not permissible in Ohio, must waive such privileges before it will be permitted to do business in Ohio.

Without such waiver, therefore, Articles of Incorporation of a foreign corporation which authorize ownership of stock in other companies, and severalty of purpose contrary to the laws of Ohio, may not be filed until these provisions are waived.

May 25, 1912.

HON. CHAS. H. GRAVES, Secretary of State, Columbus, Ohio.

DEAR SIR:—I beg to acknowledge receipt of your letter of May 6th, which is as follows:

> "I am in receipt of a sworn copy of the articles of incorporation of Libby, McNeill & Libby, a foreign corporation organized and existing under the laws of the state of West Virginia, together with the statement of said corporation under Section 179 et seq G. C. Two paragraphs of the purpose clause of said corporation are as follows:

"'Par. 6. To purchase or otherwise acquire, hold, sell, assign, transfer, mortgage, pledge or otherwise dispose of shares of the capital stock, bonds, debentures or other evidences of indebtedness of any other corporation or corporations and while owning the same to exercise all the rights and privileges of ownership, including the right to vote thereon.

"'Par. 7. To carry on any other business whatsoever which the corporation may deem proper or convenient to be carried on in connection with any of the foregoing purposes, or calculated directly or indirectly, to promote the interests of the corporation or to enhance the value of its property; and to acquire, own, lease, operate and dispose of any and all property, real and personal, necessary or convenient for the furtherance thereof.'

"Is it lawful for me as Secretary of State to file such sworn copy of charter and such statement and issue the certificate authorized by Section 178 et seq. G. C.?"

Section 178, General Code, provides in part as follows:

"Before a foreign corporation for profit transacts business in this state, it shall procure from the secretary of state a certificate that it has complied with the requirements of law to authorize it to do business in this state, and that the business of such corporation to be transacted in this state, is such as may be lawfully carried on by a corporation, organized under the laws of this state for such or similar business, or if more than one kind of business, by two or more corporations so incorporated for such kinds of business exclusively."

Section 179 provides as follows:

"Before granting such certificate, the secretary of state shall require such foreign corporation to file in his office a sworn copy of its charter or certificate of incorporation, and a statement under its corporate seal setting forth the following: The amount of capital stock of the corporation, the business in which it is engaged or in which it proposes to engage within this state; the proposed location of its principal place of business within this state; and the name of a person designated as provided by law, upon whom process against the corporation may be served within this state. The person so designated must have an office or place of business at the proposed location of the principal place of business of the corporation."

I am of the opinion that under Section 178 of the General Code a foreign corporation applying for certificate of admission may waive or relinquish any corporate franchise which it may possess under the laws of its parent state, which could not lawfully be exercised in Ohio. That is to say, a corporation having, under its charter, powers not recognized as lawful by the laws of Ohio, may state that it does not propose to exercise such powers in this state and may be licensed to exercise its remaining powers only.

In my opinion the corporation in question may not lawfully be licensed to transact business in Ohio without waiving, in the manner already suggested, its power to exercise full ownership of the stock of other corporations. You are aware of the well settled rule in this jurisdiction, to the effect that a corporation may not be organized for the principal purpose of owning the stock of other corporations and may not own such stock in the exercise of the powers incidental to another lawful purpose, excepting to the extent that it may acquire and hold the stock of other kindred but not competing corporations. I have already discussed the decisions and statutes establishing these principles, in other opinions addressed to your department.

Paragraph 7 of the articles of incorporation above quoted should either be waived by the applicant company or the statement should be made that no business will be carried on in Ohio and no right of ownership exercised thereunder, inconsistent with the laws of Ohio.

Section 178 of the General Code, as above quoted, authorizes foreign corporations to be admitted to do any business which might lawfully be done by more than one corporation organized under laws of Ohio. The effect of this provision is to reverse, as to foreign corporations, the rule of singleness of purpose which is imposed upon domestic corporations under Section 8636, General Code, as construed in State ex rel vs. Taylor, 55 O. S. 67. The mere fact, therefore, that paragraph 7 is general and authorizes the doing of any and all kinds of business deemed proper and convenient in connection with its other purposes, by its managers, would not render the whole of paragraph 7 objectionable if the same were qualified as above stated; if no such qualifying statement were made in the application, however, the same should be refused by you.

Very truly yours,

TIMOTHY S. HOGAN.

Attorney General.

FOREIGN CORPORATION—ARTICLES OF INCORPORATION OF KATARNO COMPANY—OWNERSHIP OF STOCK OF OTHER COMPANIES —WAIVER.

A foreign corporation whose articles of incorporation include the right to own stock in other kindred and non-competing companies, cannot do business in Ohio without a waiver of this provision.

May 25, 1912.

HON. CHARLES H. GRAVES, Secretary of State, Columbus, Ohio.

DEAR SIR:—Answering your letter of May 13th, submitting the application of the Katarno Company, a corporation of the State of New York, for a license to do business in Ohio, and calling my attention to certain paragraphs of the Articles of Incorporation of said company, found on pages two and three thereof, I beg to state that in my opinion you should not issue the certificate for which supplication is made unless the corporation disclaims and waives the exercise of the powers therein referred to, in the State of Ohio. Said paragraphs are as follows:

> "To acquire by subscription, purchase or otherwise, hold, deal in and with, lease, grant, exchange, sell, pledge, mortgage, hypothecate or otherwise dispose of or turn to account the property, good will, stock, bonds or other obligations or evidences of indebtedness of any other corporation or association, domestic or foreign, and to issue in exchange therefor the property, good will, stock, bonds or other obligations or evidences of indebtedness of this corporation.

"To aid in any manner any corporation or association of which any stock, bonds, securities, or other evidence of indebtedness are held by the corporation; and to do any acts or things designed to protect, preserve, improve or enhance the value of any such stock, bonds, securities or other evidences of indebtedness."

Under the settled common law of Ohio the power of one corporation to acquire and own, on its own behalf, the shares of stock of other corporations is limited to those of kindred but not competing companies. I need not cite to you the decisions of our supreme court and the statutory provisions which establish this well understood rule. The powers enumerated in the above quoted paragraph are not objectionable, however, excepting in so far as they relate to the acquisition and control of the stock of other corporations.

I herewith return papers submitted to me.

Very truly yours,

TIMOTHY S. HOGAN.

Attorney General.

LICENSE OF LOAN BUSINESS—LOANING ON SALARIES AND LOANING ON CHATTELS ARE DISTINCT BUSINESSES.

The business of loaning on salaries, and of loaning on chattels, are treated disjunctively in the relative statutes and it is evidently the intent that a separate license be required for each business.

May 31, 1912.

HON. CHARLES H. GRAVES, Secretary of State, Columbus, Ohio.

DEAR SIR:—I beg to acknowledge the receipt of your letter of May 8th, requesting my opinion upon the following question:

"May the Secretary of State issue a single license authorizing an applicant to engage in the 'business of making loans upon chattels or personal property' and 'of purchasing or making loans upon salaries or wage earnings,' or if a person wishing to engage in both of such kinds of business would it be necessary for him to procure two separate licenses?"

designated as Sections 6346-1 and 6346-7, inclusive:

I quote the following sections of the Act of June 7, 1911, 102 O. L. 469, therein

"Section 6346-1. No person, firm or corporation except banks and building and loan associations shall engage or continue in the business of making loans upon chattels or personal property of any kind whatsoever or of purchasing or making loans upon salaries or wage earnings without first having obtained a license so to do from the secretary of state. * * * *

Section 6346-2. Application for license to conduct such business must be made in writing to the secretary of state and shall contain the full names and addresses of applicants, if natural person, and in case of firms or incorporated companies, the full names and addresses of the officers and directors thereof and under law or laws incorporated, the kind of business which is to be conducted, whether chattel mortgage or salary loan; the place where such business is to be conducted and such other information as the secretary of state may require. The fee to be charged for said license shall be ten dollars per annum and such amount must accompany the application. Each license granted shall date from the first of the month in which it is issued and shall be granted for the period of one year, subject to revocation, as provided in this act, and such license shall be kept conspicuously displayed in the place of business of the license."

I find nothing in the remaining sections of the act in any way negativing the inference which I have drawn from the above quoted provisions.

In my opinion the legislative intention embodied in the act from which quotation has been made is that separate licenses shall be issued for the business of making chattel loans, and for that of making salary or wage loans. The language relating to the two classes of business is phrased disjuntively wherever it is used in the act, and it clearly appears from Section 2, above quoted, that the license in question covers only one kind of business; otherwise, the words "or both" would have been inserted therein after the phrase "the kind of business which is to be conducted whether chattel mortgage or salary loan."

Very truly yours,

TIMOTHY S. HOGAN.

Attorney General.

CORPORATION WHOSE ARTICLES OR CERTIFICATE OF AUTHORITY HAVE BEEN CANCELLED, STILL "EXISTS" FOR TWO YEARS—NEW CORPORATION CANNOT HAVE SIMILAR NAME.

Under Section 5511, General Code, a corporation whose articles of incorporation or certificate of authority have been cancelled by the Secretary of State for non-payment of fees or failure to report, still has two years within which it may be reinstated and pending such time, such corporation must be deemed to be existing within the intendment of Section 8628, General Code, prohibiting the filing of Articles of Incorporation whose name is similar to that of an existing corporation.

HON. CHARLES H. GRAVES, Secretary of State, Columbus, Ohio.

DEAR SIR:—I beg to acknowledge receipt of your letter of May 6th, requesting my opinion upon the following question:

"In view of the provisions of Section 5511, General Code, found on page 252, Volume 102, Ohio Laws, should the secretary of state file articles of incorporation wherein the name of the proposed corporation is that of one of the corporations whose articles of incrporation or certificate of authority has been cancelled by the secretary of state, according to the provisions of said Section 5509, General Code, before the expiration of two years after such cancellation?"

The following provisions of the General Code are involved in your query:

"Section 8628. The secretary of state shall not file or record any articles of incorporation wherein the corporate name is likely to mislead the public as to the nature or purpose of the business its charter authorizes, nor if such name is that of an existing corporation, or so similar thereto as to be likely to mislead the public, unless the written consent of the existing corporation, signed by its president and secretary, be filed with such articles.

Section 5509, being Section 120 in the Act of June 2, 1911, 102 O. L. 251, provides:

"corporation * * * * * * fails or neglects to make any such report or return or to pay any such tax or fee for ninety days after the time prescribed in this act for making such report or return or for paying such tax or fee, the commission shall certify such fact to the secretary. The secretary of state shall thereupon cancel the articles of incorporation of any such corporation which is organized under the laws of this state * * * * or cancel the certificate of authority of any such foreign corporation to do business in this state * * * *. Thereupon all the powers, privileges and franchises conferred upon such corporations, by such articles of incorporation or by such certificate of authority shall cease and determine. The secretary of state shall immediately notify such domestic or foreign corporation of the action taken by him."

Section 5511, being Section 122 of the same act, provides:

"Any corporation whose articles of incorporation or certificate of authority * * * has been cancelled by the secretary of state * * * upon the filing within two years after such cancellation, with the secretary of state, of a certificate from the commission that it has complied with all the requirements of this act and paid all taxes, fees or penalties due from it, and upon the payment to the secretary of state of an additional penalty of one hundred dollars, shall be entitled again to exercise its rights, privileges and fanchises in this state, and the secretary of state shall cancel the entry made by him under the provisions of section one hundred and twenty of this act, and shall issue his certificate entitling such corporation to exercise its rights, privileges and franchises."

There are no other statutes relating to the subject matter in question. There is no provision requiring the modification of any of the provisions of the articles of incorporation of a company whose corporate authority has been revoked, upon the requalification of such corporation, under Section 5511 supra. That is to say, it is not provided that if within the two years another corporation acquires the use of the name of the moribund corporation, the latter, upon its resurrection, so to speak, must amend its articles of incorporation so as to change its name.

The act of 1911, then, lacks definite provisions which might shed light upon the question. Section 8628, naturally enough, is equally silent, that section having been enacted at a time when the proceeding outlined in Section 5509 and 5511 was unknown.

It is obvious, therefore, that the answer to your question must be furnished by implication. Section 8628 preserves the right of "an existing corporation" to its corporate name. Primarily, of course, a corporation does not "exist" when it has no right to exercise any corporate privileges, franchises and powers. This is the situation apparently with respect to a corporation whose articles of incorporation have been cancelled under Section 5509, which said section expressly provides that "thereupon the powers, privileges and franchises conferred upon such corporation * * * shall cease and determine."

I am of the opinion, however, that the statutory provision last above quoted is not strictly accurate. It is not true that all the privileges conferred upon a corporation by its articles of incorporation are taken away when they are cancelled under Section 5509; there still remains the privilege of recreating the corporation under Section 5511. This is a corporate privilege to be exercised by the corporation as such, and not by individuals, as is clear from an examination of Section 5511. Manifestly, then, if this privilege exists, and if it is to be exercised by the corporation as such, the corporation must continue to exist; if this be not the case the words of Section 5511 have no meaning; that section expressly provides that the corporation may file the certificate and receive from the secretary of state his certificate entitling it to exercise its rights, privileges and franchises.

From all the foregoing, then, I think it is apparent that a corporation whose articles of incorporation have been cancelled under Section 5509 by the secretary of state continues in existence, but, so to speak, in a state of suspended animation.

The only remaining question is as to whether the existence of the corporation, under these circumstances, is such an existence as is contemplated in Section 8628. I am of the opinion that it is. The last named section is primarily intended for the protection of the public, although the provision respecting the securing of the consent of the officers of the existing corporation to the use of its name by a proposed corporation shows that the purpose of the section embraces also the protection of the rights of the existing corporation. It is from the standpoint of the public interest, therefore, that I think the solution of this question ought to be worked out.

I have already adverted to the fact that there is no method provided for a compulsory change of name on the part of a reviving corporation in case its name has been assumed by another corporation, formed within the two year period referred to in Section 5511. I do not think that such a provision can be implied; the statute being silent, I am of the opinion that the secretary of state could not require a dormant corporation, upon restoration to its full privileges, to select another name for that reason. That being the case, if after the cancellation of its articles by the secretary of state, under Section 5509, the name of an existing corporation is chosen by the promoters of a new corporation, and articles of incorporation are issued to them by the secretary of state, authorizing the use of such name, and if, further, upon the filing of the certificate prescribed by Section 5511 by the original corporation, and the payment of the penalty therein provided for, it would be the duty of the secretary of state to issue a certificate entitling the original corporation to the exercise of all its rights, privileges and franchises, including the right to the name it formerly had, then, and in that event, the very evil aimed at by Section 8628 would come into existence. There would then be two corporations having the same name, and the public injury which might, and doubtless would, result would be just as great as in the case of the formation of a new corporation having the name of a corporation existing in the full sense of the word.

For the reasons above set forth, then, I am of the opinion that until the two years, referred to in Section 5511, General Code, have expired, the corporation whose articles of incorporation have been cancelled by the secretary of state, under Section 5509, continues to be an "existing corporation" within the meaning of Section 8628, General Code, and that the secretary of state is without power to file or record the articles of incorporation of another corporation having the same name.

Very truly yours,
TIMOTHY S. HOGAN.
Attorney General.

CORPORATIONS ORGANIZED FOR ENTERTAINMENT, RECREATION AND SOCIAL BETTERMENT OF ITS MEMBERS—ARTICLES OF INCORPORATION—"MUTUAL CORPORATIONS"—"BENEVOLENT AND CHARTIABLE PURPOSES."

A corporation organized for the "entertainment, recreation and social betterment of its members and all others" is not a corporation organized strictly for benevolent and chartitable purposes, within the meaning of paragraph 4, Section 176, General Code, providing for a fee of $25 for mutual corporations so organized.

Inasmuch as Insurance companies cannot constitute "benevolent and charitable enterprises" as the term is generally used in the statutes, it is therefore not clear that all mutual corporations must be Insurance corporations.

A corporation, however, formed for the purpose of the entertainment, recreation, and social betterment of its members alone, is for no better reason, a mutual corporation than is a corporation formed for the financial betterment of its members alone wherein the members do not bear the losses. Such a corporation, therefore, must be deemed "not organized for profit and not mutual in its character" and the fee chargeable therefore, is $2.00 in accordance with paragraph 5, Section 176, General Code.

HON. CHARLES H. GRAVES, Secretary of State, Columbus, Ohio.

DEAR SIR:—I beg to acknowledge receipt of your letter of May 8th in which you request my opinion upon the following questions:

> "The purpose clause of the Articles of Incorporation of a corporation not for profit is as follows:
> * * *"Said corporation is formed for the purpose of 'the entertain ment, recreation and social betterment of its members and all others, in providing club rooms, camping locations, and all the necessary accoutrements and furnishings of the same, which would tend to the entertainment, amusement, recreation and social betterments of its said members and others.'
> "I would be pleased to have your opinion as to what the lawful fee is for filing Articles of Incorporation with the purpose clause so written."

Paragraph 4 of Section 176 of the General Code provides that the fee for filing Articles of Incorporation of "a mutual corporation not organized strictly for benevolent or charitable purposes" shall be $25.00.

The purpose clause which you quote to me shows that the corporation is organized partly for benevolent and charitable purposes. It is not, however, organized strictly for such purposes. So long as its capital and funds are devoted in part to the entertainment, recreation and social betterment of members, it is not organized "strictly" for benevolent or charitable purposes.

Paragraph 5 of the same section above quoted provides that the fee for filing the articles of incorporation of "corporations not organized for profit, and not mutual in their character" shall be $2.00. The question which arises, then, is as to whether this corporation, measured by its purpose clause, as above quoted, is "a mutual corporation."

Although the words and phrases above referred to have been in the statute ever since its original enactment, and although, also, they must have been given a practical interpretation by your department from time to time, I confess that the distinctions which they imply seem to me to be somewhat difficult to grasp from the purely legal standpoint.

Permit me, in this connection, to point out certain inferences which naturally arise from the language employed in the statute. Paragraph 4 of Section 176 is in full as follows:

> "4. For filing articles of incorporation of a mutual life insurance corporation having no capital stock, or of other mutual corporations not organized strictly for benevolent or charitable purposes and having no capital stock, twenty-five dollors, except as hereinafter provided."

From this peculiar language but two conclusions logically follow: 1. Not all mutual corporations are life insurance corporations. 2. Some mutual corporations are corporations organized solely for benevolent or charitable purposes.

In the same connection I beg leave to point out an inference which does not arise from this language: Some mutual corporations are not insurance corporations. That is to say, at first blush it would appear from the language employed in paragraph 4 that the general assembly had in mind the existence of mutual corporations other than insurance corporations. Such is not necessarily the case. It is inferable that the legislature had in mind other mutual companies other than mutual life insurance companies, but not that the reference is to other mutual companies than any kind of insurance companies.

A contrary inference, however, arises from the second primary inference above referred to. That is to say, if some mutual companies are companies organized strictly for benevolent or charitable purposes, then some mutual corporations are not insurance corporations, unless we assume that the legislature did not use the words "benevolent and charitable" in the exact sense in which they are used in taxation statutes, for example. That is to say, the doing of an insurance business is not a benevolent or charitable enterprise in the strict sense of the words. Of course, there is a large class of societies, such as fraternal beneficiary societies, and the insurance branches of fraternal orders, the purposes of which are commonly referred to as benevolent and charitable. Most of these societies are conducted upon what is technically known in insurance law as "the mutual plan" yet, the "benevolent" and the "charitable" features which such societies promote are confined to a field so restricted as not to come within the definition of the word "charity" as formulated in the principles of equity, or in the laws relating to exemption from taxation.

I fear that further analysis of these statutes but tends to confusion. Therefore I do not dwell upon the significance of the phrase "except as hereinafter provided" as used in paragraph 4, but turn at once to a simple analysis of paragraph 5 of Section 176, which, in full, is as follows:

"For filing articles of incorporation formed for religious, benevolent or literary purposes; or of corporations not organized for profit and not mutual in their character, or of religious or secret societies: or societies or associations composed exclusively of any class of mechanics, express, telegraph, railroad or other employes, and formed exclusively for the mutual protection and relief of members thereof and their families, two dollars."

From this paragraph it logically follows that there are corporations not for profit which are not mutual in their character, other than those formed for religious, benevolent or literary purposes, or religious or secret societies, or mutual aid societies composed of employes of certain establishments. In view of the foregoing anaylsis, the problem of the practical application of the two paragraphs of Section 176, above quoted, consists of an effort to identify and point out the characteristics of two classes which are evidently different and distinct in the minds of the legislature, namely:

1. Mutual corporations other than life insurance corporations, not organized strictly for benevolent and charitable purposes, and having no capital stock.

2. Corporations not for profit and not mutual in their character, other than those otherwise referred to in paragraph 5, supra.

I have searched diligently in the lexicons and in the law books for a definition of the term "mutual corporations." I have found no such definition, except in the Law of Insurance. The ordinary meaning of the term "mutual" imports reciprocal acts, conduct or promises as among two or more persons. Thus, in the law of contracts, those promises or obligations are "mutual" which, being made as between two parties, constitute each a consideration for the other. In this sense every corporation, whether having a capital stock or not, is "mutual." The consideration upon which one subscribes for the capital stock of a business corporation is the like subscription made by others to the same enterprise. It will not do, therefore, to apply this broad definition to the word "mutual' as used in connection with the word "corporation" in the section above quoted.

A secondary meaning given by lexicographers to the word "mutual" and by them described as an improper use of the term, is defined as follows:

"Possessed, experienced or done by two or more persons or things at the same time; common; joint; as, mutual happiness; a mutual effort. (Webster's International Dictionary.)"

This definition cannot be accepted here. In the first place I am unable to find that it has ever been accepted in law. In the second place it is a term which like the same word in the other sense just discussed, might be indiscriminately applied to all corporations.

I think it is perfectly apparent that the word "mutual" as used in these statutes, refers to a class of corporation less extensive than the whole. Therefore it will not do to say that the legislature had in mind any corporation in which the capital of the different members or stockholders is to be contributed to the end that all may share in the benefit derived from its use, for that is characteristic of all corporations. Therefore, if a corporation be formed for the purpose of the entertainment, recreation and social betterment of its members alone, it does not follow that it is for that reason a mutual corporation, anymore than a business corporation, formed for the purpose of the financial betterment of its stockholders would be a mutual corporation.

The legislature must be presumed to have used the phrase under discussion in some accurate and definable sense. It will not be supposed that the General Assembly used terms losely, or employed words in a fee section like Section 176, not capable of definition from examination of other sections enacted by it. I believe, therefore, that, in search of a definition for the phrase "mutual corporation" we ought to turn first to other sections of the General Code.

Section 8666 of the General Code provides as follows:

> "The trustees of a corporation created for a purpose other than profit, shall be personally liable for all debts of the corporation by them contracted."

This section alone is conclusive of the question which you ask. An ordinary corporation not for profit lacks one essential element of mutuality. Its members are not mutually liable for its debts. These, by statute, are cast upon its trustees, although the benefits which the corporation aims to secure are to be shared in common by all the members, whether they are trustees or not, yet the detriment which may ensue is not to be so shared. Therefore, an ordinary corporation not for profit is not a corporation "mutual" in character.

Section 9593 of the General Code provides as follows:

> "Any number of persons of lawful age, not less than ten in number, residents of this state, or an adjoining state and owing insurable property in this state, may associate themselves together for the purpose of insuring each other against loss by fire and lightning, cyclones, tornadoes or wind storms, hail storms and explosions from gas, on property in this state, and also assess upon and collect from each other such sums of money, from time to time, as are necessary to pay losses which occur by fire and lightning, cyclones, tornadoes, wind storms, hail storms and explosions from gas to any member of such association. The assessment and collection of such sums of money shall be regulated by the constitution and by-laws of the association."

Here is a corporation other than a mutual life insurance corporation, which is strictly "mutual in character." Not only are the profits which may be reaped, and the benefits arising under the contracts entered into by the corporation, to be apportioned among the members, but the losses and the expenses are to be likewise so apportioned. The mutuality is complete.

Section 9608 of the General Code provides as follows:

> "Any number of persons of lawful age, residents of this state, not less than five, may associate themselves together for the purpose of becoming a body corporate, and insure themselves, and any person becoming a member of such corporation, in accordance with the rules and regulations thereof, against loss from death of domestic animals, and assess upon and collect from each other, such sums of money, from time to time, as are necessary to pay losses which occur from the death of such animals to any member of the corporation, and incidental expenses. The assessments and collections of such sums of money shall be regulated by the constitution and by-laws of the corporation."

This section affords another perfect example of a "mutual corporation" other than a life insurance corporation.

I have pointed out what seems to me sufficient reasons for denying that any corporation, the expenses of operating which are not legally chargeable against the members, is a corporation "mutual in character" within the meaning of paragraphs 4 and 5 above quoted. I have also pointed out at least two instances or illustrations of corporations which are mutual in character and are not otherwise provided for in paragraphs 4 and 5. In view of the difficulty of the question, I hesitate to embark upon the formulation of the exact definition of these mooted terms. I am clearly of the opinion, however, that the corporation the purpose clause of which you quote in your letter is not a corporation "mutual in character," within the meaning of paragraphs 4 and 5 of Section 176, General Code, and that the element of mutuality is not lacking because of the insertion of the words "and all others" and "others," but even with these words eliminated, the corporation would not be a "mutual corporation."

I am, therefore, of the opinion that the fee for filing the Articles of Incorporation of a corporation having a purpose clause like that which you submit, and of all other simple corporations not for profit, the laws relating to which do not impose upon the members thereof mutual obligations, is $2.00, that prescribed by paragraph 5 of Section 176.

Very truly yours,
TIMOTHY S. HOGAN,
Attorney General.

CORPORATIONS—USE OF MISLEADING NAME—DETECTIVE ORGANIZATIONS AS "POLICE" AND "SPECIAL POLICE"—DISCRETION OF SECRETARY OF STATE.

Whether or not the use of the word "police" or "special police," in the name of corporation organized for detective work, under Sections 10199 and 10200, General Code would be likely to mislead the public in contravention to Section 8628, General Code, is a question which rests with the discretion of the Secretary of State.

HON. CHARLES H. GRAVES, Secretary of State, Columbus, Ohio.

DEAR SIR:—I beg to acknowledge receipt of your communication of May 2d, in which you submit the following question for my opinion:

> "This department is frequently in receipt of proposed articles of incorporation containing a name in which the words 'Police' and 'Special Police' are used, the purpose of which is to engage in private and special police, etc.
> "In view of the fact that the word 'Police' might imply some connection with or power under the civil authorities, and in view of the further fact that Sections 10199 and 10200 of the General Code authorize the organization of corporate bodies for the detection and conviction of criminals, is it proper for the secretary of state to file and record articles of incorporation of the kind above mentioned, but which are not drawn under the authority of said Sections 10199 and 10200 of the General Code?"

It will not be necessary to quote the two sections of the General Code to which you refer. Suffice it to say that the first section relates to the organization of a corporation for the mutual protection of the property of its members from the depredations of horse thieves and other criminals; while the other section relates to the incorporation of a company for the purpose generally of apprehending and convicting persons accused of felonies or misdeameanors. The later section is the first of a series of sections which disclose that the purpose of the authority granted in it is to enable a group of persons to associate themselves together for the purpose of protecting each other against criminals, a purpose somewhat similar to that authorized in Section 10199 of the General Code.

Neither of these acts authorizes the incorporation of a business company to be conducted for the purpose of pecuniary profit; both authorize enterprises mutual in their character,—the main idea being that of community protection.

It would not be misleading, therefore, in my judgment, (although for reasons which I shall hereafter state, I do not so hold as a matter of law) for a corporation, such as mentioned by you, to use the word "Police" as a part of its name.

A more serious question arises as to the propriety of the use of the word "Police" or the phrase "Special Police," in view of the fact that in the proper sense these terms are applied only to those appointed by public authority; that is to members of the executive branch of the government or its political subdivisions. It would seem that by reason of the use of the word "Police" as a part of the name of a corporation, unsuspecting parties might be deceived into the belief that operatives employed by the corporation really had powers and privileges as public officers.

No statute expressly prohibits the use of the word or phrase in question in the name of a corporation formed for the lawful purpose of engaging in the watchman or detective business. The only provision of law, then, which in any way bears on the question is Section 8628 of the General Code, which provides as follows:

> "The secretary of state shall not file or record any articles of incorporation wherein the corporate name is likely to mislead the public as to the nature or purpose of the business it charter authorizes, * * * ."

As I have heretofore advised you, it is for the secretary of state in the exercise of the executive discretion given him, to reasonably and not arbitrarily determine what corporate names are likely to mislead the public as to the nature or purpose of a business. If the secretary is of the opinion, upon careful consideration, that the public is likely to be mislead by the use of the word "Police" as a part of the corporate name of a company organized for any lawful purpose into the belief that the company sustains some official relations to the civil authorities, or that it is created under one of the sections of the General Code cited by you, then it is his duty to refuse to file or record the articles of incorporation. Further than this I cannot, as a matter of law, advise you.

Very truly yours,

TIMOTHY S. HOGAN,

Attorney General.

INSURANCE CORPORATIONS—ORGANIZATION UNDER SPECIAL STATUTES—PURPOSES OF PAYMENT OF FUNERAL EXPENSES AND OF SICK BENEFITS—ARTICLES OF INCORPORATION OF ERSTER RADANTZ.

Inasmuch as there are special statutory provisions governing the organization of corporations for the specific purposes of paying the funeral expenses of its members and of paying benefits to sick and deceased members, a corporation may not be organized for these purposes, under the general laws, within the meaning of Section 8623, General Code.

June 23, 1912.

HON. CHARLES H. GRAVES, Secretary of State, Columbus, Ohio.

DEAR SIR:—I beg to acknowledge receipt of your letter of June 7th, as to the legality of the purpose clause of the proposed Article of Incorporation of "THE ERSTER RADANTZ," a proposed corporation not for profit, which said purpose clause is as follows:

> "The purpose for which said corporation is formed is to assist in paying the funeral expenses of its deceased members; and to pay weekly benefits to its members who may be sick or disabled."

In State vs. The Pioneer Live Stock Company, 38 O. S., 347, it was held that the general language of Section 8623, to the effect that corporations may be formed under the general laws of the state for any purpose for which natural persons lawfully may associate themselves, is subject to the implied qualification that where express provision is made elsewhere in the statutes for the organization of corporations for specific purposes, such corporation may only be organized under such special statutes, and not under the general law. This is particularly true of corporations organized for the purpose of doing business which substantially amounts to insurance, and that is the point directly involved in the case cited.

I am of the opinion that the above quoted purpose clause defines a business which substantially amounts to insurance, and by virtue of the principle just stated, as well as by virtue of the express provisions of Section 665 of the General Code, which is to the effect that no company shall engage either directly or indirectly in this state in the business of insurance, unless it is expressly authorized by the laws of this state, this corporation may not be granted the authority it seeks unless its articles comply with the provisions of the law relating to insurance companies.

Our statutes authorize the formation of the following kinds of insurance companies:

1. Legal Reserve Life Insurance Companies (Sections 9339 et seq. of the General Code.)

2. Mutual Protective Life and Accident Companies (Sections 9427 et seq. of the General Code.)

3. Fraternal Beneficiary Associations, (Sections 9462 et seq., General Code.)

4. Health, Accident and Casualty Insurance Companies, (Sections 9510 et seq. of the General Code.)

The articles of incorporation submitted to me attempt to authorize the doing of a Health Insurance Business on the mutual plan, and as such must conform to the statutes specifically authorizing the formation of such associations.

As to the clause which attempts to confer authority to assist in paying the funeral expenses of deceased members, this business also is specifically recognized as a kind of insurance by Section 666 of the General Code, which provides as fol lows:

> "No company, corporation or association engaged in the business of providing for the payment of the funeral, burial or other expenses of deceased members, or certificate holders therein or engaged in the business of providing any other kind of insurance shall contract to pay or pay such insurance or its benefits or any part of either to any official undertaker or to any designated undertaker or undertaking concern or to any particular tradesman or business man, so as to deprive the representative or family of the deceased from, or in any way to control them in, procuring and purchasing such supplies and services in the open market with the advantages of competition, unless expressly authorized by the laws of this state and all laws regulating such insurance or applicable thereto have been complied with."

Formerly a special law found in 97 O. L., 61, therein designated as Section 3631-a Revised Statutes, authorized the formation of associations for the exclusive purpose of providing for the payment of funeral expenses of members, but this act was itself repealed in 1908, so that now there is no authority whatever for the formation of corporations for the purpose of paying the funeral expenses of deceased members; on the contrary, the declared policy of the State, as evidenced by the history of this legislation, is against the formation of such corporations.

For the foregoing reasons I advise that you do not file or record the proposed articles of incorporation of the above named company.

Very truly yours,

TIMOTHY S. HOGAN,
Attorney General.

TAXES AND TAXATION—CORPORATIONS—WILLIS FRANCHISE TAX LAW—"DOING BUSINESS" IN OHIO—EASTMAN KODAK COMPANY—CODIFICATION OF STATUTES.

Before the codification of the statutes, under Section 2 of the Willis Law, a foreign corporation was not liable for the Willis Franchise Tax in Ohio, unless it was "doing business" in this state, and owning or using a part of its capital or plant in this State, and unless furthermore it was also subject to Section 148c, Revised Statutes.

Since the corporate activity of the Eastman Kodack Company in Ohio has been confined solely to the making of sales to wholesalers and retailers through agents and through correspondence, it was not "doing business" in Ohio, within the meaning of the statutes. Nor, furthermore, did it own or use a part of its capital stock in Ohio, nor was it subject to compliance with Section 148c, Revised Statutes, and it is therefore, not liable for the Willis Tax.

The mere fact that the said corporation had voluntarily complied with Section 148d, Revised Statutes, did not make it subject to 148c, R. S. through estoppel or otherwise, for the reason that liability to 148d did not necessarily imply liability to Section 148c, General Code.

Section 2, of the Willis Law as codified, now appears as Section 5499, General Code, and the requirement therein that corporations shall be "subject to compliance with all other provisions of law" is an embodiment of the former provision of Section 2, of the Willis Law, requiring corporations so liable, to be subject to Section 148c, Revised Statutes; the reason being that a corporation subject to Section 148c was necessarily subject to "all other provisions of law."

June 23, 1912.

Hon. Chas. H. Graves, Secretary of State, Columbus, Ohio.

Dear Sir:—One of the corporations certified to me by your predecessor as delinquent for franchise taxes for the years 1902 to 1910, inclusive, is Eastman Kodack Company, a corporation of the state of New York. The file number of this corporation is F-11844.

Upon investigation of the records in your office, and conferences with local counsel representing the corporation, I find that this case presents the following statement of facts:

> "Eastman Kodack Company owns no property in the State of Ohio and has none of its capital invested here. Its corporate activities in this state are confined to the making of sales to retailers and wholesalers in the line of goods which it manufactures, through traveling agents and correspondence."

It is apparent, therefore, that this corporation is not a foreign corporation "doing business in this state and owning or using a part or all of its capital or plant in this state," within the language of the original Willis Law (95 O. L., 125), or within the meaning of any of the revisions or codifications of that act, including that now in force, being Section 110 of the act in 102 Ohio Laws, 224-249, therein designated as Section 5499, General Code, so far, at least, as the above quoted portion of such statutes is concerned.

I need not dwell upon the technical meaning of the phrase "doing business," as used in this state. This phrase now has a well understood meaning, which excludes the solicitation of sales by traveling agents or through the mails. (See Judson on Taxation, Section 183)

Original Section 2 of the Willis Law, however, and succeeding revisions of the same, adopted prior to the adoption of the General Code of 1910, contained in addition to the foregoing language, the following:

> "and subject to compliance with the provisions of Section 148*c*, of the Revised Statutes of Ohio, shall in addition to the statements required by Sections 148*c* and 148*d*, Revised Statutes of Ohio, make a report in writing to the secretary of state," etc.

Inasmuch as during all but one of the years for which Eastman Kodack Company is supposed to be delinquent the statute, as I have just quoted it, was in force, it is proper, at the outset in this case, to analyze the provisions of orignal Section 2 of the Willis Law. Such analysis readily discloses the following facts:

1. Only such foreign corporations as "do business" in Ohio were liable for reports and fees. Therefore, if a foreign corporation exercised, in Ohio, corporate activities not amounting to the doing of business as such phrase has been julicially defined, it was not liable under the Willis Law.

2. Only such foreign corporations as, in addition to doing business in the state, owned and used a part or all of their capital or plant in Ohio were liable under the Willis Law. This distinction is perhaps not of great practical importance, inasmuch as the use of capital in action in a state probably constitutes the technical "doing of business."

It would not be profitable to enter into a detailed analysis of these principles. Suffice it to say that a foreign corporation may own property in Ohio without being liable for the Willis fee, but may not do business in Ohio without becoming liable therefor.

The facts respecting Eastman Kodack Company show that this corporation did not own any property in Ohio, nor did it use its capital in Ohio save to the extent before described, which, as already stated, does not constitute the doing of business.

3. In addition to doing business in Ohio, and in addition to owning or using a part or all of its capital or plant in Ohio, a foreign corporation, to be liable for Willis Law taxes, must have been subject to compliance with Section 148*c*, Revised Statutes.

In order fully to understand the meaning of the phrase "subject to compliance with the provisions of Section 148*c*" in connection with the phrase "in addition to the statements required by Sections 148*c* and 148*d*, Revised Statutes of Ohio," it is necessary to examine into said Sections 148*c* and 148*d*, Revised Statutes.

Section 148*c*, Revised Statutes, provides as follows:

> "Every foreign corporation, incorporated for purposes of profit, now or hereafter doing business in this state, and owning or using a part or all of its capital or plant in this state, shall * * * * before it proceeds to do any business in this state, * * * file with the secretary of state, a statement * * * *.
> "From the facts thus reported, and any other facts coming to his knowledge bearing upon the question, the secretary of state shall determine the proportion of the capital stock of the company represented by its property and business in Ohio, and shall charge and collect from the company, for the privilege of exercising its franchise in Ohio, one-tenth of one per cent. upon the proportion of the authorized capital stock of the corporation, represented by property owned and used and business transacted in Ohio * * *. Upon the payment of the said amount the secretary of state shall issue to the foreign corporation a certificate that such corporation has complied with the laws of Ohio and is authorized to do business therein.

"Provided, this section shall not apply to * * * foreign corporations entirely non-resident, soliciting business, or making sales, in this state by correspondence or by traveling salesmen. * * * *."

"No foreign stock corporation, other than (certain corporations therein enumerated) * * * shall do business in this state without first having procured from the secretary of state a certificate that it has complied with all the requirements of law to authorize it to do business in this state, and that the business of the corporation to be carried on in this state is such as can lawfully be carried on by a corporation incorporated under the laws of this state for such or similar business * * * or by two or more corporations so incorporated for such kinds of business exclusively. The secretary of state shall deliver such certificate to every such corporation so complying with the requirements of the laws of this state. No such foreign stock corporations doing business in this state without such a certificate, shall maintain any action in this state upon any contract made by it in this state, until it shall have procured such certificate. Before granting such certificate the secretary of state shall require every such foreign corporation to file in his office a sworn copy of its charter or certificate of incorporation, and a statement * * * setting forth a place within this state which is to be its principal place of business, and designating * * * * a person upon whom process against such corporation may be served within this state * * * *. For each certificate thus issued by the secretary of state he shall be entitled to receive and shall be paid fees according to the amount of capital stock of each such corporation."

In Toledo Commercial Company vs. Glen Mf'g Company, 55 O. S., 217, it was held, that being the sole question at issue, that Section 148*d*, as above quoted, did not apply to foreign corporations soliciting business in this state through traveling salesmen or by corespondence, in spite of the fact that this express exception, made in Section 148*c*, was not contained in Section 148*d*. This holding is upon the principle above set forth respecting the definition of the phrase "doing business."

It thus appears that upon the facts submitted, Eastman Kodak Company was never liable to comply either with Section 148*c* or Section 148*d*, Revised Statutes. I find, however, upon examination of your records, that this company actually complied with Section 148*d*, doubtless, upon a misunderstanding and prior to the decision in Toledo Commercial Company vs. Glen Mf'g Co. A further question is therefore raised as to the effect of such compliance, inasmuch as with respect to the question under consideration, both Section 148*c* and Section 148*d* are of like application or non-application—i.e., neither properly applies to corporations engaged in business in Ohio in the manner in which Eastman Kodak Company has always conducted its affairs in this state. It might be urged that the company has estopped itself by complying with Section 148*d*, from denying that it is liable to comply with Section 148*c*, and further, from denying that it is liable to make annual reports and pay fees thereon as required by the Willis Law.

I do not think, however, that the company's compliance with Section 148*d* has any such effect. Sections 148*c* and 148*d*, obviously, do not apply to the same corporations, although, in this instance, they are both, properly speaking, inapplicable to Eastman Kodak Company. It does not necessarily follow, therefore, that because Eastman Kodak Company has voluntarily and erroneously complied with Section 148*d* it is liable to comply with Section 148*c*. It does not own or use any part of its capital in Ohio; so that, whether or not it has estopped itself from denying that it does business in Ohio, it may still he heard as to the additional facts involved in Section. 148*c*.

As a general proposition, then, Section 148*d* may and does apply to some foreign corporations to which Section 148*c* does not apply. There are other instances of the application of this proposition than the one afforded by the case of Eastman Kodak Company. It is sufficient, however, to point out now that whereas Section 148*d* applied to all corporations doing business in Ohio, Section 148*c* applied to such corporations only as, in addition to doing business in Ohio, owned or used all or a part of their capital or plant in this state. On the other hand, however, no corporation could be liable to comply with Section 148*c without also being subject to compliance with Section* 148*d*. The provisions of those two sections which I have already quoted, perhaps, do not disclose this fact fully. It is apparent, however, upon a careful examination of both sections and the express exceptions therein.

With the foregoing principles in mind, the exact meaning of the clause, "subject to compliance with the provisions of Section 148*c* of the Revised Statutes of Ohio" and "in addition to the statements required by Sections 148*c* and 148*d*, Revised Statutes of Ohio" becomes apparent. Taken in connection with what precedes in original Section 2 of the Willis Law, this phrase merely refers to and makes clear a fact already deducible from such previous provisions, namely: That the Willis Law is intended to apply to such foreign corporations as are liable to comply with Section 148*c*, and not to those liable for compliance with Section 148*d* only. This fact is rendered even more apparent by consideration of the case of Southern Gum Company vs. Laylin, 66 O. S., 578, wherein, in defining the nature of the exaction made by the Willis Law, Burket, J., uses the following language:

> "(Certain) provisions of the constitution are implied limitations upon the power of taxation of privileges and franchises, and limit such taxation to the reasonable value of the privilege or franchise conferred originally, or to its continued value from year to year. Ashley vs. Ryan, 49 Ohio St., 504 (and other cases) are examples of taxing the continued value of the existing privilege or franchise * * * *."

The privilege taxed in Ashley vs. Ryan was that of original incorporation and it was measured by a fee based upon the amount of the authorized capital stock. The privilege taxed by Section 148*c*, Revised Statutes, was likewise measured as to its value, by the proportion of the authorized capital stock of the corporation; and it is expressly recited in that section that this fee is "the same fee required to be paid by corporations formed under the laws of Ohio." It seems clear, therefore, that whatever be the nature of the privilege created by compliance with Section 148*d*, that created by Section 148*c* is the same as that taxed under the Willis Law.

For all the foregoing reasons, then, a corporation which has complied with Section 148*d* is not necessarily liable to compliance with Section 148*c*; a corporation which has complied with Section 148*d*, but is not liable to comply with Section 148*c*, is not liable for the Willis Tax; and Eastman Kodak Company, not being liable to comply with either Section 148*c* or Section 148*d*, but having voluntarily complied with the latter, is liable neither for compliance with Section 147*c* nor for annual reports and fees under the original Willis Law.

The foregoing deduction relates to the case of the company in question under the law as it existed prior to the adoption of the General Code. When the General Code was adopted the language of Section 2 of the Willis Law was changed so as to read as follows:

> "Every foreign corporation for profit, doing business in this state, and owning or using a part or all of its capital or plant in this state, and subject to compliance with all other provisions of law, and in addition to all other statements required by law, shall make a report, etc."

So that instead of referring to Section 148*c*, reference was to "all other provisions of law," and instead of referring to compliance with Sections 148*c* and 148*d*, reference is to "all other statements required by law." (Section 5525, General Code)

The same verbal changes are carried into the tax commission acts of 1910 and 1911, respectively. In my opinion these verbal changes did not effect any change in the meaning of the law. A corporation is not "subject to compliance with all other provisions of law" unless it is subject to compliance with what was, originally Section 148*c* and what was, originally, 148*d*. As I have already pointed out, a corporation could not be subject to Section 148c without being subject to Section 148*d*. If, however, a corporation were subject to compliance with Section 148*d* and not subject to compliance with Section 148*c*, it would not be "subject to compliance with all other provisions of law." In any event, Section 5525, not being completely intelligible upon its face—referring as it does, vaguely, to "all other provisions of law"—is to be construed by reference to the corresponding provisions of the pre-existing law, upon the well established principle that verbal changes in a statute, made in process of codification, merely, are not presumed to be made for the purpose of changing the meaning of the law; the presumption being that the legislature did not intend to change the meaning thereof. If Section 5525 of the General Code, and its successors in the acts of 1910 and 1911, are to be thus construed, it is at once apparent that the phrase "subject to compliance with all other provisions of law" in reality amounts to "subject to compliance with Section 183, General Code," (which is the present form of Section 148*c*, Revised Statutes).

For all the foregoing reasons I find that the State has no claim against Eastman Kodak Company. I have set forth my reasons with such fullness because I apprehended, from the fact that this company and perhaps others of the same class have been certified to me by your department, that it has been your view that all foreign corporations on the books of the secretary of state are liable for Willis taxes. This is not necessarily the case, as I have already pointed out, either under the original Willis Law or under the present statute.

Very truly yours,

TIMOTHY S. HOGAN,
Attorney General.

ADVERTISEMENT AND BIDS—PRINTING BY BOARD OF DEPUTY STATE SUPERVISORS OF ELECTIONS—PLANS AND SPECIFICATIONS AND CONTRACT PRICE CANNOT BE VARIED AFTER ACCEPTANCE.

After specifications for printing have been submitted by the Board of Elections and advertisement and bids published therefor and the successful bidder selected, the specifications cannot later be departed from and further compensation allowed for further work notwithstanding a misunderstanding by the contracting firm as to the requirements of the specifications.

July 12, 1912.

HON. CHARLES H. GRAVES, Secretary of State, Columbus, Ohio.

DEAR SIR:—On February 23, 1912, you submitted to this department a certain resolution of the Board of Deputy State Supervisors and Inspectors of Elections of Cuyahoga County, wherein is requested my opinion as to the legal right of said board to allow extra compensation to the Britton Printing Company, of Cleveland, Ohio. From said resolution it appears as follows

On the 1st day of September, 1911, The Britton Printing Company of Cleveland, Ohio, made a proposition to the Board of Deputy State Supervisors and Inspectors of Elections of the City of Cleveland, Ohio, as follows:

> "We should be pleased to furnish you with your registration lists as per your specifications for the sum of $17.95 per thousand names."

The board has advertised for bids for the necessary registration blanks and lists of names of electors in various precincts in the City of Cleveland, Ohio, and had set forth in their advertisement for bids,

> "SPECIFICATIONS FOR ALPHABETICAL LISTS.
> "The price to be paid to include the cost of composition and presswork, stock and binding and all work provided herein on both sheets and pamphlets, as follows:
> "1. For each election precinct in the City of Cleveland ten (10) copies of the list of registered voters in said precinct, printed in small pica type with headings and footings, on sheets 22x28 inches, the paper to be used to be white book paper eighty (80) pounds to the ream.
> "2. For each election precinct in the City of Cleveland seventy-five (75) lists of registered voters in said precinct, in small pica type with headings and footings, in pamphlet form 9x5⅞ inches, on number two (2) book paper, fifty (50) pounds to the ream of a sheet 25x38 inches.
> "Copy will be furnished by the Clerk of the Board on or before the last registration for the fall of 1911, and the printed sheets provided for in (1) above to be delivered at the Rooms of the Board before 8 o'clock A. M., October 25th, 1911, and the pamphlets provided for in (2) above to be delivered at the Rooms of the Board not later than 8 o'clock A. M., November 1, 1911.
> "Copy for the first days of registration to be furnished at 10 A. M. of the morning after the first day of registration being October 6, 1911.

"Copy for the second days registration to be furnished at 10 A. M. of the morning after the second day of registration being October 13th. the Printer's Copy Book for the last two days of registration must be furnished by the successful bidder.

"Two proof copies of the first and second days and two proof copies of the last two days must be furnished as soon as possible after receiving copy.

DAYS OF REGISTRATION: Oct. 5th, 12th, 20th and 21st."

Upon this advertisement for bids and the specifications for alphabetical lists, The Britton Company made their proposition, which proposition was by the Board declared to be the lowest and best proposal and accepted the same.

On Oct. 10, 1911, The Britton Company wrote the following letter:

"DEPUTY STATE SUPERVISORS AND INSPECTORS OF ELECTIONS, City Hall, Cleveland.

"DEAR SIRS:—We herewith give you the dates on which we can deliver registration names. They are as follows:

"First day, Wednesday the 11th, 12:00 Noon

"Second day, Tuesday the 17th, 12:00 Noon

"Third day, Wednesday the 25th, 12:00 Noon.

"We also call your attention to the fact we did not figure on furnishing lists in this manner, and we respectfully call your attention to your specifications and our letter of September 1st.

"Yours very truly,

"THE BRITTON PRINTING CO."

After the completion of the work, The Britton Company presented a claim to this Board for extra compensation—can the Board legally pay the same?

The Board of Deputy State Supervisors and Inspectors of Elections in Cuyahoga County, Ohio, having advertised for bids for work, giving specifications therefor as required by law, and The Britton Company having bid therefor, under the specifications, they must comply with the specifications and cannot be heard to say they did not understand the specifications, nor the law governing them. The Board of Elections cannot likewise advertise for bids under specifications and then allow the bidder to add additional compensation for carrying out the specifications and thus defeat the very object of the law.

Section 4917, G. C., requires certain things to be done and the specifications say what the Board want. The specifications seems clear as to what the Board want; if The Britton Company did not understand them it was their duty to inform themselves. The Board has no authority to pay out money except in the ordinary way provided by law.

The specifications and the bids thereunder are matters of record, and I find no law to authorize the board to pay more than the amount of the bid, because to comply with the specifications and the law might entail loss to somebody.

Very truly yours,

TIMOTHY S. HOGAN,
Attorney General.

ARTICLES OF INCORPORATION—MOTION PICTURE EXHIBITORS' LEAGUE OF AMERICA—CORPORATION FOR PROFIT—COMBINATION IN RESTRAINT OF TRADE

April 9, 1912.

HON. CHARLES H. GRAVES, Secretary of State, Columbus, Ohio.

DEAR SIR:—I am of the opinion that the Articles of Incorporation of THE MOTION PICTURE EXHIBITORS' LEAGUE OF AMERICA, submitted to me, ought not to be filed by you.

My reasons for reaching this general conclusion have been set forth in a previous opinion. The following phrases of the purpose clause of these particular articles are especially objectionable:

> "* * * to collect, preserve and circulate valuable business information and statistics, to preserve and adjust controversies and misunderstandings between persons engaged in the moving picture business in all its branches; to procure and establish fair and equitable prices for services furnished, and required by said business; and to promote, protect and advance the interests of the owners and patrons of moving picture theaters; * * *."

These are clearly business purposes and in furthering them the association would be promoting the pecuniary advantages of its members and would thus be an undertaking for profit. Furthermore, the above language comes dangerously near to defining a combination in restraint of trade and competition, if it does not indeed frankly avow the intention to enter into such a combination.

Very truly yours,

TIMOTHY S. HOGAN,
Attorney General.

ARTICLES OF INCORPORATION—THE DIME SAVINGS SOCIETY—SAVINGS SOCIETIES NOT CORPORATIONS "NOT FOR PROFIT."

A corporation whose articles disclose the purpose of inaugurating a mutual money savings system cannot be organized as a corporation "not for profit."

The laws formerly providing for the organization of savings societies as corporations not for profit have been repealed.

May 6, 1912.

HON. CHARLES H. GRAVES, Secretary of State, Columbus, Ohio.

DEAR SIR:—I beg to acknowledge receipt of your letter of April 26th, forwarding to me the proposed Articles of Incorporation of "THE DIME SAVINGS SOCIETY," and requesting my opinion as to the legality of the purpose clause thereof, in view of the fact that the proposed articles are for a corporation not for profit.

Said purpose clause is as follows:

> "Said corporation is formed for the purpose of inaugurating a mutual money saving system."

I should be inclined to hold this purpose clause to be too vague and indefinite, regardless of the propriety of forming such corporation not for profit. What a "Mutual money saving system" is, and what part the corporation would play in "inaugurating" such a system, I cannot imagine.

However that may be, it is clear that the purpose for which the corporation is formed is the pecuniary advantage of its members. That being the case, it should be organized, of course, as a corporation for profit, unless some statute expressly authorizes the form of organization chosen by the incorporators.

My reasons for this conclusion have been fully stated in previous opinions addressed to your department.

From the name of the proposed corporation, as well as from the language used in the purpose clause of the articles, I have supposed that the incorporators are seeking to organize the type of corporation known as a "savings society." There was at one time an act of the General Assembly of this state under which corporations might be organized, having the form of corporations not for profit, for the purpose of conducting a savings society. I refer you to Swan and Saylor's Revised Statutes of Ohio, page 188. Subsequently, however, this statute was repealed, 70 O. L., 40-46. The corporate power of such savings societies as had been organized under the prior law were preserved by the repealing act, which was itself an act to provide for the organization of savings and loan associations. There are several of these "savings societies" still in existence in Ohio, but, no subsequent legislation having changed the law as it existed after the passage of the act last above cited, there is no longer any authority for the incorporation of such savings society, at least as a corporation not for profit, with the powers and privileges conferred by the now repealed law upon such savings society.

For all the above reasons, I am of the opinion that you should not file or record the proposed Articles of Incorporation of "THE DIME SAVINGS SOCIETY."

Very truly yours,

TIMOTHY S. HOGAN.

Attorney General.

DISSOLUTION OF CORPORATIONS—DIFFERENT METHODS—CERTIFICATE OF CORPORATION AND OF COURT—CERTIFICATE OF TAX COMMISSION—FILING WITH SECRETARY OF STATE—NECESSITY FOR REPORTS FOR MONTH OF MAY WHEN DISSOLUTION OCCURS PRIOR THERETO—CODIFICATION OF STATUTES.

When an action is brought by petition to Court under Section 11938 of the General Code to dissolve a corporation, and, prior to the month of May, a final judgment is entered by the court dissolving the corporation and appointing a receiver to wind up its affairs; and where, after the 31*st day of May of the same year, a certificate of dissolution issued by the clerk of court under Section* 11975 of the General Code, is tendered to the Secretary of State—

HELD:

1. By virtue of Section 5521 of the General Code the secretary of state may not lawfully receive the certificate of dissolution without having the certificate of the Tax Commission provided for in Section 5521 of the General Code to the effect that the corporation has made all reports required by law to be made to the Commission and paid all taxes, fees and penalties thereon.

2. The Tax Commission may issue the said certificate provided for by Section 5521 of the General Code without having received the report as to capital stock, etc., provided for by Section 5495 of the General Code.

From the history of the statutes and particularly from the evident meaning of Section 8 of the original Willis Law, the codifying commission has clearly made a mistake in drawing Section 11978 of the General Code, which is an exact duplication of Section 5520 of the General Code, when it carried into these sections the provisions to the effect that a corporation would not be exempt from the requirements to make reports and pay fees without filing the certificate of dissolution provided for in Section 11975 of the General Code, when such dissolution is effected by a decree of court.

It is intended by the statutes, as amended in 1902, that no dissolution shall be complete until a record thereof has been made by the secretary of state through the certificates of dissolution required to be filed with him. From the evident meaning of said Sections 5520 and 11978 of the General Code, however, when a dissolution is made by order of court, the corporation shall be absolved from obligations to file said reports from the date of the judgment, and when the judgment occurs prior to May and the certificate of dissolution is filed subsequent to that month, the dissolution dates back to the date of judgment, as regards the obligation to make such reports.

DEAR SIR:—I beg to acknowledge receipt of your letter of July 10th, submitting for my opinion thereon the question disclosed by correspondence between your department and counsel for the J. W. Gorrell Coal Company enclosed therein. The question is as follows:

> "An action is brought under Sections 11938, etc., General Code, to dissolve a corporation. In said action, prior to the month of May in a given year, final judgment is entered by the court, dissolving the corporation and appointing a receiver to wind up its affairs; after the 31st of May of the same year a certificate of dissolution, issued by the Clerk of Court under authority of Section 11975, General Code, is tendered to the Secretary of State."

Two questions of law arises under these facts, as follows:

> "1. May the Secretary of State lawfully receive and file a certificate tendered under such circumstances without having the certificate of the Tax Commission provided for by Section 5521, General Code, to the effect that the corporation has made all reports required by law to be made to the Commission and paid all taxes, fees or penalties thereon?
> "2. Is the Tax Commission authorized to issue the said certificate provided for by Section 5521, General Code, if no report to the Tax Commission has been made by the corporation during the month of May, as provided by Section 5495, etc., General Code?"

I have received a similar inquiry from the Tax Commission which has before it the cases of the Keever Stone Company and the Patent Wood Keg Company. I shall endeavor so to frame this opinion as to cover all the questions suggested in the letter of the Tax Commission as well as that suggested in your letter.

I beg to quote the following provisions of the General Code, the application and effect of which are involved in these questions:

> "Section 11941. Upon such petition * * * * being filed, an order shall be entered requiring all persons interested in the corporation to show cause, if any they have, why it should not be dissolved, before some referee or master commissioner appointed by the court, and to be named in the order * * * *.

"Section 11943. When the report is made, if it appears to the court that the corporation is insolvent, or that its dissolution will be beneficial to the stockholders, and not injurious to the public interest, or that the objects of the corporation have wholly failed, or been entirely abandoned, or that it is impracticable to accomplish such objects, a judgment shall be entered dissolving the corporation, and appointing one or more receivers of its estate and effects. The corporation shall thereupon be dissolved and cease.

"Section 11945. Such receiver shall be vested with all the estate, real or personal, of the corporation, from the time of his filing the security required by law, be trustee of such estate for the benefit of the creditors of the corporation and its stoskholders, and have all the powers conferred by law upon trustees to whom assignments are made for the benefit of creditors.

"Section 11974. In case of dissolution or revocation of its charter, every domestic corporation shall file with the secretary of state a certificate thereof. If the dissolution is by voluntary action of the corporation, such certificate shall be signed by the president and secretary of the corporation.

"Section 11975. In case of dissolution or revocation of charter by action of a competent court, or the winding up of a corporation either domestic or foreign, by proceedings in assignment or bankruptcy, such certificate shall be signed by the clerk of the court in which such proceedings were had. The fees for making and filing it, shall be taxed as costs in the proceeding as other costs.

"Section 11978. The mere retirement from business or voluntary dissolution of a domestic or foreign corporation without filing the certificate provided for in section 11974, eleven thousand nine hundred and seventy-five, and eleven thousand nine hundred and seventy-six, shall not exempt it from the requirements to make reports and pay fees in accordance with the provisions of the next four preceding sections." (I shall hereinafter point out this section is erroneously placed where it is found in the General Code, and belongs in connection with the corporation franchise tax statutes where, as section 5520, General Code, the subject matter thereof may also be found. Said section 5520 will be next quoted).

"Section 5520. The mere retirement from business or voluntary dissolution of a domestic or foreign corporation, without filing the certificate, as provided for in sections eleven thousand nine hundred and seventy-four, eleven thousand nine hundred and seventy-five, and eleven thousand nine hundred and seventy-six of the General Code, shall not exempt it from the requirements to make reports and pay fees for taxes in accordance with the provisions of this act." (Section 131 of the Tax Commission Act of 1911, 102 O. L., 204).

"Section 5521. In case of dissolution or revocation of its charter, on the part of a domestic corporation, or of the retirement from business in this state, on the part of a foreign corporation, the secretary of state shall not permit a certificate of such action to be filed with him unless the commission shall certify that all reports, required to be made to it, have been filed in pursuance of law, and that all taxes or fees and penalties thereon due from such corporation have been paid.

"Section 5695. Between the first day of May and the first day of July, 1911, and annually thereafter during the month of May, each corporation, organized under the laws of this state, for profit, shall make report, in writing, to the commission, in such form as the commission may prescribe.

"Section 5496. Such report shall be signed and sworn to before an officer authorized to administer oaths, by the president, vice-president, secretary or general manager of the corporation, and forwarded to the commission.

"Section 5497. Such report shall contain:

"1. The name of the corporation.

"2. The location of its principal office.

"3. The names of the president, secretary, treasurer and members of the board of directors, with the post office address of each.

"4. The date of the annual election of officers.

"5. The amount of authorized capital stock and the par value of each share.

"6. The amount of capital stock subscribed, the amount of capital stock issued and outstanding, and the amount of capital stock paid up.

"7. The nature and kind of business in which the corporation is engaged and its place or places of business.

"8. The change or changes, if any, in the above particulars made since the last annual report.

"Section 5498. Upon the filing of the report, provided for in the last preceding sections, the commission after finding such report to be correct, shall, on the first Monday of July, determine the amount of the subscribed or issued and outstanding capital stock of each such corporation. On the first Monday in August, the commission shall verify the amount so determined by it to the auditor of state, who shall charge for collection, on or before August fifteenth, as herein provided, from such corporation, a fee of three-twentieths of one per cent. upon its subscribed or issued and outstanding stock, which fee shall not be less than ten dollars in any case. Such fee shall be payable to the treasurer of state on or before the first day of the following October."

The first question which is suggested to me by the correspondence submitted and which I have above stated, is, it seems to me, sufficiently answered by the explicit provisions of Section 5521, supra. That section is plainly applicable to the filing of a certificate of dissolution, resulting from an involuntary proceeding. Indeed, it not only applies to the dissolution of a corporation, but to the "revocation of its charter" as well. There can be no question, therefore, that the secretary of state is not authorized to file a certificate of dissolution, signed by a clerk of courts upon an entry in a proceeding brought under Sections 11938, etc., General Code, as before quoted unless the Tax Commission should first certify that all reports required to be made to it have been filed by the corporation in pursuance of law, and that all taxes or fees and penalties thereon due from such corporation have been paid.

This, of itself, answers the question which you present. The contentions of the various counsel interested in these cases, however, are really directed to the second question, as I have stated it, and that question is the only one concerning which there can be any serious doubt.

May, then, the Tax Commission lawfully issue a certificate such as that provided in Section 5521, General Code, in the case of a corporation as to which an entry of dissolution, under Section 11943, General Code, has been made by a court, when the certificate required by Section 11975, General Code, has not been filed prior to the month of May?

Two subsidiary questions have been suggested by counsel in connection with the main question here, as follows:

> "1. What is the effect of an entry of dissolution under Section 11943?
> "2. What is the effect of Section 5520, General Code, as tending to disclose the legislative intent as to the application of the Willis law?"

In seeking for an answer to the first of these two suggested subsidary questions I have found it necessary to go into the legislative history of the various sections which I have quoted.

Section 11938 is a very old section, having been originally enacted in 64 O. L., 153. The procedure outlined in this and succeeding sections is, as suggested by counsel for the Patent Wood Keg Company, adverse in its nature, in that it applies to corporations having debts and the rights of creditors are involved therein. It was one of three different methods, then or thereafter provided, for the dissolution of domestic corporations; the others are found in Sections 8738 to 8743, inclusive, General Code, and in Sections 11972 and 11973, General Code, respectively. Of these two other methods the first is available only to corporations having no debts, while the other apparently can not be completed until the debts of the corporation are satisfied, although this does not already appear. I shall not quote from or fully discuss the provisions of the sections to which I have just referred, suffice it to say that they are correctly referred to by counsel as voluntary in their nature.

In addition to these three proceedings for dissolution of a domestic corporation there are other methods by which a corporate franchise may be terminated. I refer, of course, to proceedings in Quo Warranto under Section 12304 and to similar proceedings under other sections of the General Code.

All of these methods or means of terminating the franchise to be a corporation were in existence prior to the year 1902, although in that year what are now Sections 8740 and 8741, General Code, were enacted as supplementary to what was then Section 5674, Revised Statutes. (See 95 O. L., 208).

The amendment referred to deserves special mention here. Prior to 1902, Section 5674, Revised Statutes, proivdes as follows:

> "When a majority of the directors, trustees, or other officers having the management of the concerns of any corporation, become satisfied that the objects of the corporation can not be accomplished, and no installment of the capital stock of the corporation has been paid, and no investments have been made, and no debts incurred which are unpaid, they, or the president of the board of directors, trustees, or other officers, may call a meeting of the stockholders of the corporation, at such time and place as he or they may designate, by publication in some newspaper of general circulation in the county wherein the principal office of the corporation is located; and if a majority in amount of stockholders present at such meeting, in person or by proxy, decide that the objects of the corporation can not be accomplished, the corporation shall thereupon be dissolved and shall cease."

By the amendment in question Section 5674 was changed and supplemented so as to read as Section 8741, General Code, now reads as follows:

> "If all the stockholders present at such meeting in person or by > proxy decide to surrender and abandon its corporate authority the corporation shall be abandoned and dissolved upon the filing of a certificate of the abandonment or dissolution with the secretary of state in the manner provided by law."

It is clear, however, that prior to the amendment of 1902 it was possible to dissolve a corporation either by a decree of court or by voluntary action of the members of the corporation, and to forfeit and annul the corporate franchise of a corporation in proceedings in Quo Warranto without filing any certificate in the office of the secretary of state. The typical language found in all the sections is that with which original Section 5674, supra, terminates, namely, "the corporation shall thereupon be dissolved and shall cease." (See Section 11943, General Code, supra, as Section 5656, Revised Statutes; Section 12323, General Code, as Section 6780, Revised Statutes, etc.)

Now, as to one of the methods which I have been discussing the Legislature changed the statutes itself, providing for such method in the manner already pointed out, so that instead of the proceeding being complete with the adoption of a resolution by the directors and stockholders of a corporation it was not complete until a certificate was filed "with the secretary of state in the manner provided by law." As to the other methods, however, and the sections providing for them, no such change was made. On this point might be constructed an inference to the effect that it was not intended that the filing of a certificate with the secretary of state should be necessary in a case of dissolution or revocation of a corporate charter otherwise than under what was formerly Section 5674*a*, Revised Statutes.

Such an inference, however, can not be supported. While Section 5674*a*, now Section 8741, General Code, provides that the dissolution should be effected "upon the filing of a certificate of the abandonment or dissolution with the secretary of state, in the manner provided by law" this section itself does not contain the "provision" of which it speaks. It is necessary to look elsewhere for the requirement that any certificate be filed with the secretary of state.

Obviously, the reference here is to Sections 11974, etc., General Code, originally enacted in 95 O. L., 127. I take the liberty of quoting the exact language of that act which, significantly enough, is the "Willis Law," so-called. The provisions in question are found in Section 8 of the act, which is as follows:

> "Every domestic corporation, in case of dissolution, revocation of charter or abandonment of its corporate purposes, shall file with the secretary of state a certificate of such dissolution, revocation of charter or abandonment; in case of dissolution or abandonment by voluntary action of the corporation, such certificate shall be signed by the president and secretary of the corporation; in case of dissolution, or revocation of charter by action of a competent court, such certificate shall be signed by the clerk of the court entering the decree of dissolution or revocation. The fees for making and filing such certificate with the secretary of state shall be taxed in the cost in favor of the party paying the same and shall have the same priority as other costs in the dissolution proceedings.
> "The mere retirement from business or voluntary dissolution of a domestic or foreign corporation without having filed the certificate provided for in this section, shall not exempt it from the requirements to make reports and pay fees in accordance with the provisions of this act."

It will be observed that the provisions of present Section 5520 are substantially the same as the last paragraph of this section.

This section was subsequently amended in immaterial particulars in 97 O. L., 383.

The significance of the provisions now found in Sections 11974, etc., becomes at once apparent when the legislative history already detailed is investigated These provisions were a part of the Willis Law itself. By other provisions of the same original law it was made the duty of the secretary of state to exact from each corporation organized under the laws of this state an annual report and an annual fee thereon; which said fee, in the case of Southern Gum Co. vs. Laylin, 66 O. S., 578, was held to be an annual tax on the continuing annual value of the franchise to be a corporation. It was provided that the secretary of state might request the Attorney General to bring certain actions to enforce compliance with the provisions of the act. By virtue of other statutes the secretary of state had in his office a complete record of corporations organized under the laws of Ohio, but no record whatever of the dissolution, abandonment or ouster of any such corporations. Accordingly, it would be impossible for him, in the administration of the Willis Law, to know what corporations of those found on his records were liable for the annual and fees unless some method was provided by which he might have a record of dissolutions and revocations. The General Assembly intended to afford such a method as a part of the scheme of taxation embodied in the Willis Law by enacting Section 8 thereof, now Section 11974, General Code.

What, then, was the effect of the enactment of Section 8 of the Willis Law upon the statutes providing for the various methods of the termination of a franchise to be a corporation other than formerly embodied in Section 5674, Revised Statutes, and now found in Sections 8740 and 8741, General Code? In my opinion, there can be but one answer to this question. A domestic corporation could not be effectually dissolved either by the court in a proceeding in dissolution or Quo Warranto, or by the voluntary action of the members of the corporation, after April 11, 1902, unless a certificate was filed with the secretary of state.

The reason for this conclusion is found in the very explicit language of Section 8 itself. In the first place, that section in its original form, as well as in its form in Sections 11974 and 11975, General Code, applies not only to the "dissolution" of corporations but to the "revocation of charter" as well. Furthermore, the method of causing the certificate to be filed in case of dissolution or revocation by action of a competent court, was expressly provided for. I am not now speaking of the time when the dissolution becomes effective as against the state. I assert, merely, that no court, after the passage of Section 8 of the original Willis Law, could completely exercise its power to dissolve or oust a corporation without causing a certificate to be filed with the secretary of state.

Now, the fact that Section 8 was a part of the Willis Law has further significance than that already dwelt upon. Because it was manifestly the purpose of the legislature in incorporating Section 8 into the act to afford to the secretary of state a means of knowing what corporations were in existence to be given here, for the purpose of charging them with the Willis tax, it seems to follow that as to all corporations, the record of the incorporation of which is found on the record books of the secretary of state and no record of the dissolution or revocation of which is there found, the liability for Willis Law reports and fees exists. That is to say, it is presumably true—or was under the original Willis law—that all domestic corporations not dissolved on the books of the secretary of state are in existence for Willis Law purposes and are required to make the annual reports and pay the fees thereon. I have said that presumably a corporation not dissolved on the records of the secretary of state is in existence and liable to fees under the Willis Law. It does not necessarily follow, however, that a certificate of dissolution, when filed by the secretary of state, does not relate back and terminate the life of a corporation as of some other date. Other things being equal, of course, it is true, that the requirements of Sections 11974 and 11975 being a part of the machinery of dissolution, and the dissolution itself not being complete until these requirements are complied with, the corporation would remain in existence until a certificate is filed with the secretary of state; and particularly would it seem that a corporation would continue in existence for the purpose of the Willis Law because the requirement as to the filing of the certificate was enacted as a part of that law.

It is contended, however, that other things are not equal because Section 5520 provides that "the mere retirement from business or voluntary dissolution of a domestic corporation, without filing a certificate * * * shall not exempt it from the requirements to make reports and pay fees or taxes in accordance with the provisions of this act." It is pointed out that this section enumerates voluntary dissolution, among other things, and does not mention dissolution by decree of court or revocation of charter. The rule of enumeration and exclusion is relied upon to sustain the inference that if a corporation be dissolved by decree of court such dissolution, of itself, without the filing of a certificate, is sufficient to exempt the corporation from making reports and paying fees.

Strength is lent to this contention by the fact that Section 5521 certainly in pari materi with Section 5520 expressly mentions "revocation of charter" and refers to "dissolution," as already pointed out, in such a way that dissolution by decree of court was meant thereby as well as voluntary dissolution. It could be argued here that the obvious difference between the language of Sections 5520 and 5521, as I have pointed it out, establishes the conclusion that the former is of much narrower application than the latter. Opposed to his contention is the fact that in Section 5520, as in Section 11978, the "certificate" referred to is expressly designated as "the certificate provided for in sections eleven thousand nine hundred and seventy-four, eleven thousand nine hundred and seventy-five, and eleven thousand nine hundred and seventy-six of the General Code." Now, Section 11975 provides for the filing of a certificate "in case of dissolution or revocation of charter by action of a competent court;" so that the mention of the certificate provided for in Section 5520 would seem to extend the scope of that section to dissolutions by decree of court and revocations of charter, and virtually to make such section to read as follows: "No dissolution of a domestic corporation, without filing the certificate provided for by law, shall exempt it from the requirements to make reports, etc."

At the most, however, I think that the specific mention of Section 11975 in Section 5520, taken in connection with the language, "The mere retirement from business or voluntary dissolution," creates a doubt as to the exact scope of the section. It is here that the legislative history already referred to and partly described becomes of service in ascertaining the true meaning of Section 5520.

I have already pointed out that Section 5520, while enacted as Section 131 of the Act of 1911, is, in reality, a transposition of the subject matter of Section 11978 to its proper place in the General Code. The language of the two sections is practically identical. Section 11978 is a codification of Section 8 of the Willis Law as amended in 97 O. L., 383. Said Section 11978 contains the same contradictory provisions already described in connection with Section 5520. It is a familiar and often applied principle of statutory interpretation that if there is ambiguity apparent upon the face of a codified statute, such ambiguity may be resolved by construing the meaning of the original act. The theory of this rule is that changes made in the process of codification are presumed not to be made with the intention of changing the meaning of the law. I need not cite authorities upon this well settled point.

Section 8 of the original act must then be referred to as indicating the meaning of Section 5520, General Code. At the risk of repetition let me quote certain portions of said Section 8 which, I think, throw a great deal of light upon the question now under consideration:

"In case of dissolution or abandonment by voluntary action of the corporation, such certificate shall be signed by the president and secretary of the corporation; in case of dissolution or revocation of charter by action of a competent court, such certificate shall be signed by the clerk of the court * * *.

"The mere retirement from business or voluntary dissolution of a domestic * * * corporation, without having filed the certificate provided for in this section, shall not exempt it from the requirements to make reports, etc."

Substantially the same language as that above quoted is now found in Sections 11974, 11975 and 5520, above quoted, except that the codifiers assumed that the phrase "the certificate provided for in this section" as used in original Section 8, referred to the certificate to be signed by the clerk of court as well as that to be signed by the president and secretary of a corporation. I do not think that this assumption was correct. Section 8 defines what constitutes "dissolution by voluntary action of a corporation." That is treated as a species of dissolution, separate and distinct from dissolution or revocation by action of a competent court. When, therefore, later in the same section the phrase "the mere retirement from business or voluntary dissolution of a domestic * * *corporation" is used I can not escape the conclusion that it was not intended that said phrase should include, within the scope of its meaning, the dissolution or revocation of the charter of a corporation by action of a competent court.

I am satisfied, therefore, that when the General Assembly in codifying said Section 8 as Section 11978, General Code, referred to "the certificate provided for in Section 11975" it was guilty of a mistake. If this language be eliminated from Section 11978 and from Section 5520, General Code, which is patterned after that section, there could be no doubt as to the meaning of these sections, which would then be free from ambiguity.

It follows then that Section 5520 is to be construed strictly so as to mean that the mere voluntary dissolution of a domestic corporation, without filing a certificate, shall not exempt it from the requirements to make reports and pay fees. Does it then follow that any other kind of dissolution, without filing the certificate provided by law, does exempt the corporation from these requirements? Upon a careful consideration I am of the opinion that this conclusion follows.

Two reasons have induced me to adopt this view: In the first place, if the subject matter of present Section 5520 had not been incorporated expressly in Section 8 of the original Willis Law it might have been argued that by necessary inference the dissolution of a corporation, whether by decree of court or otherwise, was not complete, for the purposes of the Willis Law, until the certificate is filed. I have already considered the argument on this point, but when the General Assembly took it upon itself to qualify the section by interposing the language under consideration especially in connection with the other language showing the distinction in the mind of the Legislature between "voluntary dissolution" and "dissolution by action of a competent court," I think it must be presumed that it was not intended that in cases of dissolution by action of a court the liability for Willis Law reports and fees should continue until the certificate was filed.

In the second place, as I have already pointed out, what was originally Section 5674, Revised Statutes, was so amended and supplemented at the same session of the General Assembly at which the Willis Law was passed, and only a few days thereafter, as to leave no doubt about the question of legislative intent. The original statute just mentioned provided that "if the majority in amount of stockholders present at such meeting * * * decides that the objects of the corporation can not be accomplished, the corporation shall thereupon be dissolved and shall cease." The Legislature so changed this language in the act found in 95 O. L., 208, as to provide that "if all the stockholders present at such meeting * * * decide to surrender and abandon its corporate authority, the corporation shall be abandoned and dissolved upon the filing of a certificate of such abandonment or dissolution with the secretary of state in the manner provided by law."

Of course, the General Assembly had in mind the provisions of Section 8 of the Willis Law when it passed this act. It saw fit then expressly to amend the provisions as to voluntary dissolutions in order to conform to the Willis Law. No such amendment was made in and to the statutes of quo warranto or the sections providing for the dissolution of a corporation by action of a competent court. I cannot believe that the express amendment of the one group of statutes and the omission to amend the provisions as to other methods of terminating the corporate franchises were accidental, especially in view of the language of Section 8 of the Willis Law as already analyzed. I think it is clear, therefore, that the Legislature in enacting the Willis Law and the other statutes passed as a part of the same scheme of legislation, did not intend that the liability of a corporation whose charter is taken away from it by decree of a competent court should continue under the Willis Law until the certificate is filed with the secretary of state.

I am, for the foregoing reasons, of the opinion that when an order of dissolution has been made in a proceeding brought under Section 11938, etc., General Code, prior to or during the month of May in any year, such a decree terminates the existence of the corporation for Willis Law purposes and no report need be made for that year, although technically perhaps the dissolution may not be complete until the certificate has been filed with the secretary of state.

I am accordingly of the opinion that if it is made to appear to the Tax Commission that a corporation not yet dissolved on the records of the secretary of state has, nevertheless, prior to or during the month of May in any year, been dissolved by action of a competent court, or that its charter has been revoked in quo warranto proceedings during the same period of time, the Commission may and should if the corporation is not delinquent for other reports, certify to the secretary of state that all reports required to be made to it have been filed in pursuance of law and that all fees and penalties thereon due from such corporation have been paid.

I shall send a copy of this opinion to the Tax Commission.

Very truly yours,

TIMOTHY S. HOGAN,
Attorney General.

ARTICLES OF INCORPORATION—THE NORWOOD RETAIL GROCERS' AND BUTCHERS' ASSOCIATION—INDEFINITENESS.

HON. CHARLES H. GRAVES, Secretary of State, Columbus, Ohio.

DEAR SIR:—In compliance with the request of your favor of October 4, 1912, I have considered the legality of the purpose clause of The Norwood Retail Grocers' and Butchers' Association, a proposed corporation not for profit, which purpose clause is as follows:

> "The purpose for which said corporation is formed is for the mutual benefit of its members."

In my opinion this statement lacks the definiteness which is required by the statute. It does not define any purpose whatever. Every corporation is, in a sense, formed for the mutual benefit of its members. If the incorporators of this enterprise desire to obtain permission to be a corporation they must specifically set forth and describe the kind of activity which they desire authority to undertake under corporate organization. Yours very truly,

TIMOTHY S. HOGAN,
Attorney General.

MUTUAL INSURANCE CORPORATIONS—ARTICLES OF INCORPORATION OF THE FIRST GREEK CATHOLIC RUSSIAN UNION OF ST. GEORGE IN THE STATE OF OHIO NOT APPROVED BECAUSE BENEFIT UNCERTAIN AND ASSESSMENT CERTAIN.

The statutes do not authorize the transaction of a mutual insurance business upon a plan that leaves uncertain the amount of the death benefit and makes certain the amount of the assessment.

The articles of the First Greek Catholic Russian Union of St. George in the State of Ohio therefore which state the purpose of paying a sick benefit of $5.00 per week and of assessing the sum of $1.00 each in case of a member's death, and paying the total amount to the wife or estate of the deceased, cannot be approved.

October 26, 1912.

DEAR SIR:—I beg to acknowledge receipt of your letter of September 24th, transmitting the proposed Articles of Incorporation of THE FIRST GREEK CATHOLIC RUSSIAN UNION OF ST. GEORGE IN THE STATE OF OHIO, a proposed corporation "not for profit," formed for the purpose of,

> "To pay a sick benefit of $5.00 per week also members will be levied the sum of $1.00 each in case of a member's death, this amount to be paid to his wife or estate."

The articles were transmitted to me for my consideration. I find myself unable to approve them for the reasons suggested in my opinion to you under date of June 23, 1912, in the matter of "The Erster Radantz." In that opinion I stated upon the authority of State vs. The Pioneer Live Stock Company, 38 O. S., 347, that in order that an insurance company might lawfully be formed under the statutes of this state, its purpose must conform to one of the statutes authorizing the formation of insurance companies. I also called attention to the express provisions of Section 665 of the General Code in this connection.

These principles being accepted it is obvious, I think, that the Articles of Incorporation in question can be accepted by you, if at all, only as those of a "mutual protective association" formed under Section 9427 of the General Code, which provides in part as follows:

> "A company or association may be organized to transact the business of life or accident or life and accident insurance on the assessment plan, for the purpose of mutual protection and relief of its members, and for the payment of stipulated sums of money to the families, heirs, executors, administrators, or assigns of the deceased members of such company or association, as the member may direct, in the manner provided in the by-laws. * * * *"

The purpose clause in question, though brief, so explicitly states the proposed method of doing business by the corporation to be formed as to make it clear that it is not in conformity with the above quoted section in that it is not proposed to provide "for the payment of stipulated sums of money" to the wives or estates of the deceased members, but merely an indefinite sum consisting of $1.00 from each member of the association as the membership may be constituted at the time of a given death. The evident intention of the statute being that the sum shall be stipulated in advance, and the evident intention of the incorporators being that the association shall not agree to pay any definite sum, I am constrained to hold that the latter does not conform to the law in this respect.

Indeed, I am not certain that the payment of $1.00 a member to be assessed against the members in case of death constitutes the transaction of the business of life insurance "on the assessment plan" as provided in the statute. As I understand the meaning of the phrase "assessment plan" as used herein, it is that which is described by Bradbury, J., in delivering the opinion in State ex rel., vs. Life Insurance Company, 58 O. S., 1-29, as follows:

> "The amount of the call is uncertain and depends upon the will of the managing body of the concern, its board of trustees."

In short, the statutes of this state does not seem to authorize the transaction of a mutual insurance business upon a plan that leaves uncertain the amount of the death benefit and certain the amount of the assessment.

For the foregoing reason, I am obliged to return herewith, without by approval, the proposed Articles of Incorporation of The First Greek Catholic Russian Union of St. George in the State of Ohio.

Very truly yours,
TIMOTHY S. HOGAN,
Attorney General.

ARTICLES OF INCORPORATION OF THE NORTH BLOOMFIELD GAME PROTECTIVE ASSOCIATION—CORPORATION NOT FOR PROFIT—FEE—PURPOSE OF ASSISTING GOVERNMENTAL FUNCTIONS.

Corporations may not be formed for the purpose of discharging governmental functions, though they may be formed for the purpose of assisting officers of the law in the performance of their duties in a legitimate way. ---- ---- ---- ---- --

Under this limitation, therefore, the Articles of the North Bloomfield Game Protective Association, stating the purpose of "the protection of game and the enforcement of the game laws of the State of Ohio," may be filed, and the fee of $2.00 for filing Articles of Corporations not for profit should be exacted.

November 19, 1912.

HON. CHARLES H. GRAVES, Secretary of State, Columbus, Ohio.

DEAR SIR:—I beg to acknowledge receipt of your letter of November 12th enclosing proposed articles of incorporation of The North Bloomfield Game Protective Association, a corporation not for profit, for the purpose of "the protection of game and the enforcement of the game laws of the State of Ohio."

You request my opinion as to your duty, as secretary of state, to file these proposed articles of incorporation and also as to the lawful filing fee therefor.

It is evidently not intended that this corporation be organized under Section 10200, General Code, which provides that:

> "Any number of persons, not less than fifteen, a majority of whom must be residents of this state, may become incorporated for the purpose of apprehending and convicting any person or persons accused of either a felony or misdemeanor."

This is apparent because the articles of incorporation are subscribed by five individuals only. I do not believe that Sections 10199 (not quoted) and 10200 are to be regarded as exhaustive, in the sense that no corporation, not for profit, may be formed to promote the enforcement of law save under one or the other of these sections. Both of these sections confer special powers upon the corporations organized thereunder in addition to the general powers of a corporation not for profit. The purpose of protecting game and enforcing the game laws of the State of Ohio is, in my opinion, one for which "individuals lawfully may associate themselves" within the meaning of Section 8623, General Code, in spite of the fact that these functions are governmental in their nature and are expressly vested by statute in the wardens and deputies of the State Fish and Game Commission. Strictly speaking, of course, the language chosen by the incorporators is unfortunate in that individuals clearly may not associate themselves for the purpose of discharging any governmental function. Giving the articles a liberal construction, however, which I apprehend more accurately expresses the exact intention of the incorporators, it would seem that the purpose defined is rather that of assisting the officers of the law in the discharge of their duties in a legitimate way. This is a purpose which is not unlawful and in my opinion the articles of incorporation in question may be properly received and filed by you.

I know of no feature of these articles which in any way distinguishes the proposed corporation from an ordinary corporation not for profit. That being the case, the filing fee provided by Section 176, General Code, paragraph 5, should be exacted for filing these articles. That fee is $2.00.

Very truly yours,

TIMOTHY S. HOGAN,

Attorney General.

ARTICLES OF INCORPORATION OF FIRST GREEK CATHOLIC RUSSIAN UNION OF SAINT GEORGE—NOT TO BE FILED AS MUTUAL PROTECTIVE ASSOCIATION FOR INSURANCE ASSESSMENT PLAN.

The purpose defined in the proposed articles of incorporation of The First Greek Catholic Russsian Union of Saint George, as being "to pay a sick benefit of five dollars ($5.00) per week," does not sufficiently state an intention to organize under Section 9427, General Code, as a "mutual protective association," nor is there any thing in the purpose clause to indicate that the plan of pensioners is the "Assessment plan" as required by the statutes.

September 18, 1912.

HON. CHARLES H. GRAVES, Secretary of State, Columbus, Ohio.

DEAR SIR:—I beg to acknowledge receipt of your letter of November 12th enclosing proposed articles of incorporation of the First Greek Catholic Russian Union of St. George in the State of Ohio, a corporation not for profit, for the purpose of "to pay a sick benefit of five dollars per week."

You request my opinion as to your duty to file and record these articles of incorporation, and also as to the lawful filing fee therefor.

These articles of incorporation have heretofore been submitted to me in another form. At that time I advised you that the business proposed to be done by this company was one substantially amounting to insurance, so that in order that it might properly be organized its charter must conform to some of the statutes providing for the organization of insurance companies. I advised you further that if this society could be regarded as coming within any of the classes of insurance companies provided for by statute it would have to be regarded as a "mutual protective association," the organization of which is covered by Section 9427, General Code. That section provides in part as follows:

> "A company or association may be organized to transact the business of life or accident or life and accident insurance on the assessment plan, for the purpose of mutual protection and relief of its members, and for the payment of stipulated sums of money to the families, heirs executors, administrators, or assigns of the deceased members of such company or association, as the member may direct, in the manner provided in the by-laws. * * *"

Upon careful consideration I am of the opinion that the purpose defined being "to pay a sick benefit of five dollars per week" does not sufficiently state an intention to organize under Section 9427 as above quoted. There is nothing in the foregoing purpose clause to indicate that the plan of business is the "assessment plan" as required by the statute.

For this reason I am of the opinion that you may not lawfully file the proposed articles of incorporation of the First Greek Catholic Russian Union of St. George.

This conclusion makes it unnecessary for me to consider the further question submitted by you.

Very truly yours,

TIMOTHY S. HOGAN,
Attorney General.

SECRETARY OF STATE MAY NOT MAINTAIN OFFICES OUTSIDE OF COLUMBUS FOR ISSUING AUTOMOBILE LICENSES.

The statutes are positive and clear in their direction that the office of the secretary of state shall be located in Columbus and that applications for automobile licenses must be filed in said office.

The secretary of state is not authorized, therefore, to maintain an office outside of Columbus for the purpose of receiving applications of automobile owners and doing other work incidental thereto.

December 7, 1912.

HON. CHARLES H. GRAVES, Secretary of State, Columbus, Ohio.

DEAR SIR:—In your letter of December 5, 1912, you request my opinion as follows:

> "Will it be lawful for me, as Secretary of State, to maintain an office outside of the City of Columbus, for the purpose of receiving applications of automobile owners for registration of automobiles, the issuing of certificates of registration, the delivery of automobile tags and the receiving of the fee therefor?"

Section 6294 of the General Code of Ohio provides as follows:

> "Every owner of a motor vehicle or vehicles operated or driven upon the public roads or highways of this state, annually before the first day of January of each year, for each motor vehicle owned or acquired, except as otherwise provided in this chapter, shall cause to be filed by mail or otherwise, together with the payment of a registration fee of five dollars for each gasoline or steam motor vehicle and a registration fee of three dollars for each electric motor vehicle, in the office of the Secretary of State, an application for registration, for the following year beginning the first day of January of such year, containing a brief description of the vehicle to be registered, including the name of the manufacturer, the manufacturer's number of the motor vehicle, if number there be, the character of the motor power, the amount of such motor power stated in figures of horse power, the name and address of the owner of such motor vehicle, and the name of the county of the state in which he resides."

Under the Constitution of Ohio of 1802 ARTICLE VII, Section 4, Chillicothe was established as the seat of government until the year 1808, and by act of the General Assembly thereafter was changed to the town of Columbus, and by the subsequent act of the General Assembly and the Constitution of 1851 (Constitution of Ohio 1851, ARTICLE XV, Section 1) Columbus was established as the seat of government until otherwise provided by law and has so continued.

The General Assembly of Ohio on February 17, 1816, passed the following act, which is now Section 14225 of the General Code (Appendix to General Code, pages 156-7):

"That the auditor, treasurer, and secretary of state, shall in the month of October next remove or cause to be removed, the books, maps and papers in their respective offices, to the offices prepared and designated for them severally, in the town of Columbus * * * and the said public officers shall there attend and keep their offices respectively from and after that time, any law to the contrary notwithstanding."

The law making power of our state has in*positive* terms fixed Columbus as the seat of our government and just as positively provided under the above quoted act where you as secretary of state must keep and maintain your office and the records thereof.

Section 6294 of the General Code enjoins upon the owner of a motor vehicle making application for a tax or certificate of registration the duty of filing his application "in the office of the secretary of state" by mail, or otherwise, and Section 6299 of the General Code enjoins upon the secretary of state the duty of filing such application in his office, and register such motor vehicle with the name and address of the owner thereof and the facts stated in such application in a book or index kept for that purpose under the distinctive number and identification mark assigned to such motor vehicle by the secretary of state, and provides further that:

"Such book or index shall be kept in the office of secretary of state and be open to the inspection of any person during reasonable business hours, etc."

I have carefully considered your inquiry and investigated all the constitutional and statutory provisions of our state on the subject of your office and the duties relating to the matter of records pertaining to motor vehicles and have reached the following legal opinion:

(a) That you can have no office outside of the City of Columbus, the seat of our state government.

(b) That under the law you must receive the application of owners of motor vehicles at your office by mail or otherwise and that the record provided for under Section 6299 must be kept at your said office the same being open to any person at all reasonable hours.

The laws on the subject above referred to are so positive in their provisions and the intent of the Legislature in relation to where your office shall be and the purpose of the record being kept therein that I can reach no other conclusions than those above stated.

Respectfully yours,
TIMOTHY S. HOGAN,
Attorney General.

ARTICLES OF INCORPORATION OF INSURANCE CORPORATION MUST BE FILED UNDER SPECIAL STATUTES—CEDAR GROVE SMOKING AND BENEFICIAL ASSOCIATION.

Articles of incorporation which disclose the purpose of conducting a form of insurance must be formed under the special statutes providing for insurance corporations, and such may not be filed as a corporation not for profit.

DEAR SIR:—I beg to acknowledge receipt of your letter of November 25th, transmitting for my consideration the proposed articles of incorporation of "THE CEDAR GROVE SMOKING AND BENEFICIAL ASSOCIATION," a proposed incorporation not for profit, the purpose of which is:

> "to promote sociability among fellow workmen, to assist its members in sickness or distress, and aid the families of deceased members by voluntary contributions under rules, regulations and by-laws to be adopted."

This purpose clause seems to disclose an intention on the part of the incorporators to form a company for purposes substantially amounting to the transaction of an insurance business. That being the case, I am of the opinion, as I have frequently advised you, that its articles of incorporation must conform to someone of the special provisions under the favor of which corporations may be organized for such purposes. The foregoing articles do not conform to any of the statutory provisions. I deem it unnecessary to discuss the failure of the articles to conform to the different provisions in question in detail, but content myself with the statement that there is no statutory provision authorizing the formation of a corporation for the purpose of carrying on any enterprise such as is described in these articles.

I, therefore, advise that you do not file or record them.

Very truly yours,
TIMOTHY S. HOGAN,
Attorney General.

STATE BOARD OF AGRICULTURE—TRANSFER OF SHOW LICENSE FUNDS TO AGRICULTURAL FUND—DUTIES OF AUDITOR OF STATE—LEGISLATIVE DEPARTURE FROM STATUTORY PROVISIONS—ESTABLISHED LEGISLATIVE CUSTOM—CONSTITUTIONAL LAW.

The Auditor of State should not transfer from the General Revenue fund to the State Agricultural fund or any other fund, an amount equal to the receipts from show licenses from the year 1882 to the year 1910 or from the year 1846 to the year 1910, or any other like period of time.

The statutes specificially prescribe for the transfer to the agricultural fund of receipts derived from show licenses and other sources, but the departure from these provisions by the legislature for a period of sixty years for supportable reasons, and an adoption of a different custom, is entitled to "almost conclusive weight."

COLUMBUS, OHIO, January 17, 1912.

HON. E. M. FULLINGTON, Auditor of State, Columbus, Ohio.

DEAR SIR:—I beg to acknowledge receipt of your letter of January 3d, requesting a reconsideration of an opinion rendered by me to the Secretary of the State Board of Agriculture, under date of June 29, 1911, respecting the duty of the Auditor of State to transfer the collections of show licenses from the years 1883 to 1910 from the general revenue fund to the agricultural fund.

The request for a reconsideration is based upon an additional statement of facts in your letter to the effect that prior to the year 1910, when the law reorganizing the State Board of Agriculture and constituting it a department of the State Government went into effect, there was no "Agricultural Fund" in the treasury of the State; that from 1883 to 1910, the show licenses, or rather the State's portion thereof, paid into the state treasury had been placed to the credit of the general revenue fund, and moneys had been appropriated from the general revenue fund for the support of the Ohio State Board of Agriculture during all these years in excess of the amount of such show license money.

As throwing light upon your statement that prior to the reorganization of the State Board of Agriculture, there had been no State Agricultural fund, I have consulted the Revised Statutes and find that what was known as the "State Agricultural Fund" is mentioned but three times therein, as follows:

1. In connection with the show license law it was mentioned, as pointed out in the letter of the Secretary of the State Board of Agriculture to me, in Section 4418, R. S., this section provided in part that "Half of the moneys collected by the several county treasurers under that law should be credited to the "State Agricultural Fund."

2. In connection with the fertilizer law, the "Agricultural Fund" is mentioned in Section 4446*e* of the Revised Statutes, which required the Secretary of the State Board of Agriculture to pay into the fund any surplus arising from license permits issued under that law; and in the same chapter of the Revised Statutes, in connection with the commercial feedstuffs law, it was required by Section 4446*s* that any surplus arising from issuance of licenses for the sale of commercial feed stuffs should be placed to the credit of the Agricultural Fund.

3. By Section 4185, R. S., it was provided that a certain part of the proceeds of the sale of escheated lands should be paid into the State Agricultural Fund.

These, then, were the source of the State Agricultural Fund. The use to which such fund was intended to be devoted was prescribed in Section 3695 R. S., which was as follows:

> "The State Agricultural Fund shall be at the disposal of the (state) board (of agriculture) for the improvement of the agricultural interests of the state; * * * *."

In like manner, Section 3694, R. S., authorized the State Board of Agriculture to,

> "audit and pay its ordinary expenses * * * out of any fund in its possession or out of the State Agricultural Fund, * * * *."

The act creating and incorporating the original State Board of Agriculture was passed in 1846, 44 O. L., 70. At the next session of the General Assembly, in 1847, there was passed an act entitled, "An act to create a permanent agricultural fund in the state of Ohio, and for other purposes, 45 O. L., 43." The first section of that act provided as follows:

> "There shall be created, from the several sources hereinafter mentioned, a fund, which shall be known as the 'State Agricultural Fund.'"

The sources of which this section speaks, as are apparent from the remaining sections of the act, are as follows:

1. Show license moneys (Sections 2 of the act.)
2. Escheated lands (Sections 3 of the act.)

Between the years 1847 and 1898, these constituted the only sources of the fund known as the "State Agricultural Fund." In 1898 the section above referred to of the fertilizer law was passed, and in 1904 the commercial feed stuffs act became a law. Section 6 of the act of 1847 became Section 3695 R. S., above quoted.

My information is that prior to the reorganization of the State Board of Agriculture, no such fund as the "State Agricultural Fund" was maintained in the state treasury, but that all appropriations for the use of the State Board of Agriculture were made from the general revenue fund. I have taken the liberty to verify this statement and have found it to be absolutely correct. From the statements above made by me, you will observe that no change in the law took place in the year 1882, as assumed in your letter and in that of the Secretary of the State Board of Agriculture to me. The date at which the State Agricultural Fund was created and at which the obligation on the part of the fiscal officers of the state to credit payments of show license moneys to such a fund came into existence was, as I have already pointed out, the year 1847. I have examined at random several volumes of the session laws between the year 1847 and the year 1882, and have found that all appropriations for the use of the State Board of Agriculture were made from the general revenue fund. For example, in the year 1859, the legislature, in its general appropriation bill, enacted the following item:

> "For the State Board of Agriculture, being proceeds of show licenses, and escheated lands, the sum of two thousand nine hundred and ninety-nine dollars and forty-one cents." (56 O. L., 221.)

This appropriation was made from the general revenue fund, and it shows, not only the custom of appropriating for the use of the State Board of Agriculture from that fund, but also a belief on the part of the legislature, at any rate, that the proceeds of show licenses and escheated lands which were in the state treasury belonged in the general revenue fund. I find upon investigation, as aforesaid, that this custom of appropriating the exact amount of the proceeds of show licenses and of escheated lands continued for a time, when the legislature began to appropriate, as you yourself state, sums greater than the amount in the treasury from such sources, and eventually came to disregard such amounts altogether.

Why this practice should have arisen seems on the face of matters to require some explanation, in view of the express language of the act of 1847, above quoted. An explanation has occurred to me, which is entirely conjectural, but I venture to suggest the same as tending to throw some light upon what may have taken place.

The act of 1847 purports to create a fund which is to be at the exclusive disposal of the State Board of Agriculture. The evident intention was to make a permanent and continuing appropriation of the moneys arising from two sources referred to in the act to the State Board of Agriculture. This was possible under the constitution of 1802, then in force, which provided, in Section 21 of Article 1 thereof that,

> "No money shall be drawn from the treasury, but in consequence of appropriations made by law."

In 1851, four years after the passage of the act creating the State Agricultural fund and appropriating it to the use of the State Board of Agriculture, the present constitution was adopted. Section 22 of Article II thereof provides that,

> "No money shall be drawn from the treasury, except in pursuance of a specific appropriation, made by law; and no appropriation shall be made for a longer period than two years."

It may have been the view of the fiscal officers of the state and of the legislatures, as evinced by the policy above referred to, that this change in phraseology as between the Constitution of 1851 and that of 1802 effected a repeal of the whole act providing for the creation of the state agricultural fund as a separate fund not subject to appropriation by the general assembly. It may have been the view that the intention of the act of 1847 was not to create a "fund" in the technical sense but merely a sub-division of the general revenue fund. The policy of the state, as above described, is consistent with either of these two theories.

At any rate, it is clear that the full effect could not be given to the provisions of the act of 1847 under the Constitution of 1851. What was done was evidently an effort to observe the spirit of the act of 1847, by making appropriations from the general revenue fund equal to or greater than the amounts received from show licenses and escheats, without keeping such moneys in the treasury as a separate fund.

It is possible also that doubt may have been felt as to the constitutionality of the act of 1847 on the ground that the old State Board of Agriculture was a private corporation. At any rate, we are confronted by a policy of legislation and administration of more than sixty years' standing, under which the Sate Board of Agriculture has received the equivalent, at least, of what was intended for it under the act of 1847.

A policy of such standing is entitled to almost conclusive weight. It is my opinion, therefore, in view of all the foregoing, that the Auditor of State should not transfer from the general revenue fund to the State Agricultural fund or any other fund an amount equal to the receipts from show licenses from the year 1882 to the year 1910, or from the year 1847 to the year 1910, or for any other like period of time. My previous opinion to the Secretary of the State Board of Agriculture was based upon the face of the statute to which he called attention, and I am indebted to you for calling my attention to the history connected with the matter.

Very truly yours,
TIMOTHY S. HOGAN,
Attorney General.

POLICE OFFICERS—MARSHALS, CONSTABLES AND CHIEFS OF POLICE—ALLOWANCE EXPENSES BY MAGISTRATE—AUTOMOBILE HIRE—TRANSPORTING, PURSUING AND SUSTAINING PRISONERS.

A Magistrate is not authorized by statute to make allowances to Constables, Marshals or Chiefs of Police for expenses incurred in pursuing prisoners and therefore, an item alowed by a magistrate for automobile hire as an expense incurred in the performance of such duty is illegal.

Such officers however, may be reimbursed for expenses incurred in transporting and sustaining prisoners.

COLUMBUS, OHIO, January 30, 1912.

HON. E. M. FULLINGTON, Auditor of State, Columbus, Ohio.

DEAR SIR:—Under date of November 28, 1911, you ask an opinion of this department upon the folowing:

> "Since automobiles have come into general use, it appears from cost bills presented to this department that police officers and constables find it very convenient in almost any form of case to hire automobiles at an expense of from ten to twenty-five dollars. So far, we have been disallowing these items.
> I herewith present two cost bills from Athens County, in which you will note that the police officer in each case, has charged ten dollars for automobile service.
> "Question: Is a charge for automobile service made by a police officer, a legal charge against the State, and should the same be paid as other costs?"

The offenses charged in the cases for which cost bills are presented are felonies and the accused has been convicted and sentenced to the Ohio Penitentiary.

The fees to be allowed constables is provided for in section 3347, General Code, which provides:

> "For services rendered, duly elected and qualified constables shall be entitled to receive the following fees: For service and return of copies, orders of arrest, warrant, attachment, garnishee, writ of replevin, or mittimus, forty cents, each, for each person named in the writ; service and return of subpoena, twenty-five cents for one person, service on each additional person named in subpoena, ten cents; service of execution on goods or body, forty cents; on all money made on execution, four per cent.; on each day's attendance before justice of the peace, or jury trial, one dollar; each day's attendance before a justice of the peace on criminal trial, one dollar; on each day's attendance before justice of the peace in forcible detainer, without jury, one dollar; summoning jury, one dollar; mileage, twenty cents for the first mile, and five cents per mile for each additional mile; assistants in criminal causes, one dollar and fifty cents per day, each; Transporting and sustaining prisoners, allowance made by the magistrate, and paid on his certificate; serving all other writs or notices not herein named, forty cents, and mileage as in other cases; copies of all writs, notices, orders or affidavits served, twenty-five cents; summoning and swearing appraisers in case of replevin and attachment, one dollar in each case; advertising property for sale on execution, forty cents; taking bond in replevin, and other cases, fifty cents; each day's attendance on the grand jury, two dollars."

Section 4387, General Code, provides for the fees of a marshal as follows:

"In the discharge of his proper duties, he shall have like powers, be subject to like responsibilities and shall receive the same fees as sheriffs and constables in similar cases, for services actually performed by himself or his deputies and such additional compensation as the council prescribes. In no case shall he receive any fees or compensation for services rendered by any watchman or any other officer, nor shall he receive for guarding, safekeeping or conducting into the mayor's or police court any person arrested by himself or deputies or by any other officer a greater compensation than twenty cents."

Section 4534, General Code, 102 Ohio Laws, 476, provides for the fees of chiefs of police, as follows:

"In felonies, and other criminal proceedings not herein provided for, such mayor shall have jurisdiction and power, throughout the county, concurrent with justices of the peace. The chief of police shall execute and return all writs and process to him directed by the mayor, and shall by himself or deputy attend on the sittings of such court, to execute the orders and process thereof and to preserve order therein, and his jurisdiction and that of his deputies in the execution of such writs and process, and in criminal cases, and in cases of violations or ordinances of the corporation, shall be co-extensive with the county, and in civil cases shall be co-extensive with the jurisdiction of the mayor therein. The fees of the mayor in all cases, excepting those arising out of violations of ordinances, shall be the same as those allowed justices of the peace for similar services and the fees of the chief of police or his deputies in all cases, excepting those arising out of violations of ordinances shall be the same as those allowed sheriffs and constables in similar cases."

Section 2997, General Code, 102 Ohio Laws, 93 provides:

"In addition to the compensation and salary herein provided, the county commissioners shall make allowances quarterly to each sheriff for keeping and feeding prisoners, as provided by law, for his actual and necessary expenses incurred and expended in pursuing or transporting persons accused or convicted of crimes and offenses, in conveying and > transferring persons to and from any state hospital for the insane, the institution for feeble minded youth, Ohio hospital for epileptics, boys' industrial school, girls' industrial home, county homes for the friendless, houses of refuge, children's homes, sanitariums, convents, orphan asylums or homes, county infirmaries, and all institutions for the care, cure, correction, reformation and protection of unfortunates, and all expenses of maintaining horses and vehicles necessary to the proper administration of the duties of his office. The county commissioners shall allow the sheriff his actual railroad fare and street car fare expended in serving civil processes and subpoenaing witnesses in civil and criminal cases, and may allow his necessary livery hire for the proper administration of the duties of his office. Each sheriff shall file under oath with the quarterly report herein provided a full, accurate and itemized account of all his actual and necessary expenses, including railroad fare, street car fare and livery hire mentioned in this section before they shall be allowed by the commissioners."

The fees in question, as shown in the cost bills, purport to have been allowed by the magistrate, although no certificate to that effect is presented. The only authority of a magistrate to make an allowance of fees is found in the clause in Section 3347, General Code, which is "transporting and sustaining prisoners, allowance made by the magistrate, and paid on his certificate." This allowance is for "transporting and sustaining prisoners." One of the costs bills charges for pursuing prisoners. There is a difference between pursuing and transporting prisoners which is recognized in Section 2997, General Code, when it provides: "for his actual and necessary expenses incurred and expended in pursuing or transporting persons accused or convicted of crimes and offenses." By virtue of Section 3347, General Code, the magistrate can only allow for transporting and sustaining prisoners and not for pursuing prisoners.

While Sections 4534 and 4386, General Code, allow marshals and chiefs of police the same fees as sheriffs and constables in similar cases, yet there is no authority of statute extending the provisions of Section 2997, General Code, to constables, marshals, or chiefs of police, so as to give the county commissioners a right to allow them their expenses in pursuing persons accused or convicted of crimes.

Section 3015, General Code, provides:

> "The county commissioners may allow and pay the necessary expenses incurred by an officer in the pursuit of a person charged with felony, who has fled the country."

By this section the county commissioners are authorized to allow the necessary expenses of an officer incurred in the pursuit of a person charged with a felony, who has fled the country.

Section 3016, General Code, provides:

> "In felonies, when the defendant is convicted the costs of the justice of the peace, police judge, or justice, mayor, marshal, chief of police, constable and witnesses, shall be paid from the county treasurer and inserted in the judgment of conviction, so that such costs may be paid to the county from the state treasury. In all cases, when recognizances are taken, forfeited and collected and no conviction is had, such costs shall be paid from the county treasury."

The cases in question come within the provisions of this latter section.

It is my conclusion, therefore, that any allowance made by a magistrate to a constable, marshal, or chief of police as his expenses incurred in the pursuit of a person charged or convicted of a felony is unauthorized and cannot be paid from the state treasury as part of the costs.

An allowance made by the magistrate to such officers for transporting and sustaining prisoners would be a proper item of cost in such cases.

The allowance made by the county commissioners to an officer as his necessary expenses in pursuing a person charged or convicted of a felony, who has fled the country, would be a proper charge in the cost bill of such case.

The items for automobiles in the two cases presented should be disallowed.

Respectfully,

TIMOTHY S. HOGAN,

Attorney General.

STATE AID FOR SCHOOLS—EFFECT OF SMITH LAW—MAXIMUM LEVY—DUTY OF AUDITOR OF STATE—REPEALS BY IMPLICATION.

Since repeals by implication are not admitted unless the latter act is clearly inconsistent with the former, and since both constitutional and legislative provision is made for "thorough and efficient schools," the State Aid law for week school districts has not been repealed by the Smith Law, and the Auditor is still authorized under the proper circumstances to issue his warrant for State Aid as provided in Section 7959 General Code.

Such warrant shall only be issued when the maximum levy for school board purposes, (three-fourths of which has been made for tuition purposes) is insufficient to enable the Board to pay $40 per month for its teachers for eight months of the year.

The "maximum levy" provided for in the State Aid law which was formerly restricted by the twelve mill limitation, is now, by reason of the Smith Law, subject to the four limitations provided for therein. It therefore, follows that what the Budget Commission determines to be the "maximum legal school levy for the district" shall be the maximum levy for the purpose of the State Aid Law.

When, therefore, the Board has properly certified a sufficient sum to the Auditor to provide sufficiently for payment of its teachers, and the Budget Commission has reduced the allowance to such an extent that teachers cannot be paid $40 per month for eight months in the year under the restrictions of Section 7959 General Code and three-fourths of such allowance is made for tuition purposes, the State Auditor may issue his State Aid Warrant.

COLUMBUS, OHIO, January 17, 1912.

HON. E. M. FULLINGTON, Auditor of State, Columbus, Ohio.

DEAR SIR:—I am in receipt of a letter from you under date of November 14th stating a certain question so succinctly that I am constrained to quote the same in full:

> "In view of the many perplexing questions relative to what is known as 'State Aid for Weak School Districts' having been presented to this department, and with the end in view of clearing some of the conflicting provisions relative thereto I request your opinion on the following:

"Section 7595, General Code. 'No person shall be employed to teach in any public school in Ohio for less than forty dollars a month. When a school district has not sufficient money to pay its teachers forty dollars per month for eight months of the year, after the board of education of such district has made the maximum legal school levy, three-fourths of which shall be for the tuition fund, then such school district shall receive from the state treasurer sufficient money to make up the deficiency."

"Section 5649-3*a* (O. L., 102, page 270). 'On or before the first Monday in June, each year * * * each board of education * * * shall submit or cause to be submitted to the county auditor an annual budget, setting forth in itemized form an estimate stating the amount of money needed for each month thereof. * * * *'

"Section 5649-3*c* (O. L. 102, 271) 'The county auditor shall lay before the budget commissioners the annual budgets submitted to him * *. The budget commissioners shall examine such budgets and estimates prepared by the county auditor * * * *. In making such adjustments the budget commissioners may review and change the annual estimate contained in such budgets, and may reduce any or all the items in any such budget * * * *.'

"The maximum levy for school purposes to be made by a board of education prior to June 2, 1911, was 12 mills, and the maximum levy for school purposes to be determined by the budget commissioners under the Act passed May 31st, 1911, and approved June 2, 1911, is 5 mills.

"Section 7595, General Code. '* * * * after the board of education of such school district has made the maximum legal school levy.'

"The former law provided for a maximum levy of 12 mills, to be made by the board of education.

The present law provides for a maximum levy of 5 mills to be determined by the budget commission.

"Question: Under the existing law, is the Auditor of State authorized to issue his warrant for State Aid provided in Section 7959, General Code?

"Question: If under the existing laws the Auditor of State is authorized to issue his warrant for State Aid provided in Section 7595, General Code, what is the maximum levy (three-fourths of which shall be for tuition purposes) necessary to qualify a school district to receive State Aid?

"Question: Is the school district in which the budget commissioners have determined the school levy to be 5 mills qualified to receive state aid, having entered into contracts with the teachers for $40.00, $50.00 and $60.00 per month respectively if after the teachers have performed services under the contracts for a period of six weeks it rescinds former contracts and enters into new contracts at the uniform salary of $40.00 per month, providing any deficiency in excess of an average of $40.00 per month for eight months is paid from outside sources other than tax collections?"

Your first query raises the question as to whether or not the State Aid Law is repealed by the act of June 1, 1911, 102 O. L., 270 popularly known as the "Smith one per cent. law."

You have yourself quoted enough of the provisions of the two acts involved in this question to illustrate the scope of each. As affecting the present question it need only be added that the Smith law does not expressly repeal the State Aid law or any part thereof, nor does it expressly amend any provision of the State Aid Law. Whatever influence the enactment of the Smith Law had upon the effect and operation of the State Aid Law must, therefore, be ascertained by implication. The present question is as to whether or not the Smith Law repeals the State Aid Law. It is a maxim of statutory construction that implied repeals are not favored. The question being as to whether a prior statute is repealed by one of subsequent enactment, a court will look to the controlling intent of both for the purpose of ascertaining whether or not the one can be reconciled with the other. If the essential intention of the earlier statute is imcompatible with that of the later one, no course is open to the court but to hold that an implied repeal has been effected. If, however, the later statute can be given full effect—and it must at all events be given full effect—without impairing the essential idea of the earlier statute, the earlier statute will be regarded as still in force, though perhaps modified to some degree by the provisions of the later one.

Applying this test to the two statutes under consideration the conclusion is reached that there has been no implied repeal. The essential idea and purpose of the whole state and thus to carry more completely into effect the mandate of Article 6, Section 2 of the Constitution which provides that, of the weak school district law is to further equality of opportunity to the youth

> "The general assembly shall make such provision by taxation, or otherwise, as, that the income arising from the school fund, will secure a thorough and efficient system of common schools throughout the state * * * * *."

The full intent of the framers of this constitutional provision was not realized so long as boards of education of the more wealthy districts of the state were able to pay their teachers such compensation as would attract the ablest members of the profession, while those of the poorer districts found themselves unable to pay compensation that would attract any competent teacher. Under such conditions the youth of the poorer districts did not receive the same school advantages as those of the more wealthy districts, and thus the common school system of the state was not equal "thorough and efficient throughout the state." In point of fact, as is well known, this was the actual condition of affairs under the scheme of legislation which provided merely for the levy of the state common school fund and its redistribution on the basis of enumerated pupils. It is quite apparent, therefore, that the obviation of this condition and the closest possible approximation of the constitutional idea must have been the legislative motive evinced in the enactment of the State Aid Law. If there were any doubt about this point the same would be removed by consideration of the very first sentence of the act which is as follows:

> "No person shall be employed to teach in any public school in Ohio for less than $40.00 a month."

To provide funds necessary to accomplish this purpose the legislature in the same act proceeded to pledge the support of the state to such districts as might not have "sufficient money to pay their teachers $40.00 per month for eight months of the year."

The money which any school district would have under the scheme of legislation in force at the time of the passage of the State Aid Law would have been derived from two sources, viz, the state common school fund, and the proceeds of local levies for school purposes. It was the intent of the act, as manifested by the further provisions thereof, that the ability of a school district to pay its teachers the minimum wage therein prescribed should be measured by the maximum revenue that could be made available to the district from these two sources. Such a test was absolutely necessary from a practical standpoint. It required that each board of education make the "maximum legal school levy, three-fourths of which shall be for the tuition fund," as a measure of the ability of the district to raise sufficient money to pay its teachers $40.00 a month for eight months.

It thus appears that the full and complete essential legislative intent embodied in the State Aid Law was that State aid should be offorded to such school districts as were unable from the limits of taxation applicable to local school levies to pay their teachers $40.00 per month for eight months in the year, so that this minimum wage could at all events be paid by every school district in the state.

The foregoing, I believe to be the true construction of the State Aid Law. That is, I understand the phrase "the maximum legal school levy" as therein used to mean "the maximum levy for local school purposes which may be made within the limitations upon the taxing power prescribed by the state." It was clearly not the intent of the general assembly to adopt by reference the existing limitations of the taxing power for this purpose and to make them a part of the State Aid act for all time so that a change in the degree or method of limiting the taxing power for local school purposes would work an implied repeal of the State Aid act. The phrase seems to have been purposely adopted with a view to permitting its adjustment, so to speak, to any changes made by the legislature in the taxing statutes.

Now at the time the State Aid Law was passed the sole and only limitation upon the taxing power for local school purposes was that of twelve mills which restrained the authority of the board of education in making its local levies. If the legislature had chosen in the meantime simply to raise or to lower this limitation of mills there would have been no question, I think, but that the new rate would have been the "maximum levy for school purposes" within the meaning of Section 7595, and that such legislation would not in any way have impaired the continuing effect of the weak school district law, although it might have had the practical effect of rendering a larger number of school districts eligible to state aid than had been eligible under the previous legislation.

So much then for the construction of the state Aid Law, and the determination of the controlling intent thereof. Nowhere in that law can there be found an intention to make any specific limitation or any specific kind of limitation or test of ability of a local school district to levy locally for tuition fund purposes. But even if such an intent could be found in the State Aid Law it would have been a minor and unessential element of that law not to be preserved, in my judgment, at the hazard of thwarting the essential and principal purpose of the act by and through some subsequent legislation changing the manner of ascertaining the limits of taxation. In either view of the case such a change would not repeal the State Aid Law by implication.

Now the Smith one per cent law applies principally to limitations on the taxing power and its essential intent has to do with such limitations although there are minor provisions of the act which relate to the expenditure of moneys raised by taxation. It would not be profitable in this opinion to go into details of the operation of the law. These are lucidly explained by the supreme court in the journey entry in the case of State ex rel vs. Sanzenbacher incompletely reported in the 84th Ohio State, and in paragraph 4 thereof as subsequently modified.

Broadly speaking, the law provides that in no taxing district shall a greater amount of taxes be levied in 1911 or in any year thereafter than was levied therein for all purposes in the year 1910; that in no taxing district shall a greater amount of taxes be levied for all purposes in the year 1911 or thereafter than will necessitate a rate exceeding ten mills exclusive of levies for interest and sinking fund purposes; that in no case shall all levies exclusive of emergency levies and inclusive of interest and sinking fund levies in the aggregate require a rate in any taxing district exceeding fifteen mills; that local levies for school purposes, for example, shall be limited to five mills; that the enforcement of the several limitations of the act shall be effected by and through the agency of what is known as the budget commission, the sole duty of which body is to see that in no taxing district any of the limitations of the act are exceeded.

The interposition of the budget commission has, so to speak, a reviewing authority as to tax levies, creates a check upon the levying power of the board of education. No longer is that power untrammeled save by the single limitation of twelve mills or by any other single limitation. Now levies of a board of education must, so to speak share with other local levies applicable in the same territory in the fund to be derived from the maximum levy for all purposes as prescribed by the Smith Law. It is the duty of the budget commission to determine the proportion in which the school district shall thus share in the gross fund, but in the exercise of this power the budget commission is itself limited by the construction of the act as enunciated by the supreme court in the case above cited, and must observe as far as possible the proportions of five mills, three mills and two mills etc., prescribed by Section 5649-3*a* of the law.

The ultimate conclusion then is that in the Smith Law the legislature has provided four limitations above enumerated upon the power to levy for local school purposes instead of one as formerly. The enforcement of all of these limitations is left to an administrative board created for that purpose; but the limitations themselves are none the less limitations prescribed by the law of the state just as the former limit of twelve mills was a limitation imposed by the law of the state. There is, therefore, nothing essentially different in the Smith Law with respect to the purpose and intent of the State Aid Law from the provisions in force at the time the State Aid Law was adopted.

It follows from all that has been said that whether or not the particular method of applying the State's limitation upon the taxing power of the board of education which was in force at the time of the enactment of the State Aid Law be regarded as having been in the mind of the General Assembly when the law was passed, and whether or not levies under the Smith Law be regarded as being made by the board of education or by the budget commission, the Smith one per cent. law merely changes the method of determining what the maximum levy for school purposes under the law of the state, which may in a given instance be applicable to a particular school district, is; that, therefore, it does not seem to be inconsistent with any of the provisions of the State Aid Law and certainly not with the controlling and essential provisions thereof; and that for these reasons the State Aid Law was not repealed when the Smith Law was enacted.

We come now to the question directly raised by your second inquiry,—a very practical one from your view point as to how the State Aid Law is to be applied under the Smith one per cent. law. This question may be answered by ascertaining what is the "maximum legal school levy" as referred to in Section 7595 and as fixed by the Smith Law.

If it be deemed essential to the legislative purpose in the enactment of the State Aid Law that the test in all events be applied to the action of the board of education, then this question must be approached from one end: if the personality, so to speak, of the board of education be deemed an unessential provision of the State Aid Law then a different method must be adopted. In either event, however, the conclusion reached is the same. If the exact meaning of the State Aid Law be that a board of education is entitled to State aid for its district, if it has done all in its power under the law to raise the money by taxation and is unable to raise enough because of limitations on its power to pay its teachers $40.00 a month for eight months, then we need only to inquire as to what the power and duty of the board of education is under the law. It appears from Section 5649-3*a* of the Smith Law that it is incumbent upon the board of education to file annually with the county auditor an estimate setting forth in detail form the needs of the school district for the incoming year. When this is done the board of education, so to speak, drops out of the machinery of taxation entirely. It now devolves upon the budget commission to compare this estimate with the estimates from other taxing districts including the territory of the school district or part thereof for the purpose of ascertaining whether or not all the money estimated to be needed by the several taxing authorities can be levied in every part of the territory of the school district without exceeding any of the limitations of the Smith Law. If this can be done the budget commission simply certifies each estimate to the county auditor untouched by it, and the county auditor computes the rate of taxation necessary to produce the estimated amount on the duplicate of the district. If, however, it is ascertained that all the sums estimated as needed for the incoming year for the several taxing districts, if allowed, would require a rate or amount of taxation which would offend against one or more of the limitations of the Smith Law, then it is the duty of the budget commission to reduce the estimates submitted to it, and the several items thereof having due regard to proportions of which the several taxing authorities submitting estimates are permitted to levy taxes according to the internal limitations of Section 5649-3*a* by such amounts as will insure compliance with every limitation of the law.

It thus appears that the power of the board of education as such is exhausted when it has filed its estimate. In this view of the case, then, the maximum exercise of power which the board of education itself may make, is the filing of an estimate which shall include all of its needs for the incoming year. This method of reasoning leading to the conclusion above reached is open to objection however because it is at least questionable whether the intention of the General Assembly in the enactment of the State Aid Law was to refer to the exercise of power by the board of education. It seems more likely to me at least that the real intention was to refer to the maximum levy of taxes for the school district whether that levy be regarded as having been made in the full sense by the board of education or by some other body, such as the budget commission. That is to say, if instead of the Smith one per cent. law the General Assembly had enacted a law providing that the county commissioners should determine the rate of taxation for local school purposes, I do not think such legislation would have impaired the State Aid Law despite the mention in that law of the "board of education." So, whether or not it is now the board of education which determines the amount or rate to be levied for school purposes the real intention of the State Aid Law applies to the taxing officer or board which does ultimately determine the rate of taxation for local school purposes; or more accurately, the real intention of the State Aid law is to impose its test upon the making of the maximum legal school levy whatever that may be, and by whatever agency it may be effected.

Now the budget commission in a philosophical sense is not the levying authority. It is not so designated in the law nor was it so regarded by the supreme court, as is evident from the language of that court employed in its decision in the case above cited. The Smith Law imposes certain limitations; these must be enforced by some administrative authority; the budget commission is created for this purpose; it is simply the agency of the state whereby the will of the legislature is carried into effect; its determinations have the force and effect of legal limitations upon the taxing power just as if they were regarded as acts of the General Assembly. There is not one limitation upon the school levy, but as I have said there are four such limitations. The action of the budget commission is simply the application of these limitations. It follows, as a matter of course, that what the budget commission determines to be the maximum amount which may be levied for a school district for local school purposes is "the maximum legal school levy for that district." This definition of the term satisfies every requirement of Section 7595.

I have already pointed out that the legislature did not necessarily have in mind a single limitation on the taxing power in enacting the State Aid Law, but certainly did have in mind any and all limitations which might at a given time curb the power of taxing for local school purposes.

It follows from what has been said that it is erroneous to regard the five mill limitation of Section 5649-3*a* which applies expressly to levies for local school purposes as being the "maximum legal levy for school purposes," or at least as being the only maximum levy for such purpose under the Smith Law. In a given instance other limitations of the Smith Law may interfere and prevent this limitation of five mills from operating at all. Thus if the needs of a school district which are to be determined by the board of education without reference to the duplicate, and without computing the number of mills necessary to produce sufficient revenue therefor, are found by the budget commission to involve a levy of four mills on the duplicate of the district, and the needs of other taxing districts levying in the same territory, as reported to the budget commission, are such that this levy of four mills together with the others would produce an aggregate levy which would violate the ten mill limitation of the Smith Law of the fifteen mill limitation thereof, or the limitation measured by the amount of taxes levied in the year 1910, then it would devolve upon the budget commission to reduce the estimate of the board of education together with those of other taxing authorities so as to enforce the limitations of the law. If the effect of such reduction would be to make it impossible for the school district to pay its teachers $40.00 a month for eight months, then such district would be in the position of being without sufficient funds to comply with the Weak School District Law under its power of levying for local school purposes. It would be a weak school district in every sense of the word as contemplated in the State Aid Law, and in my opinion if qualified in other respects should be given State Aid.

The only manner in which the five mill limitation of the Smith Law could be practically applied as the "maximum levy for school purposes" within the meaning of the State Aid Law in a case like that above described would be by holding that if the budget commission reduce the estimate for local school purposes below that which is certified to it, it does so at the peril of disqualifying the district for State aid; or rather my holding that a school district which does not need five mills in order to pay its teachers $40.00 a month can never receive State aid, and that, therefore, the budget commission ought never to reduce the estimate of such school district because its action would result in a deficiency which could not be supplied by the state.

Such a holding is impossible under the language of the Smith law. The budget commission is not supposed to be advised as to the number of teachers employed by a board of education nor as to the amount of compensation to be paid to each. The Smith Law does not provide that the commission shall take into consideration any such matters in making its reductions, and the supreme court has expressly provided that reduction shall be made with due regard to the proportions of which the various taxing districts, including the same territory, are permitted to levy by Section 5649-3*a*. Therefore, it cannot be held that the budget commission is obliged, practically or otherwise, to investigate and determine for itself the necessity of a school district under the Weak School District Law so as to guide it in its action in reducing the budget. Such a holding would also result in producing a lack of uniformity in the operation of the Smith Law as effecting all taxing districts excepting school districts. If the Smith Law was amended so as to provide that an estimate filed by a board of education as prescribed by Section 5649-3*a* should set forth the various facts required as a condition precedent to qualification as a weak school district by Section 7595, General Code, and that such estimate should not be reduced below five mills, if the effect of such reduction would be to make it impossible for the district to pay its teachers $40.00 a month for eight months, then it would have to be held that the five mill limitation of the Smith one per cent. law, which would then be the only limitation applicable to local school levies so far as the tuition fund was concerned would be the maximum levy within the meaning of Section 7595. In the absence of such express language in the section the opposite conclusion which I have already expressed must necessarily follow.

A construction of the two statutes which would regard the five mill limitation as the maximum legal school levy within the meaning of the state aid law would, therefore, result in denying state aid to school districts unable, because of the operation of the law of the State to pay their teachers $40.00 per month for eight months. Such a holding would defeat the purpose of the State Aid Law in its entirety. If this be the meaning of the Smith Law, then, in my judgment, it has worked an implied repeal of the State Aid Law, and for that very reason this construction is not to be favored.

On the other hand, I am aware that the opinion which I have expressed, and the construction which I have approved, are likely to result in an abuse of power by the budget commission, and certainly will result, with or without abuse of power, in causing many more school districts to come with in the classification of weak school districts than have heretofore been found therein. Perhaps it is fair to say that the construction which I have adopted will render school districts weak which have heretofore never been able or willing to qualify as such. I am frank to say that at the time I made up my mind as to the true meaning of the two statutes I was impressed with the idea that that meaning would result in a condition which would seriously embarrass the treasury of the state by either exhausting the state common school fund from which appropriations for state aid have heretofore been made and necessitating the distribution of said fund generally in a lesser amount per enumerated pupil than has heretofore been the practice; or, on the other hand, would result in necessitating appropriations for state aid from the general revenue fund, which seems to be already taxed to its full capacity.

I have given due weight to this consideration although, it being a mere argument of inconvenience, it is not entitled to great weight in determining what the law is. It simply amounts to an objection that the construction which I have formulated would render the State Aid Law too expensive to the state, and would render its operation subject to abuse in favor of the school districts and against the state. It is a sufficient answer to these objections to say, as to the first, that the matter of expense is entirely conjectural, and, as to the second, that, having regard to the essential intent and purpose of the state aid law, a construction which might be open to abuse as against the state is at all events to be preferred to one which would certainly lead to a denial of the benefits of the State Aid Act to any school district, and would thus defeat the essential purpose of that act, and that it must be presumed in law that the budget commission will not abuse the powers entrusted to it.

From all the foregoing I am of the opinion, in answer to your first question, that the auditor of State is authorized to issue his warrant for state aid as provided in Section 7595, General Code, despite the passage of the Smith one per cent law, so-called.

In answer to your second question, I beg to state that in my opinion the maximum levy necessary to qualify a school district to receive state aid in any levy, or rather any estimate of amount made by the board of education of a school district and filed with the county auditor as represented the total amount necessary for all local school purposes for the incoming year, three-fourths thereof being for tuition purposes, if only said estimate is reduced in such manner as to leave undisturbed the proportion which the tuition fund bears to the total school levy, by the action of the budget commission; that is to say, a practical rule for the guidance of the auditor of state in discharging his duty under Section 7596, General Code, and under the Smith one per cent. law is as follows:

The auditor of state must require from the county auditor a certified statement of the following facts:

1. The amount estimated by the board of education for its budget as necessary for tuition fund purposes.

2. The amount so certified as necessary for all other local purposes.

The auditor of state must ascertain in whether the amount certified for tuition purposes is less than three-fourths of the total amount estimated to be necessary for all purposes exclusive of sinking fund, and if so he need investigate no further and must refuse to issue his warrant.

3. The amount of the estimate for the several purposes as reduced by the budget commission. The auditor of state must then ascertain whether the tuition fund estimate as reduced still constitutes three-fourths of the total amount estimated for all purposes exclusive of sinking fund as reduced. If the proper proportion still exists the district is thus far qualified; if not the auditor need investigate no further and must refuse to issue his warrant.

4. The amount of money paid over to the board of education by the county treasurer at the February and August settlements to the credit of the tuition fund for local school purposes.

5. The number of teachers employed in the school district; the salaries contracted for, and the number of persons of school age in the district.

These facts are to be used in determining the qualifications of a school district the same as they have heretofore been used for that purpose.

6. The deficiency for the relief of which state aid is asked.

The deficiency for which a state aid voucher may be issued by the auditor of state may not exceed the difference between the amount of revenue paid to the board of education at the two semi-annual settlements (Item 4 above), and the amount estimated by the board of education as constituting its needs for the incoming year (Item 1 above), unless the amount estimated was not cut down by the budget commission, as shown by comparison of items 1 and 3 above. If the amount estimated has not been reduced by the budget commission the board of education would, therefore, be itself responsible for the deficit, in that it did not exercise the degree of care required by the letter and the spirit of the Smith Law in providing for its expenditures for the incoming year, and then, in my judgment, the board has failed to qualify. If, on the other hand, as already indicated, the board's estimate was reduced by the budget commission, and yet the amount of the deficiency added to the amount of revenue paid over by the county treasurer at the semi-annual settlement exceeds the amount of the estimate, then the board of education is not disqualified, but is not permitted to have state aid for the entire deficiency, but only for that part which equals the difference between the revenues actually collected and the amount of its estimate.

As I have enumerated the various items which I think ought to be set forth by the county auditor in his certificate to the auditor of state I have tried to indicate the rules that are to guide the auditor of state in acting thereon.

I realize that this method of procedure is quite different from that heretofore in vogue, and seems, at first blush, to distroy the old distinction between a weak school district and one which is not weak. In reality there is no such change of status. The method above suggested simply provides the relief necessary to enable a school district to pay teachers $40.00 per month for eight months in the year when the inability to pay such sum for such time is due to the operation of the limitations of the taxing power to be exerted for local school purposes, which limitations are created by the law of the state. This is precisely what the original state aid act is. If more school districts become weak than have been weak in the past under this ruling, this is but a natural result of the imposition by the Smith law of four limitations upon the taxing power in place of one. At the same time the procedure above outlined discourages carelessness and niggardliness in estimating expenses for the incoming year, and will operate in furtherance of the intention of the Smith Law in this particular.

With respect to your third question I beg to state that I have under advisement another question submitted by you which is closely related thereto. I would prefer with your consent, to consider these two questions together and to pass upon them at the same time. I, therefore, ask your indulgence in permitting me to withhold my opinion at this time upon that question and to incorporate its answer in the other opinion referred to.

Very truly yours,
TIMOTHY S. HOGAN,
Attorney General.

STATE AID TO SCHOOLS—PAYMENT OF SUPERINTENDENT AND INSTITUTE EXPENSES NOT INCLUDED WITHIN LIMITATIONS—TUITION FUND—TEACHERS' SALARIES.

A Board of Education is not to be denied State Aid by reason of the fact that is pays authorized expenses other than teachers' salaries out of the tuition fund, such as Superintendent's salary and institute fees.

The amount of State Aid allowed, however, shall not exceed such sum as is necessary to make teachers' salaries equal to $40.00 per month.

COLUMBUS, OHIO, February 26, 1912.

HON. E. M. FULLINGTON, Auditor of State, Columbus, Ohio.

DEAR SIR:—Under date of September 19th you have requested my written opinion as follows:

> "Under the Act to provide for State Aid for weak school districts, is the district entitled to State Aid which has employed a Superintendent in excess of forty dollars per month? Does the employment of a Superintendent or a teacher in excess of forty dollars per month, disqualify a school district to receive State Aid?"

In answering the above question I assume that the Board of Education of such weak school districts made the maximum levy of twelve mills, three-fourths of which was used for tuition purposes, but that the total amount received for tuition purposes for the school year ending August 31, 1911, was insufficient, and therefore a deficit was created. I also assume that the question is asked in reference to the law prior to the passage of the Smith one per cent. law passed by the last legislature.

Section 7595 of the General Code provides:

> "No person shall be employed to teach in any public school in Ohio for less than forty dollars a month. When a school district has not sufficient money to pay its teachers forty dollars per month for eight months of the year, after the board of education of such district has made a maximum legal school levy, three-fourths of which shall be for the tuition fund, then such school district may receive from the state treasurer sufficient money to make up the deficiency."

The fund from which the school teachers are paid is the tuition fund of such district and is made up from two sources.

1. From the amount received from the State of Ohio from what is designated the "State common school fund" and the "common school fund," which under the provisions of Section 7603, General Code is to be expended only in the payment of salaries of superintendent and teachers.

2. From three-fourths of the taxes raised by the maximum school levy.

The salaries of school teachers are to be paid monthly.

Section 7595, General Code provides that no person shall be employed to teach in any public school in Ohio for less than forty dollars per month.

While the Supreme Court in the unreported case of Layne, Administrator vs. Board of Education, No. 11428 on the docket of the supreme Court, seems to have held that a board of education may contract with a teacher for less than forty dollars per month notwithstanding the provisions of Section 7595, General Code that no teacher shall be employed for less than forty dollars per month, yet as the provision that no teacher shall be employed for less than forty dollars a month is contained in the same section as the provision for State Aid, I think it clearly to be the intent of the legislature that in order for a school district to receive State Aid all the teachers thereof shall be employed at a salary of at least forty dollars per month, being the minimum salary provided in such section, and that if a board of education does not pay each and every teacher at least forty dollars a month, the minimum salary provided in such section, such school district shall not be entitled to receive State Aid.

The section further provides that when a school district has not sufficient money to pay its teachers forty dollars per month for eight months in the year after the board of education of such district has made the maximum school levy, three-fourths of which shall be for tuition fund, then such school district may receive from the State treasury sufficient money to make up the deficit.

The tuition fund of a school district is the fund from which various payments shall be made other than to teachers. For instance, Section 7702, General Code provides that a city board of education shall appoint a suitable person to act as superintendent of the public schools. It would seem that the appointment of such a superintendent was mandatory upon the city school district.

Section 7690, General Code provides that each board of education may appoint a superintendent of the public schools and it would seem to me that such provision although not mandatory was permissive.

Under the provisions of Sections 7735 and 7736 General Code a board of education is required by law to pay the tuition of elementary pupils either from the tuition or contingent fund.

By the provisions of Section 7751, General Code a board of education is required to pay the tuition of pupils of a high school from either the tuition or contingent fund providing no further levy has been made under said section.

By the provision of Section 7870, General Code a board of education is required to pay in addition to the regular salary the amount due the teachers for attendance at teachers' institutes.

It would, therefore, appear that while the tuition fund is primarily for the payment of teachers' salaries at forty dollars per month, yet there are certain obligations fixed upon the board of education by law to pay from such tuition fund obligations other than the salaries of teachers. In other words, the institute fees are to be paid in addition to the teachers' salaries, the superintendent's salary is to be paid in addition to the teachers' salaries and the tuition fees of elementary pupils and high school pupils are to be paid either from the tuition or contingent fund, and therefore, should the contingent fund be insufficient the liability is placed against the tuition fund.

It will, therefore, be seen that it is not contemplated by the legislature that the tuition fund of a school district shall be used solely for the payment of salaries of teachers thereof, but that the same shall also be used for other purposes.

As I view the provisions of Section 7595, General Code it means simply if the school district does not receive into its tuition fund a sum which would be sufficient to pay its teachers forty dollars a month for eight months, such school district is entitled to receive enough money to make up the amount which would be necessary to pay its teachers such minimum salary. It does not mean, as it seems to me, that the board of education cannot pay other obligations which are placed either primarily or secondarily upon the tuition fund from such tuition fund, nor does it mean that it is restricted to the payment of the minimum salary to the various teachers of the school district, but merely that the state will only pay to such school district the difference between the total amount of the tuition fund received and the amount which would have been necessary to pay its teachers the minimum salary.

I am, therefore, of the opinion that a board of education may use the tuition fund for the payment of obligations in excess of forty dollars a month for teachers, but that in applying for State Aid such board of education shall only be entitled to an amount which would equal a sum necessary to pay the requisite number of teachers a salary of forty dollars a month after deducting the total amount of the tuition fund actually received.

Very truly yours,

TIMOTHY S. HOGAN,

Attorney General.

APPROPRIATION FOR MAINTENANCE OF OHIO NATIONAL GUARD—"DRILL PAY" INCURRED PRIOR TO FEBRUARY 11, 1911, BUT PAYABLE MARCH 1, 1911.

The appropriation bill passed for "Maintenance Ohio National Guard" has not been made as strict legality requires, from the State Military fund. The amount appropriated however, is in strict conformity with the law relating thereto, and the departure is founded in an established custom, which there is no occasion to question.

Said appropriation bill expressly provides that the funds provided for shall not be used to pay liabilities incurred prior to February 10, 1912, yet, inasmuch as the liability for "Drill Pay," although originating at the time the soldier performs the duties, is not due and payable until reports are properly made to the Adjutant General, i. e. March 1st, no liability can be said to exist as far as the state is concerned, until then.. Therefore, "Drill Pay" must have been intended by the Legislature to be met by the appropriation extending from February 11, 1911 to February 11, 1912.

COLUMBUS, OHIO, March 12, 1912.

HON. E. M. FULLINGTON, Auditor of State, Columbus, Ohio.

DEAR SIR:—I beg to acknowledge receipt of your letter of February 23d, requesting my opinion as follows:

> "Out of the appropriation made to the Ohio National Guard for the years 1911 and 1912, is paid the "Drill Pay" of the enlisted men of the Guard. In 1910, the Adjutant General exhausted his appropriation for other purposes, and did not have enough money to complete the drill pay. The Legislature in 1911 made an appropriation to meet this deficiency out of amount allotted to them under the law for 1911. They are now confronted with the same proposition for their obligations for drill pay for the year 1911. Their appropriation for Maintenance Ohio National Guard is exhausted, and they have some liabilities for drill pay. Section 2 of the General Appropriation Bill for 1912, provides that the moneys appropriated shall be available to pay liabilities incurred on and after February 16, 1912, but shall not in any way be expended to pay liabilities or deficiencies existing prior to February 16, 1912. This provision will not permit of my allowing the vouchers issued for drill pay in 1911 out of the appropriation for Maintenance of Ohio National Guard for the year 1912, unless it is construed that this is a continuing appropriation. If this view is taken, there should be some point where the liability against succeeding years' appropriations should cease, and it is contended by the Adjutant General that this should be at the close of the two year period, February 16, 1912.
> "I would be pleased to have your view of the situation, and advise as to whether or not I can pay liabilities incurred for drill pay prior to February 16, 1912, out of the appropriation for Maintenance Ohio National Guard," made in the appropriation bill for 1912."

The following sections of the General Code must be considered in connection with the question which you ask:

"Section 5265. The auditor of state shall credit to the 'state military fund' from the general revenues of the state, a sum equal to ten cents for each person who was a resident of the state, as shown by each last preceding federal census. Such fund shall be a continuous fund and available only for the support of the organized militia. It shall not be diverted to any other fund or used for any other purpose.

"Section 5266. The general assembly shall appropriate annually, and divide into two funds, the amount authorized by the preceding section. Such funds shall be respectively known as the 'state armory fund' and 'maintenance Ohio national guard fund.'

"Section 5267. From the 'maintenance Ohio national guard fund,' the adjutant general shall pay the per diem, transportation, subsistence and incidental expenses of militia companies, inspections and incidental expenses of camp, including horse hire, fuel, lumber, forage of horses, and medical supplies.

"Section 5268. From the 'state armory fund,' the board shall provide armories by leasing, purchasing or constructing as provided in this chapter."

I presume that the auditor of state has performed the duty devolving upon him by Section 5265, and that there is in the state treasury a fund known as the "state military fund," which is a continuous fund and available only for the support of the organized militia, not to be diverted to any other fund or used for any other purpose. If that is the case I am convinced by considerations that seem to me to be obvious that such a fund, so set apart, is not to be regarded as a subdivision of the general revenue fund of the state. If it were a subdivision of the general revenue fund of the state any general assembly might appropriate any portion of it for any uses and purposes whatever.

The history of appropriations to which you refer generally in your letter is perhaps best disclosed by quotation from the bills passed by the last session of the General Assembly.

On February 22, 1911 there was passed, and on February 28th there was approved, an Act, being House Bill 117, entitled "An Act to make partial appropriations for the last three-quarters of the fiscal year ending November 15, 1911, and the first quarter of the fiscal year ending February 15, 1912." Section 1 of that act provided in part as follows:

"That the following sums, for the purposes hereinafter specified, be, and the same are hereby, appropriated out of any moneys in the state treasury to the credit of the general revenue fund, not otherwise appropriated, to-wit:

* * * * * * * *

OHIO NATIONAL GUARD

Maintenance Ohio National Guard.....$50,000.00"

Section 2 of that act provided as follows:

"The moneys appropriated in the preceding section shall not be in any way expended to pay liabilities or deficiencies existing prior to February 15, 1911, nor shall they be used or paid out for purposes other than those for which said sums are specifically appropriated as aforesaid." (102 O. L. 14-27)

On April 26, 1911 the General Assembly passed an Act, approved April 28, 1911, of which the following is a complete copy:

> "An Act to make appropriations for the maintenance of the Ohio national guard.
> "WHEREAS, At the session of the general assembly in 1909, an act was passed entitled 'An act to provide the carrying into effect the provisions of article 9, of the Constitution of Ohio,' and,
> "WHEREAS, By reason of the carrying into effect the provisions of this act in the appropriations of the moneys for the maintenance of the Ohio national guard various liabilities than outstanding and since incurred for transportation and other items making up the maintenance account could not be ascertained or known by the state until after February 15, 1910, or February 15, 1911, and then the amounts could not be paid from either of the appropriations for the years beginning February 16, 1910, or February 16, 1911, and are, therefore now outstanding and unpaid for the want of authority only on the part of the state to pay these liabilities, existing prior to the above named dates, from the funds set aside on January 1, 1910, or January 1, 1911, for the maintenance of the Ohio national guard, such liabilities now aggregating twenty thousand seven hundred six dollars and eighty cents ($20,706.80); therefore,
> "Be it enacted by the General Assembly of the State of Ohio:
> "Section 1. That there be and is hereby appropriated from any moneys raised, set aside or coming into the state treasury for the maintenance of the Ohio national guard for the year ending December 31, 1911, to pay liabilities outstanding and unpaid prior to February 15, 1911, the sum of twenty thousand seven hundred six dollars and eighty cents ($20,706.80)."

On May 31, 1911 the General Assembly passed an act entitled "An Act to make general appropriations," which was approved June 14, 1911. (102 O. L. 373). The first section of this act provided in part:

> "That the following sums, for the purposes hereinafter specified, be and the same are hereby appropriated out of any moneys in the state treasury to the credit of the general revenue fund, not otherwise appropriated, to-wit:
> State armory fund ---------- $200,000.00
> Maintenance Ohio national guard ---------- $206,005.80"

Section 2 of said act provided as follows:

> "That the moneys appropriated in the preceding section shall be available to pay liabilities incurred on and after February 16, 1911, but shall not in any way be expended to pay liabilities or deficiencies existing prior to February 16, 1911, nor shall they be used or paid out for purposes other than those for which said sums are specifically appropriated as aforesaid."

Another act, passed and approved on the same respective dates as the act just mentioned, and similarly entitled, provided as follows: (102 O. L. 393)

"Section 1. That the following sums, for the purposes hereinafter specified, be and the same are hereby appropriated out of any moneys in the state treasury to the credit of the general revenue fund, not otherwise appropriated, to-wit:

* * * * * * * *

State armory fund.....$200,000.00

"Section 2. That the moneys appropriated in the preceding section shall be available to pay liabilities incurred on and after February 16, 1912, but shall not in any way be expended to pay liabilities or deficiencies existing prior to February 16, 1912, nor shall they be used or paid out for purposes other than those for which said sums are specifically appropriated as aforesaid * * * * *."

The Act of April 28, 1911 is quite ambiguous because it appropriates neither from the general revenue fund nor from the state military fund, but from "any moneys raised, set aside or coming into the state treasury for the maintenance of the Ohio national guard for the year ending December 31, 1911." I take it, however, that rather than to hold this act invalid for ambiguity a court would regard it as aptly describing "the state military fund." It is to be observed that the act of April 28, 1911 is the only act which appropriates any money from the "state military fund." Yet, I am led to believe, from the statements in your letter, that the sum of $476,712.10, being the amount appropriated for the year 1912 for the state armory fund and the maintenance of the Ohio national guard, equals the amount which would be produced by setting aside ten cents for each person in the state as shown by the last preceding federal census; that is to say, the population of the State of Ohio, as shown by the census of 1910 was 4,767,121.

This amount should be designated as a separate fund and the general assembly virtually ignored Section 5265 et seq. when it appropriated for the year 1912, for example, for the maintenance of the Ohio national guard, and for the state armory board, from the general revenue fund. However, I am aware that this is a practice in accordance with the custom of many years standing, in pursuance of which many funds, designated in the statutes as separate from the general revenue fund, are treated in the appropriation bills as subdivisions thereof. With the propriety of this custom I have nothing to do.

By process of addition it will at once be ascertained that the $50,000 appropriated from the general revenue fund by the partial appropriation bill, the $20,706.80 appropriated from the state military fund by the act of April 28, 1911, the $206,005.30 appropriated from the general revenue fund by the general appropriation bill for 1911, and the $200,000.00 appropriated for armory purposes by the general bill of 1911 from the general revenue fund, in the aggregate, equal the amount of $476,712.10, which, I have already stated, appears to be the amount of the state military fund.

It appears, therefore, that although the legislature has erroneously and inadvertently appropriated from two separate sources for the maintenance of the Ohio national guard and for state armory purposes, it has, in the aggregate, appropriated the exact amount of the state military funds. I have taken the liberty to consult the books of your office as to the manner of handling the four appropriations for the year 1911 and find that credit has been given to the Ohio national guard for the entire sum of $476,712.10. I mention this fact because I had drawn from your letter the erroneous conclusion that the $20,706.80 appropriated by the act of April 28, 1911 had been charged against the partial or the general appropriation for the same purpose. This is not so, as I have already stated; and the Ohio National Guard has received credit for and has expended all but a small part of the total amount of what would have been the "state military fund," if the legislature had properly designated the source of its appropriations for this purpose.

In fact, the legislature appropriated more than the amount of the state military fund; for purposes designated in Section 5267 as within the general description of "maintenance Ohio national guard" the sum of $5,500 for transportation deficiency was carried in the unauthorized deficiency bill of the year 1911, and appropriated out of the general revenue fund. (102 O. L. 367) I presume, however, that this item is more properly a part of the extraordinary expenses incident to the riot service of the national guard and should be considered together with the appropriation of $180,000 for this purpose, found on page 3 of 102 O. L., rather than considered as an addition to the amount appropriated for current needs of the national guard.

Confusing, then, as is the language used by the general assembly in its appropriation bills, the arithmetical coincidence above referred to leads me to conclude that its intention was that the amount of what would be the "state military fund," ascertainable on January 1, 1911, exclusive of that appropriated for armory purposes, should be expended for the payment of liabilities incurred in maintaining the Ohio national guard from February 15, 1911 to February 15, 1912, and for paying liabilities incurred for transportation and other miscellaneous items appertaining to the maintenance of the Ohio national guard, existing on and incurred prior to February 15, 1911.

It is perfectly clear, I think, that the intention of the legislature was that the amount of this fund, ascertainable on January 1, 1912, should be divided between the purposes of the state armory board for the fiscal year beginning February 15, 1912 and to pay liabilities incurred in maintaining the Ohio national guard from and after February 15, 1912.

The state military fund is a continuing fund, but the appropriations made therefrom are not and could not be "continuing appropriations," as you say the adjutant general has suggested to you. The express language of Section 2 of the partial and general appropriation bills, above quoted, preclude any such conclusion, at least any conclusion that either of these appropriations may be used to pay liabilities incurred or deficiencies existing prior to the date named in the section. In the sense that these appropriations may be used to pay liabilities incurred at any time after the expiration of a year from the date named in Section 2 of each bill, the appropriations may be said to be continuing; that is to say, it is provided in the 1911 bill, for example, that the money therein appropriated shall not be used to pay deficiencies incurred prior to a certain date, but it is not provided therein that such appropriations shall not be used to pay liabilities incurred after any given date. In other words, the legislature has not defined the posterior date beyond which liabilities may not be incurred and paid for out of the appropriation. Inasmuch, however, as the legislature is presumed to have obeyed the constitution, there is an implied limitation of this sort, to-wit: two years from the date of passage of the bill(not two years from the date at which liabilities might first be incurred and paid out of the appropriation, as you erroneously state).

It therefore follows that the moneys appropriated in the partial bill for 1911 are available to pay liabilities incurred in maintaining the Ohio national guard between February 15, 1911 and February 28, 1913; those appropriated by the act of April 28, 1911 are available to pay only those liabilities and deficiencies expressly mentioned therein but may be expended at any time up to April 28, 1913; those appropriated in what I have designated as the general bill for 1911 may be expended to pay any liability incurred between February 16, 1911 and June 14, 1913; and those appropriated in what I have termed the general bill for 1912 may be used to pay liabilities incurred between February 16, 1912 and June 14, 1913.

I have thus tried to define the exact life and meaning of these various appropriations. The use of such general words as "continuing appropriation," "appropriation for the year 1912" etc. is really meaningless, unless these terms are accurately defined.

Much of the foregoing discussion is, of course, of little value in connection with this question because the first three of the four appropriations above mentioned have now been, as you state, almost, if not completely, exhausted; so that the only money now appropriated and not expended for the maintenance of the Ohio national guard is that appropriated from what I have termed the 1912 bill. The sole question, therefore, is as to when an obligation for drill pay is "incurred" within the meaning of Section 2 of that act.

The subject of drill pay is regulated by Section 5288 of the General Code, which provides as follows:

> "Each regularly enlisted man in the organized militia of this state shall be paid twenty-five cents for each regular weekly drill attended, not to exceed forty-eight weeks in one year, to be paid quarterly upon the presentation of the proper certified muster and pay-roll to the adjutant general. Upon his approval, the state auditor shall issue his warrant upon the treasurer for the amount certified to as above provided in favor of the officer making the certificate as hereafter provided."

I am informed by the Adjutant General that by the regulations of the Ohio national guard which, by virtue of Sections 5240 and 5291, General Code, have the force and effect of law, if not inconsistent with the statutes, the dates for the quarterly payment are so fixed that one of them is March first; that is to say, on the first of March of a given year the adjutant general will have presented to him for his approval a properly certified muster and pay-roll showing the amount of drill pay due to the officers and enlisted men of the Ohio national guard for the preceding three months. At this time, also, the state auditor will have presented to him the pay-roll so approved, upon which he is required, if there be money in the treasury appropriated for that purpose, to issue the warrant upon the treasurer.

Section 5289 provides as follows:

> "The commanding officer of each company, troop, battery, hospital corps or band, at a stated hour during the regular weekly drill, shall call the roll of his command and keep a record of the members present and the absentees. From this record he shall make intriplicate muster and pay-rolls at the end of each quarter, to which he shall attach his certificate, and forward to the adjutant general."

If this section stood alone it would be clear that so far as the statutes are concerned the adjutant general would not be in a position to know what obligations for drill pay had been incurred until each commanding officer had forwarded to him the muster and pay-roll of his particular command duly certified. It is true that Section 5291 provides that,

> "The adjutant general shall make such regulations, require such bonds and reports, and furnish such blanks as may be necessary to carry out the provisions of the preceding three sections."

and that by virtue of this section the adjutant general seems to have power to require reports other than those required to be made by Section 5289 itself. However, it is my judgment that the only method of paying the pay-roll is that outlined in Section 5288 and Section 5289, above quoted: therefore, although the adjutant general has the means of advising himself as to the amount of drill pay due for drills held between December 1st and February 15th, for example, he has no power to issue separate vouchers nor to certify to the auditor of state that portion of a pay-roll separately from that reported by drills held between February 15th and March 1st.

This fact must, in my judgment, be taken into account in determining what the legislature's intention was in the use of language like that quoted from the second section of the 1912 appropriation bill. While, in the strict sense of the word, the liability for drill pay is incurred when an enlisted man, for example, reports for drill pay upon a specified date, yet, from the standpoint of the State, there can be no liability, until the various steps have been gone through with and properly certified pay-rolls have been presented to the adjutant general and approved by him. Furthermore, the indivisibility of the quarterly pay-roll resulting from the express terms of Section 5288 indicates, to me at least, that the legislature could not have intended a part of any pay-roll, and especially that falling due on March 1st, to be paid, part from one appropriation and another part from another.

Now, it might be urged that because the 1911 appropriations are available to pay the entire pay-roll falling due on March 1st if a sufficient balance remained in the account thereby created, therefore, it can not be said that the general assembly intended that this pay-roll should be met out of the 1912 appropriation, so-called. This, however, does not necessarily follow, because of the peculiar nature of the "state military fund," as I have already described. On the face of the statutes defining that fund it appears to be the intention of the general assembly that each calander year shall take care of itself, so to speak, in the maintenance of the Ohio national guard. We are, therefore, to regard the appropriations, presumably made in pursuance of these statutes, as being primarily intended to meet the charges against the state treasury on account of the maintenance of the militia for a given year. This, I believe to be the controlling intention of the legislature and to shed light upon the meaning of Section 2 of the appropriation act.

From all the foregoing considerations I am of the opinion that no part of the pay roll presented on March 1, 1912 is a liability incurred prior to February 15, 1912, and that the entire pay roll then coming due may lawfully be paid out of the appropriation for the year 1912.

This holding might seem to be inconsistent with the act of April 28, 1911, above quoted; upon careful examination of that act, however, it will be ascertained that the deficiency then existing and therein recognized as having been created and incurred prior to February 15, 1910 and February 15, 1911, respectively, are described as items of transportation and other miscellaneous items; drill pay is not expressly mentioned; it may have been a matter of fact that a part of these deficiencies consisted of drill pay; however, the legislative intent is manifested in the language used, and if there was any drill pay discharged out of this twenty thousand dollar appropriation that feature of the matter would not come to the attention of the average member of the general assembly in voting for the bill. Therefore, I cannot believe that it can be held that the general assembly has, by passing the act of April 28, 1911, construed its ordinary appropriation acts, and the language customarily used by it in the second section thereof with reference to the time when a quarterly pay roll is incurred.

Very truly yours,
TIMOTHY S. HOGAN,
Attorney General.

TAXES AND TAXATION—SMITH ONE PER CENT. LAW—STATE AID FOR SCHOOLS—"MAXIMUM LEVY" BY BOARD OF EDUCATION—SHRINKAGE IN TAX COLLECTIONS—FORMER OPINION MODIFIED.

The maximum levy necessary to qualify a school district to receive State Aid is any estimate of amount ¾ of which are for tuition purposes made by the Board of Education to the County Audtor as representing the total amount necessary for all school purposes for the coming year, regardless of reductions made by the Budget Commission, providing such reductions are made so as to preserve undisturbed the ¾ proportion for tuition purposes. If a board of education fails to estimate an amount sufficiently large to pay its teachers forty dollars per month, it is not entitled to State Aid. This rule must be qualified however, to the extent that a Board is not disqualified by reason of a mere shrinkage in tax collections.

The statement, therefore of a former opinion to the effect that a Board of Education whose estimate had been reduced by the Budget Commission, would be entitled to State Aid to the extent of a difference between the amount allowd by the Budget Commission, and the amount estimated must be overruled.

March 18, 1912.

HON. E. M. FULLINGTON, Auditor of State, Columbus, Ohio.

DEAR SIR:—At your request I have reviewed and reconsidered a portion of my opinion to you under date of January 17th, respecting the effect of the Smith One Per Cent. Law, so-called, upon the law which provides State Aid for weak school districts.

In that opinion, I undertook to set forth a detailed set of tests for the use of the Auditor of State in determining whether or not a given school district would be entitled to State aid. You now call my attention to a hypothetical state of facts as to which the application of the tests suggested by me seems difficult, and in the light of which some of the statements in my opinion seem mutually inconsistent. That state of facts is as follows:

> "A board of education filed an estimate with the county auditor under the Smith Law, which said estimate is in point of fact too low—that is, not sufficient in amount to supply the needs of the district under the State Aid Law for the ensuing fiscal year. The Budget Commission, in the discharge of its duties under the Smith Law, reduced the estimate thus made and filed with the county auditor by the board of education."

The question is, of course, as to whether or not, under my previous opinion, or under the law as I now see it, the school district under such circumstance, would be entitled to state aid.

An answer to this question is found in the following paragraph of my former opinion.

"6. The deficiency for the relief of which state aid is asked.

"The deficiency for which a state aid voucher may be issued by the auditor of state may not exceed the difference between the amount of revenue paid to the board of education at the two semi-annual settlements (Item 4 above), and the amount estimated by the board of education as constituting its needs for the incoming year (Item 1 above), unless the amount estimated was not cut down by the budget commission, as shown by comparison of items 1 and 3 above. If the amount estimated has not been reduced by the budget commission the board of education would, therefore, be itself responsible for the deficit, in that it did not exercise the degree of care required by the letter and the spirit of the Smith Law in providing for its expenditures for the incoming year, and then, in my judgment, the board has failed to qualify. If, on the other hand, as already indicated, the board's estimate was reduced by the budget commission, and yet the amount of the deficiency added to the amount of revenue paid over by the county treasurer at the semi-annual settlement exceeds the amount of the estimate, then the board of education is not disqualified, but is not permitted to have state aid for the entire deficiency, but only for that part which equals the difference between the revenues actually collected and the amount of its estimate."

The language here used by me is consistent with the language of a previous paragraph of the opinion which I also quote:

"In answer to your second question, I beg to state that in my opinion the maximum levy necessary to qualify a school district to receive state aid is any levy, or rather any estimate of amount made by the board of education of a school district and filed with the county auditor as representing the total amount necessary for all local school purposes for the incoming year, three-fourths thereof being for tuition purposes, if only said estimate is reduced in such manner as to leave undisturbed the proportion which the tuition fund bears to the total school levy, by the action of the budget commission; that is to say, a practical rule for the guidance of the auditor of state in discharging his duty under Section 7596, General Code, and under the Smith One Per Cent Law is as follows:"

Upon a careful reconsideration of these two paragraphs of my former opinion, I am of the present opinion that they are inconsistent with the reasoning that preceds them. This inconsistency is partly disclosed by language used in the first of the two paragraphs quoted above, that is to say, if the amount estimated by the board of education has not been reduced by the budget commission, and yet the returns from taxation are insufficient to carry into effect the purpose of the State Aid Law, then the responsibility for the deficiency rests upon the board of education and not upon the Budget Commission; this is equivalent to saying that the deficiency is not created by the limits of taxation, but by the voluntary act of the board of education itself. The case then would virtually be the same as one under the old law, in which the board of education had levied ten mills, say, under the erroneous belief that such a levy would enable it to pay its teachers forty dollars a month.

It now seems obvious to me that if a board of education fails to estimate the levy needed by it for the incoming year at an amount sufficiently large to enable it to pay its teachers forty dollars per month, it is not entitled to any state aid whatever, regardless of whether or not the budget commission reduces its estimate below that amount originally certified by the board.

I recall that I had in mind at the time of the preparation of the former opinion, the fact that the income from taxation is invariably less than the total amount levied. There are certain fees of the county auditor and county treasurer which must be deducted from the gross levy, and certain shrinkages due to delinquencies of tax payers which experience had demonstrated to be inevitable. I had thought that it was incumbent upon the board of education merely to consider its actual needs in making up the budget, without regard to these shrinkages, and I have thought also that the intention of the two laws under consideration, read together, is that the State shall supply deficiencies arising from such shrinkages. On the reconsideration that I have given to the matter, I have not changed my opinion in this respect. I am still of the opinion that an innocent mistake on the part of the board of education as to the shrinkage due to delinquent taxes and the fees of county officers, ought not to disqualify the board. I see, however, that my consideration of this point has lead me to formulate conclusions, in the former opinion, that were to broad. To make the matter short, and at the same time to furnish you with a complete rule of action, I beg to set forth, without further discussion, my exact views relative to the manner in which a situation like that above described should be handled.

If the board's estimate has not been reduced by the Budget Commission, and yet there is a deficiency, the Auditor of State, from the facts before him, as set forth in the former opinion, must ascertain whether or not the amount of the deficiency, added to the returns from taxation, exceed the estimate of the board. If it does, then it is obvious that the board's estimate was too low, and the board is disqualified; if it does not, then it is equally obvious that the difference between the returns from taxation and the estimate of the board is due solely to the shrinkages from tax delinquencies and officials' fees. Under such circumstances, the school district would be qualified for state aid, and, of course, would secure the entire amount of the deficiency asked for.

If, on the other hand, the estimate of the board has been reduced by the Budget Commission, and yet the deficiency asked for, added to the returns from taxation, exceed the estimate of the board, it is obvious that the deficiency is not entirely due to shrinkages in revenues, nor to the action of the Budget Commission, but in part at least, to the failure of the board of education to make a careful and complete estimate of its needs. This being the case, the district is disqualified, not only to the extent of the difference between the amount of the estimate and the sum of the deficiency asked for and the revenues received, as suggested in the former opinion, but also for any state aid whatever.

In the light of the discussion which has preceded, I think it will be entirely clear to you, if I state, as my final conclusion on the matter, that a board of education is disqualified from receiving for the district state aid if it fails to estimate the needs of the district under law which requires the payment of forty dollars per month for all the teachers therein, regardless of whether or not the Budget Commission has reduced its estimate; but that in making its estimate under the Smith Law, a board of education, in order to qualify for state aid, is not required to assume the risk of shrinkages in tax collections, and if its estimate is for an amount, which if received from taxation would enable the schools to run for eight months and the teachers to be paid forty dollars per month, then state aid may be received to cover the shrinkages in revenues even though the budget commission has not reduced the board's estimate.

I trust that I have made myself clear. All portions of the former opinion inconsistent with this opinion are to be regarded as overruled.

Very truly yours,

TIMOTHY S. HOGAN,
Attorney General.

TRAVELING EXPENSES CHARGEABLE BY PUBLIC OFFICIAL AGAINST STATE—TIPS—PORTER'S FEES— LONG DISTANCE TELEPHONE MESSAGES—MESSAGES TO FAMILY.

March 22, 1912.

HON. E. M. FULLINGTON, Auditor of State, Columbus, Ohio.

DEAR SIR:—I am in receipt of your letter of March 14, wherein you state:

> "In the examination of the financial transactions of the department of Adjutant General of Ohio, the examiners of this department find items in the expense accounts of officers and employes of the department for tips, porters and telephone messages.
> "Being in doubt as to the legality of charges for tips and porters, your opinion is respectfully requested for our guidance in auditing such accounts.
> "It has been held that the official residence of a state official is at Columbus and not where he resided at the time of his election or appointment.
> "If such officials elect to maintain their families at their home instead of at Columbus, are charges for long distance telephone messages to them, legal items of expense chargeable to the state?
> If a state official or a national guard officer on duty be continued away from home longer than expected, whether a resident of Columbus or elsewhere in the state and he telephones or telegraphs his family that he will not be home when expected, is such expense personal or can he charge same to the state?"

and in reply I beg to say that a "tip" is defined as a gift or gratuity and the Century Dictionary defines it as a donation to one for some service or pretended service while in the employ of another and for which the employer makes payment. In any light it is a gratuity or donation to one who is ready and willing to receive but who confessedly has no right to demand, and therefore cannot be considered as an expense chargeable to the State as other expenses may be.

Money paid to a porter may or may not be a legal expense, depending upon the character of service rendered and whether the doing of that for which money was given was, or was not, a part of his duties under his employment.

Long distance messages to members of an official's family who maintains his home outside of Columbus cannot be considered as an expense incident to an office.

Telegraph or telephone messages by an official when absent on duty advising his family of an unlooked for detention may be considered as an official expense where the railroad fare, hotel bills and the like are properly chargeable to the State. This is regarded as somewhat doubtful and is based not so much upon the strict legality of the charge as it is upon the fact that a state official has the same duty to perform toward his family as an individual. An individual should and would go to that expense, and the state should not object to the same as long as it was kept within reason.

Very truly yours,
TIMOTHY S. HOGAN,
Attorney General.

ABSTRACT OF TITLE—SITE FOR WOMEN'S REFORMATORY SITUATED IN UNION COUNTY, PARIS TOWNSHIP—DEFECTS AND OMISSIONS.

April 10, 1912.

HON. E. M. FULLINGTON, Auditor of State, Columbus, Ohio.

DEAR SIR:—In response to your verbal request of recent date I have examined the abstract of title to the site for the proposed Womans' Reformatory described as follows:

> "The following real estate situate in the State of Ohio, County of Union and Township of Paris, being part of surveys Nos. 3,354 and 4,069, and bounded and described as follows:
> "Beginning at a stake in the west line of survey No. 3,354 and in the center of the Collins Gravel Road; thence with the center of said road north 82° east 175 40/100 poles to a stake in the center of said road (witness an iron pipe S. 2¼° E. 20 feet) northwest corner to lands owned by Samuel F. Barr; thence with the west line of said lands south 2° 15' east 162 33/100 poles to an iron pipe in the northerly line of the right of way of the C. C. C. & St. L. Railway Company; thence with said line south 42° west 231 3/100 poles to a stake in the west line of survey No. 4,069; thence with said line north 7° 15' west 149 35/100 poles to a stone northwest corner of said survey No. 4,069 and southwest corner of said survey No. 3,354; thence with the west line of said survey No. 3,354 north 2° 15' west 16 15/100 poles to the place of beginning containing 257 80/100 acres be the same more or less."

The following, in my judgment, require correction:

A statement is made at Section No. 20 that Catherine A. Hickey is the same person as Catherine A. Barry, who was a party to the title. Her remarriage should be proved by a certified copy of the probate records of the proper county or by affidavit if the latter can be obtained. The pleadings in a partition suit at No. 19 may disclose this fact and if so, a copy therefrom would be sufficient.

The agreement of parties to a division of survey No. 4,069, as stated in Section No. 53, should be copied in full.

The alleged affidavit as to the death of John S. Fulton, the names of his surviving heirs, etc., is not sworn to by anyone. This should be corrected by an affidavit in proper form.

It appears from an examination of Section No. 80 that part of the above described property was conveyed by John Cratty, executor, to the Springfield & Mansfield Railroad Company, and the succeeding section of the abstract shows what purports to be a deed for the same premises from the Cleveland, Columbus, Cincinnati & Indianapolis Railway Company to John W. Robinson. No evidence is adduced to show that the name of the Springfield & Mansfield Railroad was changed to the Cleveland, Columbus, Cincinnati & Indianapolis Railway Company as alleged by the abstractor. It seems to have been taken for granted that the latter company sold said real estate to Robinson, as the alleged deed therefor does not appear to have been signed or recorded. Affidavits of disinterested persons having knowledge of these facts should be procured.

The will of James W. Robinson, Section 82, is not abstracted so as to show that it was properly witnessed as required by the laws of Ohio, and the statement that Section 83 should be embodied in an affidavit.

The warranty deed shown at Section 88 recites that the grantee assumes a mortgage of $4,500.00, but there is nothing to show by or to whom said mortgage was given, the date thereof, or whether the same has been released.

The foreclosure proceedings referred to in Section 128 should be abstracted so as to show how they affected the chain of title.

The mortgage given by J. W. Robinson and wife to Ester E. Caryl as shown at Section 131, appears to have been released by the alleged heirs of the mortgagee, her estate not having been settled through the probate court. There is nothing to indicate that the parties signing such release were the heirs of said Ester E. Caryl except their own statement. No power of attorney or other evidence of the legal authority of A. L. Caryl and William Caryl to execute such release as attorneys for Clifton Caryl has been presented. The agreement of said alleged heirs appointing two of their number to settle the estate should be abstracted verbatim so as to show the signatures of all the parties. Affidavits should be obtained from persons acquainted with the facts as to the time of the death of Ester E. Caryl, the names, ages and relationship of her surviving heirs and as to the payment of her legal debts.

Certificates of the clerk of the United States District Court for the Southern District of Ohio, Eastern Division, as to the pendency of suits and judgments in said court against the persons making deeds to the State of Ohio should be attached to the abstract.

The following liens are outstanding against said property:

The general taxes due June 20, 1912, on the Samuel F. Barr tract of 174 acres (Marysville School District), $49.49.

The general taxes due June 20, 1912, on the Lincoln Baker tract of 106 acres, $25.77.

The general taxes due June 20, 1912, on the Hiram and Jane E. Crottinger tract of 78¼ acres, $24.82.

Mortgage for $3,200 from Lincoln Baker and wife to the Aetna Life Insurance Company shown at exhibit No. 138.

Mortgage from Lincoln Baker and wife to the Commercial Savings Bank, of Marysville, for $800, shown at exhibit 139.

Mortgage from Lincoln Baker and wife to J. Walter Kennedy duly transferred and now held by the Commercial Savings Bank of Marysville for $2,400, as shown by exhibit No. 140.

The taxes mentioned above should be paid and the mortgages duly released before the deeds pass to the State of Ohio.

The deeds from Samuel Barr and wife, Lincoln Baker and wife, Jane Eliza Crottinger and Hiram Crottinger, husband and wife, to the State of Ohio for the various parcels of land that go to make up the whole tract described in the caption are in legal form, and upon the correction of the abstract and the payment of mortgages and taxes as above indicated will be sufficient to convey to the State of Ohio a good and sufficient title in fee simple.

I herewith return the abstract and deeds.

Yours very truly,

TIMOTHY S. HOGAN,
Attorney General.

BRIBERY—MEMBER OF GENERAL ASSEMBLY CANNOT RECEIVE PAY AFTER CONVICTION FOR—EFFECT OF APPEAL.

A member of the General Assembly who is convicted of receiving a bribe is disqualified from holding public office and from the date of his conviction, vouchers due to him as such member must be denied.

Pending an appeal from such conviction, however, the status quo of the payments accruing should be preserved.

May 24, 1912.

HON. E. M. FULLINGTON, Auditor of State, Columbus, Ohio.

DEAR SIR:—You inquire verbally through your deputy, Hon. A. W. Beatty, as to whether or not voucher should be issued to L. R. Andrews, formerly a member of the General Assembly, to-wit: A member of the State Senate of Ohio from the Eighth Senatorial District, for services as such member of the General Assembly. In reply thereto I beg to advise that Section 12823 of the General Code provides, among other things, that,

> "* * * whoever, being a member of the General Assembly, or a state or other officer, public trustee, agent or employe of the state or of such officer or trustee, either before or after his election, qualification, appointment or employment, solicits or accepts any valuable or beneficial thing to influence him with respect to his official duty, or to influence his action, vote, opinion or judgment, in a matter pending, or that might legally come before him, shall be fined not more than five hundred dollars or imprisoned in the penitentiary not more than five years, or both."

Senator L. R. Andrews was convicted of offending against this section, and sentenced by the Common Pleas Court of Franklin county, Ohio, on the twenty-seventh day of April, 1912, to the Ohio penitentiary for a period of nine months. The foregoing section was amended by an act of the last General Assembly, but Senator Andrews was convicted under the section quoted.

Section 12824 of the General Code provides as follows:

> "A person convicted under the next preceding section is disqualified from holding any public office or appointment under this state, and, if not a state officer, shall be removed from office or employment by order of the court."

It will thus appear that since April 27, 1912, Senator Andrews has been legally disqualified from holding any public office under this state, his conviction and sentence ipso facto disqualifies him, and will continue so to do until and unless the judgment of conviction be reversed.

Therefore, it is my opinion that you would not be warranted in issuing to him any voucher for salary claimed, since the date of his conviction. However, inasmuch as an appeal in his case is pending, the appropriation from which his salary would be paid if he were entitled to it should not lapse as to him, but the status quo preserved pending the determination of his said appeal.

Yours very truly,

TIMOTHY S. HOGAN,
Attorney General.

CONSTITUTIONAL CONVENTION—RIGHT OF MEMBERS AND EMPLOYES TO MILEAGE TO AND FROM CHILLICOTHE—SEAT OF GOVERNMENT.

Under Section 50, General Code, members of the Constitutional Convention are entitled to receive mileage to and from the seat of government, and for this purpose the seat of government is any place to which the convention may adjourn, by authority of Section 3 of the act of 102 O. L., p. 298.

The members are, therefore, entitled to their mileage to and from Chillicothe during the period of their adjournment to that place.

As it is the duty of the employes to go where directed, they should, therefore, be reimbursed for their transportation expenses, to and from Chillicothe.

May, 29, 1912.

HON. E. M. FULLINGTON, Auditor of State, Columbus, Ohio.

DEAR SIR:—I am in receipt of your letter of May 25th, in which you make the following request for my opinion:

> "I am requested by Mr. C. B. Galbraith, Secretary of the Constitutional Convention, to request an opinion from you on the right of the state to pay members of the convention their mileage from the city of Columbus to Chillicothe and return on the occasion of the adjourned meeting of the convention while at Chillicothe on May 9th.
> "Your opinion is also desired as to the right of the state to pay the expenses of transporting the employes of the convention to and from Chillicothe on account of such meeting. I am enclosing herewith copy of the resolution passed by the convention directing the employes of the convention to go to Chillicothe."

Section 20 of the act providing for the Constitutional Convention, 102 O. L., 298, provides:

> "* * * the delegates of the convention shall be entitled to the same compensation and mileage for their services as is allowed by law to members of the General Assembly for one year, and the officers and employes of the convention, as far as practicable, shall be entitled to the same compensation for their services as is allowed by law for similar services to officers and employes of the General Assembly. * * *"

Section 50 of the General Code, after providing that each member of the General Assembly shall receive a salary of one thousand dollars, provides:

"* * * each member shall receive two cents per mile each way for mileage once a week during the session from and to his place of residence by the most direct route of public travel to and from the seat of government, to be paid at the end of each regular or special session. * * *"

Section 54 of the General Code is as follows:

"The president of the senate, and speaker of the house of representatives, shall ascertain the number of days' attendance of each member and officer of the respective houses, during the session, the number of miles of travel of each member to and from the seat of government and certify such attendance and mileage, and the amount due therefor, to the auditor of state."

Section 3 of an act to provide for the election to, and assembling of a convention to revise, alter, or amend the constitution of the State of Ohio, found in the Ohio Laws, volume 102, at page 298, provides as follows:

"That the delegates so elected shall assemble in the hall of the house of representatives, in the city of Columbus, on the second Tuesday of January, A. D., 1912, at ten o'clock a. m., with authority to adjourn to any place or places within this state for holding of the convention; and may, for the purpose of a temporary organization, be called to order by the oldest member present. They shall be entitled to the privileges of senators and representatives, named in Section 12, Article II, of the constitution."

It will be seen that it expressly appears that the delegates to the Constitutional Convention are authorized to adjourn to any place or perhaps within this state for the holding of their convention. The seat of government, so far as the Constitutional Convention is concerned, was Chillicothe on the day on which they held their session there. The intention to give members mileage to the seat of government from some place is expressed, and inasmuch as the delegates were assembled at Columbus, it appears only reasonable that the mileage of delegates should be calculated from Columbus to Chillicothe.

In my mind, both the letter and spirit of the law, and plain principles of justice require that the delegates should receive their mileage, and no reason suggests itself to my mind to the contrary. I am, therefore, clearly of the opinion that the delegates to the present Constitutional Convention have the right to receive mileage from the city of Columbus to Chillicothe and return on the occasion of the adjourned meeting of the convention while at Chillicothe on May 9.

Now, coming to your second question, the employes are subject to the control of the convention, and when ordered to go to Chillicothe by the convention, which order was made in the form of a motion, duly adopted by the convention, it seems to me they had no choice in the matter, but it was their duty to go where they were directed; and, therefore, the transportation expenses incurred by the said employes in making said journey should be allowed, and paid out of the fund provided for by law for the uses and purposes of the Constitutional Convention.

Yours very truly,

TIMOTHY S. HOGAN,

Attorney General.

AUDITOR OF STATE—DUTY TO ISSUE WARRANT FOR PAYMENT OF COMMISSIONERS FOR TAKING DEPOSITIONS AS ALLOWED BY COMMON PLEAS COURT, UPON REQUEST, OF A DEFENDANT IN A CRIMINAL CASE.

When a bill of costs in a criminal case, certified to the Auditor of State, contains or has attached thereto, a certificate or copy thereof, showing the payment from the county treasury of an allowance made by the Court of Common Pleas to Commissioners appointed to take depositions, upon request of the defendant as provided in Sections 13668 and 13669, General Code, the auditor should issue his warrant for the same, under provisions of Section 13726, General Code,

June 3, 1912.

HON. E. M. FULLINGTON, Auditor of State, Columbus, Ohio.

DEAR SIR:—Your communication, dated May 4, 1912, enclosing two certified criminal cost bills, one being the case of State vs. John Kocyanic, No. 1266, Common Pleas Court of Trumbull County, and the other being the case of State vs. Pietro Petito, No. 2635, Common Pleas Court, Ashtabula County, both containing items of charges for taking deposition, was received, and you request my opinion as to the legality of the charges in the said cost bills for taking depositions. In reply I desire to say that Section 13668 of the General Code provides:

> "When an issue of fact is joined upon an indictment and a material witness for the defendant resides out of the state, or, residing within the state is sick or infirn, or about to the state or in confined in prison, such defentand may apply, writing to the court or the judge thereof in vacation, for a commission to examine such witness upon interrogatories thereto annexed. The court or judge may grant such commission and make an order stating in what manner and for what length of time, notice shall be given to the prosecuting attorney before such witness shall be examined."

Section 13669 of the General Code provides:

> "The examination of such witness shall be taken and certified, and the return thereof to the court made as for taking depositions in civil cases. The commissioners so appointed shall receive such compensation as the court of common pleas shall direct to be paid out of the county treasury and taxed as part of the costs in the case."

Under the provisions of the above quoted sections, the defendant in any criminal case is given the privilege of taking depositions in his behalf of witnesses as therein specified, and such compensation shall be paid to the commissioners so appointed by the court under the provisions of said sections as the court of common pleas shall direct to be paid out of the county treasury, and taxed as part of the costs in the case, and that privilege is so plainly stated in the said sections above quoted that if the commissioners so appointed by the court to take depositions, as provided in said section, have been paid out of the county treasury upon the direction of the comon pleas court, and properly charged in a cost bill and a certificate properly attached to the sheriff's certified cost of bill to you as auditor of state, there can be no question in my mind as to the legality of the same, and you should issue your warrant on the tresurer of state for the payment of the same, under the provisions of Section 13726 of the General Code.

In the case of the State vs. Pietro Potitio from Ashtabula County, the proper certificate or copy thereof of the court of common pleas showing the amount to be paid to the commissioners by the court of common pleas, and the payment thereof out of the county treasury as provided by Section 13669, is attached to the certified cost bill in the proper form, and therefore a warrant should be issued by you for the said amount to the county of Ashtabula. But in the case of John Kocyanic, from Trumbull County, the certified cost bill does not contain, nor has not attached thereto a certificate or copy thereof showing the allowance made by the common pleas court and the payment thereof from the county treasurer to the commissioners appointed by the court to take such deposition, and until such certificate is properly made by the clerk of the courts, and attached to the said certified cost bill, I am of the legal opinion that you should not issue a warrant to the treasurer of state for the payment of the said costs, and suggest that you direct the clerk of the courts of said county to attach such cerificate, as above stated.

Very truly yours,
TIMOTHY S. HOGAN,
Attorney General.

EXPENSES, TRAVELING—BOARD OF CHARITIES MAY NOT ALLOW EXPENSES OF LADY VISITORS INCURRED ATTENDING CONFERENCE OUTSIDE OF STATE.

There being no statutory provision requiring these duties or authorizing payment for the same, members of the Board of Lady Visitors may not be allowed, by the Board of State Charities, expenses incurred in attending the National Conference of Charities and Correction at Buffalo, N. Y.

June 20, 1912.
(Attention of the Hon. A. W. Beatty)

HON. E. M. FULLINGTON, Auditor of State, Columbus, Ohio.

DEAR SIR:—On June 10th you submitted to this department a certain voucher, issued by the State Board of Charities to one Miss B. V. for traveling expenses from June 6 to July 2, 1909, to be paid from the appropriation for the Board of Lady Visitors.

You call our attention to the first two items of said bill, calling for $38.80 for expenses incurred in attending the National Conference of Charities and Correction at Buffalo, N. Y. and desire to know whether or not such item is a proper charge.

The law in force at the time the charges were made is found in 99 Ohio Laws, page 349. Said Act provides:

> "Section 1. The governor shall appoint; not later than May 1, 1908, and each year thereafter, a committee consisting of six women, to visit the benevolent, correctional and penal institutions of the state. The term of appointment shall be for one year.
> "Section 2. It shall be the duty of such committee to visit such benevolent, correctional and penal institutions as often and at such times as they deem proper to ascertain whether the purposes of the institutions are being successfully carried out and whether the inmates are receiving reasonable care and attention, provided that such committee shall visit such institutions not less than twice during each year. They shall prepare a complete report in writing concerning their observations and conclusions and present the same to the board of state charities.

"Section 3. The members of said committee shall receive no compensation, but, upon presentation of properly certified and itemized statements of necessary expenses incurred in the performance of their duties, the board of state charities shall order the payment of the same from any money appropriated for this purpose.

"Section 4. That Sections 675*a*, 675*b*, 766 and 767 of the Revised Statutes be and the same hereby are repealed."

An examination of Section 3 of said act discloses that said committee, known as the board of lady visitors, are to receive no compensation for their services, but are to be allowed the "necessary expenses incurred in the performance of their duties."

There is no provision in said act for the payment of the expenses of said committee to any conference, state or national, nor can I conceive it to be a part of their duties to attend a national conference of charities and correction. The duties of such committee are those set forth in Section 2 of said act, and no other.

In comparing said act with the provisions of the Revised Statutes, Section 633-15, relating to the board of county visitors, it is to be noted that said board of county visitors is allowed not only the actual expenses incurred in the discharge of its duties, but also the actual necessary expenses incurred "in visiting any other charitable or correctional institution for the purpose of information and in attendance upon any convention or meeting held within the State of Ohio in the interest of, and to deliberate upon charitable or correctional methods or work to an amount not exceeding $100.00 per annum."

Furthermore, the legislature has seen fit to provide that the trustees of children's homes shall not receive compensation for their services "but the said trustees and the superintendent shall be allowed their necessary expenses while on duty, including expenses as duly accredited delegates to state and national conferences devoted to child saving and other correctional and charitable work"—99 O. L. 185 (now Section 3087, General Code).

It will, therefore, be seen that the legislature, in enacting the law in reference to trustees of children's homes, had in mind the advisibility of such trustees attending state and national conferences.

The duties of the committee under the act in the 99 O. L. hereinbefore set forth in full, having been fully set forth in Section 2 thereof, and Section 3 thereof permitting payment for necessary expenses incurred in the performance of their duties, and there being no provision for the allowance of expenses for attendance at a national conference of charities and correction. I am of the opinion that such a charge can not be allowed and paid from the appropriation made by the legislature for the board of lady visitors.

Very truly yours,

TIMOTHY S. HOGAN,

Attorney General.

STATE AID FOR SCHOOLS NOT BARRED WHEN EIGHT MONTHS SESSION PREVENTED BY FIRE.

It is the intent of Sections 7644 and 7595, General Code, that a Board of Education shall maintain a school session of not less than thirty-two weeks in each year as a condition precedent to obtaining State Aid.

It is not the intent to demand the impossible, however, and when, through destruction of the school building by fire, compliance is absolutely prevented, failure to maintain an eight months' session will not preclude the right to State Aid.

June 26, 1912.

HON. E. M. FULLINGTON, Auditor of State, Columbus, Ohio.

DEAR SIR:—Under date of June 21st you request our opinion on the following:

"In B, Township School district, there are nine sub-districts. At the beginning of the year the Township Board of Education employed nine teachers at $40.00 per month for the period of eight months. After the teachers employed in District No. 6 had taught 114 days, the school house burned down, and from the peculiar location of the district, it was impossible to secure a building in which to continue the school, and the Township Board of Education had no funds from which they could construct a new school building. From further information developed in the case, we find that there were enumerated in this sub-district only 13 school youth, and that the average attendance during the 114 days was only 5 pupils, and because of the busy season among the farmers, it is thought that if the school had been continued there would possibly not have been an average attendance of over two pupils. B. Township will be an applicant for State Aid at the close of the school year, August 31, 1912.

"Question: B. Township, being the unit, will the failure to have school the full eight months, for reasons beyond the control of the Board of Education disqualify B. Township from receiving State Aid, providing all other conditions and requirements under the State Aid Act have been complied with?"

Section 7644, General Code provides as follows:

"Each board of education shall establish a sufficient number of elementary schools to provide for the free education of the youth of school age within the district under its control, at such places as will be most convenient for the attendance of the largest number thereof. Every elementary day school so established shall continue not less than thirty-two nor more than forty weeks in each school year. All the elementary schools within the same school district shall be so continued."

Section 7595, General Code provides as follows:

"No person shall be employed to teach in any public school in Ohio for less than forty dollars a month. When a school district has not sufficient money to pay its teachers forty dollars per month for eight months of the year, after the board of education of such district has made the maximum legal school levy, three-fourths of which shall be for the tuition fund, then such school district may receive from the state treasurer sufficient money to make up the deficiency."

It will be seen from the above sections:

First:—That it is the duty of the Board of Education to have at least eight months school, and also that the State will, upon the board contracting with the teachers at $40.00 per month, make up to such board of education a sum necessary to meet the salaries of such teachers, providing said board has not sufficient money to pay said sum for eight months. While it is true that the State Aid Law, as I construe it, requires that the board of education shall provide eight months of schooling in order to entitle it to state aid yet in the instance you have cited, a school house has burned down in one of the sub-districts and it is impossible to secure a building in which to continue the schools. I do not believe that it was the intention of the legislature to require the impossible in order to entitle a school district to state aid. The said district having complied with all the requirements of the law to entitle it to state aid, and through no fault of theirs not being able to continue the school for the time required by law, I am of the opinion that under the facts stated in your inquiry the said Board of Education would not be debarred from state aid. To hold otherwise would be to hold that circumstances over which the board has no control would prevent it from receiving the benefit of the statute in relation to state aid although said board has done all in its power to entitle it thereto. This I do not believe was the intention of the legislature. I, therefore, hold that the failure of the board to have school in one of the districts thereof for the full eight months for reasons entirely beyond the control of said board would not disqualify it from receiving state aid, providing all other conditions and requirements under the state aid act have been fully complied with.

Very truly yours,

TIMOTHY S. HOGAN,
Attorney General.

DOW AIKEN TAX—PENALTY FOR NONPAYMENT OF ONE HALF TAX ON JUNE 20—DUTY OF ASSESSOR.

There is no statutory provision requiring a dealer in intoxicating liquors to voluntarily give notice to the tax authorities of that fact. Each dealer is bound under penalty however, to pay one half of the Dow Aiken Tax on or before June 20th, and December 20th, respectively of each year and when having started in business in April he fails to pay one half of said tax on or before June 20th, he is liable for said amount with 20 per cent. penalty.

July 10, 1912.

HON. E. M. FULLINGTON, Auditor of State, Columbus, Ohio.

DEAR SIR:—Answering your letter of June 21, 1912, wherein you state:

"A certain county was voted wet several months since. On the 17th day of June, 1912, the County Auditor discovered that Mr. "A" had been engaged in the sale of intoxicating liquors from the 13th day of April, 1912, without making any report to the Auditor or paying the Aiken tax, as required by law, and from evidence secured, he was attempting to evade the law requiring such payment. The liquor tax year beginning on the Fourth Monday of May, the Auditor required Mr. 'A' to pay the full amount of tax from April 13th to the Fourth Monday of May, together with 20 per cent. penalty.

"QUESTION:—Is Mr. 'A' liable (because of his failure to comply with the law in giving proper notice) for One Thousand Dollars, and 20 per cent penalty, for the liquor tax year beginning the Fourth Monday of May, 1912?"

Section 6071 of the General Code provides for the tax on the business of trafficking in intoxicating liquors.

Section 6072 of the General Code provides:

"Such assessment, with any penalty thereon, shall attach and operate as a lien upon the real property on and in which such business is conducted, as of the fourth Monday of May each year, and shall be paid at the times provided for by law for the payment of taxes on real or personal property within this state, to-wit: one-half on or before the twentieth day of June, and one-half on or before the twentieth day of December of each year."

Section 6073 of the General Code provides what tax is assessable for a part of the year.

Section 6081 of the General Code provides:

"Each assessor shall return to the county auditor, with his other returns, upon a blank to be furnished by the auditor for that purpose, a statement, as to each place within his jurisdiction where such business is conducted, showing the name of the person, corporation or co-partnership engaged therein, a brief and accurate description of the premises where it is conducted, and by whom owned. Such statement shall be signed and verified before the assessor by such person, corporation, or co-partnership."

Section 6082 of the General Code provides:

"If such person, corporation or co-partnership, on demand, refuses to furnish the requisite information for the statement, or to sign or verify it, such fact shall be returned by the assessor, and thereupon the assessment on said business shall be fifteen hundred dollars. If such assessment is not paid when due, there shall be added a penalty thereto of twenty per cent. which shall be collected therewith."

An examination of the liquor statutes discloses that there is no provision of law requiring a liquor dealer to give notice of his going into the business of trafficking in intoxicating liquors. Under Section 6081, supra, the duty of securing or attempting to secure the statement therein provided for devolves upon the assessor.

When a person goes into the business of trafficking in intoxicating liquors upon the first day of the Aiken tax year, he may pay the first half of the assessment on or before June 20th. June 20th is the last day, and if payment is not made by that date, the penalty prescribed by law attaches.

In the case of Mr. "A," I do not think the fact that he was derelict in the payment for the period from April 13th to the fourth Monday in May, and for which time he became chargeable with both the tax and the penalty, renders him liable to make payment for the next half year (he still remaining in the business) before the time fixed by law, to-wit: on or before June 20th, and if he would make payment of the half year's tax on June 20th, it is my opinion that there would be no authority of law for placing any penalty thereon.

As stated in Section 6082, supra, if the assessment is not paid when due, the penalty attaches, and the tax for the first half of 1912 would not be finally due until June 20th.

It is, therefore, my opinion that the auditor properly charged Mr. "A" with the full amount of the tax from April 13th to the fourth Monday of May, together with 20 per cent. penalty, but that he would not be authorized on June 17, 1912, to place Mr. "A" on the duplicate for the $1,000.00 tax and 20 per cent penalty.

Very truly yours,

TIMOTHY S. HOGAN,
Attorney General.

EXPENSES—DUE OF STATE OFFICIALS IN NATIONAL ASSOCIATION MAY NOT BE PAID BY THE STATE.

Members of the state departments are not authorized to become members of national organizations and as there is no legal provision therefor, the dues of such association may not be made chargeable against the state.

July 23, 1912.

HON. E. M. FULLINGTON, Auditor of State, Columbus, Ohio.

DEAR SIR:—I desire to acknowledge receipt of your letter of July 17th, wherein you state that you desire an opinion from this department, at your earliest convenience, upon the following request:

> "There are a number of National Associations of state officials, such as Commissioners of Insurance, Commissioners of Common Schools, Superintendents of Banks and Banking, Fire Marshall and other departments.
> "These organizations are for the purpose of discussing matters of importance to State Departments.
> "At least a part of these associations publish the minutes of their proceedings and debates and distribute them among the officials interested.
> "In view of the above facts and conditions, and for the guidance of this department, your official opinion is respectfully requested on the following question:
> "'Are the annual dues, which are for the purpose of defraying the expenses of such organizations, chargeable to the state and payable from the contingent fund of such departments?'"

In reply to your inquiry, I desire to say that the annual dues, which are for the purpose of defraying the expenses of such organizations as are mentioned in your inquiry, do not constitute legal expenses of any of the mentioned departments. This is by virtue of the fact that there is no statutory authority requiring any of the heads of such departments to become members of any such national associations, as referred to in your inquiry. Furthermore, I find no statutory authority for the payment of such dues. The heads of state departments, such as the Commissioner of Insurance, Commissioner of Common Schools, Superintendent of Bank and Banking, Fire Marshal and other heads of departments, are governed entirely by specific statutory provisions and cannot in any case exceed their statutory authority.

Therefore, in direct answer to your inquiry, I am of the opinion, that annual dues, which are for the purpose of defraying the expenses of such organizations, cannot be charged to the state and cannot legally be paid out of the contingent funds of such departments.

I am,

Very truly yours,
TIMOTHY S. HOGAN,
Attorney General.

COMPENSATION—MEMBERS OF STATE DENTAL BOARD PAID FOR DAYS ACTUALLY EMPLOYED ONLY.

Under 1317, General Code, the members of the State Dental Board are entitled to ten dollars for "each day actually employed in the discharge of his official duties" and his necessary expenses incurred," and no additional payment can be allowed for the days required to come to and return from the place where the meetings of the board are held.

September 5, 1912.

HON. E. M. FULLINGTON, Auditor of State, Columbus, Ohio.

DEAR SIR:—Your favor of July 17, 1912, is received, in which you state:

> "I submit herewith copy of letter from R. H. V., D. D. S., and would kindly request your opinion on the questions he proposes, the most important of which you will note is, Can he legally charge more than one per diem in every 24 hours? Can he legally charge per diem on Sunday? Can he legally charge per diem for one-half day?"

In the letter enclosed, the facts are stated as follows:

> "In April, I was called to Cincinnati for two days, April 22d and April 23d. The work required that I be in Cincinnati at 8 a. m., on the 22d, and that I stay there until about 5 or 6 p. m., on the 23d. To do this, I had to leave Toledo the evening of the 21st, and did not get back to Toledo until the morning of the 24th.
> "In case number two we had a meeting in Columbus on the 13th, which was called at 9 o'clock a. m. This necessitated leaving Toledo the day previous, and we were in session really from 9 a. m. until 10:00 or 10:30 p. m. This necessitated my staying in Columbus all night Saturday, and did not reach Toledo until Sunday afternoon.
> "What I want to know is whether in the case of my Cincinnati trip, I should be allowed for three days' allowance or two days', and in the case of my Columbus trip, whether or not I am entitled to one or two days' allowance?"

The person who makes the above inquiries is a member of the State Dental Board and the compensation to be paid is for services as a member of said board.

Section 1317, General Code, prescribes the compensation of the members of the dental board as follows:

> "Each member of the state dental board shall receive ten dollars for each day actually employed in the discharge of his official duties, and his necessary expenses incurred. The secretary shall receive an annual salary to be fixed by the board, and his necessary expenses incurred in the discharge of his official duties. The compensation and expenses of the secretary and members and the expenses of the board, shall be paid from moneys received under this chapter, upon the approval of the president and secretary."

The compensation is fixed upon a per diem basis, that is, the member is paid for each day actually employed in the discharge of his duties. The statute does not specify the number of hours that will constitute a day for which the compensation is to be paid.

In the first case submitted it does not appear whether the services were performed in attendance at a board meeting, or otherwise. It does appear, however, that the member performed services only upon two days, to-wit, April 22d and 23d. Parts of other days were consumed in going to and returning from Cincinnati. In the second case there was a meeting of the board which was in session upon only one day, although it appears that the session was a lengthy one. Parts of other days were also consumed in traveling to and from the place of meeting.

The question is, whether or not a member of the state dental board is entitled to his per diem for the days required of him to get to and to return from the place of meeting, when in fact no business is transacted or actual services performed on such days.

In the case of Stevens vs. United States, 38 Court of Claims (U. S.), 452, it is held:

> "The question involved here is one of statutory construction, whether certain examiners of Indian lands are entitled to their per diem while work is suspended, they at the same time being required to hold themselves in readiness to resume work.
> "I. The act of 14th January, 1889 (25 Stat. L., 642), authorizes the appointment of certain examiners by the Secretary of the Interior; the compensation in no event to exceed six dollars per day. They are not entitled to the compensation during a period of suspended work.
> "II. A per diem compensation is generally intended for days of actual service."

While this case is not directly in point, it shows that when compensation is paid upon a per diem basis, the compensation is usually paid only for the days of actual work.

In the statute now under consideration, a member of the dental board is paid a per diem "for each day actually employed in the discharge of his official duties."

A board can only act as a body. The board itself is composed of individuals, but the official acts of the board are not the acts of the individuals, but are the acts of the board as a body. The time a member of a board would be "actually employed in the discharge of his official duties," when the services are performed in connection with a meeting of the board, would be the time that the board was in session.

If it were held that a member of a board was entitled to pay for days used in traveling to and from the place of meeting, we would have the situation of one member of the board receiving more pay than another member for the same services, to-wit: attendance at the board meeting.

Again, if the members of the dental board were entitled to a per diem for days used in coming to a meeting, they would also be entitled to their per diem for the days necessary to return from said meeting place. In other words, in the first case submitted, the members would be entitled to four days, and in the second to three days pay.

It is my conclusion that the per diem provided as compensation for the members of the state dental board by Section 1317, General Code, is paid for the days actually employed in the discharge of the duties of such member, and not for the days required to come to and to return from the place where the meetings of the board are held.

In the first case submitted, the member is entitled to his per diem for two days only, to-wit: for April 22d and 23d.

In the second case, he is entitled to compensation for one day only, to-wit, the thirteenth of the month in question.

With this view of the situation it is not necessary to pass upon the specific questions asked in your inquiry.

Respectfully,
TIMOTHY S. HOGAN,
Attorney General.

COMPENSATION OF CHIEFS OF POLICE—MARSHALLS AND CONSTABLES—ALLOWANCE OF COSTS BY COUNTY COMMISSIONERS —MISDEMEANOR CASES.

The County Commissioners have no authority to allow Chiefs of Police, Marshalls or Constables their expenses in pursuing, arresting and transporting persons accused of misdemeanors, except that by reason of Section 3019, General Code, they may make an allowance in place of fees in cases of misdemeanor wherein the defendant proves insolvent.

COLUMBUS, OHIO, January 4, 1912.

Bureau of Inspection and Supervision of Public Offices, Columbus, Ohio.

GENTLEMAN:—Under favor of November 10, 1911, you ask an opinion of this department upon the following:

> "Section 3347, G. C., authorizes magistrates to make allowances to constables for the transportation and sustenance of prisoners.
> "Section 4387, G. C., provides that marshalls of villages shall receive the same fees as sheriffs and constables in similar cases.
> "Section 4534, G. C., as amended 102 O. L. 476, provides that the fees of chiefs of police shall be the same as those of sheriffs and constables in similar cases.
> "Section 2997, as amended 102 O. L., 93, provides that county commissioners shall make alowances to sheriffs for actual and necessary expenses incurred in pursuing and transporting persons accused or convicted of crimes and offenses.
> "Quarere: May the commissioners allow chiefs of police, marshals and constables expenses in pursuing, arresting and transporting persons accused of misdemeanors?"

The sections of the General Code, referred to by you, provide as follows: Section 3347, General Code, provides:

> "For services rendered, duly elected and qualified constables shall be entitled to receive the following fees: For service and return of copies, orders of arrest, warrant, attachment, garnishee, writ of replevin or mittimus, forty cents, each, for each person named in the writ; service and return of summons, twenty-five cents for each person named in the writ; service and return of subpoena, twenty-five cents for one person, service on each additional person named in subpoena, ten cents; serivce of execution on goods or body, forty cents; on all money made on execution, four per cent.; on each day's attendance before justice of the peace, or jury trial, one dollar; each day's attendance before justice of the peace in forcible detainer, without jury, one dollar; summoning jury, one dollar; mileage, twenty cents for the first mile, and five cents per mile for each additional mile; assistants in criminal causes, one dollar and fifty cents per day, each; transporting and sustaining prisoners, allowance made by the magistrate, and paid on his certificate;

serving all other writs or notices not herein named, forty cents, and mileage as in other cases; copies of all writs, notices, orders or affidavits served , twenty-five cents; summoning and swearing appraisers in case of replevin and attachment, one dollar in each case; advertising property for sale on execution, forty cents; taking bond in replevin, and all other cases, fifty cents; each day's attendance on the grand jury, two dollars."

Section 4387, General Code, provides:

."In the discharge of his proper duties, he shall have like powers, be subject to like responsibilities and shall receive the same fees as sheriffs and constables in similar cases, for services actually performed by himself or his deputies and such additional compensation as the council prescribes. In no case shall he receive any fees or compensation for services rendered by any watchman or any other officer, nor shall he receive for guarding, safekeeping or conducting into the mayor's or police court any person arrested by him or deputies or by any other officer a greater compensation than twenty cents." .

Section 4534, General Code, as amended 102 Ohio Laws, 476, provides:

"In felonies, and other criminal proceedings not herein provided for, such mayor shall have jurisdiction and power, throughout the county, concurrent with justices of the peace. The chief of police shall execute and return all writs and process to him directed by the mayor, and shall by himself or deputy attend on the sittings of such court, to execute the orders and process thereof and to preserve order therein, and his jurisdiction and that of his deputies in the execution of such writs and process, and in criminal cases, and in cases of violations of ordinances of the corporation, shall be co-extensive with the county, and in civil cases shall be co-extensive with the jurisdiction of the mayor therein. The fees of the mayor in all cases, excepting those arising out of violation of ordinances, shall be the same as those allowed justices of the peace for similar services and the fees of the chief of police or his deputies in all cases, excepting those arising out of violations or ordinances shall be the same as those allowed sheriffs and constables in similar cases.

Section 2997, General Code, 102 Ohio Laws, 93 provides:

"In addition to the compensation and salary herein provided, the county commissioners shall make allowances quarterly to each sheriff for keeping and feeding prisoners, as provided by law, for his actual and necessary expenses incurred and expending in pursuing or transporting persons accused or convicted of crimes and offenses, in conveying and transferring persons to and from any state hospital for the insane, the institution for feeble minded youth, Ohio hospital for epileptics, boys' industrial school, girls' industrial home, county homes for the friendless, houses of refuge, children's homes, sanitariums, convents, orphan asylums or homes, county infirmaries, and all institutions for the care, cure, correction, reformation and protection of unfortunates, and all expenses of maintaining horses and vehicles necessary to the proper administration of the duties of his office. The county commissioners shall allow the sheriff his actual railroad fare and street car fare expended in serving civil processes and subpoenaing witnesses in civil and criminal cases, and may allow his necessary livery hire for the proper administration of the duties of his office. Each sheriff shall file under oath with the quarterly report herein provided a full, accurate and itemized account of all his actual and necessary expenses, including railroad fare, street car fare and livery hire mentioned in this section before they shall be allowed by the commissioners."

Section 3347, General Code, prescribes the fees to which constables shall be entitled to receive, but does not purport to determine as to who shall pay such fees. The magistrate is authorized to make allowances to constables for transporting and sustaining prisoners, but does not authorize payment from any public fund. Section 4387, General Code, likewise prescribes the fees to which a marshal shall be entitled and that they shall be the same as those received by sheriffs and constables in similar cases, but does not authorize their payment from a public fund. The same is true of Section 4538, General Code, which fixes the fees of chiefs of police.

Section 2097, General Code, authorizes the county commissioners to make an allowance quarterly to sheriffs for keeping and feeding prisoners and for his actual and necessary expenses incurred in pursuing or transporting persons accused or convicted of crimes. There is no provision of statute extending this authority so as to affect the expenses of constables, chiefs of police and marshals.

The authority of the county commissioners to make allowances in the pursuit and prosecution of persons accused of crimes is found in the following sections:

Section 3015, General Code, provides:

"The county commissioners may allow and pay the necessary expenses incurred by an officer in the pursuit of a person charged with felony, who has fled the country."

Section 3016, General Code, provides:

"In felonies, when the defendant is convicted the costs of the justices of the peace, police judge, or justice, mayor, marshal, chief of police, constable and witnesses, shall be paid from the county treasury and inserted in the judgement of conviction, so that such costs may be paid to the county from the state treasury. In all cases when recognizance are taken, forfeited and collected and no conviction is had, such costs shall be paid from the county treasury."

Section 3017, General Code, provides:

"In no other case whatever shall any cost be paid from the state or county treasury to a justice of the peace, police judge or justice, mayor, marshal, chief of police, or constable."

Section 3019, General Code, provides:

"In felonies where in the state fails, and in misdemeanors where in the defendant proves insolvent, the county commissioners, at any regular session, may make an allowance to any such officers in place of fees, but in any year the aggregate allowance to such officers shall not exceed the fees legally taxed to him in such causes, nor in any year shall the aggregate amount allowed an officer exceed one hundred dollars."

Sections 3015, 3016 and 3017, cover cases in which a person is charged with the commission of a felony and do not cover your question.

Section 3019, General Code, authorizes an allowance in place of fees, in felonies where the State fails, and in misdemeanors where in the defendant proves insolvent.

None of the above statutes, except Section 3019 as above stated, authorize the county commissioners to make allowances to chiefs of police, marshals and constables. Nor do I find any other statute granting them such power. The commissioners have limited jurisdiction. They have only such powers as are given them by statute. In the absence of statutory authority they cannot make payment of fees or expenses out of any county fund.

It is my conclusion, therefore, that the county commissioners have no authority to allow chiefs of police, marshals or constables their expenses in pursuing, arresting and transporting persons accused of misdemeanors. As provided in Section 3019, General Code, supra, they may make such an allowance in place of fees in misdemeanors wherein the defendant proves insolvent.

Respectfully,

TIMOTHY S. HOGAN,

Attorney General.

VILLAGE COUNCIL OF POMEROY—ILLEGAL CONTRACTS—POMEROY AND MASON CITY FERRY COMPANY—PUBLIC IMPROVEMENTS —STATUTORY REQUIREMENTS.

A contract between a village council and a ferry company wherein the latter agrees to construct a roadway in consideration of freedom from the payment of license fees, is an attempt to contract for a public improvement without fulfilling the statutory requirements and is therefore, illegal.

It is the settled policy of the courts of this State to aid neither party to an illegal contract and therefore, the village cannot recover the license fees, which, in accordance with the terms of an illegal contract, were not collected.

The unaccrued license fee, however, may be collected.

No recovery can be had against any official of the contract was made in good faith and without collusion.

COLUMBUS, OHIO, December 29, 1911.

Bureau of Inspection and Supervision of Public Offices, Columbus, Ohio.

GENTLEMEN:—Under favor of October 24, 1911, you ask an opinion upon the following:

"In 1898, the council of the village of Pomeroy entered into an agreement with a ferry company to remit the license fees fixed by ordinances of said village for a period of fifteen years as consideration to said company for the construction of a vitrified brick roadway at the public landing in said village, said ferry company being engaged in operating a ferry across the Ohio river at said point. Said agreement has two years to run, and the department is requested to pass upon the validity of the same and whether it is binding agreement upon the present village council. If said agreement is held to be illegal, what, if any, finding for recovery should be made and against whom? If no finding for recovery can be maintained, what, if any, recommendation is proper in the premises."

From the report of the examiner attached I take the following statements of fact:

"In 1898 the council of the village of Pomeroy, Ohio, entered into an agreement with the Pomeroy and Mason City Ferry Company to remit the license fees for a period of fifteen years, the consideration being that said company would construct a vitrified brick roadway from Front Street to low water mark, or, as near thereto as is possible to do so; said roadway to be the property of the village at the expiration of the agreement.

"In accordance with the agreement the ferry company immediately constructed the roadway and have enjoyed the same ever since.

"The agreement has run for a full period of twelve years and had the village received the license required by the ordinance they would have received the sum of $1,800.00. The fifteen years would be $2,250.00 for which said village is to receive the improvement as constructed and maintained by the said ferry company at an approximate cost of $1,000.

"The following is an abstract of the council journal of said village relative to the agreement with the said ferry company. Being the only legislation therefor.

"September 5, 1898:—'Mayor Baily of Mason City was present and submitted a proposition on behalf of the Ferry Company to pave a roadway up the ferry landing and keep in repair for twenty years providing the council would remit their license for that period; referred to committee.'

"September 12, 1898:—'The committee appointed to confer with the ferry company reported that they had offered to contract the levee in accordance with their first proposition; provided council would remit their license for a term of 16 years. Report accepted.'

"'A motion that the chair appoint a committee of four to confer with the ferry people and be given power to act, providing the ferry company will make said improvement upon council remitting their license for a period not to exceed 15 years; motion carried.'

"October 11, 1898:—'Mr. Jenkinson reported that the committee which had been appointed by council to confer with the ferry company had made arrangements with them to improve the levee in accordance with the agreement previously made and in accordance with the contract made by said committee.'"

Several legal questions arise from the situation which you present.

First: Is the contract illegal?

Second: If illegal, can recovery be had against the ferry company?

Third: If illegal, what, if any, official is responsible for the loss to the city?

In order to determine the illegality of this contract, it will be necessary to examine the statutes as in force in 1898 at the time the contract was entered into.

Section 2303, Bates Rev. Stat. 1900, provided:

"When the corporation makes an improvement or repair provided for in this chapter, the cost of which will exceed five hundred dollars it shall proceed as follows:

"First: It shall advertise for bids for the period of two weeks, or if the estimated cost exceed five thousand dollars, four weeks, in two newspapers published in the corporation, or one newspaper, if only one is published therein; or by posting advertisements in three public places in the corporation, if no newspaper is published therein.

"Second: The bids shall be filed with the clerk of the board of public improvements or board of public works (city commissioners) as the case may be, sealed up, by 12 o'clock at noon on the last day, as stated in the advertisement."

There are other provisions of this section which state how the bids shall be opened, the contract let, and how the contract shall be made.

Section 2304, Bates Rev. Stat., 1900, provided:

"When it is deemed necessary by a city or village to make a public improvement, the council shall declare by resolution the necessity of such improvement, and shall give twenty days written notice of its passage to the owners of the property abutting upon the improvement, or to the persons in whose names it may be assessed for taxation upon the tax duplicate, who may be residents of the county, which notice shall be served by a person designated by the council upon such person in the manner provided by law for the service of summons in a civil action, and publish the resolution for not less than two nor more than four consecutive weeks in some newspaper published and of general circulation in the corporation; * * * * *"

Section 2702, Bates Rev. Stat., 1900, provided:

"No contract, agreement or other obligation involving the expenditure of money shall be entered into, nor shall any ordinance, resolution or order for the appropriation or expenditure of money, be passed by the council or by any board or officer of a municipal corporation, unless the auditor of the corporation, and if there is no auditor, the clerk thereof, shall first certify that the money required for the contract, agreement or obligation, or to pay the appropriation or expenditure is in the treasury to the credit of the fund from which it is to be drawn, and not appropriated for any other purpose, which certificate shall be filed and immediately recorded; and the sum so certified shall not thereafter be considered unappropriated until the corporation is discharged from the contract, agreement or obligation, or so long as the ordinance, resolution or order is in force; and all contracts, agreements or other obligations, and all ordinances, resolutions and orders entered into or passed contrary to the provisions of this section shall be void;"

The requirements of the foregoing statutes have not been complied with in the making of the contract under consideration. The contract was for a public improvement, whether of a street or of a public levee does not appear. I take it, however, that the improvement was upon ground dedicated to public use, or owned by the public. The improvement was at a cost in excess of five hundred dollars, and therefore, should have been let at competitive bidding as provided in Section 2303, supra. Failure to comply with this statute goes to the legality of the contract.

In Upington et al, vs. Oviatt, 24 O. S. 232, the fourth syllabus reads:

> "The provisions of Section 562, prescribing the time and manner of advertising for bids for doing the work and furnishing the materials for the proposed improvement, were designed for the protection of the tax-payer, and are peremptory. A failure, substantially, to comply with those provisions, is a defect which goes to the legality of the contract and of the subsequent assessment."

In the case of McCloud vs. City of Columbus, 54 O. S., 439, the syllabus is as follows:

> "Where a municipal corporation, acting under chapter 4, division 7, of Title XII, Revised Statutes, improves a public street, the provisions of section 2305, prescribing the mode and time of advertising for bids, are mandatory, the compliance with which is a condition precedent to the power of the municipality to enter into a valid agreement in respect thereof."

The preliminary resolution provided for in Section 2304, Bates was not passed. There are other requirements which have not been followed, but these are sufficient to show that the plain provisions of the statutes were ignored and that the contract in question was not properly entered into and is illegal and void.

The next question to be considered is, can recovery be had against the ferry company?

In case of Buchanan Bridge Co., vs. Campbell, 60 O. S., 406, the syllabus reads:

> "A contract made by county commissioners for the purchase and erection of a bridge in violation or disregard of the statutes on that subject, is void, and no recovery can be had against the county for the value of such bridge. Courts will leave the parties to such unlawful transaction where they have placed themselves, and will refuse to grant relief to either party."

In case of State vs. Fronizer, 77 O. S., 7 it is held:

> "Section 1277, Revised Statutes, which authorizes a prosecuting attorney to bring action to recover back money of the county which has been misapplied, or illegally drawn from the county treasury, does not authorize the recovery back of money paid on a county commissioners' bridge contract fully executed but rendered void by force of section 2834*b*, because of the lack, through inadvertence, of a certificate by the county auditor that the money is in the treasury to the credit of the fund, or has been levied and is in process of collection, there being no claim of unfairness or fraud in the making, or fraud or extortion in the execution of such contract for such work, nor any claim of effort to put the contractor in statu quo by a return of the bridge or otherwise, the same having been accepted by the board of commissioners and incorporated as part of the public highway."

These decisions settle the policy of the courts in this State as to these illegal contracts. As between the parties to the illegal contract, the courts will aid neither and will leave them just as it finds them.

In this case the village has the public improvement and the ferry company has had its license fees remitted for twelve or thirteen years. The recital in the agreement that the village is to have the improvement at the end of fifteen years does not affect the situation. If it is made upon public land or a street dedicated to public use the village has the improvement for all practical purposes. What has been done the courts will not undo. The contract however, has two or three years to run. The license fees have been remitted year by year by authority of this contract which was not binding upon the city. The city officials are not required to remit the license fees and may, and should, proceed at once to collect them from the ferry company for future use of the wharf. Under the ruling in the above cases the license fees which have been remitted cannot now be collected.

We now come to the liability of the officers.

The rule of recovery is laid down as follows in the fifth syllabus of case of McAlexander vs. Haviland Village School, 7 N. P. N. S., 590, as follows:

> "Public funds paid out on a contract, completed in good faith and free from fraud and conclusion, can not be recovered back at the instance of a tax-payer, notwithstanding the contract was illegal and void."

This was an action, among other things, to recover from the members of the board of education and from the contractor, the amount of money paid out upon an illegal contract for the construction of a school house.

On page 600, Cameron, J., says:

> "While the court finds that the contract for the building and construction of said school house was illegal and void, yet the court further finds that said contract has been fully executed, and the building built, completed and paid for, in good faith, free from fraud or collusion on the part of said board, the members thereof, or the contractor.
> "It is, therefore, the further order and judgment of the court that the mandatory injunctions prayed for, should be and are refused, as is also the prayer for a finding of the amount of money claimed to be illegally paid out by said board of education on account of said proposed school buildings and judgment therefor."

If the improvement was made in good faith, and there was no fraud or collusion, the officers who participated in the illegal contract are not liable for the license fees remitted. The officer or officers who have remitted these license fees from year to year in good faith and without fraud or collusion, cannot be held liable therefor.

In conclusion:

The contract entered into in 1898 is illegal and void.

No recovery can be had against the ferry company for license fees which have been remitted.

No recovery can be had against any official if the contract was entered into in good faith, and without fraud or collusion.

The ferry company should be required to pay the necessary license fee for the future, or be denied the priveleges of the public wharf or landing.

Respectfully,

TIMOTHY S. HOGAN,
Attorney General.

CITY'S LIABILITY TO COUNTY FOR JAILING—PRISONERS IN STATE CASES—MAYOR'S COURT—COUNTY JAIL.

The city is not liable to reimburse the county for money paid for keeping prisoners in jail in cases wherein defendants have been committed to jail from a mayor's court for violation of state laws.

The county should pay for the maintenance of prisoners confined in the county jail pending a trial before a mayor's court for an offence committed or charged in violation of a state law.

COLUMBUS, OHIO, January 15, 1912.

Bureau of Inspection and Supervision of Public Offices, Columbus, Ohio.

GENTLEMEN:—Your favor of December 19, 1911, is received, in which you ask an opinion of this department upon the following:

> "Should the city reimburse the county for amount paid to sheriff for keeping prisoners in jail in cases wherein the defendant has been committed to the county jail from the mayor's court (there being no police court) for violation of state laws? If defendants in state cases are remanded to the county jail pending a trial before the mayor's court, should the city or the county pay for maintenance?"

Section 13507, General Code, authorizes a magistrate to commit a person accused of crime to county jail pending trial, as follows:

> "If it is necessary, for just cause, to adjourn the examination of the accused, the magistrate may order such adjournment and commit him to the jail of the county, until such cause of delay is removed, but the entire time of such confinement in jail shall not exceed four days. The officer having custody of such person, by the written order of the magistrate may detain him in custody in a secure and convenient place other than the jail, to be designated by such magistrate in his order, not exceeding four days. The officer in whose custody any person is detained shall provide for the sustenance of such prisoner while in custody."

Section 13494, General Code, grants power to a mayor to issue warrants, as follows:

> "Justices of the peace, police judges and mayors of cities and villages may issue process for the apprehension of a person charged with an offense and execute the powers conferred and duties enjoined in this title."

Section 13716, General Code, provides:

> "When a person convicted of an offense is sentenced to imprisonment in jail, the court or magistrate shall order him into the custody of the sheriff or constable, who shall deliver him, with the record of his conviction, to the jailor, in whose custody he shall remain, in the jail of the county, until the term of his imprisonment expires or he is otherwise legally discharged."

Section 13717, General Code, 101 Ohio Laws, 41, provides:

"When a fine is the whole or part of a sentence, the court or magistrate may order that the person sentenced remain imprisoned in jail until such fine and costs are paid, or secured to be paid, or he is otherwise legally discharged, provided that the person so imprisoned shall receive credit upon such fine and costs at the rate of sixty cents per day for each day's imprisonment."

The above statutes grant authority to sentence persons convicted or accused of crime to imprisonment in the county jail. The penalty of each offense must be looked to to determine the extent of the imprisonment which may be imposed.

Section 2997, General Code, 102 Ohio Laws 93, authorizes the county commissioners to make allowances to the sheriff for keeping and feeding prisoners, as follows:

"In addition to the compensation and salary herein provided, the county commissioners shall make allowances quarterly to each sheriff for keeping and feeding prisoners, as provided by law, for his actual and necessary expenses incurred and expended in pursuing or transporting persons accused or convicted of crimes and offenses, in conveying and transferring persons to and from any state hospital for the insane, the institution for feeble minded yourth, Ohio hospital for epileptics, boys' industrial school, girls' industrial home, county homes for the friendless, houses of refuge, children's homes, sanitariums, convents, orphan asylums or homes, county infirmaries, and all institutions for the care, cure, correction, reformation and protection of unfortunates, and all expenses of maintaining horses and vehicles necessary to the proper administration of the duties of his office. The county commissioners shall allow the sheriff his actual railroad fare and street car fare expended in serving civil processes and subpoening witnesses in civil and criminal cases, and may allow his necessary livery hire for the proper administration of the duties of his office. Each sheriff shall file under oath with the quarterly report herein provided a full, accurate and itemized account of all his actual and necessary expenses, including railroad fare, street car fare and livery hire mentioned in this section before they shall be allowed by the commissioners."

Section 12384, General Code, provides:

"The commissioners of a county ,or the council of a municipality, wherein there is no workhouse, may agree with the city council, or other authority having control of the workhouse of a city in any other county, or with the board of district workhouses having a workhouse, upon what terms and conditions persons convicted of misdemeanors, or of violation of an ordinance of such municipality having no workhouse, may be received into such workhouse under sentence thereto. The county commissioners, or the council of a municipality, are authorized to pay the expenses incurred under such agrement out of the general fund of the county or municipality, upon the certificate of the proper officer of such workhouse."

The above section applies to the workhouses and not to jails.

Section 4564, General Code, prescribes that the city may have the use of the jail for imprisonment under ordinances, but that such use shall be at the expense of the city, as follows:

"Imprisonment under the ordinances of a municipal corporation shall be in the workhouse or other jail thereof, if the corporation is provided with such workhouse or a jail. Any corporation not provided with a workhouse, or other jail, shall be allowed, for the purpose of imprisonment, the use of the jail of the county, at the expense of corporation, until it is provided with a prison, house of correction, or workhouse. Persons, so imprisoned in the county jail shall be under the charge of the sheriff of the county, who shall receive and hold such persons in the manner prescribed by the ordinances of the corporation, until discharged by due course of law."

This section applies in cases of violations of ordinances and not to violations of state laws.

Section 4125, General Code, provides:

"The marshal or chief of police shall provide all persons confined in prison or station houses with necessary food during such confinement, and see that such places of confinement are kept clean and made comfortable for the inmates thereof."

Section 4126, General Code, provides:

"Council shall provide by ordinance, for sustaining all persons sentenced to or confined in such prison or station house, at the expense of the corporation. On the presentation of bills for food, sustenance, and necessary supplies, to the proper officer, certified by such person as the council may designate, such officer shall audit them, under such rules and regulations as the council prescribes, and draw his order on the treasurer of the corporation in favor of the officer presenting such bill, but the amount shall not exceed forty cents a day for any person so confined."

These two latter sections apply to prisons and station houses of the city and not to jails, of the county.

Section 4128, General Code, provides:

"When a person over sixteen years of age is convicted of an offense under the law of the state or an ordinance of a municipal corporation, and the tribunal before which the conviction is had is authorized by law to commit the offender to the county jail or corporation prison, the court, mayor, or justice of the peace, as the case may be, may sentence the offender to the workhouse, if there is such house in the country. When a committment is made from a city, village, or township in the county, other than in the municipality containing such work- house, the council of such city or village, or the trustees of such township, shall transmit with the mittimus a sum of money equal to forty cents per day for the time of the commitment, to be placed in the hands of the superintendent of the workhouse for the care and maintenance of the prisoner."

This latter section was passed upon by the circuit court in the case of Cleveland vs. Commissioners, 10 Cir. Court, N. S., the syllabi of which case are as follows:

"The liability of county commissioners for maintenance of prisoners, sentenced by the common pleas court to a city work house, is not essentially contractural, but is based rather on the mandatory requirements of Section 1536-369 Revised Statutes.

"Section 1536-369 is comprehensive, and excludes the interpolation of any supposed but unexpressed policy of the state as reflected by past legislation with reference to the distribution of the expense of maintaining prisoners offending against state statutes and city ordinances respectively."

Henry, J., in stating the case, says on page 278, as follows:

"* * * * *The action below was brought by the city to recover from the county the agreed price for maintenance in the city workhouse of prisoners committed thereto for violation of state statutes. The theory of the city is that the county is ultimately liable for such maintenance in all cases where the offense is statutory, and that the city's ultimate liability for such maintenance is confined to cases of violation of city ordinances."

He further says, on page 280:

"If it be contended that a literal enforcement of Section 1536-369, Revised Statutes, would saddle the city with expense of maintaining some prisoners convicted by its own police court, or before justices of the peace elected and sitting within its boundaries, of state offienses committed outside its corporate limits, it may be answered that such tribunals are presumed to be clothed with and to exercise their extramunicipal jurisdiction for the benefit of the community within and for which they act, just as similar tribunals in outlying townships of the same county may in certain like cases, and with equal propriety charge their own communities in respect of offenses committed in such city. Concerning the possibility of a trifling over-lapping of benefits or expenses as between the taxpayers of a city and the tax payers of outlying municipalities and townships in the same county, the maxim de minimus non curat lex is peculiarly applicable."

The situation presented by the case in hand is the opposite of the one adjudicated in 10 C. C. N. S. 277, supra.

In that case the city was asking for compensation from the county for keeping prisoners convicted of state offenses in its own workhouse. In the present case the county would be asking compensation from the city for keeping prisoners, convicted of state offenses, who are confined in the county jail.

Both the city and the county are important factors in the government of the State. The city has jurisdiction of local affairs while the county has more general duties and performs more of the functions of the State.

The statutes do not charge the city with liability for keeping prisoners in the county jail who have been charged or convicted of offenses in violation of state laws. The county, as the representative of the State, pays for the keeping of these prisoners in the first instance and without statutory authority the county cannot place the liability therefor upon the city.

The city, therefore, is not liable to reimburse the county for money paid for keeping prisoners in jail in cases wherein defendants have been committed to jail from a mayor's court for violation of state laws.

The county should pay for the maintenance of persons confined in the county jail pending a trial before a mayor's court for an offense committed or charged in violation of a state law.

Respectfully,
TIMOTHY S. HOGAN,
Attorney General.

MAGISTRATES—FEES—SITTING IN TRIAL—FINAL JURISDICTION—FINAL DISPOSITION—MISDEMEANOR.

A magistrate is not entitled to the statutory fee of $1.00 for "sitting in trial" of a cause, unless he has final jurisdiction therein, and makes a final disposition of the same.

A magistrate, in cases of misdemeanor where the defendant pleads guilty, can render final judgment only where the complaint is made by the party injured.

COLUMBUS, OHIO, November 27, 1911.

Bureau of Inspection and Supervision of Public Offices, Department of Auditor of State, Columbus, Ohio.

GENTLEMEN:—I beg to acknowledge receipt of your letter of October 26th, in which you state:

> "Under date of June 10, we made inquiry of you as to your opinion in regard to the jurisdiction of justices of the peace in certain cases and fees of the magistrate and constable. That inquiry, we meant to refer only to general offenses other than these coming within the special jurisdiction of magistrates under the provisions of Section 2718*c*, Revised Statutes, now Section 13423, General Code. With that understanding, we desire your opinion in answer to the folowing questions:
> "Are the magistrate and constable, or either of them, entitled to $1.00 for sitting in or attending trial, respectively, under the following circumstances:
> "1. When a person is brought before a justice of the peace or mayor of a village or of a city not having a police court, charged with a misdemeanor under the laws of the state and pleads guilty, and the magistrate renders final judgment without a written waiver by the accused of his right to a trial by jury. This primarily involves another question: 'Can the magistrate render final judgment under such conditions?'

"2. When the person so charged with a misdemeanor waives examination and is bound over to court.

"3. When such person so charged pleads guilty and is sentenced by the magistrate, either with or without a waiver of a jury."

In reply to your first question I desire to say that Section 13510 of the General Code provides as follows:

"When a person charged with a misdemeanor is brought before a magistrate on complaint of the party injured and pleads guilty thereto, such magistrate shall sentence him to such punishment as he may deem proper, according to law, and order the payment of costs. If the complaint is not made by the party injured, and the accused pleads guilty, the magistrate shall require the accused to enter into a recognizance to appear at the proper court as is provided when there is no plea of guilty."

Under the section just quoted, when a person is charged with a misdemeanor on complaint of the party injured, such magistrate has final jurisdiction without a written waiver by the accused of his right to trial by jury; but if the complaint is filed by any person other than the one injured, said magistrate has not final jurisdiction and must recognizance the accused to the proper court of the county in which the crime was committed.

Section 13511 of the General Code provides as follows:

"When the accused is brought before the magistrate and there is no plea of guilty, he shall inquire into the complaint in the presence of such accused. If it appear that an offense has been committed and that there is probable cause to believe the accused guilty, he shall order him to enter into a recognizance, with good and sufficient surety, in such amount as he deems reasonable, for his appearance at the proper time and before the proper court; otherwise he shall discharge him from custody. If the offense charged is a misdemeanor and the accused, in a writing subscribed by him and filed before or during the examination, waive a jury and submit to be tried by the magistrate, he may render final judgment."

The section prescribing the fees of a justice of the peace is Section 1746, General Code, and provides in part:

"* * * * * justices of the peace, for the services named when rendered, may receive the following fees: * * * *sitting in the trial of a cause, civil or criminal, where a defense is interposed, whether tried to the justice or to a jury, one dollar; * * * * *."

Section 3347, General Code, provides as to fees of constables. It is in part:

"For services rendered, * * * constables shall be entitled to receive the following fees: * * * * each day's attendance before justice of the peace on criminal trial, one dollar, * * * *."

Now, in order to properly answer your questions, it is necessary to decide what is a trial. The Supreme Court of Ohio in the case of Palmer vs. State, 42

O. S. 596, held that a trial is a judicial examination of the issues, whether of law or of facts, in an action or proceeding. The United States Court, in the case of United States vs. Winslow Curtis, 4 Mason's Reports, at page 232, held that:

"A trial means the trying of a cause and not the arraignment and pleading preparatory to such trial."

I am, therefore, of the opinion that a preliminary hearing is not a trial, and that in order to entitle a magistrate or constable to the fees provided by the sections above quoted, for attending a trial, the magistrate having jurisdiction of said case must have final jurisdiction therein.

In answer to your first question, therefore, I am of the opinion that a magistrate, under the circumstances set forth therein, could not render final judgment in any case other than those specifically provided by statute, where the defendant pleads guilty and does not waive the right to trial by jury, unless the complaint was filed by the party injured, as provided by the section above quoted.

In answer to your second question I am of the opinion that where a person charged with a misdemeanor waives examination and is bound over to the proper court by the magistrate, there has been no trial, under the definition and rule above quoted, and the magistrate and constable, therefore, would not be entitled to the fee of $1.00 under said statutes.

Replying to your third question—when a person charged with a misdemeanor pleads guilty and is sentenced by the magistrate according to the rules above set forth, either with or without a waiver of a jury, where that may be done under the statute, and the magistrate makes final disposition of the case, I am of the opinion that the magistrate and constable are entitled to the fee of $1.00 for each day's attendance at said trial.

Very truly yours,
TIMOTHY S. HOGAN,
Attorney General.

OFFICES INCOMPATIBLE—CITY AUDITOR AND CLERK OF COUNCIL, CLERK TO DIRECTOR OF SAFETY, CLERK TO DIRECTOR OF SERVICE, CLERK TO THE BOARD OF CONTROL, AND SECRETARY OF THE SINKING FUND TRUSTEES OR COLLECTOR OF WATER RENTS.

The office of city auditor serves as a check upon and is therefore incompatible with those of clerk of council, clerk to director of safety, clerk to the board of control, or collector of water rentals.—Salary.

By Section 4509 of the General Code, city auditor may however, act as clerk of the sinking fund trustees, where no other clerk is legally provided for and he may receive the salary provided for that position.

COLUMBUS, OHIO, December, 19, 1911.

Bureau of Inspection and Supervision of Public Offices, Department of Auditor of State, Columbus, Ohio.

GENTLEMEN:—I herewith acknowledge receipt of your communication of November 20th wherein you submit for consideration and opinion the following:

"Is it legal for the city auditor to serve as clerk of council, clerk to the director of safety, clerk to the director of service, clerk to the board of control, (secretary of the sinking fund trustees,) or collector of water rentals if said city auditor has been selected or appointed to said position by the proper authority? And, if so appointed, is he entitled to the compensation fixed by council for each of said positions in addition to his salary as city auditor?"

In reply thereto section 4284 of the General Code provides for the duties of the city auditor as follows:

"At the end of each fiscal year, or oftener if required by council, the auditor shall examine and audit the accounts of all officers and departments. He shall prescribe the form of accounts and reports to be rendered to his department, and the form and method of keeping accounts by all other departments, and, subject to the powers and duties of the state bureau of inspection and supervision of public offices, shall have the inspection and revision thereof. Upon the death, designation, removal or expiration of the term of any officer, the auditor shall audit the accounts of such officer, and if such officer be found indebted to the city, he shall immediately give notice thereof to council and to the solicitor, and the latter shall proceed forthwith to collect the indebtedness."

Section 4286 of the General Code provides as follows:

"On the first Monday of each month, detailed statements of the receipts and expenditures of the several officers and departments for the preceding month shall be made to the auditor by the heads thereof. The auditor shall countersign each receipt given by the treasurer before it is delivered to the person entitled to receive it, and shall charge the treasurer with the amount thereof. If the auditor approves any voucher contrary to the provisions of this title, he and his sureties shall be individually liable for the amount thereof."

The General Code is silent as to whether a city auditor can legally serve as such auditor and at the same time serve as clerk of council, or clerk to the director of service, or clerk to the board of control, or clerk to the director of safety, or as collector of water rentals. Under the common-law rule, offices are held incompatible when one office is subordinate to or in any way a check upon the other office.

Section 4284, quoted above, makes it the duty of the auditor to examine and audit the accounts of all officers and departments of municipalities.

Section 4286, quoted above, makes it the duty of the several officers and departments of municipal government to make a detailed statement monthly to the city auditor.

It follows, therefore, that the office of city auditor acts as a check upon the various officers and departments above enumerated. Therefore, it is not legal for a city auditor to serve as a clerk of the council, or as clerk to the director of safety, or as clerk to the director of service or as clerk to the board of control, or as collector of water rentals. It necessarily follows that such city auditor would not be entitled to the compensation fixed by council for each of the above enumerated positions in addition to his salary as city auditor.

The above reasoning and conclusion likewise applies to the city auditor serving as such officer and at the same time serving as secretary of the sinking fund trustees, except in the case where Section 4509 of the General Code intervenes. Said Section 4509 of the General Code provides as follows:

> "The trustees of the sinking fund, immediately after their appointment and qualification, shall elect one of their number as president and another as vice-president, who, in the absence or disability of the president, shall perform his duties and exercise his powers, and such secretary, clerks or employes as council may provide by an ordinance which shall fix their duties, bonds and compensation. Where no clerks or secretary is authorized, the auditor of the city or clerk of the village shall act as secretary of the board."

Therefore, by virtue of the last cited statute, where there is no clerk of the sinking fund trustees, then the city auditor shall act as such clerk and when so acting as such clerk under and by virtue of said section, it is my opinion that the city auditor would not be legally entitled to the compensation provided by the city council for the clerk of the sinking fund trustees in addition to his regular salary as city auditor.

Very truly yours,
TIMOTHY S. HOGAN,
Attorney General.

PUBLIC IMPROVEMENTS—STATUTORY REQUIREMENTS AS TO CONTRACTS—POWERS OF DEPARTMENT OF PUBLIC SERVICE—COMPETITIVE BIDDING AND ADVERTISEMENTS.

The Department of Public Service of a city is not authorized to purchase material at competitive bidding for the improvement of a street and to hire laborers and teams to do the work of constructing such improvement and to pay such laborers and teams by the day.

An assessment for the cost of such labor against the abutting property would be illegal and void.

COLUMBUS, OHIO, December 22,, 1911.

Bureau of Inspection and Supervision of Public Offices, Columbus, Ohio.

GENTLEMEN:—Under date of December 8, 1911, you ask an opinion upon the following:

> 'Is it legal for the department of public service of a city to purchase the necessary material for the paving of a street at competitive bid and employ labor and teams by the day to construct the improvement at the wage fixed by council for laborers and teams, and assess the total cost of the improvement (less city's portion) against abutting property by special assessments?"

Section 3833, General Code, prescribes the manner in which the contract for the improvement of a street shall be let as follows:

> "The contract for any such improvement shall be let by the director of public service, in the same manner as other contracts, and in case all bids be rejected such director in cities and the council in villages may order a readvertisement for bids."

Section 4328, General Code, prescribes how public contracts shall be let as follows:

"The director of public service may make any contract or purchase supplies or materials or provide labor for any work under the supervision of that department not involving more than five hundred dollars. When an expenditure within the department, other than the compensation of persons employed therein, exceeds five hundred dollars, such expenditure shall first be authorized and directed by ordinance of council. When so authorized and directed, the director of public service shall make a written contract with the lowest and best bidder after advertisement for not less than two nor more than four consecutive weeks in a newspaper of general circulation within the city."

The above sections provide that contracts for improvements of streets, when they exceed five hundred dollars, shall be let at competitive bidding, upon publication. If the city were to employ persons as laborers and hire teams to do the work, after purchasing the material at competitive bidding, that much of the improvement would not be made in compliance with the above sections.

In case of Upington, et al, vs. Oviatt, 24 O. S., 232, the fourth syllabus reads:

"The provisions of section 562, prescribing the time and manner of advertising for bids for doing the work and furnishing the materials for the proposed improvement, were designed for the protection of the tax payer, and are peremtory. A failure, substantially, to comply with those provisions, is a defect which goes to the legality of the contract and of the subsequent assessment."

In case of McCloud vs. City of Columbus, 54 O. S., 439, the syllabus is as follows:

"Where a municipal corporation, acting under chapter 4, division 7, of Title XII, Revised Statutes, improves a public street, the provisions of section 2303, prescribing the mode and time of advertising for bids, are mandatory, the compliance with which is a condition precedent to the power of the municipality to enter into a valid agreement in respect thereof."

The statutes have provided the manner in which a contract for the improvement of a street shall be made and the provisions thereof are mandatory and must be complied with. Not only the contract but the assessment levied against the abutting property would be void upon failure to substantially comply with the provisions of the statutes.

Sections 3833 and 4328, General Code, supra, require that a contract for the labor and material shall be let at competitive bidding. Failure to do so will make the contract and special assessment void.

The department of public service of a city is not authorized to purchase material at competitive bidding for the improvement of a street and to hire laborers and teams to do the work of constructing such improvement, and to pay such laborers and teams by the day. An assessment for the cost of such labor against the abutting property would be illegal and void.

Respectfully,
TIMOTHY S. HOGAN,
Attorney General.

COUNTY SURVEYOR—COMPENSATION—EXPENSES WHEN EMPLOYED BY DAY—FOOD, LODGING AND HORSE FEED.

A county surveyor when employed by the day may under Section 2822, General Code, be allowed such expenses as meals and lodging for himself and feed for his horses.

January 16, 1912.

Bureau of Inspection and Supervision of Public Offices, Columbus, Ohio.

GENTLEMEN:—Under date of November 23d, you stated that you desired my opinion whether Section 2822, General Code, authorizes the payment of such expenses as meals and lodging for the surveyor and feed for his horse when employed by the day on county work.

Section 2822 of the General Code in part provides:

> "When employed by the day, the surveyor shall receive five dollars for each day and his necessary actual expenses."

As the statute is so broad in its language, I am of the opinion that it would cover all amounts necessarily and actually expended by the county surveyor in pursuance of his duties as such surveyor, and would include meals and lodging for himself and feed for his horses necessarily and actually incurred while in the performance of his duty, and I am, therefore, in full accord with the opinion of Hon. Wade E. Ellis, rendered by him as Attorney General, on May 31, 1906.

It will be noted that Section 2822 supra contains no provision therein for mileage for the county surveyor when employed by the day.

This, as I view it, clearly distinguishes this case from the case of Richardson vs. State, 66 O. S. 108, wherein the Supreme Court considered the question of reasonable and necessary expenses actually paid to be charged by county commissioners. In that case the court held that mileage allowed a commissioner was intended to compensate him for all traveling expenses while traveling on official business. Therefore, the reasonable and necessary expenses provided in addition to the compensation and mileage of a commissioner meant solely official expenses as distinguished from those which pertained to his personal comfort and necessity.

As Section 2822, General Code, does not provide mileage for the surveyor when employed by the day on county work, I am of the opinion that such case does not apply to the question submitted.

Very truly yours,
TIMOTHY S. HOGAN,
Attorney General.

VILLAGE OF FINDLAY, OHIO—CLASSIFICATION OF CITIES—EFFECT OF UNCONSTITUTIONALITY, ON POWERS OF COUNCIL—POWERS TO CREATE AND REMOVE POLICE JUDGES AND CLERKS OF COURTS.

In 1902 the Council of the Village of Findlay passed an ordinance establishing a police court, and in 1910 passed an ordinance repealing the ordinance providing for a police judge.

Neither ordinance was authorized by a valid existing statute, and, therefore, the appointment of both police judge and clerk of courts, thereunder, was null and void and there is no vacancy at the present time to be filled by the Governor.

COLUMBUS, OHIO, December, 11, 1911.

Bureau of Inspection and Supervision of Public Officers, Jos, T. Tracy, Deputy, Columbus, Ohio.

DEAR SIR:—Under favor of May 27, 1911, you ask an opinion of the following:

> "You will note by ordinance of December 22, 1902, a police court was established in the City of Findlay, Ohio. The police judge was elected for a term of four years and a police clerk was appointed for a term of two years. A subsequent ordinance of date October 24, 1910, repealed the ordinance providing for a police judge.
> "Quaere: Is said repealing ordinance sufficient to abolish the position of police judge and that of police clerk, or should the Governor be notified to fill the vacancy?
> "Does the repealing ordinance abolish the position of clerk, or may said clerk continue in office, serving as clerk to the mayor who has discharged the duties of police judge since the abolishment of the court?"

The first question to be considered is the right of council to abolish the position of police judge.

The ordinance of October 24, 1910, seeking to abolish the office of police judge purports that it was passed by authority granted in Section 1785 of the Revised Statutes, said Section 1785, Revised Statutes, was carried into Bates Statutes of 1904, as Section 1536-797, and has not been repealed or amended by the General Code. It is now carried into the appendix of the General Code.

Said Section 1536-797, Rev. Statutes, provides:

> "In cities of the first class, and in cities of the third grade, third grade a, and third grade c, of the second class, there shall be a court, held by the police judge, which court shall be styled the police court, and be a court of record. Provided that in cities of the third grade c, the city council by a two-thirds vote may abolish the office of police judge and vest the mayor of said city with all the powers of a police judge as provided by the Revised Statutes of the State of Ohio; and when such office of police judge has been so abolished, it shall not be again re-established except by a like vote of council, but no action of council shall extend or curtail the term of office of a mayor or police judge who may be serving at the time the change may be made by council."

This statute was passed when the method of classifying cities was in vogue, and carries such classification into its provisions. The classification of cities was declared unconstitutional by decision rendered June 26, 1902, in case of State vs. Jones, 66 O. S., 453.

The classification of cities was provided for in Sections 1546 to 1552 of the Revised Statutes (Bates, 1902). The Municipal Code, passed October 22, 1902, repealed Sections 1546 to 1552 (see 96 Ohio Laws, 97). Said act as to repeals did not become effective until May 4, 1903. Thereafter the classification of cities was abolished.

Section 231 of the Municipal Code provided for its taking effect as follows:

> "For the purpose of carrying into effect the powers and duties conferred and imposed upon present councils, boards of legislation, or other legislative bodies, by the provisions of this act, and for the purpose of conducting the first election to be held in every municipality hereunder, and of preparing for the change in the organization of municipalities herein provided for, this act shall take effect from and after the fifteenth day of November, 1902; and for all other purposes this act, and every portion of the same, including the repeal of existing laws, shall take effect on the first Monday in May, 1903, and the following sections of the Revised Statutes of Ohio, are hereby repealed:"

Said Section 1536-797, Revised Statutes, authorized the council of cities of the third grade c, of the second class, to abolish the position of police judge. On October 24, 1910, the time when the city council of Findlay attempted to abolish the office of police judge, there was no city of the second class, third grade c, as the statute making much classification had been repealed. Even though the classification of cities had not been abolished, Findlay would not come within the second class, third grade c. Applying the previous Section 1548, Bates Revised Statutes, 1902, we find that in accordance with the population of Findlay in 1890, it was a city of the third grade, second class, by the population of 1900, it was a city of the third grade b, and by the census of 1910, would have been a city of the second class, third grade, as it was in 1890.

The Secretary of State's report of the population of the municipalities of Ohio, shows that in 1890, Findlay had a population of 18,553; in 1900 a population of 17,613, and in 1910, a population of 14,858. Section 1548, Revised Statutes (Bates, 1902), provided that cities having a population of not more than 20,000, and not less than 10,000, as found by the federal census should be known as cities of the second class, third grade; and that those having a population of not less than 16,000 and not more than 18,000 should be known as the second class, third grade b. The other classifications do not fit the population of Findlay.

The provision of Section 1536-797, granting authority to abolish the office of police judge could not apply to the City of Findlay.

A municipality can only exercise the powers granted it by statute. In October, 1910, the council of cities were not authorized by statute or otherwise to abolish the position of police judge.

The action of the council of Findlay in passing the ordinance attempting to abolish the office of police judge was unauthorized in law and is null and void.

The next question is, should the governor be notified to fill the vacancy?

This inquiry calls into question the legality of the establishment of the police court of Findlay.

It appears that on December 22, 1902, the city council passed an ordinance purporting to establish a police court.

The first section of said ordinance provides:

> "That a police court of and for the City of Findlay, be and the same hereby is created and established, the same being deemed expedient and required by law. That the officers of said court shall consist of a police judge, a prosecuting attorney and a clerk."

Section 2 provides for the election of the police judge, the appointment of the clerk by the police judge, and that the city solicitor shall act as prosecuting attorney.

Section 3 provides for the bond of the police judge and clerk, and Section 4 fixes the salaries of said officers.

This ordinance was passed during the interim between the passage of the Municipal Code abolishing the classification of cities, and the time the repealing clause of said act became effective.

Section 1785 of the General Statutes of 1880, (Bates 1536-797, supra), established police courts in cities of the first class only. In 1887, as shown in 84 Ohio Laws, 26, this section was amended so as to include cities of the third grade of the second class. In 88 Ohio Laws 160, cities of third grade, a second class, were included, and in 93 Ohio Laws, 615, (April 21, 1898), said section was passed in its present form.

According to the census of 1890, it has been seen that Findlay was a city of the second class, third grade, and according to the census of 1900, it became a city of the second class, third grade b.

It appears therefore that as early as 1890, Findlay, being a city of the second class, third grade, was included in the cities in which the statute provided that a police court should be established. However, from the ordinance passed in 1902, purporting to establish a police court, I conclude that said City of Findlay had no police court prior thereto.

Section 4568, General Code, provides for the salary of the police judge as follows:

"The judge of the police court shall receive no fees or perquisites, but shall receive such annual compensation, not to exceed two thousand dollars, as the council prescribes, payable quarterly, from the city treasury, and such further compensation, payable from the county treasury, as the commissioners of the county deem proper. Nothing in this section shall prohibit the police judge from receiving the fees for or taking the acknowledgement of instruments, depositions, and affidavits which are allowed to justices of the peoce for like services."

This section was known as Section 1797, Revised Statutes, and is substantially the same as it was in 1902, when the council of Findlay, passed said ordinance.

Section 4592, General Code, authorizes the council to fix the salary and bond of the clerk of the police court.

While Section 1538-797, Revised Statutes, established a police court in cities of the second class, third grade, yet it was necessary that council should fix the compensation of the police judge and clerk. The ordinance of December 22, 1902, did not establish a police court, but fixed the bond and compensation of the police judge and the clerk thereof, thereby putting into operation the provision of the statute establishing a police court.

Section 1536-797, Revised Statutes has not been repealed and unless it is unconstitutional as being class legislation is still in force.

Special legislation establishing courts was held constitutional in case of State vs. Bloch, 65 Ohio State, 370, the syllabus of which case reads:

"The act "to establish a court of insolvency in counties containing a city of the second grade of the first class, and for the relief of the probate court in such counties" (92 O. L., 475), and the acts conferring additional and concurrent jurisdiction on such court (93 O. L., 464, and 94 O. L., 353), are constitutional and valid."

This decision is based upon the provisions of Article 1, Section 4, of the constitution of Ohio. The court on pages 390 and 391, by Williams, J., says:

> " * * * * But by section 1, of article 4, there is a special grant of legislative power upon a particular subject, which itself prescribes the rule for the government of the legislative body in the exercise of that power. It provides that: 'The judicial power of the state is vested in supreme court, circuit courts, courts of common pleas, courts of probate, justices of the peace, and such other courts inferior to the supreme court, as the general assembly may from time to time establish.' The power is here undoubtedly granted to the general assembly to create courts other than those enumerated in the section; and the material inquiry is what other course may be so created? the answer is found in the language of the section, which is, 'such' other courts 'as the general assembly may from time to time establish.' That language vests in that body full power to determine what other courts it will establish, local, if deemed proper, either for separate counties or districts, and to define their jurisdiction and powers. The only limitation placed upon the exercise of that power is that the courts so established shall be inferior to the supreme court, subject of course, to the further qualification that no legislation can alter the judicial system established by the constitution, nor interfere with the courts dessignated by that instrument as the recipients of the judicial power."

Police courts are inferior to the Supreme Court, and their establishment does not interfere with the courts established by the constitution. The legislature, therefore, has the power to establish such courts in any city or district they may deem that such court is required. The classification of cities for the purpose of establishing courts is recognized as constitutional by this decision. Section 1536-797. Revised Statutes, is therefore constitutional, and has not been repealed. However said section is not applicable to any city of Ohio at the present time, because cities are no longer divided into classes or grades of a class.

The council of Findlay did not act until after the municipal code, repealing the statutes providing for the classification of cities had been passed, but before the repealing clause became effective. However, the classification of cities was at that time still in force, at least for the purpose of establishing police courts. And if the City of Findlay came, at the time the ordinance was passed, within one of the grades of classes provided in Section 1536-797 Revised Statutes, the ordinance so far is it fixed the salary and bond and duties of the police judge, clerk and city solicitor, would be legal.

> "Existing corporations, origanized as cities of the second class shall remain such until they become cities of the first class, and their grade and the grades of those which may be or may become cities of the second class shall be determined as follows: * * * * * those which, on the first day of July, A. D., 1890, had, and those which on the first day of July, in any year, have, when ascertained in the same way, more than ten thousand and less than twenty thousand, shall continue in the third grade: * * * * * those which on the first day of July, A. D., 1890, had more than sixteen thousand and less than eighteen thousand inhabitants, shall, on and after the passage of this act, constitute and be, and those which, on the first day of July, in any year, have, when ascertained in the same way, more than sixteen thousand and less than eighteen thousand inhabitants, shall constitute and be the third grade b; * * * * *"

The manner of ascertaining the population is set forth in Section 1547, and is "according to an official report or abstract of the next preceding federal census."

It has been seen that in 1890, Findlay was a city of the third grade, second class, and that in 1900 it became a city of the third grade b, of the second class. From said Section 1548, supra, it is seen that the third grade b is a special grade made out of the more general grade of third grade, second class. An examination of Section 1536-797 discloses that cities of the third grade b, second class, are not included within its provisions.

During the decade of 1890-1900 Findlay, as a city of the third grade, second class, could have legally fixed the salary and bond of a police judge and clerk, and thereby called into operation the statute establishing a police court therein. Council did not act during that period, but waited until the City of Findlay had passed into third grade b, of the second class. At that time there was no statutory provision establishing a police court in cities of third grade b, second class.

While the population of Findlay in 1900 was between ten thousand and twenty thousand, as provided for cities of the third grade of the second class, yet the provision for third grade b, second class, was a creation of a special class within the third grade and the coming of the population of a city between said figures last above would take such city from the third grade and place it in the third grade b. It is in the nature of an exception to the general rule.

The council of Findlay had power, as stated above, to call into operation the statute establishing police courts, by fixing the salary of the police judge and clerk, during the period of 1890 to 1900, but the transition of the city in 1900 to third grade b, took away that power.

Council can only act by statutory authority. At the time the ordinance of December 22, 1902, was passed there was no statute establishing a police court in the City of Findlay.

It is my conclusion therefore that the ordinance of December 22, 1902, purporting to establish a police court was without warrant of law, and therefore null and void.

The appointment of a clerk of the police court by the police judge is null and void.

There is no vacancy to be filled by the Governor. Respectfully,

TIMOTHY S. HOGAN,
Attorney General.

NO RIGHT OF CITY TO SHARE OF FUND DERIVED BY TOWNSHIP LEVY FOR POOR RELIEF—EQUAL RIGHT OF CITY'S POOR TO RELIEF FROM SAID FUND.

The levy of taxes by township trustees for the purpose of relief of the poor is for township purposes and the money derived therefrom is township money. Such money or any part thereof cannot be transferred to a city treasury. The only claim which the city has to such fund is the right of the poor of the city to the right of relief therefrom equally with the poor of the township outside the boundaries of said city.

COLUMBUS, OHIO, January 17, 1912.

GENTLEMEN:—Under date of December 23, 1911, you state as follows:

"We are in receipt of a letter from Mr. J. F. Welty, Auditor of Ashland County, Ohio, enclosing an opinion rendered to him by Maurice V. Sample, City Solicitor-Elect of Ashland (which village will be advanced to a city January 1, 1912), in which it is held that the poor fund levied by the infirmary directors upon the property within the City of Ashland shall be turned over to the city treasurer upon semi-annual distribution next February. We have written to the county auditor advising that he hold fast to the county funds until he receives further advice from this department, and we respectfully request your written opinion in regard to the matter.
"Copy of city solicitor's opinion is enclosed herewith."

Under date of December 29, 1911, you further state:

"Under date of December 23, we requested your written opinion in regard to the disposition of the money raised for the support of the poor in the City of Ashland, and enclosed a copy of the opinion of the city solicitor rendered to the auditor of said county. We are in receipt of a letter from said auditor under date of December 26 in which he says he did not refer to the money raised by the levy made by the infirmary directors, but the levy made by the township trustees for poor purposes and levied on all the property in the township, including the city. We call your attention to an opinion rendered to this department by you under date of May 3d, 1911, in regard to the relief of the poor in the township in which the City of Xenia is situated, and it would seem to us that the principle laid down there would govern the disposition of the poor funds levied by the township trustees."

The opinion of the city solicitor enclosed holds that a city is entitled to all funds levied in a city for the relief of the poor and that the director of public safety has sole control of such relief in such city. His contention is based upon Section 4089, General Code, which provides:

"The management of the affairs of corporation infirmaries and the care of the inmates thereof, the erection and enlargement of infirmary buildings and additions thereto, the repair and furnishing thereof, the improvement of the grounds therewith connected, and the granting of outdoor relief to the poor, shall be vested in the director of public safety."

This section does not give the city or the director of public safety the funds which are raised by a levy of taxes by the trustees of a township in which such city is located, for the relief of the poor.

The opinion of May 3, 1911, given to your department in a matter arising in Xenia, fully covers the situation in Ashland.

In that opinion it was held that "where a municipal corporation lies entirely within a township, temporary relief to the poor within such municipal corporation should be afforded by the township trustees, unless the boundaries of the township and the municipal corporation are co-extensive. In the latter case there would of course be no township trustees."

In passing upon Sections 5646, 5647 and 5648, General Code, which authorize a levy of taxes by the township for the relief of the poor, it was stated, in the opinion of May 3d, referred to, that this levy was made upon all the property within the township though there may be within the boundaries of such township a city.

The levy of taxes is made by the township trustees; it is made for the relief of the poor within the township including the poor in any municipality contained within the boundaries of such township. Relief from the fund so raised is to be granted by the township trustees. The funds so raised are levied for township purposes and is township money. There is no authority of law to transfer said money, or any part thereof, to the city treasury. The city has no claim to said fund, other than the poor of such city has an equal right of relief therefrom as the poor of the township outside the boundaries of said city.

The taxes levied by the township trustees for the relief of the poor should be paid to the township treasurer to be distributed therefrom as other township money.

Respectfully,

TIMOTHY S. HOGAN,
Attorney General.

SHERIFF—ALLOWANCE BY COUNTY COMMISSIONERS FOR BOARD OF PRISONER WHO VOLUNTARILY SUBMITS TO CONFINEMENT AND AGREES TO PAY BOARD.

When a constable refuses to serve a mittimus and the person committed voluntarily submits himself to the sheriff and promises to pay his board for the time of his confinement and a court of competent jurisdiction holds that confinement under such circumstances is legal, the county commissioners may make the usual allowance to the sheriff for the board of such prisoner.

Under the peculiar circumstances of the Lindsay case, however, the Bureau is recommended to make no findings, upon the right of the prisoner to receive the amount paid by him for board.

COLUMBUS, OHIO, January 6, 1911.

Bureau of Inspection and Supervision of Public Offices, Columbus, Ohio.

GENTLEMEN:—Under favor of December 16, 1911, you submit the following to this department:

> "Herewith we submit a letter from one of the state examiners of this department as to a certain condition existing in the office of the sheriff of Sandusky County and respectfully request your opinion as to what finding, if any, should be reported by our state examiner."

The letter enclosed states as follows:

> "On May 20, 1911, the mayor of Lindsay, Sandusky County, fined J. T. and A. M. $500.00 and costs each for violation of the Rose county local option law, and he issued a mittimus committing them to jail until fines and costs were paid. They refused to pay the fine and costs, but the marshal of Lindsay failed to take them to jail upon the mittimus issued by the mayor. On May 23 the defendants, being of opinion that the failure of the officer to take them to jail meant that possibly they might be sentenced to a workhouse instead, voluntarily appeared at the jail, accompanied by their attorney, and asked to be imprisoned. The sheriff refused to accept them without a mittimus, telling them that unless they were legally committed to his custody that he could not collect board from the county for their keep. The attorney and the defendants then guaranteed him the board, and assured him that he would not be proceeded against for false imprisonment, whereupon he accepted them and kept them in jail until June 19, when their attorney appeared and informed the sheriff that from that day on they would pay no more board. The sheriff, concluding that he did not have them legally in his custody, told them that if he would not be paid for their board they would have to get out, although the attorney advised the defendants, in the presence of the sheriff, not to go out unless the sheriff compelled them to go, whereupon the sheriff told them to get out, that he did not intend to board them if he could get no pay for same. The commissioners had refused to allow their board for the time they were in and the sheriff was paid by the parties. On November 16, 1911, owing to some other moves in the case, the marshal of Lindsay committed them to jail on the original mittimus that had been issued by the mayor, and on the 17th habeas corpus proceedings were instituted for their release. The court released them on the ground that their voluntary commitment in the first instance was legal, hence they could not be committed again upon the same charge. The court stated that he would not pass upon the question as to whether the sheriff's release of the prisoners at the time he told them to go, was legal or not.

"The sheriff says the parties now want their board money back from him, and he wants me to find in his favor for the board of the two prisoners for the time that they were in and that the commissioners refused to pay. I told him I would take the matter up with the bureau. I mentioned the matter to the prosecuting attorney and he was inclined to think that as the parties had made a voluntary payment to an official they might not be able to collect back from him, but the sheriff thinks that a mandamus suit will follow his refusal to pay, or if the com missioners refuse to pay him."

It is my opinion that the arrangement entered into between the sheriff and the voluntary prisoners for the payment of their board and the payment thereof to the sheriff was a private arrangement between the sheriff and the prisoners for the individual protection of the sheriff. It is a matter with which the public has no concern.

A question might be raised, however, as to the right of the commissioners to make an allowance to the sheriff for keeping these prisoners.

A court of competent jurisdiction, I take it from the letter, has passed upon the legality of the imprisonment in a habeas corpus proceeding. The court held the voluntary confinement in the jail to be legal and therefore the commissioners have the same right to make an allowance to the sheriff for keeping these persons as they would have to make an allowance for keeping other prisoners confined for similar offenses.

However, under the circumstances which have been presented I do not think a finding or recommendation of any kind should be made.

Respectfully,

TIMOTHY S. HOGAN,
Attorney General.

CHIEFS OF POLICE—NO FEES FOR SERVICE IN MAYOR'S COURT IN STATE CASES—NO RIGHT OF RECOVERY OF SAME WHEN PAID EXCEPT BY PARTIES PAYING—VOLUNTARY AND INVOLUNTARY PAYMENT BY CULPRIT.

Prior to the amendment to 4534, General Code, of 102 O. L., 476, there was no provision for taxing fees to the chief of police for process served by him in the mayor's court in state criminal cases.. When such fees are collected, therefore, the law will leave them where it finds them except as to the petition of parties against whom such fees were assessed, who paid the same involuntarily.

COLUMBUS, OHIO, January 13, 1912.

Bureau of Inspection and Supervision of Public Offices, Columbus, Ohio.

GENTLEMEN:—Under date of December 19, 1911, you ask an opinion of this department upon the following:

> "What disposition should be made of moneys collected by the mayor of a city not having a police court for fees taxed in the name of the chief of police prior to the amendment of June, 1911, said fees being collected of defendants prosecuted in said court for violation of state laws?"

The fees of the chief of police in a proceeding before the mayor's court are allowed by virtue of Section 4534, General Code, as amended in 102 Ohio Laws, 476, which section provides:

> "In felonies, and other criminal proceedings not herein provided for, such mayor shall have jurisdiction and power, throughout the county, concurrent with justices of the peace. The chief of police shall execute and return all writs and processes to him directed by the mayor, and shall by himself or deputy attend on the sittings of such court, to execute the orders and process thereof and to preserve order therein, and his jurisdiction and that of his deputies in the execution of such writs and process, and in criminal cases, and in cases of violations of ordinances of the corporation, shall be co-extensive with the county, and in civil cases shall be co-extensive with the jurisdiction of the mayor therein. The fees of the mayor in all cases, excepting those arising out of violation of ordinances, shall be the same as those allowed justices of the peace for similar services and the fees of the chief of police or his deputies in all cases, excepting those arising out of violations of ordinances shall be the same as those allowed sheriffs and constables in similar cases."

Said Section 4534, General Code, before such amendment provided:

> "In felonies, and other criminal proceedings not herein provided for, such mayor shall have jurisdiction and power, throughout the county, concurrent with justice of the peace."

The syllabi in the cases of Portsmouth vs. Milstead, and Portsmouth vs. Baucus, 18 Cir. Dec., 384, are as follows:

> "The provisions of 96 O. L. 61, Section 126 (Rev. Stat. 1536-633; Lan. 3228) requiring 'that all fees pertaining to any office shall be paid into the city treasury' has reference to municipal fees solely, or such fees as may be fixed by municipal authority.

"Said section does not authorize cities to interfere with the fees of mayors or chiefs of police in state criminal cases; whether such authority can be delegated to municipalities, quaere."

These were actions by the city to recover from the mayor and chief of police the fees which they had collected in state criminal cases in the mayor's court and which had been taxed for their services therein. The court held that the city had no right of recovery. The decision was affirmed without report in 76 O. S., 597.

In case of City of Delaware vs. Mathews, 13 C. C. N. S., 539, the syllabi reads:

"There is no provision of law for payment of a chief of police for service of process issued by a mayor in cases wherein the state of Ohio is plaintiff.

"Costs collected for services of such process by a chief of police issued by a mayor, are not recoverable by the officer where they have been turned over to the city, or by the city if turned over to the officer."

On page 541, Taggart, J., says:

"So that this record presents this state of facts: Fees were taxed for the execution of processes issued to this chief of police, and collected and paid by the parties against whom the costs were assessed, and were deposited in the treasury of the City of Delaware.

"As this court views the case, there was no right or authority for so taxing costs or collecting the same; and there was no right or authority for the plaintiff, as chief of police, receiving the same. But, as these costs and fees are in the city treasury, the plaintiff must recover by the strength of his right to the same, rather than by showing that the City of Delaware has no right to hold and retain the same."

This was an action in which the chief of police sought to recover from the city the fees which had been taxed for process served by him in state criminal cases in the mayor's court and which had been paid into the city treasury. This case was affirmed without report in 82 Ohio State, 423.

The foregoing decisions are decisive of the following propositions:

First: That prior to the amendment of Section 4534, General Code, in 102 Ohio Laws, 476, there was no authority for taxing fees to the chief of police for process served by him in the mayor's court in state criminal cases; and that where such fees were taxed and collected it was done without authority of law and was illegal.

Second: That when such fees are paid into the city treasury, the chief of police cannot recover the same from the city.

Third: That where such fees are paid to the chief of police the city cannot recover the same from him.

In other words, such fees were illegally taxed and collected and neither the city nor the chief of police have any right of recovery as against the other.

You ask what disposition should be done with such fees. You do not state, however, whether such fees are now in the hands of the mayor, the chief of police, or in the city treasury.

The decisions above cited do not determine what shall be done with these fees, but leaves the money just as it found it.

The defendants in the several actions in which such fees were collected, paid fees which were not properly chargeable against them.

The rule of recovery in such cases is set forth in 11 Cyc., 265, as follows:

> "Costs voluntarily paid cannot be recovered back, although the party paying them is not liable therefor. The rule is otherwise where the costs have not been voluntarily paid, or where costs are procured to be paid by the fraud of the opposite party."

Whether the costs were voluntarily or involuntarily paid will depend upon the particular circumstances of each case. If they were paid involuntarily they can be recovered by the party who paid them, either from the city or the chief of police, as the case may be. The one who has the money is the one from whom recovery could be had.

The statutes do not provide what shall be done with illegal fees, voluntarily paid, nor with illegal fees involuntarily paid and which have not been refunded.

It is a principle of law that in order for a party to maintain a right he must depend upon the strength of his claim, and not upon the weakness of the claim of his adversary. Where neither party has any claim to a fund, which is in the possession of one of the parties, the court will leave the fund where it finds it.

Neither the mayor, the chief of police, nor the city has any legal right to these fees. If such fees have been paid to them they hold them subject to the rights of the defendants who paid such fees.

There is no authority for making any other disposition of fees which were illegally taxed and collected. This is based upon legal principles. It is one of those situations in which legal principles appear to conflict with moral duty. The moral duty would be to refund such fees whether paid voluntarily or involuntarily.

Respectfully,

TIMOTHY S. HOGAN,
Attorney General.

BOARDS OF HEALTH, LOCAL—POWERS OF TO INCUR EXPENSE OF NEWS CLIPPINGS AS LEGAL CLAIMS AGAINST THE CITY.

Under the general powers of local boards of health, they may incur as a legal claim against the city the expense of procuring clippings from the Ohio News Bureau if such really affords them a valuable aid in the administration of their official duties.

COLUMBUS, OHIO, January 16, 1912.

Bureau of Inspection and Supervision of Public Offices, Department of Auditor of State, Columbus, Ohio.

GENTLEMEN:—I beg to acknowledge receipt of your letter of November 6, 1911, wherein you inquire as follows:

> "Is a claim approved by the board of health for the service rendered their department by the Ohio News Bureau in the way of clippings of newspapers a legal claim against their city? We refer this to your department at the suggestion of the city solicitor of Cleveland."

Replying thereto, I desire to state that under the general powers of local boards of health they may legally incur any expense which is an aid to them in the administration of the duties of their office. If the clippings referred to are of such a nature as to afford valuable information to the health authorities of the city, such as items that would tend to show methods employed by other cities in dealing with matters which come within the province of a board of health, then, I am of the opinion that such clippings are a legal claim against a city.

This holding is in accord with the former opinion of this department, given to the Secretary of State, to the effect that the news clippings furnished by the Ohio News Bureau may be legally paid for from the contingent fund of the Secretary of State.

Very truly yours,
TIMOTHY S. HOGAN,
Attorney General.

ROAD DISTRICTS—COMMISSIONERS OF, ARE NOT COUNTY OFFICIALS—MAY HIRE AND COMPENSATE COUNTY PROSECUTOR FOR LEGAL SERVICES.

The commissioners of road districts not being county officers, as they are not paid from nor subject to the control of the county and as they are given statutory authority to employ counsel, the prosecuting attorney is in no sense their legal adviser, and he may be compensated by the road commissioners when hired by them in addition to his salary as county prosecutor.

COLUMBUS, OHIO, December 30, 1911.

Bureau of Inspection and Supervision of Public Offices, Department of Auditor of State, Columbus, Ohio.

GENTLEMEN:—I am in receipt of your letter of December 5, 1911, wherein you inquire:

> "May the prosecuting attorney act as legal counsel for a road district under Section 7112 of the General Code, and be paid for his services in addition to his regular salary?"

Section 7095, General Code, provides as follows:

> "Not less than two nor more than four adjacent townships in any county, occupying contiguous and compact territory, may organize into road district. Such road districts shall be governed and controlled for the purpose of constructing pikes and improving roads, as hereinafter provided, by a road commission composed of one member from each township."

Section 7096, General Code, provides that the road commissioners shall be appointed by the county commissioners, but shall be nominated by the respective township trustees, and shall hold office for four years, or until their successors are appointed and qualified, etc.

Section 7101 of the General Code provides for the proceedings whereby is created a road district.

Section 7109 provides as follows:

> "The road commissioners may employ counsel and a clerk or bookkeeper, when necessary, * * * * *."

Section 7112 provides as follows:

> The compensation of the road commissioners, engineer, and assistants shall be allowed by the county commissioners, and, with counsel services and all other necessary expenses, shall be paid out of the road fund raised for the purpose of making such road improvement."

The road commissioners are appointed under authority of Section 7096 of the General Code by the county commissioners after they are nominated by the township trustees. Their duties are as prescribed by Section 7103 of the General Code, et seq. and are confined to road districts composed of not less than two nor more than four adjoining townships in any county occupying contiguous and compact territory. Their jurisdiction is confined to building roads in the road districts, the purchase of road rollers, machinery and appliances that they deem necessary in the improvements of the road under their charge. They may employ engineers and assistants to make maps and profiles of roads in such road districts, and they have authority, under Section 7123 of the General Code, to issue bonds of said district to provide money necessary to meet the expenses of improving roads in such road district, and the road commissioners shall, under authority of Section 7127 of the General Code, levy annually a certain amount of the taxes on each dollar of the valuation of all the taxable property of said road district and continue such levy from year to year until all the roads by the road commissioners designated for improvement have been improved as provided in Section 7095 et seq., and the bonds issued for that purpose, together with the interest thereon, have been paid.

All of the transactions of said board are confined to the road districts; all money raised by taxation to defray the expenses of the road district is levied on the property of the road district; no money is paid from the county fund. It is a special taxing district. The road commissioners are not county officers for the reason they perform none of the functions of county officers. They are not compensated by the county. They are not township officers, for the reason they represent a taxing district composed of the aggregation of townships and they are not paid from a township fund. If they were county or township officers, this act would be unconstitutional because the constitution requires that all township and county officers shall be elected. They are not a county board even though they are appointed by the county commissioners, and they perform no services for the county, and, as before stated, they are not paid by the county, nor from the county fund. They represent ONLY THE ROAD DISTRICT composed of two or more townships; they are merely agents of the road district. The Legislature seemed to have in mind that the road commissioners so appointed were not county officers nor township officers, nor a county board, because under Section 7109 of the General Code it gave them authority to employ counsel to advise them.

I, therefore, hold that the prosecuting attorney is not the legal adviser of the commissioners for the road districts, and that if he is employed by such commissioners he can be paid for his services in addition to his regular salary because he represents them, not as prosecuting attorney, but in a private capacity.

Very truly yours,

TIMOTHY S. HOGAN,

Attorney General.

PROSECUTING ATTORNEY—EXPENSE OF SURETY BOND MUST BE PERSONALLY PAID.

The cost of a surety bond given by the prosecuting attorney under 102 O. L. 74 is not an expense incurred in the performance of an "official duty" nor in the performance of an act done in the "furtherance of justice" and for these and other reasons, cannot be allowed as an expense item under this same statute.

COLUMBUS, OHIO, January 25, 1912.

GENTLEMEN:—I have your inquiry of January 11, 1912, which is as follows:

"May the cost of a surety bond given by the prosecuting attorney under amended section 3004 (102 O. L., 74) be paid from the allowance for expenses under said section?"

Section 3004 of the General Code (102 O. L. 74) is as follows:

"There shall be allowed annually to the prosecuting attorney in addition to his salary and the allowance provided by section 2914, an amount equal to one-half the official salary, to provide for expenses which may be incurred by him in performance of his official duties and in the furtherance of justice, not otherwise provided for. Upon the order of the prosecuting attorney the county auditor shall draw his warrant on the county treasurer payable to the presecuting attorney or such other person as the order designates, for such amount as the order requires, not exceeding the amount provided for herein, and to be paid out of the general fund of the county.

"Provided that nothing shall be paid under this section until the prosecuting attorney shall have given bond to the state in a sum not less than his official salary to be fixed by the court of common pleas or probate court with sureties to be approved by either of said courts, conditioned that he will faithfully discharge all the duties enjoined upon him by law, and pay over, according to law, all moneys by him received in his official capacity. Such bond with the approval of such court of the amount thereof and sureties thereon and his oath of office inclosed therein shall be deposited with the county treasurer.

"The prosecuting attorney shall annually before the first Monday of January, file with the county auditor an itemized statement, duly verified by him, as to the manner in which fund has been expended during the current year, and shall if any part of such fund remains in his hands unexpended, forthwith pay the same into the county treasury.

"Provided, that as to the year 1911, such fund shall be portioned to the part of the year remaining after this act shall have become a law."

You will note that this allowance is for the prosecuting attorney "to provide for expenses which may be incurred by him in the performance of his official duties and in the furtherance of justice, not otherwise provided for."

In my opinion the giving of the bond provided for by the second paragraph of this act cannot be included as one of the official duties of the prosecuting attorney, nor can it be said that it is an act done by him in "furtherance of justice." It is not required by the act that the prosecuting attorney give a surety company bond; a bond signed by qualified personal sureties would undoubtedly be sufficient.

It is my opinion, therefore, that the cost of a surety company bond given by a prosecuting attorney under Section 3004 is not a proper item of expense to be paid from the fund allowed to him under said section.

Very truly yours,

TIMOTHY S. HOGAN,
Attorney General.

CLERK OF PROBATE COURT— COMPENSATION CONTRARY TO SALARY LAW—COUNTY COMMISSIONERS—RULE OF RECOVERY.

Where a clerk of the probate court is employed by the county commissioners and also compensated by them contrary to the provisions of the Salary Law, the contract is void.

The question of recovery by the county is governed by the rule, applied in cases where services, voluntarily rendered, are given fair value without authority to so compensate, by the authorities who have received the benefit of such services.

COLUMBUS, OHIO, January 31, 1912.

GENTLEMEN:—You have submitted to this department for opinion thereon, certain additional facts in connection with the opinion of my predecessor under date of December 30, 1910. The gist of the holding of the opinion in question is, that if a probate judge employs a clerk, the compensation of such clerk is to be paid out of the allowance for clerk hire made by the commissioners under the county officers' salary law, and the appointment of the clerk is presumed to have been made under such salary law; that if the compensation of such clerk is in fact paid from some other fund, under such circumstances, the amount paid cannot be recovered from the clerk himself, but the officer responsible for the expenditure of money in this irregular way would be liable.

The additional facts submitted consist of a letter addressed by the probate judge to a personal friend, describing the transaction, and a copy of the original resolution of the county commissioners directing the probate judge to employ a person to do certain work at a certain compensation and appropriating in advance a certain sum from the general revenue fund of the county, with authority to create a deficiency in said appropriation account for that purpose.

I have examined the previous opinion of this department and concur generally in its holding. I call attention particularly to that portion of it in which the following language is found:

> "Unless it clearly appears then, that the employment of this clerk was made in such a way as to preclude any possibility of regarding her as having been employed under Section 3 of the county salary law, and unless also the services which she rendered were not reasonably worth the amount paid to her * * * * no action could, in my judgment, be maintained against her to recover the sums paid to her."

The additional facts submitted fulfil the condition expressed in the first part of this sentence. That is to say, they establish the conclusion that the clerk was clearly intended to be employed outside of the salary law, so to speak. The irregularity, then, instead of attaching merely to the manner in which she was compensated, as assumed in the previous opinion, characterizes the whole transaction, including her original employment. The question is, therefore, somewhat different from that presented to my predecessor.

As to the general merits of the question under the amended statement of facts, I confess that I have serious doubt. As pointed out in the opinion of my predecessor, the clerk in question rendered services to the county at a rate which, while not authorized to be paid to clerks under the statute, was nevertheless fixed as the compensation of the probate judge under the fee system, and would probably be held for that reason to be a reasonable rate. The services thus rendered are of value to the county and the county has, so to speak, enriched itself through the labors of the clerk. The money has been paid to the clerk, and in order that a finding of the Bureau adverse to the clerk might be upheld, it would be necessary to recover such moneys from her. The rule of law which would be applicable to such an action has not been clearly defined by our courts. Without citing decisions with which I assume that you are familiar I can go only so far as to say that the question ought to be determined, and that the instance referred to in your inquiry would seem to offer an excellent opportunity for such determination. The unsettled question, in short, is, as to whether a person who renders services to a county as a mere volunteer (for the contract in question is absolutely void) and receives a reasonable compensation therefor, may be compelled to pay the amount so received back to the county in the light of the fact that the county has been benefited by the work done.

The letter of the probate judge above referred to hints at a state of facts which might take the case out of the operation of the doubtful rule above referred to. If it is true that the employment of the clerk was a mere subterfuge, and that the services in question were actually not performed by the clerk but were performed by the probate judge himself, the clerk drawing the pay, or, if this state of facts was true in part, then, of course, under any rule recovery could be had from the clerk of such amount of money as represents the amount of work for which she received compensation, but which was not done by herself.

Very truly yours,

TIMOTHY S. HOGAN,
Attorney General.

SHERIFF'S FEE—DEDUCTION OF NOTARY EXPENSE FROM FEE FOR EXECUTION OF DEEDS—FEE FUND.

It is not the intention of the statutes that sheriffs should pay notary fees for the execution of deeds out of his own pocket and therefore out of the $2.00 allowed the sheriff for executing deeds, he may deduct the forty cents notary expense and pay the balance into the fee fund.

COLUMBUS, OHIO, February 7, 1912.

Bureau of Inspection and Supervision of Public Offices, Department of Auditor of State, Columbus, Ohio.

GENTLEMEN:—Under date of November 11, 1911, you inquired of me as follows:

> "Section 2845, G. C., as amended in 102 O. L., 285, provides a fee of $2.00 to the sheriff for making and executing a deed of land sold in execution, decree or order of court, to be paid by the purchaser. Before the amendment to said section the fee seems to have been merely for the making of the deed. Sheriffs usually have to pay a notarial fee of not over 40 cents for acknowledging the deed. Is the sheriff required to pay into his fee fund the $2.00 received for each deed, or the balance remaining after deducting the notary's fee?"

The provisions of the foregoing section pertinent to your inquiry having been quoted correctly, it is unnecessary for me to set the same out at length in this opinion.

The evident purpose of the amendment to Section 2845, General Code, was to clearly establish the fee of $2.00 that a sheriff might charge for the making and executing of deeds, excluding the possibility of his right to charge $2.00 for the making and put the purchaser to the additional expense of paying for the acknowledgement as would seem to have been possible under the wording of this statute prior to this amendment. Section 2997 of the General Code provides that the county commissioners may allow to the sheriff all his actual and necessary expenses in certain cases,—the present instance not being one of those cases. Section 2832 provides that office fixtures, blanks, etc., must be furnished to the sheriff at the expense of the county. It is not the purpose or the intendment of Section 2845, supra, that the sheriff should pay from his personal expenses the expense of acknowledgements of deeds made by him in his official capacity, and since no method has been provided by the statutes for the reimbursement of the sheriff in the event that he does pay such expense, I am of the opinion that the sheriff may deduct the notary fees and pay the balance into the county treasury to the credit of his fee fund.

Very truly yours,

TIMOTHY S. HOGAN,

Attorney General.

TAXES AND TAXATION—SMITH ONE PER CENT LAW—APPROPRIATIONS LIMITED BY BUDGET COMMISSION—MONEYS DERIVED FROM TAXATION—"RECEIPTS AND BALANCES"—NO WARRANTS ON EXHAUSTED FUNDS—WARRANT AN EXPENDITURE.

Under the Smith one per cent. law, by the provisions of Section 5649-3a thereof, a county auditor may not issue his warrant upon a fund raised by taxation under the Smith law that has been exhausted nor against an appropriation made under the Smith law which has become exhausted, even though there be money to the credit of the original fund, raised by a particular levy, from which fund the exhausted appropriation was originally made.. Sections 2567, 2676 and 2677 of the General Code which formerly made such action possible, have been impliedly repealed.

An appropriation in excess of the amount fixed by the Budget Commission may not be paid so as to obtain for the appropriation a greater sum of the moneys "raised by taxation than allowed for such purpose by the Budget Commission. If there is in the fund, any moneys accruing thereto from revenues other than those collected by taxation, the appropriating authorities may use such as they see fit by reason of the authority given by the Smith law with respect to "Receipts and Balances."

The authorities may not make appropriation in excess of the amount in the treasury in anticipation of moneys estimated to come into the treasury within the six months next ensuing

COLUMBUS, OHIO, January 29, 1912.

Bureau of Inspection and Supervision of Public Offices, Department of Auditor of State, Columbus, Ohio.

GENTLEMEN:—I beg to acknowledge receipt of your letter of January 11th submitting for my opinion several questions arising under section 5649-3*d*, 102 O. L. 272, being a section of what is known as the "Smith one per cent. law."

> "1. May county auditor issue his warrant upon a fund that has been exhausted or against an appropriation that has been exhausted, even though there be money to the credit of the fund from which the appropriation was made?
> "2. May an appropriation in excess of the amount fixed by the budget committee be legally made?
> "3. May appropriations be made in excess of the amount actually in the treasury at the time of such action, i. e., may they include moneys estimated to come into the treasury during the six months next ensuing?
> "4. What are the meaning and application of the last five words of said section?"

Section 5649-3*d* in full is as follows:

> "At the beginning of each fiscal half year, the various boards mentioned in Section 5649-3*a* of this act shall make appropriations for each of the several objects for which money has to be provided, from the moneys known to be in the treasury from the collection of taxes and all other sources of revenue, and all expenditures within the following six months shall be made from and within such appropria> tions and balances thereof, but no appropriation shall be made for any purpose not set forth in the annual budget nor for a greater amount for such purpose than the total amount fixed by the budget commissioners exclusive of receipts and balances."

This section is in its essential features a new thing in legislation, although much of its verbage is copied from the Municipal Code, Section 3797. There are, therefore, no precedents or decisions to be followed in its interpretation.

As applied to a county the idea of semi-annual appropriations is new in its entirely. Here, however, the methods of the Municipal Code, may be studied with advantage as throwing light upon the manner in which it is intended fit the procedure of Section 5649-3*d* into the county fiscal system.

In the main, however, Section 5649-3*d* must be studied in itself and in connection with the other provisions of the act in which it is found, and it is unsafe to rely upon the analysis of older sections in order to establish its meaning.

As I understand your first question, it supposes that an appropriation account created by the method required in the first sentence of section 5649-3*d* has become exhausted, but that there remains in the fund, i. e., the proceeds of a particular levy, a balance not appropriated for any other purpose. May then the county auditor issue his warrant upon the unappropriated balance for a purpose within the purview of the appropriation?

You seem to ask also as to whether or not the county auditor may issue his warrant for any class of claims against the county when there is no money whatever in the treasury to the credit of the fund or the appropriation on which it is drawn.

Section 2570 General Code provides in part that:

> "* * * * * He (the county auditor) shall not issue a warrant for the payment of any claim against the county, unless allowed by the county commissioners, except where the amount due is fixed by law or is allowed by an officer or tribunal authorized by law to do so."

As a matter of fact, of course, most of the claims against the county which in the ordinary course of business would be presented to the auditor are those, the amount of which is fixed by law or by some authority other than the commissioners. Thus all vouchers for salaries of county officers under the county officers salary law are "law vouchers," the amount of which has been determined by the application of the rule of population adopted by the General Assembly itself. Again, certain compensation and expenses of boards of deputy state supervisors of elections, boards of review, election officers, etc., are to be honored by the issuance of the county auditor's warrant without any action of the county commissioners. In fact the number and amount of claims requiring the allowance of the county commissioners are relatively small.

Section 2675 General Code provides as follows:

> "When a warrant drawn on him as treasurer by the auditor of the county is presented for payment, if there is money in the treasury or depository to the credit of the fund on which it is drawn, and the warrant is endorsed by the payee thereof, the county treasurer shall redeem it by payment of cash or by check on the depository, and shall stamp on the face of such warrant, 'Redeemed,' and the date of redemption."

There can be no doubt whatever that this section is directly affected by the enactment of Section 5649-3*d*, preserving, in deference to the rule against implied repeals as much of it as possible, it follows, I think, that the word "fund" in this section should now be read "appropriation account."

Sections 2676 and 2677 of the General Code provide as follows:

Section 2676:

"When a warrant is presented to the county treasurer for payment, and is not paid for want of money belonging to the particular fund on which it is drawn, the treasurer shall indorse the warrant, 'Not paid for want of funds,' with the date of its presentation, and sign his name thereto. Such warrant shall thereafter bear interest at the rate of six per cent. per annum. A memorandum of all such warrants shall be kept by the treasurer in a book for that purpose."

Section 2677:

"As soon as sufficient funds are in the treasury of the county to redeem the warrants drawn thereon, and on which interest is accruing, the treasurer shall give notice in a newspaper printed or circulating in his county, that he is ready to redeem such warrants, and from the date of the notice, the interest on such warrants shall cease."

These sections are of very ancient origin having passed in 1831, 29 O. L. 291, sections 9 and 10. They have remained unamended save in process of codification to the present time, and the fiscal affairs of the country have been conducted in pursuance of the plan thus outlined during all these years. That is to say, "law vouchers"—i. e., vouchers not requiring the approval or allowance of the county commissioners—have been honored by the issuance of warrants by the county auditor regardless of the presence or absence of moneys in the county treasury to the credit of the fund on which these warrants are drawn. Such a provision was a convenient part of the old scheme of things; it made it easy for the general assembly to provide that a certain claim should be paid out of the county treasury on the warrant of the county auditor without inviting the attention of any other officer of the county at all. In this manner the county treasury became a catchall, so to speak, for public expenditures. The State itself and other sub-divisions thereof had their fiscal affairs administered by one responsible legislature of administrative board; in every case save that of the county, the levying authority and the expending authority was lodged in the same tribunal. Thus the General Assembly possesses as to the State full revenue producing powers, and also full power over the funds produced by taxation. Not so in the county, however, under the scheme in vogue for so many years. The county commissioners had but a very limited control over the county treasury, although they with the infirmary directors constitute the sole levying authorities of the county. Thus it happened that in many counties of the state, the commissioners would not levy sufficient taxes to meet the needs of the county treasury, and the issuance of unpaid warrants grew to be a convenient way of borrowing money. In the meantime the fiscal affairs of the county were affected by the enactment of what was popularly known as the "Burns law," Section 5660 General Code. This section required in effect that before any contract or other obligation involving the expenditure of money from the county treasury be entered into a certificate of the auditor, that the money necessary to discharge the same was in the treasury or in process of collection and not appropriated for any other purpose, should be issued. However it applied only to the county commissioners. In reality it did not, therefore, in any way affect the duty of the county auditor to issue warrants under Section 2570 General Code or the duty of the county treasurer under Section 2676. That is to say as to "law vouchers" and claims against the county fixed and allowed by some authority other than the commissioners, the Burns law did not prevent the issuance of warrants, regardless of the money in the treasury, and the exercise of the treasurer of his duty to stamp such warants when presented "Not paid for want of funds."

This then was the situation when Section 5649-3*d* was enacted as a part of the Smith one per cent. law. It expressly provides that "all expenditures within the following six months shall be made from and within such appropriations and balances thereof." Manifestly this Section and Sections 2570 and 2676 General Code cannot stand together except upon one of the following theories: (1) That Section 2676 may be regarded as merely modified as Section 2675 has been by me held to be modified, viz., by substituting the phrase "appropriation account" for the word "fund;" and that Section 2677 may be regarded as similarly modified by the insertion of the phrase "and appropriate" after the word "county." This solution of the problem would leave Section 2676 in practical force modified only by the requirement that the treasurer stamp warrants "Not paid" when there is no appropriation account out of which they may be paid, and that he not redeem such warrants until there is an appropriation specifically made for the purpose of redeeming unpaid warrants. Such a construction, however, is dependent upon the proposition, (2) that the word "expenditures" as used in Section 5649-3*d* refers to and means "withdrawals of money from the county treasury". Here then is the ultimate question upon which the exact application and effect of Section 5649-3*d* to and upon Sections 2570 and 2676 General Code must be determined.

Stated in another way, this question is as follows:
When is an "expenditure" within the meaning of Section 5649-3*d* made; when a contract is entered into; or when a warrant is drawn by the county auditor; or when a warrant is actually redeemed by the county treasurer?

Whatever may be the result in practice of the conclusion which I am about to reach, I am convinced that the answer to this question is found in the requirement of Section 5649-3*d* that "appropriations for each of the several objects for which money is to be provided" shall be made by the county commissioners. This language is not susceptible of the restricted meaning which would apply it only to matters of a contractual nature. The whole Smith law must be taken into consideration in determining the meaning of each phrase thereof upon familiar principles. The law as a whole deals with taxation and limits the rates of taxation in all the taxing districts of the State. As a necessary and proper corollary to this object the General Assembly intends that moneys raised by taxation shall be expended only after periodical appropriations, so that each fiscal year of a taxing district shall take care of itself, and each such district shall be placed ultimately upon what is familiarly known as a "cash basis". This intention is evidenced in Section 5649-3*d*; and when that Section speaks of "each of the several objects for which money has to be provided," I think it clearly follows that it refers to every object requiring the levy of taxes for this achievement.

This particular meaning of the first clause of Section 5649-3*d* then indicates clearly that an expenditure within the meaning of the phrase now under consideration may be any consumption of the public revenues, and that the word is not limited merely to the creation or satisfaction of contractual obligations.

From this then it follows that a "law voucher" may not be ultimately paid, at least unless there is an appropriation from which it may be paid. May then such voucher be honored by the issuance of a warrant? Here is a very doubtful question. Is there an "expenditure" within the meaning of Section 5649-3*d* when the auditor has honored a voucher by the issuance of a warrant? In my opinion the mere issuance of a warrant does constitute an expenditure. The accounts of a county are kept in the office of the auditor. When he has issued a warrant it is his duty under Section 2568 General Code, and the first sentence of Section 2570 General Code (not quoted above) to enter the amount thereof against the fund upon which it is drawn. When he has done this the legal effect is just the same as if the county had parted with its money for the holder of the warrant has then a complete and enforceable claim against the county for the money and the warrant which he holds may pass from hand to hand like currency, and if not paid for want of funds draws interest like any negotiable instrument.

Upon reason then the word "expenditure" as used in Section 5649-3*d* must be held to apply to and signify the issuance of warrants by the county auditor. There is lack of weighty authority upon this point, but there are decisions of certain courts of Nisi Prius which are of interest here.

As I have already pointed out Section 5649-3*d* is in the main a paraphrase of Section 3797 General Code which formerly applied to municipal corporations. This Section was Section 43 M. C., adopted in 1902. In turn Section 43 M. C., was modeled after Section 1693 R. S., and Section 2690 h R. S., applicable wholly to the city of Cincinnati. Under these sections last above named the superior court of Cincinnati in the case of Ampt vs. Cincinnati 8 O. D., 475, 5 N. P. 98 and Stem vs. Cincinnati 9 O. D. 45, 6 N. P. 15 rendered opinions in which it was held that every provision thereof must be regarded as mandatory and that the broadest effect must be given to each and every phrase thereof. About the time these decisions were rendered there was in effect in Hamilton county a law very much like the Smith law in many particulars. This was the act which provided a board of control for that county and it consisted in part of Sections 1005 to 1009 R. S., repealed in 1904. These sections provided a method of annual estimates, levies and appropriations essentially similar to and possibly more explicit and workable than those of the Smith law. Under this law the case of State ex rel vs. Lewis 6 N. P. 198 was decided. In that case the plaintiff sought to enjoin a county auditor from issuing a warrant for a monthly installment of salary to be fixed by the common pleas judge—a case clearly within the rule of Sections 2570 and 2676 General Code then in force if they applied to Hamilton county. The court overruled the demurrer to the petition, in favor of which it had been argued that claims, the amount of which was fixed or determined by law or some authority other than the county commissioners, constitute an implied exception to the general rule that all expenditures must be made from and within the semi-annual appropriations. Jackson J., delivering the opinion of the court used the following language:

> "Nor are we prepared to say that even if the salaries were absolutely fixed by law, * * * the commissioners would be relieved from making detailed and specified appropriation covering the same. Section 1006 provides that the board of county commissioners and the board of control shall meet ten days after the first day of April in each year and determine (from the estimate furnished by the auditor) the total tax levy they deem necessary for that year; consequently, such estimates would be statistical, and necessary for an intelligent tax levy and for an appropriation. It is also worthy of notice that Section 1007 makes it the duty of the county commissioners to provide in their appropriations for every legitimate county expenditure. Consequently, if they refuse or fail to make the appropriation for the salary of an officer fixed by law, they could be compelled to do so by mandamus. Even if the salaries were absolutely fixed by > law, we think the reasoning of the court in the case of Ampt vs. City and Stem vs. City * * * that detailed and specific appropriations are necessary for the purpose of advising the public and inviting public criticism, applies with full force here."

Unfortunately the court did not in its opinion deal with the question as to whether or not the section which authorized the auditor to issue warrants and the treasurer to stamp them "Not paid for want of funds" applied. Obviously, however if these sections did apply the decision would have had to be opposite from that reached by the court. That is to say, if these sections applied to Hamilton county at the time, it would have been lawful for the county auditor to issue his warrant in spite of the lack of appropriation, and he would not have been enjoined from so doing. The eminence of counsel who represented the auditor in this case induce me to believe that either the question as to the application of the sections now under consideration was presented to the court and simply ignored by the court in its opinion, or that in the opinion of these eminent counsel themselves it was not worth presenting to the court. This case then in spite of its silence upon the exact point and is in the nature of authority for the conclusion already reached by me that the word "expenditure" as used in Section 5649-3*d* applies at least to the issuance of a warrant by the auditor.

From all the foregoing it necessarily follows that if the meaning of the word "expenditure" be that which I have given to it, this portion of Section 5649-3*d* is wholly inconsistent with those portions of Sections 2570 and 2676 General Code which authorize the issuance of warrants against exhausted funds. These sections and parts of sections are therefore to be regarded as impliedly repealed inasmuch as both of the constructions above suggested by which they may be reconciled with Section 5649-3*d* must be rejected and inasmuch further as there is no other construction by which such a reconciliation can be effected.

In my opinion, therefore, the county auditor will after appropriations are made under the Smith law be without authority to issue warrants in the absence of funds in the treasury appropriated for the purpose of paying such warrants. The effect of Section 5649-3*d* upon Section 2676 may be regarded as an academic question inasmuch as the commissioners would undoubtedly have authority to provide, with or without the provisions of this section, modified as above suggested, by appropriation for the payment of outstanding warrants stamped "Not paid for want of funds".

My answer then as to your first question is that the language of Section 5649-3*d* to the effect that "all expenditures within the following six months shall be made from and within such appropriations and balances thereof," is a limitation upon the power of the county auditor to issue warrants, and that such warrants may be issued only when there is money in the treasury to the credit of the fund, and lawfully appropriated by the county commissioners in their semi-annual appropriation resolution for the purpose for which the expenditure is to be made.

I recall that I have given to Hon. Sholto M. Douglas, Prosecuting Attorney of Pike County an opinion in which I advised that Sections 2676 and 2570 General Code are in effect. This opinion was rendered without consideration of the Smith law and was correct, in my judgement, when it was given, for the reason that at that time, the time for making the first semi-annual appropriation required by Section 5649-3*d* to be made had not yet arrived.

Such a holding does not make any allowance for unforeseen emergencies; but by adopting the procedure which is expressly authorized in the Municipal Code as to municipal councils, the commissioners may avoid financial embarrasment on account of the occurence of any such emergency; that is to say, by providing a contingent appropriation, the purpose of which shall be to supply deficiencies in any of the detailed appropriations caused by the happening of unforeseen emergencies and possible contingencies which ought to be properly cared for.

Your second and fourth questions may properly be considered together. I shall, therefore, take up your third question before dealing with your second question.

Here, the answer to your inquiry is made clear by comparing Section 5649-3*d* with Section 3797 General Code which is repealed by implication. In Section 3797 is found the following language:

> "The council shall make appropriations * * * from the moneys known to be in the treasury, or estimated to come into it during the six months next ensuing from the collection of taxes and all other sources of revenue."

By comparison it at once appears that the italicized portion of the above quoted provision has been left out of Section 5649-3*d* although the remainder of this portion of the section is almost verbatim quoted from section 3797. In making this verbal change the legislature could not have intended anything excepting that moneys estimated to come into the treasury during the six months next ensuing should not be available for appropriation. The clear intent of Section 5649-3*d* is, therefore, that no money shall be appropriated which is not in the treasury at the time the appropriating resolution (of the county commissioners) is adopted.

Considering your second and fourth questions it may be well to repeat the quotation of the last phrase of the section which is as follows:

> "but no appropriation shall be made for any purpose not set forth in the annual budget nor for a greater amount for such purpose than the total amount fixed by the budget commissioners, exclusive of receipts and balances."

At the outset permit me to state that the above quoted portion of the section is grammatically separate from all that precedes. That is to say, so far as the sense of the section is concerned this portion thereof might have constituted a separate sentence, or, indeed, an entirely distinct section. I mention this because from the order in which you state your questions, it occurs to me that perhaps you may have suspected that the last five words of the section modify or qualify the provisions respecting the limitation of expenditures to the appropriations and balances thereof, immediately preceding the beginning of the quotation above made. This is not the case for the reason just stated.

Further analyzing the last clause of the section, it becomes apparent, I think, that it is to be divided into two parts, having regard to its meaning and arrangement. The first of these parts relates to the purpose for which an appropriation shall be made, and the second relates to the amount of the appropriation. In connection with your second question then, some of the language of the last phrase of the section may be omitted from consideration and the same read as follows:

> "No appropriation shall be made * * * for a greater amount for such purpose (set forth in the annual budget) than the total amount fixed by the budget commissioners exclusive of receipts and balances."

I think it is quite clear upon the analysis of the section which I have tried to make that the phrase "exclusive of receipts and balances" modifies something in the language above quoted and nothing else in the section. Having regard now to the syntax of the clause it appears that the participle "exclusive" must modify one of four nouns in the quotation, viz, "appropriation," "amount," "purpose" and "amount" again. It is obvious that the noun "appropriation" is not the one limited by this phrase. This follows because the first clause of the section provides that appropriation shall be made from "moneys arising from the collection of taxes and all other sources of revenue". It is clear, therefore, that the appropriation cannot be "exclusive of receipts and balances" but must include receipts and balances with all other sources of revenue. For similar reasons the phrase cannot be regarded as modifying the noun "purpose". As already indicated the noun "amount" occurs twice in the sentence. The amount of the appropriation is not to be greater than the amount fixed by the budget commission. It really is of no great importance as to which of these two identical words the phrase now under consideration modifies. For the sake of accuracy, however, the exact grammatical construction of the sentence ought to be ascertained.

A clue to the meaning of this provision is to be found, if anywhere, in the provisions of the same act which defines the powers and duties of the budget commission. For, manifestly, if it should be ascertained that the budget commission has anything to do whatever with the receipts and balances as the term is used in Section 5649-3*d*, then it would necessarily follow that the phrase "exclusive of receipts and balances" must have been used as modifying the first word "amount."

The duties of the commission are defined in Section 5649-3*c* but certain provisions of Section 5649-3*a* must be taken into consideration in connection with this question. I quote the provisions of these two sections which are apposite here.

Section 5649-3*a*.

"* * * Such annual budgets shall specifically set forth:

(1) The amount to be raised for each and every purpose allowed by law for which it is desired to raise money for the incoming year.

* * * * * * * *

(6) The amount of money received from any other source and available for any purpose in each of the last five fiscal years, together with an estimate of the probable amount that may be received during the incoming year, from such source or sources." * * *

Section 5649-3*c*.

"The auditor shall lay before the budget commissioners the annual budgets submitted to him * * *. The budget commissioners shall examine such budgets * * * * * and ascertain the total amount proposed to be raised in each taxing district * * *. If the budget commissioners find that the total amount of the tax to be raised therein does not exceed the amount authorized to be raised in any * * * taxing district * * * the fact shall be certified to the county auditor. If such total is found to exceed such authorized amount in any * * * taxing district * * * the budget commissioners shall adjust the various amounts to be raised so that the total amount thereof shall not exceed in any taxing district the sum authorized to be levied. In making such adjustments the budget commissioners may revise and change the annual estimates contained in such budgets, * * *. The budget commissioners shall reduce the estimates contained in any or all such budgets by such amount or amounts as will bring the total for each taxing district within the limits provided by law. * * *"

It seems clear to me that the action of the budget commissioners is intended and in the nature of the case could only have been intended to affect the amount estimated as necessary to be produced by taxation. With sources of revenue other than taxation the budget commissioners have nothing whatever to do excepting in so far as the probable amount of income from other sources may be used by them in determining the necessity of the taxing district from the standpoint of taxation. That is to say, the estimated revenues from other sources are required to be reported to the budget commission, and the commission must use such information for the purpose of determining the amount which it will be necessary to raise by taxation for the purpose for which such revenues are available in case the limitations of the act have to be enforced in a particular district.

It follows from this that the budget commissioners do not fix the amount which may be expended by the authorities of a taxing district for a given purpose, but only the amount which may be levied for and raised by taxation. It would therefore be misnomer to say that the budget commissioners fix the amount of an appropriation.

From what has been said it follows that the exact meaning of the last clause of the section is that the appropriating authorities, who must at all events confine their appropriations to the amounts in the treasury, may, nevertheless, and in the case of every fund derived in part from sources of revenue other than taxation, would have to exceed the amount fixed by the budget commissioners as being the amount to be raised by taxation for such purposes. For example, a municipal electric light plant, at the current rates, might fail to be self-supporting, thus necessitating a levy each year on the grand duplicate for the purpose of the general expense of the plant. The budget commissioners have authority to fix the amount of this levy. I cannot find, however, in any of the sections of the Smith law authority on the part of the budget commissioners to fix the amount which the municipality may expend on the plant, having regard to the fact that most of the money to be expended in the operation of the plant is to be derived from revenues from the sale of current.

The limitation which we are now discussing then operates practically in this in this way: At the beginning of a half yearly period the amount of money in the treasury to the credit of a certain fund is definitely ascertained. The receipts from tax settlements can also be definitely ascertained. In case the amount in the treasury is greater than the receipts from the tax collection the difference consists of "receipts and balances" of which the statute speaks. Now the fund may have been levied to provide for several distinct purposes. The budget commission has fixed the amount to be raised by taxation for each of these specific purposes. The appropriating authorities cannot appropriate a greater amount from the moneys raised by taxation for one of these purposes than that fixed by the budget commission at the expense of appropriating a lesser amount for one of the other objects to be provided for out of the same fund. If, however, there are "balances" the appropriating officers may do as they please with such balances within the purposes mentioned in the budget. Heretofore I have spoken of the phrase "receipts and balances" as if it referred exclusively to revenues derived otherwise than from taxation. This is not the entire meaning of the word as is evident from Section 5648-3*e* which provides in effect that an unexpected appropriation or balance of appropriations remaining at the end of the year shall revert to the general fund and shall then be available for such purpose as the authorities may see fit to apply them to.

A further difficulty arises from the use of the word "receipts". It would seem that in using this word the general assembly has expressed an intention inconsistent with that embodied in the provision that appropriations shall be made "from the moneys known to be in the treasury from * * * all * * * sources of revenue". The primary meaning of the phrase "receipts and balances", as a whole, refers to an indefinite amount which is to come into the treasury from miscellaneous sources during a certain period of time. It has become customary for the general assembly in appropriating moneys paid into the general revenue fund of the state, and required by statute to be applied to the support of some particular board or officer, such as, for example, the public service commission, to appropriate "receipts and balances" for the biennial or annual period. In so doing it is understood that the legislature sets aside no specific amount but simply the amount that will go into the treasury during the period from the source of revenue at the command of the recipient of the appropriation plus the balance remaining unexpended at the date of making the appropriation. If the legislature intended to use the phrase in this sense in Section 5649-3*d* then of course there is a flat inconsistency between this last phrase and the phrase above referred to. I do not think, however, that this was the intention of the legislature. I think the word "receipts" is intended to refer to amounts which have come into the treasury from sources other than taxation; and the word "balances" is intended to refer to the amount in the treasury to the credit of the fund at the beginning of a half yearly period, in excess of the amount raised by taxation for that period. So to hold does no violence to the primary meaning of either of these words and is inconsistent only with the technical meaning that has become attached to the phrase "receipts and balances" as used in the appropriation laws of the state; on the contrary this holding harmonizes all parts of the section and furnishes a definite guide to the taxing officers of the state in the administration of their affairs under the Smith one per cent. law.

Coming now to the specific questions embodied in your second and fourth questions, I beg to state that an appropriation in excess of the amount fixed by the budget commission may legally be made if the excess consists of balances in the treasury at the beginning of the half yearly period or of revenues therein derived otherwise than from taxation. The meaning of the phrase "exclusive of receipts and balances" is that the appropriating authorities may appropriate of the proceeds of taxation, so much only for a definite purpose as has been fixed by the budget commission, and that from revenues in the treasury at the time of the appropriation derived otherwise than from taxation and from balances remaining on hand and unexpended during the last half yearly period, the authorities may appropriate any amount whatever for any purpose set forth in the budget.

Yours very truly,

TIMOTHY S. HOGAN,
Attorney General.

MAYOR'S COURT—FEES ILLEGALLY TAXED FOR CHIEF OF POLICE IN STATE CASES—CANNOT BE PAID INTO CITY OR COUNTY TREASURY.

Illegal fees payable to a chief of police taxed by a mayor, in state cases, under a misunderstanding by that official as to his right to do so under the statute, cannot be paid by the mayor into the city or county treasury. They must remain in the hands of the mayor until claimed by the parties who have the legal right to their possession, namely: The parties against whom the fees were assessed.

COLUMBUS, OHIO, February 7, 1912.

Bureau of Inspection and Supervision of Public Offices, Columbus, Ohio.

GENTLEMEN:—Under favor of February 2, 1912, you ask further in the matter of the opinion of January 13, 1912, rendered to your department, as follows:

> "Under date of January 13, 1912, an opinion was rendered by you advising as to the disposition of moneys collected by the mayor of a city not having a police court for fees taxed in the name of the chief of police prior to the amendment of June, 1911, said fees being collected of defendants prosecuted in said court for violation of state laws. We simply desire to ask if due consideration has been given to the fact that the mayor of said city, in the exercise of a judicial function, construed the law so as to assess and collect fees in state cases taxed in the name of the chief of police and that, having collected such fees in his official capacity under color of his office, whether or not he would not be required to pay the same into the county treasury (or city treasury) monthly at the time other moneys are so deposited (see Section 4270, G. C.)."

The levy and collections of the fees referred to and which were held illegal in the opinion of January 13, 1912, no doubt was due in almost all cases to a misconstruction of the statute and under the belief that they were legally chargeable.

Section 4270, General Code, referred to by you, provides as follows:

> "All fines and forfeitures collected by the mayor, or which in any manner comes into his hands, and all moneys received by him in his official capacity, other than his fees of office, shall be by him paid into the treasury of the corporation weekly. At the first regular meeting of the council in each and every month, he shall submit a full statement of all such moneys received, from whom and for what purpose received, and when paid over. All fines, penalties, and forfeitures collected by him in state cases shall be by him paid over to the county treasurer monthly."

The above section was known as Section 1536-643, Rev. Stat. and was in force in almost precisely its present form when the decision cited in support of the opinion of January 13, 1912, were rendered. This section was not directly passed upon in these cases. However, in Portsmouth vs. Milstead and Baucus 18 Cir. Dec. 384, cited in the former opinion, a similar section as to payment of fees into the city treasurer, to wit, Section 1536-633, Rev. Stat., was passed upon. The part of said section construed is now found in Section 4213, General Code, which provides as follows:

> "The salary of any officer, clerk or employe shall not be increased or diminished during the term for which he was elected or appointed, and, except as otherwise provided in this title, all fees pertaining to any office shall be paid into the city treasury."

The decision of Portsmouth vs. Milstead and Baucus, supra, holds that the city has no right to such fees as against the chief of police, and the rule would be the same as against the mayor. The decision in City of Delaware vs. Mathews, 13, Cir. Ct. N. S., 539, holds that the chief of police has no right to them as against the city, and the rule would be the same as against the mayor. As held in that case, the claimant must stand upon the strength of his right, and not upon the weakness of that of his adversary.

We cannot presume that the courts, in passing upon this question, have not taken into consideration said Section 4270, General Code. The presumption is that they have taken into consideration all the statutory law bearing upon the case.

Said Section 4270, General Code, pertains to legal fees and not to illegal fees. It does not authorize the payment into the city treasury of fees illegally charged and collected by a mayor in state criminal cases, nor does it authorize such payment into the county treasury. The mayor is required to pay "all fines, epnalties and forfeitures" into the county treasury if they arise out of state cases. Nothing is said as to costs and fees.

Illegal costs charged and collected by a mayor, remain in the possession of the person who has such costs, until claimed by a person or corporation that can show a superior right thereto.

There is no reason to modify the opinion of January 13, 1912, as to the disposition of said costs.

Respectfully,
TIMOTHY S. HOGAN,
Attorney General.

MORTGAGE AND SALARY LOAN BROKERS—LICENSE BY STATE AND BY MUNICIPAL CORPORATIONS—CONSISTENCY OF STATUTES —STATE POLICY.

The act of 102 O. L. providing for the regulation and license of chattel mortgage and salary loan brokers by the state is not inconsistent with nor does it repeal by implication, Section 3470 General Code delegating to municipal corporations the right to regulate and license such business. Municipal corporations in exercising such powers however, must keep within the policy adopted by the state.

COLUMBUS, OHIO, February 16, 1912.

Bureau of Inspection and Supervision of Public Offices, Columbus, Ohio.

GENTLEMEN:—Under favor of January 20, 1912, you ask an opinion of this department upon the following:

> "May a city, by its council, under powers granted in Section 3670 of the General Code, regulate and license chattel mortgage and salary loan brokers by charging a license fee against those engaged in such business?

"This question arises by reason of the enactment of a state regulation of such businesses under 102 O. L., pages 469-471, which law provides a license fee of $10.00 to be paid to the Secretary of State."

Section 3670, General Code, as amended in 101 Ohio Laws, page 232, provides as follows:

"To regulate and license manufacturers and dealers in explosives, pawnbrokers, chattel mortgage and salary, loan brokers, peddlers, public ballrooms, scavengers, intelligence offices, billiard rooms, bowling alleys, livery, sale and boarding stables, dancing or riding academies or schools, race courses, ball grounds, street musicians, second hand dealers, junk shops and all persons engaged in the trade, business or profession of manicuring, massaging or chiropody. In the granting of any license a municipal corporation may exact and receive such sums of money as the council shall deem proper and expedient."

The first paragraph of Section 6346-1, General Code, 102 Ohio Laws, 469, reads:

"No person, firm or corporation except banks and building and loan associations shall engage or continue in the business of making loans upon chattels or personal property of any kind whatsoever or of purchasing or making loans upon salaries or wage earnings without first having obtained a license so to do from the Secretary of State."

Section 6346-2, General Code, 102 Ohio Laws, 469, provides:

"Application for license to conduct such business must be made in writing to the Secretary of State and shall contain the full name and addresses of applicants, if natural person, and in case of firms or incorporated companies, the full names and addresses of the officers and directors thereof and under what law or laws incorporated, the kind of business which is to be conducted, whether chattel mortage or salary loan; the place where such business is to be conducted and such other information as the Secretary of State may require. The fee to be charged for said license shall be ten dollars ($10.00) per annum and such amount must accompany the application. Each license granted shall date from the first of the month in which it is issued and shall be granted for the period of one year, subject to revocation, as provided in this act, and such license shall be kept conspicuously displayed in the place of business of the licensee."

Section 6346-6, General Code, provides as set forth in 102 Ohio Laws, 470:

"Any person, firm or corporation, or any agent, officer, or employe thereof, violating any provision of this act, or that carries on the business of making loans upon chattels or personal property of any kind whatsoever, or of purchasing or making loans upon salaries or wage earnings without first obtaining a license as provided in this act shall for the first offense, be fined not less than fifty dollars ($50.00) nor more than two hundred dollars (200.00); and for a second offense not less than two hundred dollars ($200.00); and for a second offense not less than ($500.00), and it shall thereupon become the duty of the Secretary of State upon such second conviction to revoke any license theretofore issued to such person, firm or corporation."

The provisions of Section 3670, General Code, were passed upon by the Supreme Court of Ohio in two decisions reported in the 81st Ohio State reports.

The first syllabus in case of Sanning vs. City of Cincinnati, 81 Ohio St., 142, reads:

"The state may, in the exercise of the police power, license and regulate chattel mortgage and salary loan brokers; and it may delegate authority to do so to municipal corporations."

In cases of French vs. City of Toledo and Beck vs. City of Toledo, 81 Ohio St., 160, Summers, J., says at page 166:

"The statute paragraph 30 of Section 1536-100, Revised Statutes, authorizes municipal corporations to regulate and license 'chattel mortgage and salary loan brokers'."

Section 3670, General Code, authorizes municipal corporations to regulate and license chattel mortgage and salary loan brokers, and the provisions of said section have been held valid by the Supreme Court of Ohio.

Since the passage of said section the act in 102 Ohio Laws 469, has been enacted, by which act the state has exercised its power to license chattel mortgage and salary loan brokers. This latter act does not in any way refer to the right of a municipal corporation to also license such chattel mortgage and salary loan brokers. The question arises, does the act requiring a state license repeal, by implication, the authority granted to municipalities to also license such brokers? Or, in other words, will the securing of a state license exempt the holder thereof from liability to secure a municipal license, if such license is required by such municipality in which the broker carries on his business?

In the case of Canton vs. Nist, 9 Ohio St., 439, Scott, J., says at page 440:

"But the powers here conferred are expressly limited, in the preceding part of the same section to such ordinances as are not inconsistent with the laws of this state.' And this limitation, even if not expressed, must, doubtless, be regarded as implied in all such general grants of power; for it must be presumed that the legislature would not intend to give a corporation the power of contravening and defeating state policy by ordinances inconsistent with the laws of the state. Is, then, the second section of this ordinance consistent with the policy of the the state as indicated by her legislation?"

"* * * But when it is attempted, as it seems to us, is done here by this regulation, to prevent persons, who, under the laws of the state are authorized to practice their professions (even if they cannot recover for their services), without liability under any of the criminal laws, from doing so in Cincinnati, unless with the sanction and approval of one or more officers of the corporation, and make them liable to fine and imprisonment if they do attempt to practice without being so registered, that this is going beyond the power conferred upon municipal corporations by the state, and that such regulations cannot stand. The general assembly itself having assumed to legislate upon the subject, and by general law made provision as to persons who are authorized to practice medicine in the state, unless specific and express power has been conferred upon the municipal corporation to impose additional restrictions upon, and deprive them of the right to do so, unless with the consent and approval of an officer of the city, to be enforced by fine and imprisonment, such regulations cannot be upheld, and we think no such power has been conferred."

In the case under consideration express authority has been granted municipal corporations to license and regulate chattel mortgage and salary loan brokers. The right of the state to grant to municipal corporations the power to make additional restrictions upon a subject matter upon which the state has itself acted, is recognized in State vs. Pendergast, supra.

As stated in Canton vs. Nist, supra, the ordinance of council must be consistent with the policy of the state.

In the following cases requirements that the same person or firm shall secure a license from both the state and the municipal corporation have been upheld.

In Ex parte L. Siebenhauer, 14 Nev. 365, the syllabus, reads:

"The city of Virginia, under its charter may require a license for carrying on any trade, business or profession, although an act of the legislature also requires a license to be taken out for carrying on the same trade, business or profession within the county, and can enforce a penalty in case of a refusal to take out such license.

Hawley, J., says on page 371:

"The city of Virginia, authority therefor being given in its charter, may require a license for conducting or carrying on trade, business, or profession within the corporate limits, although an act of the legislature also requires a license to be taken out for conducting or carrying on the same trade, business or profession within the county, and can enforce a penalty in case of refusal to take out such license. (1 Dillon on Municipal Corporation 53; Simpson vs. Savage, 1 Mo. 359; Ambrose vs. State 6 Ind. 351)."

The syllabus in case of Simpson vs. Savage, 1 Mo. 359, reads:

"An auctioneer, in the City of St. Louis, is compelled to take a license from the state, as well as the corporation, or be liable to a penalty."

On Page 360, McGirk, Ch. J., says:

"This act of incorporation may well stand, without infringing on the act respecting the state revenue. And it is a rule of law that where there are several statutes on the same subject they are to be taken as one act. In this case these two acts, so far as they respect auctions, are one act, and may well stand together. Viewing the statutes in this light, the consequence is, that the legislature have provided and required two licenses to be taken by auctioneers, if the corporation thinks fit to ordain it necessary on their part.

"The corporation may ordain a penalty for vending at auction without their license: This they have the power to do; yet auctioneers must look in the statute book for other penalties, and if he vend at auction, without complying with the revenue law also on the subject, he incurs another penalty, so that the 12th section of the act of incorporation does not repeal the act of 1820, on this subject; nor is it inconsistent; they both stand together.

"The auctioneer, to protect himself completely, must have a license from corporation, and also from the state collector."

If the state legislature had enacted the law requiring a state license, and afterwards granted authority to municipalities to also require licenses for the same trade or business, there would be no question as to the authority of the municipality. Is the rule different when the law requiring a state license was passed later than the act granting such authority.

Repeals by implication are not favored. There is nothing in the act of 102 Ohio Laws, 469, to show that the authority of the municipality to require licenses from the class of brokers under consideration has been taken away. If the two provisions are consistent they must stand together. That they are not inconsistent is shown by the holding in 14 Nev. 365, and 1 Mo. 359, supra. The fact that the failure to secure any license may subject the offender to a penalty under both the state and the municipal regulations, does not make them inconsistent, nor does it subject the offender to two punishments for the same offense. In one case he would be subject to a penalty for the violation of a state law and in the other for a violation of the municipal ordinance. That the same act may subject the offender to penalties for the violation of more than one law is recognized by the courts.

On page 70, in the case of D. T. I. Railway Co., vs, State, 82 Ohio St., 60, Summers, C. J., says:

"The same act or series of acts may constitute an offense equally against the United States and the state, subjecting the guilty party to punishment under the laws of each government." Cross vs. North Carolina, 132 U. S., 131.

The authority granted to municipal corporations by Section 3670, General Code, to license and regulate chattel mortgage and salary loan brokers, has not been specifically taken away by the act of 102 Ohio Laws 469, requiring such brokers to take out a state license. A requirement that such brokers shall take out both a state and a municipal license is not against any policy of the state as shown by any legislative enactment. The state law and the municipal ordinance may stand together and both be complied with. They are not inconsistent but are additional requirements.

A municipal corporation may require a license from chattel mortgage and salary loan brokers who carry on such business in such municipality.

Yours very truly,

TIMOTHY S. HOGAN,
Attorney General.

OFFICES COMPATIBLE—MEMBER OF BOARD OF REVIEW AND EXAMINER OF COUNTY TREASURY—"BUSINESS OR EMPLOYMENT".

So long as the duties of examiner of the county treasury provided for in Section 2704, do not cause interference with the duties or office hours of the position of member of the board of review, the positions of both offices may be filled and their compensation received by the same individual.

COLUMBUS, OHIO, February 26, 1912.

Bureau of Inspection and Supervision of Public Offices, Department of Auditor of State, Columbus, Ohio.

GENTLEMEN:— I beg to acknowledge receipt of your communication of February 16th, wherein you ask:

> "May a member of the city board of review receiving a regular salary of $150.00 from the county for such services, legally be appointed by the probate judge to examine the county treasury under authority of Section 2700, et seq., and receive the compensation for that service provided by Section 2704, in addition to such regular monthly salary?"

Section 5621, General Code, provides:

> "The county commissioners shall fix the salary of the members of the board of review, which shall be not less than three dollars and fifty cents per day for each day the board is in session, and not to exceed two hundred and fifty dollars per month for the time such board is in session. Such salary shall be paid monthly out of the county treasury upon the order of said board and the warrant of the county auditor.
> "The board shall meet in rooms provided by the county commissioners, and when in session shall devote their entire time to the duties of their office. No member thereof shall be engaged in any other business or employment during the period of time covered by the session of the board."

While I do not believe there be much contention that an examiner appointed by the probate judge, under Section 2700, is an officer in the true sense of the word; still, whether he is or not, there woould be no incompatibility, either statutory or otherwise, in one person's performing the duties of examiner and member of the board of review.

Anderson's Law Dictionary states:

> "Offices are incompatible and inconsistent when, being subordinated and interfering with each other, they produce a presumption that they cannot be executed with impartiality."

Meecham on Public Offices, Section 422, lays down the rule that:

> "It seems to be well settled that the mere physical impossibility of one person's performing the duties of the two offices, as from the lack of time or the inability to be in two places at the same time is not the incompatibility here referred to. It must be an inconsistency in the functions of the two offices."

In the case instanced there is no connection between the duties of the two positions; one, in no way, is a check upon the other. So, even if they were offices, they would not be incompatible.

Section 5621, supra., provides, among other things: "when in session shall devote their entire time to the duties of their offices."

The Century Dictionary defines "session" as,

> "The sitting together of a body of individuals for the transaction of business; * * * the actual assembling of members of these or any similar body for the transaction of business."

It is my opinion that when the members are assembled for business, which would, of course, be at such hours during the day that they allot for the transaction of the daily affairs of the board, they are then "in session", and the members thereof are required to devote such time as is found necessary for a faithful and honest discharge of their legal duties. The duties of the board must receive primary attention and all other matters must be subordinated; still, the phrase "entire time" must not receive a strict literal construction, and so long as the duties of the board are not interfered with the statute meets with full requirement. The officer is not prohibited from temporary absence when such absence is not detrimental to public interests and does not evidence neglect of his official duties.

The last clause of Section 5621, supra, reads:

> "No member thereof shall be engaged in any other business or employment during the time covered by the session of the board."

This, too, should receive a liberal interpretation. According to Anderson's Dictionary "business" and "employment" are synonymous terms; and "business" is defined as "that which busys or occupies one's time, attention and labors as his chief concern; that state of being busy or actively employed".

In Teuttings vs. Harris, 19 Pas. 286, the court says:

> "Business is that which busys or occupies the time, attention or labor of one as his principal concern whether for a longer or shorter term."

While I do not think that a member of a board of review should give his time and attention to other matters of business or social duties during the hours fixed as office hours, or such hours as are required for the daily official acts of the board, yet, as there is nothing in your inquiry evidencing that the services as an examiner of the county treasury interfere with the duties of the person as a member of the board of review; and further, since the compensation as a member of the board of review is a monthly salary, and not a per diem, I am of the opinion that a member of a board of review, having performed the services of an examiner of the county treasury, under authority of Section 2700, et seq., is entitled to receive the compensation as such examiner, provided by Section 2704 and that this interferes in on way with the receipt by him of his regular monthly salary as a member of the board of review.

Yours very truly,

TIMOTHY S. HOGAN,
Attorney General.

LIABILITY OF CITY FOR SALARY OF EXISTING OFFICE OF CITY EXAMINER FOR WHICH APPROPRIATION NOT MADE—DUTY OF CITY AUDITOR—POWERS OF COUNCIL AND SERVICE DIRECTOR TO FIX SALARIES OF EMPLOYES—CIVIL SERVICE—CLASSIFIED SERVICE—ILLEGAL APPOINTMENT BY SERVICE DIRECTOR.

When city council has by ordinance attempted to abolish the office of city examiner, which ordinance was vetoed by the mayor and not passed over his veto, council is obliged to make the usual appropriation for city examiner, and its failure so to do does not relieve the city of liability for the salary of said city examiner.

The auditor, however cannot allow a voucher drawn for such salary for the reasons that there has been no funds appropriated for that purpose, and the official's remedies must be sought in suit against the city or in mandamus proceedings to compel the appropriation.

The service director has power to create sub-departments and fix the number of employes therein but cannot fix salaries, the latter power being vested in the council by virtue of Section 4214 General Code.

The service director may not summarily dismiss persons holding positions in the engineers department who had been appointed by the civil service commission, upon examination, as members of the classified service.

Persons appointed without examination to such positions after a presumed dismissal of the legal incumbents by the commission are not entitled to salaries and vouchers for the same may not be honored by the city auditor.

COLUMBUS, OHIO, February 14, 1912.

Bureau of Inspection and Supervision of Public Offices, Columbus, Ohio.

GENTLEMEN:—Under request of January 6, 1912, you ask an opinion of this department upon the following:

> By request of the city auditor of Dayton, Ohio, we submit for your written opinion the following questions:
> "1. City council, by ordinance, abolishes the office of city examiner; mayor vetoes ordinance; council does not pass an appropriation for said examiner.
> "Should voucher from mayor, by whom examiner is appointed, be honored by city auditor?
> "2. The service director creates a new office in the street department under title of clerk or secretary to superintendent of streets and fixes salary at $1,200.00 per year. Council has taken no action in the matter.
> "Should city auditor honor voucher for salary of said employe?
> "3. The service director has dismissed several persons holding positions in the engineer's department and appoints others in their stead. Men dismissed had passed examination and were appointed from the eligible list under civil service. Men employed have not taken examination. There are no charges filed against employes dismissed, they reporting for duty every morning.
> "Should the city auditor honor a voucher drawn in favor of new employes?"

In answering your first question it is assumed, for this opinion, that an allowance was made for the salary of the city examiner in the annual budget of the city, and that the same was allowed by the budget commission under the provisions of the one per cent. tax law. Council has failed to include said salary in the semi-annual appropriation ordinance.

The duty of the city auditor in such case is determined by the provisions of Section 4285, General Code, which reads:

> "The auditor shall not allow the amount set aside for any appropriation to be overdrawn, or the amount appropriated for one item of expense to be drawn upon for any other purpose, or unless sufficient funds shall actually be in the treasury to the credit of the fund upon which such voucher is drawn. When any claim is presented to him, he may require evidence that such amount is due, and for this purpose may summon any agent, clerk or employe of the city, or any other person, and examine him upon oath or affirmation concerning such voucher or claim."

The fifth and sixth syllabi in case of State vs. Boyden, 10 Cir. Dec., 137, are as follows:

> "If there are not sufficient funds to the credit of the account upon which the voucher is drawn, the auditor is justified, under Section 1765*a*, Rev. Stat., which is mandatory, in refusing to draw his warrant until sufficient funds are on hand to meet the same.
> "And if the voucher is not drawn on any particular fund, or on the proper fund the auditor is justified in refusing to draw his warrant until a proper voucher is presented."

At Section 824, Throop on Public Officers, says as follows:

> "So, a mandamus will not lie, to compel a public financial officer to pay a demand where no appropriation has been made therefor; or where a lawful and regular warrant or other voucher therefor has not been made."

The above section of the General Code requires the auditor to keep all expenditures within the appropriation of each particular fund. He is to be governed by the appropriation ordinance as to the amounts in each respective fund. As there was no appropriation made by council to meet the salary of the city examiner there was no fund from which the auditor could allow payment of said salary. In compliance with this statute the auditor will be justified in refusing to honor the voucher for the salary of the city examiner. This conclusion is based upon the fact that the position of the city examiner was in existence prior to the allowance of the annual budget.

However, the failure of council to make an appropriation for the salary does not of itself abolish the position of city examiner, or dismiss the occupant thereof.

The first syllabus in case of Magner vs. St. Louis, 179 Mo., 495, reads:

> "If a public officer has been unlawfully removed and is otherwise entitled to recover his salary for the unexpired part of his term, the fact that there had not been enough money appropriated to pay him will not defeat his claim."

The position in the above case was that of inspector of buildings and was created by ordinance.

The second and third syllabi in case of City of Chicago vs. Luthardt, 191 Ill., 516, are as follows:

> "A municipal officer, regularly chosen under the civil service act who is illegally dismissed from his office and prevented from performing its duties by the chief of police, who acted under proceedings of the common council, had at his request, failed to make any appropriation for the salary of the office, may, upon re-instatement by mandamus, recover back salary from the city, where it has not been paid to any one performing the duties of the office.
> "The legal right to an office carries with it the right to the salary or emoluments of the office."

Section 856 of Mechem on Public Offices and Officers, reads in part as follows:

> "An act, however, fixing the officer's salary at a given sum, is not, unless that clearly appears to be the intention, impliedly repealed or amended by one subsequently passed appropriating for its payment a smaller sum, and the officer is not estopped from recovering the greater sum by the fact that he has accepted the former."

Section 461 of Throop on Public Offices, reads in part as follows:

> "Where the salary of an officer is fixed by law, and the legislature appropriates a small sum for his salary, without any provision declaring it to be in full for his salary, or repealing the provision fixing his salary; this is merely an insufficient appropriation, not a reduction, and the officer is still entitled to the difference. So the appropriation, for the payment of the salary of a municipal officer, of a smaller sum than he had before received does not itself reduce his salary. And not only does an insufficient appropriation fail to effect a reduction of the salary, but the officer is not precluded from claiming the difference, by his continuance to serve and accepting the smaller sum."

In the case at bar the position of city examiner was, no doubt, legally created, and the occupant of the position was legally appointed thereto. Council attempted to abolish the position by ordinance. The ordinance was vetoed by the mayor and was not passed over his veto. It did not become effective and the position of city examiner was not abolished. It is still a legal position. Council, by failing to make an appropriation for the salary of the position, could not thereby abolish the position, unless the appropriation ordinance clearly shows such an intent. If the failure to make an appropriation had the effect of abolishing the position it would result in council doing indirectly that which it was unable to do directly by the passage of the ordinance which was vetoed by the mayor. The position has been legally created and the occupant has been legally appointed and has not been dismissed. The city is therefore liable to him for the salary which has been heretofore fixed for the office.

Section 3797, General Code, prescribes the duties of council as to appropriations as follows:

> "At the beginning of each fiscal half year, the council shall make appropriations for each of the several objects for which the corpora- tion has to provide, or from the moneys known to be in the treasury, or estimated to come into it during the six months next ensuing from the collection of taxes and all other sources of revenue. All expenditures within the following six months shall be made from and within such appropriations and balances thereof."

A question arises as to the proper remedy to secure payment of the salary. Whether it must be by suit for the collection of the salary as it becomes due and payable, or by mandamus to compel council to make the necessary appropriation will not be passed upon, until the question is properly presented with all the facts.

It appears from your second inquiry that the director of public service has created a new office and has fixed the compensation therefor without any action of council.

Section 4214, General Code, provides:

"Except as otherwise provided in this title, council, by ordinance or resolution, shall determine the number of officers, clerks and employes in each department of the city government, and shall fix by ordinance or resolution their respective salaries and compensation, and the amount of bond to be given for each officer, clerk or employe in each department of the government, if any be required. Such bond shall be made by such officer, clerk or employe, with surety subject to the approval of the mayor"

Section 4327, General Code, provides:

"The director of public service may establish such sub-departments as may be necessary and determine the number of superintendents, deputies, inspectors, engineers, harbor masters, clerks, laborers and other persons necessary for the execution of the work and the performance of the duties of this department."

The first syllabus in case of State vs. Lothschultz, 20 Low Dec. 390, reads:

"A director of public service of a city has no power, either under Sections 139, 140 or 141 of act 99 O. L., 563 (Gen. Code 4324, 4325, 4326), the Payne law, giving him the management and supervision of his department to fix salaries or compensation of employes therein but the exclusive right to fix salaries and compensation thereof is reposed in the city council Section 227 of such act (Gen. Code 4214)."

The above case was affirmed by the Circuit Court May 19, 1910.

There is no authority granted to the director of public service to fix the salary or compensation of the employes in his department. That authority is vested in council by Section 4214, General Code. As council has not fixed the salary, none can be paid and the auditor is not authorized to honor any voucher for the same.

Your third inquiry covers the right of dismissal of employes in the classified service.

Section 4479, General Code, provides:

"The civil service shall be divided into classified and unclassified service. The unclassified service shall include the positions of officers elected by the people or appointed to fill vacancies in offices filled by popular election, or whose appointment is subject to confirmation by the council, or who are appointed by any state officer or by any court, employes of the council, persons who by law are to serve without remuneration, persons who are appointed to positions requiring professional or technical skill as may be determined by the civil service commission; persons appointed or employed to give instruction in any educational institution, persons appointed by any board or officers supervising elections; persons who as members of a board or otherwise, have charge of any principal department of the government of any city, the head or chief of any division or principal department relating to engineering, waterworks street cleaning, or health, the chief of the police department, the chief of the fire department, the superintendent of any workhouse, house of refuge, infirmary, or hospital, the librarian of any public library, private secretaries, deputies in the office of the city auditor and city treasurer, unskilled laborers, and such appointees of the civil service commission as they may by rule determine. The classified service shall comprise offices and places not included in the unclassified service."

The officer's in question who have been discharged are in the engineering department, and neither of them is at the head of the principal department relating thereto. It appears further that they have not been placed in the unclassified service by the civil service commission as positions requiring technical or professional skill. The converse appears to be the situation. They have been placed in the classified service, and were appointed from the list of the civil service commission after examination. These positions have been properly placed in the classified service.

Section 4485, General Code, prescribes how such employes shall be removed, as follows:

"No officer or employe within the classified service shall be removed reduced in rank or discharged, except for some cause relating to his moral character or his suitableness to perform the duties of his position, though he may be suspended from duty for a period not to exceed thirty days, pending the investigation of charges against him. Such cause shall be determined by the removing authority and reported in writing, with a specific statement of reasons, to the commission, but shall not be made public without the consent of the person discharged. Before such removing, reduction, or discharge, the removing authority shall give such person a reasonable opportunity to know the charges against him and to be heard in his own behalf."

It appears that the men were discharged without charges having been first preferred against them and in violation of said Section 4485, General Code.

Further more, the positions are in the classified service, and even if there were vacancies, the apointments have not been made in compliance with the provisions of Section 4481, General Code, which provides:

"Appointments shall be made in the following manner: The appointing board or officer shall notify the commission of any vacancy to be filled. The commission shall thereupon certify to such board or officer the three candidates graded highest in the respective lists as shown by the result of such examination. Such board or officer shall thereupon appoint one of the three so certified. Grades and standings so established shall remain the grades for a period of six months, or longer if the commission so determines, and in succeding notifications of vacancies, candidates not selected may be dropped by the commission after having been certified a total of three times."

Section 4504, General Code, provides:

"No clerk, auditor or accounting officer of any city shall allow the claim of any officer for services of any deputy or other person in violation of the provisions of this title."

The appointments were not made in compliance with Section 4481, General Code, and were illegal. The auditor is therefore authorized by the provisions of Section 4504, supra, to disallow the voucher for their salaries and it is his duty to disallow the same.

Respectfully,
TIMOTHY S. HOGAN,
Attorney General.

MUNICIPAL CORPORATIONS—ILLEGAL CONTRACT OF VILLAGE OF POMEROY WITH WHARFMASTERS FOR WHARFAGE FEES—NO RECOVERY BETWEEN PARTIES.

A contract by a village with a wharfmaster whereby the latter is to receive all wharfage fees in consideration of the construction by the wharfmaster of a road way or landing, is illegal and cannot be enforced. The law leaves the parties as it finds them and there can be no recovery by the city for fees received.

COLUMBUS, OHIO, February 28, 1912.

Bureau of Inspection and Supervision of Public Offices, Columbus, Ohio.

GENTLEMEN:—Under date of October 24, 1911, you ask an opinion of this department upon the following:

"In 1902, the council of the village of Pomeroy entered into an agreement or contract with W. G. Downie for the paving of the wharf landing of said village. In consideration of the construction and maintaining of said roadway or landing by said Downie, who at that time was the wharfmaster of said village and charged with the duty of collecting wharfage of water craft landing at the public landing of said village as fixed by the ordinances thereof, said Downie was permitted to retain the fees collected for a period of fifteen years from the 10th day of January, 1902. Said Downie has collected such wharfage fees and has retained same as a reimbursement to him for the construction of said improvement, and we are now called upon to pass upon the validity and binding effect of said agreement, particularly as to whether it is at this time a binding obligation or agreement upon the present village council. If, in your opinion, such an agreement is held to be invalid, what, if any, finding should be made by this department or what recommendation do you suggest as proper in the premises."

It appears that this contract was entered into in the same manner as a contract by said village of Pomeroy with a certain ferry company in 1898, and which latter contract was passed upon by this department in an opinion to you on December 29, 1911.

The provisions of the statutes in 1902 governing contracts for improvements of this nature by a village, are the same as the provisions which were in force in 1898 and which were cited in said opinion of December 29, 1911.

The contract now under consideration is illegal for the same reasons that the other contract was held to be illegal.

Following the ruling in that opinion, no recovery can be had from W. G. Downie for money received by him for wharfage and applied on his alleged contract.

The contract, being illegal, is not binding upon the village and cannot be enforced by either party thereto.

The findings made in the opinion of December 29, 1911, apply to this contract.

Respectfully,

TIMOTHY S. HOGAN,

Attorney General.

TAXES AND TAXATION—ROAD IMPROVEMENTS—SMITH ONE PER CENT. LAW—LIMITATIONS UPON TOWNSHIP LEVIES AND BOND ISSUES UNDER GARRETT LAW—COUNTY COMMISSIONERS' POWERS.

The county commissioners may not levy upon the duplicate of the township for road improvements under the Garrett law in excess of the amount raised in 1910, or the ten mill or two mill limitations of the Smith tax law without a vote of the electors.

Neither may they issue bonds whose interest and principal, under the limitations of said law, cannot manifestly be retired within ten years as provided in Section 6949, General Code. If, however, such limitations were exceeded unknowingly and in good faith, possibly the action might be remedied by an issuance, at the proper time, of refunding bonds, under Section 5656, General Code.

COLUMBUS, OHIO, February 27, 1912.

Bureau of Inspection and Supervision of Public Offices, Department of Auditor of State, Columbus, Ohio.

GENTLEMEN:—I beg to acknowledge receipt of your letter of January 29th, enclosing three communications from the auditor of Wyandot County, presenting a question upon which you want my opinion. This question is as follows:

> "In what respect, if any, does the Smith one per cent. law, so-called, affect the power of the county commissioners to issue bonds and to levy taxes upon the duplicate of the township under what is known as the "Garrett Law," Section 6926, et seq., General Code."

The following sections of the General Code are applicable to the solution of this question:

> "Section 6926. When a majority of the resident owners of real estate situated within one mile of a public road, present a petition to the board of county commissioners asking for the grading and improving of such road, the county commissioners shall go upon the line of the road described in such petition. If, in their opinion, the public utility requires such road to be graded and improved, they shall determine whether the improvement shall be partly or wholly constructed of stone, gravel or brick, any or all, and what part or parts of such road improvement shall be of stone, gravel or brick, and enter their decision on their journal."

"Section 6928. The county commissioners shall order that a portion of the cost, and expenses thereof, which shall not be less than one-half, nor more than two-thirds of the total, shall be paid out of the proceeds of any levy or levies upon the grand duplicate of the county against which the taxable property of any township or townships in which such road may be in whole or in part as authorized hereinafter. They shall also order that the balance of said cost and expense be assessed upon and collected from the owners of said real estate, and from the real estate benefitted thereby in proportion to the benefit to be derived therefrom by said real estate as determined by said commissioners."

"Section 6949. The county commissioners, if in their judgment it is desirable, may sell the bonds of any county in which such improvements is to be or has been constructed to an amount necessary to pay, of the cost and expenses of such road improvement, the respective shares of such township or townships and of the landowners whose lands therein are benefitted by such road improvement. Such bonds shall state for what purpose issued, bear interest at a rate not in excess of five per cent. per annum, payable semi-annually, and mature in not more than ten years after their issue, in such amounts and at such times as the commissioners shall determine, but not more than one-fifth of the principal of said bonds shall mature in any one year. They shall be sold according to law and for not less than par and accrued interest."

"Section 6950. The proceeds of such bonds shall be applied and used exclusively for the payment of the expenses and costs of construction of such stone or gravel road improvements and the levy for the payment of the principal and interest of such bonds may be in addition to any levy now authorized by law."

I shall not quote all the provisions of the Smith Law which bear upon the question. In order that all provisions of the law which have such an effect might be set forth, it would be necessary to quote the entire law, and that would unnecessarily burden this opinion.

Section 5649-3*a* of the Smith Law, 102 O. L., 269, imposes certain internal limitations upon the amounts that may be levied, for example, "by a township, for township purposes." In an opinion of recent date, I have held that levies made under other road laws than the one now under consideration, upon the township duplicate by the county commissioners are to be regarded as township levies, within the meaning of said Section 5649-3*a*, and not levies within a special district for road improvements, within the meaning of said section. I have just come to the conclusion that such levies are within the two-mill limitation of the Smith Law.

In other opinions I have held such levies to be within the other three limitations of the Smith Law, viz: that measured by the taxes for the year 1910, that of ten mills, and that of fifteen mills.

It will thus be seen that the ten-mill limitation of the Smith Law is not the only one to be considered in determining the power of the county commissioners under the above quoted sections, as affected by said Smith Law. Levies to meet the principal and interest of bonds issued after June 1, 1911, without a vote of the people must, of course, be treated as any other levies made for ordinary running expenses. It follows, therefore, that the commissioners may not levy a tax under the Garrett Law, which, with other townwship taxes, will cause the total township levy to exceed two mills.

Therefore, the mere fact that the ten-mill limitation would not be exceeded by such levy would be immaterial.

The Smith Law has nothing whatever to do directly with the power of any board or officers to issue bonds. Insofar, however, as it prevents the making of sufficient levies to retire the bonds within the time limited by law, if there is such a limit, it does not impose a practical limitation upon the powers to issue bonds. Section 6949 does impose such a limitation as that above referred to. It is therein provided that the bonds issued under its authority shall be retired in ten years. It would, therefore, be unlawful for the commissioners to issue bonds which could not be retired, within the limitations of the Smith Law, in ten years from the date of issue. I am not prepared to state, however, that if the commissioners use their judgement in good faith as to the likelihood of their being able to retire bonds issued by them under this section, in ten years, and at the expiration of that time find themselves unable to pay them off because of the limits of taxation applicable to the creation of a fund for their payment, the commissioners could not then under Section 5656, General Code, provide for the payment of the indebtedness by the issuance of refunding bonds. This question, however, is not directly raised by the auditor's letter.

In connection with the question under discussion it is to be noted that Section 6950, above quoted, speaks of a levy for the "payment of the principal and interest of such bonds." The language here is seemingly meaningless, but upon careful consideration I have reached the conclusion that this phrase must refer to the levy on the grand duplicate of the township, provided for by Section 6928, also above quoted. It is this levy which, as aforesaid, must be made within all of the limitations of the Smith Law applicable to and in the township as a taxing district.

It follows, therefore, that the auditor's question must be answered by the statement that a vote of the people is necessary to authorize the making of a levy under Section 6928, General Code, if such levy cannot be made within the two-mill limitation of Section 5649-3*a*, as well as if the same cannot be made without exceeding the ten-mill limitations of Sections 5649-2 and 5649-3 of the Smith Law.

Very truly yours,

TIMOTHY S. HOGAN,

Attorney General.

MUNICIPAL CORPORATIONS—COUNCIL—NO POWER IN PUBLIC SERVICE DIRECTOR TO EXCHANGE OLD AUTOMOBILE IN PART PAYMENT FOR NEW — CONTRACTS — ADVERTISEMENT—LOWEST AND BEST BIDDER—POWER OF PUBLIC SERVICE DIRECTOR TO PURCHASE AND SELL PERSONAL PROPERTY—NECESSITY FOR AUTHORIZING ORDINANCE.

Section 4328, General Code provides that the Director of Public Service shall make no "expenditure" of more than $500, other than for compensation of employes, except upon authorization of council and upon written contract with the lowest and best bidder after advertisement. Section 4330 requires the corporation to pay the contract price in "cash" and therefore, under these sections, the city cannot include as part of such "expenditure" an old automobile in part payment of the purchase price of a new machine, exceeding $500 in value.

Under Sections 3703 and 3699, however, personal property in excess of $500 may be sold upon proper advertisement, to the lowest and best bidder. Personal property under $500 may be sold without advertisement by the director of public service but only after authorization by ordinance of council.

The public service director may, therefore, sell an old machine under $500 value after such authorizing ordinance, but a new machine may not be purchased except upon advertisement and contract, as aforesaid, in a separate proceeding.

COLUMBUS, OHIO, March 4, 1912.

Bureau of Inspection and Supervision of Public Offices, Columbus, Ohio.

GENTLEMEN:—Under date of February 15, 1912, you ask an opinion upon the following:

> "We submit herewith for your written opinion thereon a communication from the city auditor of Cleveland under date of February 10th raising the question of the legality of exchange of municipal property. As you will note, it is proposed to trade in an old automobile on a new machine, the purchase price of the latter being more than $500.00."

The letter enclosed states in part as follows:

> "I am now called upon to decide a case where one of the departments has an old Hupmobile on which can be secured a very good trade. The situation is as follows:
> "A new Hupmobile sells for $750.00. By trading in the old machine the dealer will make an allowance of $400.00, making a net due by the city of $350, but the purchase price of the new machine exceeding $500, the question arises as to whether it would be a regular and valid transaction for us to approve the bill.
> "From a business standpoint it is surely the best proposition. No other trade quite as satisfactory can be made."

There is no statutory authority to make an exchange of property in the manner asked.

Section 4328, General Code, provides:

"The director of public service may make any contract or purchase supplies or material or provide labor for any work under the supervision of that department not involving more than five hundred dollars, When an expenditure within the department, other than the compensation of persons employed therein, exceeds five hundred dollars, such expenditure shall first be authorized and directed by ordinance of council. When so authorized and directed, the director of public service shall make a written contract with the lowest and best bidder after advertisement for not less than two nor more than four consecutive weeks in a newspaper of general circulation within the city."

The word "expenditure" as used in the foregoing statue is not limited to the cash or money that might be paid out for a particular thing, but includes also any other thing of value. In the case submitted the purchase price is $750.00, and the expenditure would be $350.00 in money and $400.00 in property, making a total of $750.00. In such case the expenditure must be made at competitive bidding.

Section 4330, General Code, provides:

"The contract shall be between the corporation and the bidder, and the corporation shall pay the contract price in cash. Where a bonus is offered for completion of contract prior to a specified date, the department may exact a prorated penalty in like sum for every day of delay beyond a specified date."

By virtue of this section the contract price must be paid in cash. This provision for payment in cash would preclude the city from advertising for alternative bids after proper resolution of council, that bidders should submit bids for payment in cash and also bids for part payment in cash and part payment by taking the old Hupmobile.

However the matter might be worked out in another way.

Section 3703, General Code, provides for the sale of personal property as follows:

"Personal property not needed for municipal purposes, the estimated value of which is less than five hundred dollars, may be sold by the board or officer having supervision or management thereof. If the estimated value of such property exceeds five hundred dollars, it shall be sold only in the manner herein provided for the sale or lease of real estate."

Section 3699, General Code, provides for the sale of real estate and reads:

"No contract for the sale or lease of real estate shall be made unless authorized by an ordinance, approved by the votes of two-thirds of all members elected to the council, and by the board or officer having supervision or management of such real estate. When such contract is so authorized, it shall be made in writing by the board or officer having such supervision or management and only with the highest bidder, after advertisement once a week for five consecutive weeks in a newspaper of general circulation within the corporation. Such board or officer may reject any or all bids and readvertise until all such real estate is sold or leased."

There is a restriction, however, placed upon the director of public safety for the sale of property in his department in Section 4371, General Code, which provides:

> "The director of public safety may make all contracts and expenditures of money for acquiring lands for the erection or repairing of station houses, police stations, fire department buildings, fire cisterns and plugs, that may be required, and for the purchase of engines, apparatus and all other supplies necessary for the police and fire departments under his supervision, but no obligation involving an expenditure of more than five hundred dollars shall be created unless first authorized and directed by ordinance of council. In making, altering, or modifying such contracts, the director of public safety shall be governed by the provisions of the preceding chapter relating to public contracts, except that all bids shall be filed with and opened by him. He shall make no sale or disposition of any property belonging to the city without first being authorized by resolution or ordinance of council."

The old Hupmobile could be sold by virtue of the foregoing sections. As it is estimated to be of less value than five hundred dollars it could be sold without advertising for or receiving bids thereon.

It would be legal for the city to advertise for bids for the purchase of the new machine, and then it could sell the old machine to the successful bidder, if the price which he would give would be as good as can be secured therefor from any other person. The two transactions, however, would have to be two separate sales and purchases in order to be legal and should be complete in themselves.

While the above transaction would be legal caution must be used to avoid collusion, or abuse of power.

Respectfully,
TIMOTHY S. HOGAN,
Attorney General.

BANKS AND BANKING—MUNICIPAL CORPORATIONS—CO-PARTNERSHIP BANK AS DEPOSITORY.

If a co-partnership bank has capital and surplus which can be ascertained so as to apply the limitations of Section 4295 G. C. A municipality may legally award funds to such bank as a depository in a conformance with said section.

COLUMBUS, OHIO, March 9, 1912.

Bureau of Inspection and Supervision of Public Offices, Department of Auditer of State, Columbus, Ohio.

GENTLEMEN:—I acknowledge receipt of your letter of February 29, 1912, requesting my opinion as follows:

> "May the council of a municipality (village) legally award the public funds of the village to a co-partnership styling itself a bank?"

I have already passed upon this question in a way in an opinion rendered to Hon. J. R. Stillings, prosecuting attorney, Kenton Ohio, on April 9, 1911, a copy of which opinion I enclose herewith. This opinion was based upon the decision of Judge Dillon of Franklin County Common Pleas Court in the case of State ex rel vs. Madison Township, 15 Ohio Decisions, 720, in which opinion, construing Section 3968 of Bates' Statutes (7604 of the General Code), the Court held that the words "paid in capital stock" meant simply "capital," and that a partnership bank as well as an incorporated bank could be elected as a depository for the funds, under Section 7604 of the General Code.

The section providing for depositories for municipalities is slightly different. This section is Section 4295 of the General Code, and is as follows:

> "The council may provide by ordinance for the deposit of all public moneys coming into the hands of the treasurer, in such bank or banks, situated within the county, as offer, at competitive bidding, the highest rate of interest and give a good and sufficient bond issued by a surety company authorized to do business in the state, or furnish good and sufficient surety, in a sum not less than twenty per cent in excess of the maximum amount at any time to be deposited, but there shall not be deposited in any one bank an amount in excess of the paid in capital stock and surplus of such banks, and not in any event to exceed one million dollars."

Particular attention is called to the sentence "But there shall not be deposited in any one bank an amount in excess of the paid in capital stock and surplus of such banks." The words "and surplus" do not appear in Section 7604 construed by the court in the case mentioned above; nor does it appear in the section relating to deposit of township funds; but under the decision of Judge Dillon, I feel constrained to hold that if a partnership bank has capital and surplus which can be ascertained, that such bank can be designated as a depository.

Very truly yours,

TIMOTHY S. HOGAN,

Attorney General.

COUNTY COMMISSIONERS—ERECTION OF COUNTY JAIL TO COST OVER $25,000—PROCEEDINGS WHEN SUFFICIENT FUNDS ON HAND AND BOND ISSUE UNNECESSARY—VOTE OF ELECTORS—BUILDING COMMISSION.

Section 2333, General Code providing that the county commissioners, before erecting a county building in excess of $25,000, shall submit the question of issuing bonds or levying tax to the electors, (and upon an affirmative result) for the application to the common pleas court and the appointment of a building commission, presents a patent ambiguity when applied to a case where the county has on hand a sufficient fund without a bond issue or levy.

Determining the intention of the statutes however, from the history of the present statute and from kindred sections wherein the commissioners are required to submit the question of "appropriating funds" in excess of ten thousand dollars for other public buildings, it must be held that all other steps stipulated for in Section 2333 must be taken in the erection of a jail to cost over $25,000 even though the specific step of issuing bonds and making a levy, be dispensed with. A vote of the electors upon the question of the erection, and a building commission are, therefore indispensible.

COLUMBUS, OHIO, March 11, 1912.

Bureau of Inspection and Supervision of Public Offices, Department of Auditor of State, Columbus, Ohio.

GENTLEMEN:—I beg to acknowledge receipt of your letter of February 29th, requesting my opinion upon the following question:

> "The commissioners of Stark County desire to build a new jail and have sufficient funds at their disposal for that purpose without issuing bonds or making a special levy. Under such circumstances, are the commissioners authorized to proceed in accordance with the provisions of Sections 2343, et seq., or are they required to apply to the judge of the court of common pleas for the appointment of a building commission under Section 2333 before they are authorized to construct such jail?"

I assume that the cost of the proposed building exceeds $25,000. Section 2333 of the General Code, to which you refer, provides as follows:

> "When county commissioners have determined to erect a court house or other county building and a cost to exceed twenty-five thousand dollars, they shall submit the question of issuing bonds of the county therefor to vote of the electors thereof. If determined in the affirmative, within thirty days thereafter, the county commissioners shall apply to the judge of a court of common pleas of the county who shall appoint four suitable and competent freehold electors of the county, who shall in connection with the county commissioners constitute a building commission and serve until its completion. Not more than two of such appointees shall be of the same political party."

Section 2334 in pari materia, provides as follows:

> "The persons so appointed shall receive a reasonable compensation for the time actually employed, to be fixed by the court of common pleas and on its approval paid from the county treasury. Their compensation in the aggregate shall not exceed two and one-half per cent. of the amount received by the county from taxes raised or from the sale of bonds for the purpose of constructing the building."

It seems to me that there is a patent ambiguity. These sections are consistent and clear enough, excepting as applied to the case when there is money available to construct a building without the making of a special levy or the issuance of bonds. As applied to such a case, they are meaningless. It would be a mere mockery to submit the question of issuing of bonds to the electors if it were not necessary to issue such bonds. It would be impracticable, indeed impossible, to pay the commissioners to erect the building any compensation out of the proceeds of an issue of bonds or a special tax, when there had been no issue of bonds or levy of special tax.

It would be possible to reconcile these ambiguities by adopting the construction that it was the Legislature's intention that in all cases in which the construction of a proposed building costs more than $25,000, the county shall provide for the same by a special levy or levies, or by the issue of bonds. Indeed, the reading of Section 2333 seems to lead to such a conclusion. I am satisfied, however, that there is still enough ambiguity in the section as codified to justify a resort to the preceding law. That law was section 1 of the act found in 98 O. L., 53, which provided in part as follows:

"That when the county commissioners of any county have determined under and by the authority of the statutes of the state of Ohio to erect a court house which shall cost to exceed twenty-five thousand dollars and after the question of issuing the bonds of said county for the construction of said court house or other county building has been submitted to a vote of the electors of the county, and said question has been determined by said electors in the affirmative, said county commissioners shall, within thirty days after said election has been held and the results thereof determined, apply to the judge of the court of common pleas for said county, who shall appoint four suitable and competent freehold electors of said county, and not more than two of whom shall be of the same political party, who shall, in connection with the county commissioners, constitute a building commission and who shall serve until the completion of said court house as contemplated herein. * * * *."

It thus appears that in the original act, the provision respecting the submission of the question to the electors was jurisdictional and not mandatory. That is to say, it was a condition precedent to the appointment of a building commission, and not an independent requirement. It is to be explained by reference to other statutes then in force. I refer, of course, to Section 2825, R. S., which, as in force at that time the act under consideration was passed, provided that when the cost of a public building exceeded ten thousand dollars, the commissioners should not levy any tax therefor without submitting the question as to the policy of building such edifice by general tax to the electors. While I do not hold, as a matter of law, that this election is the one referred to in the act of 1906, yet I cannot avoid the conclusion that the indirect way in which reference is made in that act to the vote of the electors indicate that the legislature must have had some such provision, independent of the act of 1906, in mind. I am, therefore, impelled to the conclusion that the act of 1906, of which Section 2333 of the General Code is a codification, did not, as enacted, of itself require a submission to the electors or the appointment of a commission in case the cost of a proposed public building exceeded twenty-five thousand dollars; but that the act was intended to apply only in case it was necessary to submit the question of the levy of the tax or the issuance of bonds to the electors under sections like Section 2825 R. S.

Even as Section 2825 R. S. was in force in 1906, however, it required submission of the question to the electors in the case of the expenditure of public moneys when no special tax levy or issue of bonds was necessary. It expressly required that the county commissioners should not "appropriate any money" for the purpose of constructing a public building, the cost of which would exceed $10,000, without submitting the question to a vote of the electors. It would appear, therefore, that as these statutes were originally enforced, the commissioners would have in all instances, whether they had the money on hand or not, to submit the question of its expenditure for the purpose of constructing a public building to a vote of the electors. This being the case, it follows, in spite of the construction which I have given to the act of 1906, that it was impossible at all times under that act to erect a new public building without submitting the policy thereof to the electors; and that because of this fact a building commission was required in all cases, whether an issue of bonds was necessary or not.

Without tracing the subsequent history of Section 2825 R. S. suffice it to say that at the present time it comprises Section 5638 and succeeding sections of the General Code. As amended, 102 O. L., 447, this section provides as follows:

> "The county commissioners shall not levy a tax, appropriate money or issue bonds for the purpose of building county buildings, purchasing sites therefor, or for land for infirmary purposes, the expenses of which will exceed $15,000, except in case of casualty, and as hereinafter provided; or for building a county bridge, the expense of which will exceed $18,000, except in case of casualty, and as hereinafter provided; or enlarge, repair, improve, or rebuild a public county building, the entire cost of which expenditure will exceed $10,000; without first submitting to the voters of the county, the question as to the policy of making such expenditure."

Section 5639-1 is a supplementary section enacted 102 O. L., 447, and provides in part as follows:

> "When the board of county commissioners desires to submit such question to the voters of the county, it shall pass and enter upon its minutes a resolution declaring the necessity of such expenditure, fixing the amount of bonds to be issued, if any, in connection therewith, and fixing the date upon which the question of making any such expenditure shall be so submitted, and shall cause a copy of such resolution to be certified to the deputy state supervisors of elections of the county; and thereupon the deputy state supervisor shall prepare the ballot and make other necessary arrangements for the submission of the question to the voters of the county at the time fixed in such resolution. * * **."

Section 5640-1, enacted at the same time, provides in part as follows:

> "The ballots provided by the deputy state supervisors shall have printed upon the same the words 'In favor of the expenditure of $ . . . . . for the purpose of . . . . . .' and 'Against the expenditure of $ . . . . .

for the purpose of . . . . . .'said blanks to be filled with the amount proposed to be expended and the purpose for which said money is to be expended. * ** * * * *."

It is thus apparent that, at the present time, the commissioners must seek the authority of the electors before they expend moneys which they have on hand, available for the construction of a public building. That being the case, I am of the opinion, for reasons already stated, that this election is the one really meant by the first sentence of Section 2333. It follows, therefore, upon the foreging reasoning, that county commissioners may not spend money on hand for the construction of a county building, without submitting the policy of the expenditure to the electors,—if the amount involved exceeds twenty-five thousand dollars, and without providing for the appointment of a building commission as required by Section 2333, General Code.

Very truly yours,
TIMOTHY S. HOGAN,
Attorney General.

INTEREST—PAYMENT ON MONEY WILFULLY WITHHELD OR WITHDRAWN FORM PUBLIC TREASURY BY MISTAKE OF LAW—TIME OF RUNNING—COLLECTOR OF REVENUES—PUBLIC OFFICERS—CONTRACTORS—PRESUMPTION OF KNOWLEDGE OF LAW.

As interest begins to run from the time at which the principle is due and payable, interest will be chargeable against a collector of public revenues from the date which the statute prescribes for turning the money into the treasury.

Where a contractor is found to have been overpaid by reason of a clerical error in the estimate of an engineer, interest charges are collectable against such contractor only from the date upon which the mistake is discovered by him.

Depending upon the circumstances, public moneys, paid under a mistake of law, may or may not be recoverable. In cases where recovery is not defeated by reason of such mistake, the time when interest begins to run differs with various circumstances. A public officer withholding moneys, however, or parties dealing with such and receiving money from them, are presumed to know the law and interest would run from date of receipt of said moneys or when legally due. It is recommended that interest be chargeable in the case of public moneys so diverted, from the date of receipt of illegal payment or failure to pay over.

COLUMBUS, OHIO, March 23, 1912.

Bureau of Inspection and Supervision of Public Offices, Department of Auditor of State, Columbus, Ohio.

GENTLEMEN:—I beg to acknowledge receipt of your letter of January 16th requesting my opinion upon the following questions:

"If a collector of public revenue withholds the deposit of his collection from the public treasury for a considerable time beyond that required of him by law, what, if any, interest charges would be collectible of him occasioned by such delinquency on his part?

"If a contractor is found to have been overpaid by reason of a clerical error in the estimate of the engineer or in assembling his allowed claims, what, if any, interest charges are collectible from the contractor by reason of the error?

"What, if any, interest charges, are collectible from parties illegally receiving or withholding public funds under mistakes of law?"

Section 8305, General Code, which fixes the legal rate of interest at six per cent. per annum, does not apply in terms to liabilities of the sort referred to in your three questions. It is practically the universal rule, however, that interest is chargeable under circumstances like those which you suppose, upon one of two theories; that is to say, upon the ground of implied contract, or upon damages.

In Ohio, interest is allowed upon money wrongfully withheld, at the legal rate, as damages for the wrongful withholding, and the legal rate is adopted upon the principle of analogy.

Not only is the allowance of interest made as compensation to the party injured by the wrongful withholding, but also on account of the gain made from the use of the party by the party wrongfully withholding it. The law, however, does not permit an inquiry, for the purpose of ascertaining the exact loss to the injured party, and gain to the wrong-doer, but merges both in the interest at the legal rate, allowed as aforesaid.

From this, it follows, therefore, that if any interest at all were collectible under any of the facts stated by you, it would be at the legal rate. That is to say, the fact that the public treasury might have its money at two per cent, interest, say, under a depository contract, would not limit its recovery of interest as against an officer or another person wrongfully detaining money due such public treasury, to such two per cent. Nor, on the other hand, would the public be remitted to a remedy of accounting against the wrong-doer to compel him to show what, if any, profit he had made from the use of the money by him, and to pay the same into the public treasury.

Answering your first specific question, I beg to state that the general rule is that interest begins to run from the time at which the principal is due and payable. Therefore, if the statute described the date upon which a collector of public revenue shall turn his collections into the public treasury, interest at the legal rate will begin to run against him and in favor of the State from and after such date, so fixed, on moneys thereafter withheld by him.

The general principle above referred to is helpful in the solution of your second question. This question has never been decided in Ohio. The decisions in other states are not uniform, but I am satisfied that the better reason supports the rule that the default of the person wrongfully withholding the money, such as to start interest running, does not occur until the mistake has been discovered and the matter has been brought to his knowledge, either through his own discovery, or by demand of the public authorities. (22 Encyc. of Law and Procedure, page 1506, and cases cited.)

Your third question is more difficult of solution. It is made so by reason of the fact that the doctrine that voluntary payment under a mistake of law defeats recovery applies, at least in part, to the public.

(Vindicator Printing Company vs. State, 68 O. S., 362) I think that it would be confusing for me to discuss at this time and in connection with your third question the various aspects of the application of that rule to cases of attempted recovery of public funds paid out under mistake of law. There are, of course, numerous instances in which the fact that the payment was made under a mistake of law does not defeat recovery by the public. I shall, therefore, without pointing what those instances are in detail, state my opinion as to the recovery of interest in such cases.

I am not sure that any single hard and fast rule can be laid down as constituting an answer to your third question. I have been able to find but very few decisions in any way bearing upon it, and none directly in point. I think, however, that the general principle above referred to, that there must be default before interest begins to run, should be applied to this question. In the case of a public officer wrongfully withholding or receiving moneys from the public treasury it seems that the fact that he did so under a mistake of law does not relieve him of the liability to pay interest. This is because, being a public officer, and in a sense a trustee, he is presumed to know the law, and to receive or withhold public moneys at his peril.

In the case last cited the question of interest was not discussed, but the other principle last above referred to was clearly enunciated. There is a similar principle to the effect that all parties who deal with public officers are presumed to know the extent of their authority, which is limited by law. Applying this principle, it would seem that the default, which would start interest running, occurs when the party receiving the money from the public treasury, though under a mistake of law, accepts the same; this being on the theory that his mistake of law, even though shared by the public officers with whom he deals, is made at his own peril. So, it might be argued as the public officer cannot be presumed to have made a mistake of law, and as the other party receiving the money cannot be excused on the ground that he supposed he was receiving it lawfully, interest ought to run from the time the money was withdrawn from the treasury. There are cases in which private individuals have been excused from the payment of interest upon money received and held by them under a mistake of law until the discovery of the mistake and demand for replacement. These cases, however are those arising out of the administration of trusts, estates created by wills of doubtful construction, etc. In such cases the fact that the party paying the money had himself in a sense caused or sanctioned a wrongful withholding of money is relied upon as a ground of decision. I doubt whether this doctrine ought to be applied to a case in which the public is interested. So to do would be to hold, in effect, that public officers have power to bind the public by illegal acts in excess of their authority, though in good faith. I do not believe that this is the doctrine in Ohio, and I am therefore, constrained to reject the rule applying to private trusts as a guide to the solution of the present question.

In view of the state of the law, as I have fund it, I can only advise you to make findings for interest at the legal rate in all cases in which you find that money has wrongfully been withheld or paid out of the public treasury under alleged mistake of law. In some cases, of course, mistake of law is a defense against any action whatever.

(Vindicator Printing Company vs. State, supra.)

In such cases, however, in which there may be a recovery of the principal sum withdrawn or withheld under a mistake of law, I advise that the finding be for interest at the legal rate from the date of the illegal payment or failure to pay over. In this matter, I trust we may be able to secure a settlement of what seems to be a doubtful question of law.

Very truly yours,

TIMOTHY S. HOGAN,

Attorney General.

EXPENSES—REGISTRATIONS, ELECTIONS GENERAL, SPECIAL, PRIMARY—PAYMENT BY CITIES AND COUNTIES WITH AND WITHOUT REGISTRATION CITIES—SALARIES AND COMPENSATIONS OF STATE SUPERVISORS, CLERKS, DEPUTY CLERKS, STENOGRAPHERS, ETC., AND OTHER EXPENSES.

For syllabus to this opinion, reference is made to the conclusion drawn at the end hereof.

COLUMBUS, OHIO, February 27, 1912.

Bureau of Inspection and Supervision of Public Offices, Columbus, Ohio.

GENTLEMEN:—You submit to this department for answer several questions relating to the payment of election expenses by the respective political subdivisions of the state, under dates of January 24, January 27, February 19, and February 20, 1912.

The several questions submitted are as follows:

"In Hamilton County, the compensation of the deputy supervisors of election is apportioned between the county and the city as 3 is to 5 and the compensation of the clerk of said board as 4 is to 6.

"In Cuyahoga County, these salaries are paid from the county treasury at the rate of $3.00 and $4.00 for the entire unmber of precincts in the county under Section 4822 and the balance is paid by the city. In both counties, such officials receive the maximum allowed by Section 4943. Which method of division, if either, is legal. We are of the opinion that neither method is legal, but that the division should be as the products of the whole number of precincts in the county multiplied by the rates under Section 4822 are to the products of the number of city precincts multiplied by the rates under Section 4942.

"In each of said counties, there is a considerable sum paid for deputy clerks, stenographers and other office help. What is the proper method of apportioning such expenses?

"Should the cost of poll books and tally sheets of general elections in odd numbered years be charged back to the several subdivisions of the county?

"Should the poll books and tally sheets and other expenses of special elections be charged back?

"What if any, expenses should be charged back for primaries in odd-numbered years?

"Should the salaries of deputy state supervisors of election and their clerk and deputy clerks, or any portion thereof, be charged back in odd numbered years?

"Should the expenses of supplying voting places with chairs, tables lights, fuel and other furnishings be paid by the city or by the county; i. e., if they have been paid in the first instance by the county, should they be charged back to the political subdivision of the county in the odd-numbered years?

"In counties containing a registration city or cities, what subdivision should be made of the following:

"General office expenses of the board of deputy state supervisors of election.

"Compensation of assistant clerks in general office work.
"Rent of offices of such board."

First: The payment of the salaries of the deputy state supervisors of elections and of their clerks.

Section 4822, General Code, provides:

"Each deputy state supervisor shall receive for his services the sum of three dollars for each election precinct in his respective county, and the clerk shall receive for his services the sum of four dollars for each election precinct in his respective county. The compensation so allowed such officers during any year shall be determined by the number of precincts in such county at the November election of the next preceding year. The compensation paid to each of such deputy state supervisors under this section shall in on case be less than one hundred dollars each year and the compensation paid to the clerk shall in no case be less than one hundred and twenty-five dollars each year. Such compensation shall be paid quarterly from the general revenue fund of the county upon vouchers of the board, made and certified by the chief deputy and the clerk thereof. Upon presentation of any such voucher, the county auditor shall issue his warrant upon the county treasurer for the amount thereof, and the treasurer shall pay it."

Section 4942, General Code, provides:

"In addition to the compensation provided in section forty-eight hundred and twenty-two, each deputy state supervisor of elections in counties containing cities in which registration is required shall receive for his services the sum of five dollars for each electon precinct in such city, and the clerk in such counties, in addition to his compensation so provided, shall receive for his services the sum of six dollars for each election precinct in such cities. The compensation so allowed such officers during any year shall be determined by the number of precincts in such city at the November election of the next preceding year. The compensation paid to each such deputy state supervisor under this section shall in no case be less than one hundred dollars each year and the compensation paid to the clerk under this section shall in no case be less than one hundred and twenty-five dollars each year. The additional compensation provided by this section shall be paid monthly from the city treasury on warrants drawn by the city auditor upon vouchers signed by the chief deputy and clerk of the board."

Section 4943, General Code, provides a maximum salary as follows:

"In such counties containing registration cities, the whole amount of annual compensation paid to each deputy state supervisor and clerk under the preceding section and under Section forty-eight hundred and twenty-two, shall not exceed in any year the following:"

Here follows various maximum salaries graded according to the population of the county.

Section 4946, General Code, provides:

"The additional compensation of members of the board of deputy state supervisors and of its clerk in such city hereinbefore specified, the lawful compensation of the deputy clerk and his assistants and all registrars of electors in such city, the necessary costs of the registers, books blanks, forms, stationary and supplies provided by the clerk for the purposes herein authorized, including poll books for special elections, and the cost of the rent, furnishing and supplies for rooms hired by the board for its offices and as places for registration of electors and the holding of elections in such city, shall be paid by such city from its general fund. Such expense shall be paid by the treasurer of such city upon vouchers of the board, certified by its chief deputy and clerk and the warrant of the city auditor. Each such voucher shall specify the actual services rendered, the item of supplies furnished and the price or rate charged in detail."

In counties containing no city in which registration is required, the payment of the salary of the deputy state supervisors of elections and of the clerk of the board, is governed solely by the provisions of Section 4822, General Code. Each deputy supervisor receives three dollars for each election precinct in his county, and the clerk receives four dollars for each precinct in the county, with a minimum annual salary of one hundred dollars to each deputy and of one hundred and twenty-five dollars to the clerk. The amounts due under this section are paid quarterly from the general revenue fund of the county.

In counties containing a registration city, additional compensation is allowed each deputy and clerk by Section 4942, General Code, and this additional compensation is paid from the city treasury monthly. This additional compensation for each deputy supervisor is five dollars for each election precinct in such registration city, and for each clerk is six dollars for each election precinct in such city. This section also provides a minimum salary of one hundred dollars to each deputy supervisor and one hundred and twenty-five dollars to the clerk, and this amount is in addition to the amount allowed by Section 4822, General Code. In other words, the minimum amounts allowed by either Section 4822 or by Section 4942, is not affected by the amount such deputy supervisor or clerk may receive by virtue of the other section.

The maximum salary provided by Section 4943, General Code, is to be determined by the salary received by virtue of both sections, to-wit, Sections 4822 and 4942, General Code. Until the maximum salary is exceeded by the compensations provided for in said Sections 4822 and 4942, there can be no question as to what part of the respective salaries must be paid by the county and what part by the city. Until the maximum salary is exceeded each deputy supervisor receives three dollars per precinct in the county from the county, and in addition thereto the sum of five dollars per precinct in the city from the city. The clerk receives four dollars per precinct for each precinct in the county from the county and also six dollars per precinct in the city, from the city.

The statute makes no provision as to the division of these respective salaries when the compensation allowed by the foregoing sections exceeds the maximum salary allowed by Section 4943, General Code. In the absence of such provision a rule of division should be ascertained that would divide the expense equitably in all cases, and which would not under any conditions, compel one subdivision to pay more than its just proportion of the maximum salary.

The amount allowed for each precinct in the county is different than the amount allowed for each precinct in the city. And in every county in the state the number of precincts in the county is greater than the number of percincts in the city contained therein, and such precincts are in different proportions in the different counties. Therefore, any rule of division based solely upon the amounts allowed per precinct, to-wit, as 3 is to 5, or as 4 is to 6, would not divide the expense proportionately in all counties affected. Nor would a rule based solely upon the number of precincts be an equitable division.

The inequalities of a rule, if it has any, will be shown in extreme cases. For example, applying the rule used in Hamilton County. The maximum salary of the deputy supervisor is $1,800.00 and under their rule the county would pay $675.00 and the city $1,125.00, regardless of the number of precincts. Suppose the county has 500 precincts and the city has 300 precincts. If there was no limit to the salary the county would pay $1,500.00 and the city $1,500.00. In other words each would pay in such case one-half of the salary. But under the Hamilton County rule, the city pays more than half. By reason of the limit in salary, the amount payable by the city is reduced only $375.00 and the amount payable by the county is reduced $825.00. Applying the Cuyahoga County rule, the county pays $1,500.00 and the city only $300.00. The county saves, by reason of the limit only $300.00 and the city saves $1,200.00. The application of the rules of division used in Hamilton and Cuyahoga Counties to any number of precincts will produce the same inequitable results.

In the example taken, the county and city would each pay one-half of the salary of each deputy supervisor if there was no limit, and in my opinion, in such case, each subdivision should pay a like proportion of the salary when there is a limit placed upon the salary. In other words, each political subdivision should pay the same pro rata share of the salaries when there is a limit, that they would pay if there was no limit to the salary that could be drawn. The rule which you state will produce such result and will be equitable in all cases.

The share of the county is $3.00 upon each precinct in the county and the share of the city is $5.00 for each precinct in the city. The division of the salary should be in proportion to the respective products thus ascertained. That is the rule of division before the maximum salary is exceeded and it should be the rule after the maximum is reached, or exceeded.

The salaries of each deputy state supervisor of elections and of the clerk should be borne by the county and city in the ratio of the product of the whole number of precincts in the county multiplied by the rates per precinct provided in Section 4822, and the product of the whole number of precincts in the registration city multiplied by the rates per precinct provided in Section 4942 of the General Code. The first should be paid by the county and the latter by the city.

Another statute must be taken into consideration.

Section 4990, General Code, provides:

> "For their services in conducting primary elections, members of boards of deputy state supervisors shall each receive for his services the sum of two dollars for each election precinct in his respective county, and the clerk shall receive for his services the sum of three dollars for each election precinct in his county, and judges and clerks of election shall receive the same compensation as is provided by law for such officers at general elections."

Section 4991, General Code, provides:

> "All expenses of primary elections, including cost of supplies for election precincts and compensation of the members and clerks of boards of deputy state supervisors, and judges and clerks of election, shall be paid in the manner now provided by law for the payment of similar expenses for general elections, and the county commissioners, township trustees, or council of municipal corporations or other taxing bodies duly authorized, shall make the necessary levies to meet them."

In limiting the salary of each deputy supervisor and clerk, Section 4943, General Code, makes such limit apply specifically to the compensation to be paid by virtues of Section 4822 and 4942, supra. The compensation allowed by Section 4990, General Code is not limited, nor does the limitation contained in Section 4943 oreach such compensation. The amount to be paid under Section 4990 for primaries is in addition to that provided by Sections 4822 and 4942, General Code, and it is in addition to the maximum salary allowed by Section 4943.

There is no specific provision of statute stating how the compensation provided by Section 4990 for holding primary elections shall be paid.

Section 4991, General Code, provides that "such compensation of the members and clerks of board of deputy state supervisors—shall be paid in manner now provided by law for payment of similar expenses, for general elections.

The only provisions for payment of compensation of deputy supervisors and their clerks at general elections is found in Sections 4822 and 4942, General Code, supra. In counties having no registration city all the compensation for such officers is paid by the county. Then, by virtue of the provisions of Section 4991, General Code, the additional compensation allowed by Section 4990 for primaries in such counties should be paid by the county.

In counties having a registration city the compensation of such officers is paid partly by the county, and partly by the registration city. The rate per precinct is not the same, one is $3.00 per precinct in the county and the other is $5.00 per precinct in the city for the salary of the deputy supervisor. The extra compensation allowed in registration cities is allowed on account of the extra work caused by the registration of voters. In holding primaries in a registration city there is also extra work on account of registering new voters, and transferring and registering removals. Such extra work however is not as great as it is for general registrations, and for general elections. It would be only epuitable and just that the city should pay for such extra work. But the statute does not provide how this extra compensation shall be divided. The statute provides that such compensation shall be paid in the same manner as the salary for general elections. The same rule of division must apply as was found above.

In counties containing registration cities the compensation allowed each deputy state supervisor of elections and the clerk of the board, for holding primaries, shall be paid by the county and city in the same ratio as the compensation allowed to such officers by Section 4822 and 4942, General Code.

In one of your other questions you ask what, if any, portion of the salaries of these officers shall be charged back to the various political subdivisions.

The authority of the county auditor to charge elections expenses back to the various political subdivision after it has been paid by the county, is found in Sections 5052 and 5053, General Code. These sections are hereafter quoted and constructed in answering some of your other questions.

They do not, however, apply to the salaries paid members or clerk of the board of deputy state supervisors of elections. There compensation is governed by Section 4822, 4942, and 4990, General Code, which have been construed. None of the amount payable by the county for such salaries can be charged back to the various subdivisions.

The part payable under Section 4822 is paid by the county and the part payable under Section 4943 is paid by the city, and the part payable by virtue of Section 4990 is payable by the county and city in the proportion as heretofore set forth.

Your second inquiry is:

"In each of said counties there is a considerable sum paid for deputy clerks, stenographers and other office help. What is the proper method of apportioning such expenses?"

Section 4794, General Code, provides:

"Biennially, within five days after such appointments are made, the deputy state supervisors and inspectors shall meet and organize by selecting one of their number as chief deputy, who shall preside at all meetings, and two resident electors of the county, other than members of the board, as clerk and deputy clerk, respectively, all of which officers shall continue in office for two years."

Section 4799, General Code, provides:

"The deputy clerk of the board of deputy state supervisors and inspectors shall perform such duties and receive such compensation, not exceeding one hundred and fifty dollars each month, as shall be determined by the board.

"These last two sections apply only to counties containing an annual registration city, or two or more registration cities."

Section 4877, General Code, provides:

"When necessary, the board may employ a deputy clerk and one or more clerks as temporary assistants of the clerk at a salary or not to exceed the rate of one hundred dollars per month each and precsribe their duties. The period for which they are so employed must always be fixed in the order authorizing their employment, but they may be discharged sooner at the pleasure of the board. Such deputy clerk and assistants shall take the same oath for the faithful performance of their duties as required of the clerk of the boards."

The foregoing section applied only to counties containing a registration city. Section 4811, General Code, provides for the election of a clerk, as follows:

"Within fifteen days after such appointments in each year, the deputy state supervisors shall meet in the office of the county commissioners and organize by selecting one of their number as chief deputy, who shall preside at all meetings, and a resident elector of such county, other than a member of the board, as clerk, both which officers shall continue in office for one year."

This section applies to all counties, except those containing cities in which annual registration is required, or which contain two or more registration cities.

There is no provision of statute authorizing the appointment of a deputy clerk by a board of elections in counties which do not contain a registration city. The payment of such compensation is governed by Section 4946, General Code, which provides:

"The additional compensation of members of the board of deputy state supervisors and of its clerk in such city hereinbefore specified, the lawful compensation of the deputy clerk and his assistants and all registrars of electors in such city, the necessary cost of the registers, books, blanks, forms, stationary and supplies provided by the board for the purposes herein authorized, including poll books for special elections, and the cost of the rent, furnishing and supplies for rooms hired by the board for its offices and as places for registration of electors and the holding of elections in such city, shall be paid by such city from its general fund. Such expense shall be paid by the treasurer of such city upon vouchers of the board, certified by its chief deputy and clerk and the warrant of the city auditor. Each such voucher shall specify the actual services rendered, the items of supplies furnished and the price or rates charged in detail."

Section 4945, General Code, provides:

"For November elections held in even numbered years, the county in which such city is located shall pay the general expenses of such election other than the expenses of registration. Such allowance and order of the board for such expenses and compensation to such judges and clerks of elections shall be certified by the chief deputy and clerk to the auditor of such county, who shall issue his warrants upon the treasury for the amounts so certified."

The provision of Section 4945, General Code, is a general provision that the county shall pay the expenses of the November election in even-numbered years. It excepts therefrom the cost of registration . The provision of Section 4946 is specific and is not controlled by Section 4945. As seen, deputy clerks and assistants are only authorized in counties which contain a registration city. These are principally required on account of the additional work to be done in such cities by reason of registration. Section 4945, excepts the expense of registration, from the expenses which are to be paid by the county.

The compensation of deputy clerks, stenographers and other office help in the offices of the board of deputy state supervisors of elections in counties containnig a registration city should be paid by such city from its general fund.

In your sixth inquiry you ask what part of this compensation should be charged back to the various political subdivisions. It is paid by the city in the first instance and there would be no need of the county auditor charging the same back.

Your third and fourth inquiries will be considered together. They are as follows:

"Third: Should the cost of poll books and tally sheets of general elections in odd-numbered years be charged back to the several subdivisions of the county?

"Fourth: Should the poll books and tally sheets and other expenses of special elections be charged back?"

Section 5048, General Code, provides:

"The board of deputy state supervisors of each county shall furnish at the expense of the county and at least five days before the day of election, the necessary poll books and tally sheets required in each voting precinct in the county for presidential, congressional, state, county, township, municipal or other elections."

Section 5052, General Code, provides:

"All expenses of printing and distributing ballots, cards of explanation to officers of the election and voters, blanks and other proper and necessary expenses of any general or special election, including compensation of precinct election officers, shall be paid from the county treasury, as other county expenses."

Section 5053, General Code, provides:

"In November elections held in odd numbered years, such compensation and expenses shall be a charge against the township, city, village or political subdivision in which such election was held, and the amount so paid by the county shall be retained by the county auditor from funds due such township, city, village or political subdivision, at the time of making the semi-annual distributon of taxes. The amount of such expenses shall be ascertained and apportioned by the deputy state supervisors to the several political divisions and certified to the county auditor. In municipalities situated in two or more counties, the proportion of expense charged to each of such counties shall be ascertained and apportioned by the clerk or auditor of the municipality and certified by him to the several county auditors."

Section 4946, General Code, supra contains this provision:

"* * * * * the necessary cost of the registers, books, blanks, forms, stationery and supplies provided by the board for the purposes herein authorized, including poll books for special elections, * * * shall be paid by such city, from its general fund."

The clause "for purposes herein authorized," refers to the purposes of registration. The above provision of Section 4946 does not cover the expense of poll books and tally sheets except for poll books for special elections in such registration city, which are to be paid by such city.

The provision now found in Section 5048, General Code, was contained in Section 1252, Revised Statutes under the chapter entitled "Clerk of Common Pleas Court." The other sections were found under the title pertaining to elections.

Section 5048, General Code, specifically provides that the poll books and tally sheets for all elections shall be furnished at the expense of the county. Section 5052, General Code, does not specifically mention poll books and tally sheets, and the question arises as to whether the expense of furnishing poll books and tally sheets is included in the words "other proper and necessary expenses of any general or special election;" and also is it included in the words "such compensation and expenses," found in Section 5053, General Code.

The provisions now found in Sections 5052, 5053 and 5954, General Code, were all contained in one section in the Revised Statutes, known as 2966-27. The provision of Section 5048 as to furnishing ballot books and tally sheets was under an entirely different title and was not placed in the present chapter with Sections 5052 and 5053 until the passage of the General Code.

It will be observed that Section 5048 says that the poll books and tally sheets be furnished "at the expense of the county;" while in Section 5052 it is provided that the expense therein provided "shall be paid from the county treasury." The fact that Section 5048 was formerly under a different chapter, in addition to this difference in language, leads me to believe that Section 5053 does not cover poll books and tally sheets. The words used in Section 5052, General Code, are not inconsistent with the provisions of Section 5053, that such expenses shall be charged back to the political subdivisions. Being paid out of the county treasury and being furnished at the expense of the county, are two different things. The provision of Section 5048 that they shall be furnished at the expense of the county is inconsistent with the provision of Section 5053 that they shall be charged back to the respective subdivisions and thereby furnished at their expense.

It is my conclusion therefore that the cost of poll books and tally sheets for all elections, except special elections in registration cities, should be paid by the county and should not be charged back to any political subdivision.

Poll books for special elections in registration cities shall be paid by such city from its general fund by virtue of Section 4946, General Code. That is, for special elections within such city.

The statute does not provide that the expense of special elections shall be charged back to the political subdivision in which such election is held. Section 5052 provides that the expenses for a special election therein specified shall be paid from the county treasury. Section 5053 then provides that in November elections in odd numbered years such expense shall be charged back. Nothing is said about the expense of a special election being charged back. Nor do I find any other provision governing the same. In the absence of statutory authority the county auditor cannot charge back such expense. It would be no more than right that the political subdivision in which a special election is held should pay the expense of such election. The statutes, however, do not so provide.

It is my conclusion, therefore, that the expense of a special election cannot be charged back to the political division in which such election was held.

In registration cities another section is to be considered.

Section 4944, General Code, as amended in 101 Ohio Laws page 344, provides:

> "The registrars of each election precinct in such cities shall be allowed and paid for their services as registrars four dollars per day and no more for not more than six days at any one election. In registration city having a population of three hundred thousand or more by the last preceding federal census, the judges of election, including the registrars as judges and the clerks of election, shall each be allowed and paid ten dollars for each general election and five dollars for each special election, at which they serve and no more, either from the city or county. In all other registration cities, the judges of election, including the registrars as judges and clerks of election, shall each be allowed and paid five dollars for each election at which they serve and no more either from the city or county. No registrar, judge or clerk shall be entitled to the compensation so fixed except upon the allowance and order of the board of deputy state supervisors made at a joint session, certifying that each has fully performed his duty according to law as such, and stating the number of days' service actually performed by each. Such allowance and order shall be certified by the chief deputy and clerk of the board to the city or county auditor."

The foregoing section fixes the compensation of registrars and of precinct judges and clerks in registration cities, and how such compensation shall be paid. It does not specify what part shall be paid directly from the county and what part directly from the city.

Your fifth inquiry is:

"What, if any expenses should be charged back for primaries in odd numbered years?"

In odd numbered years are held the elections and primaries of municipalities and townships.

Section 4991, General Code, governs the payment of expenses at primaries and will be requoted here.

It provides:

"All expenses of primary elections, including cost of supplies for election precincts and compensation of the members and clerks of boards of deputy state supervisors, and judges and clerks of election, shall be paid in the manner now provided by law for the payment of similar expenses for general elections, and the county commissioners, township trustees or council of municipal corporations or other taxing bodies duly authorized, shall make the necessary levies to meet them."

The expenses of primaries are paid in the same manner as expenses for general elections. Although not specifically asked, this brings up the question as to what part of the expense of general elections shall be charged back in odd numbered years.

This is governed by Sections 5052 and 5053, General Code, supra.

We have seen that no part of the salary of the deputy supervisors and the clerk of the board is to be charged back. It is also held above that the cost of poll books and tally sheets is borne by the county, except for special elections in registration cities, and is not charged back in any instance.

By virtue of Sections 5052 and 5053, General Code, all expense of printing and distributing ballots, cards of explanation to officers of the election and voters and other proper and necessary expenses of general elections, which includes primaries, is paid from the county treasury, and such expense for the November election and primary election in odd numbered years is charged back to the political division in which such election or primary is held.

This question also brings up the payment of the compensation of the precinct election officers and registrars.

Section 4946, General Code, supra, contains this provision:

"* * * that the lawful compensation of all registrars in such city * * * shall be paid by such city from its general fund."

By virtue of this provision and of the provisions of Section 4991, General Code, the compensation of registrars in registration cities, for all elections, general, primary, or special, is paid by such city directly from its general fund.

Section 4944, General Code, has heretofore been referred to, and found that it fixes the compensation of the registrars and precinct officers, but does not provide how they shall be paid.

Section 4945, General Code, provides:

"For November elections held in even numbered years, the county in which such city is located shall pay the general expenses of such election other than the expenses of registration. * * * * *"

Construing these sections: In even numbered years the compensation of judges and clerks of election for general and primary elections is paid by the county directly from its treasury.

Payment of compensation of precinct election officers for elections held in odd numbered years is governed by Sections 5052 and 5053, General Code, supra.

Section 5052, General Code, provides:

> "* * * and other proper and necessary expenses of any general or special election, including compensation of precinct election officers, shall be paid from the county treasury, as other county expenses."

Then Section 5053, General Code, provides that:

Then follows the provision to charge back such expenses to such political divisions.

By virtue of these provisions, in odd numbered years, the compensation of the precinct judges and clerks of election, including the registrars as judges, for the November and primary elections is paid from the county treasury, and charged back to the political division in which such general election or primary was held.

Your sixth inquiry is as follows:

> "Should the salaries of deputy state supervisors of election and their clerk and deputy clerks, or any portion thereof, be charged back in odd numbered years."

All of the foregoing inquiry has been answered in reply to your first and second inquiries.

In your seventh inquiry you ask:

> "Should the expenses of supplying voting places with chairs, tables, lights, fuel and other furnishings be paid by the city or by the county: i. e., if they have been paid in the first instance by the county, should they be charged back to the political subdivisions of the county in odd numbered years?"

Section 4844, General Code, provides:

> "Elections shall be held for each township precinct at such place within the township as the trustees thereof shall determine to be most convenient of access for the voters of the precinct. Elections shall be held for each municipal or ward precinct at such place as the council of the corporation shall designate. In registration cities, the deputy state supervisors shall designate the places of holding elections in each precinct."

Section 4821, General Code, provides:

> "All proper and necessary expenses of the board of deputy state supervisors shall be paid from the county treasury as other county expenses, and the county commissioners shall make the necessary levy to provide therefor. In counties containing annual general registration cities, such expenses shall include expenses duly authorized and incurred in the investigation and prosecution of offenses against laws relating to the registration of electors, the right of suffrage and the conduct of elections."

Section 4819, General Code, provides:

> "The deputy state supervisors for each county shall advertise and let the printing of ballots, cards of instruction and other required books and papers to be printed by the county; receive the ballots from the printer, and cause same to be securely sealed up in their presence in packages, one for each precinct, containing the designated number of ballots for each precinct, and make the necessary endorsements thereon as provided by law; provide for the delivery of ballots, poll books and other required books and papers at the polling places in the several precincts; cause the polling places to be suitably provided with booths, guard rails and other supplies, as provided by law, and provide for the care and custody of them during the intervals between elections; receive the returns of elections, canvas them, make abstracts thereof, and transmit such abstracts to the proper officers at the times and in the manner provided by law, and issue certificates to persons entitled to them."

Section 5044, General Code, authorizes the board of deputy state supervisors to furnish voting places with shelves and booths for the marking of ballots.

Section 4874, General Code, authorizes the board to furnish suitable booths for voting places and to furnish the same in registration cities.

Section 4946, General Code, supra, contains this provision:

> "* * * the necessary cost of the registers, books, blanks, forms, stationery and supplies provided by the board for the purposes herein authorized, * * * and the cost of the rent, furnishing and supplies for rooms hired by the board for its offices and as places of registration of electors and the holding of elections in such city, shall be paid by such city from its general fund."

In registration cities the expense of supplying voting places with chairs, tables, lights, fuel and other furnishings is paid by the city by virtue of the above provision.

In other places such expenses are paid out of the county treasury, if furnished by the board of elections, by virtue of Section 4821, supra.

We have seen that by Section 4945, General Code, the general expenses of the November elections held in even numbered years is paid by the county, and by Section 5053, that the general expense as set forth in Section 5052, for the November election in odd numbered years is charged back to the various political subdivisions.

It will then be necessary to lay down a rule as to what is an expense of a particular election. It seems to me that the proper rule for charging back expenses, where there is no specific provision for their payment is that the expense for supplies which are consumed at a particular election would be considered an expense of that election and should be charged back in a proper case, and that the expense for supplies which are used for several elections should not be charged back but should be paid by the county when the same is to be used in precincts outside of registration cities and in counties not having a registration city, and by the city in registration cities.

Tables, chairs, and furnishings of a like nature should be paid by the county and not be charged back, while such supplies as coal for heat and oil for light should be charged back in odd numbered years.

> "Eighth: Payment of general office expenses of board of elections in registration city."
> "Ninth: Payment of assistant clerks in registration city."
> "Tenth: Payment of rent of offices of board of elections in registration city."

Each of the foregoing inquiries is governed by Section 4946 General Code and the provision quoted from said section in replying to your seventh inquiry governs.

The general office expenses of the board of deputy state supervisors of elections in registration cities must be borne by the city.

The payment of the assistant clerks to the board in registration cities must be paid by such city.

These have been covered in a general way in other parts of this opinion and do not need further comment.

Section 4946, General Code, specifically provides that "the cost of the rent, furnishing and supplies for rooms hired by the board for its offices * * * shall be paid by such city from its general fund".

In registration cities the rent of the offices of the board of deputy state supervisors of elections, and the cost of furnishing the same, is paid by the city.

The foregoing, I believe, covers all the questions asked. It might be well, however, to give a summary of the conclusions herein reached.

The salaries of the deputy state supervisors of elections and of their clerk, allowed by Section 4822, General Code, should be paid by the county.

The additional compensation allowed them by Section 4942, General Code, in counties having a registration city, should be paid by such registration city.

Where the maximum salary provided by Section 4943, General Code, is reached by the amounts allowed by Sections 4822 and 4942, General Code, such maximum salary shall be paid by the county and city respectively in proportion of the products secured by multiplying the number of precincts in the county by the rates provided in Section 4822, and the product secured by multiplying the number of precincts in the city by the rates provided in Section 4942, General Code.

In counties having no registration city the compensation of the deputy state supervisors of election and the clerk of the board, allowed by Section 4990, General Code for holding primary elections shall be paid by the county.

In counties having a registration city such compensation shall be paid by the county and city in the same proportion as the compensation allowed by Sections 4822 and 4942, General Code.

The compensation allowed by Section 4990, General Code, is in addition to the maximum salary allowed by Section 4943, General Code.

The compensation of the deputy clerk, stenographer, and other office help of the board of deputy state supervisors of elections in counties containing a registration city, shall be paid by such registration city.

Poll books and tally sheets at all elections, except special elections held in a registration city, shall be furnished at the expense of the county, and cannot be charged back to any political subdivision.

Poll books and tally sheets for special elections in a registration city shall be paid by such city.

The expense of printing and distributing ballots, cards of explanation to officers of the election and voters, and blanks for general, primary and special elections shall be paid from the county treasury, and in odd numbered years, such expense for the November and primary elections shall be charged back to the political subdivision in which such election is held. The expense for special elections cannot be charged back.

In counties having no registration city, and in precincts outside of registration city in counties having a registration city, the expense of supplying chairs, tables, etc., provided by the board of elections, shall be paid by the county, and cannot be charged back. The expense for light, fuel and such supplies as are consumed at a particular election is to be charged back to the political division in which such election was held in odd numbered years, except for special elections.

In counties containing a registration city, the general office expense, the compensation of assistant clerk, and the cost of the rent and furnishing of rooms for the office of the board of deputy state supervisors of elections shall be paid by the city.

The compensation of the judges and clerks of election in the precincts, including the registrars as judges, shall be paid from the county treasury for all elections. For the November and primary elections held in the odd numbered years such compensation is to be charged back to the various political divisions in which such elections were held.

Respectfully,
TIMOTHY S. HOGAN,
Attorney General.

CITY PAYS COST OF ELECTION BOOTHS IN REGISTRATION CITIES—COUNTY NOT LIABLE.

The cost of election booths in a registration city is payable by the city and no part thereof is chargeable to the county

COLUMBUS, OHIO, March 13, 1912

Bureau of Inspection and Supervision of Public Offices, Columbus, Ohio.

GENTLEMEN:—Under date of June 24, 1911, you ask an opinion of this department upon the following:

> "The City of Youngstown is contemplating the purchase of a number of election booths and the auditor of the said city claims that the county should pay a portion of the cost of the same, probably about one-third. Please advise us whether or not, in your opinion, any part of the cost of said booths may be paid from the county treasury and if so, upon whose allowance."

The election booths herein referred to are the booths to be used as voting houses. The city of Youngstown has a population, according to the last federal census, of 79,066, and is therefore a city in which general registration is held quadrennially.

The provisions governing the conduct of registrations and the holding of elections in registration cities are found in Sections 4870, et seq., General Code.

Section 4874, General Code, provides for the purchase of election booths as follows:

> "The board of deputy state supervisors shall appoint all registrars of electors, judges and clerks of election, and other clerks, officers, and agents herein provided for, and designated the ward and precinct in which each shall serve. It shall appoint the places of registration of electors and holding of elections in each ward or precinct, *provide suitable booths or hire suitable rooms for such purpo*se, and for its offices, at such rents as it deems just, and provide the necessary and proper furniture and supplies for such rooms. It shall provide for the purchase, preservation and repair of booths and ballot boxes necessary for use at elections in such city, of books, blanks and forms necessary for the registrations and elections herein designated and for duly issuing all notices, advertisements or publications required by law."

The following statutes provide for the payment of the expenses of elections: Section 4821, General Code, provides:

> "All proper and necessary expenses of the board of deputy state supervisors shall be paid from the county treasury as other county expenses, and the county commissioners shall make the necessary levy to provide therefor. In counties containing annual general registration cities, such expenses shall include expenses duly authorized and incurred in the investigation and prosecution of offenses against laws relating to the registration of electors, the right of suffrage and the conduct of elections."

Section 4945, General Code, provides:

> "For November elections held in even numbered years, the county in which such city is located shall pay the general expenses of such election other than the expenses of registration. Such allowance and order of the board for such expenses and compensation to such judges and clerks of elections shall be certified by the chief deputy and clerk to the auditor of such county, who shall issue his warrants upon the county treasury for the amounts so certified."

Section 4946, General Code, provides:

> "The additional compensation of members of the board of deputy state supervisors and of its clerk in such city hereinbefore specified, the lawful compensation of the deputy clerk and his assistants and all registrars of electors in such city, the necessary cost of the registers, books, blanks, forms, stationery and supplies provided by the board for the purposes herein authorized, including poll books for special elections, and the cost of the rent, furnishing and supplies for rooms hired by the board for its offices and as places for registration of electors and the holding of elections in such city, shall be paid by such city from its gen- eral fund. Such expense shall be paid by the treasurer of such city upon vouchers of the board, certified by its chief deputy and clerk and the warrant of the city auditor. Each such voucher shall specify the actual services rendered, the items of supplies furnished and the price or rates charged in detail."

Section 4821, supra, governs in counties having no registration city and does not apply to the present question. Section 4945 and 4946 have reference to counties in which a registration city is located.

The latter sections provide, without doubt, that all expenses of registration, including the renting and furnishing of rooms or election booths for such registration, shall be paid from the city treasury. The only expenses to be paid by the county is the general expenses for the November election held in even numbered years.

The clause in Section 4946, "and the holding of elections in such city," means all elections, and is not limited to municipal elections, or to elections held in odd numbered years. If such limitation had been intended the Legislature could have easily so provided.

A registration city is required to pay "the cost of the rent, furnishing and supplies" for rooms used for places of registrations and elections in such city. There is no obligation upon the county for such expense. The board of elections may furnish these rooms by renting or by purchasing the same. The election booths are used for registration and for municipal elections to a far greater extent than for county or state elections.

This construction of the statutes in question was made in the recently reported case of Conrad vs. Davis, 14 cir. Ct., N. S., 475 (Ohio Law Rep., March 4, 1912), in which it is held:

> "A county is not liable for the cost of election booths constructed for use within a municipality located in that county."

This decision seems to hold that the county is not liable for cost of election booths for use in any municipality, but the opinion of the court shows that the question arose in a registration city, and the holding is in fact that the county is not liable for the cost of election booths for use in a registration city.

No part of the cost of the purchasing of election booths in which to hold registration of electors and to hold elections in a registration city is payable by the county. Such cost shall be paid by the registration city.

Respectfully,

TIMOTHY S. HOGAN,

Attorney General.

PUBLICATION OF NOTICES OF CONTRACTS BY MUNICIPAL CORPORATIONS—DIRECTORS OF PUBLIC SERVICE AND PUBLIC SAFETY —ONE NEWSPAPER.

The special provisions of Section 4328, General Code, are excepted from the general provisions of Section 4229, General Code, and therefore, contracts entered into by the director of public service and also (by virtue of Section 4371,) contracts entered into by the director of public safety are governed by provision of Section 4328, General Code, and should be published only in one newspaper.

COLUMBUS, OHIO, April 6, 1912.

Bureau of Inspection and Supervision of Public Offices, Columbus, Ohio.

GENTLEMEN:—Under date of March 27, 1912, you ask an opinion upon the following:

> "Should publication of notice to contractors in cities soliciting bids for contracts involving an expenditure of more than $500.00 be made in two newspapers of opposite politics, or is such publication limited to one newspaper (see Section 4328 and Section 4229, General Code)?"

Section 4328, General Code, provides:

> "The director of public service may make any contract or purchase supplies or material or provide labor for any work under the supervision of that department not involving more than five hundred dollars. When an expenditure within the department, other than the compensation of persons employed therein exceeds five hundred dollars, such expenditure shall first be authorized and directed by ordinance of council. When so authorized and directed, the director of public service shall make a written contract with the lowest and best bidder after advertisement for not less than two nor more than four consecutive weeks in a newspaper of general circulation within the city."

Section 4371, General Code, provides:

> "The director of public safety may make all contracts and expenditures of money for acquiring lands for the erection or repairing of station houses, police stations, fire department buildings, fire cisterns, and plugs, that may be required, and for the purchase of engines, apparatus, and all other supplies necessary for the police and fire departments, and for other undertakings and departments under his supervision, but no obligation involving an expenditure of more than five hundred dollars shall be created unless first authorized and directed by ordinance of council. In making, altering, or modifying such contracts, the director of public safety shall be governed by the provisions of the preceding chapter relating to public contracts, except that all bids shall be filed with and opened by him. He shall make no sale or disposition of any property belonging to the city without first being authorized by resolution or ordinance of council."

Section 4229, General Code, provides:

> "Except as otherwise provided in this title, in all municipal corporations the statements, ordinances, resolutions, orders, proclamations, notices and reports required by this title, or the ordinances of a municipality to be published, shall be published in two newspapers of opposite politics of general circulation therein, if there are such in the municipality, and for the following times: The statement of receipts and disbursements required shall be published once; the ordinances and resolutions once a week for two consecutive weeks; proclamations of elections once a week for two consecutive weeks; notices of contracts and of sale of bonds once a week for four consecutive weeks; all other matters shall be published once. "

The preceding chapter, referred to by Section 4371, supra, is the chapter in which is found Section 4328, General Code. The provisions of Section 4328, General Code, as to advertisements for bids apply to contracts entered into by the director of public safety.

Section 4328, General Code, requires advertisement for contracts "in a newspaper," while Section 4229, General Code, provides that "notices of contracts" shall be published "in two newspapers of opposite politics, of general circulation therein, if there are such in the municipality."

However, Section 4229 contains the proviso "Except as otherwise provided in this title."

Section 4328, General Code, authorizes publication in "a newspaper" but does not otherwise fix the number of papers in which such notice shall be published.

In case of Cincinnati vs. Davis, 58 Ohio St., 225, Minshall, J., says at pages 237 and 238:

> "* * * * The statute does not limit the number of papers in which the advertisement shall be made. It simply is that, in each instance, the advertisement shall be in 'some newspaper.' But this is not saying that it shall not be in more than one. The board seems to be given a discretion in this matter; and when there is nothing to show an abuse of its discretion, exception cannot be taken to the amount paid for advertising the various steps in the proceedings as required by law."

While the Supreme Court holds that a provision for publication in "some newspaper" does not limit the number to one newspaper, I am, of the opinion that the provision of Section 4328, General Code, that such notice shall be published in "a newspaper" means publication in one and only one newspaper. If the holding were otherwise there would be no limit whatever to the number of newspapers in which such publication could be made, except the limit of the number of qualified papers.

The proposition as to which section controls where there is a special and general statute upon the same subject, is considered in reference to statutes requiring publication by county officials in case of Schloenbach vs. State, 53 Ohio St., 345.

On page 346 the court says:

> "* * * * The duty of the commissioners in regard to the publishing of their report is governed wholly by Section 917 of the Revised Statutes, and that section does not afford authority for either ordering such report published in a German newspaper, or paying for the same. See Cincinnati vs. Brickett, 26 Ohio St., 49."

Section 917, Rev. Stat., (now Section 2511, General Code), therein referred to, was a special statute which required publication in two newspapers, while a general statute, (now Section 6253, General Code) authorized an additional publication in a German newspaper. The court held that the special statute controlled.

The present question, however, can be distinguished from that in 53 Ohio St., 345. The general statute in that case did not refer to the publication authorized by the special statute. In the present situation the general statute, Section 4229, General Code, refers to "notices for contracts" which is the same matter specially covered by Section 4328, General Code.

But the proviso in Section 4229, General Code, "except as otherwise provided in this title" exempts the contracts authorized by Section 4328, General Code, from its provisions.

It is my conclusion that contracts entered into by the director of public service and director of public safety shall be advertised as provided by Section 4328, General Code, and that Section 4229, General Code does not apply. Such contracts should be published in only one newspaper.

Respectfully,

TIMOTHY S. HOGAN,

Attorney General.

BONDS OF MUNICIPALITY—PUBLICATION OF NOTICE OF SALE—ONCE A WEEK AND THIRTY DAYS NOTICE.

Section 3942, General Code, providing for thirty days' notice, requires that a publication for the sale of municipal bonds shall be made at least thirty days prior to the date of sale and Section 4229, General Code requires such notice to be published once a week for four consecutive weeks prior to sale. Both statutes must be complied with.

COLUMBUS, OHIO, April 2, 1912.

Bureau of Inspection and Supervision of Public Offices, Columbus, Ohio.

GENTLEMEN:—Under date of February 2, 1912, you ask an opinion upon the following:

"How many insertions are required to make legal publication of notices of bond sales? The wording used in said law provides for publication for four consecutive weeks."

Section 3924, General Code, provides:

"Sales of bonds, other than to the trustees of the sinking fund of the city or to the board of commissioners of the sinking fund of the city school district as herein authorized, by any municipal corporation, shall be to the highest and best bidder, after thirty days' notice in at least two newspapers of general circulation in the county where such municipal corporation is situated setting forth the nature, amount, rate of interest and length of time the bonds have to run, with time and place of sale. Additional notice may be published outside of such county by order of the council, but when such bonds have been once so advertised and offered for public sale, and they, or any part thereof, remain unsold, those unsold may be sold at private sale at not less than their par value, under the direction of the mayor and the officers and agents of the corporation by whom such bonds have been, or shall be prepared, advertised and offered at public sale."

This section requires thirty days' notice for the sale of bonds.
In case of Muskingum Valley Turnpike Co., vs. Ward, 13 Ohio, 120, it is held:

"Where the law requires 'at least sixty days' notice' to be given of the time and place of payment, a single notice, given at least sixty days before the time of payment, is sufficient; it is not intended that notice should be given sixty consecutive days."

In order to give thirty days' notice it is not required that such notice shall be published for thirty consecutive days. One insertion of such notice published thirty days prior to the date of the sale of bonds will be sufficient to give thirty days' notice.

Another section must be considered.

Section 4229, General Code, provides:

"Except as otherwise provided in this title, in all municipal corporations the statements, ordinances, resolutions, orders, proclamations, notices and reports required by this title, or the ordinances of a municipality to be published, shall be published in two newspapers of opposite politics of general circulation therein, if there are such in the municipality, and for the following times: The statement of receipts and disbursements required shall be published once; the ordinances and resolutions once a week for two consecutive weeks; proclamations of elections once a week for two consecutive weeks; notices of contracts and of sale of bonds once a week for four consecutive weeks; all other matters shall be published once."

This section requires notice of sale of bonds to be made once a week for four consecutive weeks. A similar provision of a special act governing Cincinnati was construed in case of Cincinnati vs. Fenner, 11 Ohio Dec., 281, wherein it is held:

"An advertisement for the sale of municipal bonds under Section 2293*h*, Rev. Stat., 93 O. L., 374, providing that bids may be received, 'after advertising the same for sale once per week for four consecutive weeks, on the same day of the week,' is complete and effective after the fourth insertion."

Under Section 4229, General Code, the insertion of notice of sale of bonds should be made once each week for four consecutive weeks, that is, four insertions are required, and the sale could be made after the day of the fourth insertion.

Section 3924, General Code, requires thirty days' notice and Section 4229, General Code, requires that the notice be published once a week for four consecutive weeks. Construing the two provisions together, it is necessary that the notice of sale of bonds by a municipal corporation shall be published once a week for four consecutive weeks, making four insertions, and that the first notice shall be inserted and published thirty days prior to the date of sale.

Respectfully,

TIMOTHY S. HOGAN,
Attorney General.

COUNCIL—PUBLICATION OF ORDINANCES AND RESOLUTIONS IN GERMAN PAPER, TWICE—RECOVERY BY CITY SOLICITOR OR TAXPAYER FOR ILLEGAL PAYMENT TO PAPER.

Publications of ordinances and resolutions in a German newspaper in accordance with Section 4228, General Code, should be published once a week for two consecutive weeks.

Where such German paper has been making but one publication, but has been paid for two, a finding should be had against the same for such excess payment, and recovery for the same may be had in an action either by the city solicitor or a tax payer.

COLUMBUS, OHIO, April 1, 1912.

Bureau of Inspection and Supervision of Public Offices, Columbus, Ohio.

GENTLEMEN:—Your favor of February 2, 1912, is received in which you ask an opinion of this department upon the following:

> "How many insertions should be given ordinances and resolutions of the city council required to be published in a German newspaper. Said ordinances and resolutions of a general nature and providing for improvements have been published in only one issue and the paper has received pay from the city treasury for two insertions (in the same amount as the English papers).
> "What, if any, finding for recovery should be made against said German paper?"

Section 4228, General Code, provides for German publication as follows:

> "Ordinances and resolutions requiring publication shall be published in two newspapers of opposite politics, published and of general circulation in such municipality, if such there be, and shall be published in a newspaper printed in the German language if there is in such municipality such a paper having a bona fide paid circulation within such municipality of not less than one thousand copies: Proof of such circulation shall be made by the affidavit of the proprietor or editor of such paper, and shall be filed with the clerk of the council."

Section 4229, General Code, prescribes the number of insertions, as follows:

> "Except as otherwise provided in this title, in all municipal corporations the statements, ordinances, resolutions, orders, proclamations, > notices and reports required by this title, or the ordinances of a municipality to be published, shall be published in two newspapers of opposite politics of general circulation therein, if there are such in the municipality and for the following times: The statement of receipts and disbursements required shall be published once; the ordinances and resolutions once a week for two consecutive weeks; proclamations of elections once a week for two consecutive weeks; notices of contracts and of sale of bonds once a week for four consecutive weeks; all other matters shall be published once.

While Section 4229, General Code, does not refer to publications in a German newspaper, it does not appear that the number of insertions therein provided is limited to the insertion in the two papers of opposite politics. There is no specific provision of statute, stating the number of insertions to be made in a German newspaper.

The provision of Section 4228, General Code, requiring the publication of the ordinances and resolutions of council in two newspapers of opposite politics, is the same as the provision requiring publication in a German newspaper when such a paper is printed in such municipality with the required circulation.

It is my conclusion that the number of insertions to be made in a German newspaper is the same as that required in the two newspapers of opposite politics.

Ordinanaces and resolutions requiring publication should be published two times in a German newspaper, when such German paper has the required circulation and meets the other requirements.

It appears that the paper has been making but one and geting paid for two insertions. The payment for the second insertion is clearly illegal.

The decisions of the Supreme Court are apparently not in harmony as to the right of recovery of such illegal payments.

The rule of recovery is laid down in the case of Vindicator Co., vs. State, 68 O. S., 362, as follows:

> "But where a claim for such excessive publications has been presented to the board and allowed, and payment made by the treasurer on the warrant of the auditor prior to April 25, 1898, the prosecuting attorney cannot maintain an action, in the absence of both fraud and mistake of fact, to recover back the money.
> "The act of April 25, 1898, (93 O. L., 408), clothes the prosecuting attorney with power to recover back money so illegally drawn from the treasury on and after the date of its passage."

On page 370 of the opinion, Spear, J., says:

> "* * * * * The situation then was that the company had received moneys of the county, in a way apparently regular but to which it was not in strict law entitled. But an accounting officer, the proper officer, had paid the money voluntarily, upon vouchers issued by another accounting officer, in form duly approved, and it is difficult to see why in these respects, as to a stranger, they did not represent the county, and why the facts do not present a case of voluntary payment with the usual legal result that, in the absence of an enabling statute and where there is no showing of fraud or mistake of fact, there can be no recovery back. The rule recognizes the fact that the money paid was unjustly paid; that the claim itself is illegal, one which the party, had he sought to do so, could have resisted. He chose not to resist but to pay, and he cannot afterwards ask the law to rectify his mistake."

The court cites, among other cases, the case of Cincinnati vs. Gas Light Co., 53 Ohio St., 278, which denies the right of the city to recover illegal payments when voluntarily made.

In a more recent case, Walker vs. Village of Dillonvale, 82 Ohio St., 137, it is held:

"In the absence of statutory regulation a taxpayer may maintain an action, on behalf of himself and other taxpayers, to recover money illegally paid out of the public treasury; and in such action may unite as defendants all against whom any relief is asked and whose right will be affected by the determination of the subject of the action."

On page 145, Summers, C. J., says:

"* * * * If those entrusted with the custody of public funds, or those whose duty it is to protect the public interests are remiss in their duty, or refuse to act, the taxpayer should be permitted to do so, and the courts in the exercise of a sound discretion will prevent any abuse of the privilege."

While this last cited case does not directly hold that the city solicitor may sue to recover illegal payments, without an enabling act, yet from the part of the opinion above quoted such holding can be reasonably implied. The right of the taxpayer to sue is based upon the fact that some official has been remiss in his duty. The city solicitor is required to sue to prevent the misapplication of funds, and it no doubt would be his duty likewise to bring action to recover illegal payments.

Although this latter decision does not refer to, nor distinguish in any way, the former rulings of the court, it is the later decision and should be followed.

It is my conclusion that an action can be maintained, either by the solicitor or by a taxpayer, to recover the illegal payments. A finding should be made against the paper for such illegal charges.

Respectfully,
TIMOTHY S. HOGAN,
Attorney General.

COUNCIL—UNION LABEL MAY NOT BE REQUIRED IN PUBLIC PRINTING.

As the city council is not so authorized it may not require that the Union label shall be placed upon all matter printed for the corporation, or upon any part of it.

COLUMBUS, OHIO, April 3, 1912.

Bureau of Inspection and Supervision of Public Offices, Columbus, Ohio.

GENTLEMEN:—Under date of March 6, 1912, you inquire:

"Has the city council the authority to prescribe that all job printing in the various departments shall bear the Union label stamp?"

There is no provision of statute authorizing council to require that all printing done for a city or village shall bear the union label. Council has only that authority which is granted it by statute, or which is necessarily implied to carry out power granted by statute.

The effect of requiring the union label upon all printing is to provide that none but union labor can be employed by the person, firm or corporation who contracts to do printing for the village or city.

In the case of City of Cleveland vs. The Clemens Bros. Construction Co., 67 Ohio St., 197, an act limiting the hours of daily labor to be inserted in contracts for public improvements was held unconstitutional.

There are cases in other states more directly in point.

In Lewis vs. Board of Education, 139 Mich., 306, it is held:

"The board of education of the city of Detroit has no power to require contractors constructing public buildings to employ union labor exclusively."

In the case of Adams vs. Brenan, 177 Ill., 194, syllabi read:

"A board of education has no power to agree with the representatives of labor organizations to insert in all its contracts for work upon school buildings a provision that none but union men should be employed in such work or placed upon its pay rolls.

"That a board of education might have been of the opinion its action was for the public benefit affords no justification for limiting competition among bidders upon school building contracts, by requiring them to employ only union men in the work.

"A provision in a contract for a public school building which requires the employment of union men only, creates a monopoly in their favor and restricts competition by preventing contractors from employing any but union men, excluding all others engaged in the same kind of work."

In delivering the opinion of the court Justice Cartwright says:

"There is another ground upon which complainant has an undoubted right to maintain the bill, and that is, that the contract tends to create a monopoly and to restrict competition in bidding for work. The board of education may stipulate for the quality of material to be furnished and the degree of skill required in workmanship, but a provision that the work shall only be done by certain persons or classes of persons, members of certain societies, necessarily creates a monopoly in their favor. The effect of the provision is to limit competition by preventing contractors from employing any except certain persons and by excluding therefrom all others engaged in the same work, and such a provision is illegal and void."

This is not a question as to the merits of labor or trades unions, or as to the right of labor to organize for its mutual benefit in all lawful ways. These rights are well recognized. The question is as to the right of the council to stipulate that all work for the city shall be done by union labor and thereby excluding all other labor from performing any work for the city. This right is not recognized by the courts.

Therefore, the city council has no authority to require that the union label shall be placed upon all matter printed for the corporation, or upon any part of it.

Respectfully,

TIMOTHY S. HOGAN,
Attorney General.

BUREAU OF INSPECTION AND SUPERVISION OF PUBLIC OFFICES, NOT AUTHORIZED TO AUDIT BOOKS OF CEMETERY ASSOCIATIONS.

As the trustees of cemetery associations are not public officers and as such associations are not "institutions of a taxing district" they are not within the statutory provisions referring to the duties of the Bureau with respect to the auditing of books.

April 9, 1912.

Bureau of Inspection and Supervision of Public Office, Department of Auditor of State, Columbus, Ohio.

GENTLEMEN:—I beg to acknowledge receipt of your letter of March 21st, requesting my opinion upon the following question:

> "Is it the duty of the Bureau of Inspection and Supervision of Public Offices to audit the books of cemetery associations?"

I quote the following statutory provisions which are the only ones that bear upon the question: Section 274 of the General Code, as amended, 101 O. L., 282, is as follows:

> "There shall be a bureau of inspection and supervision of public offices in the department of the auditor of state which shall have power as hereinafter provided in sections two hundred and seventy-five to two hundred and eighty-nine inclusive, to inspect and supervise the accounts and reports of all state officers including every state educational, benevolent, penal and reformatory institution, public institution and the offices of each taxing district, or public institution in the state of Ohio. By virtue of his office the auditor of state shall be chief inspector and supervisor of public offices, and as such appoint not exceeding three deputy inspectors and supervisors, and a clerk. No more than two deputy inspectors and supervisors shall belong to the same political party."

Section 276, as amended 101 O. L., 283:

> "* * * State examiners and assistant state examiners shall receive the following compensation for each day necessarily employed by them * * * *. Each state examiner assigned to examine offices or institutions of other taxing districts (than counties or cities), eight dollars * * *."

Section 284, General Code, as amended, 101 O. L., 384:

> "The chief inspector and supervisor, a deputy inspector and supervisor or a state examiner shall examine the condition of each public office, such examination of township, village, and school district offices to be made at least once in every two years, and all other examinations to be made at least once a year. * * * * On the examination, inquiry shall be made into the methods and accuracy of the accounts and reports of the office, whether the laws, ordinances and orders of the taxing district have been observed, and whether the requirements of the bureau of inspection and supervision have been complied with."

I think it is clear that under the most liberal construction of the foregoing sections, the duty of the Bureau of Inspection and Supervision of Public Offices does not extend beyond that of inspecting and auditing the accounts of an "institution of a taxing district."

Without quoting any of the sections pertaining to cemetery associations, I think it is reasonably clear that their officers are not "public officers" and that, if their accounts are subject to inspection by the bureau at all it is because the association, or, perhaps more properly speaking, the cemetery itself, might be called an "institution of some taxing district."

There are several sections of the General Code, which it will not be necessary to quote, which afford to township trustees and to village councils authority over the interment of dead bodies, and the measure of control over cemetery associations within their territorial jurisdiction. Suffice it to say that in my opinion such statutes have not the effect of constituting the cemetery an institution of the taxing district. In fact the only sections in any way applicable to the question at hand are Sections 3461 to 3463, inclusive, of the General Code, which are as follows:

> "Where the township owns a burial place within the grounds of a cemetery association, the trustees of the township may levy a tax not exceeding five mills on the dollar of the tax duplicate of the township for the purpose of erecting permanent buildings upon and within such cemetery grounds."
> "Section 3462. When such tax has been assessed and collected it shall be paid to the officers of such cemetery association, and by them applied to the erection of such permanent buildings as in their judgment may be requisite for the accommodation of the patrons of the cemetery."
> "Section 3463. In anticipation of such tax, the officers of such cemetery association may issue and sell bonds to bear interest at a rate not to exceed six per cent. per annum."

The question is here raised, of course, as to whether these provisions constitute a cemetery owned by a private cemetery association, but for which taxes have been levied as prescribed therein, an institution of the township within the meaning of the statutes pertaining to the Bureau of Inspection and Supervision of Public Offices.

Statutes similar to these are found elsewhere in the General Code. Thus it is provided that a municipal council may contribute to the support of a public library maintained by a private association and that a board of education may do likewise. In these statutes it is generally provided that the taxing district shall require an annual financial statement from the association. No such provision is found in Section 3462, but in other respects the essential similarity of the section under consideration to those just mentioned seems to be complete.

There is, of course, complete lack of authority upon the exact question. Most of the phrases used in the act relating to the powers of the Bureau of Inspection and Supervision of Public Offices have never been judicially construed, nor is there any authority whatever as to the construction or operation of statutes like those under consideration.

In the absence of any such authority, then, I am obliged to arrive at my conclusion by such reasoning as occurs to me. I am of the opinion that a cemetery association though aided in the manner set forth in Section 3451 et seq., above quoted, is not an institution of the township. The township has the power to maintain a cemetery of its own, just as the village or the school district has the right to have a public library of its own. The granting of aid by taxation to a private institution of either sort, however, is clearly distinguishable from maintaining such an institution as an institution of the taxing district. The taxing district would have the undoubted right even in the absence of specific provisions like that to which I have referred to require an accounting of the public moneys paid over to the private institutions. Such an accounting might be enforced by appropriate proceeding in equity, as the statutory duty imposed by Section 3462 upon the trustees of the cemetery association is in the nature of a trust. When the accounting has been obtained, it would become a part of the accounts of the taxing district,—in this case, the township. As such, it would be subject to the inspection of the Bureau of Inspection and Supervision of Public Offices. I am convinced, however, that the books of the cemetery association as such are not open to inspection by the bureau.

Very truly yours,
TIMOTHY S. HOGAN,
Attorney General.

BOARD OF EDUCATION—EMPLOYMENT OF PERSON WITHOUT TEACHER'S CERTIFICATE DURING TEACHER'S ILLNESS, LEGAL —PAYMENT OF TEACHER DURING ILLNESS, AN INCREASE OF SALARY.

The board of education is not acting illegally in employing a person not possessed of a teacher's certificate to teach in the emergency arising by reason of the illness of a regular teacher.

The action of the board in allowing said regular teacher full pay during said absence is in effect an increase in pay and not illegal. Such action, however, should be scrutinized.

The payment by the absent teacher, of compensation to the aforesaid substitute, is a private arrangement not objectionable.

April 12, 1912.

Bureau of Inspection and Supervision of Public Offices, Department of Auditor of State, Columbus, Ohio.

GENTLEMEN:—I herewith desire to acknowledge receipt of your letter of February 3, 1912 wherein you inquire as follows:

"Mr. A., teacher in the third room of * * * * school was kept home by illness. His room was then placed in charge of a primary teacher, and the latter room was placed in charge of Miss M., a daughter of the president of the board of education, who had no certificate to teach. Mr. A. was paid for the full time he was out, and he then paid Miss M. $61.00 for her work. Was the payment illegal and if recoverable from whom?"

In reply thereto I desire to say that Section 7690 of the General Code provides as follows:

"Each board of education shall have the management and control of all the public schools of whatever name or character in the district. It may appoint a superintendent of the public schools, truant officers, and janitors and fix their salaries. If deemed essential for the best interests of the schools of the district, under proper rules and regulations, the board may appoint a superintendent of buildings, and such other employes as it deems necessary, and fix their salaries. Each board shall fix the salaries of all teachers, which may be increased, but not diminished during the term for which the appointment is made. Teachers must be paid for all time lost when the schools in which they are employed are closed owing to an epidemic or other public calamity."

Section 7687 of the General Code provides as follows:

"Teachers of the public schools may dismiss their schools, without forfeiture of pay, on the first day of January, the twenty-second day of February, the thirteenth day of May, the fourth day of July, the first Monday in September, the twenty-fifth of December, and on any day set apart by proclamation of the President of the United States, or the governor of this state as a day of fast, thanksgiving or mourning."

I particularly call attention to the language used in Section 7687, General Code, in respect to the matter of the forfeiture of pay, to wit: "teachers in the public schools may dismiss their schools, without forfeiture of pay" on certain holidays, and I also call attention to the language used in Section 7690, General Code, above quoted, to wit: "teachers must be paid for all time lost when the schools in which they are employed are closed owing to an epidemic or other public calamity."

It will be noted that the management and control of all public schools of whatever name or character in the district is vested in the board of education. Under Section 7690, just quoted, each board shall fix the salary of all teachers which may be increased but not diminished during the term for which appointment is made. If the board allows the teacher full pay for his term, it amounts to an increase in salary, which was not contrary to the law. Aside from this, a matter of this kind seems to be peculiarly within the legislative control of the board of education. It was entirely competent for the board to place the primary teacher in room A, and while technically no one is authorized to teach, except one having a teacher's certificate, yet, it will be kept in mind that there are times and circumstances under which it is extremely difficult, if not quite impossible, to procure a teacher in an emergency. The statute itself,—Section 7690-6—provides:

"Nothing herein contained shall prevent the board of education of each city school district from defining the duties of its various employes, and prescribing the rules and regulations under which they shall serve, nor from exercising proper supervision over them. Nor shall the board of education of such city school district be precluded from securing labor or assistance for short periods within its discretion in cases of emergency."

The writer himself has observed instances in which it was impossible to procure a teacher or instructor in a school where there were many departments and one of two things would have to be done,—either fill the vacancy with one not having a certificate, or permit the room to be without an instructor and that department continued longer than the others. The reasonable and practicable thing to do under the circumstances would be to keep the school going. Of course, boards of education, under fear of being guilty of malfeasance in office, must act in good faith and within reason to the end that the spirit of the law requiring teachers to have certificates may not be abused.

In regard to the matter at hand, the payment by teacher "A" to Miss M was a purely private arrangement over which no authority has any control beyond the parties to the agreement. There can be no finding against Miss M.

As to teacher "A," if the board of education granted him full pay for his term, the effect of it in law was an increase in salary, and no finding can be made against him. While the action of the school board in allowing full compensation is to be carefully scrutinized, yet, when they act within reason and with evidence of good faith, it is the opinion of this department that no findings are to be made.

Very respectfully,

TIMOTHY S. HOGAN,
Attorney General.

TAXES AND TAXATION—SMITH ONE PER CENT. LAW—TEN MILL LIMITATION—INTEREST AND SINKING FUNDS FOR BONDS ISSUED SUBSEQUENT TO JUNE 2, 1911 WITHOUT VOTE OF PEOPLE.

The municipal budget must provide for every object for which moneys are to be raised. Sinking funds and interest on all bonds issued subsequent to June 2, 1911, without a vote of the people must be counted within the ten mill limitation of the Smith One Per Cent. Law.

April 25, 1912.

Bureau of Irspection and Supervision of Public Offices, Department of Auditor of State, Columbus, Ohio.

GENTLEMEN:—I acknowledge receipt of your letter of April 9, submitting the following question for my opinion:

"Must the municipal budget provide for sinking fund and interest on all bonds issued subsequent to June 2, 1911, the issue of which has not been submitted to a vote of the people, from revenue levied and collected within the ten mill limitation? We would refer you to the concluding provision of Section 5649-2 of the General Code."

At the outset I beg to advise that the municipal budget must provide for every object for which moneys are to be raised, regardless of any of the limitations. As to whether or not sinking fund and interest levies like those concerning which you inquire must be made within the ten mill limitation, the sentence to which you refer is, it seems to me, conclusive. That evidence exempts from the ten mill limitation

> "* * * * such levies in addition thereto for sinking fund and interest purposes as may be necessary to provide for any indebtedness heretofore incurred or any indebtedness that may hereafter be incurred by a vote of the people."

The Supreme Court, in the case of State ex rel Sanzenbacher, has been careful to use exactly the same language as that used in this sentence, and I can see no reason for holding otherwise than that levies for sinking fund and interest purposes in connection with bonds issued after June 2, 1911, without a vote of the people, must be counted in ascertaining whether or not the ten mill limitation of Section 5649-2, General Code, has been or will be exceeded.

Very truly yours,

TIMOTHY S. HOGAN,
Attorney General.

EXECUTORS AND ADMINISTRATORS—RECOVERY FROM, OF EXCESSIVE FEES—OPENING OF ALL FORMER ACCOUNTS UPON FILING EACH ADDITIONAL ACCOUNT—ILLEGAL CONTRACT OF VILLAGE FOR SALE OF TIMBER—RECOVERY AGAINST HEIRS FOR AMOUNT RECEIVED FROM SUCH SALE.

In accordance with Section 10835, General Code, all former accounts may be opened up and errors therein corrected, upon the filing of every additional account.

Matters of dispute between parties which have been settled by a court however, may not be readjusted.

Under this rule, excessive fees paid an executor may be excepted to and recovered upon the filing of any account.

When council authorized the heirs of one Walker, who had willed certain timber land to the City, to sell timber on said land for a return of $1,515.42, said action of council was illegal in that it was not taken in accordance with Section 3699, General Code, providing for the sale of real estate upon competitive bids. Council's action, in authorizing said heirs to devote moneys from the amount so received, to the making of improvements and repairs from time to time on said property, was legal however, in that bids were unnecessary.

The heirs are, therefore, liable to the village for the amount received from the sale of said timber less the amount paid for repairs.

COLUMBUS, OHIO, April 23, 1912.

Bureau of Inspection and Supervision of Public Offices, Columbus, Ohio.

GENTLEMEN:—Under date of January 27, 1912, you ask an opinion of this department upon the following:

"The enclosed statement gives the allowances made by the probate court of Clinton county to executors of the Walker estate as their fees for the settlement of said estate. You will note that the fees allowed said executors for ordinary services far exceeds the rate fixed by law and we would ask whether or not the matter at this time can be opened up and recovery be had from executors for the over allowance made them by the court for ordinary services. We might add that the estate was left to the village of Wilmington, Ohio, for the purpose of establishing a public library.

"We also desire your opinion as to whether or not recovery can be had of the heirs at law of said estate under an agreement for repairs, fences, etc., on farm belonging to said estate left to the village. The amount involved in this proposition is $497.07."

From the statement attached to your letter it appears that the fourth account of the executors was filed March 17, 1911. This appears to be the last account filed and this is not a final account.

Section 10834, General Code, provides:

"When an account is settled in the absence of a person adversely interested, and without actual notice to him, it may be opened on his filing exceptions to the account within eight months thereafter."

Section 10835, General Code, provides:

"Upon every settlement of an account by an executor or administrator, all his former accounts may be so far opened as to correct any mistake or error therein. Matters of dispute between two parties, which previously had been heard and determined by the court, shall not again be brought into question by either of the same parties without leave of the court."

The date of the settlement of the fourth account is not given, but it is evident that more than eight months have elapsed since said settlement. If that is true then no exceptions can be filed to the account by virtue of Section 10834, General Code.

As other accounts are to be filed, all former accounts may be opened under the provisions of Section 10835, General Code, upon the filing of any additional account.

In case of Lambright, Admr., vs. Lambright, 74 Ohio St., 198, Crew, J., says at page 207, of the opinion.

"* * * * It is suggested in the argument, in the brief of counsel for plaintiff in error, that the adjudication and settlement by the probate court, of the first account filed by Frank Lambright as administrator,—no exception having been filed thereto,—was and is, as between the parties to the present controversy, final and conclusive. This claim we think is sufficiently answered by the provision of Section 6187, Revised Statutes, the language of which is as follows: 'and upon every settlement of an account by an executor or administrator all his former accounts may be so far opened as to correct any mistake or error therein; excepting that any matter of dispute between two parties which had been previously heard and determined by the court shall not be again brought into question by either of the same parties without leave of the court.' "

The settlement of the former accounts is not conclusive and may be opened and all errors and mistakes therein corrected upon the filing of a further account. When the next account is filed, exceptions should be made thereto, and to the former accounts, so as to open all former accounts and the entire matter adjusted by the probate court.

You next inquire as to the right of recovery from the heirs upon an agreement for repairs and improvements. From the report of the axaminer attached to your letter, it appears that the village granted permission to the heirs of Walker to cut and sell growing timber and that the proceeds should be applied to building fences and making repairs on the farm, which had been given to the village by the will of Walker.

The resolution of council authorizing the repairs and sale was passed September 4, 1908, and provides:

"Whereas application has been made to this council by the heirs of Samuel Walker for permission to cut some declining trees on the land willed by said Walker to the village and a committee of this body having examined into said matters and finding that there are a number of trees on said land in a dying condition and will be worthless before the time expires for said land to be turned over to the village and numerous repairs are needed on said farm of a more permanent nature than are likely to be placed unless permission is given to cut said timber and believing that it is to the best interest of the town to keep said farm land in the best possible condition;

"Therefore be it resolved that permission be granted to cut such timber, as the committee of council have approved the proceeds of the same to be used in building permanent fences and other needed repairs on said farm and that the said heirs shall make a report to this council of the receipts and expenditures under this order."

The following motion was also passed by council:

"Motion made and seconded that the committee appointed to look after the sale of timber on the Samuel Walker farm be instructed to see that the money from the sale of said timber be properly spent in improvements on said farm."

It appears that in December, 1908, the sum of $1,515.42 was deposited in bank on account of the Walker timber, and which sum represented the amount of timber sold by the heirs. The amount expended therefrom for improvements on the farm was $1,018.35. The balance thereof, amounting to $497.07, was distributed among the heirs, after paying $250.00 for attorney fees.

The heirs afterwards sold their interest in the land to the village, but the balance due on the timber account was not taken into consideration in said sale.

It will first be necessary to pass upon the legality of the action of council in this matter.

Section 3699, General Code, provides how real estate shall be sold by a municipal corporation, as follows:

"No contract for the sale or lease of real estate shall be made unless authorized by an ordinance, approved by the votes of two-thirds of all members elected to the council, and by the board or officer having supervision or management of such real estate. When such contract is so authorized, it shall be made in writing by the board or officer having such supervision or management and only with the highest bidder, after advertisement once a week for five consecutive weeks in a newspaper of general circulation within the corporation. Such board or officer may reject any or all bids and readvertise until such real estate is sold or leased."

Section 3703, General Code, provides for the sale of personalty:

"Personal property not needed for municipal purposes, the estimated value of which is less than five hundred dollars, may be sold by the board or officer having supervision or management thereof. If the estimated value of such property exceeds five hundred dollars, it shall be sold only in the manner herein provided for the sale or lease of real estate."

The timber sold amounts to more than five hundred dollars and whether this timber was sold as real estate or as personal property the provisions of Section 3699, General Code, must have been complied with and such timber should have been sold at competitive bidding after advertising as required by said section.

In case of Hirth vs. Graham, 50 Ohio St., 57, Bradbury, J., says on page 65 of the opinion:

"Sales of growing timber are as likely to become the subjects of fraud and perjury, as are the other integral parts of the land, and the question whether such sale is a sale of an interest in or concerning lands, should depend, not upon the intention of the parties, but upon the legal character of the subject of the contract, which, in the case of growing timber, is that of realty."

This is the leading case in Ohio on this question and has not been overruled. Growing timber is realty, and such timber must be sold at competitive bids as required by Section 3699, General Code. It does not appear that this was done, but on the contrary the resolution of council shows that the permission to cut and sell the timber was to be done without competitive bids. The contract then was illegal.

However, the timber has been cut and sold. The heirs who cut and sold it and who acted under the illegal agreement, would be liable, at least, for the reasonable value of the timber, which would be the selling price of such timber at the usual market price. The timber was sold for $1,515.42 and there is nothing to show that it was not sold at the market price at the time of sale.

Part of this money was expended for repairs upon the farm. The farm belonging to the village and it was within the power of council to have repairs made upon the same.

The repairs and improvements appear to have extended over a period from December, 1908 to June, 1911.

Section 4221, General Code, prescribes how contracts shall be made by a municipal corporation, as follows:

"All contracts made by the council of a village shall be executed in the name of the village and signed on behalf of the village by the mayor and clerk. When any expenditure other than the compensation of persons employed therein, exceeds five hundred dollars, such contracts shall be in writing and made with the lowest and best bidder after advertising for not less than two nor more than four consecutive weeks in a newspaper of general circulation within the village. The bids shall be opened at twelve o'clock noon on the last day for filing them, by the clerk of the village and publicly read by him."

The repairs made may have been and probably were, such as could have been contracted for without competitive bidding. The repairs extended over more than two years, and there may have been several distinct and separate repairs and improvements, each of which involved an expenditure of less than five hundred dollars. In such case the contract need not have been let at competitive bidding.

If the contracts for the repairs and improvements were legally entered into, the heirs would be entitled to a credit for such repairs and would be liable to the village for the difference in the selling price of the timber and the cost of the repairs. This difference is $497.07 and the heirs should account to the village for this sum.

Respectfully,
TIMOTHY S. HOGAN,
Attorney General.

MUTUAL INSURANCE COMPANIES AND MUTUAL INSURANCE ASSOCIATIONS—RIGHT OF BOARD OF EDUCATION TO INSURE IN THE FORMER UNDER THE STOCK PLAN.

There are radical differences between mutual insurance companies and mutual insurance associations. Yet in as far as the former organizations possess all the features of the latter which prevent the insurance of boards of education with such associations such as the right to share in the profits and losses of the company, and the contingent liability of members, boards of education are also prevented in this respect from insuring in mutual insurance companies.

Under the stock plan of insurance, however, which is permitted to such mutual insurance companies by Section 9574, General Code, when their net assets amount to two hundred thousand dollars, the insured are not members of the company and the boards of a education may insure under said stock plan with said companies.

COLUMBUS, OHIO, May 13, 1912.

GENTLEMEN:—Under date of January 25, 1912 you inquire as follows:

"Please render to this bureau your written opinion as to whether a board of education can legally insure a school building in a mutual fire insurance company organized under Section 3634, R. S. Attached is a letter from the Central Manufacturers' Mutual Insurance Company of Van Wert asking that the ruling of this bureau against the insurance of school buildings in mutual fire insurance companies be reversed. Also attached is Attorney General's opinion of April 28, 1911, covering a part of the question involved."

The opinion of this department of April 28, 1911, to which you refer, applied to mutual protective fire associations organized under the provisions of Section 9593, et seq., General Code. On December 29, 1911, that opinion was again considered and the conclusion of the former opinion was adhered to. This last opinion was given at the request of the Legislative Committee of the Federation of Mutual Insurance Associations of Ohio, and a copy of the same is herewith enclosed.

Your inquiry is as to the right of boards of education to insure school buildings in mutual insurance companies, organized and doing insurance business in accordance with Sections 9524, et seq., of the General Code, upon the mutual plan.

An examination of the statutes governing these two kinds of insurance companies or associations will show that there is a radical difference between the two, and that the former opinions herein referred to, concerning those associations organized under Section 9593, General Code, are not necessarily conclusive as to mutual insurance companies organized under Sections 9524, et seq., General Code.

The difference between these two classes of insurance companies is stated in case of Richards vs. Swaim & McCormick, 9 Ohio Dec., 70, the first syllabus of which case reads:

"The system of insurance contemplated by Sections 3686 to 3690, Rev. Stat., and known as mutual insurance associations, differs essentially and radically from the plan of mutual insurance companies provided for by Sections 3634 to 3684, Rev. Stat."

Van Pelt, J., after giving the history of legislation in Ohio upon the subject of mutual insurance, points out the various differences in the two plans on pages 73 and 74 of the opinion, when he says:

"Mutual companies must have a certain amount of insurance subscribed before they can organize; a fund to pay losses and expenses is provided by the payment of annual cash premiums in advance; if the amount of premiums in any year exceed the amount of losses and expenses, the excess goes into the surplus and may be used to pay future losses; if the losses and expenses exceed the premiums a draft is made upon any surplus on hand from former years, or assessments may be made upon the policy holders, and the liability of members is secured either by deposit notes (before the amendment of April 14, 1888), or a contingent written contract liability, as now provided for. Such companies may have a capital stock; they may insure their risks, and maintain a reinsurance reserve fund; they may be organized for profit and may declare dividends out of surplus profits; they contemplate an extended business and a numerous and widely scattered membership. * * * * *.

"Mutual associations are not required to have any certain amount of insurance subscribed; they have no capital stock; they are not organized for profit; they are not required or empowered to charge or collect cash premiums in advance; they have no surplus or reserve fund; members are not by law required to secure their liability by deposit notes or any form of contingent liability, though a form of security may doubtless be provided for by the constitution and by laws. Such associations are of a local nature; the members are comparatively few in number and are likely to be more or less acquainted with the financial standing of each other; * * * * * and the statute contemplates specific assessments of members from time to time to pay lossess as they occur, and when the amount thereof has been ascertained; and the liability of members is limited only by the amount of losses."

In mutual insurance associations organized under Sections 9593,, et seq., General Code, the liability of the members is limited only by the amount of the losses. In mutual fire insurance companies organized under Sections 9524, et seq., General Code, the liability is certain as to a particular amount and is contingent as to a further amount.

Section 9525, General Code, provides:

"A company so incorporated for the purpose of transacting the business of fire insurance on the mutual plan, thereupon may elect officers and, upon procuring from the superintendent of insurance his certificate that it has filed with him its bond in the sum of ten thousand dollars approved by him, conditioned upon the faithful accounting for all funds and property coming into his hands, also may solicit subscriptions for insurance and accept premiums, which shall be held by the company in trust for the respective subscribers until policies of insurance are issued to them."

Section 9526, General Code, provides:

"Any such company shall not issue policies or grant insurance until it has procured the certificate provided for in section ninety-five hundred and twenty-two. Such certificate shall not be issued until at least five hundred thousand dollars of insurance in not less than two hundred separate risks, no one of which exceeds five thousand dollars, have been subscribed, and the premiums thereon, for one year to an aggregate of ten thousand dollars paid in cash by the subscribers, each of whom agrees in writing, to assume a liability to be named in the policy, subject to call by the board of directors, in a sum not less than three nor more than five annual premiums. The same liability shall be agreed to in writing by each subsequent subscriber or applicant for insurance who is not a merchant or manufacturer. Each subscription before incorporation shall be accompanied by a certificate of a justice of the peace of the township or city where such subscriber resides, that in his opinion the subscriber is pecuniarily good and responsible to the extent of the contingent liability agreed to be assumed."

Section 9528, General Code, provides:

"Any such company, in its by-laws and policies must fix by a uniform rule the contingent mutual liability of its members for the payment of losses and expenses. Such contingent liabilities shall not be less than three nor more than five annual cash premiums as written in the policy; and shall cease with the expiration of the time for which a cash premium has been paid in advance, except for liability incurred during that time."

Those who insure in this class of insurance companies upon the mutual plan are required to pay an annual cash premium and to assume a contingent liability of not less than three nor more than five annual cash premiums as written in the policy.

The status of the insured and the manner of making assessments upon the members is provided by statute.

Section 9538, General Code, provides:

> "Every person who effects insurance in a mutual company, and continues to be insured, and his heirs, executors, administrators, and assigns thereby shall become members of the company during the period of insurance, and be bound to pay for losses and such necessary expenses as accrue in and to the company in proportion to the original amount of his deposit note or contingent liability. As often as they deem necessary, the directors may settle and determine the sum to be paid by the several members thereof, and publish this in such manner as they choose, or as the by-laws prescribe. The sum to be paid by each member always shall be in proportion to the original amount of the liability, and it shall be paid to the officers of the company within thirty days next after the publication of such notice. But when the company is not possessed of cash funds above its reinsurance reserve sufficient for the payment of incurred losses and expenses, it shall be deemed to have impaired its capital. When such impairment exceeds twenty-five per cent. of the reinsurance reserve required to be maintained, the company shall make an assessment for the amount needed to pay such losses and expenses upon its members liable to assessment, in proportion to their several liabilities, and to make good the reinsurance reserve."

Section 9540, General Code, provides:

> "If a member neglects for thirty days after the publication of such notice, and after demand for payment, to pay the sum assessed upon him as his proportion of such loss, the directors may sue for and recover the whole amount of contingent liability, with costs of suit. Execution shall only issue for assessments and costs as they accrue, and every such execution must be accompanied by a list of losses, for which the assessment is made. If the whole amount of liability is insufficient to pay the loss occasioned by any fire or fires, the sufferers insured toward making good their respective losses, shall receive a proportional share of the whole amount of such liability, according to the sums by them respectively insured. No member ever shall be required to pay for a loss occasioned by fire, or inland navigation, more than the whole amount of such liability."

In fixing the amount of the assessment the directors may take into consideration those claims which are worthless, and the assessments which may be uncollectable.

At Section 559 of May Insurance the rule is stated:

> "* * * * But in determining whether there are earned premiums available to pay losses, uncollectable and worthless claims may be disregarded. In fixing the amount to be assessed, interest on borrowed money, probable failures in the collection, a reasonable sum for the expense of collection, and a reasonable allowance by way of discount for prompt payment may be taken into account."

The amount which a member of a mutual fire insurance company will be required to pay upon his contingent liability depends not only upon the amount of loss by fire, but also the expenses of the company and the reduction of the amount raised by the assesment due to the inability of insolvent members to pay their liability.

May on Insurance at Section 548, sets forth the principle upon which mutual insurance is founded:

> "* * * * The principle which lies at the foundation of mutual insurance, and gives it its name, is mutuality; in other words, the intervention of each person insured in the management of the affairs of the company; and the participation of each member in the profits and losses of the business, in proportion to his interest. Each person insured becomes a member of the body corporate, clothed with the rights and subject to the liabilities of a stockholder. He is at once insurer and insured."

At Section 549 he defines the status of the members:

> "Although the members of a mutual company are not usually denominated stockholders, and are not stockholders in the usual sense of the word, yet they are in point of fact stockholders, and in many of the policies are recited to have taken a portion of the capital stock. This stock is usually taken by paying in a certain amount of cash premium, and the balance in what are denominatel premium notes, that is, notes given for premiums, to form the basis of assessments for losses and expenses, and constituting the capital or funds of the company. The capital stock of a mutual insurance company usually consists in its cash assets, its premium and deposit notes, assessable to pay losses, which are usually denominated absolute funds, and the liability to a fixed amount, by statute or charter, over and beyond these to be resorted to after the first are exhausted, and usually denominated conditional funds."

By Section 9540, General Code, it is seen that if the whole amount of liabliity is insufficient to meet losses by fire, the sufferers insured must accept a pro rata share of their losses and do not get the full amount of insurance called for in their policies.

While there is a radical difference in the two classes of companies, yet it is seen that the insurers on the mutual plan as provided in Section 9525, et seq., General Code, are members of the company with all the rights of membership in a corporation; that they share in the profits and losses of the company, and the solvent members must meet, to the extent of their contingent liability, the defaults of insolvent members. These are the features of the mutual insurance associations which prevent boards of education from insuring school houses in such associations. As these features are also contained in the mutual insurance companies, the same reasons as set forth in the former opinions herein referred to would apply to such companies and would prevent boards of education from insuring school houses in such companies upon the mutual plan.

Mutual companies doing business in accordance with Sections 9524, et seq., General Code, are authorized, under certain conditions, to issue insurance upon the stock plan.

Section 9574, General Code, provides:

> "Every mutual company shall embody the word 'mutual' in its title which must appear upon the first page of every policy and renewal receipt. Each stock company upon the face of every policy and renewal receipt shall express in some suitable manner, that such policy or receipt is a stock policy or receipt. Neither class of companies doing business in this state, shall issue a policy not appropriate to its class, except that any mutual comapny doing business in this state, having net assets not less than two hundred thousand dollars invested as provided in section ninety-five hundred and eighteen may issue policies either upon the mutual or stock plan, and may continue to do such kind of business so long as its assets continue so invested, and may expose itself to loss on any risk or hazard, either by one or more policies, to an amount not exceding five per cent. thereof."

Under the stock plan of insurance, the insured are not members of the company, and there is no contingent liability, the cost of the insurance is known when the policy is written. The boards of education could insure school houses in mutual companies upon the stock plan if such companies are authorized to issue such policies.

Respectfully,
TIMOTHY S. HOGAN,
Attorney General.

COUNTY RECORDER—FEES FOR TRANSCRIBING INDEX RECORD DESTROYED BY FIRE ARE FOR OFFICIAL DUTIES—PAYMENT INTO COUNTY FEE FUND.

Service performed by the Recorder of Adams County (prior to November 28, 1910, when Section 2780 was amended) in transcribing a deed index record which had been defaced by fire, even though done at night and outside of office hours, are services performed as a part of his official duties, and the fees received by him for said work should have been paid by him into the county fee fund in accordance with Section 2977, General Code.

A finding should therefore be made for the amount received.

May 7, 1912.

Bureau of Inspection and Supervision of Public Offices, Department of Auditor of State, Columbus, Ohio.

GENTLEMEN:—In your letter of February 29, you inquire as follows:

"Subsequent to the fire which destroyed the court house of Adams County, there was paid to the county recorder an amount for transcribing a deed index record defaced by the fire. The recorder states in a letter to this department that the work was done at night and on Sunday and all out of office hours. The amount paid the recorder was retained by him and not paid into his fee fund. What should be the finding of this department in the case?"

In reply to your inquiry, I desire to say that Section 2977 of the General Code provides as follows:

"All the fees, costs, percentages, penalties, allowances and other perquisites collected or received by law as compensation for services by a county auditor, county treasurer, probate judge, sheriff, clerk of courts, or recorder, shall be so received and collected for the sole use of the treasury of the county in which they are elected and shall be held as public moneys to such county and accounted for and paid over as such as hereinafter provided."

Section 2995 of the General Code provides for the salary of the county recorder as follows:

"Each recorder shall receive sixty dollars for each full one thousand of the first fifteen thousand of the population of the copnty, as shown by the last federal census next proceding his election;

"fifty dollars per thousand for each full one thousand of the second fifteen thousand of such population of the county;

"forty dollars per thousand for each full one thousand of the third fifteen thousand of such population of the county;

"thirty dollars per thousand for each full ont thousand of the fourth fifteen thousand of such population of the county;

"twenty dollars per thousand for each full one thousand of the fifth fifteen thousand of such population of the county;

"ten dollars per thousand for each full one thousand of the sixth fifteen thousand of such population of the county;

"and five dollars per thousand for each full one thousand of such population of the county in excess of ninety thousand."

Section 2996 of the General Code provides that such salary shall be in full of all fees, etc., as follows:

"Such salaries shall be instead of all fees, costs, penalties, percentages, allowances and all other perquisities of whatever kind which any of such officials may collect and receive, provided that in no case shall the annual salary paid to any such officer exceed six thousand dollars."

Section 2479 of the General Code provides that the county commissioners may have certain records transcribed, as follows:

"When they deem it necessary, the county commissioners shall have any of the records or books in the office of the county auditor, county recorder, or county surveyor, transcribed into other books, by the officers having charge thereof, and pay them therefore six cents per hundred words. The records and books so made have the same force and be as valid in law as evidence as the records and books from which they were taken."

Section 2774 of the General Code provides that when the records in the county recorder's office become defaced or injured, and when directed by the county commissioners, the recorder shall transcribe them into new books, as follows:

"When the records of the recorder's office, or any part of them, become defaced or injured, the recorder when directed so to do by the county commissioners, shall transcribe them into new books, which shall be as valid in law as the original record, and transcripts therefrom shall be received and taken as of the same force and effect."

Section 2775 of the General Code provides as follows:

"When any of the records of a county are destroyed in whole or in part, a map, plat, deed, conveyance, mortgage, power of attorney, or other instrument in writing, or record in any proceeding authorized by law to be recorded, which affects real estate in the county, or the continuing rights of parties to such record, and of which the original, or exemplification thereof has been recorded, such original or exemplification or a certified copy of the former record, may be recorded in the proper office therefor. In re-recording it, the officer shall record the certificate of the previous record with date of filing for record appearing on the original or certified certificate so recorded which shall be taken and held as the date of the recording of the instrument to which it is attached. Copies of records herein authorized to be made, duly certified, shall have the same force and effect as evidence as certified copies of the original record."

Section 2776 of the General Code provides that a competent person shall compare such records with the instrument so recorded, as follows:

"When any such instrument or record is presented to the county recorder or other proper custodian of such records, he shall forthwith record and index it in accordance with the law for the original recording. A competent person shall compare such record with the instrument so recorded, and, if correctly recorded, certify on the margin of the page upon which such record has been made the correctness thereof."

Section 2777 of the General Code provides for the fees to be paid to the recorder for such transcribing, and provides how the same are to be paid, as follows:

"Such recording officer shall receive compensation for recording such map or plat not exceeding six lines, fifty cents, and for each additional line, two cents, and for any such recording and indexing other than a map or plat, at a rate of not more than five cents for each hundred words. Such compensation shall be paid from the county treasury upon the allowance of the county commissioners.

"No bill for service under this section shall be allowed by the county commissioners until they are first duly satisfied that such services have been rendered and the charges therefor are not in excess of the rates herein provided."

It will be noted that said last quoted section fixes the compensation for recording and indexing all instruments other than a map or plat at a rate of not more than five cents for each one hundred words, which said provision seems to be in conflict with Section 2780 of the General Code, which provides that the recorder shall receive six cents for each one hundred words for transcribing defaced or injured records; and the section further specifically and unequivocally provides such fees shall be paid into the county treasury to the credit of the county recorder's fee fund, as follows:

"For services directed to be performed by the county commissioners in transcribing the records of other counties, and transcribing defaced or injured records, the recorder shall receive such compensation as the commissioners determine, not exceeding six cents for each hundred words; and for transcribing defaced or injured records of plats, not exceeding fifty cents for the first six lines and three cents for each additional line. For the purposes of this section, a line shall be such portion of the record as can be drawn by a continuous stroke of the pen without change of the rule, regardless of intersecting lines, and for making the general indexes provided for herein, such sum as is fixed by the commissioners. The commissioners shall allow the recorder his necessary expenses in transcribing records in other counties."

While there is a conflict as to the fee to be paid to the county recorder for transcribing defaced and injured records, nevertheless such fees, whether fixed according to the rate under Section 2777 of the General Code, above quoted, or according to the rate fixed by Section 2780 of the General Code, above quoted, are to be paid into the county treasury to the credit of the recorder's fee fund as specifically provided by Section 2780 of the General Code, above quoted.

I am verbally informed by your department that the fee for transcribing said deed index record mentioned in your inquiry was paid by the said recorder of Adams County on November 28, 1910, and that said services were rendered prior to that date, which was prior to the amendment of Section 2780 as passed by the last general assembly, 102 O. L., 277. If the services had been rendered and the fee paid since that date, it is my opinion that unquestionably the last mentioned section of the General Code, as so amended, would apply. The statutory law governs, however, as it existed on or prior to that date, and I have above quoted that section as it existed at that time, and which said section, I believe, determines the matter about which you inquire.

By reason of the provisions contained in Section 2479 of the General Code, supra, it was part of the official duty of the recorder to transcribe the records in question,—he being the officer in charge of the said records. Whatever amount was paid to the county recorder for transcribing defaced or injured records, whether at the rate fixed by Section 2777 of the General Code, or at the rate fixed by Section 2780 of the General Code,—said amount, in my opinion, is an allowance or perquisite which is paid to such recorder in the performance of his official duties, and in my judgment comes within the provisions of said Section 2977 of the General Code, supra.

THEREFORE, It is my opinion that the amount paid the said recorder and retained by him is an allowance or perquisite for the performance of his official duties and should have been paid into the Adams County fee fund in accordance with the above quoted sections, and a finding should be made by your department accordingly.

Very truly yours,

TIMOTHY S. HOGAN,

Attorney General.

EXPENSES—SHERIFF—POWER TO PAY DEPUTY FIXED SUM PER WEEK FOR MAINTAINING HORSE—ALLOWANCE TO SHERIFF BY COUNTY COMMISSIONERS.

A sheriff may legally pay his deputy a fixed sum per week for the care of his horse and be re-imbursed therefor by allowance of the county commissioners.

April 26, 1912.

Bureau of Inspection and Supervision of Public Offices, Columbus, Ohio.

GENTLEMEN:—Under date of February 2, 1912, you inquire of me as follows:

> "Is it legal to pay anyone a fixed rate per week or month for boarding the sheriff's horses under Section 2997? If so, is it legal for the deputy sheriff to receive pay from the county for boarding the sheriff's horses?"

In answer to the first question, I desire to state that this department, in an opinion addressed to you, on October 13, 1911, held that county commissioners could not legally adopt a resolution providing for the allowance to a sheriff of a certain stipulated sum per month for the expense of maintaining the horses and vehicles necessary in the proper discharge of his duties, under Section 2997, General Code, as amended 102 Ohio Laws, page 93, for the reason that said section only authorizes the county commissioners to allow to the sheriff his actual and necessary expenses of maintaining such horses and vehicles, because the commissioners are without authority to determine what the actual expense will be until the sheriff files his quarterly statement.

As I view it, the question presented by your latest inquiry is whether the sheriff may legally pay to any one a stipulated sum per week or month for the care of his horses, and be re-imbursed therefor by allowance of the county commissioners.

Said Section 2997 as amended authorizes the county commissioners to make allowances to the sheriff quarterly, "of all expenses of maintaining horses and vehicles necessary to the proper administration of the duties of his office." This statute also requires, as preliminary to such allowance, that the sheriff file with his quarterly report, under oath "a full, accurate and itemized account of all his actual and necessary expenses." etc. So long as the amount claimed by the sheriff represents the amount actually expended by him for the maintenance of his horses, I am of the opinion that it is perfectly legal and proper to pay a stipulated rate per week or month for boarding the sheriff's horses, providing such arrangement is the best and most economical that can be made.

Section 2830 of the General Code authorizes a sheriff to appoint in writing one or more deputies subject to the approval of a judge of the court of common pleas of the sub-division in which the county is situated and Section 2831 provides that the sheriff shall be responsible for the neglect of duty, or misconduct in office of his deputies.

I have not found any authority which would prohibit a deputy sheriff from receiving pay from the county for boarding the sheriff's horses unless Section 12910 of the Code can be so construed.

Said section is as follows:

> "Whoever holding an office of trust or profit by election or appointment, or as agent, servant or employe of such officer or of a board of such offices, is interested in a contract for the purchase of property, supplies or fire insurance for the use of the county, township, city, village, board of education or a public institution with which he is connected, shall be imprisoned in the penitentiary not less than one year nor more than ten years." (R. S., Section 6969.)

The foregoing section being criminal in its nature should be strictly construed, and unless the conduct of an officer or employee of such officer clearly comes within its terms, he is not amenable to the penalty prescribed for a violation thereof. The prohibition is against the interest of any officer in contracts "for the purchase of property, supplies or fire insurance for the use of the county * * *" with which he is connected.

In no sense can it be said that the boarding by a deputy sheriff of the horses used by the sheriff in the performance of his official duties constitutes an interest of the deputy in a contract for the purchase of property or supplies for the use of the county.

It is my conclusion, in answer to the second question, that a deputy sheriff may legally receive pay from the county for boarding the sheriff's horses, providing the cost thereof is no greater than if the same services were performed by any other person.

Very truly yours,
TIMOTHY S. HOGAN,
Attorney General.

WATER RENTALS—POWER OF CITY TO COLLECT—DUTIES OF DIRECTOR OF PUBLIC SERVICE AND POWERS TO PASS REGULATIONS MAKING RENTALS A LIEN ON PROPERTY—RESPONSIBILITY OF LANDLORD—WATER RENTAL NOT A TAX.

The director of public service is authorized, by Sections 3956, 3957, 3958, General Code, to adopt such rules and regulations as to security for water rent as he sees fit so long as they do not conflict with statutes, and these powers extend to making the premises a lien for water rents, or to making the landlord responsible for rentals due from a tenant.

When, however, neither such rules and regulations, nor the statutes provide for the same, water rentals due from a tenant are not collectible against the landlord personally nor are they chargeable against the real estate.

Such rentals are in no sense a tax and there is no authority to certify such rents to the auditor for collection.

Bureau of Inspection and Supervision of Public Offices, Department of Auditor of State, Columbus, Ohio.

DEAR SIR: Your favor of April 16th received. You inquire:

"1. Are delinquent water rentals collectible of the owner of real estate supplied with water service by a municipal plant in the event that payment thereof is not made by the tenant?

"2. Are delinquent water rentals a lien upon real estate if certified to the county auditor and placed by him upon the duplicate of the county treasurer for collection the same as other taxes? Should the county treasurer refuse to take other taxes in the event the owner of the real estate refuses to pay water rent so placed upon the tax duplicate in his hands for collection?

"3. In the event that you hold that the law does not constitute such delinquent water rentals a lien upon real estate, could the director of public service, by rule or order entered upon his journal, make such claims a lien upon real estate and impose their collection upon the county auditor and county treasurer by requiring the water works officials to certify same to the county auditor?"

Answering your first question, Section 3958, General Code provides in part as follows:

"For the purpose of paying the expenses of conducting and managing the water works, such director may assess and collect from time to time a water rent of sufficient amount in such manner as he deems most equitable upon all tenements and premises supplied with water."

It becomes important, in order to answer your first question to determine the nature of this rent or charges for water. It has been held, in a similar statute to ours in the state of New York that:

"The charge upon persons and their property for supplying them with water and commonly known as water rent, is not, in its inception, either a tax or an assessment * * *. As regards water rent, the city occupies the position of a merchant with commodities for sale. It collects a quanity of water, provides means for its distribution, fixes a rate at which it will supply with water, and proclaims that all requiring water can have it at that rate. The city does for water what the gas companies do for gas. The Legislature has a right to declare that an indebtedness for water rent shall be a lien, and that the property may be sold to satisfy that lien, equally as it declared the wages of a mechanic a lien, and that the property may be sold to pay that lien."

Hennessey vs. Volkening, 30 Abbots, New Cases, New York State. Abbot on municipal corporations, Volume II, paragraph 468 says that water rentals or assessments are not regarded as taxes, but simply the purchase price of commodities sold by a public corporation * * *.

Under the doctrine laid down in the foregoing authorities, the water rent, to be charged consumers at a rate fixed by the director of public service under authority of Section 3956 General Code, is not a tax, nor can it be said to be an assessment.

The relation between the city and the consumer of water is a contractual one. When a city erects a water works and furnishes water to the residents of a city on the terms prescribed by the director of public service, when these terms are assented to on an application for water and water is furnished under such application, it then becomes a matter of contract between the city and the consumer of water. The city agrees to supply water on specific terms and at a fixed rate and under certain conditions intended to secure the payment thereof; and the consumer of water agrees to use and pay for the same on the terms specified.

Having held that the relation between the city and consumer is a contractual one, the question now arises whether the language of Section 3950, General Code, above quoted, is sufficient to make the indebtedness for water rent, a lien against the property furnished with water. There is no doubt that the legislature has a right to declare that an indebtedness for water rent shall be a lien upon real estate supplied with water and that the property might be sold to satisfy that lien. (Hennessey vs. Volkening, 30 Abbots New Cases, New York State.)

It was evidently the intention of the legislature, when they enacted Section 3958, General Code, to provide that the real estate furnished with water should be responsible therefor. Section 3958 seems to contemplate an assessment on the premises and not a personal charge for water supplied. However, it has been held, in the case of Eagle Manufacturing Company vs. Davenport, (101 Iowa, 493) that, "assessments for local improvements are not a lien unless made such by express statutes".

The legislature must expressly declare that a tax, assessment or charge shall be a lien on the premises sought to be charged. To illustrate—the legislature in providing for assessments for street improvements, Section 3857 General Code, provides that:

> "Every such assessment shall be a lien on the lands charged from the time the council determines the amount assessed against each parcel of land."

In assessments for sewers, Section 3897 provides:

> "Special assessments shall be payable by the owners of the property assessed personally, by the time stipulated in the ordinance providing therefor, and shall be a lien from the date of the assessment upon the respective lots or parcels of land assessed."

In the case of taxes, Section 5671, General Code, the legislature provides that:

> "The lien of the state for taxes levied for all purposes, in each year, shall attach to all real property subject to such taxes on the day preceding the second Monday of April, annually, and continue until such taxes, with any penalty occurring thereon, are paid."

Section 3956, General Code, only authorizes the director of public service to assess and collect, from time to time, a water rent * * * on all tenements and premises supplied with water. It does not expressly provide that all water rent shall be a lien on the tenements and premises supplied with water, from the time the water is furnished.

It is right, however, that when water is furnished on credit by the city, some system must be adopted to save the city from numerous and constant losses which would simply increase the burden of those who pay promptly for the water they consume. It would be impossible to furnish, with any degree of safety, water on credit to persons having no visible property. However, the legislature has provided that the department of director of public service has a right to adopt such rules and regulations as to security, for water rent, as he deems advisable, provided that the rules and regulations do not conflict with the statutes. This authority is granted by Sections 3956, 3957 and 3958 which are as follows:

> Section 3956. "The director of public service shall manage, conduct and control the water works, furnish supplies of water, collect water rents, and appoint necessary officers and agents."
> Section 3957. "Such director may make such by-laws and regulations as he deems necessary for the safe, economical and efficient management and protection of the waterworks. Such by-laws and regulations shall have the same validity as ordinances when not repugnant thereto or to the constitution or laws of the state."

Section 3958. "For the purpose of paying the expenses of conducting and managing the water works, such director may assess and collect from time to time a water rent of sufficient amount in such manner as he deems most equitable upon all tenements and premises supplied with water * * *."

Under the authority of these sections, the director of public service may make a regulation that property supplied with water shall be held liable for all water rents and provide that such rents shall become a lien on the property supplied with water.

The city of Bellefontaine adopted the following rules and resolutions in reference to water rents:

"All applications for the use of water from the Bellefontaine waterworks for the purpose of introducing water into premises, must be made by the owner or his authorized agent.

"The applicant must state fully all purposes for which the water is required and answer all questions for which they required the use of water, and with the distinct understanding that the property is to be held liable for all water rents. Upon complying with these conditions the clerk of the waterworks will issue a permit granting the applicant the privilege of a service attachment and the number of the service.

"Water service pipes shall be taken to at least six inches beyond the curb line, where it does not exceed twenty feet from water main.

"An advance rate of eight dollars ($8.00) must be paid at the time of application."

The right of a city to adopt such rules and regulations, was tested in the case of Young vs. Hamilton found in 9 N. P. (n. s.). In that case an action was brought by Young to foreclose a mortgage. The city of Bellefontaine was granted leave to be made a party defendant and to file answer, and in its pleadings, set up the rules and regulations above set forth and claimed a lien of $4.00 for water rent due from a tenant of the owners of the property covered by the mortgage, and asked that the water rents be decreed to be a lien on the premises and ordered to be paid out of the proceeds of sale. It was held:

"Where waterworks were owned by a municipality and the by-laws and regulations prepared by the director of public service, where the waterworks department provided, among other things, that property to which water is supplied shall be held liable for all water rents, such rents become a lien on the property notwithstanding that application for the use of the water was made by the tenant instead of the landlord."

I am of the opinion, therefore, for reasons heretofore stated, that Section 3958, General Code, does not create a lien in itself for water rentals; but Section 3958, General Code, together with Sections 3956 and 3957, General Code, authorizes the director of public service to make such rules and regulations that he may deem advisable to protect the city in the payment of water rents and charges. He may make rules and regulations to the effect that a deposit shall be made by the owner of property, covering water rent for a certain period whether it be furnished to a tenant or to the owner; or, he may make a rule that in case water rent is not paid, the water will be turned off until all arrearages are paid; or, he may adopt the rules and regulations adopted by the director of public service of Bellefontaine requiring the owner or his agent to agree that the property and premises furnished water, shall be responsible for water rent and shall be a charge upon the property until paid.

Sections 3956, 3957 and 3958, General Code, give sufficient authority to the director of public service to protect the city in the payment of water rents without making it an express lien on the premises.

Answering your first question specifically, I am of the opinion that in the absence of any rules and regulations made by the director of public service of a city, requiring the owner of property to be responsible for all water rent for water supplied to a tenant, and expressly providing that the property is to be held liable for all water rents; or, in the absence of any agreement on the part of the owner at the time water was furnished to a tenant, that he will be responsible for the water rent of a tenant, the water rentals are not collectible from the owner of the property personally, nor is it chargeable against the real estate supplied with water. On the other hand, if the department of public service has established rules and regulations making the owner of the property responsible or the premises liable for all water furnished to a tenant, then, in that event, the owner of the property could be held responsible or the premises could be charged for the water rent, being a question of fact in each instance.

Answering your second question, I am of the opinion that delinquent water rentals are not a lien on real estate when certified to the county auditor and placed by him on the duplicate of the county treasurer for collection the same as other taxes. I further hold there is no authority of law to certify delinquent water rents to the county auditor for collection. Therefore, the county treasurer should not refuse to take other taxes in the event the owner of real estate refuses to pay water rent so placed on the tax duplicate in his hands for collection.

Answering your third question, I am of the opinion that the director of public service cannot, by any rule or order entered upon his journal, make such delinquent water rents a lien upon real estate so as to impose their collection upon the county auditor and county treasurer by requiring the waterworks officials to certify the same to the county auditor; but I am of the opinion that the director of public service, by adopting a rule, regulation or order entered upon his journal, may require the property owner to stand responsible for water rentals for his tenant and can require him to agree, before water is turned on, that the property furnished with water is to be held liable for all water rents.

Yours very truly,

TIMOTHY S. HOGAN,
Attorney General.

EXECUTORS AND ADMINISTRATORS—ACCOUNT AND RECEIPT BOOKS MAY NOT BE FURNISHED TO, BY COUNTY COMMISSIONERS.

Inasmuch as the statutes do not expressly authorize the furnishing of the same, the county commissioners are not authorized to provide account and receipt books at the expense of the county, for the use of executors, and administrators, etc., in the probate courts.

April 18, 1912.

Bureau of Inspection and Supervision of Public Offices, Department of Auditor of State, Columbus, Ohio.

GENTLEMEN:—I beg to acknowledge receipt of your letter of February 8, 1912, wherein you request my opinion as follows:

> "Please render this department your written opinion as to whether or not the county commissioners are authorized to provide at the expense of the county account books and receipt books for the use of executors, administrators, etc., in the probate courts of the counties. This question is submitted by the probate judge of Trumbull County and his letter is herewith enclosed. Your opinion will be sent out to probate judges in the form of a circular letter when received."

In reply thereto, Section 1583 of the General Code provides as follows:

> "A probate court is established in each county which shall be h. l at the county seat. Such court shall be held in an office furnished by the county commissioners, in which the books, records and papers pertaining to the court shall be deposited and safely kept by the judge thereof. The commissioners shall provide suitable cases for the safe keeping and preservation of the books and papers of the court, and furnish such blank books, blanks and stationary as the probate judge requires in the discharge of official duties. "

> "Administrators and executors are designated as officers of the court." Orlopp vs. Schueller, Administrator, 4 C. C. n. s. 614.

> "An administrator appointed by a state court is an officer of that court. His possession of the decedent's property is a possession taken in obedience to the orders of that court. Byers vs. McAuley, 149 U. S. 608-615.

Upon the theory that because administrators and executors are officers of the probate court any supplies necessary to the discharge of their duties ought to be furnished them as "blank books and stationary required by the probate judge in the discharge of his official duties", an affirmative answer to your quotation would have to be given. This theory, however, can not be accepted in its fullness, for it would embrace the renumeration of the administrator or executor for all the expenses of administration from the funds of the county instead of from those of the estate; thus, the railroad fare of an administrator or executor upon a journey made necessary in the discharge of his duties is an expense to which he is entitled to be reimbursed, not out of the fund of the county, but from those of the estate; yet, it is an expense incurred in the discharge of his duties as officer of the court.

It is obvious, therefore, that a line must be drawn between those supplies which are to be furnished to the executor or administrator by the probate judge and those which he must procure for himself at the expense of the estate. In my opinion, this line ought to be drawn in strict conformity with the language of Section 1583, above quoted; that section authorizes and requires the commissioners to provide the stationary and blank books required by the probate judge in the discharge of his official duties; only by inference does it authorize the commissioners in the discharge of their duties. The inference must be rejected.

I am, therefore, of the opinion that blank account books and receipt books for the use of executors and administrators may not be furnished them by the probate judge at the expense of the county. The judge, perhaps, has authority to prescribe the form of the accounts to be kept by the administrator, but the book in which such accounts are to be kept must be paid for by the estate and not by the county.

Yours very truly,
TIMOTHY S. HOGAN,
Attorney General.

ADDENDUM

As the above question is a close one, and as the probate courts of numerous counties have been providing blank account and receipt books for the use of executors and administrators, under the impression that the furnishing was authorized by law, I would suggest to the Bureau that no adverse findings be made against the probate judge or officials of counties in which such blank account and receipt books have heretofore been furnished.

TRANSCRIPT OF PROCEEDING UPON SALE OF BONDS MAY NOT BE FURNISHED BY CITY—CITY SOLICITOR MAY NOT RECEIVE EXTRA COMPENSATION FOR SAME BY CITY.

A municipality is not authorized to furnish the purchases of bonds a transcript of the proceedings leading up to the sale of the same and therefore, the city solicitor may not be re-imbursed by the city for furnishing such a transcript.

May 2, 1912.

GENTLEMEN:—Under date of January 2, 1912, you propounded the following questions:

"1. In the issuance and sale of bonds by a city, is it a legal expense of the municipality to furnish the purchaser a transcript of the proceedings leading up to the sale of the bonds?

"2. If so, whose duty is it to prepare said transcript.

"3. If prepared by the city solicitor, could said solicitor legally receive compensation for such service in addition to his regular salary?"

The transcript, enclosed in your letter, is composed of copies of the ordinances and resolutions of the council of the city of Dayton, relative to the improvement of a certain street in said city.

The statutes concerning the issue and sale of bonds for municipal street improvements, and the duties of the various city officers in relation thereto, do not disclose that the bond buyer is entitled, as a matter of right, to receive, without payment therefor, a copy of such transcript, or that any officer or department of the city government is in duty bound to furnish the same and receive compensation therefor from the city treasury in addition to his regular salary. The successful bidder at a bond sale takes the bonds at his own risk, and if he deems it necessary to have a transcript of the proceedings, in order to determine their validity, the expense thereof must be borne by himself.

I conclude, therefore, in answer to your first question, that it is not a legal expense, chargeable against a city, to furnish a transcript to the purchaser of municipal bonds.

A negative answer to your first question renders an answer to the second unnecessary.

The preparation of such transcript, not being within the duties of the city solicitor, he is not entitled to receive compensation from the city treasury therefor. If the solicitor prepares such transcript he must look for compensation to the person at whose instance the same is done.

Very truly yours,

TIMOTHY S. HOGAN,
Attorney General.

DIRECTOR OF PUBLIC SERVICE—POWER TO RENT OFFICES OUTSIDE OF ANY CITY HALL FOR ENGINEERS EMPLOYED IN INVESTIGATION AND IMPROVEMENT OF CITY SEWER SYSTEM.

The expenditure of a special fund raised from the sale of bonds for the investigation and improvement of a city sewer system, and the direction of such work is lodged in the director of public service and in the exercise of his vested discretion, that official may legally employ expert engineers and rent for them, offices outside of the city hall.

The city auditor is required to issue his warrant for the expenses so incurred regardless of the fact that there are quarters obtainable in the city hall.

Said expenses should be paid from the fund raised for the purpose and not from the general tax fund.

Bureau of Inspector and Supervision of Public Offices, Columbus, Ohio.

GENTLEMEN:—Under date of May 8, 1912, you ask an opinion of this department upon the following:

> "A special fund has been created by the issuance of bonds for the investigation and improvement of the city sewer system. Expert engineers have been employed and rooms have been rented outside the city hall by the service director as offices for such employes. May the city auditor refuse to issue his warrant in payment of the rental charge for said rooms if he is of the opinion that there is sufficient room in the city hall to accomodate said employes? Are such charges a legal claim against the special fund or should they be met by the service fund created by tax levy?"

The city hall is a public building and as such is under the management of the director of public service, by virtue of Section 4326, General Code which provides:

> "The director of public service shall manage municipal water, lighting, heating, power, garbage and other undertakings of the city, parks, baths, play grounds, market houses, cemeteries, crematories, sewage disposal plants and farms, and shall make and preserve surveys, maps, plans, drawings and estimates. He shall supervise the construction and have charge of the maintenance of public buildings and other property of the corporation not otherwise provided for in this title. He shall have the management of all other matters provided by the council in connection with the public service of the city."

It appears that the expert engineers for whom rooms have been rented outside the city hall are employed in connection with the specific improvement for which the bonds were issued. Their work pertains exclusively to the investigation and improvement of the city sewer system. No doubt, the compensation of these expert engineers is paid from the money raised by the sale of the bonds. The offices which they occupy are also used for the purpose for which the bonds were issued. The rent of such offices would be a part of the cost of the investigation and improvement of the city sewers. The money secured by the sale of bonds is to be used in payment of the cost of the improvement under consideration. The salary of officers, and the rental of offices used by them, where the time of such officers is used exclusively to promote the work for which the bonds are issued, would be a part of the cost of such improvement.

As it is a part of the cost of the improvement, the rent of offices may be paid from the money set aside for the improvement, and need not be paid from the funds raised by general taxation.

Section 4325, General Code, provides:

> "The director of public service shall supervise the improvement and repair of streets, avenues, alleys, lands, lanes, squares, wharves, docks, landings, market houses, bridges, viaducts, aqueducts, sidewalks playgrounds, sewers, drains, ditches, culverts, ship channels, stream and water courses, the lighting, sprinkling and cleaning of public places, the construction of public improvements, and public works, except those having reference to the department of public safety, or as otherwise provided in this title."

It is made the duty of the director of public service to supervise the improvement of the sewers of a city. The sewers of the city are in his department. The director of public service also has charge of public buildings, including the city hall. The investigation and improvement of the city sewers is under his control and direction. The fund raised by the sale of bonds is expended under the direction of the director of public service.

The director of public service has some discretion in the management of the affairs of his department. It is for him to determine whether the offices in the city hall are suitable for the purpose and if not, he may secure offices outside the city hall. In renting offices, however, he must comply with the provisions of the statute as to making contracts.

The city auditor would not be authorized to refuse his warrant for the payment of the rent of the offices upon the ground that there is room in the city hall. That is left to the discretion of the director of public service.

Respectfully,
TIMOTHY S. HOGAN,
Attorney General.

CIGARETTE TAX—DISPOSITION OF SECOND HALF OF TAX LEVIED IN MUNICIPAL CORPORATION AND TOWNSHIPS OUTSIDE OF MUNICIPAL CORPORATIONS—COUNTIES WITH AND WITHOUT COUNTY INFIRMARIES.

In counties where money is paid on account of the cigarette business conducted in a township outside of a municipality, the half which remains after the first half is paid into the state treasury, under Section 5901 General Code, shall be paid to the credit of the infirmary fund of said county where an infirmary is maintained in said county.

However, when the township is in a county not containing a county infirmary, the said remaining one half is to be credited to the poor fund of the township.

Bureau of Inspection and Supervision of Public Offices, Department of Auditor of State, Columbus, Ohio.

GENTLEMEN:—You request my opinion as to the proper distribution of the cigarette tax collected in townships outside of a municipal corporation, in view of the somewhat obsecure language of Section 5901, General Code, under which such distribution is to be made.

Section 5901, General Code, provides:

> "One-fourth of the money paid into the county treasury on account of such business in a municipal corporation shall be paid, upon the warrant of the county auditor, into the treasury of such corporation to the credit of the police fund, or in a corporation having no police fund, to the credit of the general revenue fund. The remaining one-fourth thereof shall be credited to the poor fund of such county; but in counties having no county infirmary, it shall be credited to the infirmary fund or poor fund of the township, village or city in which it was collected. In counties where such money is paid on account of such business conducted in a township outside of a municipal corporation, the last named two-fourths shall be credited to the infirmary fund or the poor fund of such township."

The question then arises as to the proper application of the one-half of the cigarette tax left for apportionment, the other half having been paid into the state treasury, under Section 5900. Analyzing Section 5901, we find the money accruing from the cigarette tax to be derived from one of two sourses, namely: from a municipal corporation or from a township.

In the first situation the statute provides that one-half of the amount to be distributed shall go to the corporation and the other half to the poor fund of the county in which such municipality is located. It is true that the county has no poor fund, so-called, but the wording of the statute, "shall be credited to the poor fund of such county; but in counties having no county infirmary", makes it clear that the term "poor fund of the county" and the term "county infirmary" are used interchangeably.

Simplifying the language, then, the second half of the half to be distributed is to be paid to the county infirmary, if there should be one, and if not, then, to the city infirmary, if there is one, and to the city poor fund if not.

In the second situation, the one covered by your question, there are two phases to be considered; first, where the township is in a county containing a county infirmary, and, second, where the township is in a county not containing a county infirmary.

1. Where the township is in a county containing a county infirmary, then, the two-fourths or one-half of the tax remaining after the payment of the state treasury of the first half is to be credited to the infirmary fund of the county, or, in other words, to the county infirmary.

2nd. Where the township is in a county not containing a county infirmary, the remaining two-fourths or one-half is to be credited to the poor fund of the township.

The statute, as I understand, means, and with the words interpolated which are understood, would read as follows:

> "In counties where such money is paid on account of such business, conducted in a township outside of a municipal corporation, the last named two-fourths shall be credited to the infirmary fund of such county, or, in other words, to the county infirmary; but in counties having no county infirmary it shall be credited to the poor fund of such township."

The reason for the difference in the application of the funds in the case of a township within, and a township not in, a county containing a county infirmary, can be found in Section 3488 of the General Code, which provides:

> "When the trustees of a township in a county having no county infirmary, are satisfied that a person in such township ought to have public relief they shall afford such relief at the expense of their township as in their opinion the necessities of the person require. When more than temporary relief is required, they shall post a notice in three public places in the township, specifying a time and place at which they will receive proposals for the maintenance of such person, which notice shall be posted at least seven days before the day therein named for receiving proposals."

In other words, in the former situation the township is under no obligation to afford poor relief, while in the latter it is under such obligation.

Accordingly, if Lucas County maintains a county infirmary, which I presume it does, then the method of distribution employed by the county auditor in dividing the tax between the state and the county infirmary fund, to the exclusion of the township whence it is derived, is the direct method of distribution.

Very truly yours,

TIMOTHY S. HOGAN,
Attorney General.

INTEREST OF PUBLIC OFFICIAL IN PUBLIC CONTRACT—MEMBER OF BOARD OF EDUCATION IN VILLAGE DISTRICT HAVING NO BANK, AS DIRECTOR OF BANK, CONTRACTING FOR DEPOSIT OF VILLAGE FUNDS.

The deposit of a board of education of a village district wherewith there is no bank, is governed by Section 7607 General Code which provides for a contract by the board with a conveniently located bank offering the highest interest. Such a contract is within Section 4757, General Code, and when made by the board, with a bank whereof a member of the board is both a stockholder and a director, it is therefore, void.

May 6, 1912.

Bureau of Inspection and Supervision of Public Offices, Department of Auditor of State, Columbus, Ohio.

GENTLEMEN:—I am in receipt of your letter of April 3, 1912, wherein you state:

> "There is no bank within the boundary of a certain village school district. The board of education of this district contracted with a certain bank making the bank the depositary for the school funds. This contract was made without submitting the same to bids, or without any publicity prior to the awarding of the contract which would be calculated to induce other banks to bid for the depositary. "H" was a member of the board of education of the village school district and was also a director in the bank now acting as depositary for the school funds at the time the contract was made, and is still a member of both boards.
> "Is the contract thus entered into by the board of education of the school district legal?"

The only material fact stated in your letter is that a member of the board of education was a director in the bank at the time the contract was made, and still retains his interest in the bank. The fact that the contract was entered into without submitting the same to competitive bids, or without any publicity whatever, is not a material one. Section 7607 of the General Code, as amended 102 O. L., 290, does not require any degree of publicity whatever in the selection of a depositary for the funds of a school district which has no bank within its territorial limit. That section provides as follows:

> "In all school dstricts containing less than two banks, after the adoption of a resolution providing for the deposit of its funds, the board of education may enter into a contract with one or more banks that are conveniently located and offer the highest rate of interest, which shall not be less than two per cent. for the full time the funds or any part thereof are on deposit. Such bank or banks shall give good and sufficient bond, or shall deposit bonds of the United States, the state of Ohio, or county, municipal, township or school bonds issued by the authority of the state of Ohio, at the option of the board of education, at least equal to the amount deposited. The treasurer of the school district must see that a greater sum than that contained in the bond is not deposited in such bank or banks, and he and his bondsmen shall be liable for any loss occasioned by deposits in excess of such bond."

It will be observed that the section authorizes the board of education to enter into a contract with any conveniently situated bank which qualifies otherwise. The procedure is quite different from that outlined in the preceding section, which I shall not quote. That section, which applies to the case in which the district contains two or more banks, requires that competitive bids be solicited in the manner therein described, and the board of education has nothing whatever to do, excepting to determine the sufficiency of the security offered by the successful bidder.

Under Section 7607, above quoted, however, the arrangement entered into between the board of education and the bank has every element of a contract. That being the case, I am of the opinion that Section 4757 of the General Code applies. That section is as follows:

> "Conveyances made by a board of education shall be executed by the president and clerk thereof. No member of the board shall have directly or indirectly any pecuniary interest in any contract of the board or be employed in any manner for compensation by the board of which he is a member, except as clerk or treasurer. No contract shall be binding upon any board unless it is made or authorized at a regular or special meeting of such board."

My predecessor, Hon. Wade H. Ellis, rendered an opinion to the prosecuting attorney of Holmes county, in which he held that the section last above quoted would not render invalid a depository award made under what is now Section 7605 and Section 7606 of the General Code. In the course of that opinion he stated, speaking of what is now Section 4757, General Code, that:

> "If this section is applicable at all, it would render voidable all contracts between a bank and a school board on which there was a single member who was also a stockholder in a bank, regardless of whether his vote was necessary to pass a resolution. (Bellaire Goblet Company vs. Findlay, 5, O. C. C., 418)"

The former attorney general's reasoning was that inasmuch as a board of education of a school district having two or more banks has nothing whatever to do of a discretionary nature after it has passed the resolution now required by law, for the establishment of a depository, but is required by law to award the deposit of its funds to such bank or banks which offer the highest rate of interest and sufficient security, the case was not within the obvious intendment of the prohibitory section.

I have already pointed out the fundamental distinctions between the act of the board of education under Section 7605 and the corresponding act under Section 7607 of the General Code. The reasoning of Mr. Ellis' opinion, applied to what is now Section 7607, General Code, would produce results opposite to that which it produced as applied to the other sections. I am in accord with that reasoning, and give it to you as my opinion, that from the authority of the case cited by Mr. Ellis, and other cases to the same effect, a contract between a board of education of a school district in which there are fewer than two banks, and a bank for the deposit of the funds of the district is rendered void by reason of any interest in the bank which may be possessed by any member of the board of education.

I assume, as a matter of course, that the bank director is also a stockholder of the bank. A stockholder's interest, while small and indirect, has been repeatedly held sufficient to constitute a violation of statutes like Section 4757.

Very truly yours,

TIMOTHY S. HOGAN,

Attorney General.

BOARD OF TRUSTEES OF PUBLIC AFFAIRS—POWER TO MAKE RULE TO TURN OFF WATER IN EVENT OF NON-PAYMENT OF RENT.

The board of public affairs of a village has the same powers to enforce its rules by turning off the water in the event of non-payment of rent as are possessed by the director of public service of a city, in this regard.

Bureau of Inspection and Supervision of Public Offices, Department of Auditor of State, Columbus, Ohio.

GENTLEMEN:—Your favor of May 13th received. You inquire:

> "May the board of public affairs of a village enforce its rules by turning off the service if water rents are not paid in accordance with the contract and rules of the board?"

Section 4357 of the General Code provides when the board of trustees of public affairs shall be established, and is as follows:

> "In each village in which water works, an electric light plant, artificial or natural gas plant, or other similar public utility is situated, or when council orders water works, an electric light plant, natural or artificial gas plant or other similar public utility, to be constructed, or to be leased or purchased from any individual, company or corporation, council shall establish at such time a board of trustees of public affairs for the village, which shall consist of three members, residents of the village, who shall be each elected for a term of two years."

Section 4361, General Code, provides as follows:

> "The board of trustees of public affairs shall have all the powers and perform all the duties provided in this title to be exercised and performed by the trustees of water works, and such other duties as may be prescribed by law or ordinances not inconsistent herewith."

Section 4361, General Code, was construed by this department in an opinion addressed to Hon. Allen C. Aigler, Village Solicitor, Bellevue, Ohio, under date of November 8, 1911, a copy of which opinion is as follows:

> "I beg to acknowldge receipt of your letter of February 27th, in which you call attention to the manifest defect in Section 4361, General Code, which confers upon the board of trustees of public affairs in villages, all the powers of waterworks trustees, whereas there are no such officers as waterworks trustees mentioned in the code. The specific question which has been raised under this statute is as to the authority of a board of trustees of public affairs of a village by contract to create an indebtedness of more than five hundred dollars, without advertising for competitive bids.
> "The question as to the meaning of Section 4361, General Code, was presented to this department and a bill prepared under the direction of my predecessor was presented to the general assembly for the purpose of correcting it, so as to make it read,

"'The board of trustees of public affairs shall have all the powers and perform all the duties provided in this title to be exercised and performed by the director of public service with regard to waterworks.'

"Your inquiry was delayed, pending the action of the legislature thereon. The general assembly, however failed to pass the bill referred to."

Section 4361, General Code, provides in part as follows:

"'The board of trustees of public affairs shall have all the powers and perform all the duties provided in this title to be exercised and performed by the trustees of waterworks.'

"As you pointed out, 'this title' does not again mention 'trustees of waterworks'; it is therefore an ambiguity, apparent upon the face of the codified section. I have, in numerous instances, held, following the established weight of authority, that where an ambiguity is created in process of codification the pre-existing law may be looked to for the purpose of ascertaining the intention of the legislature. The pre-existing law being consulted discloses at once the fact that the powers of trustees of waterworks are the same powers now vested in the direction of public service of a city by Sections 3956 to 3981, General Code. These powers, in my opinion, are the statutory powers of the board of trustees of public affairs. In addition thereto the board has such powers as may be conferred upon it by ordinance of council. * * *"

Following that opinion, I hold that the powers of trustees of waterworks are the same powers now vested in the director of public service of a city by Section 3956 to Section 3981, General Code, and those are the statutory powers of the board of trustees of public affairs.

Section 3958, General Code, provides for the assessment and collection of water rents and is as follows:

"For the purpose of paying the expenses of conducting and managing the waterworks, such director may assess and collect from time to time a water rent of sufficient amount in such manner as he deems most equitable upon all tenements and premises supplied with water. When more than one tenant or water taker is supplied with one hydrant or off the same pipe, and when the assessment therefor are not paid when due, the director shall look directly to the owner of the property for so much of the water rent thereof as remains unpaid, which shall be collected in the same manner as other city taxes."

I have already held, in an opinion to your department under date of May 14, 1912, that,

"The director of public service may make rules and regulations to the effect that a deposit shall be made by the owner of property, covering water rent, for a certain period, whether it be furnished to a tenant or to the owner; or, he may make a rule that in case water rent is not paid, the water will be turned off until all arrearages are paid; or, he may adopt * * * rules and regulations * * * requiring the owner or his agent to agree that the property and premises furnished water, shall be responsible for water rent and shall be charged upon the property until paid"

I am, therefore of the opinion that the board of trustees of public affairs of a village has authority to enforce its rules by turning off the service if water rents are not paid in accordance with the contract and rules of the board. They have the same authority as the director of public service in that regard.

Very truly yours,

TIMOTHY S. HOGAN,

Attorney General.

FEES AND COSTS—CRIMINAL CASES BEFORE JUSTICES OF THE PEACE, MAYORS AND POLICE JUDGES—NO DISTINCTION AS REGARDS CASES PUNISHABLE BY IMPRISONMENT AND THOSE PUNISHABLE BY FINE ONLY.

From the arrangement of the statutes before their codification, the intent is clear that the words "such prosecution", as they appear in Section 13436, General Code, making fees of constables, chiefs of police and marshals similar to those of sheriff's fees in criminal cases, and in Section 13439, General Code, with reference to payment of costs, refer to all cases coming under the jurisdiction of justices of the peace, police judges and mayors, as enumerated in Section 13423, General Code.

There is nothing in the statutes, therefore, requiring a distinction as regards payment of such fees and costs, between cases in which imprisonment is a part of the penalty and those punishable by fine only.

Bureau of Inspection and Supervision of Public Offices, Columbus, Ohio.

GENTLEMEN:—Under date of February 6, 1912, you inquire as follows:

"What cases are included within the purview of Section 13436. Does it cover all cases arising under Section 13423, and if not, which of the cases arising under said section are covered?

"So far as this department is concerned, the principal question arising in this matter is whether or not the fees of the officers in such cases can be paid under Section 13439."

Section 13423, General Code, to which you refer provides:

"Justices of the peace, police judges and mayors of cities and villages shall have jurisdiction, within their respective counties, in all cases of violation of any law relating to:

"1. The adulteration or deception in the sale of dairy products and other food, drink, drugs and medicines;

"2. The prevention of cruelty to animals and children;

"3. The abandonment, non-support or ill-treatment of a child by its parent;

"4. The abandonment or ill-treatment of a child under sixteen years of age by its guardian;

"5. The employment of a child under fourteen years of age in public exhibitions or vocations injurious to health, life or morals, or which cause or permit it to suffer unnecessary physical or mental pain;

"6. The regulation, restriction or prohibition of the employment of minors;

"7. The torturing, unlawfully punishing, ill-treating or depriving any one of necessary food, clothing or shelter;

"8. The selling, giving away or furnishing of intoxicating liquor as a beverage, or keeping a place where such liquor is sold, given away or furnished, in violation of any law prohibiting such acts within the limits of a township and without the limits of a municipal corporation;

"9. The shipping, selling, using permitting the use of, branding or having unlawful quantities of illuminating oil for or in a mine;

"10. The sale, shipment or adulteration of commercial feed stuffs;

"11. The use of dust creating machinery in workshops and factories;

"12. The conducting of a pharmacy, or retail drug or chemical store, or the dispensing or selling of drugs, chemicals, poisons or pharmaceutical preparations therein;

"13. The failure to place and keep in a sanitary condition a bakery, confectionary, creamery, dairy, dairy barn, milk depot, laboratory, hotel, restaurant, eating house, packing house, slaughter house, ice cream factory or place where a food product is manufactured, packed, stored deposited, collected, prepared, produced or sold for any purpose."

By virtue of the foregoing section justices of the peace, police judges and mayors are given jurisdiction to try cases arising from violation of any law relating to the various subjects enumerated therein.

Section 13432, General Code, provides:

"In prosecutions before a justice, police judge or mayor, when imprisonment is a part of the punishment, if a trial by jury is not waived, the magistrate, not less than three days nor more than five days before the time fixed for trial, shall certify to the clerk of the court of common pleas of the county that such prosecution is pending before him."

This section covers prosecutions before a justice, police judge or mayor when imprisonment is a part of the punishment prescribed for the offense charged. It will include prosecutions for violation of any law relating to the various subjects enumerated in Section 13423, supra, when the law prescribes punishment by imprisonment as a part of the penalty for the offense charged.

Section 13436, General Code, provides:

"In pursuing or arresting a defendant and in subpoenaing the witnesses in such prosecutions, the constable, chief of police, marshal or other court officer shall have like jurisdiction and power as the sheriff in criminal cases in the common pleas court, and he shall receive like fees therefor."

Section 13439, General Code, provides:

"In such prosecutions, no costs shall be required to be advanced or secured by a person authorized by law to prosecute. If the defendant be acquitted or discharged from custody by nolle or otherwise, or convicted and committed in default of paying fine and costs, all costs of > such case shall be certified under oath by the trial magistrate to the county auditor, who, after correcting errors therein, shall issue a warrant on the county treasury, in favor of the person to whom such costs and fees are payable. All moneys which are to be paid by the county treasurer as provided in this chapter shall be paid out of the general revenue fund of such county."

The question arises as to what prosecutions are referred to by the words "such prosecutions" as used in the foregoing sections. Do they refer to the prosecutions described in Section 13432, General Code, that is, those prosecutions in which imprisonment is a part of the punishment, or do they refer to the prosecutions for the various offenses enumerated in Section 13423, General Code, supra?

Said Sections 13436 and 13439, General Code, are placed in the same chapter as Section 13432. In this same chapter are also three other sections which use the words "such prosecutions."

Section 13438, General Code, provides:

> "In such prosecutions, the jurors and the witnesses shall be entitled to like mileage and fees as in criminal cases in the court of common pleas."

This section tends to show that the term "such prosecutions" refers to those prosecutions triable to a jury.

Section 13435, General Code, however, throws doubt upon this meaning, when it provides:

> "In such prosecutions, where a different punishment is provided for a second or subsequent offense, the information or affidavit upon which the prosecution is based, must charge that it is the second or subsequent offense or the punishment shall be as for the first offense."

The same is true as to the provisions of Section 13437, General Code which are:

> "In such prosecutions, if there is a verdict for conviction, a new trial may be granted for like reasons and subject to like conditions as a new trial in criminal cases in the court of common pleas."

The provisions of Section 13435, General Code, will apply to those offenses which only have a fine as the penalty for the first offense, and also to those which have a fine and imprisonment as a penalty for the second or subsequent offense. In such cases the term " such prosecutions" is not limited to those prosecutions which have imprisonment as a part of the penalty. There is no valid reason why the provisions of Section 13437, General Code, as to a new trial, and of Section 13439, as to security for costs should not apply to all prosecutions under Section 13423, General Code.

The provisions now contained in Section 13423 and 13432 to 13440, inclusive, General Code, were originally found in Section 3718*a* of the Revised Statutes. The codifying commission placed in Section 13423, General Code, the various offenses which were more generally enumerated in the first paragraph of said Section 3718*a*, Revised Statutes, and also those which came under its provisions by reference thereto.

The second paragraph of said Section 3718*a*, Revised Statutes, provides in part:

"In any such prosecution where imprisonment may be a part of the punishment, if a trial by jury be not waived, * * *."

In placing this provision in the General Code, it was put in a different chapter than the first paragraph and the language was changed so as to read:

"In prosecutions before a justice, police judge or mayor, when imprisonment is a part of the punishment,* * *"

The third paragraph of said Section 3718*a*, Revised Statutes provides in part:

"In all cases prosecuted under the provisions of this act, no costs shall be required to be advanced or be secured by any person or persons authorized under the law to prosecute such cases; * * *"

This provision was carried into Section 13439, General Code.
The fifth paragraph of said Section 3718*a*, Revised Statutes, provided:

"In pursuing or arresting any defendant and in subpoenaing the witnesses, the jurisdiction and powers of the constable or other court officer acting in such capacity, in all such cases, shall be the same as that of the sheriff of the county in criminal cases in the common pleas court, and he shall receive the same fees therefor as are allowed said sheriff."

These provisions were carried into the General Code as Section 13436, supra.

Under the provisions of the Revised Statutes the fees of the constable or other court officer, in all cases under said Section 3718*a*, were to be the same as allowed to the sheriff. There was no distinction as to cases where imprisonment was or was not a part of the punishment. The same was true as to the provisions for security for costs and as to the payment of costs from the county treasury.

While said Section 3718*a*, Revised Statutes, has been subdivided into several sections of the General Code, some of which have been placed in separate chapters, yet there is nothing to show any intent to change the rule and to provide that the fees of the constable or other officer should be the same as those allowed to the sheriff, when imprisonment was a part of the penalty, and that they should be otherwise when the offense was punishable by fine only. The same is true as to the provision for a new trial and as to charging a second offense.

It is my conclusion that the provisions of Sections 13436 and 13439, General Code, apply to all cases enumerated in Section 13423, General Code, the same as under the provisions of Section 3718*a*, Revised Statutes.

Respectfully,
TIMOTHY S. HOGAN,
Attorney General.

WITNESS FEES—RAILROAD POLICEMEN AND HUMANE OFFICERS NOT ENTITLED TO, IN CRIMINAL ACTIONS IN JUSTICE'S, POLICE AND MAYOR'S COURTS.

Railroad policemen and humane officers are such "other police officers" as are intended by Section 3024, General Code, prohibiting such from receiving witness fees in criminal acting before justices of the peace, mayors and police judges.

June 14, 1912.

GENTLEMEN:—Under date of June 4, 1912, you inquire as follows:

> "Is either a railroad policeman appointed under and by virtue of authority of Section 9150 or a humane officer appointed under and by virtue of authority of Section 10070 and kindred sections, such an officer as is precluded from receiving witness fees under the provisions of Section 3024?"

Section 3024, General Code, to which you refer, provides:

> "No watchman or other police officer is entitled to witness fees in a cause prosecuted under a criminal law of the state, or an ordinance of a city before a police judge or mayor of such city, justice of the peace, or other officer having jurisdiction in such cases."

The term "other police officers" as used in the foregoing section will include all police officers and the statute makes no exception therefrom. It will be necessary to determine whether a railroad policeman and a humane officer are in fact police officers.

First as to the railroad policeman.

Section 9150, General Code, provides:

> "Upon the application of a company, owning or using a railroad, street railroad, suburban or interurdan railroad in this state, the governor may appoint and commission such person as the company designates or as many thereof as he may deem proper, to act as policeman for and on the premises of such railroad or elsewhere, when directly in the discharge of their duties for such railroad. Policemen so appointed shall be citizens of this state and men of good character. They shall hold office for three years, unless for good cause shown, their commission is revoked by the governor, or by the railroad company as provided by law. Not more than one such policeman shall be appointed for each five miles of a street, suburban, or interurban railroad"

Section 9151, General Code, provides:

> "Before entering upon the duties of his office, each policeman so appointed shall take and subscribe an oath of office, which shall be endorsed on his commission. A certified copy of such commission, with the oath, shall be recorded in the office of the clerk of the common pleas court in each county through or into which the railroad runs for which such policeman is appointed, and intended to act. Policemen so appointed and commissioned severally shall possess and exercise the powers, and be subject to the liabilities of policemen of cities in the several counties in which they are authorized to act while discharging the duties for which they are appointed."

A railroad policeman is appointed and commissioned by the governor. He is authorized to exercise the same powers and is subject to the same liability as a policeman of a city. His compensation, however, is not paid by the public, but by the company, by virtue of Section 9154, General Code, which provides:

> "The compensation of such policemen shall be paid by the company for which they respectively are appointed, and at such rates as may be agreed upon by the parties."

The fact that the railroad company pays his compensation does not alter his powers, duties or liabilities. He is a police officer, with the powers and liabilities of a policeman of a city. The term "other police officer" as used in Section 3024, General Code, makes no distinction between police officers and will include a policeman of a city and also a railroad policeman.

Second as to the humane officer.

Section 10070, General Code, provides for the appointment of the humane officer as follows:

> "Such societies may appoint agents who are residents of the county or municipality for which the appointment is made, for the purpose of prosecuting any person guilty of an act of cruelty to persons or animals, who may arrest any person found violating any provision of this chapter, or any other law for protecting persons or animals or preventing acts of cruelty thereto. Upon making such arrest, such agent shall convey the person so arrested before some court or magistrate having jurisdiction of the offense, and there forthwith make complaint on oath or affirmation of the offense."

By virtue of Section 10071, General Code, such appointment must be approved by the mayor of the city or village for which such appointment is made, or by the judge of the probate court. Said section provides:

> "All appointments by such societies under the next preceeding section shall have the approval of the mayor of the city or village for which they are made. If the society exists outside of a city or village, appointments shall be approved by the probate judge of the county for which they are made. The mayor or probate judge shall keep a record of such appointments."

The compensation of such humane officer is to be fixed and paid in accordance with the provisions of Section 10072, General Code, which provides:

> "Upon the approval of the appointment of such an agent by the mayor of the city or village, the council thereof shall pay monthly to such agent or agents from the general revenue fund of the city or village, such salary as the council deems just and reasonable. Upon the approval of the appointment of such an agent by the probate judge of the county, the county commissioners shall pay monthly to such agent or agents, from the general revenue fund of the county, such salary as they deem just and reasonable. The commissioners, and the council of such city or village may agree upon the amount each is to pay such agent or agents monthly. The amount of salary to be paid monthly by the council of the village to such agent shall not be less than five dollars, by the council of the city not less than twenty dollars, and by the commissioners of the county not less than twenty-five dollars. But not more than one agent in each county shall receive remuneration from the county commissioners under this section."

The humane officer is appointed by the humane society, subject to the approval of the mayor or probate judge. His compensation is paid by the village, city or county from public funds. His special duty is to prevent cruelty to animals and persons. In order to carry out this duty he is given certain powers pertaining to the duties of a police officer. He may arrest persons violating any law relating to the protection of persons or animals or the prevention of cruelty thereto. He possesses all the powers of a policeman pertaining to these offenses. He is to that extent a police officer. The term "other police officer" as used in Section 3024, General Code, refers to all police officers, and is broad enough to include the humane officer, who has certain police powers.

In conclusion, the provisions of Section 3024, General Code, will include a railroad policeman appointed under authority of Section 9150, General Code and will also include the humane officer who is appointed by virtue of Sections 10071, et seq., General Code, and will prevent such officers from receiving witness fees in the class of cases enumerated in said Section 3024.

Respectfully,
TIMOTHY S. HOGAN,
Attorney General.

MUNICIPAL CORPORATIONS—MAY NOT FURNISH ELECTRIC LIGHT TO ADJACENT OR CONTIGUOUS VILLAGE.

The statutes do not authorize a village board of affairs managing and controlling a municipal electric light plant, to furnish electric light outside of the village and therefore, a contract providing for the same may not be entered into with either a contiguous or an adjacent municipality.

Bureau of Inspection and Supervision of Public Offices, Department of Auditor of State, Columbus, Ohio.

GENTLEMEN:—I beg to acknowledge receipt of your favor of April 23rd, in which you request my opinion upon the following questions:

"Has a board of public affairs managing and controlling a municipal electric light plant the authority to contract with a village adjacent, but not contiguous, for furnishing street lighting, or for private consumers resident of said adjacent village?

"If said village is contiguous to the village owning and operating the municipal electric light plant, would said last named village have the authority to furnish light to said contiguous village?"

It is well settled that municipal corporations have only such capacities and powers as are expressly granted, and such as may be implied as essential to carry into effect those which are expressly granted; and the doubtful claims to power are resolved against the corporation. So the question resolves itself into the proposition as to whether the power has been granted to a municipal corporation which owns its municipal electric light plant to contract with a village adjacent but not contiguous, for furnishing street lighting or lighting to private consumers, resident in said adjacent village, or with a village that is contiguous.

Turning to the enumerated powers of municipal corporations, Section 3618 of the General Code authorizes the establishment of lighting, power and heating plants and provides as follows:

> "To establish, maintain and operate municipal lighting, power and heating plants, and to furnish the municipality and the inhabitants thereof with light, power and heat, to procure everything necessary therefor, and to acquire by purchase, lease or otherwise, the necessary lands for such purposes, within and without the municipality."

Section 3990 of the General Code gives specific authority to the council of a municipality to erect gas or electric works at the expense of the corporation, or purchase gas or electric works already erected therein; it provides as follows:

> "The council of a municipality may, when is is deemed expedient and for the public good, erect gas works or electric works at the expense of the corporation, or purchase any gas or electric works already erected therein, but in villages where gas works or electric works have already been erected by any person, company of persons or corporation, to whom a franchise to erect and operate gas works or electric works has been granted, and such franchise has not yet expired, the council shall, with the consent of the owner or owners, purchase such gas works or electric works already erected therein. If the council and owner or owners of such gas or electric works are unable to agree upon the compensation to be paid therefor, the council may file in the probate court of the county where such gas works or electric works are located, a petition to appropriate such gas or electric works, and thereupon the same proceedings of appropriation shall be had as is provided for the appropriation of private property by a municipal corporation. A municipal contract existing between any village and such person, company of persons or corporation, for the public or street lighting shall be considered as an element of value in fixing the compensation to be paid for such gas works or electric works"

Section 3991 and 3992 of the General Code expressly authorize municipal gas plants, which are erected or purchased under authority of Section 3990 of the General Code, to deliver gas outside the municipality. But these sections are silent as to the power of a municipality to dispose of electricity outside of the municipality.

Section 3991 provides:

> "When a municipal corporation is the owner of a natural gas plant by which the citizens thereof are supplied with natural gas, and such natural gas is so supplied through pipes from a point beyond the limits of such corporation which pipes pass through the limits of an incorporated village, the municipality may sell natural gas to such village, or to a company, for the use of such village and the citizens thereof, such gas to be delivered at a reducing station to be located within one hundred feet of the main pipe line."

Section 3992 provides:

"When a municipal corporation is the owner of a natural gas plant to supply the citizens thereof with natural gas for fuel, the council of such municipal corporation may provide for supplying natural gas at rates to be determined by it, to persons living outside of and in the vicinity of such municipal corporation, and to county infirmaries, children's homes and other public institutions within or without such municipal corporation. To encourage the location or establishment of manufacturing industries within such municipal corporation, council may reduce the price of gas to be used to operate such manufacturing, or donate it for a term of years for such purpose, but this section shall be inoperative if the municipal corporation or the citizens thereof are thereby deprived of a full supply of such gas."

Section 3966 et seq., General Code, authorizes municipalities to dispose of water outside the corporation limits.

You will note, in the enumeration of powers of municipal corporations, as provided in Section 3613, that a municipality has the power to establish, maintain and operate municipal lighting, power and heating plants, and to furnish the municipality and the inhabitants thereof with light. But there is no express authority given by statute to furnish electricity outside of the corporate limits. Municipalities have a right to furnish gas and water to residents outside of the municipal corporation, because they are expressly authorized to do so by statute; but in the absence of a statute authorizing a municipal corporation to furnish electric light outside of the city limits. I am of the opinion that the board of public affairs, managing and controlling a municipal electric light plant, has no authority to contract with a village adjacent but not contiguous, for furnishing street lighting or to private consumers resident of said adjacent village; nor has the municipality which owns and controls its electric light plant any right to furnish light to a contiguous village.

Very truly yours,

TIMOTHY S. HOGAN,
Attorney General.

COUNTY TREASURER—NO POWER TO CHARGE AGAINST COUNTY, FEES OF ATTORNEY EMPLOYED TO RECOVER TAXES COLLECTED BY INSOLVENT BANK—PERSONAL LIABILITY.

A county treasurer has no authority to delegate his duties to collect taxes to a bank. When he does so, therefore, and the bank becomes insolvent and he employs attorneys to collect from the receiver the taxes collected by the bank, there is no statutory authorization providing for the compensation of such attorneys and the treasurer must be held personally liable for their fees.

June 12, 1912.

Bureau of Inspection and Supervision of Public Offices, Department of Auditor of State, Columbus, Ohio.

GENTLEMEN:—Your letter of May 9th received, enclosing a letter from Mr. M. P. Totman, treasurer of Athens County, and you request that I give you a written opinion in answer thereto. Mr. Totman's letter is as follows:

"The Albany State Bank, at Albany, Athens county, Ohio, took in from taxpayers of Albany village and the township of Lee, in which Albany is situated, $1,807.42, and sent to me as treasurer of said county a draft on The Second National Bank of Parkersburg, West Virginia, for the amount to pay said taxes, and I as said treasurer, marked paid and sent to said bank the receipts for said tax, and placed the draft in The First National Bank of Athens, which bank forwarded said draft to the bank at Parkersburg, but before payment was made, the State Bank of Albany was closed by the State Banking Association and a receiver appointed to take charge of said Albany State Bank.

"Now my tax receipts were out and I had not received money for same, so I went to Albany and saw the receiver and demanded the money but was refused, so I made every effort I could to get the money, but failed, so I employed attorneys of the firm, Wood and Wood, and they looked up the law and made out a brief of different decisions on like claims and finally got the money in full, $1,807.42, and the same has now been placed to the credit of the county, and the law firm of Wood and Wood has made a charge of $200.00 for their services.

"Now, what I want to know is, who has the $200.00 to pay? It does not seem that I as treasurer should be held for this personally, and I don't know whether the county could pay same. You see what I want; I don't feel that I should pay this fee of $200.00, and I don't know whether the law firm of Wood and Wood could draw said fees from the county, and I would like your opinion in regard to the matter."

It appears that for the convenience of the taxpayers of Lee Township, Athens County, the treasurer of Athens County sent a list of the taxpayers to the Albany State Bank, with the amounts assessed against each, and the Albany State Bank collected the taxes and sent a draft for the amount on the Second National Bank of Parkersburg, West Virginia. On receipt of this draft, the treasurer of Athens county sent the tax receipts to the Albany State Bank, and they were distributed to the proper parties. Before the draft was paid, the Albany State Bank went into the hands of a receiver, and the draft was held up. The treasurer of Athens county employed attorneys, who collected the amount in full, and charged for their services the sum of $200.00. The question presented for answer is; Who has the $200.00 attorney fee to pay,—the county treasurer personally, or the county?

Sections 2648 and 2649 et seq. G. C. makes it the duty of the county treasurer to receive and collect taxes throughout the county.

Section 2917 of the General Code provides as follows:

"The prosecuting attorney shall be the legal adviser of the county commissioners and all other county officers and county boards and any of them may require of him written opinions or instructions in matters connected with their official duties. He shall prosecute and defend all suits and actions which any such officer or board may direct or to which it is a party, and no county officer may employ other counsel or attorney at the expense of the county except as provided in section twenty-four hundred and twelve. He shall be the legal adviser for all township officers, and no such officer may employ other counsel or attorney except on the order of the township trustees duly entered upon their journal, in which the compensation to be paid for such legal services shall be fixed. Such compensation shall be paid from the township fund."

You will note that no county officer may employ other counsel or attorney at the expense of the county, except as is provided in Section 2412 of the General Code. Section 2412 G. C. provides as follows:

> "If it deems it for the best interest of the county, upon the written request of the prosecuting attorney, the board of county commissioners may employ legal counsel to assist the prosecuting attorney in the prosecution or defense of any suit or action brought by or against the county commissioners or other county officers and boards, in their official capacity."

It becomes the duty of the county treasurer under Sections 2648 and 2649 et seq. of the General Code to collect the taxes. He could not delegate the authority to the Albany State Bank. Having done so, and having entrusted the bank with the tax receipts he did so at his own peril, and the recovery of the money was a matter entirely personal with him as treasurer, and it was his duty to employ and pay for the attorneys personally, and the charge would not be a proper one against Athens county. He could not in any event in his official capacity have employed an attorney other than the prosecuting attorney, as it is the duty of the prosecutor, under Section 2917 of the General Code, to prosecute all actions in favor of the county; and the only instance in which the county can employ attorneys is under authority of Section 2412, G. C., and the commissioners might employ attorneys to assist the prosecuting attorney. The treasurer of Athens county employed these attorneys personally, and did not get the commissioners to employ them under Section 2412 of the General Code.

THEREFORE, I am of the opinion that the county is not responsible for the attorney fees of Sirs Wood and Wood under the circumstances related in your letter.

Very truly yours,
TIMOTHY S. HOGAN,
Attorney General.

SHERIFF—CONTRACT WITH COUNTY COMMISSIONERS TO FURNISH LIGHT, HEAT, WATER, ETC., FOR RESIDENCE, IS VOID—PRISONERS' MAINTENANCE.

A contract by the county commisioners with the sheriff providing for the furnishing by the former of light, heat, water, fuel, telephones and cooking utensils for the residence of the latter and sixty cents a day for each prisoner maintained, would contravene the spirit of Section 2850, General Code, providing that the sheriff shall be allowed by the commissioners not less than forty-five nor more than seventy-five cents per day for keeping and feeding prisoners in jail. Such contract is unauthorized and void.

April 27, 1912.

Bureau of Inspection and Supervision of Public Offices, Department of Auditor of State, Columbus, Ohio.

GENTLEMEN:—Replying to your letter of March 6, 1912, in which you inquire relative to the legality, or, if it is held illegal, what the finding of this department would be, of a resolution of the board of county commissioners of Clark County, Ohio, as to entering into a written contract with one D. D. Lawrence, sheriff of the county, providing that in consideration of the keeping and feeding of the prisoners in the county jail for the year 1911; that the board of county commissioners shall furnish all necessary light, heat, water, fuel, telephones and cooking utensils for the residence of the said D. D. Lawrence and pay to the said D. D. Lawrence the sum of sixty cents per day for keeping and feeding each prisoner in the county jail for one year beginning January 2, 1911.

Section 2850, General Code provides that the sheriff shall be allowed by the county commissioners not less than forty-five nor more than seventy-five cents per day for keeping and feeding prisoners in jail, and under certain circumstances may receive the same for idiots or lunatics. In addition thereto the section provides what the sheriff shall furnish at the expense of the county. Certainly not under this section and no other section of the General Code do we find authority for the county commissioners to make a contract as indicated by your letter. This resolution does not even indicate that the sheriff's residence is a part of the same building, nor under the same roof, and if it were, where can the commissioners find authority for furnishing the sheriff's residence with light, heat, water, fuel, telephones and cooking utensils? Why not add provisions?

But one branch of this question has come into the courts, that of light. Section 2850 and Section 3177, General Code was before the court in Wood County in the Circuit Court in the State of Ohio ex rel vs. Toan, 13 C. C. R. 276 (N. S.) in which the court say:

> "County commissioners are without authority to provide for the expense of lighting that part of the county jail which is used by the sheriff as a residence."

If not light, why heat—why water, fuel, telephones, and why cooking utensils for the sheriff's residence? The county commissioners can only make contracts under authority of the statute and there is none to warrant such a contract.

The purpose of this section is to limit the commissioners as to the per capita consideration of the contract and to be valid the section must be of general operation. A contract such as the one entered into might contravene the very purpose of the statute.

Suppose an instance of a sheriff, occupying a very large residence, lighted by electricity, heated most completely and in the expensive way and also carry the hypothesis to the extent of such a sheriff only having an average of one prisoner a week to board. Would this kind of a contract govern such a case and still be within the letter as well as the spirit of this section? Still this section is enacted to govern all cases.

If such a contract was entered into it was illegal and without authority of law. If money was paid out under such a contract, it should be returned to the county treasury and the sheriff paid for the keeping and feeding of prisoners within the limits of Section 2850, General Code.

Very respectfully,

TIMOTHY S. HOGAN,
Attorney General.

MUNICIPAL COURT OF CLEVELAND, OHIO—DUTY OF CLERK TO PAY FINES ASSESSED IN STATE CASES INTO THE COUNTY TREASURY AND TO THE LAW LIBRARY ASSOCIATION—DUTIES OF FORMER POLICE CLERKS—CONSTITUTIONAL LAW.

The clerk of the municipal court of Cleveland succeeds to the duty of the former police court clerk of paying the percentage of fines assessed in state cases, specified in Section 3056, General Code, to the law library association of Cuyahoga county, notwithstanding the language of Section 30 of the act providing for the municipal court, stating that the clerk shall collect "all costs, fines, and penalties and pay the same quarterly to the treasurer of the city of Cleveland".

This language is made ambiguous by the further language in said section providing that the clerk shall succeed to all duties and powers of police clerks, which duties provided for the payment of fines assessed in state cases, into the county treasury, and to the law library assosciation.

To permit state fines to be paid into city treasury would violate Article II, Section 26 of the constitution providing against special legislation, by its interference with respect to disposition of state fines and with reference to common school funds, poor funds, and law library associations. As there is furthermore, no apparent reason for the sacrifice of state fines to the city, the ambiguity must be construed in favor of the latter language of Section 30 aforesaid, and the clerk of the municipal court given the duties which formerly devolved on the former police clerk of paying a certain portion of state fines to the law library association.

May 23, 1912.

The bureau of Inspection and Supervision of Public Offices, Columbus, Ohio.

GENTLEMEN:—In your favor of March 14th, you requested my opinion upon the following question:

> "Is the law library association of Cuyahoga county entitled, under Section 3056, General Code, to any part of the fines collected in the municipal court of the city of Cleveland, Ohio, created by act of the General Assembly on May 11, 1910 (101 O. L. p. 364—see Section 30)?"

You refer to Section 3056 which appears in 101 O. L. 295 as follows:

> "All fines and penalties assessed and collected by the police court for offenses and misdemeanors prosecuted in the name of the state, except a portion thereof equal to the compensation allowed by the county commissioners to the judges, clerk and prosecuting attorney of such court in state cases shall be retained by the clerk and be paid by him quarterly to the trustees of such law library associations, but the sum so retained and paid by the clerk of said police court to the trustees of such law library association shall in no quarter be less than 15 per cent. of the fines and penalties collected in that quarter without deducting the amount of the allowances of the county commissioners to said judges, clerk and prosecutor * * *."

and also you refer to 101 O. L. 304, Section 30, which has been amended in 102 O. L. 163 in a manner immaterial to your question so as to now read as follows:

"The clerk of the municipal court shall have general powers to administer oaths, and take affidavits, and to issue executions upon any judgment rendered in the municipal court, including a judgment for unpaid costs; he shall have power to issue and sign all writs, process and papers issuing out of the court, and to attach the seal of the court thereto; shall have power to approve all bonds, recognizances and undertakings fixed by any judge of the court or by law; shall file and safely keep all journals, records, books and papers belonging or appertaining to the court, record its proceedings and perform all other duties which the judges of the court shall prescribe. He shall pay over to the proper parties all moneys received by him as clerk; he shall receive and collect all costs, fines and penalties, and shall pay the same quarterly to the treasurer of the city of Cleveland and take a receipt therefor, but money deposited as security for costs shall be retained by him pending the litigation; he shall keep a book showing all receipts and disbursements, which shall be open for public inspection at all times; and shall on the first Monday of each term of court make to the city auditor a report of all receipts and disbursements for the preceding term. He shall succeed to all and shall have all the powers and perform all the duties of police clerks, and as to the selection of the deputy clerks he shall have power to appoint a chief deputy only. All other deputies and assistants shall be appointed or selected by him as hereinafter provided."

The first italicized portions of the language of Section 30 of the Municipal Court Act as above quoted when considered separately and independently from other provisions of the act would seem to impart a clear and unequivocal expression of an intent that all fines assessed in the municipal court should be turned over quarterly to the city treasury. Should this interpretation prevail, fines assessed in state cases, would, of course, be included and Section 3056 aforesaid, with reference to law libraries, would have no application.

Such an interpretation, however, would innovate a heretofore unheard of procedure. The practice of paying fines assessed for violation of state statutes into the county treasury has been a universal one. In this connection, Section 12378, General Code, has a substantial bearing to-wit:

"Unless otherwise required by law, an officer who collects a fine, shall pay it into the treasury of the county in which such fine was assessed, to the credit of the county general fund within twenty days after the receipt thereof, take the treasurer's duplicate receipts therefor and forthwith deposit one of them with the county auditor."

And so, throughout the statutes, fines assessed in state cases are directed with respect to all courts to be paid into the county treasury. In some instances it is true the practice of payment into the general fund of the county has been departed from. For example, Section 12343 provides that fines assessed in quo warranto or ouster proceedings shall be paid into the county treasury to the credit of the common school fund; Section 13231, General Code provides that fines assessed for violation of Section 13229, General Code, which is a township local option provision, shall be paid into the county treasury to the credit of the poor fund, and Section 3056, the subject of our present interest, provides that certain fines shall be paid directly to the law library association. Only one instance is revealed where state fines are to be paid into a municipal treasury and this is the provision of Section 13247, General Code, of the chapter dealing with offenses relative to intoxicating liquors, which section stipulates that fines assessed in a court of the county, shall be paid into the county treasury and that fines enforced in a court of a municipality, shall be paid into the treasury of a municipal corporation. This statute will be referred to in a further connection.

A possible reason for a change from the general practice suggests itself in the present case as a desire to reimburse the city for the benefits extended to the county by virtue of the relief accorded to the common pleas court through the extended jurisdiction of the municipal court. That this was the intention of the legislative mind, however, is made less probable by a contemplation of the part of the expenses of the maintenance of the municipal court which is directly borne by the county. Thus, Section 3 of the Municipal Court Act provides for a payment to each of its seven judges, by the county, of not less than $1,000 yearly, while the city pays not less than $3,500 each; Section 29 of the Act prescribes a compensation by the county of not less than $2,000 to the clerk while the city pays $2,500; and Section 38-1 of the Act, as it appears in 102 O. L. 167 provides that the commissioners may allow such further compensation to the city solicitor and his assistants for services in the court, as the county commissioners deem proper.

Since the legislature has provided the share of the expenses of the maintenance of the court which shall be borne by the county, such may be deemed exclusive and it seems improbable that a further expense was sought to be imposed upon the county, such as the forfeiture of fines in all state cases. It seems feasible, furthermore, that the county's assistance with respect to salaries of judges, clerk and prosecutor, is primarily intended as in the similar police court provisions, as a compensation to the court for its assistance in bringing fines into the county treasury. (See Sections 4568, 4599 & 4307, General Code.) In this connection, note may also be taken of the fact that the jurisdiction of the municipal court is confirmed solely to the City of Cleveland or to residents of the city except with reference to criminal procedure in general.

Coming now to the specific language of Section 30 of the act aforesaid, that the clerk "shall receive and collect all costs, fines and penalties and shall pay the same quarterly to the treasurer of the City of Cleveland," attention may be called to certain other sections of the act to the end that the construction may be made in the light of the entire act.

Section 12 of the Act in 101 O. L. 366, provided as follows:

> "In criminal cases, the practice and procedure shall be as now or hereafter provided by law for police courts in cities."

This provision as amended 102 O. L. 159, Section 12-1 appears as follows:

> "In criminal cases and proceedings, the practice and procedure and the mode of bringing and conducting prosecutions for offenses and the powers of the courts in relation thereto, shall be the same as those which are now or may hereafter be possessed by police courts in municipalities."

This last quoted section points directly to Section 4578, General Code providing for the mode of bringing and conducting prosecution in the police court which is as follows:

> "Prosecutions for offenses against the laws of the state shall be brought and conducted in the name of the state, and prosecutions for violations of city ordinances shall be brought and conducted in the name of the corporation. In any case a new trial may be granted within the same time and for the same cause as in like cases in the court of common pleas."

It will be noted that the amendment in Section 12-1 of the act above quoted, made clear and definite, what was obscure in the old section to-wit the intention to distinguish between state and city cases. The same intent was further clarified in the amendment to Section 8, now appearing in Section 102 O. L. as Section 8-1 with respect to misdemeanors and felonies, which section incorporated Sections 4582, 4583 and 4584, General Code of the police court provisions into the municipal court act.

These provisions point strongly to the intention to make the municipal court, in its criminal procedure, an immediate substitute for the former police court with the same powers, practice and procedure.

Coming again to Section 30 of the Act referring to the powers of the clerk, note may be had of the second italicized portion of the Act which is as follows:

> "He shall succeed to all and have all of the powers and perform all the duties of police clerks."

The powers and duties of clerks herein referred to are largely set out in Section 4599, General Code referring also to the police court to-wit:

> "On the first Monday of each month, he shall make, underoath, to the city auditor, a report of all fines, penalties, fees, and costs imposed by the court in city cases, showing in what cases they have been paid, and in what cases they remain unpaid, and, at the same time, he shall make a like report to the county auditor as to state cases. He shall immediately pay into the city and county treasuries, repsectively, the amount then collected, or which may have come into his hands, from all sources, during the preceding month."

From all the foregoing therefore, I am of the opinion that Section 30, at least presents a patent ambiguity and the problem is fairly presented as to whether or not the legislature intended the payment of all fines therein referred to, to include fines assessed in state cases.

In the ascertainment of the true intent, Article II, Section 26 of the Constitution providing that all laws of a general nature shall have a uniform operation throughout the state, seems material. Laws with reference to the disposition of state fines are manifestly of a general nature. The one statute which permits state fines to be paid into the city treasury to-wit the provision above referred to with reference to intoxicating liquors cannot be attached for lack of uniformity.

While having in mind the exception recognized by the courts with reference to the ability of the legislature to pass special laws with respect to the organization and establishment of courts, I do not hesitate to question strongly whether this exception would extend so far as to permit the passage of a statute which is in itself so contrary to this rule of uniformity and which furthermore would affect so universal an interference with the uniform operation of so many state statutes such as the code section afore mentioned with reference to payment of state fines to the credit of common school funds, poor funds, and to law library associations, as would a stipulation that all fines in all state cases assessed in one specific city should be paid into the treasury of said city. There is clearly an apparent limit to this exception to the rule of uniformity and when a statutory direction extends beyond the sphere of establishing and organizing a court and amounts in reality to a violation of the constitutional inhibition, the scope of the exception has clearly been overreached.

The syllabus in the case of Portsmouth vs. Milstead, 18 Cir. Dec. 284 is as follows:

> "1. The provisions of 96 O. L. 61 Section 126 (Rev. Stat. 1536-633; Lan. 3228) requiring "that all fees pertaining to any office shall be paid into the city treasury" has reference to municipal fees solely, or such fees as may be fixed by municipal authority.
> "2. Said section does not authorize cities to interfere with the fees of mayors or chiefs of police in state criminal cases; whether such authority can be delegated to municipalities, quaere."

and on page 385 the court said:

> "It is uniformly held that municipal powers are strictly limited. They have only those powers that are expressly granted or are clearly implied, as essential to carry into effect such powers expressly granted, and in cases of doubt, the court should be resolved against the city"

In view of this decision and for the reason aforesaid, that there exists no apparent substantial reason for payment of the fines in state cases to the city, that the municipal court is manifestly intended to substitute the former police court and for the further reason that to hold otherwise would seem to admit of a violation of the constitutional inhibition against special legislation, I am constrained to conclude that Section 30 should be construed to require the clerk to pay all fines, penalties, and costs assessed in city cases only, quarterly, to the city treasurer and to pay all fines, penalties and costs assessed in state cases as directed in Section 4599, General Code relating to the duties of clerks in police courts.

Answering your specific question, therefore, in as much as Section 30 prescribes that the clerk shall "succeed to all and have all the powers and perform all the duties of police courts", he shall succeed to the duty set out for police clerks in Section 3056, General Code, of paying the amount of fines therein specified, to the law library association of Cuyahoga county.

This conclusion is further supported by the fact that the legislature has no way changed the obligations of said association to permit all city and county officials the use of said library, for which the payment of fines provided for in Section 3056, General Code was intended as a compensation, and also by the further fact that a discrimination against this particular law library association would not seem to be justified in law or equity.

Very truly yours,

TIMOTHY S. HOGAN,

Attorney General.

COUNTY DETECTIVES ENTITLED TO WITNESS FEES IN CRIMINAL CASES—GRAND JURY WITNESSES—IDENTIFICATION CERTIFICATE OF FOREMAN OF GRAND JURY, NOT SUFFICIENT—WITNESSES BROUGHT FROM OUT OF STATE AND SERVED AT COUNTY SEAT, NOT ENTITLED TO MILAGE—"COMPENSATED BY PROSECUTOR IN FURTHERANCE OF JUSTICE".

Grand jury witnesses are entitled to their mileage only upon the certificate of the clerk. The identification certificate endorsed by the foreman of the grand jury, is not in itself sufficient.

In criminal cases, a county detective is entitled to witness fees as ordinary witnesses.

Witnesses in criminal cases responding to the request of the prosecutor from without the state or county and served with subpoenas at the county seat are not entitled to mileage. They may be compensated by the prosecutor however, out of the funds provided by Section 3004, General Code, for expenditures made in "furtherance of justice".

June 26, 1912.

Bureau of Inspection and Supervision of Public Offices, Columbus, Ohio.

GENTLEMEN:—I beg to acknowledge your letter of December 29, 1911, in which you state that Charles S. Homer, Clerk of Courts, of Cleveland, Ohio, has asked your department the following questions:

> "1. Are grand jury witnesses entitled to the milage marked upon their identification certificates and endorsed by the foreman of the grand jury?
> "2. Is the county detective entitled to witness fees in a criminal case?
> "3. Are witnesses in criminal cases, responding to the request of the prosecutor from without the state or county, and served after their arrival in the county, entitled to mileage from the county line?"

I will answer your questions in their order.

1. Section 3013 of the General Code provides that the officer serving a subpoena shall endorse thereon the number of miles to which each witness is entitled. This must go to the clerk of court in the first instance, and when the witness appears, he must, by favor of Section 13564, G. C., go before the clerk of court and take the oath provided by this section. The clerk must give him a certificate to that effect, and before he can be examined he must present this certificate to the foreman of the grand jury.

The witness, when examined, must return to the clerk to receive certificate for his fees.

The foreman of the grand jury has nothing to do with fixing his mileage. The clerk has that record. The foreman can certify that the witness was present and examined, but on this certificate he cannot go to the auditor or treasurer and draw any fees. The last sentence of Section 3014, G. C., says: "When certified to the county auditor by the clerk of the court, fees under this section shall be paid from the county treasury". Only such fees and mileage as are certified by the clerk can be drawn from the treasury. The indentification certificate spoken of by you has nothing to do in fixing mileage.

2. The county detective is entitled to witness fees in criminal cases, the same as any other witness, if properly subpoenaed.

3. Your third question is answered—No.

There is no such doctrine in Ohio as witnesses receiving mileage, in criminal cases, "to the county line," if they appear at the place of holding court, and are then subpoenaed for the first time. Witness fees and mileage are statutory, and no legal departure can be made from the strict letter of the law.

If a witness appears voluntarily, under some arrangement with a party or prosecutor, he must look to the one with whom he made the arrangement, and cannot draw fees from the county, except such as are enumerated in the law.

Such witnesses as you speak of are only entitled to $1.00 per day, when subpoenaed at the county seat.

I have no doubt the prosecuting attorney can reimburse such a witness out of the funds provided for him by Section 3004, G. C., "in the furtherance of Justice."

Very truly yours,
TIMOTHY S. HOGAN,
Attorney General.

SALARIES OF COMMON PLEAS JUDGES BASED ON CENSUS LAST PROCURING ASSUMPTION OF DUTIES—"TAKING" OF CENSUS AS OPPOSED TO "PROMULGATION."

Section 2252, General Code, provides that a Common Pleas Judge shall be compensated in accordance with the population as ascertained by the federal census next preceding the assuming of his duties.

Judges who took office prior to the "taking" of the census of 1910, therefore, shall be compensated in accordance with the census of 1900, and those taking office subsequent to that time, in accordance with the census of 1910.

June 28, 1912.

Bureau of Inspection and Supervision of Public Offices, Columbus, Ohio.

GENTLEMEN:—Under date of May 17th you propounded the following inquiries:

> "Under Section 2252, G. C., each common pleas judge in the state shall receive not less than $1,000 to be paid by the counties in proportion to the population. Shall the salaries of the judges who were in office prior to the election in 1910, who continue to hold their offices, be apportioned according to the federal census of 1910, or shall they continue to draw from the several counties of their subdivisions on the apportionment of the census of 1900?
> "Shall the salary of a common pleas judge appointed after the promulgation of the federal census of 1910 be based upon such census or upon the census of 1900?"

Section 2252 of the General Code, cited by you, provides:

> "In addition to the salary allowed by the preceding section, each judge of the court of common pleas and of the superior court shall receive an annual salary equal to sixteen dollars for each one thousand population of the county in which he resided when elected or appointed, as ascertained by the federal census next preceding his assuming the duties of such office, if in a separate judicial subdivision. Such additional salary shall be paid quarterly from the treasury of the county upon the warrant of the county auditor. If he resides in a judicial subdivision comprising more than one county, such additional salary shall be paid from the treasuries of the several counties of the subdivision in proportion to such population thereof upon the warrants of the auditors of such counties. In no case shall such additional salary be less than one thousand dollars or more than three thousand dollars."

I am of the opinion, in answer to your first question, that the salaries of common pleas judges who were in office prior to the census of 1910, and who continue to hold their offices, should be apportioned according to the federal census of 1900 and not the census of 1910. The statute explicitly states that such salary shall be based upon the population as ascertained, not by the "next preceding" census, but by that "next preceding his assuming the duties of such office." This language is perfectly clear.

It is equally clear that the salaries of common pleas judges, appointed after the promulgation of the federal census of 1910, should be based upon that census.

In this connection, I beg to enclose herewith a copy of an opinion rendered, under date of February 4th, 1911, to the Hon. F. J. Rockwell, prosecuting attorney, Akron, Ohio, in which I point out that it is not the promulgation, but the taking of the census that fixes the date at which such salaries are to be determined.

Very truly yours,

TIMOTHY S. HOGAN,

Attorney General.

CONTRACT BY VILLAGE WITH PUBLIC UTILITY GRANTING FREE WATER TO LATTER, IS VOID.

The purposes for which council may supply free water, are enumerated in Section 3963, General Code, and free water for no other purpose is authorized.

A contract, therefore, by the village with a public utility, containing in its provisions a grant of free water and light to said utility, is void.

June 25, 1912.

Bureau of Inspection and Supervision of Public Offices, Columbus, Ohio.

GENTLEMEN:—You ask for an opinion as to the validity of a contract between the Village of Plymouth, Ohio, and The Northern Ohio Railroad Company. Copies of the contract, called "An Ordinance," and letter of the Village Clerk accompany your request.

In order to properly construe this contract and intelligently answer your question, I quote the contract, or "Ordinance:"

"AN ORDINANCE"

"Approving the contract entered into by the Northern Ohio Railway Co. and the Village of Plymouth, Ohio, with relation to the removal of division terminals from New London, Ohio, to the Village of Plymouth, Ohio,

"Be it ordained by the Common Council of the Village of Plymouth, Ohio, that a contract signed by the Mayor and Clerk of the Village of Plymouth and by the Northern Ohio Railway Co., dated the 28th day of October, 1904, providing for the removal of the division terminals from New London, Ohio, to the Village of Plymouth with relation thereto be and the same is hereby in all things ratified and approved, and the same shall be in full force and effect from and after this date for the term and time mentioned in the said contract, and shall be binding and obligatory upon the said Village of Plymouth during all of said period. The said contract reads in words and figures following to-wit:

"This article of Agreement made and entered into this 18th day of October, 1904, between the Northern Ohio Railway Company, a corporation of the State of Ohio, first party, and the Village of Plymouth, O., second party, witnesseth:

"That whereas the said first party desires to change its division terminals on its railroad from the Village of New London, O., to a more convenient and satisfactory location on its said line of railroad, and whereas the said Village of Plymouth, O. is located upon said line of railroad, and desires to secure the location of said division terminal in said Village.

"Now this agreement is to the effect following:

"First, That the said first party agrees to change its said division terminal from the said Village of New London in the State of Ohio and locate the same in the Village of Plymouth in the said State of Ohio, for and in consideration of the things granted and to be done by the said village of Plymouth as hereinafter provided.

Second, The said second party agrees to furnish to the said first party, free of cost, electric current, lamps, connections and all other appliances necessary for lighting all street crossings crossed by said railroad within the said Village of Plymouth and required by said Village to be lighted, from this date during the full term and continuance of this agreement.

"Third, The said second party agrees to furnish to the said first party, free of cost, all electric current, lamps, connections, etc., for lighting the passenger station of said first party and the office of its roadmaster to be located in said village of Plymouth for and during the continuance of this agreement.

"Fourth, The said second party agrees to furnish to first party and deliver to its water tank, free of cost, sufficient water to supply at all times during the term and continuance of this agreement, water necessary for all of the locomotives of said first party, the said second party is to provide two lines of pipes to its pumping station so as to be able to pump water into the said tank from either the river or village wells in case of a shortage of water at either of said points.

"Fifth: The said second party agrees that if at any time the said water lines shall be extended in Riggs Ave. across the tracks of the first party the said second party will furnish to first party free of cost, water for its station, the said first party to pay for making the tap to said water supply.

"Sixth: The said second party hereby agrees that the said first party shall have the right to lay any and all tracks additional which may be necessary in the proper conduct of its business, across Beelman St. in the said Village of Plymouth.

"Seventh: It is agreed that this agreement shall remain in full force and effect for so long as said first parties division terminal shall remain located in said Village of Plymouth.

"In witness whereof, the said parties hereunto subscribed this agreement in duplicate this the day and date first above written.

"THE NORTHERN OHIO RAILWAY CO.,
"By E. A. HANDY, Chief Engineer.
"THE VILLAGE OF PLYMOUTH, OHIO,
"By Geo. HANICK, Mayor.

"Attest W. A. JEFFREY, Clerk.

"This ordinance shall take effect from and after its passage and publication.

"Passed this 18th day of Oct., 1904.

"W. A. JEFFREY, Clerk. GEO. HANICK, Mayor."

Then follows a "Resolution to Approve Contract," which reads as follows:

"Resolved by the Council of the Village of Plymouth, Ohio, three-fourths of all members thereto concurring, that the agreement covering the matter of leasing the pump foundation and pipe line of the Northern Ohio Railway Co. to the Village of Plymouth, Ohio, be and the same is hereby approved and the Mayor and Clerk are hereby authorized to sign the same in duplicate for and in behalf of the Village of Plymouth, Ohio, and the same shall be in full force and effect from and after this date. This said contract reads in words and figures following:

"This agreement made this 7th day of December, 1907 between the Northern Ohio Railway Company, first party and the Village of Plymouth, Ohio, second party, witnesseth:

"Where as, by an agreement entered into by and between the parties hereto on the 18th day of October, 1904 said second party agrees to furnish said first party, at its water tank in the Village of Plymouth, O., sufficient water at all times during the term of said agreement for all locomotives of the first party, and to provide two lines of pipes so as to be able to pump water into said tank either from the Huron River or the Village wells; and whereas. to provide better facilities for furnishing said water to first party second party desires to use first parties old pump foundation located in said village of Plymouth, O. together with first parties three inch intake pipe leading from Huron River to said pump foundation, and two and one half inch supply pipe leading from said pump foundation to first parties water tank, said pump foundations and pipes being substantially as shown on the blue print attached hereto and made a part hereof.

Now, therefore, said first party does for and in consideration of one dollar to it in hand paid and the agreement hereinafter contained, hereby grant to the said second party the right to use the above designated pump foundation and pipes of first party upon the following terms and conditions.

"First: That all necessary repair work shall be done and the pipes maintained in perfect condition and repairs at the sole cost of said second party, and if at any time it fails to keep said pipes in such perfect condition and repair and such default continues after ten days notice to said second party by the first party to repair said pipes in such manner as shall be designated by first parties Chief Engineer second parties right to use said pipes shall cease and terminate and the first party shall take possession thereof, or may, at its option, make such repairs, and charge the cost thereof to second party, which second party agrees to pay within ten days after presentation of bills therefor.

"Second: That second part may erect a building upon the old pump house foundation located on first parties right of way, as shown on the blue print hereto attached, which building shall be constructed and maintained satisfactory to first party.

"Third: This agreement is upon the express understanding and condition that the first party shall be permitted to terminate the same at any time by giving second party thirty days notice in writing of such intention.

Fourth: The second party shall and will indemnify the first party against any and all damages, claims and demands, which may in any manner and at any time be made, or which may arise from the bursting or leaking of said pipes, or from any other cause which would or could be attributed to the said pipes or to the maintaining, renewing or using of the same.

"In witness whereof the said parties have hereunto subscribed this agreement in duplicate this the day and year first above written.

"THE VILLAGE OF PLYMOUTH, OHIO.
"By J. T. GASKEILL, Mayor.

"Attest, W. A. JEFFREY, Clerk.

"Passed this seventh day of December, 1905.

"W. A. JEFFREY, Clerk. J. T. GASKILL, Mayor."

I do not see much difficulty in answering your interrogatory.

The powers of villages, in Ohio, are all enumerated in the Municipal Code. Unless authority is given by said code, to enter into such an arrangement as is set forth in the quotations above, the village has no power to bind itself by such contractual relations, and the same, as to both parties, is unenforceable and void.

The municipal code nowhere gives a village the right to enter into such a contract as above set out; nor into any contract, however advantageous to the municipality, by which a person or corporation can enjoy free use of water or light, except as specifically provided by law.

A village can not, as such, give special privileges to any one, even in return for concessions to the municipality.

Water and light, when controlled and owned by the village, are elements of revenue, and not subject to gift.

The Legislature has fully spoken as to the free use of water. Section 3963, G. C., is inclusive, and as a matter of law, exclusive, as to all not mentioned therein.

Water Supply Free For Certain Purposes:

"Section 3963. No charge shall be made by the director of public service in cities, or by the board of trustees of public affairs in villages, for supplying water for extinguishing fires, cleaning fire apparatus, or for furnishing or supplying connections with fire hydrants, and keeping them in repair for fire department purposes, and cleaning of market houses, the use of any public building belonging to the corporation or any hospital, asylum, or other charitable institution, devoted to the relief of the poor, aged, infirm, or destitute persons, or orphan or delinquent children, or for the use of public school buildings; but, in any case where the said school building, or buildings, are situated within a village or cities, and the boundaries of the school district include territory not within the boundaries of the village or cities in which said building, or buildings, are located, then the directors of such school district shall pay the village or cities for the water furnished for said building or buildings."

Therefore, the contract between the village of Plymouth and the railroad company is void.

Very truly yours,
TIMOTHY S. HOGAN,
Attorney General.

BLIND RELIEF COMMISSION—EXPENDITURES LIMITED TO YEAR AND FUND FOR WHICH LEVY MADE—NEW LEVY BY COUNTY COMMISSIONERS AND NEW ALLOWANCES.

The expenditures of the Blind Relief Commission are limited to the fund raised by levy by the county commissioners for this purpose, and each fund is limited to expenditures of the year succeeding March 1st, for which the levy was made.

Allowance made by the Blind Relief Commission, therefore, for months preceding March 1st, and exceeding the amount of the fund, are absolutely void, and the claims for which said allowances were made can only be paid through a specific levy made by the County Commissioners and a new allowance made by the Blind Relief Commission on the new fund so raised.

June 28, 1912.

Bureau of Inspection and Supervision of Public Offices, Department of Auditor of State, Columbus, Ohio.

GENTLEMEN:—I beg to acknowledge receipt of your letter of May 7th, enclosing a letter addressed to you by the acting secretary of the Franklin County Blind Relief Commission, asking the following question:

"I desire to know why the blind pensioners should not be paid for October, November and December, 1911, and for January and February, 1912. The fund became exhausted because a levy of 24/100 mills was made when the law authorized a levy of 3/10 mills, and under the Smith Law the levy cannot be increased over that made last year."

This question involves the consideration of the following provisions of the General Code:

"Section 2967. * * * If the commission is satisfied * * * that the applicant is entitled to relief hereunder, it shall issue an order therefore, in such sum as it finds needed not to exceed one hundred and fifty dollars per annum, to be paid quarterly from the fund herein provided, on the warrant of the county auditor, and such relief shall be in place of all other relief of a public nature.

"Section 2969, as amended 101 O. L., 50. In addition to the taxes levied by law for other purposes, the county commissioners of each county shall levy a tax not to exceed three-tenths of one mill per dollar on the assessed value of the property of the county, to be levied and collected as provided by law for the assessment and collection of taxes, for the purpose of creating a fund for the relief of the needy blind of their respective counties."

I am firmly of the opinion that the Blind Relief Commission is without authority, under the present laws at least, to issue orders in any one year aggregating a greater amount than the amount of the Blind Relief Fund as measured by the county comissioners. Likewise, of course, the county auditor would be without power to issue a warrant against this fund when the same has become exhausted. In connection with the above sections must be considered the provisions of the Smith One Per Cent. Law, so-called, as heretofore construed by me in an opinion to your department, and in one to Hon. E. C. Turner, Prosecuting Attorney of Franklin County, a copy of which you have. In the latter opinion, especially, it is pointed out that proceds of a levy made in June 1911, available in March, 1912, and in August, 1912, can be expended only for the purpose of paying claims arising during the year beginning on March 1st. In order to pay back claims, the commissioners would at least have to levy especially for that purpose, as well as to subsequently appropriate the proceeds of such levy for the payment of such claims arising prior to March 1st, 1912. In short, in the absence of an appropriation to pay claims arising in a previous year, each year must, under the Smith Law, take care of itself.

What I have already said furnishes a sufficient answer to the question presented. However, I am inclined seriously to doubt whether the commissioners would have the authority to make a levy especially for the purpose of paying claims allowed by the Blind Relief Commission in a previous year, in excess of the amount of the fund. I have already stated that in my opinion it is the duty of the Blind Relief Commission to confine their allowances in the aggregate to the amount of funds. Authority is not expressly granted to this commission to make the allowance, irrespective of the amount of the fund, but on the contrary it is expressly declared that the allowance must be paid from the Blind Relief Fund and from no other source of revenue. In the absence of specific authority in the statute conferred upon the Blind Relief Commission to create a claim against the county as such, as distinguished from the Blind Relief Fund. I am clearly of the opinion that such power does not exist. The general rule, that statutes providing for the expenditure of public money and creating agencies of the public for special purposes are to be strictly construed, applies here.

Indeed, if the law must be construed so as to give the Blind Relief Commission independent power to create an obligation against the county, then it is clearly unconstitutional, and in that event the members of the Blind Relief Commission would be county officers; such officers, under the constitution, must, of course, be elected by the people. As I have construed the law, I believe it to be constitutional, although the prosecuting attorney expresses some doubt as to that question.

From what I have said it follows that outstanding orders issued by the Blind Relief Commission prior to March 1, 1912, at a time when the Blind Relief Fund was exhausted, cannot be paid from this year's fund, or the appropriation therefor. While my opinion is not solicited upon the point, it seems to me, also, that the county commissioners are without power to recognize the validity of such orders, and to make a levy expressly for the purpose of paying them. Relief may, however, in my opinion, be lawfully extended to those who are the losers by reason of the facts submitted to me in this case. A levy especially for that purpose must be made by the county commissioners and an appropriation thereof for the purpose of paying relief claims for the year 1911, then the Blind Relief Commission must make new allowances to these persons, the old ones being absolutely void. If the county commissioners are willing to do this, and are able to do it within the limitation of the budget, I believe the end sought can be accomplished in this way, but not by any other proceedings. The allowances already made are absolutely void.

Very truly yours,

TIMOTHY S. HOGAN,
Attorney General.

COMPENSATION OF TOWNSHIP TRUSTEES—LIMITATION OF $150.00 PER YEAR APPLIES ONLY TO GENERAL TOWNSHIP DUTIES—COMPENSATION FOR SPECIAL DUTIES NOT PRECLUDED.

Section 3294, General Code, providing a limit to yearly compensation of township trustees to the extent of $150.00, applies only to compensation for general business of the township. Said section, therefore, does not preclude the township trustees from receiving additional compensation, under Section 1184-2, General Code, which is a later statute imposing special duties and providing for payment out of a special road fund, for making up statistics as provided in said section.

July 2, 1912.

Bureau of Inspection and Supervision of Public offices, Department of Auditor of State, Columbus, Ohio.

DEAR SIRS:—Your letter under date of February 29th containing the question:

> "Would a member of the board of township trustees be entitled to receive under Section 1184-2 G. C., an amount due for services rendered by him, if such an amount would make the total received by him for his services during the year over $150.00?"

Section 3294, General Code, provides:

> "Each trustee shall be entitled to one dollar and fifty cents for each day of service in the discharge of his duties in relation to partition fences, to be paid in equal proportion by the parties, and one dollar and fifty cents for each day of service in the business of the township, to be paid from the township treasury. The compensation of any trustee to be paid for the treasury shall not exceed one hundred and fifty dollars in any year including services in connection with the poor. Each trustee shall present an itemized statement of his account for such per diem and services, which shall be filed with the clerk of the township, and by him preserved for inspection by any person interested."

Section 1184, General Code, (Vol. 102, O. L. p 336, Sec. 9) provides among other things:

> "The township trustees shall be paid the per diem allowance by law for their services, for the actual time so employed" (that is in making up the statistics provided for) "and the same shall be paid out of the road fund of the township, which shall be in addition to all other compensations allowed them by law."

This section refers to duties of trustees in conjunction with the Highway Commissioner.

Sections 5942-3-4-5, General Code, PROVIDE for work to be done by the township trustees in keeping down brush, briars, thistles or other obnoxious weeds along partition fences, etc., and Section 5946, General Code, provides for the payment of one dollar and fifty cents per day for each trustee for such services and this per diem shall be paid by the parties as costs. See Section 3294, General Code.

Likewise under Section 6619, General Code, township trustees shall be allowed for locating and establishing ditches under the chapter, one dollar and fifty cents per each day, etc.

Section 6621, General Code:

"The clerk shall apportion the payment of the costs of location and establishing ditches under the chapter to the parties interested in such ditch."

The above sections provide for the allowance of one dollar and fifty cents per diem to the trustees and as the costs are to be paid by the parties, from no part of the general business of the township as provided for in Section 3294, General Code.

These sections seem to distinguish between the duties of the trustees on behalf of individuals and on behalf of the township and the township business is further subdivided into general and special duties of the trustees.

The Section 3294 limits the trustees' compensation for the administration of the general business of the township to $150.00 in any one year to be paid from the treasury; this we assume to mean the general fund.

Section 1184-2, General Code, to which you make reference imposes special duties and provides for the payment out of a special fund and the duties imposed are not wholly of township interest but are in assistance of a state officer in a matter of general state wide interest.

This last named section governs Section 3294 in this matter both because it is a later enactment and because it is a special provision which, if not inconsistent, would govern the general provision of Section 3294.

We do not think these provisions inconsistent or conflicting and I am, therefore, of the opinion that the allowance of fees permitted under Section 1184-2 G. C., is proper and legal even though such allowance exceeds the limit of $150.00 provided by Section 3294, General Code.

Very truly,
TIMOTHY S. HOGAN,
Attorney General.

TAXES AND TAXATION—SMITH ONE PER CENT. LAW—GENERAL FUNDS—LEDGER FUNDS—TRANSFER OF FUNDS—OVERDRAFTS—"REVERT TO GENERAL FUNDS"—LIMITATION UPON POWER OF APPROPRIATIONS—COUNTY COMMISSIONERS.

Under the Smith One Per Cent. Law in spite of the language of 5649-3e G. C. providing that unexpended balances shall revert to the "general fund," it must be concluded in view of Section 5649-3a G. C. that the existence of so called "ledger funds" constituting appropriations for specific purposes for which levies have been definitely made, have not been supplanted by single "general" or "undivided tax fund."

The power of the county commissioners in making appropriations is therefore limited not only by the requirement that appropriations shall not exceed the total amount fixed by the budget commission, but also by the requirement that all appropriations must be made from funds in the treasury, and not for a greater amount for any purpose than that which stands to the credit of the particular fund on the ledger of the county.

Under Section 2443 G. C., transfers may not be made from the general fund to a particular ledger fund, nor vice versa, unless the fund to be transferred to is "exhausted," and unless furthermore there is authority for supplemental levies for the reimbursement of the fund transferred from, which authority does not exist under the Smith Law, and such fund could not be reimbursed unless a specific item has been provided for such purpose by the Budget Commission. A further reason preventative to such transfers from the general fund lies in the fact that said Section 2443 G. C., applies only to transfers from funds levied and collected for a special purpose, which cannot apply to a "general fund."

In view of these limitations therefore, when county officials have, from a misunderstanding of the law, paid bills prior to March, 1912, but of moneys coming into the treasury from the collection for the first half of 1912, so that there is therefore as a result of such overdrafts less money in the treasury then was appropriated for that period, monies cannot be transferred from the general fund to specific funds, or vice versa for the purpose of providing for such overdrafts.

And so also the county commissioners may not resort to such transfers to and from the general fund in order to effect an expenditure of moneys appropriated for the second half of the year for purposes of the first half of the year, or vice versa, when it is thought advisable or necessary to expend a greater amount for one period than for the other.

Such transfers may be made under 2296 G. C., by appeal to Common Pleas Court. Such a procedure is cumbersome however, and, when the transfer is to be only temporary, would have to be followed twice, once for the transfer and again for the retransfer.

When as a result of the overdrafts aforementioned there is to the credit of the general tax fund balance a less amount of money than has been allowed for all purposes by the Budget Commission, the only method of bookkeeping would seem to be that of crediting the funds respectively with the amount which they should legally contain and requiring the commissioners to limit the appropriations to the amounts available from each fund as reduced by the overdrafts.

Section 5649-3e of the General Code provides "that balances remaining over shall revert to the general fund." From the primary meaning of the word "revert" and also from the fact that the general fund is treated as a thing already existing and is not defined as a new creation such language should be construed to require such balances to revert to the funds from which they were taken.

Revised June 22, 1912.

Bureau of Inspection and Supervision of Public Offices, Department of Auditor of State, Columbus, Ohio.

GENTLEMEN:—I herewith acknoweldge receipt of your letter of April 15th, in which you submit for my opinion thereon the following questions:

> "1. May the county commissioners, in making appropriations for the first half of the fiscal year beginning March 1st, exceed the amount to the credit of any certain fund as shown by the auditor's ledger for any one object,—for instance, for maintenance and repair of bridges,—provided the amount appropriated for that object does not exceed the amount allowed therefor for the entire year by the budget commission and provided, further, that the aggregate of appropriations so made does not exceed the total amount of money in the county treasury subject to appropriations?
> In handling the finances of a county, it is often desirable and often necessary to use a much greater amount for certain objects the first half of the fiscal year than the last half, while certain other objects may, and often do, require the use of more money during the last half of the year. Keeping in mind the two limitations provided in Section 5649-3*d*, viz: that no appropriation shall be made for a greater amount for any purpose than the amount fixed by the budget commission for such purposes (exclusive of receipts and balances) and that all appropriations must be made from moneys known to be in the treasury, it seems to us that the plan outlined above would meet the requirements of said section. Of course, any appropriation made the first half of the year must be deducted from the amount fixed by the budget commisssion to ascertain the maximum appropriation that may be made for the same purpose the second half. If this plan were followed, it would be found at the end of the year that no more had been appropriated for any object for the entire year than the amount fixed by the budget commission and furthermore, the appropriations would be found to have been made from moneys in the treasury.
> "By this plan we do not mean that fund accounts should be entirely disregarded, but it would really have the effect of allowing the commissioners to make use of Section 2443 in an indirect manner.
> "2. Section 5649-3*e* provides that balances remaining over shall revert to the general fund, which, if interpreted literally, would in effect allow such balances to be used, in the discretion of the commissioners, for any purpose whatever requiring appropriations. In your opinion, may the last mentioned section be so construed as to authorize the balances to revert to the funds from which they were originally appropriated? This would seem to be the meaning of the word 'fund' in the third line from the last in said section were interpreted to mean 'funds.'"

In order that my opinion may be of service to you in advising officials of as many counties of the state in which difficulty may exist because of failure to understand the application and workings of the Smith One Per Cent. Law, so-called, I shall assume that this statement of facts, to which I think you will agree, is typical of those found in many counties.

After the February settlement, so-called, in the year 1912, the amount of money in the treasury of the county to the credit of all of the funds of the county combined as the proceeds of such settlement is found to be much less than the ledger balance which should be in the treasury to the credit of such funds after such settlement. This is due to the fact that the commissioners of the county, in good faith and in ignorance of the implied repealing and amendatory effect of the Smith Law as I have discussed the same in my previous opinion to your department, and in that to Hon. E. C. Turner, Prosecuting Attorney of Franklin county, a copy of which you have, have expended prior to March 1, 1912 a part of the proceeds of the collection for the first half of the year 1912. In this way they have created in various funds what are popularly called "overdrafts" prior to the settlement. For example, they had, in accordance with a long-established custom, expended from the general treasury balance money for purposes chargeable against the general county fund, although there was no money in the treasury to the credit of such been credited to such fund has been made technically was illegal.

Under this statement of fact, a county auditor after the settlement would, if he followed his usual custom, credit so much of the proceeds of the settlement of the tax collection as was derived from levies for the general county fund, to that fund and deduct the amount of the overdraft therein. In case the overdraft exceedsd the proceeds of collection his ledger will show the general county fund to be exhausted and no money therein subject to appropriation.

Your first question applied to the above hypothetical facts would be as to the whether or not the county commissioners in making the appropriation could appropriate anything from the general county fund for the purposes of such fund in the face of the fact that the auditor's ledger shows no balance therein.

Of course, your first question has primary application also to a case in which there are no overdrafts at all, but in which the commissioners for some reason or other satisfactory to themselves desire to appropriate a greater amount for the first half of the year for purposes chargeable against a given fund than the ledger balance in said fund after the semi-annual settlement without in the aggregate of their appropriations exceeding the total amount known to be in the treasury at the time of making such appropriation.

Section 5649-3*d* of the General Code, enacted as a part of the Smith One Per Cent. Law, 102 O. L., 266, provides in full as follows:

> "At the beginning of each fiscal half year the various boards mentioned in section 5649-3*a* of this act shall make appropriations for each of the several objects for which money has to be provided, from the moneys known to be in the treasury from the collection of taxes and all other sources of revenue, and all expenditures within the following six months shall be made from and within such appropriations and balances thereof, but no appropriation shall be made for any purpose not set forth in the annual budget nor for a greater amount for such purpose than the total amount fixed by the budget commissioners, exclusive of receipts and balances."

Section 5649-3*e* must be read in connection with the foregoing section, and is as follows:

> "Unexpended appropriations or balances of appropriations remaining over at the end of the year, and the balances remaining over at any time after a fixed charge shall have been terminated by reason of the object of the appropriation having been satisfied or abandoned, shall revert to the general fund, and shall then be subject to other authorized uses, as such board or officers may determine."

At the very outset the question arises as to whether or not under these two sections, and under the Smith Law as a whole, there are now any ledger funds of the county.

I state this question in this broad fashion because there is really some doubt as to whether or not the Smith Law has not effected a complete and revolutionary change in the manner of handling the finances of all the taxing districts. Speaking generally, the system of the administration of the fiscal affairs of all taxing districts heretofore has been based upon a theory of separate levies by the taxing authorities for the different general purposes, the proceeds of which have constituted in each instance what is known as a "fund." That is to say, the county commissioners at their March and June sessions annually would levy upon the grand duplicate of the county, say one mill for general county purposes, and the proceeds of that levy, together with some other miscellaneous revenues, would constitute what was popularly known as the "general county fund."

So, in a city under the Municipal Code, the council levied a specific number of mills for the different purposes of safety, service, health, etc., and the proceeds of such specific levies constituted the funds of the city.

Under such statutes, and particularly under the Municipal Code which has always provided for the semi-annual appropriations, the funds themselves could not be ignored in making the appropriations; or, stated in other words, the appropriation was not from the moneys in the general treasury, but from the moneys in the treasury to the credit of the funds from which the appropriation was to be made. Thus, Section 43 of the Municipal Code, which is a section quite similar to Section 5649-3*d* of the General Code (which supplanted it as to municipal corporation), although it provides that,

> "At the beginning of each fiscal half year the council shall make appropriations for each of the several objects for which the county has to provide from the moneys known to be in the treasury, or estimated to come into it during the six months next ensuing from the collection of taxes and all other sources of revenue."

also privides that,

> "The unexpended appropriations or balances of appropriations remaining over at the end of the year, and balances remaining over at any time after a fixed charge shall have been terminated, by reason of the object of the appropriation having been satisfied or abandoned, shall revert to the funds from which they were taken."

The same section of the Municipal Code also provides that the county may make transfer among several funds raised by taxation, so that reading the entire section as a unit, it is apparent that the general assembly intended not that the appropriation should be made from moneys in the treasury, as would seem to follow from the first sentence, but from the FUNDS in the treasury.

Now, Section 5649-3*d* does not contain language like that in the Municipal Code. You second question calls attention to this very fact. Instead of providing that the unexpended balances shall revert to the funds from which they were taken, Section 5649-3*e*, which disposes of such unexpended balances, expressly provides that they shall revert to > "the general fund, and shall then be subject to other authorized uses as such board or officers may determine."

It will be necessary at this point to anticipate a little, and discuss some of the questions raised by your second inquiry as throwing some light upon the answer to your first inquiry.

So far as the primary meaning of the language employed in Sections 5649-3*d* and 5649-3*e* is concerned, it seems that the Legislature had in mind a supposition that all the proceeds of a tax collection and of the other sources of revenue subject to appropriation constituted but a single fund, which it denominated the "general fund," corresponding roughly to the "general treasury balance" so-called, under the pre-existing statutes; or, perhaps more accurately, to an "undivided tax fund" plus balances to the credit of funds not raised by taxation. If this be the true meaning of the two sections, then the answer to both of your questions is obvious; but at the same time the consequence of such a holding would be that what is known as a "fund" no longer has any existence. This would, indeed, be a revolutionary change.

The question which I have raised as preliminary to the specific question which you ask, and necessarily so, is best answered in the first instance by considering other related sections of the Smith One Per Cent. Law. Section 5649-3*a* is in point here, and provides in part as follows:

> "On or before the first Monday in June, each year * * * all * * * boards or officers authorized by law to levy taxes within the county * * * shall submit or cause to be submitted to the county auditor an annual budget setting forth in itemized form an estimate stating the amount of money needed for their wants for the incoming year, and for each month thereof. Such annual budgets shall specifically set forth:
> "1. The amount to be raised for each and every purpose allowed by law for which it is desired to raise money for the incoming year.
> "3. The monthly expenditures from each fund in the twelve months and the monthly expenditures from all funds in the twelve months of the last fiscal year.
> 4. The annual expenditures from each fund for each year of the last five fiscal years.
> "5. The monthly average of such expenditures from each of the several funds for the last fiscal year, and also the total monthly average of all of them for the last five fiscal years."

It is scarcely necessary to go further in the light of the italicized portions of the above quotation. This section expressly recognizes the continuing existence of what are known as the "funds" of the taxing district. I might add, however, that the Smith Law does not purport to repeal or amend any of the numerous statutes relating to the fiscal affairs of the various taxing districts which provide for and recognize the existence of funds as above defined.

In the face of these facts, Sections 5649-3*d* and 5649-3*e* of the Code must be interpreted as having a meaning perhaps somewhat different from that apparent on the face thereof. The true meaning of Section 5649-3*e* is involved in your second question, and a discussion of it will be postponed until that question is reached. Section 5649-3*d,* however, must, for the foregoing reasons, be paraphrased so as to read as follows:

> "At the beginning of each fiscal half year the various boards * * * shall make appropriations for each of the several objects for which money has to be provided from moneys known to be in the treasury from the collection of taxes and other sources of revenue to the credit of the several funds therein."

This interpretation has the effect of introducing a new limitation or qualification into the section. Not noly is the power of the commissioners of a county, for example, in making appropriations, limited by the requirement that no appropriation shall be made for a greater amount for such purpose than the total amount fixed by the budget commissioners exclusive of receipts and balances, but also by the implied limitation that all appropriations must be made from funds in the treasury, and no appropriation may be made for a greater amount for any purpose than that which stands to the credit of the proper fund on the ledger of the taxing district.

But this conclusion does not necessarily furnish a completely negative answer to your first question; it does furnish the conclusion that the commissioners in making appropriations for the first half of the fiscal year beginning March 1st may not exceed the amount to the credit of certain funds as shown by the auditor's ledger for any one object, but it does not necessarily follow that the commissioners are limited absolutely to such amount.

Under the Municipal Code, Section 43, above quoted, the contingency concerning which you inquire was provided for by the vesting in council of the authority to transfer among funds raised by taxation. In this way, if a greater amount of money were needed for an object chargeable against a certain fund, then the amount of the fund, as shown on the ledger at the time of making the appropriation, and a lesser amount of another fund than that shown on the ledger were needed for the ensuing fiscal half year, council by proper transfer could make the necessary adjustment and still not appropriate an amount in excess of the legal balance to the credit of the funds.

It remains to be inquired as to whether there are any statutes under which the county commissioners may accomplish the same result. You refer in your letter to Section 2443 of the General Code. That section is, in part, as follows:

> "* * *. If there is a fund in such treasury that has been levied and collected for a special purpose, and such fund, or a part thereof, will not be needed for such purpose until after the period fixed by law for the next payment of taxes, and any of the other funds of the county are exhausted, the commissioners may transfer such special fund, or such part thereof as is needed to such exhausted fund, and reimburse such special fund from the taxes levied for such other fund, as soon as they are collected."

Without entering upon a lengthy discussion of this section, it seems to me that its availability for the present purposes depends upon the meaning of the word "exhausted" as therein used. The primary meaning of the very "exhaust," from which the adjective in question is derived, is given by the Century Dictionary as follows:

> "1. To draw out or break off the whole of, draw out until nothing of the matter drawn is left; removed or taken out completely * * *.
> "2. To use up or consume completely; expend or make away with the whole of; cause the total removal or loss of."

It is obvious that the primary meaning of the word "exhausted" precludes the use of Section 2443 for the purpose suggested by you, except for the relief of the funds to the credit of which appropriation time there is no money whatever in the treasury. Unfortunately, in my opinion, this primary meaning of the word must be given to it in Section 2443. That section is a grant of power and must be strictly construed and limited to the specific things enumerated in it. Therefore, so far as this section is concerned, the commissioners are not authorized to augment an insufficient fund by transferring from a fund in which there is more than a sufficient amount. Authority for such a transfer must be sought elsewhere.

As to Section 2443, however, it is difficult to imagine how it could ever be made available at all. So long as any allowance has been made by the budget commission for any fund, and the collection made on that account, such fund, prior to appropriation, could not be regarded as "exhausted," while there is no authority in Section 5649-3*d* for supplemental appropriations. Furthermore, if the commissioners undertake to make such a transfer at the time of making the September appropriation, they are prevented from so doing by two causes:

In the first place they may not in this manner make the funds sought to be transferred by them available for expenditure from the transfered funds in excess of the total amount fixed by the budget commission, exclusive of receipts and balances as provided in Section 5649-3*d;* in the second place they may not make any transfer at all, unless they have put in the annual budget an item specifically devoted to the reimbursement of the fund from which the transfer was made. This is for the reasons set forth in my opinion to Mr. Turner, namely, that the proceeds of a levy under the Smith Law are in the first instance set apart and devoted to the uses of the fiscal year succeeding the making of the levy.

Still another limitation upon the exercise of power under Section 2443 seems to exist. The section authorizes the transfer from a fund "levied and collected for a special purpose." There is no judicial definition of this phrase, excepting, possibly, in The Infirmary Directors vs. Commissioners, 6 O. N. P. n. s., 347-350. In this decision, and upon the reasoning there in embodied, it seems that most of the specific levies made by the county commissioners are to be regarded as levies for special purposes; but this would not include, in all probability, the levy for the general county fund. Therefore, in my opinion, a transfer may not lawfully be made at anytime from the general county fund under Section 2443.

In seeking further authority to transfer funds on the part of the county commissioners, I find no other provision, excepting that embodied in Sections 2296 et seq. of the General Code. I need not cite these sections as you are familiar with them. Suffice it to say they authorize a proceeding in the common pleas court for the transfer of the public funds under the supervision of anyone board or legislative body from one fund to another, in addition to all the other procedures provided by law. This procedure is available to accomplish the purposes set forth in your letter. In my opinion it should be followed in all cases where a fund at appropriation time is not completely exhausted; it will enable the commissioners in the case supposed by you to transfer from any fund of the county under their supervision to any other fund of the same kind whether exhausted or not. The difficulty arises here, however, because this transfer when made appears to be permanent and not temporary whereas a temporary transfer would be desirable and necessary in order to accomplish the results under consideration. The only way this difficulty could be obviated would be to appeal again to the commonpleas court, at the time of making the apropriation for the second half of the year, for a re-transfer of the amount originally transferred to the fund from which the first transfer was made. This procedure is, of course, cumbersome and not at all desirable, but it is the only one I have been able to work out under the statutes as they exist. It is just possible that the court in proceeding under Sections 2296 et seq. would, upon proper petition, order a temporary transfer for the purposes which you suggest. I do not undertake to lay down a rule for the guidance of courts in such matters.

For all of the foregoing reasons, then, I am of the opinion that in spite of the literal languages of Section 5649-3*d*, appropriations may be made only from funds in the treasury and not from the general treasury balance. That is to say, I am of the opinion that the funds of the county, and of the other taxing districts to which the section relates, are intended to be continued under the Smith Law, and not converted into one single fund. That being the case I am of the opinion further that the commissioners of the county are without authority at any one time to appropriate from a fund a greater amount than the ledger balance to the credit of that fund; that in order to expend a greater amount for such purposes than is shown by the ledger of the auditor to be in the fund at the time of making the appropriation, transfers may not be made under Section 2443 of the General Code, that being practicably inapplicable; and that recourse must be had to the cumbersome precedure outlined in Sections 2996 et seq. of the General Code.

I agree heartily with your assumption that at all events regardless of whether the transfer is permanent or otherwise, Section 5649-3*d* positively limits the amount to be appropriated in any one year for an object set forth in the annual budget to the amount fixed by the budget commission; so that even if there should be in a fund at any time other than at the end of a fiscal year an amount greater than the difference between the amount appropriated from the fund and the total amount fixed for the year by the budget commission, exclusive or receipts and balances, such amount would not be available for appropriation.

I also agree, of course, with your further assumption that at all times the appropriations made by the commissioners must not in the aggregate exceed the total amount of money actually in the treasury to the credit of all the funds combined at the time of making the appropriation.

The foregoing conclusions relate more particularly to the case as stated by you, but not necessarily to that hypothetically imagined by me. For the sake of clearness, I am impelled to qualify them to a certain extent insofar as they are to be applied to counties in which one or more funds were "overdrawn" on the books of the auditor prior to March 1, 1912. Here the situation is quite different from that before discussed. The auditor, prior to March 1, 1912, had the undoubted right to issue vouchers upon an exhausted fund, although after that date, as you have already been advised, he was without such power. The county treasurer, however, had no right to pay such vouchers. In fact, he was expressly prohibited from so doing by provisions of the law which I need not quote. At the same time, as I have already held in other opinions, the commissioners were without authority to transfer under Section 2443 from one fund to another and to make reimbursements out of any part of the proceeds of the 1911 levy for the purpose of meeting expenditures prior to March 1, 1912. For similar reasons, the county treasurer was not authorized to credit to any specific fund as an advance payment or otherwise any moneys in the undivided tax fund produced at the December collection of 1911 so as to make it available for expenditures prior to March 1, 1912. In short, none of the proceeds of the December collection of 1911 could legally be expended, except after appropriations made at the beginning of the fiscal year commencing on March 1, 1912. The reasons for this conclusion have all been set forth in other opinions with which you are familiar.

Now the treasurer's illegal act in paying vouchers out of what is virtually the undivided tax fund, whether or not attempted transfers or advance payments have been made, reduces the amount of such undivided tax fund and the amount of the general treasury cash balance on the books of the auditor. Of course this reduction appears as an overdraft in one or more specific funds. This overdraft could not be cancelled by the issuance of bonds under Section 5656 of the General Code, as I have already held in my opinion to Mr. Turner. The money having been paid, however, the question at once arises as to how the overdraft is to be treated. Without discussing the question further, and upon reasoning which I have set forth in other opinions, I beg to advise that in my judgment a discrepancy between the amount of money in the treasury and the amount which should be credited to the several funds on account of the two collections of 1912 is not to be charged against any one fund regardless of the purpose for which the expenditures were made. The case would be just exactly the same as if a portion of the money in the undivided tax fund or in the general treasury fund had been stolen or destroyed, excepting, of course, as to the technical liability of the county treasurer. I have already stated in my opinion to Mr. Turner that I did not believe that the treasurer could be made to respond in damages to the county on account of this illegal act.

The question as to how the ledger of the county auditor should be kept under circumstances such as those supposed is very difficult. I have been unable to reach any conclusion perfectly satisfactory to myself on this point. My best judgment is that in such cases the auditor's ledger before settlement should show the extent of the overdraft in the funds on which his warrants erroneously paid, as aforesaid, were drawn. This, in my judgment, the settlement should show the amount which ought to have been to the credit of the several funds if the payments had not been made; then the commissioners in making their appropriations would be required to limit them in the first instance to the amount in each fund, as shown by such fictitious settlement sheet, and in the second instance, in the aggregate to the amount of money actually in the treasury. For example, if in the illegal manner I have tried to describe there is created an overdraft in the general county fund equal to or in excess of the amount to be credited to that fund at the first semi-annual settlement under the Smith Law, the amount to the credit of that fund after such settlement should, nevertheless, be that which would have been to the credit of such fund if no such illegal expenditures had been made. The commissioners would then have power to appropriate from such funds up to the amount so fixed, but if they should undertake to so appropriate them they would have to reduce the appropriation from other funds to a sum less than the ledger balance of such other funds in order to keep the aggregate of that appropriation within or equal to the amount of money actually in the treasury.

In cases, then, where the necessity for appropriating more than what under the former practice would be the ledger balance to the credit of the fund arising from overdrafts in such fund was created in the manner described by me, my first conclusion of law does not necessarily apply, but the situation should be handled in the manner just described.

I, perhaps, owe you an apology for injecting into my opinion a question concerning which you did not specifically inquire. I did so from a desire to be accurate and because of a suspicion that you might have had in mind in asking the question which you did ask some cases in which the facts are as I have supposed them.

Your second question is rendered difficult of solution by facts that are not apparent on the face of the act. Section 5649-3*e* speaks of "the general fund;" the problem is, of course, to give to this term, not defined in this section, a meaning. One such meaning is suggested by you. I can conceive of but two alternatives: the fund in the treasury known by that name as "the general county fund," "general township fund," etc.; second, a new and distinct fund separate from all other funds which might more appropriately be termed "a residuary fund" consisting only of balances remaining over at the end of the year or after fixed charges have been terminated.

The first of these two suggested alternative meanings clearly cannot be adopted for the sufficient reason that there is no such "general fund" of the school district nor of the city or village. The choice, then, lies between the meaning suggested by you and the second one suggested by me. When I first considered this question, I was of the opinion that the matter would have to be adopted for the reason that the General Assembly evidently had before it in enacting Section 5649-3*e* Section 43*e* of the Municipal Code already referred to, and now consisting of Sections 3797 et seq. of the General Code.

It was provided in that statute that the unexpended appropriations and balances should "revert to the funds from which they were taken." It would seem reasonable that if the General Assembly intended the phrase "general fund" to mean "the funds from which they were taken," it would have used this language which was before it, and it is at least difficult to suppose the Legislature would have deliberately changed language so expressive as this without intending to use the phrase which it employed in a meaning different therefrom.

Two considerations, however, have inclined me to adopt the view suggested by you, which is equivalent to holding that the phrase "general fund" means "the funds from which they were taken" in the face of the above mentioned facts. In the first place Section 5649-3*e* speaks of "the general fund" as a fund already existing, not one created by virtue of the enactment of the law itself. This is rendered even clearer by the fact that the act contains no definition of what shall constitute the "general fund," but, as already pointed out, leaves the definition of that term to be sought for in other statutes. In the second place, the word "revert" has a meaning which is inconsistent with such a construction. In its primary and natural significance, this word means:

"To come back to a former place or position." (Century Dictionary)

The use of this word, then, is inconsistent with the idea that balances are to be passed to the credit of a fund other than that from which they were taken.

I am, therefore, of the opinion that the phrase "shall revert to the general fund" means, in effect, "shall revert to the funds from which they were taken; and, further, that the phrase "and shall then be subject to other authorized uses as such board or officers may determine" means "and they shall be subject to such other uses as are authorized to be made of such funds;" so that in order that a balance of an appropriation thus reverting may be expended for a purpose or use to which the original fund is not properly applicable, such balance must first be transferred in accordance with the law authorizing such transfers to the fund from which it is desired to make the new appropriation before being subject to expenditure in such matter.

I regret that the conclusion to which I have come will make it inconvenient to operate under the Smith Law and will perhaps confuse the bookkeeping of the counties. Supplementary legislation like that embodied in the Municipal Code with respect to the transfer of funds, or an amendment of Section 2443 of the General Code eliminating therefrom the word "exhausted" would answer the purpose of your first question.

Very truly yours,

TIMOTHY S. HOGAN,

Attorney General.

BOARD OF EDUCATION—VILLAGE SCHOOL DISTRICT HAVING NO BANK—PUBLICITY—CONTRACT ILLEGAL WHEN MEMBER OF BOARD IS STOCKHOLDER OF BANK.

A board of education of a village school district within which there is no bank cannot contract without publicity, with a bank for the deposit of school funds when a member of said board was a director and a stockholder in the said bank, for two reasons:

FIRST: Sections 7608 and 7807 of the General Code require such proceedings to be sufficiently public to enable banks conveniently located to compete for the contract and thereby enable the the board to select the bank "offering the highest rate of interest."

SECOND: Under Section 4757 of the General Code such a contract is void when a member of such board is pecuniarly interested as stockholder in such contracting bank.

May 31, 1912.

Bureau of Inspection and Supervision of Public Offices, Department of Auditor of State, Columbus, Ohio.

GENTLEMEN:—I am in receipt of your letter of April 3, 1912, where in you state:

> "There is no bank within the boundary of a certain village school district. The Board of Education of this district contracted with a certain bank making the bank the depositary for the school funds. This contract was made without submitting the same to bids, or without any publicity prior to the awarding of the contract which would be calculated to induce other banks to bid for the depositary. 'H' was a member of the board of education of the village school district and was also director in the bank now acting as depository for the school funds at the time the contract was made, and is still a member of both boards.
> "Is the contract thus entered into by the board of education of the school district legal?"

Two considerations induce me to the opinion that the contract of which you speak was illegal. In the first place, Section 7608 of the General Code provides as follows:

> "The resolution and contract in the next four preceding sections provided for, shall set forth fully all details necessary to carry into effect the authority therein given. All proceedings connected with the adoption of such resolution and the making of such contract must be conducted in such a manner as to insure full publicity and shall be open at all times to public inspection."

This section applies both to the case of a district containing two or more banks and to that of a district in which less than two banks are situated. Without quoting all the sections, which will hereafter be quoted in the course of this opinion, suffice it to say that while in the former case the board of education is required to advertise for competitive bids and in the latter case no such requirement is contained in the statute, yet, the above quoted provision of Section 7608 precludes the board of education of a district containing less than two banks from arbitrarily selecting a single bank as the depositary without giving some opportunity to other banks to qualify as such. That is to say, while under Section 7607 the determination of what banks are "conveniently located" rests within the sound discretion of the board of education, this discretion must not be abused; and the evident intention of that section, read in connection with Section 7608, is that such degree of publicity shall be given to the proceedings of the board of education, in the adoption of the resolution and the making of the contract necessary for the designation of a depositary, that a considerable number of banks may be induced to bid for the funds.

In selecting the depositary, then, the board of education is authorized to consider the convenience of location in connection with the rate of interest offered.

The foregoing conclusion is supported not only by the express provisions of Section 7608, but also by that of Section 7607, which is as follows:

> "The board of education may enter into a contract with one or more banks that are conveniently located and offer the highest rate of interest."

It is obvious that the board of education could not legally act under this section without knowing what banks "conveniently located" offer the highest rate of interest; and that this fact, in turn, could not be ascertained without offering an opportunity to numerous banks to offer to take the contract in question.

For the foregoing reasons, then, I am of the opinion that a depositary contract made by the Board of Education of a district containing less than two banks, with a single bank, without any publicity, and without notifying any other banks of the proceeding, is illegal, at least presumptively so.

But there is another, and in itself a sufficient reason, for the conclusion which I have reached. Section 7607 of the General Code, as amended, 101 OHIO LAWS, 290, heretofore referred to in this opinion, provides in full as follows:

> "In all school districts containing less than two banks, after the adoption of a resolution providing for the deposit of its funds, the board of education may enter into a contract with one or more banks that are conveniently located and offer the highest rate of interest, which shall not be less than two per cent. for the full time the funds or any part thereof are on deposit. Such bank or banks shall give good and sufficient bond, or shall deposit bonds of the United States, the state of Ohio, or county, municipal, township or school bonds issued by the authority of the state of Ohio, at the option of the board of education, at least equal to the amount deposited. The treasurer of the school district must see that a greater sum than that contained in the bond is not deposited in such bank or banks, and he and his bondsmen shall be liable for any loss occasioned by deposits in excess of such bonds."

It will be observed that the section authorizes the board of education to enter into a contract with any conveniently situated bank which qualifies otherwise. The procedure is quite different from that outlined in the preceding section, which I shall not quote. That section, which applies to the case in which the district contains two or more banks, requires that competitive bids be solicited in the manner therein described, and the board of education has nothing whatever to do, excepting to determine the sufficiency of the security offered by the successful bidder.

Under Section 7607, above quoted, however, the arrangement entered into between the board of education and the bank has every element of a contract. That being the case, I am of the opinion that Section 4757 of the General Code applies. That section is as follows:

> "Conveyances made by a board of education shall be executed by the president and clerk thereof. No member of the board shall have directly or indirectly any pecuniary interest in any contract of the board or be employed in any manner for compensation by the board of which he is a member, except as clerk or treasurer. No contract shall be binding upon any board unless it is made or authorized at a regular or special meeting of such board."

My predecessor, Hon. Wade H. Ellis, rendered an opinion to the prosecuting attorney of Holmes County, in which he held that the section last above quoted would not render invalid a depository award made under what is now Section 7605 and Section 7606 of the General Code. In the course of that opinion he stated, speaking of what is now Section 4757, General Code, that:

> "If this section is applicable at all, it would render voidable all contracts between a bank and a school board on which there was a single member who was also a stockholder in a bank, regardless of whether his vote was necessary to pass a resolution. (Bellaire Goblet Company vs. Findlay, 5 O. C. C., 418)"

The former attorney-general's reasoning was that inasmuch as a board of education of a school district having two or more banks has nothing whatever to do of a discretionary nature after it has passed the resolution now required by law, for the establishment of a depository, but is required by law to award the deposit of its funds to such bank or banks which offers the highest rate of interest and sufficient security, the case was not within the obvious intendment of the prohibitory section.

I have already pointed out the fundamental distinctions between the nature of the act of the board of education under Section 7605 and the corresponding act under Section 7607 of the General Code. The reasoning of Mr. Ellis' opinion, applied to what is now Section 7607, General Code, would produce results opposite to that which it produced as applied to the other sections. I am in accord with that reasoning, and give it to you as my opinion, that from the authority of the case cited by Mr. Ellis, and other cases to the same effect, a contract between a board of education of a school district in which there are fewer than two banks, and a bank for the deposit of the funds of the district is rendered void by reason of any interest in the bank which may be possessed by any member of the board of education.

I assume, as a matter of course, that the bank director is also a stockholder of the bank. A stockholder's interest, while small and indirect, has been repeatedly held sufficient to constitute a violation of statutes like Section 4757.

Very truly yours,

TIMOTHY S. HOGAN,
Attorney General.

MUNICIPAL CORPORATIONS LIABILITY FOR PREMIUM UPON AN APPEAL BOND.

A city is granted the power to sue and be sued, and to make necessary contracts. A city may therefore perfect an appeal and when in so doing it contracts with a surety company for an appeal bond it is liable for the premiums thereon.

June 28, 1912.

Bureau of Inspection and Supervision of Public Offices, Department of Auditor of State, Columbus, Ohio.

GENTLEMEN:— Your communication of January 2d in reference to cost of an appeal bond is as follows:

> "Is the cost of an appeal bond secured of a security company in a case in which the city is a party, a legal charge against the city?"

Particularly referring to the cost of appeal bonds of the City of Dayton in the case of the Dayton Reduction Company vs. The City of Dayton, Ohio.

Your question presupposes that all the necessary steps have been taken for the execution of the appeal bonds and the perfecting of the case in the circuit court. The city having given a surety bond under proper authority, the premium upon these bonds is a necessary charge against the city and must be paid as any other indebtedness of the city.

Section 3615, General Code, gives the power to municipal corporations to sue and be sued.

Section 3616, General Code, provides:

> "All municipal corporations shall have the general powers mentioned in this chapter, and council may provide by ordinance or resolution for the exercise and enforcement of them."

> "Municipal corporations, in their public capacity, possess such powers and such only, as are expressly granted by statute, and such as may be implied as essential to carry into effect those which are expressly granted."

Ravenna vs. Penn. Co., 75 O. S., 118.

Municipal corporations have the same "power to make contracts advantageous to the municipality as that of an individual."

Columbus vs. Railway Company—2 C. C. (N. S.) 305, 25 C. C., 663.

The city having the right of appeal under the general statutes has also the powers, which are necessary to carry out powers expressly granted, and has, therefore, the right and power to carry out and perfect that appeal, by contracting for and securing surety bonds therefor, and to pay the premium thereon, the same as an individual.

See 2 C. C. (N. S.) 305, herein cited.

The city, therefore, dealing with the surety company does so as an individual, and the cost of an appeal secure of a surety company in a case in which the city is a party, is a legal charge against the city to be paid as other claims.

Very respectfully,

TIMOTHY S. HOGAN,
Attorney General.

OFFICES INCOMPATIBLE—COUNTY COMMISSIONERS AND MEMBER OF BOARD OF DEPUTY STATE SUPERVISOR OF ELECTIONS.

Inasmuch as there are certain expenses of the Board of Elections which cannot be allowed except upon the approval of the County Commissioners, the office of County Commissioner and that of member of the Board of Deputy State Supervisors of Election are incompatible.

July 6, 1912.

Bureau of Inspection and Supervision of Public Offices, Columbus, Ohio.

GENTLEMEN:—This morning you orally submitted a request for opinion from this department as to whether or not the offices of county commissioner and member of Deputy State Supervisors of Elections were incompatible.

As far as I could find there is no statutory inhibition against the holding of the two offices, and consequently the matter resolves itself into whether or not by reason of the duties devolving upon each of said offices the same become incompatible.

I would call your attention to Section 4821 of the General Code which provides in part as follows:

> "All proper and necessary expenses of the board of deputy state supervisors shall be paid from the county treasury as other county expenses, and the county commissioners shall make the necessary levy to provide therefor."

Section 5052 of the General Code provides:

> "All expenses of printing and distributing ballots, cards of explanation to officers of the election and voters, blanks, and proper and necessary expenses of any general or special election, including compensation of precinct election officers, shall be paid from the county treasury, as other county expenses."

Section 2460, General Code, provides in part:

> "No claims against the county shall be paid otherwise than upon the allowance of the county commissioners, upon the warrant of the county auditor, except in those cases in which the amount due is fixed by law, or is authorized to be fixed by some other person or tribunal, in which case it shall be paid upon the warrant of the county auditor, upon the proper certificate of the person or tribunal allowing the claim."

In an opinion rendered to the Hon. W. B. Gongwer, Deputy Clerk, Board of Elections of Cuyahoga County, under date of June 27, 1911, I gave it as my opinion that in view of the provisions of Section 2460, General Code, the county commissioners have the right to exercise supervision over all expenses incurred by the Board of Deputy State Supervisors and Inspectors of Elections, except those the amount of which is fixed by law or authorized to be paid out of the county treasury or city treasury upon voucher of the Board of Deputy State Supervisors and certified by the chief deputy and clerk thereof as set forth in the various sections of the General Code. It would, therefore, appear that there are certain election expenses which can only be paid upon allowance of the county commissioners. To permit the holding of the office of county commissioner and that of a member of the board of deputy state supervisors of elections would permit such member to pass upon bills incurred by the board of which he is a member by himself as one of the county commissioners. I believe that this is a sufficient check of one office upon the other as to create an incompatibility in the holding of both at the same time.

Very truly yours,
TIMOTHY S. HOGAN,
Attorney General.

COMPENSATION OF POLICE JUDGE—REDUCTION FOR DAYS OF ABSENCE IN EXCESS OF SIXTY.

When a regular Police Judge is off the bench for more than sixty days in any one year his compensation is reduced to the extent that his absence exceeds sixty days, regardless of whether one or several acting police judges have performed his duties in his absence.

Each acting judge receives compensation for his period of duty on the same basis as the regular judge.

June 27, 1912.

Bureau of Inspection and Supervision of Public Offices, Columbus, Ohio.

GENTLEMEN:—I beg to acknowledge receipt of your letter of December 29, 1911, in which you say:

> "Under Section 4569 G. C., an 'acting police judge' may be selected under certain conditions and Section 4570 provides that such acting police judge shall be paid in the same manner and at the same rate as the police judge, and that amount so paid shall not be deducted from the compensation of the police judge if the holding of the court by the acting judge does not exceed sixty days in any one year.
> "If one or more acting police judges be selected in any one year no one of whom holds court for sixty days, but the aggregate number of days of court held by such acting police judge or judges exceeds sixty days in any one year, what if any compensation shall be deducted from the salary of the regular police judge? Shall the compensation for the aggregate time served by all the acting judges be deducted or only for the time in excess of sixty days? May the same acting police judge hold court sixty days and then be re-appointed and take a new oath of office and hold court sixty more days without his compensation being deducted from that of the police judge?
> "Would the city be required to make deduction from the salary of the regular judge under the same conditions as the county?"

I do not see much difficulty in disposing of your queries. The police judge is a salaried officer for a fixed term, with jurisdiction in the city and within four miles thereof. He is paid by the city and county, as provided in Section 4568 G. C.

By Section 4573 G. C. the court is required to always be open for transaction of business, adjourning from day to day, etc., with monthly terms commencing the first Monday of the month.

By Section 4569 G. C., an "acting police judge" may be chosen, for the reasons therein stated.

Under this section, during a year, there might be chosen several "acting police judges," serving such times, successively, as the emergencies might require. Each of said "acting police judges," by Section 4570 G. C., would, respectively, be entitled to pay for the time he acted as such, on same basis as the regular judge.

If, during any year, any or all of such "acting judges" were not on duty as such, in the aggregate over sixty days, then the regular judge is entitled to his entire annual salary. But, if the holding of such court by any or all of said "acting judges," in any year, exceeds, in the aggregate, sixty days, then the regular judge must lose so much of his salary as is in excess of sixty days.

I other words, the regular judge is allowed to be off of the bench sixty days in a year, and no more, and it makes no difference whether one or a dozen "acting judges" take his place, their times of serving must be taken as cumulative for a year, and the regular judge's salary computed and paid accordingly.

The city and county should each make deductions from the regular judge's salary when he is not on duty as aforesaid. Very truly yours,

TIMOTHY S. HOGAN,
Attorney General.

ELECTION EXPENSES—TABLE OF, APPROVED—COMPENSATION OF CLERKS—PUBLISHING NOTICES—INVESTIGATION AND PROSECUTION OF ELECTION LAW AND REGISTRATION LAW VIOLATIONS—VOTING PLACES—NO CHARGE TO COUNTY FOR RENT OF TOWN HALL.

Under Section 4821 of the General Code in counties having no registration, cities where assistant clerks to the Board of Elections are unauthorized, persons may be hired to compile and tabulate election returns, and they may be compensated under the head of "proper and necessary expenses."

Under Section 4852 of the General Code ballot boxes must be paid for by the county and should not be charged back against other subdivisions.

The expense of posting or publishing notices of elections should be paid by the political subdivision affected.

The expense of investigating and prosecuting violations of registration laws should be paid by the registration cities.

The expenses incurred in the investigation and prosecution of violations of election laws should be paid in the same manner as other general expenses of an election. Such expenses pertaining to elections in odd numbered years shall be paid by the county and charged back, those paid in even numbered years shall not be charged back.

The rent for voting places in a township or municipality other than a registration city should be paid by the county as a proper and necessary expense of an election under Sections 4821 and 5052 of the General Code, to be charged back in odd numbered years under Section 5053 of the General Code.

Townships and municipalities may not charge the county rental for use of its public hall or building for holding elections therein.

All other items of expense in schedules submitted are in accordance with prior opinion.

July 8, 1912.

Bureau of Inspection and Supervision of Public Offices, Columbus, Ohio.

GENTLEMEN:—Your favor of July 5, 1912, is received, in which you state:

"We hand you herewith three schedules relating to the payment of election expenses, denominated respectively, Schedules A, and B, and C, which were compiled by Mr. C. E. Brotton, one of the state examiners of this department in conformity to your written opinion to this department on this subject under date of February 27, 1912.

"Will you kindly review the schedules, and make the necessary corrections therein, if any, and embody the same in a letter or opinion to this department at your earliest convenience?"

The schedules enclosed are as follows:

"2. Printing cards of explanation to officers and voters.

"3. Printing blanks required for such elections.

"4. Compensation of precinct election officers.

"5. Other proper and necessary expenses of any general or special election.

"The above phrase "proper and necessary expenses" is held to include:—

"a. Expenses incurred in setting up and returning voting equipment under Section 5046 G. C.

"b. Investigation and prosecution of violation of election laws relating to the right of suffrage and the conduct of elections:—Section 4800 G. C.

"c. Coal for heat and oil for light for voting places.

"d. Any other proper and necessary expense provided by law and not specifically enumerated under this or the foregoing schedules A or B.

"NOTE:—The statutes make no provision for the personal expenses of either the members or clerk in either even or odd-numbered years.

"SCHEDULE B.

"Expenses to be paid by county and registration cities both even and odd-numbered years.

"Salaries members and clerk general elections:—Sections 4822, G. C. and 4942, G. C.

"Based on the number of precincts at the preceding November election.

"The maximum salary provided in Section 4943, G. C., is to be apportioned between the county and the city in the ratio of product obtained by multiplying the whole number of precincts in the county by the rate per precinct, under Section 4822, G. C., to the product obtained by multiplying the number of city precincts by the rates per precinct under Section 4942, G. C.

"The first should be paid quarterly by the county and the second should be paid monthly by the city.

"Salaries of members and clerks, primary election:—Section 4990, G. C.

"Based upon number of precincts at the time of holding primary.

"The total amount to be paid members and clerk which is obtained by multiplying the total number of precincts in the county by the rates per precinct of $2.00 and $3.00, respectively, as provided by Section 4990, G. C.

"The total amount to be paid, thus obtained should be apportioned between the city and the county and paid in the same ratio and in the same manner as the salaries for such members and clerk for general elections.

"SCHEDULE D.

"Expenses to be paid by registration cities—Direct in both even and odd numbered years.

"Section 4946, G. C.

"Salaries of assistant clerks, as provided by Section 4877, G. C.

"Voting shelves:—Section 5044 G. C.

"Guard Rails:—Section 5045, G. C.

"Section 4800, G. C.

"Investigation and prosecution of violation of election laws relating to registration of voters.

"Expenses to be paid by the county in both even and odd-numbered years. Never to be charged back.

"Section 4852, G. C. Ballot Boxes.

"Section 5048, G. C. Pool books and tally sheets, at all elections except special elections in a registration city.

"Section 5044, G. C. Voting shelves or booths, for precincts outside of registration cities.

"Section 5045, G. C. Guard rail for precincts outside of registration cities.

"SCHEDULE E.

"Expenses to be paid by county in even-numbered years—Not charged back.

"Expenses to be paid by county in odd-numbered years—Charged back.

"Section 4945, G. C.

"The above section provides that 'For November elections held in even numbered years, the county in which such city is located shall pay the general expenses of such election, other than the expenses of registration.'

"Section 5052, G. C.

"This section construed together with the language of Section 4945, G. C., seems to classify the general expenses mentioned in the last named section, as follows:

"1. Printing and distributing ballots.

"2. Printing cards of explanation to officers and voters.

"3. Printing blanks required for such election.

"4. Compensation of precinct election officers.

"5. Other proper and necessary expenses of any general or special election.

"a. This is held to include expenses incurred in setting up and returning voting equipment under Section 5046, G. C.

"b. Investigations and prosecutions of violation of election laws relating to the right of suffrage and the conduct of elections—Section 4800, G. C.

"c. Any other proper and necessary expenses provided by law and not specifically enumerated under foregoing schedules B, C, and D.

The greater part of the items in the foregoing schedules were passed upon in the opinion of February 27, 1912, to which you refer. Some items are not covered by that opinion. These will now be considered.

In the opinion of February 27 it is held that there is no provisions for an assistant clerk to the board of deputy state supervisors of elections in counties having no registration cities or city. You state that where boards employ an assistant clerk at a fixed monthly salary, it is held illegal, but that where an assistant clerk is employed at a nominal per diem to assist in tabulating and compiling election returns, no findings have been made.. As authority for this you cite Section 4821, General Code, which provides:

> "All proper and necessary expenses of the board of deputy state supervisors shall be paid from the county treasury as other county expenses, and the county commissioners shall make the necessary levy to provide therefor. In counties containing annual registration cities, such expenses shall include expenses duly authorized and incurred in the investigation and prosecution of offenses against laws relating to the registration of electors, the right of suffrage and the conduct of elections."

The term "all proper and necessary expenses of the board" in my opinion will include the compensation of persons who are necessarily employed to assist in compiling and tabulating the election returns. It will not, however, authorize the board to create a position of assistant clerk and pay him a stipulated salary as is done in the case of the clerk.

The schedule provides for the payment of ballot boxes by the county by authority of Section 4852, General Code, which section reads:

> "The deputy state supervisors of each county shall cause to be provided at the expense of the county a ballot box for each election precinct therein, and cause it to be deposited with the proper township or village clerk or city auditor. Each such officer shall cause a ballot box with a copy of this title to be delivered at each place of holding elections in his township or corporation as often as elections are held therein. After such election, such ballot box shall be forthwith returned to him by the judges of election for safekeeping. In registration cities, the care of the ballot boxes to be used at any election shall devolve upon the board of deputy state supervisors."

This section provides that the ballot box shall be provided at the expense of the county. The language used in this section as to payment for ballot boxes is the same as used in Section 5048, General Code, as to payment for poll books. As held in construing Section 5048, General Code, in the former opinion, so in construing Section 4852, supra, it must be held that the ballot boxes must be paid for by the county and should not be charged back.

The schedule refers to payment of township election notices, cost of publishing mayor's proclamation and of notices for school elections.

Section 4833, General Code, provides:

> "The constable who receives such warrant shall notify the electors of the township by posting copies of the warrant in at least three public places in the township at least ten days before the meeting of the electors. If the office of one or more of the trustees is vacant, the township clerk, together with the trustee or trustees in office, shall issue such warrant."

"Section 4837, General Code, provides:

> "Previous to any election for municipal officers, the mayor shall issue a proclamation to the electors of the corporation or of the respective wards or districts thereof, as the case may require, setting forth the time and places of election and the officers to be chosen, and cause such proclamation to be published in a newspaper printed in the corporation at least ten days previous to the election. If no such newspaper is published in the corporation, such notice may be given by posters."

Section 4839, General Code, provides:

> "The clerk of each board of education shall publish a notice of all school elections in a newspaper of general circulation in the district or post written or printed notices thereof in five public places in the district at least ten days before the holding of such election. Such notice shall specify the time and place of the education, the number of members of the board of education to be elected, and the term for which they are to be elected, or the nature of the question to be voted upon."

Section 3346, General Code, provides:

> "The constable who advertises the time of holding elections and notifies the township officers of their election, shall be allowed a reasonable compensation therefor, to be fixed by the trustees and paid from the township treasury."

Section 3346, supra, requires payment for notices of township elections to be paid from the township treasury.

It will be observed that the various notices are given by officers of the political divisions for which the elections are to be held. They are for the benefit of such districts. It is a duty pertaining to an officer of the township, municipality, or school district. Neither the county nor the board of elections have any control over such expense or any duty to perform in reference thereto. The expense of posting or publishing such notices should be paid by the political division affected.

Notices of township elections should be paid by the township. Publishing of mayor's proclamation of election should be paid by the municipality and the publishing of notices of school elections should be paid by the school district.

The schedule contains several provisions for payment of expenses connected with the investigation and prosecution of violation of election laws. It states that such expense, when pertaining to elections should be paid by the county in all years, and shall not be charged back in even-numbered years, but shall be charged back in odd-numbered years; and that such expense for violation of registration laws shall be paid by the registration city.

Section 4800, General Code, provides:

> "The board of deputy state supervisors and inspectors shall investigate and prosecute all violations of the laws relating to the registration of electors, the right of suffrage and the conduct of elections, and make report thereof to the state supervisor and inspector. When approved by the state supervisor and inspector and by a vote of a majority of its members, each such board may incur any expense necessary to the conduct of such investigations and prosecutions."

The last sentence in Section 4821, General Code, supra, provides:

> "In counties containing annual general registration cities, such expense shall include expenses duly authorized and incurred in the investigation and prosecution of offenses against laws relating to the registration of electors, the right of suffrage and the conduct of elections."

Section 4945, General Code, provides:

> "For November elections held in even-numbered years, the county in which such city is located shall pay the general expenses of such election other than the expenses of registration. Such allowance and order of the board for such expenses and compensation to such judges and clerks of elections shall be certified by the chief deputy and clerk to the auditor of such county, who shall issue his warrants upon the county treasury for the amounts so certified."

The expense of registration is excepted from the part of the expense of an election which the county is to pay in even-numbered years. The expense of registration is to be paid by the registration city, by authority of Section 4946, General Code, as held in the opinion of February 27, 1912. Nothing is said in said Section 4946, about the expense of investigating and prosecuting violations of registration laws. Such an expense would be an expense pertaining to the registration of electors, and should be paid by the registration city.

Section 5052, General Code, provides:

> "All expenses of printing and distributing ballots, cards of explanation to officers of the election and voters, blanks, and other proper and necessary expenses of any general or special election, including compensation of precinct election officers, shall be paid from the county treasury, as other county expenses."

Section 5053, General Code, provides:

> "In November elections held in odd-numbered years, such compensation and expenses shall be a charge against the township, city, village or political division in which such election was held, and the amount so paid by the county shall be retained by the county auditor from funds due such township, city, village or political division, at the time of making the semi-annual distribution of taxes. The amount of such expenses > shall be ascertained and apportioned by the deputy state supervisors to the several political divisions and certified to the county auditor. In municipalities situated in two or more counties, the proportion of expense charged to each of such counties shall be ascertained and apportioned by the clerk or auditor of the municipality and certified by him to the several county auditors."

It will be observed that Section 4821, General Code, provides that all necessary and proper expenses of the board shall be paid from the county treasury and that the county commissioners shall make the necessary levy therefor. This expense shall include expenses incurred in investigation and prosecution of violations of election and registration laws in counties containing annual general registration cities. This provision does not affect the provisions of Sections 5052 and 5053, General Code, as to the payment of proper and necessary expenses from the county treasury and the right of the county to charge back such expense.

The expenses incurred in the investigation and prosecution of violations of election laws should be paid in the same manner as other general expenses of a particular election. For violations of election laws at elections in even-numbered years, such expense shall be paid by the county and not charged back, and in odd-numbered years shall be paid by the county and charged back.

The schedule states that the expense of providing a room for voting place in a township or municipality must be paid by the township or municipality by authority of Section 4844, General Code.

Said section reads:

> "Elections shall be held for each township precinct at such place within the township as the trustees thereof shall determine to be most convenient of access for the voters of the precinct. Elections shall be held for each municipal or ward precinct at such place as the council of the corporation shall designate. In registration cities, the deputy state supervisors shall designate the places of holding elections in each precinct."

The expense of furnishing voting booths and voting rooms with chairs, fuel, light, voting shelves, etc., is covered by the opinion of February 27, 1912.

Section 4844, General Code, provides that the township trustees shall select the place of voting in the township precincts; that the council of the corporation shall select the place in municipalities; and that the board of elections shall designate the place in registration cities. Nothing is said in this section as to who shall pay for such rooms or places. The payment of the rent of voting places is specifically provided for in registration cities and has been covered in the opinion of February 27.

There is no specific provision of statutes directing how the rent for voting places in a township or in a municipality other than a registration city, shall be paid. In the absence of such specific provision, any necessary expense incurred for renting rooms for elections in such places would constitute a proper and necessary expense of the election to be paid as provided in Sections 4821 and 5052, General Code, by the county, and to be charged back in odd-numbered years as provided in Section 5053, General Code.

You refer to the report of the Attorney General of 1906, at page 109. An opposite holding is apparently made by the Attorney General in the opinions of 1909-1910 at page 602.

A question will arise as to the right of a township or municipal corporation to charge the county rental for the use of its public hall or building for holding elections therein. I find no authority to make such charge. Said buildings are provided for public purposes and it adds no expense to the township or municipality to permit the use of such building for elections.

With the one exception as to payment of rent for rooms for voting places in townships or municipalities, other than registration cities, the schedules as submitted are approved. It properly states the manner in which the election expenses shall be paid, except as above noted.

Respectfully,
TIMOTHY S. HOGAN,
Attorney General.

ADMISSION OF MINORS, ADULTS, AND EPILEPTICS TO INSTITUTION FOR FEEBLE MINDED—PROCEDURE—CERTIFICATE AND TESTIMONY OF MEDICAL WITNESSES.

Under Section 1892 of the General Code the Trustees of the State Institution for feeble minded, shall prescribe the rules of admission for pupils under 15 years of age and medical witnesses are therefore not necessarily required for the admission of such.

Feeble minded persons over 15 years of age who are not public charges, can only be admitted to the institution by commitment by a probate judge after witnesses are subpoenaed, hearing had and certificate signed by two medical witnesses. Public charges, however, may be admitted upon simple application.

By virtue of the requirement of Section 1902 of the General Code that feeble minded adults may be committed to the institution for feeble minded only upon pursuing the same course of legal commitment as governs admission to the state hospital for the insane, the testimony and certificate of two medical witnesses are essential.

By virtue of Section 2045 of the General Code the certificate of only one physician is required to admit an epileptic to the state institution for epileptics.

Bureau of Inspection and Supervision of Public Offices, Department of Auditor of State, Columbus, Ohio.

GENTLEMEN:—Your favor of May 29th received. You inquire:

> "1st. Whether two medical witnesses are required for the admission of patients to the institution for the feeble minded who are under legal age.
> "2d. Does a requirement that the same course of legal commitment be followed, as provided in Section 1902, governing admission to state hospitals for the insane, authorize the payment of fees provided in Section 1981?
> "3d. In the commitment of patients to state institutions for epileptics is an examination and certificate by two physicians required?"

Answering your first question, Section 1891 provides for the admission of pupils to the Institution for Feeble Minded Youth not over fifteen years of age, residents of the state, who are capable of receiving instructions. Section 1892 provides for the rules governing admission of pupils and is as follows:

> "The trustees shall prescribe and publish instructions and forms for the admission of pupils, and may include in them such interrogatories as > they think necessary or useful. Such instructions and form shall be furnished to any person applying therefor, and also be sent in sufficient numbers to the probate judges in the several counties."

Under authority of Section 1892, General Code, the Board of Administration, who succeeded to all the duties of the Board of Trustees of the Institution for Feeble Minded Youth, may provide the terms and requirements for admission of pupils to this institution. No medical examination is required. The statute does not provide that applicants should first be examined as to their mental condition, but authorizes the board to prescribe and publish instructions and forms for the admission of pupils; and they may include therein such interrogatories as they may think necessary or useful to have answered.

This view is sustained by the case of Doran vs. Fleming, 17 Circuit Decisions 737.

Section 1893, General Code, provides for the admission of pupils over fifteen years of age; it is as follows:

> "If the capacity of the institution allows the reception of pupils besides those above described, the trustees may admit persons of greater age, and persons not resident in the state. For all who are not residents of the state for the required time, the trustees shall charge and receive for the institution a fair rate of compensation, to be fixed by them."

I have already held, in an opinion addressed to Dr. E. J. Emerick, of the date of September 25, 1911, that feeble minded persons over fifteen years of age, who are not public charges, can only be admitted to the institution by commitment by a probate judge, after witnesses are subpoenaed, hearing had, and a certificate signed by two medical witnesses; that persons who are public charges may be admitted upon simple application.

So that, answering your question specifically, two medical witnesses are not required to admit persons under fifteen years of age, eligible to be admitted to the Institution for Feeble Minded Youth; and two witnesses are not required to admit persons over fifteen and under twenty-one years of age, who are public charges, and who are admitted under authority of Section 1893, General Code; but two medical witnesses are required for persons over fifteen years of age and under twenty-one years of age, not public charges, who are admitted to the institution.

Coming now to your second question, Section 1902 provides as follows:

> "Feeble minded adults of such inoffensive habits as to make them proper subjects for classification and discipline in the institution may be admitted, on pursuing the same course of legal commitment as govern admission to the state hospital for the insane."

Proceedings for admission of the insane are found in Section 1953, et seq. General Code. To admit patients to a hospital for the insane requires the certificate of two medical witnesses, who are allowed, under Section 1981, General Code, five dollars each for making the examination and certificate. Section 1902, above quoted, provides: Feeble minded adults may be committed to the institution for feeble minded youth on pursuing the same course of legal commitment which governs admission to state hospitals for the insane. It therefore requires the testimony and certificate of two medical witnesses to commit feeble minded adults to the institution, and they are entitled to five dollars for making the examination and certificate, as provided in Section 1981, General Code.

Answering your third question, Sections 2045 and 2046 of the General Code provide as follows:

> "Application for admission to the hospital of an epileptic person, other than insane or dangerous, first shall be made in writing by such person, his or her parent, guardian or representative, to the probate court of the county in which the epileptic is resident. If such epileptic has no parent, guardian or representative, any citizen may make such application on his behalf. (Section 2405).
> "Not more than five days after the application is filed, on the day fixed by him, the probate judge shall examine and inquire whether the alleged epileptic is a suitable person for admission into the hospital, and for such purpose may subpoena witnesses. He shall subpoena a reputable physician, and, if necessary, may issue his warrant commanding the alleged epileptic to be brought before him. If deemed unsuitable to bring him into the probate court, the judge shall personally visit such person, and certify that he so ascertained his condition by actual inspection. The other proceedings then may be had in the absence of such person. (Section 2406)"

It is expressly provided in Section 2045 that the certificate of only one physician is required to admit an epileptic to the state institution for epileptics.

Very truly yours,

TIMOTHY S. HOGAN,

Attorney General.

COMPENSATION OF WATCHMAN AND JANITOR OF COUNTY JAIL—ALLOWANCE OF COUNTY COMMISSIONERS TO SHERIFF FOR KEEPING AND FEEDING PRISONERS.

Under Section 2997 of the General Code the County Commissioners must make an allowance to the sheriff in addition to his salary for the keeping and feeding of prisoners and all employes hired by the sheriff must be paid by him from this fund.

Under Section 2410 of the General Code the County Commissioners may employ and pay out of the general fund of the county such watchman, jaintors and other employes as are deemed necessary for the care and custody of the jail building only.

Under Section 3161 of the General Code the sheriff may appoint his deputy keeper of the jail. Such deputy must be paid however from the allowance made by the county commissioners under Section 2980 of the General Code, and should be paid from the fee fund.

July 10, 1912.

Bureau of Inspection and Supervision of Public Offices, Columbus, Ohio.

GENTLEMEN:—Your favor of June 20, 1912, is received in which you inquire:

> "May the county commissioners employ and pay out of the general county fund watchmen and janitors for the county jail?
> "If a sheriff appoints one of his deputies jailer under Section 3161, shall he be paid from the sheriff's fee fund or the general county fund?
> "Under Section 2850, the mommissioners shall make the sheriff an allowance for keeping and feeding prisoners in jail. Section 2410 provides that the commissioners may employ such watchmen, janitors and other employes for the care and custody of the jail as they deem necessary. Under these related sections, is it the duty of the sheriff to safeguard and keep the prisoners at his own expense in consideration of the amount allowed him for their board, or can the commissioners employ a turnkey and watchmen for the safeguarding of the prisoners and pay them out of the general county fund?"

Section 3157, General Code, provides:

"The sheriff shall have charge of the jail of the county, and all persons confined there, keep them safely, attend to the jail, and govern and regulate it according to the rules and regulations prescribed by the court of common pleas."

By virtue of this section the sheriff is made the keeper of the jail.

Section 3161, General Code, provides:

"The sheriff may appoint one of his deputies to be keeper of the jail."

Instead of performing the duties of keeper of the jail personally, the sheriff may appoint one of his deputies as the keeper of the jail.

Section 2980, General Code, provides:

"On the twentieth of each November such officer shall prepare and file with the county commissioners a detailed statement of the probable amount necessary to be expended for deputies, assistants, bookkeepers, clerks and other employes, except court constables, of their respective offices, showing in detail the requirements of their offices for the year begining January 1st next thereafter with the sworn statement of the amount expended by them for such assistants for the preceding year. Not later than five days after the filing of such statement the county commissioners shall fix an aggregate sum to be expended for such period for the compensation of such deputies, assistants, bookkeepers, clerks or other employes of such officer, except court constables, which sum shall be reasonable and proper, and shall enter such finding upon their journal."

Section 2980-1, General Code, limits the amount to be allowed to such offices to a certain percentage of the fees of such office.

Section 2981, General Code, provides:

"Such officers may appoint and employ necessary deputies, assistants, clerks, bookkeepers or other employes for their respective offices, fix their compensation and discharge them, and shall file with the county auditor certificates of such action. When so fixed, the compensation of each duly appointed or employed deputy, assistant, bookkeeper, clerk or other employe shall be paid monthly from the county treasury."

Section 2987, General Code, provides:

"The deputies, assistants, clerks, bookkeepers, and other employes of such offices shall be paid upon the warrant of the county auditor, from the fees, costs, percentages, penalties, allowances, or other perquisites or sums of whatever kind collected and paid into the county treasury and credited by the treasurer to the fee fund of such offices."

The foregoing sections authorize the county commissioners to make an annual allowance for the payment of the compensation of deputies and other employes in the office of the sheriff and other county offices. The amount to be allowed must not exceed the percentages of the fees of the office as prescribed in Section 2980-1, General Code. While the compensation of deputies is paid from the county treasury, yet the amount is limited by the fee fund and is to be paid from the amount credited to the fee fund.

When the sheriff appoints one of his deputies as keeper of the jail, such appointee is still a deputy to the sheriff. The compensation of such deputy who performs the duties of the keeper of the jail should be paid from the allowance made by the county commissioners for the sheriff's office and should be paid from the fee fund of that office.

Section 2410, General Code, provides:

"The board may employ a superintendent, and such watchman, janitors and other employes as it deems necessary for the care and custody of the court house, jail, and other county buildings, and of bridges, and other property under its jurisdiction and control."

This section authorizes the commissioners to employ a superintendent, watchman, janitors or other employes as they deem necessary for the care and custody of the jail. It makes no provision for the care and custody of the prisoners confined therein.

Section 2850, General Code, provides:

"The sheriff shall be allowed by the county commissioners not less than forty-five nor more than seventy-five cents per day for keeping and feeding prisoners in jail, but in any county in which there is no infirmary, the county commissioners, if they think it just and necessary, may allow any sum not to exceed seventy-five cents each day for keeping and feeding any idiot or lunatic. The sheriff shall furnish at the expense of the county, to all prisoners confined in jail, except those confined for debt only, fuel, soap, disinfectants, bed, clothing, washing and nursing when required, and other necessaries as the court in its rules shall designate."

The allowance authorized to be made to the sheriff by the county commissioners by Section 2850, General Code, is for "keeping and feeding prisoners in jail."

By virtue of Section 2997, General Code, this allowance is in addition to his salary as sheriff. Said Section 2997 provides:

"In addition to the compensation and salary herein provided, the county commissioners shall make allowances quarterly to each sheriff for keeping and feeding prisoners, as provided by law, for his actual and necessary expenses incurred and expended in pursuing or transporting persons accused or convicted of crimes and offenses, in conveying and transferring persons to and from any state hospital for the insane, the institution for feeble minded youth, Ohio hospital for epileptics, boys' industrial school, girls' industrial home, county homes for the friendless, houses of refuge, children's homes, sanitariums, convents, orphan asylums or homes, county infirmaries, and all institutions for the care, cure, correction, reformation and protection of unfortunates, and all expenses of maintaining horses and vehicles necessary to the proper administration of the duties of his office. The county commissioners shall allow the sheriff his actual railroad fare and street car fare expended in serving civil processes and subpoenaing witnesses in civil and criminal cases, and may allow his necessary livery hire for the proper administration of the duties of his office. Each sheriff shall file under oath with the quarterly report herein provided a full, accurate and itemized account of all his actual and necessary expenses, including railroad fare, street car fare and livery hire mentioned in this section before they shall be allowed by the commissioners."

The compensation of the sheriff allowed him for keeping and feeding prisoners must cover all his expenses for such keeping and feeding. The sheriff is required to keep the prisoners safely, and in order to do so he must in many counties employ watchmen and guards. The expense of employing such watchmen and guards in connection with the jail must be met from the allowance made to him for "keeping and feeding" the prisoners.

The duty of the commissioners under Section 2410, General Code, is to care for the building, which is the property of the county, and not to care for the prisoners confined therein.

It is my opinion that the county commissioners may employ and pay out of the general fund of the county, watchmen and janitors for the care of the county jail, but the duty of such watchman or janitor must be confined to taking care of the building, and not in caring for the prisoners.

It is the duty of the sheriff to safeguard and keep the prisoners in the jail at his own expense in consideration of the amount allowed him for keeping and feeding them. The county comissioners are not authorized to employ a turnkey or watchman for safeguarding the prisoners.

Respectfully,
TIMOTHY S. HOGAN,
Attorney General.

FINDING OF BUREAU—LICENSE FEES NOT COLLECTED BY MAYOR FROM JUNK SHOP DEALERS MAY NOT BE COLLECTED BY LEGAL AUTHORITIES—CRIMINAL PENALTY—MANDAMUS AGAINST MAYOR.

Under Section 286 of the General Code when receipt of a report of finding is made by the Bureau of Inspection and Supervision of Public Offices it is made the duty of the proper legal authority to institute proceedings for the recovery of public funds "misappropriated."

When a mayor has failed to collect license fees from junk shop dealers, collection of the same may not be enforced under this section.

The proper legal authority may take action however to compel performance of the neglected duty.

The provisions for license are in the nature of a police regulation and whilst collection may not be compelled the criminal penalty for noncompliance may be enforced against the dealers.

Bureau of Inspection and Supervision of Public Offices, Department of Auditor of State, Columbus, Ohio.

GENTLEMEN:—Your letter of June 19th received. You request my opinion upon the following question:

> "It is found that the provisions of an ordinance imposing a license fee upon junk shop dealers has not been enforced by the mayor of a city. Can a finding for recovery against the mayor of the city or junk shop dealers who refused or neglected to pay said fee be enforced to the amount of the license fees so remaining uncollected?"

The Bureau of Inspection and Supervision of Public Offices was created by Section 274, General Code, which provides in part as follows:

> "There shall be a bureau of inspection and supervision of public offices in the department of the auditor of state, which shall have power * * * * * to inspect and supervise the accounts and reports of all state offices * * * and the offices of each taxing district or public institution in the state of Ohio. * * * *."

Section 284, General Code, provides:

> "The chief inspector and supervisor, a deputy inspector and supervisor or a state examiner shall examine the condition of each public office such examination of township, village and school district offices to be made at least every two years, and all other examinations to be made at least once a year. Offices of justice of the peace, elected in cities, villages or townships, shall be examined at least once every two years. On the examination inquiry shall be made into the methods and accuracy of the accounts and reports of the office, whether the laws, ordinances and orders of the taxing district have been observed, and whether the requirements of the bureau of inspection and supervision have been complied with."

Section 286 provides in part as follows:

> "A report of the examination shall be made in triplicate * * *. If the report discloses malfeasance, misfeasance, or neglect of duty on the part of an officer or an employe upon the receipt of such copy of said report it shall be the duty of the proper legal officer, and he is hereby authorized and required, to institute in the proper court within ninety days from the receipt thereof civil actions in behalf of the state or the political divisions thereof to which the right of action has accrued, and promptly prosecute the same to final determination to recover any fees or public funds misappropriated or to otherwise determine the rights of the parties in the premises. * * * *."

You state that the provisions of an ordinance imposing a license fee upon junk shop dealers had not been enforced by the mayor of a city, and you inquire whether a finding can be made against the mayor for the amount of uncollected license fees or against the junk shop dealers. In view of the foregoing quoted provisions of the statute I am of the opinion that your bureau is not authorized to make a finding for other than fees and public funds misappropriated; your authority does not extend to making findings for loss of revenue or public funds, occasioned by the neglect of duty on the part of any public official in failing to collect licenses and other fees, provided for in ordinances such as you describe in your inquiry. However, it would be the duty of your examiners to note the neglect of duty complained of in your letter, and the proper legal officer should take cognizance of your report and compel, by proper proceedings, the mayor to perform his duty in regard to collecting the fees from the dealers mentioned.

The junk dealers, of course, would be subject to criminal prosecution for doing business without paying a license.

You also inquire whether a finding can be made against the junk shop dealers for the amount of unpaid fees. I am of the opinion that no such finding can be made, and if made would be of no more force than the original obligation to pay the license. The licensing of junk shop dealers is more in the nature of a police regulation and the failure to pay the fees can be enforced by criminal prosecution.

Very truly yours,

TIMOTHY S. HOGAN,
Attorney General.

SHERIFF—ALLOWANCE BY COUNTIES COMMISSIONERS FOR BOARD-PRISONERS OF OTHER STATES AND COUNTIES—BOARDING OF FEDERAL PRISONERS PAID BY UNITED STATES AUTHORITIES.

By Section 3179 of the General Code provision is made for payment by the United States authorities for the boarding of federal prisoners by a sheriff. The expense of boarding such may not therefore be made chargeable against the county.

By provision on Section 2850 and 2997 of the General Code the county commissioners may make an allowance to a sheriff for boarding in the county jail, prisoners held for another county or state.

The latter conclusion does not however, effect the rights of a county for keeping prisoners for another county that has not a sufficient jail as provided in Sections 3170 et seq. of the General Code.

July 3, 1912.

Bureau of Inspection and Supervision of Public Offices, Columbus, Ohio.

DEAR SIR:—Your favor of June 22, 1912, is received in which you inquire as follows:

> "Have the county commissioners authority to pay the sheriff out of the county treasury for boarding: First: Prisoners held for federal authorities; Second: Prisoners held for other states; Third: Prisoners held for other counties? (See Sections 2850, 2997 and 3179.)"

The provisions governing the detention and boarding of federal prisoners in the county jail are found in Section 3179, General Code, which provides:

> "The sheriff shall receive prisoners charged with or convicted of crime committed to his custody by the authority of the United States, and keep them until discharged by due course of law. A prisoner committed for an offense by the authority of the United States shall be supported at the expense thereof during his confinement in jail. No greater compensation shall be charged by a sheriff for the subsistence of such prisoner, than is authorized by law to be charged for the subsistence of state prisoners. The commissioners of a county in which a prisoner so committed may be confined shall receive from the United States one dollar per month for the use of the jail for each person so committed. A sheriff or jailor who neglects or refuses to perform the services and duties required of him by this section shall be liable to like penalties, forfeitures, and actions as if such prisoner had been committed under the authority of this state."

This section requires the sheriff to receive federal prisoners who are charged with or convicted of crime and who are committed to his custody by the federal authorities, or by the authority of the United States. Such prisoners are to be supported at the expense of the federal government? The sheriff cannot charge more for their subsistence than is authorized to be paid for the subsistence of state prisoners.

There is no provision that the county commissioners may make an allowance for the boarding of federal prisoners. The statute authorizes the sheriff to charge for boarding such prisoners, and the government to be charged is the United States. The county is not liable for their board.

The sheriff should settle directly with the federal authorities. The county commissioners have no authority to pay the sheriff for boarding federal prisoners.

The amount of compensation for feeding prisoners in a county jail is provided in Section 2850, General Code, which reads:

> "The sheriff shall be allowed by the county commissioners not less than forty-five nor more than seventy-five cents per day for keeping and feeding prisoners in jail, but in any county in which there is no infirmary, the county commissioners, if they think it just and necessary, may allow any sum not to exceed seventy-five cents each day for keeping and feeding any idiot or lunatic. The sheriff shall furnish at the expense of the county, to all prisoners confined in jail, except those confined for debt only, fuel, soap, disinfectants, bed, clothing, washing and nursing when required, and other necessaries at the court in its rules shall designate."

Section 2997, General Code, authorizes the county commissioners to make an allowance to the sheriff for keeping and feeding prisoners, as follows:

> "In addition to the compensation and salary herein provided, the county commissioners shall make allowances quarterly to each sheriff for keeping and feeding prisoners, as provided by law, for his actual and necessary expenses incurred and expended in pursuing or transporting persons accused or convicted of crimes and offenses, in conveying and transferring persons to and from any state hospital for the insane, the institution for feeble minded youth, Ohio hospital for epileptics, boys' industrial school, girls' industrial home, county homes for the friendless, houses of refuge, children's homes, sanitariums, convents, orphan asylums or homes, county infirmaries, and all institutions for the care, cure, correction, reformation and protection of unfortunates, and all expenses of maintaining horses and vehicles necessary to the proper administration of the duties of his office. The county commissioners shall allow the sheriff his actual railroad fare and street car fare expended in serving civil processes and subpoenaing witnesses in civil and criminal cases, and may allow his necessary livery hire for the proper administration of the duties of his office. Each sheriff shall file under oath with the quarterly report herein provided a full, accurate and itemized account of all his actual and necessary expenses, including railroad fare, street car fare and livery hire mentioned in this section before they shall be allowed by the commissioners."

The term "prisoners" as used in each of the foregoing sections is not qualified. It is not limited to prisoners of the county or of the state of Ohio. It may include any prisoner who is lawfully confined in the county jail. It does not, however, include federal prisoners, because the manner of paying their subsistence is specially provided for in Section 3179, supra.

The arrest of fugitives from other states is provided for in Sections 13520, 13521 and 13522, General Code.

Section 13521, General Code, provides:

> "When a person is arrested in pursuance of the next preceding section, and brought before the officer who issued the warrant, he shall hear and examine such charge, and, upon proof adjudged by him to be sufficient, commit such person to the jail of the county in which such examination is had, or cause him to be delivered to a suitable person to be removed before such judge or justice of the proper county in which to take such examination, who shall take it and proceed as if the warrant had been issued by him."

Fugitives from other states are legally confined in the county jail. The statutes do not provide specifically for the payment of their board therein. They are prisoners within the meaning of Sections 2850 and 2997, General Code, and the county commissioners may make an allowance to the sheriff for boarding such prisoners.

Section 13492, General Code, provides:

"A sheriff, deputy sheriff, constable, marshall, deputy marshall, watchman or police officer, shall arrest and detain a person found violating a law of this state, or an ordinance of a city or village, until a warrant can be obtained."

Section 13493, General Code, provides:

"When a felony has been committed, any person without warrant, may arrest another whom he has reasonable cause to believe is guilty of the offense, and detain him until a warrant can be obtained. If such warrant directs the removal of the accused to the county in which the offense was committed, the officer holding the warrant shall deliver the accused to a magistrate of such county, to be dealt with according to law. The necessary expense of such removal, and reasonable compensation for his time and trouble, shall be paid to such officer, out of the treasury of such county, upon the allowance and order of the county auditor."

This latter section authorizes the county wherein the offense was committed to pay the expense of the removal of such prisoner to the county. Nothing is said about boarding such prisoner in the county jail.

Section 13503, General Code, provides:

If a person charged with an offense abscond or remove from the county in which such offense is alleged to have been committed, a magistrate of the county in which such person is found may issue a warrant for his arrest and removal to the county in which the offense is alleged to have been committed, to be delivered to a magistrate of such county, who shall cause such person so delivered to be dealt with according to law. Such warrant shall have like force and effect as if issued from the county in which the offense is alleged to have been committed."

Section 13598, General Code, provides:

"When the accused resides out of the county in which the indictment was found, a warrant may issue thereon directed to the sheriff of the county where such accused resides or is found. Such sheriff shall arrest such accused and convey him to the county from which such warrant issued and there commit him to the jail or hold him to bail, as provided in this title."

Section 13599, General Code, provides:

"When the accused escapes and forfeits his recognizance after the jury is sworn, at the request of the prosecuting attorney, a warrant reciting the facts may issue to the sheriff of any county, who shall pursue, arrest and commit him to the jail of the county, from which such warrant issued, until he is discharged by law."

These sections authorize the arrest of a fugitive from justice or a person accused of crime in any county in the state. They contemplate that such prisoners shall be removed to the county in which the offense was committed, as soon as the same can be reasonably done. It will not always be possible to remove them at once and it may be necessary to confine them in the county jail. When so held in jail they are prisoners, within the meaning of Sections 2850 and 2997, General Code, and an allowance may be made by the county commissioners to the sheriff for boarding such prisoners. I find no other sections authorizing the pay of board of such prisoners.

In conclusion:

The county commissioners cannot make an allowance to a sheriff for boarding federal prisoners in the county jail.

The county commissioners may make an allowance to a sheriff for boarding prisoners in the county jail held for another county or for another state.

This latter conclusion does not affect the rights of a county for keeping prisoners for another county that has not a sufficient jail, as provided in Sections 3170 et seq, General Code.

Respectfully,
TIMOTHY S. HOGAN,
Attorney General.

SHERIFF'S EXPENSES—ALLOWANCE BY COUNTY COMMISSIONERS OF WAGES OF HOSTLER FOR MAINTENANCE OF HORSE—HOTEL BILLS, HACK FARE, ETC., OF ASSISTANT OF SHERIFF CONVEYING INSANE PERSON TO HOSPITAL.

The county commissioners may allow the sheriff his expenses in paying a hostler's wage for care of a horse maintained by the said sheriff, under the provisions of Section 2997 of the General Code authorizing the payment of the expense of the maintenance of horses and vehicles.

Section 1981 of the General Code authorizing the payment of $2.00 per day and two cents per mile each way to an assistant to convey an insane person to the state hospital is intended to cover compensation and railroad fare. It is not the intention of the Legislature that said assistant shall work without compensation however, and when other necessary expenses are incurred such as hack fare, hotel bill, etc. they may be allowed under Section 2997 of the General Code as actual expenses of the sheriff in making said conveyance.

June 28, 1912.

Bureau of Inspection and Supervision of Public Offices, Columbus, Ohio.

GENTLEMEN:—I beg to acknowledge receipt of your letter of May 17th, wherein you state:

"May the county comissioners, under Section 2997, allow to the sheriff his expenses incurred in maintaining his horses by way of wages paid to a hostler?"

Section 2997 of the General Code reads as follows:

> "In addition to the compensation and salary herein provided, the county commissioners shall make allowances quarterly to each sheriff for keeping and feeding prisoners, as provided by law, for his actual and necessary expenses incurred and expended in pursuing or transporting persons accused or convicted of crimes and offenses, in conveying and transferring persons to and from any state hospital for the insane, the institution for feeble minded youth, Ohio hospital for epileptics, boys' industrial school, girls' industrial home, county homes for the friendless, houses of refuge, children's homes, sanitariums, convents, orphan asylums or homes, county infirmaries, and all institutions for the care, cure, correction, reformation and protection of unfortunates, and all expenses of maintaining horses and vehicles necessary to the proper administration of the duties of his office. The county commissioners shall allow the sheriff his actual railroad fare and street car fare expended in serving civil processes and subpoenaing witnesses in civil and criminal cases, and may allow his necessary livery hire for the proper administration of the duties of his office. Each sheriff shall file under oath with the quarterly report herein provided a full, accurate and itemized account of all his actual and necessary expenses, including railroal fare, street car fare and livery hire mentioned in this section before they shall be allowed by the commissioners."

You will note that the foregoing authorizes county commissioners to allow to the sheriff quarterly "all expenses of maintaining horses and vehicles necessary to the proper administration of the duties of his office."

In the case of State ex rel vs. Commissioners, 10 C. C., n. s., 398, the word "maintaining" as used in the above quoted section was defined by the court as follows:

> "All lexicographers define maintenance as 'maintaining; supporting; upholding; keeping up; sustaining supply of the necessaries of life; subsistence;' and the word 'maintain' 'to hold or keep up in any particular state of condition; to support; to sustain; to keep up.' So that the meaning of the word 'maintaining' as used in this section in reference to horses and vehicles, means supporting; sustaining; keeping up; supplying with the necessaries of life."

The statute does not enumerate specifically what may be allowed as expenses of maintenance of the sheriff's horses, but I have no hesitation in saying that the services of a hostler in the care of horses is a necessary part of their maintenance.

In an opinion recently rendered to your department I held, that it would be legal for the sheriff to contract to pay a stipulated sum per week or month for the care of his horses. If such contract were entered into between the sheriff and a livery stable keeper, for instance, it would undoubtedly include the services of a hostler as well as whatever else might be necessary in the maintenance of the horses.

If the sheriff kept the horses in his own barn, they would be entitled to, and should receive the same care as if they were maintained in a livery stable, or elsewhere, by virtue of a contract.

I am of the opinion that county commissioners may legally allow a reasonable cost for the care of sheriff's horses by way of wages paid to a hostler.

What is a reasonable cost for such services is a matter that must be determined by the circumstances of each particular case.

It is the intention of the statute that the necessary expenses of taking care of the sheriff's horses shall be paid by the county, and no more.

If the sheriff can contract with another person to care for the horses at a less price in the aggregate than he could purchase feed and pay the wages of a hostler, it is his duty to do so, to the end that the county may obtain as economical a bargain as possible, consistent with the proper maintenance of the horses.

You also inquire:

> "Under said section (2997 G. C.), may the commissioners allow the sheriff, as a part of his necessary expenses, the hack fare, hotel bills and other expenses of an assistant to convey an insane person to the State Hospital (see Section 1981 of the Canfield Act)?"

Section 1981 of the General Code, insofar as it applies to your inquiry, provides:

> "The costs and expenses, other than the fees of the probate judge and sheriff, to be paid under the provisions of this chapter, shall be as follows: * * * to one assistant to convey to the hospital, when authorized by the probate judge, two dollars, and two cents per mile each way;"

Section 1959 of the General Code authorizes the probate judge to appoint one person to assist the sheriff to convey an insane person to a state hospital, when he is satisfied, from proof, that such appointment is necessary, and, in all cases, where the insane person is a female it is the mandatory duty of the probate judge to appoint such assistant.

Under Section 2997 of the General Code, the sheriff is entitled to receive his "actual and necessary expenses incurred and expended * * * in conveying and transferring persons to and from any state hospital for the insane" etc.

In my judgment, it is not the intention of the statute that such assistant shall accompany the sheriff and the insane person to the state hospital without compensation, and, therefore, I hold that two dollars ($2.00) mentioned in said section is to be regarded as a fee for the services of such assistant, and the two cent (2c) per mile each way is intended to cover the railroad fare and that in addition thereto the sheriff should pay the hack fore and hotel bills of such assistant, for which he should be reimbursed by the county commissioners.

Very truly yours,

TIMOTHY S. HOGAN,

Attorney General.

"PAVING" AND "REPAVING" 50 PER CENT. ASSESSMENT AGAINST ABUTTING PROPERTY HOLDERS FOR REPAVING.

Any material by which a hard, firm, or smooth surface for travel is secured constitutes a paving and when a street is paved the second time abutting property holders cannot be assessed for more than 50 per cent. of the cost of such "re-paving."

July 13, 1912.

The Bureau of Inspection and Supervision of Public Offices, Columbus, Ohio.

GENTLEMEN:—Under date of April 16th, you requested my opinion as follows:

> "1. A street has been paved with cobblestone on a gravel foundation and the cost thereof (except 2 per cent. for intersections) assessed against abutting property. If said street be now repaved with brick laid upon a concrete foundation, may the council assess more than 50 per cent of the cost thereof against the abutting property?
> "2. If a street has been paved with asphalt block and the cost thereof (except 2 per cent. for intersections) assessed against abutting property and is now repaved with brick on the same foundation, can council assess more than 50 per cent. against the abutting property. See letter of W. E. Dilley, City Auditor of Warren, enclosed herewith."

Section 3822, General Code, is material to your inquiry. It is as follows:

> "When a special assessment for the improvement of a street or other public place has been levied and paid, the property so assessed shall not again be assessed for more than one half the cost and expense of repaving or repairing such street or other public place unless the grade thereof is changed."

The question as to what constitutes a "re-paving," within the meaning of Section 3822, General Code, aforesaid, has been answered in the case of Baldwin vs. Springfield, 20 O. Dec. N. P. n. s., 265. On page 272, the court says:

> "Any material by which a hard, firm or smooth surface for travel is secured, constitutes a paving."

In view of this decision, therefore, the answer to each of your questions must clearly be a negative one. In each case, a former improvement constituted a paving and the same is true of the new improvement under contemplation.

I am, therefore, of the opinion that council can in neither case, assess more than fifty per cent. of the costs of the intended improvement, against the abutting property.

Very truly yours,

TIMOTHY S. HOGAN,

Attorney General.

WITNESS AND PHYSICIAN'S FEES IN ADMISSION OF YOUTHS AND ADULTS TO INSTITUTION FOR FEEBLE MINDED.

Under Section 1902 of the General Code adults are admitted to the institution for feeble minded under the same method of legal commitment as governs admission to the state hospital for the insane, and physicians called in such proceedings are therefore entitled to $5.00 each and $1.00 per day and mileage.

As it is not otherwise provided, when physicians are summoned in the case of the admission of youths, they are entitled to ordinary witness fees only.

July 18, 1912.

Bureau of Inspection and Supervision of Public Offices, Columbus, Ohio.

GENTLEMEN:—In your letter of November 23, 1911, you ask what, if any, fees witnesses are entitled to for admission of youths and adults to the institution for feeble minded; and what, if any, fees physicians are entitled to for making the examination and medical certificate.

I will first take up the manner of admission of adults to this institution, and the fees connected therewith.

Section 1902 of the General Code says:

> "Feeble minded adults of such inoffensive habits as to make them proper subjects for classification and discipline in the institution, may be admitted, on pursuing the same course of legal commitment as govern admission to the state hospitals for the insane."

Let us see how the insane are admitted to such institutions.

Section 1953 of the General Code requires an affidavit to be filed with the probate judge of the county where the patient resides. The judge under Section 1954, issues his warrant bringing the person before him; and must immediately issue subpoenas for such witnesses as he deems necessary, two of whom shall be reputable physicians.

By Section 1956 of the General Code these medical witnesses must have five years' experience, and certify the insanity of the party on blanks provided for that purpose.

Section 1981 of the General Code says, that the costs and expenses shall be "to each of the two physicians designated by the court to make examination and certificate, five dollars and witness fees as allowed in the court of common pleas; to witnesses the same fees as are allowed in the court of common pleas."

The fees allowed in the court of common pleas to witnesses are $1.00 per day, and five cents per mile each way, from their residences to the court house.

So, physicians, in commitment of adults, receive $5.00 each and $1.00 per day and mileage as aforesaid. Ordinary witnesses receive $1.00 per day and mileage.

This disposes of the question of fees in cases of adults.

The question as to fees for witnesses and physicians in the admission of youths is not as clear as it might be.

The whole subject of institution for feeble minded youths is set forth in Sections 1891 to 1904, inclusive of the General Code.

There is no provision in this chapter for subpoenaing witnesses or physicians in the matter of admission of youths to said institutions. There is no provision for any sort of a trial before the probate court, as to youths.

Section 1901 provides that the Trustees (now Board of Administration) shall cause to be printed instructions and forms of applications for the admission of children, and that the same shall be endorsed by the probate judge.

Section 1903 of the General Code reads as follows:

> "In approving an application for the admission of a person to the institution, the probate judge shall state whether or not such person has an estate of sufficient value, or a parent or parents of sufficient financial ability, to defray the expense, in whole or in part, of supporting such person in the institution, and if there be means of supporting in part only, the amount per month which the parent, or legal guardian, may be able to pay. The person who makes the application for such admission shall therein make statement, under oath, as to such means of support."

This would seem to make it probable that on such questions as enumerated in this section the probate judge, in order to satisfy himself as to the matters, might subpoena witnesses. If he does so, such witnesses are entitled to $1.00 per day and mileage at five cents per mile, as above set forth as to adults. But there is no provision whatever for calling physicians as experts in the proceedings relative to youths; no provision that they shall sign or certify any document as in case of insanity. Therefore, if they are subpoenaed as witnesses, they only get what other witnesses receive and not $5.00 extra.

Very truly yours,
TIMOTHY S. HOGAN,
Attorney General.

CLERK OF THE COURTS—FEES FOR ENTERING, ATTENDANCE AND CERTIFYING FEES OF EACH GRAND JUROR AND WITNESS.

Inasmuch as Section 2903 of the General Code in providing a fee for the clerk of courts for entering attendance and certifying fees of "each grand juror" and of each "grand jury witness," places emphasis upon the number of jurors and witnesses rather than the number of certificates and the number of entries, and as the history of the statute bears out such construction, the clerk is entitled to but one fee for each witness or juror in such cases and should issue but one certificate to each juror or witness.

Bureau of Inspection and Supervision of Public Offices, Department of Auditor of State, Columbus, Ohio.

GENTLEMEN:—I beg to acknowledge receipt of your letter of April 20th, requesting my opinion upon the following question:

> "Under section 2903, as amended in 102 O. L. 284, to what fee is the clerk of courts entitled for entering attendance of each grand jury witness, certifying the fees of each grand jury witness, entering the attendance of each juror and certifying the fees of each juror; i. e., are these fees based on the number of jurors and the number of witnesses, respectively, or upon the number of days' attendance and the number of certificates issued?"

Said Section 2903 of the General Code, as amended as aforesaid, provides in part as follows:

"The clerk shall receive out of the county treasury upon the allowance of the county commisissioners the following fees: * * * for entering the attendance of each juror, ten cents; for certifying fees of each juror, ten cents * * * for entering attendance of each grand jury witness, five cents; for certifying fees of each grand jury witness, five cents, * *."

Section 2903, General Code, prior to its amendment, did not embrace all of the matters now covered by it; it provided as to the fees of the clerk, however, in part as follows:

"* * * for certifying fees for each grand juror, eight cents; and for all services rendered to the grand jury, he shall receive the same fees as allowed for similar services in a cause pending in court * * *."

Reference here is to the fees formerly enumerated in Section 2900, among the provisions of which are the following:

"entering attendance each witness, four cents; a certificate to each witness for his fee, four cents."

Upon carefully comparing the amended section with the sections of the code in their unamended form I am unable to reach the conclusion that any change in meaning was intended by the General Assembly. This question is not free from doubt, but the evident purpose of the General Assembly here was to make specific provision for the fees of the clerk for services in connection with the grand jury, rather than to leave the same to implication and construction, as was the case under the former provision. I do not think the legislative intention was more far-reaching than this.

The corresponding provisions of the Revised Statutes are embraced in Sections 1262 and 1260 thereof, which are in part as follows:

"Section 1262. * * * certifying for fees for each grand juror, eight cents; * * *."

"Section 1260. * * * entering attendance each witness, four cents; a certificate to each witness for his fee, four cents; * * *."

I am of the opinion that insofar as the question which you submit is concerned, the Legislature has never intended to change the meaning of the statute, which is the same under the present language of the amended section of the General Code as it was under the original sections of the Revised Statutes.

All the provisions which I have quoted throw some light upon the solution of your question, which is, however, at the best, a doubtful one. However, inasmuch as the original section uses the words "a certificate to each witness" and "entering attendance, each witness," thus placing the emphasis upon the number of witnesses and the number of jurors, rather than upon the number of certificates or the number of entries, I am of the opinion that the present statutes should be construed so as to place the emphasis upon the same words. Amended Section 2903 is susceptible of such a construction; indeed, it seems to be the most natural construction; indeed, it seems to be the most natural construction to give to the language above quoted from that section.

I am, therefore, of the opinion that the clerk of the courts is entitled to one fee for each witness and each juror, whose attendance he enters, regardless of the number of entries made by him and regardless also of recesses taken by the grand jury upon permission of the court, etc.

The adoption of the rule of construction adopted above, however, does not necessarily lead to a similar result in the case of the fee for issuing certificates for witnesses and jurors. Under all the statutes the fee seems to attach, so to speak, to the certificate as well as to relate to the number of witnesses. While the language of the original statute was "a certificate to each witness for his fees," this did not necessarily mean that the clerk was entitled to charge fees on only one certificate if, as a matter of fact, he issued more than one. Under Section 3014, General Code, fees of witnesses before the grand jury are required to be "certified to the county auditor by the clerk of the court." A similar provision is made in Section 3008 as to the fees of grand jurors. I do not find in these statutes any evidence of the existence of a right on the part of any juror or witness to demand more than one certificate. For example, if a grand jury be in session for a number of weeks, I do not believe that the clerk of courts has any right to issue more than one certificate to each juror for his entire attendance and fees. The practice of paying such jurors weekly or at other intervals has no foundation in law.

Considering Sections 3008 and 3014, then, in connection with Section 2903, and the prior provisions relating to the same subject matter, all doubt as to the right of the clerk to fees for certifying to the fees of grand jurors and witnesses before the grand jury is dispelled. The clerk is entitled to one fee for each juror or witness in such cases and should issue but one certificate to each juror or witness.

Very truly yours,

TIMOTHY S. HOGAN,
Attorney General.

CEMETERY FUNDS—DEPOSIT IN MUNICIPAL TREASURY—DISPOSITION AND EXPENDITURE OF BY DIRECTOR OF PUBLIC SERVICE —WARRANT OF AUDITOR.

In accordance with Section 3795 of the General Code all moneys donated for cemetery purposes must be deposited in the municipal treasury to the credit of this specific fund and can only be paid out upon the warrant of the auditor upon the direction of the director of public service.

July 18, 1912.

Bureau of Inspection and Supervision of Public Offices, Columbus, Ohio.

GENTLEMEN:—Your favor of July 5, 1912, is received in which you call attention to the following paragraph in the opinion given to Roderick Jones on May 31, 1912, in reference to the income of funds invested by a city for the donors for the care of lots or other parts of a city cemetery, to-wit:

> "I find no statute which authorizes the auditor or treasurer of the city to receive or to pay out the income derived from the funds. The director of public service is required to take care of the lots and to expend the income of the funds for that purpose. By virtue of the provisions of section 4169, General Code, the income is paid to the director to carry out the purposes for which the principal was donated."

You call attention to the provisions of Section 3795, General Code, which provides:

"The taxes of the corporation shall be collected by the county treasurer and paid into the treasury of the corporation in the same manner and under the same laws, rules and regulations as are prescribed for the collection and paying over of state and county taxes. The corporation treasurer shall keep a separate account with each fund for which taxes are assessed, which account shall be at all times open to public inspection. Unless expressly otherwise provided by law, all money collected or received on behalf of the corporation shall be promptly deposited in the corporation treasury in the appropriate fund, and the treasurer shall thereupon give notice of such deposit to the auditor or clerk. Unless otherwise provided by law, no money shall be drawn from the treasury except upon the warrant of the auditor or clerk pursuant to the appropriation by council."

In accordance with the provisions of this section the income from the funds should be paid into the city treasury from which it should be paid upon the voucher of the auditor for the expenses incurred in the care of the lots or other parts of the city cemetery by the director of public service as required by the donors of the funds.

Respectfully,
TIMOTHY S. HOGAN,
Attorney General.

BOARD OF EDUCATION—MANDATORY DUTY TO ESTABLISH DEPOSITARY—RIGHT OF TREASURER TO RECEIVE MONEYS FROM CLERK AND AUDITOR WHEN NO DEPOSITARY ESTABLISHED.

Section 7604 of the General Code makes it mandatory upon the Board of Education of a school district to establish a depositary and when it fails so to do legal proceedings may invoke to compel the same.

When such depositary has not been established however, money may be paid to the treasurer of such school district in accordance with the procedure set out in Sections 4764, 4768 and 4769 of the General Code.

July 18, 1912.

Bureau of Inspection and Supervision of Public Offices, Columbus, Ohio.

GENTLEMEN:—Under date of July 11th you requested my opinion on the following question:

"Is it legal for the clerk of a board of education or a county auditor to pay school funds to the treasurer of a school district, which district has not qualified to receive the same by complying with the law requiring the establishment of a depositary for said funds?"

Section 7604, General Code, provides that the Board of Education of any school district by resolution shall provide for the deposit of any or all moneys coming into the hands of its treasurer.

Prior to the amendment of this statute, 101 Ohio Laws 290, the establishment of a depositary for a school district was optional with the board of education thereof.

Section 4764, General Code, provides:

"Before entering upon the duties of his office, each school district treasurer shall execute a bond, with sufficient sureties, in a sum not less than the amount of school funds that may come into his hands, payable to the state, approved by the board of education, and conditioned for the faithful disbursement according to law of all funds which come into his hands, provided that when school moneys have been deposited under the provisions of Sections 7604-7608 inclusive, the bond shall be in such amount as the board of education may require."

Section 4768, General Code, provides:

"No treasurer of a school district shall pay out any school money except on an order signed by the president or vice-president and countersigned by the clerk of the board of education, and when such moneys have been deposited as provided by sections 7604-7608 inclusive, no money shall be withdrawn from any such depository, except upon an order signed by the treasurer and by the president or vice-president and countersigned by the clerk of the board of education; and no money shall be paid to the treasurer of the district other than that received from the county treasurer, except upon the order of the clerk of the board, who shall report the amount of such miscellaneous receipts to the county auditor each year immediately preceding such treasurer's settlement with the auditor."

Section 4769, General Code, provides as follows:

"The clerk of a board of education or the county auditor shall pay no money into the hands of the treasurer of a school district in excess of the amount of his bond. Should any such clerk or auditor violate this provision, he and his bondsmen shall be liable for any loss occasioned thereby. But where depositories for school funds have been created under the provisions of sections 7604-7608 inclusive, all school moneys shall be paid directly into such depository or depositories by the auditor upon the written order of the board of education signed by the president or vice-president and countersigned by the clerk. In case the school funds have been deposited under the provisions of sections 7604-7608 inclusive, the limitation of payment herein contained shall not apply. * *."

While Section 7604, General Code, since the amendment in 101 Ohio Laws 290, makes it mandatory upon the board of education to establish a depositary, yet from a reading of Sections 4764, 4768 and 4769 it will be noted that such sections contemplate that the board of education may not fulfill its duties in so establishing the depositary as required by law, and that until it does do so the treasurer shall be entitled to receive the money for such school district. Section 4764, General Code, states specifically that the treasurer shall execute a bond in a sum not less than the amount of the school funds that may come into his hands, and then states that when a depositary has been provided under Sections 7604-7608 that the bond shall be in such amount as the board of education may require. This provision shows that it contemplated that the treasurer shall receive school funds although the board of education has not established a depositary. Section 4768, General Code, provides that no money shall be paid to the treasurer of the district other than that received from the county treasurer, except upon the order of the clerk of the board, and by reference to Section 4769, General Code, it will be noted that when depositaries have been created the school money shall be paid into such depositaries by the auditor upon the written order of the board of education. The provision that the treasurer shall not receive any money "other than received from the county treasurer except upon order of the clerk of the board" would be a nullity were it not considered that the treasurer was to receive the money prior to the establishment of the depository for the reason that when a depository is established the money is paid directly by the auditor into such depositary; furthermore, Section 4769 further provides that the clerk of the board of education or the county auditor shall pay no money into the hands of the treasurer of a school district in excess of the amount of his bond. The amount of the bond required by Section 4764, General Code, to be in a sum not less than the amount of the school funds is so fixed when a depositary has not been established, but as soon as a depositary has been established the amount of such bond is determined by the board of education.

For the foregoing reasons, I am of the opinion that it is legal for the clerk of the board of education or a county auditor to pay the school funds to the treasurer of the district before the board of education of said district has complied with the requirement of law that a depositary for said funds be established. If the board of education fail to establish a depositary they may by proper proceeding be compelled so to do, but until such depositary is established money should be paid to the treasurer as has been the custom heretofore prior to the amendment of the depositary statute making it mandatory upon the board of education to establish such depositary.

Very truly yours,
TIMOTHY S. HOGAN,
Attorney General.

COUNTY COMMISSIONERS—POWER TO AGREE TO APPOINT OFFICIAL COURT STENOGRAPHER TO TAKE EVIDENCE AND CHARGE TO PARTIES—REFEREE AND MASTER COMMISSIONER.

When a case in which the county commissioners are defendants is referred by both parties to the official court stenographer under the designation of master commissioner for the purpose only of taking the testimony offered by the parties and reporting the same to the court without any conclusions on the law and facts, the procedure must be referred to Section 1554 of the General Code providing for the appointment of the court stenographer as a referee, in spite of the fact that said stenographer was designated as master commissioner.

The stenographer may be compensated for the transcript so made under Section 1552 of the General Code, the cost thereof being divided between the parties.

The power of the county commissioners to make such an agreement proceeds from their power to sue and to be sued.

July 22, 1912.

Bureau of Inspection and Supervision of Public Offices, Department of Auditor of State, Columbus, Ohio.

GENTLEMEN—Your inquiry of February 2, 1912, in regard to the allowance and payment of cost of master commissioner and stenographer (which in this case seems to be one and the same individual) for services and transcript furnished to the court before the case is finally settled. In the case stated by you, two cases were pending in the circuit court of Fulton County, Ohio.

John R. Mason for himself and others vs. The County Commissioners et al.
A. L. Russell for himself and others vs. The Commissioners, Auditor et al.

Both cases involving the same questions to be determined, the court, by consent of all interested, consolidated these cases for the purpose of disposing of law and facts.

At the May term of the Court, 1909, to-wit: May 19, 1909, a journal entry appears, the concluding part of which is as follows:

> "On motion of plaintiff and defendants herein, and for good cause shown, this cause is referred to George S. May as special Master Commissioner of this court to take the testimony offered by the parties and report the same to the court without any conclusions on the law and facts involved in the issues, and that he make a report of the evidence on or before October 1, 1909, and this cause is continued."

The same entry appears in both cases pending as above stated. The following account was filed and paid as follows:

"Court Stenographer, Geo. S. May.

"Advance payment by County Commissioners in Russell and Mason cases against commissioners.

"1909.
"Aug. 31—7225 Transcript, on account	$ 50.00
"Oct. 23—7609 Transcript, on account	500.00
"1910.
"Sept. 24— 152 Transcript, on account	260.00
"1911.
"Aug. 12—2733, Transcript, on account	200.00
"Total	$1,010.00"

It appears that the transcript in question was furnished by the joint request of the parties, the commissioners on the one hand and the plaintiffs on the other, each party agreeing to pay half of the costs thereof, and apparently the transcript was ordered to be used in lieu of a transcript to be furnished to the court, thus eliminating the cost of the transcript as costs in the case.

At the May term of Court, 1910, to-wit: May 26th, 1910, the following entry appears:

> "On motion to the court and by consent of both parties hereto and for good cause shown it is ordered that this cause be and the same hereby is referred to William W. Campbell, who is hereby appointed Special Master Commissioner for that purpose, who shall upon being duly qualified, proceed without unnecessary delay to take the testimony in writing in said cause and report the same to this court and therewith his conclusions on the law and the facts involved in the issue."

The same entry appears in both cases as stated above.

The account of George S. May, as above stated, was paid by the county commissioners and at the times and upon the vouchers numbered above.

Your question is as to whether the county commissioners had the authority to issue vouchers for the payment of the fees of the stenographer (who appears to be the court stenographer.

Some confusion arises by virtue of the peculiar nature of the appointment in this case. Section 1554 of the General Code provides that the official stenographer may be appointed a referee to take and report evidence.

In this instance, however, the stenographer was appointed as a special master commissioner, and I am inclined to the opinion that the court is without power to appoint a master commissioner to take evidence alone without reporting the finding of facts at least, and is likewise without power to appoint a referee under the general sections providing for such appointment, without referring to such referee one or more of the issues of the case for determination by him. Inasmuch as the duties delegated to the stenographer by the court are exactly those which may be delegated under authority of Section 1554, I am of the opinion that the appointment is referable to this section in spite of the use of the term "master commissioner."

Section 1554 does not prescribe any rule of compensation for the stenographer acting as special referee. Presumably, then, his compensation as such special referee under this section is to be determined by the section which regulates his compensation as court stenographer. That section is Section 1552 of the General Code, which provides as follows:

> "The compensation of stenographers for making such transcripts shall be not more than eight cents per folio of one hundred words, to be fixed by the common pleas judges of the subdivision. ' Such compensation shall be paid forthwith by the party for whose benefit a transcript is made. The compensation for transcripts made in criminal cases, by request of the prosecuting attorney or the defendant, and transcripts ordered by the court in either civil or criminal cases, shall be paid from the county treasury, and taxed and collected as other costs. The clerk of the proper court shall certify the amount of such transcripts, which certificate shall be a sufficient voucher to the auditor of the county, who shall forthwith draw his warrants upon the county treasurer in favor of such stenographers."

It will be observed that transcripts ordered by parties must be paid for forthwith, while transcripts ordered by the court must be paid for from the county treasury and the compensation so paid must be taxed and collected as other costs.

It would appear that a reference to the stenographer under Section 1554 of the General Code itself amounts to an order by the court for the making of a transcript. I am of the opinion, however, that the court has the power, with the consent of the parties, to substitute a transcript ordered by the parties, or either of them, for the report to be made to the court under Section 1554.

Clearly, if either of the parties to a civil action desires a transcript for his own use, upon a reference to the stenographer under Section 1554, such a transcript must be made and paid for by the party ordering.

In the case under consideration it appears that the transcript was ordered by the parties. It also appears that by the consent of all concerned this transcript was substituted for the transcript which otherwise would have been made for the use of the court in pursuance of the order of reference.

I am of the opinion that the procedure in this case is lawful, being a convenient way of dividing what is doubtless the largest item of the costs in the case.

County commissioners have authority to sue and are vested with the capacity to be sued. By virtue of these provisions of law the commissioners are given the same degree of control over litigation, in which they are parties, as private individuals are given, at least so far as agreements to divide costs and like matters are concerned. I know of no reason why the commissioners may not lawfully agree with their adversaries and with the court, just as the private suitor, to substitute a transcript ordered by the parties for another transcript to be ordered by the court, and to divide the cost in that way. In fact, if the commissioners desired, for the convenience of their counsel, to ask for a transcript, they could have done so, and could lawfully have paid for the entire cost of making such transcript in addition to having a transcript made for the court itself. The arrangement which was made was an economical one for the county, and was entirely lawful and proper.

Very truly yours,
TIMOTHY S. HOGAN,
Attorney General.

CONSTITUTIONAL CONVENTION ELECTION—SHERIFF NOT TO ISSUE PROCLAMATION OF.

The Sheriff is nowhere authorized by the statutes to make proclamations of the election on the results of the Constitutional Convention, nor has the convention itself exercised its power to provide for the same. The sheriff therefore is not required to make such proclamation.

July 24, 1912.

The Bureau of Inspection and Supervision of Public Offices, Department of Auditor of State, Columbus, Ohio.

GENTLEMEN:—Your communication of July 19th, received. You state:

> "Please advise us whether or not, in your opinion, sheriffs are required to issue proclamation of election on the adoption of the amendments to the Constitution to be voted on September 3, 1912?
> "If you should hold in the affirmative, will you kindly give an outline of what said proclamation should contain?"

The following sections of the General Code make provision for the sheriffs issuing proclamations of elections:

Section 4824, General Code, provides for election of electors of President and Vice-President.

Section 4825, General Code, provides:

> "At least fifteen days before the time for holding the election provided for in the preceding section, the sheriff shall give public notice by proclamation through his county of the time and place of holding such election and the number of electors to be chosen. A copy of such proclamation shall be posted at each of the places where elections are appointed to be held and inserted in a newspaper published in the county."

Section 4826, General Code, provides the time of state and county elections.

Section 4827, General Code, provides:

> "At least fifteen days before the holding of any such general election, the sheriff of each county shall give notice by proclamation throughout his county of the time and place of holding such election and the officers at that time to be chosen. One copy of the proclamation shall be posted at each place where elections are appointed to be held, and such proclamation shall also be inserted in a newspaper published in the county."

Section 4829, General Code, provides for the sheriff or sheriffs giving notice for a special election to fill a vacancy in the office of congressman or member of the General Assembly.

Section 4840, General Code, provides for the submission of questions to be voted for at a regular election when a special election is not provided for, and for the embodiment of the notice of such questions, in the proclamation.

I find no other sections of the General Code which would authorize the sheriff to make proclamations for election, other than in the above quoted statutes, and unless the Act providing for the Constitutional Convention makes express provision therefor, it would be my view that the sheriff would be without authority to make such proclamation, nor would he be so required to do, by virtue of the duties of his office.

Section 4 of the Act providing for the election to and assembling of a convention to revise, alter and amend the Constitution of the State of Ohio, 102 O. L. p. 298, provides:

> "Said convention shall have authority to determine its own rules of proceeding, and to punish its members for disorderly conduct, to elect such officers as it may deem necessary for the proper and convenient transaction of the business of the convention, and to prescribe their duties: to make provisions for the publication of its proceedings, or any part thereof, during its session; to provide for the publication of the debates and proceedings of the convention, in durable form, and for the securing of a copyright thereof for the state; and to fix and prescribe the time and form and manner of submitting any proposed revision, alterations or amendments of the constitution to the electors of the state: also the notice to be given of such submission."

In view of the above express provisions, reserving to the Constitutional Convention, among other things, the authority concerning notice to be given of the submission of the Convention to the vote of the people, as well as the entire absence of any statutory authority to the sheriff for making such proclamation, I am of the opinion that sheriffs, as part of their general duties, are not required to issue a proclamation of election upon the adoption of the amendments to the Constitution, to be voted for on September 3, 1912.

2. The answer to the first question being negative, it dispenses with any reason for answering your second inquiry.

Very truly yours,

TIMOTHY S. HOGAN,

Attorney General.

CIVIL SERVICE COMMISSION—PAYMENTS OF SALARIES TO CLERKS AND EXAMINERS MUST BE AUTHORIZED BY ORDINANCE OF COUNCIL.

Under Section 4486 of the General Code the council must provide for the salaries of clerks and examiners of the civil service commission and any payments made before such ordinance has been passed or in conflict with such an existing ordinance are illegal.

July 26, 1912.

Bureau of Inspection and Supervision of Public Offices, Columbus, Ohio.

GENTLEMEN:—Under date of July 17, 1912, you inquire:

> "Section 260 of the salary ordinance of the city of Cincinnati allows the civil service commission a clerk at $1,200.00 and an assistant clerk at $1,000.00 per annum. On April 30, 1912, council passed an amendatory ordinance creating the position of examiner and secretary at $2,040.00 per annum. Previous to the passage of this amendatory ordinance and without any further action by council, on February 23, 1912, the auditor received certification of appointment of an examiner in the civil service department at $170.00 per month, and seven days' salary was paid at this rate. On March 1st, the auditor received certification of same appointee as clerk at $100.00 per month and March and April salary was paid at this rate, instead of $170.00 per month.
> "Question—1. Was payment for first seven days at $170.00 per month legal?
> "2. May the appointee legally be paid the balance of $70.00 per month for the months of March and April?
> "3. Is it legal for the city auditor to draw his warrant in payment of a pay roll for employes under the civil service commission in excess of $183.33 1/3 a month prior to the going into effect of the ordinance passed April 30, 1912, viz., sixty days after said date?"

Council is authorized to fix the salaries of the employes of the civil service commission by Section 4486, General Code, which reads:

> "The commission shall make such other other rules and regulations as are not inconsistent with this chapter for the promotion and betterment of the service. The council shall provide for the salaries, if any, of the commission, for such clerical force, examiners, necessary expenses and accommodations as may be necessary for the work of the commission."

By virtue of this section council had created the positions of clerk and assistant clerk at the salaries of $1,200.00 and $1,000.00 per annum respectively. The amendatory ordinance of April 30, 1912, which did not become effective until sixty days after its passage, created the position of examiner and secretary at a salary of $2,040.00 per annum.

In February, 1912, there was no ordinance providing for the position of examiner, and no ordinance authorizing the payment of a salary at $170.00 per month. The appointment on February 23, 1912, was for a position which had not been created and at a salary which had not been provided. The appointment was therefore illegal and no payment could be made for services performed under such appointment.

On March 1, 1912, the same person was appointed as clerk at a salary of $100.00 per month. This appointment and salary was authorized by the ordinance.

Your inquiries are therefore answered as follows:

First: The payment of the salary for the seven days from February 23 to March 1, 1912, at the rate of $170.00 per month was illegal.

Second: The appointee was legally entitled to $100.00 per month and no more for the months of March and April.

Third: Until the amendatory ordinance of April 30, 1912, became effective sixty days after its passage, the city auditor could only draw his warrant for the positions created by the original ordinance and at the salaries therein fixed, which are to the clerk $100.00 per month, and to the assistant clerk $83.33 1/3 per month. Any payment in excess of these amounts would be illegal.

Respectfully,
TIMOTHY S. HOGAN,
Attorney General.

MUNICIPAL CORPORATION—PLAN OF SEWERAGE CONSTRUCTION—POWERS OF DIRECTOR OF PUBLIC SERVICE AND OF COUNCIL—SALARY ORDINANCE—INITIATIVE AND REFERENDUM ACT.

Under Section 4327 of the General Code, the director of public service may fix the number of assistants in his department, whose compensation must be fixed by council under Section 4214 of the General Code.

The formation of a general plan of sewerage within a municipality, when not intrusted by the municipal corporation, under Section 3871 of the General Code, to some specially employed person, must be performed by the regular engineer as work belonging to the department of public service.

The construction of the sewerage system must be carried out by the regular employees of the department notwithstanding that council has provided for payment of the same by special bond issue.

When council has fixed the salaries of employees at certain rates for certain classes the director of public service may appoint as many numbers in each class for the performance of such special work as he deems necessary.

Should the general salary ordinance in existence not cover necessary new appointments, a new salary ordinance would be necessary, and such ordinance would be subject to suspension for sixty days, under the Initiative and Referendum Act.

Bureau of Inspection and Supervision of Public Offices, Department of Auditor of State, Columbus, Ohio.

GENTLEMEN:—I beg to acknowledge receipt of your letter of July 17th submitting for my opinion the following question:

> "If, by reason of the necessary investigation of special engineering problems in the city government, it is found expedient to increase the staff in the engineering department, would the general salary ordinance theretofore passed by council fixing the salaries in said department govern additional employes assigned to said special work, provided that said salaries are payable from a special fund created by a bond issue for that particular purpose? If not, may the director of service make such employment by individual contract with the engineers employed in such service, or would the council be required to pass a salary ordinance (or amend the existing ordinance) fixing said salaries, and would the same be required to lie sixty days before it could become effective? If the salary ordinance provides for 'principal assistant engineer $3,000.00 per annum' (expressed in the singular), would this salary govern the engineer appointed to make said special survey of sewerage system?"

The following sections of the General Code furnish, I think, a guide which must be followed in answering all the questions which you submit:

Section 4214.

"Except as otherwise provided in this title, council, by ordinance or resolution, shall determine the number of officers, clerks and employes in each department of the city government, and shall fix by ordinance or resolution their respective salaries and compensation, * * *."

Section 4327.

"The director of public service may establish such sub-department as may be necessary and determine the number of superintendents, deputies, inspectors, engineers, harbor masters, clerks, laborers and other persons, necessary for the execution of the work and the performance of the duties of this department."

Section 4324.

"The director of public service shall manage and supervise all public works and undertakings of the city, except as otherwise provided by law, and shall have all powers and perform all duties conferred upon him by law. * * *."

Section 4325.

"The director of public service shall supervise the improvement and repair of streets, avenues, alleys, lands, lanes, squares, wharves, docks, landings, market houses, bridges, viaducts, aqueducts, sidewalks, play grounds, sewers, drains, ditches, culverts, ship channels, streams and water courses, the lighting, sprinkling and cleaning of public places, the construction of public improvements and public works, except those having reference to the department of public safety, or as otherwise provided in this title."

Section 4326.

"The director of public service shall manage municipal water, lighting, heating, power, garbage and other undertakings of the city, parks, baths, play grounds, market houses, cemeteries, crematories, sewage disposal plants and farms, and shall make and preserve surveys, maps, plans, drawings and estimates. * * * He shall have the management of all other matters provided by the council in connection with the public service of the city."

Section 4328.

> "The director of public service may make any contract or purchase supplies or material or provide labor for any work under the supervision of that department not involving more than five hundred dollars. When an expenditure within the department, other than the compensation of persons employed therein, exceeds five hundred dollars, such expenditure shall first be authorized and directed by ordinance of council. When so authorized and directed, the director of public service shall make a written contract with the lowest bidder after advertisement for not less than two nor more than four consecutive weeks in a newspaper of general circulation within the city."

The letter enclosed with your communication discloses that the special engineering work to which you refer was under authority of an ordinance which I quote herewith:

> "Section 1. That the director of public service and the chief engineer of the city be, and they are hereby directed to devise and form or cause to be devised and formed a plan of the sewerage for the city of Cincinnati with regard to the present and prospective needs and interests of the whole corporation. And said director of public service and the chief engineer of the city are hereby authorized and empowered to do all things necessary to that end.
> "Section 2. That the proceeds of bonds issued under Ordinance No. 107, passed February 12, 1912, 'To issue one hundred and twenty-five thousand dollars of bonds for sewer purposes' shall be available and may be used for the purposes specified in Section 1 of this ordinance."

It does not appear from this ordinance whether any or all of the cost of the sewer system covered by the bond issue is to be paid for by special assessments. Presumably this is true as it seems likely that the city authorities are proceeding under Section 3871, etc., General Code, which provides in general for the formation and adoption of a plan of sewerage and the assessment of a portion of the costs of constructing sewers according to that plan by "sewer districts."

Section 3871 provides as follows:

> "In addition to the power herein conferred to construct sewers and levy assessments therefor, council of a municipal corporation may provide a system of sewerage for such municipal corporation or any part thereof. The engineer of such corporation, or some person employed by the municipality shall devise and form or cause to be devised and formed, a plan of the sewerage of the whole corporation, or such part thereof as may be designated by the council. Such plan shall be devised with regard to the present and prospective needs and interests of the whole corporation, and shall be by him reported to the council for its confirmation."

While the question may appear to be doubtful I am of the opinion that although the formation of the plan of sewerage may be entrusted under Section 3871 to "some person employed by the municipality," such work is by virtue of sections 4325 and 4326, supra, within the department of public service and must be done under the supervision of the director of that department. At any rate council did not direct the director of public service to employ an independent engineer or person for the purpose of instructing to such engineer or person the formulation of the plan of sewerage instead in the ordinance above quoted the work itself was entrusted to the director of public service and the chief engineer as such. Clearly then, in the present case, the work contemplated by the ordinance is regular work of the department of public service in the sense that any preparation of plans and supervision of improvements is regular work of that department. The magnitude of the specific undertaking may make it appear as if the work is not regular work of the department, but it is as much such work as any of the other matters and things covered by Sections 4324, 4325 and 4326 above quoted.

Nor does the fact that the cost of the preparation of the plans is to be charged against and paid out of the proceeds of the bonds militate against the above conclusion. The fact that a municipal corporation borrows money to carry on specific undertakings under authority of law does not change the nature of the undertaking. Much of the work performed under the supervision of the director of public service must necessarily be immediately paid for out of borrowed money. An interesting question might possibly arise when the time arrives for the determination of the cost of the improvement assessable upon benefited property whether or not the compensation of engineers paid out of the proceeds of the bond issue in question could be included in the total cost so assessable, but this is an entirely separate and distinct question from those presented in your letter.

Inasmuch as the work is regular work of the department of public service it necessarily follows that those who participate in the doing of the work are the regular employes of that department, and that, therefore, the contracts of employment are within the exception contained in Section 4328 and need not be specially authorized by council or entered into after advertisement and competitive bidding. In fact, I am of the opinion, as I am advised that my predecessor was, that every engineer employed by the city to do work under the supervision of the department of public service is an employe of that department and though he be retained in the capacity of an expert or consulting engineer, yet his compensation must be measured by the same rule as the compensation of other members of the department unless council provides special compensation for employes of this kind.

Now by virtue of Section 4327, supra, the number of employes in the department of public service is to be fixed by the director, while under Section 4214, supra, the compensation of such employes is to be fixed by ordinance or resolution of council. It appears from the correspondence enclosed in your letter that the general salary ordinance of the city of Cincinnati prescribes different grades of compensation in the department of public service, thus leaving it to the director of that department to appoint as many employes to a given grade as he may choose (with a possible exception of the "principal assistant engineer"). This method of dealing with the question is, in my opinion, in exact conformity with the requirements of Sections 4314 and 4327 with the possible exception already noted.

Answering your first question specifically, I am of the opinion, for reasons already stated, that inasmuch as the work contemplated, though paid for out of the proceeds of a bond issue, is regular work of the department of public service to be carried on presumably by its regular staff—the ordinance not otherwise providing—the general salary ordinance in effect at the present time would presumably control and limit the authority of the director of public service to prescribe and agree upon the amount or rate of compensation of the persons employed in this special investigation. I say that it would presumably so limit the director. Not having the whole salary ordinance before me I cannot venture to state whether its terms would compel strict construction, and would exclude the compensation of employes employed in the department of public service in work of this nature. I am satisfied, however, that unless the terms of the ordinance rather clearly showed that such a limited operation thereof was intended, the ordinance would apply to the specific cases concerning which you inquire.

I am further of the opinion in connection with your second question, and in direct answer thereto, that if the general salary ordinance does not apply, and there is no ordinance of the city prescribing the compensation of persons specially employed in the department of public service the director of public service is without authority to employ any person upon such special work and to fix his compensation, and the auditor of the city may not lawfully honor any salary vouchers in favor of such person if so employed. If an ordinance were now to be passed prescribing a different or special rule for the salaries of persons specially employed in the department of public service, upon this or any other work, such ordinance would undoubtedly, in accordance with the opinions already rendered by this department, be governed by the provisions of the initiative and referendum act of the last General Assembly and would not become effective until sixty days from the passage thereof.

Answering your third question I beg to state that there is, as I have already hinted, some doubt as to whether council has the authority in passing a salary ordinance to limit the number of persons in the department of public service who shall receive a given compensation. Council has the authority to fix the compensation of each employe in each department of the city government; but as to the department of public service I am of the opinion that this authority is limited to the fixing of compensation which shall attach to each position in the department, leaving to the director of public service the authority to which he is entitled under Section 4327, supra, to determine the number of persons who shall be employed in each position. While the singular number is used in the ordinance in question, I am of the opinion that in order to render it legal this fact may be ignored and the ordinance interpreted to mean that all principal assistant engineers shall receive $3,000 per annum. If then the director of public service chooses to appoint more than one person as "principal assistant engineer" because of some special work he may have in his department, I believe that such plural appointments to the position would be legal. Whether or not the salary of $3,000 to which you refer would govern that of the engineer appointed to make a special survey like that of which you speak depends entirely, of course, upon the interpretation of the salary ordinance as a whole, as to which I have already stated that I would prefer not to render a positive opinion.

Yours very truly,

TIMOTHY S. HOGAN,
Attorney General.

CEMETERIES—LOTS MAY NOT BE LEASED OR DEEDED TO MAUSOLEUM COMPANY.

Cemetery trustees, or boards, either municipal or township, are not authorized to lease or deed lots to Mausoleum company.

June 25th, 1912.

Bureau of Inspection and Supervision of Public Offices, Columbus, Ohio.

GENTLEMEN:—Replying to yours of June 5th, 1912, as to contract of Greenville Cemetery Trustees with Mausoleum Company, regarding the sale of lots, and payment therefor by said company, either in cash or crypts, I beg leave to say:

I see no reason to change my mind on the opinion rendered by me to the prosecuting attorney of Ashtabula County on the same general subject, a copy of which opinion you have.

The fact that this is a joint City and Township Cemetery, makes no difference as to the title to the property and the sale of lots therein, and the control therein, and the same can not be avoided by a contract, which, on its face, is not provided for by law.

I base by opinion on the following clause of your transcript as to this contract, in the light of the general cemetery laws:

> "On the 11th day of January, 1911, an agreement was entered into between the board of trustees of Greenville cemetery and The International Mausoleum Company of Chicago, Ill., whereby lots 22, 23, 26, 27, and 30 to 40 inclusive, at the corner of First and Fifth avenues, in section 4, were set apart for the purpose of erecting thereon a mausoleum sufficient to accommodate at least three hundred crypts. At the completion of said mausoleum, the said company are to pay to the trustees as an endowment fund, $5.00 for each and every crypt, said fund and income therefrom to be used for the care of the land and building as cemetery property and to be left intact, all excess to be placed to the credit of the original sum.

You will notice that fifteen lots are set apart "for the purpose of erecting thereon a mausoleum," etc. Then it is provided, by said contract, that said Mausoleum Company is to pay $5.00 for each crypt, etc., to the trustees, as an endowment fund with provisions as to disposal of the fund and income therefrom.

The whole matter, as proposed, despite the proposition that the cemetery officers are supposed to retain control of their lots, resolves itself into a dual control of these lots and the mortuaries and crypts erected thereon; and deprives the union city and township cemetery trustees of the full and absolute control of all the lots in the cemetery.

Until the legislature provides for this new arrangement, all cemeterw trustees are bount by the law as it now is; and the only safe course to pursue, in order to avoid conflict of jurisdiction and legal questions, is to deny the right to make such contracts as are submitted herein.

Progressive movements, public demand and general accommodation, no doubt, would be accelerated by such an arrangement; but great confusion and conflict of rights would result if the law is not changed to authorize this departure from the strict letter of the law.

Very truly yours,

TIMOTHY S. HOGAN,
Attorney General.

HEALTH OFFICER—BOARD OF HEALTH MAY PAY EXTRA COMPENSATION FOR PHYSICIANS' SERVICES IN QUARANTINE CASES—RATIFICATION AND ADOPTION OF UNAUTHORIZED ACTS OF HEALTH OFFICER—PAYMENT BY MUNICIPALITY.

A Board of Health is empowered to employ a health officer to perform physician's services in quarantine cases, under 4436 General Code, and said health officer may be compensated by the municipality in addition to his salary for such services as are not within his duties as health officer, when the quarantined family is unable to pay the same.

When a health officer employs himself as physician in such cases, the board of health is not bound to compensate him, but it may or may not, in its discretion, adopt the services and certify them for payment by the municipality, under said Section 4438 General Code.

When a health officer, without being so directed by the board of health, contracts for guards, nurses, supplies, etc., in quarantine cases, the board may or may not, as it sees fit, ratify such contracts and certify their amounts to the municipality for payment.

Bureau of Inspection and Supervision of Public Offices, Columbus, Ohio.

GENTLEMEN:—Under favor of June 19th, you requested the opinion of this department upon several questions pertaining to the compensation of Health Officers when acting in the capacity of physician in small pox cases.

I quote Section 4436 of the General Code, which governs each of your inquiries:

> "When a house or other place is quarantined on account of contagious diseases, the board of health having jurisdiction shall provide for all persons confined in such house or place, food, fuel, and all other necessaries of life, including medical attendance, medicine and nurses, when necessary. The expenses so incurred, except those for disinfection, quarantine, or other measures strictly for the protection of the public, when properly certified by the president and clerk of the board of health, or health officer where there is no board of health, shall be paid by the person or persons quarantined, when able to make such payment, and when not by the municipality in which quarantined."

Your first question is as follows:

> "May a health officer of a city board of health be employed by said board as a physician in charge of small pox cases and be allowed extra compensation, in addition to his regular salary for said services as physician?"

The answer thereto is fully covered by an opinion hereto attached which was rendered, under date of October 4, 1911, to M. R. Smith, City Solicitor of Conneaut, Ohio, which held that when a health officer in a city was employed to perform physician's services in a case of quarantine, "all the work done by him in connection with the case of small pox he was called upon to perform in his capacity as health officer, must be compensated for by his monthly salary. All services as a physician not falling within his official capacity as health officer, can be paid by virtue of Section 4436, General Code."

Your next inquiry is as follows:

> "May he, as health officer, employ himself as physician in quarantined cases and bind the board of health to pay him for such services in such an amount as said board of health may determine to be just and reasonable? May said health officer perform the services of a physician in charge of quarantined cases (small pox) and later present a claim therefor to the board and in this manner create a valid obligation against the public funds of the city, if said claim be allowed and approved by the board of health at a subsequent date?"

These questions may be answered together.

Section 4436 above quoted, provides that the Board of Health shall provide the necessary medical attendance, etc., and further provides that the bills for the same when properly certified by the President and Clerk of the Board of Health, shall be paid by the municipality in the event that the quarantined family is unable to meet the same. The power to employ physicians and the duties to approve the payment of their compensation under these circumstances, therefore, rests with the Board itself.

The health officer is designated in Section 4408 of the General Code to be the "executive officer" of the Board of Health; he is the instrument of the board. It is his duty to execute its orders and, in all his duties, unless otherwise provided by statute, he is subject to its direction. When he acts without orders, therefore, he clearly exceeds his authority and has no legal claim for compensation for services as physician, which he performed without such direction.

A public agency or board, however, is empowered to adopt or ratify unauthorized acts which it has itself the power to authorize or perform. The general rule is stated in Mecham on Public Officers, Section 533, as follows:

> "It is, however, the general rule, that whoever was capable of performing an act or entering into a contract with another, unauthorized, has asumed to perform or make for him as his agent, and who is still capable of performing or entering into it, is capable of ratifying that act or contract, thereby rendering it good from the beginning and the same as though he had originally authorized or made it."
> Section 534. And this rule is as true in the case of a corporation, private or municipal, as of an individual. * * *

Also, in Section 838 of the same authority, the rule is stated as follows:

> "* * * * For it is a principle applicable to states and lesser municipal governments and agencies, as well as to private principals, that whatever the principal might originally and could still lawfully do himself, and might then and could still lawfully delegate to an agent, he may subsequently, when done in his name and on his behalf, lawfully ratify and adopt with the same effect as though it had been properly done under a previous authorization."

I am, therefore, of the opinion that the health officer cannot bind the board of health for his own services, in the absence of the latter's authorization or ratification. When, however, the board has ratified his act, by approving the same, the health officer is entitled, in the light of the answer to your first question, to such compensation from the municipality, for such work as a physician, which is not included in his duties as health officer, as the board has legally certified to.

Your last question is:

> "Could the health officer create valid obligations against the city for supplies, guards, nurses, etc., provided such claims ordered by said health officer be subsequently allowed and approved by the board of health?"

The purchasing of supplies, under Section 4436, General Code, and the employing of nurses thereunder, as well as the employment of guards, under Section 4431, General Code, as subject to the same rules and procedure as the employment of physicians as aforesaid, and may be accomplished through the instrumentality of the Health Officer, upon due authorization or ratification by the Board. When bills are so incurred therefor by the Health Officer and properly certified by the Board of Health, they become a legal charge against a municipality, in accordance with Section 4436, General Code.

Yours very truly,
TIMOTHY S. HOGAN,
Attorney General.

MUNICIPAL COURT OF CLEVELAND—WITNESS' AND JURORS' FEES IN STATE AND CITY CASES.

Under 1579-2, General Code, criminal jurors in the Municipal Court of Cleveland, shall receive the same fees as jurors in the Court of Common Pleas, which are $2.00 per day and five cents per mile from residence.

Under 1579-4, General Code, witness fees in said court are the same as those formerly provided for the police court of Cleveland, except that the judges of the court may provide a standard of fees and costs.

Such witness fees as the city of Cleveland has fixed for cases of violation of ordinances or as have been fixed by the judges of said court, must be allowed to govern.

Under 4580, General Code, if council or the judges have fixed no standard witness fees in cases of violation of ordinances, they shall be the same as in cases before justices of the peace, viz: fifty cents a day and mileage at five cents per mile.

In State cases under 4580, General Code, witnesses are entitled to $1.00 a day and five cents a mile.

August 5, 1912.

Bureau of Inspection and Supervision of Public Offices, Columbus, Ohio.

GENTLEMEN:—I acknowledge yours of March 21, 1912, in which you ask:

> "What are the legal fees of witnesses and jurors serving in the trial of misdemeanor cases in the municipal court of the City of Cleveland, Ohio? Also, what are the fees of jurors and witnesses when serving in cases tried in said court for the violation of municipal ordinances?"

The municipal court of Cleveland was established by Tit. IV., Chapter 5a, General Code; and the provisions of said code relating thereto, are embraced in Sections 1579-1 to 1579-45, General Code, inclusive. By Section 1579-1 it is made a court of record. Section 1579-9 gives this court "Jurisdiction of all misdemeanors and of all violations of city ordinances of which police courts in municipalities now have or may hereafter be given jurisdiction."

This municipal court was created by a special act; and it succeeded the old police courts of Cleveland—the latter, together with all offices thereof, having been abolished by Section 1579-45, General Code (effective anuary 1, 1912).

This court, then, being a creature of Chapter 5a, supra, is governed by its provisions, and not by the general laws of the State on the subject, except insofar as references are made to, and adoption of, the provisions of general law on the subject, as recited in the Cleveland Municipal Court Act.

The Legislature is presumed to have covered the ground fully in this Act, on this subject; and when any questions, such as the ones propounded herein, arise, our first duty is to carefully read this special act, construe it as a whole, and govern ourselves accordingly. I will first take up the question of jurors' fees in said court.

Section 1579-21, General Code, provides:

> "Jurors in the municipal court shall be chosen and summoned in accordance with an ordinance of the Council of the City of Cleveland, or if no such ordinance is enforced, in accordance with a rule of the court. They shall be impaneled in the same manner and challenged for the same causes as jurors in the Court of Common Pleas; they shall have the same qualifications and receive the same fees as jurors in the Court of Common Pleas; their fees shall be paid out of the treasury of the City of Cleveland."

The marginal reference to this section in Page and Adams statutes is: "choosing and summoning jury." This is the only section of the municipal court chapter wherein jurors' fees are specifically mentioned. There is no ambiguity in the language, and I believe it includes all criminal juries in said court. This court holds four terms a year, keeps permanent records, ranks next to the Common Pleas, and it was the intention of the Legislature that uniform fees should be drawn by its jurors, which it fixed in this section.

Jurors' Fees in Common Pleas Court.

Section 3008, General Code, provides that each juror shall receive $2.00 for each day's service; and if not a talesman, five cents a mile from his residence. I am, therefore, of the opinion that jurors in said Municipal Court are entitled to the above fees, in criminal cases.

But it is claimed that Section 1579-40 of this special act, might and does, provide a different rule. The marginal note to this section, in Page and Adams Statutes, is: "Costs and how taxed." In the first place jurors' fees in criminal cases, in courts of record are not costs, and are never taxable or recoverable as such—being paid directly from the treasury. So this section has no relation to jurors' fees—the same having been fully covered in Section 1579-21; and the Legislature is not presumed to have intended to make two provisions, covering the same subject, in the same chapter.

Witness Fees in Criminal Cases in Cleveland Municipal Court.

The disposition of this question requires a careful investigation of all general laws on the subject, involving jurisdiction of this court, rules of practice therein, together with the antecedent history of the various police courts of Cleveland of which the present municipal court is the successor; and all the provisions of Chapter 5 aforesaid on the subject of fees and costs, must be construed in pari materia with all general statutes on the subject.

Section 3014, General Code, provides that each witness attending under subpoena, before Common Pleas Court, Grand Jury, or other court of record, shall receive, for each day's attendance, $1.00 and five cents for each mile, the same as in civil cases.

If this were the only expression on this subject, no difficulty could arise concerning their fees, as this general statute interprets itself. But Section 1579-40 (which is a part of the special chapter, above cited) contains the following provision: "In criminal cases, all fees and costs shall be the same, as now fixed in the police court of said city. The judges of the municipal court may by rule of court provide in all cases, not covered by this act, a standard of fees and costs." Witness fees are within these provisions. What is meant by "as now fixed in the police court of said city?" How fixed? By city ordinance, by statute or rule of court? The above provisions being fixed in the special chapter, must dominate as against general provisions on the same subject, if we can arrive at an intelligent conclusion as to their interpretation. I do not know whether the City of Cleveland has, by ordinance, fixed witness fees or not; neither am I apprised whether the court has established a standard of fees and costs. These matters would appear only in the record of ordinances, and the journals of the Municipal Court, respectively, of said city. There is no provision in this special act, or in any law on the subject, in which witness fees are specifically mentioned, applying to Cleveland.

If the City of Cleveland, through its council, has fixed witness fees by ordinance, in the municipal court, then the fees so determined and specified are to be paid. This would solve the question, and we need look no further. Simply to follow the ordinance, or the standard fees established by the municipal court, is all that is necessary; and the officers whose duty it is to certify fees are to be guided solely by what the local records of the city disclose on that subject. If the expression in Section 1579-40—"in criminal cases all fees and costs shall be the same as now fixed in the police court of said city"—means fees fixed by law, then we must see what these fees were, under the general law applying to all police courts, at and before the enactment of the special act creating Cleveland's Municipal Court.

Subdivision 11, Tit. XII., Division 5, Chapter 3, of Bates Statutes, being Sections 1536-794 to 1536-846, inclusive, denominated "Police Courts," is an uncertain commingling of special acts applying to police courts of different cities, as well as a few sections intended to apply to all. Section 4578, General Code, provides that prosecutions for offenses against the laws of the State shall be conducted in the name of the State; and for violation of ordinances in the name of the corporation.

The fees for witnesses in these two classes of cases are different. Section 4580, General Code, says that witnesses in cases for violation of ordinances shall receive the same fees as in like cases before a Justice of the Peace, which are fifty cents a day, and mileage at five cents per mile. The same section says that in State cases the fees are the same as in like cases in Common Pleas Court, which are one dollar a day and five cents a mile as above set out.

Section 4581 says that fees for violation of ordinances shall be such as the council prescribes by ordinance, not exceeding fees for like services in State cases.

My conclusions are as follows:

First. All jurors in criminal cases in said court are entitled to $2.00 a day and five cents a mile, if living more than one mile from place of holding court.

Second. All witnesses in State cases are entitled to $1.00 a day and five cents a mile, if living more than a mile from place of holding court.

Third. If the Council of Cleveland has by ordinance fixed the fees for witnesses in cases brought in the name of the city for violations of ordinances, then such witnesses are entitled to the fees specified in the ordinance; and if the municipal court has fixed a standard of fees, the same must be paid as provided in the order of the Court.

Fourth. If there is no ordinance of the city on the subject, then all witnesses in cases for violation of ordinances are the same as before Justice of the Peace —fifty cents a day and five cents a mile, if residing more than a mile from the place of holding court.

Very truly yours,
TIMOTHY S. HOGAN,
Attorney General.

TOWNSHIP TRUSTEES—FEES PAID FOR ANNEXATION PROCEEDINGS ARE ILLEGAL—MUST FURNISH CIVIL DOCKETS TO JUSTICE OF PEACE.

Inasmuch as the limits of Millcreek Township, Hamilton County, include more than one municipal corporation, Section 3512, General Code, cannot apply to an annexation of a part of such township to Cincinnati, and the township offices would not be abolished by such annexation, and the ordinary duties of the township trustees will continue.

The township trustees are not authorized to perform any duties in a proceeding for annexation of a part of a township to a village. Payment from the township treasury, presumably for such services, is therefore illegal and should be recovered and repaid into the township treasury.

Under 1724, General Code, the township trustees are required to furnish Justices of the Peace with civil dockets. Criminal dockets, however, must be paid for out of fines retained by the Justice under 1741, General Code.

August 3, 1912.

Bureau of Inspection and Supervision of Public Offices, Columbus, Ohio.

GENTLEMEN:—Under date of March 6, 1912, you inquire of this department:

"On October 28, 1911, Millcreek Township, Hamilton County, became a part of the city of Cincinnati. A part of Norwood City, St. Bernard and Elmwood Village, within the original boundaries of the said Millcreek Township, were not annexed to Cincinnati. Are there statutory duties that will make necessary the continuance of the Millcreek Township board of trustees? If so, what are the duties?

"An examination of Millcreek township books shows that on December 16, 1911, J. P. M., E. S. P. and J. W. H., township trustees, each drew from the township funds for services in annexation proceedings, $100.00. Were these payments legal? If not legal and should be returned, to whom should they be returned?

"During the years 1910 and 1911, township trustees paid $187.00 for dockets for S. B. B., Justice of the Peace, and during the same period, $77.60 for docket for C. F. D., Justice of Peace. Were these payments illegal and if so, from whom should the money be recovered and if recovered, to whom paid?"

I assume from your inquiry that at the time of the annexation of the territory to Cincinnati, Millcreek township consisted of the territory so annexed and also of territory in Norwood City, St. Bernard and Elmwood Village.

Your first inquiry involves a construction of Section 3512, General Code, which provides:

> "When the corporate limits of a city or village become identical with those of a township, all township offices shall be abolished, and the duties thereof shall thereafter be performed by the corresponding officers of the city or village, except that justices of the peace and constables shall continue the exercise of their functions under municipal ordinances providing offices, regulating the disposition of their fees, their compensation, clerks and other officers and employes. Such justices and constables shall be elected at municipal elections. All property, moneys, credits, books, records and documents of such township shall be delivered to the council of such city or village. All rights, interests or claims in favor of or against the township may be enforced by or against the corporation."

This section applies when the boundaries of a township are identical with the corporate limits of a city or village. In the case you submit the boundaries of Millcreek township include more than one village or city, or parts thereof. The boundaries thereof are not identical with the corporate limits of either of the cities or villages.

The provisions of Section 3512, General Code, cannot apply for another reason. Said section retains the offices of justice of the peace and constables, who are to exercise their powers under muncipal ordinance. The effect of merging the township when its boundaries are identical with a village or city is to place the justices of the peace and constables under municipal authority. A question would arise in the care of Millcreek township as to which municipal corporation should assume jurisdiction over such officers. The same will apply to the provisions for claims for or against the township. The statutes do not provide for such a situation.

I find no other provision for merging a township with a municipal corporation. As Section 3512, General Code, does not apply to the case in question, the township is continued in existence and is entitled to have its statutory officers.

You ask what are the statutory duties of the township trustees of Millcreek township? As will be seen in answer to your third inquiry herein the township trustees are required to furnish dockets for justices of the peace. They have other duties to perform in reference to the bonds of justices of the peace. There are other statutory duties of the board of township trustees. Those above mentioned are sufficient to show that they have some duties to perform.

In your second inquiry it appears that the township trustees have drawn certain fees for services in annexation proceedings. Upon inquiry at your office it appears that this money was drawn for services performed as trustees of the township in connection with the annexation of the part of the township to the city of Cincinnati referred to in your first inquiry.

Section 3540, General Code, provides:

> "Each officer shall receive for the services required of him under this division, the same fees he would be entitled to for similar services in other cases. Unless such fees are paid in advance, for services under this chapter, by the agent of the petitioners, of whom demand may be made, and by some person interested for services under other chapters of this division, the officer shall not be required to perform the service."

This section is found in the chapter relating to the incorporation of villages, wherein the township trustees may have certain duties to perform.

Section 3294, General Code, provides:

"Each trustee shall be entitled to one dollar and fifty cents for each day of service in the discharge of his duties in relation to partition fences, to be paid in equal proportions by the parties, and one dollar and fifty cents for each day of service in the business of the township, to be paid from the township treasury. The compensation of any trustee to be paid from the treasury shall not exceed one hundred and fifty dollars in any year including services in connection with the poor. Each trustee shall present an itemized statement of his account for such per diem and services, which shall be filed with the clerk of the township, and by him preserved for inspection by any person interested."

The annexation of territory to municipal corporations is provided for in sections 3547 to 3576, General Code. The proceedings in these cases are had before council of the corporation and before the county commissioners. I find no statute wherein the township trustees are required to act in a proceeding for the annexation of a part of a township to a city or village. Neither do I find any authority for the payment to the trustees of any money from the township treasury for such services.

Payment for such services is unauthorized and was therefore illegal. As the township still exists, the money so illegally paid should be recovered from the township trustees and paid into the township treasury.

Your third inquiry is as to certain expenditures for the dockets of the justices of the peace.

Section 1724, General Code, provides ,in part:

"Each justice of the peace must keep a docket, which shall be furnished by the trustees of the township, in which must be entered by him:"

The statute then enumerates in detail what shall be entered into the docket.

This statute has reference to civil dockets and not to criminal dockets. The trustees are required to furnish the civil dockets of the justices of the peace, and pay for the same is to be made from the township treasury.

Criminal dockets are to be paid for as provided in Section 1742, General Code, which reads:

"A justice of the peace may retain out of fines or other moneys belonging to the county coming into his hands in criminal proceedings, the amount paid for a criminal docket, and each justice of the peace, except those receiving a salary, may retain out of such fines or other moneys an amount not exceeding twenty dollars for a suitable desk in which to keep the dockets, files, papers, books and documents of his office, which shall be the property of the county and shall be turned over by each justice of the peace to his successor. Such justice may expend of such fines and other moneys not exceeding five dollars per annum, for necessary paper, blanks and other stationery for his office, but a justice shall not purchase such desk if he has received a suitable desk from his predecessor. A justice of the peace paying out money for such purposes shall file with the county auditor, at the expiration of his term of office, a sworn itemized statement thereof. In making the annual statement to the auditor as required by law, a justice of the peace, having made such expenditures or having such moneys in his hands contemplated for such purposes, shall include therein the moneys so paid or held by him."

The criminal docket is not furnished by the township.

If the expenditures for dockets were for civil dockets of the justice of the peace to be used by him as such justice the expenditures were authorized and are legal. The amount of such expenditures appears rather large, This might bear further investigation.

Respectfully,
TIMOTHY S. HOGAN,
Attorney General.

OFFICES COMPATIBLE—INCOMPATIBLE—CITY AUDITOR AND CLERK OF COUNCIL, COLLECTOR OF WATER RENTALS, CLERK OF SINKING FUND TRUSTEES, CLERK OF BOARD OF CONTROL AND CLERK OF SAFETY OR SERVICE DEPARTMENT.

By Sections 4284 and 4286, General Code, the office of city auditor is made a check upon those officers of a city who in any way handle funds of the city, or who are required to keep accounts of the same, or who are required to certify claims for payment to the city auditor, in order that he may draw vouchers for the same. His office is therefore incompatible with any of such offices.

When the duties of a clerk of council of a city do not require him to perform any of such acts, the city auditor may hold both positions and receive the payments incidental to each, providing it is physically possible to perform the duties of both.

The same is true with reference to the duties of the office of clerk of the Board of Control, and clerk of the Service or Safety Department.

September 9, 1912.

Bureau of Inspection and Supervision of Public Offices, Columbus, Ohio.

GENTLEMEN:—Your favor of August 12, 1912, is received in which you state:

"We respectfully request your reconsideration of the opinion rendered this department under date of January 19, 1912, wherein it was held that it is illegal for a city auditor to serve as clerk of council, clerk of the department of service, and various clerkships in the municipal government."

The question under consideration in the opinion of January 19, 1912, to which you refer, was as follows:

"Is it legal for the city auditor to serve as clerk of council, clerk to the director of safety, clerk to the director of service, clerk to the board of control, secretary of the sinking fund trustees, or collector of water rentals if said city auditor has been selected or appointed to said position by the proper authority? And, if so appointed, is he entitled to the compensation fixed by council for each of said positions in addition to his salary as city auditor?"

In this opinion it was held that the city auditor could not hold these positions because they were incompatible with the office of city auditor.

The rule of incompatibility in office is stated by Dustin, J., in the case of State vs. Gehert, 12 Cir. Ct. N. S., 274, on page 275 of the report, where he says:

"Offices are considered incompatible when one is subordinate to, or in any way a check upon the other; or when it is physically impossible for one person to discharge the duties of both."

This rule states two conditions of incompatibility, first, when one office is subordinate to, or is in any way a check upon the other; second, when it is physically impossible for one person to discharge the duties of both offices.

It appears from your letter that it is physically possible for the same person to perform the duties of city auditor and of the clerkships in question, in a large number of the smaller cities of the State. It will be necessary, therefore, to consider only the first ground of incompatibility.

In order to determine whether a particular office is incompatible with another upon the first ground it is necessary to examine the duties of each office.

The duties of the city auditor are prescribed in Sections 4275 to 4278 and Sections 4283 to 4292 of the General Code.

Section 4284, General Code, provides:

"At the end of each fiscal year, or oftener if required by council, the auditor shall examine and audit the accounts of all officers and departments. He shall prescribe the form of accounts and reports to be rendered to his department, and the form and method of keeping accounts by all other departments, and, subject to the powers and duties of the state bureau of inspection and supervision of public offices, shall have the inspection and revision thereof. Upon the death, resignation, removal or expiration of the term of any officer, the auditor shall audit the accounts of such officer, and if such officer be found indebted to the city, he shall immediately give notice thereof to council and to the solicitor, and the latter shall proceed forthwith to collect the indebtedness."

Section 4286, General Code, provides:

"On the first Monday of each month, detailed statements of the receipts and expenditures of the several officers and departments for the preceding month shall be made to the auditor by the heads thereof. The auditor shall countersign each receipt given by the treasurer before it is delivered to the person entitled to receive it, and shall charge the treasurer with the amount thereof. If the auditor approves any voucher contrary to the provisions of this title, he and his sureties shall be individually liable for the amount thereof."

By virtue of these sections it is made the duty of the city auditor to examine and audit the accounts of the various officers of the city, and the head of each department is required to make detailed statements of the receipts and expenditures of the department to the city auditor.

These duties of the city auditor pertain to the receipts and expenditures of money of the city, and of accounts with the city. The office of city auditor is a check upon those officers of the city who in any way handle funds of the city, or who are required to keep accounts of the same, or who are required to certify claims for payment to the city auditor in order that he may draw vouchers for the same. It is the duty of the city auditor to examine and audit the accounts of all such officers, and if he finds an officer indebted to the city at the termination of his official services to report such indebtedness to the proper official.

Therefore, the city auditor is a check upon every officer of the city who has charge of any accounts of the city, or who receives or pays out funds of the city, or who makes a certificate to the auditor for the payment of claims. The office of city auditor would be incompatible with any and all of such offices.

Therefore, the city auditor cannot also fill a position in the service of the city, when the duties of such other office require the incumbent to account for, receive or expend moneys or funds of the city, or to certify claims to the auditor for payment.

This rule will now be applied to the various positions of which you inquire.

In an opinion given to Hon. G. T. Thomas, city solicitor of Troy, Ohio, under date of March 16, 1912, it was held that when council has made provision for and has fixed the compensation of a clerk or secretary of the sinking fund trustees, the city auditor cannot fill such position. That opinion is still adhered to.

The clerk of council of a city has certain statutory duties and in addition thereto council may prescribe other duties, by virtue of Section 4210, General Code, which reads:

> "Within ten days from the commencement of their term, the members of council shall elect a president pro tem, a clerk, and such other employes of council as may be necessary, and fix their duties, bonds and compensation. The officers and employes of council shall serve for two years, but may be removed at any time for cause, at a regular meeting by a vote of two-thirds of the members elected to council."

The statutory duties of a clerk of council pertain principally to the authentication of ordinances, the certification of their publication, the serving of notices of public improvements, the certification of special assessments to the county auditor, and to the recording of the proceedings of council. None of these duties are incompatible with the duties of the office of city auditor.

When the duties of a clerk of council of a city do not require him to handle funds or to keep an account of the same, or to certify an indebtedness for payment to the auditor, the positions of clerk of council and of city auditor may then be occupied by the same person, and he would be entitled to receive the compensation provided for each office.

Another position inquired of is that of collector of water rentals. The duties of this office are not prescribed by statute, but from the title of the office, it is apparent that the person who fills this position must receive and account for funds belonging to the city. It is the duty of the city auditor to examine and audit the accounts of such officer. These positions are, therefore, incompatible and cannot be filled at the same time by the same person.

The duties of the clerk of the director of public service; clerk of the director of public safety; and clerk of the board of control, and of the service and safety departments, are not prescribed by statute.

The city auditor has certain duties to perform in reference to the opening of bids in the safety and service departments as prescribed in Section 4278, General Code, which reads:

> "When bids are required to be filed for the letting of contracts by the director of public service, or public safety, it shall be the duty of the city auditor or his chief deputy to attend and assist at the opening thereof and to inspect them."

This duty will not of itself make the positions of city auditor and clerk of the safety or service department incompatible.

Unless the duties of the office of clerk of the board of control, or clerk of the safety or service department, require such officer to receive, pay out or to account for funds of the city, or to certify an indebtedness for payment to the city auditor, such positions are not incompatible with the position of city auditor, and the same person may fill said positions and that of city auditor at the same time and receive the compensation fixed for each office.

Respectfully,
TIMOTHY S. HOGAN,
Attorney General.

PARK COMMISSION—COUNCIL MAY MAKE APPROPRIATION FOR EXPENDITURES OF.

The council is empowered to make appropriations for park purposes where there is no park commission and the control and management of the parks remain in the directors of public service. The park commission act does not take this power away from the council, and where such commission exists, therefore, council has the same authority to make detailed appropriations of the park funds to be expended by the park commissioners, as council has to make appropriations for other municipal purposes.

July 18, 1912.

Bureau of Inspection and Supervision of Public Offices, Columbus, Ohio.

GENTLEMEN:—Under date of January 2, 1912, you inquire:

> "Has the council of the city of Cincinnati the authority to make detailed appropriations of the proceeds of the levy made for park purposes, the parks of said city being under the control of a park commission, or has said commission the absolute control over the moneys produced by the levy for park purposes."

The law relating to park commissioners in cities is found in Sections 4053 to 4065, inclusive, of the General Code.

Section 4056, General Code, provides the manner of disbursing the money received for parks as follows:

> "All disbursements of money shall be made by the treasurer of the city upon warrants drawn by the auditor and no warrant shall be drawn by the city auditor or paid by the treasurer unless approved and attested by the signatures, in their own handwriting, of the president and secretary of the board of park commissioners."

In cities having park commissioners the management and control of the parks thereof are placed under their control and management by virtue of Section 4057, General Code, which reads:

> "The board of park commissioners shall have the control and management of parks, park entrances, parkways, boulevards and connecting viaducts and subways, children's play grounds, public baths and stations of public comfort located in such parks, of all improvements thereon and the acquisition, construction, repair and maintenance thereof. The board shall exercise exclusively all the powers and perform all the duties, in regard to such property, vested in and imposed upon the director of public service."

Section 4058, General Code, provides for the expenditure of the money by the park commissioners as follows:

> "The board shall have the expenditure of all moneys appropriated by the city council or received from any other source whatever, for the purchase, acquisition, improvement, maintenance, equipment or enjoyment of all such property, but no liability shall be incurred or expenditure made unless the money required therefor is in the treasury to the credit of the park fund and not appropriated for any other purpose."

Section 4062, General Code, provides:

> "All moneys received by the city from taxation or otherwise for the purpose of acquiring, constructing, equipping and maintaining parks, park entrances, parkways, boulevards and connecting viaducts and subways, children's playgrounds, public baths and stations of public comfort located in such parks, shall be deposited in the city treasury and transferred by warrants on the city auditor to the credit of the board of park commissioners in a fund designated as 'the park fund.' All expenditures incurred by such board shall be by warrant of the city auditor drawn in pursuance of the regularly authorized attested voucher of such board of park commissioners."

The park commissioners are not authorized to levy a tax for park purposes but must act through council by virtue of Section 4064, General Code. If the council fails to make the levy the question shall be submitted to a vote.

Said Section 4064, General Code, provides:

> "When the board of park commissioners deems it necessary to issue bonds or to levy a tax for the purpose of carrying into effect the powers herein conferred, the board shall by written resolution so declare its judgment and state therein the amount of bonds to be issued or the tax to be levied for such purposes and transmit the resolution to the city council. If the council fails to enact legislation for the issuance of such bonds or the levying of such tax, within ninety days after the time the resolution was received by the council, the question of the issuance of the bonds or the levy of the tax shall be submitted to a vote of the qualified electors of the city, and the board of park commissioners shall file the resolution and request with the board of deputy state supervisors of elections of the county. Such board of deputy state supervisors shall then submit the question of the issuance of such bonds or the levying of such tax, or both, to the qualified voters of the city, at either a special or general election as the resolution and request may specify, to be held in the manner provided by law for voting on the question of the issue of bonds in excess of the limit fixed by law, except as otherwise provided herein."

None of the sections pertaining to the park commission give any authority to make appropriations of funds raised for park purposes.

Section 3797, General Code, provides:

"At the beginning of each fiscal half year, the council shall make appropriations for each of the several objects for which the corporation has to provide, or from the moneys known to be in the treasury, or estimated to come into it during the six months next ensuing from the collection of taxes and all other sources of revenue. All expenditures within the following six months shall be made from and within such appropriations and balances thereof."

Where there is no park commission the parks are under the control and management of the director of public service. In such case there is no question as to the right and duty of council to make detailed appropriations for park purposes. The park commission act does not take this authority from council. The language used in Section 4058, supra, that the board shall have the expenditure of all money "appropriated by the city council" "in the treasury to the credit of the park fund and not appropriated for any other purpose," shows that it is the duty of council to make appropriations for park purposes.

I am, therefore, of the opinion that the council of a city has the same authority to make detailed appropriations of the park funds of said city, which are to be expended by the park commissioners thereof, as council has to make appropriations for other municipal purposes.

Respectfully,

TIMOTHY S. HOGAN,

Attorney General.

COUNCIL—PLURALITY VOTE SUFFICIENT TO ELECT COUNCILMAN—APPOINTMENT BY MAYOR TO FILL VACANCY AFTER THIRTY DAYS—DISQUALIFICATION BY VIRTUE OF INTEREST IN PUBLIC CONTRACT—POWER OF COUNCIL AND OF COURT TO ADJUDGE.

In the absence of a contrary rule of council adopted by authority of 4238, General Code, a plurality of votes is sufficient to determine an election by council.

Under 4236, General Code, the mayor is empowered to fill a vacancy in council by appointment, when council fails to make such appointment before the expiration of thirty days from the date of the creation of said vacancy.

From a review of the decisions, council is empowered to declare a person disqualified for the reason set out in Section 4207, General Code, but disqualifications set out in 3808, General Code, must be adjudicated by a court in quo warranto proceedings. When disqualifications admittedly exist under either section, however, council is not in any event empowered to declare the person qualified, and when such person admits the disqualification, quo warranto is unnecessary.

When a person is elected by council, therefore, to fill a vacancy, and such person admits himself to be disqualified, by virtue of interest as stockholder in a corporation furnishing gas to the municipality, there has been no election, and if council has taken no other steps to fill the vacancy within thirty days, the mayor may make the appointment, provided by 4236, General Code.

August 27, 1912.

The Bureau of Inspection and Supervision of Public Offices, Columbus, Ohio.

GENTLEMEN:—Under date of April 16th you requested my opinion upon the following questions:

> "1. Is an election by council to fill a vacancy in its membership made by a plurality vote legal?
> "2. Is the appointee of a mayor to fill a vacancy in council appointed after the expiration of thirty days from the date of the creation of said vacancy, if he qualifies and is recognized by council, a legally constituted member of said body? If such an appointee serves would measures passed by his vote be legal enactments of the council?"

In answer to your first question, the cases of State ex rel Attorney General vs. Anderson, 45 O. S., 196, and State ex rel Calderwood vs. Miller, 62 O. S., 436, are directly in point, both presenting authority for the principle that in the absence of a contrary rule of council adopted by authority of Section 4238, General Code, a plurality of votes is sufficient to determine an election by council.

Sections 4236 and 4237, General Code, provide as follows:

> "Section 4236. When the office of councilman becomes vacant, the vacancy shall be filled by election of council for the unexpired term. If council fail within thirty days to fill such vacancy, the mayor shall fill it by appointment.
> "Section 4237. Council shall be the judge of the election and qualification of its members. A majority of all the members elected shall be a quorum to do business, but a less number may adjourn from day to day and compel attendance of absent members in such manner and under such penalties as are prescribed by ordinance. The council shall provide rules for the manner of calling special meetings."

Section 4238, General Code, provides that "council shall determine its own rules."

As there are no statutory provisions specifying the method which shall be adopted by council in such elections, I am of the opinion that under the power to determine its own rules council may provide for the election of a member to fill a vacancy by other than a plurality vote should it so desire, provided, of course, that it can not exceed the limitations of Section 4237, General Code, requiring a majority to constitute a quorum to do business.

In answer to your first question, therefore, I am of the opinion that in the absence of any other rule of procedure legally adopted by council, a vacancy in its body is filled by the plurality vote of a quorum.

The answer to your second question is afforded by Section 4236, General Code, above quoted.

In view of the clear provisions of this statute there can be no doubt that the mayor is empowered to fill a vacancy in council by appointment after the expiration of thirty days from date of creation of said vacancy. If such appointee, therefore, qualifies, he becomes a legally constituted member of said body, and measures passed by his vote would be legal enactments of council.

In the letter of Mr. Dilley which prompted the above inquiries and which you have submitted therewith, the facts are materially as follows:

"A vacancy was created by the death of a councilman. An election was held by council (a quorum being present) to fill the vacancy, at which one Mr. B., who was incidentally a holder of $15,000 worth of preferred stock in the Trumbull Public Service Company, which corporation furnished light and water to the city, received a plurality vote. The mayor believing that council had adopted a rule which required a majority vote to elect and that Mr. B. was not, therefore, elected, appointed one Mr. C. at a time subsequent to the expiration of thirty days from the death of the original councilman, but within thirty days after the date upon which the plurality vote had been accorded. Mr. B had, meanwhile, believing himself disqualified by virtue of Section 4208, General Code, withdrawn all claims to the election."

You inquire as to the legality of measures passed with the vote of Mr. C.

Sections 3808 and 4207, General Code, provide as follows:

"Section 3808. No member of the council, board, officer or commissioner of the corporation shall have any interest in the expenditure of money on the part of the corporation other than his fixed compensation. A violation of any provision of this or the preceding two sections shall disqualify the party violating it from holding any office of trust or profit in the corporation, and shall render him liable to the corporation for all sums of money or other thing he may receive contrary to the provisions of such sections, and if in office he shall be dismissed therefrom.

"Section 4207. Councilmen at large shall have resided in their respective cities, and councilmen from wards shall have resided in their respective wards, for at least one year next preceding their election. Each > member of council shall be an elector of the city, shall not hold any other public office or employment, except that of notary public or member of the state militia, and shall not be interested in any contract with the city. A member who ceases to possess any of the qualifications herein required, or removes from his ward, if elected from a ward, or from the city, if elected from the city at large, shall forthwith forfeit his office."

It is well settled that statutes of this nature extend to the interest of a stockholder in a corporation contracting with the municipality.

The case of State ex rel vs. Egry, 79 O. S., 391, distinguishes between the right of council to declare a member disqualified under Section 4207, General Code, and the right to declare such members disqualified under Section 3808, General Code. The case presents authority for the proposition that council is not judge of the qualifications set out in Section 3808, General Code, whilst on page 407 there appears a dictum to the effect that the qualifications set out in Section 4207, General Code, are such as council may be the judge of. Other ruling decisions of Ohio courts on the question are as follows: Stearns vs. Wyaming, 53 O. S., 532; State ex rel vs. Berry, 42 O. S., 232, present authority for the rule that ordinarily council is the exclusive judge of the election and qualifications of its members. In these cases, however, the court had not before it the question of any violation of Sections 4207 or 3808, General Code, above quoted, but was considering questions purely of the validity of an election.

The case of State ex rel vs. O'Brien, 47 O. S., 464, is in point, in that it had before it the question of the disqualification of a councilman under Section 4207 General Code, on the ground of non-residence in the respective ward for the period of one year previous. The court held the ward had no legal existence and ousted the claimant to office, thus overruling the action of council in declaring said member elected.

In the case of State ex rel vs. Collister, 600 C. N. S., page 33, authority is presented for the right of a court to oust a member elected by council on the ground of disqualification or non-citizenship, specified in Section 4207, General Code.

There is no case which has held that where any of the disqualifications set out in either Section 4207 or 3808, General Code, indisputably exists that council has, nevertheless, the right to declare the claimant elected. To so hold would enable the council to override the express will of the Legislature and, in effect, would be a substitution of the discretion of an inferior body for the express will of a superior body. Such a ruling was surely not intended by the courts. In every case which presented the admitted fact of the existence of any of the disqualifying provisions set out in either Section 4207 or 3808, General Code, the courts have overruled the choice of the council.

I am, therefore, of the opinion that the aforesaid dictum in the case in the 79 O. S., to the effect that council is the judge of the qualifications set out in Section 4207, General Code, extends such discretion to council only to the extent of declaring a person disqualified under said section, but does not enable that body to declare a person qualified in the face of the fact that there is an admitted circumstance which would render such person disqualified under said section. In short, the effect of the case in the 79 O. S. is that disqualifications under Section 3808, General Code, must be judicially determined, while disqualifications under Section 4207, General Code, may be determined by council. Council may not determine a person qualified, however, when admitted facts exist which would render him disqualified under either section. I see no reason, however, why, when the person elected admits his disqualification and makes no contest for the office, there should be any necessity for a decision of court determining the disqualification in any case.

In the present question the case is that of a councilman admittedly disqualified by interest in a contract in contravention to Section 4207, General Code. The council, however (presumably by mistake), has declared him elected. The councilman in question, according to your statement of facts, has withdrawn his claim and the new appointee of the mayor is serving as councilman. The facts having been admitted, the court would have no discretion in quo warranto other than to oust him from his seat. His admission and withdrawal has rendered the quo warranto unnecessary.

Mr. B. was admittedly disqualified from the beginning; the new appointee was duly appointed after the expiration of thirty days from the creation of the vacancy. He is, therefore, a legal member of council and all measures passed by his vote are legal enactments.

Very truly yours,
TIMOTHY S. HOGAN,
Attorney General.

EXAMINERS OF WATERWORKS—APPOINTMENT BY MAYOR AND FIXING OF COMPENSATION BY COUNCIL—APPROPRIATION—PAYMENT FROM MAYOR'S FUND.

A resolution of council providing for the appointment by the mayor of an examiner of a department of a city is not necessary, as such appointment may be made by the mayor by virtue of Section 3792 General Code.

The compensation of such examiner, by virtue of said Section 3792, General Code, must be fixed by council.

Council may fix an appropriation for said compensation or designate a fund from which it shall be paid. When council does not so do, payment must be made from the mayor's fund.

August 27, 1912.

Bureau of Inspection and Supervision of Public Offices, Columbus, Ohio.

GENTLEMEN:—Under date of July 17, 1912, you inquire:

"The following is a copy of a resolution passed by the council of the city of Cincinnati:

"'A RESOLUTION

"'Requesting the mayor to appoint an investigating committee to ascertain whether more modern methods of bookkeeping could be installed in certain departments.

"'Be it resolved by the council of the city of Cincinnati, state of Ohio.

"'Section 1. That the mayor be and hereby is, requested to appoint competent disinterested persons not exceeding three in number, and not more than two of whom shall be of the same political party, to examine the affairs of the water works department for the purpose of ascertaining whether or not a more modern or better system of bookkeeping can be installed therein, and for such other purposes and departments as may be deemed proper, at a reasonable compensation to be hereafter determined by council, which compensation shall in no event be less than $100.00 per month, nor in excess of $200.00 per month, for time actually expended in the work.'

"'Passed April 2, 1912.

"'(Signed) J. W. PECK.
"'President pro tem of Council.

"'Attest: ARTHUR ESPY, Clerk.

"'Approved April 3, 1912.

"'(Signed) SIMEON M. JOHNSON,
"'Acting Mayor.'

"Also follows a copy of an appointment under said resolution:

"'CINCINNATI, May 9, 1912.

"'HON. IRA D. WASHBURN,
"'City Auditor.

"'DEAR SIR:—This is to certify that on April 1st, 1912, I appoint C. R. Hebble as examiner of the water works department at a salary of two hundred ($200) per month.

"'Respectfully,
"'(Signed) HENRY T. HUNT, Mayor.'

"QUESTIONS.

"1. Is said resolution valid in view of the requirements of Section 4284, General Code, which specifically enjoins the duties of the appointees under said resolution upon the city auditor?

"2. Is the appointment under date of May 9 to cover services from and after April 1st, legal?

"3. Is an appointment under date of April 1st valid if said appointment is by virtue of a resolution passed April 2 and approved April 3?

"4. Said resolution provides for a reasonable compensation to said appointees, the amount thereof to be hereafter determined by council. If council has taken no further action in the matter, is it legal for the mayor, who is the appointing officer of said commission, to place the salary at $200.00 per month?

"5. As said resolution makes no provision as to what fund or appropriation is to meet the expenditures arising thereunder, has the auditor the authority to determine to what fund and appropriation said charge shall be made? Are such claims, if held to be legal under the resolution, legally payable from the water works contingent fund?"

Section 4284, General Code, to which you refer, provides:

"At the end of each fiscal year, or oftener if required by council, the auditor shall examine and audit the accounts of all officers and departments. He shall prescribe the form of accounts and reports to be rendered to his department, and the form and method of keeping accounts by all other departments, and, subject to the powers and duties of the state bureau of inspection and supervision of public offices, shall have the inspection and revision thereof. Upon the death, resignation, removal or expiration of the term of any officer, the auditor shall audit the accounts of such officer, and if such officer be found indebted to the city, he shall immediately give notice thereof to council and to the solicitor, and the latter shall proceed forthwith to collect the indebtedness."

This section prescribes the duties of the city auditor.
Section 3792, General Code, provides:

"At any time the mayor may appoint competent, disinterested persons, not exceeding three in number, not more than two of whom shall be of the same political party, to examine without notice the affairs of any department, director, officer or employe in the city government, for the purpose of ascertaining facts. In connection with such examinations, the mayor or such appointees may compel the attendance and testimony of witnesses, administer oaths and examine such persons as they deem necessary, and compel the production of books and papers. The result of the examination shall be recorded in the office of the mayor and transmitted by him to the council without delay. The council shall provide the examiners reasonable compensation for such services."

By virtue of this section the mayor is authorized to appoint not more than three competent, disinterested persons to examine any department or officer of the city government. It is not necessary that council should authorize the mayor to make such appointments. The duty of council in regard thereto is to provide a reasonable compensation for the services of the appointees.

The compensation may be fixed by council after the appointments have been made and the service performed. As the examination may be made without notice, the mayor may appoint without first requesting the council to fix the compensation. Otherwise the provision for examination without notice would to a certain extent be nullified.

The notice to the auditor on May 9, 1912, states that the appointment was made on April 1, 1912. This notice does not state the authority by which the appointment was made. As the appointment is apparently within the provision of Section 3792, supra, it must be presumed that it was made by virtue of the provisions of that section. If the appointment was made on April 1 it was a legal appointment from that date, and council would be required to fix a compensation for the services of such appointee from that time, or from the time the services were commenced.

Section 4491, General Code, provides:

"The appointing board or officer shall certify to the auditor all appointments to offices and places in the respective departments of the classified service of such city, and all vacancies occurring therein, whether by dismissal, removal, resignation or death, and the date thereof."

This section covers the classified service, and I find no other provision of statute requiring a certificate of appointment to be filed with the auditor.

The statutes do not provide when an appointment to office shall be certified to the auditor. One of the purposes of such notices to the auditor is to inform him of the appointment so that the appointee may draw proper vouchers for the pay of such appointee.

The notice to the auditor does not control the date of the appointment.

The appointment may have been made and become effective some time prior to the notice to the auditor.

In the resolution of council of April 2, 1912, it is provided that the compensation of such examiner shall not be less than one hundred dollars per month, nor more than two hundred dollars per month, the exact amount to be thereafter determined by council. Council has not determined the amount to be paid. It is the duty of council to fix the compensation. The mayor has no authority to fix it. The fixing of the salary by the mayor in the notice to the city auditor is null and void.

You inquire further as to what fund this compensation shall be paid from.

The investigation and appointment under Section 3792, General Code, is made at the instigation of the mayor. He may, under this section, make inquiry into any department of the city. The expense created by such investigation is properly an expense of the mayor's office. The expenditure is not made at the instance of the superintendent of water works. The water works department has no control over such expenditure.

The contingent fund of the water works department is provided to pay expenditures in that department, and which are under the control of the head thereof. The expense of an examination by the mayor under Section 3792, General Code, into the affairs of the water works department should not be charged against the funds of the water works. This is an expense of the mayor's office and should be paid from the funds appropriated for the use of his office, unless council creates a special fund, or makes a special appropriation for that purpose.

Council has not yet fixed the compensation to be paid the examiner. Council may yet provide the fund from which the expenditure shall be made. Council may create a special fund, or make a special appropriation for this purpose. If council does not so act the expenditure should be made by the auditor from the mayor's fund from money not otherwise appropriated.

Your several questions will now be specifically answered.

First.—The resolution of council providing for the appointment of an examiner of a department of a city is not necessary, as such appointment may be made by virtue of section 3792, General Code.

Second.—The appointment purports to have been made on April 1, 1912. The notice to the auditor on May 9, 1912, is not conclusive as to the time of the appointment.

Third.—It does not appear that the appointment was made by virtue of the resolution.

Fourth.—Council should fix the compensation of such examiner. The fixing of the compensation by the mayor is unauthorized and is null and void. The resolution of council does not definitely fix the compensation to be paid.

Fifth.—The compensation of the examiner in question is not a proper charge against the water works contingent fund. Such compensation should be paid from the mayor's fund, if council does not designate the fund, or make a special appropriation therefor.

Respectfully,
TIMOTHY S. HOGAN,
Attorney General.

INFIRMARY DIRECTORS—POWER TO CONTRACT FOR TOWNSHIP AND INFIRMARY PHYSICIANS IN EXCESS OF APPROPRIATIONS AND FOR PERIOD EXCEEDING TERM OF DIRECTORS.

The infirmary directors are themselves levying authorities, and there is no statutory provision requiring a certification of the auditor to the effect that there is money in the treasury as a condition precedent to the incurring of expense. When such directors, therefore, enter into legal contracts for physicians, for amounts in excess of existing appropriations, they may pay the same from the succeeding appropriations.

The limitation of Section 2546, General Code, providing that contracts for township physicians shall not exceed one year, excludes all other limitation and a contract for such period would be legal even though it extended beyond the term of the infirmary directors who made the contract.

In the absence of statutory provision a contract extending beyond the term of the officer making the same is void unless the public good requires the same. A contract entered into with a physician for the infirmary, therefore, under Section 2522, General Code, for a period exceeding the term of the directors, is void unless said contract can be shown to be for a reasonable time, and necessary for the public good or for the good of the infirmary.

Bureau of Inspection and Supervision of Public Offices, Department of Auditor of State, Columbus, Ohio.

GENTLEMEN:—I beg to acknowledge the receipt of your letter of August 16th, requesting my opinion upon certain questions submitted by the Auditor of Butler County, as follows:

> "The infirmary directors attempted to enter into contracts for infirmary and township physicians to become effective July 1, 1912, for periods of one year. The amount of these contracts exceeds the amount appropriated at the semi-annual appropriation for the period ending September 1st. The auditor refused to certify that the money was in the treasury not appropriated for other purposes.
> "On September first may appropriations 'be made to cover the six month period' under these contracts and may such appropriations if made be lawfully extended for this purpose in face of the fact that the certificate has not been entered into, and in view also of the fact that the periods of these contracts extend beyond the terms of the infirmary directors?"

The following sections of the General Code are to be considered in connection with these questions:

Section 2546 provides as follows:

> "Infirmary directors may contract with one or more competent physicians, to furnish medical relief and medicines necessary for the persons of their respective townships to come under their charge, but no contract shall extend beyond one year. Such contract shall be given to the lowest competent bidder, the county commissioners reserving the right to reject any or all bids. The physicians shall report quarterly to the county commissioners on blanks furnished by the commissioners the names of all persons to whom they have furnished medical relief or medicines, the number of visits made in attending such persons, the character of the disease, and such other information as may be required by the commissioners. The commissioners may discharge any such physician for proper cause."

This section provides for the employment of township physicians. Section 2522, General Code, provides in part as follows:

"The infirmary directors shall make all contracts and purchases necessary for the county infirmary and prescribe such rules and regulations as it deems proper for its management and good government, and to promote sobriety, morality and industry among inmates. * * *"

This section confers the only power that is found in the statutes for the employment of a physician for the infirmary itself. There is no provision of law specifically applicable to the infirmary directors or to the expenditure of their moneys requiring the issuance of the auditor's certificate as a condition precedent to the making of a valid contract by such infirmary directors.

Section 5660, General Code, familiarly known as the "Burns Law" under which the auditor is required to issue certificates for certain contracts, provides as follows:

"The commissioners of the county, the trustees of a township and the board of education of a school district shall not enter into any contract * * * unless the auditor or clerk * * * first certifies, etc."

This section does not apply to the infirmary directors; therefore, the question which the auditor asks respecting the necessity for the issuance of a certificate by him, and the effect of his failure to issue it upon the validity of the contracts, may be dismissed from consideration.

In this connection I beg to cite Sections 2537 and 2538, General Code, without quoting them, because upon examination they will be found to be inconsistent with the idea of Section 5660.

The only question remaining to be considered is the effect of the contract extending beyond the term of office of the infirmary directors. This question is rendered interesting, but not materially different by the fact that the board of infirmary directors, as such, will be abolished on January 1, 1913, and thereafter the county commissioners will by virtue of the act found in 102 O. L., 433, succeed to the powers and duties of the infirmary directors.

As to the township physician, it seems to me that Section 2546 itself contains a sufficient answer to the question which you suggest. Inasmuch as this section provides that a contract for township medical services shall be entered into after competitive bidding and that the directors (hereafter the commissioners) may discharge such physicians for proper cause, I am of the opinion that there is no principle of law upon which it can be held that the infirmary directors may not contract for services beyond their terms of office. The express limitation that the contract shall not extend beyond one year excludes all other limitations and the reservation of the power to discharge which would vest in the successors of the directors, making the contract, as well as in those directors themselves, safeguards the exercise of this power against any of the abuses which are sometimes said to flow from permitting a contract to be made so as to extend beyond the term of office of the contracting officer.

In Commissioners vs. Ranck, 6 Circuit Decision, 133, it is held that a "contract for the employment of a janitor, made by a board of county commissioners, for a period of time extending beyond the time when a change is certain to occur in the personnel of the board is against public policy and void unless made in good faith in the interest of the public and for a time reasonable under the circumstances."

This decision is a very well considered one and many authorities are cited, but at least insofar as the employment of township physicians is concerned, it has no application. The Legislature itself has determined what is a "reasonable time" for the employment of such physicians and has safe-guarded the interests of the public by vesting in the controlling board the power of discharge.

The case of the infirmary physician, however, is somewhat different. As already remarked the infirmary directors employ this physician under their broad and general power to "make all contracts and purchases necessary for the county infirmary." There is no specific authority here to enter into a periodical contract with any physician. The infirmary directors have discretion as to whether or not they will employ such physician; they may prefer to call in physicians upon cases requiring medical attendance as they occur and to pay such physicians their regular fees for such services. On the other hand, they clearly have power to enter into such periodical contracts and in the exercise of good business policy ought certainly to do so.

It cannot be held, under the case above cited, that all contracts extending beyond the term of office of the contracting board, in the absence of specific authority, are void or even voidable. It is only such contracts as cannot be shown to have been made under circumstances showing that the public good required them to be made for such period of time as are against public policy. In the specific case there might be some reason requiring an annual contract. For example, it might be shown to be impossible or impracticable for the directors to secure the services of physicians on the contractual basis for a period of time less than a year. Under those circumstances a year might not be an unreasonable time and the extension beyond the term of office might be shown to be reasonably "necessary for the county infirmary" within the meaning of Section 2522 and reasonably "required by the public good" within the doctrine of Commissioners vs. Ranck, supra.

It is clear, however, that the case cited does establish the proposition that prima facie a contract of this sort, extending beyond the term of office of the contracting board is, in the absence of special provisions like those in Section 2546, not perfectly valid.

The further question is then presented as to whether such contracts are void ab initio or simply voidable. The facts presented in Commissioners vs. Ranck, supra, were such as to make an answer to this question somewhat difficult. It appears from the report of this case that after the unauthorized contract was entered into the board of commissioners rescinded it and employed another person as janitor; whereupon the plaintiff sued for services during the first month of the employment of his successor. The same conclusion would have been reached by the court if it had held the contract merely voidable as would be reached by holding it void. There is a fundamental difference, however, between the two cases. In the case of the contract being void ab initio no right of action lies for recovery thereon by either party. If the contract is simply voidable, however, the party performing the services thereunder prior to its avoidance by the adversary party is entitled to compensation therefor.

The cases cited in Commissioners vs. Ranck seem to hold that such contracts being against public policy are entirely void. In other words, these cases are not decided upon the ground that the interests injured are those of the successors in office of the employing authority, but those of the public generally. See Commissioners vs. Taylor, 123 Ind., 148; Craft vs. McConnoughy, 79 Ill, 436; People ex rel vs. Chicago, etc., Co., 22 N. E. 798, and other cases cited in the opinion of Commissioners vs. Ranck.

I am, therefore, of the opinion that a contract by a board of infirmary directors with a physician for services to be rendered to the inmates of the infirmary during the year, which year extends beyond the term of office of the infirmary directors is, unless circumstances exist making the period of time reasonable, and the extension beyond the term of the directors promotive of the public interest, to be regarded as entirely void. Whether or not these facts exist must be determined in each particular instance. The county auditor in the exercise of the powers and duties vested in him by law may satisfy himself upon this point, and if in his judgment the public interests are not to be subserved by the unusual contract may refuse to issue warrants under any such contract.

As to whether or not appropriations may be made is a question with which the auditor has nothing whatever to do. Inasmuch as the infirmary directors are, under the present law, themselves levying authorities, it is their duty to appropriate funds under their control and not that of the county commissioners. If the directors see fit to appropriate money for this purpose they cannot be restrained from so doing as the money so appropriated might be expended under another contract lawfully made.

Yours very truly,
TIMOTHY S. HOGAN
Attorney General.

"FINES AND PENALTIES" DOES NOT INCLUDE COSTS—FINES IN HUMANE CASES MAY NOT BE PAID TO LAW LIBRARIES.

The words "fines and penalties" as employed in Section 3056, General Code, providing for the payment of such to law library associations, cannot be construed to include "costs."

Section 12971, General Code, providing for the disposition of fines assessed in humane cases must be construed as an exception to Section 3056, General Code, and fines assessed in such cases cannot be paid to the Law Library Association.

September 13, 1912.

Bureau of Inspection and Supervision of Public Offices, Department of Auditor of State, Columbus, Ohio.

GENTLEMEN:—I acknowledge receipt of your communication of August 24, 1912, which is as follows:

> "Some question has arisen in Hamilton County in regard to the payment of fines by the police court to the law library of that county.
> "Please give us your opinion in answer to the following questions:
> "1. Can the words 'Fines and Penalties' contained in Section 3056 be construed to cover costs?
> "2. Section 12971 provides for the disposition of fines in humane cases. Shall the fines in such cases be included in determining the amount to be paid to the law library association?"

Answering your first interrogatory, I am of the opinion that the expression

"fines and penalties" cannot be construed to cover or include the word "costs." The legal and dictionary definitions of these three words are not the same; and when the statute referred to by you says, "fines and penalties," it must be strictly construed and limited to the accepted meaning thereof.

If the Legislature intended to include "costs" it should have said so. The common meaning of these words is as follows:

> "A fine is the exaction of a money payment as a punishment for an offense or dereliction of any kind—as a fine for assault."
> "A penalty is money recoverable by virtue of a penal statute." Sometimes called a forfeiture.
> "Costs are the sums fixed by law or allowed by the court for charges in a suit."

Costs are based upon the services of the officers and witnesses; and are a separate and distinct item in the final judgment of the magistrate.

That these three items are entirely distinct is shown in Section 4599 of the General Code, where the clerk of the police court is required to make a report of all fines, penalties, fees, and costs, to the city auditor in city cases; and a like report to the county auditor in state cases. This is a requirement of the clerk of the very court referred to in your letter, and it shows that costs are a separate item to be accounted for by the clerk as such, and cannot be included in any other name or term.

Your second question is determined by a comparison of Sections 3056 and 12971 of the General Code.

There is at first sight an apparent conflict between these provisions; but it must be remembered that statutes on the same subject must be read and construed together, and the intention of the Legislature determined therefrom.

Section 3056 is the older statute, having been enacted on the 27th of April, 1872 (69 O. L., 165). It has been amended three times since, but retains its original substantial form as to these fines and penalties. At that time there was no law for the incorporation of societies for the prevention of cruelty to animals. On March 29, 1875, the law was passed for that purpose (720 L., 129). This opened up a new field for a new kind of prosecutions, never contemplated in Section 3056 G. C., as originally passed. Something had to be done to keep up this society, which was doing a new work in Ohio. So the Legislature, on April 11, 1876, (730 L., 219), passed the law which is carried into Section 12971, through various amendments. Now, the effect of Section 12971 is to take out of the provisions of Section 3056 all cases instituted by a humane society, and leave the other cases "prosecuted in the name of the state," still subject to the provisions of Section 3056.

The Legislature, no doubt, had before it the older statute when it passed the one relating to cases prosecuted by the humane society; and intended that the first law should be modified to that extent. The last section cited by you does that very thing, and by implication the first law, Section 3056, is modified or repealed to that extent.

There is nothing inconsistent with such a conclusion, when both statutes and their history, and objects, are considered.

Therefore, it is my opinion that such fines as are mentioned in Section 12971 are not to be "included in determining the amount to be paid to the law library association."

Very truly yours,

TIMOTHY S. HOGAN,

Attorney General.

BOARDS OF EDUCATION—CONTRACT BY TOWNSHIP BOARD FOR TUITION OF BOXWELL PUPILS EXEMPTS BOARDS, HAVING NO HIGH SCHOOLS, FROM PAYMENT OF TUITION OF PUPILS ONLY WITHIN THREE MILES OF SCHOOL SO PROVIDED—BOARDS MAINTAINING HIGH SCHOOL GOVERNED BY SECTION 7748 GENERAL CODE.

Where a township board of education having no high school, enters into a contract for the payment of tuition for the schooling of its Boxwell graduates with a village district high school within the township, Boxwell pupils resident in the township district, living more than three miles from the high school provided by the board may attend any other high school in the state in accordance with 7744 General Code and their tuition must be paid by the township board as provided by Section 7747, General Code.

The language of Section 7748, General Code, providing for the payment of tuition of pupils living more than four miles from the school provided by a board of education or for transportation of such pupils in lieu of such payment, is general in its application, and since high schools having no boards of education are provided for by Sections 7747 and 7750, said language in 7748 is restricted in its application, to boards of education maintaining high schools of their own.

September 23, 1912.

Bureau of Inspection and Supervision of Public Offices, Department of Auditor of State, Columbus, Ohio.

GENTLEMEN:—Under date of September 17, 1912, you submit for my opinion the following:

> "Scipio Township School District does not mantain a high school. The board of education of this district has an agreement with the board of education of Republic Village to furnish schooling for Boxwell graduates of Scipio Township School District. Republic Village is situated in Scipio Township. I. H., a Boxwell graduate of Scipio Township School District, residing more than three miles, to-wit, three and one-half miles from the above mentioned Republic village, attends the high school at Tiffin. Tiffin is in Clinton township, and adjoins Scipio township.
> "Can a bill presented by the Tiffin Board of Education to the Scipio Township Board of Education for the tuition of the said I. H. be legally paid from the funds of Scipio Township School, assuming that the legal notice was given and that the schools of both Republic Village and Tiffin are of the kind prescribed in the statutes providing for the education of Boxwell graduates?"

Section 7744 of the General Code provides with respect to the Boxwell graduates' diplomas, that > "* * * Such diploma shall entitle its holder to enter any high school in the state."

Sections 7747 and 7750 provide as follows:

Section 7747.

"The tuition of pupils holding diplomas and residing in township or special districts, in which no high school is maintained, shall be paid by the board of education of the school district in which they have legal school residence, such tuition to be computed by the month. An attendance any part of the month shall create a liability for the entire month; but a board of education maintaining a high school shall not charge more tuition than it charges for other non-resident pupils."

Section 7750.

"A board of education not having a high school may enter an agreement with one or more boards of education maintaining such school for the schooling of all its high school pupils. When such agreement is made the board making it shall be exempt from the payment of tuition at other high schools of pupils living within three miles of the school designated in the agreement, if the school or schools selected by the board are located in the same civil township, as that of the board making it, or some adjoining township. In case no such agreement is entered into the school to be attended can be selected by the pupil holding a diploma, if due notice in writing is given to the clerk of the board of education of the name of the school to be attended and the date the attendance is to begin, such notice to be filed not less than five days previous to the beginning of attendance."

Under Section 7747, township or special school districts in which no high school is maintained are required to pay a tuition of pupils attending high schools in other districts.

Section 7750 provides that any board of education having no high school, may, by entering into contract for the schooling of its high school pupils with one or more boards of education of the same or adjoining township, exempt itself from paying the tuition required by Section 7747 of the General Code, except as to pupils who live more than three miles from the school designated in the contract.

Inasmuch as in the case you present the pupil lives more than three miles from the school designated in the agreement, said Scipio township board is not exempted by Section 7750 of the General Code from paying a tuition of said pupil as required by Section 7747, supra. I am informed that the difficulty which prompts your inquiry arises by reason of the language of Section 7748 of the General Code, which is italicized in this section as it is herewith quoted:

"A board of education providing a third grade high school as defined by law shall be required to pay the tuition of graduates from such school residing in the district at any first grade high school for two years, or at a second grade high school for one year and a first grade high school for one year. Such a board providing a second grade high school as defined by law shall pay the tuition of graduates residing in the district at any first grade high school for one year; except that, a board maintaining a second or third grade high school is not required to pay such tuition when a levy of twelve mills permitted by law for such district has been reached and all the funds so raised are necessary for the support of the schools of such district. No board of education is required to pay the tuition of any pupil for more than four school years; except that it must pay the tuition of all successful applicants, who have complied with the further provisions hereof, residing more than four miles by the most direct route of public travel, from the high school provided by the board, when such applicants attend a nearer high school, or in lieu of paying such tuition the board of education maintaining a high school may pay for the transportation of the pupils living more than four miles from the said high school, maintained by the said board of education to said high school. Where more than one high school is maintained, by agreement of the board and parent or guardian, pupils may attend either and their transportation shall be so paid. A pupil living in a village or city district who has completed the elementary school course and whose legal residence has been transferred to a township or special district in this state before he begins or completes a high school course, shall be entitled to all the rights and privileges of a Boxwell-Patterson graduate."

The language italicized cannot, in my opinion, under any mode of construction, be held to exempt Scipio township board from the payment of tuition of the pupils living more than three miles from the Republic school provided by its contract.

This language is of a general nature with respect to which the provisions of Section 7750, General Code, with reference to boards of education, having no high school, must be regarded as a modification. In brief, the Legislature having provided in Section 7750, General Code, for the payment of the tuition of pupils living more than three miles from a high school, provided by a board of education having no high school, the requirement of Section 7748, General Code, that the tuition of pupils living more than four miles from a school provided by a board of education, must be paid by such board, must be confined to boards of education other than those not having a high school.

I am therefore of the opinion that this language applies only to such boards as maintain a high school of their own.

To summarize, therefore, the right of a Boxwell graduate to attend any high school is fixed by Section 7744 of the General Code. The liability for tuition for such pupil of the school district having no high school is fixed by Section 7747 of the General Code. Scipio township board is not exempt from such liability for pupils living more than three miles from the Republic school, by virtue of contracts made under authority of Section 7750 of the General Code. And lastly the above quoted italicized language of Section 7748 of the General Code cannot operate to dispense with the liability resting upon a board making such contracts to pay the tuition of pupils living more than three miles from a school contracted for.

I am, therefore, of the opinion that said Scipio township school district is liable to the board of education of Tiffin for the tuition of said "I. H." and that tuition may be paid from the funds of the Scipio township school district as provided by Section 7751 of the General Code.

Very truly yours,

TIMOTHY S. HOGAN,

Attorney General.

ROADS AND HIGHWAYS—PROSECUTING ATTORNEY LEGAL ADVISER OF ONE MILE ASSESSMENT PIKE COMMISSIONERS—FINDING OF BUREAU FOR EXTRA COMPENSATION FOR SERVICES, JUSTIFIED.

The road commissioners under the one mile assessment pike law are appointed by the county commissioners, are required to file their maps, profiles and reports with the latter, cannot levy a special tax but must act through the commissioners, must turn over their completed work to the commissioners and are clearly made the agents of the commissioner for the accomplishment of county work.

Under 2917, therefore, General Code, the prosecuting attorney is made the legal adviser of the Pike Commissioners and must serve them without compensation.

A finding of the Bureau of Inspection and Supervision of Public Offices is, therefore, justified for the amount of any extra compensation paid to a prosecuting attorney for services rendered the pike commissioners.

October 9, 1912.

Bureau of Inspection and Supervision of Public Offices, Columbus, Ohio.

GENTLEMEN:—Your favor of August 6, 1912, is received, in which you state:

> "Under the opinion of your predecessor dated September 20, 1910, published in the annual report of that year, page 435, a state examiner of this department returned a finding against Mr. John H. Clark for payments made to him by the one mile assessment pike commissioners for legal services while he was prosecuting attorney. Mr. Clark does not agree with the ruling, and we respectfully request you to consider the same and give us your own opinion in the matter."

The question answered in the opinion referred to was as follows:

> "May a prosecuting attorney be employed by the board of pike commissioners, organized under the one mile assessment pike law, and be legally paid for his services out of the funds of the pike district in addition to his salary as prosecuting attorney."

Section 2917, General Code, provides:

> "The prosecuting attorney shall be the legal adviser of the county commissioners and all other county officers and county boards and any of them may require of him written opinions or instructions in matters connected with their official duties. He shall prosecute and defend all suits and actions which any such officer or board may direct or to which it is a party, and no county officer may employ other counsel or attorney at the expense of the county except as provided in section twenty-four hundred and twelve. He shall be the legal adviser for all township officers, and no such officer may employ other counsel or attorney except on the order of the township trustees duly entered upon their journal, in which the compensation to be paid for such legal services shall be fixed. Such compensation shall be paid from the township fund."

Section 2412, General Code, referred to in the above section provides:

> "If it deems it for the best interests of the county, upon the written request of the prosecuting attorney, the board of county commissioners may employ legal counsel to assist the prosecuting attorney in the prosecution or defense of any suit or action brought by or against the county commissioners or other officers and boards, in their official capacity."

By virtue of Section 2917, General Code, the prosecuting attorney is made the legal adviser of all county officers and boards, and also of all township officers.

Section 4761, General Code, prescribes what official shall be the legal adviser of boards of education. The statutes specifically provide who shall be the legal adviser of a city, and specifically authorize the employment of legal counsel for a village. There is no specific provision of statute as to who shall be the legal adviser of road commissioners, neither are said commissioners specifically authorized to employ legal counsel.

The construction and repair of roads outside of municipalities, usually devolve upon the county commissioners, or upon the township trustees. Such work is considered part of the work of the county or of the township.

Sections 7232, et seq. General Code, cover the one mile assessment pikes. There is no specific provision therein as to a legal adviser, or specific power to employ counsel.

The board of road commissioners under the one mile assessment pike law, are constituted by a body corporate and are authorized to sue and can be sued.

Section 7265, General Code, provides:

> "The road commissioners and their successors shall be a body corporate, under such name as the commissioners of the county may designate, for the purpose of carrying into effect the provisions of this chapter. They shall prosecute for all obstructions to the road, or for injuries done thereto, or to bridges thereon. The amount recovered in each case shall be the amount of damages actually found by the court or jury, and the interest thereon."

Section 7266, General Code, provides:

> "In all cases the road commissioners may sue, either before a justice of the peace, or in the court of common pleas of the county, as in other cases, and the amount collected in each case shall be used for the benefit of the road, and be paid over to the road commissioners."

The roads under this act are established upon petition to the county commissioners. The county commissioners are then authorized to appoint the pike commissioners. Said pike commissioners are required to make settlement with the county commissioners.

Section 7234, General Code, provides:

> "Thereupon the county commissioners shall appoint three judicious freeholders of the county resident within the bounds of said road, to be commissioners of such free turnpike road, who, by the name fixed by the county commissioners, shall be a body corporate, for the purpose of laying out and establishing a free turnpike road between the points within the county named in the petition. The county commissioners shall appoint such persons to be commissioners of such free turnpike road as have been recommended by petition of a majority of the landowners, if such recommendation is so made."

Section 7262, General Code, provides:

"The road commissioners, annually, on the first Monday in December, shall make a full settlement with the county commissioners of the several counties in or through which their respective roads are located, and file them with a statement of all their receipts and expenditures within the county, and deposit a copy thereof in the auditor's office of the county."

Section 7263, General Code, provides:

"If such road commissioners fail to make settlement as provided by the next preceding section, the county commissioners, at the next term of the court of common pleas of the county shall cause an action to be instituted against them, in the corporate name of the road, to enforce such settlement."

Section 7264, General Code, provides:

"Such action shall be conducted by the prosecuting attorney of the county, and such delinquent road commissioners shall be prima facie liable for the full amount of taxes and money which were applicable to the construction of the road as they appear upon the tax duplicate of the county. In all cases judgment shall be rendered against them for costs of the suit."

The above section specifically provides that the prosecuting attorney shall conduct the suit for settlement on behalf of the county commissioners. It would not be conducive to good results to permit the prosecuting attorney to act for the pike commissioners and to receive extra compensation therefor, when he might be required to enter suit on behalf of the county commissioners, against his former clients. Situations occur wherein the prosecuting attorney could not represent a county official, as where county officials are plaintiff and defendants. In such case the prosecuting attorney must choose which he will represent. Section 7264, supra, in effect chooses for him and requires him to represent the county commissioners.

In order to determine the status of the road commissioners under the one mile assessment pike law, in connection with the county commissioners, it will be necessary to examine the entire act. Several of the sections will now be quoted.

Section 7237, General Code, provides:

"The road commissioners, so appointed by the board of county commissioners, and who qualify as hereinafter provided, within a reasonable time, shall proceed to lay out and establish such free turnpike road within the points named in the petition. As soon thereafter as can be done they shall return to the board of county commissioners a map and profile of the road, including upon the map, as near as can be done, the names of the land owners, whose property is liable to be taxed for its construction, as hereinafter provided, with a statement of the probable cost of building and completing it."

Section 7238, General Code, provides:

"The board of county commissioners shall forthwith thereafter transmit to the auditor of the county the map, profile and statement as returned to them by the road commissioners, and, at the same time, direct the auditor to levy upon the grand duplicate of the county, for the purpose of constructing, improving, and repairing such road, the amount of the tax, and for the number of years petitioned for. The auditor shall enter the levy upon the duplicate for collection, on all the lands and taxable property within the bounds of the road, as laid out and established in like manner and subject to like penalties and forfeitures as other taxes are entered thereon. No such tax shall be levied for an amount or for a term of years greater than that set forth in the petition."

Section 7239, General Code, provides:

"If it is ascertained by the board of county commissioners, by the report of the road commissioners appointed by them, or otherwise, that the property upon the tax duplicate for the purpose of raising a fund for the construction of a free turnpike or road, under the provisions of this chapter, will not be sufficient during the time for which extra taxes may be levied and collected to build and construct a good road or the kind of road provided for, and if no bonds have been issued that remain unpaid or if there are no unpaid certificates outstanding for the work and labor done on said road or proposed road, the board shall order that work on the road or proposed road shall not be done, and shall at once notify the road commissioners thereof."

Section 7240, General Code, provides:

"The county commissioners shall order the county auditor not to levy further tax or any tax for said road or proposed road, and all extra taxes heretofore levied for the road or proposed road and not paid shall not be treated as delinquent taxes but, by like order, be cancelled off the tax duplicate against the lands and personal property on which they were levied."

Section 7241, General Code, provides:

"The road or proposed road shall not be built until the county commissioners are satisfied that the extra taxes to be levied will build a good and sufficient turnpike road as contemplated by the provisions of this chapter."

Before the road commissioners can proceed with the construction of the proposed road they must make a map and profile of the same, with a statement of the probable cost of construction and the names of the landowners whose property is liable to be taxed, and must file the same with the county commissioners. The county commissioners are thereupon required to transmit the same to the county auditor and direct such auditor to levy the tax. By virtue of Sections 7239 and 7240, General Code, the county commissioners are authorized to stop the construction of the road if they ascertain that the special taxes to be levied will not be sufficient to construct a good road. By virtue of Section 7241 the proposed road is not to be built until the county commissioners are satisfied that the extra taxes to be levied will be sufficient to construct a good road as contemplated by the act.

Section 7245, General Code, provides:

> "The road commissioners shall severally execute a bond payable to the state, for the use of the county in which the road is located, with good and sufficient sureties, to be approved by the board of commissioners of the county, and in such sum as such board thinks proper, conditioned for the faithful performance of their duties as such road commissioners. They shall each take an oath faithfully and honestly to discharge their duties, before they shall be authorized to do or perform any matter or thing under this chapter."

The bond to be given by each road commissioner is to be made payable to the state, but is for the use of the county.

Section 7257, General Code, provides:

> "So much of the taxes annually levied for road purposes by the trustees of townships which are collected within the bounds of such road, including the two days' labor authorized by law, shall be applied in the construction of the road under the direction of the road commissioners, and the payment of the principal and interest of bonds, if any have been issued therefor."

Section 7260, General Code, provides:

> "So much of the taxes mentioned in section seventy-two hundred and fifty-seven, levied and collected on taxable property within the bounds of a road located under the provisions of this chapter, which is not discharged in labor, and which is paid into the county treasury, shall be paid by the treasurer, upon the warrant of the county auditor, to the road commissioners of such road to be expended by them in constructing it, and to the payment of the principal and interest of bonds, if any have been issued therefor, this section shall apply to such taxes as have been levied heretofore and have not been paid to township trustees."

These sections show that the one mile assessment pike is to receive the benefit of the road tax in conjunction with other roads, township and county.

Section 7267, General Code, provides:

> "When the road commissioners deem they have their road completed in a good substantial manner, the bridge and culverts thereon having been built, and the road graded and macadamized, or paved, they may make application to the board of county commissioners to receive it. The county commissioners, within a reasonable time after the filing of such application, shall proceed upon actual view to examine the road. Upon such examination, if it is their opinion that the road is in suitable condition to be received as completed, they may receive it, and the road may be kept in repair as provided in chapter eleven of this title. The provisions of this section and section 7276 shall apply to all pending proceedings for the establishment of one mile assessment pikes."

Section 7268, General Code, provides:

"When a road, as provided for under this chapter has been completed and received by the county commissioners, they shall enter such finding upon their journal, and the county auditor shall certify it to the trustees of the several townships through which a part or all of the road runs. When the road is paid for, and its bonds and coupons, if bonds have been issued thereon, have been redeemed, the road commissioners, by order of the county commissioners, shall cease to be a body corporate."

When the road is completed it may be turned over to and received by the county commissioners. It is then to be repaired in the manner provided for other roads under chapter eleven of title four of the statutes. It is provided also that when the road is paid for and the bonds redeemed the road commissioners cease to be a body corporate.

Attention has been called to the provisions of Sections 7270 and 7308, General Code.

Section 7270, General Code, provides:

"The expenses of surveying and locating the road shall be paid out of the county treasury, and the other expenses incident to the construction of the road shall be paid out of the funds appropriated by this chapter to the construction thereof. The sum paid the surveyor and his assistants shall not exceed the customary wages per day for each day they are actually employed in locating and surveying the road."

This section shows that a certain part of the expense shall be paid from the county treasury, this tending to show that the construction of such road is part of the work of the county.

Section 7308, General Code, provides:

"When the commissioners of a free turnpike road have completed it, they shall forthwith make a final report to the county commissioners of the total expenditures on the road and deposit their books and papers with the county commissioners. Upon the acceptance of said road by the county commissioners, as provided in this chapter, and the approval of the final report, the road shall be kept open and in repair, as provided in chapter eleven of this title. Money remaining in the hands of the free turnpike commissioners upon the acceptance of the road by the county commissioners shall be paid into the county treasury and paid out in conformity to law. Whenever any free turnpike road, constructed in accordance with the provisions of this chapter, shall have been fully paid for, and the bonds and coupons, if bonds have been issued thereon, shall have been redeemed, and the pike commissioners of such road shall have ceased to exist, any money remaining in the treasury of the county in which such road was or shall be constructed, and which was derived from taxation or the sale of bonds to construct such road, shall upon the order of the county commissioners, be paid over, upon the warrant of the county auditor in such amounts and at such intervals as they deem proper, to the pike superintendent, or superintendents as the case may be, to be by such superintendent or superintendents used, under the provisions of chapter eight, title IV, part II, in making repairs of such road, for the construction of which such remaining money was raised. And this provision shall apply in all cases where there is now a balance remaining in the county treasury, as well as to all such cases as may arise in the future."

This section only follows the general tendency of all the other provisions of the act, that is, that the construction of the one mile assessment free turnpike is county work.

Instead of the county commissioners constructing such pikes under their personal supervision, they are authorized, upon petition to them, to appoint three road commissioners, who are to have direct supervision of the construction of such road. The road commissioners are made a body corporate, but the district upon which the special tax is levied, is not made into a political subdivision, nor into a special road district.

The road commissioners do not levy the special tax. This is done by the county commissioners. The county commissioners may also stop the construction of the road if they find that the fund to be raised is not sufficient to construct a proper road.

The road commissioners are required to make settlement annually with the county commissioners, and when the road is completed they must forthwith make a final report to the county commissioners and deposit their books and papers with the county commissioners.

After the road is turned over to and received by the county commissioners, the duty of the road commissioners as to the road itself ceases, and when the road is paid for, and bonds and coupons are redeemed, the road commissioners cease to be a body corporate by order of the county commissioners, as shown by Section 7268, General Code, supra.

One of the purposes of appointing road commissioners is to have the pike built under their direct supervision, rather than under the county commissioners. The road commissioners are not independent of the county commissioners, but are dependent upon them in a great measure. The road commissioners are engaged in a work which rightly belongs to the county, the construction of a road. They do not continue as a body corporate indefinitely. Upon the happening of the conditions set forth in Section 7268, General Code, they cease to exist. The road itself is, however, continued.

The road commissioners are in fact the agents of the county commissioners in the construction of the one mile assessment pike. They are appointed by the county commissioners and are required to file their maps, profiles and reports with the county commissioners. They cannot levy the special tax but must act through the county commissioners. They are the agents of the county commissioners in this work.

It is my opinion, therefore, that the provisions of Sections 2917, General Code, will cover the board of pike commissioners under the one mile assessment pike law, and that the prosecuting attorney shall be the legal advisor of such board without extra compensation.

Respectfully,

TIMOTHY S. HOGAN,

Attorney General.

DITCHES, COUNTY—LOWER LAND OWNER MAY PETITION FOR DITCH EXTENDING HIGHER UP THAN OWN LAND—COUNTY COMMISSIONERS MAY EXTEND DITCH HIGHER THAN PETITION CALLS FOR—ASSESSMENT OF UPPER LAND OWNER ACCORDING TO BENEFIT.

Under Sections 6440 and 6443, General Code, a land owner may petition for the construction and tiling of a county ditch which extends higher up the water course than his own land extends.

Under 6443, General Code, the county commissioners may upon their own initiative extend a ditch higher up the water course than the land of the petitioner extends, even though the petition only provides for a ditch upon the land of the petitioner where such extension is necessary for the better accomplishment of the improvement and will be necessary or conducive to the public health, convenience or welfare of the neighborhood.

Assessments must be made according to benefits and if the upper land owner derives no benefit from the improvement, he cannot be assessed for the same. He may be assessed, however, when by reason of artificial interference with natural conditions, he has made the construction of the ditch necessary for the good of the lower land owners or the neighborhood.

October 4, 1912.

Bureau of Inspection and Supervision of Public Offices, Department of Auditor of State, Columbus, Ohio.

GENTLEMEN:—Under date of September 19 you requested my opinion with reference to a set of facts, included in a letter submitted to you by the County Commissioners of Crawford County, which communication read in part as follows:

> "Can Mr. A, a land owner, petition for the construction and tiling of a county ditch higher up the water course than his own land extends? If not, can the county commissioners when they view the ditch improvement extend the ditch and the tiling of the same further up the water course than what the petition calls for, under section 6443, G. C., when they think that the object of the improvement will be better accomplished thereby?
> "We have in this county this situation: Mr. A. owns a farm through which there is a natural water course and he wants a county ditch constructed and tiled through the same. The county commissioners think that the improvement ought to extend further up the water course than what Mr. A's land goes. It will not make a satisfactory job to have the ditch constructed and tiled only up as far as A's land extends. The object of the improvement would be better accomplished by extending the ditch and tiling about one mile further up the water course than what A's land extends, but the land owners on that mile of territory do not care for the improvement. Now, if Mr. A. petitions for the construction and tiling of a county ditch on that water course, have the commissioners the right to grant and extend the improvement higher up the water course than what Mr. A's land goes and assess the land owners on that extension for said improvement without the consent of them or any of them?"

Inasmuch as the statutes seem to employ the term "natural water course "when speaking of living streams, whilst the term "water course" is used in accordance with Section 6442 as synonymous with the term "drain," the assumption is undoubtedly justified that the commissioners intended in above letter, to refer to a water course or natural drain and that the term "natural water course" in the letter should be "water course."

The question included in this letter may be resolved into the three following questions, based upon the situation therein presented:

> "1. May the land owner petition for the construction and tiling of a county ditch higher up the water course than his own land extends?
> "2. May the county commissioners upon their own initiative extend such ditch higher up the water course than the land of the petitioner extends, when the petition only provides for a ditch upon his own land?
> "3. In the event that either of these powers exists, may the owners upon whose land the ditch is constructed above the land of the petitioner, be assessed without their consent for the improvement made under the exercise of such powers?"

Sections 6443 and 6447 provide as follows:

> "Section 6443. The board of county commissioners, at a regular or called session, when necessary to drain any lots, lands, public or corporate road or railroad, and it will be conducive to public health, convenience or welfare, in the manner provided in this chapter, may cause to be located and constructed, straightened, widened, altered, deepened, boxed, or tiled, a ditch, drain or water course, or box or tile part thereof, or cause the channel of a river, creek or run, or part thereof, within such county, to be improved by straightening, widening, deepening, or changing it, or by removing from adjacent lands timber, brush, trees or other substance liable to obstruct it. The commissioners may change either terminus of a ditch before its final location, if the object of the improvement will be better accomplished thereby."

> "Section 6446. Application for such improvement shall be made to the commissioners of the county, signed by one or more owners of lots or lands which will be drained or benefited thereby, or shall be made by the street commissioner or superintendent of the road district in which it is required to be done. The trustees of an original surveyed township owning land granted by congress for the support of common schools, or the infirmary directors of a county, may make such application and file the petition and bond provided for in this chapter."

> "Section 6447. A petition shall be filed with the county auditor setting forth the necessity and benefits of the improvement and describing the beginning, route and termini thereof. It shall also contain the names of the persons and corporations, public or private, who, in the opinion of the petitioner or petitioners are in any way affected or benefited thereby. There shall be filed therewith a bond, subject to the approval of said auditor, payable to the state of Ohio, with at least two sufficient sureties, in not less than two hundred dollars, conditioned for the payment of all costs if the prayer of the petition is not granted or is dismissed for any cause. If the name of a person or corporation, either public or private, in any way affected by the proposed improvement, is omitted from the petition, the county commissioners, upon discovering that such omission has been made, shall supply such name, and cause notice to be served as herein provided."

With respect to the first question it will be observed that under Section 6446, General Code, the petition need be presented by one or more owners of lots or lands which will be drained or benefited by the improvement and that under Section 6447, General Code, said petition must contain the name of person or corporation, public or private, for whom the improvement contemplates benefit. Also under 6447 the petition must describe the beginning, route and termini of the improvement.

I am of the opinion that under these statutes, the provision is clearly made for such a petition signed by a lower land owner as the first question contemplates. The said question may therefore be answered affirmatively.

In answer to question No. 2 the italicised portion of Section 6443, above quoted, provides that in the manner provided in this chapter, the commissioners may cause to be located, constructed and tiled a ditch, drain or water course, when necessary or when it will be conducive to public health, convenience or welfare. Said section provides further that the commissioners may change either terminus of a ditch before its final location, if the object of the improvement will be better accomplished thereby.

In the case of Marsh vs. County Commissioners, 26 Weekly Law Bulletin, page 4, Judge Rockel says:

"It is contended that this notice is defective because the route therein described is not the same as that in the petition, and, therefore, does not give the "prayer" of the petition, as required by the statute above quoted.

"The commissioners, in determining the location of the route, did not agree with the petitioner in the termini of the proposed ditch. Instead of commencing at a point in Newton Marsh's land, about one hundred rods down the proposed ditch, at a point on the line of the lands of Wm. E. Yeazell and Andrew Phalen, and instead of terminating the ditch at one hundred rods southeast of Andrew Phalen's and Jonathan Markly's lands, they concluded to run it about 600 feet further, to the Old Columbus road.

"Under the broad language of Section 4448, and the liberal interpretation that is always applied to our ditch laws, there is no doubt in my mind but that the commissioners had ample authority to change "either terminus of the improvement" if they were of the opinion that the object of the improvement will be better accomplished thereby."

The second paragraph of the syllabus in the case of Railway Company vs. Commissioners, 63 Ohio State, page 32, reads as follows:

"Under section 4448, of the revised statutes (now 6443 General Code), the commissioners may change either terminus of a ditch before its final location, when in their opinion the object of the improvement will be better accomplished thereby; and their official action making the change raised the presumption that there was legal cause therefor."

In the case of Gease vs. Carlisle, 15 Ohio Decisions, nisi prius, page 435, at page 436, Judge Dilion says:

"There was an evident purpose in providing that the commisioners could change the termini of any ditch, drain or watercourse, and expressly omitting that power with reference to a river, creek or run, That purpose evidently is based upon two considerations; First, that a river, creek or natural run has its termini already fixed by nature and it would be absurd to say that the commissioners might change the termini thereof. A second consideration is that as to a ditch or other artificial body to be established, it may be apparent to the commissioners that the judgement of the petitioner is not at all conclusive as to the manner in in which the lands should be drained, and that upon a hearing the commisioners might find that the purpose would be more fully accomplished by change of proposed termini. I am of the opinion, therefore, that commissioners have only power to change the termini of a ditch, a drain or artificial water course, and that as to any river, creek, run or natural water course they have no such power."

The fourth paragraph in the case of Chesbrough, vs. Commissioners, 37 Ohio State, 508, provides as follows:

"It is the public health, convenience, or welfare of the community to be affected by the proposed ditch, and not that of the public at large, that is to be regarded in the construction of a ditch. Hence, if it appears that the proposed ditch will be conducive to the public health, convenience and welfare of the neighborhood' through which it will pass, the commissioners are authorized to construct the same."

In view of these authorities, I am of the opinion, that the commissioners may extend the terminus of the proposed ditch on lands above those of the petitioner, provided that they exercise a legitimate discretion in determining that said improvement will be accomplished thereby and will be necessary or conducive to the public health, convenience or welfare of the community or neighborhood.

With respect to question No. 3, Sections 6442 and 6452, General Code, provides as follows:

Section 6442:

"The word 'ditch' as used in this chapter shall include a drain or watercourse. The petition for such improvement shall include a side, lateral, spur or brench ditch, drain or watercourse necessary to secure the object of the improvement, whether it is mentioned therein or not; but no improvement shall be located unless a sufficient outlet is provided. The words 'according to the benefits' as used in this chapter in directing boards of county commissioners to assess lands for ditches, and in directing engineers to report assessments therefor, shall not authorize an assessment for benefits conferred upon lands by nature nor the right of easement of the owners of superincumbent lands to pass the water therefrom through natural water courses."

Section 6452:

"The county commissioners may hear and determine at the same time and under the same petition, the necessity of locating a new ditch, or a ditch partly old and partly new, or of deepening, widening, straightening, or altering an old ditch, as the necessity of the case requires, and shall cause such entry to be made on their journal as in their judgement is required. Estimates by the surveyor, engineer, or commissioners, shall be made as provided in this chapter, and no assessment shall be made on lands upon any principle other than that of benefits derived, and in proportion thereto, in deepening, widening, straightening, or altering a ditch. No lands, lying below, shall be assessed for the benefit of lands lying above. All assessments shall be made in proportion to the benefits derived."

The case of Blue vs. Wentz, 54 Ohio State, page 247, in the first paragraph of the syllabus thereof, provides as follows:

"Where the lands of an owner, by reason of their situation, are provided with sufficient natural drainage, they are not liable for the costs and expense of the ditch necessary for the drainage of other lands, simply for the reason that the surface water of his lands naturally drain therefrom to and upon the lands requiring artificial drainage."

The third paragraph of the syllabus of the case of Pontifical College vs. Kleeli, 5 Nisi Prius, page 241, provides as follows:

"Where an upper proprietor has drained his lands without exceeding legal rights, and no advantage results to him from a township ditch which he did not enjoy before it was constructed, he is not chargeable with any part of the assessment for the cost of such an improvement, and an injunction will lie against the collection of an assessment levied on his land."

The syllabus in the case of Mason vs. Commissioners, 80 Ohio State, page 151, is as follows:

"A landowner may, in the reasonable use of his land, drain the surface water from it into its natural outlet, a watercourse, upon his own land, and thus increase the volume and accelerate the flow of water without incurring liability for damages to owners of lower lands; and his land is not subject to assessment for the cost of a ditch, or an improvement, that will not benefit its drainage, but is constructed to prevent overflow from the watercourse or to benefit the drainage of servient lands."

On the other hand the fifth paragraph of the case of Mason vs. County Commissioners, 10 Ohio Circuit Court, page 201, is as follows:

"Where plaintiffs, by reason of artificial improvements on their lands above, helped to make it necessary for the protection of the lands below that improvements be made in a ditch or watercourse, they should contribute toward payment thereof."

The intention and spirit of the above quoted statutes and decisions is clearly evident, to wit: all assessments shall be made in proportion to the benefits derived Question No. 3, therefore, is a question of fact.

If no benefit accrues to the upper land holders, by reason of the construction of the ditch and if they will be in no better position as far as the drainage of their land is concerned, than they are with the watercourse remaining in its natural state, they can be assessed nothing whatever for the cost, expense, or appropriations necessary to the improvements. If, however, by reason of artificial interference they have caused overflow or other inconvenience to the lower land owners, they may be assessed for the construction of the ditch, insofar, as it is made necessary, by their artificial interference with the natural conditions.

In direct answer to question No. 3, therefore, I am of the opinion that the upper land owners may be assessed for the improvement, if they derive any benefit therefrom and only to the extent that they are actually benefited.

In conclusion, therefore,

1. A land owner may petition for the construction and tiling of a county ditch higher up the watercourse than his own land extends.

2. Under the conditions prescribed, the county commissioners may extend the ditch improvement further up the watercourse than where the petition calls for if it is necessary or conducive to the public good of the neighborhood.

3. Assessments may be made upon the upper land owners in proportion to the benefits derived by them from the improvement.

Very truly yours,

TIMOTHY S. HOGAN,
Attorney General.

DEPUTY STATE SUPERVISORS OF ELECTIONS AND CLERKS—ADDITIONAL COMPENSATION IN PRESENT YEAR BASED UPON PRECINCT IN ALLIANCE WHICH RECENTLY BECAME REGISTRATION CITY—BOARD CAN HAVE OFFICE IN BUT ONE CITY—TRAVELING EXPENSES OF BOARD AND OF CLERK.

Under Section 4942, General Code, deputy state supervisors of election and the clerk of the board are allowed additional compensation at a fixed rate for each election precinct in a registration city. This section applies to each city in the county wherein registration is held.

In Stark County, registration has been held in the cities of Canton and Massillon and this year it was conducted for the first time in the city of Alliance, held:

That based upon the time of appointments of members of the board and of the clerk, the years of each begin about May 1st, and they are, therefore, entitled from that date to the compensation provided by 4942, General Code, from the city of Alliance. If, however, the clerk is not appointed until after May first, his compensation will date from the time of his appointment and qualification

Sections, 4920, 4873, 4803, 4874 and 4935, General Code, provide for but one office in one registration city for the board of election, the selection of the registration city in which such office shall be located being left to the board. The board cannot, therefore, be allowed their traveling expenses to and from places in other cities wherein they have held meetings.

By virtue of Sections 4821, 5052 and 4946, General Code, all necessary and proper expenditures of an election or registration may be paid from public funds. When the clerk of the board, therefore, is sent from the office on necessary official business to different parts of the county, the amount necessarily expended in so doing may be allowed.

November 8, 1912.

Bureau of Inspection and Supervision of Public Offices, Columbus, Ohio.

GENTLEMEN:—Your favor of October 26, 1912, is received in which you enclose a copy of letter from the clerk of the deputy state supervisors and inspectors of elections of Stark County, and ask for an opinion upon the several questions therein submitted.

The facts and questions are stated as follows:

"As provided in Section 4870, General Code, the board of deputy state supervisors of elections for Stark County, Ohio, has conducted registration of electors in cities of Canton and Massillon, and is now conducting same for the first time in the city of Alliance.

"The board of deputy state supervisors and inspectors of elections was appointed as provided by Sections 4788 and 4789, General Code, and the clerk was elected as provided by Section 4794, General Code.

"The members of the board and clerk have been drawing their compensation for conducting registration from cities of Canton and Massillon, as provided by Section 4942, General Code, from May 1, 1912.

"First: Are not the members of the board and the clerk entitled to draw compensation (as provided by Section 4942 of the General Code of Ohio) from city of Alliance, beginning May 1, 1912?

"As required by Section 4920 of the General Code of Ohio, the members of the board are in session in their offices in cities of Canton, Massillon and Alliance on Saturday and Monday preceding election day, to examine applicants as to their rights to register and vote. The main office of the board is in the city of Canton.

"Second: Are the members of the board entitled to draw car fare for attendance upon such meetings, the same to be figured from the city of Canton?

"The clerk is required, acting under instructions of the board, to make trips to various voting precincts on official business for the board.

"Third: Is the clerk entitled to car fare when making trips on official business for the board?"

Section 4942, General Code, provides:

"In addition to the compensation provided in section forty-eight hundred and twenty-two, each deputy state supervisor of elections in counties containing cities in which registration is required shall receive for his services the sum of five dollars for each election precinct in such city, and the clerk in such counties, in addition to his compensation so provided, shall receive for his services the sum of six dollars for each election precinct in such cities. The compensation so allowed such officers during any year shall be determined by the number of precincts in such city at the November election of the next preceding year. The compensation paid to each such deputy state supervisor under this section shall in no case be less than one hundred dollars each year and the compensation paid to the clerk under this section shall in no case be less than one hundred twenty-five dollars each year. The additional compensation provided by this section shall be paid monthly from the city treasury on warrants drawn by the city auditor upon vouchers signed by the chief deputy and clerk of the board."

In Stark County there are three cities in which registration of voters is required. The above section fixes the compensation to be paid to the members and clerk of the board of deputy state supervisors and inspectors of elections in registration cities. This compensation is in addition to that paid by virtue of Section 4822, General Code, and is paid at so much per precinct from the city treasury. It applies to each city in which registration is held and to each precinct thereof.

In the city of Alliance registration was held for the first time this year and the question is as to whether the compensation of the members of the board and its clerk shall be allowed for the precincts in the city of Alliance starting with May 1, 1912.

Section 4870, General Code, provides:

> "In cities which at the last preceding federal census had, or which at any subsequent federal census may have, a population of eleven thousand eight hundred or more, there shall be a general registration of electors in the several wards or precincts thereof in the manner, at the times and on the days hereinafter provided. No person shall have acquired a legal residence in a ward or election precinct in any such city for the purpose of voting therein at any general or special election, nor shall he be admitted to vote at any election therein unless he shall have caused himself to be registered as an elector in such ward or precinct in the manner and at the time required by the provisions of this chapter."

It is evident that by virtue of the federal census of 1910, and of this section, the city of Alliance became a registration city.

Section 4788, General Code, provides:

> "In each county of the state which contains a city wherein annual general registration of the electors is required by law, or which contains two or more cities in which registration is required by law, there shall be a board of deputy state supervisors and inspectors of elections, consisting of four members who shall be qualified electors of the county."

This section was amended in 102 Ohio Laws 98, by inserting the words "or which contains two or more cities in which registration is required." Said section now applies to Stark County which has three registration cities.

Section 4789, General Code, provides:

> "On or before the first day of May, biennially, the state supervisor and inspector of elections shall appoint for each such county two members of the board of deputy state supervisors and inspectors of elections, who shall each serve for a term of four years from such first day of May. One member so appointed shall be from the political party which cast the highest number of votes at the last preceding November election for governor, and the other member shall be appointed from the political party which cast the next highest number of votes for such officer at such election."

The terms of the members of the board are for four years and commence on May first of the year of their appointment.

Section 4794, General Code, provides:

> "Biennially, within five days after such appointments are made, the deputy state supervisors and inspectors shall meet and organize by selecting one of their number as chief deputy, who shall preside at all meetings, and two resident electors of the county, other than members of the board, as clerk and deputy clerk, respectively, all of which officers shall continue in office for two years."

The clerk is appointed within five days of the appointment of the members of the board and is appointed for a term of two years.

The compensation fixed by Section 4942, General Code, for the members of the board and the clerk is their annual compensation and is paid quarterly. The year for the members of the board begins on May first and that of the clerk from the time of his appointment and qualification. The appointment of the clerk is to be made within five days after the appointment of the deputies. The term of the clerk must begin about May first.

As Alliance is now a registration city and the members of the board of elections and the clerk were appointed by virtue of Section 4788, General Code, they are entitled to the compensation provided for in Section 4942, General Code, from the city of Alliance for the year beginning May 1, 1912. The salary of the clerk will begin from the time of his appointment and qualification if not made on May first.

The second question is in reference to the allowance of car fare to members of the board for attending meetings of the board at its offices in Alliance and Massillon. The main office of the board is in Canton.

It is stated that these meetings are held as required by Section 4920, General Code, which provides:

"At such meeting and subject to the same conditions, any qualified elector of such precinct may be registered who shall appear and present an order requiring it, signed by not less than three members of the board of deputy state supervisors. No such order shall be made or considered by the board, except in a session of the board, to be held in its office on Saturday and Monday preceding the November election in each year, and during such hours as may be prescribed by the board therefor, nor unless the applicant shall appear before the board personally at such session after the last day of general registration and proves to its satisfaction that he could not by due diligence have appeared before the registrars in his proper precinct on either of the days appointed herein, and shall furthermore comply with all the prescribed requirements for general registration."

It appears that the board of elections has offices in each of the three registration cities in the county and that they meet in each city on the Saturday and Monday preceding the election in November for the purpose of issuing orders of registration. Section 4920, General Code, provides that the board shall meet "at its office," and not at its offices. This section does not contemplate that the board shall have more than one office. The difficulty arises with the provisions of Section 4873, General Code, which reads:

"In counties containing a registration city, the board of deputy state supervisors shall have a sufficient and suitable office and rooms in such city for the purposes required by this chapter, which shall be in charge of the clerk thereof. In cities in which annual general registration is required, such office shall be kept open daily, except Sundays and legal holidays, and in quadrennial general registration cities such office shall be kept open at such times as the board may require."

This section does not specifically take into consideration a county which has two or more registration cities. It is made to govern in a county which has only one registration city. But as it is the only section providing for the office of the board in counties having a registration city it must also apply to a county having more than one registration city.

The amendatory act of 102 Ohio Laws 98, is the first instance of the present election laws of the state that takes into consideration a county containing two or more registration cities. In that act only two sections were amended: Section 4788, supra, and Section 4803, General Code, which provides:

> "Except in counties containing cities wherein annual general registration of electors is required by law, or which contains two or more cities in which registration is required by law, there shall be a board of deputy state supervisors of elections for each county consisting of four members who shall be qualified electors."

The amendatory act did not provide for the office of the board of elections in a county containing two or more registration cities.

Section 4874, General Code, authorizes the board of deputy state supervisors to provide for its office, as follows:

> "The board of deputy state supervisors shall appoint all registrars of electors, judges and clerks of election, and other clerks, officers, and agents herein provided for, and designate the ward and precinct in which each shall serve. It shall appoint the places of registration of electors and holding elections in each ward or precinct, provide suitable booths or hire suitable rooms for such purpose, and for its office, at such rents as it deems just, and provide the necessary and proper furniture and supplies for such rooms. It shall provide for the purchase, preservation and repair of booths and ballot boxes necessary for use at elections in such city, of books, blanks and forms necessary for the registrations and elections herein designated and for duly issuing all notices, advertisements or publications required by law."

This section also contemplates only one office for the board.

Section 4935, General Code, provides:

> "The board of deputy state supervisors shall convene in session at its office at five-thirty o'clock forenoon on the day of each election in such cities, and remain in session continuously until such statements giving the result of the election are received from every precinct in such city. The board may employ messengers, use the telephones and telegraph, direct the police force of the city, and use any other lawful means to secure prompt and correct reports from the election judges. The police authorities shall assign at least one policeman to do duty in each precinct on each day of election."

This section requires the board of deputy state supervisors to meet at 5:30 a. m. on the day of each election in a registration city, at its office, and remain in session until returns are received from each precinct of the city. It would be impossible for the board to comply with this section if it had an office in each of the three cities in which registration is held. The statute does not contemplate that it shall meet in more than one office on election day.

The statutes do not authorize the board of deputy state supervisors of elections to have an office in each registration city in the county when such county has more than one registration city. The board is authorized to provide for one office, and that office must be in the registration city where the county has only one city in which registration is required by law. The statutes do not provide a method of selecting the city in which such office shall be located, if the county has more than one registration city. In such a case the election of the city in which its office shall be located is left to the board. Such office must be located in one or the other of such registration cities.

As the board of elections is not authorized to have more than one office, its members cannot charge car fare against the county or city for traveling from one office to another office of such board.

It may be urged that it will be inconvenient to compel the voters of Alliance and Massillon, in this case, to go to Canton to secure orders from the board permitting them to register on the Saturday and Monday before the November elections. This is no doubt true. But that is a matter for the Legislature to provide for. This department can only construe the law as it finds it.

The third question is in reference to the car fare of the clerk when making trips on official business of the board.

Section 4821, General Code, provides:

> "All proper and necessary expenses of the board of deputy state supervisors shall be paid from the county treasury as other county expenses, and the county commissioners shall make the necessary levy to provide therefor. In counties containing annual general registration cities, such expenses shall include expenses duly authorized and incurred in the investigation and prosecution of offenses against laws relating to the registration of electors, the right of suffrage and the conduct of elections."

Section 5052, General Code, provides:

> "All expenses of printing and distributing ballots, cards of explanation to officers of the election and voters, blanks, and other proper and necessary expenses of any general or special election, including compensation of precinct election officers, shall be paid from the county treasury, as other county expenses."

Section 4946, General Code, provides:

> "The additional compensation of members of the board of deputy state supervisors and of its clerk in such city hereinbefore specified, the lawful compensation of the deputy clerk and his assistants and all registrars of electors in such city, the necessary cost of the registers, books, blanks, forms, stationery and supplies provided by the board for the purposes herein authorized, including poll books for special elections, and the cost of rent, furnishing and supplies for rooms hired by the board for its offices and as places for registrations of electors and the holding of elections in such city, shall be paid by such city from its general fund. Such expense shall be paid by the treasurer of such city upon vouchers of the board, certified by its chief deputy and clerk and the warrant of the city auditor. Each such voucher shall specify the actual services rendered, the items of supplies furnished and the price or rates charged in detail."

By virtue of these sections all necessary and proper expenses of an election or registration may be paid from the public funds.

If the clerk of the board of elections is sent from the office of the board upon necessary official business to different parts of the county, the amount necessarily expended by such clerk in reaching the various points and in returning to the office would be an expense which could properly be paid by the board and for which the board could make an allowance to the clerk. This allowance must be for the amount actually and necessarily expended by the clerk.

Respectfully,

TIMOTHY S. HOGAN,

Attorney General.

PROBATE JUDGE CANNOT RECEIVE ADDITIONAL COMPENSATION FOR TRANSCRIBING INDEX—WORK MUST BE DONE BY OFFICE FORCE AND BE COMPENSATED FROM ALLOWANCE MADE BY COUNTY COMMISSIONERS—ADDITIONAL ALLOWANCE BY COMMON PLEAS COURT—FEE FUND.

When the index of estates, executors and administrators in a probate judge's office is so badly worn as to require re-transcribing and the use of said index is so necessary as to prevent the doing the work during office hours, held:

If the work is done by the probate judge himself, under Section 2493, General Code, the allowance made by that section, of six cents per hundred words, must be paid into the fee fund, under Section 2983, General Code.

The work must be done by the employees of the Probate Court and their compensation must be made from the allowance made by the county commissioners for the Probate Court's office, under Section 2980, General Code, which allowance is based upon a detailed statement of the needs of the office made by the probate judge.

If such expense was not included in the statement made for 1912 and no allowance, therefore, made for the same, and the work can be postponed until 1913, such expense may be provided for in the allowance for 1913.

If the work connot be postponed, and additional allowance may be made upon application to a judge of the court of Common Pleas, under Section 2980-1, General Code.

Such work need not be done during office hours and errors may be corrected during the transcribing.

In no event can the Probate Judge receive compensation in addition to his salary for such work.

September 13, 1912.

Bureau of Inspection and Supervision of Public Offices, Columbus, Ohio.

GENTLEMEN:—Under date of August 21, 1912, you inquire as follows:

"The index of estates, executors and administrators in a probate judge's office is so badly worn as to render re-binding impracticable. It has been discovered that there are some errors in the book and it is desired to correct and copy same in a new volume. The book is in use so much of the time during the day that little progress can be made in copying it during office hours. The probate judge does not feel that the corrections could be reliably made by any of the clerks in his office.

"First: Would it be legal for the county commissioners to pay the probate judge in such case, extra compensation for correcting this index provided the work was done entirely out of office hours?

"Second: Would it be legal for the commissioners to pay such judge extra compensation for copying this index after it has been corrected, provided the work is done after office hours?

"Third: If neither of these payments would be legal what, if any, proceeding can you suggest by which the index may be corrected and copied and the services be legally paid for out of the county treasury?"

Section 1583, General Code, provides:

"A probate court is established in each county which shall be held at the county seat. Such court shall be held in an office furnished by the county commissioners, in which the books, records and papers pertaining to the court shall be deposited and safely kept by the judge thereof. The commissioners shall provide suitable cases for the safe keeping and preservation of the books and papers of the court, and furnish such blank books, blanks and stationery as the probate judge requires in the discharge of official duties."

This section makes it the duty of the county commissioners to furnish the probate court with the necessary blank books.

Section 2493, General Code, provides:

"When a record, journal, or other book belonging to any of the courts, is so worn or defaced as to require transcribing, the commissioners shall order it done by the officer in charge thereof, and pay him therefor six cents per hundred words."

The index in question is a book of one of the courts of the county. This index is so worn that it is necessary to transcribe its contents into a new book. The officer in charge, in this case the probate judge, shall do the work upon the order of the county commissioners. For this work he is to receive compensation at the rate of six cents per hundred words. These fees, however, would be credited to the fee fund of the probate judge.

The work of transcribing this index must be done by the employes of the probate court. The compensation to be paid the employe who performs this work must be paid from the allowance made by the county commissioners for the clerks and employes of the office of probate judge.

Section 2980, General Code, provides:

"On the twentieth of each November such officer shall prepare and file with the county commissioners a detailed statement of the probable amount necessary to be expended for deputies, assistants, clerks and other employes, except court constables, of their respective offices, showing in detail the requirements of their offices for the year beginning January 1st next thereafter with the sworn statement of the amount expended by them for such assistants for the preceding year.

Not later than five days after the filing of such statement, the county commissioners shall fix an aggregate sum to be expended for such period for the compensation of such deputies, assistants, book-keepers, clerks or other employes of such officer, except court constables, which sum shall be reasonable and proper, and shall enter such finding upon their journal."

This section covers the office of probate judge as shown in Section 2978, General Code.

Section 2980-1, General Code, provides:

"The aggregate sum so fixed by the county commissioners to be expended in any year for the compensation of such deputies, assistants, bookkeepers, clerks or other employes, except court constables, shall not exceed for any county auditor's office, county treasurer's office, county probate judge's office, county recorder's office, sheriff's office, or office of the clerk of courts, an aggregate amount to be ascertained by computing thirty per cent. on the first two thousand dollars or fractional part thereof, forty per cent. on the next eight thousand dollars or fractional part thereof and eighty-five per cent. on all over ten thousand dollars, of the fees, costs, percentages, penalties, allowances and other perquisites collected for the use of the county in any such office of official services during the year ending September thirteenth, next year preceding the time of fixing such aggregate sum; provided, however, that if at any time any one of such officers requires additional allowance in order to carry on the business of his office, said officer may make application to a judge of the court of common pleas, of the county wherein such officer was elected; and thereupon such judge shall hear said application and if, upon hearing the same, said judge shall find that such necessity exists, he may allow such a sum of money as he deems necessary to pay the salary of such deputy, deputies, assistants, bookkeepers, clerks or other employes as may be required and thereupon the board of county commissioners shall transfer from the general county fund, to such officers' fee fund, such sum of money as may be necessary to pay said salary or salaries.

"When the term of an incumbent of any such office shall expire within the year for which such an aggregate sum is to be fixed, the county commissioners at the time of fixing the same, shall designate the amount of such aggregate sum which may be expended by the incumbent and the amount of such aggregate sum which may be expended by his successor for the fractional parts of such year."

Section 2981, General Code, provides:

"Such officers may appoint and employ necessary deputies, assistants, clerks, bookkeepers or other employes for their respective offices, fix their compensation and discharge them, and shall file with the county auditor certificates of such action. Such compensation shall not exceed in the aggregate for each office the amount fixed by the commissioners for such office. When so fixed, the compensation of each duly appointed or employed deputy, assistant, bookkeeper, clerk and other employe shall be paid monthly from the county treasury, upon the warrant of the county auditor."

It appears that the regular force in the probate court cannot transcribe this index and at the same time perform the other services required of them. I assume that the compensation of the regular force consumes the allowance made by the county commissioners for the office of probate judge. As heretofore held by this department, the county commissioners cannot make an additional allowance when they have once fixed the annual allowance. They cannot now make an additional allowance for this work for the year 1912.

If the matter is so urgent that it must be done at once, application for an additional allowance can be made to a judge of the common pleas court as provided in Section 2980-1, General Code.

If, however, the work can be postponed until the first of the year, the cost of transcribing the index may be estimated and included in the estimate and allowance to be made for the office of probate judge for the year 1913.

It is not necessary that the work shall be done during office hours. It may be done at the time most convenient. Whether done during office hours or not, the compensation of the person who transcribes this index is a charge against the office of the probate judge and must be paid from the allowance made for his office.

I find no statute in reference to the correction of errors in an index or other record of the probate court. The errors nevertheless should be corrected when the index is transcribed.

Your inquiry involves another question. That is, the right of the probate judge himself to correct and make a new index out of office hours, and his right to be allowed compensation for such services in addition to his salary.

Under the county salary law, all fees and perquisites of the office of probate judge are paid into the county treasury for the benefit of the county.

Section 2977, General Code, provides:

> "All the fees, costs, percentages, penalties, allowances and other perquisites collected or received by law as compensation for services by a county auditor, county treasurer, probate judge, sheriff, clerk of courts, or recorder, shall be so received and collected for the sole use of the treasury of the county in which they are elected and shall be held as public moneys belonging to such county and accounted for and paid over as such as hereinafter provided."

Section 2983, General Code, provides:

> "On the first business day of April, July, October and January, and at the end of his term of office, each such officer shall pay into the county treasury on the warrant of the county auditor, all fees, costs, penalties, percentages, allowances and perquisites of whatever kind collected by his office during the preceding quarter or part thereof for official services, which money shall be kept in separate funds and credited to the office from which received; and he shall also at the end of each calendar year, make and file a sworn statement with the county commissioners of all fees, costs, penalties, percentages, allowances and perquisites of whatever kind which has been due his office and unpaid for more than one year prior to the date such statement is required to be made."

The fees to be paid for transcribing the index, as fixed in Section 2943, supra, General Code, are for official services of the probate judge, and should, under the foregoing sections, be paid into the county treasury for the benefit of the county. These fees are no longer paid for the benefit of the officer or employe who performs the services. Such officers and employes are now paid a salary.

Section 2989, General Code, provides:

> "Each county officer herein named shall receive out of the general county fund the annual salary hereinafter provided, payable monthly upon warrant of the county auditor."

The amount of the salary to be paid to the probate judge is fixed by Section 2992, General Code.

Section 2996, General Code, provides:

> "Such salaries shall be instead of all fees, costs, penalties, percentages, allowances and all other perquisites of whatever kind which any of such officials may collect and receive, provided that in no case shall the annual salary paid to any such officer exceed six thousand dollars."

The salary fixed for the probate judge is his compensation for his official services, and is paid to him instead of all fees and other allowances.

By virtue of Section 1584, General Code, the probate judge is authorized to act as clerk of the probate court. Said sections reads:

> "Each probate judge shall have the care and custody of the files, papers, books and records belonging to the probate office. He is authorized to perform the duties of clerk of his own court. He may appoint a deputy clerk or clerks, each of whom shall take an oath of office before entering upon the duties of his appointment, and when so qualified, may perform the duties appertaining to the office of clerk of the court. Each deputy clerk may administer oaths in all cases when necessary, in the discharge of his duties. Each probate judge may take a bond with such surety from his deputy as he deems necessary to secure the faithful performance of the duties of his appointment."

The salary of the probate judge is to cover his compensation for his official services. The transcribing of an index in his office is to be made under his direction and is a part of his official duty. All fees and allowances of all kinds collected or received by the probate judge for official services must be paid into the county treasury.

The county commissioners have no authority to allow a probate judge extra compensation for services performed by him, within or without office hours, in transcribing an index of his office.

The county commissioners may make an additional allowance for deputies and clerks for this service, at the time they make the allowance for the year 1913, or for any other year. They cannot now make an additional allowance for this work for the year 1912.

TIMOTHY S. HOGAN,

Attorney General.

HUMANE AGENT ALLOWED NO FEES IN ADDITION TO SALARY FIXED—NO FEES FOR SERVING SUBPOENAS—NOT A COURT OFFICER—POWER TO MAKE ARRESTS—EXPENSES MAY NOT BE PAID BY COUNTY.

Under Section 10072, General Code, the compensation of agents of humane societies is fixed upon a salary basis by the council of a municipality or by the county commissioners or by both.

By virtue of Section 10076, General Code, such agents are allowed and paid such fees for services under that chapter "as they are allowed for services in other cases".

Inasmuch as Section 13436, General Code, which provides the compensation for "court officers" in such "other cases" cannot be construed to include agents of humane societies, such agents cannot, therefore, be allowed anything in addition to their fixed compensation for their services.

The humane agent is more than a court officer, but is an officer of the humane society, authorized to prosecute persons charged with cruelty to persons or animals.

Section 11504 enumerates persons who may serve subpoenas in official capacity, and inasmuch as agents of humane societies are not therein named, they may serve subpoenas only in their individual capacity and no costs may be taxed for such services.

A humane officer may arrest as provided by Section 10070, General Code, "any persons found violating any provision of that chapter," also by 10075, General Code, any member of the humane society may require the agent or officer of the society "to arrest any person found violating the laws in relation to cruelty to persons or animals", and under 13491, General Code, a humane officer may make arrests provided for in that section when a warrant is issued to him therefor by a magistrate or court authorized to issue such warrant.

As the statutes do not so authorize, the county is not authorized to pay from the county treasury any expense incurred by the humane officer in the discharge of his official duties.

Bureau of Inspection and Supervision of Public Offices, Columbus, Ohio.

GENTLEMEN:—Under date of September 19, 1912, you inquire of this department as follows:

> "Is an agent of the humane society authorized by law to act and collect fees for his services, either from the defendant or from the county treasury? If so, under what section or sections shall the fees be taxed?
>
> "Has a humane agent any authority, as such, to serve subpoenas?
>
> "Under what circumstances is such humane agent authorized to make arrests?
> "May such agent be allowed any expenses from the county treasury incurred in the discharge of his official duties?"

Agents of humane societies are appointed by virtue of Section 10070, General Code, which reads:

> "Such societies may appoint agents who are residents of the county or municipality for which the appointment is made, for the purpose of prosecuting any person guilty of an act of cruelty to persons or animals, who may arrest any person found violating any provision of this chapter, or any other law for protecting persons or animals or preventing acts of cruelty thereto. Upon making such arrest, such agent shall convey the person so arrested before some court or magistrate having jurisdiction of the offense, and there forthwith make complaint on oath or affirmation of the offense."

The agent is appointed for the purpose of prosecuting persons who are guilty of acts of cruelty to animals or persons. He is also authorized to arrest any person found violating the provisions of the chapter pertaining to the humane society.

Section 10072, General Code, prescribes how his compensation shall be fixed, as follows:

"Upon the approval of the appointment of such an agent by the mayor of the city or village, the council thereof shall pay monthly to such agent or agents from the general revenue fund of the city or village, such salary as the council deems just and reasonable. Upon the approval of the appointment of such an agent by the probate judge of the county, the county commissioners shall pay monthly to such agent or agents, from the general revenue fund of the county, such salary as they deem just and reasonable. The commissioners, and the council of such city or village may agree upon the amount each is to pay such agent or agents monthly. The amount of salary to be paid monthly by the council of the village to such agent shall not be less than five dollars, by the council of the city not less than twenty dollars, and by the commissioners of the of the county not less than twenty-five dollars. But not more than one agent in each county shall receive remuneration from the county commissioners under this section."

Section 10075, General Code, provides:

"A member of such society may require the sheriff of any county, the constable of any township, the marshal or policeman of any city or village, or the agent of such society, to arrest any person found violating the laws in relation to cruelty to persons or animals, and to take possession of any animal cruelly treated, in their respective counties, cities, or villages, and deliver it to the proper officers of the society."

Section 10076, General Code, provides:

"For this service and for all services rendered in carrying out the provisions of this chapter, such officers, and the officers and agents of the association, shall be allowed and paid such fees as they are allowed for like services in other cases, which must be charged as costs, and reimbursed to the society by the person convicted."

By virtue of this section "the officers and agents of the association shall be allowed and paid such fees as they are allowed for like services in other cases." The section does not fix the fees that shall be paid or charged as costs, but says that they shall be the same as are allowed such officers or agents in other cases. The pronoun "they" in the above quoted clause refers to the officers enumerated in Section 10075, General Code, to-wit, the constable, marshal, policeman, or humane officer making the arrest. This provision cannot be construed to mean that the humane officer or agent shall be paid the same fees as are allowed constables, marshals or policemen for like services in other cases. It means that the humane officer or like agent shall be allowed the same fees as are allowed such humane officer or agent for like services in other cases. It is, therefore, necessary to ascertain what, if any, fees such humane officer or agent is allowed in other cases.

Section 13436, General Code, provides:

> "In pursuing or arresting a defendant and in subpoenaing the witnesses in such prosecutions, the constable, chief of police, marshal or other court officer shall have like jurisdiction and power as the sheriff in criminal cases in the common pleas court, and he shall receive like fees therefor."

Section 13439, General Code, provides:

> "In such prosecutions, no costs shall be required to be advanced or secured by a person authorized by law to prosecute. If the defendant be acquitted or discharged from custody by nolle or otherwise, or convicted and committed in default of paying fine and costs, all costs of such case shall be certified under oath by the trial magistrate to the county auditor, who, after correcting errors therein, shall issue a warrant on the county treasury in favor of the person to whom such costs and fees are payable. All moneys which are to be paid by the county treasurer as provided in this chapter shall be paid out of the general revenue fund of such county."

It has been held in an opinion to your department that the words "such prosecutions" refer to the several prosecutions enumerated in Section 13423, General Code. Subdivision two of said section reads:

> "Justices of the peace, police judges and mayors of cities and villages shall have jurisdiction, within their respective counties, in all cases of violation of any law relating to:
> "2. The prevention of cruelty to animals and children."

The humane officer is required to prosecute for the class of offenses set forth in said subdivision two of Section 13423, General Code. The term "such prosecutions" as used in Sections 13436 and 13439, General Code, would apply to prosecutions by a humane officer for such offenses if made before the officers named in said Section 13423, General Code.

Section 13436, General Code, does not specifically mention the humane officer or agent as one of the officers who are entitled to the fees which are allowed a sheriff in criminal cases in the common pleas court. The humane officer must come under the term "or other court officer" if he is entitled to said fees.

A humane officer is given certain powers to arrest a certain class of offenders and to that extent he possesses certain police powers, which powers are also possessed by a constable, marshal, chief of police, and policeman.

The humane officer has more duties than this. He is required to prosecute such persons as are guilty of cruelty to persons or animals. He is more than a police officer. He is also a prosecutor. And for his services as police officer and prosecutor he is paid the compensation which is fixed in accordance with the provisions of Section 10072, General Code. It appears from the letter enclosed that the county commissioners have made the humane officer in question an allowance to be paid by the county.

The term "or other court officer" refers, in my opinion, to officers who attend the trial of a criminal case in a capacity similar to that of a constable, marshal, or chief of police, or policeman. These officers attend upon the court and execute its orders rather as peace officers than as prosecuting officers.

It does not refer to a humane officer, who has power to arrest, but is in fact the prosecutor of the person charged with the offense. He is not an officer of the court, or a court officer, but is the agent and officer of the humane society and authorized to prosecute persons charged with cruelty to persons or animals.

Therefore, said Section 13436, General Code, does not authorize the payment of fees to the agent or officer of the humane society.

In Section 3718*a*, Revised Statutes, of which the provisions of Section 13436, General Code, were a part, the words "or other court officer" are limited by a phrase not now found in the General Code. It reads:

> "The jurisdiction and powers of the constable or other court officer acting in such capacity—"

This does not change my opinion as to the proper construction of Section 13436, General Code, but rather confirms it. By this provision the court officer must act in the capacity of a constable. Except as to his power to arrest, the humane officer acts in a capacity other than that of a constable.

I find no provision of statute which authorizes the taxing of costs, either against the defendant or against the county for the services of a humane officer or agent in prosecutions made by such humane officer.

Therefore, the humane officer or agent is not entitled to charge fees or costs for his services in arresting persons or for any other services performed by him.

Section 11504, General Code, provides:

> "A subpoena may be served by the sheriff, coroner, or any constable of the county, by the party, or other person; but if service is not made by a sheriff, coroner or constable, proof of it shall be shown by affidavit, and no costs shall be taxed."

This section does not name the humane officer as one who can, in his official capacity, serve subpoenas. He may serve subponeas in his individual capacity, the same as any other person, but no costs can be taxed for such services.

The humane officer may arrest, as provided in Section 10070, General Code, "any person found violating any provision of this chapter." That is, the chapter pertaining to the humane society and its powers and duties.

By virtue of Section 10075, General Code, any member of the humane society may require the agent or officer of the society "to arrest any person found violating the laws in relation to cruelty to persons or animals."

Section 13491, General Code, further authorizes the humane officer to make arrests, as follows:

> "When complaint is made, on oath or affirmation, to a magistrate or court authorized to issue warrants in criminal cases, that the complainant believes that the law relating to or affecting animals is being or is about to be violated in a particular building or place, such magistrate or court shall forthwith issue and deliver a warrant directed to any sheriff, constable, police officer, or agent of a society for the prevention of cruelty to animals, authorizing him to enter and search such building or place, and arrest all persons there violating or attempting to violate such law, and bring such persons before a court or magistrate of competent jurisdiction within the city, village or county within which such offense has been committed, to be dealt with according to law. Such attempt shall be held to be a violation of such law, and shall subject the person charged therewith, to the penalties thereof."

The humane officer may make the arrest or arrests provided for in this section when a warrant is issued to him therefor by a magistrate or court authorized to issue such warrant.

The foregoing are three instances where a humane officer may make arrests. His power to arrest must rest upon statutory authority.

Your next inquiry is as to the right of the county to pay the expenses of the humane officer. I find no statutory provision which authorizes the county to pay for any of the expenses of a humane officer, other than the salary of such officer to be fixed in the manner provided in Section 10072, General Code.

The statutes authorize certain fines to be paid to the humane society. These fines are used to defray the expenses of such society.

For example, Section 12971, General Code, provides:

"If prosecution under either the next preceding section or section twelve thousand nine hundred and sixty-eight, is instituted by an incorporated society for the prevention of cruelty to animals, the fines collected thereby shall be paid to such society; otherwise fines collected under such sections shall be paid to any society so incorporated."

The county commissioners cannot pay any of the expenses of the humane officer from the funds of the county without statutory authority therefor. As the statutes do not so provide, the county is not authorized to pay from the county treasury any expense incurred by the humane officer in the discharge of his official duties.

Respectfully,

TIMOTHY S. HOGAN,
Attorney General.

LAW LIBRARIES—COLLECTION ON FORFEITED BONDS IN POLICE COURT NOT INCLUDED IN FINES AND PENALTIES—NOT TO BE PAID TO LAW LIBRARIES.

The provision of Section 3056, General Code, requiring a proportion of all fines and penalties assessed and collected by the police court for offenses prosecuted in the name of the state, cannot be construed to include collections made on forfeited bonds in state cases.

Both the words "fines and penalties" partake of the nature of punishment, whilst collection on a bond is in the nature of a forfeiture and cannot be included within the term "fines and penalties."

Moreover, the history of Section 3056, General Code, makes clear, by the provision in the former enactments, restricting such payments to fines and penalties to cases "which shall be tried and determined in such police court," that collections on forfeited bonds were not included therein.

November 1, 1912.

Bureau of Inspection and Supervision of Public Offices, Columbus, Ohio.

GENTLEMEN:—Under date of October 1, 1912, you inquire as follows:

"Are law library associations entitled to collections made in the police court of forfeited cash bail taken in state cases brought in said court and afterwards forfeited by the court by reason of the non-appearance of the defendant?

"Also, are said libraries entitled to collections made on forfeited bonds in state cases brought in the police court?"

Fines and penalties are paid to law library associations by virtue of Section 3056, General Code, which provides:

"All fines and penalties assessed and collected by the police court for offenses and misdemeanors prosecuted in the name of the state, except a portion thereof equal to the compensation allowed by the county commissioners to the judges, clerk and prosecuting attorney of such court in state cases shall be retained by the clerk and be paid by him quarterly to the trustees of such law library associations, but the sum so retained and paid by the clerk of said police court to the trustees of such law library association shall in no quarter be less than 15% of the fines and penalties collected in that quarter without deducting the amount of the allowances of the county commissioners to said judges, clerk and presecutor. In all counties the fines and penalties assessed and collected by the common pleas court and the probate court for offenses and misdemeanors prosecuted in the name of the state, shall be retained and paid quarterly by the clerk of such courts to the trustees of such library association, but the sum so paid from the fines and penalties assessed and collected by the common pleas and probate courts shall not exceed five hundred per annum. The moneys so paid shall be expended in the purchase of law books and the maintenance of such association."

The original act for assisting law library associations by the payment of fines and penalties to them was passed in 1872, as shown in 69 Ohio Laws, 166. In that act the provision now under consideration reads as follows:

"That all fines and penalties, which may hereafter be assessed and collected by the police court, and mentioned in the first section of this act, for all offenses and misdemeanors prosecuted in the name of the state of Ohio, which shall be tried and determined in such police court, * * *."

In the Revised Statutes of 1880, which was a general revision of the laws of Ohio, the words "which shall be tried and determined in such police court," were omitted and have been so omitted in amendatory acts and revisions of said section.

In the original act these words, which are now omitted, limited the application of the term "fines and penalties" to those offenses and misdemeanors "which shall be tried and determined in such police court." In the case of a forfeited bond, cash bond or other bond, the offense is not tried and determined, unless the non-appearance of the defendant occurs after trial and sentence. In the latter event it is customary to take the fine which was assessed from the cash bond.

The original act did not authorize the payment of money secured by reason of the forfeiture of a bond to the law library association. It limited the payments to the association to the "fines and penalties" which were assessed and collected in state cases which were "tried and determined" in the police court.

Under the original act the word "penalty" did not refer or apply to forfeited bail. There is nothing to show that the Legislature intended to change the meaning and application of the word "penalty" in said section as said word is used in any of the subsequent amendments or revisions thereof. The mere omission from a statute of the definition of a word used therein does not change the meaning thereof when such word is used in the same manner in all succeeding amendments.

The words "fines" and "penalties" as used in Section 3056, General Code, have the same meaning and application as did the same words in the original act in 69 Ohio Laws 166.

As it has been strongly urged that the word "penalty" will include money received on forfeited cash bond, and money collected on a forfeited bond, the question will be further considered.

Bouvier in his Law Dictionary gives the following definitions of "fine" and "penalty," as used in criminal law.

> "Fine: Pecuniary punishment imposed by a lawful tribunal upon a person convicted of crime or misdemeanor. It may include a forfeiture or penalty recoverable in a civil action.
> "Penalty: The punishment inflicted by a law for its violation. The term is mostly applicable to a pecuniary punishment.
> "The words penal and penalty in their strict and primary sense, denote a punishment whether corporal or pecuniary imposed and enforced by the state for a crime or offense against its laws."

A fine is limited to a pecuniary punishment. While a penalty is also usually limited to a pecuniary punishment, it may also include a corporal punishment. "Penalty" is a broader term than "fine." A fine in all cases may be termed a penalty, yet a penalty is not always a fine.

In United States vs. Nash, 111 Federal 525, it is held:

> "While the word "penalty" has a broader meaning than the word "fine" still a fine, in a judicial sense, is always a penalty, although a penalty may sometimes not be a fine, or even a criminal punishment."

In the case of In re Brittingham 5 Federal 191, the syllabus reads:

> "Sums recovered on forfeited bail-bonds are not "fines, penalties, or forfeitures" within section 4 of the act of June 22, 1874, and the petitioner is not entitled under the provisions to compensation as an informer. "

Also in United States vs. Fanjul, Vol. 25 Federal Case No. 15069, it is held:

> "The penalty of a recognizance for the appearance in court of a defendant charged with a crime under the customs act of 1799 (1 Stat. 627), is not a penalty recovered by virtue of that act.
> "It seems that a fine imposed under that act goes, in part, to the informer.
>
> "But money paid into court by the sureties on a recognizance is not such a fine, and is not instead of a fine, though the alleged crime was one that might have required the imposition of a fine if the defendant had been convicted; and no part of it belongs to the informer."

Lowell, D. J., says on page 1040:

> "But in this case, the penalty, so called, which has been paid into court, is not a fine, penalty or forfeiture recovered by virtue of that act, but the penalty of a recognizance taken by the court to insure the appearance of the defendant to answer the charge. The amount in which the bond was taken was estimated with a view to all the circumstances of the charge, including the possible fine; but it was in no sense a substitute for the fine. If the defendant, after his default, had appeared, or had been brought in by his bail the court might have remitted to the sureties the whole or some part of the penalty of the recognizance, by virtue of the act of 1839 (5 Stat. 321). Supposing the time for such action to be passed, and that the sureties have relinquished all claim to a remission, still if the defendant is found he can be tried, and if convicted, may pay a fine, in which the petitioner may be interested, but as I said before, no such fine or penalty has yet been imposed or paid."

In case of State vs. Horgan, 55 Minn. 183, Collins, J., says at page 183:

> "Now the selling of the article or substance mentioned in chapter 11, unless it be colored a bright pink, is an act forbidden by law; it is a public offense. Upon conviction, a pecuniary penalty, is imposed, and this is nothing more or less than a fine, according to the lexicographers. The offense is a misdemeanor, and the penalty or fine, is to be recovered in accordance with the provisions of 1876, G. S. ch. 78, Section 10, by a criminal prosecution in a court of competent jurisdiction."

Tenney, J., defines a fine and penalty on page 179 of Lord vs. State 37 Me., 177, as follows:

> "The terms "fine" and "penalty" signify a mulet for an ommission to comply with some requirement of law; or for a positive infraction of law and do not include the costs, which accrue in the prosecution."

The terms "fine" and "penalty" are often used interchangeably and both are used to express a pecuniary punishment which is imposed for violation of some law.

Section 3056, General Code, limits the fines and penalties to those which are "assessed and collected" "for offenses and misdemeanors prosecuted in the name of the state. The usual method of assessing fines and penalties in criminal cases is to first try the defendant and if found guilty to then assess the fine or penalty.

In the case of forfeited bail there is no trial and there is no assessing of a fine or penalty for an offense or misdemeanor. The forfeiture of a bail bond is made because the accused failed to appear at the specified time. It is not a punishment for the offense charged. It is a forfeiture, which might be termed and often is called a penalty, because of the failure to appear in court when ordered.

Dickman, J., defines bail on page 267 of Reinhard vs. City, 49 Ohio St., 257, as follows:

> "Bail may be defined as a delivery of a person to his sureties, upon their giving, together with himself, sufficient security for his appearance; he being supposed to continue in their friendly custody, instead of going to jail. To say nothing of its liability to abuse, the deposit of money with the officer, as security for the appearance of the accused, would not be so likely to secure the end proposed as that provided by the statute."

In Hampton vs. State, 42 Ohio St. 401, Follett, J., says at page 404:

"Thus it is clear that after conviction and until sentence, the court has power to admit to bail. The object of bail is to secure the appearance of the one arrested when his personal presence is needed; and, consistently with this, to allow to the accused proper freedom and opportunity to prepare his defense. The punishment should be after the sentence."

The recognizance in a criminal case is taken to secure the attendance of the prisoner when wanted or needed. It is not taken as security for the fine or penalty that may be imposed for the commission of the offense. The amount recovered upon forfeiture of a bond is not a punishment for the offense but is a penalty imposed because the accused failed to appear, because the sureties failed to produce the body of the prisoner who was placed in their charge, as it were. The cash bond is forfeited because of the failure of the accused to appear and is not assessed or collected as a fine or penalty for the offense or misdemeanor.

The fines and penalties referred to in Section 3056, General Code, are the fines and penalties which are imposed as punishment for the commission of an offense. A forfeited bail is not such a punishment. The collection upon a bail bond is not a bar to a further prosecution of the offense charged.

The rule is stated in 12 Cyc. 262, as follows:

"And a judgment against the accused on a recognizance for failure to appear is not a former jeopardy, and is no bar to another prosecution for the same offense."

The forfeiture and collection of a bond does not constitute a jeopardy.

Section 3056, General Code, does not authorize the payment of money secured upon a forfeited bail bond, cash or other bond, to the law library association.

Respectfully,

TIMOTHY S. HOGAN,

Attorney General.

CITY AUDITOR—NOT LIABLE FOR PAYMENT OF ILLEGAL CLAIMS IF MADE IN GOOD FAITH UPON ADVICE OF CITY SOLICITOR—BOND CONDITIONED UPON FAITHFUL PERFORMANCE OF DUTIES.

The bond of the city auditor is conditioned that he will "faithfully perform the duties of his office." Neither he nor his bondsmen, therefore, are liable upon said bond unless he has failed to faithfully perform said duties.

His liability, therefore, is a question of fact. If he uses ordinary care, prudence and good faith in the payment of illegal claims, if his payment of such is advised by an opinion of the city solicitor, and there appears no substantial reason for doubting such opinion, he is not liable for the payment of the same.

October 30, 1912.

Bureau of Inspection and Supervision of Public Offices, Columbus, Ohio

GENTLEMEN:—Your favor of October 19, 1912, is received, in which you inquire:

> "Are the city auditor and his bondsmen protected from liability in the payment of illegal claims if the former has used ordinary care and prudence in his approval of the same and has the written opinion of the city solicitor that said claim was legal?

Section 4666, General Code, provides for the oath of a city official as follows:

> "Each officer of the corporation, or of any department or board thereof, whether elected or appointed as a substitute for a regular officer, shall be an elector within the corporation, except as otherwise expressly provided, and before entering upon his official duties shall take an oath to support the constitution of the United States and the constitution of Ohio, and an oath that he will faithfully, honestly and impartially discharge the duties of the office. Such provisions as to official oaths shall extend to deputies, but they need not be electors."

Section 4668, General Code, prescribes the condition of the bond:

> "In each such bond, the condition that the person elected or appointed shall faithfully perform the duties of the office shall be sufficient. The fact that the instrument is without a seal, that blanks like the date or amount have been filled subsequent to its execution but before its acceptance, without the consent of the sureties, that all the obligees named in the instrument have not signed it, that new duties have been imposed upon the officers or that any merely formal objection exists shall not be available in any suit on the instrument."

The city auditor takes an oath that he will "faithfully, honestly and impartially discharge the duties of his office." The bond is conditioned that he will "faithfully perform the duties of his office." In holding the sureties upon the bond liable, it must be determined whether or not he has faithfully performed the duties of his office. The individual liability of the auditor is to be measured by the manner in which he is required to discharge his duties. The question is, has he "faithfully, honestly and impartially" discharged the duties of his office If he has, then he cannot be held individually liable for loss to the city.

In the case of the Common Council of Alexandria vs. Corse, 2 Cranch C. C. (U. S.) 363, it is held:

> "The surety in an official bond, conditioned that the principal shall faithfully execute the duties of his office, is not liable for the honest error in judgment or want of skill of the principal. But gross negligence is want of fidelity."

At Section 243 of Troop on Public Offices, the rule is laid down:

> "An official bond, whatever special condition it may contain, almost invariably contains a general condition that the officer shall faithfully discharge the duties of his office. This condition is not broken by an honest error of judgment, or an honest mistake, or want of skill in the discharge of a duty, where the precise mode of discharging it is not pointed out by the statute. But the mere fact that the officer acted in accordance with the opinion of the attorney general will not suffice to protect him or his sureties."

In support of the latter proposition he cites Dodd vs. State, 18 Ind. 56, in which it is held:

> "An official opinion of the attorney general of the state can constitute no legal justification of any officer, for any act done in pursuance of it, but such act must be tested by the law.
> Hanna, J., says on page 66:
>
> "It is insisted that when an officer of state, in pursuance of this statute, calls upon, and obtains from, the law officer of the state, a legal opinion in reference to his duties, and proceeds in accordance with the same, that a suit will not lie upon his official bond, whether said opinion is sound in law or not. And the question is asked, if this is not so, then what use is there in requiring the opinion?
> "There are several reasons why this position is not tenable. First, if the opinion can shield the officer from a civil suit, when he does wrong, then it ought to be binding upon him; and of course, as it is expressed in as strong language, when called for, binding upon the legislature. The auditor audits money accounts before the applicant can receive the same from the treasury. Suppose under a mistaken view of the law, based upon an erroneous opinion, he should refuse to allow a just account to a private citizen. Would that opinion be a bar to proceedings to obtain the amount so due? Would an unconstitutional law be held binding because an opinion had been given to the legislature in advance that it was valid? The position is so plainly untenable that it is useless to pursue the subject."

I find no decisions in Ohio upon the proposition under consideration. There are authorities which show the tendency of our courts. None of these are upon cases of an illegal payment of money from public funds. They are in reference to negligence of an official which caused damage to an individual.

In Kloeb vs. Mercer County, 16 Cir. Dec. 152, the third syllabus reads:

"Although the drawing of a warrant by a county auditor upon the county treasurer, upon direction of the county commissioners, is a mere subservient and ministerial act, yet it is the official duty of the auditor, as a public officer and agent of the people, to protest against and object to drawing any warrant which he in good faith, and in the exercise of his judgment as a prudent and honest agent of the people, deems to be an unlawful expenditure of the public money. The order of the county commissioners does not have the effect of a judgment at law or stop the auditor from questioning, in good faith, its validity."

This decision states the duty of an auditor in reference to an order from the county commissioners. It does not touch the question of the effect of an opinion of the legal adviser of the county.

In Gregory vs. Small, 39 Ohio St., 346, it is held:

"The local directors of a sub-school district, dismissed a person found in possession of the schoolhouse and teaching the public school, under their control, on the ground that he had not been employed, and placed a teacher they had employed, in charge of the school. Held; that they were not liable personally, in damages, for such dismissal, if they acted in their official capacity, in good faith, and in the honest discharge of official duty."

On page 349, Johnson, C. J., says:

"If there was no valid employment, and there could be none except by official action when the salary was payable out of the public funds, the directors acting officially might refuse him possession of the schoolhouse, or to recognize him as teacher. Indeed it was their duty to do so. If there was a valid contract of employment, followed by a subsequent dismissal, for sufficient cause, the plaintiff was without remedy even at common law; but if there was no sufficient cause for such dismissal the directors are not personally liable when they acted in good faith, in what they supposed was the honest discharge of official duty. They are personally liable, only when they act with a corrupt intent."

In Thomas vs. Wilton, 40 Ohio St., 516, the syllabus reads:

"County commissioners, who act in their official capacity in good faith and in the honest discharge of official duty, cannot be held to personally respond in damages."

This case arose out of damages received by reason of a defective bridge. These cases are not in point but tend to show that more than a mere error in judgment is required to hold an officer individually liable.

It is not possible to lay down a rule of liability which can be applied to every case that may arise. The individual liability of an officer is always a matter to be determined by the particular facts, and the law applicable thereto, of each particular case.

In the case of a city auditor it is a question as to whether or not he has "faithfully, honestly and impartially" performed the duties of his office. If he has, he is not individually liable. If he has not so performed his duties, he and his bondsmen may be liable for any loss occasioned thereby.

The liability of the auditor and the sureties on his bond, must in the end be measured and tested by the law.

The opinion of the city solicitor that a payment or claim is legal is not of itself sufficient to excuse the auditor from liability. The opinion of the solicitor may be palpably wrong and given from corrupt motives of which the auditor may be presumed to have notice. For example, if the city solicitor should declare a claim legal, which had been declared illegal by a court of competent jurisdiction and whose jurisdiction extended to the officers who were acting, and such decision was known to the auditor, he could not rely solely upon the opinion of the city solicitor. He must act honestly and faithfully in the matter.

The opinion of the city solicitor would be a circumstance and a strong circumstance to show that the city auditor has acted in good faith and has made an honest effort to faithfully and honestly discharge the duties of his office. In addition to securing the opinion of the solicitor the auditor must use ordinary care and prudence in allowing the claim. The opinion of the solicitor does not excuse him from using his judgment.

It is difficult to lay down a rule of liability without knowing the particular facts of the case.

It may be safely held, as a general rule, that where a city auditor has used ordinary care and prudence in the allowance of a claim and in addition has the written opinion of his official legal adviser, the city solicitor, that such claim is legal, the city auditor and his bondsmen would not be liable on the official bond, if such claim should eventually be declared illegal.

Respectfully,
TIMOTHY S. HOGAN,
Attorney General.

SURETY BONDS OF PUBLIC OFFICES—MUNICIPALITY MAY NOT MAKE ABSOLUTE REQUIREMENT OF, AND MAY NOT PAY PREMIUMS ON.

Inasmuch as the Legislature has not authorized the municipality so to do, it may not pay the premiums on the bonds of its officers and employes out of the public funds.

Since it is unconstitutional for the Legislature to require that only surety company bonds may be given by officers, the Legislature is without power to delegate to a municipality the right to make such a requirement, and the latter can have no such power. Personal surety may, therefore, always be given by municipal officers, providing said surety be acceptable to the approving officer.

October 19, 1912.

Bureau of Inspection and Supervision of Public Offices, Columbus, Ohio.

GENTLEMEN:—Under date of July 17th, you submitted for my opinion the following:

> "1. Is it a legal use of the public funds of a city to be used in the payment of premium on the official bonds of officers and employes of the city, provided that the ordinances of the city require that said officers and employes give a surety company bond?
> "2. If said ordinances so provide, is it obligatory on said officers or employes, or may they give personal surety on their official bonds, provided said sureties be acceptable to the approving officers?"

"3. If no ordinance exists requiring that only surety company bonds be accepted of officers and employes, would the payment of the premium on such bonds be held to be legal, provided that appropriation had been made therefor by council?"

Before answering your questions specifically as they are above set out I shall consider two propositions:

"1. Whether or not a municipality has the power to pay premiums on the bonds of its officers and employes out of the public funds of the municipality.

"2. Whether or not it is legal for a municipality in fixing the bonds of its officers and employes to provide that the same shall be furnished only by a surety company."

It is a well settled rule in Ohio that municipal corporations cannot exercise any powers which are not expressly granted to them by the Legislature, or such powers as are necessarily incident thereto in order to carry out the powers specifically granted and that whenever a municipal corporation attempts to go beyond the powers so specifically granted or those which are necessarily incident thereto the acts of such corporation in reference thereto are void. It is, therefore, nesessary at the outset to examine the statutes by which the Legislature grants powers to the municipal corporations in order to determine whether or not the power was so granted to such municipal corporation to use the funds belonging to such corporation in the payment of premiums on official bonds of officers and employes. If no such power can be found then it is illegal for the municipal corporation to use the public funds in the payment of such premiums.

Section 4214, General Code, in relation to cities, provides:

"Except as otherwise provided in this title, council, by ordinance or resolution, shall determine the number of officers, clerks and employes in each department of the city government, and shall fix by ordinance or resolution their respective salaries and compensation, and the amount of bond to be given for each officer, clerk or employe in each department of the government, if any be required Such bond shall be made by such officer, clerk or employe, with surety subject to the approval of the mayor."

Section 4219, General Code, in relation to villages, provides in part:

"Council shall fix the compensation and bonds of all officers, clerks and employes in the village government, except as otherwise provided by law. All bonds shall be made with sureties subject to the approval of the mayor."

Section 4592, General Code provides in part:

"The clerk of the police court shall give such bond, with sureties, as may be required by the council and county commissioners."

Section 4155, General Code, in relation to cemeteries provides:

"Council may require the officer authorized to receive and disburse moneys arising from the sale of lots, or otherwise, and to invest, manage and control the property and funds in his hands, to enter into a bond to the corporation with sufficient sureties, conditioned for the faithful performance of his duty, in that behalf, and account for all moneys by him received, and pay over to his successor all moneys or other property unexpended. Such bond shall be filed in the office of the corporation clerk."

While the sections above quoted are not intended to be exhaustive in reference to the bonds to be given by municipal officers and employes, yet it is to be noted that none of them provide that the expenses of procuring the bonds by the officer or employe shall be paid out of the public funds. In fact, I have been unable to find any authority whatever which could be construed as authorizing such a payment, and while it is true that it is a rule of law that the legislative determination as to what is a municipal purpose will not be annulled by the courts in any doubtful case (People vs. Kelly, 76 N. Y. 475), yet in the matter under consideration the legislature has not seen fit to delegate any power of paying premiums on official bonds to municipalities, and, therefore, since a municipality is only authorized to exercise such powers as are delegated, either specifically or by necessary implication, I am of the opinion that the payment of the premium on official bonds out of the public funds of the municipality is clearly unauthorized as much so as the paying of the expenses of celebrations and entertainments are without municipal authority.

(State vs. Cincinnati, 6 N. P. 15; Moore vs. Hoffman, 2 C. S. C. R. 453; See also Dillon on Municipal Corporations, Fifth Edition, Sec. 309.)

The giving of bond by an officer or employe is one of the things necessary to be done in order to qualify him for office, and while it is true that it has been held that the giving of such bond is not a condition precedent to such officer or employe entering upon the duties of his office, and that the same may be given subsequently thereto, nevertheless, it has never been held, as far as I am able to ascertain that the premium for such bonds when so given shall be paid by the municipality to which it is given. Furthermore, the giving of such bond by the officer or employe is one necessary to complete his full qualifications for the position, and although it has been held that he may enter upon the performance of his duties without first giving such bond, nevertheless since it is required that an officer taking an oath of office must give a bond, in contemplation of law the same should be done prior to his assuming office. Furthermore, the giving of surety company bonds is of recent origin. Prior to the creation of surety companies it was customary to give personal bonds, and all expenses incident thereto were borne by the officer in so giving such bond. Again, at the time of the adoption of the Municipal Code in 1902, surety companies were then in existence and were then supplying bonds for premiums to be paid, and had it been the intention of the legislature that the premium for such bond should be paid from public funds it would have so stipulated. Not having done so, and not having subsequently done so, the power does not exist in municipal corporations to pay such premiums.

It has been suggested that since it is a rule of law that a municipality may indemnify its officers for any losses incurred by them in the performance of their duties that, therefore, there is no distinction between so reimbursing an officer for losses incurred in the discharge of his duty, even though he exceeded his lawful right and authority and to expend the funds of a municipality for insurance against such a liability.

Dillon on Municipal Corporations, Fifth Edition, Section 307, states the rule in this regard. The author states (page 363):

> "But such a corporation has power to indemnify its officers against liability which they may incur in the bona fide discharge of their duties, although the result may show that the officers have exceeded their legal authority."

This is an entirely different proposition, as I view it, from paying the premium on a bond which bond is one given to the municipality itself as security for the faithful performance of the duties of officers. It is to indemnify the municipality not for the bona fide discharge of their duties, but for malfeasance or misfeasance on the part of the officers.

I am, therefore, of the opinion that payment of premiums on official bonds is not a municipal purpose as the law now stands and is, therefore, illegal.

Second. As to the right of a municipality to provide by ordinance that its officers and employes shall provide only surety company bonds.

Since municipal corporations have only such powers as are delegated to it by the legislature it is a self-evident proposition that the legislature cannot delegate a power to the municipal corporation which it itself could not exercise.

In the case of Robins vs. State, (71 O. S. 273), it was held that:

> "The act of the general assembly entitled 'An Act to amend section 3641c of the revised statutes of Ohio, relating to the giving of surety bonds' passed April 20, 1904 (97 O. L. 782), is unconstitutional and void, being in violation of article I., sections 1 and 2 of the constitution."

While the suit in that case was in reference to the right to require an administratrix of an estate to give a surety company bond in accordance with the act passed April 20, 1904, yet the court on page 290 states as follows:

> "The provisions of the act are so interdependent and interwoven that the whole act must stand or fall together. It provides that the execution of all bonds for the faithful performance of official or fiduciary duties, or the faithful keeping, applying or accounting for funds or property, or for one or more of such purposes, with certain exceptions, is thereby required to be by a surety company or companies. We are, therefore, not able clearly to perceive that the general assembly intended in any event to require bonds to be executed by a surety company or companies in any one of the classes mentioned to the exclusion of another, This being so if the statute is void as to administrators, or other fiduciaries, it is void as to public officers, and if void as to public officers it is void as to fiduciaries, and the contention here made as to the bond of an administratrix involves as well the question as to the validity of the bonds of public officers."

and on page 294 the court concludes the opinion as follows:

> "The issue raised here is whether the general assembly may make security by security companies exclusive and compulsory. It is not whether corporations may be authorized to secure bonds, nor whether the person giving bonds may at his option give a bond signed either by personal securities or by security companies.
> "Our conclusion is that the statute is unconstitutional and it is accordingly ordered and adjudged that the demurrer to the answer be sustained and a peremptory writ of mandamus allowed."

It would, therefore, appear from the above case that the legislature was without power to declare that only surety company bonds were to be given by public officers, and, consequently, I am of the opinion that since municipalities derive their powers only by delegation of the general assembly an ordinance of a municipality providing that only surety company bonds shall be given by its officers and employes is unconstitutional and therefore of no force and effect.

Coming now to answer specifically the three questions which you have submitted to me:

I am of the opinion, in answer to your first question so submitted that it is not a legal use of the public funds of the city that the same be used in the payment of premiums on official bonds of officers and employes of the city providing that the ordinance of the city require that said officers and employes give a surety company bond.

In answer to your second question I am of the opinion that if the said ordinance so provide, since such ordinances are unconstitutional and therefore void, it is not obligatory on said officers and employes to give surety company bonds, but they may give personal surety on their official bonds providing said surety be acceptable to the approving officer.

In answer to your third question I am of the opinion that even if no ordinance exists requiring that only surety company bonds be accepted from officers and employes the payment of the premium on such bonds would not be held to be legal even though appropriation had been made therefore by council, since such an appropriation would be for a purpose not recognized as a municipal purpose.

The statute authorizing the giving of surety company bonds by municipal officers is found in Sections 9571, 9572 and 9573 of the General Code. Prior to the adoption of the General Code said three sections of the statute were included within Section 3641*c* Revised States.

Section 9572, General Code, provides as follows:

> "A judge, court or officer, whose duty it is to pass upon the account of an assignee, trustee, receiver, guardian, executor, administrator or other fiduciary, required by law to give bond as such, whenever any fiduciary has given bond with a surety company as surety thereon, in the settlement of his account as such fiduciary, shall allow a reasonable sum paid such company authorized under the laws of this state so to do, for becoming his surety, not above half of one per cent. per annum on the amount of the bond; unless it is in double the amount of the liability of the fiduciary, when the sum so allowed must not exceed a fourth of one per cent. per annum. Such company must have complied and continued to comply with the laws of this state relative to it, and with requirements as to justification, prescribed by the head of the department, court, judge, or officer required to approve or accept the bond. The bond or recognizance also must be approved by the head of the department, court, judge or officer required to approve or accept it."

While said section provides for the allowance of a reasonable sum to be paid a surety company for becoming surety when the account of an assignee, trustee, receiver, guardian, executor, administrator or other fiduciary is passed upon, yet under the doctrine of ejusdem generis I am of the opinion that such word "fiduciary" must be read as other like fiduciary. In other words, a fiduciary similar to those specially set forth, which, of course, would not include the bond of an officer for the faithful performance of his duty, and I am therefore, of the opinion that the premium upon the bond of such an officer cannot be paid by the municipality.

Very truly yours,
TIMOTHY S. HOGAN,
Attorney General.

MUNICIPAL CORPORATIONS—CONTRACT OF DIRECTOR OF PUBLIC SERVICE FOR MEN TO TEST WATER MAINS—AUTHORIZATION OF COUNCIL AND ADVERTISEMENT FOR BIDS—EXPERT AND SKILLED SERVICES—PATENTED DEVICES—EMPLOYES OF DEPARTMENT.

Under Section 3809, General Code, a contract with a company for the services of two men at $50.00, per day, in testing the water mains of a municipal waterworks plant, is not valid without the certificate of the auditor to the effect that there are moneys in the treasury, unappropriated for other purposes as provided in Section 3806, General Code.

Under Section 4328, General Code, when the certificate aforesaid has been provided, contracts may be entered into by the director of public service, without bids and without the authorization of council, when the total expenditure thereon does not exceed five hundred dollars. When the expenditure exceeds that amount, a contract must first be authorized by council, and must be let on advertisement and bids.

If in the present case, the services required are skilled or expert services, advertisement and bids may be dispensed with. If the device required for testing is a patented article, the use of the same is not prohibited in accordance with Ohio authorities by the statute providing for advertisement and bids. Competitive bidding should be had, so far as such bids are practicable and available.

Such men do not fill positions provided by council and are, therefore, not employes in the department so as to come within the exception of Section 2328, General Code.

September 27, 1912.

Bureau of Inspection and Supervision of Public Offices, Columbus, Ohio.

GENTLEMEN:—Your favor of September 10, 1912, is received in which you inquire:

> "A superintendent of distribution lines of a municipal water works plant, with the consent of the service director, by letter accepted a proposition from a pitometer company for the services of two men at $50.00 per day, such services to be utilized in testing the water mains of the plant. Such agreement was entered into without a special authorization of council and without advertisement for competitive bids or certification of the city auditor as to the funds being in the treasury to meet the obligation arising from said contract or agreement.
> "May the city auditor legally pay claims presented for compensation under said agreement?
> "If said contract is not a valid and binding obligation of the city, what, if any, procedure on the part of the city may be taken to render said contract a valid and enforcible obligation of the city and on which the city auditor may legally issue his warrant in payment thereof?"

The first question to be considered is the necessity of a certificate of the city auditor that the funds are in the treasury and not otherwise appropriated.

Section 3806, General Code, provides:

> "No contract, agreement or other obligation involving the expenditure of money shall be entered into, nor shall any ordinance, resolution or order for the expenditure of money, be passed by the council or by any board or officer of a municipal corporation, unless the auditor or clerk thereof, first certifies to council or to the proper board, as the case may be, that the money required for such contract, agreement or other obligation, or to pay such appropriation or expenditure, is in the treasury to the credit of the fund from which it is to be drawn, and not appropriated for any other purpose, which certificate shall be filed and immediately recorded. The sum so certified shall not thereafter be considered unappropriated until the corporation is discharged from the contract, agreement or obligation, or so long as the ordinance, resolution or order is in force."

Section 3807, General Code, provides:

> "All contracts, agreements or other obligations, and all ordinances, resolutions and orders entered into or passed, contrary to the provisions of the preceding section shall be void, and no person whatever shall have any claim or demand against the corporation thereunder, nor shall the council, or a board, officer, or commissioner of any municipal corporation, waive or qualify the limits fixed by such ordinance, resolution or order, or fasten upon the corporation any liability whatever for any excess of such limits, or release any part from an exact compliance with his contract under such ordinance, resolution or order.

Section 3809, General Code, makes certain exceptions to the provisions of Section 3806, supra, as to the necessity for a certificate of the auditor, as follows:

> "The council of a city may authorize, and the council of a village may make, a contract with any person, firm or company for lighting the streets, alleys, lands, lanes, squares and public places in the municipal corporation, or for furnishing water to such corporation, or for the collection and disposal of garbage in such corporation, or for the leasing of the electric light plant and equipment, or the water works plant, or both, of any person, firm or company therein situated, for a period not exceeding ten years, and the requirement of a certificate that the necessary money is in the treasury shall not apply to such contract, and such requirement shall not apply to street improvement contracts extending for one year or more, nor to contracts made by the board of health, nor to contracts made by a village for the employment of legal counsel."

The contract in question does not come within either of the foregoing exceptions. Although the contract is in reference to the water works of the city, it is not a contract for furnishing the city with water.

The provisions of Section 3806, General Code, as to the certificate of the auditor, applies to the employment of persons in the department.

In case of Pittinger vs. City of Wellsville, 75 Ohio St., 508, it is held:

> "The policy of our statutes respecting municipal corporations is that no debt shall be incurred for the ordinary expenses of the corporation unless an appropriation to meet it has been made by the city council, and the city auditor or clerk has certified to the city council that the money is in the treasury; and in the absence of such certificate, as required by Section 45 of the Municipal Code, the board of public service is without authority to employ a janitor for the city building, and a person so employed can not recover from the city for his services."

In order to make an obligation binding upon the city, the city auditor must certify that the money necessary to pay such obligation is in the treasury to the credit of the fund and not otherwise appropriated, unless the obligation comes within one of the exceptions found in Section 3809, General Code. The obligation in question does not come within any of said exceptions, and the certificate of the auditor is required to make its payment legal.

Next as to the requirement for bids and the authorization of council.

Section 4328, General Code, provides:

> "The director of public service may make any contract or purchase supplies or material or provide labor for any work under the supervision of that department not involving more than five hundred dollars. When an expenditure within the department, other than the compensation of persons employed therein, exceeds five hundred dollars, such expenditure shall first be authorized and directed by ordinance of council. When so authorized and directed, the director of public service shall make a written contract with the lowest and best bidder after advertisement for not less than two nor more than four consecutive weeks in a newspaper of general circulation within the city."

For expenditures less than five hundred dollars the director of public service may contract without asking for bids and without the authorization of council. The total amount of the expenditure to be made by the contract in question is not stated. If it is less than five hundred dollars it may be entered into by the director of public service, without asking for bids, and without the direction and authorization of council. If the expenditure exceeds five hundred dollars council must first authorize and direct such expenditure.

The compensation of the persons employed in the department, is also excepted from the provision for competitive bidding, and as to the authorization and direction of council.

In order for a person to be employed in a department, a position therein must be regularly created, and the compensation therefor must be fixed by council under the authority given it by Section 4214, General Code, which reads:

> "Except as otherwise provided in this title, council, by ordinance or resolution, shall determine the number of officers, clerks and employes in each department of the city government, and shall fix by ordinance or resolution their respective salaries and compensation, and the amount of bond to be given for each officer, clerk or employe in each department of the government, if any be required. Such bond shall be made by such officer, clerk or employe, with surety subject to the approval of the mayor."

In the service department the director of public service is authorized to establish the positions under Section 4327, General Code, which provides:

> "The director of public service may establish such sub-department as may be necessary and determine the number of superintendents, deputies, inspectors, engineers, harbor masters, clerks, laborers and other persons, necessary for the execution of the work and the performance of the duties of this department."

The persons in question in this case are not employed directly by the city but are furnished by the company under its proposed contract with the city. No positions have been created, and no compensation has been fixed by council. Neither the contract in question nor the compensation to be paid the men, can come within the provision that the expenditure is for the compensation of employes in the department.

No doubt the services for which the contract is sought to make are such as to require skill, knowledge and experience. It is evident also that in addition to the men, the contract calls for the use of a patented device which is to be used by them in making the proposed tests. The contract then is for the use of a patented device and for the services of experienced men to use the device.

This situation raises two questions:

First. Does the requirement for competitive bidding include the employment of persons, who are employed because of their skill, experience and knowledge?

Second. Does the requirement for competitive bidding prevent the city from contracting for the use of a patented device?

The general rule is stated by Dillon in his work on Municipal Corporations at Section 802, page 1199, as follows:

> "It has been held that where competitive proposals work an incongruity and are unavailing as affecting the final result, or where they do not provide any advantage, but the nature of the supply requires that it be determined from inspection and test, which are made from personal examination and trial and depend upon special knowledge and judgment, or where the thing to be obtained is a monopoly, or the requirement is of personal skill or professional service, or it is practically impossible to obtain what is required and observe such forms, a statute requiring competitive bidding does not apply."

He further says at pages 1202 and 1203:

> "A practical monopoly of the subject matter of the contract is also regarded as furnishing a sufficient reason for an exception to a statutory requirement to advertise for bids.
> "Scientific knowledge or professional skill has also been regarded as furnishing a ground for an exception to the statutory rule. Thus it has been said that the services of a lawyer, of a physician, or of an architect or surveyor, are not embraced within a provision requiring the letting of contracts to the lowest bidder."

In case of Horgan and Slattery vs. City of New York, 100 N. Y. Supp. 68, it is held:

> "A contract between the armory board and an architect for the rendition of services by the latter, devising plans for an armory was not required to be in writing."

Houghton, J., says at page 71.

> "It was not necessary to let the contract for the preparation of plans and specifications for the proposed armory by competitive bidding. The services required scientific knowledge and skill, and that character of service need not be obtained by bids."

In O'Brien vs. City of Niagara Falls, 119 N. Y. Supp. 497, it is held:

> "The provision of a city charter that it shall be the duty of the city council, and of all boards, departments, and officers of the city, after public notice, to let to the lowest bidder contracts for any work or material, in excess of fifty dollars, for any such board, department, or officer, unless the board of estimate and apportionment unanimously determine it to be impracticable to procure the work or material by contract so let, does not apply to the professional and technical services of a court stenographer, so as to prevent the city council obtaining such services without competitive bids or the approval of the board of estimate and apportionment, for the purpose of conducting, pursuant to its power under the charter, an occasional investigation of the management of the city offices."

Pound, J., says at page 499:

> "That the services of a stenographer in reporting evidence call for technical and professional knowledge and skill not of a character ordinarily to be obtained to the best advantage by competitive bids, cannot be seriously questioned. It has been so held as to architects and engineers, physicians, lawyers, and artists."

Men of professional and technical knowledge and skill cannot be employed to advantage by competitive bidding. Such men are usually employed by personal selection, where opportunity is given to determine and judge the person's knowledge, skill, experience and ability. The value of the services of a person of professional and technical skill and knowledge cannot be determined at competitive bidding.

It would be impracticable and useless to ask for bids for the services of men to use a patented device, where such device requires skill and technical knowledge to operate the same. Such men may be employed without securing bids therefor.

The courts are not agreed as to the rule in the case of patented materials and devices. The authorities are in conflict and cannot be reconciled.

Dillon on Municipal Corporations discusses this at Section 803, as follows:

> "When no provision of the charter restricts the power of the municipality to contract, e. g., requiring all contracts to be let to the lowest bidder, municipality may contract for the use of a patented or monopolized article in a public improvement. When the statute or charter requires that contract for work or material shall be let by competition and after advertisement, a divergence in the views of the courts has arisen on the question whether a city can contract for the purchase or use of patented articles. In Michigan, New York, and some other states, it has been held that where the statute or charter provides that no contract shall be made by the city except with the lowest bidder after advertisement for proposals, such provision was not intended to prevent the city from taking advantage of patented articles, and does not prohibit it from contracting for the use of an article or material although the article is patented, and the patent is owned and controlled by a single person. But on the other hand the Supreme Courts of Wisconsin, Louisiana, Illinois, and some other states have adopted the contrary view and hold that the statute intends that there shall be competitive bidding in all cases; that when an article is patented there cannot be competitive bidding, and that a specification calling for a patented article violates the implied requirement of a statute prohibiting the letting of contracts otherwise than by competition to the lowest bidder."

McQuillan on Municipal Corporations says at Section 1197:

"The prevailing and better opinion is that a provision of the charter or statutes that municipal contracts be let on competitive bids, does not preclude the proper authorities from specifying a patented article or process, which practically precludes competitive bidding. Therefore, it is generally held that if all the competition is permitted of which the situation allows, a patented article or process may be specified."

In the cases which do not except patented articles from the provisions of the charter or statute which provides for competitive bidding, it is usually held that this provision prevents the city from contracting for the patented material.

The courts of Ohio have permitted municipalities to use patented pavement in the improvement of a street.

In case of Hastings vs. Columbus, 42 Ohio St., 585, the sixth syllabus reads:

"The fact that a street improvement is to be made with a specific patented pavement, is no valid objection to an assessment for such improvement, if, before the contract was let, the city had acquired the right to permit any bidder who might be successful, to use, on reasonable terms, such patent in making the improvement."

In Holbrook vs. Toledo, 18 Cir. Dec., 284, it is held:

"Competitive bidding is not necessarily narrowed, but may be broadened, by admission to the competition of material which monopolized by reason of patents; and in the exercise of a sound discretion it is competent for the proper city authorities, in advertising for bids for a street improvement, to call for material which is covered, or the assembling of which is covered, by patents."

This case was affirmed without report in 73 Ohio St., 400. In this latter case it was contended that the city must first secure the right to use the patented article at a reasonable price before the city can specify such patented pavement for use. This contention was overruled by the court.

In summing up his conclusions, Wildman, J., says on page 296 of 18 Cir. Dec. 284, supra, as follows:

"In the absence of any provision in the Ohio statutes that a city may not let just such a contract as has been let here, in the absence of any provision in this statute such as we find in the statute with reference to the city of Cincinnati, which was cited to us, containing the express terms upon which a patented improvement may be used, we are of one mind that we ought not to read into this law the restrictions and qualifications for which counsel for plaintiff contend. Wherever the exclusive right to a thing is owned or controlled, it has seemed to us that the people of a city ought not to be deprived of an opportunity to avail themselves of a useful and valuable thing simply because it is so controlled. And this kind of monopoly which we guard by the issuing of letters patents is a monopoly which has been encouraged, because it stimulates inventive genius and in the end results in great good to humanity."

In Saunders vs. City of Iowa City, 134 Iowa 132, it is held:

"A contract for a street improvement which is let to the lowest bidder is not in violation of the statute relating to competitive bidding by reason of the fact that the council, in its resolution authorizing the improvements and its advertisement for bids, required the use of a patented pavement."

Deemer, J., says at page 145:

"What is meant by this statute is that there must be competition where competition is possible. This is the construction usually given to statutes which are not prohibitive in character. If the material, or part of it, is monopolized by patents, there cannot, of course, be absolutely free competition, and where that is impossible, it surely was not the intent of the legislature that all improvements should cease, or that antiquated methods only should be adopted. All that the law means, as we view it, is that in all cases where competition may exist, such competition shall be allowed by receiving bids, and in the absence of expressed prohibition there is nothing to warrant the exclusion of patented articles."

The court here states what, in my opinion, is the correct rule. In Ohio the courts have recognized the right of a municipality to use patented pavements. A patented device or article of any kind is usually under the absolute control of the patentee or his assignees. He has a monopoly of this article, which has been given to him by the federal government. So far as the patented article is concerned there can be no competition. There may be, however, as in a paving contract, other things to be furnished in addition to the patented article. So far as the patented article is concerned there can be no competition, and bids upon that alone would be useless and worthless. The other features of the contract, however, may be subject to competition. As to these bids are required. So also there are several patented pavements, these may be placed in competition with each other.

In submitting plans for bids the entire contract, including the patented articles, should be submitted for bids. A patented article is usually for sale to all persons at the same price, although the price is to a certain extent arbitrary to the person who controls the patent.

Section 3811, General Code, provides:

"No municipal corporation shall adopt plans or specifications for a public improvement required by law to be made by contract let after competitive bidding, which requires the exclusive use of a patented article or process, protected by a trade-mark, or an article or process wholly controlled by any person, firm or corporation or combination thereof."

This statute places a limitation upon the use of a patented article by a municipal corporation in making a public improvement. The purpose of the contract in question is not for the purpose of making a public improvement, but is for the purpose of testing the water pipes.

This section does not prohibit the use of a patented article or process, but it prohibits the adoption of plans and specifications for a public improvement which requires the exclusive use of the patented article or process. The purpose of the section is to require that other articles on processes shall be placed in competition with the patented article or process. The plans may call for the use of a patented article, provided other articles are placed in competition with it and may be substituted for the patented article in the letting of the contract.

In your case there are no plans and specification. The city desires the use of a patented article to test its water mains. It does not purchase the patented device but contracts for its use. It is not, in my opinion the purpose of this statute to prevent the city from using a patented device such as is to be contracted for in this case. Section 3811, General Code, does not control this question. It is declaratory, however, of the policy of the law as to the use of a patented article, where competitive bidding is required.

If there is but one device by which the water mains can be successfully tested, competition is unavailable. If, however, there is more than one device by which the test can be made, bids might be asked for. In that case a question would arise as to which was the better device or process. This would have to be taken into consideration in awarding the contract. The lowest bid alone would not of itself be controlling. The utility and other qualities of the device must also be taken into consideration. This would present a situation similar to that which is presented in the employment of persons of professional or technical skill and knowledge. Competitive bidding would not always be available, it would not always bring the desired result. Better results may be secured by negotiation than by competitive bidding. It is impossible to lay down a general rule to govern all cases.

The proper rule seems to be that where a patented article is to be used by a city, competitive bidding should be had so far as such bids are practicable and available. This must be determined by the particular facts of each case.

In the case you submit, two things are contracted for, to-wit: the patented device, and the services of the men to use the device. Competitive bidding as to both of these is to a great extent impracticable. The first is under the absolute control of the company, and second requires technical knowledge and skill. Competitive bidding is not required as to the second, and the facts submitted are not sufficient to determine definitely if it is required as to the first. Where bids are not required because they are impracticable, the requirement that council must first direct and authorize the expenditure is a check upon the power of the director of public safety.

The contract so far has not been legally entered into. The certificate of the auditor, in any event, is required. If the expenditure is in excess of five hundred dollars, council must first authorize such expenditure. More facts are required in order to determine if the same can be let without competitive bidding.

Respectfully,

TIMOTHY S. HOGAN.

Attorney General.

JUSTICES OF THE PEACE NOT ABOLISHED BY CONSTITUTIONAL AMENDMENT.

As evidenced (1) by the express statement of the committee, chosen by the constitutional convention, to report on the question of the abolition of Justices of the Peace, (2), by the action of the convention in providing in every instance of the abolition of offices for the continuation in office of present incumbents, until provision is made for their successors, (3) by the title to Proposal No. 19, which purported to abolish Justices of the Peace only in certain cities, (4) by the provision of proposal No. 41, that all laws then in force and not inconsistent with the constitution, shall continue in force until amended or repealed; it was clearly not the intention of the Constitution to abolish Justices of the Peace.

Proposal No. 41, must, therefore, be construed to leave unrepealed the statutory provisions relating to Justices of the Peace.

November 18, 1912.

Bureau of Inspection and Supervision of Public Offices, Department of Auditor of State, Columbus, Ohio.

GENTLEMEN:—In your letter of September 30th you ask me the following question:

> "Will the office of justice of the peace be abolished after January 1, 1913, by reason of the adoption of the constitutional amendments to Article IV of the Constitution of Ohio?"

In reply to your inquiry I beg to advise that this question has given me more trouble in arriving at a conclusion than any submitted to me since my incumbency in this office. Appreciating the fact that not only has there existed and do there exist opposite opinions among the very best lawyers of the State upon the effect of the constitutional amendments in respect to the continuance or the abolition of the office of the justice of the peace, but also the reasons for the position taken by the advocates of the one side or the other to the controversy are out of harmony, and in fact destructive of each other, I have sought the written opinions of two of the very ablest jurists who were members of the constitutional convention, to-wit: Honorable Hiram D. Peck, author of the Judicial Reform Proposals, and Honorable E. B. King; also, the written opinions of two other distinguished lawyers, Honorable Thomas H. Tracy of Toledo, and Honorable J. M. McGillivray, of Jackson, Special Counsel in this department; as well as the verbal opinion of a great number of other lawyers, and I must say I have never found a question looked at from so many different angles as the present one. The lawyers mentioned are all men of such high standing that I deem it proper to embody their respective views in this communication and to state my own conclusions as I go along.

Judge Hiram D. Peck forwarded to me on August 22, 1912, a copy of a communication which he had just prepared for publication, and the same is herein given, together with copy of his letter of August 22d:

"Cincinnati, August 22, 1912.

"DEAR MR. HOGAN:—Yours of the 21st is just at hand.

"I hand you herewith a copy of an article which I have just prepared for publication on the subject mentioned by you. I have great confidence in the proposition stated, and have nothing more to add, except to say, that if anybody in the Convention had thought that they were abolishing the office of Justice of the Peace, the proposition would not have been passed in its present form.

"Yours truly,

H. D. PECK."

"AS TO JUSTICES OF THE PEACE.

"With reference to the contention that the proposed amendment to the Constitution of the State will result, if adopted, in the abolition of the office of Justice of the Peace, permit me to say that the Constitution now in force has two sections that bear on the subject. Section 1 of Article IV mentions Justices of the Peace as part of the Judiciary of the state, but does not prescribe them, where or how they shall be chosen, or fix their terms of office or jurisdiction. Section 9 of the same Article is the real source of the existence and powers of the Justice of the Peace. It is in these words:

"'Section 9. A competent number of justices of the peace shall be elected by the electors in each township in the several counties. Their term of office shall be three years and their powers and duties shall be regulated by law.'

"It will be observed that this section is mandatory; that it provides for a competent number of justices of the peace in each township, fixes the term of office, and directs the legislature to regulate their powers and duties. If there were no mention of Justices of the Peace in Section 1, Section 9 provides everything that is necessary for the existence of such Justices, so that if the mention in Section 1 omitted, and Section 9 continued in force, the office is duly provided for. Now, that is just what is provided for in the proposed amendments. The words, 'Justices of the Peace' are omitted from Section 1 of Article IV, and Section 9 of the same article is re-enacted as follows:

"'Section 9. A competent number of Justices of the Peace shall be elected by the electors in each township in the several counties, until otherwise provided by law. Their term of office shall be for four years, and their powers and duties shall be regulated by laws; provided that no justice of the peace shall be elected in any township in which a court other than a mayor's court is, or may thereafter be maintained with the jurisdiction of all causes of which justices of the peace have jurisdiction, and no justice of the peace shall have, or exercise jurisdiction, in such township.'

"The foregoing Section 9 is substituted by the proposed amendment for the original Section 9, and with this new section in force there is as clear and express provision for the office of Justice of the Peace as there was by the terms of the original section. The only difference is that the General Assembly may in the future abolish the office in places where it is not needed or desired—a power which it is eminently proper the General Assembly should have. The existence of the office and its functions are as clearly provided for as they were in original Section 9 and in the same mandatory words, and all that part of the new section after the word 'provided' relates only to the City of Cleveland and does not affect the general question of the existence of Justices of the Peace.

"To put it briefly, the provisions of the constitution as to the office of Justices of the Peace will stand as follows, if the proposed amendments are adopted:

"'Section 9. A competent number of Justices of the Peace shall be elected by the electors in each township of the several counties, until otherwise provided by law.'

"If that does not provide for the continuance of the office, it is difficult to see how it could be done. The reference in the schedule of Proposal 21 is to original Section 9 of Article IV, for which the new Section 9 is substituted, and as the repeal of Section 1 and original Section 9 leaves the whole matter to rest on the provisions of the new Section 9, the amendment as to the City of Cleveland is unnecessary or 'of no effect,' as the schedule provides, because the new Section 9 leaves the whole matter within the discretion of the General Assembly, which can provide for Justices in Cleveland or not as may be found proper.

"Since writing the above my attention has been called to the fact that Sections 2 and 3 of Article XVII, which remain in force undisturbed by the new provisions, recognizes the existence of the office of Justices of the Peace and fixes their terms of office in these words:

"'The term of the office of Justice of the Peace shall be such even numbered years, not exceeding four years, as may be prescribed by the General Assembly.'

"'Section 3. Every elective officer holding office when this amendment is adopted shall continue to hold such office for the full term for which he was elected and until his successor shall be elected and qualified as provided by law.'

"If anything more were needed to show the intention of the Constitutional Convention to continue the existence of the office of Justice of the Peace, and to continue in office the men now holding that office, it is difficult for me to suggest what that should be."

Before going further it may be said that I fully concur with Judge Peck in his statement,—if there were no mention of Justices of the Peace in Section 1, Section 9 provides everything that is necessary for the existence of such justices. However, Judge Peck assumes that Section 9 as found in Proposal 21, or in Article IV of the New Constitution, remains in full force and effect. In my judgment, it will not do to assume this. The matter is very disputable, with the weight of reason being the other way. In fact, Judge King (as will hereinafter appear in his brief) differs from his associate in the Constitutional Convention, Judge Peck, on this material point.

Said Proposal 21 appears in the following way:

"NUMBER 21.

"ABOLITION OF JUSTICES OF THE PEACE IN CERTAIN CITIES.

ARTICLE IV.

"Section 9. A competent number of justices of the peace shall be elected by the electors in each township in the several counties, until otherwise provided by law. Their term of office shall be for four years and their powers and duties shall be regulated by law; provided that no justice of the peace shall be elected in any township in which a court, other than a mayor's court, is, or may hereafter be, maintained with the jurisdiction of all causes of which justices of the peace have jurisdiction, and no justice of the peace shall have, or exercise, jurisdiction in such township.

"SCHEDULED.

"If the amendment to Article IV, Sections 1, 2 and 6 be adopted by the electors of this state and become a part of the constitution, then Section 9 of Article IV of the constitution is repealed, and the foregoing amendment, if adopted, shall be of no effect."

At this point it will be noted that the Constitutional Convention made the following explanation of Proposal 21:

"This amendment prohibits the election of justices of the peace in municipalities where municipal courts, other than mayor's courts, have been or may be established. It applies only to certain large cities."

If we assume that by the language,—"Section 9 of Article IV of the Constitution is repealed" that the whole Section 9 is referred to, we still have confronting us the following language of the schedule,—"and the foregoing amendment, if adopted, shall be of no effect."

The argument is made that by the language—"and the foregoing amendment, if adopted, shall be of no effect" is meant in reference only to the proviso in Section 9, to-wit: "provided that no justices of the peace shall be elected in any township in which a court other than, etc.," I cannot concur in this view. That might have been thought by some of the members of the Constitutional Convention, and might have, in a way, been intended, but amendment means amendment and not proviso.

Judge King's position in the matter is stated in his commission of October 8th. Judge King's communication is a very lucid and strong argument in support of the proposition that the office of Justice of the Peace in the State of Ohio has not been abolished. It will be noticed that Judge King does not rely upon the material proposition advanced by Judge Peck, and their different lines of reasoning, and the different premises moved me at times to the conclusion to submit this whole matter to the courts for determination. His letter of October 8th reads as follows:

"Sandusky, Ohio, October 8, 1912.

"DEAR SIR:—In reply to your favor of the 7th inst., I beg leave to enclose a printed copy of the circular prepared in accordance with the resolution of the convention upon the subject of the status of justices of the peace, and I also note in your letter that the question is giving you considerable trouble.

"Proposal No. 19, providing for the amendment to Sections 1, 2 and 6 was adopted by the convention with the understanding that Section 1, left out of the list of constitutionally created courts, justices of the peace. This was definitely done and done for the purpose of leaving the justices of the peace a purely statutory office that might in the future be abolished entirely by the General Assembly either throughout the State or in such municipalities as might desire and acquire by general or special legislation a municipal court that would take the place of the justices of the peace.

"Proposal No. 21 was designed to fit a condition of affairs existing in the city of Cleveland more particularly providing that no justice of the peace should be elected in any township in which another court other than Mayor's court is, or may hereafter be, maintained.

"After the two had been adopted it was noted that if the amendments in Sections 1, 2 and 6 were ratified by the people that there would be a conflict with Section 9 because Section 9 is the section of the old constitution which provided that justices of the peace shall be elected in each township of the several counties of the state and if they were adopted and in effect, the adoption of the amendment to Section 1 would have no effect since Section 1 is a mere recitation that judicial power invested in certain named courts. Section 9 then was the important section in that article which established the justices of the peace court.

"Framers of the Constitution of 1851 did not mention Section 1 of Article IV as establishing a court of the justices of the peace or any other court, for they provided to establish a supreme court by Section 2, and by Section 3 a common pleas court, and by amendment to Section 6 a circuit court, and by section 7 a probate court, and by section 9 justices of the peace. Section 1 then was simply a declarative section of the vesting of judicial power, but Section 1, while it mentions a number of courts, might have omitted all of them or might have named only one, retaining the provision which is in the original section such other courts inferior to the supreme court as may from time to time be established by law.'

"The amendment recites the supreme court, courts of appeal, courts of common pleas, courts of probate and then such other courts inferior to courts of appeal as may from time to time be established by law.

"Now then, the report of the committee enclosed was prepared before the election. We could not know what action the voters might take but they not only adopted proposals 19 and 21, but they also adopted proposal 41, and it is upon that I now rely for the statement that justices of the peace are not abolished by the two amendments to the constitution, notwithstanding that the schedule attached to No. 21, Section 9, providing that if the amendment to article IV, Section 2 and 6 be adopted, then Section 9 of Article IV of the Constitution is repealed, and the foregoing amendment, if adopted, shall be of no effect, for the very evident reason that the provision in the schedule No. 41 'All laws then in force (January 1, 1913) not inconsistent therewith shall continue in force until amended or repealed.'

"Laws are in force establishing the office of justice of peace, providing for his election, the duties of his office and his jurisdiction. These are not inconsistent with the constitution because judicial power is vested in Ohio in the courts named in Article IV and in such other courts inferior to the court of appeals as may from time to time be established by law. Those statutes not being inconsistent with either of the amendments relating to the judicial system are still in force.

"There is no provision in the constitution prohibiting the election of a justice of the peace or preventing the legislature from establishing the office, this having been done even previous to the adoption of the amendment, but not being inconsistent to the amendment, remains in force, and is as truly a law establishing the office of justice of the peace, and as truly within the terms of the present amended constitution as if it were a law enacted by the General Assembly subsequent to the adoption of the amendments to the constitution.

"If I doubted my own judgment upon this construction, I am sustained by the opinion of my colleagues in the convention whose attention was called to this question and who were men of legal experience as well as every other lawyer with whom I have discussed the question, excepting Mr. Tracy, of Toledo, who took an active interest in the defeat of most of the amendments to the constitution and who sought evidently to bring discredit upon the judicial amendment known as the 'Peck Proposal,' Sections 1, 2 and 6, by asserting that the office of Justice of the Peace was abolished in Ohio.

"My mind is so constituted that it can see but one side of this proposition. The constitution does not abolish the office; it simply says nothing about it. Its establishment is not contrary to any provision of the constitution, but, on the contrary, power is expressly conferred upon the General Assembly to establish it or any other judicial office and there, the situation and position of justice of the peace will remain after January 1, as they have been before, and when the terms of the present incumbents expire, their successors will be elected as before and all things shall go forward as before until such time as the General Assembly shall see fit to amend the statutes in relation to them.

"It is true that Section 9 is of no effect. Old Section 9 is repealed and the new one having been adopted by its own terms becomes of no effect, therefore the constitution does not provide as the amendment to Section 9 is intended to provide, for the abolishment of the office in townships in which a court is maintained having the same jurisdiction as justices of the peace. The subject proposed to be accomplished by the amendment to Section 9 is now turned over to the General Assembly."

After the Constitutional Convention had agreed upon the proposal and during the campaign in reference to the constitutional amendments there was much discussion throughout the state as to whether or not the office of justice of the peace would be abolished provided Proposal 21 was adopted. The Association of Justices held a meeting to consider the matter, and interest in the question became so intense that the Constitutional Convention assembled on the 26th of August, 1912, appointed a committee consisting of Judge Hiram D. Peck, Judge E. B. King and Judge D. J. Nye to prepare and have published a statement as to whether or not the adoption of Proposal 19 on the Constitutional amendment ballot would abolish the office of justice of the peace, and this committee reported as follows:

"JUSTICES OF THE PEACE.

"THEY ARE NOT ABOLISHED BY THE PROPOSED AMENDMENTS TO THE CONSTITUTION.

"Report of Special Committee Appointed by the Convention:

"The undersigned, appointed by the Fourth Constitutional Convention at its session in Columbus August 26, 1912, as a committee to prepare and have published a statement as to whether or not the adoption of No. 19, on the constitutional amendments ballot, relating to change in the judicial system, will abolish the office of justice of the peace, beg leave to submit the following report:

"This office, by the existing constitution, is declared to be one of the courts in which judicial power is vested. But this section of Article IV, now in force, as well as amended Section 1, vests the judicial power in certain named courts and such other inferior courts as may from time to time be established by law. While the office of justice of the peace is recognized by the constitution as a judicial one, it is also established by law, for there exists on the statute books a provision for election of justices of the peace, their number in each township, the terms of their office, their jurisdiction and the manner of their compensation.

"Provision is made in the General Code for justices of the peace, as well as their election and duties, in Sections 1712-1806, and for their jurisdiction and powers in Sections 10223-10491, both inclusive; and none of these statutes will be repealed by the adoption of any of the constitutional amendments proposed.

"Section 15 of Article IV of the Constitution, both in the present constitution and in the amendment proposed, provides that 'any existing court heretofore created by law shall continue in existence until otherwise provided.' Section 1 of the original schedule and the schedule adopted by the convention known as amendment No. 41 on the ballot, provides that all laws in force, not inconsistent with these amendments 'shall continue in force until amended or repealed.' These two propositions of the constitution protect in office every official until the end of his term, and they protect forever, until repealed by the General Assembly, the statutes creating and regulating the jurisdiction of the office of justice of the peace, because it is not inconsistent with the constitutional provisions contained in Section 1 of Article IV. Section 1 is only declarative of the courts in which judicial power is vested. It omits to name several important courts now existing in Ohio, as for instance, the superior court of Cincinnati, the court of insolvency of Cuyahoga county, the municipal court of the city of Cleveland, and there may be others, all of which are created by statute and all of which will remain in existence until the statutes creating them are repealed or changed. This is so with justices of the peace. The justices now in office will continue until their terms expire, and they will continue to be elected until the General Assembly changes the law relating to them. It may be just as well said that the superior court of Cincinnati, the court of insolvency of Cuyahoga County, and the municipal court of Cleveland are abolished by these amendments; because they are not named in Section 1 as constitutional courts; yet no one would claim that these courts are interfered with.

"This, we believe to be the legal construction and effect of the proposed amendments that relate to the office of justice of the peace.

"HIRAM D. PECK,
"E. B. KING,
"D. J. NYE."

The report made by the committee was published throughout the state.

The position of Mr. Tracy is contained in his letter of August 27, 1912, to Judge King which is as follows:

"August 27, 1912.

"HONORABLE E. B. KING, Sandusky, Ohio.

"MY DEAR JUDGE:—I note from the morning paper that you and others have been appointed a committee by the late constitutional convention to inform the justices of the peace of the state that the adoption of Proposal No. 19 would not abolish the office of justice of the peace in the state of Ohio.

"I will esteem it a favor if you will promptly send me a copy of anything which you may sign and put out on this subject.

"In the meantime, I call your attention to the schedule, with which, of course, you are entirely familiar, which follows Section 9 of Article IV, and which reads as follows:

"'If the amendment to Article IV, Sections 1, 2 and 6, be adopted by the electors of this state and becomes a part of the constitution, then Section 9 of Article IV of the constitution is repealed, and the foregoing amendment, if adopted, shall be of no effect.'

"Amended Section 1 of Article IV, which is included in proposal No. 19, omits justices of the peace from its provisions, and the above quoted schedule expressly provides that if Proposal No. 19 is adopted, the Section 9 of the present constitution shall be repealed, and amended Section 9 shall be of no effect.

"Under these conditions, it has seemed to me that the office of justice of the peace, so far as the constitution is concerned, will be abolished if Proposal No. 19 is adopted. I do not want to mislead myself or any of the voters of the state, and I am sure you do not."

Also, in his letter of August 29th to Honorable E. B. King, which is in part as follows:

"Notwithstanding your statement that the position taken by myself and, I believe, a majority of the lawyers of the state who have considered the matter, 'is not supported by any kind of reason and certainly contrary to the truth," I am still unconvinced of the correctness of your position after reading your letter.

"You absolutely ignore the effect of the schedule following Section 9. If it had not been the intention to abolish the office of justice of the peace, why was the schedule following proposed Section 9 inserted? I have been told that it was the sentiment of a majority of the delegates to the constitutional convention that the office of justice of the peace should be abolished. You know whether this is correct or not. I am not in a position to know.

"The people undoubtedly have the right to vote, and should be given the opportunity to vote, if they desire, upon the question as to whether the office of justice of the peace should be abolished, but the members of the convention should inform them, and not mislead them, when the question is before them, as I believe it squarely is at this time.

"I wrote to Judge Peck substantially the same letter which I wrote you, and have received a reply, in which he gives entirely different reasons as to why the office is not abolished, and which reasons do not support your argument, but are, it seems to me, inconsistent with your argument.

"You correctly anticipate what any lawyer would say to the sophistry contained in your suggestion, that the schedule, being Proposal No. 41, would retain in force all laws not inconsistent with the amendments, and properly answer, by saying that there is no assurance that proposal No. 41 will be adopted. You, however, state what is not true when you say 'the schedule of the original constitution provides that all laws in force, continue in force until amended or repealed.' Section 1 of the schedule to the original constitution provides, 'All laws of this state in force on the 1st day of September, 1851, not inconsistent with this constitution, shall continue in force, until amended or repealed,' whereas the facts are, that none of the sections of the statute which you cite, from 1712 to 1806, inclusive, and from 10233 to 10449, inclusive, and which you claim create and provide for the continuance of justices of the peace, were 'in force on the 1st day of September, 1851.'"

Mr. McGillivray responds to Judge King's brief with a brief of which the following is a copy:

"Section 1 of Article III of the Constitution of 1802 and of Article IV of the Constitution of 1851 both include Justices of the Peace among the constitutional offices of our judicial system. Proposal 19 leaves them out.

"Section 11 of Article III of the Constitution of 1802 and Section 9 of Article IV of that of 1851 provided for the election of Justices in each township of the several counties of the state. Section 9 is repealed by the schedule attached to proposal 21.

"This presents the whole question, except as to the effect of proposal 41.

"That Justices of the Peace were intentionally omitted from the list of constitutionally created courts is conceded. This is clearly stated by Judge King, with whom I agree that Section 1 of Article IV did not create the office of Justice of the Peace, but it was established by Section 9 of that Article. Such being the case, I take it that Judge King and I will also agree that with Section 9 repealed, Justices of the Peace are not established as a part of our judicial system by the Constitution, and are relegated to the class of 'such other courts inferior to the Supreme Court as may from time to time be established by law,' to use the language found in the Constitution of 1851, or 'inferior to the Courts of Appeals,' to adopt the language of proposal 19.

"Assuming that all agree as to this, about which there is no room for cavil, attention is called to proposal 41, which reads:

"'The several amendments passed and submitted by this convention when adopted at the election shall take effect on the first day of January, 1913, except as otherwise specifically provided in the schedule attached to any of said amendments. All laws then in force not inconsistent therewith, shall continue in force until amended or repealed,' etc.

"Two provisions are here to be noticed: 1. Schedules attached to amendments are given controlling effect, and, 2, 'All laws not inconsistent with the amendments shall remain in force until amended or repealed.'

"The first proposition fixes the status of the schedule attached to Proposal 21, and leaves it in control. The effect of the second is for consideration. I am ready to concede that if, prior to September 3, 1912, Justices of the Peace had been a statutory office created by the Legislature, it would survive under favor of this provision—but it is not.

Wherein Judge King and I differ is that I do not concur in his statement 'Laws are in force establishing the office of Justices of the Peace.' If such were the case, no question could be raised as to abolishing that office, but I cannot find such law, although I find laws fixing their jurisdiction, and to adopt the language of the Constitution of 1851, 'regulating their powers and duties.'

"This, then, presents the matter in a nut shell. That those offices named in Section 1 of Article IV of the Constitution of 1851, and provided for in Sections 2, 3, 6, 7, 8 and 9 of said Article were treated as constitutionally created offices must be conceded, and the Legislature in no instance did more than to provide for jurisdiction, election, compensation and the like.

"When it came to other offices, such as the Superior, Municipal, Insolvency Courts and the like, the Legislature has in haec verba 'established' courts. For instance, Section 1605, General Code, reads:

"'There shall be established in Hamilton County a court of record that shall be styled "The Court of Insolvency," etc.'

"Section 1559 of the General Code, specifically recognizes the former establishment of the Superior Court of Cincinnati, while Section 1 of the Act of May 10, 1910, 101 O. L., 364, reads:

"'Section 1. That there shall be and is hereby established in and for the city of Cleveland a Municipal court which shall be a court of record and shall be styled "The Municipal Court of Cleveland," etc.'

"These courts, the Superior Court of Cincinnati, The Court of Insolvency, and the Municipal Court of Cleveland, were all established under authority of Section 1 of Article IV of the Constitution of 1851, and as their creation and establishment are not inconsistent with any of the amendments, but would be a lawful exercise of the power to create other courts 'inferior to the Courts of Appeals,' the laws affecting them continue in force under the provisions of Proposal 41.

"But finding no such enactment relating to Justices of the Peace, and feeling the same would be unnecessary under Section 9 of Article IV of the Constitution of 1851, and the construction given it and the related sections of that article by the Legislature for sixty years, I am forced to the conclusion that Proposal 41 only goes far enough to authorize present justices of the peace to exercise their powers, as provided by laws in force on January 1, 1913, until the expiration of their respective terms of office, and at that time, unless provision is made establishing justices courts, there will be no authority to elect, not because there is no statutory direction to do so, but because there is no such office to fill, either statutory or constitutional.

"This results in the necessity of legislation creating the office of Justice of the Peace, and regulating powers and duties.

"Of an act of the Legislature can be found creating or establishing the office of Justice of the Peace, and not merely fixing the numbers thereof and prescribing their powers and duties, I might conclude otherwise, although confronted with the fact of no necessity for the same.

"To say that the schedule to Proposal 21 is an absurdity is to praise it. It is worse. It is a provision whereby the votes on Proposal 21 can only be effective in the event of Proposal 19 losing out."

To my mind a decision on this question turns upon the issue squarely drawn between Judge King and Mr. McGillivray upon the effect of Proposal 41. It will be noticed that Mr. McGillivray says "I am ready to concede that if, prior to September 3, 1912, justices of the peace had been a statutory office created by the Legislature, it would survive under favor of this provision (Proposal 41)—but it is not. Wherein Judge King and I differ is that I do not concur in his statement 'Laws are in force establishing the office of Justice of the Peace.' If such were the case, no question could be raised as to abolishing that office, but I cannot find such law, although I find laws fixing their jurisdiction, and to adopt the language of the Constitution of 1851, 'regulating their powers and duties.'"

In a strictly logical sense counsel is perhaps correct in this statement, but in my view a liberal construction must be given the amendments to our constitution in relation to the old constitution and the laws passed pursuant thereto.

At this point it can be said at the expense of repetition that Section 9 of Article IV expressly authorizes their creation, and we have a number of sections of the General Code in reference to the justices of the peace, for instance, Section 1712 relating to the jurisdiction of the common pleas court to fix the number of new townships; Section 1713, the number of justices in a township may be increased or diminished; 1714, filling vacancies; 1715, election and term; 1716, fixing jurisdiction, and other sections, to-wit: 1717, 1718, 1719, 1720, 1721, et seq. in relation to the election and the duties of the justices of the peace. I have no doubt that if the constitution were silent in respect to justices of the peace, and there were provisions authorizing the Legislature to create inferior courts, and the Legislature passed only such sections of the General Code as we have in reference to justices of the peace, no one would question the creation or the existence of the office. When the Legislature provides for the election or appointment of an officer and prescribes his duties, fixes the terms of office and provides for other things as contained in the General Code in reference to justices of the peace, it creates the office.

Quoting from Proposal 41:

> "All laws then in force, not inconsistent therewith, shall continue in force until amended or repealed."

I think that the amendment to the constitution contemplates and embraces within that expression the laws we have in reference to justices of the peace because they are not inconsistent with the constitution. If they be inconsistent with the constitution, unquestionably the Legislature would be without power hereafter under the head of "inferior courts" to create the office of justices of the peace.

Moreover, at best, and without looking at extraneous aids, it is a disputable question whether by the language used in the amendment to the constitution it can be said the office of justices of the peace has been abolished. In this contention considerable weight is to be given to extraneous related matters. It will be kept in mind that in the amendment relating to the judicial reform, provision is made for taking over by the Supreme Court of the work of the old, and similar provision is made for the taking over of the work of the circuit court by the newly created court of appeals. The new constitution in the latter respect is as follows:

> "The courts of appeal shall continue the work of the respective circuit courts and all pending cases and proceedings in the circuit courts shall proceed to judgment and be determined by the respective courts of appeal, and the supreme court, as now provided by law, and cases brought into said court of appeals after the taking effect hereof shall be subject to the provisions hereof, and the circuit courts shall be merged into, and their work continued by, the courts of appeals."

The jurisdiction of the common pleas courts remains the same under the new constitution as the old. It therefore appears that the constitutional convention provided for the care of the cases pending in the common pleas, circuit and supreme courts expressly—otherwise litigants might be deprived of their rights. Now, there is no provision whatever with reference to cases pending in the justices courts, and I do not believe that with this condition of affairs the people of the state on the 3d of September, 1912, believed that they were abolishing the justices of the peace courts. Certainly the constitutional convention did not so think, otherwise provision would have been made for the cases pending in the justices courts. Moreover, the committee appointed by the constitutional convention on August 26, 1912, reported that "the justices now in office will continue until their terms expire and they will continue to be elected until the General Assembly changes the law relating to them. This committee, comprising judges and men of high integrity, had the means of knowing the true intent of the delegates to the convention, and while we must judge of the intent of the constitutional convention by its language, yet we have a right to give great weight to its own interpretation of its own acts. This is doubly important because the interpretation was given prior to the election.

Attention might further be called to the form of the ballot used at the special election. As to Proposal 21, it was as follows:

> "Article IV, Section 9, Abolition of Justices of the Peace in certain cities."

Counsel do not concur with me in giving much weight to the form of the ballot. While it may not be necessary for the form of the ballot to indicate definitely the true character of the proposal, yet, in my judgment, the form of the ballot must not be misleading or calculated to work a fraud on the electorate. To hold that a ballot entitled "Abolition of Justices in certain cities" carries with it a proposal to abolish justices of the peace entirely is to make out of the law an instrument of fraud. I apprehend that a court would go very slow in ousting a justice of the peace from office in a back township through the instrumentality of a vote under the head of "justices in certain cities." Whether the courts would look to the form of the ballot in determining the question, I do not know, but the present controversy discloses the wisdom and necessity of the constitutional convention exercising the greatest care to the end that the form of the ballot may not be misleading to the voter. In any event, the form of the ballot may be assumed as indicative of the real intention of the constitutional convention.

Considering the great number of justices in the state, the importance of their work for the welfare of the state, the vast interests involved, the necessity for their existence especially outside of municipalities as is clear from the fact that the constitutional convention desired to leave the matter to the Legislature, I cannot bring myself to believe that the office has been in fact abolished.

After the constitutional convention finished its regular work it adjourned to re-convene on August 26th, 1912, at which latter date the convention had full knowledge of the doubt that had arisen with reference to the abolition of the office of the justices of the peace, and in reliance upon the accuracy of the report of the committee aforesaid, the convention adjourned without having changed the proposals.

For the foregoing reasons I am of the opinion that the office of justice of the peace has not been abolished by the amendments adopted on September 3, 1912. In any event this department will leave it to the courts to say to the contrary.

Very respectfully submitted,

TIMOTHY S. HOGAN,
Attorney General.

TRAVELING EXPENSES OF MUNICIPAL OFFICIALS IN ATTENDING CONVENTIONS—DIRECTOR OF PUBLIC SAFETY, CHIEF OF FIRE DEPARTMENT, HEALTH OFFICER, PHYSICIAN OF HEALTH DEPARTMENT.

(1). The director of public safety, the chief of the fire department, the general superintendent of the water works department, the health offier and the physician of the health department, may not be allowed their expenses incurred in attending conventions for the mere purposes of general education.

(2). The director of public safety and the chief of the fire department may be reimbursed for expenses incurred in attending fire chiefs' conventions, providing such a visit is the most economical and efficient method of promoting a purchase, held in immediate contemplation by the department of public safety.

(4). The superintendent of the water works department, under like conditions, with reference to purchases of the water works department, may be reimbursed for expenses to such conventions, incurred in a visit authorized by the director of public service.

October 23, 1912.

Bureau of Inspection and Supervision of Public Offices, Department of Auditor of State, Columbus, Ohio.

GENTLEMEN:—Under favor of October 5, you request my opinion as follows:

> "Is it legal for the director of safety, chief of the fire department and the general superintendent of the water works department to attend the national fire chiefs' convention recently held at Denver, Col., at the expense of the city? The above officials attended said convention for the purpose of obtaining knowledge regarding machinery and mechanical devices necessary for the betterment of the fire system of city?
> "Is it legal for the health officer and a physician of the health department to attend the meeting of the American Public Health Association and the International Congress on Hygiene and Demography, held in Washington, D. C., from Sept. 18 to 28, 1912, at the expense of the city?"

The following is stated in Abbott's Municipal Corporations, Section 697:

> "A public official in performing the duties of his office may incur miscellaneous expenses which are a proper charge upon public funds and this is especially true where the expense was one incurred in the performance of a duty in which the public corporation has a direct and beneficial interest or one which rests upon it as a duty or as an agency of the sovereign. For such disbursements a public officer is clearly entitled as a matter of right to a reimbursement. If the expenses, however, are incurred in connection with services not authorized by law or in the performance of duties in excess of corporate powers, no right of indemnity or reimbursement exists.
> "Where the expense is incurred in a service which properly belongs to the public corporation as a governmental agent or as the sovereign itself, or is one in which it is directly and beneficially interested, the authorities are all agreed that while a public official may not as a matter of right be entitled to reimbursement for the necessary ex> penditures, yet, the corporation has the unquestioned power to provide for a reimbursement. Where, however, the disbursement was made in the rendition of a service in which the officer or individual alone is directly and beneficially interested and which cannot be considered as a duty resting upon the corporation to perform, the right of power of reimbursement does not exist for this would be equivalent to the appropriation or use of public moneys for private purposes."

In view of the well established principle that municipalities and statutory officers possess only such powers as are conferred by statute, and those which are necessary to carrying into effect the powers so conferred, I am unable to find any provisions of the General Code from which, by any implication, the expenses incurred, by the officers named, of attending national conventions for the purpose of merely general instructions or information with reference to the duties of their offices, could be made a charge against the city. The acquirement of a knowledge of the general affairs and detailed workings of his office is a responsibility resting upon the officer himself, not upon the city; and the possession of requisite skill and information is to be presumed.

The power to incur expense for the general education and enlightenment of its officers is not expense conferred upon municipalities by any statute nor is such a power anywhere granted to any of the officers named in your inquiry, and such a purpose is too remote as regards the powers conferred for the maintenance and operating of fire and health departments, to be regarded as a power actually necessary for the carrying into effect of those functions.

I take it that this rule disposes of your question with reference to the visits of the health officer and the physician of the health department.

The statement of your question with reference to the other officials, however, calls for a distinction. For as regards the necessary visits to other localities for the immediate purpose of acquiring information with reference to a definite presently contemplated undertaking, such as the purchase of machinery, the decisions permit of a modified application of the above rules, holding that such visits may be regarded as of sufficient necessity to the performance of a fixed duty to justify an allowance of the cost so incurred as an expense incurred for the benefit of the municipality in the performance of a duty enjoined by law.

Thus, in Mogel vs. Berks County, 154 Penna. State, 14, the state prison inspectors were contemplating the installation of a new system of identification, and a certain number of them made the trip outside of the county to determine the actual working of the system. There was no provision of law for the payment of such expenses, and yet the court held,

> "The authority to examine and investigate, so far as may be necessary to form an intelligent judgment upon the utility and value of the machine they were authorized to buy and the system they were authorized to adopt, is incidental to the power conferred."

Sections 4328 and 4371 provide as follows:

> "Section 4328. The director of public service may make any contract or purchase supplies or material or provide labor for any work under the supervision of that department not involving more than five hundred dollars. When an expenditure within the department, other than the compensation of persons employed therein, exceeds five hundred dollars, such expenditure shall first be authorized and directed by ordinance of council. When so authorized and directed, the director of public service shall make a written contract with the lowest and best bidder after advertisement for not less than two nor more than four consecutive weeks in a newspaper of general circulation within the city."

"Section 4371. The director of public safety may make all contracts and expenditures of money for acquiring lands for the erection or repairing of station houses, police stations, fire department buildingings, fire cisterns and plugs, that may be required and for the purchase of engines, apparatus, and all other supplies necessary for the police and fire departments, and for other undertakings and departments under his supervision, but no obligation involving an expenditure of more than five hundred dollars shall be created unless first authorized and directed by ordinance of council. In making, altering, or modifying such contracts, the director of public safety shall be governed by the provisions of the preceding chapter relating to public contracts, except that all bids shall be filed with and opened by him. He shall make no sale or disposition of any property belonging to the city without first being authorized by resolution or ordinance of council."

Under Section 4371, General Code, the director of public safety, who, by virtue of Sections 4246, 4368, 4375 and 4377, is made the executive head of the fire department and required to administer and manage its affairs, may make expenditures for the purchase of engines and apparatus and all other supplies necessary for the police and fire departments.

In view of the above stated rule, I am of the opinion that when machinery and mechanical devices are necessary for the betterment of the fire department system of the city and when the purchase of the same has been decided upon, and when the purchase cannot be so economically and so judiciously made without a visit such as that to the fire chiefs' convention, held at Denver, Colorado, the director of public safety may, under Section 4371, General Code, make the expenditure necessary for the transportation of himself and the fire chief to said convention, when the latter's co-operation is a necessary adjunct, for the purpose of furthering the prudence of the purchase.

I am furthermore of the opinion that if purchases are likewise contemplated by the waterworks department, whose economy and effectiveness would be promoted by a visit of the latter's superintendent to said convention, the director of public service, who, under Section 4326, is given the management of municipal water undertakings, may authorize such visits and may pay the expenses of the same, under Section 4328, General Code, providing for the purchase of supplies or materials for work under the supervision of his department, on the ground that the officers may be allowed the expenses necessarily incurred in the performance of a duty enjoined by law.

In direct answer to your inquiries, therefore,

1. The director of public safety, the chief of the fire department, the general superintendent of the water works department, the health officer and the physician of the health department, may not be allowed their expenses incurred in attending conventions for the mere purpose of general education.

2. The director of public safety and chief of the fire department may be reimbursed for expenses incurred in attending fire chiefs' conventions, providing such a visit is the most economical and efficient method of promoting a purchase, held in immediate contemplation by the department of public safety.

3. The superintendent of water works, under like conditions, with reference to purchases of the water works department may be reimbursed for expenses to such conventions, incurred in a visit authorized by the director of public service.

Very truly yours,

TIMOTHY S. HOGAN,
Attorney General.

COMPENSATION AND EXPENSE FORMERLY PROVIDED FOR INFIRMARY DIRECTORS CANNOT BE MADE TO COUNTY COMMISSIONERS WHEN FORMER ARE ABOLISHED.

Whilst the Act of 102, O. L. 433, abolishes the infirmary directors and substantially places all their duties and powers upon the county commissioners, such act does not place the county commissioners in exact substitution for the infirmary directors.

Section 3002, General Code, therefore providing compensation for the infirmary directors, cannot be considered to apply to the county commissioners.

November 20, 1912.

Bureau of Inspection and Supervision of Public Offices, Department of Auditor of State, Columbus, Ohio.

GENTLEMEN:—Under favor of November 12 you requested my opinion as follows:

> "The last general assembly, in abolishing the office of infirmary director, did not repeal Section 3002, G. C. Is the same now of any general effect and can it in any way be applied to the county commissioners after January 1, 1913?"

Section 3002, General Code, is as follows:

> "In addition to his actual traveling expenses, each infirmary director shall be allowed two dollars and fifty cents for each day employed in his official duties. He shall present an itemized account of such services and expenses to the board of directors at a regular meeting, which account after being approved by such board, shall be submitted to the board of county commissioners at a regular session and upon approval thereof, the county commissioners shall allow the account to be paid from the county fund on the warrant of the county auditor."

The title to the House Bill No. 204, appearing on page 433, 102 O. L., is as follows:

> "To abolish the county board of infirmary directors, to define the duties of the board of county commissioners respecting county infirmaries and to repeal Sections 2517 to 2521 inclusive of the General Code, and to amend (certain sections of the General Code enumerated)."

The intent of House Bill No. 204, as evidenced by its general provisions, and as expressly provided in this title, is to abolish the infirmary directors. It is true that their powers and duties are substantially all transferred to the county commissioners. The result is brought about, however, by separate provisions with reference to each range of duty and to each class of powers. There is no express provision, substituting in general terms, the county commissioners for the infirmary directors, and by no mode of reasoning can it be implied that the infirmary directors are substituted generally, as to duties, obligations, powers and recompense, by the county commissioners.

In short, the county commissioners are neither expressly nor impliedly placed in a position of exact substitution. Each power and each duty, added by the change, to those formerly possessed by the county commissioners, is provided for by express separate provision.

Section 3002, therefore, providing for compensation of infirmary directors, cannot be said to apply to the county commissioners, and since infirmary directors have been abolished, said section is of no effect whatever.

Very truly yours,

TIMOTHY S. HOGAN,
Attorney General.

COMPENSATION—PER DIEM CANNOT BE CHANGED ON TWO OFFICIAL POSITIONS — COUNTY SURVEYOR — WORK REQUIRING ONLY FRACTION OF A DAY ENTITLES TO FULL PER DIEM.

It is an established rule of law that when compensation is fixed at a per diem allowance, the officer cannot have such an allowance on the same days for services in each of two or more offices held by him.

When, therefore, a county surveyor has drawn his per diem from the county and has received a per diem from any other public source for the same day or part thereof, he should be required to elect which of the per diems he will retain and a finding should be made against him for the other. He may, however, receive a compensation for work done for a private individual.

The law disregards fractions of a day and when a county surveyor in charge of ditch work is called to inspect and approve the work of a contractor and such work requires a substantial effort, even though the service requires only a fractional part of a day, the surveyor can legally receive compensation for the full day at the rate fixed by statute.

Bureau of Inspection and Supervision of Public Offices, Department of Auditor of State, Columbus, Ohio.

GENTLEMEN:—Under date of September 16 you inquire of me as follows:

> "1. If a county surveyor is found to have charged the county for a day's work and to have charged a private individual or a municipal corporation for all or part of the same day, what should be the finding of this department?"

Section 2822 of the General Code provides that a county surveyor "when employed by the day" shall receive five dollars for each day and his necessary actual expenses.

In the case of Commissioners vs. Bromley, 108 Ind. 158, it is held:

> "Where a township trustee during his term intermingled his services for the township and as overseer of the poor, and receives full compensation from the township fund for every day when he performed an official duty, he cannot recover compensation from the county for services as overseer, on the ground that he is liable to reimburse the township fund for the amount over-charged for other official services."

On page 162 of the opinion the court says:

> "We further interpret the section under consideration to mean that, as applicable to both classes of service, an allowance of only two dollars can be made for an actual day's service, without reference to the manner in which the day may have been divided between the two classes of service, and that, consequently, a township trustee is not entitled to receive, out of any fund, more than two dollars for official services performed during any one day. * * * Having intermingled his services as overseer of the poor with his other official duties, and having received full compensation from the township fund for every day during which he performed any official duty, he is now precluded from recovering any further compensation from the county, or from any other fund."

"Where the compensation is a per diem allowance, the officer cannot have an allowance for the same day's service, in each of two or more offices held by him."

See Throop on Public Officers, Section 496; Mechem on Public Officers, Section 859.

Under the foregoing authorities I am of the opinion that when a county surveyor has charged the county for particular day's work he cannot receive compensation from any other public source for services performed on that day, or any part thereof. That is to say, he cannot receive a per diem from the county and a per diem from a city, village, or township for the same day. In case a county surveyor has drawn his per diem from the county, and has received a per diem from any other public source, for the same day or any part thereof, he should be required to elect which of the per diems he will retain; and a finding should be made against him for the other.

I know of no reason why a county surveyor should not be paid for work done for a private individual on the same day that he performs services and receives a per diem therefor from the county, provided he has done his full duty toward the county on that day.

You next inquire:

"If a county surveyor in charge of ditch work is called to inspect and approve the work of a contractor, and the service requires only a fractional part of a day, can the surveyor legally receive compensation for a full day at the rate fixed by statute?"

It is a well established principle that the law does not regard fractions of a day, and that if any substantial service is performed by a public officer on any day he is entitled to his per diem for the whole day. Upon this subject it was held, in the case of Smith vs. Commissioners of Jefferson County, 10 Colo. 17, that:

"The law does not recognize fractions of days. And when it provides a per diem compensation for the time necessarily devoted to duties of an office, the officer is entitled to his daily compensation for each day on which it becomes necessary for him to perform any substantial official service, if he does perform the same, regardless of the time occupied in its performance."

I am of the opinion, therefore, in view of the principle above referred to, and of the decision in the Colorado case, that when a county surveyor, in charge of ditch work, is called in to inspect and approve the work of a contractor, which service requires only a part of a day, the surveyor is nevertheless entitled to the full per diem provided by Section 2822, supra.

Very truly yours,

TIMOTHY S. HOGAN,
Attorney General.

STATE HIGHWAY COMMISSIONER—APPORTIONMENT OF FUND OBTAINED FROM REGISTRATION OF AUTOMOBILES BY SECRETARY OF STATE—INTER-COUNTY AND OTHER ROADS.

The moneys obtained by the Secretary of State from the registration of automobiles shall first be directed to carrying out the provisions of the chapter on automobiles, and any surplus thereafter shall be paid in to the state treasury to the credit of a fund which shall be expended as the state highway fund is apportioned.

This fund is divided among the counties and subject first to the application of the county commissioners, then to the application of the township trustees, and if neither of these applications are made, shall be applied to the construction, improvement, maintenance or repair of inter-county roads by the State Highway Commission.

When the inter-county highways have been improved to the standard fixed by the Highway Commissioner, the balance may be employed in the construction, improvement, maintenance or repair of any road within the county.

April 30, 1912.

HON. D. S. CREAMER, Treasurer of State, Columbus, Ohio.

DEAR SIR:—I beg to acknowledge receipt of your letter of March 4th, enclosing a letter addressed to you by C. H. Barth, attorney at law, of Cincinnati, which is as follows:

> "The Pleasant Ridge Welfare Association of Pleasant Ridge, Ohio, has requested me as chairman of the law committee, to ascertain what can be done toward obtaining from the State Treasury from the fund created by Section 6309, New General Code, revenues derived by registration of automobiles, money to pay for the oiling of Ridge avenue, and Montgomery pike, both of which are important thoroughfares in this county."

Section 6309 of the General Code, cited by Mr. Barth, provides:

> "The revenues derived by registration fees provided for in this chapter, shall be applied by the secretary of state toward defraying the expenses incident to carrying out and enforcing the provisions of this chapter, and any surplus thereof shall be paid by him, monthly, into the state treasury. All such moneys coming into the state treasury shall be a separate fund for the improvement, maintenance and repair of the public roads and highways of this state, and be apportioned as the state highway fund is apportioned. (99 v. 545 33,34.)"

The following sections of the General Code, (Page and Anderson's edition,) are pertinent:

> "Section 1185. The commissioners of a county may make application to the state highway commissioner for aid from an appropriation by the state for the construction, improvement, maintenance, or repair of highways. Such application shall be filed prior to May first of the year in which such appropriation may be made or become available. If the county commissioners have not made use of the apportionment to such county, in the year in which it is available, then the township trustees may make application prior to the first day of April of the succeeding year. And if the township trustees do not make use of the appropriation prior to the first day of July next succeeding, then the state highway commissioner shall have full power and authority to enter upon and construct, improve, maintain or repair any of the inter-county highways or parts thereof of said county, either by contract, force account, or in such manner as the state highway commissioner may deem for the best interests of the public, paying the full cost and expense thereof from the said apportionment of the appropriation to said county so unused as aforesaid. Any part of the apportionment to a county remaining unexpended shall remain to the credit of such county and be available for the succeeding year as herein provided."

"Section 1186. Each application for state aid in the construction, improvement, maintenance or repair of highways shall be accompanied by a proper certified resolution of the county commissioners or township trustees having jurisdiction of the road to be constructed, improved, maintained or repaired, stating that the public interest demands the improvement of the highway therein described; that the description does not include any portion of the highway in the limits of any municipality. Provided, also, that when all the inter-county highways within a county have been improved to the standard specified by the state highway commissioner, then the appropriation may be used, in the construction, improvement, maintenance or repair of any road within such county. Each application for state aid shall also contain an agreement on the part of the county commissioners or township trustees, having jurisdiction over the road, to pay one-half of the cost and expense of surveys and other expenses preliminary to the construction, improvement, maintenance or repair of said road."

"Section 1222. Moneys appropriated by the state for the purpose of carrying out the provisions of this chapter, shall not be used in any manner or for any purpose, except as provided herein. Moneys so appropriated shall be equally divided among the counties of the state, except such moneys as are appropriated for the use of the department and for surveys, plans and estimates of inter-county highways."

Section 1225 reads in part as follows:

"Highways improved or constructed under the provisions of any act providing for aid by the state shall be kept in repair and maintained by the state highway commissioner. The expense of such repair and maintenance shall be divided and payable twenty-five per cent. thereof by the state, fifty per cent. thereof by the county and twenty-five per cent. thereof by the township or townships. The state's share being payable from moneys appropriated by the general assembly for the purpose; the county and township shares from their respective road or road repair funds."

I am of the opinion that oiling a road would come under the term "maintenance" since it would tend to keep the road in good condition for travel.

Under Section 1222 above quoted the funds appropriated by the state pursuant to the highway law must be divided equally among the several counties of the state, and Section 1185 requires the county commissioners to make application to the state highway commissioner for the county's part of the apportionment for state aid in the construction, improvement, maintenance or repair of highways on or before May first of the year in which such appropriation becomes available, and in the event of their failure to make such application, the township trustees may do so prior to the first day of April of the succeeding year. If both the commissioners and trustees fail to apply, then the state highway commissioner may contract, improve, maintain or repair any of the inter-county highways and pay the whole cost thereof out of the county's apportionment of the appropriation for state aid.

Section 1186 provides that, "when all the inter-county highways within a county have been improved to the standard specified by the state highway commissioner, then the appropriation may be used in the construction, improvement, maintenance or repair of any road within such county."

I am of the opinion that if the two roads mentioned in Mr. Barth's inquiry are inter-county highways improved to the standard specified by the state highway commissioner they may be maintained by state aid, and if they are not inter-county highways they may nevertheless by so maintained providing all of the inter-county highways of the county have been first improved, repaired or maintained, the expense of such maintenance to be born by the state, county and township in the proportion designated in Section 1225 supra.

I trust the foregoing will clearly indicate to Mr. Barth the procedure necessary to procure the money about which he inquires.

Yours very truly,

TIMOTHY S. HOGAN,

Attorney General.

Upon application to do business in New York said company was obliged, under the assumption that it was engaged in three kinds of insurance business, to deposit* $250,000 with the New York Commissioner, to comply with the New York law requiring an amount equal to the amount deposited in New York to be deposited in the home state said company de-deposited in New York to be deposited in the home state said company deposited an additional $50,000 with the Ohio insurance commissioner acting presumably under 9543 General Code. In fact said company was engaged in only one form of insurance business in New York.

The company, which has ceased business in New York, now desires to dissolve, is solvent and wishes to have returned the fifty thousand additional deposit.

Held:

The deposit of the fifty thousand dollars was unauthorized by Section 9543, General Code, as such section applies only to insurers against accidental personal injury, and is in excess of the amount required to be deposited and should be returned.

Even though the deposit was authorized the requirement of Section 9543 permitting the withdrawal of deposits therein authorized upon the cessation of business in the outside state is conclusive.

October 15, 1912.

HON. D. S. CREAMER, Treasurer of State, and

E. H. MOORE, Superintendent of Insurance, Columbus, Ohio.

GENTLEMEN:—I am in receipt of a copy of an application made to you jointly by The Bankers' Surety Company, of Cleveland, Ohio, to withdraw fifty thousand dollars ($50,000) in securities deposited with the Treasurer of State on July 15, 1902; and I am also in receipt of a letter from the Treasurer of State, dated September 19, 1912, asking for my opinion as to whether said application should be granted or not. You have also submitted to me various affidavits relative to this matter.

The facts, as I gather them from the data submitted to me, are as follows:

The Bankers' Surety Company is an Ohio corporation, organized for the purpose of transacting what is known as "fidelity and surety insurance." At the time the superintendent of insurance licensed the said Bankers' Surety Company to transact surety business in this state, this company made a deposit of two hundred thousand dollars ($200,000.00) with the superintendent of insurance, as required by Section 9568 of the General Code (formerly R. S., 3641).

Subsequently this company applied for a license to transact business in the state of New York. The New York laws require a deposit of one hundred thousand dollars ($100,000.00) for a domestic insurance company if organized for one kind of insurance only, but if organized for two or more separate classes of insurance, then, it is required to deposit the same amount as if it had been separately formed for such purposes, the total amount of such deposit, however, not to exceed two hundred and fifty thousand dollars. The laws of New York also require a company of another state, desiring to do business in New York, to keep on deposit in its own state the same amount of securities which the New York laws require of domestic companies. The superintendent of insurance of New York held that the charter of The Bankers' Surety Company authorized it to transact three kinds of business, and he, therefore, required that the company make a deposit of fifty thousand dollars ($50,000.00) with the superintendent of insurance of Ohio, in addition to the two hundred thousand dollars already deposited by the said company, so that the company would have on deposit in Ohio a total of two hundred and fifty thousand dollars.

It appears further from a letter dated July 15, 1902, that the superintendent of insurance of Ohio issued to The Bankers' Surety Company two certificates certifying that it had deposited with him fifty thousand dollars, and two hundred thousand dollars of securities for the benefit of its policyholders. It appears from this letter that the two hundred thousand dollars was deposited first, and the fifty thousand dollars subsequently, and that the fifty thousand dollars were to be held pending the application of the company for a license to transact business in the state of New York, that if such license were issued, then said fifty thousand dollars, as well as the two hundred thousand dollars, were to remain as an aggregate deposit of two hundred and fifty thousand dollars for the benefit of policyholders, but that if such license were refused by the state of New York, then said fifty thousand dollar deposit was to be returned to the said company.

In a letter of December 15, 1902, from the superintendent of insurance to The Bankers' Surety Company, the following statement appears:

> "Issue of the two certificates of deposit requested has been and will be for the time deferred, pending receipt of further information. At the time of the issue by this department to the company of license and authority to commence business, there was deposited with the department $200,000.00 in designated securities in pursuance of Section 3641, paragraph fourth, Revised Statutes. Subsequently, and on July 15, 1902, the company made a further tentative deposit of $50,000.00 in approved securities under Section 3670, Revised Statutes, with a view to applying for admission to transact business in the state of New York. The department is advised but has been officially notified that the company has since been admitted in the state of New York and is now transacting business therein, and a formal notification is requested as to whether or not it has been so admitted into New York state. If license by the New York department of insurance has been issued to the company, the certificates of deposit will recite and show the deposit of $250,000.00. If not so admitted, the certificate will show a deposit of $200,000.00 as heretofore."

It appears from the above that the deposit of the two hundred thousand dollars was made under Section 9568 of the General Code (R. S. 3641), and the deposit of fifty thousand dollars, under section 9543 of the General Code (R. S. 3670).

It further appears that The Bankers' Surety Company was only authorized to transact the business of "fidelity and surety insurance" in the state of New York, and to transact no other class of insurance. It further appears that The Bankers' Surety Company never transacted any accident or liability business, or any insurance business other than surety business.

It further appears that the company has discontinued all insurance business in the state of New York, and has entirely discontinued all insurance business, and is now engaged in collecting its assets and paying its liabilities, with a view to the dissolution of the corporation, and that the company is solvent.

Section 9568 of the General Code, under which the deposit of two hundred thousand dollars was made, is as follows:

> "No company organized under the laws of this state to transact the business of guaranteeing the fidelity of persons holding places of public or private trust, who are required to or in their trust capacity do receive, hold, control, disburse public or private property, and guaranteeing the performance of contracts other than insurance policies, or of executing or guaranteeing bonds or undertakings required or permitted in actions, proceedings or by law allowed, shall commence business until it has deposited with the superintendent of insurance two hundred thousand dollars in securities permitted by sections ninety-five hundred and eighteen and ninety-five hundred and nineteen, which shall be held for the benefit and security of all policyholders of the company, and not be received by him at a rate above their par value."

Sections 9542 and 9543 of the General Code, under which the deposit of fifty thousand dollars is claimed to have been made, are as follows:

> "Section 9542. Companies may be organized for the special purpose of insuring persons against accidental personal injury or loss of life, while traveling by railroad, steamboat, or other mode of conveyance, and making all and every insurance connected with accidental loss of life, or personal injury caused by accident, of any description; against expenses and loss of time occasioned by sickness or other disability, on such terms and conditions for such periods of time, and confined to such countries, localities, and persons, as may be provided for in the by-laws of the company."
> "Section 9543. When a company so organized desires to do business in another state, by the laws of which, to qualify it therefor, it is required to make a deposit of securities assigned in trust for the benefit of its policyholders with an officer of this state, the state treasurer shall receive such deposit, and issue therefor to the company his receipt, giving a pertinent description of the securities and a certificate of the market value thereof. He also shall issue a life certificate to the superintendent of insurance, who shall place it on file in his office. Such company may exchange these securities for other like securities, in whole or in part, as far as its business requires, and wholly withdraw them if it discontinues business in such other state. Such changes or withdrawals of securities at once shall be duly certified by the treasurer to the superintendent of insurance."

These sections might possibly be looked at from many different angles, but from the facts as given to me, the right of the company to withdraw this deposit of fifty thousand dollars seems so clear that it is unnecessary to enter into a prolonged discussion of the matter. In the first place, I find no authority for this deposit of fifty thousand dollars with the superintendent of insurance. Sections 9542 and 9543 of the General Code provide for a deposit with the treasurer of state by companies organized for the special purpose of insuring persons against accidental personal injury, etc., when such company desires to do business in another state.

This deposit was made with the superintendent of insurance, and was by him turned over to the treasurer of state, together with the deposit of two hundred thousand dollars, so that the books of the treasurer of state show that this company has on deposit two hundred and fifty thousand dollars of securities as a liability deposit received from the superintendent of insurance. The only requirement for a deposit by this company with the superintendent of insurance is under Section 9568, which provides for the two hundred thousand dollars to be so deposited. There is no provision in Section 9568 or subsequent sections authorizing additional deposits by surety companies in order to do business in other states, and, therefore, this company has now, and has had at all times, the full amount required to be deposited by it with the superintendent of insurance of Ohio, and the fifty thousand dollars are simply an excess deposit; but if it is taken that there was authority for this additional deposit, and that the state of Ohio, having accepted the same is bound to maintain it, then it can only be maintained in accordance with Section 9543 of the General Code, whether said section gives authority for such deposit or not. This section contains the provision that:

> "Such company may * * * wholly withdraw them (the additional securities) if it discontinues business in such other state. * *"

Therefore, as it appears from the data furnished me, that The Bankers' Surety Company has entirely discontinued business in the state of New York, under this section it would be entitled to withdraw said additional deposit of fifty thousand dollars of securities, and this would leave the full amount required by the laws of Ohio still on deposit with the treasurer of state through the insurance department.

Very truly yours,
TIMOTHY S. HOGAN,
Attorney General.

BONDS OF DISTRICT OF COLUMBIA NOT UNITED STATES BONDS—MAY NOT BE ACCEPTED BY TREASURER OF STATE AS SECURITY FOR DEPOSIT OF STATE FUNDS.

"Although bonds issued by the District of Columbia must be authorized by Congress, they are not "United States Government Bonds" within the meaning of the act providing for the deposit of bonds by state depositories with the Treasurer of State, and as the District of Columbia is not a state or territory, its bonds are not included within said act.

Bonds of the District of Columbia may not, therefore, be deposited with the Treasurer of State as security for the deposit of state funds.

October 10, 1912.

HON. DAVID S. CREAMER, Treasurer of State, Columbus, Ohio.

DEAR SIR:—You have asked for my construction of that part of Section 14 of the Act passed March 7, 1911, entitled "An Act to provide a state depository for state funds," found in 102 O. L., 33, specifying the securities which must be deposited with you by banks or trust companies which have been designated as depositories for state funds. This section requires that there must be deposited with you by every approved bank or trust company, before making a deposit with it, "United States Government bonds, bonds of this state, county, township, school district, road district, or municipal bonds of this state * * *," and your particular inquiry is whether the term "United States Bonds" would include bonds of the District of Columbia, issued under the authority of the United States, and for the payment of which the faith of the United States is pledged.

The National Banking Act of the United States, Section 5158, United States Revised Statutes, defines the term "United States Bonds" as follows:

> "The term 'United States Bonds' as used throughout this chapter shall be construed to mean registered bonds of the United States."

The District of Columbia is not a territory nor a department of the United States government; its political status, as defined by Cyc, is as follows:

> "The District of Columbia, under its present form of government, is neither a sovereignty, a territory, nor a department of the United States government; it is simply a municipal corporation, with such powers and liabilities as are common to municipal corporations in general, except insofar as it may be affected by acts of Congress."

Bonds of the District of Columbia can only be issued under authority of an act of Congress. Various issues of such bonds have been authorized from time to time, and when the government guarantees the payment of such bonds, of course they are just as good as bonds issued primarily by the United States government.

But from the language used in our depository act, my opinion is that only bonds issued by the United States government are intended, and that the language does not contemplate bonds issued by the District of Columbia, or by other political entities under authority of the United States government, whether the payment of such bonds is guaranteed by the government or not. If this had been the intention of the Legislature, it would have been a simple matter to have added the words "or bonds for the payment of which the faith of the United States is pledged" immediately after the words "United States Government bonds" as they appear in the act. Therefore, while there is no question whatever as to the validity of such bonds, I think that it is necessary to interpret the provisions as to the securities to be furnished by depositories strictly, and that you should, therefor, decline to receive as securities any bonds which are not clearly specified by the Act.

Very respectfully,

TIMOTHY S. HOGAN,
Attorney General.

STATE CANALS—DAMS—EMINENT DOMAIN—POWER OF DISPOSAL—FEE SIMPLE RIGHT AND EASEMENT.

When the State has maintained a dam as part of one of its canals for the purpose of maintaining a pool of slack water from which the canal was furnished with water for navigation purposes, and the canal was abandoned by legislative act and permission given by the same act to either lease or sell the canal lands, held:

Whatever land is actually appropriated for canal purposes necessarily vests in the state in fee simple, and the state may dispose of the same as it sees fit.

When the possession and use of the state, however, is not an out and out, notorious appropriation, but a mere incidental or indirect and not necessarily exclusive usage, such as the mere backing up or overflow of water, the interest of the state is merely that of an easement, which was acquired for a public use from which it cannot be diverted to a merely private use.

Under these rules as the state has the absolute fee simple in the lands covered by the dam and only an easement in the lands overflowed by reason of the erection of said dam therefore the State may sell or lease the dam and land upon which it is situated, but cannot grant any right or easement in the land and water above the dam.

From the premises the Board of Public Works cannot maintain this dam for the purpose of renting water to private enterprises.

COLUMBUS, OHIO, February 8, 1912.

HON. JOHN I. MILLER, Chief Engineer, Board of Public Works, Columbus, Ohio.

DEAR SIR:—Under favor of November 16, 1911, you ask an opinion of this department upon the following:

> "The state of Ohio has maintained for many years, a dam across the Scioto river about two miles below the city of Circleville in Ross County, Ohio. This dam was a part of the Ohio Canal System and its use was to make a pool of slack-water from which the said canal was furnished with water for navigation purposes.
> "This canal has been abandoned by Act of Legislature, and by the same Act, the Board of Public Works, after certain arrangements specified in the enactment are perfected, may either lease or sell the lands belonging to the said canal.
> "Query 1. Does this give authority to the Board of Public Works to sell or lease the state dam in the Scioto river below Circleville?
> "Query 2. Or can the state maintain the dam and charge rental to parties using the water so impounded?"

The Act abandoning this part of the canal is found in 102 Ohio Laws, page 293, et seq.

Section 1 of said Act provides:

> "That the portion of the Ohio Canal commencing at the junction of said canal with what is known as the Dresden Side Cut near Trin-way in Muskingum county, Ohio, and extending thence southwesterly to the southerly end of the aqueduct across Raccoon creek in West Newark, Licking county, Ohio, also that portion of said Ohio canal commencing at the flume that connects Buckeye lake with said Ohio canal at the west end of said reservoir in Fairfield county, Ohio, and extending thence southwesterly and southerly with the line of said Ohio canal to its junction with the Ohio river, near Portsmouth in Scioto county, Ohio, be and the same is hereby abandoned for canal purposes."

Section 3 of said Act provides:

"As soon as such surveys and plats have been completed, the state board of public works and the chief engineer of public works, acting as a joint board, shall proceed to appraise, and lease or sell, as they may deem for the best interest of the state, subject to the approval of the governor and attorney general, said canal lands, except as hereinafter noted, in strict conformity with the various provisions of the statutes of Ohio relating to the leasing and selling of state canal lands, except that the grant of such leases shall be for a term of not less than fifteen nor more than twenty-five years, and that the bed and banks of said abandoned canal property may be included in any lease of such canal lands."

Section 8 of said Act provides:

"Nothing in this act shall interfere with any leases, rights or privileges heretofore granted by the state of Ohio and in force at the date of approval of this act."

As stated in your inquiry the dam in question is a part of the Ohio canal system, and was used for the purpose of securing a water supply for the canal. The canal is now abandoned and the use of the dam for canal purposes is at an end.

Your first question is as to the right of the Board of Public Works to lease or sell this dam. Its sale or lease would mean that the dam and the water held by it would be used for a private purpose, instead of for a public purpose as formerly used.

The first question to determine is the title of the state to the dam and to the land covered by the back water.

In Malone vs. City of Toledo, 34 Ohio St., 541, the syllabus is as follows:

"Under the constitution of 1802, the legislature, in the exercise of the right of eminent domain, possessed the power to appropriate to public use the fee simple title to lands, where, in its judgment, the public necessities required it; and the title acquired by the state by the appropriation of lands for canal purposes, under the eighth section of the act of February 4, 1825, (2 Chase, 1472,) was an absolute estate in fee."

In the case of Ohio vs. Railway Company, 53 Ohio St., 189, the third syllabus reads:

"By force of the provision of Section 8 of the act to provide for "the internal improvement of the state of Ohio by navigable canals," 23 O. L., 57, whenever the state actually occupied a parcel of land for canal purposes, a fee-simple title thereto at once and by virtue, alone, of such occupancy, vested in the state."

On page 243 of the opinion, Bradbury, J., says:

"That the title of the state to its canal lands is one in fee simple, is a question of law. The only fact to be ascertained is whether the lands were in fact a portion of the canal system. How the acquisition was made is not material. The mere seizure and appropriation of a parcel of land for canal purposes, by force, of the statute under which our canals were constructed, was alone sufficient to vest in the state a fee simple title to them. Nor could any other title than one in fee simple be received by the state for lands to be devoted to a canal. A mere occupation of lands by the state for canal purposes, was a seizure and appropriation of it to that purpose, and to be devoted to that purpose was to give the state a fee simple title thereto. No conveyance was necessary; the seizure and occupation transferred to the state the entire estate in the lands so seized and occupied, leaving to the former owner simply a claim for compensation."

In State vs. Grifther, 61 Ohio St., 201, the first and second syllabi reads:

"The title acquired by the state to lands which it appropriated and used in the construction and operation of canals under the act of February 4, 1825, 23 O. L. 50, is a fee simple, and the former owners of such lands, by reason of such appropriation, parted with all their title and interest in such lands.

"The fee simple title to such lands remains in the state after it ceases to use such lands for canal purposes, and the statute of limitations does not run against the state as to such lands."

The dam in question was part of the canal system, used to furnish a supply of water for the canals. The land upon which this dam was built was actually appropriated by the state for canal purposes. The state, thereby, took an absolute fee simple title in the land upon which the dam was constructed. Having an absolute fee the state has the right to dispose of its title thereto in any manner in which it sees fit.

A further question arises. What is the nature of the right of the state in the land covered by the back water caused by the construction of the dam. Did the state take a fee or an easement in this land? There is no evidence before us to show whether the state actually purchased the fee to this land, or that it has paid any compensation therefor. In the absence of such proof it is to be presumed that the state has only such right or title thereto as was necessary to carry out the purpose for which the dam was built. This title must be determined by the nature of the state's occupancy of the land in question.

In case of Smith vs. State of Ohio, 59 Ohio St., 278, the first syllabus reads:

"It is the purpose of the act of February 4, 1825, (25 O. L. 57), to award compensation to owners of private lands taken for canal purposes, where they have not been donated, and where the loss or damage exceeds the benefits, and to afford opportunity to such owners to make demand for appraisal of such damages. Hence, in order to the acquisition of title to lands for canal purposes by the state under the above act, by occupancy and use, it is necessary that the occupancy by the state be exclusive, and that it be so open and notorious as to put the owner on notice that the property has been taken by the state for its own, with the purpose of incorporating it as a part of its canal system."

The syllabi in the case of Miller vs. Wisenberger, 61 Ohio St., 561, are as follows:

"Where the possession and use of lands or streams in the construction of the Ohio canal system were merely incidental, constructive or indirect, and not of a character to fairly apprise both the officers of the state and the owners of the lands, that such lands or streams were appropriated and used in the construction of the canals, no fee to such lands or streams vested in the state.

"Section 8 of the canal act of 1825 should be so construed as to fairly carry out the intention and understanding of the officers of the state on the one hand, and the land owner on the other, in each case, as near as the same can be ascertained from what was done, and the situation and surroundings of the premises in question.

"The mere incidental backing of water up a stream caused by the erection of a dam across a river, used as a part of the canal system, such stream flowing into said river and remaining in a state of nature, except as slightly raised by such back water, does not constitute such an appropriation and use of the bed of the stream for canal purposes as to vest the fee of such stream in the state."

Burket, J., on page 584 of the opinion says:

"The above cases clearly point out the rule by which the state could acquire the fee to lands for canal purposes. If the entry, use and possession by the state were open and notorious so as to inform the land owner that his land had been taken by the state for canal purposes, a fee vested in the state. But if the entry, possession or use was merely incidental, constructive or indirect, and not of such a character as to apprise the canal commissioners that they were making the state liable, nor the land owner that his lands were so appropriated as to give him a claim against the state for taking and using the same for canal purposes, no title or fee vested in the state."

Also on page 585, Burkett, J., says:

"The mere backing up of water in a river, creek, run or ravine to an extent insufficient to seriously interfere with the use of the lands by the owner, could not have regarded in those days, either by the officers of the state or the land owners, as an appropriation and use of such river, creek, run or ravine for canal purposes. What must have then been understood as an appropriation and use of lands and streams was an actual physical possession and use in the construction of the canals and feeders, dykes, locks and dams connected therewith so as to become a part of the canal system of the state. Such an appropriation was open and public notice to the land owner that he had been deprived of his property and an invitation to him to make application for compensation."

The dam in question is five feet high. The report of the engineer submitted does not give the elevation of the banks of the river along where the back water stands and where the water in the river is raised by the dam. Nor does the report show that the back water, at its ordinary stage, overflows any land, or that it interferes with the use of the land in any respect.

From the principles laid down in the foregoing decisions, if the raising of the water of the river by the dam did not cause an overflow upon the land and interfere with the use thereof, there was not such a nortorious taking of the land by the construction of the dam so as to notify the owners of the fee that the state had appropriated their lands for canal purposes, and that he would have a right of compensation for the state for damages sustained. The mere raising of the water of the river within its banks was an incidental and indirect taking of the land and was not sufficient to appropriate the fee of the land.

The right of the state, therefore, to the land covered by the back water is that of an easement, to use it for the public purpose of promoting its canals. This was a public use. The leasing or selling of the dam to private parties to carry on private enterprises would change this use from a public to a private use. The question arises: Is that change from a public to a private use an additional burden upon the lands, for which the owner of the fee will be entitled to additional compensation?

In such case, the rights of the riparian owner and of the lessee or grantee of the dam would be a private matter to be determined between themselves, and would be rights with which the state would have no concern. Yet as the state is called upon to sell or lease the dam, the question will be as to what the state can actually grant by its conveyance. It is not the purpose of this department to settle private contriversies. This question is only considered in order to determine the rights which can be conveyed by the state.

The state appropriated this property by its right of eminent domain.

Article 1, Section 19 of the Constitution of Ohio, provides in part:

> "Private property shall be held inviolate, but subservient to the public welfare. * * *"

Lane, J., in case of Cooper vs. Williams, 4 Ohio, 253, says on page 287 of the opinion:

> "It is upon these rights the state has presumed to act, by virtue of its transendent sovereignity (dominum eminens), a power to appropriate private property for public uses, for the purpose of promoting the general welfare. This power is inherent in every government; but it should be exercised in cases, and for objects strictly public; and, in our country, the constitution of the United States and of the state of Ohio, insure that principle of natural justice, which requires compensation to be made to the individual reprived of his property."

In case of Giesy vs. Cincinnati, etc., Railroad Company, 4 Ohio St., 308, part of the syllabi reads:

> "The power of eminent domain is not conferred by either of these sections; they simply prescribe modes for, and limitations upon, its exercise.
> "The power rests upon the public necessity, and can only be exercised where such necessity exists.

"Only such interest as will answer the public wants can be taken; and it can be held only so long as it is used by the public, and cannot be diverted to any other purpose."

It is a uniform rule, well established, that private property can be appropriated only for a public use and not for private uses.

The case of Hatch vs. Cincinnati, etc., Railroad Company, 18 Ohio St., 92, the second syllabus reads:

"Where, in such case, the owner of the fee simple title to the lands covered by the easement, though denying the right to have made it, yet recognizing the appropriation by the railroad company as an accomplished fact, brings his action against the railroad company to recover damages as for a permanent appropriation, he is entitled to recover the full value of lands, if any, taken by the railroad company, and not recovered by the former appropriation by the canal company; and, also, a full and fair compensation for such additional burdens and inconveniences, not common to the general public, as accrue to him and his entire tract on which the easement is imposed, by reason of the change of uses to which the lands appropriated have been subjected."

The sixth syllabus in case of Vough vs. Railroad Company, 58 Ohio St., 123, reads:

"Where, however, the land is only abandoned by the state for canal purposes, and is at the same time leased or conveyed to a railroad company for the construction and operation of a railroad thereon, the owner is only entitled to compensation for such additional burthen thereby imposed on the land, and such damages as may result from the new use Hatch vs. Railroad Co., 18 Ohio St., 92.

In this latter case the state had only an easement and not the fee to the canal lands.

Wright, J., delivering the opinion in case of Malone vs. City of Toledo, 28 Ohio St., 643, says at page 660:

"However it may be elsewhere, it appears to us to be the law in this state, that when property has been appropriated for one public purpose, it may be applied to another, not substantially different, and it is still subserving its original uses. Further, that such a change does not afford ground of complaint that the property is wholly forfeited, or the public rights extinguished.

A change that involves a cessation of all public uses, such as the selling out of public property to private parties, for private ends, would be governed by different considerations, and where such a case arises, it would be controlled by those considerations."

The syllabus in case of McCombs vs. Stewart, 40, Ohio St., 647, reads as follows:

"A canal company, incorporated under the act of January 10, 1827 (25 Ohio L., 3), erected across a river a dam to the height of fourteen feet, causing the water to flow back upon the lands of a proprietor above the dam on the same stream. The company owned in fee simple, by purchase, the land on which the south half of the dam was built, but none of the land on which the north half was built; and conveyed, in fee simple to certain mill owners, the land it thus owned, and granted to them and their heirs the privilege of using the surplus water of the dam not required for canal purposes.

"Held: The right of the company acquired by appropriation, to flow the lands of such proprietor by maintaining a dam of such height, did not, by virtue of the company's conveyance and grant to the mill owners, survive and vest in them after the dissolution of the corporation."

Dickman, J., says on page 664:

But a different rule prevails where lands and easements are acquired by appropriation or proceedings in invitum. The Pennsylvania and Ohio Canal Company had the undoubted right to take and hold lands in fee, but such taking was to be by gift or purchase, and not by right of eminent domain. The right derived under Section 3 "to enter upon, take possession of, and use "lands, real estates, and streams, cannot be enlarged by implication into an estate beyond the corporate existence of, the company. The property being taken for public use, when that use ceases, it must revert to the owner of the soil from whom it was taken, relieved of the burden or easement which the sovereign power has imposed."

Also on page 668, Dickman, J., says:

"* * * As long as the canal company kept the canal in repair, in compliance with the requirement of its charter, and until the corporation was dissolved, the mill owners were entitled to the surplus water, and Stewart had no legal ground of complaint, on account of the height of the dam or the burden imposed upon his land by flowage. But the canal company had no power to transmit to others, in perpetuity, privileges and franchises which it derived from the state for public use only, and not to be continued when the consideration for which they were granted no longer existed."

Also on page 669, Dickman, J., further says:

"* * * Property taken in the name of the public, for public and general use, could not be diverted to private and individual uses."

The easement of the state to raise the water in the river by the construction of the dam in question, was secured by it through its right of eminent domain. The use was a public use.

The state, through the Legislature, has abandoned the canal and the public use of the dam has been thereby terminated. The public necessity no longer exists to maintain this dam. If maintained it will be to promote private interests. In McCombs vs. Stewart, 40 Ohio St., 647, Supra, it is held that an easement secured by appropriation for a public use cannot be diverted to a private use. The authorities further hold that where the use is changed from one public use to another public use, the owner of the fee is entitled to additional compensation for any additional burden placed upon his lands. The same would be true when the change is from a public to a private use, where the same can be legally done.

Section 3 of the act abandoning this part of the canal, authorizes the board of public works to "lease or sell, as they may deem for the best interest of the state" and said canal lands subject of the Governor and Attorney General. This authority to sell or lease extends to all parts of the canal system and will include the dam in question.

We have seen that the state owns the absolute fee simple in the lands occupied by the dam. By virtue of the authority vested in it by Section 3 of the above act the board of public works can lease or sell this dam and the land upon which situated. They could not, however, sell or lease the easement which the state had in the lands covered by the back water, nor its right to raise the water in the river above its normal stage.

Neither can the state maintain this dam for the purpose of leasing water and charging rental therefor. The right to lease and sell water is an incident to the public use for which the public works were constructed. Where the state only has an easement, as in this case, the abandonment of the public use, will constitute an abandonment of its incidental right to lease surplus water. Upon such abandonment the property reverts to the owner of the fee freed of the public easement. Where the state has the fee simple to the land, the rule will be different.

It is my conclusion that the state may sell or lease the dam and land upon which it is situated, but cannot grant any right or easement in the land and water above the same.

The board of public works cannot maintain this dam for the rental of water to private enterprises.

Respectfully,

TIMOTHY S. HOGAN,

Attorney General.

SECRETARY OF STATE BOARD OF PUBLIC WORKS—EXTRA COMPENSATION FOR PERFORMANCE OF DUTIES FORMERLY RESTING IN OHIO CANAL COMMISSION.

The secretary of the board of public works is obliged to perform certain extra duties which formerly devolved upon the Ohio Canal Commission. The board is authorized by express statutory provisions to expend $4,000 to meet the expenses of salaries, employes and other needs for the performance of the duties formerly performed by the canal commission.

Held, that out of said $4,000, the secretary of the board can be allowed, not as extra salary, but as compensation for extra and independent duties for the performance of the added work aforesaid, though the general appropriation ordinance for the board of public works provides only "receipts and balances for maintenance and improvements" of certain canals, and further expressly provides that no bills shall be paid for extra clerk hire in favor of any clerk drawing a salary from the state.

The special provision for $4,000 allowance for expenses for said extra duties, overrides the general provisions of the appropriation act, and the secretary is not to be considered a clerk nor are expenses for the performance of duties formerly resting upon the canal commission to be considered "clerk hire."

March 12, 1912.

Board of Public Works, Columbus, Ohio.

GENTLEMEN:—I beg to acknowledge receipt of your letter of February 26 requesting my opinion upon the following questions:

> "By the act of April 2, 1906, O. L. 306, the powers and duties theretofore conferred on the Ohio Canal Commission were conferred upon and invested in the board of public works, and the board was expressly authorized to expend out of the canal earnings of the state an amount not exceeding $4,000 per annum to meet the salaries and necessary expenses of employes of the board in the discharge of the additional duties devolving upon them and theretofore imposed upon the canal commission.
>
> "By reason of the revolution of the powers and duties effected by this act a number of distinct duties were by action of the board imposed upon its secretary. That is to say, the board required its secretary, without additional compensation, to perform the service theretofore performed by the secretary of the canal commission who received a salary of $1,350 per annum.
> "The board feels that in justice to its secretary it ought to allow him, if possible under the law, additional compensation for the additional and independent duties performed by him, growing out of the assumption of the board of the powers and duties of the canal commission.
> "May the board legally do this?"

The following provisions of law must be considered in answering your question:

Section 408 (as amended) 101 O. L. 360:

> "The board of public works shall organize by the election of a member as president and the appointment of a secretary and clerk. The secretary shall receive a salary not to exceed fifteen hundred dollars per annum. The clerk shall receive such compensation as the board directs, not to exceed nine hundred dollars each year, to be paid upon the order of the board from moneys appropriated for that purpose."

Section 464 General Code (formerly Section 3 of the act of 1906, 98 O. L. 306).

"In addition to the powers and duties herein conferred upon the board of public works, the board shall exercise all powers and duties heretofore conferred by law upon the Ohio Canal commission, but no land lease, or sale of canal or state lands shall be made except upon the written approval of the governor and attorney general."

Section 466 General Code (formerly Section 4 of the act of 1906, 98 O. L. 306).

"The board of public works may expend from the canal earnings of the state, an amount not exceeding four thousand dollars each year for the payment of salaries and necessary expenses of employes of the board while engaged in the discharge of duties heretofore imposed upon the canal commission."

The appropriation act for the year 1912, 102 O. S. 393, Section 1:

"That the following sums for the purposes hereinafter specified be and the same are hereby appropriated out of any moneys in the state treasury to the credit of the general revenue fund, not otherwise appropriated, to-wit:

* * * * * * * * *

BOARD OF PUBLIC WORKS.

Salary of secretary ----------$1,500.00

* * * * * * * * *

Miami and Erie canal for maintenance and improvements, receipts and balances.

Ohio canal for maintenance and improvements, receipts and balances.

* * * * * * * * *

"Sec. 2. The moneys appropriated in the preceding section shall * * * * * (not) be used or paid out for purposes other than those for which said sums are specifically appropriated as aforesaid.

"Sec. 3. No bills for extra clerk hire in favor of any clerk or clerks while drawing salaries from the state shall be allowed from any amount herein appropriated."

I have quoted all of the provisions of law in any way applicable, or which might be considered applicable to the question at hand.

Section 4 of the act of 1906 which has, as above stated, become Section 466, General Code, clearly vested in the board of public works authority to pay its own employes out of the canal earnings of the state additional compensation for the additional services which might devolve upon them by virtue of the other provisions of that act. The secretary of the board is not mentioned in this section, and it might be contended, with some show of reason, that he is not, strictly speaking, "an employe" of the board. Inasmuch, however, as he has no definite term of office but serves at the pleasure of the board, it appears that his practical status is that of an employe, and I am convinced that the use of the word "employe" in section 466 is not to be regarded as restricted or technical.

I am, therefore, of the opinion that the secretary of the board of public works is within the intendment of Section 4 of the act of 1906, now Section 466, General Code.

Now the salary of the secretary is fixed by law—or rather the maximum salary so payable to him is so fixed—and the board of public works is without authority to increase that salary. No time need be spent in demonstration of this point.

As I understand your request, the board is not contemplating increasing the salary of the secretary as such, but rather paying him certain specified compensation for certain defined services which the board deems not to be within the scope of the duties of the secretary of the board as such, and clearly to be within the purview of the "additional duties" mentioned in Section 466 of the General Code. This would not be an increase of the secretary's salary in the strict sense of the word, but rather the payment of compensation of the secretary for independent duties which might be lawfully imposed upon him.

I am of the opinion that the board of public works may lawfully recognize the fact that under the law of 1906 some of the duties now being performed by the secretary of the board of public works are not germane to that position as such but must be regarded as "additional duties" within the meaning of Section 4 of that act; and that the board may attach to such "additional duties" a separate and specific compensation payable out of the $4,000 authorized to be devoted to this and similar purposes from the canal earnings of the state.

A number of collateral questions are here suggested and ought to be disposed of. In the first place, the sole authority of the board of public works to expended any money out of the canal earnings—that is the authority of the board to withdraw such money from the state treasury—is derived from the appropriation above quoted of "receipts and balances" of the two canals therein mentioned.

Section 2 of the appropriation law expressly provides that money appropriated in Section 1 shall not be expended for any purpose other than that for which it is appropriated. The purpose for which receipts and balances are appropriated is the "maintenance and improvement" of the canals. I do not regard this point as of great weight, however, because the legislature in making an appropriation of "receipts and balances" must be deemed to intend that the moneys thus appropriated shall be used for purposes for which they may be used under general and permanent statutes. This amounts to holding that in law the setting aside the sum of $4,000 or any lesser sum from the canal revenues for the purpose of paying additional compensation to employes of the board under Section 466, General Code, is a proper charge against "maintenance and improvement" of the canals.

The further question here suggested as to which of these two appropriations of "receipts and balances" the $4,000 ought to be set aside from is not directly raised and is not of sufficient importance for consideration here.

Another possible objection to the conclusion which I have already reached is raised by consideration of Section 3 of the appropriation law, which provides, as above quoted, that no bills for extra clerk hire shall be paid to any clerk from any of the appropriations while such clerk is drawing a salary from the state.

I do not think this possible objection to be of weight for three reasons. In the first place I question whether the secretary is a "clerk" within the meaning of this provision. The position of secretary, while in a sense clerical, is clearly to be distinguished from that of clerk of the board which is provided for in the same section which authorizes the appointment of a secretary. It is my opinion that the secretary is not a "clerk" within the meaning of the appropriation. In the second place I am of the opinion that the extra compensation, concerning which you are inquiring, is not "extra clerk hire" within the meaning of the provision above referred to. The specific recognition of the additional duties imposed upon employes of the board by Section 466, General Code, is sufficient, in my judgment, to take the case out of the operation of general provisions like those found in the appropriation bills passed during the last few years at any rate. That is to say, services thus expressly recognized by statute are not, in my judgment, to be regarded as in the nature of "extra clerk hire," compensation for which may not be paid to a clerk receiving a salary from the state. In the third place the appropriation bill, while a law of equal dignity with that of other laws of the state, yields, in my judgment, to a general and permanent statute in case of inconsistencies between the appropriation law and such permanent statute, in the sense at least, that general language in the appropriation bill must be construed in the light of possible exceptions in the general law. Putting it in another way, if the appropriation bill limits the use of money appropriated therein for all departments in a certain way, and the general law specifically authorizes a certain department to make a certain specific expenditure which might seem to be violative of the general restrictions of the appropriation law, then that specific case must be regarded as having been excepted in the mind of the legislature from the general rule prescribed in the appropriation law.

This is the same as holding that the sentence above quoted from section 3 of the appropriation law should be interpreted to mean that no bills for extra clerk hire should be paid to any clerk or clerks out of any of the appropriations made in Section 1 of the act in case such clerk or clerks are receiving a salary from the state, unless some general statute specifically authorizes the head of the department to pay such extra clerk hire out of some particular appropriation.

For all the foregoing reasons I am of the opinion that while the board of public works may not increase the salary of its secretary as such, it may recognize the existence of certain independent duties which the board has imposed upon him, and may provide out of the $4,000 authorized to be devoted to this purpose from canal revenues, a separate salary or compensation for the secretary in the discharge of such independent duties, and that the secretary may receive such compensation so provided in addition to the $1,500 per annum which he is entitled to receive as secretary of the board.

It seems to me that in addition to the plain intendment of the statute, the distinctions of which I have before spoken, are clearly recognized in the common law of public officers. State ex rel. vs. Lewis, 21 O. C. C. 410.

Yours very truly,

TIMOTHY S. HOGAN,
Attorney General.

BOARD OF PUBLIC WORKS—POWER TO PAY EXTRA COMPENSATION TO CLERKS AND ASSISTANT ENGINEER FOR EXTRA SERVICE IN CANAL LAND DEPARTMENT.

The Board of Public Works may lawfully pay to the clerk of the board and to the assistant engineer, additional compensation for the performance of duties, which formerly rested upon the Canal Commission.

April 5, 1912.

Board of Public Works, Columbus, Ohio.

GENTLEMEN:—I beg to acknowledge receipt of your letter ot recent date, supplementing your previous letter of February 26th and requesting my opinion upon the right of the Board of Public Works to pay additional compensation to certain of its employes for services devolving upon its employes under the act of April 2, 1906, 98 O. L. 306, now Section 456 of the General Code.

The first case concerning which you now desire to be advised is that of the assistant engineer of the public works, who is desired by the engineer of the canal land department as his assistant, the understanding being that he is to give a part of his time to the work of the land department in consideration of the additional services to be imposed upon him by the board in finishing the work of the canal commission, a good share of which has fallen to the lot of the land department.

The other case is that of the clerk of the Board of Public Works, who is asked to perform a great deal of stenographic work for the canal land department, which work has devolved upon her by virtue of the act of April 2, 1906, transferring the duties of the canal commission to the board of public works.

It will be unnecessary for me to repeat the reasoning which I have embodied in my opinion to you under date of March 12th. I feel, however, that it is necessary for me to mention the fact that the canal land department of the Board of Public Works, so-called, does not exist by virtue of any special statute, but in fact is that department of the board's activities which pertains more especially to the work which was formerly within the province of the canal commission.

The cases of the assistant engineer and clerk of the board are, of course, not to be regarded as in all respects similar to that of the secretary, covered by my letter of March 12th; the former holds his office under Section 420, General Code, which is as follows:

> "The board of public works may appoint an assistant engineer of public works, who shall be a practical civil engineer, hold his office for a term of two years, unless sooner removed by the board, and be subject to such rules and regulations as the board prescribes. The assistant engineer shall receive such salary as the board directs, not to exceed sixteen hundred dollars each year, and necessary expenses incurred in the discharge of his official duties, which shall be paid upon the order of the board and the warrant of the auditor of state."

It is apparent, I think, that inasmuch as the assistant engineer is appointed by the Board of Public Works and not by the Governor, as is the case with the chief engineer, he is an "employe" within the meaning of the act of 1906, just as I have held the secretary of the board to be.

Otherwise, the opinion of March 12, 1912, applies to the case of the assistant engineer of the public works in its entirety.

The same reasoning applies to the case of the clerk of the Board of Public Works. Of course, the entire opinion of March 12, 1912, does not apply to the clerk, for the reason that it was pointed out therein that the secretary of the board could not be considered a "clerk" within the meaning of Section 3 of the Appropriation Bill of 1912. Undoubtedly, if said Section 3 applies at all to this case, the clerk of the Board of Public Works would have to be regarded as a clerk within the meaning of this provision.

I pointed out further, on page 5 of the previous opinion, that extra compensation paid to an employe of the Board of Public Works under and by virtue of Section 466, General Code, would not be regarded as "extra clerk hire" within the meaning of the appropriation bill. For this reason alone, then, I am of the opinion that the board may lawfully pay to the clerk of the board, as well as to the assistant engineer of the public works, additional compensation for performing duties outside of their regular employments, which said duties have been imposed upon them because of the devolution of the powers and duties of the canal commission upon the board of public works.

Very truly yours,
TIMOTHY S. HOGAN,
Attorney General.

LEASE BY BOARD OF PUBLIC WORKS TO ENDWELL OIL & GAS COMPANY—NO RIGHT OF SAID COMPANY TO OUTPUT OF OHIO FUEL & GAS COMPANY.

Under the terms of the lease granted to the Endwell Oil & Gas Well Company by the board of public works, the latter company was entitled only to seven-eighths of the output of wells drilled by itself. Said company was, therefore, not entitled to any royalties for gas taken by another company, namely, the Ohio Fuel & Gas Company from wells formerly drilled by that company and operated by it after the date of the lease to the Endwell company.

Inasmuch also as the lease made provision for a return of the $200.00 deposited by the Endwell company by a deduction of said amount from the one-eighth return from actual output of the company's own wells, said company is not entitled to a return of said $200.00 under any other conditions.

State Board of Public Works, Columbus, Ohio.

GENTLEMEN:—Your communcation of some time ago, written by Mr. E. E. Booton, engineer of the canal land department, in which he states that the officers of The Endwell Oil & Gas Company of Sugar Grove, Ohio, had expressed their dissatisfaction with an opinion rendered by me on September 11, 1911, to your board relative to the right of said company to participate or share in certain revenues collected from The Ohio Fuel Supply Company for gas taken from certain wells located on the Hocking canal lands owned by the state, but held under a lease to the said The Endwell Oil & Gas Company, believing that Mr. Booton had misstated the facts in regard to the lease, was duly received.

I want to state to your board that said opinion was rendered by me under a musunderstanding of the facts, but Mr. Booton had not misstated the facts at all. Mr. Booten's last communication gives a complete statement of the facts as follows:

> "On December 2, 1898, the canal commission and board of public works granted three leases to E. M. Poston, W. H. Jennings and L. D. Lampman respectively, covering the lands later leased to the Endwell

Oil & Gas Company and other lands in addition thereto for the term of ten years, the aggregate rental being $25,000.00, which was paid in advance.

"Shortly after these leases were taken out, they were assigned to The Federal Gas & Fuel Company and the assignment was duly approved by the board of public works as required by the terms of the lease. At a later date these leases appear to have been acquired in some way by the Ohio Fuel Supply Company, but the assignment was never approved by the board of public works.

"Sometime before the leases expired, an application was filed requesting a renewal of their pipe line lease, and when they were requested to renew the lease for gas and oil, they replied that the field was exhausted and that they were preparing to draw their casings, with a view to abandoning all their canal leases. Having no reason to doubt their statement, the board of public works granted The Ohio Fuel Supply Company a renewal of its pipe line leases, and some six months after the expiration of the original leases, a lease was granted to The Endwell Oil & Gas Company for a portion of the territory for the purpose of drilling thereon for oil and gas, the strip leased being the berme bank of the Hocking canal between Maple street, in Lancaster, Ohio, and the canal bridge at Enterprise.

"When the Endwell people went on the ground, they found the Ohio Fuel Supply Company operating four wells upon the canal property.

"This fact they reported to the land department and expressed a desire to secure these wells in order to drill them deeper in hopes of striking oil.

"The facts were laid before the board of public works and I was directed to place the facts before Mr. Alburn, second assistant attorney general, with the request that he take steps to secure a settlement for the gas. Mr. Alburn was very busy with other matters and the matter was delayed until it was reported that The Ohio Fuel Supply Company was pulling the wells. He was urged to bring an injunction to stop this, but the work was practically completed when he and I visited the fourth well.

"Mr. Alburn endeavored to have the Ohio fuel people discontinue work on the last well until some understanding could be arranged between the state and the company, but by some misunderstanding (possibly intentional on the part of some one representing the company) the work continued over Sunday, the casing was drawn and the well plugged.

"Shortly after this the board of public works notified The Ohio Fuel Supply Company to appear before the board and render an account of the gas taken from the state property. A representative met the board on at least two occasions and on the last occasion furnished the board with a statement taken, as he said from the books of the company, showing that so many thousand cubic feet of gas had been produced from these wells since the expiration of the original lease to Poston and others.

"He also stated the price the company was paying others for gas in this locality.

"On this basis it was found that the state on a one-eighth royalty was entitled to something like $200.00 and settlement was made for this amount.

"Now the Endwell people contend that the amount reported by

> The Ohio Fuel Supply Company was a mere fraction of the actual amount produced, and that the actual value of the output of these four wells was at least $16,000.00, of which The Endwell Oil & Gas Company was entitled to seven-eighths."

And have been approved as set forth therein by the president and secretary of The Endwell Oil & Gas Company, for the consideration of the same by me.

Your board request me to render it an opinion upon the following matters relative to said controversy, viz:

> "First. Whether or not The Endwell Oil & Gas Company is entitled to seven-eighths of the rental collected by the state and a like proportion of any further amount that may be collected from The Ohio Fuel Supply Company in case the charges made by The Endwell Oil & Gas Company are substantiated.
> "Second. Whether or not The Endwell Oil & Gas Company are entitled to receive back from the state the $200.00, the advanced payment made by it under its lease, in case it is not entitled to participate in the rentals already collected or that may hereafter be collected by the state from The Ohio Fuel Supply Company.
> "Third. Whether the board of public works could legally pay to The Endwell Oil & Gas Company any portion of the money already collected or that may hereafter be collected from either company without a special act of the General Assembly authorizing the same."

In order to answer your first question and properly determine the rights of The Endwell Oil & Gas Company it is necessary to look to the lease executed by your board to said company, a copy of which you attached to your communication, and upon examination of said lease I find that said lease contained the following:

> "The party of the first part (the board of public works) hereby leases to the party of the second part (The Endwell Oil & Gas Company), its successors and assigns the following described positions of the berme embankment of the Ohio canal with the right to said second party, its successors and assigns, to enter upon, occupy and use said lands for the purpose of drilling therein for gas and oil, laying therein the pipes necessary for transporting the same and erecting and maintaining tanks and other equipment and machinery necessary for storing and handling the oil and gas therein discovered." and the clause reciting the consideration for said lease is in part as follows:

> "Now, therefore, in consideration of the payment by the party of the second part of $200.00 in advance, and in consideration of the other rents and royalties herein provided and the conditions and stipulations herein contained it is hereby agreed."

It is plain to be seen from the above quoted stipulations in the lease from your board to The Endwell Oil & Gas Company that all that was granted to the said company by said lease was:

> "The right to enter upon, occupy and use said lands for the purpose of 'drilling' therein for gas and oil and laying the necessary pipes to transport the same and erecting and maintaining tanks and other equipment and machinery necessary for storing and handling the oil and gas therein discovered."

There were no other rights acquired by said lessee under said lease and it is significant that nothing in said lease referred directly or indirectly to any gas or oil either to be transported, tanked or a royalty paid for to state "except such as discovered by said company in drilling the wells it agreed to drill in said lands."

From the facts above stated and a careful consideration of the said lease, I am of the legal opinion that the only vested rights held by The Endwell Oil & Gas Company, lessee, under its lease, during the time the gas in question was taken from the four wells by The Ohio Fuel Supply Company was as above stated and "not to have the output of" any well or wells not drilled by it under the terms of its lease.

There is nothing exclusive granted to said lessee under said lease other than as above indicated, therefore, I am of the opinion that The Endwell Oil & Gas Company is not entitled to the seven-eighths (7/8) of the rental already collected by the state nor a like proportion of any further amount that may be collected from The Ohio Fuel Supply Company.

In answer to your second question I desire to say that the $200.00 which The Endwell Oil & Gas Company paid in advance as part of the consideration for said lease, was to be paid to said company upon certain conditions set forth in said lease which were as follows:

> "The party of the second part agrees to properly care for output of said wells, to deliver all of such output free of cost to the party of the first part as security for payments due such party of the first part, into the pipe lines of its company with which second party may connect its said wells where such output shall be divided so that the first party shall receive credit for one-eighth of such output of gas or oil, so delivered and said second party seven-eighths (7/8) and to pay such first party as royalty the purchase price of one-eighth (1/8) of such entire output. Provided, however, that ten (10) per cent. shall be deducted from the one-eighth (1/8) royalty each year until the amount so deducted shall equal $200.00 and thereafter the state shall receive the full one-eighth (1/8) royalty."

There having been no breach of the lease by the state, and the terms of said lease being as just above set forth, I am of the legal opinion that the state should not and could not return the said $200.00 to said lessee under no other circumstances than a credit on any royalty due the state for gas or oil that may be produced from wells drilled on said lands by said lessee as provided in said lease.

As to your third and last question it is not necessary to go into the matter as to whether or not the board of public works could legally pay The Endwell Oil & Gas Company any portion of the money collected from the other company without a special act of the general assembly authorizing the same, in view of the answer to your first and second questions wherein I hold that said The Endwell Oil & Gas Company are not entitled to participate in any revenue collected as a royalty from gas produced from wells it did not drill under the terms of its lease.

Very truly yours,

TIMOTHY S. HOGAN,

Attorney General.

ABANDONED CANAL LANDS—EXPENDITURES OF SURVEY, PLATTING, MONUMENTING AND SELLING MAY BE PAID FROM CANAL FUNDS AND RECEIPTS OF SALE BE CREDITED BACK.

Section 7 of the Act of 102 Ohio Laws, 293, providing for the abandonment of certain portions of the Ohio canal, and Section 5 of the Act of 102, Ohio Laws, 49__, providing for the abandonment of a certain portion of the Hocking Canal, each provide that all expenses of surveying, platting, monumenting and selling or leasing said abandoned canal lands, shall be paid out of the "canal funds or other funds provided for the surveying of canal lands," and further provide for the crediting back to such funds a like amount from the receipts of sale.

The words "provided for the sale of canal lands" as employed in the above sections, apply only to "or other funds" and do not limit or qualify the words "canal funds" and it is not the purpose of the Legislature to limit the fund from which the enumerated expenditures could be made to the fund specifically provided for the survey of canal lands.

Such expenditures may therefore be made from the funds appropriated for the survey of canal lands or from any other canal funds.

October 7, 1912.

State Board of Public Works, Columbus, Ohio.

GENTLEMEN:—Your favor of October 4, 1912, through Hon. E. E. Booton, Engineer Canal Land Department, has been received, in which it is stated:

> "The acts passed by the seventy-ninth general assembly, providing for the abandonment of certain portions of the Ohio canal and for the abanbonment of the Hocking canal authorized the state board of public works and the chief engineer of the public works, acting jointly, to cause such surveys to be made of said canal property as in their judgment is necessary for the purpose of carrying out the provisions of this act, together with such maps and plats of the same as will facilitate the selling and leasing of said canal lands. Section 7 of the act to abandon the Ohio canal (O. L. 102, p. 294) and Section 5 of the act to abandon the Hocking canal (O. L. 102, p. 491) provides that all accounts of expenses incident to surveying, platting and monumenting said abandoned canal lands, together with the necessary expenses of advertising, selling or leasing the same, shall be verified and approved by the chief engineer and the board of public works, and paid out of the canal funds, or other funds provided for the survey of canal lands, and the auditor of state is hereby directed to credit back to the fund or funds from which such payments are made, the like amount in any sum not to exceed twenty thousand dollars from the receipts derived from the sale and leases on the Ohio canal, and a like amount in any sum not to exceed five thousand dollars from the receipts derived from the sale and leases of said Hocking canal lands.
> "In carrying out the provisions of these two acts surveying and platting of the lands on these canals has been in progress for the past fifteen months. The joint board had hoped to makes sales of a portion of these lands prior to the first of September, 1912, but owing to injunction suits, brought by the city of Newark and the owners of property abutting on said canal lands, in said city, we have been prevented from making the proposed sales. The result is that the special appropriation for making surveys and credited to the canal land department will be exhausted possibly before these sales can be consummated.

"Sections 5 and 7, referred to above, provide that the expenses shall be paid out of the canal funds. This is the regular fund accredited to the board of public works from appropriations and earnings from leases of land and water power and is always accredited to the canal repair fund simply as a convenience for keeping the funds separate from the appropriations made to the canal land department. So far all of the expenses have been paid out of the appropriations made to the canal land department. As we interpret the law, we can, if necessary, pay out of the canal funds temporarily sufficient to carry on this work until sales can be made from which the amount can be repaid from the fund from which such payments were made.

"Will you kindly advise us whether or not we are correct in our interpretation of these statutes and whether or not these payments may be made for temporary purposes from the regular canal funds?"

Upon inquiry at your office it appears that the amount expended for platting and surveying the canal lands in question, amounts to about $12,700.00.

There are two acts to be construed in this opinion. The one found in 102 Ohio Laws, 293, provides for the abandonment of certain portions of the Ohio canal. The other, found in 102 Ohio Laws, 490, provides for the abandonment of a portion of the Hocking canal. The provisions of these two acts to be considered are similar.

Sections 2, 3 and 7 of the act in 102 Ohio Laws 293, provides:

"That the state board of public works and the chief engineer of the public works, acting jointly, shall cause such surveys to be made of said canal property as in their judgment is necessary for the purpose of carrying out the provisions of this act, together with such maps and plats of the same as will facilitate the selling or leasing of said canal lands, which plats shall be preserved as permanent records in the office of the state board of public works.

"Section 3. As soon as such surveys and plats have been completed, the state board of public works and the chief engineer of public works, acting as a joint board, shall proceed to appraise, and lease or sell, as they may deem for the best interest of the state, subject to the approval of the governor and attorney general, said canal lands, except as hereinafter noted, in strict conformity with the various provisions of the statutes of Ohio relating to the leasing and selling of state canal lands, except that the grant of such leases shall be for a term of not less than fifteen nor more than twenty-five years, and that the bed and banks of said abandoned canal property may be included in any lease of such canal lands.

"Section 7. All accounts of expenses incident to surveying, platting and monumenting said abandoned canal lands, together with the necessary expenses of advertising, selling or leasing the same, shall be verified and approved by the chief engineer and the board of public works, and paid out of the canal funds, or other funds provided for the survey of canal lands, and the auditor of state is hereby directed to credit back to the fund or funds from which such payments are made, a like amount in any sum not to exceed twenty thousand dollars ($20,000.00) from the receipts derived from the sale and leases of said lands."

Sections 2, 3 and 5 of the act of 102 Ohio Laws, 490, provides:

"Section 2. That the state board of public works and the chief engineer of the public works, acting jointly, shall cause such surveys to be made of said canal property as in their judgment is necessary for the purpose of carrying out the provisions of this act, together with such maps and plats of the same as will facilitate the selling or leasing of said canal lands, which plats shall be preserved as permanent records in the office of the state board of public works.

"Section 3. As soon as such surveys and plats have been completed, the state board of public works and the chief engineer of the public works, acting as a joint board, shall proceed to appraise, and lease or sell, as they may deem for the best interest of the state, subject to the approval of the governor and attorney general, said canal lands in strict conformity with the various provisions of the statutes of Ohio relating to the leasing and selling of state canal lands, except that the grant of such leases shall be for a term of not less than fifteen nor more than twenty-five years, and that the bed and banks of said abandoned canal property may be included in any lease of such canal lands.

"Section 5. All accounts of expenses, incident to surveying, platting and monumenting said abandoned canal lands, together with the necessary expenses of advertising, selling or leasing the same, shall be verified and approved by the chief engineer and the board of public works, and paid out of the canal funds, or other funds provided for the survey of canal lands, and the auditor of state is hereby directed to credit back to the fund or funds from which such payments are made, a like amount in any sum not to exceed five thousand ($5,000.00) dollars from the receipts derived from the sales and leases of said lands."

These acts do not make a specific appropriation of any sum or sums to be expended for the purpose of platting, surveying and monumenting the several parts of the abandoned canals. The acts authorize the expenses of plating, surveying and monumenting said lands, and the expenses of advertising, selling and leasing the same to be "paid out of the canal funds, or other funds provided for the surveying of canal lands." They further direct the auditor of state to credit back to the "fund or funds from which such payments are made" a like amount from the receipts derived from the sale and lease of said lands, in any sum not to exceed $20,000.00 for the Ohio canal, and not to exceed $5,000.00 in the act pertaining to the Hocking canal. It appears that to date $12,700.00 has been expended for these purposes. This is but a little more than half of the aggregate amount that may be credited back to the fund or funds from the receipts to be derived from the sale and lease of said canal lands.

The acts do not fix any one specific fund from which payment of such expenses may be made in the first instance. The acts, in fact, contemplate that such payments may be made from one or more funds.

It appears that the expenditures to date have been made from the special fund appropriated for the survey of canal lands and that this fund is now nearly exhausted. It appears further that your department has a canal repair fund which is derived from appropriations and earnings from leases of land and water power. This is the general canal fund.

It was not the purpose of the legislature, in my opinion, to limit the fund from which the enumerated expenditures could be made, to the fund specifically provided for the survey of canal lands.

The phrase is that such expenditures shall be "paid out of the canal funds, or other funds provided for the survey of canal lands." The latter part of this phrase makes the meaning not entirely clear. The words "provided for the survey of canal lands" applies only to the words immediately preceding them, to-wit, "or other funds" and does not limit or qualify the words "canal funds." A construction making these words limit both "or other funds" and "canal funds" would eliminate the general canal funds as one of the funds from which such payments could be made. This was not in my opinion the intention of the legislature in enacting this provision.

Ultimately such expenses are to be paid from the receipts derived from the sale and lease of said abandoned canal lands. Until such sales or leases can be made it is provided that the expenditures required to plat, survey and sell or lease the land should be advanced from funds available for canal purposes. The fund or funds from which such advance payments are made, are to be reimbursed from the receipts derived from the sale and lease of said lands.

I am, therefore, of the opinion that the expenditures required for the platting, surveying and monumenting of said canal lands, and for advertising, selling or leasing the same, as provided for in the acts of 102 Ohio Laws, 293, and 102 Ohio Laws, 490, may be made from funds appropriated for the survey of canal lands or from any other canal funds.

Respectfully,
TIMOTHY S. HOGAN,
Attorney General.

LEASES OF SURPLUS CANAL WATER TO AKRON WATER WORKS COMPANY—ASSIGNMENT TO CITY OF AKRON—RIGHTS OF STATE TO WATER RENTAL FROM CITY—EFFECT OF GRANT OF 102 O. L. 175, TO CITY OF AKRON OF WATER FROM CERTAIN RIVERS—RIGHTS OF CITY AND STATE.

The city of Akron purchased from the Akron Water Works Company, two leases granted to the latter by the state of Ohio to a certain amount of water from Summit Lake, Long Lake and Nessmith Lake. Subsequently, the legislature by act of 102 O. L., 175 granted to the city of Akron the right to divert and use forever, for the purpose of supplying water to said city of Akron and the inhabitants thereof, the Tuscarawas, the Big Cuyahoga, and the Little Cuyahoga rivers, subject to canal navigation uses and upon the condition that the city shall at all times save "the state harmless from all claims arising from such grant and construction thereunder.

Held: The lessee and the assignee of the leases take subject to the right of the state to abandon the canals and the "leases imposed no obligation whatever to furnish or supply the city with water." They did nothing more than confer on the (lessees and assignees) the privilege of using the surplus water whenever and so long as there would be a surplus above that employed in navigation. The leases contain the implied covenant of quiet enjoyment to the effect that "so long as the canal was used for purposes of navigation and while there was during the period it was so used, a surplus of water above that which was required for navigation, the lessors agreed that they would do no such acts as would deprive the lessees or assignees of its enjoyment."

The leases were executed and delivered before the passage of the act in 102 O. L., 175, under which the city of Akron claims to hold. The grant of said act was subject to the prior rights of the lessees and assignees.

The city of Akron chose to purchase the leases and if it does not pay the rentals, it is not saving the state harmless by virtue of the grant of 102 O. L., 175, when it seeks to take advantage of it.

The state may sue either or both the lessee under the leases, or the assignee, since the lease did not contain any restrictions against assignment. But one recovery may be had, however.

The agreement in the lease to pay rent amounts to a covenant, which the city of Akron as assignee assumes.

A grant by the government is construed strictly against the grant of privilege and though this rule is relaxed in most masses where a consideration is paid, the relaxation does not apply when the grant is one of rights and which the state holds in trust for public uses, such as the control of navigable waters. The city receives the grant only in its governmental capacity and reserves only what is granted in clear and explicit terms.

Under the act in question, therefore, the state gets a right only to use or divert the waters of the rivers and their tributaries named and since Summit Lake is not a tributary, it is not a grant of a right to use or divert the waters in the canals of which Summit Lake is a part.

Though the lease provides for the shutting off of water when rent is not paid, the better procedure would be for the state to sue for rent due under the leases.

December 21, 1912.

Board of Public Works, Columbus, Ohio.

GENTLEMEN:—You have referred to me for consideration the matter of the claim of the state of Ohio against the city of Akron for water rent as the assignee of two leases given to the Akron Water Works Company by the state of Ohio for surplus water to be taken from certain lakes in Summit county.

The first lease was entered into on September 30, 1902, and is to run until December 31, 1918, and calls for an annual rental of $1,500.00, payable semi-annually in advance on the first days of May and November of each year. The second lease was entered into on February 12, 1910, and is to end on April 16, 1914, and calls for an annual rental of $4,500.00, payable semi-annually in advance on the first days of May and November. The second lease is made as an additional lease to the first. The Akron Water Works Company took possession under these leases and was in possession at the time it transferred its plant to the city of Akron.

On October 16, 1911, the Akron Water Works Company gave an option to the city of Akron to purchase its entire plant including all easements and rights possessed by it. The city of Akron exercised its option and purchased said plant. The actual transfer was made to begin with April 1, 1912, and was made in accordance with the terms of the option.

The fifth clause of this option read as follows:

> "Said the Akron Water Works Company will, within sixty (60) days after the receipt by it of said written notice from the said city of Akron of its intention to exercise said option and making by said city of its first payment, furnish to said city for examination full and complete abstracts showing a good and sufficient title of record to all of the real estate held by it in fee and showing further the RIGHTS and EASEMENTS held by it under certain grants, and upon payment of the remainder of said purchase price and the actual cost of said extensions and improvements, supplies, materials and personal property on hand, which payment must be made or secured to the satisfaction of said The Akron Water Works Company on or before the first day of May, 1912, upon the terms and in the manner above stated, will transfer and convey, or cause to be transferred and conveyed to said city of Akron, by appropriate instruments in writing, a good and sufficient title to all the property, both real and personal and mixed, as hereinbefore mentioned and on the terms and conditions herein stated, free and clear from all encumbrances whatsoever, save and except that such EASEMENTS and RIGHTS or other interests in real estate owned by said company but not held by it in fee, shall be transferred and conveyed to said city of Akron under the same restrictions, terms and conditions upon and under which said EASEMENTS and RIGHTS are held by said company."

By virtue of this provision of the option and the final purchase by the city of Akron, said city of Akron became the assignee of the Akron Water Works Company in the two leases in question. The city of Akron now refuses to pay the rental and your honorable board desires to know the proper course for it to pursue in the premises.

The city of Akron maintains that it is not required to pay said rental and is exempted therefrom by the provisions of the act of 102 Ohio Laws, 175.

This act provides in full as follows:

> "Section 1. That there is hereby granted to the city of Akron, in the county of Summit, and state of Ohio, the right to divert and use forever for the purpose of supplying water to said city of Akron and the inhabitants thereof, the Tuscarawas river, the big Cuyahoga and little Cuyahoga rivers, and the tributaries thereto, now wholly or partly owned or controlled by the state and used for the purpose of supplying water to the northern division of the Ohio canal, provided, however, and this grant is upon the condition that at no time shall said city use the waters of any such stream, to such extent or in such manner as to diminish or lessen the supply now necessary, to maintain the flow in and through the canal as said canal now exists or as hereafter may become necessary for navigation purposes for an enlarged canal and upon the further condition that the city of Akron shall at all times save the state harmless from all claims arising from such grant and construction thereunder.

"Section 2. There is hereby granted to said city of Akron for the water works purposes as aforesaid the right to enter in and upon and occupy the lands of the state in said Summit county to develop additional storage either by the construction of new reservoirs or dams, or the enlargement of those already constructed by the state on said rivers, always provided that said construction or enlargement will not result in any interference with or diminution of the supply now necessary for said canal for navigation purposes. And, provided further, that before any such construction of reservoirs or dams, or enlargement of reservoirs or dams now existing shall be commenced, the plans and specifications therefor be first approved by the chief engineer of the state board of public works. And further provided, that any diversion or impounding on the lands of the state of said Tuscarawas river and the tributaries thereto, by said city of Akron shall be east of highway known as South Main street extended south. And if the waters of said Tuscarawas river are impounded, used or diverted by said city, the amount of the flow as now or hereafter used and controlled by the state shall not be diminished by such impounding, use or diversion by said city during the months of June, July, August, September, October and November; and at no time shall said city of Akron take or use from any reservoir constructed on the Tuscarawas river an amount of water in excess of an annual average of fifteen million gallons per day, unless with the approval of the board of public works, and upon such terms and conditions as may be agreed upon between the said board of public works and said city of Akron, and the chief engineer of the said board of public works shall at all times have access to said property for the purpose of ascertaining the amount of water that is being used by said city of Akron.

"The governor shall appoint a commission of three arbitrators to fix the compensation to be paid the state by the city of Akron for any lands or property, exclusive of water, taken by the city of Akron under the provisions of this act.

"Provided that any money accruing to the state under this act shall be paid into the state treasury to the credit of the general revenue fund.

"Section 3. The governor, upon behalf of the state shall execute and deliver to the city of Akron, Summit county, Ohio, a grant of the right to use forever the waters of such streams, as herein provided, under the provisions herein set forth and for the purposes herein stated.

"The attorney general shall prepare the form of said grant."

This act does not refer in any manner to the leases of The Akron Water Works Company. Said company was exercising its rights under said leases at the time of the passage of said act and continued to exercise said rights and to pay the rental therein provided up to the time of the assignment of the leases to the city of Akron, to-wit, to April 1, 1912.

The above act grants to the city of Akron,

> "the right to divert and use forever for the purpose of supplying water to said city of Akron and the inhabitants thereof, the Tuscarawas river, the big Cuyahoga and little Cuyahoga rivers, and the tributaries thereto, now wholly or partly owned or controlled by the state and used for the purpose of supplying water to the northern division of the Ohio canal."

In the first lease above mentioned the right was to draw water from Summit lake, as is shown by the following provision thereof:

> "It is agreed, that subject to the restrictions, limitations and conditions herein contained, the said party of the first part does hereby grant unto the said party of the second part, its successors and assigns, the right to draw water from said Summit Lake in such quantity as will pass through a pipe eight inches in diameter in accordance with the mode described in said petition, and in the manner shown by the said plans and profiles, said water to be used for water works purposes."

The second gives the lessee the right to draw water from Summit Lake, Long Lake or Nesmith Lake, as is provided in the second paragraph thereof, which reads:

> "That the party of the first part, in consideration of the rents hereinafter stipulated, and upon the express condition that the party of the second part shall, during the whole term of this agreement, comply with the conditions and limitations hereinafter contained, agrees to permit said party of the second part to draw, during the term of this agreement, from Summit Lake, Long Lake or Nesmith Lake, by pipes or other suitable means, such quantity of water as it, The Akron Water Works Company, may from time to time need or require for its water works purposes during the term of this agreement, not exceeding an average daily maximum of ten million gallons; including the quantity permitted to be taken or drawn under said agreement dated September 30, 1902, hereinafter mentioned; by the amount of water hereby permitted to be drawn shall be subject to the quantity required by the state of Ohio for navigation and the lockage of boats from what is known as the Summit Lake level."

The next paragraph of said second lease reads:

> "Said party of the first part hereby agrees to permit said party of the second part to lay upon the banks of the Ohio canal and the lands belonging to said party of the first part such pipes, and to construct thereon such other appliances, as may be necessary for said party of the second part to construct and maintain for the purpose of taking the water as herein provided from either or all of said lakes."

It will be observed that the second lease contained an express stipulation that the lessee should comply with the terms of said lease "during the whole term of this agreement."

The rights of the state of Ohio against The Akron Water Works Company will be first considered.

Said leases are for surplus water only. If all of the water in said lakes is required for the purposes of navigation, the lessee could not use any of the water. It is also held and firmly established in this state and other states that leases for surplus water of the state's canals are taken subject to the right of the state to abandon said canals.

In Hubbard vs. Toledo, 21 Ohio St., 379, it is held:

> "The abandonment of her public canals by the state, creates no liability on her part to respond in damages resulting therefrom to parties holding leases of 'surplus water,' under the act of March 23, 1840, 'to provide for the protection of the canals of the state of Ohio, the regulation of the navigation thereof, and the collection of tolls.'"

The lessees of surplus water of the canals of the state of Ohio take their leases subject to the right of the state to resume the water for the use of navigation in its canals and also subject to the right of the state to abandon its canals. If the state resumes all the water or abandons the canal, the lease for surplus water is terminated and the lessee has no further rights under the lease and has no right of action against the state because of the lease having been ended before the term for which the lease was made.

In this case the state has not exercised either of the above privileges. It still has surplus water to dispose of. So long as the state has surplus water, can it enforce said leases during the terms and compel the lessee to pay the rental therein stipulated and covenanted to be paid?

At Section 352*a* of Jones on Landlord and Tenant it is said:

> "On the lease of the surplus water in a canal, the covenant for quiet enjoyment which the law annexed to the lease was that so long as the canal was used for purposes of navigation and while there was a surplus of water, the lessors agreed that they would do no acts to interrupt or deprive the lessee of its enjoyment. On the abandonment of the canal for navigation, the lessors were under no obligation to continue to keep it in repair."

In Commonwealth vs. The Pennsylvania Railroad Company, 51 Pa. St. 351, Strong, J., says at page 355:

> "It would have been no breach of faith in her at any time to construct her canal along another route and abandon all her works on the Kiskiminetas, making no other compensation to her lessee of surplus water than a relinquishment of the rent reserved. It was only while she chose to maintain those works, and had surplus water at dam No. 2, water which she did not use for purposes of navigation, that Speer had any right against her under the demise."

In case of Hoagland vs. The New York, Chicago & St. Louis Railway Company, 111 Ind., 443, it is held:

> "A covenant for quiet enjoyment is implied in every mutual contract for leasing land, by whatever form of words the agreement is made.
> "Under a lease made by the state of the use of so much of the surplus water, not required for navigation, of the Wabash and Erie Canal as would be sufficient to propel certain machinery in the lessee's mills, the implied convenant for quiet enjoyment was such that, so long as the canal was used for purposes of navigation, and while there was during that period, a surplus of water, the lessor agreed to do no acts which would interrupt or deprive the lessee of its enjoyment.

"The contract in such case did not impose upon the lessor or its grantees any obligation to keep the canal in repair, or to maintain it in such a condition that a surplus of water would be available, or to supply the lessee with any water whatever, but the latter took the lease subject to all the vicissitudes which might attend a public work of that character, and to the right of the lessor or its grantees to abandon the canal for purposes of navigation and to appropriate it to other uses including the construction of a railroad on the line occupied by it, thereby filling up the channel."

The matter is fully discussed in the opinion and it will be liberally quoted from. On page 447, Mitchell, J., says:

"The decisions of this and other courts establish beyond question, that the lessor, by the terms of the lease in question, assumed no obligation to maintain the canal in repair, or to keep it in such a condition as that a surplus of water above that needed for navigation should be available. The lease imposed no obligation whatever to furnish or supply the lessees with water. It did nothing more than confer upon them the privilege of using the surplus water whenever and so long as there should be a surplus above that employed in navigation. Indeed, it is apparent from the face of the lease, that both parties contemplated that the supply of water might become partially or wholly inadequate. In the event of such a contingency, the lease made provision for a corresponding reduction or suspension of rent."

Also on page 448, he further says:

"By their lease, the lessees simply obtained the privilege of using for motive power at their mill wheels so much of the surplus water, passing through the canal, as was not necessary to carry out the primary purpose for which the work was constructed. The state and its grantees, who succeeded to its rights and liabilities, had the right to resume the use of all the water, or to abandon the canal entirely at pleasure. Whether they exercised the right of abandonment, or resumption, the effect upon the privilege granted to the lessees was the same. In neither event did the lessor become liable to any other consequence than the inability to collect rent from the lessees."

Mitchell, J., further says on pages 488 and 449:

"The covenant for quiet enjoyment, which the law annexed to the lease in controversy, was, therefore, such that so long as the canal was used for purposes of navigation, and while there was during the period it was so used, a surplus of water above that which was required for navigation, the lessors agreed that they would do no such acts as would interrupt or deprive the lessees of its enjoyment. This was the extent of the covenant, because the privilege granted, and to which the covenant related, extended no further. So long, therefore, as the owners do not act in violation of this covenant they cannot be liable for a breach of the covenant of quiet enjoyment."

This case was again considered upon a motion for rehearing and Elliot, J., delivered the opinion of the court affirming its former holding.

He says on pages 452 and 453 of the same report as follows:

"When the canal was abandoned, there was no subject upon which the lease could operate, and it ceased to be effective. This result, as the decisions referred to in the original opinion clearly show, the lessor was not bound to prevent. There was no obligation, express or implied, that water should always be supplied, nor that the canal should be so maintained as that the lease should remain operative. On the contrary, the clear implication is, that when the subject of the lease ceased to exist, the rights of the parties under it terminated fully and completely.

"The appellants did not acquire any corporeal property; all that they acquired was an incorporeal right. Their right was to use the water, for they did not acquire any right to the corpus of the water, much less to any of the land. Angell Water Course, Section 90. The incorporeal right which they acquired was to the use of surplus water, and when the abandonment of the canal for the purposes of navigation made it impossible that there should be surplus water, the incorporeal property which formed the subject of the lease ceased to exist. If the subject of the lease—that is, the incorporeal right to the use of the surplus water—ceased to exist when the canal was abandoned, then the appellants had no longer any right in the canal or its appurtenances, because the only property on which their lease could operate was gone."

The subject of the leases now in question is the surplus water. There is no obligation or covenant upon the part of the state to maintain a supply of surplus water. The subject matter of the lease is liable to be extinguished by the resumption of the water for navigation purposes, or by the abandonment of the canal. The lessee takes the lease for surplus water subject to extinguishment of the subject matter of the lease by either of the above means.

In the case now under consideration the subject matter of the lease has not been extinguished. The state still has surplus water and so long as it has surplus water it is under obligations to furnish it to the lessee as provided in the leases.

The leases do not contain a covenant for quiet enjoyment, but as held in Hoagland vs. Railway Co., 111 Ind. 443, supra, a covenant for quiet enjoyment is implied so long as the subject matter is in existence.

Therefore, so long as the state has surplus water it cannot release itself from the obligations of the lease without the consent of the lessee or its assignee.

The leases in this case were executed and delivered before the passage of the act in 102, Ohio Laws 175, under which the city of Akron now claims to hold. This grant was subject to all prior rights of lessees to the use of the surplus water. The leases were binding upon the state of Ohio, and it could not, after the execution and delivery of the leases and while they were in effect, make a further lease or grant which would interfere with the rights of the lessees under said leases.

In case of Board of Trustees vs. Reinhart, 22 Ind. 463, it is held:

"Where successive leases of water power on the Wabash & Erie Canal are executed by the trustees thereof to different persons, and the water in the canal proves insufficient to supply the requisite amount to all the lessees, but is sufficient to supply some of them, the lessees should be supplied in the order in which the leases are executed."

In Detwiler vs. Toledo, 3 Cir. Dec. 177, it is held:

"D. having by lease from the State Canal Commissioners, the prior right, for the purposes of running his mill, to draw from a certain level of the Miami & Erie Canal, surplus water not necessary for the use of navigation, to the amount of 1,800 cubic feet of water per minute, may maintain an injunction against a subsequent lessee of said Commissioners, restraining such subsequent lessee from drawing water from said level at such times or in such manner as to interfere with D's prior right thereto, D's right to draw some water from said level being admitted, and the controversy between the parties being as to the extent and priority of their respective rights to such surplus water."

The Akron Water Works Company, by virtue of their leases, had a prior right to the surplus water and the act of 102 Ohio Laws 175, could not deprive it of the rights which it possessed under its leases. The act does not refer to said leases and does not authorize the board of public works to cancel said leases. The act specifically provides that the grant shall be taken

"upon the further condition that the city of Akron shall at all times save the state harmless from all claims arising from such grant and construction thereunder."

Under the grant given to it by the act of 102 Ohio Laws 175, the city of Akron has the right to use the waters of the big Cuyahoga, little Cuyahoga and Tuscarawas rivers and their tributaries, for the purpose of supplying water to said city and its inhabitants, subject to prior rights of any and all lessees to such water. Instead of taking the water subject to the rights of all prior lessees, it chose to purchase and become the assignee of a prior lessee of the surplus water, to-wit, of The Akron Water Works Company. It is now using the water by virtue of the plant of The Akron Water Works Company and under said leases, and not by virtue of the grant given it by act of 102, Ohio Laws, 175. By assuming said leases and then refusing to pay the rental thereof it is not saving the state harmless by virtue of its grant, but is depriving the state of an annual revenue of six thousand dollars.

The state has not released the lessees from their obligations under the lease, nor has the lessee released the state from its obligation thereunder. The leases are still in operation and are binding upon the parties thereto.

The city of Akron is the assignee of the leases and is in possession thereunder.

The rights of the lessor as against the lessee and its assignee is determined in Sutliff vs. Atwood, 15 Ohio St., 186, wherein it is held:

"Where a lease was made of a 'dairy farm,' with certain stock thereon, for a term of years at a stipulated 'annual rent,' the contract for rent runs with the land; and the assignees of the term are bound for its payment; whether they be such by the voluntary assignment of the lessee, or by purchase at sheriff's sale.

"An express contract of the lessee fixes his liabilities for the whole term; but that of the assignee is limited to the rent accruing during the continuance of his interest. The lessor may, at his election, pursue either or both for payment.

"It is the legal duty of the assignee to pay the rent while he enjoys the estate; and the personal liability of the lessee is in the nature of a security as between him and the assignee, and, in the absence of agreement between them, the latter is primarily liable."

On page 194, White, J., says:

"But the liability of the lessee, arising from express contract, is so permanently fixed during the whole term, that no act of his own can absolve him from the lessor's demands in respect to it. An assignment with the lessor's concurrence, and his subsequent receipt of rent from the assignee will be ineffectual for this purpose. The lessor, where there is an express agreement of the lessee, may sue, at his election, either the lessee or the assignee, or may pursue his remedy against both at the same time, though he can have, of course, but one satisfaction."

This case has been followed by later decisions of the Supreme Court of Ohio. In Smith vs. Harrison, 42 Ohio St. 180, it is held:

"The lessee of a perpetual leasehold estate is liable, upon an express covenant to pay rent to the lessor, his heirs and assigns during the term, in an action by the assignee of the reversion for accruing rents, whether such rents accrue before or after an assignment by the lessee of all his interest in the leasehold estate."

For the recovery of the unpaid rent under the leases in question the state of Ohio may sue either the city of Akron or The Akron Water Works Company, or, if it chooses, it may sue both in the same action. It can have, however, only one recovery or payment of the rent.

In this case the lessor has not consented to the assignment of the leases. The leases do not contain any provision limiting in any way the right of the lessee to assign its interest in the leases.

The rule is stated at Section 108 of Taylor on Landlord and Tenant, as follows:

"The tenant of the original lessor so long as his interest lasts, has a right to underlet to any person; for, while his interest in the premises continue, he has the absolute disposition of it, unless some covenant between him and the landlord limits his power so to do."

There is an express agreement of the lessee to pay the rent stipulated to be paid in the two leases.

In the lease of September 30, 1902, it is provided:

"In consideration whereof the said party of the second part, for itself, its successors and assigns, hereby agrees to pay to the Collector of Rents and Tolls at Akron, O., or such other agents as the State may authorize to receive the same, an annual rental of fifteen hundred dollars ($1,500.00), said rental to be paid semi-annually in advance on the first day of May and November of each and every year during the continuance of this lease, in two equal installments of seven hundred and fifty dollars ($750.00) each."

In the second lease it is agreed:

> "And the said party of the second part, for and in consideration of the right to the use and occupation of the water hereby leased, agree to pay to the state the yearly rent or sum of four thousand five hundred dollars ($4,500.00) * * * * *
> "It is hereby understood and agreed that the rent herein stipulated shall be paid semi-annually in advance, on the first days of May and November in each and every year during the continuance of this lease, to the Collector of Canal Tolls at Akron, Ohio, or other agent of the state authorized to receive the same."

This is an express covenant to pay the rental. And as held in Sutliff vs. Atwood, 15 Ohio St. 186, supra, the lessee cannot release itself from liability under an express covenant, without the consent of the lessor.

In order to make an express covenant the use of the word "covenant" is not necessary. Any word which signifies an agreement to do some particular act in a deed or lease will constitute a covenant.

At Section 883 of Devlin on Real Estate, it is said:

> "A covenant may be created by any language showing the intention of the parties to bind themselves. No particular form is required, nor is it necessary to use any particular word. A covenant may be created without using the word 'covenant' in the clause containing the stipulation."

At Section 881, Devlin on Real Estate defines a covenant:

> "Covenants in deeds are those clauses or agreements whereby one party stipulates that certain facts are true, or obligates himself to perform or forbear doing something to or for the other."

In the leases now in question there is an express covenant to pay the rent stipulated therein.

As set forth in the option under which the purchase was made the city took the leases under the following conditions:

> "save and except that such easements and rights or other interests in real estate owned by said company but not held by it in fee, shall be transferred and conveyed to said city of Akron under the same restrictions, terms and conditions upon and under which said easements and rights are held by said company."

An assignment of an oil lease made in similar terms was passed upon in the case of Woodland Oil Co., vs. Crawford, 55 Ohio St. 161, wherein it is held:

> "U. assigned the lease to the oil company, and in such assignment stipulated that the oil company should have and hold the lease under the terms thereof, and under and subject to the rents and covenants therein reserved and contained, on part of the lessee to be paid, kept, done and performed, and the oil company accepted the assignment and received the lease thereunder. Held: That thereby the oil company stepped into the shoes of U., and assumed his obligations, and became liable for the rentals due under the lease."

When the city of Akron accepted the assignment of the leases upon the conditions expressed in the option, it assumed the obligation to pay to the state of Ohio the rental therein stipulated to be paid by the Akron Water Works Company.

It is urged that the act of 102 Ohio Laws 175 exempts the city of Akron from paying the rental under said leases.

Section one of this act granted to the city of Akron the right to use the waters of the big Cuyahoga, little Cuyahoga and Tuscarawas rivers and their tributaries.

The right of the city of Akron under this grant extends to the waters of these rivers and their tributaries. The leases grant the right to take water from Summit lake, Long lake or Nesmith lake. The lessee has been taking its water solely from Summit lake, and the city of Akron is now taking its water from said Summit lake and in the same manner as its assignee took its water.

Summit lake is a part of the canal. The canal passes directly through said Summit lake. Summit lake has not now a direct outlet or inlet to either of the rivers mentioned in the act of 102 Ohio Laws 175, or to any of their natural tributaries. It is a part of the canal. Its water comes into it from the canal and goes out through the canal. It has been in this status for probably seventy-five years. It is not a part of either of the rivers mentioned in the special grant, and it is not a tributary to either of them.

A tributary is defined at page 1993 of Volume 38 of Cyc.:

> "A running natural stream which empties into another stream; in ordinary language, a stream running into another stream."

Summit lake does not come within the above definition of a tributary. It has been appropriated by the state and is in fact a part of the canal and is not a part of the rivers or their tributaries.

A grant by the government is construed strictly and where the language used is uncertain or is ambiguous, it is construed in favor of the state and against the grantee.

In Dermott vs. State, 99 N. Y. 101, it is held:

> "While the rule requiring a strict construction, as against the grantee, of a grant from the state does not apply in all of its severity, and in all cases where the grant is for a good consideration, it may not be relaxed when the grant relates to rights, which the state holds in trust for the public use, such as the supervision of public highways and the control of navigable waters."

At Section 36 of Gould on Waters it is said:

> "The state may grant to individuals or corporations the soil of public navigable waters, or exclusive rights of fishery in them. If the terms of the grant are doubtful, that construction will be adopted which least restricts the rights of the state and of the public, inasmuch as public grants, whether made by the crown, or by congress, or by a state, are construed strictly, and pass only what appears by express words or necessary implication."

Justice Gray says at page 49 of Central Transportation Co., vs. Pullman Palace Co., 134 U. S. 24, as follows:

"By a familiar rule, every public grant of property, or of privileges or franchise, if ambiguous, is to be continued against the grantee and in favor of the public; because an intention, on the part of the government, to grant to private persons, or to a particular corporation, property or rights in which the whole public is interested, cannot be presumed, unless unequivocally expressed or necessarily implied in the terms of the grant; and because the grant is supposed to be made at the solicitation of the grantee and to be drawn up by him or by his agents, and therefore the words used are to be treated as those of the grantee; and this rule of construction is a wholesome safeguard of the interests of the public against any attempt of the grantee, by the insertion of ambiguous language, to take what could not be obtained in clear and express terms."

At Section 548 of Sutherland on Statutory Construction the rule is stated:

"The words of a private grant are taken most strongly against the grantor, though if the meaning cannot be discovered the instrument is void. But this rule is reversed in case of public grants. They are construed strictly in favor of the government on grounds of public policy. If the meaning of the words be doubtful in a grant designed to be of general benefit to the public, they will be taken most strongly against the grantee and for the government, and therefore should not be extended by implication in favor of the former beyond the natural and obvious meaning of the words employed. * * *

"Any ambiguity in the terms must operate in favor of the government. Whatever is not unequivocally granted is taken to be withheld. Whether the grant be of property, franchises or privileges, it is construed strictly in favor of the public; nothing passes but what is granted in clear and explicit terms, but it will be construed reasonably for the purpose the act contemplates."

The grant now under consideration is not made to a private person or corporation, it is made to a public corporation, a municipality, which is the agent of the state in many of its governmental duties.

Municipal corporations act in two capacities: governmental, and proprietary or municipal. In establishing a waterworks and furnishing its inhabitants with water it acts in its proprietary capacity and not in its governmental capacity.

At pages 268 and 269 of 28 Cyc. the municipal functions are given as follows:

"All functions of a municipal corporation, not governmental, are strictly municipal. They are sometimes called private, just as the governmental are called public; but this terminology is unfortunate, since all municipal functions are public, as pertaining to the public nature of the corporation. Under this class of functions are included, in most jurisdictions, the proper care of streets and alleys, parks and other public places, and the erection and maintenance of public utilities and improvements generally. Logically all those are strictly municipal functions which specially and peculiarly promote the comfort, convenience, safety, and happiness of the citizens of the municipality, rather than the welfare of the general public.

The grant in this case is for the special benefit of the people of the city of Akron. The state of Ohio as a whole is interested in its canals and this grant gave to a particular portion of the inhabitants of Ohio special privilege to use and divert water of the state. The city of Akron can only take what is granted in clear and explicit terms.

The language of the grant is not ambiguous or uncertain. It is a grant of the right to use or divert the waters of the rivers named, and is not a grant of the right to use or divert the waters in the canals of which Summit lake is a part.

By virtue of the second section of said act it is apparently contemplated that the city should construct additional dams and reservoirs, or enlarge the dams and reservoirs of the state, in order to secure its supply of water.

This act clearly contemplates that the city of Akron shall build dams or reservoirs or both to provide a supply of water. It does not contemplate that it shall use the water of the canals of the state which has been provided by the public works of the state.

The city of Akron has not acted in accordance with the grant given it by act of 102 Ohio Laws 175. Instead of acting under said grant it chose to purchase the leases of The Akron Water Works Company, and in purchasing said leases it has assumed the obligations thereof.

I am, therefore, of the opinion that the city of Akron is liable to the state of Ohio under said leases in accordance with the terms and conditions thereof from the time it took possession under the assignment of said leases to it.

The city of Akron took possession on April 1, 1912. The Akron Water Works Company has paid the rental up to said April, 1912. Since said date no rental has been paid. The rent is payable on the first of May and November of each year in advance. The city of Akron now owes $500.00 for the month of April, 1912, and on May 1, 1912, there was due $3,000.00 for the ensuing six months, and on November 1, 1912, an additional sum of $3,000.00 was due for the six months ending May 1, 1913. The total amount now due the state of Ohio from the city of Akron is $6,500.00.

The leases provide for shutting off the water in case of non-payment of rent. As the water is supplied to the city of Akron and its inhabitants a summary proceeding to shut off the water is not desirable.

The action, if one is necessary, should be for the recovery of the rental now due. The action should be brought against both the lessee and assignee of the lease. The city of Akron and The Akron Water Works Company should each be made parties defendant.

Respectfully,

TIMOTHY S. HOGAN,

Attorney General.

CITY AND COUNTY SEALERS OF WEIGHTS AND MEASURES—JURISDICTION CONCURRENT—CONFLICT OF JURISDICTION.

City and county sealers have concurrent jurisdiction in cities. In case of conflict, the sealer who first assumes jurisdiction, i. e. in sealing the weights, etc., should maintain control.

COLUMBUS, OHIO, January 19, 1912.

HON. S. E. STRODE, Dairy and Food Commissioner, Columbus, Ohio.

DEAR SIR:—I beg to acknowledge receipt of your letter of December 12, 1911, wherein you state:

> "On June 28th we addressed you a letter for opinions on certain matters relating to enforcement of weights and measures laws. One of the questions (No. 2) was, 'Do the city sealer and county sealer and his deputy have concurrent jurisdiction in municipalities?' Your opinion was that they did have concurrent jurisdiction.
> "Now this question has arisen and we will be glad to receive your opinion: In a case of conflict of authority between the city sealer and the county sealer or his deputy, which is first in authority, the city or the county sealer?"

While the term "concurrent jurisdiction" is probably more properly applied to courts or states, it expresses the intended meaning when applied to officers. As you state, I did hold that the city sealer and the county sealer (and his deputy) have concurrent jurisdiction in municipalities, owing to the fact that the jurisdiction of the county sealer is co-extensive with his county. I am inclined to the belief that the same principle would apply to a conflict of authority between officers like the ones in question as applies to courts. It is elementary that of two courts having concurrent jurisdiction, the one assuming jurisdiction in the first instance has jurisdiction of the matter to its final determination, to the exclusion of the other. So, likewise, it is my view that whichever of the two officers assumes the jurisdiction he would retain the same to the exclusion of the other.

The provisions of Section 2616, General Code, as amended May 10, 1910, bear out this view. Such section provides as follows:

> "* * * No weight, measure, balance or other weighing or measuring device shall be used or maintained for weighing and measuring in this state unless such weight, measure, balance or other weighing or measuring device has been sealed or marked by the state dairy and food commissioner, or any employee of said commissioner detailed for that purpose, or by the county sealer or by the sealer of the city or village in which the same is used or maintained, by stamping upon each the letter 'O' and the last two figures of the year in which it has been compared with legal standards, adjusted and found or made to conform to said standards, with seals to be provided by said dairy and food commissioner for that purpose. Whoever violates any of the provisions of this section shall be fined, etc."

The unlawfulness is in the use of a weight, etc., not sealed by one of the officers therein named, and, of course, that officer who first sealed the weight, etc., would have made it comply with the law. There is no question of "first in authority," as between the officers named, because, since their jurisdiction is concurrent, the first in the exercise of the authority would retain it to the exclusion of any of the other officers.

I trust that the foregoing fully answers your inquiry.

Very truly yours,

TIMOTHY S. HOGAN,
Attorney General.

OFFICES COMPATIBLE—TOWNSHIP CLERK, MEMBER OF BOARD OF EDUCATION, AND DEPUTY COUNTY SEALER OF WEIGHTS AND MEASURES.

As there is no express statutory prohibition against the same and as the offices in themselves are not incompatible, a person who holds both the positions of township clerk and member of the board of education may be appointed to the additional office of deputy county sealer of weights and measures.

COLUMBUS, OHIO, March 16, 1912.

HON. S. E. STRODE, Dairy and Food Commissioner, Columbus, Ohio.

DEAR SIR:—Your favor of February 9, 1912, is received in which you inquire as follows:

> "The following question has been submitted to this department, which we refer to you for an opinion as promptly as you can render the same:
> "'Can the auditor of a county, who is county sealer by virtue of his office, appoint as his deputy one who is already a township clerk and a member of the board of education?'
> "We presume the question is whether one already holding a public office can be appointed a deputy county sealer."

Section 2622, General Code, 102 Ohio Laws 426, provides for the appointment of a deputy county sealer of weights and measures, and prescribes the duties of the position as follows:

> "Each county sealer of weights and measures shall appoint by writing under his hand and seal, a deputy who shall compare weights and measures wherever the same are used or maintained for use within his county, or which are brought to the office of the county sealer for that purpose, with the copies of the original standards in the possession of the county sealer, who shall receive a salary fixed by the county commissioners, to be paid by the county, which salary shall be instead of all fees or charges otherwise allowed by law. Such deputy shall also be employed by the county sealer to assist in the prosecution of all violations of laws relating to weights and measures."

There is no statute prohibiting any other officer from being appointed as deputy county sealer of weights and measures. Where there is no constitutional or statutory inhibition, a person may hold two or more positions at the same time if such positions are not incompatible.

The rule of incompatibility is set forth in the case of State ex rel, vs. Gebert, 12 Cir., Ct. N. S., 274, by Dustin, J., on page 275, of the opinion, when he says:

> "Offices are considered incompatible when one is subordinate to, or in any way a check upon the other; or when it is physically impossible for one person to discharge the duties of both."

Whether it is physically possible for the same person to fill two particular positions must be determined by the circumstances of each case.

The deputy county sealer of weights and measures is not subordinate to, nor in any way a check upon the clerk of the township, or upon the members of the board of education. The duties of the first position are independent of the duties of the latter positions. Such positions may be filled by the same person, if it is physically possible for such person to perform the duties of each position.

A clerk of a township, or a member of the board of education may be appointed deputy county sealer of weights and measures.

Respectfully,

TIMOTHY S. HOGAN,

Attorney General.

WEIGHTS AND MEASURES—SEALER MAY ADOPT BUT ONE STANDARD FOR PECK, QUARTER PECK, QUART AND PINT DRY MEASURE—PROPORTIONATE CONFORMITY TO WEIGHT AND DIAMETER—STANDARD HALF BUSHEL.

Section 6414, General Code, creates the standard half bushel measure and requires that it shall have a certain height and diameter. Section 6415, General Code, provides that the peck, half peck, quarter peck and quart shall be derived from the standard half bushel by dividing it and each successive measure by two.

In view of Section 6416, General Code, requiring articles sold by heaped measures to be heaped as high as the articles will permit, and in view of 2616 General Code, permitting the sealer to seal only such measures as are made to conform to standards in his possession, Section 2615, General Code, must be construed to require that only one standard may be adopted by the State Sealer for each of the measures enumerated, and that such standard must maintain such proportion in height and diameter to the standard half bushel measure as will permit the measure to be so heaped as to maintain the proportion specified with respect to the quantity sold as well as with respect to the cubic capacity of the measure.

November 23, 1912.

HON. S. E. STRODE, Dairy and Food Commissioner, Columbus, Ohio.

DEAR SIR:—Under date of May 29, 1911, you submitted for my opinion the following question:

> "Section 6414, General Code, creates the standard half bushel measure and requires that it shall conform to a certain height and diameter. Section 6415 provides that the peck, half peck, quarter peck and quart shall be derived from the standard half bushel by dividing it and each successive measure by two. Does that mean that the peck, half peck, quarter peck and quart shall conform in height and diameter to standard half bushel as well as conform to it in cubic inches?"

Sections 6414, 6415 and 6416 of the General Code, provide as follows:
Section 6414.

"The unit or standard measure of capacity for substances other than liquids, from which all other measures of such substances shall be derived and ascertained, shall be the standard half-bushel measure furnished this state by the government of the United States, the interior diameter of which is thirteen inches and thirty-nine-fortieths of an inch, and the depth is seven inches and one twenty-fourth of an inch."

Section 6415.

"The peck, half-peck, quarter-peck, quart and pint measures for measuring commodities other than liquids, shall be derived from the half-bushel measure by dividing it and each successive measure by two. (R. S. Sec. 4440.)"

Section 6416.

"Articles usually sold by heaped measures shall be heaped in a conical form as high as such articles permit. (R. S. Sec. 4441)"

Section 6415 does not make any express limitations with reference to the slope of the measures therein provided for, and the purport of your inquiry is, whether or not, under that section, dealers may be permitted to use measures of various shapes and forms, so long as they maintain, with respect to their cubic capacity, the proportions prescribed in this section.

The advantage to be derived by a dealer in using a peck or pint or other measure which is tall and narrow, over a measure of like capacity, which is low and wide, is readily manifest in contemplation of Section 6416. General Code, requiring articles sold in heaped measures, to be heaped in a conical form as high as such articles permit.

It is clear that to hold that dealers might use any arbitrary shape, so long as cubic capacity was maintained, would be to permit the law to work inequality, and I am of the opinion that these sections should, if possible, be construed to prevent such a contingency, which would be manifestly out of touch with the spirit of these laws.

Section 2616, General Code, provides as follows:

"The county sealer shall compare all weights and measures, brought to him for that purpose, with the copies of standards in his possession. When they are made to conform to the legal standards, the officer comparing them shall seal and mark such weights and measures. * * * * *"

I am of the opinion that this statute contemplates that the county sealer shall have but one standard for each measure recognized by the law. To hold otherwise would require him to have an infinite number of forms, inasmuch as he can only seal such measures as conform to his legal standard, and if a dealer could adopt any shape in the measure he used, there would be no end to the number of forms which he would be required to have on hand.

The object of Section 6416, General Code, is to require that the peck, one-half peck, one-quarter peck, quart and pint measures used by dealers should have respectively one-half the quantity of the one-half bushel, and each preceding measure respectively enumerated in Section 6415, General Code.

The state sealer, therefore, under this section, and having in view Section 2616, General Code, shall adopt one standard which shall bear proportions as to cubic capacity, which are prescribed in Section 6415, General Code, for each measure therein enumerated. In adopting such standards, he shall be guided by the rule that the proportions as to quantity must be based upon the heaped one-half bushel measure and must be maintained as to each of the lesser measures. The standards adopted by him, therefore, will be such as will permit of the necessary heaping to sustain this proportion.

In conclusion, therefore, I am of the opinion that the state sealer may adopt as a standard but one uniform form of measure enumerated in Section 6415, General Code, which standard must maintain such proper proportions as to height and diameter as will enable the proportions specified in Section 6415, General Code, to apply to the quantity sold, as well as to the cubic capacity of the measure.

Very truly yours,

TIMOTHY S. HOGAN,
Attorney General.

JOINT SCHOOL SUB-DISTRICT—ABOLITION OF—DISPOSITION OF TERRITORY—EXPENSE OF INSTRUCTION—EFFECT OF FAILURE OF TOWNSHIP TO MAKE AND FILE MAPS WITH COUNTY AUDITOR—SUNFISH AND BENTON TOWNSHIPS.

When a joint sub-district has been abolished and the township to which the territory consequently accrued has failed to have a map of said territory made and filed with the county auditor as provided by Section 4724, General Code, and by reason of the failure to perform this ministerial act the township burdened with the expense of instruction of the pupils of the attached territory did not receive the money for the enumeration of the pupils thereof nor the taxes upon the property therein; held:

That the adjoining township would be obliged to account to the first township for the amount received by reason of the enumeration of the pupils which had been schooled by the first township and for the revenues collected as school tax in the attached territory, the failure to perform a mere ministerial duty not being sufficient to enable the township which had received the benefits to also retain the moneys intended for their expense.

COLUMBUS, Ohio, February 3, 1912.

HON. FRANK W. MILLER, State Commissioner of Common Schools, Columbus, Ohio.

DEAR SIR:—Your communication of November 10th is received wherein you state:

> "We have today received the following communication of a contention between Sunfish and Benton townships, Pike county:
> "'There was located between Sunfish and Benton townships, a joint sub-district. This joint sub-district was abolished by Section 4723 of the General Code. After this joint district was abolished Sunfish township neglected to have a map of such territory made according to Section 4724. When such map was not made and filed with the auditor of the county, Sunfish township ceased to receive the money for the enumeration of the pupils in the Benton township part of this school district. Benton township also received the school tax of the property of this district that was located within the township. Pupils in Benton township and within this district continued to go to the school located in Sunfish township. Benton township refuses to pay Sunfish township any money that they have collected as money from this portion of the former joint district that is located in Benton township.'
> "Question. Is Sunfish township entitled to the money that Benton township has collected from the enumeration and school taxes of the portion of this former joint district that is located in Benton township?"

Section 4735 of the General Code provides:

> "Joint sub-districts are abolished and the territory of such districts situated in the township in which the school house of the joint district is not located shall be attached for school purposes to the township school district in which such school house is located. Such territory shall constitute a part of such township school district, and the title of all school property located therein is vested in the board of education of the township to which the territory is attached."

Section 4724 of the General Code provides:

"A map of such attached territory shall be prepared under the direction of the board of education of the township district to which the territory is attached and made a part of the records of the board. A copy of such map shall be filed with the auditor of the county in which such territory is situated, or, if the territory is in two or more counties, it shall be filed with the auditor of each county."

Under Section 4723 the territory situated in Benton township remained attached for school purposes to Sunfish township where the school house was situated. It was undoubtedly the duty of the board of education of Sunfish township to prepare a map of the attached territory and file a copy of the same with the auditor as well as to record said map in the minutes as provided by Section 4724, supra, and if they have failed and neglected so to do until this time they are not thereby released from their duty but should perform the same at the earliest opportunity. Nor does it seem to me that the mere failure of performing this ministerial act, to-wit, the preparing of the map, etc., under the facts stated by you, releases Benton township from the obligation of accounting for the moneys received for the enumeration of pupils in the attached territory, and also of school taxes collected on the property in that portion of the school district. The pupils of Benton township have been cared for; the burden and cost of their education has been borne by Sunfish township, and all things else have been done as far as Sunfish township is concerned the same as if the map had been prepared and properly filed and recorded. Can Benton township now be heard to say that it will retain the moneys received by reason of the enumeration of the very pupils who have been schooled by Sunfish township, and further that it will keep the revenue collected as school tax in the attached territory merely because of the technicality of the failure to perform a purely ministerial duty? The authorities are practically unanimous that the failure to perform a ministerial duty enjoined upon an officer will not be allowed to work a hardship.

Common conscience and equity will not permit this; the same code of morals applies to the sub-division of the state as controls the acts of individuals. The amount of the enumeration moneys is easily ascertainable; the amount of the school tax collected can readily be calculated; Benton township has raised the money for the enumeration to the use of the district wherein the enumerated pupils reside and are schooled and the school tax has been collected in the attached territory for school purposes for the district of which the attached territory is a part. The township should at once settle their differences according to law and right and ex quo et bono, Benton township is called upon to render to Sunfish township its dues.

It is my opinion, therefore, that Sunfish township is entitled to the money that Benton township has collected from the enumeration and school taxes of the portion of this former joint district that is located in Benton township.

Yours very truly,

TIMOTHY S. HOGAN,
Attorney General.

LEGAL ADVISER—BOARDS OF EDUCATION OF CITY, VILLAGE AND COUNTY—PROSECUTING ATTORNEYS AND CITY SOLICITORS—VILLAGE SOLICITOR NOT AN "OFFICIAL."

Section 4761, General Code, beyond dispute, makes the city solicitor the legal advisor of city school districts. Also, by provision of Section 4761, the prosecuting attorney is made the legal adviser of all school boards within the county with the single exception of boards of education which are engaged in civil actions with one another.

The village solicitor being appointed by contract, fulfilling only contractual duties, serving for an indefinite term and not being obligated to take oath or give bonds, is not an "official" within the meaning of Section 4762, General Code, which stipulates that these duties shall fall upon "any official serving in a similar capacity" to that of prosecuting attorney or city solicitor. This language refers to "county solicitors," "directors of law" and "corporation counsel" (all of which offices existed at the time of the passage of Section 4762, General Code) and to such other similar offices as might be created in the future.

At the present time, therefore, the legal duties necessitated by village board of education also fall upon the prosecuting attorney.

COLUMBUS, OHIO, March 2, 1912.

HON. FRANK W. MILLER, State Commissioner of Common Schools, Columbus, Ohio.

DEAR SIR:—For some time past this department has been deluged with requests from all over the state, emanating from boards of education and officers thereof, seeking opinions on various matters pertaining to their affairs and duties, and deeming it wise and proper to finally determine what officer is the legal adviser of the boards of education of the different school districts, that all might know to whom the requests above mentioned should be referred, I have concluded to address this opinion to you.

As far as city school boards are concerned the matter is of easy solution, for the general assembly has fixed this beyond dispute, in the following language of the General Code, Section 4761:

> " * * * In city school districts the city solicitor shall be the legal adviser and attorney for the board of education thereof and shall perform the same services for such board as herein required of the prosecuting attorney for other boards of education of the county."

Therefore, all matters of the board of education of city districts, requiring legal advice or attention, must be submitted to the respective city solicitor, who is made by law the legal adviser of such boards; and it is neither the province, function nor duty of the prosecuting attorney or the attorney general to act as counsel or attorney for such boards.

Further quoting from Section 4761:

> "Except in city school districts, the prosecuting attorney of the county shall be the legal adviser of all boards of education of the county in which he is serving. * * * he shall be the legal counsel of such boards or the officers thereof in all civil actions brought by or against them and shall conduct such actions in his official capacity. When such civil action is between two or more boards of education in the same > county the prosecuting attorney shall not be required to act for either of them * * *"

This section, standing by itself, makes the prosecuting attorney of each county the legal adviser of all boards of education in school districts of his county, other than city school districts, with the single exception, that when an action is brought by one board against another board in the same county the prosecuting attorney shall not be required to act for either.

The reasonableness of the latter exception is readily apparent, since he could not act for both boards, nor in action where their contentions were adverse should he be compelled to make a selection.

There would be no trouble if Section 4761 were the only section pertaining to the proper legal advisers of boards of education. The language is clear and concise; no contention could be made against the manifest meaning of the statute which specificially makes city solicitors advisers of boards of education of city school districts and the prosecuting attorney the legal adviser of all other boards outside of city districts, excepting in the instance where two boards might be adverse litigants. But the provisions of the section immediately following, and closely related thereto (Sec. 4761) has made the confusion. Different interpretations have been placed upon the phrase "serving in a similar capacity," and this department, as first, was inclined to a view different from the one herein expressed; but after a full and careful consideration the conclusion I have reached appears to me to be the most reasonable, the most satisfactory, and beyond any question must have been the intention of the general assembly in enacting the statute. Section 4762 provides:

> "The duties prescribed by the preceding section shall devolve upon any official serving in a capacity similar to that of prosecuting attorney or city solicitor for the territory wherein a school district is situated, regardless of his official designation. No prosecuting attorney, city solicitor or other official acting in a similar capacity shall be a member of the board of education. No compensation in addition to such officer's regular salary shall be allowed for such services."

Since the statute just quoted provides that the duties of the prosecuting attorney and city solicitor, as prescribed by Section 4761, should devolve upon "any official serving in a capacity similar to that of prosecuting attorney or city solicitor for the territory wherein a school district is situated, regardless of his official designation" there has been considerable contention that any person acting as legal counsel of a village, under the provisioins of Section 4220, would be such "official," and therefore, the adviser of the school district in which such village might be situated.

I am free to confess that this department, when the matter was first submitted, inclined to this view, and very forcible were the many arguments in its favor; but after a most careful and mature deliberation I am constrained to hold, under the authorities and better reasoning, that the legal counsel spoken of in Section 4220, supra, is not, and as such cannot be, the adviser of the village district.

Section 4220 provides:

> "When it deems it necessary, the village council may provide legal counsel for the village, or any department or official thereof, for a period not to exceed two years, and provide compensation therefor."

So, whether the village "provides" (and since he is not an officer enumerated in Section 4248 they could only provide by employing) a legal adviser, either for the village or for any department or official thereof, it is a mere hiring, and such legal advisor, so hired, is but an employe. The contract entered into by the village and the legal counsel, either specificially or impliedly, contains all the provisions of the employment. The legal counsel is only bound to the performance of the things he has contracted to do and perform, and he is justified in relying on the letter of his contract. He would have no official duties for no matter how similar to the work of a city solicitor his obligations are contractual.

As stated by Gilmore, J., in State vs. Wilson, 29 O. S., 345, let us examine to determine whether "some of the indicia" of an officer may be found. Is he appointed for a definite term? No he is hired by contract and the hiring may be for one case, or for one month, or for any other time, so long as it does not exceed the limitation two years fixed by law. Must he take an oath of office or give a bond? No, no more than any other mere employe of the village. Must he be an elector of the village? Not at all; many cases have come to my notice where, by reason of there being no attorney at law in a village, or for some other good and sufficient cause, legal counsel have been employed from neighboring jurisdictions. In fact, I cannot find any legal necessity for his being an elector at all, nor (though I do not pass upon the question) would I see any objection to the employment of an alien or a woman counsel, if the village council saw fit. It does not appear to me that this position is such an "office" as, under article 15, Section 4, of the constitution, would render it necessary for the person to be possessed of the qualifications of an elector. The duties of village counsel are not prescribed by statute but fixed by contract. If he die or resign his duties are not cast upon a successor; a new contract is necessary, with a new party.

So, I conclude that the legal counsel of the village is not an official in the true sense of the word, and was not contemplated under the provisions of Section 4762, General Code.

A glance at the history of prior legislation along this line is conclusive on the question and dissipates whatever obscurity attaches to the provisions of Section 4762.

Section 69 of the act for the reorganization and maintenance of common schools, found in Vol. 70, O. L. at page 216, provides:

> "It is hereby made the duty of the prosecuting attorney of the proper county, or in case of the city district, the city solicitor, to prosecute all actions which by this act may be brought against any member or officer of any school board, in his individual capacity; and to act in his official capacity as such prosecutor, as the legal counsel of such boards or officers in all civil actions brought by them or against them in their corporate or official capacity; provided, no prosecuting attorney or city solicitor shall be a member of the board of education."

This section later became Section 3977 of the Revised Statutes (now Sections 4761 and 4762 of the General Code). Subsequently, and after a law had been passed authorizing certain counties to have "county solicitors," the foregoing section was amended as follows:

> "Provided that a county having a county solicitor, such officer shall prosecute all actions which may be brought against any member or officer of the school board in his individual capacity and perform all other duties herein required of the prosecuting attorney as to the schools, school board and officers of schools of the county outside of said city; but for such services he shall receive no additional compensation."

When the School Code of April 25, 1904, was passed, Section 3977, Revised Statutes (97 O. L., page 355) appeared the following language:

> "The prosecuting attorney shall be the legal adviser of all boards of education in the county in which he is serving, except in city school districts, he shall prosecute all actions against a member or officer of a board of education for malfeasance or misfeasance in office, he shall be the legal counsel of said boards or the officers thereof in all civil actions brought by or against them and shall conduct the same in his official capacity; provided, that when said civil action is between two or more boards of education in the same county said prosecuting attorney shall not be required to act for either of them. In city school districts the city solicitor shall be the legal adviser and attorney for the board of education and shall perform the same services for said board of education as is herein required of prosecuting attorneys for other boards of education. The duties herein prescribed shall devolve upon any official serving in a capacity similar to that of prosecuting attorney or city solicitor for the territory wherein a school district is situated, regardless of his official designation. No prosecuting attorney, city solicitor or other official acting in a similar capacity shall be a member of the board of education. No compensation in addition to such officer's regular salary shall be allowed for such services."

Section 845 of the Revised Statutes authorized the county commissioners to employ legal counsel, or the county solicitors above mentioned, and that section also provided that said legal counsel, among other duties, "shall also perform such duties and services as are now required to be performed by the prosecuting attorney" under Section 3977. Said Section 845 was amended May 9, 1908, which was a modification in accordance with State ex rel vs. Kennon, Law Bulletin, July 5, 1909, affirmed by the Supreme Court, June 25, 1909. It was on the statute books at the time of the codification.

In Brewster vs. Anderson it was held that "in a proper case the county solicitor could waive the service of process or summons," thus designating the legal counsel whom commissioners might employ under Revised States, Section 845, before that part of that section was declared unconstitutional.

Section 1011-3, Revised Statutes (repealed, 97 O. L., 306), authorized the county solicitor of Hamilton county to act in certain instances.

It readily appears that, at that time, there was an official other than the prosecuting attorney who had similar duties and probably the general assembly was mindful of the fact that some future legislature might see fit to designate the officer by a still different name, whose duty would be similar to that of the prosecuting attorney.

So, too, it has happened in certain cities, under a semi-federal or other plan of government, instead of city solicitors the duties of that office devolved upon what was known as "a director of law." In other municipalities the legal officer was known as "corporation counsel."

And, thus, it is readily seen that it could not be foretold what new name might not be attached to the law department; and, seeking to have the duties pertaining to school boards to attach to that office, the legislature was wise in providing that any official serving in a capacity similar to that of prosecuting attorney or city solicitor, regardless of the official designation, was required to perform the duties theretofore referred to.

In conclusion, then, I hold that the prosecuting attorney of the county is the legal adviser of the school boards of all the districts in the county, excepting city districts; hence, he is the legal adviser of village districts; also, that is the legal duty of these officers to duly advise in all proper matters, the respective school boards; that there is a corresponding obligation upon these boards to submit their questions to their respective legal advisers and to be guided and bound by the advice received; that this department, being only adviser to prosecuting attorneys and city solicitors, should in no instance be called upon by the boards in question to solve their legal problems, for these, in every case, should be submitted to the prosecuting attorney or city solicitor, as the case might be.

Strict adherence to the above holding will save time, trouble and misunderstanding.

I need not state that I stand ever ready and willing, in season and out of season, to respond to requests from legal departments heretofore referred to in all proper matters; but this department has grown so rapidly, and the volume of business of the office has become so enormous that even with an increased force, working extra hours and holidays, it has been impossible to keep the work up as close as I would wish. So attention is again called to the ethics and simple courtesy that demand that the school boards submit all of their matters to their respective legal advisers and be guided by such advice when their adviser is free from doubt; if he is in doubt I will be glad to be of such assistance as I can upon request. And I again urge that whenever the prosecutor or solicitor refers any matters to this department, their requests should be accompanied by the officer's own opinion on the matter, with such memorandum of authorities as he can furnish. This will aid and facilitate the department and will be greatly appreciated.

Very truly yours,

TIMOTHY S. HOGAN,
Attorney General.

BOARD OF EDUCATION—MAY NOT ALLOW SUPERINTENDENT OF SCHOOL, IN ADDITION TO SALARY, ALL TUITIONS OF NON-RESIDENT PUPILS.

A board of education may not provide that the superintendent of schools shall receive, in addition to a stated salary, all funds received for tuition of non-resident pupils, for the reason that such payment would not be a "fixed" salary as intended by Section 7690, General Code.

Furthermore, such would be in contravention to Section 7603, General Code, which provides special distribution for the respective funds under the control of the board.

April 30,1912.

HON. FRANK W. MILLER, State Commissioner of Common Schools, Columbus, Ohio.

DEAR SIR:—I herewith desire to acknowledge receipt of your letter of March 19, 1912, wherein you inquire as follows:

> "Can a board of education legally employ a superintendent of schools at a stated salary per month and in addition give him the tuition from the non-resident pupils as a part of his salary, if the school board so desires?"

In reply thereto, I desire to say that Section 7690 of the General Code provides that the board of education shall have the management, control and hiring of the superintendents, teachers and other employes of the schools of their respective school districts as follows:

> "Each board of education shall have the management and control of all the schools of whatever name or character in the district. It may appoint a superintendent of the public schools, truant officers, and janitors and fix their salaries. If deemed essential for the best benefits of the schools of the district, under proper rules and regulations, the board may appoint a superintendent of buildings, and such other employes as it deems necessary, and fix their salaries. Each board shall fix the salaries of all teachers, which may be increased, but not diminished during the term for which the appointment is made. Teachers must be paid for all time lost when the schools in which they are employed are closed owing to an epidemic or other public calamity."

Said section specifically states that the board of education shall appoint a superintendent of schools and fix his salary. I believe that said section is to be strictly construed, and that the section means that such superintendent's salary shall be fixed definitely as to amount. There might be any number of non-resident pupils attending such schools who would pay tuition, and there might not be any such pupils, which would result in the superintendent's salary being indefinite and uncertain, and this, I believe, would be contrary to the construction which should be placed upon said section, to-wit, 7690 of the General Code, above quoted.

Furthermore, I desire to say that Section 7603 of the General Code, creates and designates the various funds into which moneys raised by taxation shall be placed, and further provides that funds raised other than by taxation shall be placed in the contingent fund, as follows:

> "The certificate of apportionment furnished by the county auditor to the treasurer and clerk of each school district must exhibit the amount of money received by each district from the state, the amount received from any special tax levy made for a particular purpose, and the amount received from local taxation of a general nature. The amount received from the state common school fund and the common school fund shall be designated the 'tuition fund' and be appropriated only for the payment of superintendents and teachers. Funds received from special levies must be designated in accordance with the purpose for which the special levy was made and be paid out only for such purpose, except that when a balance remains in such fund after all expenses incident to the purpose for which it was raised have been paid such balance will become a part of the contingent fund and the board of education shall make such transfer by resolution. Funds received from the local levy for general purposes must be designated so as to correspond to the particular purpose for which the levy was made. Moneys coming from sources not enumerated herein shall be placed in the contingent fund."

It follows, therefore, that it would be contrary to the provisions contained in the said section if the board of education were to give the tuition from non-resident pupils to the superintendent as part of and in addition to his regular salary.

For the foregoing reasons, I am of the opinion that the board of education cannot legally give to the superintendent of schools the tuition of any non-resident pupils attending such schools in addition to his stated salary as fixed by the board of education.

Very truly yours,
TIMOTHY S. HOGAN,
Attorney General.

BOARD OF EDUCATION—MAY RESERVE RIGHT TO REJECT ANY AND ALL BIDS IN SALE OF REAL PROPERTY AT AUCTION.

Section 4750, General Code, providing for the sale of real estate valued in excess of $300.00 at auction does not compel the board of education to dispose of the property to the highest bidder and the board in its notice of sale may reserve the right to reject any and all bids.

June 3, 1912.

HON. F. W. MILLER, State Commissioner of Common Schools, Columbus, Ohio.

DEAR SIR:—Under date of May 1, you submitted the following matter for my consideration:

> "A board of education has centralized schools, and abandoned the school districts of the township. The board of education desires to sell the real estate in the different sub-districts of the township. This board has a warranty deed for the different tracts of land they desire to sell. Section 4756 of the General Code provides the manner in which the board of education sells real property.
> "When such property is advertised according to the above mentioned section, is it necessary for the board of education to accept the bid of the highest bidder, if such bid is trivial in the estimation of the board and does not represent the true value of the property to be sold?"

Section 4749, General Code, provides:

> "The board of education of each school district, organized under the provisions of this title, shall be a body politic and corporate, and, as such, capable of suing and being sued, contracting and being contracted with, acquiring, holding, possessing and disposing of real and personal property, and taking and holding in trust for the use and benefit of such district any grant, or devise of land and any donation or bequest of money or other personal property and of exercising such other powers and privileges as are conferred by this title and the laws relating to the public schools of this state."

Section 4756, General Code, provides:

> "When a board of education decides to dispose of real or personal property, held by it in its corporate capacity, exceeding in value three hundred dollars, it shall sell such property at public auction after giving at least thirty days' notice thereof by publication in a newspaper of general circulation or by posting notices thereof in five of the most public places in the district in which such property is situated. When the board has twice so offered a tract of real estate for sale at public auction and it is not sold, the board may sell it at private sale, either as an entire tract or in parcels, as the board deems best. The president and secretary of the board shall execute and deliver deeds necessary to complete such sale."

The word "auction" is defined in Century Dictionary as:

"A public sale in which each bidder offers an increase on the previous bid, the highest bidder becoming the purchaser."

The word "auction" is defined by Webster as:

"A public sale of property to the highest bidder as where successive increased bids are made."

While the word "auction" has been defined to be a public sale to the highest bidder I can find no statement in the law that the property must at all events be knocked down to the person making such highest bid. When the board of education determines that the property which it seeks to sell under Section 4756, supra, exceeds in value $300.00 it shall sell such property at public auction after giving the requisite notice provided for in such section. Such section, however, does not contain any provision for appraisement of such property so sought to be sold, nor does it specify any price at which such property must be sold. However, Section 4749, supra, provides that the board of education shall be a body politic and corporate and is given the power of disposing of real and personal property belonging to it. Being such body politic and corporate, and there being no provision in Section 4746, supra, defining the terms under which the property shall be sold, I am of the opinion that the board of education may provide in its notice for sale that it reserves the right to reject any and all bids, and if it does so in its said notice, it can, if in its judgment the amount paid for such property is trivial and does not represent the true value of the property to be sold, reject such bid and re-advertise said property.

Very truly yours,
TIMOTHY S. HOGAN,
Attorney General.

TEACHERS' INSTITUTES—CANNOT COMPEL REGISTRATION FEE—TEACHERS MAY VOLUNTARILY CONTRIBUTE.

There is no provision in the statutes for the payment of a registration fee by teachers who attend a county institute and none can therefore be compelled. Registration may be required by the rule of the institute however, and there is no objection to the payment of a voluntary fee therefore, should teachers desire to contribute the same.

August 6th, 1912.

HON. FRANK W. MILLER, State Commissioner of Common Schools, Columbus, Ohio.

MY DEAR MR. MILLER:—I have your letter of August 6 wherein you advise:

"Last year during the institute season the report was spread among the teachers of Ohio that you had ruled concerning the compulsory registration of teachers in order that said teachers receive their card for attendance. This card is necessary before the teachers receive pay from their boards of education for institute attendance. Please advise me concerning your opinion of teachers being required to register and pay a registration fee before such teachers receive their card for attendance. Also, is it not possible for the teachers that desire their card of attendance without registering to receive this card when they have attended regularly the sessions of the institute? I desire to inform the teachers of your opinion while they are in session at their institutes this month and would appreciate a prompt reply."

County teachers' institutes are provided for by the General Code of Ohio by Sections 7859 to 7870, inclusive.

Section 7859 provides for the organization of county teachers' institutes. Section 7860 provides for the election of officers and their terms. The officers provided for are president, secretary and an executive committee consisting of three members. By virtue of Section 7860, the president and secretary of the institute shall be ex-officio members of the executive committee and act as chairman and secretary thereof.

Section 7861 provides when the election is to be held.

Section 7862 relates to vacancies.

Section 7863 is in relation to the duties of the executive committee, and is as follows:

"Such executive committee shall manage the affairs of the institute. The committee must enter into a bond, payable to the state, with sufficient surety, to be approved by the county auditor, in double the amount of the institute fund in the county treasury, for the benefit of the institute fund of the county, and conditioned that the committee shall account faithfully for the money which comes into its possession, and make the report to the commissioner of common schools, required in Section seventy-eight hundred and sixty-five."

Section 7865 is as follows:

"Within five days after the adjournment of the institute, its secretary shall report to the state commissioner of common schools the number of teachers in attendance, the names of instructors and lecturers attending, the amount of money received and disbursed by the committee, and such other information relating to the institute as the commissioner requires."

Section 7869 provides as follows:

"All teachers and superintendents of the public schools within any county in which a county institute is held while the schools are in session, may dismiss their schools for one week for the purpose of attending such institute."

Section 7869 is of importance in determining the question which you submit, as is likewise Section 7870, which reads:

"The boards of education of all school districts are required to pay the teachers and superintendents of their respective districts their regular salary for the week they attend the institute upon the teachers' or superintendents' presenting certificates of full regular daily attendance, signed by the president and secretary of such institute. If the institute is held when the public schools are not in session, such teachers or superintendents shall be paid two dollars a day for actual daily attendance as certified by the president and secretary of such institute, for not less than four, nor more than six days of actual attendance, to be paid as an addition to the first month's salary after the institute, by the board of education by which such teacher or superintendent is then employed. In case he or she is unemployed at the time of the institute, such salary shall be paid by the board next employing such teacher or superintendent, if the term of employment begins within three months after the institute closes."

The support of the county teachers' institute is covered by Section 7820 of the General Code which is as follows:

"The clerk of the board of county school examiners must promptly collect all fees from applicants at each examination and pay them into the county treasury quarterly. He shall file with the county auditor a written statement of the amount, and the number of applicants, male and female, examined during the quarter. All money thus received must be set apart by the auditor for the support of county teachers' institutes, to be applied as provided for in chapter eight of this title."

It will appear from a consideration of the section cited and quoted that the teachers' institute is entirely an organization created and provided for by the statutes, and no teacher is bound, in respect to the privileges which he enjoys, by any condition not found therein.

You will observe that Section 7869 provides that teachers and superintendents of public schools within any county in which a teachers' institute is held while their schools are in session may dismiss their schools for one week for the purpose of attending such institute. This discloses the great importance of attendance upon the institute, and without deciding here whether or not such attendance is obligatory, the purpose of the legislature in giving the teacher the right is very significant.

By virtue of Section 7870, boards of education are called upon to pay teachers and superintendents of their respective districts their regular salaries for the week they attend the institute upon the teachers' and superintendents' presenting certificates of full regular daily attendance signed by the president and secretary of such institute. If the institute is held when the public schools are not in session, such teachers and superintendents shall be paid $2.00 per day for actual daily attendance as certified by the president and secretary of the institute. for not less than four nor more than six days of actual attendance, to be paid in addition to the first month's salary after the institute by the board of education by which such teacher or superintendent is then employed.

You will observe that the only condition imposed upon the teacher in order to entitle him to compensation is a certificate of daily attendance required by the statutes, and this to be signed by the president and secretary of the institute. Of course the teacher is required to comply with all of the rules and regulations of the institute according to the constitution and by-laws of the organization, and such other reasonable requirements as the institute in its judgment deems proper. This, however, does not relate to financial matters. It is entirely proper to require registration in order that a proper record of attendance may be kept, but it is not lawful to require a registration fee. I am of the opinion that substantially all the teachers understand this, and that in fact what is denominated by some teachers as a "registration fee" is in reality a voluntary contribution made by them. I see no obligation to officers of institutes receiving from teachers who voluntarily desire to make a contribution in order to provide for a greater number of instructors, better means of instruction, or a continuance of the institute over a greater period. This, however, should be explained to the teachers in advance. At any rate, this department will have no objection to such voluntary contributions made by the teachers for the purposes aforesaid.

Your request brings to mind a related subject, and that is the statutory requirement for holding and concluding teachers' examinations in one day. Unquestionably, in consideration of the number of subjects upon which applicants for teachers' certificates are required to pass, it works a great hardship upon both the teachers and the examiners to undertake the performance of the task in one day. Legislation is needed here to remedy the defect. Applicants for teachers' certificates should be given two days in which to take the examinations, and I am sure they would not object to paying a greater examination fee. In this way the fund for the maintenance of teachers' institutes could and would be enlarged, and doubtless could be made entirely ample to meet the deficiency which has heretofore been made up by voluntary contributions. At any rate, better provisions should be made by the legislature for the fund for the maintenance of county teachers' institutes. Teachers are paid little enough, and while economy should be practiced all along the line in governmental work, its hardships should not be visited upon those entrusted with the great responsibility of educating the youth of the state.

Very respectfully yours,
TIMOTHY S. HOGAN,
Attorney General.

BOARD OF EDUCATION—CONSOLIDATION OF TWO SUBDISTRICTS—TRANSPORTATION OF PUPILS NOT PROVIDED FOR.

Under 4716, General Code, a board of education of a township may consolidate two school subdistricts into one and there are no statutory provisions enabling the people of such subdistricts to object to or prevent such action.

When such consolidation is carried out, the board is not required by the statutes to provide transportation for pupils attending the consolidated school.

HON. FRANK W. MILLER, State Commissioner of Common Schools, Columbus, Ohio.

DEAR SIR:—I herewith acknowledge the receipt of your communication of the date of July 18, 1912, wherein you inquire as follows:

> "1. Can board of education of a township consolidate two school districts into one, if the majority of the people of said sub-districts object?
> "2. If the above mentioned majority can prevent such action on the part of the board of education, how will they proceed to do it?
> "3. In case the board of education has the right to consolidate as indicated in question 1, are they obliged to transport all pupils who attend the consolidation school but who live over one and one-half miles from said school."

In answer to your first question, I desire to say that Section 4716, General Code, provides as follows:

"The division of township school districts into sub-districts as they exist shall continue and be recognized for the purpose of school attendance, but the board of education may increase or diminish the number or change the boundaries of the sub-districts at any regular meeting. A map designating such changes shall be entered upon the records of the board."

Said section is the only one which provides for the consolidation of sub-districts of a township, and the matter of such consolidation is left entirely to the discretion of the board of education of such township, and the people residing in the consolidated sub-districts have no voice in the matter. Therefore, in conclusion, I am of the opinion that the board of education of a township can consolidate two sub-districts in said township into one sub-district, even if a majority of the people living in said sub-district object to such consolidation.

My answer to your first question also answers your second question.

Section 7731 of the General Code provides for transportation of pupils living in townships, only in case of centralization of the school of such township as follows:

"No township schools shall be centralized under the next preceding section by the board of education of the township until after sixty days' notice has been given by the board, such notices to be posted in a conspicuous place in each sub-district of the township. When transportation of pupils is provided for, the conveyance must pass within at least the distance of one-half of a mile from the respective residences of all pupils, except when such residences are situated more than one-half of a mile from the public road. But transportation for pupils living less than one and one-half miles, by the most direct public highway, from the schoolhouse shall be optional with the board of education."

Section 7732 of the General Code provides for the conveyance of pupils living in special districts as follows:

"Boards of education of special school districts may provide for the conveyance of the pupils of such districts to the school or schools of the districts or to a school of any adjoining district, the expense of such conveyance to be paid from the school fund of the special school districts. But boards of education of such districts as provide transportation for the pupils thereof, shall not be required to transport pupils living less than one mile from the schoolhouse; and such boards of education shall not discriminate between different portions of said districts or between pupils of similar ages or residing at similar distances from the schoolhouse."

Section 7733 of the General Code provides for the conveyance of pupils living in village school districts as follows:

"At its option, the board of education in any village school district may provide for the conveyance of the pupils of the district or any adjoining district, to the school or schools of the district, the expense of conveyance to be paid from the school funds of the district in which such pupils reside. But such boards as so provide transportation, shall not be required to transport pupils living less than one mile from the schoolhouse or houses."

Section 7748 of the General Code provides that in certain instances the board of education may pay for the transportation of its high school pupils as follows:

"A board of education providing a third grade high school as defined by law shall be required to pay the tuition of graduates from such school residing in the district at any first grade high school for two years, or at a second grade high school for one year and a first grade high school for one year. Such a board providing a second grade high school as defined by law shall pay the tuition of graduates residing in the district at any first grade high school for one year; except that, a board maintaining a second or third grade high school is not required to pay such tuition when a levy of twelve mills permitted by law for such district has been reached and all the funds so raised are necessary for the support of the schools of such district. No board of education is required to pay the tuition of any pupil for more than four school years; except that it must pay the tuition of all successful applicants, who have complied with the further provisions hereof, residing more than four miles by the most direct route of public travel, from the high school provided by the board, when such applicants attend a nearer high school, or in lieu of paying such tuition the board of education maintaining a high school may pay for the transportation of the pupils living more than four miles from the said high school, maintained by the said board of education to said high school. Where more than one high school is maintained, by agreement of the board and parent or guardian, pupils may attend either and their transportation shall be so paid. A pupil living in a village or city district who has completed the elementary school course and whose legal residence has been transferred to a township or special district in this state before he begins or completes a high school course, shall be entitled to all the rights and privileges of a Boxwell-Patterson graduate."

Section 7749 of the General Code provides for the transportation of pupils to a township high school, when the elementary schools of such township have been centralized, as follows:

"When the elementary schools of any township school district in which a high school is maintained are centralized and transportation of pupils is provided, all pupils resident of the township school districts holding diplomas shall be entitled to transportation to the high school of such township district, and the board of education thereof shall be exempt from the payment of the tuition of such pupils in any other high school for such a portion of four years as the course of study in the high school maintained by the board of education includes."

None of the above quoted sections of the school code apply to the case you cite in your inquiry, to-wit: the consolidation of two sub-districts in a township.

Therefore in direct answer to your third question, it is my conclusion that the board of education is not obliged to transport all pupils who attend such consolidated schools, even though they live over one mile and one-half from said school.

Yours truly,
TIMOTHY S. HOGAN,
Attorney General.

AGE AND SCHOOLING CERTIFICATE—DUTY OF SUPERINTENDENT OF SCHOOLS OR AUTHORIZED PERSON TO ISSUE TO CHILD OVER FOURTEEN—CERTIFICATE OF BOARD OF HEALTH IF DOUBT AS TO NORMAL DEVELOPMENT EXISTS.

Under Section 7766, General Code the superintendent of schools or the person authorized by him when the parent so demands, is legally bound, if all the conditions imposed by said section are complied with to issue the age and schooling certificate therein provided to a child, upon satisfactory proof that such child is over fourteen years of age and passed a satisfactory fifth grade test in the studies enumerated in Section 7762 and is engaged in some regular employment, unless a "reasonable doubt exists in the mind of the superintendent or the person authorized by him that the child has not reached the normal development of a child of its age and is not in sound health and physically able to perform the work which it intends to do".

If such doubt exists, the parent or guardian must be required to procure a certificate from the board of health showing that the child is able to perform the work he is to be employed at.

HON. FRANK W. MILLER, State Commissioner of Common Schools, Columbus, Ohio.

DEAR SIR:—I beg to acknowledge the receipt of your letter of inquiry, of the date of October 30, 1912, wherein you inquire as follows:

> "In case the parent so demands, is the superintendent of schools, or the person authorized by him, compelled to issue an age and schooling certificate to a child upon satisfactory proof that such child is over fourteen years of age, and passed a satisfactory fifth grade test in the studies enumerated in Section seventy-seven hundred and sixty-two, and in engaged in some regular employment?"

In reply thereto I desire to say that Section 7765 of the General Code, as amended (101 O. L. 310), provides for the issuing of age and schooling certificates, as follows:

Section 7766.

> "An age and schooling certificate shall be approved only by the superintendent of schools, or by a person authorized by him, in city or other districts having such superintendent, or by the clerk of the board of education in village, special and township districts not having such a superintendent, upon satisfactory proof that such child is over fourteen years of age, and that such child has been examined and passed a satisfactory fifth grade test in the studies enumerated in Section seventy-seven hundred and sixty-two; provided, that residents of other states who work in Ohio must qualify as aforesaid with the proper school authority in the school district in which the establishment is located, as a condition of employment or service, and that the employment contemplated by the child is not prohibited by any law regulating the employment of children under sixteen years of age. Every such age and schooling certificate shall be signed in the presence of the officer issuing the same, by the child in whose name it is issued. The age and schooling certificate must be formulated by the state commissioner of common schools and furnished, in blank, by the clerk of the board of education. Any child between fourteen and sixteen years of age, who shall cease to work for any cause whatever shall report the fact and cause at once to the superintendent of schools, or by a person authorized by him, in city or other districts having such superintendent, or to the clerk of the board of education in village, township or special districts not having such superintendent; said child shall be required to return to school within two weeks, provided other employment is not secured within such time; provided, that should a child in the opinion of the superintendent or person authorized by him in cities and districts having such superintendent or the clerk of the board of education in village, township, or special districts lose his employment by reason of persistent, wilful misconduct or continuous inconstancy, he may be placed in school until the close of the current school year. The superintendent of schools, or the person authorized by him to issue age and schooling certificates, shall not issue such certificate until he has received, examined and approved and filed the following papers duly executed: (1) The written pledge or promise of the person, partnership or corporation to legally employ the child, also the written agreement to return to the superintendent of schools or to the person authorized by the superintendent of school to issue such certificate, the age and schooling certificate of the child, within two days from the date of the child's withdrawal or dismissal from the service of the person, partnership or corporation, giving the reason for such withdrawal or dismissal; (2) The school record of such child properly filled out and signed by the principal or other person in charge of the school which such child last attended, giving the name, age, address, standing in studies enumerated in Section seven thousand seven hundred and sixty-two and number of weeks' attendance in school during the year previous to applying for such school record, and general conduct; (3) A passport or duly attested transcript of the certificate of birth or baptism or other religious record, showing the date and place of birth of such child; a duly attested transcript of the birth certificate filed according to law with a registrar of vital statistics, or other officer charged with the duty of recording births, shall be conclusive evidence of the age of the child; or the affidavit of the parent or guardian or custodian of the child applying for an age and schooling certificate showing the place and date of birth of such child, which affidavit must be taken before the officer issuing the age and schooling certificate, who is hereby authorized and required to administer such oath, and who shall not receive or demand a fee therefor; (4) When a reasonable doubt exists in the mind of the superintendent or the person authorized by him that the child has not reached the normal development of a child of its age and is not in sound health and physically able to perform the work which it intends to do, he shall require of the parent or guardian a certificate from the board of health showing that the child is able to perform the work he is to be employed at."

From the language employed in said section, to-wit; "an age and schooling certificate shall be approved only by the superintendent of schools, or by a person authorized by him in city or other districts having such superintendent, or by the clerk of the board of education in village, special and township districts not having such superintendent;" also the following language "the superintendent of schools or person authorized by him to issue age and schooling certificates shall not issue such certificate until he has received, examined and approved and filed the following papers", etc. I have come to the conclusion that the superintendent of schools, or the person authorized by him in the premises, has the sole authority to issue the age and schooling certificates prescribed in said section. If all the conditions imposed by said statute are complied with and fulfilled by such pupil, then I believe the superintendent is legally bound to issue the age and schooling certificate therein provided, unless "a reasonable doubt exists in the mind of the superintendent, or the person authorized by him that the child has not reached the normal development of a child of its age and is not in sound health and physically able to perform the work which it intends to do." If the superintendent, or the person authorized to act for him, entertains such reasonable doubt, then "he shall require of the parent or guardian a certificate from the board of health showing that the child is able to perform the work he is to be employed at".

Very truly yours,
TIMOTHY S. HOGAN,
Attorney General.

POWER OF ADJUTANT GENERAL TO EMPLOY ENGINEER TO CARE FOR HEATING APPARATUS OF THE STATE HOUSE—DUTIES OF THE STATE HOUSE—DUTIES COMPATIBLE—APPROPRIATION FOR PURPOSE—DUTIES GERMANE AND INCIDENTAL.

The adjutant general, out of the funds appropriated for "care and repair heating apparatus," may pay a man $200.00 a year for caring for and repairing the heating apparatus of the state house and he may designate the engineer to do the work for this amount provided the duties are independent from and not germane or incidental to the ordinary work of that official and not of such a nature as to interfere with such official duties.

COLUMBUS, OHIO, February 14, 1912.

HON. CHARLES C. WEYBRECHT, Adjutant General, Columbus, Ohio.

DEAR SIR:—I have your communication of January 26, 1912, wherein you state:

> "I respectfully submit the following questions and ask for a ruling thereon. Under 'State House and Grounds' we have an appropriation of 'Care and repair heating apparatus.'
> 1. Would it be possible for me to pay a man $200 per year, payable quarterly, out of this fund for taking care of and repairing the heating apparatus?
> 2. In case this is a proper charge, could this department designate the engineer to do this work and pay him the $200 a year, he doing the work at times other than his regular working hours?"

Answering your first inquiry it is my opinion that you could pay a man $200 per year, payable quarterly, out of the "care and repair heating apparatus" fund or such other sum within the appropriation for the performance of the work provided for.

Section 146 of the General Code makes the Abjutant General by virtue of his office superintendent of the State House, and gives him "supervision and control of the State House and heating plant therein * *".

The duty imposed by the statute to supervise and control the State house and heating plant therein not only authorizes but requires him to preserve and care for same, while the appropriation for "Care and repair of heating apparatus" furnishes him a fund, fixing the maximum amount that may be used for that purpose. The duty imposed by the statute does not require the personal attention of the Adjutant General, but does require his supervision and makes it his duty to see that it is done. This necessarily implies the employment of assistants and employes to do this work, and I see no reason why a contract cannot be entered into for the sum named in your question, and payable as therein stated for the work of caring for and repairing the heating apparatus.

Regarding your second inquiry, I am of the opinion that you could legally enter into a contract with a person already employed as an engineer in your department to do the work for the compensation, and payable as stated in your first inquiry. Of course while it is the contract and not the appropriation that fixes the amount of compensation payable to an employe, yet under Section 147 no contract shall exceed the amount appropriated by law applicable to the particular purpose, and of course since the appropriation for the engineer is limited to $1,000 he could be paid no more for his services as engineer, but if the work of caring for and repairing the heating apparatus was entirely different from and not germane to his duties as engineer, there is no reason, as I view it, why he could not be employed to do the extra work so long as it did not interfere with his work as engineer, and especially as stated in your second question, when the work on the care and repair of the heating apparatus was done and performed at other and different times than his regular working hours. Of course this should be a separate contract, and executed as other contracts made by your department for work and materials.

Yours very truly,

TIMOTHY S. HOGAN,
Attorney General.

ABSTRACT OF TITLE—PROPERTY OF ARTEBENES KIRK—DEFECTS AND OMISSIONS.

April 20, 1912.

HON. CHARLES C. WEYBRECH, Adjutant General, Columbus, Ohio.

DEAR SIR:—I beg to acknowledge receipt of an abstract of title and deeds from the executors of the last will and testament of Artebenes Kirk, deceased, and from the heirs of said Artebenes Kirk, for the following promises:

> "Situated in the Township of Erie, County of Ottawa and State of Ohio, and known as and being the north half (½) of the Northwestern Quarter (¼) of the Northwest Quarter (¼) of Section Twenty-eight (28), Town Seven (7), North range Sixteen (16), East, containing twenty (20) acres of land, be the same more or less. Also the North half (½) of the South half (½) of the Northwest Quarter (¼) of the Northern Quarter (¼) of Section Twenty-eight (28), Town Seven (7), North Range Sixteen (16) east, containing Ten (10) acres of land to be the same more or less."

The transcript of the wills of John Kirk and of Immer L. Kirk, and proceedings had thereunder, and the oil and gas lease from the last named to W. H. Murphy, should not be included in the abstract, for the reason that they do not affect the land described in the deeds.

I would suggest, that the abstract be supplemented so as to show the following:

Copy of the patent from the United States government to Henry McCallum; the discrepancy between the statement in the deeds that the land to be conveyed is in range 16 East and the omission of the word East in the recital of the entry by Henry McCallum should be cleared; completion of the record of the settlement of the estate of Elias Haines; affidavits that Elizabeth H. Broadwell and Josephine R. Foster are the same persons mentioned in the will of Elias Haines as Elizabeth H. Little and Josephine R. Little, respectively; an affidavit showing the date of the death of Artebenes Kirk, his residence at the time of his death, the names of his surviving heirs and their relationship to him; a certificate of the clerk of the United States Court for the district in which the land is situated as to the pendency of executions, foreign or domestic, suits or judgments in such court against said grantors, or any of them.

No liens are disclosed by the abstract. The statement in the certificate that there are no overdue taxes, which are a lien against said premises, is not sufficiently broad to include the taxes and assessments due and payable June 20, 1912. If the same have not been paid they constitute a lien against said premises and should be paid before the title finally passes.

Subject to the foregoing, I am of the opinion that the State of Ohio will acquire a good and sufficient title in fee simple.

Very truly yours,
TIMOTHY S. HOGAN,
Attorney General.

TRAVELING EXPENSES—TRANSPORTATION OF MEDICAL OFFICERS OF OHIO NATIONAL GUARD TO MEETING OF ASSOCIATION OF MILITARY SURGEONS UNAUTHORIZED.

Inasmuch as the payment of the transportation of medical officers of The Ohio National Guard to the meeting of the Association of Military Surgeons is unauthorized by law, the same may not be paid from state funds.

GENERAL CHARLES C. WEYBRECHT, Adjutant General, Columbus, Ohio.

DEAR SIR:—The following letter under date of August 13, 1912, was referred to me by the Auditor of State for an opinion as to your powers with respect to the purposes therein contemplated:

> "The Adjutant General, State of Ohio, Columbus.
> SIR:
> I have the honor to inform you that the twenty-first Annual meeting of the Association of Military Surgeons of the United States will be held in Baltimore, Maryland, October 1 to 4, 1912.
> "The membership of this association is confined to medical officers of the Army, the Navy, the Public Health and Marine Hospital Service and the National Guard of the United States. Foreign countries also send medical officers of their military service as visiting delegates. The meetings of this association have always been of exceptional interest, and are valuable schools of instruction.
> "While federal funds are unauthorized to meet the expense of attendance for National Guard officers, it is hoped that you will find it practicable, through your governor, to send as many of your medical officers as possible at state expense, as the papers and discussions presented from this and foreign countries afford exceptional opportunity for improvement and increased efficiency in the military sanitary service. It is hoped that your state will be liberally represented at this meeting.
> Very respectfully,
> Wm. J. Snow,
> Major, Acting Chief, Division of Militia Affairs."

It is well settled that public funds may be expended only as they have been appropriated and as their payment has been expressly authorized or directed by law. The only statutes I find which have a possible relation to your inquiry are the following:

Section 5265, General Code.

"The auditor of state shall credit to the 'state military fund' from the general revenues of the state, a sum equal to ten cents for each person who was a resident of the state, as shown by each last preceding federal census. Such fund shall be a continuous fund and available only for the support of the organized militia. It shall not be diverted to any other fund or used for any other purpose."

Section 5266, General Code.

"The general assembly shall appropriate annually, and divide into two funds, the amount authorized by the preceding section. Such funds shall be respectively know as the 'state armory fund' and 'maintenance Ohio national guard fund.'"

Section 5267, General Code.

"From the 'maintenance Ohio national guard fund', the adjutant general shall pay the per diem, transportation, subsistence and incidental expenses of militia companies, inspection and incidental expenses of camp, including horses' hire, fuel, lumber, forage of horses, and medical supplies."

Section 5269, General Code.

"All bills authorized by contracts made and approved by the board, shall be paid upon vouchers of the adjutant general."

Section 5292, General Code.

"Officers and enlisted men of the national guard shall receive pay for their services at the following rates: When in actual service, in case of riot or insurrection, or when called upon in aid of the civil authorities, each commissioned officer shall receive such sum per day for each day's service performed as is allowed commissioned officers of like grades in the army of the United States, together with the necessary transportation, commissary and quartermaster stores, and medical supplies. For all horses of enlisted men there shall be paid two dollars per day for each horse necessarily used by them for each day's service performed."

Section 5293, General Code.

"Officers and enlisted men shall receive pay for each day actually spent by them on duty at annual encampments, ordered by the commander-in-chief, at the following rate, together with all necessary transportation, quartermaster stores and medical supplies. Each commissioned officer shall receive pay as provided in the next preceding section. For each day's service performed, each enlisted man shall receive one dollar and rations at a rate not to exceed forty cents a day."

Section 5295, General Code.

> "Payment under the preceding two sections shall be made on the payrolls prepared according to such forms as directed by and upon the warrant of the adjutant general, and approved by the governor, out of moneys in the treasury, appropriated for that purpose. The necessary commissary and quartermaster stores, and medical supplies, and transportation for the troops in actual service, and while attending the annual encampment, and the transportation and subsistence of organizations of the national guard representing the state officially on accasions of ceremony within or without the state, shall be contracted for by the proper department officers, by direction of the governor, and paid for in like manner."

Under Sections 5292 and 5293, General Code transportation and subsistence is authorized for officers and enlisted men of the militia in the following instances: First, when in actual service; second, in case of riot or insurrection; third, when called upon in aid of the civil authorities, and fourth, when on duty at annual encampments.

Under Section 5295 transportation and commissary supplies are authorized on behalf of the troops, first when engaged in actual service, and second, while attending annual encampments. Under the same section transportation and subsistence is provided for organizations of the national guard when representing the state officially on occasions of ceremony within and without the state.

I am of the opinion that the purpose here presented of sending representatives to the meeting of the Association of Military Surgeons of the United States is not included within any of the foregoing provisions. Transportation or subsistence of such representatives therefore, may not be paid out if state funds.

Yours very truly,

TIMOTHY S. HOGAN,
Attorney General.

COMPENSATION OF OFFICER FOR REPRESENTING ADJUTANT GENERAL'S OFFICE IN ARBITRATION BEFORE ATTORNEY GENERAL FOR DAMAGE CLAIM AGAINST RAILROAD SAME AS ALLOWED AT ANNUAL ENCAMPMENTS.

Under Section 5296 General Code, an officer delegated by the governor to represent the adjutant general's department, in a claim for damages against a railroad company in the matter of which the attorney general is acting as arbiter, may be paid for the time devoted to such duties the amount allowed by law for duty at annual encampments.

HON. CHARLES C. WEYBRECHT, Adjutant General of Ohio, Columbus, Ohio.

DEAR SIR:—I am in receipt of your letter of November 18, 1912, in reference to the claim of Col. B. L. Barger, which letter is as folows:

> "Enclosed bill from Colonel B. L. Barger is forwarded for your approval. Colonel Barger was employed by this department to look after the interests of the state in the matter of certain damages paid by the state of Ohio on account of railroad wreck at Belle Valley, Ohio, 1910, on Pennsylvania lines.

"The total damages to horses and men amounted to $2,400.00. This amount is withheld from the bill of transportation to the Pennsylvania Company. An agreed statement of facts was to be furnished your department by February, 1912, but it is evident that the Pennsylvania Company does not intend to press the claim.

"We would like to have your approval of this as soon as possible."

As stated in your letter, Col. Barger was employed, or detailed, by you, to represent the state on behalf of your department, in a claim amounting to $2,400, against the Pennsylvania Railroad Company, for damages on account of loss in a wreck at Belle Valley, Ohio, on July 31, 1910, in which wreck a number of horses, belongin to the Fourth and Eighth Infantry, were killed and injured. The claim on behalf of the state, and your department, was resisted by the railroad company, and it was necessary that someone be assigned to look after the interests of the state. It was agreed that the matter be submitted to me as arbitrator, and, therefore, it would not have been proper for anyone connected directly with my department to appear before me in behalf of the state; and it was eminently fitting that Col. Barger, on account of his complete knowledge as to the transaction, as well as of the law governing, be assigned to this duty. The duty to which he was assigned most efficiently performed by him, and his services resulted in the claim of the state being paid. The amount he has charged is most reasonable—in fact, he has simply charged what his pay as an officer would have amounted to had he spent the time devoted to this matter in the performance of ordinary military service.

Owing to all the conditions surrounding this claim, the manner of its presentation, and the result achieved, I think that Section 5296, General Code, to-wit:

> "For services and attendance upon general court-martial, courts of inquiry, and boards appointed by the commander-in-chief, as member, judge, advocate, recorder or witness, or upon inspection or other duty, when ordered by the commander-in-chief, officers shall receive as pay the amount allowed by law for duty at annual encampments, together with transportation in kind and actual necessary expenses for each day's service, and the time actually employed in going to and returning from such duty, courts or boards."

applies, and that this bill may properly be paid by your department, and the same is hereby approved.

Very truly yours,

TIMOTHY S. HOGAN,
Attorney General.

ABSTRACT—BLANCHESTER ARMORY SITE—TITLE BY DESCENT—AFFIDAVIT BY HEIRS OR CONVERSANT PARTIES.

Abstract of Blanchester Armory site purchase is correct except that it shows a necessity for the affidavit of heirs or persons who have knowledge of facts which justify title in property, which comes by descent as required by 102 O. L. 99 amending 2768 General Code.

COLUMBUS, OHIO, January 29, 1912.

HON. B. L. BARGER, Secretary Ohio State Armory Board, Columbus, Ohio.

DEAR SIR:—I herewith desire to acknowledge the receipt of your communication of the 15th inst., enclosing the abstract of title to the real estate for the Blanchester Armory site, and which said real estate is described as follows:

> "The following described real estate, lying and being situated in the county of Clinton and state of Ohio, and further described as follows: town lot No. one (1) in Jonathan Baldwin's Addition to the town of Blanchester which said town lot will be more fully described by references to the recorded plat of said addition to said town."

While I find that said abstract of title and the deed to said real estate are in and of themselves correct, I find upon further investigation that inasmuch as the real estate in question came to the said heir at law under the laws of descent that it will be necessary to attach to said deed an affidavit conforming to Section 2768, General Code as amended 102 O. L. 99, and which provides in part as follows:

> "* * * before any real estate, the title to which shall have passed under the laws of descent shall be transferred * * * from the name of the ancestor to the heir at law * * * or to any grantee of such heir at law * * *; and before any deed or conveyance of real estate made by such heir at law or next of kin shall be presented or filed for record by the recorder * * * such heir at law shall present to such auditor the affidavit of such heir or heirs at law or next of kin, or of two persons resident of the state of Ohio, each of whom has personal knowledge of the facts, which affidavits shall set forth the date of such ancestor's death * * * the fact that he or she died intestate, the names, ages and addresses * * * of each such ancestor's heirs at law or next of kin who by his death inherited such real estate, and the relationship of each to such ancestor and the part or portion of such real estate inherited by each * *. Such affidavit shall be filed with the recorder and shall be by him recorded and indexed * * * in his office. * * *"

It follows from the provisions of the foregoing section of the General Code that such affidavits may be sworn to and subscribed either by all the heirs at law of the decendent who join in the deed, or by two persons residents of the state of Ohio, not themselves heirs at law but who have knowledge of the facts. Said affidavit shall set forth the date of such ancestor's death, the fact that he or she died intestate, the names, ages and addresses of such ancestor's heirs at law or next of kin, who by his death inherited such real estate and the relationship of each to such ancestor and the part or portion of such real estate inherited by each. As soon as such affidavit is filed, then the said abstract of title and the said deed meet with my approval.

Yours very truly,
TIMOTHY S. HOGAN,
Attorney General.

ARMORY BUILDING—EXPENSE OF CONSTRUCTION BORNE BY STATE—LAW PUTTING EXPENSE ON COUNTY, UNCONSTITUTIONAL—RIGHT OF COMMISSIONERS TO DEMAND RENT FROM STATE FOR ARMORY ERECTED UNDER UNCONSTITUTIONAL LAW.

The expense of constructing an armory building must be borne by the state and taxes for the purpose must be levied by a uniform rule upon all the property in the state.

When the county commissioners of Muskingum County have erected an armory as part of a monumental building, in compliance with a law requiring them to bear the expense of said armory, which law has since been adjudged unconstitutional, said commissioners may charge the state a reasonable rental for the use of said building for armory purposes. The trustees of the monumental building may be authorized to collect such rent as agents of the commissioners.

March 12, 1912.

HON. B. L. BARGAR, Secretary Ohio State Armory Board, Columbus, Ohio.

DEAR SIR:—I herewith desire to acknowledge the receipt of your communition of January 25, 1912, copy of which is as follows:

> "The Zanesville monumental building, built under a special statute was part armory. This armory part was built by the county commissioners under a law which directed them to furnish an armory for the National Guard organizations within their county. After the commissioners of Muskingum county performed this statutory duty, by building the armory part of the monumental building, the armory law was declared unconstitutional. (It was held to be the duty of the state to provide armories). Before (or unaware of) the rendition of this decision the county commissioners executed said ninety-nine years' lease, exempting the armory part of said building. Later they authorized these lessees-trustees to collect armory rents, and rents were so collected. (See 3*a*).
> "Then Attorney General Denman's opinion of August 11, 1910 (see 3-b), was rendered and payment of rentals, for armory part of building, ceased.
> "The trustees of the Soldiers' and Sailors' Monumental Association contend that said opinion of the attorney general was based on the fact that he had not been advised of the specific authority vested in the trustees by the commissioners (subsequent to lease) to collect rentals for armory part of building. They have requested that you review the former opinion of Attorney General Denman, in light of the facts herewith submitted, and advise whether or not said trustees are entitled to rentals for the armory part of said building.

"Therefore, the armory board submits this matter; but with a further suggestion:

"After said county commissioners sold bonds and built an armory under the old armory law, without expectation of rentals, can they afterward claim rentals simply because their act in building the armory was performed under an unconstitutional statute?"

The special act under which the Zanesville monumental building and armory was built is found in Vol. 84 O. L., page 71, and provides as follows:

"Be it enacted by the general assembly of the state of Ohio, that the board of county commissioners of any county, in which there is a city of the second class and third grade, be, and said board is hereby authorized and empowered to unite with any board of trustees of any soldiers' memorial association organized under the law, and whose principal office is in such city, in the erection of a building suitable for monumental or memorial building, as well as for an armory; such board of county commissioners are hereby further empowered to purchase, or lease real estate in such city suitable for a site for such building as aforesaid, from the board of trustees aforesaid, and erect on the site so purchased or leased as aforesaid, a building suitable for a soldiers' monumental building as well as an armory. The terms and conditions upon which said association shall hold and occupy the parts of any such building so erected by said board of commissioners, as well as the terms and conditions upon which the said association on the one part, and said board of commissioners, for armory purposes only, on the other part, shall, respectively, hold and occupy the building erected by both boards jointly, shall be fixed by a written lease or other contract, between the said two boards.

"Section 2. To meet such expense, the county commissioners of any such county may levy a tax in excess of the maximum allowed by law, but the total collectable for such purpose in any one year shall not exceed ten thousand dollars, and said commissioners are hereby further authorized and empowered to issue the bonds of the county for the purpose aforesaid."

A special act similar to the above cited act was passed by the general assembly April 27, 1893, 90 Ohio Local Laws, 115, authorizing the commissioners of Cuyahoga county to build and furnish an armory as follows:

"Be it enacted by the general assembly of the state of Ohio, that the commissioners of any county containing a city of the first class, second grade, be and they are hereby authorized and empowered to build and furnish an armory in any city for the use of the Ohio national guard, to procure a site for the same and to borrow money to pay for the same, not to exceed the sum of two hundred and twenty-five thousand dollars ($225,000).

"Section 2. That to secure the payment of the amount so borrowed, with interest, the said commissioners are authorized to issue the notes of bonds of said county, payable, if bonds are issued, in twenty-five years and redeemable after ten years from date; said bonds shall be denominated 'central armory bonds,' and shall be for the sum of one thousand dollars each, payable to bearer, and bear interest at rate not exceeding five per centum, payable semi-annually; said notes or bonds shall be signed by the president of the board of county commissioners, and counter signed by the auditor of said county, and the sale of said bonds shall be governed by the provisions of an act entitled 'An act providing for the sale of public bonds,' passed March 22, 1883.

"Section 3. To pay the interest on said notes or bonds and to create a sinking fund sufficient to redeem the same at maturity, the commissioners of said county are hereby authorized to levy a tax, in addition to any tax now authorized by law, not to exceed three-tenths of a mill on the dollar valuation, on the general tax duplicate of said county.

"Section 4. That if, on the completion of said armory, there is any unexpended balance of said fund, it shall be placed and kept to the credit of the sinking fund provided for by this act.

"Section 5. This act shall take effect and be in force from and after its passage."

The Supreme Court in construing the last act in the case of Hubbard as treasurer of Cuyahoga county vs. Fitzsimmons, 57 O. S. 436, holds as follows:

"1. The erection of an armory for the use of the national guard is a general purpose of the state, and taxes to be devoted to that purpose constitution, be levied by a uniform rule upon all the taxable property must, in obedience to the requirement of Section 2, of article 12, of the within the state.

"2. The act of April 27, 1893 (Local Laws, Vol. 90, p. 115) entitled 'an act to authorize the commissioners of any county containing a city of the first class, second grade, to borrow money and issue bonds therefor, for the purpose of building and furnishing a central armory in any such city for the use of the Ohio national guard, and procuring a site therefor' is void, being an attempt to make such general purpose the subject of a local imposition.

"(Wasson et al. vs. the Commissioners, 49 Ohio St., 622, followed and approved)."

Section 3085, Bates' Revised Statutes as originally enacted April 28, 1886, 83 O. L., 101, provided as follows:

"The board of county commissioners of the county in which all, or a majority of the officers and enlisted men of any regiment, battalion, company, troop or battery reside, shall provide for each organization a suitable armory for the purpose of drill, and for the safe keeping of the arms, equipments, uniforms and other military property furnished by the state, subject to the inspection and approval of an officer detailed for such purpose by the commander-in-chief, and the expense of armories including the necessary fuel and lights, shall be paid either by the county wherein all the members of any such organization reside, or by counties in proportion as they have resident members of any such organization."

Said section as amended April 18, 1892, 89 O. L., provided in substance that the board of county commissioners shall provide a suitable armory for the purpose of drill and for the safe-keeping of the arms, equipment, uniforms and other military property purchased by the state.

The circuit court in the case of State ex rel vs. Brinkman, 7 C. C. Rep. 165, held said act unconstitutional. Later said section was again amended by the legislature on April 27, 1893, and again on March 24, 1894, 91 O. L., 100.

In construing said act as last amended, that is as amended on March 24, 1894, the circuit court in the case of State ex rel vs. Kreighbaum, et al., 9 C. C. Rep., 619, held said act clearly unconstitutional. In said case the court traces the history of said statute through its various amendments in the following language:

> "In determining the constitutionality of this section of the statute, it is necessary to examine the entire act of which it forms a part, and the previous legislation on this same subject, recently enacted by the legislature.
> "April 18, 1892, the legislature passed the act found in 89 Ohio L. 411, pertaining to the militia of the state, providing as to how it should be constituted, organized and apportioned.
> "Section 3085 of that act provides that the board of county commissioners shall provide a suitable armory for the purposes of drill and for the safe-keeping of the arms, equipment, uniforms and other military property furnished by the state. The constitutionality of that section was considered and passed upon by the circuit court of the three circuit, sitting in Putnam county, and reported in 7 O. C. C. R., 165. The opinion of the court was announced by Seney, J. We concur in the reasoning and the conclusion of the court arrived at in that case.
> "No doubt, in view of the decision in that case, the legislature repealed that section of the statute, and April 27, 1893, enacted by way of amendment, Section 3086 as found in 85 Ohio Laws, 90, 367.
>
> "The original section required the county to bear the expense of the erection of a suitable armory. The section as enacted April 27, 1893, provided that the adjutant general, by contract or otherwise, for a period not exceeding one year from the passage of this act, provides for each organization in the county where a majority of the officers and enlisted men of any regiment, battalion, company, troop or battery reside, a suitable armory for the purpose of drill, and for the safe-keeping of the arms, equipments, uniforms and other military property furnished by the state, expenses to be paid by the state.
> "On March 28, 1894, this section was repealed, and the one now under consideration by this court enacted. It reads as follows:
>
> "Section 3085. The board of county commissioners of a county in which all or a majority of the officers and enlisted men of any regiment, battalion, company, troop or battery reside, shall provide for each organization a suitable armory for the purpose of drill, and for the safe-keeping of the arms, equipments, uniforms and other military property furnished by the state; which armory shall be inspected and approved by an officer detailed by the commander-in-chief for such purpose, who shall file with the board of county commissioners a certificate of such inspection and approval.
> "Under this last section, instead of the state bearing any of the cost of providing a suitable armory, the county must bear the entire burden.
> "Section 3085*a* provides, among other things, that the expense of armories, including the necessary care, fuel and lights, provided under Section 3085, shall be paid by the county wherein all the members of the military organization reside. This would apply to Stark county under the agreed facts of this case."

And on page 626 of the opinion the court further says:

> "We conclude the act for the organization of the militia of the state and to provide suitable armories for the safe-keeping of the arms, equipments, uniforms and other military property furnished by the state, is a general law, and not local in its character; and that the cost and expenses provided for by the act should be borne by the state at large, and not by the particular locality."

The provisions of said Section 3085, Revised Statutes, so held unconstitutional were very similar to the provisions of the special acts of the legislature passed April 27, 1893, 90 Ohio Local Laws, 71, heretofore referred to.

All the cited decisions hold in substance that the erection of an armory for the use of the national guard is a general purpose of the state and void as being an attempt to make such general purpose the subject of local imposition.

Now, coming to answer your question directly, I am of the opinion, based upon the reasoning of the above cited cases, that the county commissioners of Muskingum county are not required to furnish armory quarters to the state militia free of rent, for if the county commissioners were to do this they would be providing an armory for the general purpose of the state supported and maintained by local taxation, which would be contrary to the decisions above cited. I think the said commissioners are clearly entitled to charge and receive rent for said armory, and that the trustees of the Soldiers' and Sailors' Monumental Association of Muskingum county may collect such rent as the properly authorized agents of said county commissioners. Yours very truly,

TIMOTHY S. HOGAN,
Attorney General.

ABSTRACT OF TITLE—ARMORY SITE OF MARION—PROPERTY OF WM. B. DENMAN.

COLUMBUS, OHIO, April 5, 1912.

HON. BYRON L. BARGER, Secretary Ohio State Armory Board, Columbus, Ohio.

DEAR SIR:—I beg to acknowledge receipt of your letter of March 2, 1912, enclosing abstract of title and deed for a proposed armory site at Marion, the same being described as follows:

> "Known as being part of the west half of the southeast quarter of section 21, township 5, south range 15 feet, bounded and described as follows:
> "Commencing at a point where the north line of Church Street intersects the east line of Olney Avenue in said city; thence north along the east line of Olney Avenue one hundred thirteen and one-tenth (113.1) feet to the south line of William Coler's land; thence east on the south line of said Coler's land eighty-two and eight-tenths (82.8) feet to a point ten feet north of the northwest corner of Hattie Murphy's lot; thence south on a line parallel with the east line of Olney Avenue one hundred thirteen and one-tenth (113.1) feet to the north line of Church Street aforesaid; thence west along the north line of Church Street eighty-two and eight-tenths (82.8) feet to the place of beginning."

Examination of said abstract discloses no defects which would prevent the State of Ohio from acquiring a good and sufficient title to said premises in fee simple. No liens are disclosed except taxes and assessments, due and payable June 20, 1912, amounting to $31.40.

There should be attached to the abstract a certificate of the clerk of the United States District Court for the Northern District of Ohio, Western Division, as to pending suits or judgments in said court against William B. Denman.

The deed from William B. Denman and wife to the State of Ohio is in proper legal form and, in my opinion conveys a good and sufficient title in fee simple.

I am returning herewith the abstract and deed.

Very truly yours,

TIMOTHY S. HOGAN,

Attorney General.

ABSTRACT OF TITLE—DEFECTS AND OMISSIONS—PROPERTY SITUATED IN VILLAGE OF HILLSBORO.

HON. B. L. BARGER, Secretary Ohio State Armory Board, Columbus, Ohio.

DEAR SIR:—I herewith acknowledge the receipt of abstract of title to the following described real estate:

"DESCRIPTION:

"Situated in the County of Highland, in the state of Ohio and in the town of Hillsboro, and bounded and described as follows: In-lot number forty-four (44) as the same is known and designated on the recorded plat of said town, and being the north-east corner of High and Beech streets. The premises hereby conveyed being formerly known as the 'Woodrow House' property, now the 'Clifton House' property.

"PART OF SAID REAL ESTATE TO BE DEEDED TO THE STATE OF OHIO, FOR SITE FOR ARMORY.

"DESCRIPTION:

"A part of in-lot number forty-four, in the Village of Hillsboro, Highland County, Ohio, bounded and described as follows:

"Beginning at the southwest corner of said in-lot number 44, at the intersection of High and Beech streets; thence with the west line of said in-lot number 44 and the east line of High street, northwardly 99 feet, the full width of said in-lot; thence eastwardly with the north line of said in-lot, 125 feet; thence southwardly, parallel with High street across said in-lot, 99 feet to the south line of said in-lot and the north line of said Beech street; thence westwardly with the south line of said in-lot and the north line of Beech street, 125 feet to the beginning."

The plat does not show or designate the real estate to be conveyed and does not show the measurements. I would suggest that the plat be made to show both.

The first of the above description seems to include all of said in-lot No. 44, and the second describes only a part of in-lot No. 44. This is not a material defect, but I believe it would be well to explain the same in the abstract.

At page 5 of the abstract, transfer No. 4, James Elliott to Benjamin Elliott, said conveyance fails to state whether or not the said James Elliott is married or single and there is no release or dower. However, I do not think that this is a material defect for the reason that an act entitled "To cure and make valid certain deeds and the record thereof" passed by the 79th General Assembly in the 102 Ohio Laws, page 461, provides as follows:

> "When any deed conveying real estate shall have been of record in the office of the recorder of the county within this state, in which such real estate is situated, for more than twenty-one years prior to the taking effect of this act, and the record thereof shows that there is a defect in such deed, for any one or more of the following reasons; because the husband did not join with the wife or the wife with the husband in all the clauses of the deed conveying such real estate, but did join with each other in one of them, in the execution and acknowledgment of such deed; or because any grantor in such deed omitted to affix his seal thereto; or because such deed was not properly witnessed; or because the acknowledgment to such deed does not show that the wife was examined separate and apart from her husband; or because the officer taking the acknowledgment of such deed, having an official seal, did not affix the same to the certificate of acknowledgment; or because the certificate of acknowledgment is not on the same sheet of paper as the deed; or because the executor, administrator, guardian, or assignee or trustee making such deed, signed the same individually instead of in his official capacity; or because the corporate seal of the corporation making such deed was not affixed thereto, such deed and the record thereof shall be cured of such defects, and be effective in all respects as if such deed had been legally made, executed and acknowledged. Provided that nothing herein contained shall be construed to affect rights vesting after the record of such defective deed and prior to the passage of this act, or operate on any suit or action now pending, or which may have been heretofore determined in any court of this state, in which the validity of the making, execution or acknowledgment of any such deed has been or may hereafter be drawn in question. Any person claiming adverse title thereto shall bring proceedings within one year from the taking effect of this act, if not already barred by limitation or otherwise."

At page 6 of the abstract, transfer No. 5, entitled power of attorney of Benjamin Elliott to Phineas Hunt, it appears at page 8 of said abstract that there were no witnesses to said signature of said Benjamin Elliot. However, I think this defect is not material by virtue of the act found in 102 Ohio Laws, page 461, quoted above.

Transfer No. 15 of said abstract is as follows:

"No. 15.

"Joshua Woodrow, Sr., Plaintiff, vs. "Joshua Woodrow, Jr., Margaret T. Woodrow, John Barry, Samuel C. Steel and Eliza Steel, his wife, Christopher Arthur, Joseph V. Patton, Andrew Blount, Matthew Caldwell, Jas. Mitchell, George Roads and John Townley."	"Action in Common Pleas Court, Highland Co., Ohio. Complete Record No. 1, Page 670. Date of filing, February 13, 1858."

"Suit in foreclosure of mortgage.

"Petition sets out that Joshua Woodrow, Jr., and Margaret T. Woodrow, his wife, executed a mortgage of date of July 2, 1855, recorded in book 2, page 194, by which they agreed to maintain and support plaintiff for his natural life. Recites a complete failure to do so by which the conditions become absolute.

"Recites the conveyance to John Barry in Trust, (See No. ____. Abstract,) also a mortgage of $5,000.00 given to Samuel C. Steel and Eliza Ann Steel, his wife; recites that the other defendants, Arthur, Patton, Blount, Caldwell, Mitchell and Roads had brought suits in attachment against said Joshua Woodrow, Jr. That defendant Townley had a lease on said premises, being the property described in the Abstract.

"Complete record shows all parties were served, and an entry shows that all parties consented to judgment in favor of plaintiff on his mortgage for $1,250.00 in his favor; and consented to order of sale of the premises being in-lot No. 44, described in Caption.

"Record shows appraisement and sale to be regular, sale being made to James T. Thompson for $2,600.00 and on confirmation, Thos. H. Baskin as Master Commissioner and Sheriff, was ordered to make deed to purchaser, and an order of distribution was made.

The mortgage from Joshua Woodrow, Jr., and Margaret T. Woodrow, his wife, upon which suit was brought, is recorded in Mortgage record No. 2, page 194. There is no release entered of said mortgage on said record, but the sale was made and distribution ordered, on the petition alleging said mortgage.

"In the above suit, Samuel C. Steel and Eliza Ann Steel, his wife, are made parties defendant, and are alleged to have a mortgage for $500.00 on said property. A finding is made and an order that they be paid the amount due. A release of said mortgage is entered on the records. (Mortgage Record No. 2, page 485-6), as follows:

"'Received payment in full satisfaction of the within note and mortgage and in consideration I hereby release the same and all right and title under the deed of mortgage. July 15, 1858.

"'Samuel Stell for himself and wife.'"

The records disclose suits filed against Joshua Woodrow, Jr. prior to the above action as follows:

"Christopher Arthur	vs.	Joshua Woodrow, Jr.,	Jan. 11, 1858.
"Joseph V. Patten	vs.	same	Jan. 11, 1858.
"Matthew Caldwell	vs.	same	Jan. 11, 1858.
"Jas. W. Mitchell	vs.	same	Jan. 11, 1858.
"Andrew Blount	vs.	same, dismissed	Mar. 26, 1858.
"Geo. Roads	vs.	same	Jan. 11, 1858."

The judgment in above case in favor of Joshua Woodrow, Sr. and the order of distribution provided that the proceeds of sale should be divided and distributed after payment of costs as follows:

"To Joshua Woodrow, Sr., $1,250.00.

"To Samuel C. Steel and wife, $500.00 and interest.

"To John Barry, trustee for Margaret T. Woodrow, the balance of the proceeds."

The suits against Joshua Woodrow by Arthur and others above noted were most of them reduced to judgment, but nothing was left of proceeds to apply to the claims, and as they were all made parties and consented to sale, their interests in the lot, if any, by attachment were transferred to the fund by the sale.

I am of opinion that a copy of the petition in that action should be set forth, together with copies of the records in such case, and also show copies of all records shown as the final determination of the suit, and also a copy of the court entry showing the consent of the defendants to the sale of said property, and then the abstract will conclusively show that all the interests of the respective parties were transferred from the real estate to the funds realized from the sale of the property.

Transfer No. 20 shows no release of the dower estate, but for reasons above stated, this defect is not material.

Encumbrance No. 1, being a mortgage deed from Jacob Uhrig and Mary Uhrig, his wife, to N. Craig McBride and J. D. McBride, should be cleared up by showing a copy of release.

In respect to encumbrance No. 2, I think the abstract should contain a certificate of the Probate Court, showing the estate of Eliza J. Wright to have been fully administered.

I think said abstract should further state whether or not there are any tax assessment or judgment liens against said property, and whether or not there are any foreign executions standing against said premises.

I believe also a certificate should be secured from the United States District Court (setting forth whether or not there are any pending judgments or liens against said property).

Very truly yours,
TIMOTHY S. HOGAN,
Attorney General.

DEED AND ABSTRACT OF TITLE—COMMONS OF MARIETTA, OHIO—OHIO COMPANY'S PURCHASE—ORIGINAL TOWNSHIP DEDICATION—FEE IN COUNTY TO USE OF CITY—LEGAL INTEREST CONVEYED TO STATE FOR ARMORY PURPOSES.

The commons of Marietta was originally a part of the Ohio company's purchase, and under such sale, was devoted to religious purposes.

The plat, however, was laid off and dedicated by the trustee of original township and this dedication was ratified by the legislature. Such dedication, by virtue of Ohio Land Laws, 445, vested the fee simple of the streets, alley, commons and public places, in the county to the use of the municipal authority.

Such use constitutes an "interest" within the meaning of Section 3631, General Code, which may be legally deeded to the state of Ohio for armory purposes.

The deed, under consideration therefore, legally vests such interest in the state and the armory board may employ said property for armory purposes.

March 15, 1912.

COL. BYRON L. BARGAR, Secretary Ohio State Armory Board, Columbus, Ohio.

DEAR SIR:—

IN RE MARIETTA ARMORY SITE.

There was submitted to this department sometime in July last an abstract of the land offered by the city of Marietta, Ohio, to the state of Ohio for the purpose of erecting and maintaining an armory at Marietta.

On consideration of said abstract on July 28, 1911, I wrote you as follows:

> "In reference to the property covered by the abstract of title herewith presented and signed by Mr. A. D. Fellett I beg to advice that it is my judgment that the title to the premises therein described is good and sufficient for the erection and maintenance by the state of Ohio of an armory for the use of the Ohio National Guards, or any other public purpose for which the state should desire to use the same."

and at the same time enclosed said abstract of title. I am informed that said abstract and opinion did not reach the board, and that the board now desires to have the same renewed, together with a statement of the title which the board will receive when acquiring the deed offered by the city of Marietta, to it.

I have, therefore, gone fully into the matter and especially in reference to the title which is offered and I find no reason to change or modify my letter of July 26, 1911.

The tract in question, to-wit: Commons of Marietta, was originally a part of Section twenty-nine (29) of the Ohio company's purchase, which under the contract of sale or conveyance to the Ohio company was devoted to religious purposes. This fact for a time gave me considerable concern, but upon careful examination, I find that while a portion of the lots, streets and alleys of Marietta, and all of this commons was laid off and dedicated by the trustees of the original township, as is shown by the original plat of the town of Marietta left for record April 20, 1802, yet since that date the legislature of Ohio recognized the dedication by authorizing the leasing of all lands included in the dedication other than such as was laid off in streets, alleys and commons, Ohio Land Laws 161, act of February 21, 1805.

By the act of December 6, 1800 (Ohio Land Laws 445) requiring the recording of town plats, it is provided that such proceeding shall vest the fee simple to the streets, alleys, commons and public places in the county.

The plat so recorded on April 20, 1802, had the effect, as I view it, to vest the fee to this commons in the county, the same, however, to be under the control of the municipal authority for public uses as found in the plat. Such use, however, is not to be strictly construed, but will include any public use to which the city authorities may desire to devote it.

Langley vs. Gallipolis, 2 O. S., 110.

The result of this is the dedication vested a naked legal title to this commons in the county with the use in the city, and the fact that it was originally a portion of Section twenty-nine(29) cuts no figure whatever. The title acquired by the state will be just the same had the dedication been made by any other land owner.

Section 3631, General Code, was amended 102 Ohio Laws, 153, granting municipal corporations the power > "to hold real estate or any interest therein and other property for the use of the corporation and to sell or lease it, or to donate the same by deed in fee simple to the state of Ohio as a site for the erection of an armory."

The city of Marietta undoubtedly has an interest in the commons, a part of which is herewith offered by deed of fee simple to the state of Ohio.

I am of the opinion, that, as heretofore stated, the title offered is good and sufficient for the purposes desired, though the deed from the city will not convey a fee which can subsequently be disposed of by the state.

I have suggested, however, as a purely precautionary measure and no more, that a resolution be procured from the county commissioners approving the conveyance for the purposes for which the same is made, which has been done.

I herewith enclose a copy of the abstract which I have heretofore sent you and a deed conveying the title to the state of Ohio, which deed has been submitted to me and which I find to be correct in form.

Yours very truly,
TIMOTHY S. HOGAN,
Attorney General.

ABSTRACT OF TITLE—PROPERTY IN SIDNEY, OHIO, LOT NO. 1.

HON. BYRON L. BARGER, Secretary State Armory Board, Columbus, Ohio.

DEAR SIR:—Herewith find enclosed abstract of title and deed from the city of Sidney to the state of Ohio for lot No. 101 in said city, which said city is donating to the state of Ohio as a site for an armory.

Careful examination has been made of said abstract and deed, and in my opinion the same are sufficient to convey to the state of Ohio a good title in fee simple.

Yours very truly,
TIMOTHY S. HOGAN,
Attorney General.

ABSTRACT OF TITLE—PROPERTY IN COVINGTON, OHIO—VACATION OF STREETS AND ALLEYS.

HON. BYRON L. BARGER, Secretary of State Armory Board, Columbus, Ohio.

DEAR SIR:—I beg to acknowledge receipt of your letter of September 5, enclosing three deeds from the village of Covington to the state of Ohio, and two abstracts of title for the following described premises, which it is proposed to donate to the state of Ohio for an armory, to-wit:

> "Situated in the county of Miami, in the state of Ohio, and in the village of Covington, and bounded and described as follows:
> "Situate in the northeast quarter of Section 20, town 8, range 5, east, and more fully described as follows: Including all of in-lot 151 and the east 30 ft. of lot 152 in Daniel Lehman's addition in said village. Beginning at the southeast corner of said in-lot 151; thence southwestwardly along the southeasterly line of said lot, 128 ft; thence northwardly parallel with and 30 ft. westwardly at right angles from the east line of said lot 152, 126.4 ft.; thence northeastwardly 128.2 ft. to a point in the west line of High street 119.8 ft. northwardly measured along the west line from the place of beginning; thence southwardly along said west line to the place of beginning; thence southwardly along said west line from the place of beginning, containing an area .334 of an acre, more or less. (This description embraces the in-lots as described and the land lying on the north boundary thereof, which was formerly the right of way of the P. C. C. & St. L. Railway Co.).

Also,

"Being all that certain tract or parcel of land, situate in the northeast quarter of Section 30, town 8, range 5, east, in the village of Covington, Miami county, Ohio, and being further described as follows:

"Beginning at a point in the east line of Main street at the northwest corner of in-lot No. 153 in Daniel Lehman's addition; thence northwardly along said east line 45.3 feet; thence northeastwardly 149.5 feet to an iron pin at the northwest corner of a parcel of land conveyed to J. J. Hittle by deed dated December 28, 1909, recorded in Vol. 136, page 432; thence southwesterly by lands last mentioned 38.4 feet to the northwestly line of in-lot 152 in said addition; thence southwardly along the northwesterly line of said lot 162 to the place of beginning, containing an area of 0.135 of an acre, more or less. (This description embraces what was formerly the right of way of the P. C. C. & St. L. Railway Company, adjoining on the north the following lots, viz: lot No. 153 and part of lot No. 152, in the D. Lehhan addition to said village of Covington)."

Also,

"Being all of lot number one hundred and fifty-three (153); and all of lot number one hundred and fifty-two (152), except 30 ft. off the east side of lot No. 152 heretofore deeded to the P. C. C. & St. L. Railway Company."

A careful examination has heretofore been made of these abstracts and certain amendments were incorporated therein at my suggestion, and upon a further examination of the abstracts as amended, I am of the opinion that the state of Ohio will acquire a good and sufficient title in fee simple.

It will be observed that the council of the village of Covington has instituted proceedings to vacate the alleys between lots 151 and 152, and lots 152 and 153, respectively. These alleys were never, in fact, open to the public, as is shown by exhibit B, attached to abstract No. 1913, and exhibit E attached to abstract No. 1915.

It is practically certain that the alleys will be duly vacated inasmuch as the adjoining property is now owned by the village of Covington, and by the time the proceedings for vacation will have been completed, the state of Ohio will have become owner of the adjoining lands by virtue of the aforesaid deeds, and said alleys will become the property of the state.

The delay in the proceedings for the vacation is not, in my opinion, sufficient justification for your board to hesitate about taking any contemplated action with regard to the location of an armory at Covington.

Herewith find enclosed abstracts and deeds hereinbefore referred to.

Yours very truly,

TIMOTHY S. HOGAN,
Attorney General.

MECHANICS LIEN LAW NOT AVAILABLE AGAINST STATE—STATE ARMORY BOARD—RIGHTS OF BOARD WHEN CONTRACTOR DIES INSOLVENT.

Upon the principle that the State may not be sued, when a contractor dealing with the Armory Board, dies insolvent, before the completion of the Armory contracted for, with monies owing to material men and sub-contractors for work done on the Armory, the latter have no right to perfect liens under the mechanic's lien law.

When the administration fails to make application to probate court for authority to complete the contract, immediate notice of the fact should be given to the surety and demand made to complete the contract. Upon failure to comply, the Armory Board may complete the contract and charge the cost thereof over and above the amount still due on the contract, to the bonding company.

December 4, 1912.

HON. BYRON L. BARGER, Secretary Ohio State Armory Board, Columbus, Ohio.

DEAR SIR:—I beg to acknowledge receipt of your letter of November 28th, as follows:

> "Mr. J. L. H. Barr, contractor for Batavia armory died November 16, 1912.
> "At the time of his death he was nearing completion of his contract and the Armory Board had allowed him estimates aggregating $10,228.00. On final completion he would have been entitled to an additional sum of about $7,665.00. An additional sum of $105.00 is in dispute.
>
> "His bondsman is The Citizens Trust and Guaranty Company of Parkersburg, West Virginia. A copy of the bond is herewith transmitted.
> "D. L. Barr, son of the decedent, has been appointed administrator. His attorneys are Messrs. Griffith and Nichol, of Batavia.
> "On Sunday, November 24, 1912, the Armory Board met the administrator and Judge Griffith at Cincinnati, and the Board was informed that said decedent owed about $9,400.00 to sub-contractors and material men et al for materials and work on this Batavia armory. That decedent's estate was insolvent and that the Probate Court would not direct the administrator to complete this contract. Judge Griffith further suggested that the Board direct the bondsman to complete the contract.
> "Meanwhile several of the sub-contractors have endeavored to perfect liens.
> "Please advise as soon as you can what action the Board should now take."

The right of sub-contractors, material men or laborers of a contractor making public improvements for the State of Ohio to secure a lien upon the funds set apart by the State for such improvement is adversely decided in the case of State ex rel vs. Morrow, 10 N. P., n. s., 279, the third syllabus of which is as follows:

"The mechanic lien law, although general in its nature, and the language in code broad enough to include public improvements of the state, does not apply to any public improvement made by the State. And any steps taken pursuant to the mechanic lien act to establish a lien or claim against funds in the hands of the state set apart for any public improvements have no effect in law and afford no ground for action either in law or equity against the state."

And on page 285 of the opinion, Kyle, J., says:

"The trustees know no one in the transaction save the principal contractor, and under the law it was the duty of them to have an estimate made to such principal contractor, and having certified such estimate to the auditor it was the duty of the auditor to pay the same to to such principal contractor, there being no provision for the determination of any other person's rights to such fund by them. Hence, it is my opinion that the State of Ohio is not subject or bound by the provisions of the lien law, and no person can acquire any interest in any money by any steps taken under such lien law against any fund in the hands of the board of trustees or the Auditor of State, and that, therefore, the relator is not entitled to a peremptory writ of mandamus, and the writ will be quashed and the petition dismissed at the costs of the plaintiff."

The circuit court on October 21, 1910 affirmed this decision in the following memorandum set forth in the note at the bottom of page 279 of the above case, to-wit:

"We think that the judgment of the lower court should be affirmed for the reasons given by Judge Kyle in his opinion, and in addition this reason:

"'There is a doctrine laid down in 38th Law Bulletin, 212, which is the law that where a contractor absconds that ends his rights, and the owner may proceed with the completion of the work and without paying to the contractor or his sub-contractor anything, even though he should complete the work at a less price than originally contracted for.'"

The additional reason given by the circuit court is not germane to the situation herein presented.

I am, therefore, of the opinion that no part of the fund in the hands of the State Armory Board for the construction of the Batavia armory can be subjected to the payment of the liens above mentioned. Inasmuch as the estate of the contractor is insolvent, and as his administrator refuses to make application to the probate court for authority to complete the contract, I advise that you give immediate notice of this fact to the bonding company and demand that they complete the contract. In event of their failure to take steps to do so within reasonable time, it would be the duty of the State Armory Board to see to the completion of the same and charge the cost thereof over and above the amount of money still due on the original contract to the bonding company.

I herewith return copy of the bond sent to me with your communication.

Very truly yours,

TIMOTHY S. HOGAN,
Attorney General.

ABSTRACT OF TITLES—TEETERS, LAMBORN AND COMPANY'S ADDITION TO THE INCORPORATED VILLAGE OF ALLIANCE, OHIO.

December 20, 1912.

HON. BYRON L. BARGER, Secretary State Armory Board, Columbus, Ohio.

DEAR SIR:—I beg to acknowledge receipt of your letter of December 16th, enclosing for my consideration and approval, deed and so-called Abstract of Title for roads 1322, 1323, and 1324 in Teeters, Lamborn & Company's Addition to the incorporated village of Alliance, Ohio; also all the right, title and interest of the grantors in said deed, to a certain strip of land twenty (20) feet in width and one hundred and twenty (120) feet in length adjoining said lots, upon which land it is proposed to erect an armory.

A careful examination of said so-called abstract discloses that it is nothing more, in the main, than copies of the indexes to certain deeds in the office of the county recorder of Stark County. It is absolutely impossible for anyone to intelligently pass upon the legality of this title with the meager information at hand. I would suggest that an abstract be made in regular form and transmitted to this office. In addition to this, I would suggest that the following doubtful points be covered in the abstract.

1. Summons in the proceeding appearing at No. 14 does not appear to have been served on all of the defendants, nor do those named as not having been served, appear to have waived service. I presume the record will show these facts.

2. It appears that in the proceeding abstracted at No. 27, summons were issued to various counties, but the abstract fails to state from whom they were issued and whether or not service was had upon the parties.

3. A copy of the plat of Teeters, Lamborn & Company's Addition to the town of Alliance, or so much thereof as will be necessary to show the location of the lots in question, together with a complete copy of the minutes appearing upon the record of the plat, should be attached to the abstract.

4. Affidavits should be procured showing that L. H. Miller, grantee in No. 30, and Lyman H. Milner, grantor in No. 31, are one and the same person; and as to the discrepancies in No. 31, between the names of the grantors as given at the head of the instrument and the signatures.

5. Affidavits should be procured showing whether Richard W. Teeters, grantee in No. 31 and R. W. Teeters, grantor in No. 33 are one and the same person.

6. The abstractor states that there is only one witness to the signatures of the two last grantors in No. 28, and as two witnesses are required under the laws of Ohio, it will be necessary to procure a quit claim deed from those persons.

Affidavits should be procured covering the point as to whether the John R. Morgan and Arthur Morgan, whose names appear as grantors in the deed, are the same persons who appear to have signed the same as John W. Morgan and Arthur P. Morgan, respectively.

7. There is no apparent reason why the quit claim deed in No. 40 should have been given. The title had theretofore vested in Margaret M. Ramsey by virtue of a deed given by the heirs of Thomas Morgan including William H. Morgan, and I do not understand why William H. Morgan should be included as a grantee in said instrument. If the interests of William H. Morgan are not fully divested, a quit claim deed should be obtained from him; at least, an explanation should be made as to why the deed was executed.

8. A certificate of the Clerk of the United States District Court at Cleveland, as to the pendency in said court of judgments or bankruptcy proceedings against Margaret M. Ramsey, should be attached to the abstract.

The certificate to the amended abstract should be more comprehensive than the certificate attached to the papers I have considered. It should contain a statement of the abstractor as to the character of title that would be acquired by the State.

I have also examined the deed from Margaret M. Ramsey and husband to the State of Ohio, and while it is not absolutely necessary inasmuch as both parties have joined in the granting clause, yet I would prefer that the contingent right of dower of Willis H. Ramsey be specifically released.

You raise the question in your letter as to what effect the words "for armory purposes,"appearing in the granting clause, would have on the fee simple title which the State would acquire.

Inasmuch as the deed is for a valuable consideration, and as no clause is contained therein providing that the said land should revert to the State of Ohio if sold or used for other than armory purposes, I am of the opinion that the State would acquire a good fee simple, marketable title.

I am herewith returning to you said deed and the alleged abstract, for correction in the particulars mentioned.

Very truly yours,

TIMOTHY S. HOGAN,

Attorney General.

FOREIGN CORPORATIONS—"DOING BUSINESS" IN OHIO—STATUTORY REQUIREMENTS.

A foreign corporation is not "doing business" in Ohio within the meaning of Section 183, G. C., by the mere fact of procuring a lease or commencing a litigation based upon the question of the validity of certain of its patent rights.

A company is not "doing business" within the meaning of statutes like 183, General Code, unless it is engaged in the principal enterprise for which it was organized.

COLUMBUS, OHIO, January 12, 1912.

The Tax Commission of Ohio, Columbus, Ohio.

GENTLEMEN:—I beg to acknowledge receipt of your letter of December 8th, certifying to me, as a foreign corporation doing business in the State of Ohio without having complied with the laws thereof, the International Metal Products Company, a corporation organized under the laws of the State of New Jersey, and having its place of business at Middletown, Ohio. You refer to me in connection with this certification a question raised by the company and its counsel in correspondence, copies of which are enclosed in your letter, as to whether, upon the facts therein stated, the company is "doing business" in this state within the meaning of the statute applicable thereto.

The facts thus stated are as follows: The company owns all of its property and keeps all of its books at Middletown, Ohio. Its property consists solely of certain patent rights pertaining to the manufacture of a certain article of commerce. These patent rights are at present in litigation, the company having brought a suit for the purpose of testing their validity and value. In addition to bringing this action the company has leased a manufacturing plant for the purpose of carrying on the business of manufacturing the article by the use of the patented process in question. The company has never manufactured anything and the foregoing are all the corporate activities upon which it has embarked.

Section 183 of the General Code, under which the obligation of the company to file the statement and pay the fee failure to file and pay which renders it liable, if it is liable at all, to the penalty for which you have requested me to bring suit, provides in part as follows:

> "Before doing business in this state, a foreign corporation organized for profit and owning or using a part or all of its capital or plant in this state shall make and file with the secretary of state, in such form as he may prescribe, a statement under oath of its president, secretary, treasurer, superintendent or managing agent in this state. Containing the following facts: * * *."

From this language it is at once apparent that the mere ownership of property and the mere use of the capital stock of a foreign corporation in the State of Ohio otherwise than in the doing of business does not impose any obligations upon such a foreign corporation under this section.

Analyzing the facts above described, it appears that two acts, and two only, might be construed as the doing of business within the meaning of Section 183, above quoted, namely: the bringing of the action and the making of the lease.

Upon the authorities which I have examined in connection with this question I am of the opinion that neither of these acts constitute "doing business" within the State of Ohio as the phrase is used in the statutes. The authorities are as follows:

"Railway Company vs. Fire Association, 55 Ark., 163.
"Life Insurance Company vs. Sawyer, 44 Wis., 387.
"Christian vs. Land and Mortgage Co., 89 Ala., 198.
"Cook vs. Bridge Company, 98 Ala., 409.
"Lard Stock Company vs. Cattle Co., 16 Utah, 59.
"Utley vs. Mining Company, 4 Colo., 369.
"Mandel vs. Land and Cattle Co., 154 Ill., 177.
"Cattle Company vs. Commissioners, 9 Mont., 145.
"Wood and Cement Company vs. Cement Co., 84 N. Y. Sup., 38.
"Beard vs. Publishing Company, 71 Ala., 60.
"United States vs. Amer. Bell Tel. Co., 29 Fed., 17.
"(A case arising under the Ohio Statutes.)"

All these cases establish the same general principle, viz: that a company is not doing business within the meaning of statutes like Section 183, General Code, unless it is engaged in the principal enterprise for which it was organized—in the case of the International Metal Products Company, the business of manufacturing.

I am, therefore, of the opinion that this company is not doing business under Section 183, General Code, upon the facts submitted. I, therefore, await your advice as to the correctness of these facts.

Very truly yours,
TIMOTHY S. HOGAN,
Attorney General.

TAXES AND TAXATION—SMITH ONE PER CENT. LAW—TRANSFER OF FUNDS BY COUNTY COMMISSIONERS—"DEFICIENCY BONDS" FUNDING INDEBTEDNESS.

There is no authority for the issuance of deficiency bonds by the County. An indebtedness must be valid, matured and of a non-contractual nature before it can be funded or refunded.

The Commissioners could not reimburse a special fund from which a transfer has been made out of the proceeds of a general levy for the fund to which the transfer has been made. The theory of the Smith law as expressed in Section 5649-3 impliedly repeals Section 2443, General Code, providing for transfers of unexpended funds.

The Commissioners may not therefore, after March 1, 1912, make a temporary transfer from a special fund to the judicial fund and have the special fund reimbursed out of the next semi-annual collection for the judicial fund.

March 26, 1912.

Tax Commission of Ohio, Columbus, Ohio.

GENTLEMEN:—I beg to acknowledge receipt, through you, of a letter addressed to you by Hon. Frank L. Johnson, Prosecuting Attorney of Greene County, and of another letter from Hon. Walter L. Dean, Auditor of Greene County, submitting several queries arising by virtue of the effect of Section 5649-3*d* of the Smith law upon pre-existing statutes. The questions, as I gather them from the two letters, are as follows:

> "1. May the proceeds of a special fund, a part of which will not be needed until after the next collection of taxes, be transferred to the judicial fund under Section 2443, General Code, and the special fund reimbursed out of the collection for the judicial fund at the next semi-annual collection?
> "2. Can the county commissioners and county auditor allow and pay bills after March 1st from a fund that has been provided for by levy but exhausted?
> "3. Can the county auditor issue warrants on the county treasurer when a fund is exhausted?
> "4. How are the commissioners to provide money when needed where there is no money in the funds?
> "5. Can we issue deficiency bonds: if so when and how?"

I enclose herewith copies of opinions rendered by me to Hon. Edward C. Turner, Prosecuting Attorney of Franklin County, and to the Bureau of Inspection and Supervision of Public Offices, which furnish answers to some of these questions. Thus, the auditor's third question is fully answered in the letter to the Bureau of Inspection and Supervision of Public Offices. The reasoning of that opinion is also applicable to the second question, above submitted, and furnishes a negative answer thereto. The fifth question is also sufficiently answered by the opinion to Mr. Turner, as I have suggested therein, the circumstances under which bonds may be issued by a county. I may state further, however, that there is no authority whatever for the issuance of "deficiency bonds" in the broadest sense of that term; except in the case of specific improvements bonds may not be issued by the county commissioners, save for the funding or refunding of a valid existing indebtedness. The commissioners have no power, under any statute, to borrow money to supply a deficiency in a fund and then to proceed to contract indebtedness and pay the same out of the proceeds of such a bond issue. The indebtedness must first have been lawfully contracted for, or must be a claim existing, by virtue of law, against the county, regardless of contract; and, in addition thereto, must be due before it can be funded or refunded. Therefore, if a fund becomes exhausted and some of the claims against this fund, which are likely to accrue in the future, are non-contractual in their nature, such as salaries of county officers and the like, such claims, after they become due, must be met by the issuance of bonds under Section 5656, General Code. The accrual of such claims can not be anticipated under said section, nor can such claims be met by the issuance of warrants and their being stamped "Not paid for want of funds," as was the case under prior laws. The reasons for these conclusions will, I think, be sufficiently disclosed by the opinions above referred to.

The fourth question asked by the auditor has, I think, already been answered. County commissioners are utterly without power, under the Smith law, to provide money for claims of a contractual nature when there is no money in the funds, but may, under Section 5656, General Code, provide money when needed to meet matured claims of a non-contractual nature.

The foregoing conclusions leave unanswered only the first question. This question renders necessary a consideration of Section 2443, General Code, and the effect thereon, if any of Section 5649-3*d*. Said Section 2443 provides as follows:

> "The county commissioners may transfer an unexpended balance of any fund, raised for the purpose of erecting public buildings, remaining in the treasury, to any other fund, or to any other purpose for which money is needed by the county. If there is a fund in such treasury that has been levied and collected for a special purpose, and such fund, or a part thereof, will not be needed for such purpose until after the period fixed by law for the next payment of taxes, and any of the other funds of the county are exhausted, the commissioners may transfer such special fund, or such part thereof as is needed to such exhausted fund, and reimburse such special fund from the taxes levied for such other fund, as soon as they are collected."

By referring to my opinion to Mr. Turner, as well as to some pages in my opinion to the Bureau of Inspection and Supervision of Public Offices, it will be noted that a part, at least, of this section cannot be carried into effect under the Smith law. None of the avails of taxation can be expended under that law unless first appropriated, and the proceeds of each levy are devoted, by force of its provisions, to meeting the expenditures between March 1st of one year and the same date of the following year. Therefore, the power of the commissioners to "reimburse such special fund from the taxes for such other fund, as soon as they are collected" is inconsistent with the plain purpose of Section 5649-3*d*, and the latter being later in point of enactment must control. Hence, it follows that the commissioners may not reimburse a special fund, from which a transfer has been made, out of the proceeds of a general levy for the fund to which the transfer has been made. However, if a special levy be made for that purpose, i. e., the reimbursement of the fund from which the transfer was made, the proceeds of such a levy might, after appropriation, be lawfully expended for such purpose. This, however, is not what is meant by Section 2443; that fund contemplates a reimbursement, not from a special levy but from a general levy, for the purpose of the fund to which the transfer was made.

In short, the theory of the Smith law, as exemplified in Section 5649-3*d*, is absolutely inconsistent with former Section 2443, and I can reach no other conclusion than that said Section 2443 has been repealed by implication. It is, therefore, my opinion that the commissioners are without authority to make a temporary transfer from the special fund in question for the relief of the judicial fund, under Section 2443, General Code, after March 1, 1912. The reason for selecting this date will appear in the two opinions, copies of which I enclose herewith.

Very truly yours,

TIMOTHY S. HOGAN,

Attorney General.

TAXES AND TAXATION—CORPORATIONS—WILLIS TAX LAW—CERTIFICATE OF DISSOLUTION—CANCELLATION OF ARTICLES OF INCORPORATION.

The authorities have settled that the mere filing of Articles of Incorporation confer sufficient corporate powers to justify the assessment of a tax upon the privilege of being a corporation. Therefore, when Articles of Incorporation have been procured from the Secretary of State, a corporation has been "organized under the laws of this State" within the contemplation of Section 5495, General Code. Such a corporation is not entitled to the certificate of dissolution provided for in Section 5521, General Code, until it has filed the report and paid the annual fee as provided for in said sections. In case of default of said payment and report, the Tax Commission may certify said corporation to the Secretary of State who must then cancel its Articles of Incorporation as provided in Section 5509, General Code.

April 5, 1912.

Tax Commission of Ohio, Columbus, Ohio.

GENTLEMEN:—I beg to acknowledge receipt of your letter of March 21st, requesting my opinion upon the following questions:

> "Where articles of incorporation have been procured from the Secretary of State, but no certificate of stock subscription filed or any other steps taken—
> "1. Query: Is such "a corporation organized under the laws of this state," and as such required to file reports and pay fees as provided in Section 5495 et seq. of the General Code?
> "2. Query: Is it entitled to the certificate provided for in Section 5521 of the General Code when it has filed no reports and paid no fees as required under Sections 5495 et seq.?
> "3. Query: Is it such a corporation as should be certified to the Secretary of State by the Tax Commission for cancellation of its articles of incorporation, where it has failed to file reports and pay fees as provided in Section 5509, General Code?"

I quote the sections referred to by you in your letter.

> "Section 5495 (Section 106 of the Act of June 2, 1911, 102 O. L. 249). Between the first day of May and the first day of July, 1911, and annually thereafter during the month of May, each corporation, organized under the laws of this state, for profit shall make a report, in writing, to the commission, in such form as the commission may prescribe."

> "Section 5521 (Section 132 of said act, 102 O. L. 254). In case of dissolution or revocation of its charter, on the part of a domestic corporation, or of the retirement from business in this state, on the part of a foreign corporation, the secretary of state, shall not permit a certificate of such action to be filed with him unless the commission shall certify that all reports, required to be made to it, have been filed in pursuance of law, and that all taxes or fees and penalties thereon due from such corporation have been paid."

"Section 1309 (Section 120 of said act, page 251, 102 O. L.) If a corporation, wherever organized, required by the provisions of this act, to file any report or returns or to pay any tax or fee, either as a public utility or as a corporation, organized under the laws of this state for profit or as a foreign corporation for profit doing business in this state and owning or using a part or all of its capital or plant in this state, or as a sleeping car, freight line or equipment company, fails or neglects to make any such report or return or to pay any such tax or fee for ninety days after the time prescribed in this act for making such report or return or for paying such tax or fee, the commission shall certify such fact to the secretary of state. The secretary of state shall thereupon cancel the articles of incorporation of any such corporation which is organized under the laws of this state, by appropriate entry upon the margin of the record thereof, or cancel the certificate of authority of any such foreign corporation to do business in this state by proper entry. Thereupon all the powers, privileges and franchises conferred upon such corporations, by such articles of incorporation or by such certificate of authority, shall cease and determine. The secretary of state shall immediately notify such domestic or foreign corporation of the action taken by him."

The essential provisions of the first of these sections are found in the Willis Law of 1902, so-called; the phrase concerning which you inquire has always been in the law, since its original enactment.

The other two sections above quoted are new in the act of 1911 and, of course, have not been judicially construed. I think it is apparent, however, that Section 120, at least, applies to precisely the same corporations or organizations as Section 5495; it is only as to corporations "required by the provisions of this act to file a report" that the commission may take the action therein referred to.

For similar considerations I am of the opinion that Section 5521 is limited in its operations and effect to the class of organizations defined in Section 5495. I refer you to a previous opinion, in which I held that Section 5521 did not apply to domestic corporations not for profit, organized after the law of 1911 went into effect, and the reasoning therein in support of this conclusion.

It follows, therefore, that the sole question of law for determination here is as to the meaning of the phrase "organized under the laws of the state, for profit," as used in Section 5495.

The manner of the organization of a corporation under the laws of Ohio, for profit, is prescribed by Section 8623 et seq. General Code, some of which I quote.

"Section 8623. Except for carrying on professional business, a corporation may be formed for any purpose for which natural persons lawfully may associate themselves."

"Section 8625. Any number of persons, not less than five, a majority of whom are citizens of this state, desiring to become incorporated, shall subscribe and acknowledge articles of incorporation * * *."

"Section 8625. * * * Articles of incorporation shall be filed in the office of the secretary of state, who shall record them, and shall also record certificates relating to that corporation, thereafter filed in his office."

"Section 8627. Upon filing articles of incorporation, the persons who subscribed them, their associates, successors, and assigns, by the name and style provided therein, shall be a body corporate, with succession, power to sue and be sued, contract and be contracted with: also, unless specially limited, to acquire and hold all property, real or personal, necessary to effect the object for which it is created, and at pleasure convey it in conformity with its regulations, and the laws of this state. Such corporation also may make, use, and at will alter a common seal, and do all other acts needful to accomplish the purposes of its organization."

Section 8629. A copy of articles of incorporation so filed, and duly certified by the secretary of state, shall be prima facie evidence of the existence of the corporation therein named.

"Section 8630. The persons named in the articles of incorporation of a corporation for profit, or a majority of them, shall order books to be opened for subscriptions to the capital stock of the corporation at such time or times and place or places as they deem expedient."

"Section 8633. When ten per cent. of the capital stock is subscribed, the subscribers to the articles of incorporation, or a majority of them at once shall so certify in writing to the secretary of state."

"Section 8634. The incorporators shall be liable to any person affected thereby, in the amount of any deficiency in the actual payment of ten per cent. on the stock subscribed for at the time of so certifying to the secretary of state."

"Section 8635. As soon as such certificate is made, the signers thereto, shall give notice to the stockholders, as provided in section eighty-six hundred and thirty-one, to meet at such time and place as the notice designates, for the purpose of choosing not less than five nor more than thirty directors, to continue in office until the time fixed for the annual election, and until their successors are elected and qualified. * * *"

"Section 8636. At the time and place appointed, directors shall be chosen by ballot, by the stockholders who attend, either in person or by lawful proxies. * * *"

"Section 8660. The corporate powers, business and property of corporations formed under this title shall be exercised, conducted, and controlled by the board of directors: * * *"

It is manifest, under all these sections, that the "organization" of a corporation, formed under the laws of Ohio for profit, is not complete until its directors have been elected; until that time there is no agency whereby the corporate powers may be fully exercised. So it was held in the case of State, ex rel. vs. Insurance Company, 49 O. S., 440:

"The making and filing, for the purpose of profit, of articles of incorporation in the office of the secretary of state, do not make an incorporated company; such articles are simply authority to do so. No company exists within the meaning of the statute, until the requisite stock has been subscribed and paid in, and the directors chosen."—(Syllabus, 5th Branch.)

This was the holding of the Supreme Court in an action in quo warranto brought for the purpose of ousting a foreign insurance company from the privilege of exercising corporate franchises in Ohio without authority of law. The action was founded specifically upon what was then Section 282, Revised Statutes, which provided as follows:

"When, by the laws of any other state or nation, any taxes, fines, penalties, license fees, deposits of money, or of securities or other obligations or prohibitions are imposed on insurance companies of this state, doing business in such state or nation, or upon their agents therein, so long as such laws continue in force, the same obligations and prohibitions, of whatever kind, shall be imposed upon all insurance companies of such other state or nation doing business within this state, and upon their agents here."

It was shown that the respondent company was organized under laws of the state of New York, which said state imposed upon insurance companies of the state of Ohio certain obligations and prohibitions which had not been imposed by the State of Ohio upon the respondent. The court held, however, that in order to lay the foundation for the application of this statute to the respondent it would have to be shown that there was in existence in Ohio an insurance company of Ohio doing business in this state. One of the defenses being that there was no such company in existence at the time the attorney general, the rolator, in the case, sought leave to file a reply to this defense, setting up the filing of articles of incorporation by persons proposing to form an Ohio insurance company. The court held, as evidenced by the syllabus already quoted, that for the purpose of this statute no Ohio company was shown to be in existence by the proposed reply. The language of the opinion on this point, per Minshell, J., is found on page 446, as follows:

"3. The next question is, should leave be given to file the proposed reply to the third defense? We think not, for the reason that it does not show that an Ohio company has been formed to do the four lines of insurance in which the defendant is engaged. It will be observed that it does not aver that any officers or directors have been chosen, or that any of the stock has been subscribed, or that any organization whatever has been effected. It is simply that 'articles of incorporation' have been made, and filed and recorded in the office of the Secretary of State. Articles of incorporation do not make an incorporated company; they are simply authority to do so."

It will thus be seen that while the court laid down some broad principles in this case it had before it a very restricted question.

Again, in Cincinnati vs. Telephone Company, 15 O. Dec. 43, the action was by a telephone company, under the statute which authorized a hearing by the probate court of a proceeding to condemn a right-of-way for its wires in a municipal corporation upon the refusal of council to grant the same. It was made to appear that directors of the plaintiff company had been elected by the votes of stockholders who had not paid the first installment of ten per cent. on their subscriptions as required by statute. The court in its opinion, per Littleford, J., pointed out that under the decisions relating to condemnation proceedings, to which this was likened, a plaintiff corporation is obliged to show a complete right to exercise corporate powers, citing Railway Company vs. Sullivant, 5 O. S., 276; Atkinson vs. Railway, 15 O. S., 21; Powers vs. Railway, 33 O. S., 429. State vs. Insurance Company, supra, is also cited; and the acknowledgment is made that "it is true that the syllabus of the case (State vs. Insurance Company) must be interpreted in the light of the text and restricted accordingly." In all these authorities it was held that the city could question the regularity of the organization of the company and that the failure of the company to show a regularly completed organization precluded recourse by it to the probate court for the purpose of compelling the granting of a right-of-way for its wires.

From what has been said I think it is apparent that decisions of this sort are not conclusive of our question. The real point is as to whether or not a corporation is to be regarded as organized for the purpose of taxation; not whether it is completely organized so as to be an insurance company doing business in Ohio, or so as to be able to exercise the right of eminent domain.

Now, whatever be the effect of the issuance of a certificate of incorporation, to the individuals who desire to incorporate a corporation not for profit, it is clear that such certificate does confer corporate powers upon them; they have the right to be a corporation, although certain steps may yet remain to be taken before their corporation may act in all respects as such. I feel that I need go no further than the provisions of Section 8627 in support of such a statement; however, a very profitable discussion of the effect of the filing of articles is to be found in Ashtabula & New Lisbon R. R. Company vs. Smith, 15 O. S., page 328, and particularly in the opinion therein, per White, J. It is said therein on page 334, that:

> "Under the restrictions imposed, these general powers fall into two classes; such as may be exercised before, and, such as can not be until after, the election of directors. Among the former is the right to receive subscriptions to the capital stock, and, when ten per centum of the amount shall be subscribed, to elect directors; and, among the latter, the location and construction of the proposed road."

It is thus clearly pointed out that the right to elect directors is itself a corporate power, and the object of a special privilege granted by the state.

Now, the class of privileges to which Judge White refers as those which may be exercised before the election of directors constitute corporate powers and special privileges which may be made the subject of excise taxation; of this there can be no doubt. As much was definitely decided in the case of Ashley vs. Ryan, 49 O. S., 504; the syllabus in this case is as follows:

> "Section 148*a*, Revised Statutes, as amended February 12, 1889, (86 O. L. 33), requiring the payment of a fee to the secretary of state for the filing of articles of agreement of incorporation, and, also, of consolidation, proportioned to the authorized capital stock of the company, is a valid law; and applies to articles of agreement of consolidation between an Ohio company and a company or companies of another state, as well as to articles of consolidation between Ohio companies only."

Section 148*a*, Revised Statutes, is described in the foregoing syllabus only insofar as it related to the filing of articles of agreement of consolidation. It ought to be pointed out, however, that the same section was that which provided the fee which the secretary of state should exact for filing articles of incorporation of domestic companies for profit. With this point in mind the reasoning of the opinion, per Minshall, J., becomes of especial interest; I quote liberally from that opinion:

> "The plaintiffs base their right to relief upon the invalidity of the law under which the money paid by them, was exacted by the secretary of state * * *
> "The first objection to the statute is, that it imposes a tax, not authorized by the constitution of the state; * * *
> "1. In support of the first objection the second and fifth sections of the twelfth article of the constitution are cited. We think it well settled that the second section simply relates to the taxation of property; and unless it can be shown that the sum exacted of the plaintiffs is such a tax, it has no application to the case. * * *
> * * * Whether the sum required by this statute for filing articles of incorporation be termed a fee, a tax or an assessment, is, we think, immaterial, for it is clear that it is not a tax on property. The filing and record of such articles is simply an authority or license to the persons filing them to form a corporation, and the sum paid therefor is the consideration demanded and paid the state for the grant of the right to be a corporation. We fail to perceive anything in the principles of government or sound policy, that should forbid the state from making an exaction, even for the purposes of general revenue. The franchise is valuable to the corporators, or, it is fair to assume, it would not be sought; and that the burdens of government are greatly increased by the formation of corporations, is daily seen in the business of the courts and the police establishment of the state. It is further claimed that the exaction made by the statute violates that principle of equality that should underlie all taxation. That this principle should not be disregarded is clear; but perfect equality is not attainable in any system of taxation. This, however, is equal in the sense that it applies to the formation of all incorporated companies, and is imposed according to the amount of the capital of each; and in this respect it is neither unequal nor unusual. Cooley Const. Lim. 608. The fact that it does not apply to companies already formed, does not make it unequal. If that were so then a change in any fee will, or rate of charges, would be open to the same objection. The law operates upon the future, and its equality must be determined by the future and not the past."

Here, then, the filing fee, which the secretary of state is authorized to charge for the issuance of a certificate of incorporation to the incorporators of the company, is called a tax on the privilege of being a corporation.

When the so-called Willis law was enacted in the year 1902, the rate of the annual fee, prescribed by its provisions, was the same as that of the initial fee under Section 148*a*, although the two fees were not based upon the same amount, the one being based upon the subscribed, issued or outstanding capital stock, and the other upon the authorized capital stock. Whether for this reason, or from other considerations, the Supreme Court, in passing upon the constitutionality of the Willis law in the case of Southern Gum Company vs. Laylin, 66 O. S., 578, seemed to regard the Willis law as simply an extension of the principles of taxation embodied in Section 148*a*, as pointed out by the court in its previous decision, in Ashley vs.

Ryan. Thus, the following language appears in the third, fourth and fifth branches of the syllabus:

> "3. * * * a tax on privileges and franchises can not exceed the reasonable value of the privilege or franchise originally conferred, or its continued annual value hereafter. The determination of such values rests largely in the general assembly, but finally in the courts.
> "4. An excise tax may also be imposed upon corporations to compensate the state for the additional burden caused by the aggregation of capital in an artificial body, and the exemption, in part at least, of the individuals composing such body from liability for its debts.
> "5. A franchise tax may be imposed by the general assembly upon corporations, both domestic and foreign, doing business in this state."

These propositions of the syllabus find support in the opinion of Burket, J., on page 594 et seq., as follows:

> "* * * upon the power to tax privileges and franchises there is no express limitation in the constitution, but certain limitations upon that power must be implied from other provisions of the constitution, so as to make the whole instrument harmonious and consistent throughout. The constitution was established to 'promote our common welfare.' Preamble to the constitution. Government is instituted for the equal protection and benefit of the people. Section two of the bill of rights. Private property shall ever be held inviolate, but subservient to the public welfare. Section nineteen of the bill of rights. These provisions of the constitution are implied limitations upon the power of taxation of privileges and franchises, and limit such taxation to the reasonable value of the privilege or franchise conferred originally, or to its continued value from year to year. Ashley vs. Ryan, 49 O. S., 504; State ex rel. vs. Ferris, 53 O. S., 314, and Hagerty vs. State, 55 O. S., 613, are examples of taxing the privilege or franchise conferred; while Telegraph Co. vs. Mayer, 28 O. S., 521, and Express Co., vs. State, 55 O. S., 59, are examples of taxing the continued value of the existing privilege or franchise from year to year.

> "A domestic corporation is given life and continued existence by the state, and this life and existence with their accompanying powers constitute the franchise, and this franchise being valuable and given by the state, the state may impose a franchise tax thereon to the amount of the value thus conferred and continued, the same as in taxation by assessment, the public first bestows a special benefit upon the property, and then takes back by way of assessment a part or all it has thus conferred. Walsh vs. Barron, 61 O. S. 15. A foreign corporation can do business in this state only upon such terms and conditions as the state may impose, and therefore a franchise tax may be imposed upon a foreign corporation for the privilege of doing business in this state. It therefore follows that a franchise tax may be imposed on both domestic and foreign corporations alike.
> "An excise tax may also be imposed on corporations to compensate the state for the additional burden sustained by the state and the people, by reason of property being held by artificial bodies, the persons comprising such bodies being exempt from liability to a great extent for the debts thereof. This ground of excise taxation was recognized in Adler vs. Whitbeck, 44 O. S., 539, and was there applied to the liquor traffic, because that business was there shown to impose additional burdens upon the state. So the aggregation of capital by corporations imposes additional burdens, and requires regulations not applicable to individuals."

Whether by accident or otherwise, it is to be seen that the Supreme Court, both in the syllabus and in the opinion of Burket, J., in Southern Gum Co. vs. Laylin, has referred to the annual fee under the Willis law as the "reasonable annual value" of the "privilege originally conferred." In speaking of the "privilege originally conferred," and of its value, the court clearly had in mind, not the privilege of doing business as a corporation, but the privilege of being a corporation—the privilege taxed under Section 148*a*, Revised Statutes, as construed in Ashley vs. Ryan, supra.

It occurs to me, however, that there is considerable warrant for the position taken by the Supreme Court in Southern Gum Company vs. Laylin, whether that position was thoroughly considered or not. The fee under the Willis law has always been measured, and still is, under the act of 1911, measured by the "subscribed or issued and outstanding capital stock." It does not seem likely that the general assembly would have used this peculiar language had it not contemplated the contingency that a corporation might have subscriptions to its capital stock without being in a position to issue any capital stock.

Upon the consideration which I have given to the subject, then, I am of the opinion that the word "organize," as used in the original Willis law and carried into the tax commission law of 1911, is descriptive and not definitive; that no intention can be imputed to the general assembly to apply the provisions of the Willis law to such corporations only as are completely and legally "organized"; that such internal evidence of intention as is afforded by the remaining provisions of the statute points to the conclusion that it applies to all corporations for which certificates of incorporation have been issued; and that, as construed in Southern Gum Company vs. Laylin, the annual fee or tax is based upon the reasonable annual value of the privilege originally conferred by the issuance of the certificate of incorporation and not upon the doing of a corporate business.

I might add, here, to state more clearly the reasons upon which my opinion is based, that the tax is laid upon stock, irrespective of the amount of business done; this serves but to emphasize the proposition that it is based upon the privilege of being a corporation and not upon the manner in which that privilege is used or upon its use at all. I might also state that a conclusion opposite to that which I have reached would place upon the state the burden of ascertaining whether a corporation had been legally organized or not, and would afford to a corporation the possible defense (although I question whether estoppel would not prevent its successful interposition) that it would not be liable for franchise tax because it had not been properly organized.

Some certificate filed in the office of the secretary of state must be regarded as conclusive of the "organization" of a corporation within the meaning of the Willis law. As your letter suggests, it must be either the certificate of incorporation or the certificate of subscription to the capital stock. It must be the former, because that confers the privilege, which is considered a proper subject for taxation under the statute passed upon in Ashley vs. Ryan; because the privilege conferred by the articles of incorporation is itself the essential privilege, that conferred by the certificate of subscriptions being the incidental power; and because, finally, in Section 124 of the act of 1911, which is merely a revision of the provision which has been in the law since its original enactment, it is provided that failure to pay the annual fee shall subject a corporation to an action in quo warranto for the annulment of its franchise—the ouster of its corporate existence and not merely its right to carry on the business—and by Section 120, already quoted, it is provided that the secretary of state, under the direction of the tax commission, may, for failure to pay the tax, cancel, not the certificate of subscription, but the articles of incorporation.

The questions which you submit are perhaps somewhat doubtful. I have, however, in accordance with the foregoing reasoning, come to the following conclusions:

When articles or incorporation have been procured from the secretary of state there is in existence a corporation "organized under the laws of this state" within the meaning of Section 5495 et seq., General Code; such corporation is not entitled to the certificate provided for in Section 5521, General Code, when it has filed no report and paid no annual fee as required by said sections; in case of default in making report or paying fee, on the part of such a corporation, the tax commission may certify the corporation to the secretary of state, who must then cancel its articles of incorporation as provided in Section 5509, General Code.

Very truly yours,

TIMOTHY S. HOGAN,

Attorney General.

TAXES AND TAXATION—CORPORATIONS—WILLIS TAX LAWS—COLLECTION OF PENALTIES FOR DELINQUENCY OF REPORTS AND FEES—DUTIES OF STATE AUDITOR, TREASURER, TAX COMMISSION AND ATTORNEY GENERAL.

The intention of the Act of 1910 seems to be that penalties against corporations shall not be collected by the Treasurer, but that the same shall be collected by the Tax Commission or the Attorney General.

The Auditor of State in certifying fees to the Treasurer of State for collection is not to add penalties for failure to file reports to the amount of a fee due from a foreign or domestic corporation under the act of 1910, when such fee has for the first time been certified to him by the Tax Commission.

With respect to foreign and domestic corporations, delinquent for reports and payment fees under the Willis Tax Law for years preceding the year 1910, it is the duty of the Tax Commission in the exercise of the powers formerly conferred upon the Secretary of State, to which it succeeds, to collect such penalties or to certify the delinquency of the companies to the Attorney General for action thereon under provision of Section 5535, General Code. It is not the duty of the Auditor to add any penalty to sums certified to him in this relation, for certification for collection to the Treasurer of State. This method may be followed, however, if all officers are willing.

Prior to the year 1911, it was not the duty of any officer of state except the Attorney General, to collect any penalties for failure of a public utility to file a statement due under the "Cole" law. The above principles also apply to the duty of the Auditor in this connection.

Action of the Commission, under Section 72, General Code, however, may effect a modification of the above rules.

COLUMBUS, OHIO, November 28, 1911.

The Tax Commission of Ohio, Columbus, Ohio.

GENTLEMEN:—In your letter of October 9th, receipt whereof is acknowledged, you request my opinion upon the following questions:

"(1) Section 94 of the Act of May 10, 1910, (101 O. L., 399) provides that 'if a corporation, other than public utility, required to file a report and pay the fee prescribed in the act, fails or neglects to make such report as required, it shall be subject to a penalty of fifteen per cent of the amount of the fee required to be paid by it.' Section 95 provides that such penalty may be recovered by an action in the name of the state.

"The commission has certified to the auditor of state a number of companies which failed to file reports within the time prescribed in said Act. The commission in its order found that each of said corporations was delinquent for report and liable for the penalties provided by law for failure to file the same, and ordered that the auditor of state be so advised.

"Query. Is it the duty of the auditor of state to add a penalty of fifteen per cent. to the amount of the fee required to be paid by each such delinquent corporations, before certifying the same to the treasurer of state for collection?

"(2) A number of foreign and domestic corporations, delinquent for reports and payment of fees under Sections 5522-5542 of the General Code, commonly known as the 'Willis Law,' for years preceding the year 1910, were at the same time certified to the auditor of state with like advice.

"Section 5534 provided that if a corporation required to file report fails or neglects to make such report within the period prescribed, it shall be subject to a penalty of fifty per cent. of the amount of the fee required to be paid by it, with an additional penalty of ten dollars per day for each day's omission after the time limited for filing such report.

"Section 5535 provided for collection of such fees by an action instituted by the attorney general.

"Query. Is it the duty of the auditor of state to add a penalty of fifty per cent. or any other amount, before certifying the same to the treasurer of state for collection?

"(3) The commission at the same time certified to the auditor of state a number of public utility companies delinquent for the year 1910, and one company delinquent for the years 1908 and 1909, each of which companies was found to be delinquent for report and subject to the penalties provided by law for failure to file the same, and the auditor of state advised accordingly.

"Section 110 of the Act of May 10, 1910, provides certain penalties for failure to make report within the time prescribed in the Act, it being made a misdemeanor for any officer, agent or employe of any public utility company to fail or refuse to fill out and return blanks as required by the Act or to answer questions, etc., and making the company, if such agent or employe acted in obedience to the direction, instruction or request of such utility, or any general officer thereof, subject to a penalty of not less than five hundred dollars nor more than one thousand dollars.

"Section 5508 of the General Code (repealed by the Act of May 10, 1910) provided for a penalty of five hundred dollars on each public utility failing to make report.

"Query. What is the duty of the auditor of state with reference to adding any penalty to the amount of the tax before certifying the same to the treasurer of state for collection?"

Answering your first question I beg to state that I have carefully examined the Act of May 10, 1910, referred to by you and fail to find therein any provision whatever as to the manner of collecting the penalties provided for by Section 94 thereof, save and excepting the provision of Section 95 to the effect that the penalty may be recovered by an action in the name of the state, which in turn, by the provisions of Section 96, is to be instituted by the Attorney General on the request of the Commission. The sole duty of the Auditor of State, with respect to the collection of annual fees from corporations, is defined by Sections 84, 87, 90, 91 and 92 of the Act of May 10, 1910, 101 O. L., 422-4 as follows:

Section 84..

"Upon the filing of the report provided in sections 82 and 83 of this act, the commission * * * shall report to the auditor of state, who shall charge and certify for collection * * * a fee of three-twentieths of one per cent. upon its subscribed or issued and out-standing capital stock * * *."

Section 87.

"Upon the filing of the report provided for in the last two preceding sections the commission * * * shall determine the proportion of the authorized capital stock of the company represented by its property and business in this state, a * * * * and shall report the same to the auditor of state who shall charge and certify to the treasurer of state * * * * for collection * * * * one-tenth of one per cent. for the year 1910 and three-twentieth of one per cent. for each year thereafter upon the proportion of the authorized capital stock of the corporation represented by property owned and used and business transacted in this state."

Section 90.

"Upon the filing of such report as provided for in the last two preceding sections, the commission shall report to the auditor of state * * * who shall charge and certify to the treasurer of state * * * for collection * * * a fee of ten dollars from each corporation organized as a mutual insurance corporation, etc."

Section 91.

"Upon the filing of the report provided for in sections eighty-eight and eighty-nine of this act the commission shall report to the auditor of state * * * who shall charge and certify to the treasurer of state * * * for collection * * * one dollar from each corporation * * * not organized for profit."

Section 92.

"Upon the filing of the report and the payment of the fee provided for in sections eighty-two to one hundred inclusive of this act to > the treasurer of state, the auditor of state shall make out and deliver to the corporations so paying, a certificate of the compliance by such corporation with said sections of this act, and the payment of the annual fee therein provided for. The auditor of state shall make a report monthly to the commission of the annual fees collected."

Full machinery is thus provided for the certification to the treasurer of state for collection of the principles of the fees payable under those provisions of the Act of 1910, which is familiarly known as the "Willis Law." No provision whatever is made for the preparation of duplicates or certificates for the treasurer's guidance in collecting the penalties in case of delinquency. On the contrary the intention of the act of 1910 seems to be that the treasurer shall not collect penalties, but that the same shall be collected by the Tax Commission of the Attorney General.

Section 102 of the act of June 2, 1911, 102 O. L. 248 contains quite a different provision in this respect. It is as follows:

> "* * * if any corporation fails or refuses to pay on or before the dates fixed in this act, the fee charged against it, the treasurer of state shall certify the list of such * * * corporations so delinquent to the auditor of state who shall add to the tax or fee due a penalty of fifteen per cent. thereon. The auditor of state shall thereupon forthwith prepare proper duplicates and reports of such taxes and fees and penalties thereon and certify them to the treasurer for collection. Thirty days after he receives such duplicates or delinquent taxes and fees and penalties thereon from the auditor of state, the treasurer of state shall certify to the commission a list of such public utilities and corporations as have failed to pay such taxes and penalties thereon."

Section 103 then provides that the fees and penalties may be recovered by action in the name of the state, etc., in language quite similar to that of Sections 95 and 96 of the act of 1910 above quoted and referred to.

However, these provisions of the act of 1911, in my opinion, do not apply to delinquencies under the act of 1910, but only to corporations delinquent under the act of 1911 unless perhaps the action of the commission was under Section 72 of the act of 1911. This section is quite lengthy, but authorizes in general the correction by the commission of the returns and reports made in former years, and the certification by the commission for collection "as required in this act" of the fees or taxes upon the facts ascertained by it.

In no event, however, in my opinion, is the auditor of state authorized or required to add to the amount of the fee due from a foreign or domestic corporation under the provisions of the act of 1910 for the first time certified to him by the commission for collection any sum whatever by way of penalties for failure to file reports, before certifying the principal fees themselves to the treasurer of state for collection.

The reasons above given support a similar answer to your second question, although the statutes are not precisely the same. Indeed, there are differences in the related statutes which are fundamental. Thus Sections 5524, 5527, 5530 and 5531, General Code, authorized and required by the Secretary of State to collect what were popularly known as "Willis Law" fees from corporations, while another section required him to pay the amounts so collected into the state treasury. These sections were simply repealed by the act of May 10, 1910, not, however, with any intention of waiving the rights of the state as to reports and fees due but not furnished thereunder as is apparent from Section 123 of the act of 1910, which expressly provides, "this act shall not in any manner affect existing causes of action or pending action, proceedings or prosecutions."

However, Section 115 of the act made it clear that the Legislature did not intend that the Secretary of State should continue to exercise his powers as to the unpaid fees and the reports not yet furnished at the time of the passage of that act. It provides that,

> "* * * any power or duty which has heretofore been conferred upon any state . * officer * * * which power and duty is hereby conferred upon the commission, is hereby imposed and conferred upon the commission created by this act."

Evidently then the Tax Commission was, under the act of 1910, to exercise all the powers and duties of the Secretary of State with respect to the collection of franchise taxes from domestic and foreign corporations.

The above quoted language of Section 115 is repeated in the act of 1911. See Section 35 thereof, 102 O. L. 229.

Under these sections then it is my opinion that the Auditor of State is not required to make up any duplicates whatever for the collection of fees under the original Willis Law, but that if the Commission so desires it may, upon the filing of a report by a corporation which failed to file a report for the years preceding the year 1910 collect the fee and pay it into the state treasury upon the warrant of the auditor. Here again, however, the same exception must be made as to the action of the commission under Section 72 of the act of 1911.

It is, therefore, my opinion as to your second question that in general it is not, the duty of the Auditor of State to add any penalty to the principal sums certified to him as due from corporations which failed to make reports under the Willis Law for the years prior to 1910, nor is it his duty to certify the fees due from such corporations to the Treasurer of State for collection at all. Convenience, however, would seem to dictate that the collection be made by the Treasurer of State, and if the officers concerned are willing I suggest that this method be followed.

In connection with your second question I beg to advise that it is my opinion it is the duty of the commission to collect the penalty or certify the deliquency of the companies to the Attorney General for his action thereon as provided in Section 5535, General Code.

Nevertheless, as above suggested, if other officers of the state are willing to collect these penalties I am sure I would be glad to be relieved of the burden of collecting them, although the law seems to require that I do so.

For the reasons above stated I am clearly of the opinion with respect to your third question that prior to the year 1911 it was not the duty of any officer of the state save the Attorney General to collect any penalties for failure of a public utility to file a statement due from it under what was popularly known as the "Cole Law." With the same qualification respecting the action of the commission under Section 72, I beg to advise that in my opinion the Auditor of State is not authorized to add any penalty to the amount computed by him as being the excise tax of such public utility for any year or years preceding the year 1911 because of a failure of the utility to file statements in such year or years.

Yours very truly,

TIMOTHY S. HOGAN,
Attorney General.

TAXES AND TAXATION—REAL ESTATE CONVERTED INTO NON-TAXABLE BONDS NEED NOT BE LISTED—MONEYS, CREDITS OR OTHER "EFFECTS" INCLUDE ONLY PERSONAL PROPERTY.

The words "other effects" in item 16 of Section 5376, General Code, providing for the listing of the average monthly value of moneys, credits, or other effects, which have been converted into non-taxable securities, comprehends personal property only. Real estate converted directly into said bonds need not, therefore, be listed.

The Tax Commission of Ohio, Columbus, Ohio.

GENTLEMEN:—I beg to acknowledge receipt of your letter of May 7, requesting my opinion as to the following question:

> "Item 16 of Section 5376, G. C., requires the statement of a person required to list property to truly and distinctly set forth 'the monthly average amount or value, for the time he held or controlled them, within the preceding year, of all moneys, credits, or other effects, within that time invested in, or converted into bonds or other securities of the United States or of this state, not taxed, to the extent he may hold or control such bonds or securities on said day preceding the second Monday of April."
> "Query: Does this provision cover real estate converted into such bonds?"

I find no decision construing Section 5376 with reference to the question which your raise. The matter is one for the application of the ordinary rules of statutory construction. The ultimate inquiry is, of course, as to the meaning of the word "effects" as here used. The following definitions are given to this term

> "Goods; movables; personal estate. In law:
> (a) property; whatever can be turned into money.
> (b) personal property." (Century Dictionary).
> "Goods; movables; personal estate * * * sometimes used to embrace real as well as personal property." (Webster's International Dictionary).

If these lexicons are correct, then the term under discussion is capable of two meanings—one limited in its significance to movable things, the other broad enough to include all things capable of ownership. These definitions both relate primarily to the meaning of the word as used without qualification and in the absence of a context which in any way modifies it. There seems to be some conflict of authority as to the true meaning of the word "effects" when so used in the cases cited in "Words and Phrases Judicially Defined," volume 3, pages 2330 et seq. On the whole, however, the weight of authority seems to be the effect that the primary meaning of the words is their restricted one, the border meaning being given to them only under stress of some circumstances showing an intent to use the word in such a sense; thus the cases in which the term is held to include real property, are those in which a testator has defined "all his effects," such a device being held sufficient to pass real property. Most of the cases arising under the statutes hold the primary meaning of the word to be the restricted one.

I do not enter into a discussion of all the cases, however, because, conceding that the word has two meanings, it is not used in Section 5376 by itself, nor without the assistance of a context,, which, upon the application of well understood principles of statutory construction, discloses the sense in which the word was intended to be used. The whole phrase under consideration is "all moneys, credits or other effects." Here we have a word capable of a restricted meaning and a general one following an enumeration of particular things of the restricted class. A more perfect instance of the application of the rule of ejusdem generis could scarcely be afforded. The rule applied to the phrase would result in a provision of it as a whole,—"all moneys, credits, or other effects of the same kind." The broadest meaning which it would be possible to give to the word "effects" under this rule would be that which would include all personal estate as distinguished from real estate I am disposed to give the statutes a liberal construction, and for that reason would extend the meaning of the word to all personal property, although a thorough-going application of the rule of construction would result in the meaning of the term being still further limited so as to exclude specific tangible personal property.

For the reasons above suggested I am of the opinion that the provisions of Section 5376 of the General Code, as to the statement to be made in item 16 of the tax list do not cover real estate converted into non-taxable bonds, and that the taxpayer need not return the monthly average value of the funds coverted into such non-taxable bonds for the time that the same were invested in real estate.

Authorities which might be cited are:

Ennis vs. Smith, 55 U. S., 400.
McKleroy vs. Cantey, 95 Ala., 295.
Bank vs. Electric Light Compony, 97 Ala., 465.
Rawlins vs. Jennings, 13 Bes., 38.
De Cordova vs. Kanowles, 37 Tex., 19.

I am aware of no equitable reason that, carefully considered, would impel a conclusion different from that which I have stated; nor does the constitutional limitation to the effect that laws taxing real and personal property shall be by uniform rule affect the opinion which I have expressed.

Very truly yours,

TIMOTHY S. HOGAN,
Attorney General.

TAXES AND TAXATION—CORPORATIONS—MAY BE REQUIRED BY AUDITOR TO FILL OUT INQUISITORIAL BLANKS UPON AMOUNT OF MONEYS, CREDITS AND VALUES.

The county auditor may require a corporation to fill out blanks containing questions relating to real estate, credits, moneys and values owned.

The power follows from the auditor's power in the correction of returns, to compel attendance and to require answers to all questions under penalty of the contempt procedure of the probate court.

The Honorable Tax Commission of Ohio, Columbus, Ohio.

GENTLEMEN:—You have requested my opinion upon an inquiry submitted by Hon. Daniel J. Ryan, General Counsel for the Ohio Manufacturers' Association, which is as follows:

> "What authority of law is there for the inclusion in the blanks for the returns of incorporated companies of questions 7, 8, 14, 19, 20, 21 and 22?"

Mr. Ryan states in his letter that there is objection on the part of many manufacturers doing business under corporate organization to some or all of these questions as unnecessarily inquisitorial.

The questions are as follows:

> "7. The market value of its shares of capital stock is—
> "8. The actual value (if there is no market value) of its shares of capital stock is—
>
> "14. The amount of fire insurance carried on buildings in Franklin county is—
>
> "15. The amount of fire insurance carried on other property in Franklin county is—
>
> "19. The amount of accounts payable and bills payable in Franklin county on the day preceding the second Monday of April, 1912, was—
>
> "20. The amount of the last inventory of real and personal property in Franklin county was:
>
> "21. The amount of the last inventory of real and personal property in Ohio and outside of Franklin county was—
> "22. The amount of the last inventory of real and personal property outside of Ohio was—"

Section 5406 of the General Code requires the county auditor to furnish blanks for the making of returns by incorporated companies.

The form of such blanks is not prescribed by statute, and I am of the opinion that the outline set forth in Section 5376 of the General Code of items which shall be set forth in the personal property return of a natural person is not applicable to the return of a corporation.

It is, therefore, incumbent upon the county auditor to furnish to each corporation a blank which shall enable the corporation to list its personal property subject to taxation. That is, as defined by Section 5404 of the General Code, "all the personal property thereof, and all real estate necessary to the daily operations of the company, monies and credits of such company or corporation within the state, at the true value in money."

The section last above cited, together with Section 5405, as amended at 102

O. L. 61, discloses that the purpose of this legislation is to secure from each corporation a full and complete return of everything it owns in Ohio, as well intangible things of value as tangible property.

Theoretically, the aggregate value of the shares of capital stock of the corporation equals the value of all of its property and interests. This principle is universally recognized. At the very least, such aggregate value of shares of stock is a fact of importance, in connection with other facts, in determining what the property and interests of a corporation are worth in money.

Thus, questions 7 and 8, above quoted, are seen to have a direct and substantial value and use in aiding the taxing authorities in the discharge of their duties.

It scarcely seems necessary to comment on questions 14 and 15. Surely the amount of insurance carried upon buildings and personal property affords something of an index as to the value of such buildings and property.

Question 19 is of importance because corporations are required to return for taxation all their credits in Ohio. The term "credits" is defined in Section 5327, General Code, to be "the excess of the sum of all legal claims and demands * * * due to the person liable to pay taxes thereon * * * when added together * * * over and above the sum of legal bona fide debts owing by such person." Question 19 simply informs the taxing authorities as to what deductions may lawfully be made from the sum of the amounts shown in answer to questions 17 and 18, which are not quoted.

There is surely no question as to the aptness of this question.

Questions 20 to 22, inclusive, relate to the amount of inventories of real and personal property in the county, outside of the county in the state, and outside of the state respectively. The answers to these questions are of value to the taxing authorities because they show the distribution of the property and, in connection with the answers to questions 7 and 8, indicate the proportion of the intangible interests of the corporation represented by tangible property in the county, and the apportionment therein in accordance with the rule set forth in Section 5405. Furthermore, the taxing authorities are entitled to know the book value of the assets of the corporation which they are assessing.

What I have thus far said relates to the use which the taxing authorities may make of the answers to the mooted questions. Such answers are doubtless useful in other ways than those which I have stated.

It is sufficient, however, to observe in conclusion as to these points that the questions are material and relevant to the issue to be determined by the county auditor.

As to the power of the county auditor to include in his blank any questions which are thus material, I think it is sufficient to point out that under Sections 5398 to 5403, inclusive, of the General Code, a county auditor has the power in the correction of returns filed with him, to call before him any persons having knowledge of the value of the property in question, and inquire of them, under oath, as to the value thereof.

The auditor is given compulsory process to enforce attendance of witnesses under the sanction of contempt proceedings, as set forth in Section 5403; so that, if an officer of a corporation be called before a county auditor and a question were put to him by the auditor "touching the matter under examination," as Section 5403 has it, and should refuse to answer the same, he might be visited with the penalties of contempt of the probate court.

Now, all of the questions under consideration are clearly questions "touching the matter under examination," or which is to be under examination by the county auditor, i. e., the value of all of the real and personal property, monies and credits of the corporation in the county.

I know of no reason why the auditor may not include in his blanks any questions which he could ask an officer of the company on the witness stand; to hold otherwise would make it necessary, in order that the tax laws should be properly enforced, and a just and equal valuation of incorporated property secured, for the county auditor, or the board of review, or equalization to summon and to examine under oath the officers of all the corporations under their jurisdiction, and themselves to examine into the books of all such corporations.

By answering the questions, concerning which Mr. Ryan inquires, the corporations will avoid the unpleasant and inconvenient consequences of such a cumbersome procedure.

Very truly yours,
TIMOTHY S. HOGAN,
Attorney General.

TAXES AND TAXATION—CORPORATIONS—CREDITS OF NON-RESIDENT CORPORATION—DOMICILE AND RESIDENCE—CONSTITUTIONAL LAW AS TO CORPORATIONS TAXED AS PRIVATE PERSONS—"CONSTITUENT ACTS"—LOCALIZATION OF CREDITS—TAXATION OF AGENTS—NO DEDUCTION OF OUTSTANDING CHECKS FROM RETURN OF BANK DEPOSITS.

Section 5404 of the General Code, in providing for the tax of credits existing in Ohio, belonging to non-resident corporations, does not violate Artivle XIII, Section 4 of the Constitution of Ohio, providing that the property of corporations shall be taxed the same as individuals, for the reason that the credits of non-resident private persons may also be taxed through resident agents.

Credits of a non-resident corporation may be taxed in Ohio, only when they are "localized" by being committed to the charge and management of an agent or other representative who is more than a mere custodian or collector and who has power to deal in a managerial capacity with the fund represented by the credit.

A corporation cannot have a legal residence apart from its domicile and it conducts business in states other than the state of its incorporation, only through agencies.

The "constituent acts," that is, those acts which are necessary to the organization and existence of the corporation itself or its final dissolution, must be performed within the limits of the sovereignty which creates the corporation. Its other business may be conducted in other jurisdictions through its officers acting as agents. The state in which such other business is done, therefore, may tax such credits as are "localized" therein, that is, such as are fully and completely controlled and managed therein, and if all of the business except the "constituent" acts are so managed and controlled therein, the property used in and the credits growing out of such business, may be taxed therein.

A state may also tax all debts due a non-resident corporation from resident debtors regardless of the place where the debt was contracted.

Outsanding checks which are not certified, may not be deducted from a return to the auditor of the amount of deposits held in bank on the second Monday of April. Such checks are debts, however, and may be deducted from credits listed by the taxpayers.

The Tax Commission of Ohio, Columbus, Ohio.

GENTLEMEN:—Some time ago you referred to this department a file of correspondence between the Commission and the Board of Review for the City of Columbus, disclosing the existence of a question as to the taxation of the credits of The W. M. Ritter Lumber Company. The correspondence in question comprises the following:

A letter addressed to the Tax Commission by the Board of Review; a letter addressed to the Board of Review by Mr. Talfourd P. Linn, counsel for the company; and certain confidential data belonging to the Board of Review.

In addition to the foregoing I have examined and considered a brief, submitted on behalf of the company by Messrs. J. J. Divine and Talfourd P. Linn.

The facts stated in Mr. Linn's letter, and elaborated upon in the brief, and which do not seem to be disputed by the Board of Review, are as follows:

> "The W. M. Ritter Lumber Company is a corporation organized under the laws of West Virginia, with its principal place of business at Welch, in that state. In conformity to the provisions of its charter, all of its stockholders' meetings, and some of its directors' meetings, are held at Welch, W. Va. The business of the company, as may be inferred from its name, is that of manufacturing the lumber of commerce from the raw material, known as timber. Its manufacturing operations are variously located; some of them are in the state of West Virginia, one of them being at or near the said corporation of Welch; others are in Kentucky, Virginia and North Carolina; none are in Ohio. At each of these plants there are administrative offices, maintained by clerical forces. The company also owns large tracts of timber land in several states. As a natural corollary to its manufacturing business, the company engages in the sale of its manufactured product, through agents and to customers in various parts of the United States.
> "The company's principal business office is located at Columbus, Ohio. Here are located the offices of its executive officers and agents, and here books of account, showing all of its debits and credits are kept. The exact manner of administering the affairs of the corporation, through this Columbus office, is as follows:
>
> "'Orders for the company's products are placed with its selling agents in different parts of the country. Whether or not all of these orders are transmitted to the Columbus office and by it to one or the other of the plants owned by the company is not stated, nor, in the view I take of the case, is this fact material. At any rate, when an order is filled, the Columbus office is notified and entries are made on the books kept there, showing the existence of credit arising from such sale. The company frequently takes notes from its customers to secure the payment of accounts owned by them to it, and these are transmitted to the Columbus office and there held until due.
> "'When on account or note held by the company becomes due it is transmitted for collection from the Columbus office to an agent of the company residing near the debtor's place of residence or to some bank with which the company has an account, which said bank collects the same and deposits it to the credit of the company. The Columbus office and the bank used by the company in the city of Columbus constitute the Columbus agency for Ohio accounts, but not for those arising from business transacted outside of Ohio. The moneys deposited in the several banks used by the company, as above referred to, are expended in maintaining the company's various plants and, of course, in part, in maintaining the Columbus office and in the salaries of the executive officers of the company, who are paid through said office. Surplus profits, reaped by the company, are distributed or reinvested as determined by the directors of the corporation.

"'The company has returned for taxation its credits, arising from sales in Ohio only.

"'On the day preceding the second Monday of April the books of the bank in which all of the cash, excepting a small amount held by the company in Ohio, was deposited, showed a balance in the company's favor of some nineteen thousand dollars; on the same day the check stubs and ledgers of the company showed the balance in this account to be approximately five thousand dollars, the difference being accounted for by outstanding checks which had not been paid by the bank.'"

Two questions are submitted by the Board of Review upon the foregoing facts:

1. Has the company made full return of its credits taxable in Ohio; or are all the credits of the company, arising from sales, wherever consummated, taxable here?

2. What amount of money in bank should be returned for taxation by the company?

There is a suggestion in the letter of the Board of Review as to the personal returns of two of the executive officers of the company, but no facts are submitted showing the nature of the question which is in the minds of the members of the board.

I have given very careful consideration to the first of the two questions above stated, because I have apprehended that the facts, as I have outlined them, might be typical of a very large number of cases. I have heretofore considered questions quite similar to but not identical with this question, and have embodied my conclusions thereon in other opinions, addressed to you; thus, in an opinion under date of September 13, 1911, I had before me the following question, submitted by you:

"A New York company claiming to maintain its principal office in that state, but in fact keeping its books at the office of its factory in this state, where it has its headquarters, and where one of the principal owners resides, and where it is admitted by the officers of the company that everything is kept, showing its debts and credits—

"QUESTION: Should such credits be returned by the company and assessed and taxed in this state, where its headquarters are located and such books and records are kept?"

To this question I returned the following answer:

"In my opinion a foreign corporation which maintains its nominal principal office in another state, must return as part of its credits, subject, of course, to proper deduction, and at the true value in money, such claims and demands due the company and for which the evidences of indebtedness, consisting of books, accounts and other papers are kept in Ohio; and if, in point of fact, such a foreign corporation maintains its only factory in this state and there maintains headquarters and keeps its books and papers, excepting its mere corporate records, a very strong presumption, to be rebutted only by the most convincing testimony, will exist that all of the credits of such corporation should be listed and assessed at the office of the company in Ohio. Hubbard vs. Brush, 61 O. S. 252."

I call attention to this opinion solely for the purpose of distinguishing the case there considered from the one now under consideration. In that case all of the capital of the corporation was invested in Ohio; its only plant was here established and operated, and its affairs were completely managed in this state, excepting the mere formal proceedings incident to the selection of its officers, etc. Here, the capital of the corporation is invested in several states and the function of management seems to be similarly divided among different jurisdictions. In a sense, the Columbus office of The W. M. Ritter Lumber Company is its managing office; in another sense, however, this conclusion would not follow.

I think it is obvious, however, to any one who has made even a cursory study of the subject, that the case of Hubbard vs. Brush, supra, must be examined in connection with the question now presented. The syllabus of that case is in part as follows:

"Choses in action, whether book accounts, promissory notes, or the like, of foreign corporations that are kept in this state and arise out of the corporate business transacted here, are subject to taxation under the provisions of Section 2744, Revised Statutes."

The exact question involved in this case, as a full report of the same shows, was as to whether or not, under a statute which provided that "no person shall be required to list for taxation any shares * * * of the capital stock of any company the capital stock of which is taxed in the name of such company," a resident owner of the shares of stock of a certain foreign corporation, having property situated in Ohio, should return the same for taxation. In approaching the ultimate question the court, following Leo 2 vs. Sturges, 46 O. S. 153, and Sturges vs. Carter, 114 U. S. 511, construed the statute in question as affording an exemption to the owners of capital stock of such foreign corporations only, all of whose property was subject to taxation in Ohio. Thereupon, the court proceeded to inquire as to whether or not all of the property of the corporation in question was taxable in Ohio. These facts explain the significance of the first branch of the syllabus in the case, which is as follows:

"Where all the business of a foreign corporation is transacted in this state, and all of its property stipulated and taxed here, shares of its capital stock held in this state are exempt from taxation by force of Section 2746, Revised Statutes."

Having in mind, then, the question before the court it is readily seen that it does not necessarily follow from the decision that in order that the credits of a foreign corporation should be taxable in Ohio all of its property should be situated and taxed in that state; at least that was not the point decided by the court.

It does seem to follow, however, from the second branch of the syllabus, above quoted, that only those credits arising from the business transacted in Ohio are subject to taxation in this state.

The facts upon which this decision was predicated, as found by the circuit court, and as reported on page 260 of the supreme court report, are in substance as follows:

"The Sandusky Portland Cement Company is * * * a corporation organized under the laws of the state of West Virginia, having its principal office and principal place of doing business in Erie County, Ohio * * * and engaged solely in the business of extracting from its lands in said Erie County, the materials for Portland cement, and manufacturing such cement from such materials upon said lands in said county and there selling the same. All of its * * * property, except * * * accounts receivable, was listed for taxation in the name of said company, and taxed in the name of said company in 1895, in said county. The company had no office and did no business in West Virginia, during the time referred to."

The legal proposition embraced in the second branch of the syllabus, above quoted, are discussed by Bradbury, C. J. on pages 262 to 264, inclusive, of the report, as follows:

"The finding of the circuit court, in as far as it reflects on this question, shows that the corporation whose stock defendant in error held, was a foreign corporation, but that all of its property was situated within this state and its business wholly conducted herein. Whatever situs, in fact, it choses in action possessed, was also herein, for it appears that it maintained no office, and did no business whatever in West Virginia, the state by which it was created, but that its office was in this state where its property was situated and its business transacted. And whether these choses in action consisted of promissory notes, book accounts or other evidence of indebtedness, they must be presumed to have been kept in its office in this state. However, notwithstanding all this, doubtless the legal situs of this intangible property for most purposes, was that of the residence of the corporation, which, in law, is within the state by whose authority it was created. Bank of Augusta vs. Earle, 13 Pet. 519; B. & O. R. R. Co. vs. Cary, 28 Ohio St. 208; Bridge Co. vs Mayer, 31 Ohio St., 317; 25 Am. and Eng. Ency. of Law (1st Ed.), 146.

"Does that situs for all purposes adhere to the corporate residence, or may choses in action, having the relation, connection and situation in which these were found, be held to possess such a situs in this state as will clothe the state with jurisdiction over them for taxation? The state attempts by Section 2744, Revised Statutes, to assert and exercise such power or jurisdiction. The section, so far as it relates to this subject, reads as follows: Section 2744. 'The president, secretary * * * of every joint stock company, for whatever purpose they may have been created, whether incorporated by any law of this state or not, shall list for taxation * * * all the personal property, which shall be held to include * * * credits of such company or corporation within this state.'

"We perceive no reason for denying to the state the power asserted by this section. If men choose to resort to another state or country for authority to organize a corporation for the purpose of engaging in business in this state. or if that was not their original purpose, chose afterwards to plant themselves herein, and in either case transact the corporate property wholly within our borders, and enjoy the protection of our laws, it is only just and reasonable that its property should be subject to taxation herein as fully as if its organization had been effected under our own laws, and the right of taxation should not be defeated nor limited upon the ground that for some other purpose the situs of a part of its property should be regarded as being in the state or country where the corporation was organized.

"Where foreign corporations voluntarily bring their property and business into this state to avail themselves of advantages found here which they believe will enhance the probabilities that the business they intend to pursue will be profitable, they should not be heard to complain of laws which tax them as domestic corporations are taxed by the state. We hold, therefore, that the provisions of Section 2744, which make it the duty of foreign corporations to list for taxation in this state, their choses in action where they are held within this state and grow out of the business they conduct herein, is a valid exercise of the taxing powers vested in the state. This holding finds support in many adjudications, among which may be cited The People ex rel. vs. The Village of Ogdensburgh, 48 N. Y., 390; Redmond vs. Commissioner, 87 N. Car., 122; State ex rel. Taylor, Adm'r, vs. St. Louis County Court, 47 Mo., 594."

Section 2744, Revised Statutes, analyzed by the court in this case, has become Section 5404, General Code, which, at the time the question under consideration arose, read, substantially, as abstracted in the above quotation. The section has since been amended in other particulars and not so as to affect the present question. It is perfectly obvious, I think, although the court does not explicitly so hold, that as to corporations, the legislation of Ohio is intended to tax all credits existing in Ohio regardless of the technical domicile of the owner.

Some question might be raised, in the absence of the decision in Hubbard vs. Brush, as to the scope and effect of this legislation under Article XIII, Section 4, of the Constitution, which provides that, "The property of corporations, now existing or hereafter created, shall forever be subject to taxation, the same as the property of individuals." This section of the constitution, referred to and seemingly so applied in Cleveland Trust Company vs Lander, 62 O. S. 266, appears to prohibit the imposition upon corporations of burdens of property taxation not imposed in equal measure upon individuals. That being the case the provisions of Section 5328, General Code, as compared with those of Section 5404, above referred to, take on a peculiar aspect. Said Section 5328 provides as follows:

"All real or personal property in this state, belonging to individuals or corporations, and all moneys, credits, investments in bonds, stocks, or otherwise, of persons residing in this state, shall be subject to taxation, except only such property as may be expressly exempted therefrom. * * *."

It is to be seen from this section that natural persons, not resident of the state, are not to be taxed herein upon their intangible property, whereas under Section 5404, as interpreted in Hubbard vs. Brush, supra, a corporation not technically a resident of the state is taxed on all moneys and credits having a situs here. This apparent inconsistency is cleared up by the provisions of the general tax laws requiring agents and trustees having the power to control and invest funds of non-residents in Ohio, to list the same for taxation, and also upon the theory that the corporation concerned in Hubbard vs. Brush, supra, was regarded by the courts as a resident of Ohio, though not technically domiciled therein. At any rate, further discussion of these statutes is rendered unnecessary by the positive decision of Hubbard vs. Brush.

From that decision it necessarily follows that it is possible for a foreign corporation so to conduct its affairs in Ohio as to create a situs to which all of its credits shall be referable.

It is also apparent that where all the property of a corporation is owned in Ohio, and all of its business is there transacted, this possibility is realized. It seems also to be established, by the second branch of the syllabus in Hubbard vs. Brush, although not necessary to the decision of the case, that any credits of a foreign corporation arising from business transacted in Ohio are taxable here under Section 5404.

These propositions, however, are far from conclusive of the question under consideration, as under the facts above stated the Wm. M. Ritter Lumber Company does not own and use all of its property in Ohio, and whether or not it transacts all of its business in Ohio by virtue of the fact that its principal business office is there located is a very serious question. Again, whether or not the keeping of books of account and the ordinary administration of its affairs at and through its Columbus office constitute the transaction of all of the business of the corporation so as to make all of its credits referable to that office is very uncertain. It is manifest, therefore, that authorities other than Hubbard vs. Brush, if any exist, must be examined in order to furnish an answer to the question now under consideration.

Now, it is manifest, as I have already stated, that Ohio intends to tax all credits of corporations within its territorial jurisdiction. It is also obvious, as conceded by the court in its opinion, that the general rule is that the situs for taxation purposes of credits, and especially book accounts, the most "intangible" of all property rights, is the domicile or taxing residence of the owner. In other words, the right of the state to tax the credits of foreign corporations arises by reason of an exception to the general rule. As the state has manifestly exerted this right to the utmost of its ability it is necessary only to ascertain what the exception to the rule is.

The three cases cited in the above excerpt from the opinion in Hubbard vs. Bruch, namely; People ex rel. vs. Ogdensburg, 48 N. Y. 390; Redmond vs. Commissioner, 87 N. Car. 122; State ex rel. vs. County Court, 47 Mo. 594, are all representatives of a line of decisions, of which Catlin vs. Hull, 21 Vt. 152, decided in 1849, is the leading case. In this case the court had before it a single question, namely: as to whether or not a statutory provision similar to Section 5370, General Code of Ohio, to the effect that every person, resident of the state, should return for taxation all property and credits owned and controlled by him, as agent,trustee or on account of any other person, applied to agents having the custody, control and management of intangible interests of non-residents of the state. The holding, of course, was that the legislature of Vermont had the power to enact a law subjecting property controlled and managed by an agent, resident therein, for a non-resident of the state to taxation. A very great number of cases have been decided to this general effect; in each one of them the doctrine is stated that credits of a non-resident, in the hands of an agent residing in the state, and subject to his control, with respect to management, investment and reinvestment, are to be regarded as situated in the state for purposes of taxation; thus, in Walker vs. Jack, 88 Fed. 576, a decision of Taft, J., the doctrine is stated as follows:

> "It is within the power of the state to tax money and credits of a non-resident when the money is invested, the deed contracted, and the investment controlled by a resident agent of the owner, having the evidences of debt in his possession."

This decision was rendered directly under what is now Section 5370, General Code, which was then Section 2734, Revised Statutes.

So also, in re Jefferson, 35 Minn. 215, the court, in speaking of the exception to the general rule that the situs of the credit is the domicle of the owner, uses the following language:

> "The creditor, however, may give it a business situs elsewhere; as where he places it in the hands of an agent for collection or renewal with a view to retaining the money and keeping it invested as a permanent business."

In Buck vs. Miller, 147 Ind. 586, a very instructive, although by no means lengthy, discussion of this principle, is found. It appears that the Indiana statute provided that "personal property of non-residents of the state shall be assessed to the owner or to the person having the control thereof, in the township, town or city where the same may be," which provision possesses a meaning substantially identical with that under discussion here. The court, per, Powers, J., on page 589 et seq. of the opinion, makes use of the following language:

> "If personal property is used in business in this state it will be assessed here, even though the owner may reside elsewhere; and this must be true of credits and moneys as well as of other forms of personal property. A business may be done in buying and selling property and making loans and investments, collecting and reloaning the money so used from year to year, and if the money, notes and mortgages, so used, are retained in this state they will be subject to taxation here, as well as any other kind of personal property. * * *
> "The same departure (from the legal fiction that movable things follow the person of the owner) has been taken in regard to notes and evidences of debt in the hands of an agent of the owner who resides in another state or county, which notes are taken for money loaned and held for renewal or collection with the view of reloaning the money by the agent in the same state, the business being permanent in the hands of the agent. * * *"

Many other cases exemplify the rule of Larkin vs. Buck. Indeed, our supreme court might as well have cited two Ohio cases on the point, as those actually referred to by it; thus, in Grant vs. Jones, 39 O. S. 506, the rule is recognized and applied; so also in Myers vs. Seaberger, 45 O. S. 232. Curiously enough, practically all the cases decided on this point are those in which the moneys and credits in question were in the hands of an agent in the state for purposes of investment and reinvestment; that is to say, the agent was virtually conducting a separate business for his principal, with full power to manage the same; the nature of the agency was general and not limited. Thus, it might appear that the principle, as stated in the decisions above quoted, may have been through caution, limited to the facts before the court. However, a few cases, and among them, decisions of the supreme court of the United States and of the state of Ohio, serve to illustrate the limitations of the principle and to show that all of the qualifications stated, for example, in the above quotation from Walker vs Jack, and in that from In re Jefferson, are indispensible.

In estate of Fair, 128 Calif, 607, that case involved the right to the taxing authorities of California to collect a tax on bonds held by an agent of a decedent in the state of New York, simply for safe-keeping and without the power to control the investment and reinvestment of the moneys represented by the bonds. The court first held that the bonds in question were not taxable properly as investments, but under the law of California amounted to credits, the subject of taxation being the debt itself and not the negotiable or non-negotiable paper representing it. Considering, then, the question as to whether or not the bonds were taxable in California, the court seemed to place its decision upon the question as to their taxability in New York, holding that they were not taxable there and should be taxed at the domicile of the owner in California. Catlin vs. Hull, and other decisions of the same nature were expressly distinguished, on the ground that the control and management of the credits or their production in business carried on independently of the principal was an essential element of the rule which permitted a state to tax the credits of a non-resident in the hands of an agent.

In Buck vs. Miller, supra, the following paragraph is found in the decision, immediately succeeding the language already quoted therefrom:

> "If notes and other choses in action were in this state temporarily, however, or in the hands of an attorney for collection merely, it would of course, be different * * * still more where the credit is owned and held in another state by a non-resident of this state * * *."

In Grant vs. Jones, supra, the second branch of the syllabus is as follows:

> "Credits owned by a non-resident of this state are not taxable here, unless they are held within this state by a guardian, trustee, or agent of the owner by whom they must be returned for taxation. The fact that such credits are secured by mortgage on real estate, within this state, does not change the rule that credits are to be taxed at the resident of the creditor, and not of the debtor."

While this decision was under the express terms of what was then Section 2734, Revised Statutes, the court discusses the principle involved independently of the exact statutory language. The following from the opinion, per Johnson, C. H., makes this plain:

> "Our statute clearly adopts that rule. Whenever the person holding such choses in action resides in Ohio, he must list for taxation such credits, whether he holds them as owner, guardian, trustee or agent. If they are held within the state in either capacity, they are within the jurisdiction of the state for purposes of taxation. If they are not so held, but are owned and held by a non-resident, they are not subject to taxation."

In Myers vs. Seaberger, supra, the syllabus is as follows:

> "A loan of money, secured by mortgage on real estate, is a credit within the meaning of the statutes of this state providing for the taxation of property; and where the creditor resides in another state, is not subject to taxation in this, although the securities are in the hands of an agent residing here, intrusted by the terms of his agency with the collection of the interest and principal when due, and its transmission to the creditor when collected."

In Buck vs. Beach, 206 U. S. 392, the Supreme Court of the United States still further narrows the doctrine of Buck vs. Miller, supra. making use, per Mr. Justice Peckham, of the following language: (page 400 et seq.)

> "The sole question * * * for this court is whether the mere presence of the notes in Indiana constituted the debts, of which the notes were the written evidence, property within the jurisdiction of that state, so that such debts could be therein taxed. * * *

"The Supreme Court of Indiana refused to accept the testimony of the agents that the Ohio notes were sent to Lafayette merely for safe-keeping and for clerical convenience and said that * * * the evidence clearly warranted the conclusion that Buck was vested with the control of said notes and securities for the purpose of enabling decedent to escape taxation in Ohio. We must, therefore, conclude * * * that the court below found that in conducting the business of the Ohio agency the decendent separated from said business the possession of said notes and mortgages and vested the right to such possession in said Buck. * * *

"Taking this to be a finding of fact by the supreme court of the state, it is plain that the action of the decedent in sending the Ohio notes into the state of Indiana * * * was improper and unjustifiable."

so held.

It is very difficult to frame a rule by which the power of the state in this respect can be determined. In Judson on Taxation, Section 397, an effort is made to state the rule as follows:

"The principle established in the construction of state statutes taxing all property within the scope of their operation is that the state can tax whatever personal property it can localize within its jurisdiction. * * * It seems that in order for the debt to be subject to the taxing power of the state it must be reduced to a concrete form and evidenced in some tangible shape, as in a note or other written obligation, and must be actually in the state, in the hands of the agent, or otherwise localized within its confines for permanent, as distinguished from temporary use."

The last statement contained in this quotation is not strictly accurate, as will be seen from a study of Buck vs. Beach, supra, wherein it is decided that tangible evidence of indebtedness in the hands of an agent for permanent custody only are not taxable by the state in which the agent resides if the principal is a non-resident.

Accepting the rule as above stated, with the qualification which must be made in the light of Buck vs. Beach, the problem becomes the ascertainment of what acts or methods of dealing with credits, on the part of a non-resident and his agents within a state, are sufficient to "localize" the same therein. Courts and text writers have used this term, seemingly fearing to use a more exact and definite one. I think, however, that from all the foregoing cases the following principles may be evolved:

Credits owned by a non-resident are so localized within a state if they are committed to the charge and management of an agent or other representative who is more than a mere custodian or collector and who has power to deal in a managerial capacity with the fund represented by the credit.

If it is difficult, however, to frame a principle from the decisions discussed, it is even more so to apply the same to the facts upon which this opinion is based. Two preliminary questions must be first disposed of, namely:

1. Did the W. M. Ritter Lumber Company, by establishing an office in Columbus, Ohio, where its president and managing officers have their headquarters, and where business details respecting the selling operations of the company are administered and the book accounts and other evidences of indebtedness owing to the company are kept, acquire there a residence of the corporation as such, district from its domicile, so as to render it a resident of the state of Ohio, in the face of the fact that some of its directors' meetings are supposed to be held in Welch, West Virginia?

2. Are the officers and employes of the company, having headquarters in Columbus, to be regarded as the agents of the corporation, which has a distinct entity at its domicile in West Virginia, for purposes of taxation?

It will be readily seen, of course, that if the answer to the first question suggested be in the affirmative, the case is at once disposed of and the corporation, has an entity, is to be regarded as a resident of Ohio. If, on the other hand, the first question be answered in the negative, and the second in the affirmative, then, the ultimate question to which the above stated principle must be applied is raised, namely: As to the nature and extent of the management of the business of the corporation intrusted to those agents whose offices are in Columbus.

In Pelton vs. Transportation Company, 37 O. S. 450, the question involved was as to the taxing district in which the movable property of a corporation organized under the laws of Ohio should be listed. The certificate of incorporation of the company gave the name of a certain village in Cuyahoga county as the place where the principal office of the company was situated. It appeared that the sole business transacted at this office consisted of the holding of the annual stockholders' meeting and the listing of property for taxation. Detailed business affairs were managed in various cities and the principal accounting office (seemingly corresponding, at least rougly, to the Columbus office of The W. M. Ritter Lumber Company) was located in the State of Vermont, where the president of the company resided and the office of its directors was located. In the opinion of the court, per McIlvaine, J., the following language appears: (Page 455 et seq)

> "For many purposes, a corporation is regarded as having a residence —a certain fixed domicile in this state, where corporations are required to designate in their certificates of incorporation the place of the principal office, such office is the domicile or residence of the corporation. The principal office of a corporation, which constitutes its residence or domicile is not to be determined by the amount of business transacted here or there, but by the place designated in the certificate. True, several offices may be established at the place specified in the certificate, as it is sufficient, under this statute, to specify the 'county or place.' But where a single office is established in the county, or township, or city, or other place designated, no further inquiry as to the identity of the principal office is admissible. And, as the statute does not require the office building to be specified, it is competent for the corporation to transfer its principal office from one building to another, within the specified county or place, whenever its own convenience or advantage may be subserved. No doubt, the exact location of the office should be open and notorious, so that a secret or fraudulent removal would not avail any purpose, yet the particular motive in making the change is not material, as, for instance, whether it was done to avoid taxation. If a natural person may change his residence for such purpose (and of this there can be no doubt), we see no reason why a corporation may not do the same. Such removal is not a fraud against tax laws, unless so declared by express legislation."

The entire case is interesting, but I forbear to quote more extensively from the opinion, suffice it to say that it is clearly established therein that as to a domestic corporation of Ohio its residence for purposes of taxation is the place designated in its articles of incorporation as its principal office. The court was construing the provision which is now found in Section 5371, General Code, to the effect that "all other personal property, moneys, credits and investments * * * shall be listed in the township * * * in which the person to be charged with taxes therein resides at the time of the listing thereof."

The statute in question has not been amended since this decision. The case then settles the rule as to domestic corporations. It would naturally seem that by parity of reasoning the mere establishment of a principal accounting office where the president resides and the directors sometimes meet, in Ohio, on the part of a corporation domiciled in another state would not constitute such foreign corporation a resident of the state for taxation purposes. Indeed, this seems to be the well established rule. The state of the law on this point is exhaustively discussed in Thompson on Corporations, Sections 492 to 504, inclusive, and in other similar works.

I think that the authorities cited by me in this connection completely establish the conclusion that a corporation can have no residence, as such, apart from its legal domicile. This is but another way of stating that when the directors and executive officers of a corporation, taking with them all the business books and records thereof, migrate from the state of origin to another state and there establish a business office, they have not taken with them the thing konwn as the corporation; that remains at the "principal place of business" designated in the charter and the directors, officers and employes of the corporation are simply agents of the corporation, transacting whatever business on its behalf may be committed to their hands by the stockholders, within the confines of the state to which they have removed.

The first preliminary question above suggested, then, must be answered in the negative; the corporation, as such, does not reside in Ohio, no matter to what extent its management is intrusted to officers and agents having headquarters therein.

We are brought, therefore, to the consideration of the second of the two questions last above suggested. For the purpose of ascertaining the extent of the state's power to tax the intangible property of a foreign corporation are the officers and employes of such corporation, resident in Ohio, and their exercising the powers and duties committed to them by the corporation, as such, to be regarded as the managing agencies of the corporation?

This question is not free from doubt. Corporations are generally treated as entities, although they must necessarily act through their officers and agents. So, Section 5404 of the General Code, under which the right of the state to the taxes claimed by the Board of Review in this case is asserted, requires the return to be made for the corporation by the principal accounting officer thereof. No different rule is thereby formulated for the making of the return of a foreign corporation from that laid down as to domestic corporations. On the other hand, however, this section does not in terms require a report or return from the corporation, as such, but from the principal accounting officer thereof. Other sections of the Ohio statutes seem to shed a little clearer light upon this question. Thus, Sections 178 to 182, inclusive, General Code, formerly Section 148-d, Revised Statutes, require all foreign corporations, excepting banking, insurance, building and loan and bond investment companies, before doing business in Ohio, to designate its principal place of business within this state, and the kind of business to be transacted here, and to secure a certificate from the secretary of state entitling it to carry on such business; so also, Sections 183 to 191, inclusive, General Code, formerly Section 148-c, Revised Statutes, requires all corporations other than insurance, banking, savings and loan, building and loan or bond investment companies, interstate carriers, and "foreign corporations entirely non-resident, soliciting business or making sales in this state, by correspondence or by traveling salesmen" to procure another kind of certificate and to pay a compliance fee based upon the proportion of its entire authorized capital stock "represented by property owned and business transacted in this state."

It could surely not be asserted that the state of Ohio, in this legislation, is attempting to run counter to the established principle that the domicile of the corporation cannot be changed. While it may use terms which signify the admission of the corporation into the state to do business, and while text writers and courts have often spoken of the matter in this light, it seems that what is actually done is to admit to the state the agents and officers of the corporation and to authorize them to carry on all or any part of the business of a corporation there. This is made very clear, it seems to me, by the provisions of Section 182, General Code, formerly a part of Section 148-D, Revised Statutes, which imposes criminal penalties upon persons soliciting or transacting business in Ohio for a foreign corporation which has not complied with the provisions of the preceding section.

The general principle here involved is, it seems to me, well stated in some of the above cited sections of Thompson on Corporations. Thus, in Section 495 the following language is used by the author:

> "* * * It has always been conceded that a corporation can have a permissive existence by delegation and representation in a state or county other than that of its creation."

That is to say, the corporation does not change its residence but it may delegate representatives to transact any part of its business and to manage any part of its external corporate affairs in a jurisdiction other than that of its origin.

Further in the same section the author says:

> "Where a corporation migrates to another sovereignty and takes with it all its property, together with its business, it has been held that it does not thereby carry its corporate attributes with it. * * * But the court of appeals (of New York) treated (such) corporation as a foreign corporation transacting business in the state of New York; since it still held its annual meetings in the state of Connecticut, which was all that it was required to do under its charter * * * the court expressly said * * * 'its domicile was not controlled by the place where its office was kept, where its books and papers were deposited, or where its business was done * * *.'"

That is to say, it is possible for a corporation to maintain its principal place of business within the meaning of its charter in one state and there to hold the meetings and maintain the organization which pertains to its internal affairs as a corporate entity, and yet to have all its business transacted and managed in another state.

In Section 498 the same author says:

> "The distinction between what is known as migration and its effect * * * and the removal of the office and offivers of a corporation, must be borne in mind. * * * Of this principle a Missouri case says, 'Directors are the agents of the corporation and it is now quite well settled that they may hold meetings and transact business in a foreign > state if they desire to do so unless the contrary is expressly provided by the charter of the general laws of the state under which the corporation was organized.' (citing Missouri Lead Mining Co. vs. Reinhard, 114 Mo. 218) The Illinois Court of Appeals said that 'corporations lawfully may, as they often actually do, remove their officers, agents, offices and effects into another sovereignty and there exercise their functions and franchises.' (Citing Pennsylvania Co. vs. Sloan, 1 Ill. Appeals 364.)"

Here is a suggestion of the vital principle, as it seems to me. A corporation of West Virginia cannot change its domicile as a corporation, but by the laws of West Virginia its corporate powers are to be exercised by certain directors and officers. Those directors and officers are the agents of the corporation—the universal agents, so to speak, with full power to manage and control the exercise of the corporate powers committed to them. Should they leave the state of West Virginia and go into the state of Ohio and there maintain the offices, hold the meetings and transact the business which constitutes the exercise of the corporate powers, they do not, thereby, offend against the law of the corporation's domicile or cause the corporation, as such, to migrate to another sovereignty; but as such agents and officers they are deemed to be transacting the business of the corporation in the state to which they have removed as individuals.

Further, in the same section, the author from whom I am now quoting says:

> "The Supreme Court of Georgia makes a clear distinction between what the law terms its principal office of business and its purely administrative offices; the former is said to be that which pertains to the management and control of the corporate affairs proper, while the latter are those which may from time to time be created by the corporation for the purpose of more conveniently transacting the business for which it was created."

The author states the rule in its entirety in Section 500 of his work, as follows:

> "It is very generally conceded and the authorities are agreed that the performance of constituent acts, that is, those acts which are necessary to the organization and existence of the corporation itself, or its final dissolution, must be done within the limits of the sovereignty which created the corporation."

That is to say, The W. M. Ritter Lumber Company must hold its stockholders' meeting at Welch, West Virginia, but it is not without power to transact all of its business from an office located in Columbus, Ohio. The managing officers there residing are its agents, to which it has committed the powers it enjoyed under the West Virginia charter.

The whole matter is summed up by the author in Section 501, as follows:

> "As has been already seen, the residence or citizenship of a corporation is not inconsistent with the location of its office, the transaction of its business and even a residence of its officers, in a jurisdiction or sovereignty other than that which has given its corporate life. * * * The general rule now recognized by the authorities is, that a corporation may be organized in one state and transact all of its business in another state in the absence of charter or statutory prohibition."

Indeed, recognition of this principle is found in many of the provisions of Section 178 to 192, inclusive, General Code of Ohio, above cited.

> "So, under these principles," says Mr. Thompson, "it has accordingly been frequently held that boards of directors of corporations may act as such outside the limits of the state unless meetings are prohibited by charter or statute. * * *"

The author states that some states prohibit certain meetings from being held outside of the state of origin and that it is very clear, of course, that at common law, regardless of statutory prohibitions or authorizations, constituent acts—those meetings and official acts relating to the internal management of corporations, as such, must be held and the records thereof kept at the domicile of the corporation.

Ohio cases cited by Mr. Thompson under Section 501, from which quotation has been made, are: Bank vs. Hall, 35 O. S. 158, and Petroleum Company vs. Weare, 27 O. S. 343. I do not quote from these decisions because they do not bear directly upon any question involved in your inquiry.

I am unable to escape the logical conclusion that if the removal of the officers of a corporation from the place of its domicile to a place in another state, and the transaction therein by them of its business, and the management of its affairs, do not operate to change the domicile of the corporation as such, yet, such acts do have the effect of establishing in the second state an agency of the corporation; and if to such agency is committed the management of all the affairs of the corporation, excepting its constituent acts, and excepting also the ultimate disposal of the surplus profits, that agency is taxable in the state where it is located, upon the property used in, and the credits growing out of, the business which it there conducts.

It will be seen that I have answered the second of the above suggested preliminary questions and have come to the conclusion that the removal of the officers of a corporation from the state of its origin to another state, and the transaction by them in that state of some of the corporate business duly committed to them, constitutes them the managing agents of a non-resident, within the rule so accurately defined as to private individuals.

I come now to the ultimate question in the case as made by the facts submitted to me, which said question I would state as follows:

The rule being that a state may tax the credits of a non-resident, which it finds localized within its borders and there used in or growing out of the transaction of business managed and conducted within its jurisdiction, by an agent of the ultimate owner thereof and corporate officers, maintaining definite headquarters within a state other than the state of the corporation's origin, being agents of the corporation within the meaning of that rule, to what extent, if at all, are the credits of The W. M. Ritter Lumber Company, arising from sales in states other than Ohio, localized in Ohio by reason of the establishment of the business office of the concern at Columbus?

Before coming to the discussion of the particular facts of this case it would be well to point out the somewhat unsatisfactory state of the law as disclosed by the adjudicated cases. As I have already pointed out, practically all of the cases which I have already cited, and others to the same effect, relate to the subject of investments. That is to say, the typical case is one in which a non-resident principal has intrusted to his agent, in the state exercising the taxing power, a fund for investment in mortgages, notes and other securities, leaving to the agent a large measure of control and management of the funds so to be invested. I have been unable to find any case, excepting the two Ohio cases of Hubbard vs. Bush and Pelton vs. Transportation Company, supra, in which the test as to the degree of control of a manufacturing or mercantile business, sufficient to give the credits arising therefrom the situs of the agent's residence, rather than that of the principal, has been involved.

While, therefore, these cases are of service in establishing the principle they do not furnish the ultimate and deciding test.

It is asserted that the limitations on the power of the state to tax credits of non-residents' business are accurately defined in the case of Liverpool & London & Globe Insurance Company of New York vs. Board of Assessors for the Parish of Orleans, 221 U. S. 346. This contention is made in the brief filed with me by counsel for The W. M. Ritter Lumber Company, and it is claimed that in that case the Supreme Court of the United States decided as an abstract proposition that the situs of credits for the purpose of taxation is the domicile of the debtor and that each state is permitted to tax to the creditor or his representative, if found within his territorial jurisdiction, the credits owed—not owned within its boundaries, and no others; so that a state has no power to tax a resident principal or agent upon credits arising from business managed by him within its boundaries if the debtors reside in another state.

I do not so interpret the decision, and in order to make my views of it clear, I take the liberty of quoting at some length from the report thereof, and particularly from the opinion of Mr. Justice Hughes, at page 349:

> "The assessment itself is not shown by the record, but, from the testimony, the Supreme Court of the state concluded 'that the property intended to be assessed was the amount due plaintiff by its policy holders in this state for premiums on which credit of thirty and sixty days had been extended. * * *.'
> "The assessment was laid under act 170 of 1898. Section 1 of this act, in defining property subject to taxation, includes 'all rights, credits, bonds, and securities of all kinds; promissory notes, open accounts and other obligations * * * and all movable and immovable, corporeal and incorporeal, articles or things of value, owned and held and controlled within the state of Louisiana by any person, in any capacity whatsoever.' Section 7 * * * provides as follows:
> "'* * * the intent and purpose being that no nonresident, either by himself or through any agent, shall transact business here without paying to the state a corresponding tax with that exacted of its own citizens; and all bills receivable, obligations, or credits arising from the business done in this state, are hereby declared assessable within this state, and at the business domicile of said non-resident, his agent or representative.'"

The italics are mine. It will be seen that the act does not attempt to cover credits arising from business transacted in Louisiana but due from non-residents of Louisiana to the agents of the company located in that state. In all likelihood the Louisiana agents of the insurance company were given no management and control of the business of the company within Louisiana at all. It was not the case of a foreign corporation whose entire affairs are managed at an office within a given state other than that of its origin; it was the case of a corporation maintaining its actual business office at its techincal domicile, being taxed in another state on credits due, not to one of its agents but directly to it at its home office, and owned by citizens of that state. So viewed, the case is not in point at all; but it is interesting to note that it really does what is claimed for it by counsel for The W. M. Ritter Lumber Company, namely: It revolutionizes the law of the taxation of credits, but in a way opposite to that supposed by these counsel. The effect of this decision, in connection with that in Hubbard vs. Brush, supra, would be to authorize the state of Ohio to tax the credits of The W. M. Ritter Lumber Company, arising from sales made in Ohio and owned by persons and corporations resident in Ohio, whether The W. M. Ritter Company had an office in Ohio or not.

It is with this point in mind that the following language, found on pages 354 and 355 of Mr. Justice Hughes' opinion, must be read:

> "The legal fiction expressed in the maxim mobilia sequuntur personam yields to the fact of actual control elsewhere. And in the case of credits, though intangible, arising as did those in the present instance, the control adequate to confer jurisdiction may be found in the sovereignty of the debtor's domicile. The debt, of course, is not property in the hands of the debtor; but it is an obligation of the debtor, and is of value to the creditor, because he may be compelled to pay; and power over the debtor at his domicile is control of the ordinary means of enforcement. Blackstone vs. Miller, 188 U. S. pp. 205, 206, 47 L. Ed. 444, 445, 23 Sup. Ct. Rep. 277. Tested by the criteria afforded by the authorities we have cited, Louisiana must be deemed to have had jurisdiction to impose the tax. The credits would have had no existence save for the permission of Louisiana; they issued from the business transacted under her sanction within her borders; the sums were payable by persons domiciled within the state, and there the rights of the creditor were to be endorsed. If locality, in the sense of subjection to sovereign power could be attributed to these credits, they could be localized there. If, as property, they could be deemed to be taxable at all, they could be taxed there."

In other words, the point that was not decided in the case last discussed was that if the insurance company had maintained a universal agent in the state of Louisiana, having the entire management and control of its business in that state and, say the states of Texas and Arkansas, Louisiana could not have taxed the credits due that agency from residents of Texas and Arkansas.

In Hutchison vs. Board of Equalization of the City of Oskaloosa, 66 Ia. 35, the plantiff appealed from an assessment made by the board of equalization upon moneys and credits in his hands as the agent of non-residents. The facts are sufficiently stated in the opinion of the court, beginning at page 38, as follows:

> "II. The plaintiff came to Iowa from England in 1875, and became a resident of Mahaska county. Afterwards, and for a year or more prior to the assessment in question, the plaintiff changed his mode of doing business, and made the loans of said money in his own name, and he collected the interest and principal when they became due, and reloaned the same. The notes and mortgages were in his possession, and he had the exclusive management and control thereof, but he was accountable for his doings to the parties in England. A portion of the money, at the time of the assessment, was loaned in Kansas in the plaintiff's name. (Italics mine). Such loans were made by his direction, and the loans and the evidences thereof were controlled by him. It does not appear that there was any understanding between the plaintiff and the parties in England as to how long the arrangement above stated was to continue. For aught that appears, it could well continue for an indefinite time. The assessment was made for the year 1882, and is in these words, as appears from the assessor's books: 'Hutchinson, Charles, Agent for the other parties, names not given, moneys and credits, $34,699: total $34,699.'

"III. The plaintiff has the money in question under his control and management, and loaned the same for pecuniary profit, and is therefore clearly within the letter and spirit of the statute; and counsel does not claim otherwise. Their contention is that the statute should not be so construed, for the reason, as we understand, that, whatever may be the rule as to tangible personal property, the situs of moneys and credits is where the owner resides; and, as the owners reside in England, such property cannot be taxed here, for the reason that it must be deemed to be in England. It is undoubtedly true that for some purposes, to prevent injustice, legal fiction has been adopted in relation to the situs of personal property. But this fiction cannot be permitted to prevail in view of the facts in this case. Nor are we aware of any difference between different species of personal property. The fiction, when allowed to prevail at all, applies alike to all personal property."

While the court does not elaborately discuss the proposition as to the taxability of the credits represented by the Kansas investment, yet, it will be observed that this point was necessarily involved in the decision of the case and that the same is, therefore, to that extent, authority for the conclusion that a state may tax the credits arising from a business managed and conducted within its territorial borders by an agent of a non-resident, having full power in the premises, regardless of the domicile of the debtor. This conclusion is consistent with the decision of the Supreme Court of the United States in Buck vs. Beach, supra, wherein the sole question was as to the extent of the control and management possessed by the agent residing in Indiana.

The broad principle, then, which should be stated before embarking upon its application to the facts submitted by the board of review, is as follows:

A state may tax credits due to a non-resident arising from business transacted by such non-resident within its territorial jurisdiction and due from those residing therein, regardless of the place from or through which the affairs of the non-resident, respecting the business so transacted, are managed; a state may also tax credits ultimately belonging to a non-resident, if arising from a business managed and conducted within its territorial limits by an agent of such non-resident, regardless of the situs of the debtors.

It will be readily seen, from what has preceded, that it will be necessary for the board of review to ascertain definitely the extent of the management of the business affairs of the W. M. Ritter Lumber Company which is intrusted to the officers of the company at Columbus, Ohio, or which is transacted and managed through and from the Columbus office.

As a guide to the board in the pursuit of this inquiry I beg to point out some of the immaterial facts which have been given to me, and all of which are incorporated in the statement made at the opening of this opinion:

In the first place the mere fact that the books of account and the notes and other evidences of indebtedness are held at Columbus is not of itself of determining force. Regard must be had to the purpose for which such accounts and notes are there held and to the nature of the control over the collection thereof, and the disposition of the proceeds of such collections when made, by the Columbus office. That is to say, if, as seems to be claimed by counsel representing The W. M. Ritter Lumber Company, the Columbus office is nothing more or less than a sort of clearing house for its various collection agencies, the company is not taxable here upon the credits so held for temporary purposes at Columbus.

In the second place the mere fact that some of the executive officers of the company have their offices in Columbus is not of itself controlling, although of strong persnasive force. Under the regulations and by-laws of the corporation the power and duties intrusted to such officers may relate solely to the rountine and detail of its business. Broad questions of policy and the like may be required to be determined at stock-holders' meetings or directors' meetings, held at Welch, W. Va. This seems, however, I am free to say, to be most unlikely, and I apprehend that upon investigation it will be found that a very large and active part in the management of the corporate concerns, in the broadest sense, is vested in the officers who have their headquarters at Columbus.

In the third place the mere fact that the company owns no plants in Ohio and that practically all of its tangible property is located in other states is not of itself conclusive. While it is true that in Hubbard vs.Brush, supra, the court mentions the fact that all of the property of the corporation therein concerned was located in Ohio, and it is its only plant there situated, these facts were dwelt upon, as I have already pointed out, because the question before the court was as to whether or not the company paid taxes on its entire capital in the state of Ohio. It is true that the principal business of The W. M. Ritter Lumber Company is that of manufacturing, and that ordinarily such business is deemed to be carried on at the manufactory. This test is not accurate, however, and it seems to me that the specific case under consideration affords an excellent example of the impossibility of its application. If the business of The W. M. Ritter Lumber Company is to be regarded as carried on where its manufacturing activities are immediately conducted, then, it has no one business place, but several, located in different states, for its saw mill operations are thus scattered. On the contrary, I am satisfied that though the saw mills themselves may be in a dozen states, if, as a matter of fact, they are all managed in the executive sense by officers of the corporation and directors, sitting in a single place, the business situs to which the credits arising from the manufacture of lumber, through such plants, are referable is that office and that only.

In the fourth place, the mere fact that The W. M. Ritter Lumber Company is incorporated under the laws of West Virginia and that its stockholders' meetings and some of its directors' meetings (as the statement of counsel has it) are held there, is not of itself conclusive. So far as the stockholders' meetings are concerned, unless the regulations of this company differ from those of most business corporations, they pertain exclusively to the doing of what Mr. Thompson calls the "constituent acts" of the corporation, and have nothing whatever to do with the management or conduct of the business carried on by the corporations. So also as to the directors' meetings held in West Virginia; if, under the regulations, by-laws and customs of the corporation, the only business transacted by the directors in West Virginia is the election of officers to be elected by them, the declaration of dividends, etc.—in short, that pertaining to the management of the corporation, as such, as distinguished from the business in which it is engaged, then, it would still be possible for the corporation, through its directors and other officers, to act completely in another jurisdiction in the management and control of its purely business activities.

In the fifth place, the mere fact that the increment to the capital of the company is not reinvested in Ohio is not of itself of determining force. This point is closely related to that with respect to the location of plants of the company. I mention it, however, because of the fact to which I have already repeatedly alluded, that nearly all the cases pertaining to the power of the state to tax the credits of non-residents are those in which the business of loaning money was conducted through an agent in the state asserting the taxing power. As I interpret those decisions, however, as well as the few cases in which the facts are not in this typical form, the ultimate test is that of control and management of the investment and not the place where it is made;—the place where the business is conducted and not that where the property is located or the debtor resides.

In the sixth place the mere fact that the Columbus office in its capacity as a collecting agency, if that be only one of its functions, uses banks and other agents in different states in which the debtors of the company reside is of no force whatsoever. If the Columbus office has control of these collections and of the evidences of indebtedness upon which they are based, and surrenders such evidences of indebtedness to such bank or other agents upon its own intiative—in other words, at all times retains the full charge of the collection business of the company without dictation from any other or higher authority in the company than itself, then, that office is certainly more than a mere clearing house for the collections of the company and the board is entitled to take such facts into consideration, together with others pertaining to the degree of control possessed by the Columbus office over the affairs of the corporation generally in determining whether or not the Columbus office is the one executive office of the company.

All the aforementioned considerations, then, are subordinate to the one test which, in the last analysis, must determine whether or not the credits of the W. M. Ritter Lumber Company, arising from sales outside of Ohio or otherwise due it from persons and corporations not resident of Ohio, must be returned by the accounting officer of that company at Columbus, Ohio, for taxation there. That test is as follows:

If, at the offices of the company in Columbus, Ohio, the ultimate control of all of its business affairs is exercised by its directors and managing officers, leaving for transaction at the technical domicile at Welch, W. Va., only such business as relates to the organization of the corporation as such, and its relation to its stockholders, all of the credits of the company arising from business done everywhere are taxable here, because all of the business is managed here and the control of the credits is referable to this office. If, on the other hand, those in charge of the Columbus offices are agents to whom limited authority is delegated, with respect to the corporation's business policies and dealings, subordinate to the control of some external power within the corporation, then, only those credits arising from sales in Ohio or otherwise attributable to Ohio debtors must be returned by the company in Ohio or otherwise attributable to Ohio debtors must be returned by the company at Columbus. The statement is made by counsel representing the company that some of its directors' meetings are held at Welch, W. Va. No statement is made as to where the other directors' meetings are held, or as to what the policy of the company is as to the nature of the business customarily transacted in the directors' meetings held in Welch, W. Va. Ordinarily, the ultimate control of the business policies of a corporation is vested in its board of directors and by them exercised; they in turn delegate the execution, in detail, of the policies determined upon them by them to the managing officers of the company. The exact functions of the several officers and of the directors respectively are subject to definition by the regulations and by-laws of the corporation. It is, therefore, apparent that I cannot answer categorically the question which has been submitted to me. I can only advise that the board of review ascertain certain facts and act in accordance therewith, under principles which I have laid down and shall hereafter lay down. I have gone thus carefully into the question, however, because I have apprehended that many similar questions might arise from time to time throughout the state and that the tax commission might be requested for rulings thereon.

I am of the opinion, therefore, as to the first question submitted, that the board of review must first call upon The W. M. Ritter Lumber Company for a statement as to the degree of control vested by the regulations and by-laws of the company in its board of directors. If it is ascertained that the directors exercise over the affairs of the corporation the degree of conrtol usually exercised by directors of corporations generally, and particularly with respect to the determination of what terms shall be given purchasers in general, what plants shall be operated, by what force of men, what forests of timber shall be purchased for the uses of the company, what localities shall be canvassed by the representatives of the company in an effort to secure business, what proportion of the income of the corporation shall be set aside for betterments and the like (I have suggested a few only of the many possible activities of the board of directors); then the board should ascertain where those meetings are ordinarily held at which the directors transact business of this nature. If the board finds the meetings held at Welch, W. Va., are for the purpose of doing acts which relate to the constituency of the corporation itself, such as the annual election of officers, the periodical declaration of dividends, etc., while all other meetings at which general business policies are discussed and determined are held at Columbus, at the general offices of the company there, then, in my opinion, the board may safely determine that the credits of the company are all subject to taxation in Ohio.

If upon such investigation the board finds that under the regulations and by-laws of the company the board of directors is not vested with active control and management of the business policies of the company, and that the same is committed to the president or to some other officer or officers of the corporation, subject to no superior control and to no check whatsoever, save that which would be rendered effectually by removal from office or employment, then, the board should ignore the custom of the directors with respect to the holding of their meetings and should ascertain whether or not the business offices of the president and the other managerial officers of the corporation are at Columbus. If that is ascertained to be the case, and if the business headquarters of the executive officers of the corporations are in Columbus, and those officers have, as aforesaid, the complete and actual charge of the business affairs of the corporation, being responsible only for results to the board of directors, then, and in that event, all the credits of the corporation, arising from sales, wherever made, or due from debtors wherever residing, should be returned for taxation here.

I may summarize my conclusions of law as follows:

If the business affairs of the W. M. Ritter Lumber Company are transacted from the Columbus office, without control as to such matters on the part of any other agency or power within the corporation, then, the whole business of the corporation is transacted at Columbus, and all of its credits are localized here within the meeting of the rule as so frequently and so loosely stated by courts and text writers. In any event, the credits arising from Ohio sales and due from residents of Ohio must be returned by the Columbus office for taxation here. The representatives of the company seem to concede this point,with possibly one qualification, which I shall immediately discuss.

The qualification which I have in mind is that which takes the form of a contention on the part of counsel representing the company to the effect that inasmuch as all of the plants of the company are in another state and the company maintains no lumber yard or other office from which sales are directly made in the state of Ohio, but ships its product directly form one of its plants to its customers wherever located, it is, therefore, as to Ohio sales, engaged in interstate commerce, and that the credits arising from such business cannot be taxed. In support of this contention the case of Western Union Telegraph Company vs Kansas, 216 U. S. 1 is cited. This case is easily distinguished upon the principle which is stated in Judson on Taxation, Section 183, as follows:

> "In one sense all commercial business between citizens of different states is interstate commerce. The manufacturer who ships his goods to a purchaser in another state, is engaged in interstate commerce. But in this connection the term 'carrying on interstate commerce' has a peculiar and technical meaning, which limits it to corporations actually engaged in carrying on interstate commerce, that is, common carriers and others, who afford the facilities whereby commerce is carried on between the states. Thus all public carriers, railroads, steamboats, telegraph or telephone companies, bridge and ferry companies, are carrying on interstate commerce in this sense. The state can neither exclude corporations of this class, actually engaged in interstate commerce, nor can it impose any conditions upon the transaction of their business in the state. A railroad or telegraph company opening an office in the state for its business and manufacturing corporation, which establishes there a sales office or a sales agency, are both, broadly speaking, engaged in interstate business, but in a different sense. The latter can be taxed by the state for the privelege or excluded, the former cannot."

In writing this paragraph, the author was discussing the right of a state to exact license fees from foreign corporations for the privelege of doing business within its jurisdiction. That was the nature of the case in Western Union Telegraph Company vs. Kansas.

This point is not elaborately discussed in the brief, and I shall not take the time to go deeply into it. Suffice it to say that the rule seems to be that a state may tax whatever property rights and things of value it finds located within its borders, although the same may be themselves the instrumentalities of interstate commerce or arises out of the carrying on of that commerce. In order to constitute a burden upon interstate commerce the taxation of the state must directly fasten itself upon that commerce as such. I am aware of no case which holds that a state may not tax the fruits of interstate commerce when it finds them localized within its borders, by the same rule and under the same laws as it taxes other property there localized. The tax which the board of review claims in this case is neither a license tax nor a privelege tax. It is not imposed upon the receipts from commerce as such or the credits growing out of commerce as such; it is the general property tax due the state as a just return on the value of the property right held within its domain. This contention of counsel, if it be seriously put forth, is not tenable.

Your second question is more easily answered. While it seems a hardship to hold that a taxpayer must, at his peril, ascertain the amount of money with which he is credited at the bank on the day preceding the second Monday of April, although he may have issued a large number of checks against his account, and in good faith believes the same to be practically exhausted, yet, in Insurance Company vs. Hynicka, 5 N. P. n. s., 255, our statute pertaining to the taxation of moneys was construed in this particular as follows:

> "Money as defined in Section 2730, when on deposit and subject to legal demand, is taxable, whether held by one in his own right or in a representative capacity, and outstanding checks which have not been certified can not be deducted from the balance in the bank in determining the amount to be returned." (Revised Statutes, now Section 5326, General Code.)

My view of the law is in accordance with this decision and I am therefore of the opinion that the amount of money actually in the bank subject to withdrawal on the day preceding the second Monday in April must be returned by the taxpayer for taxation, subject to no deduction for outstanding checks excepting such as may have been certified by the bank.

Of course, checks not certified and outstanding on the day preceding the second Monday in April represent debts of the taxpayer; as such they may be deducted from his credits, but not from his moneys in bank.

Very truly yours,

TIMOTHY S. HOGAN,
Attorney General.

TAXES AND TAXATION—CORPORATIONS—WILLIS FRANCHISE TAX—INTERSTATE COMMERCE—DETROIT & CLEVELAND NAVIGATION COMPANY.

Since the Detroit & Cleveland Navigation Company is engaged in interstate commerce, it is not subject to Section 148c, Revised Statutes, and since a corporation is not liable for the Willis Franchise Tax unless it is subject to Section 148c. Revised Statutes, the Detroit & Cleveland Navigation Company is not liable for the same tax.

Tax Commission of Ohio, Columbus, Ohio.

In re F—11822—The Detroit & Cleveland Navigation Company.

GENTLEMEN:—In the above entitled matter I find, as a matter of law, that the state has no claim for franchise fees. I recommend that the Commission authorize the Attorney General to dispose of the claim without collecting any part of it. My reasons for this conclusion are such, I believe, as to justify the preparation of an opinion for the guidance of the Commission in other similar cases, of which I apprehend there may be several instances.

The facts presented to me by counsel for The Detroit & Cleveland Navigation Company, and verified by the Secretary of State, in person, are as follows:

"The Detroit & Cleveland Navigation Company is a foreign corporation engaged in interstate commerce, as a water transportation company. This company, under its former name of The Detroit & Cleveland Steam Navigation Company, qualified under the laws of this state in 1893, the law being what has since been known as section 148-d, and is now section 178 of the code. When the section, generally spoken of as 148-c, was passed in 1894, the then Secretary of State called upon this company to qualify under that section, and it was pointed out to him that this company came within the exception of that act in that it was a transportation company engaged in interstate commerce. Subsequently, on March 16, 1904, the company, having changed its name by dropping out the word 'steam', again qualified under Section 148-d, but it has not qualified under Section 148-c, which is now Section 183, etc., of the code. For some years two or three boats, obsolete for the general line work, a part interest in which was owned by The Cleveland & Buffalo Transit Company and the remaining interest owned by The Detroit & Cleveland Navigation Company, have been by a joint arrangement put into a Cleveland and Toledo service, taking some local passengers and some on through tickets coming from other states, but the general, and with this small exception, the entire business of The Detroit & Cleveland Navigation Company has been at all times its interstate commerce business in connection with its service between Cleveland and Detroit, and so on, up Lake Huron.

"The Detroit & Cleveland Navigation Company has made reports and paid through the State Auditor's office the annual excise tax from the years 1904 to 1909, both inclusive, but in 1910 this service between Cleveland and Toledo was treated separately by the tax commission of Ohio and it goes by the name of The Cleveland and Toledo line, although there is no such corporation, and its only existence is, as above stated, a joint operation as to two or three boats, and this only for about two months of the year."

In an opinion addressed to the Secretary of State, a copy of which I have sent you under separate cover, I have stated the following conclusions of law, the reasoning in support of which it will not be necessary to repeat in this opinion:

1. A corporation might be, and possibly many corporations are, required to comply with Section 148*d*, Revised Statutes, now Section 178, General Code, without being required to comply with Section 148*c*, Revised Statutes, now Section 183, General Code.

2. All foreign corporations subject to compliance with any laws of the State of Ohio are subject to compliance with Section 178 of the General Code, formerly Section 148d, Revised Statutes; so that all corporations subject to compliance with Section 183, General Code, are also subject to compliance with Section 178, General Code.

3. The Willis law, popularly so-called, and particularly that portion thereof now incorporated in Section 110 et seq. of the Act of June 2, 1911, 102 O. L., 249. does not, nor in any of its form did it ever apply to corporations not required to comply with the provisions of Section 148*c*, Revised Statutes, now Section 183, General Code.

It appears from the above statement of facts that The Detroit & Cleveland Navigation Company has never complied with Section 183 of the General Code, nor with its predecessor, Section 148*c*, Revised Statutes, but did comply with Section 148*d*, Revised Statutes. Whether or not it was liable to comply with Section 148*d* is not mooted by counsel representing the company. The question as to whether or not any kind of a privilege or franchise tax or license may be exacted by a state from a foreign corporation engaged in interstate commerce is an interesting one; as is the further question as to the exact nature of the exaction made by the state of Ohio under former Section 148*d* of the Revised Statutes. It is sufficient to note that the company has voluntarily complied with this section and that in accordance with the reasoning of the opinion to the Secretary of State, to which I have already referred, such voluntary compliance with Section 148*d* does not estop a corporation from denying that it is liable to comply with Section 148*c*.

In but two respects is the case of The Detroit & Cleveland Navigation Company different from that of Eastman Kodak Company, passed upon in the opinion to the Secretary of State. In the first place, The Detroit & Cleveland Navigation Company is a public utility and has paid excise taxes to the Auditor of State for a number of years. This, however, was upon the assumption by it that it was in part engaged in intra-state commerce, the excise tax law, at all times, requiring the payment of taxes upon receipts of transportation companies from such commerce at least, whether the company was engaged also in interstate commerce or not. There is nothing in such conduct incompatible with the present assertion that the company is engaged largely, if not exclusively, in interstate commerce.

This brings me, then, to the second and principal points of difference between the present case and the one discussed in the opinion to the Secretary of State. While Eastman Kodak Company neither owned nor used any part of its capital or plant in Ohio, and did not, within the technical definition of the term, "do business" in Ohio, this is not the case of The Detroit & Cleveland Navigation Company; that company does not own valuable property in Ohio (although this is not disclosed by the statement of facts above set forth) and does use a part of its capital in this state. Unless some other reason appears, therefore, for claiming exemption from the Willis law, the company is liable for that tax, inasmuch as it has been determined (and the correctness of the determination is not disputed) that the corporation, as such, is not engaged in the business of intra-state water transportation, but that this operation is separate and distinct from its ordinary corporate activities. Such another reason is found, however, in the language of present Section 188, General Code, formerly part of Section 148*c*, Revised Statutes, which provides as follows:

> "The preceding five sections (including Section 183) shall not apply to foreign * * * express, telegraph, telephone, railroad, sleeping car, transportation, or other corporation engaged in Ohio in interstate commerce; * * *"

The Detroit & Cleveland Navigation Company is a foreign transportation company, engaged in Ohio in interstate commerce—almost exclusively so engaged, in fact, under Section 188, I am of the opinion that the extent to which a corporation may be engaged in interstate commerce is immaterial. It is very clear, it seems to me, that The Detroit & Cleveland Navigation Company was not subject to compliance with Section 148*c*, Revised Statutes, and is not now subject to compliance with Section 183, General Code, or liable for the penalties prescribed by Section 186, General Code, for failure to comply therewith.

The question is thus raised as to whether or not a foreign corporation which owns and uses a part or all of its capital or plant in Ohio, but which is one of the companies engaged in interstate commerce and enumerated in Section 188, General Code, is liable for reports and fees under the Willis law, or rather under Section 110 et seq. of the Act of 1911.

Recurring now to the analysis of Section 2 of the Willis law, and its successors, Section 5525, General Code, and the corresponding sections of the tax commission acts of 1910 and 1911, as set forth in my opinion to the Secretary of State, I beg leave to point out again that in order that a foreign corporation may be made liable to the Willis law under any of these sections, it must appear not only that it does business in Ohio, not only that it owns or uses a part of all of its capital in Ohio; but also that it is subject to compliance with Section 148*c*, Revised Statutes, or Section 183, General Code.

The Detroit & Cleveland Navigation Company is not subject to compliance with Section 148c, Revised Statutes, or Section 183, General Code, and is therefore not subject to the Willis tax; that is, it is not liable for reports and fees under Section 110 et seq., 102 O. L. 249.

In my opinion it would be useless to take any position other than that which I have above outlined, in court. The meaning of the statutes involved is so plain that litigation of this point is not worth while.

I therefore respectfully repeat my request that I be authorized to compromise claim F-11822, without the payment of any fees or penalties, or the making of any reports whatsoever.

Very truly yours,
TIMOTHY S. HOGAN,
Attorney General.

TAXES AND TAXATION—BOARDS OF REVIEW—POWER TO CHANGE VALUATIONS ON FUTURE DUPLICATE WHEN ACTING AS ANNUAL BOARD OF EQUALIZATION, AND ON PRESENT DUPLICATE WHEN ACTING AS QUADRENNIAL BOARD OF REVIEW.

Changes in real estate value made by the board of review when acting as an annual board of equalization, affect only the duplicate in process of being made up. When acting as a quadrennial board of revision, however, such board has power to make changes on a duplicate in the hands of a treasurer for collection.

COLUMBUS, OHIO, July 5, 1912.

The Tax Commission of Ohio, Columbus, Ohio.

GENTLEMEN:—I beg to acknowledge receipt of your favor of June 12, enclosing me a copy of a letter addressed to the commission by the county auditor of Franklin county, in which the writer state that a complaint against a real estate valuation has been recently filed with the board of review of the city of Columbus, with the specific request that the valuation complained of be changed upon the duplicate now in the hands of the treasurer for the collection of taxes thereon. The auditor desires to be advised as to the power of the board of review at the present time to order changes made upon the tax duplicate.

The following sections of the General Code furnish I think, by necessary inference the answer to the question thus submitted:

"Section 5624.

> "Boards of review, within and for their respective municipalities, shall have all the powers and perform all the duties provided by law for all other municipal boards of equalization and revision. * * * * * * When the appointment of a board of review in a municipality all other boards of equalization and revision therein shall be abolished. At the conclusion of the quadrennial appraisement of real property in such municipal corporation, the board of review therein shall sit as a board for the equalization of the value of such real property."

Section 5624-1.

> "Boards of review for municipal corporations sitting as boards of equalization and revision shall have and exercise, in so far as the same may be applicable, all the powers and perform all the duties, and be governed by the same rules and limitations, conferred or imposed by law upon annual county boards of equalization of real estate and personal property, moneys and credits and quadrennial county boards of equalization of real property outside of cities, and such boards sitting as boards of revision; * * *"

Section 5595.

"The quadrennial county board of equalization shall complete its work of equalization, on or before the first Monday in October then next following the beginning of the equalization. On the completion of such work the board shall adjourn as a board of equalization."

Section 5601.

"The quadrennial county board of equalization, sitting as a board of equalization or as a board of revision, may call persons before it and examine them, under oath, as to their own or other's property. The president or the presiding officer pro tem. of the board may administer oaths. If a person notified to appear before the board refuses or neglects to appear at the time required, or appearing, refusing to be sworn, or answer any question put to him by the board, or by its order, the presiding officer of the board shall make complaint thereof, in writing, to the probate judge of the county, who shall proceed against such person in like manner as is provided for in the last sub-division of chapter three of this title."

Section 5599.

"The quadrennial county board of equalization shall sit as a board of revision, when notified by the auditor of the county to meet for that purpose. It shall begin its session as a board of revision, on the first Monday of May following the completion of the quadrennial equalization, and shall close its session on or before the fourth Monday of September next following."

Section 2588.

"From time to time the county auditor shall correct all errors which he discovers in the tax list and duplicates, either in the name of the person charged with taxes or assessments, the description of lands or other property, or when property exempt from taxation has been charged with tax, or in the amount of such taxes or assessment. If the correction is made after the duplicate is delivered to the treasurer, it shall be made on the margin of such list and duplicate without changing any name, description or figure in the duplicate as delivered, or in the original tax list, which shall always correspond exactly with each other."

Section 5580.

"The * * * board for the annual equalization of the real and personal property, moneys and credits in each county * * * shall meet * * * on the Wednesday after the third Monday in May * * *."

Section 5590.

"The county auditor shall lay before the board and also before all city boards of equalization * * * the returns of the assessors for the current year * * and also the valuation of the real estate as entered on the duplicate of the preceding year * *."

Section 5620.

"The board of review shall meet annually at the office of the county auditor on the first Monday in June, and continue in session from day to day, except Sundays and legal holidays, until the Saturday preceding the first Monday in June of the following year. The state board of appraisers and assessors for laying excise taxes may fix the time within which the work shall be completed."

I think it is reasonably clear upon even a casual inspection of the foregoing sections, that the answer to the auditor's question depends upon the further question as to whether or not the Board of Review of the City of Columbus was at the time the complaint was made sitting as a quadrennial board of revision or an annual board of equalization. It is obvious that inasmuch as changes made by a board of revision are under section 5601 to be made in the manner provided by law for making corrections on the duplicate, such board has power to change valuations on a duplicate in the hands of the treasurer for collection. It is equally obvious, I think, that changes made by an annual board of equalization affect only the duplicate then in process of being made up. This follows from section 5590 supra, and further from the fact that the work of the annual county board of equalization and the board of review sitting as an annual board of equalization is one of the steps in making up the future duplicate,—not correcting a past duplicate.

In my opinion the Board of Review of the city of Columbus was at the time the complaint spoken of by the auditor was filed (June 11, 1912) sitting as an annual board of equalization. I do not think that the state board of appraisers has the power under section 5620 supra, to regulate or change the times at which city boards of review shall exercise the various functions imposed in them by law. These matters are regulated by Sections 5580, 5594 and 5599, all of which, as to boards of review, are adopted by appropriate reference in sections 5624 and 5624-1 supra. Between the first Monday of May, 1911, and the fourth Monday of September, 1911, or such later date, within the limits fixed by the state board of appraisers, as might have been necessary to afford the board sufficient time to complete the work of hearing complaints theretofore made to it as a board of revision, the board of review was sitting as such board. Changes made by it upon such complaints after the duplicate of 1911 was in the treasurer's hands were in and to that duplicate. Complaints thereafter filed, however, are to be heard by the board as an annual board of equalization at its session beginning on the third Monday in May, 1912. Acting as such board it cannot change the 1911 duplicate.

As to the exact date beyond which complaints made to the board of review as a board of revision may not be received by it, I express no opinion. (See Britton vs. Baker, 12 O.D., 107.)

It is sufficient for the present purpose to state that the complaint in question clearly invoked the jurisdiction of the annual board, not the board sitting as a quadrennial board of revision.

Very truly yours,

ATTORNEY GENERAL.

TAXES AND TAXATION—SAVINGS BANKS—RETURN OF DEPOSITS BY DEPOSITORS—BY BANK—"MONEYS"—"CREDITS"—PERSONAL PROPERTY—SOCIETY FOR SAVINGS—SPRINGFIELD SAVINGS SOCIETY—BANKS WITH AND WITHOUT CAPITAL STOCK.

Both the society for savings of Cleveland and the Springfield Savings Society of Springfield were organized under laws since repealed and these institutions are therefore different from all other banking companies in Ohio.

Upon the authority of Collet vs. Springfield Savings Company which considered the case of the defendant company which was similar to the society for savings, in that neither society had a capital stock, the entire working capital of either being made up of the deposits received by them, both societies are to be held the agents or trustees of the depositors. The funds of such depositors could not therefore be classed as credits.

In spite of the fact that Section 5370 of the General Code requires agents or trustees to return for taxation funds invested by them in behalf of others, still by reason of the requirement of the same statute that the moneys subject to order or check should be returned by the depositor, these deposits must be returned not by the society but by the depositor. Further reasons in support of this rule, are that the bank could not intend such deposits to be returned by both bank and depositor and also the fact that since moneys are subject to the depositor's order, without regard to the nature of the investment, he has no direct interest in the investment itself, as cestui que trust.

Whether such deposits must be returned by said depositor as money or as personal property is immaterial.

In savings banks properly so-named, the officers or trustees are agents of the depositors. When the capital is owned by shareholders however, they are wrongly named savings banks, and the relation between bank and depositor is that of debtor and creditor for the reason that the security for deposits therein depends partly upon investments made of their capital stock and not altogether upon the investments of the deposits themselves.

Since therefore, all so-called savings banks in Ohio, except the two above mentioned, possess a capital stock, depositors in such banks are really preferred creditors of the banks and ont principals or cestui que trusts.

Such deposits should therefore be listed as credits, except when they become money by express provision of Section 5325 of the General Code, that is when they are payable upon demand and without right to interpose a suspension of payment by notice.

From these rules therefore deposits in the society for savings and The Springfield Savings Society and in all other proper savings banks outside of Ohio, mus be returned by the depositor himself.

Deposits in all other Ohio savings banks and in all banks having a capi stock must be returned as moneys, if payable on demand, if payable otherwise credits.

COLUMBUS, OHIO, July 22, 1912

Tax Commission of Ohio, Columbus, Ohio.

GENTLEMEN:—I beg to acknowledge receipt of your letter of June 13th in full is as follows:

"The commission submits to you the following questions relatin deposits in savings banks, and encloses herewith the rules of a numb such institutions—three from Cleveland and two from Columbus—will not that the rules governing withdrawals and the requirements to give notice before withdrawing deposits are substantially similar in all of these, and presumably are the same in all savings banks throughout the state.

The questions submitted are:

"1. Are such deposits 'moneys' within the definition of that term in Section 5326?

"2. If such deposits are not moneys, are they 'credits' within the definition of that term in Section 5327?

"3. Does a trust relation exist between the bank and those depositing money with it under the conditions provided by such rules and regulations, and, if so, is it the duty of the bank to return the same as trustee under the provisions of Section 5370, General Code?"

One of the pamphlets enclosed by you in your letter contains the rules and regulations of the society for savings in the city of Cleveland, the other rules are those of several banks organized as savings and trust companies. I mention this fact because, for convenience, I shall deal separately with the case of the society for savings. The rules of the society for savings, insofar as they bear upon the question submitted by you, are as follows:

"Deposits will be received from one dollar upward; the sum deposited to the credit of any one account may not exceed in the aggregate five thousand dollars, without special arrangement. * * *

"Dividends are declared and credited upon depositors' accounts semi-annually, on January 1st and July 1st, and these are entitled to dividends the same as the original deposits. The rate is fixed by the society's earnings, which in the past have warranted a dividend of not less than four per centum per annum. * * *

"The society does not accept on deposit the funds of banks, bankers, firms, or business corporations. * * *

"Money deposited, and the dividends thereon, may be withdrawn by the depositor either in person, by order in writing, or by letters of attorney, and in case of death by legal representatives; but no preson shall be entitled to receive any part of his principal or dividend unless he produce the pass-book * * * or shall prove that such book has been lost or destroyed, in which case a written discharge and indemnity my be required. * * *

"The privilege which is uniformly reserved by savings banks, of requiring notice before any sum may be withdrawn will not ordinarily be enforced, and as a general rule depositors will be permitted to withdraw their deposits at pleasure."

The other rules enclosed in your letter, while differing in language, are substantially similar to each other. I quote one of these pamphlets, which is ypical of all of them.

"Savings deposits of_____Dollars, or more, will be received, upon which interest will be allowed, in accordance with these rules, at the rate of_____per cent. per annum.

"Accrued interest will be placed to the credit of depositors, * * * and if not withdrawn will be added to the principal and will draw interest from the date of credit * * *

"Deposits may be withdrawn by the depositor in person or by written order, but either case the pass-book shall be presented that such withdrawal may be entered therein,* * * In the event this book is lost and a duplicate issued, and payment made upon presentation of either the duplicate or the original will be a valid discharge to the bank for the amount so paid. The bank reserves the right to require a bond of indemnity before a duplicate pass-book will be issued.

"Depositors may be required to give sixty days' notice before withdrawing their deposits, but as a general rule they will be permitted to withdraw them at their pleasure. * * *

"No assignment or transfer of this pass-book, or of the deposits herein entered, will be recognized by or binding on this bank, unless the consent of the bank shall first be obtained, and a memorandum thereof entered herein."

The statutes cited by you, and under which the questions arise are as follows:

Section 5326.

"The term 'money' or 'moneys' as so used (in this title) includes any surplus or undivided profits held by societies for savings or banks having no capital stock, * * * and every deposit which the person owning, holding in trust, or having the beneficial interest therein, is entitled to withdraw in money on demand."

Section 5327.

"The term 'credits', as so used, means the excess of the sum of all legal claims and demands, whether for money or other valuable things, dues or to become due to the person liable to pay taxes thereon including deposits in banks or with persons in or out of the state, other than such as are held to be money, as hereinbefore defined, * * * over and above the sum of legal bonafide debts owing by such person. * * *"

Section 5370.

"Each person of full age and sound mind shall list the personal property of which he is the owner and all moneys in his possession, all moneys invested, loaned, or otherwise controlled by him as agent or attorney, or on account of any other person or persons, company or corporation, and all moneys deposited subject to his order, check, or draft; * * * The property * * * of a person for whose benefit property is held in trust (shall be listed) by the trustees: * * * and surplus or undivided profits held by a society for saving or bank having no capital stock, by the president or principal accounting officer."

I think that my reason for treating separately of deposits in the society for savings must have been made apparent by some of the foregoing statutory provisions. This institution (for, as I understand it, there is no other institution precisely like it in the state of Ohio) has been given the distinction of separate treatment in some of the taxation statutes of the state and it remains to be seen to what extent such express mention thereof affects the question which you have submitted, insofar as that institution is concerned.

In an opinion to the commission under date of May 24, 1911, I considered and passed upon inter alia the following question:

> "Is the society for savings of Cleveland such a bank or banking association under the laws of this state as should make report to the county auditor and be assessed by him under the provisions of Sections 5407-5414 of the General Code?"

In that opinion it was pointed out that the society for savings of Cleveland was incorporated by special act of the legislature of this state prior to the adoption of the Constitution of 1851; that said special act created certain individuals a body corporate and provided that they, and such others as should be duly elected members of the said company, should be and remain a body politic and corporate for a period of thirty years, which said period was subsequently extended indefinitely by the Act of February 15, 1877; that membership in the society as a corporation is not extended to all of its depositors, but only to such persons as may be elected by ballot by other members, thus constituing the society a "close corporation"; and that, finally, Section 3 of said Act provided as to deposits as follows:

> "All deposits of money received by said society, shall be used and improved to the best advantage and in a manner not inconsistent with the laws of this state. And the income or profits thereof shall be applied and divided among the persons making the deposits, their executors or administrators, in just proportion, with such reasonable deduction as may be chargeable thereon, and the principal of such deposits may be withdrawn at such time and in such manner as the said society shall direct and appoint."

It was also pointed out that the Act of February 15, 1877, extending the charter of this society, together with that of other savings societies, which were incorporated under an entirely different law, provided that such societies, before paying dividends or interest on deposits, should have a surplus fund equal to five per cent. of the whole amount of deposits, which should be gradually increased until the same equaled ten per cent. thereof. It was also pointed out that the society for savings has no "capital stock" in the sense in which this phrase is most often used.

The question being, as aforesaid, upon the duty of the principal accounting officer of the society for savings, to return to the county auditor the aggregate value of the means invested in the enterprise, as in the case of an incorporated bank, I advised the commission that in my opinion the society for savings is not a bank within the meaning of the present bank taxation law, being neither an incorporated bank having capital stock divided into shares, nor an unincorporated bank, but being, on the contrary, an incorporated bank the capital stock of which is not divided into shares, and indeed an incorporated bank without capital stock, in the strict sense of the term.

In reaching this conclusion I pointed out that the statutes contain explicit provision for the taxation of all things of value held by the society for savings, in that, under Section 5325 and 5370 of the General Code, above quoted, the surplus and undivided profits belonging to the society were required to be listed as "moneys" by "the president or principal accounting officer thereof", the real and personal property belonging to the society, as such, being assessable to it, as a "person," by virtue of the provisions of Section 5320, in connection with the fact that the society could not be held to be an incorporated company whose taxation is not "specifically provided for" within the meaning of Section 5404 as amended; that the members of the society, as members, are required to return for taxation the value of their interest therein, as such members, as "personal property" under Section 5325, being "shares or interests in means not forming part of the capital stock of an incorporated company"; and that, finally, the depositors in such society should return as money the amount of their several deposits in the institution.

It will be observed, therefore, that insofar as the taxation of deposits in the society for savings is concerned, I have already, in a way, passed upon that question. Inasmuch, however, as the question which you now ask was not directly before me when I prepared the other opinion, and as my statement respecting the taxation of deposits, therein set forth, was in a sense gratuitous, though made in the course of the expression of my reasons for the ultimate conclusion reached by me, I deem it proper to go into the matter again; and to restate in this opinion the substance of the reasoning upon which the statement in question was made by me.

The case upon which the conclusion of the former opinion, and each of them, were based is that of Collett vs. Springfield Savings Society, 13 C. C. R. 131, affirmed without report, 56 O. S. 776. A full discussion of this case will be found in the previous opinion; suffice it to say at this time that it is held therein that in the absence of any law specifically taxing the assets controlled by the defendent savings society, as such, it was the duty of the depositors to return and pay taxes upon their deposits. That this was directly held in the case appears from the following language quoted from the decision of Summers, Jr.:

> "The defendent, for each of the years in controversy, returned and paid taxes upon its furniture, real estate, and surplus, less that part of the surplus invested in United States bonds, and the (common pleas) court, in one of its conclusions of fact finds that in each of said years 1887 to 1892, both inclusive, said savings society paid taxes on a larger amount than it would be required to pay taxes upon, by the letter of Section 2759 of the Revised Statutes.
> "The findings of fact, sustained by the evidence, will warrant no other conclusion of law than that the return for each of the years in controversy, prior to the year 1892, was not false; so that only the return for 1892 is involved, and the principal question is, does Section 2759*b* of the Revised Statutes * * * conflict with any provision of the constitution?
> "Or, to state it in a different form, do the deposits held and controlled by the defendent. The Springfield Savings Society, belong to it, or do they belong to the depositors, and are they held and controlled by the society as the incorporated agent or trustee of the depositors, and for their sole use and benefit? * * *
>
> "That the relation of savings societies, such as defendent, and depositor is that of agent and principal, is settled by an unbroken current of authority. (Here follow citations to numerous authorities, including Ridenour vs. Mayo, 40 O. S. 9) * * *
> "* * * The society can have no capital or anything with which to carry on business other than the deposits; and, in order that it may induce people to entrust their money to its care and so accomplish the objects of its creation, it is necessary that the depositor may, from time to time, put in whatever he can spare, with the assurance that he can, at any time, upon short notice, draw out the whole or any part * * * without awaiting the winding up of the institution, or relying upon the uncertainties of finding a purchaser for his interest. And so the law provides that he may withdraw his deposits upon thirty days' notice, and that an account shall be given him in a book, or otherwise, of the sum deposited, which shall be the evidence of his property in such society. * * *

"* * * it is evident that the depositors' property in such society and the deposits, or that in which they are invested, are for the purpose of taxation just as clearly reciprocals as are stockholders' shares of stock and the capital stock or that in which it is invested; and if the depositors are taxed upon the reciprocal of the deposits or that in which they are invested, and the society is taxed upon the real estate, furniture, surplus and undivided profits, the whole property is taxed, and not only is no provision of the constitution violated, but, perhaps, all is exacted that the constitution will permit. * * *

"It only remains, then, to determine whether the depositors are required to return for taxation their "property" in these societies."

After quoting from Section 2730 of the Revised Statutes the definitions of "money" and "personal property," above quoted from Sections 5325 and 5326, respectively, General Code, above quoted and referred to, the court uses the following language:

"That is to say personal property shall be held to mean and include every interest in the capital stock, undivided profits, and all other means not forming part of the capital stock, by whatsoever name the same may be designated, of every company, whether incorporated or unincorporated. * * *

"* * * whether or not the interests or 'property' of depositors, in savings societies organized under the law of 1867, might be held to be a deposit, which the owner is entitled to withdraw in money on demand, and therefore comprised in the term 'money', or a deposit which the owner is not entitled to withdraw in money on demand, and therefore embraced in the term 'credit', there can be no doubt that that part of the definition of personal property in Section 2730 * * * is sufficiently comprehensive to include the interests of such depositors, and that they must be returned under the fifteenth item of Section 2737. If not, then certainly under the seventh item of that section."

The two items referred to by the court are now found in Section 5376 of the General Code, and are as follows:

"* * * seventh, the total values of all articles of personal property not included in the preceeding or succeeding classess; * * * fifteenth, the amount of all moneys invested in bonds, stock, joint stock companies, annuities, or otherwise; * * *"

A careful reading of the above quoted excerpts from the opinion of the Circuit Court, and indeed of the entire opinion, establishes three facts:

1st. That the court did not decide unequivocally as to whether or not the interests of the several depositors were to be regarded as moneys, investments or personal property, though seeming to incline to the view that they are to be regarded as personal property. It is quite apparent, however, that the court meant to hold that such interests did not constitute "credits", although this is not expressly stated.

2nd. It was not necessary for the court to decide precisely the method of listing such depositors' interests, because the court was striving to establish the conclusion merely that the taxation of the deposits as property belonging to the depositors, together with the taxation of the tangible property and the surplus and undivided profits, in the name of the society, reached everything of value existing by virtue of such society.

3rd. The court undoubtedly meant to hold—although, again, it was not unequivocally so stated in the opinion—that the deposits should be returned by the depositors. This follows from the decision that prior to the enactment of the special statute (since repealed), by virtue of which savings societies were to be taxed as banks, the defendant had returned only its surplus and undivided profits, and real and tangible personal property, for taxation, and had not returned anything as agent or trustee for its depositors. By approving the conclusions of fact and law on this point, reached by the common pleas court, the circuit court, and of course the supreme court, affirming it, lent their sanction to the method of return adopted by the savings society.

The decision itself leaves something to be desired in the matter of clearness. To be sure, it makes very little practical difference as to whether deposits in a society like the Springfield Savings Society are to be taxed as "moneys," "investments" or personal property", the "personal property" having no usual selling price. In any event, under Section 5388, General Code, the ultimate rule of valuation would be the same. So long as it is established, and I think it is, by the decision, that the depositor's interest is not "credits" the taxing authorities need give little concern to the further purely argumentative question.

But the decision also leaves a cloud upon the question as to the court's reason for holding seemingly that the savings society should not make the return for its depositors as their agent or trustee. It is expressly held in the opinion that the society does bear precisely this relation toward its depositors, and it is difficult at first blush to understand why it should not be obliged to make the return as such. Careful inspection of Section 5370, above quoted, however, seems to furnish the answer suggested by this question. That section provides that each person shall list the personal property of which he is the owner, and all moneys invested, loaned or otherwise controlled by him as agent or attorney, and all moneys deposited subject to his order, check or draft. That is to say, with respect to moneys three rules are furnished, as follows:

1. One who holds possession of money must return it.
2. One who controls moneys invested or loaned, as agent or attorney for another, must return such moneys so invested or loaned.
3. All moneys deposited, subject to the order of an individual, must be returned by the one having the right to issue such an order.

It will thus be seen that a special rule is made to cover deposits, and in my judgement this special rule takes the case covered by it out of the more general rules otherwise applicable. Thus, in a sense, the actual cash on hand in a savings society on taxing day would be covered by the rule that moneys in possession should be returned by the possessor, and as a result the society would have to return such moneys; so also the amount represented by the deposits, but which is actually invested in productive securities for the benefit of the depositors, on taxing day, should be returned as an investment made by an agent for the benefit of his principal, that being the relation of the savings society to its depositors. But because all persons having the right to demand money deposited with another must return such deposit as money of their own, it necessarily follows that when the cash on hand, plus the amount invested, represents an aggregate sum that is subject to withdrawal by check, order or draft, it is not to be returned as cash in the possession of the society or as an investment made by the society for the benefit of another, but as deposits in the name of and upon the return of the depositor.

To hold otherwise would result in two general property taxes being levied upon the same thing, an end surely not contemplated by the statute. Furthermore, as to so much of the assets of any institution which is in law the trustee of its depositors as are invested for the benefit of the depositors, it is clear that the moneys cannot be regarded as completely invested, loaned and controlled by such trustee, so long as the right to withdraw on demand exists in the depositor. For both of these reasons, then, I am of the opinion that an institution which holds moneys of depositors and invests them for the interest of such depositors, is not to be regarded as a person having invested, loaned or controlled moneys on account of any other person or persons, within the meaning of Section 5370; but that the persons subject to whose order the moneys so deposited and invested are held must severally return their interests in such fund under the same section.

Now, the foregoing comments relate exclusively to an institution precisely like the savings society whose case was considered by the circuit court in Collett vs. Springfield Savings Society, supra. The application of these principals to the case of other institutions is to be determined by considering the points of similarity and difference, respectively, between the nature, power and methods of doing business of such other institutions than the Springfield Savings Society.

Returning, then to the case of the society for savings in the city of Cleveland, I beg to state that by reference to the former opinion, wherein the powers of this institution are fully discussed, it will be found that it differs from the Springfield Savings Society principally in that the members of the latter were all depositors of moneys in excess of a certain amount, while the membership of the former was confined to the original incorporators and their successors, as elected by them. Neither society had a capital stock, the entire working capital of both being made up of the deposits received by them.

I am of the opinion, however, that the single noteworthy point of difference above pointed out is not essential, and that the conclusions above referred to apply fully to the case of the society for savings as well as to that of the Springfield Savings Society. The essential point upon which Judge Summers bases his conclusions in the Springfield case is the fact that the savings society was not the debtor of its depositors, but was a trustee or agent for them. This fact, at the very outset, precluded the possibility of deposits being considered as credits, regardless of the fact that they were not payable, strictly speaking, on demand. The same thing is true of the society for savings. While it is not clear that the members of the society for savings are not entitled to reap profits for themselves out of the conduct of the business, yet, it is true that under the act they are trustees and their obligations to the depositors may be enforced on that basis. Strength is lent to this conclusion by the fact that instead of paying "interest" this institution assumes to pay dividends to its depositors.

I am, therefore, of the opinion that the deposits in the society for savings of Cleveland are not to be regarded as credits. I am further of the opinion that such deposits are to be returned for taxation by the individual depositors; as to whether or not such deposits are to be called "moneys" or "personal property" is a question which I regard as academic, though I incline to the belief that they are to be regarded as moneys notwithstanding the peculiar nature of the institution, and notwithstanding also the implied reservation of the right to require notice before any sum may be withdrawn.

Having thus disposed of the case of the society for savings, I come now to consider the case of other savings banks, whose printed matter you have enclosed. Herein, again, it will be necessary to examine into the nature of the institutions, as such, which, under the laws of Ohio, have the right to hold themselves out as "savings banks". For it must be understood that the term "savings bank" has a certain technical significance. thus, in Morse on Banks and Banking, Fourth Edition, the nature of a savings bank in the proper sense is defined as follows: (Sec. 617) while in the next section (Section 618) the following qualification is set forth:

> "The depositors are the bank, the trustees and officers are their agents for receiving and loaning their money; and the profits belong to the depositors."

> "Although a bank may be called a savings bank, if it is really a stockholders' bank, while the capital is owned by the share-holders, the name will amount to nothing * * * and in such a bank a deposit creates the relation of debtor and creditor * * *. A by-law authorizing a savings deposit to be withdrawn after giving due notice, without regard to the condition of the investment at the time, indicates that the depositor has not trust in the investment; otherwise he would have to await the maturity of the note on which his money was loaned."

It is clear from the foregoing authority that, as already suggested, the statutes of the state must be examined to ascertain the nature of the different kinds of savings banks, if such there are. We have already discussed the questions which you present insofar as they relate to two classes of savings institutions now obsolete, save insofar as they are represented by existing institutions; i. e., it is no longer possible to organize such an institution as either the Springfield Savings Society or the Society for Savings of Cleveland. The Act which repealed the law under which the Savings Society of Springfield was organized provided for the organization of what were known to the statutes as "savings and loan associations" (70 O. L. 40). Many of the provisions of this act, save only that authorizing the formation of this act, save only that authorizing of such associations, are now found in the General Code, being Sections 9798 to 9809, inclusive, thereof. This Act was in full force from the time of its enactment until the passage of the so-called Thomas Banking Act in 1908, 99 O. L. 269. A "savings and loan association," as an institution, might be roughly described as follows: the association was a corporation having a capital stock divided into shares; so far, at least, it was, as Mr. Morse would say, a "stockholders' bank." It was governed by a board of directors, but their acts were subject at all times to the provisions of what is now incorporated in the above cited sections of the General Code. Of all these provisions the essential one is that now found in Section 9803, as follows:

> "Such corporation may receive on deposit for safe-keeping or investment all money offered for that purpose by tradesmen, clerks, mechanics, laborers, minors, or other persons, or by a religious or charitable society, or municipal corporation, or that may be ordered to be deposited by a court in this state having custody of money, and make investment thereof in the manner provided in this chapter. It may credit and pay such rates of interest thereon as are agreed upon, not exceeding the rate allowed by law; also purchase and sell promissory notes, drafts, and bills of exchange, at such rates as are agreed upon, and transact such other business as properly pertains to the business of such associations not forbidden by the constitution and laws of this state."

What is now Section 9805 prescribes in detail the manner of investing the funds of such association. Section 9806, formerly Section 3806, Revised Statutes, regulates the manner of discounting notes and bills of exchange by such association. Section 9808, formerly Section 3808, Revised Statutes, authorizes the declaration of dividends to the stockholders. Section 9809, formerly Section 3809, Revised Statutes, explicitly provides that:

> "When such an association ceases to do business * * * the assets thereof shall be distributed and disbursed by the directors, or other designated persons, as follows:
> "First. In Payment of depositors.
> "Second. In payment of the debts of the corporation.
> "Third. The remainder, proportionately among the shareholders."

The effect of all these sections, insofar as the powers thereby created bear upon the questions submitted you, are described in Meissee et al.vs. Loren 4 N. P. 100 et al. It is therein held that the property and assets of a savings and loan association constitute a trust fund for the benefit of the stockholders and depositors, and that the directors were to be regarded as trustees with respect to their obligation toward the depositors. The decision is somewhat complicated by a discussion of the so-called trust fund doctrine as applicable to corporations generally. No distinction is made in the opinion as between depositor and general creditors with respect to the application of the trust fund doctrine. It is to be pointed out that the power of the corporation is "to receive on deposit for safekeeping and investment" moneys offered to it; to invest such moneys only in certain specified ways and in general to conduct the business of the institution in the manner prescribed in the statute. It is also expressly provided that the depositors shall be paid first from the assets of the corporation upon its dissolution. It is clear, thereof, that under these statutes the depositors of a savings and loan association, organized under the Ohio Law, are not the general creditors of the institution; they are at least preferred creditors.

Unfortunately, all of the authorities cited, for example, in 5 Cyc., 607, as to the relation of a savings bank to its depositors are cases of savings institutions having no capital stock, and in each one of the decisions there set forth the absence of capital stock as given as one of the reasons for holding that the institution is the trustee of its depositors. So also in State vs. National Banks, 75 N. H. 27, the supreme court of New Hampshire, citing Section 618 of Morse on Banks, supra, holds that a national bank is the debtor and not the trustee of the depositors in its savings department. The following sentence from the opinion of the court is of particular interest:

> "The depositors' security, as a matter of law, does not depend upon the character of the investment made by the bank, but upon the general solvency of the institution."

This decision, well reasoned as it is, would seem to be decisive of the question as to national banks, although you do not directly submit any such question. It sheds light upon the status of a so-called "savings and loan association," organized under the laws of Ohio. It is true that very great weight ought to be given to the use of the word "savings"; it would seem that the state would not in its statutes use this term in an inaccurate sense. Nevertheless, it is equally true that the security of the depositor in such an institution depends not upon the investment made by the bank for his benefit alone, but also upon the capital stock which the state requires to be subscribed and issued and invested in certain specified securities. If this be the test then, "savings and loan associations" are improperly so-called, and in reality their depositors are preferred creditors rather than cestuis que trustent.

Unfortunately, there is no authority in this state, other than the unsatisfactory case of Moisse vs. Loren, supra, upon this question. Nor do the statutes of other states seem to be similar to those of Ohio. In Polley vs. Hicks, 58 O. S. 218, the court seems to treat the delivery of a savings bank book as the delivery of the deposits represented by the book. Inferentially, at least, this case is authority for the conclusion that the depositor is the owner of his deposits. However, the exact point is not necessary to the decision of the case, and it will be observed that the delivery of the book is treated, as well as "a delivery of an instrument evidencing a debt" (page 223) as a delivery of the deposit itself.

Upon careful consideration of the question, however, I am of the opinion that the relation of a savings and loan association to its savings depositors is that of debtor and creditor and not trustee or agent and principal.

The relation, then, being that of debtor and creditor, the further question arises as to the application of Section 5326 to the question. It is conceded that the relation of a commercial bank to its ordinary depositors is that of debtor and creditor, and that the effect of Section 5326, above quoted, is arbitrarily to take such deposits out of the class of "'credits' where they naturally belong. This is pointed out in the opinion in Collett vs. Springfield Savings Society, supra. The definition being an arbitrary and unnatural one, it appears to me, although I am unable to cite authority on the proposition, that the section will be strictly construed as in derogation of the common law. So that, when it is provided that "every deposit which the person owning, holding in trust, or having the beneficial interest therein, is entitled to withdraw in money on demand," every word will be given its strict and full meaning.

Now, it is obvious that the depositor in a savings and loan association is not entitled to withdraw his deposit on demand. To be sure, the rule which the bank has made is not ordinarily enforced, and in all probability is not at a given tax listing day regarded by either of the parties as in force. Nevertheless, it cannot be said by the depositor whose duty it is to list such deposits, whatever be their nature, that he is not at any time subject to that rule; the officers of the savings bank may meet him at the paying window, with the statement that the rule will be enforced as to him; there is no obligation on the part of the bank to notify all depositors when the rule goes into effect. This being the case , I am of the opinion that deposits in savings and loan associations are not "moneys" within the meaning of Section 5326.

Naturally enough, not being moneys, such deposits must be treated as "credits" within the meaning of Section 5327, being "deposits in banks" other than such as are held to be moneys. "It is the duty of the individual depositor to include the amount of such deposits in the sum of all legal claims and demands due to him, which, less his bona fide debts, constitutes the "credits" which he must return for taxation.

The foregoing remarks apply as well to so-called "savings and trust associations" of which there are a large number in the state. These institutions exist by virtue of consolidation of "savings and loan associations," as above described, with "safe deposit and trust companies," provided for by other sections of the statute. The powers and obligations of such institutions with respect to savings accounts are exactly the same as those of savings and loan associations.

The so-called Thomas Banking Act, referred to above, and now incorporated in Section 9702 to 9795, inclusive, General Code, provides in Section 9762 et seq. for the organization of savings banks. It is also provided in Section 9704, inter alia, that "the capital stock * * * of a savings bank * * * (shall be) not less than twenty-five thousand dollars." The detailed provisions of Section 9762 et seq., already referred to, are substantially similar to those of Section 9798 et seq., respecting savings and loan associations, and the same conclusions apply.

For all the foregoing reasons, then, I am of the opinion that with certain definite exceptions, deposits in Ohio savings banks, by which the rule of notice of withdrawal is adopted, are to be listed as "credits;" deposits in savings institutions outside of Ohio are to be listed as "credits" if such institutions have a capital stock; but if they are "savings institutions" in the proper sense of the term, they should be listed as "money." Deposits in the savings department of national banks are to be listed as "credits;" deposits in private or unincorporated intsitutions are to be listed either as "credits" or as "moneys," according to the nature of the agreement between the parties; but if such private institution holds itself out as a "savings bank," then, the presumption would be that its savings deposits are "moneys." The only exception to the general rule that deposits in savings banks, incorporated under Ohio laws, are to be listed as "credits," are those of institutions incorporated under the laws providing for the organization of "savings societies' and "societies for savings."

Of course, if any incorporated institution, above referred to and discussed, does away with the rule respecting the giving of notice of withdrawal, so that such savings deposits may be withdrawn on demand, then, in spite of the requirement that the passbook be brought, I am of the opinion that such deposits would, by virtue of Section 5325 be regarded and listed as "moneys."

Very truly yours,

TIMOTHY S. HOGAN,
Attorney General.

TAXES AND TAXATION—WILLIS TAX—WHEN BECOMES A LIEN SO AS TO JUSTIFY PAYMENT OF TAX OUT OF PROCEEDS OF JUDICIAL SALES—PERSONAL LIABILITY OF CORPORATION ATTACHES, WHEN.

Where no time is expressly named a lien for tax becomes a charge upon the property when such tax is entered upon the roll for collection. Since therefore it is the duty of the auditor under Section 5498 General Code to charge the Willis tax for collection on the 15*th of August, the lien for said tax attaches on that date against the property of the corporations.*

The personal liability of the corporation, however, attaches for the ensuing year when the corporation has been in existence during the entire month of May of that year. When, therefore property of such corporation is sold at a judicial sale prior to August 15, the lien of the state is not to be paid out of the proceeds of said sale though the state has a claim against the corporation as such for said tax.

Tax Commission of Ohio, Columbus, Ohio.

GENTLEMEN:—I take the liberty of addressing an opinion to you upon a question which has been squarely raised in the matter of The Euclid Heights Realty Company, a claim certified to this office for collection. The question has arisen between counsel representing this department in the city of Cleveland and counsel for the company, and is as follows:

> "The property of the corporation is involved in foreclosure proceedings, founded upon a trust deed and mortgage of some years' standing; it is the intention of the parties to sell the property at judicial sale prior to to August 15th. Should the decree of the court order that the franchise fees upon the report of the company, filed, or which should have been filed, in May, 1912, shall be paid out of the proceeds of the sale; and if so, should such fees be set aside prior to other taxes or to the satisfaction of the lien of the mortgage?"

I quote the following sections of the General Code of Ohio, under which this question arises:

Section 5692.

> "When * * * real estate is sold at judicial sale, or by administrators, executors, guardians, or trustees, the court shall order the taxes and penalties and the interest thereon against such lands, to be discharged out of the proceeds of such sale or election."

Section 5671.

> "The lien of the state for taxes levied for all purposes, in each year, shall attach to all real property subject to such taxes on the day preceding the second Monday of April, annually * * * "
> "Section 5495. Between the first day of May and the first day of July, 1911, and annually thereafter during the month of May, each corporation, organized under the laws of this state, for profit, shall make a report, in writing, to the commission, in such form as the commission may prescribe. (Section 106, 102 Ohio Laws, p. 224)
>
> "Section 5498. Upon the filing of the report, provided for in the last three preceding sections, the commission, after finding such report to be correct, shall, on the first Monday of July, determine the amount of the subscribed or issued and outstanding capital stock of each such corporation. On the first Monday in August, the commission shall certify the amount so determined by it to the auditor of state, who shall charge for collection, on or before August fifteenth, as herein provided, from such corporation, a fee of three-twentieths of one per cent. upon its subscribed or issued and outstanding capital stock, which fee shall not be less than ten dollars in any case. Such fee shall be payable to the treasurer of state on or before the first day of the following October. (Section 109, 107 O. L. p. 224)
> "Section 5506. The fees, taxes and penalties, required to be paid by this act, shall be the first and best lien on all property of the public utility or corporation, whether such property is employed by the public utility or corporation in the prosecution of its business or is in the hands of an assignee, trustee or receiver for the benefit of the creditors and stockholders thereof. (Section 117, 102 O. L. p. 224)"

The first question which naturally arises is as to the application of Section 5671, supra, to the case at hand. I think it will be apparent, however, upon reflection, that this section has no application because it manifestly applies only to taxes levied upon real property as such.

By virtue of Section 5506 the Willis law tax, so-called, is constituted the first and best lien on all property of the corporation liable therefor; but the date at which this lien shall attach is not specified. If this statute is to be relied upon for an answer to the question at hand, then, the date at which it becomes operative in each year must be ascertained by the rules or rule applicable to such case.

The rule is stated, I think, in Cooley on Taxation, Volume 2, page 872, as follows:

> "Where no time is thus expressly named the lien should attach at the time when by an extension of the tax upon the roll a particular sum has become a charge upon a particular parcel of land."

This rule was applied to Section 5692, supra, in Hoglen vs. Cohan, 30 O. S. 436, wherein it was held that the taxes should not be discharged out of the proceeds of a judicial sale, held between the day preceding the second Monday of April and the first day of October, on the ground that no tax is charged against any lands in any year until the duplicate is placed in the hands of the treasurer. In the course of the opinion in that case, per Ashburn, J., is found the following language:

> "The payment provided for by Section 77 (now Section 5692) is in no way affected by Section 53 (now Section 5671), which provides, 'the lien of the state for taxes levied for all purposes, in each year, shall attach to all real property subject to such taxes, on the day preceding the second Monday of April, annually, etc.' The practical operation of this rule as a lien, is to fix the lien of the state on a day in advance of any and all levied for general purposes. It was scarcely necessary to declare such a lien for the sole purpose of protecting the interests of the state, since under our general system of taxation, the payment of taxes legally assessed against real property could not be successfully resisted. It would follow the land like a covenant of title into the hands of all successive owners. The payment of state taxes, without this express lien, could only be jeopardized when the taxes levied on the land exceeds its value, and the owner is found to be bankrupt."

The practical effect of this decision, then, as to real estate taxes, is that while the lien of the state attaches on the first of April, it is not a charge against the land in the hands of the owner of the property on that date, but its effective force will not be exerted until the tax itself becomes a charge on the land.

Applying the principle as stated by Judge Cooley, and as unanimously supported by the authorities, as, for example, those cited in 37 Cyc., page 1142, it appears, it seems to me, clearly, that the lien of the state for the Willis law tax, so-called, attaches on August 15th. On that date, under Section 5498, supra, the auditor of state is required to charge for collection the fees due from each corporation. By Section 5488, General Code, which I do not quote, the auditor is, immediately, to prepare duplicates and reports and certify them to the treasurer of state for collection. The collection may be made at any time between the 15th of August and the first of October, The analogy between the sections upon which I have just commented and the section construed in Hoglen vs. Cohan, supra, is almost perfect. While holding, as already pointed out, that the tax on land was not to be paid out of the proceeds of the sale, held after the day preceding the second Monday in April and before the first of October, the court refused to hold, in that case, that the date of the making of the final levy, or the last date at which payment of taxes could be made, were either of them material. The court also did not consider the possible variance in the actual date at which the auditor would transmit his duplicate to the treasurer for collection; it was sufficient for the purpose of the court to determine that it was the duty of the auditor to perform this official act on the first day of October.

It seems clear to me, therefore, that the Willis tax is a lien upon the property of the corporation liable for it on the 15th day of August following the month of May in which the report is to be made.

I am also of the opinion, for reasons sufficiently apparent, I think, from what has preceded, that the court ordering the distribution of proceeds of the judicial sale of property of a corporation, held prior to August 15th, in any year and after May 31st of such year, may not lawfully set aside any portion of such proceeds for the payment of the Willis tax for the current year.

I am further of the opinion that the purchaser at such judicial sale takes the property of the corporation free from the lien of the state for the Willis tax. In this particular the case differs from the case of the real estate tax considered in Hoglen vs. Cohan, supra, by virtue of the specific provision of Section 5671, already considered, respecting the real estate tax, and by virtue also of the essential difference between the specific tax on real estate and the franchise tax on a corporation. Without citing any other sections, it may be I think, safely stated, as a general principle, that the specific real estate tax assessed in rem. It is not and never becomes a charge upon the owner of the land in person, although, in this respect, the law of the state have been changed within recent years. The corporation fee, on the other hand, is a strictly personal obligation, and becomes a charge upon the property, as such, only by virtue of Section 5506, supra. And when it is provided as it is in this section, that the fees and penalties shall be the first and best lien on all property of the corporation, the effect of such a provision, in my opinion, is to make the lien attach to all property which the corporation has when the tax becomes chargeable, and not to all property which the corporation may have had at the time the liability for the tax accrued. In speaking of the time when liability of the tax accrued I mean to refer to the provisions of Section 5495, above quoted, as construed in Emmerman vs. Specialty Company, 14 O. F. D. 289, and Bank vs. Aultman, 14 O. F. D. 298. It is held in these cases that the Willis tax is levied upon the privilege of being a corporation for the year following the month in which the corporation is required to report; and that the exercise of the privilege during any part of that year renders the corporation liable for the tax. Without entering into the philosophy of the Willis law, suffice it to state that I am of the opinion that insofar as these decisions hold that a corporation which is in existence during the entire month of May in any year is liable for the Willis fee, upon the report that should be made in that month, they are correct. This liability, however, as I have already stated, is purely personal to the corporation and does not become charged upon its property, as such, until the date when, under the rules already referred to, the lien created by virtue of Section 5506, supra, becomes effective.

From what I have already stated it follows, of course, that the state must seek payment of the Willis tax for the year 1912, from the Euclid Heights Realty Company, as such, on and after October 1, 1912, and may not lay claim to any portion of the proceeds of a judicial sale of the property of this corporation, if held prior to August 15th, nor follow any of the property disposed of at such sale, or otherwise, by The Euclid Heights Realty Company, prior to August 15th, when in the hands of the purchaser, and sequester the same for the satisfaction of the fee.

I have taken the liberty of addressing this opinion to the commission because I apprehend that the question is one which will arise frequently under the amended law, which provides for the certification of the fees, taxes and penalties, due to the state under the so-called Willis and Cole laws at a date subsequent to the month in which the report is required to be made.

Very truly yours,
TIMOTHY S. HOGAN,
Attorney General.

TAXES AND TAXATION—INSURANCE POLICIES—LIFE AND ENDOWMENT POLICIES—"INVESTMENTS"—"CREDITS"—ANNUITIES—CONSTITUTIONAL LAW.

Insurance policies are valuable property rights, and it was intended by the constitution, Art. XII, Sec. 2, that provision should be made for the taxation of the same.

Said constitutional provision is not self executing however, and it is therefore necessary to look for specific legislative provision to determine whether or not insurance policies are taxable.

The right of the policy holder under a paid up life insurance policy, or under certain types of policies when not paid up, if they have a cash surrended value is not "money" as defined in Section 5326 of the General Code. It is not "credits" as defined in Section 5327 of the General Code because it is not a legal claim or demand to which the policy holder is entitled without parting with a thing of value to himself. It is not an "investment in bonds" as defined in Section 5323 of the General Code, nor an "investment in stocks" as defined in Section 5324; nor "personal property" as defined in Section 5325.

If they are to be taxed at all therefore, they are to be taxed as "investments otherwise" as the term is employed in the constitution and the statutes to-wit, Art. XII Sec. 2, and Sections 5376 and 5388 of the General Code. In each instance the intention seems to be to tax the moneys invested and not the investment itself or the act of investing.

The holder of a life insurance policy invests for the benefit of the beneficiary and the cash surrender value which alone may be deemed his proper interest may not be considered an investment. A policy holder's interest in an ordinary life insurance policy, or in a limited term policy, which said interest consists merely of a right to a cash payment upon the surrender thereof, is therefore not taxable at all whether the policy is paid up or not.

In the case of an endowment policy, however, wherein after all premiums are paid up the holder is entitled to a fixed sum of money, or the annual payment of a fixed sum, prior to the time when the assured is himself entitled to such payment the policies are not taxable.

If, however the time for payment has arrived and the same is due but not received by the assured his interest should be taxed as a "credit." The same is true of any insurance payment which is due but not yet received.

Whether or not the assured's interest after election has been made to receive his returns in annual payments, may be taxed as an annuity is a doubtful question.

Tax Commission of Ohio, Columbus, Ohio.

GENTLEMEN:—I beg to acknowledge receipt of your letter of May 2d, requesting my opinion upon the following question:

"Are life insurance policies taxable in this state?

"There are different kinds of life policies issued, some of which may be described as follows:

"The ordinary life policy, which provides for the payment of an annual premium during life, the insurance being payable at death. Such policies may have some cash surrender value.

"Another form provides for the payment of fixed premiums during a limited period of years, the insurance being payable at death. After the policy is paid up it has a cash surrender value, the amount of which is sometimes fixed in the policy.

"Another form provides for the payment of fixed premiums during a definite term of years and payment of the insurance at death or at a certain fixed time prior thereto. These policies also have a cash surrender value."

I have searched in vain for authority upon this question, which would seem to be one which would be likely to arise frequently. It is unquestionably true that life insurance policies represent to the policy holder valuable interests—property rights convertible into money and protected by the law of the state, which, in good conscience, ought to be assessed upon the tax lists, and made to contribute to the public revenues. Furthermore, it was surely the intention of the framers and adopters of the constitution of 1854 that such valuable interests, in common with other property, should contribute equally to the revenues of the state. Article XII, Section, 2, of the constitution provides that:

"Laws shall be passed, taxing by a uniform rule, all moneys, credits, investments in bonds, stocks, joint stock companies, or otherwise; and also all real and personal property according to its true value in money * * *"

It is seemingly obvious that this provision is not self-executing. That is to say, unless laws are passed taxing investments and bonds, for example, such investments cannot be taxed although laws may have been passed the other classes of things enumerated in the constitution. It is thus seen that it is possible for the General Assembly, in carrying out the mandate of the constitution makers, inadvertently to omit some class of property or property rights which the constitution requires to be taxed uniformly with other property. This possibility has been recognized in many adjudicated cases, which it is not necessary to cite and which hold that such inadvertence neither invalidates the legislation which has been enacted nor affords ground for taxing the things thus omitted.

It is also apparent from Article XII, Section 2, of the constitution, that the things subject to the property tax, and hence, to the uniform rule, are enumerated and classified therein; that is to say, in order that a subject of ownership may be taxed by the property tax, it must be one of the things referred to in the section—moneys, credits, investments in bonds, investments in stocks, investments in joint stock companies, investments otherwise than in bonds, stocks, or joint stock companies, or personal or real property. But it does not follow that these words of Section 2 of Article XII have any extra legislative meaning, any more than it does that the whole section is self-executing. It devolves upon the legislature to formulate definitions of these terms, just as it does to pass laws whereby the taxing power of the state shall be made effective.

In the discharge of this necessary duty the legislature has enacted the following statutes:

"Section 5323. The term 'investment in bonds' * * * includes all moneys invested in bonds, certificates of indebtedness, or other evidences of indebtedness of whatever kind * * *

"Section 5324. The term 'investment in stocks' * * * includes all moneys invested in the capital or stock of a bank * * * or an association, corporation, joint stock company, or other company, the capital or stock of which is or may be divided into shares, which are transferable without the consent of the other * * * stockholders * * *

"Section 5325. The term 'personal property' * * * includes first, every tangible thing being the subject of ownership, whether animate or inanimate other than money, and not forming part of a parcel of real property as hereinbefore defined; second, the capital stock, undivided profits, and all other means not forming part of the capital stock of every company, whether incorporated or unincorporated, and every share, portion, or interest in such stocks, profits, or means, by whatsoever name designated * * * third, money loaned on pledge or mortgage of real estate * * *

"Section 5326. The term "credits" as so used, means the excess of the sum of all legal claims and demands, whether for money or other valuable thing * * * due or to become due to the person liable to pay taxes thereon * * * over and above the sum of legal bona fide debts owing by such person. * * *

"Section 5328. All real or personal property in this state, belonging to individuals or corporations, and all moneys, credits, investments in bonds, stocks, or otherwise, of persons residing in this state, shall be subject to taxation, except only such porperty as may be expressly exempted thereform. * * *"

This section, however, is not of itself affectual to tax every subject of ownership. Its provision shows that it is declaratory merely of the intention of the legislature that certain property shall be taxable, as distuinguished from such property as is intended to be properly exempted from taxation.

"Section 5375. A person required to list property, upon receiving a blank for that purpose from the assessor, or, within five days thereafter, shall make out and deliver, annually, to the assessor, a statement, verified by his oath, of all the personal property, moneys, credits, investments in bonds, stocks, joint stock companies, annuities, or otherwise, in his possession, or under his control, on the day preceding the second Monday of April of that year, which he is required to list for taxation, either as owner or holders thereof, or as parent, husband, guardian, trustee, executor, administrator, receiver, accounting officer, partner, agent, factor, or otherwise.

"Section 5346. Such statement shall truly and distinctly set forth: first, the number of horses, and the value thereof; second, the number of meat cattle, and the value thereof; third, number of mules and asses, and the value thereof; fourth, the number of sheep, and the value thereof; fifth, the number of hogs, and the value thereof; sixth, the number of pleasure carriages, of every kind, and the value thereof; seventh, the total value of all articles of personal property, not included in the preceding or succeeding classes; eighth, the number of watches, and the value thereof; ninth, the number of pianos and organs, and the value thereof; tenth, the average value of the goods and merchandise which such person is required to list as a merchant; eleventh, the value of the property which such person is required to list as a banker, broker, or stock-jobber; twelfth, the average value of the materials and manufactured articles which such person is required to list as a manufacturer; thirteenth, moneys on hand or by deposit, subject to order, fourteenth, the amount of credits as hereinbefore defined; fifteenth, the amount of all moneys invested in bonds, stocks, joint stock companies, annuities or otherwise; sixteenth, the monthly average amount or value for the time he held or controlled them, within the preceding year, of all moneys, credits, or other effects, within that time invested in, or converted into bonds or other securities of the United States or of this state, not taxed to the extent he may hold or control such bonds or securities on said day preceding the second Monday of April.

"Section 5388. In listing personal property, it shall be valued at the usual selling price thereof, at the time of listing, and at the place where it may then be. If there is no usual selling price known to the person whose duty it is to fix a value thereon, then at such price as is believed could be obtained therefor, in money, at such time and place. Investments in bonds, stocks, joint stock companies, or otherwise, shall be valued at the true value thereof, in money. Money, whether in possession or on deposit, shall be entered in the statement at the full value thereof, except that depreciated circulating notes shall be entered at their current value. A credit for a sum certain, payable in money, property of any kind, labor or service, shall be valued at its true value in money, except that if it is for a specific article, or for a specified number or quantity of any article or articles of property, or for a certain amount of labor of services of any kind, it shall be valued at the current price of such property, or of such labor or service, at the place where payable. Annuities or moneys receivable at stated periods, shall be valued at the sum which the person listing them believes them to be worth in money at the time of listing."

Manifestly, the right of a policy holder, under a paid-up life insurance policy or under certain types of policy when not paid up, if such policy has a cash surrender value, is not "money" as defined in Section 5326, above quoted; it is not "credits" as defined in Section 5327, supra, because it is not a legal claim and demand to which the policy holder is entitled without parting with nothing of value to himself; it is rather a right to elect between two inconsistent benefits of a policy; nor it is a claim which is "due or to become due" as provided in said section; it is not an "investment in bonds" as defined in Section 5323; nor an "investment in stocks" as defined in Section 5324; nor "personal property" as defined in Section 5325. All of the last three statements are manifestly true.

If, then, the policy holder's interest in a life insurance policy is comprehended within any one of the classes of taxable things enumerated in Article XII, Section 2 of the Constitution, it must be an "investment otherwise," within the meaning of said section. The word "investment," in the sense in which it is used here, is defined as follows, in the Century Dictionary:

"* * * Expenditure for profit or future benefit; the placing or conversion of capital in a way intended to secure income or profit from its employment * * *. (2) That which is invested; money or capital laid out for the purpose of producing profit or benefit. (3) That in which money is laid out or invested."

Cases in which the word "investment" has been used afford no definition other than the three, quoted from the lexicon. It is apparent that in the financial sense there are three shades of meaning in which the word may be used; first, it may describe an act; second, it may refer to the money used; and third, it may refer to the thing purchased or held, with a view to profit. In which sense, then, is the word used in the constitution; or rather, in what sense has the legislature defined the word as used in the constitution?

This question is easily answered as to investments in bonds and stocks. There the thing to be taxed is not the property or evidence of indebtedness or security purchased for investment purposes, but the money so laid out and expended; at least this is clearly inferable from Sections 5323 and 5324, supra. There is, however, no definition of the phrase "investments otherwise" as used both in the constitution and in the statutes. Does it refer to moneys, invested otherwise than in stocks or bonds, or to the thing in which the investment has been made? Certainly, it cannot refer to the act of investing, as an act is not a proper subject of taxation.

It seems to me that the answer to this question is furnished by Section 5376, supra. Item 15 therein is as follows: "The amount of all moneys invested in bonds, stocks, joint stock companies, annuities or otherwise." This provision is interesting for two reasons: In the first place it shows that investments "otherwise" are the same kind of investments as investments in stocks; that is, the thing taxed is the money invested and not the thing in which it is invested. The meaning of "or otherwise," as the phrase is used in the constitution, is pointed out in this legislation. I refer to "annuities," which the Legislature evidently intended to provide specifically for, and not to leave covered by the general term "otherwise."

When we come to Section 5388, certain difficulties are encountered; although the thing taxed is the amount of money invested, yet "investments" are to be valued at the true value thereof in money, while "annuities" or moneys receivable at stated periods "shall be valued at the sum which the person listing them believes them to be worth in money at the time of listing." These rules for valuation are more appropriate to the idea of the investment considered from the standpoint of the thing in which the investment is made. The paradox, however, afforded by comparison of Section 5376 and Section 5388 is not concerned in the question under consideration; suffice it to say, as to Section 5388, that a method of valuing "investments otherwise" than in "stocks, bonds, joint stock companies and annuities" is therein provided for. Seemingly, it was the intention of the General Assembly that all investments should be taxed.

Is, then, the life insurance policy an "investment?" The germ of the idea of investment is that of profit. If one makes an investment he does so with the expectation of preserving the principal sum so expended, and reaping thereby, in addition thereto, a reasonable profit.

Now, the holder of a policy of a life insurance company makes an investment, to the benefit of which he himself is never entitled unless it be in the case of an endowment policy. The real investment is for the benefit of his beneficiary. His right to demand the cash surrender value of his policy is dependent upon his waiver of the benefits to accrue to his beneficiary. He cannot preserve the one and secure the other. If he surrenders the policy and secures the surrender value thereof, he will not receive anything like the amount of money which he has expended in premiums, to say nothing of the interest thereon. True, the cash value of policy is a thing upon which money can be secured as a loan; this fact, however, tends rather to establish the conclusion that the policy holder's right to the cash surrender value is rather a "credit" or "property" than an "investment," and certainly does not go to show that it is to be regarded as the latter.

Certainly, then, so far as the cash surrender value of a policy is concerned, it cannot be said to be an "investment." No person ever buys a life insurance policy with the purpose, at the time, of surrendering it for its cash value at some future date; if he did he would be making a mistake and not an investment, knowing, as he does, that he will expend a much larger amount than he will receive by virtue of the transaction.

I am, therefore, of the opinion that the fact that a life insurance policy has a cash surrender value does not render the same, to the extent of the policy holder's interest therein, an "investment." In this connection the following remarks, which are obiter dicta found in the opinion of Burket, C. J., in Chisholm vs. Shields, 67 O. S. 374-377, 378:

> "It is claimed by counsel for defendant in error, that this legacy (which gave to testator's widow an annuity chargeable against the body of his estate) is an investment in an annuity, and being of the same general class as credits, investments in bonds and stocks, that it is included within the word 'otherwise' that all property must be taxed, and that as this legacy is property, it must also be taxed. But this section is only the declaratory section, and subsequent sections, especially 2736, 2737 and 2739 carry this declaratory section into execution, and perscribe the manner in which taxation is to be imposed upon property therein specified; and property not so specified in any section, is not taxed; as for instance, investments in life insurance policies are not taxed, for the reason that no statute authorizes their taxation, although thousands, if not millions of dollars are invested in them, many being fully paid up, and others having a surrender value. Such policies are clearly property, and very valuable property at that, but not taxed, because no statute specifically requires their taxation. The same is true of many other valuable investments. So that the word "otherwise" in Section 2731 includes only such property or investments as are specificially mentioned and required to be taxed in the subsequent sections, and property or investments not so mentioned cannot be taxed. And in so specifically mentioning and requiring to be taxed, the property must be such as is ordinarily included in the description given, and not such as can be brought within the description by a process of reasoning only, or by a strained construction. The general assembly must be presumed to be able to fairly describe such property as it desires to tax, without resorting to a strained construction, or a course of fine reasoning."

If the Supreme Court had had before it, for decision in this case, the points concerning which these remarks are made, they would, of course, be conclusive of the question which you ask. Even as it is they are entitled to great weight. In the face of the reasons above stated, and the conclusion at which I have independently arrived, together with this decision, I am compelled to take the view that the policy holder's interest in an ordinary life insurance policy, or in a limited term policy, which said interest consists merely of a right to a cash payment upon the surrended thereof, is not taxable at all, whether the policy is paid up or not.

The above remarks, however, do not necessarily apply to an endowment policy. I am not familiar with the forms of contracts in use, by life insurance companies, but if I have a correct understanding of the matter, the form of policy known as the endowment policy affords to the policy holder himself, after the expiration of a certain number of years from the date of the policy a fixed lump sum of money, or the annual payment of such a fixed sum of money. In order, however, to be entitled to these benefits, the policy holder must have, previously to the time fixed in the policy for payments thereunder, paid all the premiums due from him; that is to say, such policies must be paid up before the policy holder himself is entitled to receive any fixed sum of money, without waiving some alternative right. I am of the opinion that during the time in which premiums are being paid on a policy of this type it does not, for the reasons already stated, constitute an "investment;" that is to say, it is not taxable, at least, until it is paid up.

After such an endowment policy becomes paid up, however, the situation is entirely different. Under the terms of the policy, the policy holder is entitled to receive either a certain lump sum or a specified sum, annually, for a limited number of years. This right of the policy holder is his without surrendering any alternative right. If it is stipulated in the policy that some time shall elapse between the payment of the last premium and the payment of the lump sum or annuity, during which time the benefits due under the policy will, in the event of the death of the assured, be paid to his beneficiaries, then, during such time, the right of the assured to the payments provided for in the policy is not yet fully vested; that is to say, as against the contingent rights of the beneficiary he cannot dispose of the payments by assignment or will; nor, in the event of his death interstate, would his personal representatives be entitled thereto. I am, therefore, of the opinion that prior at least to the time when the right to the payments under an endowment policy becomes absolutely vested in the assured, his interest in the policy is not taxable, though the same be fully paid up.

If, however, the time has arrived when, under the policy, the assured is entitled to have either a lump sum to him or a fixed sum paid annually to him, and he has made the necessary election, but has not received payment thereunder, his interest, if the sum due be a lump sum, is clearly a "credit," as the same is defined by our statute. Cooper vs. Board of Review, 207 Ill. 472.

If the policy holder has elected to receive his benefits in yearly payments, and one of these payments is due and unpaid, such installment would of course be listed as a "credit." Whether or not his interest in the policy, reduced by such amount, would then be taxable either as an "annuity," within the meaning of our statutes, or as a "credit," is, in view of the language used by Burket, J., in Chisholm vs. Shields, supra, a very doubtful question. I should be inclined to hold that such interest is not taxable. Very truly yours,

TIMOTHY S. HOGAN,
Attorney General.

TRUSTEES RESIDENT IN OHIO—CONTROL OF DEPOSITS OUTSIDE OF OHIO—LISTING FOR TAXATION OF MONEY, CREDITS AND INVESTMENTS—JOINT TRUSTEES—PERSONAL PROPERTY.

Under 5326, 5328, 5370 and 5371, General Code, all deposits which the person who resides in Ohio is entitled to withdraw in money, upon demand should be listed for taxation at the place where such person resides, regardless of the place where such deposits are held. The same is true of credits and investments which are controlled by a person in Ohio though held outside of Ohio.

Where such deposits, credits or investments are subject to joint ownership or management by a party who resides in Ohio and by another who resides outside of Ohio, one-half thereof should be listed in Ohio at the place of residence of the party residing therein.

Tax Commission of Ohio, Columbus, Ohio.

GENTLEMEN:—I beg to acknowledge receipt of your letter of August 19th, requesting my opinion upon the following questions:

"An estate consisting of real property was transferred to two trustees, one residing in the city of Lorain in this state and the other in Washington, D. C. The trustees converted the property into money and the money is held by the trustees residing in Washington, D. C. Part of the beneficiaries of the trust reside in the city of Lorain and part of them outside of the state of Ohio."

The statutes of this state, insofar as they relate to the question which you ask, are as follows:

"Section 5326. The term "money" or "moneys" * * * includes * * * every deposit which the person * * * holding in trust, or having a beneficial interest therein, is entitled to withdraw in money on demand."

"Section 5328. All * * * moneys * * * of persons residing in this state, shall be subject to taxation, except only such property as may be expressly exempted therefrom * * *."

"Section 5370. Each person of full age and sound mind shall list * * * all moneys in his possession, all moneys invested, loaned or otherwise controlled by him * * * on account of any other person or persons * * * and all moneys deposited subject to his check or draft; * * *. The property of * * * a person for whose benefit property is held in trust (shall be listed) by the trustees * * *.

"Section 5371. A person required to list property, on behalf of others shall list it in the township, city or village in which he would be required to list it if such property were his own. He shall list it separately from his own, specifying in each case the name of the person * * * to whom it belongs. * * * All * * *moneys * * * except as otherwise specially provided shall be listed in the township, city, or village in which the person to be charged with taxes thereon resides at the time of the listing thereof, if such person resides within the county where the property is listed, and if not, then in the township, city, or village where the property is when listed."

The following points have occurred to me in connection with the foregoing statutes:

1. "Moneys" need not be actually located in Ohio in the physical sense in order to be taxable in Ohio. The state of Ohio asserts, its right, well established in law, to affix to all intangible property the taxable situs of the owner's residence. In contemplation, of law, therefore, all "moneys" are taxable in Ohio which belong to "persons residing in this state." (Section 5328 G. C.)

2. The ordinary, or rather the theoretical, status of deposits in banks being that of "credits," and the above quoted provision, constituting them "moneys," being arbitrary and artificial it follows that those only are "moneys of persons residing in this state "is entitled to withdraw in money on demand," if consisting of bank deposits.

3. It is the evident intention of the statutes that persons holding moneys in trust for the benefit of others shall list such moneys at their own places of residence, respectively. Insurance Company vs. Hynicka, 5 N. P. n. s. 255-259; Section 5370, supra; Section 5371, supra; Brown vs. Noble, 42 O. S. 405; State ex rel vs. Matthews, 100 O. S. 431.

In Brown vs. Noble, supra, the syllabus is as follows:

"Where administration of an estate is committed to two or more persons residing in different counties, 'the moneys, credits and investments' belonging to the estate must be listed for taxation under Section 2735 of the Revised Statutes, in the county where the administrator, having actual possession and control of the property to be listed, resides at the time of listing."

Section 2735, Revised Statutes, referred to in this syllabus, is at present Section 5371, General Code, supra.

It was held further, however, in this case, that as between two administrators, both residents of the state, but residents of different counties therein, the in tangible assets of an estate should be listed at the residence of the managing administrator. The court, in the opinion, clearly recognizes the fact that in contemplation of law, the legal title of all property and interests of the estate resided jointly in both administrators, but insisted that what is now Section 5371 fixed upon the domicile of the managing administrator as the situs of the entire assets of the estate. There is nothing in this case from which a rule can be derived, by virtue of which the jurisdiction of the state over property within its power of taxation is in any way abridged or limited.

I have already discussed, and shall hereafter discuss, your question literally; that is to say, I shall assume that the "money" of which you speak in your letter is actually money on deposit in banks, withdrawable on demand. I shall also hereafter discuss the question upon the theory that the "money" of which you speak may prove to be "credits" or "investments."

Upon this first assumption, then, I am of the opinion that although the money may be held on deposit, at the residence of the trustee who resides outside of the state, yet, if it is subject to the joint control of both trustees, so that neither one, alone, is entitled to withdraw the deposits on demand, but the concurrent action of both is required, then, one-half of the money is taxable in Ohio upon a return by the resident trustee. The money in question represents the conversion of real property that was formerly taxable in Ohio. Presumably, at the instant of conversion the taxable situs of the fund was in the state of Ohio. Some weight, although not great weight, perhaps, is to be attached to this fact in determining the present situs of the property; that is to say, the property, once having been subject to the jurisdiction of the Ohio taxing authorities, the legal effect of the acts which might be relied upon to change the situs of the property, in whole or in part, must be made to appear. Mackay vs. San Francisco, 128 Calif. 678.

Our statutes are silent as to the taxation of trust estates, the legal title to which is in trustees, some of whom are not residents of the state. In the face of the considerations which I have mentioned, I do not think that this silence should be given effect so as to restrict the power of the state in such matters, but rather to give it its full scope. If the money in question is on deposit outside of Ohio, and yet the Ohio trustee is the joint manager of the fund, and his authority is necessary to the withdrawal of any considerable portion of the deposit, then, in my opinion, he should list his half of the estate at his residence; even if the money were held outside of the state as actual cash, but could not be expended in any considerable amount except by authority of both the trustees, the same result would follow; while, if, on the other hand, the possession of the non-resident trustee is so full and complete, in fact, as to make his control of the money absolute, so that the resident trustee has no real part in the control and management of the fund, none of the money is taxable in Ohio.

If the fund is so deposited or invested as not to be payable on demand to the trustees or either of them, a different question would, of course, arise. If the fund had been converted into "credits" the test would be practically the same as above defined with respect to "moneys;" that is to say, if the control and management of the fund is joint it is the legal interest of the resident trustee that is taxable here, regardless of the place where the evidences of indebtedness may be physically held.

In case the fund has been converted into "personal property," within the meaning of the section defining that term, no part of the estate is taxable in Ohio. (Section 5328, supra)

If the fund is so invested as to be returnable as "investments" the question is perhaps doubtful; but I am of the opinion that the test above laid down, with respect to moneys and credits, would apply.

Upon all the propositions above laid down I beg leave to cite the following authorities:

Somers vs. Boyd, 43 O. S. 648, in which it is held that the mere custody of a trust estate does not determine its situs, the test being the actual power of control and manage the same.

Mackay vs. San Francisco, supra, in which the facts are very much like those which you state in your question, and in which half of the estate was held to be taxable in California, although the securities in which it was invested were deposited outside of the state, in the joint names of the two trustees. It is interesting to note here that the beneficiaries, under the trust in this case, resided outside of the state; that the estate originated in California; and that one of the trustees resided there.

People ex rel vs. Feitner, 168 N. Y. 360, in which it was held that property consisting of moneys and credits, in the hands of three trustees, one of whom was a non-resident of the state, was taxable in New York as to the two-thirds interest of the resident trustees. This case is of imporance because it was decided under a statute providing that,

> "Every person shall be taxed in the taxing district where he resides * * * for all personal property * * * under his control as * * * trustee. Where taxable personal property is in the possession or under the control of two or more * * * trustees * * * each shall be taxed for an equal portion of such property so held by them * * * if a person holds taxable property as * * * trustee * * * he shall be assessed therefor as such, with the addition to his name of his representative character * * *.

These provisions are very much like those of Sections 5370 and 5371 of our own General Code, passed on in Brown vs. Noble, supra, and in State ex rel vs. Matthews, 10 O. S. 431. In this latter case the Supreme Court held, under the statutes above cited, that where three executors resided in different taxing districts, and the control of the executors over the estate was joint in every sense, the assessment should be divided among the taxing districts. The New York case, just cited, was decided under a statute which laid down this rule expressly. It might just as well have been decided under the Ohio law.

In People ex rel vs. Coleman, 119 N. Y., 137, the court applied a rather narrow construction to the then existing statute of that state, holding virtually that because the statute did not expressly provide for the case of persons holding possession of property for the benefit of others, jointly, with other persons non-resident of the state, there was, therefore, no method of taxing the interest of such persons. For reasons already stated, I do not feel that this decision should be followed, but that the better reasoning of the other cases, which I have cited, should prevail.

For the foregoing reasons, and upon the above cited authorities, I am of the opinion, as already stated, that if the estate of which you speak has been converted into that which is either "moneys," "credits" or "investments," within the meaning of our tax statutes, half of the estate is taxable in Lorain county, Ohio, unless the control of the non-resident trustee over the fund is absolute and complete, so that the resident trustee is virtually a figurehead. If, however, the conversion is into "personal property," none of such property, if held outside of Ohio, is taxable here under any circumstances.

Very truly yours,

TIMOTHY S. HOGAN,
Attorney General.

TAXES AND TAXATION—INTERSTATE COMMERCE—CONNECTING GAS COMPANY—TRANSPORTATION OF GAS BY PIPE LINE—REPORTS TO PUBLIC UTILITIES COMMISSION—EXCISE AND FRANCHISE TAX—"GROSS RECEIPTS."

Inasmuch as the Connecting Gas Company, corporation formed for the purpose of transporting and selling natural gas, and maintaining a pipe line for the purpose of receiving gas at the state line from a trunk line, which is itself fed from the producing fields in West Virginia, is engaged in the business of conducting such gas along the line of its transportation, from its delivery in one state to the point of its destination in another state, the receipts derived form such business must be regarder as "Interstate Commerce Receipts" within the meaning of the excise law of Ohio.

Such company, under 5410 General Code, is "engaged in the business of transporting natural gas through pipes or tubing" and therefore subject to assessment and valuation of its property for simple taxation under 5423 General Code.

Said company is subject to Section 5470 and 5471, requiring the filing, with the commission before September first of each year, a statement setting forth the information prescribed by 5471 General Code, also Section 5475 General Code. This latter section requires a statement of the total gross receipts of said company from all sources, whether from intra or interstate business, or from services done as other than a public utility, as set out in Section 5417 General Code; and also a statement of the entire gross receipts of said company, except receipts derived from interstate commerce or business done for the federal government.

Under 5475 and 5481 General Code, the commission shall certify all intrastate receipts and all receipts for all services except interstate commerce business, to the auditor of state for taxation at the rate of one and two-tenths per cent. as specified in Section 5483 General Code, the amount to be not less than $10.00 in any case.

Notwithstanding the fact that the amount of such tax in the case of the Connecting Gas Company would evidently be trivial, being engaged almost entirely in interstate commerce, yet by virtue of the fact that it is required to pay this excise tax, it is exempted from paying franchise fees as a domestic or foreign corporation by virtue of 5518 General Code.

The filing of a report of interstate receipts under such circumstances is subject to suspicion and the commission is advised to exercise caution in such cases.

September 5, 1912.

Tax Commission of Ohio, Columbus, Ohio.

GENTLEMEN:—I beg to acknowledge receipt of your letter of August 21st, enclosing a copy of the purpose clause of the articles of incorporation of The Connecting Gas Company, an Ohio Corporation, together with a statement of the nature and character of the business in which the company is engaged.

The corporation, it appears, is formed for the purpose of producing, transporting and selling natural gas, with authority to maintain a pipe line and appurtenances from a point on the Ohio River in Washington county, this state to a point at or near Sugar Grove, in Fairfield county.

The statement of the nature and character of business in which the company is engaged is to the effect that it produces no gas in Ohio and sells none there, but that it is engaged solely, or substantially so, in the transportation, through its pipe line, of gas received by it from a certain West Virginia corporation for delivery to certain Ohio distributing companies of Sugar Grove.

The corporation reports, in its statement under the excise tax law, some intrastate receipts, consisting of interest, the source of which is not definitely explained.

Upon these facts so disclosed you request my opinion as to the following questions:

> "1. Are the receipts of this company from transporting gas in the manner stated 'interstate receipts?'
> "2. If such receipts are 'interstate,' should the company be required to report and pay an excise tax upon its intrastate receipts, or as a domestic corporation for profit and pay an annual fee upon the amount of its subscribed or issued and outstanding capital stock?"

It will be necessary for me to assume certain facts which are, however, I think obvious, in order to answer your first question. It appearing that the pipe line of the Connecting Gas Company begins, so to speak, exactly upon the state line, it necessarily follows, from the nature of the commodity to be transported, that it must there connect with another similar pipe line extending into the state of West Virginia. I think it perfectly safe to assume that this pipe line, in turn, receives gas from the producing field through radiating or gathering lines. That is to say, the line which connects at the state line with the pipe line of the Connecting Gas Company is itself a "trunk line;" the gas from the producing wells does not pass directly into the pipe line of the Connecting Gas Company and only arrives there by means of the agencies above described.

Under this statement of facts, partially assumed, it seems clearly to follow that when natural gas is pumped into the pipe line which connects at the state boundary with the pipe line of The Connecting Gas Company and had no place of escapement excepting into the said pipe line, its journey from the producing field to its ultimate point of destination has commenced.

In Coe vs Errol, 116 U. S., 517 the supreme court of the United States in describing the movement of a commodity which consists of interstate commerce uses the following language, per Bradley, J.:

> "this movement does not begin until the articles have been shipped or started for transportation from the one state to the other. The carrying of them in carts or other vehicles or even floating them to the depot where the journey is to commence is no part of that journey. This is all preliminary work, performed for the purpose of putting the property in a state of preparation and readiness for transportation. Until actually launched on its way to another state, or committed to a common carrier for transportation to such state, its destination is not fixed and certain. It may be sold or otherwise disposed of within the state, and never put in course of transportation out of the state. Carrying it from the farm or the forrest to the depot is only an interior movement of the property, entirely within the state, for the purpose, it is true, but only for the purpose, of putting it into a course of exportation; it is no part of the exportation itself. Until shipped or started on its final journey out of the state its exportation is a matter altogether in flori, and not at all a fixed and certain thing."

Applying this reasoning to the case at hand and having regard to the nature of the commodity, the transportation of which is involved here, it appears that in the very nature of things the continuous movement of the gas could not begin at the Ohio River terminus of The Connecting Gas Company pipe line, but at some point in the state of West Virginia. From this it follows that The Connecting Gas Company's service with respect to the transportation of the gas in question is one of two or more like services necessary in order to complete a continuous movement. The service itself takes place entirely within the state of Ohio, but the movement originates in West Virginia and terminates in Ohio.

In Steamer Daniel Vall vs. United States, 557, the following self-explanatory language appears, per Mr. Justice Field:

"But it is contended that the steamer, Daniel Ball, was only engaged in the internal commerce of the state of Michigan, and was not, therefore, required to be inspected or licensed, even if it be conceded that Grand River is a navigable water of the United States; and this brings us to the consideration of the second question presented.

"There is, undoubtedly, an internal commerce which is subject to the control of the states. The power delegated to Congress is limited to commerce 'among the several states,' with foreign nations, and with the Indian tribes. This limitation necessarily excludes from federal control all commerce not thus designated and, of course, that commerce which is carried on entirely within the limits of a state, and does not extend to or affect other states. Gibbons vs. Ogden, 9 Wheat., 194. In this case it is admitted that the steamer was engaged in shipping and transporting, down Grand river, goods destined and marked for other states than Michigan, and in receiving and transporting up the river goods brought within the state from without its limits; but inasmuch as her agency in the transportation was entirely within the limits of the state, and she did not run in connection with, or in continuation of, any line of vessels or railway leading to other states, it is contended that she was engaged entirely in domestic commerce. But this conclusion does not follow. So far as she was employed in transporting goods destined for other states, or goods brought from without the limits of Michigan and destined to places within that state, she was engaged in commerce between the states, and however limited that commerce may have been, she was, so far as it went, subject to the legislation of Congress. She was employed as an instrument of that commerce; for whenever a commodity has began to move as an article of trade from one state to another, commerce in that commodity between states has commenced. The fact that several different and independent agencies are employed in transporting the commodity, some acting entirely in one state, and some acting through two or more states, does in no respect affect the character of the transaction. To the extent in which each agency acts in that transportation, it is subject to the regulation of Congress."

The doctrine of this case has been followed without deviation by the Supreme Court of the United States. (Sec. N. & W. R. R. vs. Pennsylvania, 136 U. S., 114; W. ST. L. & P. R. R. vs. Illinois, 116 U S., 557).

The facts in the case under consideration made a clearer case for the characterization of the transportation in question as interstate commerce than those in Steamer Daniel Ball, supra, for here, in the very nature of things, the gas pipe line must connect directly with a like transportation line extending from the interior of West Virginia to the Ohio state boundary.

I am, therefore, of the opinion that the transportation of gas from the state boundary line to a point in Ohio, being a part of a single movement of the commodity for a point in West Virginia to a point in Ohio, constitutes interstate commerce and that the receipts from such business are "receipts from interstate business," within the meaning of the excise law of Ohio.

The foregoing conclusion answers your first question. Your second question is more difficult in view of the peculiar language of the excise tax law. The corporation in question is clearly "engaged in the business of transporting natural gas * * * through pipes or tubing, within the meaning of Section 40 of that act, designated as Section 5416, General Code. It is, therefore, notwithstanding the interstate character of its business, subject to assessment and valuation of its property for simple taxation under Section 47 of that act, designated as Section 5423, General Code, which seems to be a point not conceded by the company but concerning which you do not request my opinion.

Being, therefore, by virtue of these facts, "a natural gas company" and a "public utility," within the meaning of the Tax Commission act, it is clearly subject to the requirements of Section 81 and 85 thereof, designated as Sections 5470 and 5474, General Code, respectively. These sections stipulate that each public utility, as defined in the act, shall make a statement of gross receipts to the Tax Commission annually. That is to say, it must make some report, at least setting forth the facts mentioned in Section 82 of the act, designated as Section 5471, General Code. Indeed, it seems clear that some report must also be made under Section 85 of the act, which requires the statement to contain "the total gross receipts * * from business done within this state," whether interstate or intrastate in character, though the same section also requires a separate statement of receipts from intrastate business alone. The exact form of this stipulation is as follows:

> "Such statement shall also contain the entire gross receipts of the company, including all sums earned or charged, whether actually received or not, from whatever sources derived, for business done by it within this state for the year next preceding the first of May * * * but this shall not apply to receipts from interstate business * * *."

This language is enlarged in its scope by the provisions of Section 41 of the above cited act, designated as Section 5417, General Code, as follows:

> "The term 'gross receipts' shall be held to mean and include the entire receipts for business done by any person or persons, firm or firms, co-partnerships or voluntary association joint stock association, company or corporation, wherever organized or incorporated, from the operation of any public utility, or incident thereto or in connection therewith. The gross receipts for business done by an incorporated company, engaged in the operation of a public utility, shall be held to mean and include the entire receipts for business done by such company under the > exercise of its corporate powers, whether from the operation of the public utility itself or from any other business done whatsoever."

Reading these two sections together it appears that although the public utility business of a corporation in Ohio may be entirely interstate, yet if the corporation has receipts other than those derived from the public utility business as such and which are derived from business within this state under its corporate charter, such receipts must be reported to the Tax Commission. It follows, then, that under Section 86 of the act, Section 5475 of the General Code, the Tax Commission must determine the gross receipts of a company so engaged in business as being those receipts in Ohio other than those from the operation of the public utility as such. However trivial in amount such recipts may be, the amount so ascertained must, under Section 92 of the act, Section 5481, General Code, be certified to the Auditor of State, who must, under Section 94 of the act, Section 5483, General Code, compute an excise tax of one and two-tenths per cent. thereof, not less than $10.00 in any case, thereon and charge the same for collection.

In view of the foregoing considerations it seems clear that the corporation in question comes under the saving clause incorporated in Section 129 of the act, Section 5518, General Code, which exempts public utility corporations paying excise taxes from the payment of franchise fees as domestic or foreign corporations. The language is as follows:

> "An incorporated company, whether foreign or domestic, owning or operating a public utility in this state, and as such required by law to file reports with the tax commission and to pay an excise tax upon its gross receipts or gross earnings as provided in this act * * * shall not be subject to the provisions of Sections one hundred and six to one hundred and fifteen, inclusive, of this act."

The corporation in question being one which is operating a public utility in this state, and is, as such required by law to pay an excise tax upon its gross receipts, need make no report and pay no fees as a domestic corporation for profit.

It seems that the construction which I have been forced to apply to the law involved in your inquiry results in the receipt of a ridiculously small amount of taxes from the company in question. Substantial justice would seem to require that this company pay franchise taxes. The legislature, however, has so enlarged the meaning of the words "gross receipts," as used by it throughout the act, as to make it impossible for me to escape the conclusion that so long as a corporation engaged exclusively in an interstate public utility business has any miscellaneous or trivial recepits which are not interstate, it may escape privilege taxation on everything save those receipts.

I am, therefore, of the opinion that The Connecting Gas Company, under the facts submitted, is required to report and pay an excise tax upon its intrastate receipts, if any, and is not required to report annually as a domestic corporation for profit or to pay franchise fees as such. It will be observed that I do not hold that if a corporation doing business in the manner in which The Connecting Gas Company does business in Ohio, actually has no intrastate receipts it will escape taxation altogether. On the contrary, under Section 5518, General Code, supra, exemption from Willis law taxation is extended only to such corporations as are required to pay some excise taxes. It will be observed, also, that I do not hold that the corporation in question is not a "public utility." As already stated its property must be assessed by the commission for simple taxation upon the unit basis as a going concern, despite the fact that it is engaged in interstate commerce.

In conclusion I may be permitted to suggest that cases of this sort seem to me to afford some grounds for suspicion that the so-called "intrastate receipts" are not actual and bona fide. The commission is not, of course, bound by the report of the company, and if upon the investigation which it is authorized to make it is found that a company reporting a small amount of "intra state receipts" in fact has no such receipts, and has so reported solely for the purpose of avoiding Willis Law taxation, the commission may lawfully and with propriety insist that such a company must file report and pay fees under the Willis Law sections of the act.

Very truly yours,

TIMOTHY S. HOGAN,
Attorney General.

TAXES AND TAXATION—DEPOSITS IN SAVINGS BANKS WITHDRAWABLE ON DEMAND AT TIME OF LISTING "MONEYS"—"CREDITS."

When a savings bank has a rule as follows:"Depositors may be required to give sixty days notice before withdrawing their deposits, but as a general rule they will be permitted to withdraw at pleasure;" held: that evidence of long usage and custom established that such rule is intended as a reservation of a right to pass a rule suspending payment for sixty days, rather than as a rule itself, and that as a matter of fact such deposits are and always have been "withdrawable on demand," will justify the listing of such deposits by a person owning the same, or holding them in trust, or having a beneficial interest in them as moneys under Section 5320 General Code.

August 14, 1912.

Tax Commission of Ohio, Columbus, Ohio.

GENTLEMEN:—I beg to acknowledge receipt of your letter of August 9th, enclosing a communication addressed to the commission by the board of review of the city of Cleveland. The letter of the board of review sets forth a statement of facts upon which a reconsideration of my opinion of July 22, upon the taxation of savings deposits, is requested in so far as the said opinion relates to deposits in savings banks in corporated under the general statutes of this state. In the former opinion it was assumed that the statements denominated the "Rules and Regulations" as set forth in the printed matter of several of these institutions, transmitted to me by you are all of the same dignity and effect, and are all what they purport to be, namely, rules adopted by the directors of several banks governing their officers on the one hand, and the depositors, on the other, as to the manner and conditions of receiving and making savings deposits.

I am free to state that I was fully cognizant at the time of writing the former opinion that in practice savings bank depositors, generally, are permitted to withdraw their deposits at pleasure without giving any notice. I had been unable, however, to satisfy myself, from my own general knowledge of the subject, upon the question as to whether or not a savings bank depositor was entitled as of right to withdraw his deposits without giving notice, being unable to assume from the face of the so-called "Rules" on the subject that the officers of the bank might not at anytime as to a given depositor choose to stand on the bank's legal rights, whatever they might be. In other words, I could not feel certain that the requirement of the sixty-days' notice, was not to be regarded as fully in effect and as qualifying in some way the right of the depositor to withdraw his deposits.

In the face of these facts, and in the face, too, of the strict construction to which I felt the section of the General Code which defines the term "money" is subject, I deemed it wise to give to the so-called "Rules" full force and effect as such.

The statement of facts now submitted by the board of review of Cleveland is to the effect that in Cuyahoga county, at least, a rule stating that:

> "Depositors may be required to give sixty days' notice before withdrawing their deposits; but as a general rule they will be permitted to withdraw them at their pleasure."

is not treated in practice by and savings bank itself as a self-executing regulation of the corporation, but that it is regarded—and the practice is universal among all the like institutions in the county—rather as the reservation of the right to make a rule than as a rule itself. That is to say, the actual understanding of the parties—the bank on the one hand, and the depositors on the other—sanctioned by long usage under printed statements like the above, is that the bank has no rule requiring notice, but that it reserves the right at any time to make such a rule and to enforce it as to any deposits which may be outstanding at that time.

The letter of the board of review also states that none of the savings banks in the city of Cleveland, or in the county outside of the city, so far as the writer is advised, has ever taken action through its board of directors in any way modifying this usage or understanding.

Of course, the foregoing statement of facts is not the one considered in my former opinion. I took the so-called "Rule" at its face value; the custom of the business seems to be such as to modify what had appeared to me to be the primary meaning of the printed statement. I acknowledge that the printed statement is fairly susceptible of either of the two meanings involved. That being the case, it is sufficiently ambiguous to permit of proof as to its real meaning by evidence of any custom, usage or understanding which may show, or tend to show, the real intention of the parties concerned.

Assuming the facts to be as the board of review states them, that is to say, assuming that the mere inclusion of a so-called "Rule," like the one above quoted, in the printed "Rules and Regulations" of a savings bank does not establish the conclusion that the directors of the bank have actually adopted a rule understood by them as requiring sixty days' notice, and authorizing the officers of the bank to relax the rule simply as a matter of convenience to the depositors, the rule itself still being in existence as a matter of legal rights, but that on the other hand the understanding and custom is to treat such printed statement as notice of the reservation of a right to act in the future, the conclusion which I would reach would be opposite to that stated in my former opinion. That is to say, if there is actually no rule authorizing the requirement of thirty or sixty days' notice as a condition of withdrawal of savings deposits therein until the board of directors of the bank has exercised the right reserved to it, and has passed such a rule, savings deposits therein would be "deposits which the person owning * * * is entitled to withdrawal in money on demand" within the meaning of Section 5326 of the General Code.

In other words, the question as it ultimately presents itself is as to the real mutual understanding between the depositor, on the one hand, and the savings bank, on the other, as to their respective rights in the premises on the day preceding the second Monday in April. When such an understanding is shown to exist and it is to the effect that the deposits are on that day actually withdrawable in money on demand and will be so payable until such future time as the board of directors of the bank may see fit to put into force a general rule applicable to all depositors requiring notices of withdrawal, then such deposits should be listed as "money" of the depositor, not in spite of the printed "Rule," but because the ambiguity of the rule permits such understanding to be shown in the interpretation thereof. Evidence of such long continued usage and evidence of the fact, as stated by the writer of the letter from the board of review, that no savings bank has ever attempted to treat its "Rule" as operative further action of the board of directors would be such evidence as might lawfully be received by the taxing officers, such as the county auditor or the board of review in support of an assessment of a savings deposit as "money" instead of as a "credit."

I am, therefore, of the opinion that under facts like those above stated, showing as they do a practical construction of the "Rule" of a savings bank by its own managers, somewhat different from what might be considered to be the primary meaning of its language, but nevertheless not so inconsistent therewith as to be inadmissible as evidence to contradict the written language, deposits made thereunder in a savings bank must be listed as "moneys" and not as "credits."

While the facts stated by the board of review are represented as being those which existed in Cuyahoga county, only, the above conclusion would, of course, apply in any other locality in which the custom of savings banks, and the interpretation placed by the banks themeslves, as well as the depositors, upon rules of this sort, are shown to be similar to that described in the letter of the board of review. I suppose the custom prevails throughout the state.

In matters of taxation the law looks to substance and not to form, to real facts and not to any shells that may surround them. Where one has, in fact, at the time of listing a deposit in the hands of a society for savings or banks having no capital stock, or a deposit which the person owning, holding in trust of having the beneficial interest therein, is entitled by practice to withdraw in money on demand, such deposits it taxable as moneys; and to be exempt from paying tax as money under the head of not being payable on demand, it must be true that the time of listing such depositor could not, in fact, receive his money upon demand.

Very truly yours,

TIMOTHY S. HOGAN,
Attorney General.

TAXES AND TAXATION—NON-RESIDENT CORPORATION HAVING AGENCY IN OHIO—DEDUCTION OF DEBTS CREATED WITH RELATION TO BUSINESS DONE AND NOT MERELY GOODS HELD IN OHIO.

On the authority, Hubbard vs. Brush 610 O. S. 252, a foreign corporation having an agency in this state and a stock of goods and machinery located at such agency, is not entitled under the tax laws to deduct from the sum of all its legal claims arising from the sale of such goods and machinery in this state, the legal bona fide debts owing by such corporation regardless of whether such debts are related to the goods sold and the business done in this state of Ohio.

Such corporation may deduct from its credits, under the control and management of the Ohio agency, arising from the sale of goods and machinery in this state, its legal bona fide debts which are related to the business conducted in Ohio, but not those debts which are related merely to the goods owned by the corporation in Ohio.

Debts therefore, created by the corporation at its domicile in the general purchase of goods, part of which are consigned to the Ohio agency for sale, are not deductible.

Debts so created, however, solely for and on account of the goods to be sold in Ohio may be deducted.

COLUMBUS, OHIO, August 22, 1912

Tax Commission of Ohio, Columbus, Ohio.

GENTLEMEN:—I beg to acknowledge receipt of your letter of August 18th requesting my opinion upon the following questions which you advise have been submitted to the commission by Hon. Daniel J. Ryan, general counsel for The Ohio Manufacturers' Association:

> "1. Is a foreign corporation having an agency in this state and a stock of goods and machinery located at such agency, entitled under the tax laws to deduct from the sum of all its legal claims and demands arising from the sale of such goods and machinery in this state, the legal bona fide debts by such corporation regardless of whether such debts are related to the goods sold and the business done in the state of Ohio?
> "2. May such corporation deduct from its credits arising from the sale of goods and machinery in this state, its legal bona fide debts owing on account of the purchase by such corporation of the goods and machinery from the sale of which in this state the credits arise?"

You enclose a copy of Mr. Ryan's letter to the commission in which he expresses the view that under Hubbard vs. Brush, 61 O. S. 252, seems to him that a foreign corporation, under the circumstances detailed in your question, would be entitled to deduct all indebtedness which it owed regardless of whether such indebtedness related to the goods sold and business done in the state of Ohio or not; and that certainly upon a more limited construction the corporation would at least be entitled to deduct that indebtedness which was directly connected with the goods and business out of which taxable credits arose.

The taxation of credits of foreign corporations in Ohio and the meaning and effort of the decision of Hubbard vs. Brush, supra, were somewhat elaborately discussed by me in my opinion of recent date to you in the matter of the Ritter Lumber Company. It will, therefore, not be necessary for me to repeat much that was said in that opinion as to the manner in which credits of a foreign corproation acquire a taxable situs in Ohio nor as to the general interpretation of the decision in the case cited. It will be sufficient to state, as a conclusion arising from the authorities discussed in the former opinion that the credits of a foreign corporation that is, not the technical credits defined in Section 5327 General Code, but the legal claims and demand owing to the corporations, become assessable in Ohio when they grow out of a business conducted and managed by representatives of the corporation in Ohio and are there held and controlled by such representatives.

The matter of what debts may lawfully be deducted by such a corporation from the claims thus arising in order to ascertain the amount of the tax on "credits" as defined by Section 5327 was not considered in that opinion.

In the case of Hubbard vs. Brush, supra, the third branch of the syllabus is as follows:

> "Such corporation, in listing for taxation is 'credits' liable to taxation in this state, may, under the provisions of Section 2730, Revised Statutes, deduct from its claims and demands that arise out of the business it transacts in this state, such of its bona fide debts as arises from the same sources."

This proposition of law is, of course, to be given precedence over any portion of the opinion on the case which may seem inconsistent with it. Mr. Ryan in his letter quotes from pages 264 and 265 of the opinion from which the inference may be drawn that the court was of the opinion that the corporation whose case it had before it was entitled to deduct all of its debts from the credits which it would be required to list for taxation. It is not necessary, however, to resort to the rule which obtains in this state, that is to the effect that the syllabus governs the opinion, in dealing with the seeming inconsistencies between this portion of the opinion and limited language of the syllabus above quoted. The court had already found that as to the Sandusky Portland Cement Company, the foreign corporation involved, in the case of Hubbard vs. Brush, all of its business was conducted in Ohio and all of its credits—that is all of its accounts receivable and notes were situated in this state, so that the effect of the opinion in that case is merely to hold that a foreign corporation, all of whose credits are taxable in Ohio, may deduct all of its debts in making up the sum thereof.

In framing the third branch of the syllabus thereof, quoted above, the court was very careful to state the proposition of law upon which the decision was founded with entire accuracy. It seems to me that it is perfectly clear from this syllabus that the law of this state is that a foreign corporation, subject to taxation upon any of its credits in Ohio, may deduct from its claims and demands so subject to taxation such of its bona fide debts, and such only, as arise from "the business it transacts in this state."

We are thus furnished with a rule which is complete in itself, but the application thereof to the facts submitted by you is not perfectly clear. That is to say, it is clear that the answer to your first question must be in the negative.

Your second question must be answered by applying the above stated principle, but the principle itself does not furnish an immediate answer thereto. The exact question of law now presented may be stated as follows:

Does indebtedness created by a foreign mercantile corporation in the purchasing of goods and machinery which it sells at a profit through an agency located in Ohio become attributable to the business done by the agency in Ohio so as to be subject to deduction from the claims and demands due to, managed and controlled by such agency in Ohio? I have described the foreign corporation as a mercantile corporation because it appears from Mr. Ryan's letter to be such in the particular instance of which he inquires.

In the first place it is to be observed that the debt in question is not created by the agency as are the claims and demands from which it is proposed to deduct it. In the second place the debt is created in the course of business usually managed and conducted, I take it, by the home or principal office of the company. That is to say, I assume that the Ohio agency is without authority to create indebtedness in the purchase of merchandise but that it merely draws upon the home office or warehouse for such stock as may be needed. The fact that the goods sent to the home office are not yet paid for is a fact over which the Ohio agency has no control, if this assumption be correct. In the light of these facts, partly apparent on the face of Mr. Ryan's letter and partly assumed as probable in connection with the facts which he states, the question becomes somewhat difficult to answer.

Under tax laws like those of New York, for example, your second question would have to be answered in the affirmative. That state imposes a tax upon non-residents, not upon their tangible property, but upon the sums invested in the state. Under this statute it has been held that such non-residents are entitled to deductions for debts, not only as against New York credits, but also as against the value of any tangible property they may possess in the state. It is further held that indebtedness incurred by a non-resident in the purchase of assets located in New York, is, under this rule, deductible from the value of the assets. People ex rel vs. Barker, 147 N. Y. 31. See also, People ex rel vs. Barker, 145, N. Y. 239; People ex rel vs Barker 35 App. Div. 486; People ex rel vs. C. Dannell, 46 Misc. 521.

The rule in all these cases is perhaps well illustrated by the following excerpt from the opinion in the first cases above cited:

> "Is the fact that the company has in its possession as ostensible owner $200,000 in value of wheat conclusive evidence that the company has invested that sum in its business in this state, when in truth it has paid a sum amounting to but half its value and has promised to pay the balance at some future time? It seems to us there can be but one answer to this question. The sum invested is the sum paid and not the sum which is promised to be paid on a future occasion."

If the Ohio law permitted, as does that of New York, the deduction of debts from tangible personal property owned by a non-resident and located in Ohio then, of course, it could be said that the debts mentioned in your letter did bear a direct relation to the goods and machinery mentioned therein and should be deducted from the value thereof. Under the Ohio rule, however, the debts must bear relation, not to the property owned in Ohio, but to business conducted in Ohio, and it is clear that under Hubbard vs. Brush, supra, the debts must have been created in the ordinary course of the business conducted in this state in order to be subject to deduction from the claims and demands likewise created. If the debt is created by the central management of the corporation in the course of its regular business, then the same fact that the debts is on account of goods, some of which are sent into Ohio, does not, in my judgment, constitute the debt when created in the course of the business transacted in Ohio. That is to say, if the central or general management of the corporation in the coarse of its business buys with the intention of re-selling a large amount of goods, then the situs of the debt for the purpose of taxation would clearly be that of the corporation itself. If, before the indebtedness created in this manner is discharged, some of the goods not yet paid for are sent to the agency in Ohio for re-sale, I do not believe that upon any reasoning it could be held that a portion of the debt becomes separated from the principal debt and travels with the goods to Ohio, becoming there referable to the business conducted by the agency. The debt still remains that of the corporation itself as distinguished from that of its agency; or to put it more clearly, it is one incurred in the transaction of the general business of the corporation and not one incurred in the course of its business in Ohio. It would be otherwise, of course, in the indebtedness, whether created by the agency or by the home itself, were directly referable to the business of the agency. That is to say, if goods are purchased by the corporation especially for sale in Ohio, the whole transaction being directly referable to the business conducted in Ohio, than, in my judgement, such debt by whomever created may be deducted from claims and demands growing out of Ohio business. This would be clearly true if the Ohio agency had authority to purchase goods or to use the credits of the company for this purpose; but in my judgement it would also be true if the general management of the company, in order to supply the needs of the Ohio agency, purchased goods solely on account of those needs and pledged its own credit for a part of the purchase price thereof.

The whole question is one upon which there is a surprising lack of authority aside from the New York cases which I have cited, which, in reality, are not in point at all. The rules which I have tried to lay down, however, are, in my judgement, correlative to those suggested by me in my opinion in the matter of the Ritter Lumber Company for determining the situs for taxation purposes of claims and demands owing to a foreign corporation by virtue of business conducted in Ohio. That is to say, the test as to the situs of such claims and demands for taxation purposes be the place where the business in which they are created, is managed and conducted, it seems at least consistent and reasonable to hold that such debts and those only are deductible from such claims and demands as are incurred by or directly on account of those representatives of the company in Ohio whose management and control would constitute the claims and demands of the company taxable here.

For all the foregoing reasons I am of the opinion that the mere fact that a foreign corporation having an agency in this state and a stock of goods and machinery located at such agency, owes money on account of such goods and machinery, does not entitle such corporation to deduct from its claims and demands arising from the business conducted at its Ohio agency all of such indebtedness. The indebtedness which may be deducted from such credits must be related, not to the goods owned by the corporation in Ohio, but to the business which it conducts therein. If the purchase of the goods for the corporation is directly referable to the Ohio business alone, then, in my opinion, a deduction on account of indebtedness so created may be made from Ohio credits, otherwise the only indebtedness which may be deducted from the claims and demands created by the Ohio agency are the debts created by that agency itself.

Yours very truly,

TIMOTHY S. HOGAN,
Attorney General.

TAXES AND TAXATION—CORPORATION—RETURN UNDER 5404 AND 5385, GENERAL CODE—MERCHANTS AND MANUFACTURERS STOCK—MANUFACTURED STOCK REMOVED TO STORFHOUSE IN OTHER COUNTY TO BE THEREIN SEPARATELY LISTED AS MANUFACTURERS STOCK.

Section 5404 and 5405, General Code, providing for the return to the county auditor, by corporations, of all personal and real property, are not exclusive provisions in the sense that they exclude such portions of chapter three of the title in the General Code, relating to taxation, as may be applicable to corporations.

A corporation, obliged to return all its personal property under 5404, General Code, which is engaged in the manufacturing business, must return, upon an average basis, so much of its property as is engaged in process of manufacture, in the manner specified in 5385 and 5386, General Code.

As to the articles manufactured by a corporation in this state and sent to a warehouse in another county to be stored, decisions in other states support the proposition that manufactured products so separated from the manufactory, should be separately listed for taxation in the county whence removed.

The one decision in Ohio, however, Bridge Company vs. Yost, presents seeming contrary authority to the effect that all manufacturing stock should be returned at the principle place of business. Inasmuch as this decision, however, overlooked the requirement of Section 5371, General Code, requiring manufactured stock to be listed in the township, city or village where situated, it seems advisable to distinguish the case by limiting it to the peculiar circumstances of the Bridge Company which required its articles to be manufactured at various places. The rule is adhered to therefore, that the stock stored in the warehouse should be separately listed at the place where stored.

Under Section 5381, General Code, inasmuch as such stock has "not been purchased" and has not "been consigned from a place outside of the state," the same cannot be listed as "merchants" stock.

Under 5385, General Code, therefore, the manufactured products so stored in the warehouse in another county, should be listed in such county on the average basis as a separate stock of manufactured products, and the same should not be returned with the list of products on hand at the place of their manufacture, from the time they have left such place for storage in the separate county.

August 25, 1912.

The Tax Commission of Ohio, Columbus, Ohio.

GENTLEMEN:—I beg to acknowledge receipt of your letter of August 16th, submitting for my opinion the following questions:

"1. Does chapter 4, beginning with Section 5404,, G. C., include all the provisions for the taxation of corporations designated in Section 5405, or are corporations entitled to all of the privileges and subject to all of the requirements enumerated in chapter 3?

"2. In view of the provisions of Section 5404, G. C., are corporations subject also to Section 5385, G. C., contained in chapter 3?

"3. In answer to question 75 in QUESTIONS RELATING TO TAXATION, answered by the Tax Commission March 19 and 20, 1912, it is indicated that goods of a manufacturer shipped on consignment to another state "cease to be on hand" within the meaning of Section 5385. Inasmuch as goods shipped to another county are taxed in such county under the provisions of 5405, should goods so shipped and taxed in another county be considered as not on hand at the date of return in the county of the residence of a corporation?

"4. If a corporation is engaged in county 'A,' which is its place of residence, makes return in such county in accordance with Section 5385 and is thus taxed upon the average of all articles purchased, etc., for the purpose of being used in manufacturing and of all the articles which were at any time by it manufactured, and such corporation has in county 'B' a warehouse in which is stored a portion of its manufactured product of the year preceding the return day, if such contents of warehause is taxed under 5404 in county 'B,' is there such double taxation as would be improper?

"5. In view of the provisions of Sections 5405 and 5404, whereby all of the property of a corporation is taxed in which ever county of the state it is found, should Section 5385 be operative upon corporations?"

Question 75 referred to by you in your third question is answered by a quotation from an opinion which I gave to the Tax Commission on September 13, 1911. In that opinion I considered and answered your questions No. 1, 2 and 5, holding that a corporation which is engaged in the business of manufacturing must return that portion of its property which consists of materials and manufactured products in the capacity of a "manufacturer," and upon the monthly average basis as provided by Sections 5385 and 5386, General Code.

By reference to that opinion, then, you will observe that your first question may be answered by stating that Sections 5404, etc., General Code, are not exclusive provisions for the taxation of corporations in the sense that they exclude such portions of Chapter 3 of the title relating to taxation as may appropriately be applied to corporations. It will also be observed that your second and fifth questions should be answered in the affirmative.

In the former opinion I considered and passed upon the question as to whether or not the manufactured products of an Ohio corporation, sent into another state for the purpose of sale, cease to be "on hand" within the meaning of Section 5358 and, hence, should not be considered as a part of a manufacturer's stock of finished products from the date upon which they are sent into another state.

In discussing this question I considered and commented upon the cases of Bridge Co. vs. Yost, 22 O. C. C., 376; American Steel & Wire Co., vs. Speed, 110 Tenn., 524, affirmed 192 U. S., 500; and Selz vs. Cagwin, 104 Ill., 647. The first of these cases I distinguished as not in point on the question then under consideration; the other two cases I cited upon the point that manufactured products, separated from the stock on hand at the manufactory and transmitted to a separate warehouse for the purpose of sale, were there to be treated as merchandise stock. In the Tennessee case it was held that a sales agency of a foreign manufacturing corporation located in Tennessee was there taxable upon its stock of goods as a "merchant;" in the Illinois case the facts are identically the same as those stated by you in your third question; that is to say, the manufacturing operation was carried on in one county of the state and the warehouse was located in another county. Both stocks were held to be assessable where located, the one as a manufacturer's stock and the other as that of a merchant.

The principal point upon which these two cases were cited, however, was that establishing the separation from the manufacturer's stock of finished products at the manufactory of the goods treated in the manner under consideration in the former opinion. To that extent these cases are also applicable to the question which you submit. That is to say, although the statutes under which they are decided are not quite similar to those of Ohio they are authority for the conclusion that when a stock of goods is maintained by a manufacturing corporation at a place other than the manufactory and in a manner separate and apart from the stock of manufactured products kept on hand at the manufactory, such stock becomes separately taxable.

In seeming opposition to these cases in so far as they apply to the question which you now ask, although not with respect to the question passed upon in the former opinion, is the case of Bridge Co. vs. Yost, supra. In that case it was held, in short, that a manufacturing company must return, as if located at its principal place of business and as if a part of the stock there maintained, all of the material located in the state and used by it there in the process of manufacturing, although such material might never go into the manufactory at all. The facts in that case are as follows: The bridge company manufactured at its factory some only of the materials used by it in constructing its finished product, the completed bridge; other materials used by it were purchased from other manufacturers and transported to the places where the bridges were in process of erection and there worked into the finished bridge. The court held that all of the material in Ohio, whereever situated, must be deemed a part of the manufacturer's stock of materials, having its taxable situs in Locus county, and must be there valued on the average basis. As pointed out in the former opinion the decision in this case simply ignores the provisions of Section 5376, General Code, which are in part as follows:

> "Merchants' and manufacturers' stock and personal property upon farms shall be listed in the township, city or village in which it is situated."

In the former opinion I was forced to speculate upon the degree of weight and effect which should be given to this decision in view of this apparent oversight, but the matter was not important for the reason that the case could be distinguished from the facts then under consideration. In connection with your present question, however, I am brought face to face with this problem. There being an entire lack of authority upon the proposition in Ohio and in the face of cases like those above cited from other jurisdictions, I feel compelled to take the view that while Bridge Co. vs. Yost may be regarded as establishing an artificial situs for all of the material of a manufacturing company doing business in the peculiar manner in which the Toledo Bridge Company conducted its manufacturing operations, that case can not be regarded as controlling facts like those which you now submit. There are essential differences which must be taken into account. In the first place, the bridge company did not have any one place where all of its manufacturing operations were carried on to completion; under the facts which you submit the manufacturing operations of the corporation are completed in a single taxing district, or at least in one place. In the second place, the Toledo Bridge Company did not maintain any selling warehouse but its manufactured articles were put in place by it in the course of manufacture as permanent additions to the real estate; in the case which you submit the corporation has a warehouse in a county other than that in which its manufactory is located and in other counties a stock of goods which is regularly kept up. In the third place, the controversy in the bridge company case related to the materials used in manufacturing; the question submitted by you relates to the taxable situs of the manufactured product. The difference between the two kinds of goods is possibly of some importance; the location of materials is dependent upon the practical necessities of the manufacturing operation; manufactured products, on the other hand, if susceptible of being kept in stock may, by the voluntary act of the manufacturer, be separated from his general stock and taken elsewhere for the purpose of sale.

Having regard to all these substantial differences between the case of Bridge Company vs. Yost and that presented by you, and having regard also to the principles enunciated in the former opinion and embodied in the two other cases above cited, I am of the opinion that the act of a corporation in separating from its stock at the manufactory, articles of its finished product and sending them to a warehouse maintained by it in another county, causes the goods so separated to cease to be "on hand" with the meaning of Section 5385, General Code, as part of the stock which a corporation must list in the county where the manufactory is located.

I come now to the consideration of the question as to the manner of listing the stock at the warehouse in the other county. Three views might be taken of this question:

> "1. That it must be listed as any other tangible personal property, by setting forth the value of the goods on hand on the day preceding the second Monday of April;
> "2. That it must be listed as merchant's stock;
> "3. That it must be listed as a separate manufacturer's stock."

Having regard to the purpose of the statutes relating to the listing of merchants and manufacturers stock, and the manifest intention of the Legislature in enacting them, as discussed by me in the former opinion, I reach the conclusion that a stock of goods maintained in a warehouse in the manner suggested in your question should not be listed as ordinary tangible property, but should be listed upon the average basis either as merchants or manufacturers stock of finished product. In spite of the decision in the Illinois case above cited I am of the opinion that the warehouse stock should not be listed as merchants stock. Section 5381 defines the term "merchant" as follows:

> "A person who owns or has in his possession or subject to his control personal property within this state, with authority to sell it, which has been purchased either in or out of this state, with a view to being sold at an advanced price or profit, or which has been consigned to him from a place out of this state for the purpose of being sold at a place within this state, is a merchant."

Analyzing this provision, it appears that the agent of a manufacturing company located outside of the state who has in his control or possession a stock of its manufactured product in Ohio, shall list such stock as a merchant but that when both the manufactory and the selling agency are located in Ohio this rule does not prevail because the agent does not have possession of property "which has been purchased * * * with a view to being sold at an advanced price or profit." In this respect the statute of this state differs from those of some other states upon the same subject.

Section 5385, General Code, in so far as it applies to the listing of manufacturers finished products and to the definition of the term "manufacturer," is as follows:

> "A person who purchases, received or holds personal property * * * for the purpose of adding to the value thereof by manufacturing * * * or by the combination of different materials with a view of making a gain or profit by so doing, as (is) a manufacturer, and, when he is required to make and deliver to the assessor a statement of the amount of his other personal property subject to taxation, he shall include therein the average value estimated, as hereafter provided * * * of all articles which were at any time by him manufactured or changed in any way, either by combination or adding thereto which, from time to time, he has had on hand during the year next previous to the first day of April annually * * *."

Taken in connection with the provision of Section 5381 which I have already quoted, this statute furnishes, it seems to me, the proper guide for the listing and valuation of the warehouse stock described in your letter. To be sure, there is a slight inconsistency arising out of the failure of the statute specifically to provide for separating a stock of finished products into more than one part. That it was the intention of the Legislature that this should be done, however, seems to me to be reasonably clear from Section 5371, supra, and I can not reach the conclusion that the General Assembly intended to give such an artificial situs to a manufacturer's stock of finished products as to preclude him from keeping two separate stocks of said products in two different places. For the reasons already suggested the case of Bridge Co. vs. Yost, supra, can not be relied upon in support of any such construction of the law. The construction suggested is consistent with reason and justice and, in my opinion, ought to prevail.

This construction is also consistent with the provisions of Sections 5404 and 5405, General Code, pertaining to corporate returns, and permits corporations to return their property consisting of manufactured products in the counties wherein it is actually situated in accordance therewith.

I am, therefore, of the opinion that when a manufacturing company whose factory is located in one county maintains in a warehouse, or otherwise, situate in another county, a stock of its manufactured products, such stock should be listed in such other county as a separate stock of manufactured products and valued on the average basis. No "double taxation" results from adherence to this principle. The moment an article leaves the factory it must be charged off from the stock of finished products there maintained and credited to the stock of manufactured articles maintained at the warehouse in the other county. No single article need be included in the monthly averages of both stocks for any one month.

Very truly yours,

TIMOTHY S. HOGAN,

Attorney General.

TAXES AND TAXATION—CORPORATION NOT FOR PROFIT—WESTERN METHODISTS BOOK CONCERN NOT LIABLE FOR FRANCHISE TAX—NOT AN INSTITUTION OF PURELY PUBLIC CHARITY BECAUSE BENEFITS RESTRICTED TO ONE DENOMINATION —PROPERTY NOT EXEMPT FROM TAXATION.

The Western Methodist Book Concern, being a company engaged in the publishing business, under the management of a board of trustees known as a "Book Committee," to be appointed from time to time by the general conference of the Methodist Episcopal church in the United States, whose profits are to be applied according to its articles of incorporation to the relief of ministers of that denomination, their wives, widows and children, which has no capital stock, and the ministers of which and the beneficiaries are not members, is a corporation on "not for profits" and, therefore, not liable for annual reports to the Tax Commission or for franchise taxes.

Since the benefits of said corporation are limited strictly to ministers of the Methodist Episcopal church and their dependents, in view of the rule of strictly construction to be applied to exemption statutes, it may not be deemed "an institution of purely public charity" and therefore none of its property, either real or personal, or if its moneys or credits, is exempted from general property taxation.

COLUMBUS, OHIO, October 10, 1912.

To the Tax Commission of Ohio, Columbus, Ohio.

GENTLEMEN:—I beg to acknowledge receipt of your letter of September 26th, enclosing a copy of the amended Articles of Incorporation of the "Western Methodist Book Concern," a corporation under the law of Ohio, and certain correspondence relating thereto. It appears that this company is engaged in the publishing business under the management of a board of trustees known as the "Book Committee" to be appointed from time to time by the general conference of the Methodist Episcopal church in the United States of America. The profits of the business so conducted are, by the Articles of Incorporation, to be applied, as provided by the constitution of the said church, to the relief of ministers of that denomination, their wives, widows and children. The company has no capital stock, and the ministers and other beneficiaries, as such, are not members of the corporation.

From this statement of facts you request my opinion upon the following questions:

"1. Is the Methodist Book Concern a domestic corporation for profit, and as such required to file annual reports and pay fees as provided in Section 5495 to 5498 G. C., inclusive?

"2. Is the property of said company, or any part of it, exempt from taxation under laws of Ohio?"

I enclose herewith copies of opinions rendered Honorable Charles H. Graves, Seceretary of State, in which I have attempted to define what constitutes a corporation "for profit," or, conversely, one "not for profit," within the meaning of our statutes.

Applying the reasoning of these opinions to the facts above stated, I am of the opinion that the Western Methodist Book Concern is a corporation not for profit within the meaning of the general incorporation laws of this state.

I am further of the opinion that the term "corporations organized under the laws of this state, for profits," as referred to in Section 106 of the Tax Commission Act of 1911, (102 O. L., 224) designated as Section 5495 of the General Code, is identical with the corresponding phrase as used in the general incorporation act.

OPINION:—No franchise tax being assessed against domestic corporations "not for profit," I am of the opinion that the Western Methodist Book Concern is not liable for annual reports to the Tax Commission for franchise taxes thereon.

* * * * * *

Coming now to your second question, I beg to preface my discussion of it by the general statement that all tangible real and personal property, moneys, credits and investments within the taxing jurisdiction of the state are presumed to be subject to taxation unless the contrary clearly appears from the exemption statutes passed under favor of Article XII, Section 2, of the Constitution of 1851. Said constitutional provision is, in part, as follows:

> "Burying grounds, public school houses, houses used exclusively for public worship, institutions of purely public charity, public property used exclusively for any public purpose, and personal property to an amount not exceeding in value two hundred dollars for each individual, may, by general laws, be exempted from taxation."

It is obvious that if the Western Methodist Book Concern is to be regarded as within the purview of any of these exemptions, it must be classed as "an institution of purely public charity." The following section of the General Code is the only one which has been passed in pursuance of this constitution authority as affecting "institutions of purely public charity," Section 5353, which provides:

> "* * * property belonging to institutions of purely public charity only, shall be exempted from taxation."

Formerly this section was a part of the sixth paragraph of Section 2732. Revised Statutes, which provides as follows:

> "All buildings belonging to institutions of purely public charity, and all buildings belonging to and used exclusively for armory purposes by lawfully authorized military organizations * * *, and all moneys and credits appropriated solely to sustain and belonging exclusively to such institutions, and military organizations" (shall be exempted from taxation.)

The verbal change which has been made was made only in the process of codification, and some question arises as to whether there has been a corresponding change in meaning. Under the former section it was held, in Little vs. Seminary, 72 O. S., 472, that a college which makes a charge for tuition, but the principle object of which was for the diffusion of knowledge, and which was not conducted for pecuniary profit, was an "institution of purely public charity," and that moneys and credits appropriated solely to sustain such institutions by way of endowment funds were exempted from taxation under favor thereof. Whether a court would reach the same conclusion under the present language of the statute is, in a way, a question.

In an opinion to the prosecuting attorney of Lorain county rendered sometime ago I held that in view of the legislative history involved, the word "property," as used in the present Section 5353, must be given a broad meaning so as to include intangible possessions like moneys and credits if appropriated solely to sustain the institutions, as well as tangible real and personal property. I am informed that the Nisi Prius court in Cuyahoga county has held to the contrary and reached the conclusion that a change of meaning has resulted from the verbal change made in the statute. Not having seen the opinion of the court, I am in doubt as to what point was actually involved in the decision, and in view of my former opinion I am disposed to adhere thereto, at least until the question is fully adjudicated.

Assuming, however, that moneys and credits appropriated solely to sustain an institution of purely public charity are still exempt from taxation, two questions still arise from the facts submitted by you, the answer to either of which is conclusive of the matter, viz:

1. Is the Western Methodist Book Concern "an institution of purely public charity?"

2. Are the moneys and credits of this institution, consisting of its moneys in bank and its book accounts, "appropriated solely to sustain" the institution within the meaning of this phrase?

Perhaps still another question arises here which ought to be considered in this connection. That is to say, the phrase now being, "property belonging to institutions of public charity only" and a reason existing for which the word "property" should be given a meaning broader than the technical one which refers only to the tangible real and personal property, should the statutes, and particularly Section 5353 of the General Code, be now construed so as to render exempt all real and personal property, moneys, credits and investments of institutions of purely public charity?

I think it is clear that this question, like the one last above suggested, does not even arise unless an affirmative answer is returned to the first question just stated. I think that it is obvious that the Western Methodist Book Concern is, on the facts submitted, a charitable institution. No member of the incorporation receives a pecuniary profit from its business activities, and whatever profits are derived from the management of the concern are distributed in a charitable way. But is this charity "purely public," or, using the language of the statute instead of that of the constitution, (there being in the very nature of the case no difference in meaning between the two,) is that "charity" of the Western Methodist Book Concern " public only?"

Questions of this sort have been before the Supreme Court of this state in the following cases:

Gerke vs. Purcell_____25 O. S., 229,
Little vs. Seminary, supra,
Library Association vs. Pelton 36 O. S., 253,
Humphreys vs. Little Sisters of the Poor, 29 O. S., 201, Morning Star Lodge vs. Hayslip, 23 O. S., 144, and Davis vs. Camp Meeting Association, 57 O. S., 257.

The doctrine of these cases may be summarized as follows:

In Gerke vs. Purcell it was held:

"A college consisting of a private corporation and having a private foundation fund is devoted to a public use, yet the use is none the less public because tuition is charged * * *" (page 241) and that

"Schools established by private donations, and which are carried on for the benefit of the public, and not with a view to profit are 'institu> tions of purely public charity' within the meaning of the provisions of the constitution, which authorizes such institutions should be exempted from taxation." (5th syllabus.)

In Little vs, Seminary, supra, this case was followed and approved, and it was held that a college privately managed and owned, and open to all on the same conditions is an institution of purely public charity. The question of charging tuition does not seem to enter into this case.

In Library Association vs. Pelton, supra, a public library " open to all without distinction" was, apparently, held to be an institution of purely public charity, although the exact ground in the decision is very difficult to comprehend.

In Humphreys vs. Little Sisters of the Poor, supra, it was held that:

> "A corporation organized for the sole and only object of offering an asylum for destitute men and women and the incurable sick and blind, irrespective of nationality or creed, is an institution of purely public charity." (first syllabus.)

In Morning Star Lodge vs. Hayslip, it was held that:

> "A charitable or benevolent association which extends relief to its own sick and needy members and to the widows and orphans of its deceased members is not 'an institution of purely public charity.'"

In Davis vs. Camp Meeting Association, it was held that:

> "An association organized and conducted for the purpose of a purely public charity, as a camp meeting, under the supervision and control of some church."

is exempted from taxation on its real estate, although it charges for the privileges contributing to the comfort and convenience of those who may attend the meetings. In reaching this conclusion the court took refuge behind a finding of the lower court to the effect that the association in question was an institution of purely public charity. It appears, however, from the pleadings set forth in the report of the case that all of the income of the association was used to keep up the camp meeting.

None of these cases directly touch the question here. It is significant in all of them, excepting Morning Star Lodge vs. Hayslip, that the institutions concerned afford benefits to all persons upon equal terms regardless of religious affiliations or other points of difference. This point might be relied upon as a basis of an opinion to the effect that because the Western Methodist Book Concern devotes the proceeds of its business to the relief of ministers of a certain denomination and their dependents only, it is not an institution of purely public charity. The case of Morning Star Lodge vs. Hayslip is not direct authority for any such conclusion. There the benefits of the Lodge were to be accorded to the members thereof and their dependents only; here the charitable activities of the Western Methodist Book Concern are to be undertaken for the benefit of those who are not members of the corporation itself.

It may be parenthetically remarked here that in the case of the Cleveland Library Association vs. Pelton it was held that the word "purely" modifies the adjective "public" and not the noun "charity." No such direct statement is found in the opinion, but it is held that an institution which leases some of its property for profit and for purposes disassociated from the charity, which constitutes the principal pursuit of the institution, does not thereby lose its exemption in toto, but merely pro rata. Therefore, the mere fact that the Western Methodist Book Concern is in a sense a business institution will not destroy its character as a charitable one.

It is proper here to remark also that in the correspondence attached to your letter there is a statement that the corporation in question has heretofore been paying taxes upon its real and personal property and not on its moneys and credits. This would be perhaps a proper practice under the language of the sixth paragraph of Section 6732 of the Revised Statutes, as above quoted, where the qualifying clause "not leased or otherwise used with a view to profit" is found in connection with the exemption of tangible property of the institution of purely public charity. In order, however, to justify such practice completely it would still be necessary to demonstrate that the Book Concern is "an institution of purely public charity."

The lack of authorities directly in point in this jurisdiction, then, leads to the examination of the cases decided under similar constitutions and statutory provisions of other states. Such provisions, insofar as they relate to the exemption of property used for charitable purposes, fall into two classes, viz:

1. Constitutional provisions and the statutes exempting "property used for charitable purposes" or " belonging to charitable institutions."

2. Constitutional provisions and statutes exempting "institutions of purely public charity." In this class the Ohio Constitution and statutes enacted thereunder, belong.

Under provisions like those of the first class, it has been directly held in the case of Book Agents of the Methodist Episcopal church, South, vs. Hinton, 92 Tenn., 188 that a "book concern" managed exactly like the Western Methodist Book Concern is exempt from taxation upon its property. If the Ohio Constitution and its statutes were like those of the state of Tennessee, this case would be directly in point and would support, possibly, under the present statutory provisions the complete exemption from taxation of all of the property of the Western Methodist Book Concern.

Indeed, under such constitutional provisions and statutes it is held that an institution which administers charity among its own members exclusively is entitled to exemption from taxation.

(Fitterer vs. Crawford, 157 Mo., 51)
(Philadelphia vs. Masonic Home, 160 Pa., 572)
(Hibernian Benevolent Society vs. Kelly, 28 Oreg., 173)
(Petersburg vs. Petersburg Benev. Mechanic Assoc., 78 Va., 431)

It is evident, however, that there is a wide distinction between the phraseology employed in the first class of constitutional provisions and statutes, and the language employed in the second class thereof as above exemplified, and, undoubtedly, "charitable" institutions may nevertheless not be entitled to exemption under the language of the second class of provisions because of not being "public."

(Philadelphia vs. Masonic Home, supra.)
(Morning Star Lodge vs. Hayslip, supra.)
(Bangor vs. Rising Virtue Lodge, 73 Me., 428.)
(Nupert vs. Masonic Temple Assoc., 108 Ky., 333.)

And the deliberate use of the qualifying adverb "purely" makes it all the more apparent that exemption is not to be extended to charitable institutions the activities of which cannot be said in the proper sense to be "public."

Now, it is apparent that some latitude must be allowed to charitable institutions and that it is not required that the county afforded by them be offered to all objects of charity upon the same basis, and without any discrimination whatever. Discriminations which may be made without affecting the public nature of the charity will readily occur to the legal mind; such are territorial restrictions, as the relief of the poor of a certain town; racial restrictions, as the relief of destitute and needy negroes; discriminations with respect to the nature of the relief to be awarded, as the relief of poverty, of ignorance, of sickness and injury, etc., restrictions with respect to the afflicted and needy as objects of charity, as the relief of the destitute blind, the deaf, etc., and discriminations as to occupations, sex, etc., as the relief of the working girls, sailors, mechanics, etc. Statutes so restricting the scope of their charitable activities are, nevertheless, "purely public" within the meaning of the provisions now under consideration.

It is obvious however, that there must be a line of distinction between the two classes of exemption provisions; and it is clear that institutions dispensing charity to their own members and their families exclusively are beyond the line. A more difficult case is presented by institutions like the one under consideration which limit their charitable activities, not to their own members, but to members of a particular religious or fraternal society. Perhaps the leading case here is that of Philadelphia vs. Masonic Home, supra, in which the following test is laid down which I think is reasonable and accurate:

> "A charity may restrict its admissions to a class of humanity, and still be public; it may be for the blind, the mute, those suffering from special diseases; for the aged, for infants, for women, for men, for different callings or trades by which humanity earns its bread, and as long as the classification is determined by some distinction which involuntarily affects or may affect any of the whole people, although only a small number may be directly benefitted, it is public. But when the right to admission depends on the fact of voluntary association with some particular society then a distinction is made which concerns not the public at large. The public is interested in the relief of its members, because they are men, women and children, not because they are Masons. A home without charges exclusively for Presbyterians, Episcopalians, Catholics or Methodists, woud not be a public charity. But then to exclude every other idea of public, as distinguished from private, the word 'purely' is prefixed by the constitution; this is to intensify the word 'public,' not 'charity.' It must be purely public; that is, there must be no admixture of any qualification for admission, heterogeneous, and not solely relating to the public. That the appellee is wholly without profit or gain only shows that it is purely a charity, and not that it is a purely public charity.
> "Nor does the argument that, to the extent it benefits Masons, it necessarily relieves the public burden, affect the question; there is no public burden for the relief of aged and indigent Masons; there is the public burden of caring for and relieving aged and indigent men whether they be Masons or anti-Masons; but age and indigence concern the public no further than the fact of them; it makes no inquiry into the social relations of the subjects of them."

This distinction is observed in Commonwealth vs. Thomas, 119 Ky., 208, and in Burd Orphan Asylum vs. School District, 19 Pa., 21, as construed in Philadelphia vs. Masonic Home, supra.

On the other hand, it must be admitted that authority directly opposed to the Pennsylvania case above cited may be found in Widows' and Orphans' Home of Odd Fellows of Kentucky vs. Commonwealth, 16 L. R. A., N. S., 829 (Ky. 1907) it was held:

> "The benefits of a home for the support of widows and orphans or confined to those of members of a particular society, does not deprive it of the character of a purely public charity within the meaning of a constitutional tax exemption."

The opinion of the majority of the court, per Baker, J., is based on the theory that relief of widows and orphans is a public burden, and that whosoever without profit to himself engages in this activity, though he limit it to widows and orphans having peculiar social relations is dispensing charity which is "purely public."

> (Burd Orphan Asylum vs. School District, supra)
> (Kentucky Female Orphans School vs. Louisville, 100 Ky., 470)
> (Norton vs. Louisville, 118 Ky., 836)

were cited in support of the proposition of law announced by the court, but the citation here is obviously erroneous, because each of these cases when examined are found to offer instances of charitable institutions open to the public, but in which preference is to be given to those having peculiar social relations, as church and lodge affiliations. These cases cannot properly be cited in support of the proposition that an institution which simply closes its doors to all excepting those of a certain class, socially defined, is an institution of purely public charity.

The court, in the Kentucky case, further bases its conclusion upon debates in the Constitutional Convention at which the provision was framed. Believing, however, as I do that such debates are merely a final recourse in cases of doubt. I do not deem it necessary to investigate the debates of the other convention of 1851 as to this point. It is significant, however, that the court found it necessary to overrule the prior case of Widows' and Orphans' Home vs. Bosworth, 112 Ky., and that two judges dissented emphatically, calling attention to the prior decision of the Kentucky Court of Appeals.

In this connection it may be remarked that the case of Gerke vs. Purcell is cited in Burd Orphan Asylum vs. School District, and Widows' and Orphans' Home vs. Commonwealth, supra, as establishing the principle—

> "When the charity is public the exclusion of all idea of private gain or profit is equivalent in effect to the force of 'purely,' as applied to public charity in the constitution."

This language is found in the Gerke vs. Purcell case and may be accepted as defining the law of Ohio without changing the views herein expressed; for it must be noted that within this rule it must first be established that the charity is "public." The facts in Gerke vs. Purcell, as I have already mentioned them, show that the charity in question there was administered without reference to artificial classification of people.

The question, indeed, is a close one and convincing reasons may be marshalled on both sides of it. On the one hand the doctrine of the Pennsylvania Supreme Court, as laid down in the quotation made from its opinion herein, is logical and convincing. On the other hand, the argument of the Kentucky Court of Appeals to the effect that the constitution must be interpreted in the light of the reason for the exemption which is, that whoever relieves the public of the necessity of supporting the poor, for example, is engaged in a public work, is equally satisfying.

The temptation is, of course, to adopt the broader and seemingly more humane rule of the Kentucky court. I am constrained not to do so, however, for two reasons in addition to the logic of the Pennsylvania decision. These reasons are as follows:

1. To follow the Kentucky case would leave no distinction in logic between institutions relieving the wants of those of a particular denomination or society other than its own members and institutions relieving its own members exclusively. Inasmuch as the Supreme Court of this state has, in Morning Star Lodge, vs. Hayslip, supra, expressly held that an institution of the latter class is not one of "purely public charity," I cannot lend my assent to a holding which cannot in principle be distinguished from one that is opposed to that decision.

2. At the very most the question may be said to be extremely doubtful. That being the case, recourse must be had, I think, to the well-defined and settled principle that exemptions from general taxation are strictly construed, so that every presumption is against the exemption and in favor of the taxing power.

> "The exemption must be shown indubitably to exist: at the outset every presumption is against it. A well-founded doubt is fatal to the claim. It is only where the terms of the concession are too explicit to admit fairly of any other construction that the proposition can be supported."
> (Railway Company vs. Supervisors, 93 U. S., 595)

quoted with approval by Spear J., in delivering opinion in Lee, Treasurer vs. Sturges, 46 O. S., 153-159.

For the foregoing reasons, then, I am of opinion that The Western Methodist Book Concern is not "an institution of purely public charity," because its benefits are limited strictly to ministers of the Methodist Episcopal church and their dependents, and that, therefore, none of its property, either real or personal, or of its moneys or credits, is exempted from general property taxation.

Very truly yours,

TIMOTHY S. HOGAN,
Attorney General.

PUBLIC UTILITIES—GAS COMPANIES AS OPPOSED TO PIPE LINE COMPANIES—BUSINESS OF "TRANSPORTING" AND BUSINESS OF "PRODUCING" GAS—INTERSTATE COMMERCE RECEIPTS—RIGHT OF STATE TO IMPOSE EXCISE TAX FROM POINT OF DISTRIBUTION.

When a gas company which produces gas in another state and transports the same through pipes directly to an independent distributing company in Ohio and also transports said gas to individual consumers in this state; held:

That although transportation of said gas is an incident to its business, nevertheless, it is not any more incidental than it is to any other business involving production and sale and, therefore such company is engaged in the business of supplying natural gas to consumers within this state, within the meaning of Section 5416, General Code, defining gas companies and not in the business of transporting natural gas through pipes or tubing within the meaning of the same section defining pipe line companies. Its receipts, therefore, from the sale of gas transported through its pipes to points in Ohio cannot be designated "interstate commerce receipts" in the same sense that they may be so considered for the purposes of taxation in the case of transportation companies.

The case of the American Steel and Wire Company vs Speed, 192 U. S. 500, held that when a foreign corporation sends goods into this state, though they are consigned to a definite point in this state for distribution in their original packages, interstate commerce ends when the goods reach their point of destination, (i. e. the point of distribution) and the right of the state of distribution to impose a privilege tax upon the sale thereof begins.

Upon the authority of this decision, when the gas company, in this case, transports its gas through main line pipe to a point of distribution in this state, i. e. to a point where the main line enters into a system of branch pipes for the purpose of diverting the product to individual consumers, "interstate commerce" as intended by Section 5474, General Code, ceases and the right of the state to impose an excise tax, without discrimination, upon the business of selling the gas, as upon all gas, produced and sold in Ohio, begins.

The sale of the gas directly to the independent company in Ohio, however, is interstate commerce, which may not be subject to tax in this state. The same is true of the sale to any consumer directly from the producing company in another state, or directly from the main line of said company without entering the point of common distribution.

September 27, 1912.

The Tax Commission of Ohio, Columbus, Ohio.

GENTLEMEN:—I beg to acknowledge receipt of your letter of August 21st, enclosing copies of the purposes clauses of the following named companies:

Ohio Valley Gas Co. (Ohio Corporation).
Tri-State Gas Company (W. Va. Corporation)
Wetzel Gas Company (W. Va. Corporation)
Wheeling Natural Gas Co. (W. Va. Corporation)

together with certain correspondence and information respecting the business transacted by these companies; also, of a letter under date of September 6th, setting forth a statement of facts with respect to the business done by The United Fuel Gas Company, a corporation organized under the laws of West Virginia. The questions of law raised in these two letters are substantially the same, and for convenience I shall discuss them together.

With respect to the companies mentioned in your letter of August 21st, it appears that all of them are operated through stock control as a part of the general system of The Manufacturers Light & Heat Company, a Pennsylvania corporation, and that all of them apparently are engaged in the business exclusively of supplying natural gas to consumers within Ohio. That is to say, it does not affirmatively appear that these companies sell any of the gas to other distributing companies, but all of them appear to be dealing with consumers of that commodity directly. Three of these companies produce some gas in Ohio which said gas is mixed in the mains of the companies with other gas produced elsewhere than in Ohio, in proportions practically impossible of definite ascertainment. All of the companies produce a large portion of the gas sold by them in Ohio, in other states, while one of the companies produces all of the gas which it sells in Ohio in another state.

Counsel for these companies contend that they are entitled as best they can to separate receipts from the sale of gas produced and sold in Ohio from receipts from the sale of gas produced elsewhere than in Ohio and sold in this state; and that the latter constitutes "receipts from interstate commerce" within the meaning of the excise tax law of this state.

As to one of these companies, to-wit, The Wheeling Natural Gas Company, at least, it appears its distribution lines in Ohio constitute an extension of a similar system in Wheeling, West Virginia, although the exact facts with respect to the manner of conducting this business are not available from the memoranda furnished me.

The questions submitted by the commission as to these four companies are as follows:

> "(1) Are receipts from sale of gas produced outside of the State of Ohio, either by the company itself or some one of the allied companies operated by The Manufacturers Light & Heat Company, 'receipts from intra-state business' within the meaning of the provisions of the Act of May 31, 1911?
> "(2) Where, by reason of the mingling of the gas produced within and without Ohio, the company is unable to state, with any reasonable degree of accuracy, the amount produced in Ohio, what, if any, part of the receipts from the sale of gas so produced should be considered by the Commission as receipts from intra-state business?"

In the case of the United Fuel Gas Company, the facts are very clearly stated in your letter as folows:

The company produces natural gas in West Virginia, and transports it through pipe lines in West Virginia and Kentucky to a point on the Ohio river opposite Portsmouth, where its lines cross into Ohio. It sells gas at Portsmouth to the Portsmouth Gas Company, which distributes it to consumers in Portsmouth; this company also sells gas directly to consumers in the city of Ironton. This company contends that all of its receipts for gas sold both to the Portsmouth Gas Company and to consumers in Ironton are "receipts from interstate business" within the meaning of the law, but reports certain intra-state receipts,—being those from the sale of merchandise. The questions submitted in connection with this statement of fact by the Commission are as follows:

> "(1) Are the receipts of this company from sales of gas 'intra-state' or 'interstate' receipts?
> "(2) If such receipts are 'interstate' should the company be required to report and pay an excise tax upon its 'intra-state' receipts alone, or as a foreign corporation for profit and pay an annual fee upon the proportion of its authorized capital stock represented by property owned and used and business transacted in this state?"

I think it is apparent, as already stated, that a single fundamental question of law is raised by all of these facts. That question may be stated as follows:

"Does the business of supplying natural gas to consumers in Ohio constitute interstate commerce when the gas is produced in another state by the companies which supply to consumers, but is committed to their transportation pipe lines for carriage into Ohio, and there distributed by them to the consumers?"

Though the question is single, my investigation has led me to the conclusion that the principles of law which govern its solution are such that various qualifications must be made so that eventually the single question becomes subdivided into several subsidiary questions.

In the matter of the Connecting Gas Company—a pipe line company—I held recently that a corporation engaged in the business of transporting natural gas through pipes, which said transportation constituted a part of a movement of the commodity from a point outside of Ohio to a point within Ohio was engaged in that respect in interstate commerce, so that its receipts from that source would be "receipts from interstate business" within the meaning of the excise tax law. That conclusion was inevitable because the company in question there was itself an instrumentality of commerce between the states, and the business or occupation upon which the tax in question in that opinion was laid was a business which itself constituted an instrumentality of commerce. In a word, the Connecting Gas Company was taxed as a carrier of a commodity, and it is very clear, under the principles that have been laid down by the Supreme Court of the United States in numerous decisions, beginning with that of Gibbons vs. Ogden, 9 Wheaton 1, that the journey of a commodity of commerce from a point in one state to a point in another state is a movement of interstate commerce so that every act or service of transportation committed in connection with such a journey and all instrumentalities employed therein are subject to the exclusive jurisdiction of Congress, except for local police purposes. So that no state may regulate or by taxation or otherwise impose any burden upon such commerce or its instrumentality. Detailed discussion of the rules of law applicable to this subject insofar as they relate to transportation business as such is unnecessary here.

But the business upon which the companies, concerning which you now inquire, are subject to excise taxation, if at all, is not a transportation business. No question is raised as to the right of the state to tax them or any of them as "pipe line companies" for the state asserts no such right. The business in respect of which the state requires a tax is defined by Section 5416 of the General Code as follows:

"The business of supplying natural gas for lighting, heating or power purposes, to consumers within this state."

And this business is separate in the contemplation of the statutes from that next defined in the same section, which is,

"The business of transporting natural gas * * * through pipes or tubing, either wholly or partially within this state."

I think, therefore, that I may safely postulate the proposition that the business upon which the tax of one and two-tenths per cent. of such receipts thereof is laid, and which constitutes the company in question a "natural gas company," as distinguished from a "pipe line company" is to be deemed and considered a mercantile business rather than a transportation business.

Perhaps I am not justified in making this assumption. Arguments may possibly occur to one to the effect that the business of supplying natural gas to consumers is a transportation business. Certainly transportation is a necessary incident to the business, as, indeed, it is to every barter and sale of commodities. A farmer cannot sell the produce of his garden unless one of two things happens:—Either he must by some means transport same to the market, or the purchaser thereof must come and get it. His potatoes, and turnips, and onions, and radishes possess no value or utility to anyone as they grow in his garden or as they are sheltered in his barns. If because of some mysterious force of nature it should be discovered that these vegetables could not be moved from the place where they are found in the producer's possession they would be worthless, and would no longer constitute something for barter and sale. The value, therefore, of a commodity arises in a large part from its susceptibility to transportation. So it is very apparent, I think, that transportation is a necessary incident to every commercial activity. It will not do, then, to say that because transportation is essential in the business of supplying natural gas to consumers it necessarily follows that such a business is a transportation business.

Now, when a consumer of natural gas pays his bill at the office of a gas company, he is paying for a valuable thing which he has received, and the value of which has been contributed to from different sources or by different causes. It is by no means an inconsiderable element in the value of what he has received that it is delivered at his meter by means of transportation facilities of the gas company; but this is not all that adds value. The gas in the first instance having been liberated from its natural reservoirs by the art of the producer has become tangible property in the possession of the producer. As such property it is capable of control, transportation, delivery, and consumption in a way which satisfies an economic want of the public. Therefore it is like any other commodity that may be so delivered and used; while transportation-cost enters into its selling price, it has an intrinsic value which arises from its susceptibility to ownership and consumption.

I have therefore felt justified in making the assumption that, as between a "natural gas company" as defined and referred to in Section 5416 of the General Code, and the "consumers" with which it deals, "the business" transacted is in no essential respects unlike any transaction of barter and sale whereby a commodity having a value arising from use and consumption changes hands. And if I had any doubt upon this proposition, I think all such doubts were readily dissipated by consideration of the fact that the same statute recognizes a business of transporting natural gas and separates it from the business of supplying the same commodity to consumers, imposing upon the two separate businesses different rates of excise taxation.

Now, in considering the principal question involved here I have imagined a simpler case which, in the light of the assumptions which I have been discussing, may be tentatively regarded as analagous. Let it be supposed that a farmer in the state of Kentucky produces a bushel of potatoes which he himself loads into his wagon and carries across the ferry, or by other means, to an Ohio city for the purpose of sale there. Undoubtedly the transportation of this bushel of potatoes from Kentucky into Ohio for the purpose aforesaid constitutes interstate commerce. Let it be supposed, however, that upon reaching the Ohio city he takes his commodity into the market place and there exposes his bushel of potatoes for sale. Does that sale by him of the potatoes under these circumstances constitue interstate business?

More explicitly—would he be subject to an occupation tax for carrying on the business of selling in the market, if such tax were imposed on all who sold therein at the same rate without discrimination against those selling the products of another state?

In answering this hypothetical question the temptation is to trace the history of the rule by the application of which it may be answered from its origin, in Brown vs. Maryland, 12 Wheaton, 436. through various other leading cases like

Leisy vs. Hardin, 135 U. S., 100;
Lyng vs. Michigan, 135 U. S., 161;
Woodruff vs. Parham, 8 Wal., 123; and Brown vs. Houston, 114, U. S., 622.

For the purpose of this opinion, however, it will suffice to state the rule as it is found reiterated and embodied in American Steel and Wire Company vs. Speed, 192 U. S., 500. The facts in that case will be found very fully stated in the opinion by Mr. Justice White, beginning at page 508, Abstracted, they are as follows:

The state of Tennessee levied a "merchants tax" upon persons and corporations engaged in the trades and in the manner defined therein, being denominated by Mr. Justice White as "a privilege tax," which, I take it, is substantially the same kind of tax as that involved in your question. The American Steel and Wire Company, having been compelled to pay this tax under protest, brought suit for the recovery thereof, asserting that it was a New Jersey corporation maintaining in the various states plants for the manufacture of wire and nails; that the city of Memphis, Tennessee, had been selected by it as a distributing point. With that end in view, the American Steel and Wire Company entered into a contract with a transfer company under which products shipped to Memphis consigned to the American Steel and Wire Company were to be received and stored, subject to its order, by the transfer company. The goods so received were held by the transfer company in the "original packages," and all of them came from outside of the state of Tennessee. Therefore, it was contended that inasmuch as the goods were in the original packages as shipped from the other state and were unsold in Tennessee, they were moving in the channels of interstate commerce from the place where the goods were manufactured for delivery to persons to whom "in effect" they had been sold.

The trial court found all of the facts alleged in the bill to be true, and in addition found that the transfer company, under its contract with the American Steel and Wire Company, was required to assort the goods received by it so as to make them available for convenient re-distribution. The products were sold to jobbers through the solicitation of traveling agents, generally in advance of manufacture, but subject to specifications as to the exact quantity and kind of goods to be furnished, which specifications were required to be filed with the storage company at Memphis.

The lower court held accordingly that the goods were not in transit but had reached the destination of their interstate journey when they arrived at Memphis, and that despite the fact that the goods arrived in their original packages and had been, in a sense, sold before their arrival, the privilege tax upon the plaintiffs as merchants was lawfully assessed because of the maintenance of the stock of goods at Memphis, in the manner described.

This holding was affirmed by the Supreme Court of the United States.

Mr. Justice White, in the course of the opinion, first points out that some of the points of the decision in Brown vs. Maryland, supra, could not be applied to an instance of commerce among the several states because the constitutional prohibition upon the levying by states of duties on imports related only to commerce with foreign nations. Therefore, it woud not do to hold that the test laid down in Brown vs. Maryland is applicable upon questions of taxation by a state of goods brought into that state from another state while yet in the original package. An import is an import until it is sold; but "interstate commerce" may have ceased as to goods brought into a state from another state while yet the goods remain in the original packages of their transportation, and before their actual sale.

Proceeding further in his opinion, Mr. Justice White points out that Leisy vs. Hardin and Lyng vs. Michigan, supra, cannot be cited with accuracy as defining the powers of a state to tax such things which have been subjects of interstate commerce, because both of those cases involved the right of a state to prohibit the sale of a commodity which had been brought into the state from without. The true rule, then, was said to have been laid down in Woodruff vs. Parham, and in Brown vs. Houston, supra. Speaking of these cases, Mr. Justice White summarizes as follows:

> "Woodruff vs. Parham, and Brown vs. Houston * * dealt with no positive and absolute inhibition against the exercise of the taxing powers, but determined whether a particular exertion of that power by a state so operated upon interstate commerce as to amount to a regulation thereof, in conflict with the paramount authority conferred upon Congress. In order to fix the period when interstate commerce terminated, the criterion announced in Brown vs. Maryland—that is, sale in the original packages at the point of destination—was applied. The court, therefore, conceded that the goods which were taxed had not completely lost their character as interstate commerce, since they had not been sold in the original packages. As, however, they had arrived at their destination, were at rest in the state, were enjoying the protection which the laws of the state afforded, and were taxed without discrimination, like all other property, it was held that the tax did not amount to a regulation in the sense of the constitution, although its levy might remotely and indiretcly affect interstate commerce."

Two other cases are cited, namely: Emart vs. Missouri, 156 U. S., 296; and Kelley vs. Rhoads, 188 U. S., 1.

The exact conclusion reached by the court, as phrased by Mr. Justice White, was:

> "The goods * * were subject to state taxation after they had reached their destination and whilst held in the state for sale."

I do not think, in the light of the cases commented upon in the decision just discussed, and upon its express authority, that there can be any doubt as to the liability of the Kentucky farmer, in the suppositious case which I have imagined, for occupation tax levied upon him as a seller in the market under the circumstances referred to.

How different, then, is the case of these gas companies? One manifest seeming difference lies in the fact that the commodity which is the subject of its transportation and sale never is "at rest." This is true for obvious reasons arising out of the nature of the commodity itself and the means taken to transport it. It might be logically conceivable that natural gas should be sold in tanks and transported by railroads to distributing points, there to be sold to consumers. Such a hypothesis is practically impossible. The gas must be forced into the pipe lines of the company at high pressure which propels it to its destination, and which pressure is sufficient in most instances to carry to the meter of each consumer, and beyond it to the point of consumption, the cubic feet of gas which he uses. So, it might be argued that the journey of the gas from the wells in West Virginia or another state to the residence of a domestic consumer of the commodity in Ohio is a continuous one.

In spite of these difficulties arising from the inherent nature of natural gas as a subject of transportation and sale, however, I am of the opinion that the interstate journey of the commodity is complete and ended before it reaches the consumer's meter, at least in a typical case. In speaking of a "typical case" I refer to the well-known fact that gas, water, and steam—the ordinary subjects of distribution and sale as public utilities, must be distributed through radiating lines of pipe of smaller dimensions than the main pipe line. That is to say, the natural gas business, for example, is divided quite accurately into the two distinct processes (among others) of transportation and distribution. Frequently, if not always, the pressure at which the gas is propelled in the transportation mains or lines is reduced, by an apparatus designed for that purpose, when the gas enters the distribution system; but this fact while of some collateral weight is not of itself essential. The controlling point is that the main current, so to speak, of gas which flows through the transportation pipe line is broken up and diverted into numerous and increasingly numerous subsidiary currents when it reaches the distribution system.

In such a typical case, then, where domestic and commercial consumers are supplied by means of a well-defined distribution system, I am of the opinion that when the natural gas enters that distribution system its technical interstate journey is complete, and it has become the subject of domestic delivery and sale, so that it is co-mingled with the general mass of commodities in the state within the meaning of the rule exemplified in the authorities cited. At least I am sure that the excise tax levied on those who are "engaged in the business of supplying natural gas to consumers" appertains to them as distributors of the natural gas, and not as transporters thereof; and that the distribution of the product is in a typical case a wholly domestic or intrastate activity; so that the tax not being levied only on those engaged in the business of supplying natural gas produced in other states as such nor by different rates as to such persons, and there being no discrimination in this particular, the tax in question if exacted from those doing business in this manner would not constitute such a direct burden on interstate commerce as is prohibited by the constitution of the United States.

In reaching this conclusion I have relied not only upon the authorities cited, but upon others which illustrate and express the reason for the rule which prohibits a state from regulating by taxation or otherwise commerce among the states. That reason may be expressed as follows: The taxation of the state may not directly affect or burden commerce among the states; but such taxation, as, without discriminating against the products of other states or those engaged in dealing in them as such, and without tending directly or indirectly to discourage, curb, or regulate commerce among the states, is laid upon goods which have been brought into the state and commingled with the general mass of property in the state from other states, or upon those who deal therein with respect to their occupation as dealers in goods generally, is not without the power of the state.

The tax in question, as I have construed it, does not impose burdens upon interstate commerce at all. It does not tax the bringing of natural gas into Ohio from another state, but only the distribution of the gas and its sale to consumers in this state, regardless of the state of its production.

At this point it seems necessary to remark that, in my opinion, the words "receipts from interstate business" as found in Section 5474 of the General Code are to be construed in the light of the rules of law which I have already discussed. That is to say that is "interstate commerce" within the meaning of this phrase which it is beyond the power of the state to burden by taxation within the meaning of the rule as laid down.

Applying these principles, then, to the specific cases mentioned by you, and speaking first of the case of the United Fuel Gas Company, I am of the opinion that the transportation of gas by this company into Ohio for the purpose of delivery to the Portsmouth Gas Company, a distributing company, is "interstate commerce" so that no receipts of The United Fuel Gas Company from the sales of gas to the Portsmouth Gas Company made by it are to be included in the report of the former to the Tax Commission of Ohio. I assure that it is an essential element of the contract between the Portsmouth Gas Company and the United Fuel Gas Company that the service furnished to the former by the latter be performed in the precise way in which it is being performed; and inasmuch as the activity of the United Fuel Gas Company in this behalf consists solely in transporting gas from West Virginia and Kentucky to Ohio for the purpose of sale there, so to speak, in bulk, or, adopting an awkward analogy "in the original package," I am of the opinion, as already expressed, that this portion of the receipts of the United Fuel Gas Company consitutes "receipts from interstate business" within the meaning of Section 5474. Indeed, the Portsmouth Gas Company is not "a consumer" within the meaning of Section 5416, supra, and perhaps but for the comprehensive definition incorporated in the last sentence of Section 5417 of the General Code, these receipts would not have to be reported for that reason alone. That fact, however, is immaterial in this connection.

The sales of the United Fuel Gas Company to consumers in Ironton, however, are upon a different footing. I cannot state unequivocally that this business is "intrastate" because the facts are not complete enough for me to do so. If there is a distribution system in the city of Ironton owned by the United Fuel Gas Company so that the gas is carried across the river in a single pipe and distributed to different Ironton consumers wholly within Ohio, then I am of the opinion that receipts from this business shoud be included in the statement of the company. If, however, the consumers at Ironton, being few in number, if that be the case, are supplied directly from Kentucky without the medium of a distribution system however extensive, a contrary result would follow. That is to say, if the distribution of gas necessary to conduct the same to the meters of consumers in Ironton is effected in the state of West Virginia so that each consumer receives, so to speak, his own "original package" of gas, the Ironton business as well as that done in Portsmouth is "interstate;" but if the distribution takes place in Ohio, then the business in question is "intrastate."

With respect to this company's merchandise sales in Ohio, the same constitute "receipts from intrastate business" upon the principles laid down in my opinion with regard to The Connecting Gas Company, so that this compensation is subject to excise taxes and not to franchise taxes. Indeed, no franchise tax could be exacted from this company, which is a foreign corporation, in any event, it being engaged in interstate commerce. (See opinion in re Detroit and Cleveland Navigation Company, a copy of which you have.)

I need not go into details in applying the principles and conclusions to be drawn therefrom to the case of the four other corporations mentioned by you in your letter of August 21st. The specific questions regarding these corporations may be answered as follows:

In reply to your first question, I am of the opinion that the fact that some of the gas sold in Ohio to consumers by the four corporations mentioned is produced outside of the State of Ohio, is immaterial as affecting the question as to whether or not receipts from the sales are "receipts from interstate business" within the meaning of the section above cited. The test in each case is determined by the location of the point at which final distribution to the consumers begins, for at that point "interstate commerce" ends.

In this connection I beg to state that the mere branching out of an elaborate system of gas pipe lines does not constitute "distribution" within the meaning of the principle as I have tried to define it. That is to say, one of these corporations might have a pipe line running parallel to the Ohio River on the West Virginia shore, and whenever a point opposite to a town in Ohio was reached a branch line might be constructed to carry the gas across the river. In my opinion the gas is still in the process of transportation as distinguished from distribution when it is in such branch line.

The principles which I have tried to define cannot be applied to the second question asked by you in your letter of August 21, and the conclusion reached by me makes it unnecessary to consider that question.

I trust that I have furnished a test which the Tax Commission will find practicable to apply. In conclusion I will state that I have observed that counsel for the four companies inquired about in your letter of August 21st make the suggestion that they will be glad to make a statement of their position on the law of the matter. I wish to state that while confident of the ground that I assume, I will be glad at anytime to reconsider the matter on the furnishing of briefs by any counsel for any interested parties.

Very truly yours,
TIMOTHY S. HOGAN,
Attorney General.

CORPORATIONS—INSURANCE COMPANIES NOT YET AUTHORIZED TO DO BUSINESS AND NOT REQUIRED TO FILE REPORTS WITH SUPERINTENDENT OF INSURANCE, ARE NOT EXCEPTED FROM WILLIS LAW PROVISIONS.

Section 5518 General Code excepts from the Willis Law franchise tax provisions such insurance companies as are required by law to file "annual reports with the superintendent of insurance."

Such exceptions cannot be construed therefore to include an insurance company organized for profit, which has not yet disposed of all its shares of capital stock, as required by law and has not yet been licensed to do business by the superintendent of insurance, and therefore, is not required to file reports with that official.

The franchise tax is a tax upon the privilege of being a corporation rather than a tax upon doing business.

Tax Commission of Ohio, Columbus, Ohio.

GENTLEMEN:—I beg to acknowledge receipt of your letter of October 5th, in which you state that the Bankers Guaranty & Casualty Company, a domestic insurance company, was incorporated June 13, 1911, but, not having disposed of all its shares of capital stock, as required by law, has not yet been licensed to do business by the superintendent of insurance. You request my opinion as to whether a corporation like the one mentioned, organized for the purpose of transacting the insurance business, must make so-called "Willis Law" reports, and pay fees thereon between the time of the filing of its articles of incorporation and the time it is licensed by the superintendent of insurance to do business.

A definite question is presented here as to the interpretation of the following statutes:

"Section 5495. Between the first day of May and the first day of July, 1911, and annually thereafter during the month of May, each corporation, organized under the laws of this state, for profit, shall make a report, in writing, to the commission, in such form as the commission may prescribe.

"Section 5518. An incorporated company, whether foreign or domestic, owning or operating a public utility in this state, and as such required by law to file reports with the tax commission and to pay an excise tax upon its gross receipts or gross earnings as provided in this act, and insurance, fraternal beneficial, building and loan, bond investment and other corporations, required by law to file annual reports with the superintendent of insurance, shall not be subject to the provisions of Sections one hundred and six to one hundred and fifteen.

"Section 9349. When the (legal reserve life insurance) company is fully organized and has deposited the requisite amount of securities, it shall file with the superintendent of insurance a duly certified copy of its articles of incorporation and approval of the attorney general, and a copy of its by-laws or constitution. If the superintendent finds that the company is duly organized and that its capital stock has been subscribed, paid in and invested as required by law, unless he finds the name assumed by the company so nearly similar to the name of another company doing business in this state as to lead to confusion or uncertainty on the part of the public, he shall furnish the company with his certificate of such deposit, and with a license duly reciting that the company has complied with the law and is entitled to transact the business defined in Section ninety-three hundred and eighty-five, which license shall be its authority to commence business and issue policies.

"Section 9522. * * * If the superintendent finds that the company (other than life) is duly organized and has complied with the law entitling it to transact business and issue policies, unless he also finds the name assumed by it so nearly similar to that of another company doing business in this state as to lead to confusion or uncertainty on the part of the public, he shall furnish the company with his license reciting that it has complied with the law and is entitled to transact the business authorized, describing it, which license shall be the authority to commence business and issue policies.

"Section 9590. The president or vice-president and secretary of each insurance company organized under the laws of this or any other state, and doing business in this state, annually, on the first day of January, or within thirty days thereafter, shall prepare, under oath, and deposit in the office of the superintendent of insurance a statement of the condition of such company on the thirty-first day of December then next preceding, exhibiting the following facts and items, and in the following form: * * *"

It is obvious, I think that the legislature, in excluding "insurance * * * and other corporations required by law to file annual reports with the superintendent of insurance" from the operation of the franchise tax, must have had in mind that without this express exclusion such companies would have been within the meaning of the term "domestic corporation for profit," if, in point of fact, they were corporations for profit. (Some forms of insurance companies, organized under the laws of Ohio, are clearly corporations not for profit, but I do not understand that this is the case with regard to the corporation concerning which you specifically inquire. That is to say, Section 5518, which contains subject matter that has always been in the Willis law since its original enactment in 1902, could not have been inserted through an abundance of caution, but must be referred to an intention to make an exception that otherwise could not exist. Therefore, I am of the opinion that a stock insurance company is a "corporation for profit" within the meaning of Section 5495, above quoted.

The other sections which I have quoted make it apparent that an insurance corporation cannot "do business" until it receives its license from the superinendent of Insurance, and that such a corporation does not become liable to make annual reports to the superintendent of insurance until it is engaged in business; that is, until it has reached the point where it requires a license.

Applying to these facts the express language of Section 5518, supra, which is not at all ambiguous, it seems clear to me that an insurance company which has not yet become "required by law to file annual reports with the superintendent of insurance" is not exempted from the "Willis law" provisions of the Tax Commission Act. That is to say, it is not the mere fact that a corporation is organized for the purpose of doing an insurance business which makes it exempt; the company must be actually engaged in such business.

If any further discussion is needed, it might be well to consider the fact that the franchise tax, as construed in Southern Gum Company vs. Laylin, 66 O. S. 578, is a tax upon the privilege of being a corporation—the privilege originally conferred by the issuance of articles of incorporation. It is not upon the privilege of doing the business for which the corporation is organized, but upon the privilege which exists at the instance of the issuance of the articles of incorporation, and by virtue of which the incorporators proceed to dispose of the capital stock of the corporation before engaging in any business whatever.

I am, therefore, of the opinion that the Bankers Guaranty & Casualty Company, upon the facts mentioned by you, is liable for annual reports and fees for the year 1912, it having been organized more than six months prior to the month of May of that year.

I herewith return the correspondence enclosed in your letter, as requested by you.

Very truly yours,

TIMOTHY S. HOGAN,

Attorney General.

TAXES AND TAXATION—SALE OF REAL ESTATE WITH PRIVILEGE OF LEASE AND RE-PURCHASE NOT TAXABLE AS "CREDIT" NOR AS INVESTMENT—IF A SECURED LOAN IT IS TAXABLE AS PERSONAL PROPERTY.

Where a transaction is consumated, whereby the owner of real estate sells the same with a condition, providing for its immediate lease by the seller from the buyer, and with an option of re-purchase by the seller at the expiration of the lease at the original selling price; held:

Whether such a transaction is in reality an out and out sale, with an option of re-purchase, or a mere loan to be secured by the real estate, depends upon the intention of the parties as shown by all accompanying incidents and the facts and circumstances of the deal based upon tests herein prescribed.

The lessor in such case could not be taxed for the same as an "investment" in any event, for the reason that the land itself is already taxed to its full value.

If the transaction in actual fact proves to be a land secured loan, the contract cannot be taxed as a credit but must be taxed under Section 5325 General Code as "personal property."

COLUMBUS, OHIO, October 24, 1912.

Tax Commission of Ohio, Columbus, Ohio.

GENTLEMEN:—I beg to acknowledge receipt of your letter of Ocotober 7th, requesting my opinion upon the following questions:

> "A. being the owner of certain real estate, and having the legal title to the same, leases it to B. for a definite term of years. The lease contains a provision under the terms of which B. has the privilege of purchasing the property for a fixed sum, provided he chooses to exercise the option within a certain number of years.
> "Question: Does this contract constitute a credit or investment subject to taxation in the hands of A. or his assigns?
> "It will be noted that in this particular instance B. sold the property to A. in consideration of the sum of $9,000. On the same day A. executed the lease to B., with the privilege of purchase for the sum of $9,000. The effect of this was very much the same as if A. had loaned B. $9,000 and taken a mortgage upon the property, with conditions for payment similar to those contained in the option of the purchase clause of the lease."

The precise question which you submit can be easily answered. That is to say, it is very clear that the contract in question creates in the hands of A. or his assigns nothing which can be assessed to him or to them either as "a credit" or as "an investment." Sums due as rent or periodical payments under the lease in question must, of course, be included in the list of A. as "credits." Not so, however, as to the price at which the property may be repurchased whether the transaction be held to constitute a sale or not. The reason for this statement I shall presently point out. Meanwhile, permit me to call your attention to the dictum of Burket, C. J., in Chisholm vs. Shields, Treasurer, 67 O. S., 374-379, wherein it is pointed out that a legacy consisting of a stipulated sum annually to be produced by investing a certain security cannot be taxed as "an annuity" for the reason that > "payment must be made out of the estate, the legacy and the estate being combined and both together constituting but one; and as the estate is and must be taxed upon its full value, to tax her on her legacy as an annuity, would clearly be double taxation."

So, in the case presented by you there can be said to be no "investment" for the reason that the thing invested in is the land itself and that is already taxed to A, at its full value.

The reason for holding that regardless of the legal effect of the transaction described by you, A cannot be said to have any "credit" arising therefrom, excepting for the periodical payments due and unpaid, appears from a consideration of certain language found in Section 5325 of the General Code, which provides in part as follows:

> "The term 'personal property' as * * * used (in this title) includes, third, money loaned on pledge or mortgage of real estate; although a deed or other instrument may have been given for it, if between the parties thereto it is considered as security merely."

If the contract in question creates in A a property right other than the legal title to the land itself, it is clear that under Section 5325 such right as a subject of taxation must be classed as "personal property" as distinguished from either "a credit" or "an investment."
