While the probation laws vest the court with the power to suspend the sentence, at the same time the prisoner placed upon probation is under the supervision of the penitentiary or reformatory, under such requirements and conditions as have been adopted by the board of administration, in control of the respective institutions; and unless the prisoner, whose sentence is suspended, has complied with the requirements he has never been properly under the supervision of either of the respective institutions named, and the state of Ohio, therefore, should not be held for the costs, and, further, the warden of the penitentiary and the superintendent of the Ohio state reformatory would be without legal authority or right to certify or issue certificate to the auditor of state for the payment of the costs, under the circumstances related by the clerk of courts in his letter to you. No prisoner whose sentence has been suspended under circumstances like those stated by your county clerk could be said to have passed into either the actual or legal custody of either of said institutions; and it was evidently the intention of the legislature, in providing that the state should pay the costs in criminal cases, where the criminal had plead guilty or been found guilty of a felony, that the prisoner should be in the custody of the state of Ohio and under the control of the institution to which he would have been conveyed had not the sentence been suspended.

For the reasons above set forth, I am of the opinion that the warden of the Ohio penitentiary and the superintendent of the Ohio state reformatory may legally and properly refuse to issue certificate to the auditor of state for the payment of the costs in criminal cases under the circumstances above referred to; and I am further of the opinion that in order to entitle your county to be reimbursed from the state treasury for costs in criminal cases under said circumstances, the defendant must be properly placed in the custody of the respective institutions and have complied with all the rules of probation adopted by the state board of administration.

Very truly yours,
TIMOTHY S. HOGAN,
Attorney General.

CEMETERIES—TOWNSHIP—TOWNSHIP TRUSTEES HAVE CONTROL OF AND MAY NOT SELL LOTS FOR CONSTRUCTION OF A COMMUNITY MAUSOLEUM.

As the statutes provide that the entire control of township cemeteries shall be vested in the township trustees, and as power to convey lots therein are restricted solely to conveyance to families and individuals, the trustees may not sell lots in said cemetery to a private company for the purpose of constructing therein a community mausoleum.

COLUMBUS, OHIO, April 30, 1912.

HON. F. R. HOGUE, Prosecuting Attorney, Ashtabula County, Jefferson, Ohio.

DEAR SIR:—I acknowledge receipt of your letter of March 18, 1912, in which you ask my opinion as to whether the trustees, having title, control and possession, under the law, of lands for the purpose of a township cemetery for the burial of the dead of said township, can sell lots therein "upon which to be constructed a community mausoleum."

I desire to say that the matter depends upon the power conferred on said trustees, relative to such cemeteries, as enumerated by the statutes of Ohio.

The powers, duties and privileges of township trustees, in relation to such cemeteries is provided for in Sections 3441 to 3475, inclusive, of the General Code.

Unless such authority is expressed or fairly implied, within the above sections, the right so to do does not exist.

Let us examine the written law on the subject; for there we must find authority, if any, for the contemplated act of the trustees. The right to acquire lands by purchase or condemnation is given; also to levy tax for purchase, improvement and maintenance. A vote is required by the people in a proper case. Other safeguarding provisions are made by this chapter relative to the acquisition of lands for such purposes.

Section 3447, G. C., provides:

> "The trustees may have such cemetery laid out in lots, avenues and paths, number the lots and have a suitable plat thereof made, which shall be carefully kept by the township clerk. They may make and enforce all needful rules and regulations for its division into lots, and the allotment thereof to families or individuals, and for the care, supervision and improvement thereof. Suitable provision shall be made therein for persons whose burial is at the expense of the township."

Section 3448, G. C., provides:

> "Upon application the township trustees shall sell at a reasonable price such number of lots as the public wants demand for burial purposes. Upon complying with the terms of sale, purchasers of lots shall be entitled to receive a deed or deeds therefor which the trustees shall execute, and which shall be recorded by the township clerk in a book for that purpose * * * *. Upon application of a head of a family living in the township, the trustees shall make and deliver to such applicant a deed for a suitable lot for the burial of his or her family without charge, if in the opinion of the trustees, by reason of the circumstances of such family, payment therefor would be oppressive."

Section 3451 provides that the title, right of possession and control in all public graveyards and burial grounds which have been set apart and dedicated as public graveyards or burial grounds shall severally be vested in the trustees of the township where located.

The law also provides for the levying of taxes and the issuing of bonds for the maintenance and improvemnt of such cemeteries. Trustees are required to keep them in good repair. There is a penalty provided for the failure to perform their duties regarding such cemeteries.

The control, supervision, rules and regulations as to the use of any grounds for burial purposes shall be under the exclusive control of the township trustees in such cemeteries as the one spoken of in this case.

The statute also provides that trustees can make rules and regulations relative to the care and maintenance and preservation of the different lots making up the cemetery.

The question then arises whether the selling of a right to a lot or lots, such as is contemplated by the interrogatory in this case, would not be doing indirectly what could not be done directly—the trustees thereby depriving themselves of the sole authority given to anyone by law.

Nowhere does it appear in the statutes governing township cemeteries that anyone else than the trustees have any rights therein as to general control over any part thereof.

To grant to an association the right to erect a mausoleum for the burial of dead on lots owned by said association at prices which may be fixed by said association, and at a profit derived by it, is beyond the powers of the trustees.

Individuals could erect structures of their own for the purpose of interring their own dead, under proper limitations; the trustees could possibly do so themselves, retaining absolute control thereof; vaults for the reception of bodies temporarily could be maintained, but to convey lots to such associations, as the one referred to, for permanent use for the public generally, is not authorized by law.

I concede that modern requirements and public demands, in the light of the age in which we are living, would make such an arrangement a matter of public satisfaction; but the trustees cannot part with control of the rights of burial and of jurisdiction of the property held in trust to a private concern, and thus have within their cemetery a concern independent of them. However convenient, commendable and desirable this might be, no relief can be had along that line until the legislature has enlarged the statute on that subject.

All these sections clearly show that the trustees are exclusively vested with the title and control of all township cemeteries; and that such cemeteries and all the lots there are exclusively under the control of said trustees for the use of those to whom they are allotted—which the statute says, Section 3447, shall be "to families or individuals."

Therefore, I am of the opinion that the right of township trustees to permit any such arrangement, as the law now stands, is without authority.

Respectfully,

TIMOTHY S. HOGAN,

Attorney General.

SHEEP—ALLOWANCE OF DAMAGE CAUSED BY DOGS WORRYING FLOCK—DISCRETION OF TOWNSHIP TRUSTEES AND COUNTY COMMISSIONERS.

The allowance of damages for injuries to sheep by a dog, under Sections 5840—5846, General Code, rests in the discretion of the township trustees and county commissioners, under the procedure therein provided, and this discretion extends to damage caused by worry or fright to said sheep, though there exists no visible physical disorder.

COLUMBUS, OHIO, May 7, 1912.

HON. J. B. TEMPLETON, Prosecuting Attorney, Wauseon, Ohio.

DEAR SIR:—I beg to acknowledge receipt of your communication of April 20th, which is as follows:

> "It has always been the custom in this county for the county commissioners to pay sheep claims, under Section 5840 of the General Code, as follows:

Damage for sheep killed_____ $----
For sheep injured_____ ----
For injury to flock being worried_____ $0 50 per head.

The last board of state examiners have said in their report that the last payment of damages to flock for being worried by dogs is not lawful. The commissioners have always, as I have said, paid something for damages to the flock, but never more than 50 cents per head. What is your ruling on this? We have a lot of such claims pending."

In brief your question is whether or not under the statutes an allowance will be made for such damage to sheep as may occur by reason of worry or fright, which is caused by the ravages of dogs among the flock. The difficulty refers to a mere nervous, or, if the term may be used, a mental debility caused to the animal by fright or shock. This result is not evidenced by any visible physical disorder, but I am informed that almost inevitably the effect is such a grave debilitation as to seriously retard the growth and impair the general usefulness of the animal, and very frequently, indeed, to cause the death of the animal within a shorter or longer period of time.

The following sections of the statutes are applicable:

"Section 5840. A person damaged by the killing or injuring of sheep by a dog, may present a detailed account of the injury done, with damages claimed therefor, verified by affidavit at a regular meeting of the trustees of the township wherein the damage or injury occurred and within six months thereafter. Such account shall state the kind, grade, quality and value of the sheep so killed and the nature and the amount of the injury, and present the testimony of at least two freeholders where the injury was done, who viewed the results of the killing or injuring and can testify as to the number, kind and grade, and who may give their opinion as to the quality and value thereof."

"Section 5841. The person owning such sheep or having charge thereof must make it appear that such injury was not caused in whole or in part by an animal kept or harbored by him, or by an employe or tenant of the owner upon such owner's premises, and that he does not know whose animal committed the injury, or if known and such amount reduced to judgment, it could not be collected on execution.

"Section 5842. The township trustees shall receive any other information or testimony that will enable them to determine the value of the sheep so killed or injured.

"Section 5844. The township trustees shall hear such claims in the order of their filing and may allow them, or such parts thereof as the testimony shows to be right and just. They shall endorse the amount allowed and transmit them with the testimony so taken and the fees due witnesses over their official signatures to the county commissioners in care of the county auditor, who shall enter upon the book to be kept for that purpose in their order, each claim so received.

"Section 5845. The witness, as provided in the next preceding chapter, not exceeding four, shall be allowed fifty cents each and mileage as in other cases. The trustees may administer an oath or affirmation to a claimant or witness. If the sheep killed or injured are in the care of an employe or tenant of the owner thereof, the affidavit provided in section fifty-eight hundred and forty may be made by such employe or tenant, whose testimony may be received in regard to all matters relating thereto which said owner would be competent to testify.

"Section 5846. The county commissioners, at the next regular meeting, shall examine such claims and may hear additional testimony or receive additional affidavits in regard to the claims and may allow the amount determined by the township trustee, or part thereof, or any amount in addition thereto that they find to be correct and just, to be paid out of the fund created by the per capita tax on dogs. Such claims as are allowed in whole or in part, shall be paid only at the June session of such commissioners; and, if such fund is insufficient to pay the claims in full, they shall be paid pro rata. If there is not sufficient money in such fund in any year to pay the claims in full, the part thereof allowed but unpaid by reason of lack of funds, shall be paid in any year thereafter whenever there is a surplus in the fund remaining after the claims for such year have been paid in full."

Considering the broad scope of the word "injured" as it is generally defined, I have no hesitancy in concluding that as it is employed in these statutes, the allowance of damage by the commissioners for such a detriment to a flock of sheep as is the subject of your inquiry may be properly permitted, provided sufficient evidence is afforded the township trustees and the commissioners to enable them to base their judgment of the amount upon a sound and unabused discretion.

The difficulty seems to be with the ability to prove not merely the existence, but the nature of these injuries. The question of damages, however, is universally a hazy one, but that fact has never in law served as a ground for the denial of the rights of compensation for a manifest injury. The exercise of discretion upon questions of nervous ailments and the consideration of the prospects of future suffering and losses is in an unlimited measure permitted to the jury in the trial of personal injury cases. The case at hand is quite parallel, and in the exercise of the broad discretion conferred by the statutes aforesaid, first upon the trustees, and then upon the commissioners in their review of the allowance made by the trustees, I see no reason why these authorities may not, under the restrictions set forth and in due course of the procedure provided, allow such damages as the circumstances of each individual case seem to justify.

The facts set forth do not make possible any comment upon former practices. Suffice it to say that the question of allowance is placed within the broad province of the judment of the trustees and the commissioners to be formed in view of all the surrounding facts and circumstances, and if in the act of these officers there is not manifested a clear and flagrant abuse of this discretion, or non-compliance with the statutory safeguards imposed upon them, their ruling on the question as to such damages should be accepted as final.

Very truly yours,

TIMOTHY S. HOGAN,
Attorney General.

INITIATIVE AND REFERENDUM—SUSPENSION OF EFFECT OF ORDINANCE UPON FILING OF REFERENDUM PETITION UNTIL MAJORITY VOTE OF ELECTORS IS DETERMINED.

An ordinance upon which a referendum petition has been filed, cannot become operative until it has been determined by a majority vote that the electors have adopted it.

COLUMBUS, OHIO, April 26, 1912.

HON. FRANK X. FREBIS, Prosecuting Attorney, Georgetown, Ohio.

DEAR SIR:—Under date of January 31st, you request my opinion on Section 4227-2, General Code, concerning the question when an ordinance that has been passed by council shall become effective in the event a referendum petition is filed and election held on such ordinance and the result of said election is in favor of the ordinance as passed by council.

You call my attention to the fact that in Section 4227-1, General Code, in reference to an initiative petition it is specifically provided that the ordinance shall become valid from the date of the determination of the vote thereon, and that Section 4227-2, General Code, under paragraph two thereof states that certain ordinances shall not become effective in less than sixty days after their passage, and that said law is silent upon the question as to when an ordinance concerning which a referendum petition has been filed shall become operative. The object of the referendum petition is that the electors of the municipality shall be entitled to have caused to be submitted to them the ordinances and resolutions passed by council for their approval. In other words, it is a provision of law that the electors of the municipality shall be entitled to decide whether or not such laws shall go into operation.

Section 4227-5, General Code, states that no ordinance or other measure shall be adopted unless it receives an affirmative majority of the total number of lawful and effective votes cast at such election and entitled to be counted. The object of the referendum act being that the electors of the municipality shall have the privileges of adopting the law as passed by the council, it would seem to me that the law could not become operative, after the filing of the referendum petition, until it had been adopted by a majority of the electors.

I am, therefore, of the opinion that such an ordinance would not become operative for any purpose after the referendum petition had been filed until it had been determined by a majority vote that the electors had adopted it. The ordinance would be held in suspension and no rights would be acquired under it until adopted by such electors.

Yours truly,

TIMOTHY S. HOGAN,

Attorney General.

ROAD IMPROVEMENTS—APPORTIONMENT OF ASSESSMENTS BY TOWNSHIP TRUSTEES—TIME FOR FILING NOTICE—APPOINTMENT OF EQUALIZING BOARD—CERTIFICATION OF ASSESSMENT TO COUNTY AUDITOR.

The township trustees are given jurisdiction of apportionment of assessments for road improvements, under Sections 1208 and 1210, General Code.

By provision of these sections, when the special provisions therein contained are not applicable the provisions of Section 6907 et seq., General Code, must govern in the hearing of complaints and allowing of damages.

Under this principle objections to the apportionment which is made by the township trustees, must be filed with the township trustees within two weeks after the apportionment is made.

The township trustees shall appoint an equalizing board, upon the expiration of the time for filing objections.

The township trustees shall certify the assessments to the county auditor, who shall certify the same to the county treasurer, along with the times of payment which are to be fixed by him as provided in Section 1210, General Code.

COLUMBUS, OHIO, May 1, 1912.

HON. T. J. KREMER, Prosecuting Attorney, Woodsfield, Ohio.

DEAR SIR:—Your favor of December 14, 1911, is received, in which you make inquiry as follows:

> "I would like to have a construction on the clause,
> "'And an opportunity given them to be heard in the manner provided by law for the assessment of the costs and expenses in establishing county roads.'
> "Contained in Section 1208 and also known as Section 35, page 343 of volume 102 of the Ohio Laws. While there is an appeal from the compensation and damages allowed property owners through which a county road is established, yet there seems to be no law for the assessment of the costs and expenses of establishing a county road other than the determination by the commissioners whether they deem it of sufficient importance for them to pay it or that the petitioners pay all or a part thereof.
> "The law as embodied in volume 99 page 314 and following of the Ohio Laws, refers to 4633-4 and following of the Revised Statutes or 6907 and following of the General Code, but this law does not seem to refer to cost and expense of establishing county roads. If it should be construed that the law, as it now stands, refers to 6907 and following of the General Code, then would the abutting property owners objecting to the apportionment, file their objections with the county commissioners and the county commissioners appoint an equalizing board as provided by law and if so, who would certify the apportionment to the county auditor?
> "If the county commissioners have no jurisdiction in this matter and this law only refers to the manner in which abutting property owners can be heard, and that they must file their objections before the board of trustees appoint an equalizing board and proceed in a similar manner as the commissioners would proceed under 6907 of the General Code, then would the trustees be compelled to give three weeks notice as provided in Section 6907 of the General Code in addition to the ten days notice which was given under Section 1208? If it should be determined that it is not necessary to give three weeks notice as just referred to, then within what time would the abutting property owners objecting, be compelled to file their objections and would the trustees appoint an equalizing board?

"In the case where the commissioners are compelled to give three weeks notice after apportionment, there is no notice given prior to the apportionment, whereas, under the law under consideration, the trustees give ten days notice prior to such apportionment.

"The matter is very important to us for the reason that the costs and expenses of the road have already been paid and the county is very anxious that it be placed on the tax duplicate and of course be placed there at once and correctly. We are confident that if it is not placed there correctly and legally, that a suit will be instituted to restrain the collection of the same. It seems to me to say the least, that the law is very indefinite and should be amended so as to be intelligible."

Section 1208, General Code, referred to by you, as amended in 102 Ohio Laws, 343, provides as follows:

"Except as otherwise provided one-fourth of the cost and expense of such improvement shall be apportioned to the township or townships in which such road is located. Of the amount so apportioned three-fifths shall be a charge upon the whole township or townships and two-fifths shall be a charge upon the property abutting on the improvement. The township trustees shall apportion the amount to be paid by the owners of the abutting property according to the benefits accruing to the owners of land so located. At least ten days' notice of the time and place of making such apportionment shall be given to the persons affected thereby, and an opportunity given them to be heard in the manner provided by law for the assessment of the cost and expense of establishing county roads. If the improvement lies in two or more townships the amount to be paid by each shall be apportioned according to the number of lineal feet of the improvement lying in each township.

"When an improvement of a highway shall be made by the state in conjunction with a township or townships, thirty five per cent. of the total cost and expense thereof shall be assessed on the township or townships and fifteen per cent. of the total cost and expense thereof shall be assessed on the land abutting on such highway."

You ask for a construction of the part underscored.

You raise several questions, which may be summarized as follows:

Should the abutting property owners objecting to the apportionment, file their objections with the county commissioners or with the township trustees?

Who shall appoint an equalizing board and when shall same be appointed?

Who shall certify the apportionment to the county auditor?

What notice, or notices, are required under Section 1208, General Code?

Within what time will the abutting property owners be required to file their objections?

Section 1208, General Code, as originally passed in 99 Ohio Laws, 314, contained the following:

"* * * Upon at least ten days' notice of the time and place of such apportionment to the persons affected thereby and after such persons have an opportunity to be heard in manner and form as provided in Sections 4637-4, 4637-5, 4637-6 and 4637-7 of the Revised Statutes of Ohio * * *."

In placing this section in the General Code, the part under consideration was put in its present form.

Said Sections 4637-4, 4637-5, 4637-6 and 4637-7, Revised Statutes, were carried into the General Code as Sections 6907, 6908, 6909 and 6910, respectively. These sections provide for the apportionment of the cost and expense of establishing and improving county roads.

Section 6904, General Code, provides:

"The county commissioners may assess the damages on account of the widening, altering or establishing of such road, or part thereof, and the costs and expenses of any or all of the improvement or such part of said damages, costs and expenses as they deem equitable under the circumstances, upon the taxable property abutting upon the road or part thereof, either according to the foot frontage or according to the benefits. The commissioners shall be an assessing board for the purpose of assessing the damages, costs and expenses, as herein set forth, upon the abutting property as aforesaid."

Section 6907, General Code, provides:

"Before adopting the assessments so made, the county commissioners shall publish notice for three consecutive weeks in a newspaper of general circulation in the county, that such assessments have been made, and that they are on file in the office of the county commissioners for the inspection and examination of the persons interested therein."

Section 6908, General Code, provides:

"If a person objects to the assessment, he shall file his objections in writing with the board of county commissioners within two weeks after the expiration of such notice, and thereupon the board shall appoint three disinterested freeholders of the county to act as an equalizing board."

Section 6909, General Code, provides:

"Upon the day appointed by the county commissioners for that purpose, such equalizing board, after taking an oath before a proper officer honestly and impartially to discharge their duties, shall hear and determine all objections to the assessment and equalize it as they think proper. It shall report such equalized assessment to the board of county commissioners, which may confirm such report or set it aside and cause a new assessment to be made, and appoint a new equalizing board possessing like qualifications, which shall proceed in the manner herein provided."

Section 6910, General Code, provides:

> "When the assessment is confirmed by the county commissioners it shall be complete and final, but if, by any of the provisions of this subdivision of this chapter, an act or thing is required to be done by the commissioners, the concurrence of two-thirds of the commissioners shall be sufficient."

Section 1208, General Code, is in its nature a special statute governing the apportionment of the cost of the improvement upon the abutting property by the township trustees. It provides for certain specific things and then provides for a hearing of objections to the apportionment "in the manner provided by law for the assessment of the costs and expenses in establishing county roads." This manner is that which is found in the above sections.

The rule of construction where there are specific provisions and general provisions in statutes applicable to a proposition is set forth in case of Gas Company vs. Tiffin, 59 O. S., 420, by Williams, J., on page 441, as follows:

> "* * * It is a settled rule of construction, that special statutory provisions for particular cases operate as exceptions to general provisions which might otherwise include the particular cases, and such cases are covered by the special provisions."

Section 1208, General Code, is a special statute in reference to these apportionments, and it makes the manner of procedure, prescribed in Sections 6907, et seq., General Code, a general rule for hearing objections. Therefore, where Section 1208, General Code, prescribes a specific rule, such rule governs and excludes a provision upon the same subject which may be found in the general rule. In other words, said Sections 6907, et seq., General Code, govern only in such cases which are not specifically covered by Section 1208, General Code.

Said Section 1208 requires at least ten days' notice of the time and place of such apportionment. This provision governs and excludes the notice required by Section 6907, General Code.

Section 1208, General Code authorizes the township trustees to make the apportionment. If there are any objections to the apportionment the objectors have a right to be heard in the same manner as prescribed for the establishment of county roads. This section does not authorize the county commissioners to take jurisdiction, but it prescribes the manner in which the township trustees shall proceed when obections are filed.

Section 1210, General Code, prescribes that the township trustees shall certify the assessment to the county auditor as follows:

> "The township trustees shall certify the assessment to the county auditor, who shall place it upon the tax duplicate against the property benefited. The county treasurer shall collect such assessments in the manner as other taxes are collected, and in such payments as may be approved by the county auditor. The township trustees shall pay the portion of the cost and expense assessed to the township in the same manner as other claims are paid."

The township trustees have jurisdiction over this apportionment throughout the proceedings and when Sections 1208 and 1210, supra, do not provide the rule of procedure they must look for guidance to Sections 6907, et seq., General Code.

Sections 1208 and 1210, General Code, do not provide for the filing of objections or for the appointment of an equalizing board, and therefore the provisions of the other sections must govern.

Section 6908, General Code, provides that objections must be filed with the commissioners within two weeks after the expiration of such notice. The notice herein referred to is the notice by publication for three weeks and which is given after the apportionment is made, but before its final adoption. Notice in the case of apportionment made by the township trustees is given at least ten days before the apportionment is made.

It is the purpose of Section 1208, supra, that reasonable opportunity shall be given to file objections and to be heard upon the same. Two weeks time from the expiration of the notice as provided in Section 6908, General Code, would not be a reasonable time, as the time for filing objections, under such a ruling could not possibly exceed four days, and in fact notice could be given two weeks before the apportionment and thus opportunity for filing objections be denied. The statute has in effect provided that two weeks is a reasonable time in which such objections should be filed. The reasonable construction of this statute in reference to an apportionment by township trustees, is that within two weeks after the apportionment is made by the trustees objections must be filed, and such objections must be filed with the trustees.

Section 6908, General Code, provides that when objections are filed the commissioners shall appoint three disinterested freeholders of the county as an equalization board. This section prescribes the procedure of the trustees. It is the duty of the township trustees when apportionments are made by them and objections have been filed thereto, to appoint three disinterested freeholders of the township to act as an equalization board. The appointment of this board should be made at the expiration of the time given to file objections.

Answering your questions, my conclusions are as follows:

The objections to the apportionment made in accordance with Section 1208, General Code, should be filed with the township trustees who made the apportionment.

Such objections must be filed within two weeks after the apportionment is made.

The township trustees shall appoint an equalizing board when objections are filed and such board should be appointed upon the expiration of the time for filing objections.

The township trustees shall certify the assessment to the county auditor, who shall certify the same to the county treasurer along with the times of payment which are to be fixed by him as provided in Section 1210, General Code.

Respectfully,

TIMOTHY S. HOGAN,

Attorney General.

CORRUPT PRACTICE ACT—PARTY AFFILIATION AT PRIMARY DETERMINED BY VOTE AT LAST GENERAL ELECTION— VOTER CANNOT CHANGE POLITICS AT PRIMARY.

The party affiliations of a voter at the primary election are to be determined only by his vote at the last general election and a Democrat cannot vote the Republican ticket by swearing that he will support the nominee.

HON. F. L. JOHNSON, Prosecuting Attorney, Xenia, Ohio.

DEAR SIR:—I am in receipt of your letter of May 16th, in which you request my opinion as follows:

> "I have been asked by a number of candidates whether or not a democrat can vote in the Republican primary if he will swear to support the nominee, and I have answered that a man cannot change his politics at a primary election; if he wants to change from democrat or socialist to Republican he must do so at the general election and not at the primary. Am I correct in my holding?"

Section 4980, General Code, provides as follows:

> "At such election only qualified electors, or such as will be legally qualified electors at the next ensuing general election may vote and all such electors may vote only in the election precinct where they reside, and it shall be the duty of the challengers and of the judges, and the right of any elector, whenever there is reason to doubt the legality of any vote that may be offered, to interpose a challenge. The cause of a challenge shall be: That the person challenged has received or been promised some valuable reward or consideration for his vote; that he has not previously affiliated with the party whose ticket he now desires to vote. Affiliation shall be determined by the vote of the elector making application to vote, at the last general election held in even numbered years."

Section 4981, General Code, describes the character of oath a challenged person may be required to take.

Section 4982, General Code, provides when a vote may be rejected.

As is apparent from a cursory reading of Section 4980, supra, the sole manner of determining with which political party a person is affiliated is by finding out with what political party he voted at the last general election held in even numbered years. The mere fact that a person is willing to swear to support the nominee would not qualify him to vote in the party primary of another political party than that with which he is affiliated, as determined by the rule laid down in Section 4980.

Very truly yours,

TIMOTHY S. HOGAN,

Attorney General.

CORRUPT PRACTICE ACT—CERTIFICATION OF NAME OF REPRESENTATIVE AT POLLS TO BOARD OF ELECTIONS BY CHAIRMAN AND SECRETARY OF PARTY CONTROLLING COMMITTEE.

The name of a representative employed by a candidate in each voting precinct upon the day of the primary election must be certified, under Section 5175-26, General Code, to the board of elections by the chairman and secretary of the controlling committee of the party, at least two days prior to the election.

Such name must be furnished the chairman and secretary aforesaid, therefore, at some time prior to said two days, preceding the election.

COLUMBUS, OHIO, May 18, 1912.

HON. FRED W. CROW, Prosecuting Attorney, Pomeroy, Ohio.

DEAR SIR:—I beg leave to make reply to your communication of May 8th, wherein you propound the following inquiry:

> "With reference to Section 5175-26 of the General Code of Ohio, how can a candidate legally employ one representative in each voting precinct upon the day of the primary election? To whom must the candidate certify the name of such representative, or in other words, how should such representative's name be certified and to whom certified?"

Section 5175-26 provides in part, as follows:

> "* * * Each political party may designate one party representative in each precinct upon each registration day, and such committee may designate not more than three (3) such representatives and each candidate one representative in each voting precinct upon each election day, whose names shall be certified to by the chairman and secretary of the controlling committee of such party to the board of deputy state supervisors of elections, at least two (2) days before such registration or election day, and who may be paid, etc."

It is evident from a reading of the foregoing that the law provides that the representatives referred to shall be certified to the board of elections of the county, and that this certification shall be made by the chairman and secretary of the controlling committee of the party with which the candidate is affiliated, in the one instance, or which represents the political party in the other. While the provision of the statute is that the committee and the candidate "may designate" their respective representatives, there is no express procedure provided for the giving of the information of this fact to the controlling committee for certification; however, as knowledge must be brought home to the chairman and secretary prior to their making certificate, it is my opinion, and I am informed that it is also the opinion of the state supervisor of elections, that it devolves upon the respective candidate and committee, at some reasonable time prior to the election, to hand in the names of the representatives designated under this act to the controlling committee of their party, so that the controlling committee may be duly advised of what is desired by said candidate or committee. Since it becomes the duty of the chairman and secretary of the controlling committee to certify to the board of deputy state supervisors of elections, at least two days before such registration or election day, these names, it is readily apparent that the time when the names should be given to the committee is some time prior to two days before the election or registration day.

No prescribed form is necessary in the handling of the names to the controlling committee; all that is required is that the committee receive a list of names with a statement that the persons thus named are the duly designated representatives of the candidate or committee, respectively.

Very truly yours,

TIMOTHY S. HOGAN,

Attorney General.

CORRUPT PRACTICE ACT—DELEGATES TO NATIONAL AND COUNTY CONVENTIONS AND COUNTY COMMITTEEMEN—REPORTS OF EXPENDITURES—WHERE FILED—DUTIES OF COMMITTEES.

Delegates to the national convention who are elected at the primary, delegates to the county convention and county central committeemen are candidates voted for at an election, and therefore are included in the enumeration of Section 5175-1 of the corrupt practice act, and therefore are required to file a report of expenditures as provided in Section 5175-2, General Code.

Committees making expenditure in behalf of such candidates at the primaries must file reports through their treasurer by virtue of Section 5175-2, General Code.

By provision of Section 5175-6, General Code, since district delegates to the national convention are elected by the voters of a sub-division in the state, greater than the county, their account of expenditures must be filed in the office of the secretary of state.

Delegates to the county convention being elected by the voters of the county, their report of expenditures should be filed with the board of elections of the county.

Committees should file a report of expenditures made in behalf of delegates to the national convention with the secretary of state, while expenditures made in behalf of delegates to the county convention should be filed with the board of elections of the county.

Delegates to conventions are not "public officers," and their expenditures are limited as to their character but not as to their amount.

COLUMBUS, OHIO, May 18, 1912.

HON. HOLLAND C. WEBSTER, Prosecuting Attorney, Toledo, Ohio.

DEAR SIR:—I am in receipt of your letter of May 6th, in which you request my opinion upon the following questions:

> "1. Are delegates to the national convention, delegates to the county convention and county central committeemen included among the candidates enumerated in Section 1 of the corrupt practices act, General Code, 5175-1, and required to file the report of expenditures required by Section 2 of said act, Section 5175-2, General Code.

"2. If a candidate for delegate to the national convention, county convention or the county central committee is not included in the act and is not required to file a statement of his receipts and disbursements, is the treasurer of the committee or organization, as described in Section 5175-1, which has been formed for the purpose of co-operating and aiding in the promotion or success of such delegates to the national convention, delegate to the county central committee, required to file the report required by the corrupt practices act?

"3. Section 6 of the act, General Code, 5175-6, provides that statements of expenditures which are required to be filed that relate to the election of candidates for offices upon propositions submitted to the electors of the entire state, or any sub-division or district thereof, greater than a county, shall be filed in the office of the secretary of state, and in all of the elections such statements shall be filed in the office of the board of deputy state supervisors of elections for the county in which such election is held. Under this section should the statement of a delegate or alternate to the national convention, if he is required to file a statement of expenditures, be filed with the secretary of state? Should the statement, if one be required to be filed by a delegate to the county convention, be filed in the office of the board of deputy state supervisors, notwithstanding the fact that delegates to the county convention are elected partially for the purpose of electing delegates to the state convention and state offices?

"4. Where the treasurer of a committee or association, as defined in Section 1 of the corrupt practices act, General Code, Section 5175-1, is paid money for the three objects of assisting in the nomination or election of the delegates to the national convention, delegates to the county convention and county central committeemen, without specifying as to its division, can such treasurer or executive committee of such organization by vote of majority apportion the amounts to be expended toward the election of the delegates to the national convention, delegates to the county convention and the county central committee, and if they are required by the corrupt practices act to make report of such expenditures, file their reports direct with the secretary of state and in the office of the board of deputy state supervisors of election of the county, showing in each report, respectively, the amounts expended for said candidates?

"5. Section 29 of the act, General Code, Section 5175-29, specifies the amount of expenditures allowed by various candidates. Delegates and alternates to the national convention, or their offices above mentioned are not specified. A presidential elector is restricted in his contribution to the sum of $2,000. Inasmuch as no mention is made of the delegates to the national convention, to what amount are they restricted in their contributions?"

Answering your first question, Section 5175-1, which I will not quote, and which is Section 1 of the so-called corrupt practices act, defines "committee" or "organization," and the mere reading of this section develops that any two or more persons, co-operating to aid or promote or defeat or take part in the election of delegates to the national convention, delegates to the county convention, or county central committeemen, would constitute a "committee" or "organization" under this section.

Section 2 of the act, Section 5175-2, General Code, provides that "every candidate who is voted for at any election or primary election, held within this state, and every person, committee or association of persons * * * who may have contributed, promised, received or expended * * * any money or thing of value in connection with such election, shall * * * file * * * an itemized statement, etc." This department has already held that a "candidate who is voted for at any election or primary election" includes delegates and central committeemen who are voted for at the primary. In my opinion, delegates selected by convention are not within the terms of the provisions of the act above referred to, as they expressly apply to candidates who are voted for at an election.

So, while the district national delegates who are elected at the primary come within the purview of the act, and I suppose it is these delegates to which you refer, I do not wish to be understood as holding that the same rule applies to delegates to the national convention, chosen otherwise than at the primary.

It is, therefore, my opinion that your first question should be answered affirmatively, as far as delegates to the county convention and county central committeemen are concerned. As regards delegates to the national convention, the answer also is affirmative as to delegates voted for at the primary election.

The same reasoning applies in answering your second question, as to whether or not a candidate for delegate to the national convention, county convention or the county central committee would be required to file a statement of his receipts and disbursements. As stated before, Section 5175-2 provides that "* * * every person, committee or association of persons * * * who may have contributed, promised, received or expended * * * any money or thing of value in connection with such election shall * * * file, etc.;" and since district delegates to the national convention, to the county convention, as also county central committeemen, are voted for at the primary, a committee making an expenditure in connection with such election should be required to file a report; also, since the disbursements of a committee would have to be through its treasurer, and he must, under the law, keep the proper book or books, showing in detail all his receipts and expenditures, such treasurer would be the proper person to file the account.

Reference to Section 5175-5, requiring all statements and accounts of expenditures to be signed and verified, discloses that the verification by a committee or association can be made by "the duly appointed treasurer or president." It further provides that the statement "to the affiant's own knowledge" should be a full and true account of all contributions and the disposition thereof; and since the treasurer is required to make all disbursements, to my mind, he is the proper party to make, verify and file the statement required. Of course, in his absence or inability, the president of the committee might do so, as he is one of the officers referred to in the statute.

Answering your third question, Section 5175-6 provides:

> "Statements required to be filed by this section if they relate to the election of candidates for offices to be filled by, * * * the electors of the entire state, or any division or district thereof greater than a county, shall be filed in the office of the secretary of state; in all other elections such statements shall be filed in the office of the board of deputy state supervisors of elections for the county in which such election is held * * *"

Since the position of district delegates to the national convention is one to be filled by the electors of a sub-division or district in a state greater than a county, under the provisions of this section, his statement of expense should be filed in the office of the secretary of state. As far as delegates to the county convention are concerned, their expense statements should be filed in the office of the board of deputy state supervisors of election of their respective counties. It is not the functions or duties of the candidate that determine where his expense account shall be filed; it is whether or not the place or office is to be filled by the electors of the state, district or county.

Answering your fourth question, I do not see how we can lay down a rule as to the method of procedure for the committee in apportioning funds in their hands for the purposes for which the money may have been contributed, and to the various localities for which it may have been intended. Suffice it to say that the committees are called upon to file their statements under the law; the proper officers of the committees must keep a detailed account of all receipts and expenditures; and it is for such officers to determine whether a particular item of expense relates to the election of a candidate for an office to be filled by the electors of the entire state or any division or district thereof greater than a county, or otherwise. If the item of expense relates to a place to be filled by the electors of the entire state, or any division or district thereof greater than a county, then, it should be included in the report filed in the office of the secretary of state; otherwise, it would be a proper charge in the report filed in the office of the board of deputy state supervisors of elections of the county.

The question of the apportionment of funds is one entirely within the control of the committee, and neither the corrupt practices act nor the primary election law seems to have given such matter any attention.

Replying to your fifth inquiry, this department has already held that only the offices enumerated in Section 5175-29 are limited in the amount that may be expended for the permitted purposes of the corrupt practices act. Delegates and alternates to the national convention are not "public offices;" they are places or positions of political preferment. They do not seem to have been considered at all when it came to restricting the amount one might expend at an election, and it is, therefore, my opinion that delegates to the national convention are not limited in the amount of their expenditures.

I do not wish to be understood, however, as holding that district delegates are not limited in the character of their expenditures. Section 5175-26 makes it a corrupt practice for any person, directly or indirectly, by himself or through any person, to pay, lend or contribute or offer or promise to pay, lend or contribute, any money or other valuable consideration in connection with or in respect of any election for any other purpose than the matters and services enumerated therein at their reasonable bona fide and customary value.

Very truly yours,

TIMOTHY S. HOGAN,
Attorney General.

CORRUPT PRACTICE ACT—POWER OF CANDIDATE TO EMPLOY PERSON TO PASS CARDS AND SOLICIT VOTES NEAR POLLS ON ELECTION DAY.

Under Section 5175-26, General Code, by compliance with the requirements therein made, each candidate may employ a person for a compensation not to exceed $5.00 per day to stand at or near the polls on election day to distribute his cards to voters or to solicit their support.

COLUMBUS, OHIO, May 18, 1912.

HON. F. M. STEVENS, Prosecuting Attorney, Elyria, Ohio.

DEAR SIR:—I beg to acknowledge receipt of your letter of May 15th, in which you request my opinion as follows:

> "Referring to the Kimble corrupt practices act, I wish to submit to you the following proposition:
> "Has a candidate under that act, the right to employ a person to stand at or near the polls on election day and distribute his cards to the voters as they approach the polls, or verbally solicit their support for the candidate for whom he is working or do both for compensation or gratuitously?"

Under Section 5175-26, each candidate may designate one representative in each voting precinct upon each election day, whose name shall be certified to by the chairman and secretary of the controlling committee of a party to the board of deputy state supervisors of elections, at least two days before such registration or election day, and who may be paid for his services, by such candidate, not in excess of five dollars per day.

I am of the opinion that by virtue of the above section a candidate is authorized to employ a person to stand at or near the polls on election day, and distribute his cards to the voters as they approach the polls, or verbally solicit support for the candidate for whom he is working, so long as the compensation does not exceed five dollars per day, and the name of such person, acting as a representative of the candidate has been duly certified by the chairman and secretary of the controlling committee of the party to which he belongs, to the board of deputy state supervisors of elections not less than two days before the election. The candidate has no authority to designate a representative in each precinct, other than that given in the section above referred to.

Very truly yours,

TIMOTHY S. HOGAN,

Attorney General.

RESULTING TRUST—EFFECT OF ABANDONMENT OF NATIONAL GUARD ENCAMPMENT SITE TO BOARD OF TRADE AFTER THE BOARD HAD BEEN REIMBURSED BY CITY AND COUNTY FOR THE PURCHASE OF SAID SITE—CITY OF NEWARK AND LICKING COUNTY.

The board of trade, of Newark, Ohio, paid for a site upon which the state established an encampment ground for the Ohio National Guard. The city and Licking county then issued and sold bonds, the proceeds of which were employed to reimburse the board of trade. When the state abandoned said encampment, the site reverted, by provision of the original deed to the board of trade.

Held: A resulting trust was thereby effected with the board of trade as trustee and the city and county as beneficiary.

A conveyance is advised; however, from the board of trade to the city, setting out the circumstances of the acquisition of the property.

COLUMBUS, OHIO, May 15, 1912.

HON. PHILIP B. SMYTHE, Prosecuting Attorney; HON. RODERICK JONES, City Solicitor, Newark, Ohio.

GENTLEMEN:—In your letter of March 7th you make the following statement of facts and request for opinion:

> "We, Philip B. Smythe and Roderick Jones, respectively prosecuting attorney, Licking county, and city solicitor, city of Newark, submit to you, for your advice and opinion, the following state of facts:
> "Prior to 1892 the state appointed a commission to select a site for a permanent encampment ground for the Ohio National Guard and establish a permanent encampment ground to be afterwards located by said commission.
> "This was done by act of the legislature. The board of trade and other citizens of the city of Newark and Licking county thought it would be for the benefit of the city of Newark and Licking county that this camp ground should be located on a site near the city of Newark, known as the 'Octagon and Circle Forts.' After due consideration the said state commission agreed to locate said permanent encampment ground on said site on condition that the title to said site should be acquired to the state of Ohio without cost to said state. In the year 1892 the board of trade of the city and certain other persons, whose identity is not known to us, advanced sufficient money and purchased the ground agreed upon by the state commission and caused a deed for said ground to be made to the state of Ohio, with the provision therein incorporated that in case the state should cease to use said grounds for a permanent encampment ground for the national guard that the title to said property should revert to the board of trade of the city of Newark, February 19, 1892, the legislature passed an act authorizing and directing the commissioners of the county and the council of the city of Newark to sell bonds in the sum of thirteen thousand dollars, on the part of the county, and ten thousand dollars, on the part of the city, to reimburse the board of trade and such persons as had advanced said moneys for the purchase of said ground, and authorized the levy of a special tax to pay said bonds as they matured. Said act further provided that said bonds should not be issued unless the same should be authorized by a majority vote of the electors of the city and county. Afterwards the board of county commissioners and the city council, respectively, caused an election to be held on the question of whether or not said bonds should be issued, and which election resulted in a large majority, in each case, in favor of the issuance of said bonds. Whereupon said bonds were issued and the money applied, presumably for the purposes designated in the act of the legislature. In 1905 and 1906 the state abandoned said grounds, as a permanent camp ground for the national guard, having obtained another site at Camp Perry, near Ottawa, and caused all state property which had been placed on said ground to be removed to said Camp Perry. By an act of the legislature, to be found in 99 Ohio Laws, 629, the governor was authorized and directed to convey said grounds to the board of trade of the city of Newark, which is a corporation organized under the laws of the state of Ohio, but not for profit, which was done. In 1910 said board of trade executed a lease of said grounds to the Licking County Club Company, which is also a corporation organized under the laws of Ohio. Said lease was to be for the period of twenty years, at a yearly rental of six hundred dollars, with the provision therein incorporated that said rental should be applied by said county club company in permanent improvements on said grounds, and with the further provision that, at any time, said lease might be terminated at the option of the board of trade upon the repayment to said county club company of any sums paid out for permanent improvements on said grounds. Certain citizens and taxpayers of the city and county recently commenced agitation to have the title to said grounds so altered that the same may be vested either in the city or county, or in the board of trade, as trustees, and we have been called upon by the county commissioners and the city council for our opinion in the matter.

"In addition to the fact that, so far as we can see, any theory of legal remedy on behalf of either the city or county or both, is extremely hazy, and we have felt compelled to call upon your office for advice in this matter, on account of the fact that both of us are members of both corporations whose rights are at issue, feeling that it would be better and more satisfactory to all concerned that an opinion as to the legal rights of the city and county should be given by some official who would not be under any suspicion, bias or prejudice growing out of any adverse interest in the matter."

From the above the facts which must govern this matter are as follows:

For the purpose of securing a location in Licking county and near the city of Newark, for a permanent camp ground for the Ohio National Guard, the board of trade and certain citizens of the city of Newark advanced sufficient funds to purchase a site and had the deed for said grounds made by the grantors to the state of Ohio, which deed contained the provision that in case said camp ground should be abandoned by the state, the property should revert to the board of trade of the city of Newark.

After the money had been so advanced and the deed so made, under authority from the legislature, the city of Newark and the county of Licking issued bonds in the amounts of ten thousand dollars and thirteen thousand dollars, respectively, to reimburse the board of trade of the city of Newark and the persons who had advanced the money for the purchase of said ground.

A special tax was authorized to pay said bonds as they matured, and presumably said bonds have been paid, and the money raised by the same was paid to the board of trade and to the citizens who made the initial advancement of cash necessary to purchase said real estate.

Afterwards the state abandoned said grounds, and by authority of the legislature caused a deed for said real estate to be made by the state to the board of trade of the city of Newark.

I take it that the above are all the facts that are essential to determine this question, and from them it appears that the board of trade has really no pecuniary interest in the property, nor have the citizens of Licking county, and the city of Newark, who originally advanced the money to pay for the same any interest therein, for I take it, from your letter, they have been fully reimbursed for the advancements so made by them. The property was really paid for by the city of Newark and the county of Licking, the payment being made with the proceeds of the bonds issued as above stated, and, therefore, the deed having been made to the board of trade of the city of Newark, and the board of trade as such having advanced no consideration whatever for said deed, it must be held that a trust is necessarily created for the benefit of the county of Licking and the city of Newark in the board of trade of the city of Newark, i. e. the board of trade of the city of Newark is vested with the title to said real estate as trustees for the county of Licking and the city of Newark in proportion to the amount of the purchase price of said real estate contributed by such county and city respectively.

It seems to me that this trust actually exists at the present time, and that no proceedings are necessary. However, if it is deemed necessary by anyone to have some record of this matter, a conveyance could be made by the board of trade of the city of Newark, as trustees, to some other trustee for the county and city, or to the county and city, in which conveyance a full recital could be made of all the facts as to the acquisition of this property.

Very truly yours,

TIMOTHY S. HOGAN,
Attorney General.

CHIEF OF POLICE, MARSHAL AND CONSTABLES—"MILEAGE"—ALLOWANCE FOR TRANSPORTATION AND SUBSISTENCE OF A PRISONER—TRAVELING EXPENSES.

The term "mileage" as employed in Section 3347, General Code, is intended to cover all personal expenses incurred by a constable, and he cannot be allowed further expenses for board, railroad hire, livery hire, etc.

Under the same section, express provision is made for an allowance by the magistrate for expenses incurred in the transportation and subsistence of a prisoner. The same provisions, by virtue of Section 4581, General Code, apply to chiefs of police.

COLUMBUS, OHIO, May 22, 1912.

HON. HARRY P. BLACK, Prosecuting Attorney, Tiffin, Ohio.

DEAR SIR:—Your favor of May 6, 1912, is received, in which you ask an opinion upon the following:

"The question of subsistence of a chief of police, marshal and constable for themselves and their prisoner while executing and making arrest under warrant in a foreign county, query: Is the arresting officer entitled under the law for subsistence of prisoner and himself after the arrest has been made and while they are en route to the court where the affidavit was filed and the warrant issued, or is the cost of subsistence to be taken from the amount allowed him for his mileage?"

The fees of a chief of police for services in a police court are provided for in Section 4581, General Code, which provides:

"Other fees in the police court shall be the same in state cases as allowed in the probate court, or before justices of the peace, in like cases, and in cases for violation of ordinances such fees as the council, by ordinance, prescribes, not exceeding the fees for like services in state cases."

Section 4387, General Code, applies to the fees of a marshal of a village and reads:

"In the discharge of his proper duties, he shall have like powers, be subject to like responsibilities and shall receive the same fees as sheriffs and constables in similar cases, for services actually performed by himself or his deputies and such additional compensation as the council prescribes. In no case shall he receive any fees or compensation for services rendered by any watchman or any other officer, nor shall he receive for guarding, safekeeping or conducting into the mayor's or police court any person arrested by himself or deputies or by any other officer a greater compensation than twenty cents."

Section 4534, General Code, provides for the fees of a chief of police in a mayor's court, as follows:

"In felonies, and other criminal proceedings not herein provided for, such mayor shall have jurisdiction and power, throughout the county, concurrent with justices of the peace The chief of police shall execute and return all writs and process to him directed by the mayor, and shall by himself or deputy attend on the sittings of such court, to execute the orders and process thereof and to preserve order therein, and his jurisdiction and that of his deputies in the execution of such writs and process, and in criminal cases, and in cases of violations of ordinances of the corporation, shall be co-extensive with the county, and in civil cases shall be co-extensive with the jurisdiction of the mayor therein. The fees of the mayor in all cases, excepting those arising out of violation of ordinances, shall be the same as those allowed justices of the peace for similar services and the fees of the chief of police or his deputies in all cases, excepting those arising out of violations of ordinances shall be the same as those allowed sheriffs and constable in similar cases.

These several statutes provide that the fees shall be the same for a chief of police, and a marshal as are provided for constables and sheriffs in similar cases. In construing this provision this department has held that where the fees prescribed for a constable are applicable, such fees are to be charged for services of a chief of police or a marshal, but that where a chief of police or marshal performs services, for which no fee is prescribed for a constable, such chief of police or marshal may be allowed the fee that is provided for a sheriff for similar services in like cases.

The fees allowed a constable are set forth in Section 3347, General Gode, which provides:

> "For services rendered, duly elected and qualified constables shall been entitled to receive the following fees: For service and return of copies, orders of arrest, warrant, attachment, garnishee, write of replevin, or mittimus, forty cents, each, for each person named in the writ; service and return of summons, twenty-five cents for each person named in the writ; service and return of subpoena, twenty-five cents for one person, service on each additional person named in subpoena, ten cents; service of execution on goods or body, forty cents; on all money made on execution, four per cent.; on each day's attendance before justice of the peace, or jury trial, one dollar; each day's attendance before justice of the peace on criminal trial, one dollar; on each day's attendance before justice of the peace in forcible detainer, without jury, one dollar; summoning jury, one dollar; mileage twenty cents for the first mile, and five cents per mile for each additional mile; assistants in criminal causes, one dollar and fifty cents per day, each; transporting and sustaining prisoners, allowance made by the magistrate, and paid on his certificate; serving all other writs or notices not herein named, forty cents and mileage as in other cases; copies of all writs, notices, orders, or affidavits served, twenty-five cents; summoning and swearing appraisers in case of replevin and attachment, one dollar in each case; advertising property for sale on execution, forty cents; taking bond in replevin, and all other cases, fifty cents; each day's attendance on the grand jury, two dollars."

As this section provides for the mileage of the constable and for the allowance for transporting and sustaining prisoners, it applies as well to the mileage and allowance of a chief of police and marshal in similar cases.

This section fixes the mileage of a constable at twenty cents for the first mile and five cents per mile for each additional mile.

The supreme court of Ohio has determined the meaning of mileage and the expenses for which the mileage is allowed.

In case of Richardson vs. State, 66 Ohio St., 108, the first and second syllabi read:

> "The expenses which are authorized to be paid a county commissioner, by the last clause of Section 897, of the Revised Statutes, include only his official expenses 'actually paid in the discharge of some official duty,' as distinguished from those incurred for his personal comforts and necessities. He has no valid claim against the county, or its funds, beyond the per diem compensation and mileage allowed, for any of his personal expenses.
> "Expenses incurred for railroad fare, livery hire, charges for the use of his own conveyance, for the feed and shoeing of horses used by him, and for his board and others of a like nature, are of a personal character, for which no valid claim can be made against the county, although they are incurred while about the business of the county."

Williams, C. J., says on page 11, of the opinion:

> "It must be conceded that the three dollars per day allowed the commissioner is the limit of his compensation for his day's work, in whatever way it may be performed in the discharge of his official duties. He cannot lawfully claim that the county is also bound to pay his board, or other personal expenses. And, the 'mileage' allowed him is intended to compensate him for expenses of his travel on official business. That is the legal meaning and import of the term."

The mileage allowed a constable or other officer is allowed him to cover his personal expenses in traveling, and includes his expense of transportation and of subsistence. The mileage covers his railroad fare, or livery hire, and board for himself.

Section 3347, General Code, contains the clause:

> "Transporting and sustaining prisoners, allowance made by the magistrate, and paid on his certificate."

By virtue of this provision the magistrate before whom the charge is heard may make an allowance to the officer for the expense in transporting and sustaining his prisoner. This allowance can only include the expense of travel and subsistence of the prisoner. The officer must defray his own personal expense from the amount allowed him for mileage.

In conclusion: A chief of police, marshal or constable cannot be allowed his personal expenses for his meals when engaged in arresting a person accused of crime, in addition to his mileage. The amount allowed him as mileage covers this item of expense.

The magistrate may make an allowance to a constable, chief of police or marshal for the expenditure caused by reason of the transportation and subsistence of a prisoner. This latter allowance is in addition to the mileage allowed the officer.

Respectfully,
TIMOTHY S. HOGAN,
Attorney General.

BIDS UPON COUNTY FUNDS—FAILURE OF BIDDING DEPOSITARY TO NAME SECURITY, FATAL—DEFINITENESS AS TO AMOUNT.

A bank bidding as a depositary for county funds, under Section 2716, General Code, must name its security and a general statement to the effect that reliable surety company bond will be furnished is not of sufficient definiteness.

A bid upon the inactive funds of a county, for a definite period is a sufficiently definite bid to include all said funds, if other requirements are complied with.

COLUMBUS, OHIO, May 23, 1912.

HON. HOLLIS C. JOHNSTON, Prosecuting Attorney, Gallipolis, Ohio.

DEAR SIR:— Your favor of May 21, 1912, is received in which you state as follows:

"Today the county commissioners of Gallia county received bids for the county money for a period of three years. Two questions have arisen.

"First. The Crown City Bank of Crown city, Ohio, the highest bidder, bid for $15,000.00 of the inactive funds 4.51 per cent., but did not name the name of its sureties, but did say 'said deposit to be secured by a bond of a reliable surety company or companies. The question upon this bid is, does their failing to name the sureties invalidate their bid?

" The Commercial and Savings Bank bid for the inactive deposit 4.10 per cent, not naming any amount, but intending to take the whole or any part allowed to it, but not saying so in its bid, but using the following language: 'In accordance with your legal notice, The Commercial and Savings Bank of Gallipolis, Ohio, hereby offers you 4.10 per cent. on the inactive funds of Gallia county for a period of three years, beginning June 20, 1912.' The Ohio Valley Bank bid 4 per cent. on the inactive funds and the amount of $30,000.00 is named by it, and the question comes up between the Commercial and Savings Bank and the Ohio Valley Bank whether or not the failure on the part of the Commercial and Savings Bank to name the amount desired would entitle the Ohio Valley Bank to the money."

The county depository act is found in Sections 2715, et seq., of the General Code.

Section 2716, General Code, provides:

"When the commissioners of a county provide such depositary or depositaries, they shall publish for two consecutive weeks in two newspapers of opposite politics and of general circulation in the county a notice which shall invite sealed proposals from all banks or trust companies within the provisions of the next two preceding sections, which proposals shall stipulate the rate of interest, not less than two per cent. per annum on the average daily balance, on inactive deposits, and not less than one per cent. per annum on the average daily balance on active deposits, that will be paid for the use of the money of the county, as herein provided. Each proposal shall contain the names of the sureties or securities, or both, that will be offered to the county in case the proposal is accepted."

Section 2717, General Code, provides:

"At the hour of twelve o'clock noon on the Monday next following the last insertion of such notice, the commissioners in open session shall open the sealed proposals and award the use of such money to the bank or banks or trust companies that offer the highest rate of interest therefor on the average daily balance, provided proper sureties, securities or both, are tendered in the proposal."

In making its bid the bank or trust company is required by Section 2716, supra, to give the names of the sureties or securities that it will offer the county if the money is offered it, and these must be named in its proposal or bid.

By virtue of Section 2717, General Code, the county commissioners open the bids and award the use of the money. The money is to be awarded to the bank offering the highest rate of interest, provided "proper sureties, securities or both, are tendered in the proposal."

It is the evident purpose of the statutes that when proposals are submitted for the use of county money, they shall be complete, and that they shall be submitted in such definite terms that the county commissioners may consider them and make the awards for the use of the money from the terms of the proposals.

The provisions of Section 2717, General Code, will prevent the county commissioners from awarding the use of the money to a bank which fails to tender or name proper sureties or securities or both, in its proposal.

The proposal you submit did not name the sureties, or securities, to be tendered by the bank for the use of the money, if its proposal was accepted. It did not, therefore, comply with the provisions of the law, and the county commissioners could not award the use of the money on such proposal. The proposal was not properly submitted and could not be considered.

It might be urged that the proposal did comply with the law by naming the security. The word "securities" as used in the statutes under consideration does not refer to a bond executed by a bonding company, but refers to bonds issued by the United States, the state of Ohio, and the political subdivisions as set forth in Section 2732, General Code.

Your second question is governed by the provisions of Section 2715-1, General Code, as enacted by the last legislature, and set forth in 102 Ohio Laws at page 59.

Said Section 2715-1, General Code, provides:

> "The deposits in active depositaries, as provided for in the next preceding section shall at all times be subject to draft for the purpose of meeting the current expenses of the county. The deposits in inactive depositaries shall remain until such time as the county treasurer is obliged to withdraw a portion or all of same and place it in the active depositary or depositaries for current use. Each bank or trust company, when submitting proposals as provided in Section 2716 for the inactive deposits shall stipulate the amount of money desired by such bank or trust company; and when the aggregate amount placed with all the banks and trust companies, qualifying for same, in any county, does not equal the amount that may be placed into inactive depositaries the county commissioners shall, upon securing sufficient additional security from any or all of such inactive depositaries authorize the county treasurer to increase the deposits therein; or such county commissioners shall in the manner herein provided designate a bank or banks or trust companies, located outside of the county in which the county treasurer shall deposit such excess funds."

While it is true that the bank bidding shall stipulate the amount of money desired by such bank or trust company, yet, in my judgment the bid of The Commercial and Savings Bank of Gallipolis is in accordance with that requirement of the statute.

You advise that the banks bid was as follows:

> "In accordance with your legal notice, The Commercial and Savings Bank of Gallipolis, Ohio, hereby offers you 4.10 per cent. on the inactive funds of Gallia county for a period of three years, beginning June 20, 1912."

The meaning of this, in my judgment, is that the bank bids for the whole of the inactive funds. There is no uncertainty about the meaning of the bid; they are entitled to the whole of the funds. If, however, another bank should bid a higher rate for only a part of the funds the form of bid of The Commercial and Savings Bank would be sufficiently definite to entitle them to the inactive deposits not awarded to the higher bidding bank.

After all, the object of the statute is the protection of the public, and by holding the bid as legal there is no possible danger of any abuse. So long as a bid is bona fide and in substantial compliance with the statute I should always go slow to pursue any course that would deny the public the benefit of the higher rate of interest, unless in so doing a way would be opened up to abuses.

Very truly yours,

TIMOTHY S. HOGAN,
Attorney General.

TAXES AND TAXATION—SMITH ONE PER CENT. TAX LAW—ELECTION FOR IMPROVEMENT OF TOWNSHIP AND VILLAGE ROADS BY GENERAL TAXATION—EFFECT OF TWO MILL LIMITATION UPON INDEBTEDNESS INCURRED.

Inasmuch as, in an election for the purpose of improving roads, within the township and village by general taxation, under Sections 6976-7008, General Code, the people do not vote upon the proposition of issuing bonds, and trustees are left the discretion of dispensing with bond issues and using the proceeds of direct levies under Section 7006, indebtedness incurred for this purpose after June 1, 1911, is within the two mill limitation of the Smith one per cent. law.

Indebtedness incurred prior to June 1, 1911, however, are not within said limitations.

COLUMBUS, OHIO, May 13, 1912.

HON. DON. J. YOUNG, Prosecuting Attorney, Norwalk, Ohio.

DEAR SIR:—I regret my inability to sooner answer your communication of May 2nd. The pressure of business in this office at the present time has made it impossible for me to comply with your request that my reply should be in your hands by May 6th.

You ask my opinion upon the following question:

> "The township of New Haven has within its limits the incorporated village of Chicago Junction. About eight years ago an election was held in this township and in the village, under the provisions of old Section 4686-1-25, for the purpose of improving the roads by general taxation within the township and village. This election was successful, and during the period up to the present time, the township trustees have issued bonds and improved the roads and there is at the present time outstanding $32,000.00 of bonds.
> "They desire to continue to issue bonds under this election, and the question that confronts them is whether, under old Section 4686-18-18a, the tax levy there provided for must be included within the two-mill limit of the Smith law, so-called."

The sections to which you refer by the sections numbers as given in Bates' Annotated Ohio statutes are now found in Section 6976 to Section 7018, inclusive, General Code. In quoting such parts of this act as are material in the determination of your question I shall, for convenience, use the General Code numbers, as there have been no material changes in phraseology as between the former statutes and the present sections embodied in the code. Such material portions are as follows:

"Sections 6976. The trustees of a township, when the petition of one hundred or more of the taxpayers of such township is presented to them, praying for the improvement of the public roads within such township and including a road running into or through a village or city, shall submit the question of the improvement of said roads to the qualified electors of the township at the next general election or at a special election, held after the presentation of such petition.

"Section 6977. The qualified electors of such township, at said election, shall have submitted the policy of the improvement of its public roads by general taxation. Those voting in favor of such proposition shall have on their ballot 'road improvement by general taxation—yes,' and those opposed, 'road improvement by general taxation—no.'

"Section 6982. At such election, if a majority are in favor of the policy of the improvement of the public roads of such township by general taxation, the trustees of the township shall appoint three freeholders as commissioners, who shall serve three years from and after the date of their appointment, and if vacancy occurs upon such board it shall be filled by appointment for the unexpired term by the trustees.

"Section 6985. Such commissioners shall designate and determine the established roads and streets in the township which, in their opinion, shall be improved. The commissioners shall call to their assistance a competent engineer, who shall make a correct map of the township, plainly showing the established roads and streets therein which have been by such commissioners designated for such improvement, also profiles of such roads and streets showing the grade thereof, as they then exist or have been established, which he shall turn over to the custody of the township clerk.

"Section 6987. After the report of the commissioners, and the map and the profiles have been filed with the township clerk, the township trustees, in determining which roads shall be first improved, of those designated by the commissioners, shall select those nearest the center line of such township, north and south. If, in their opinion, it is not expedient to improve all roads in all directions at one time, they shall improve the roads which in their opinion are the most traveled and used within such township.

"Section 7001. The trustees of a township in which free turnpikes have been constructed under the provisions of this subdivision of this chapter, when the petition of twenty-five per cent. or more of the taxpayers of such township, including any village therein, is presented to them praying that no further levy be made under such provisions, shall submit the question of making no further levy to the qualified electors of the township and village, at the next general election held after the presentation of the petition. The qualified electors of the township and village at said election, shall have submitted to them the policy of making no further levy under such provisions.

"Section 7003. At such election, if a majority of the votes cast are in favor of no further levy for road improvements, the township trustees shall thereafter make no further levy under this subdivision of this chapter. If a majority of the votes cast are against no further levy, the trustees shall proceed to levy under such subdivision in a like manner as before the election.

"Section 7004. For the purpose of providing the money necessary to meet the expenses of improving such roads and streets the trustees of a township, if advisable in their opinion, may issue the bonds of the township clerk, payable at such times as they determine, not exceeding thirty years, in the sum of five hundred dollars each, bearing interest at a rate not to exceed five per cent. per annum payable semi-annually.

"Section 7006. When the trustees of such township have determined to improve a road, as herein provided, in order to provide for the payment of such improvement and to provide a fund for the redemption of bonds issued by them under the provisions of the next two preceding sections, with interest thereon, in addition to the other road taxes authorized by law, they shall levy annually upon each dollar of valuation of all taxable property of such township an amount not exceeding six mills upon each dollar of such valuation, and shall continue such levy from year to year until the roads and streets, by said commissioners designated for improvement, have been improved, as herein provided, and the bonds issued for that purpose, with interest thereon, have been paid.

"Section 7007. The trustees of such township, when the petition of one hundred or more of the taxpayers of the township, including a city village therein, is presented to them praying for an increase of tax levy for the improvement of public roads and streets of the township and city or village, shall submit the question for an increase of tax levy for the improvement of public roads and streets to the qualified electors of the township and the city or village, at the next general election or at a special election held after the presentation of such petition.

"Section 7008. The qualified electors of such township, and city or village, at said election, shall have submitted to them the policy of an increase of tax levy for the improvement of its public roads and streets by general taxation. Those voting for such proposition shall have on their ballots, 'increase of tax levy for road improvement by general taxation—yes,' and those opposed, 'increase of tax levy for road improvement by general taxation—no.'"

I need not burden this opinion with extensive quotations from the Smith one per cent. law, so-called. In the case of State ex rel. vs. Sanzenbacher, 84 O. S., unreported, it was held that the internal limitations of Section 5649-3*a* of that act do not include levies for interest and sinking fund purposes to provide for indebtedness incurred prior to June 1, 1911, or thereafter, by a vote of the people.

Under this decision I think there is no question as to such levies as are now necessary to provide for the retirement of the outstanding bonds—that is, those issued prior to June 1, 1911, under the sections above quoted. Levies for this purpose are not within the two-mill limitation upon township levies, provided for in said Section 5649-3*a*.

As to levies for interest on and the retirement of principal of bonds issued after June 1, 1911, the sole question which is at all debatable, in my opinion, is as to whether or not such bonds issued under the sections above quoted, are to be regarded as "indebtedness incurred by a vote of the people."

On the one hand, I am clearly of the opinion that such levies are "levies by a township for township purposes" within the meaning of said Section, 5649-3*a*.

Road levies under the above sections have every characteristic of township levies, and they are not included in the catalog of levies exempted from the internal limitation by Section 5649-3*a* itself.

On the other hand, it is equally clear in my mind that the mere fact that no election was held after June 1, 1911, is not conclusive. I do not construe the decision in State ex rel. vs. Sanzenbacher as applying to indebtedness incurred by a vote of the people held or taken after June 1, 1911, but, as I have already phrased it, to indebtedness incurred after June 1, 1911, by a vote of the people, whether such vote was reported prior to that date or thereafter.

Coming now to the sole question which I deem to be involved in your letter, I beg to state that after careful consideration I have come to the conclusion that bonded indebtedness created under the sections above quoted is not "incurred by a vote of the people," as that phrase is used in the Smith law, and as the supreme court evidently intended it to be applied to the construction of Section 5649-3*a* thereof.

The only question submitted to the electors is that of the policy of improving roads by general taxation as opposed to that of improving roads by local assessment in whole or in part. The electors never approve any specific bond issue, nor does it necessarily follow that because the proposition submitted to them has carried, an indebtedness will be incurred. To be sure, the success of the proposition at the polls authorizes the trustees to incur indebtedness under the limitations of Section 7108 of the General Code, but the authority thus conferred is not direct. The people do not vote upon the proposition of issuing bonds, and the trustees might, if they saw fit, dispense with such issue of bonds. They may, if they choose, use the proceeds of the levies under Section 7006, above quoted, directly to pay for the cost of the improvement, or rather that portion of it to be carried on within any one year, instead of anticipating such levies by the issue of bonds.

For all of the above reasons, I am of the opinion that levies under the act concerning which you inquire are not levies for sinking fund and interest purposes to provide for an indebtedness incurred by a vote of the people within the meaning of the Smith one per cent. law as construed by the supreme court in the case above cited. There being no other reason for holding such levies exempt from the two-mill limitation of Section 5649-3a, I am of the opinion they are to be included therein, except, of course, as already stated, insofar as they apply to and are made for the purpose of extinguishing indebtedness incurred prior to June 1, 1911.

Very truly yours,

TIMOTHY S. HOGAN,

Attorney General.

TEACHER—COMPENSATION BY BOARD OF EDUCATION FOR SERVICES WITHOUT CERTIFICATE—SPECIAL LEGISLATIVE ACT VALID—CONSTITUTIONAL LAW.

A special act of the legislature providing for the payment by a board of education of compensation to a teacher who performed teacher's services without a certificate as well as janitor's services at the behest of said board, is not invalid.

COLUMBUS, OHIO, May 24, 1912.

HON. HOLLAND C. WEBSTER, Prosecuting Attorney, Toledo, Ohio.

DEAR SIR:—I beg to acknowledge receipt of your letter of February 14th, in which you inquire as follows:

> "Enclosed herewith find copies of communications from this office to the board of education of Washington township, this county, under dates of February 23, 1910, December 14, 1910 and August 19, 1911, which are self-explanatory.
> "You will note that the question involved is whether or not the board of education of Washington township, Lucas county, Ohio, can lawfully make payment to Miss Hattie Vermilyea of the sum of $345.00, said amount representing six months' services as teacher at $55.00 per month, and five months' services as janitress at $3.00 per month, these services covering a period of time during which Miss Vermilyea had no certificate authorizing her to teach.
> "I am advised that the board of education is well satisfied with the services rendered by Miss Vermilyea, and that it is ready and willing to pay the amount in question, provided an opinion is rendered them from this department or from your department, to the effect that they may lawfully do so. Permit me to say that the prosecuting attorney of this county is not inclined to interpose any objection to the payment of these services, provided that your department will approve the same. The accounting bureau, in making examination of the affairs of the township, will doubtless report the situation as one in which the board of education had no authority to make payment, unless it be that the provisions of house bill No. 352, entitled, 'An act to provide for the payment of a certain sum to Miss Hattie Vermilyea, Washington township, Lucas county, Ohio, as compensation for her services as a teacher and janitress,' as passed May 31, 1911, would authorize such payment.
> "If your department should be of the opinion that payment should be made to Miss Vermilyea as authorized in this act referred to, and the accounting bureau thereupon advised of such action, this department here will submit to your ruling in the matter. Kindly let us have your opinion at your earliest possible convenience."

In reply thereto I desire to say that Section 7690, General Code, provides as follows:

> "Each board of education shall have the management and control of all of the public schools of whatever name or character in the district. It may appoint a superintendent of the public schools, truant officers and janitors, and fix their salaries. If deemed essential for the best interests of the schools of the district, under proper rules and regulations, the board may appoint a superintendent of buildings, and such other employes as it deems necessary, and fix their salaries. Each board shall fix the salaries of all teachers, which may be increased, but not diminished during the term for which the appointment is made. Teachers must be paid for all time lost when the schools in which they are employed are closed owing to an epidemic or other public calamity."

I gather from the correspondence enclosed that Miss Vermilyea has taught school for many years, having a teacher's certificate, and that she was unable to take the examination for renewal of certificate on account of illness. There is considerable doubt as to the wisdom of requiring a teacher who has been licensed to teach for a period of years to continue to take an examination at stated intervals so long as she may wish to remain a teacher. This consideration, however, should not control the law, but it is a matter not to be left out of the facts in determining the question of whether or not, under all of the facts stated in your question, Miss Vermilyea should not be compensated for the time about which you inquire. It appears that she was a faithful teacher, rendered good service, and no complaint was made as to her competency.

No premium, it is true, is to be put upon the employment of any person who has not the qualifications required by law, yet the circumstances in this case disclose the good faith of the board of education. There is always some liberality to be shown in favor of one who is in any wise deficient on account of ill health. No doubt the board of education of Washington township had this in mind when it permitted Miss Vermilyea to continue teaching without a certificate, and doubtless, too, the last General Assembly acted upon this theory when it passed an act entitled:

"An act to provide for the payment of a certain sum to Miss Hattie Vermilyea, Washington township, Lucas county, Ohio, as compensation for her services as a teacher and janitress," found in 102 O. L., 481, and which is as follows:

"WHEREAS, Hattie Vermilyea, at the request of the board of education of Washington township, Lucas county, Ohio, and under a contract duly entered into, has taught such school during the months of February, March, April, May, June and September, 1910, without having received a certificate so to do, on account of sickness at that time, and

"WHEREAS, Miss Hattie Vermilyea at the request of such board rendered janitor services during the months of February, March, April, May and June, 1910, therefore,

Be it enacted by the General Assembly of the State of Ohio:

"SECTION 1. That the board of education in school district No. 9, of Washington township, Lucas county, Ohio, be and they are hereby authorized to pay Hattie Vermilyea out of the tuition fund under their control and not otherwise appropriated, the sum of three hundred and forty-five ($345) dollars, being the sum due her for her six months at $55.00 per month, and also due her for five months' janitor service at $3.00 per month.

"SECTION 2. Upon the order of the board of education of such township, the clerk of such board is hereby authorized to issue his warrants, and the treasurer of such board is hereby authorized to pay such warrant in favor of such Hattie Vermilyea out of the tuition fund under the control of such board of such township and not otherwise appropriated."

This department hesitates to pronounce any act of the legislature invalid, and never does so unless the act is clearly unconstitutional, or fatally defective, and added thereto, unless the recognition of the invalid statute as a lawful one were calculated to work future injury, public justice does not require the submission of Miss Vermilyea's claim to a court, and I therefore, without any hesitation, recommend to you to advise the board of education to give her voucher.

Very truly yours,

TIMOTHY S. HOGAN,
Attorney General.

GAMBLING DEVICE—SLOT MACHINES—EFFECT OF GIVING CHEWING GUM ON EVERY PLAY.

The operation of a slot machine where the player may receive from 5 cents to $2.00 per play, is none the less the operation of a gambling device within the prohibition of Sections 13056 and 13066, General Code, when the player is given a package of gum on every play.

COLUMBUS, OHIO, May 31, 1912.

HON. JOSEPH T. DOAN, Prosecuting Attorney, Wilmington, Ohio.

DEAR SIR:—I herewith acknowledge receipt of your communication of April 8th, 1912, wherein you state:

"The question that concerns a portion of this county is, How far can a slot machine go before it is run in violation of the law? A firm has a slot machine in its place of business, a 'nickel' is placed in the machine, and in return you are liable to get five-cent chips up to as high as $2.00 in the aggregate, a person receiving at least a package of chewing gum. Does the giving of the gum prevent the machine becoming a gambling device under the statutes?"

In reply thereto, I desire to say that Section 13056 of the General Code provides as follows:

"Whoever permits a game to be played for gain upon or by means of a device or machine in his house or in an outhouse, booth, arbor or erection of which he has the care or possession, shall be fined not less than fifty dollars nor more than two hundred dollars."

Section 13066 of the General Code provides as follows:

"Whoever keeps or exhibits for gain or to win or gain money or other property, a gambling table, or faro or keno bank, or a gambling device or machine, or keeps or exhibits a billiard table for the purpose of gambling or allows it to be so used, shall be fined not less than fifty dollars nor more than five hundred dollars and imprisoned not less than ten days nor more than ninety days, and shall give security in the sum of five hundred dollars for his good behavior for one year."

In construing the said sections the courts have held that slot machines are gambling devices, as follows:

"The plaintiff claims the sum of fifteen and seventy-five one-hundreth dollars ($15.75) for money lost and paid to defendant on account of a scheme of chance, commonly known as a slot machine * *.

"An attachment was issued under the provisions of Section 6489, Revised Statutes.

"It is claimed by the defendant, on a motion to dismiss the attachment, that the transaction upon which the action is brought is a gambling contract and therefore void and that an attachment will not lie upon such contract. * * * * *

"This leads to the inquiry whether the liability incurred in this case results from crime.

"The device used in the transaction is the cause of this action is known as a slot machine and is operated by inserting in a slot at the top a coin which finds its way into one of the several compartments at the bottom, according as it is deflected to one side or the other by pegs or other obstructions against which it may chance to strike.

"In my opinion it is clearly within the definition of a gambling machine, in Section 6934, Revised Statutes (Section 13066 of the General Code), the keeping of which for the purpose of gambling is punishable by fine and imprisonment, and is therefore a crime under the laws of this state."

(Wise vs. Martin, 5 O. D., 550. 7 Ohio, N. S., 660.)

Sixth syllabus.

"A slot machine is a 'gambling device within the meaning of Section 6933 Rev. Stat. (Section 13056 General Code) which prohibits the playing of any game whatsoever for gain by means of any 'gambling device or machine of any denomination or name.

"(Kubach vs. State, 14 O. D., 726, 1 O. N. P., n. s., 405.)"

It is my opinion that the giving of gum, whether equal to or less than the value of a nickel for each nickel placed in the slot of the machine, is not such an act or subterfuge as to take such machine from out of the operation of the statutes above quoted. As you suggest in your opinion, the nickel is put in to pay for the chance to get more than its value, which fact clearly brings such machine within what is termed a "gambling device."

There are no Ohio decisions decisive of the question as based upon the facts in your inquiry. I find upon investigation, however, that there are a number of decisions from other states which hold such machine to be a "gambling device" where the operator of the machine in every instance receives value or something of value for the money he puts into such machine and with a chance of receiving more than the value of money he so puts into such machine. I herewith quote from some of those decisions, as follows:

"A merchant who gives to a designated class of customers an opportunity to secure, by lot or chance, any article of value additional to that for which such customers have paid, violates the provisions of Section 407 of the Penal Code, which declares that 'no person shall keep, maintain, employ or carry on any lottery in this state, or other scheme or device for the hazarding of any money or valuable thing.'

"In Cullinan vs. Hosmer, 100 App. Div. 148, 91 N. Y., Supp. 607, the operation of a slot machine into which any person dropping five cents became entitled by its operations to at least one five-cent cigar, and possibly to three, was held to violate the condition of an undertaking of an applicant for a liquor tax certificate that he would not 'suffer or permit any gambling to be done in the place designated,' there being absent any element of chance and resulting loss so far as the operator of the machine was concerned; but in Re Cullinan, 114 App. Div., 654, 99 N. Y. Supp. 1097, the same court announces that, upon more mature consideration of the question, and in view of a decision of the court of appeals subsequently coming to its attention, it had arrived at a different conclusion. It was there held that the maintenance in a saloon of a slot machine known as the Yale Wonder Clock, which, upon being operated, discharged disks entitling the player to 5, 10, 15 or 25 cents in trade, was a violation of a provision of the liquor tax law prohibiting gambling in a saloon. The court said:

" 'The chief element of gambling is the chance or uncertainty of the hazard. The chance may be in winning at all, or in the amount to be won or lost. In using the present machine we may assume that the player cannot lose. By far the greater majority of the checks called in trade for the precise sum deposited in the slot. If every ticket represented five cents, the machine would not be patronized. The bait or inducement is that the player may get one of the checks for a sum in excess of the nickel he ventures; and that is the vice of the scheme. If he wins more than he pays, the proprietor must lose on that discharge of the ticket. To constitute gambling it is not important who may be the loser.'

"In Meeks vs. State (Texas Crim, App.) 74 S. W., 910, it was held that evidence that defendant kept in his saloon a slot machine, which, when operated upon the insertion of a nickel or a metal check, would display poker hands, such hands winning, in proportion to their value, various numbers of cigars; that, in paying the winnings, the machine did not work automatically, but retained what was played into it, and defendant in person paid the player; that it was generally the custom to pay in trade checks unless cigars were demanded; that there was printed on a card attached to the machine a statement, 'Every 5 cents played gets one 5-cent cigar,' but that if the party lost, defendant did not pay anything unless he demanded it; and it was not the general rule of players to ask for and receive anything unless they won; that the machine would win in such a rising scale that, while it would play about even, it would lose altogether about four times out of five; that the machine was kept as a trade leader for the purpose of attracting crowds into the defendant's place of business and increasing his sales—was sufficient to sustain a conviction for exhibiting a gambling table and bank, commonly called a 'slot machine,' for the purpose of gambling.

"In State vs. Vasquez, 49 Fla., 126, 38 So., 830, it was held that a machine from which one who put in a check, costing five cents, stood a chance of getting, in addition to a cheap cigar and a tune from a musical instrument, two or more, up to forty, additional checks that were good for five cents each in trade at the place in which the machine was placed, was a gambling apparatus which was not protected by a statute licensing 'lung testers,' striking machines, weighing machines, chewing gum stands, or automatic penny in the slot machines, or any other device of a similar nature,' especially where the state constitution expressly prohibits lotteries.

"In Lythe vs. State (Tex. Crim. App.) 100 S. W. 1160, it was held that one who, on various occasions, deposited a nickel in a contrivance known as a Yale Wonder Clock, which discharged checks entitling the player to 5, 10, 15 or 25 cents worth of merchandise, working automatically and requiring no personal supervision, was properly convicted of unlawfully betting at a gambling table and bank.

Second syllabus.

"A slot machine, so operated that the operator putting into it a nickel coin receives in any event a cigar of the value of his coin, and also stands to win by chance additional cigars without further payment, is a gambling device.

"(Lang vs. Merwin, 99 Maine Reports, 486.)"

Therefore it is my conclusion under the circumstances and facts stated in your inquiry that the mere giving away of chewing gum does not prevent such machine from being a "gambling device" and that furthermore such machines come within the prohibition of the statutes of Ohio, as above quoted.

Very truly yours,

TIMOTHY S. HOGAN,

Attorney General.

ROADS — ONE MILE TURNPIKE ASSESSMENTS — COMMISSIONERS MUST BE APPOINTED FROM JUDICIOUS FREEHOLDERS RESIDENT WITHIN BOUNDS OF ROAD.

The recent introduction by the legislature into the statutes relating to one mile asessment pikes, of language requiring the road commissioners to be selected from judicious freeholders "residing within the bounds of the road," makes clear the legislative intent that others than such freeholders cannot be appointed even when such resident freeholders do not exist.

COLUMBUS, OHIO, June 3, 1912.

HON. JOHN G. ROMER, Prosecuting Attorney, Celina, Ohio.

DEAR SIR:—I beg to acknowledge receipt of your letter of March 6th, which is in part as follows:

"We have two petitions before the county commissioners for road improvement under 'One Mile Assessment Pikes' under Section 7232 to 7321, General Code.

"Section 7234 provides that the county commissioners shall appoint three judicious freeholders residing within the bounds of said road, to be commissioners of said free turnpike road.

"Query: Can the commissioners appoint any other than freeholders living within the bounds of said road in case where there are not three judicious freeholders?

"In both cases there are but two resident land owners living within the bounds of said improvements, the lands being owned by persons living outside of the bounds of said limits as laid down; in one case we could have but one who could act, as the other is an invalid. The people owning lands to be assessed are in favor of proposed improvements and prefer the 'one mile assessment law' and would all agree to let the township trustees act as commissioners or any other that might be appointed. There are renters on said lands within territory, but they are not freeholders."

So far as a careful search of the digests of decisions of the courts of this state reveals, your question has not been adjudicated. A consideration of the history of this statute is therefore important in order to determine the legislative intent in its enactment. As originally enacted, March 29, 1875 (72 O. S., 93), it provided for the appointment of road commissioners to lay out and establish free turnpikes, in the following language:

"Said commissioners shall appoint three judicious freeholders of the county, to be commissioners of such free turnpike road."

This law was amended in several particulars, March 28, 1876 (73 O. L. 96), but the above quoted language was retained.

Said statute became Section 4775 of the Revised Statutes and the language thereof remained unchanged until April 16, 1900 (94 O. L., 334), when it was amended so as to read as follows:

"Thereupon the commissioners shall appoint three judicious freeholders of the county, resident within the bounds of said road, etc."

and the same was carried into the General Code as Section 7234, as above quoted.

The addition of the words "resident within the bounds of said road" clearly indicates, to my mind, the disapproval of the General Assembly of the method of appointment of such road commissioners previously in vogue, and the intention of that body to limit the appointment of such commissioners to freeholders, resident within the bounds of a road, rather than freeholders of the county generally, as had been the law for twenty-five years.

It is, therefore, my opinion that county commissioners, under the law as it now exists, may not legally appoint, as commissioners of said road, persons other than freeholders resident within the bounds thereof.

I am aware of the inconvenience which this holding may cause, but it is the only one I can consistently make in view of the plain provisions of said statute.

Very truly yours,

TIMOTHY S. HOGAN,

Attorney General.

SICK, POOR—COUNTY COMMISSIONERS—FORMATION OF CORPORATION FOR PURPOSE OF LEASING ROOMS FROM PRIVATE HOSPITAL AND RECEIVING COUNTY FUNDS FOR CARE OF INDIGENT SICK—INDIRECT VIOLATION OF LAW.

An independent corporation formed for the purposes of leasing rooms from a private hospital for profit, could not constitute such a hospital as is contemplated by Sections 2502 and 2181-1, General Code, authorizing the county commissioners to make payments to charitable hospitals for the care of indigent sick and disabled.

The formation of such a corporation for these purposes would constitute an attempt to do indirectly what could not be done directly, namely: an arrangement with the private hospital for profit from which the rooms were intended to be leased.

COLUMBUS, OHIO, June 7, 1912.

HON. ALLEN T. WILLIAMSON, Prosecuting Attorney, Marietta, Ohio.

DEAR SIR:—Your favor of February 27, 1912, is received, in which you inquire as to certain powers of the county commissioners under Section 2502 of the General Code. The facts and inquiry are stated in your communication of March 9, 1912, as follows:

> "The Marietta Hospital Company, a private corporation, maintains for profit the Washington Hospital in the city of Marietta, Washington county, Ohio. There is, at present, no hospital in Washington county supported by public funds. The management of the Washington Hospital proposed to the commissioners of Washington county, with a view to receiving an appropriation from the county poor fund under Section 2502, General Code of Ohio, that they, co-operating with others, acting as individuals and not for the hospital company, will organize another corporation for purely charitable purposes which will maintain two or three rooms which the new corporation will rent from the Marietta Hospital Company, in which the indigent poor of the county may receive, free of charge, needed medical and surgical treatment. Such new corporation will have no sectarian connections.
> "Would the commissioners, under said Section 2502, be authorized to pay money to such new corporation maintaining said rooms for charitable purposes? Is the maintaining of such rooms the maintaining of a 'hospital organized or incorporated for purely charitable purposes.'"

A further inquiry has been received as to whether such arrangement can be made under Section 3138-1, General Code. This latter inquiry reads:

> "I wish to have your opinion as to whether a hospital is organized for charitable purposes within our county, under Section 3138-1, as provided in the year book of the laws of Ohio number 101, on page 166, being known as house bill number 259. Whether or not a company or organization of that character not owning, or having leased a building of their own could enter into a contract with another company, who owned and maintained a hospital for profit, for the use of two three wards or rooms in said company's hospital building, and thereby under the above statutes maintain a charitable hospital independent from the hospital company from which they rent, and by having leased the said rooms run a charitable hospital, such as provided for in said section, and whether or not in your opinion the county commissioners would have the authority to enter into a contract with said charitable hospital, to provide means to support the same."

The plans proposed in each of the above inquiries are substantially the same and may be considered together.

Section 2502, General Code, provides:

"Except in counties containing hospitals supported by public funds, the commissioners of any county, in their discretion, may pay to a hospital organized or incorporated for purely charitable purposes, in which the indigent poor of the county may receive free of charge medical and surgical treatment, a sum not to exceed twenty-five hundred dollars each year. Such amount shall be paid from the county poor fund in equal payments on the first day of January and July, and shall be for the maintenance and support of such indigent poor and the reimbursement of such hospital for treatment thereof. Nothing herein shall authorize the payment of public funds to a sectarian institution."

Section 3138-1, General Code, provides:

"That the board of county commissioners of any county may enter into an agreement with a corporation or association, organized for charitable purposes in such county where a hospital has been established or may hereafter be established, for the sick and disabled, upon such terms and conditions as may be agreed upon between said commissioners and such corporation or association, and said commissioners shall provide for the payment for the amount agreed upon, either in one payment, or installment, or so much from year to year as the parties stipulate."

The agreements contemplated by both sections are to be made by the county commmissioners with a hospital or association organized for charitable purposes. The Marietta Hospital Company is a corporation organized for profit and is maintaining a hospital. This hospital is not maintained for charitable purposes and it is conceded that it does not meet the requirements of either Section 2502, General Code, or of Section 3138-1, thereof. An agreement could not, therefore, be entered into directly with The Marietta Hospital Company under either section.

It is proposed, in order to meet the requirements of the statutes, that a corporation be organized for charitable purposes and that the new corporation lease from the old company two or three rooms or wards wherein the indigent poor may receive medical attention and care. It is not stated whether or not this new corporation will maintain these rooms for others than the indigent poor. That fact would have no bearing upon the conclusion reached herein.

The purpose of the statutes is apparently to provide for the medical attention and care of the indigent poor of the county, in a hospital maintained for the usual purposes of a hospital.

It is necessary to ascertain the nature of the institution that is contemplated by the sections under consideration.

A hospital is defined in the second edition of Black's Law Dictionary, as follows:

> "Hospital. An institution for the reception and care of sick, wounded, infirm or aged persons; generally incorporated, and then of the class of corporations called 'eleemosynary' or 'charitable.'"

In 21 Cyc. at page 1105 a hospital is defined:

> "A hospital is an institution for the reception and care of sick, wounded, infirm or aged persons; generally incorporated, and then of the class of corporations called 'eleemosynary' for the perpetual distribution of the free alms of their founders."

In order to constitute a hospital the institution must be prepared to receive and take care of the sick, infirm or aged. It must have rooms for receiving the patients and also the means of giving them the proper attention.

The hospital or association contemplated by Sections 2502 and 3138-1 of the General Code is one which is prepared and equipped to receive and to take care of the sick and wounded. The leasing of two of three rooms or wards from a company maintaining a hospital for profit, would not, in my opinion, meet the requirements of the statutes. This would be especially true if the old hospital would furnish the care and attention to the patients.

Even though such a corporation as is proposed to be formed, should meet all the requirements of a hospital, the manner of leasing the rooms from a hospital run for profit, would preclude the county commissioners from entering into an agreement with it.

The new corporation would be the instrument that would permit the county commissioners to enter indirectly into a contract with the present hospital company. It is seen that an agreement cannot be entered into with them directly.

The money to be paid by the county commissioners to the proposed corporation would in turn be paid to the old company in the form of rental. For all intents and purposes the money may as well be paid directly to the old company, as in the end it secures the benefit of the payment. Under such an arrangement it would be very difficult to distinguish between the money received by the new company and that received by the old for rent. Such an arrangement would violate the principle of law that what cannot be done directly cannot be done indirectly.

The purpose in view is no doubt a worthy one but the statutes under consideration will not permit it to be carried out under the plans proposed.

In entering into a contract of this nature the provisions of Section 6 of Article 8 of the Ohio Constitution must be considered.

The application of this section of the constitution to Section 3138-1, General Code, was considered in an opinion given to Hon. C. A. Leist of Circleville under date of February 7, 1911. The conclusions therein reached will apply also to a contract under Section 2502, General Code. A copy of that opinion is herewith enclosed.

Respectfully,
TIMOTHY S. HOGAN,
Attorney General.

VILLAGE SCHOOL DISTRICT WHEN VALUATION REACHES $100,000—NO POWER TO TRANSFER TO TOWNSHIP—TOWNSHIP TERRITORY MAY BE TRANSFERRED TO VILLAGE SCHOOL DISTRICT.

Under Section 4681, General Code, when a village obtains a valuation of $100,000, it becomes ipso facto a village school district and in view of this statute, any attempt to transfer the village district to the township disrict would be useless.

Section 4681, General Code, however, contemplates that territory of the township which is contiguous to the village, may be attached to the village school district, and there is no legal objection to making such transfers, under the procedure provided by Sections 4692 et seq., General Code.

In making such transfer, however, its effect upon the right of centralization of schools should be considered.

COLUMBUS, OHIO, May 24, 1912.

HON. RICHARD H. SUTPHEN, Prosecuting Attorney, Defiance, Ohio.

DEAR SIR:—Under date of May 14, 1912, you inquire as follows:

> "In Tiffin township in this county is located the small village of Ney, which prior to the last quadrennial appraisement had an assessed valuation of less than $100,000.00. The board of education of Tiffin township has always up to this time included the territory of the village of Ney within its jurisdiction but it, Ney, has now arrived at a point where it constitutes a separate village school district. The village clerk advises me that it is the sentiment of a large majority of the citizens in the district and the village that the township board should continue to look after the affairs in the village district as well as in the township outside of the village and they requested me to advise them as to the proper steps to be taken to accomplish this purpose. I have examined the law thoroughly and the only statute which in my opinion might possibly permit the transfer of the territory from the village to the township school district is Section 4693 of the General Code.
> "The question upon which I wish your opinion is this: Under Sections 4693-4-6 and 6 may all of the territory comprising the village school district of Ney be transferred to the Tiffin township school district thus in effect working a dissolution of the Ney village school district and placing its affairs under the jurisdiction of the township board."

Section 4681, General Code, provides when a village shall become a village school district, as follows:

> "Each village, together with the territory attached to it for school purposes, and excluding the territory within its corporate limits detached for school purposes, and having in the district thus formed a total tax valuation of not less than one hundred thousand dollars, shall constitute a village school district."

This section was construed in an opinion given to Hon. James F. Bell, of London, Ohio, on April 18, 1912, a copy of which is herewith enclosed. As held in that opinion the village constitutes a village school district when it has the necessary tax valuation, but continues under control of the township district until the village district can be properly organized.

The village of Ney has a tax valuation of over $100,000.00 and is thereby constituted a village school district. I find no provision of statute authorizing a dissolution or discontinuance of a village school district which has a tax valuation of not less than one hundred thousand dollars.

Section 4682, General Code, governs when the tax valuation is less than $100,000.00, and reads as follows:

> "A village, together with the territory attached to it for school purposes, and excluding the territory within its corporate limits detached for school purposes, with a tax valuation of less than one hundred thousand dollars, shall not constitute a village school district, but the proposition to dissolve or organize such village school district shall be submitted by the board of education to the electors of such village at any general or a special election called for that purpose, and be so determined by a majority vote of such electors."

You inquire if all the territory of a village school district may be transferred to a township school district by virtue of the provisions of Sections 4693, et seq., of the General Code.

Section 4693, General Code, provides:

> "Territory may also be transferred from one school district to another as follows: A petition, signed by not less than one-half of the qualified male citizens who are electors, residing in the territory sought to be transferred and accompanied by a correct map of the territory, shall be filed with the clerks of the boards of education interested. If such boards of education fail or refuse to transfer such territory by mutual consent, as herein provided, within sixty days from the filing of the petition and map, the petitioner shall file a copy of the petition and map in the probate court of the county in which the territory is situated, or, if it be situated in two or more counties, in the probate court of the county containing the largest proportionate share of the territory to be transferred. The petitioners shall give satisfactory security for the costs in the sum of one hundred dollars, conditioned that they will pay all the costs in case the transfer is not granted."

The following sections provide for the hearing, judgment and costs, and the apportionment of funds.

What would be the result if all of the territory of a village school district should be transferred to a township school district? The village school district of Ney has not as yet been organized. It is still under the jurisdiction of the township board of education. If the territory of the village district is transferred to the township school district, you find yourself at the point where you started when the village of Ney secured a tax valuation of $100,000.00. You would have a village with a tax duplicate of $100,000.00 and yet not organized into a village school district. The provisions of Section 4681, General Code, would apply and the territory of the village would again constitute a village school district. Even though the provisions of Section 4693, General Code, would authorize the transfer of the whole territory of Ney, it would be a useless ceremony. The plain provision of Section 4681, General Code, could not thereby be defeated.

What is really wanted by the people affected is to have the schools of the village and township under the same jurisdiction.

Section 4679, General Code, enumerates the kind of school districts, as follows:

> "The school districts of the state shall be styled, respectively, city school districts, village school districts, township school districts and special school districts."

Section 4680, General Code, states what shall constitute a city school district. Sections 4681 and 4682, General Code, apply to village school districts and have already been quoted herein.

Section 4683, General Code, defines what shall constitute a township school district, as follows:

> "Each civil township, together with the territory attached to it for school purposes, and excluding the territory within its established limits detached for school purposes, shall constitute a township school district."

All other school districts are special school districts as provided in Section 4684, General Code, which reads:

> "Any school district, other than a city, village or township school district, and any school district organized under the provisions of chapter five of this title, shall constitute a special school district."

Section 4728, General Code, which is found in chapter five above referred to in Section 4684, provides for special school districts as follows:

> "A special school district may be formed of any contiguous territory, not included within the limits of a city or village, which has a total tax valuation of not less than one hundred thousand dollars."

It is apparent that the territory in the village of Ney cannot be a part of a city school district. It has also been seen that it cannot be transferred to a township school district. It cannot be formed into a special school district under Section 4728, General Code, because that section specifically excludes from its provisions territory within a city or village.

Section 4681, General Code, by which the village becomes a village school district contemplates that territory may be attached to a village school district for school purposes. The territory to be attached would have to come from territory contiguous to the village, which in this case is the township. The territory of the township school district, or part thereof could be transferred to the vilage school district.

The statute does not require a township to be or to have a township school district. The township school district takes the territory of the township which is not included in any other school district. There are townships in this state which are composed entirely of special districts, and which have no township school district. Others are co-extensive with a municipality and have no township school district.

If it is desired to have all the territory of the township under the jurisdiction of one school board, it can only be done by organizing the village school district and transfer the territory to the village school district. Section 4692, General

Code and Sections 4693 et seq., General Code, provide the means by which the transfer can be made.

Before transferring the territory, however, the right of centralization of schools of a township should be taken into consideration, and the effect that such transfer of territory would have upon the right of centralization.

Whether or not this method is practicable or desirable must be determined by those who are directly interested in the question.

Respectfully,
TIMOTHY S. HOGAN,
Attorney General.

ROADS—REPAIR OF COUNTY LINE ROAD—NO POWER TO PURCHASE RIGHT OF WAY AROUND SINK HOLE.

The language of Section 6901, General Code, providing for the repair of a county line road, which has become impassable by reason of a sink hole, fissure, washout or other obstruction, is clear and definite and no authority can be implied therefrom to enable the county commissioners to purchase a right of way around a sink hole, instead of filling, bridging or pontooning the same as provided by this statute.

COLUMBUS, OHIO, June 14, 1912.

HON. C. H. DUNCAN, Prosecuting Attorney, Urbana, Ohio.

DEAR SIR:—I beg to acknowledge receipt of your letter, wherein you state:

> "A road established and opened upon the line between Champaign and Logan counties has become impassable by reason of a sink hole. Notice thereof in writing has been filed with the county auditors of the respective counties and the boards of county commissioners have held a meeting at the office of the Champaign county board, said county being the older of the two counties. The time for this meeting was fixed by the auditor of Champaign county who gave written notice to all of such boards, and the boards went on the line of the roads and jointly viewed the sink hole.
> "They have taken certain adjournments and have certain advice from competent engineers and it has been found that it will probably require several thousand dollars to fill the sink hole. It has also been determined that it would be much cheaper to purchase a right of way around the sink hole than to attempt to fill same.
> "You will note that Section 6901 of the General Code, which, by the way, was enacted to meet the special situation above set forth, provides only for a repair of such a road by filling, pontooning or bridging. I desire to inquire, whether, in the opinion of your office, implied authority exists under said Section 6901 in the boards of county commissioners of the two counties, to purchase a right of way around a sink hole and divide the costs and expenses of purchasing said right of way and building a roadway upon the same in equal parts between the two counties. Also as to whether such new roadway would be and remain a county line road despite the fact that it would be entirely within the confines of one county.

"I have doubted myself whether the statutes would authorize the procedure outlined in purchasing a new right of way and dividing the cost, and have refused to advise the board of commissioners of my county to enter into such a contract unless the matter first be submitted and approved by your office."

Section 6901 of the General Code, cited by you, reads as follows:

"When a road, established and opened upon a county line, becomes impassable by reason of a sink hole, fissure, washout or other obstruction, or is in need of repair from any cause, the boards of county commissioners of the respective counties, when notice thereof in writing is filed with the county auditor of the respective counties, shall meet in session at the office of the board of county commissioners of the oldest of such counties, at a time to be fixed by the auditor of such oldest county in a written notice to be by such auditor given to all of such boards, and go upon the line of said road and jointly view it and such sink holes, fissures, washouts or other obstructions as may then be thereon. They shall adjourn, from time to time, and from place to place, to meet in joint session, and, by necessary orders, proceedings and other joint action, cause such road to be repaired and restored by filling, pontooning or bridging such sink hole, fissure or washout or by filling or removing any other obstruction therein. When necessary they may direct a competent engineer to prepare specifications and estimates. (99 vs. 485—4658*a*.)"

It is well settled law in Ohio that where a statute is plain and unambiguous, whether its provisions are wise or equitable, courts have no authority, by judicial construction to read anything into or out of it.

In the case of Heck vs. The State, 44 O. S. 536, the following language is used by Judge Minshall in rendering the opinion of the court, on page 537:

"Where the language is plain and leads to no absurd results, there is no room for construction, and it is the duty of the courts to give it the effect required by the plain and ordinary signification of the words used."

Sedwick on statutory and constitutional law, 231, says:

"When the law is clear and explicit, and its provisions are susceptible of but one interpretation, its consequences if evil can only be avoided by a change of the law itself, to be effected by legislation, and not judicial action. Where a law is plain and unambiguous whether it be expressed in general or limited terms the legislature should be intended to mean what they have plainly expressed, and consequently no room is left for construction."

The language used in Section 6910 is, to my mind, clear and unambiguous, and in view of the above cited authorities, I am constrained to hold that county commissioners, under said section are wholly without authority to do anything except what is expressly permitted therein.

Very truly yours,

TIMOTHY S. HOGAN,

Attorney General.

ROAD IMPROVEMENTS—TOWNSHIP ROAD DISTRICTS—POWER OF TRUSTEES TO GRADE, GRAVEL OR MACADAMIZE—WORK TO BE LET ON CONTRACT.

The improvements dealt with in Sections 7033 to 7052, General Code, providing for the creation of township road districts, are such road improvements only as are constructed of gravel or macadam.

The trustees are authorized by these statutes to do the necessary grading, culverting, draining or bridging in the construction these roads, as incidental only however, to the graveling or macadamizing.

All work in this connection must be let upon contract as provided by Sections 7025, 7026, 7027, 7046 and 7047, General Code, except such work as is required to be done under the supervision of the road superintendents as presented by Section 7024, General Code.

COLUMBUS, OHIO, May 29, 1912.

HON. WM. VINCENT CAMPBELL, Prosecuting Attorney, Belmont County, St. Clairsville, Ohio.

DEAR SIR:—Under date of March 26, 1911, you wrote as follows:

> "As you will see by the enclosed letter I have been requested to get your opinion on the improvement of roads provided for under Sections 7033, to 7052, inclusive. I have already given these same parties my opinion on the matter and am enclosing you copy of the same; the bonds provided for have already been issued, and the trouble among them seems to be as to the manner of improving; some of the trustees claiming they can do nothing but macadamize."

The letter to which you refer was addressed to you by the clerk of Washington township, Belmont county, and reads in part as follows:

> "In improving roads under Sections 7033 to 7052 of the General Code of Ohio, are the trustees required to build permanent macadam or gravel roads? Can they improve any roads by grading only? Must all work be let at contract?"

Sections 7033 to 7052 inclusive, of the General Code, constitute a subdivision of the title "township roads," entitled "township or precinct a road district," and provide the method of improving township roads when certain preliminary steps looking toward the erection of the township or part thereof into a road district have been complied with. The entire subdivision must be considered in order to determine the power of township trustees and not merely one section. The following section I deem sufficient in the solution of your question:

> "Section 7033. The board of trustees of a township, when, in their opinion, it is expedient and necessary, and for the public convenience and welfare, to improve the public ways of the township, in whole or in part, by grading, macadamizing or graveling, draining, culverting, and bridging, by resolution, may create the township into a road district for the purpose of improving the public ways therein, or any number of them. If, in the township, there is a municipal corporation or corporations, such trustees, by resolution, may erect the portion or portions of the township not included within the corporate limits of a municipal corporation, into such road district. In like manner the trustees may erect an election precinct, or part thereof, in the township, into such road district. (94 V. 129 Section 1.)

"Section 7045. Thereupon the trustees shall determine the order and manner in which the public ways shall be improved, beginning, so far as practicable, with the main roads. In improving such public ways the macadamized or graveled portion shall be located, when practicable, so as to leave sufficient space for a dirt road at its side. The graveled or macadamized portion shall be not less than eight nor more than fourteen feet in width, and the gravel or macadam shall be not less than twelve inches in depth in the center, and eight inches in depth at each outer side. (94 V. 130 Section 6.)

"Section 7046. As the improvement of each public way is determined upon, the engineer shall divide the improvement into working sections and make a correct profile of each thereof, as it then exists, and a profile of the grades established for its improvement, and prepare specifications for, and an estimate of, the cost of each working section of such improvement, which shall be filed and recorded in the office of the clerk of the township. (94 V. 131 Section 7.)"

You will note that all of these sections as well as others in the same subdivisions refer to the improvement of roads and it becomes necessary to determine what is meant by an improvement as described in these statutes. It was held in an opinion recently rendered to you by this department that an improved road is one constructed from any of the various classes of material prescribed by the statutes for road building. Applying that definition to the present case I am of the opinion that an improved road would be one constructed from gravel or macadum. Section 7045 specifically provides for the location of the graveled or macadamized portion of such road, the width of the road bed and the depth of the gravel or macadam thereon, and Section 7046 provides, among other things, that the surveyor shall make a profile of the grades established for the road improvement. Grading is a mere incident of the improvement and is not of itself an improvement in the sense contemplated by the foregoing statutes. I am of the opinion that a road to be improved within the meaning of these statutes must be built of macadam or gravel but that the trustees as incident to the improvement may grade, culvert, drain or bridge the same when necessary.

In answer to the question as to whether all work must be let upon contract I call your attention to the following sections:

"Section 7046. As the improvement of each public way is determined upon, the engineer shall divide the improvement into working sections and make a correct profile of each thereof, as it then exists, and a profile of the grades established for its improvement, and prepare specifications for, and an estimate of, the costs of each working section of such improvement, which shall be filed and recorded in the office of the clerk of the township. (94 V. 131 Section 7.)

"Section 7047. The contracts for furnishing the materials and performing the labor in and about such improvement, shall be made by such sections and in like manner as provided by law for other township improvements. (94 V. 131 Section 8.)

"Section 7024. The trustees may consolidate the road districts through which such proposed road improvement passes, and direct the superintendents thereof to work the two days' labor therein in hauling material, such as crushed stone or gravel, upon the road. Such hauling shall be under the supervision of the superintendents of the district, but must be performed in such manner as is prescribed by the trustees. (93 V. 157 Section 3.)

"Section 7025. A majority of the board of trustees shall be necessary to order such road improvement. The work of the construction and the furnishing of the material therefor shall be publicly let, excepting such work as may be done by the road superintendent of the road district as above provided. The contract for the material to be used in the construction of the road improvement, and the contracts for hauling material upon the roads, shall be let separately. (98 V. 341 Section 4.)

"Section 7026. The trustees after having given public notice of the time and place of such letting for at least two weeks, in a newspaper of general circulation in the township or county, or by hand-bills, or both, at the discretion of the board of trustees, specifying the kind and quality of material, and the part of the road upon which it is to be used, shall let the contract to the lowest bidder, who shall give bond to the acceptance of the trustees. (93 V. 158 Section 5.)

"Section 7027. The trustees may accept donations of material or labor for the benefit of any or all roads to be improved, and the road upon which the largest donation is offered shall be constructed first. The bids for the material and for the work of hauling it shall be separately stated, and the trustees may reject any or all bids. (93 V. 158 Section 5.)"

It is my conclusion, therefore, that township trustees must let all work upon contract as provided by Section 7025, 7026, 7027, 7046 and 7047 except such work as is required to be done under the supervision of the road superintendents as prescribed by Section 7024.

Very truly yours,
TIMOTHY S. HOGAN,
Attorney General.

BURIALS—WHEN DUTY OF COUNTY TO BURY PAUPERS DYING IN BENEVOLENT OR CHARITABLE INSTITUTIONS.

Under Section 3495, General Code, there devolves upon the county the duty of burying persons dying in benevolent or charitable institutions which are situated in the county and not supported by the state, when such dead person had a legal settlement in the county, or whose legal settlement was not in the state or unknown, and when the body is not claimed for private burial or is not delivered for the purpose of medical or surgical study or dissection, in accordance with law.

COLUMBUS, OHIO, June 11, 1912.

HON. LEWIS MALLOW, Assistant Prosecuting Attorney, Toledo, Ohio.

DEAR SIR:—Your favor of April 24th received. You inquire:

"When does it become the duty and obligation of the county to make burials of persons dying in benevolent or charitable institutions which are situated within the county and not supported by the state?"

Section 3495 of the General Code provides as follows:

"When information is given to the trustees of a township or proper officer of a municipal corporation, that the dead body of a person, having a legal settlement in the county, or whose legal settlement is not in the state or is unknown, and not the inmate of a penal, reformatory, benevolent or charitable institution, has been found in such township or corporation and is not claimed by any person for private interment at his own expensse or delivered for the purpose of medical or surgical study or dissection in accordance with law, they shall cause it to be buried at the expense of the township or corporation, but, if such trustees or officer notify the infirmary directors, such directors shall cause the body to be buried at the expense of the county."

Section 3496 of the General Code provides:

"In a township in which is located a state benevolent institution, the trustees of the township shall pay all expenses of the burial of a pauper that dies in such institution, and send an itemized bill of the expenses thereof to the infirmary directors of the county from which the pauper was sent to the institution. Such infirmary directors shall immediately pay the bill to such township trustees."

Section 9984 of the General Code is as follows:

"Superintendents of city hospitals, directors or superintendents of city or county infirmaries, directors or superintendents of work-houses, directors or superintendents of asylums for the insane, or other charitable institutions founded and supported in whole or in part at public expense, the directors or warden of the penitentiary, township trustees, sheriffs, or coroners, in possession of bodies not claimed or identified, or which must be buried at the expense of the county or township, before burial, shall hold such bodies not less than thirty-six hours and notify the professor of anatomy in a college which by its charter is empowered to teach anatomy, or the president of a county medical society, of the fact that such bodies are being so held. Before or after such burial such superintendent, director, or other officer, on the written application of the professor of anatomy, or the president of a county medical society shall deliver to such professor or president, for the purpose of medical or surgical study or dissection, the body of a person who died in either of such institutions, from any disease, not infectious, if it has not been requested for interment by any person at his own expense."

The above three sections of the General Code cover all cases of the disposal of dead bodies of indigent and unclaimed poor, except the unknown, or indigent, dying from contagious diseases.

Section 3496 governs in cases where the pauper dies in a benevolent institution supported by the state.

Section 3495 of the General Code provides for the burial of a person having a legal settlement in the county or whose legal settlement is not in the state, or is unknown, and not the inmate of a penal, reformatory, benevolent or charitable institution. The benevolent and charitable institutions referred to in Section 3495 of the General Code are benevolent and charitable institutions supported in whole or in part by the state.

I am of the opinion that if a pauper taken care of by some private, benevolent or charitable institution, situated within Lucas county and not supported by the state, should die and the charitable institution should notify the proper municipal officer or township trustees, it would be the duty of the township trustees or the proper officer in the municipal corporation, to bury such person and if such person had a legal settlement in the county, or whose legal settlement was not in the state, or was unknown, and was not claimed by any person for private interment or delivery for the purpose of medical or surgical study or dissection in accordance with law, that they should cause said body to be buried at the expense of said township or corporation; or should notify the infirmary directors and the infirmary directors should bury the body at the expense of the county.

The fact that the county is saved the expense of providing for the indigent poor who are taken care of by private benevolent institutions, is no reason why these institutions should have the burden of burying the pauper dead. A pauper may be kept at some private residence without extra expense to the county out of the goodness of heart of the owner. On his death, he may not desire to have the expense and trouble of burial and he can notify the proper authorities and burial will be provided for by law.

So it is with a purely private, charitable institution. It may provide for persons, as was done in Toledo, so long as they live. On their death, they may desire the public to provide for their burial. In that event, they should give the information to the trustees of the township or proper officer of a municipal corporation as provided by Section 3495 of the General Code.

Answering your question specifically, it becomes the duty and obligation of the county, to make burial (of persons dying in benevolent or charitable institutions which are situated in the county, and not supported by the state) when the dead body of a person having a legal settlement in the county, or whose legal settlement is not in this state, or is unknown, and not an inmate of a penal, reformatory, benevolent or charitable institution supported by the state, in whole or in part, has been found in such township or corporation and is not claimed by any person for private interment at his own expense or is not delivered for the purpose of medical or surgical study or dissection in accordance with law.

Very truly yours,

TIMOTHY S. HOGAN,

Attorney General.

SMITH ONE PER CENT. LAW—GARRET LAW—ROAD IMPROVEMENT NOT WITHIN TOWNSHIP TWO MILL LIMITATION—SPECIAL DISTRICTS.

Levies under the Garret road law are "levies in special districts created for road improvements over which the budget commission shall have no control," within the meaning of Section 9 of Section 5649-3a, General Code, and therefore, such levies are not included within the requirement of Section 5649-3a that the aggregate of all taxes by a township for township purposes, shall not exceed in any one year, two mills.

COLUMBUS, OHIO, June 20, 1912.

HONORABLE CHARLES S. HATFIELD, Prosecuting Attorney, Wood County; L. E. MALLOW, Assistant Prosecuting Attorney, Lucas County, and J. W. SMITH, Prosecuting Attorney, Putnam County, Ohio.

GENTLEMEN:—I beg to acknowledge receipt of a brief prepared by yourselves, with the assistance of Honorable Edward M. Fries, in the matter of the application of the Smith one per cent. law, so-called, to levies under what is known as the Garret road law. I wish to take this opportunity of expressing my appreciation of your courtesy in furnishing this brief in conformity to my own request.

I have read your brief with great care and interest. With equal interest I have read the opinion of special counsel in this office, Mr. Clarence D. Laylin, who still adheres to the former opinions of this department. I might say by way of introduction that when the former opinion reached me for inspection and examination, it was while one of the hotly contested bribery cases was on, and I found it somewhat difficult to bring myself to that clear consideration of the case which its importance demanded. This, however, was not due to any lack of interest, but to physical and mental exhaustion. Whatever doubts I had, and I was not without them, I resolved them in favor of the writer of the opinion, who I can say with both truth and propriety, is a lawyer of exceptional ability, and the very highest order of integrity, and from whose opinions I very rarely have occasion to dissent. My own general views in the beginning led me to the same conclusion as those I am herein going to express, but looking at it from the angle by which it was viewed by Mr. Laylin, I drifted to his conclusion. In the beginning, it may be said, that the policy of the state has been, and particularly is now, toward the making and maintaining of good and safe public highways. All of the exceptions in reference to taxation as disclosed by a reading of the living statutes, as well as those not in force, disclose this.

The question we are interested in is this: Do the provisions of Section 5649-3*a* of the General Code which read as follows:

> "The aggregate of all taxes that may be levied by a township for township purposes, on the taxable property in the township on the tax list, shall not exceed in any one year two mills."

apply to the tax which, under the Garret law, may be levied by the county commissioners on the duplicate of the township or townships in which the road to be improved is located?

The limitation referred to is found in subdivision 9 of Section 5649-3*a* of the General Code. This inter alis provides:

> "* * * Such limits for county, township, municipal and school levies shall be exclusive of any special levy, provided for by a vote of the electors, special assessments, levies for road taxes that may be worked out by the tax payers, and levies and assessments in special districts created for road or ditch improvements, over which the budget commissioners shall have no control."

The budget commissioners, of course, have control over the internal limitations, and the sole question to be here determined is whether or not your townships are bound by the following provisions without the exceptions, to-wit:

> "The aggregate of all taxes that may be levied by a township for township purposes, on the taxable property in the township on the tax list, shall not exceed in any one year two mills."

No exceptions mentioned, in my judgment, apply, unless it be under the heading of—"levies and assessments in special districts created for road or ditch improvements." Now, is a district created for road improvement when the plan provided for by Sections 6926 et seq., has been followed? Section 6926 of the General Code is as follows:

> "When a majority of the resident owners of real estate situated within one mile of a public road, present a petition to the board of county commissioners asking for the grading and improving of such road, the county commissioners shall go upon the line of the road described in such petition. If, in their opinion, the public utility requires such road to be graded and improved, they shall determine whether the improvements shall be partly or wholly constructed of stone, gravel or brick, any or all, and what part or parts of such road improvement shall be of stone, gravel or brick, and enter their decision on their journal."

I am impressed with the fact that the very procedure under this section suggests something special. It is clear that it is not regular. Again, suppose the balance of the cost and expenses after assessing upon the owners of real estate, and the real estate benefited thereby, be assessed a certain distance out in each township and not covering the whole township, it could not be denied that such district would be a special district. To my mind, because the township or townships are to pay the entire balance, they being political subdivisions, does not alter the case. The point of difference between you gentlemen and special counsel in this department seems to be right here. You regard the township or townships for the purposes as special districts, while counsel regards them as still being political subdivisions.

Your point in directing attention to the road districts under the so-called one mill assessment Pike law and likening it to a township with a view to showing that the latter under the Garret law is in reality a special taxing district with boundaries co-extensive with the political division and must be regarded as such with the meaning of the exemptions of Section 5649-3*a*, is, in my judgment, well taken as conclusive of the question.

I have given the matter a great deal of care, study and consideration. Our aim is to give every question presented such careful consideration as to have no occasion to reverse ourselves until compelled to do so by the decisions of the courts, but notwithstanding this care, and notwithstanding the pride of opinion that any conscientious official should have, I do not permit these considerations to stand in the path of my duty. At any rate, if a question is doubtful, the decision of this department should be given so as to harmonize with the public welfare. I understand that the people of the counties affected desire improved roads constructed in harmony with Section 6926 of the General Code, that there is no disposition among them to create any litigation over the matter, that the condition of the roads in the counties affected and concerned here is such as to demand improvement, and I, therefore, reverse the former holding of this department, and announce to you that so far as the attorney general's office is concerned, the proper officers of your county may proceed to make the road improvement as upon the theory that you are not subject to the two mill limitation.

Very respectfully yours,

TIMOTHY S. HOGAN,
Attorney General.

TOWN HALL BUILT JOINTLY BY TOWNSHIP TRUSTEES AND VILLAGE COUNCIL—VILLAGE MAY RENT ROOMS FOR JAIL THEREIN UPON MAJORITY VOTE OF BOTH BODIES.

The control of a hall built jointly by the township trustees and a village, is in the hands of these joint parties and when a majority of both bodies so agree, the village may rent a room in said hall for jail purposes.

HON. CHAS. F. RIBBLE, Prosecuting Attorney, Zanesville, Ohio.

DEAR SIR:—At your request I am herewith answering an inquiry received from Mr. H. I. Wheeler, a trustee of Salem township, Muskingum county, Ohio. Said inquiry is as follows:

> "As one of the trustees of my township I desire your construction of the law governing a joint town and township hall. We have a village in our township and a hall built jointly by the village and the township. The village now wants to rent a room in this building for jail purposes and two of the trustees favor it but the people are against it. Can it be leased for such purposes?"

In reply I desire to say that Section 3397 of the General Code provides as follows:

> "After such affirmative vote, the trustees may make all needful contracts for the purchase of a site, and the erection, or the improvement of enlargement of a town hall. They shall have control of any town hall belonging to the township, and from time to time, may lease so much thereof as may not be needed for township purposes, by the year or for shorter periods, to private persons, or for lectures or exhibitions, in all cases having the rent paid in advance or fully secured. The rents received may be used for the repair or improvement of the hall so far as needed, and the balance for general township purposes."

It will be noted that said section gives the township trustees the right to lease so much of such town hall as is not needed for township purposes, and then only to private persons or for lectures or exhibitions. Township trustees only have such authority as is given them by statute, and as a municipal corporation is not a private person it follows that the township trustees are without legal authority to rent any portion of a township hall owned exclusively by the township to a municipal corporation, such as a city or village. Such township halls are ordinarily used for public meetings and to provide a meeting place for the public officials of the township, and when owned by a township such halls are to be used only for township purposes, which said purposes are to be determined by the township trustees in accordance with Section 3397, General Code, above quoted.

As I view it, however, that is not this case, for the reason that said section provides that the township trustees shall have the control of such township halls as are owned exclusively by the township. In the matter about which you inquire both the village and the township own the said town hall jointly, the same having been built jointly by the village and the township. It follows that the village and the township have equal jurisdiction over, and the co-ownership of, said hall. That being the case, I am of the opinion that such hall is subject to such uses as the said joint ownership may agree upon, Section 3397, General Code, above quoted, notwithstanding. As above stated, said section applies only to township halls belonging solely and exclusively to the township. Therefore, if the township trustees and the village council agree that one of the rooms of such township hall shall be used for a jail room, such room may be so used without being in contravention of any statutory prohibition.

By reason of the foregoing I am of the opinion that the village may use a room of such township hall, provided the township trustees and the village council agree thereto.

Very truly yours,
TIMOTHY S. HOGAN,
Attorney General.

TAXES AND TAXATION—BONDS ISSUED BY ROAD DISTRICT, NOT EXEMPT.

Bonds issued as the obligations of a road district are not included within those enumerated in ArticleXII, Section 2, of the Constitution of Ohio and are, therefore not exempt from taxation.

COLUMBUS, OHIO, June 20, 1912.

HON. DON J. YOUNG, Prosecuting Attorney, Norwalk, Ohio.

DEAR SIR:—I beg to acknowledge receipt of your letter of June 6th, requesting my opinion upon the following question:

> "The Greenwich township trustees formed that part of the township outside the incorporated village of Greenwich into 'The Greenwich Road District,' under the provisions of Sections 7033-7052, and issued bonds in the sum of $30,000.00, after an election had been successfully carried. Are these bonds exempt from taxation within the state of Ohio?"

Section 2, Article XII of the Constitution of Ohio provides in part as follows:

> "* * * Bonds of the state of Ohio, bonds of any city, village, hamlet, > county or township in this state, and bonds issued in behalf of the public schools of Ohio and the means of instruction in connection therewith shall be exempt from taxation. * * *"

The specific exemptions from taxation are set forth in Sections 5349 et seq. of the General Code. These sections are not in any way repugnant to the provisions of the statutes; indeed, the statutes are entirely silent as to this point, the constitution being self-executing with respect to its exemptions of such bonds.

Section 7035, one of the sections to which you refer, authorizes the issuing by the township trustees of "bonds of the road district." The territorial limits of the road district created under authority of this section may or may not be co-terminus with those of the township itself (Section 7033). It is, therefore, clear that the bonds are not the obligations of the township as such, but of the especially created taxing district known as the road district.

It is a general principle that exemptions from taxation are strictly construed. Authorities need not be cited on this point. The constitution exempts bonds of the state and of any city, village, hamlet, county or township therein, but it does not exempt bonds of any sub-division or taxing district other than those enumerated. On the principle just stated, as upon the principle of construction, which is to the effect that the expression of one thing is the exclusion of others, which applies here, I am of the opinion that bonds in question are not exempt from taxation in Ohio.

Very truly yours,

TIMOTHY S. HOGAN,
Attorney General.

MUTUAL INSURANCE COMPANIES AND ASSOCIATIONS—POWER OF COUNTY COMMISSIONERS TO INSURE COUNTY PROPERTY THEREIN—STOCK PLAN.

County commissioners are as much a branch of the government as boards of education and are equally prohibited from becoming stockholders in any joint stock company, corporation or association. They may not, therefore, insure county property in Mutual Insurance Associations nor in Mutual Insurance Companies except (with reference to the latter) when they are in a position to issue policies upon the stock plan.

COLUMBUS, OHIO, June 19, 1912.

HON. W. V. WRIGHT, Prosecuting Attorney, New Philadelphia, Ohio.

DEAR SIR:—I herewith desire to acknowledge the receipt of your letter of May 20, 1912, wherein you inquire as follows:

> "Your opinion is respectfully solicited as to whether or not county commissioners are authorized or may lawfully insure county property in Mutual Insurance Companies.
> "In this connection your attention is directed to Sections 9538 and 9596, et seq. General Code, defining Mutual Insurance Companies.
> "As policies on some of our county property will expire within the next few days, an early answer will be full appreciated."

In reply thereto, I desire to say that this department has already held that boards of education are without legal right or authority to insure school houses in mutual insurance associations and that school boards are also without legal right or authority to insure school houses in mutual insurance companies, unless such mutual insurance companies are in a position to issue policies upon the stock plan.

Both of said opinions were rendered to the bureau of inspection and supervision of public officers. The former opinion was rendered on April 28, 1911, and the latter opinion on May 13, 1912.

I am herewith enclosing to you copies of both of said opinions.

I desire furthermore to say that the former opinion, to-wit: the one rendered on April 28, 1911, was carefully reconsidered by this department by special request, and as a result of said request, said opinion was re-affirmed on December 29, 1911, an opinion to the legislator committee of the federation of Mutual Insurance Association of Ohio, a copy of which said opinion, I am also herewith enclosing to you.

I firmly believe that the principles set forth in all the above mentioned opinions are applicable to county commissioners as well as boards of education, for the reason that county commissioners are as much a branch of the government as boards of education, and are prohibited by Section 6, Article VIII of the Constitution from becoming stock holders in any join stock company, corporation or association whatever, or lending their credit to such joint stock companies, corporations or associations.

The entire question is fully discussed in said opinions, and I believe said opinions, copies of which I am herewith enclosing, fully answer your inquiry, therefore, I beg to remain,

Very truly yours,
TIMOTHY S. HOGAN,
Attorney General.

BOND ISSUE FOR ELECTION ON REPAIR AND BUILDING OF BRIDGES —BALLOTS SHOULD SPECIFY PARTICULAR BRIDGES.

In providing for an election on the question of issuing bonds for the repairing and building of certain bridges, in order to comply with the purpose of Section 5640-1, General Code, to give the electors accurate information upon the proposed expenditure, the ballots should specify the bridges to be improved.

COLUMBUS, OHIO, June 26, 1912.

HON. R. I. GILLMER, Assistant Prosecuting Attorney, Warren, Ohio.

DEAR SIR:—Your favor of the 24th received. You advise as follows:

> "It is desired by the board of county commissioners of Trumbull county to issue bonds in the amount of $100,000.00 for the purpose of repairing and building certain bridges in Trumbull county. Under Section 5630-1, wherein it provides what the ballot shall contain, is it necessary to specify what bridges are to be repaired or built?"

Section 5640-1 of the General Code of Ohio provides:

> "The ballots provided by the deputy state supervisors shall have printed upon the same the words, 'In favor of the expenditure of $_____ for the purpose of_____' and 'Against the expenditure of $_____ for the purpose of_____,' said blanks to be filled with the amount proposed to be expended and the purpose for which said money is to be expended. If the board of county commissioners desire to submit upon the same ballot more than one question as to the expenditure of money for any of the purposes referred to in Section 5638, the same may be done by proper resolution and notice, and by separately stating upon said ballot each proposition, as above provided."

The clause of interest is this:

"If the board of county commissioners desire to submit upon the same ballot more than one question as to the expenditure of money for any of the purposes referred to in Section 5638, the same may be done by proper resolution and notice, and by separately stating upon said ballot each proposition, as above provided."

What is the meaning of this, in the light of Section 5638, which is as follows (102 O. L., 447):

"The county commissioners shall not levy a tax, appropriate money or issue bonds for the purpose of building county buildings, purchasing sites therefor, or for land for infirmary purposes, the expense of which will exceed $15,000.00, except in case of casualty, and as hereinafter provided; or for building a county bridge, the expense of which will exceed $18,000.00, except in case of casualty, and as hereinafter provided; or enlarge, repair, improve, or rebuild a public county building, the entire cost of which expenditure will exceed $10,000.00; without first submitting to the voters of the county, the question as to the policy of making such expenditure.

You will notice the statute reads, "building a county bridge," not "building a county bridge or bridges." If it were one bridge to be built, unquestionably it would be proper to give notice as to what bridge it is. The same applies when more bridges than one are to be built. The object of the notice required in Section 5640-1 is to advise the people not only of the character of the improvement, but specifically as to what the improvement is. Where a notice is to be given that improvement will be made, the notice should be sufficiently full and definite to give accurate information to the electors as to what improvement is to be made, to the end that they may judge not only with reference to the advisability of the expenditure, but also as to the necessity for the expenditure. If the electors do not know what bridges are to be improved they have no way of passing judgment as to the necessity for the improvement. The commissioners may have in mind a set of bridges not requiring improvement as badly as other bridges which the electors might have in mind.

I would suggest, therefore, that in the proposition submitted you specify the bridges to be improved in such a way as that the electors may be fairly advised.

Very truly yours,

TIMOTHY S. HOGAN,
Attorney General.

COUNTY SURVEYOR—DUTIES OF DEPUTY SURVEYOR—ALLOWANCE BY COUNTY COMMISSIONERS FOR COMPENSATION—DATE DIRECTORY.

Under Section 2787, General Code, the county surveyor is required to make application to the county commissioners for an allowance of an amount sufficient for compensation of the surveyor's assistants. Until such allowance is made, a deputy surveyor may not be compensated for his services.

The requirement of Section 2787, General Code, however, that such allowance shall be made before the first Monday of June, is merely directory and it may be made at a future date.

The deputy may perform all acts of his principal and such acts performed in the absence of the latter, are legal and valid.

COLUMBUS, OHIO, May 29, 1912.

HON. FRANK X. FREBIS, Prosecuting Attorney, Brown County, Georgetown, Ohio.

DEAR SIR:—I beg to acknowledge receipt of your letter wherein you state:

> "You would greatly favor me by rendering me an opinion upon the following matter: The duly elected and qualified surveyor of Brown county, Ohio, has appointed a deputy surveyor under the General Code, Section 2788, but he has not asked the commissioners to fix the amount of the allowance to be paid said deputy. The said surveyor is out of the county most of his time and practically all of the work is done by this deputy, who makes all estimates for the county commissioners and renders accounts to said commissioners for his per diem fees and expenses.
> Can the commissioners allow the bills of this deputy, when he is acting for and in place of the regular surveyor, and are his acts, such as making estimates and the like, legal?"

Two separate and distinct questions are involved in your inquiry; first, whether the county commissioners may legally allow the per diem and expenses of a deputy acting for and on behalf of a county surveyor during the latter's absence from the county when said surveyor has not made an application to the county commissioners asking them to fix the deputy's compensation, and secondly, whether the acts of said deputy in the preparation of estimates, etc., during the absence of his principal are legal.

In answer to your first question, I call your attention to Sections 2787 and 2788 of the General Code, which are as follows:

> "Section 2787. On or before the first Monday of June of each year, the county surveyor shall file with the commissioners of such county a statement of the number of all necessary assistants, deputies, draughtsmen, inspectors, clerks or employes in his office for the year beginning September first next succeeding and their aggregate compensation. The county commissioners shall examine such statement and, after making such alterations therein as are just and reasonable, fix an aggregate compensation to be expended therefor for such year.
> "Section 2788. The county surveyor shall appoint such assistants, deputies, draughtsmen, inspectors, clerks or employes as he deems necessary for the proper performance of the duties of his office, and fix their compensation, but compensation shall not exceed in the aggregate the amount fixed therefor by the county commissioners. After being so fixed, such compensation shall be paid to such persons in monthly installments from the general fund of the county upon the warrant of the county auditor."

It will be observed that it is the duty of the county surveyor, under Section 2787, to file with the county commissioners, on or before the first Monday of June of each year, a statement of the number of assistants, deputies, etc., required in his office for the year beginning September first thereafter, and that the county commissioners shall fix an aggregate compensation to be expended in payment of the salaries of such persons for such year.

Section 2788 empowers the surveyor to appoint such assistants, deputies, etc., and fix their compensation.

If the application has been filed with the county commissioners, and the commissioners have acted thereon, as provided by Section 2787, they have nothing further to do with the payment of the salaries of such deputies, etc., and the same, when fixed by the county surveyor, should be paid monthly out of the county treasury, upon the warrant of the county auditor, as provided by Section 2788.

If, however, the surveyor has not made an application, and the commissioners have not fixed the aggregate amount that may be expended in payment of salaries of the deputies, etc., in the county surveyor's office, then such deputies, etc., are not entitled to receive any pay from the county treasury.

In view of the foregoing, the deputy to whom you refer would not be entitled to receive the salary of the surveyor. The only salary that he could receive is that fixed by Section 2788, provided the requirements of Section 2787 have been complied with.

If the commissioners have not made the allowance as provided by Section 2787, they may yet do so, notwithstanding the provision of said section, that said application must be made on or before the first Monday of June, for the reason that the said section has been held directory as to time.

The answer to your second question is determined by Section 9 of the General Code, as follows:

"A deputy, when duly qualified, may perform all and singular, the duties of his principal. A deputy or clerk, appointed in pursuance of law, shall hold the appointment only during the pleasure of the officer appointing him. The principal may take from his deputy or clerk a bond, with sureties, conditioned for the faithful performance of the duties of the appointment. In all cases the principal shall be answerable for the neglect or misconduct in office of his deputy or clerk."

The language of the foregoing section, particularly the first sentence, is so clear and explicit as to leave no room for doubt that the deputy surveyor takes the place of his principal, and, accordingly, his acts, such as preparing estimates and the like, during the absence of the surveyor, are legal and should be so recognized by the county commissioners.

Very truly yours,

TIMOTHY S. HOGAN.

Attorney General.

HORSES AND VEHICLES—COUNTY COMMISSIONERS MAY NOT PROVIDE DEPUTY SEALER OF WEIGHTS AND MEASURES WITH CONVEYANCE.

As the legislature has not so provided, a deputy sealer of weights and measures may not be provided by the county commissioners, with a conveyance for use in his official duties.

COLUMBUS, OHIO, April 19, 1912.

HON. JOHN V. CAMPBELL, Assistant Prosecuting Attorney, Cincinnati, Ohio.

DEAR SIR:—Answering your communication of January 20th, delayed until now by reason of the facts already made known to you, wherein you state:

> "I have advised the commissioners of this county that under Section 2622 as amended, 102 Ohio laws, page 426, they might provide the deputy county sealer with a conveyance for use in his official duties. I had been in doubt about their authority to do this, until I saw a letter from the state auditor's office to Mr. C. E. Bertton, state examiner, advising him that under an opinion of the attorney general, deputy county sealer should be allowed necessary expenses, including livery hire, etc. It seemed to me that if livery hire might be allowed, a conveyance might be furnished from the same fund, but after my opinion was read by the board, I was told by the president thereof that your office, while ruling that the county surveyor might be allowed livery hire, might not be furnished with a conveyance, and it was determined that no conveyance would be furnished the deputy county sealer until I had asked your advice thereon."

it does appear very reasonable that, under the facts disclosed as to the situation of the deputy sealer of weights and measures of your county, there should have been some provision made for the allowance of an expenditure for such a conveyance as would, eventually, save the county many dollars. But the legislature did not see fit to make such provision, and I find myself unable to read into the law what, possibly, it would have been better to have included therein.

This department, under the preceding administration, rendered an opinion, found in attorney general's report, 1909, at page 226, that under Section 1181, Revised Statutes, providing for the furnishing of county surveyor's office "with all necessary tools, instruments, books, blanks and stationery, necessary for the proper discharge of the official duties of said county surveyor," the county commissioners were without authority to purchase automobiles for the use of the surveyor's department.

In the case of State vs. Commissioners, 10 C. C. n. s. 398, the circuit court, construing Section 1235, Revised Statutes, Section 2997, General Code, to determine whether, as the law then stood, the county commissioners, who were permitted to allow to the sheriff "all expenses of maintaining horses and vehicles necessary to the proper administration of the duties of his office, could supply the sheriff with horses, vehicles and harness, or allow him the expense necessarily incurred in their purchase, held in the negative. In that case the court said:

> "Public officers can be allowed only such compensation or fees, as are provided for in express terms, or by necessary implication from the terms used."

and again:

"If the legislature intended to have county commissioners supply sheriffs with horses, vehicles and harness, or to allow them the expense necessarily incurred in their purchase, it certainly would have so provided in unambiguous terms. Simple words only were needed to make such a provision."

In the recent case of Peter vs. Parkinson, treasurer, 83 O. S., Judge Crew, at page 49, uses this language:

"While in a sense the board of commissioners is the representative and financial agent of the county, its authority is limited to the exercise of such powers only as are conferred upon it by law. As said by this court in the first paragraph of the syllabus in Jones, Auditor vs. Commissioners of Lucas county, 57 O. S., 189: 'The board of county commissioners represents the county in respect to its financial affairs only so far as authority is given to it by statute.'"

In view of the law as we find it, and the adjudications on somewhat similar statutes, I am constrained to hold that your county commissioners would be without authority to purchase a conveyance for use by your deputy county sealer.

Very truly yours,

TIMOTHY S. HOGAN,
Attorney General.

SMITH ONE PER CENT. LAW—FISCAL YEAR OF COUNTY—CERTIFICATE OF INDEBTEDNESS ISSUED BY COUNTY COMMISSIONERS FOR CLAIMS ARISING IN MONTHS OMITTED IN ESTIMATE TO BUDGET COMMISSION—DUTIES OF BUDGET COMMISSION.

The fiscal year of the county begins and ends on March 1st, but when the county commissioners, in submitting their budget, mistakenly assumed the fiscal year to end on January 1st and made their estimates accordingly, they may lawfully issue certificates of indebtedness, under Section 5656, General Code, for the legally authorized claims of the omitted months of January and February, for which "law vouchers" might be lawfully issued.

The amounts necessary to retire such certificates of indebtedness may be certified to the budget commission for the ensuing year and the budget commission may reduce or allow such estimates as the circumstances justify.

HON. THOMAS L. POGUE, Prosecuting Attorney of Hamilton County, and HON. ALFRED G. BETTMAN, City Solicitor of Cincinnati, Cincinnati, Ohio.

GENTLEMEN:—I have been asked to advise the budget commission of Hamilton county as to its power and duties under the following statement of facts:

"A year ago the commissioners of Hamilton county, in submitting their budget, assumed the fiscal year of the county to be identical with the calendar year; this assumption was acquiesced in by the budget commission, with the result that it is now apparent that the fixed and legal charges against the county during the months of January and February, 1913, cannot be paid from the appropriations for the current year. The commissioners of Hamilton county are about to submit their budget to the auditor and are at a loss as to whether or not they may or should include in such budget for the year 1913 the estimated amount of indebtedness incurred in the months of January and February of that year. The budget commission is at a loss to know whether or not it would have the right to make an allowance for such indebtedness in the 1913 budget."

As you know, I have held in opinion to Hon. E. C. Turner, prosecuting attorney of Franklin county, that the fiscal year for the county begins and ends on March 1st.

In the same opinion I held that for the payment of claims against the county, for which "law vouchers" might be honored by the county auditor, and which, therefore, are not within the purview of Section 5660 of the General Code, known as the "Burns law," the county commissioners may issue certificates of indebtedness, under Section 5656, General Code.

I have also held, in an opinion to the bureau of inspection and supervision of public offices, that Section 5649-3*d*, insofar as it provides that "all expenditures within the following six months shall be made from and within such appropriations," does not apply to the expenditure of the proceeds of loans lawfully made.

From these three conclusions it follows that the commissioners of Hamilton county, for the payment of the salaries of county officers, and like claims, will have the power to borrow money and expend the proceeds of such loans, even though the result will be the expenditure for current needs of the county of a greater amount than the appropriation made for the last half of the fiscal year 1912-1913.

As I understand it, this is exactly what is anticipated, and it is now foreseen that there will be certificates of indebtedness outstanding on March 1, 1913, covering obligations of this sort, incurred in the months of January and February of that year.

Section 5649-3*a* provides as follows:

"On or before the first Monday in June, each year, the county commissioners of each county, the council of each municipal corporation, the trustees of each township, each board of education and all other boards or officers authorized by law to levy taxes, within the county, except taxes for state purposes, shall submit or cause to be submitted to the county auditor an annual budget, setting forth in itemized form an estimate stating the amount of money needed for their wants for the incoming year, and for each month thereof. Such annual budget shall specifically set forth:

"1. The amount to be raised for each and every purpose allowed by law for which it is desired to raise money for the incoming year.

"2. The balance standing to the credit or debit of the several funds at the end of the last fiscal year.

* * * * * * * * * * * * * *

"7. The amount of the bonded indebtedness setting out each issue and the purpose for which issued, the date of issue and the date of maturity, the original amount issued and the amount outstanding, the rate of interest, the sum necessary for interest and sinking fund purposes, and the amount required for all interest and sinking fund purposes for the incoming year.

* * * * * * * * * * * * * *

"9. Such other facts and information as the tax commission of Ohio or the budget commissioners may require."

In connection with this section I call attention to the provisions of Section 5649-1, which is as follows:

"In any taxing district, the taxing authority shall levy a tax sufficient to provide for sinking fund and interest purposes."

I call attention to the following facts:

1. The first sub-paragraph of Section 5649-3*a* includes everything for which levies can be asked; the remaining paragraphs, which prescribe the form of budget are for the information and guidance of the budget commission.

2. While the seventh paragraph speaks of bonded indebtedness only, no inference can thereby be raised that the Smith law is not intended to provide the means for the payment of indebtedness not bonded; or if this be the inference, then, such inference would result in requiring all indebtedness incurred under Setcion 5656 to be funded by an issue of bonds before it could be paid with levies under the Smith law.

As this opinion is written in haste I will come immediately to my conclusion, without elaborating further upon the reasons therefor. I am of the opinion that whenever indebtedness is created or funded the authority creating the indebtedness —in this instance, the county commissioners—has, unless otherwise provided in the statute authorizing the creation of the indebtedness, the discretionary power to determine the date of payment of such indebtedness. If the commissioners issue notes, for example, it lies within their discretion to determine the date at which those notes shall be payable; so likewise with bonds.

Now, if the commissioners had issued bonds for some lawful purpose, prior to the present time, and had determined that one installment of this issue should become due and payable in the year 1913, the levy to pay that installment of principal and the interest on the entire issue would be a levy for one of the purposes "allowed by law for which it is desired to raise money for" the year 1913, within the meaning of the first paragraph of Section 5649-3a; and would also be one of the "sums necessary for interest and sinking fund purposes" within the meaning of paragraph seven thereof, and within the meaning of Section 5649-1.

The only question which I can see is as to whether or not the commissioners may, at the present time, treat anticipated indebtedness as they would treat indebtedness already accrued. I can see no reason for distinguishing between the two cases. It is a matter which rests within the sound financial discretion of the county commissioners to determine how much of the anticipated indebtedness ought to be paid in the year 1913. They have, perhaps, the right to make all the notes or bonds issued on this behalf due in that year. Such policy would avoid the payment of interest but it would seem of questionable wisdom, in view of the strict limitations of the Smith law. On the other hand, the commissioners have the right to fund the notes or refund bonds which they may have outstanding on March 1, 1913, because of their necessities as aforesaid. In so funding or refunding such indebtedness they have the power to provide what portion thereof shall become due and payable in the year 1913. Such portion as is so determined would then be one of the purposes for which it is desired to raise money for the year 1913, within the meaning of Section 5649-3*a*.

So much, then for the duty of the county commissioners. They may include all, any part, or none of the anticipated indebtedness, in the budget which they submit to the auditor. The budget commissioners then, would have nothing whatever to do with the budget of the county commissioners, unless a reduction of that budget was made necessary by reason of its exceeding the limitations of Section 5649-3*a*, or, in some taxing districts in the county, the other limitations of the Smith law. If, however, as will undoubtedly be the case, it becomes necessary for the budget commission to scale down the budget of the county commissioners in order to enforce the limitations of the Smith law, then, such budget commission may, and properly ought, to take into consideration in so doing the fact that the county commissioners have the power to fund or refund indebtedness like that concerning which you inquire. They may, accordingly, if they see fit, scale down this item of the county budget to a proportionally greater extent than that to which they reduce the other items of the county budget, leaving it to the county commissioners to readjust their finances in such manner as to provide that a relatively smaller portion of the anticipated indebtedness shall fall due in the year 1913.

It is, of course, true that, broadly speaking, the intention of the Smith law is that each fiscal year of the county shall take care of itself and that the county in common with all other taxing districts shall be operated upon a strictly cash basis. The county, however, must pay the legal claims against it for salaries, judicial expenses, compensation of assessors and other like claims. The Smith law does not disclose any intention to relieve the county of the obligation to pay such claims, although it does provide that, not to exceed certain amounts and rates shall be levied and expended in a given year. The solution of the difficulty is, of course, found, as I pointed out in my opinion to Mr. Turner, in Section 5656, General Code. The practical result of the exercise of power under this section is to carry part of the business of a given year over into another year or years, thus violating, in a sense, the broad purpose of the Smith law, as I have already referred to it. This apparent inconsistency, however, is not absolutely real. Obligations created under Section 5656 must be provided for within some of the limitations of the Smith law itself; so that if the policy of borrowing money be recklessly or improvidently adhered to there will come a time when the fiscal authorities will find themselves face to face with the necessity of exhausting practically all of their power to levy under the Smith law for the purpose of meeting sinking fund and interest charges. The law, then, does ultimately place a restraining influence or check upon the tendency to borrow money; and while elastic enough to permit the necessary adjustments and changes incident to its enactment, and the casual emergencies occurring from time to time under its operation, to be met and provided for, will in the long run tend to establish each taxing district upon the much to be desired cash basis.

For all of the foregoing reasons, then, I am of the opinion that the county commissioners of Hamilton county may lawfully ask in their budget for the year 1913, and as one of the needs of that year, for sufficient money to discharge indebtedness due and payable in that year, although existing by virtue of the failure of the appropriations for the year preceding to furnish enough money to operate the county and pay all legal claims against it; that the determination of whether or not a part or all or none of such indebtedness shall fall due in the year 1913 rests, primarily, in the discretion of the county commissioners; that the exercise of this discretion and the determination that a given part of the indebtedness shall fall due in the year 1913 constitutes a levy for such part one of the needs of the year 1913; and that the budget commission, if called upon for any reason to reduce the county budget, may lawfully take into consideration the broad powers of the commissioners in funding and refunding indebtedness, and if the commissioners, in the judgment of the budget commission, have asked for too much money for this purpose, may lawfully single out this particular item of the budget in making whatever reductions may be necessary for the purpose of enforcing the limitations of the law.

Very truly yours,
TIMOTHY S. HOGAN,
Attorney General.

COLLECTION OF AMOUNTS DUE CERTAIN OFFICES—PAYMENT INTO GENERAL FUND.

Under Section 2979, General Code, certain county officers are required to file with the prosecuting attorney for collection, reports of amounts overdue their office from persons and individuals.

After the report is filed, the officers have nothing more to do with the same and the amounts when collected are turned, by the prosecuting attorney, into the general fund of the county.

COLUMBUS, OHIO, June 27, 1912.

HON. EDWARD C. TURNER, Prosecuting Attorney, Columbus, Ohio.

DEAR SIR:—Replying to your letter of January 21, 1912, in which you state that under Section 2979, General Code, 102 O. L. p. 290 "certain county officers are required to file with the prosecuting attorney a report in writing showing the amount of fees, percentages, penalties, allowances and perquisites due his office from each person or corporation which has remained due and unpaid for more than one year prior to January 1st next preceding and makes it the duty of the prosecuting attorney to collect the same" and after the list has come into the hands of the prosecuting attorney and he has proceeded under the statute to collect, can the officer filing the list collect the same and credit the same to the respective fee fund? Section 2979, General Code, page 290 O. L. 102, requires certain county officers to file with the prosecuting attorney a report in writing showing the amount of fees, percentages, penalties, allowance and perquisites due his office from each person or corporation, which has remained due and unpaid for more than one year, prior to January 1st next preceding, and makes it the duty of the prosecuting attorney to collect the same and to pay the amount so collected into the county treasury to the credit of the general county fund.

When the report of the county officers, containing list of all delinquents are placed in the hands of the prosecuting attorney, the county officer has nothing more to do with the collection thereof, the same has passed from his hands into that of the prosecuting attorney; if the county officer does so collect he should pay the same to the prosecuting attorney by whom it is placed in the county treasury.

Very respectfully,
TIMOTHY S. HOGAN,
Attorney General.

REDEMPTION BY OWNER OF REALTY PURCHASED FROM HOLDER OF A TAX CERTIFICATE AT DELINQUENT TAX SALE—SEPARATE PROCEDURES — BUILDING ERRONEOUSLY TAXED AS REALTY—VOID SALE—REMEDY.

When "A" holds a "tax certificate" against a property but fails to pay the taxes on the same and it is sold for taxes, being purchased by "B." Held:

That the primary owner can redeem said property only by paying to the treasurer on the certificate of the auditor, the proper amount of money, under Section 5734, General Code, to cancel "A's" lien, and also by paying the proper amount of money, under Section 5735, General Code, to cancel "B's" lien.

The effect of "B's" purchase does not destroy "A's" lien but does destroy its priority and also prevents "A" from receiving a deed in the event of non-redemption after two years.

A "lodge" erects a building on ground owned by "A," the real estate appraiser appraising the building as real estate owned by the "lodge" and the same is placed on the real estate duplicate and sold to "B" at a delinquent land sale, upon failure of the "lodge" to pay the tax thereon. Meanwhile, the lodge sells the building to "C" and disbands, when it is removed by "C" to other lands. Held:

The building was personalty and being erroneously taxed as realty, the sale to "C" was void, under Section 5729, General Code, and "C" is entitled to receive his purchase money back.

The only remedy is to treat the building as omitted personalty and place the same upon the duplicate as of the year it should have been listed and a proceeding had against the members of the lodge for the taxes due.

COLUMBUS, OHIO, June 21, 1912.

HON. L. T. CROMLEY, Prosecuting Attorney, Mt. Vernon, Ohio.

DEAR SIR:—I acknowledge receipt of your letter of February 24th, submitting for my opinion the following questions:

> "1. 'A' holds a 'tax certificate' against a property, but fails to pay the taxes on the same and it is sold for taxes, being purchased by 'B.' Should 'A's' 'tax certificate' be considered in computing the amount necessary for redemption?
> "2. A 'lodge' erects a building on ground owned by 'A.' The real estate appraiser appraises it in the name of the 'lodge,' and the same is placed on the real estate duplicate. 'A' pays the tax on the real estate upon which the 'lodge' is located, but the 'lodge' fails to pay the tax on its building, and it is sold at delinquent land sale to 'B.' In the meantime, the 'lodge' sells the building to 'C' and disbands. 'C' removes the building (before it is sold for tax) to another farm. ('C' is the son of 'A.') Is 'B' entitled to a refunder from the county auditor? If not, how will he receive a deed for a 'building?'"

I quote the following sections of the General Code, which seem involved in the consideration of your first question:

> "Section 5715. The county auditor shall make and deliver to the purchaser of land or lots, sold for delinquent taxes as aforesaid, a certificate of purchase, therein describing the land or lots so sold, as described in the tax duplicate, and stating therein the amount of taxes, and penalty for which they were sold. * * *

"Section 5717. No deed shall be made by the county auditor for any land or lot so sold for taxes, until the expiration of two years from and after such sale. * * *

"Section 5719. After the lapse of two years from the time of such sale for taxes, if the land or lot so sold has not been redeemed, the county auditor, on request and production of the certificate of purchase, and in case of the sale of part only of a tract of land or lot, on production of the county surveyor's return of a survey, if he deems such survey necessary, in conformity with the requisitions of such certificate, shall execute and deliver to the purchaser, his heirs, or assignee, a deed of conveyance for the tract of land or town lot, or such part thereof as has been sold as aforesaid.

"Section 5724. Upon the sale of land or town lots for delinquent taxes, the lien which the state has thereon for taxes then due shall be transferred to the purchaser at such sale. If such sale should be invalid on account of irregularity in the proceedings of an officer, having a duty to perform in relation thereto, the purchaser at such sale shall be entitled to receive, from the owner of such land or lot, the amount of taxes, interest, and penalty legally due thereon at the time of sale, with interest thereon from the time of payment thereof, and the amount of taxes paid thereon by the purchaser subsequent to such sale. Such land or lot shall be bound for the payment thereof.

"Section 5731. A county auditor delivering a certificate of purchase of forfeited lands, or delinquent lands sold for taxes, shall forthwith transfer it on his duplicate, into the name of the purchaser, charging therefor the sum of ten cents, which shall be considered part of the expenses of the sale. If an auditor neglects to make such transfer, he shall be liable to action by any person injured thereby as for a neglect of official duty.

"Section 5733. All lands and town lots sold for taxes at a delinquent sale, may be redeemed at any time within two years from and after the sale thereof. * * *

"Section 5734. A person desiring to redeem land or town lots sold at a delinquent tax sale within one year after the sale thereof, or within one year after the expiration of any of the disabilities named in the next preceding section, may deposit with the county treasurer, upon the certificate of the county auditor, particularly describing and specifying such land or town lot, an amount of money equal to that for which such land or town lot was sold, and the taxes subsequently paid thereon by the purchaser, or those claiming under him, together with interest, and fifteen per cent. penalty on the whole amount paid, including costs, and one dollar to pay the expenses of advertising as hereinafter provided.

"Section 5735. A person desiring to redeem any land or town lot sold at a delinquent tax sale, after the expiration of one year from the sale thereof, and within the time limited by law for such redemption, may deposit with the county treasurer, upon the certificate of the county auditor, particularly describing and specifying such land or town lot, an amount of money equal to that for which such land or town lot was sold, and the taxes subsequently paid thereon by such purchaser, or those claiming under him, together with interest and twenty-five per cent.

penalty on the whole amount paid, including costs, and one dollar to pay the expenses of advertising, as hereinafter provided.

"Section 5737. Upon the presentation of such certificate of the county auditor to the county treasurer, for the redemption of land or town lots sold for taxes, and upon the payment of the money into the county treasury, the county treasurer shall give the person or persons making such payment, duplicate receipts therefor, describing the property of the land or the town lot as it is described in or upon the certificate of the auditor. One of such receipts shall be registered by the treasurer, and forthwith filed with the county auditor, by the party receiving it. Thereupon the auditor shall forthwith cancel the sale, and transfer the property, land, or town lot to the proper party; and such receipt, when so filed, shall operate as an extinguishment of all rights, either in law or equity, conferred in any manner by such sale. The auditor shall publish a notice of such redemption in the newspaper in which the advertisement of sale was published, for the term of three weeks, either in a weekly or a daily paper, once in each week, at an expense not exceeding one dollar.

"Section 5738. Upon the demand of the purchaser, or his legal representative, and the surrender of the tax certificate, and upon the payment of the auditor's fees, the county auditor shall draw his warrant upon the county treasurer in favor of such purchaser, or his legal representative, for the amount of money so deposited as hereinbefore provided, with the treasurer, after deducting therefrom the treasurer's fees for such services"

In answering your first question, I assume that the owner of property desires to redeem the same within two years after the first sale thereof for taxes.

A purchaser of land sold for delinquent taxes acquires the state's lien thereon for taxes then due. Section 5724, supra, State ex rel. vs. Godfrey, 62 O. S., 18. This lien may or may not ripen into a legal title by the failure of the owner to redeem the land within two years from the date of the sale, and subsequent execution and delivery of a tax deed to the purchaser. During the two-year period, however, at least, and within the general statute of limitations applicable to the enforcement of such liens, at most, (there being no special statute of limitations applicable thereto in the chapter relating to the sale of delinquent lands) such a lien remains valid and subsists in the purchaser. As stated in the case last above cited, this lien, at least, is "surely conferred upon the purchaser holding the certificate."

As I construe the related sections above quoted, they provide a statutory method of extinguishing this lien. Of course, the owner of the land may himself buy the tax certificate from the purchaser at the delinquent tax sale, and, as an assignee, under Section 5718 of the General Code, may effectually extinguish the lien. The only way, however, by which the equitable lien witnessed by the entry on the margin of the grand duplicate, made in accordance with Section 5831, General Code, may be extinguished of record, is by depositing with the county treasurer under Section 5734 or Section 5735, as the case may be, the proper amount of money.

I am of the opinion, that because of the considerations above mentioned, the owner of land which has been twice sold for delinquent taxes to different parties cannot extinguish all equitable titles arising by virtue of such sales without depositing with the treasurer a sufficient sum of money to redeem the land as against each and every outstanding certificate.

Another way of working out the same conclusion is afforded by considering the matter from the standpoint of the county auditor. His duplicate shows two tax transfers, one from the owner to the first purchaser, and the other from the first purchaser to the second purchaser. He would, of course, have authority to cancel but one of such transfers, at a time, and for each such cancellation he must have filed with him a proper receipt.

I am further of the opinion that the first purchaser is not to be regarded as having lost all his rights by reason of his failure to pay the tax assessed against the land during his possession of the tax title. To be sure, he is personally liable for the taxes on the land during such time. But the essential liability for the tax assessed against the land is that of the land itself, rather than that of the land owner. It cannot be inferred from the sections above quoted that the purchase by failing to pay the taxes on the land thereby extinguishes his lien. It seems to me reasonable to hold that such neglect on his part causes him to lose the priority of his lien, as, upon the reasoning above set forth, the second purchaser's lien becomes prior to that of the first purchaser, furthermore, the first purchaser's neglect to pay the taxes effectually precludes his rights to receive a deed in case of non-redemption. So that it cannot be said that the first purchaser may with impunity fail to pay the taxes.

Upon careful consideration of all the sections, I am of the opinion that the land's redemption from the lien of "A's" certificate is a separate thing from that of "B's" certificate. The amounts to be deposited would, under Sections 5734 and 5735 be different, the character and dignity of the two liens is slightly different, each case stands by itself. That is to say the original owner may redeem from "B's" lien alone. Brodie vs. State, 101 Minn., 202. If he desires to redeem as against "B," he must deposit the proper amount of money under Section 5734, supra. By so doing he leaves still in force the lien of "A," although the auditor and treasurer may proceed to extinguish "B's" lien just as if "A" did not hold a certificate. If, however, the owner wishes to redeem his land from all outstanding tax certificates, he must deposit under Section 5734 to provide for "B's" certificate, and under Section 5735 to provide for "A's" certificate. Separate proceedings on the part of the county auditor and county treasurer should then be had in the case of "A" and "B."

Your second question involves several interesting propositions. In the first place it appears that the real property assessor listed the building in question and returned the same as real estate in the name of the owner of the building, and not in that of the owner of the land on which it was situated.

In the memorandum which you append to your opinion you state that the arrangement between the lodge and the owner of the property upon which its building was situated was such that the building was clearly personal property. I assume this conclusion of law to be correct.

If the building, being personal property, is required to be listed as personal property in the name of the owner thereof, then, of course, its sale as "delinquent land" was simply void, and under the provisions of Section 5729, General Code, the purchaser at the delinquent land sale is entitled to receive the amount of money he paid for his certificate from the county treasury. In that event, also, the sole remedy of the taxing authorities in the premises would be to cause the building to be placed on the personal property duplicate of the year for which it ought to have been returned for taxation as such, unless that year be a year prior to the year 1911, and to proceed personally against the lodge or against its members. (See Sections 5399 et seq., General Code.) I doubt very much whether this remedy would be efficacious, in view of the fact that the lodge has disbanded.

Certainly the county treasurer would not be able to distrain any property in order to secure payment of such personal tax.

I am not certain, however, that the property ought to have been assessed as personalty in the name of the owner. Section 5554, General Code, applies here. It provides as follows:

> "The assessor, in all cases, from actual view, and from the best sources of information within his reach, shall determine, as near as practicable, the true value of each separate tract and lot of real property in his district, according to the rules prescribed by this chapter for valuing real property. He shall note in his plat-book separately, the value of all dwelling houses, mills and other buildings, which exceed one hundred dollars in value, on any tract or plat of land not incorporated, or on any land or lot of land included in a municipal corporation, which shall be carried out as a part of the value of such tract. He shall also enter therein the number of acres of arable or plow land, meadow and pasture land, and wood and uncultivated land, in such tract, as near as possible."

It will be noted that it is the duty of the real property assessor to determine the value of all buildings which he finds on any tract of real property, and include the value thereof in the assessment of the value of the plat or lot. This peculiar phraseology raises an interesting question as to whether or not the original assessment should have included the value of the portable building as a part of the value of the real estate on which it was found by the assessor, and the further possible question as to whether or not the knowledge of the assessor as to the actual ownership of such a building, or the lack of such knowledge would be factors which would determine the course he ought to take. The solution of these questions, however, is not necessary to a decision of that which you present. If the value of the buildings should have been included with that of the other buildings found on the real estate assessed, then the separate assessment of the building as real property was void and could not lay the foundation for a valid tax sale of the building.

If, however, the assessment of the building as real estate against the actual owner thereof and separately from the land on which it was situated at the time of the assessment, as actually made in the case you present was itself valid, I would be of the opinion that the sale was void. It is only "land and town lots" that may be sold for delinquent taxes. The effect of the tax sale being to divest the owner of the property of his title, the statutes providing for such proceeding must be strictly construed, as, indeed, has always been the case wherever such statutes have been put to the test. Therefore, the failure to provide for the sale of a building separately from the land on which it is situated for taxes due on such building as real estate has the effect of depriving the taxing authorities of any such remedy for the collection of such taxes; the power to sell a building for taxes cannot be inferred from the power to sell land and town lots.

Whether, therefore, the assessment was originally legal or illegal, and if illegal, whether the proper assessment should have been of the building as a part of the real estate on which it was situated, or as personal property, it follows in any event that the tax sale is void, and that the amount paid by the purchaser at the delinquent land sale should be refunded to him from the county treasurer.

You ask also as to who is to pay the taxes charged on the duplicate by virtue of this assessment. If the assessment was legal—that is, if it was proper to assess the building separately as real estate, then, in my opinion, there is no method provided for by the statutes for the collection of such taxes. A careful examination of the statutes fails to show the existence of any form of action for the recovery of delinquent real estate taxes. Such taxes are in theory assessed in rem and the procedure of delinquent lands and lots seems to be exhausted; inasmuch, then, as the procedure does not apply to the collection of taxes upon a building as such, I am of the opinion that no remedy exists whereby collection of taxes as they stand charged on the duplicate can be enforced.

If it were possible to assess the building against the owner of the real estate and include the valuation thereof in the aggregate of all the buildings found by the assessor on the tract of land, then the listing of the building as real estate in the name of the owner of the building would have to be regarded as a clerical error apparent on the face of the tax list and the duplicate. It is clear, however, after settlement with the county treasurer, the county auditor has no authority to correct clerical errors of this sort, so that there does not now seem to be any way of bringing property on the duplicate of any past year in the name of the owner of the soil, even if that be conceded to be the proper assessment.

If, as seems most likely, the building should have been assessed by the personal property assessor in the name of the lodge, then the remarks which I have already made would apply, and the property would have to be dealt with, if at all, as omitted personalty.

Yours very truly,
TIMOTHY S. HOGAN,
Attorney General.

FORFEITURE OF RECOGNIZANCES GIVEN IN STATE AND MUNICIPAL CASES—DUTIES OF PROSECUTING ATTORNEY AND CITY SOLICITOR TO COLLECT.

The recognizances referred to in Section 13548 of the General Code, which requires the prosecuting attorney to collect forfeiture of the same, are those given to the state of Ohio.

Bonds for violation of city ordinances, however, are given to the city and must be collected in accordance with Section 4308 of the General Code by the city solicitor, and by him paid into the city treasury in accordance with Section 4310 of the General Code.

COLUMBUS, OHIO, July 6, 1912.

HON. ALFRED BETTMAN, City Solicitor, Cincinnati, Ohio.

DEAR SIR:—In your letter of April 22, 1912, you request my opinion upon the following question:

> "Should the prosecuting attorney of the county or the prosecuting attorney of the city file suit to collect forfeited bail bonds in cases of violation of city ordinances?"

The answer to the question depends upon the following sections of the General Code, with reference to forfeiting recognizances:

> "Section 13545. When a person under recognizance in a criminal prosecution to appear and answer or to testify in court, fails to perform the condition thereof, his default shall be recorded, and such recognizance forfeited in open court.

"Section 13546. Probate judges, prosecuting attorneys, clerks of the court of common pleas and the police court, justices of the peace and other magistrates, shall return forthwith to the county auditor of their respective counties all forfeited recognizances in criminal cases.

"Section 13547. The county auditor shall make, in a book to be kept for that purpose, a memorandum of each recognizance returned to him, the court in which it was taken, the name of the case, the names of all the parties, the amount and date, the person to whom paid, the time when delivered and the final disposition thereof. He shall deliver it to the prosecuting attorney and take his receipt forthwith therefor.

"Section 13548. The prosecuting attorney shall prosecute recognizances by him received, for the penalty thereof. Such action shall be governed by the code of civil procedure so far as applicable.

Section 13552 provides the form for recognizance as an accused person, of a witness, and to keep the peace; and it is seen from these forms, as well as from the statutes themselves, that the recognizances spoken of in this chapter, and necessarily those upon which suit is directed to be brought by the prosecuting attorney, by Section 13548, are recognizances given to the state of Ohio, and therefore, necessarily, suit on the same must properly be brought by the prosecuting attorney of the particular county in which the recognizance is given.

The bonds for violation of city ordinances, however, are not given to the state but are given to the city, and when it is necessary that suit be brought on such bonds, it seems to me that the city solicitor, and not the prosecuting attorney of the county, is the proper officer to bring those suits. This seems to me to be clear without any reference to Section 13548 (which undoubtedly refers to the prosecuting attorney of the county), for the reason that Section 4308 of the General Code provides:

"When required so to do by resolution of the council, the solicitor shall prosecute or defend, as the case may be, for and in behalf of the corporation, all complaints, suits and controversies in which the corporation is a party, and such other suits, matters and controversies as he shall, by resolution or ordinance, be directed to prosecute, but shall not be required to prosecute any action before the mayor for the violation of an ordinance without first advising such action."

and Section 4310 provides that the solicitor shall pay to the treasurer "all moneys which may come into his hands belonging to the corporation, or by way of fines, forfeitures, costs, or otherwise * * *;" and in case of the forfeiture of a bail bond, payable to a city, it would undoubtedly, under Section 4308, when so required, be the duty of the solicitor to bring suit to collect the penalty of such bond.

Very truly yours,

TIMOTHY S. HOGAN.

Attorney General.

ADDENDUM.

Section 1 of the act of February 24, 1871, found in volume 68, laws of Ohio, page 31, provides for the "return to the county auditor of their respective counties all forfeited recognizances in state cases immediately after forfeiture."

Section 13545, General Code, provides:

> "When a person under recognizance in a criminal prosecution to appear and answer or to testify in court, fails to perform the condition thereof, his default shall be recorded, and such recognizance forfeited in open court."

This change in the use of words hardly warrants evidence of an intention to change the law in respect to prosecutions of recognizances. The words "criminal prosecution" in lieu of "state cases" doubtless were selected as being more in harmony with the provisions that followed. If Section 13546 were intended to embrace forfeited recognizances in city cases doubtless the word "mayor" would occur. It is true that "other magistrates" would cover the word "mayor," but in view of the fact that probate judges, prosecuting attorneys, clerks of courts, chiefs of police, police courts and justices of the peace are specifically mentioned it is hardly likely that the mention of "mayor" specifically would be overlooked unless the legislature had in mind that city cases were not intended to come within the purview of the statutes herein referred to, and by the words "other magistrates" is unquestionably meant magistrates having jurisdiction in state cases and exercising jurisdiction in such cases. There is nothing in the change of language referred to in the light of Sections 13545, 13546, 13547 and 13548, and in the further light of the separation to be kept in mind between municipalities and other jurisdictions in the administration of their respective affairs, to warrant the conclusion that a county prosecuting attorney is to prosecute the action on a forfeited recognizance running in favor of a municipal corporation.

GRAND JURY PROCEEDINGS—SECRET—PROSECUTING ATTORNEY MAY NOT FURNISH TRANSCRIPT OF TESTIMONY TO DAIRY AND FOOD COMMISSIONER.

The statutes impose absolute secrecy as to grand jury proceedings and prohibits their disclosure to all except a court of justice. The prosecuting attorney may not therefore furnish the dairy and food commissioner with a transcript of testimony taken before the grand jury.

COLUMBUS, OHIO, July 2, 1912.

HON. WM. VINCENT CAMPBELL, Prosecuting Attorney, St. Clairsville, Ohio.

DEAR SIR:—You inquire in your letter of February 26th whether you were correct and within the law in refusing to furnish the dairy and food commissioner's office with a transcript of the testimony taken before the grand jury in cases for violation of the county local option laws, so that they could use the same for the purpose of placing the liquor tax against the property used for such purposes.

You will observe that by Section 13556, G. C., an oath is administered to the foreman of the grand jury, which provides, among other things, as follows:

inquest, shall diligently inquire, and true presentment make, of all such matters and things as shall be given you in charge, or otherwise come to your knowledge, touching the present service; the counsel of the state, your own and your fellows, you shall keep secret, unless called on in a court of justice to make disclosures * * *."

Section 13557, G. C., gives the oath to be administered to the other grand jurors:

"The same oath which your foreman has taken before you on his part, you and each of you, shall well and truly observe and keep on your respective parts."

Section 13560, G. C., authorizes the prosecuting attorney and the assistant prosecuting attorney to appear before the grand jury to give information, or advice upon legal matters, and may interrogate witnesses before such jury when it or he deems necessary and in a matter or case which the attorney general is required to investigate or prosecute by the governor or general assembly; he shall have the rights, privileges and powers conferred by this section and the next succeeding section, upon prosecuting attorneys.

Section 13561, G. C., provides:

"The official stenographer of the county, at the request of the prosecuting attorney, shall take shorthand notes of the testimony and furnish a transcript thereof to him and to no other person, but the stenographer shall withdraw from the jury room before the jurors begin to express their views or give their votes on a matter before them. The stenographer shall take an oath, to be administered by the court after the grand jurors are sworn, imposing an obligation of secrecy to not disclose any testimony taken or heard except to such jury or prosecutor, unless called upon in a court of justice to make disclosure."

By these sections we are impressed with the great care of the general assemby, the courts and all those in authority to guard the secrecy of the grand jury proceedings. There is but one place where the secrets of the grand jury can be laid bare and that is in a court of justice, where called before the court.

In view of these statutes your question is easily answered, and in fact you have answered it yourself, when you refused to deliver the transcript. These secrets are locked up, and there is but one key to unlock them, and that is in the hands of the court.

Very truly,
TIMOTHY S. HOGAN.
Attorney General.

COMMON PLEAS JUDGES TO FIX AMOUNT TO BE PAID ASSISTANTS IN PROSECUTING ATTORNEY'S OFFICE FOR COLLECTING UNPAID FEES.

Under Section 2014 of the General Code the judge of common pleas, on or before the first of January, may fix the amount to be expended by the prosecuting attorney for assistants.

Under Section 2915 of the General Code the prosecuting attorney may appoint assistants to collect the uncollected fees, etc, filed by the various county officers and may compensate them from the fund so fixed.

HON. G. P. GILLMER, Prosecuting Attorney, Warren, Ohio.

DEAR SIR:—Your letter of January 16, 1912, received. You state that:

> "From present indications the statements of uncollected fees, percentages and penalties filed by the several county officers under Section 2979, General Code, page 290, 102 O. L. is going to be large. The collecting of those various fees, percentages and penalties will be a task sufficient for one man for a good long while to come. This duty is placed upon the prosecuting attorneys. In this county we have not heretofore employed assistance in the prosecutor's office, save in isolated cases where special counsel has been appointed for particular purposes. If, however, the office is to be called upon to collect these delinquent fees, percentages and penalties, it will be necessary to have assistance."

and inquire whether you are entitled to assistance in order to make the collections referred to, and also the method of employment and payment of such assistance.

Section 2014 of the General Code provides as follows:

> "On or before the first Monday in January of each year in each county, the judge of the court of common pleas, or if there be more than one judge, the judges of such court in joint session, may fix an aggregate sum to be expended for the incoming year, for the compensation of assistants, clerks and stenographers of the prosecuting attorney's office.
> "Section 2915. The prosecuting attorney may appoint such assistants, clerks and stenographers as he deems necessary for the proper performance of the duties of his office, and fix their compensation, not to exceed in the aggregate the amount fixed by the judge or judges of the court of common pleas. Such compensation after being so fixed shall be paid to such assistants, clerks and stenographers monthly from the general fund of the county treasury upon the warrant of the county auditor."

You will note that the judge of the court of common pleas of your county, on or before the first Monday in January in each year, should fix an aggregate sum to be expended for the incoming year for the compensation of assistants, clerks and stenographers of the prosecuting attorney's office. After the amount is fixed by the common pleas judge, then, under authority of Section 2915 of the General Code, you have the right to appoint such assistants, clerks and stenographers as you deem necessary for the proper performance of the duties of your office; and under authority of said section you have the right to fix their compensation. But the amount paid to your assistants, clerks and stenographers shall not exceed, in any one year, the aggregate amount fixed by the common pleas judge. After the compensation is fixed the same shall be paid to each assistant upon the warrant of the county auditor, out of the county treasury.

Very truly yours,

TIMOTHY S. HOGAN,
Attorney General.

MEDICAL AND SURGICAL RELIEF—TOWNSHIP TRUSTEES MAY ALLOW COMPENSATION FOR OPERATIONS UPON NEEDY POOR.

The term "medical relief" as employed in Sections 3480, 3490 and 3546 of the General Code providing for the furnishing of such to the poor by township and county authorities includes "surgical relief."

When therefore, physicians are not regularly contracted for by township authorities, upon the proper notice given, surgeons may be reimbursed for operations performed for needy poor, in such measure as the township trustees see fit to allow.

COLUMBUS, OHIO, June 22, 1912.

HON. GEORGE D. KLEIN, Prosecuting Attorney, Coshocton, Ohio.

DEAR SIR:—Under date of June 12, 1912, you inquire of this department as follows:

> "Our city has built a city hospital, since then the township trustees of Tuscarawas township and the county infirmary directors are getting numerous applications for surgical operations at the expense of the tax payers. For example in appendicitis cases the doctors, since the hospital is built, when they get one of these patients they call up the township trustees or infirmary directors and say that a certain patient who is not able to pay must be operated upon at once or they will die.
> "I have examined the statutes and am unable to find any direct authority on such cases, that is are the township trustees or infirmary directors authorized to pay for surgical operations upon people who are a public charge?
> "These people are taken to the hospital, the doctor charges from thirty-five to fifty dollars for the operations and the care and nursing in addition runs from thirty-five to fifty dollars and it is getting to be quite a burden."

Section 3480, General Code, authorizes the township trustees to grant medical relief under certain conditions, as follows:

> "When a person in a township or municipal corporation requires public relief, or the services of a physician or surgeon, complaint thereof shall be forthwith made by a person having knowledge of the fact to the township trustees, or proper municipal officer. If medical services are required, and no physician or surgeon is regularly employed by contract to furnish medical attendance to such poor, the physician called or attending shall immediately notify such trustees of officer, in writing, that he is attending such person, and thereupon the township or municipal corporation shall be liable for relief and services thereafter rendered such person, in such amount as such trustees or proper officers determine to be just and reasonable. If such notice be not given within three days after such relief is afforded or services begin, the township or municipal corporation shall be liable only for relief or services rendered after notice has been given. Such trustees or officer, at any time may order the discontinuance of such services, and shall not be liable for services or relief thereafter rendered."

The authority to regularly employ a physician by contract is found in Section 3490, General Code, which provides:

"The trustees of a township, or the proper officers of a municipal corporation in any county, may contract with one or more competent physicians to furnish medical relief and medicines necessary for the persons who come under their charge under the poor laws, but no contract shall extend beyond one year. Such physician shall report quarterly to the clerk of the township or municipality, on blanks furnished him for that purpose, the names of all persons to whom he has furnished medical relief or medicines, the number of visits made in attending such person, the character of the disease, and such other information as may be required by such trustees or officers."

It will be observed that in Section 3480, General Code, the term "physician or surgeon" is used, in addition to the term "medical services." In Section 3490, General Code, no reference is made to a suregon, but the township trustees are authorized to contract with one or more "physicians to furnish medical relief." Does this latter phrase include relief by a surgeon by an operation?

The same term is used in the statute authorizing the infirmary directors to enter into a contract for medical relief.

Section 2546, General Code, before the amendment of 102 Ohio Laws 433, provided:

"Infirmary directors may contract with one or more competent physicians, to furnish medical relief and medicines necessary for the persons of their respective townships, who come under their charge, but no contract shall extend beyond one year. Such contract shall be given to the lowest competent bidder, the directors reserving the right to reject any or all bids. The physicians shall report quarterly to the infirmary directors on blanks furnished by the directors, the names of all persons to whom they have furnished medical relief or medicines, the number of visits made in attending such persons, the character of the disease, and such other information as may be required by the directors. The directors may discharge any such physicians for proper cause."

The amendatory act does not take effect until January 1, 1913, and the above section applies at the present time,

The provisions of Section 3480, General Code, were under consideration in the case of Trustees vs. White, 48 Ohio St., 577, the syllabus of which case reads:

"Physicians affording relief to a person in condition requiring relief under Section 1494, Revised Statutes, which provides that the township shall be liable for relief afforded "only in such amount as the trustees determine to be just and reasonable," have a claim against the township wherein such relief is afforded for no greater amount than the trustees determine to be just and reasonable. And where the trustees have considered a claim, and, acting in good faith, have rejected it, no action can be maintained against the township."

The bill rendered in the above case and for which payment was demanded was for services as a surgeon.

The court, Spear, J., says on page 579:

"Although many changes were made in this statute by amendment, the section quoted was not altered until the statute of April 12, 1876, when, for the first time, the services of physicians and surgeons were in terms included in the statute."

On page 584, it is further said:

"In regard to the effect of the determination of the trustees, we think the language used leaves no serious question. The words of the additional clause as to liability are apt words to express a purpose to lodge with the trustees the discretion and power to determine finally the amount of compensation to be awarded to physicians and surgeons rendering services under the statute, and it is difficult to attach any meaning whatever to those words unless the plain ordinary signification is the true meaning. We conclude that the legislature meant, by the clause quoted, that which the words naturally import, and that the discretion conferred upon the trustees, when exercised, is to be held conclusive and final."

In case of Wetherall vs. Marion county, 28 Iowa 22, it is held:

"The term 'duties of physician" as used in a contract between the plaintiff, as a physician, and the board of supervisors of the county of M., for the performance by him of professional services for the paupers of said county at the poor house therein, was held to include, in its general and ordinary acceptation, the usual cases of surgery as well as the administration of medicine."

Cole, J., says at page 24:

"If we were, therefore, driven (as perhaps we are not) to determine as a matter of legal construction, the meaning of the terms 'duties of physician' and 'medical treatment' we should not hesitate long in deciding that they, like the degrees or diplomas of those who practice them, include both medicine and surgery."

Section 3480, supra, provides that if "no physician or surgeon is regularly employed by contract to furnish medical attendance," relief may be given in the manner therein provided. This section contemplates that a physician or surgeon may be employed by contract. Section 3490, General Code, authorizes a contract with a physician for medical relief. There is no other statute authorizing the township trustees to contract for the services of a physician. Section 2546, General Code, authorizes a contract with a physician for medical relief by the infirmary directors. These are the only provision of the statute authorizing a contract with a physician for medical relief of the poor.

The provision of Section 3480, supra, as to a contract with a physician or surgeon, refers to the authority granted in said Sections 3490 and 2546, General Code. It is therefore evident that the term physician as used in said sections, will include a surgeon, and that the term "medical relief" will include "surgical relief." I am of the further opinion that where a contract is entered into with a physician either under Section 3490 or under 2546, General Code, to furnish medical relief for the poor, said contract will include services to be performed as a surgeon as well as services performed as a physician as those terms are understood in the profession of medicine. The words "physician" and "medical relief" as used in the statutes are to be given their ordinary meaning, rather than the narrow professional meaning of the terms.

The provision of Section 3480, General Codee, applying when no physician or surgeon is regularly employed to furnish medical attendance to the poor, who are a public charge.

By the decision in the case of Trustees vs. White, 48 Ohio St., 577, supra, it is seen that the amount to be paid for such services is to be determined by the trustees. The trustees also are to determine if the claim is a proper one to be paid by the township.

Said Section 3480, General Code, will include services of a surgeon for surgical operations, but pay for such services and the amount to be paid is subject to the decision of the trustees.

The obligation of the public to furnish relief to the needy and poor is stated by Spear, J., at page 578, in Trustees vs. White supra as follows:

> "Whatever moral duty rests upon the well-to-do to aid those less fortunate, in their distress there is aside from the obligations attaching to husband, parent and guardian, no legal obligation to perform that moral duty, nor to recompense another who may voluntarily render the needed service, nor is there, at common law, any such legal duty imposed upon the community. Clearly, then, the plaintiffs could not recover unless, by statutory authority, a right of action is given."

The authority to pay for such services is prescribed by the statutes, and the provisions thereof must be complied with.

Respectfully,
TIMOTHY S. HOGAN,
Attorney General.

GRAND JURORS—MILEAGE WHEN GRAND JURY ADJOURNS FROM TIME TO TIME.

Though the law expressly provides for only one session of a grand jury, yet if in the interests of economy and justice it is deemed advisable to adjourn from time to time the grand jurors may be allowed mileage upon each return to the county seat after a period of such adjournment.

COLUMBUS, OHIO, July 11, 1912.

HON. HARRY P. BLACK, Prosecuting Attorney, Tiffin, Ohio.

DEAR SIR:—I am in receipt of your letter of June 11th, wherein you state as follows:

> "On account of the stress of business in my county it has been found necessary to adjourn the grand jury from time to time in order to complete the business and to give men confined in the county jail and out on bond, an opportunity for being tried, and especially it is true on account of our jail facility, having a small and inadequate building. The grand jury met for the April term and after being in session about six days and disposing of their business at that time, they were adjourned by order of the court subject to the call of the clerk, in order to dispose of the business that would accumulate before the end of the term in July and the beginning of the next term in October. They reconvened on the tenth day of June and disposed of the business for which they were called.
> "QUERY: Are they entitled to mileage for the distance covered by them from their homes to the court house?"

Section 3008, General Code, provides as follows:

> "Each grand or petit juror drawn from the jury box pursuant to law, each juror selected by the court as talesman as provided by law, and each talesman, shall receive two dollars for each day of service, and if not a talesman, five cents each mile from his place of residence to the county seat. Such compensation shall be certified by the clerk of the court and paid by the county treasurer on the warrant of the county auditor."

There is no provision in the above statute that mileage shall only be paid once, nor is there any provision that such mileage shall not be paid more than once. The statute is silent upon the subject and should, therefore, receive, a reasonable construction.

It is contemplated that whenever a grand jury is brought together, such jury shall consider all the business before it without adjournment, except from day to day, and that after such business is completed the said jury will be discharged finally. However, if in the interest of public justice and economy it is deemed advisable by the court to adjourn said jury, subject to the call of the clerk instead of holding it together during the entire term, and thus allow the jurors to return to their respective homes, I believe a reasonable construction of the statutes in question would entitle said grand jurors to their mileage in returning to the performance of their duties upon order of the court and call of the clerk. It is not only just so to do, but more economical to allow them to return to their respective homes than to hold them together during the entire session of the court.

I, therefore, hold that grand jurors who are adjourned by order of the court and allowed to return to their respective homes, subject however, to be reconvened upon call of the clerk are, on so returning entitled to the mileage provided for in Section 3008 of the General Code.

Yours truly,
TIMOTHY S. HOGAN,
Attorney General.

TAXES AND TAXATION—SMITH ONE PER CENT. LAW—FUNDING INDEBTEDNESS OF COUNTY COMMISSIONERS—PAYMENT OF SALARIES—APPROPRIATIONS—CERTIFICATES OF INDEBTEDNESS—PURCHASE OF SUPPLIES—CLAIMS OF BENEVOLENT INSTITUTIONS AGAINST COUNTY.

A county officer's salary may be said to be "an existing, valid and binding obligation against the county" within the meaning of Sections 5656 and 5658 of the General Code so as to justify the borrowing of money by the county commissioners in order to meet the same, when the claim for such salary accrues at the end of each month.

Even though it would be legal practice for the commissioners to transfer from the undivided tax fund to the county general fund, such a proceeding would not avail, to pay salaries for the reason that Section 5049 of the General Code will not permit expenditures from other than funds specifically appropriated therefor.

Section 5656 of the General Code in providing that the commissioners "may borrow money 'or' issue bonds thereof" enables them to issue certificates of indebtedness or promissory notes.

In the absence of specifically appropriated funds the commissioners may not purchase supplies. Appropriations may be made for contingencies however, to take care of deficiencies in the various funds.

Claims presented by benevolent institutions of the state, for clothing for inmates from the county may not be paid in the absence of appropriations for the purpose. Money may be borrowed for the purpose of paying the same however, under Section 5656 of the General Code.

COLUMBUS, OHIO, July 6, 1912.

HON. F. A. SHIVELY, Prosecuting Attorney, West Union, Ohio.

DEAR SIR:—I beg to acknowledge receipt of your letter of May 27th, submitting several questions that have arisen in Adams county under the appropriation sections of the Smith one per cent. law, so-called. You state that you have a copy of my opinion to Hon. Edward C. Turner, prosecuting attorney of Franklin county, Ohio, and that the questions which you are submitting are such as have arisen in your mind concerning the application of that opinion. In answering your several questions I shall leave out much of the reasoning upon which my conclusions have been based, because it is set forth rather fully in the opinion to Mr. Turner.

Your questions are as follows:

"1. When may a claim, such as a county officer's salary, be said to be 'an existing, valid and binding obligation against the county' within the meaning of Sections 5656 and 5658 of the General Code?

"2. May the commissioners, for the purpose of securing money necessary to pay salaries and other legal claims, without the necessity of a monthly borrowing, transfer temporarily from the undivided tax fund to the county fund; and when a sufficient indebtedness has been incurred to make the borrowing of money convenient, proceed to do so and reimburse the county fund and transfer back to the undivided tax fund the amount taken therefrom?

"3. Must the commissioners, in borrowing money under Section 5656 of the General Code, issue bonds, or may certificates of indebtedness or notes be issued and redeemed subsequently by the isuance of bonds?

"4. If an appropriation account for a class of expenses subject to contract, such as office supplies becomes exhausted before the time for the next semi-annual appropriation, how may the commissioners secure money to furnish such supplies?

"5. Certain benevolent institutions of the state have presented their bills for clothing for inmates from Adams county, etc., due prior to March 1, 1912, but not presented until after that date; no appropriation was made to pay such bills nor is there any money in the treasury appropriated. How may these claims be paid, if at all?"

In connection with all these questions you state that the county officials' fee funds do not produce enough money to accumulate any surplus transferable to any of the other funds of the county.

Answering your first question, I am of the opinion, upon the reasoning found in the opinion to Mr. Turner, that a claim for the salary of a county officer becomes "an existing, valid and binding obligation against the county" within the meaning of Section 5658 of the General Code, when it has been earned. County officers' salaries are payable monthly. Such claims, therefore, accrue monthly. Money may not be borrowed in advance of the accrual of such claims.

Answering your second question, I beg to state that in my opinion a temporary transfer from the undivided tax fund to the county fund to pay salaries, so as to enable the commissioners to borrow a larger amount at a given time than they would otherwise be able to borrow, would not solve the problem, even if authorized by law. The plain requirement of the Smith law, Section 5649-3*d*, is that all expenditures within the six months following an appropriation period shall be made from and within the appropriations then made, and the balances thereof. If, therefore, the county fund should subsequently to the appropriation period, receive an accession of money, either by transfer from the undivided tax fund or from any other source, such money would not be available for expenditures for any purpose covered by any of the regular funds of the county until after the next appropriation period.

I enclose herewith a copy of an opinion to the bureau of inspection and supervision of public offices, in which I discuss the reasons for this holding. In other words, the only exception to the rule of Section 5649-3*d*, aside from the payment of salaries of deputies and assistants, out of the fee funds of the various county officials, is that of the proceeds of loans made by the county commissioners or other like authorities. All the ordinary current revenues of the county can only be expended after appropriation. Therefore, even after the money from the undivided tax fund has been transferred, in the manner of which I speak, to the county fund, it could not then lawfully be expended from the county fund in the absence of an appropriation thereof. The method which you suggest may be a convenient one and might be approved by the bureau of inspection and supervision of public offices as an emergency measure, the attitude of that department during the current year to relax the strict letter of the law so as to enable the various counties to get most conveniently upon the cash basis which the Smith law clearly requires. I would rather, however, that you would communicate directly with the bureau of inspection and supervision of public offices, to ascertain the attitude of that department as to the procedure of which I have just been speaking.

Answering your third question, I am of the opinion that the power of the commissioners is to borrow money by other methods than the issuance of bonds, if deemed advisable. Section 5656 of the General Code provides that the commissioners "may borrow money or issue the bonds thereof." The significance of the word "or" in this connection is dwelt upon in Commissioners vs. State, 78 O. S. 287, to which I refer you. The commissioners, therefore, have the power to issue certificates of indebtedness or promissory notes of the county, not binding themselves personally in any way, for such amounts as they may need from time to time. Indebtedness created in this manner may be refunded by an issue of bonds, advertised and sold in the manner prescribed by law for the issuance and sale of county bonds. Such bonds may not be exchanged for the outstanding notes. Commissioners vs. State, supra.

Answering your fourth question, I beg to state that in my opinion the commissioners have no way in which they may secure money to furnish supplies or otherwise provide for contractual claims after an appropriation has been exhausted, and are therefore simply without power to purchase such supplies or to enter into such contracts during such time. In the opinion to the bureau of inspection and supervision of public offices, copy of which is enclosed, you will find suggested a method for ameliorating the rigidity of the appropriation section of the Smith law in this particular. That method is, in short, for the commissioners to provide in each fund a contingent account at the time of making the semi-annual appropriation. The purpose of this contingent account would be to provide for deficiencies in any of the detailed appropriations made from that fund.

I am of the opinion also that it would be proper and lawful for the commissioners to levy a sufficient amount expressly for the purpose of creating a contingent fund the proceeds of which should be subject to appropriation and expenditure in providing for deficiencies in any of the detailed appropriations from any of the funds. In the absence of such provision, however, I know of no manner in which an emergency, such as you speak of in your fourth question, can be met.

Answering your fifth question, I am of the opinion that the claims presented to you by the benevolent institutions of which you speak cannot be paid until there is money in the treasury appropriated for the purpose of paying them, unless the commissioners desire to borrow money for that purpose. Without quoting the various statutes under which benevolent institutions are authorized to draw upon the various counties for a portion of the expense of the maintenance of the wards of the state, suffice it to state that such claims are created independently of the action of the county commissioners and constitute an obligation of the county independently of the provisions of Section 5660 of the General Code. So that, upon the principles set forth in the opinion to Mr. Turner, money may be borrowed for the purpose of paying such claims under authority of Section 5656 of the General Code.

Very truly yours,

TIMOTHY S. HOGAN,

Attorney General.

COMPENSATION OF JUDGES AND CLERKS AT ELECTIONS WITHIN SPECIAL SCHOOL DISTRICT WHEN BOND ISSUE VOTED ON SAME DATE AS PRIMARY NOT DOUBLED—CHANGE OF HOURS—EXPENSES PAID BY COUNTY.

Judges and clerks are to be paid three dollars ($3.00) under Section 4860 of the General Code for each "election" at which they serve, and the fact that the judges and clerk of the West Carrollton school district served at an election whereat votes were cast both upon the primary and also upon a school district bond issue would not entitle them to double pay.

Under Section 5092 of the General Code school elections are paid for by the county and there is no authority to charge back the expenses of the same against the special school district.

HON. CARL W. LENZ, Prosecuting Attorney, Dayton, Ohio.

DEAR SIR:—Your favor of July 1st received. You state:

> "After the call had been issued for the primary election on May 21st, the board of education of the West Carrollton village school district determined to submit a bond issue question at that same election, for which the proper notices were given, and both elections were held at the same time. The hours of the primary election closed at 5:30 p. m., but the election board held that the hours for the special election on the bond issue could not close until 6:00 p. m. The election officers in the two precincts comprising the West Carrollton village school district are claiming two days' pay for their services."

and request my opinion as to whether they are entitled to two days' pay or only one.

The duties and compensation of judges and clerks of election are found in Sections 4859 and 4860 of the General Code, which are as follows:

> "Section 4859. The judges and clerks of elections, provide for herein, shall serve as such in all elections held under the provision of this title. They shall perform all the duties and be subject to all the penalties imposed by law upon judges and clerks of election.
> "Section 4860. Such judges and clerks shall each receive as compensation for their services the sum of three dollars, which services shall be the receiving, recording, canvassing and making returns of all the votes that may be delivered to them in the voting precinct in which they preside on each election day. In any county containing a city having a population of three hundred thousand or more by the last preceding federal census, the compensation of such judges and clerks for such services shall be five dollars. In cities where registration is required, the compensation of judges and clerks shall be as otherwise provided by law."

Both elections were held on the same day; ballots for the primary and ballots for the bond issue were handed to the voters as they came into the polls. I agree with you that though the hours required for the special election are longer than those for the primary election the greater would include the less. It became the duty of the judges and clerks, as such, to receive, record, canvass and make returns of all the votes that were delivered to them in the voting precincts in which they presided on election day, whether on bond issue or primary election. The judges and clerks receive three dollars for the election and not for any particular number of hours of work; the time of closing the polls has nothing to do with the amount of compensation; they are paid, as before stated, so much for an election, and it does not make any difference how many questions are voted on a said election, or how many tickets there may be in the field, and there is no express statutory authority for additional compensation for special elections called on the same day as a general election.

You state in your letter that the claim was made for double compensation for the reason that the expense of the primary election was paid by the county and the expense of the special election would be charged back against the school district, that for that reason election judges and clerks were entitled to compensation for two days. I have already held, in an opinion addressed to Hon. Roderic Jones, city solicitor, Newark, Ohio, dated March 9, 1912, that under Section 5092 of the General Code provision is made for the payment of school elections by the county, and there is no authority to charge back such special election against the special school district wherein such special election is held. I therefore hold that the election judges and clerks in the two precincts comprising the West Carrollton village school district are entitled to but one day's pay for the services at the primary held on May 21, 1912.

Very truly yours,
TIMOTHY S. HOGAN,
Attorney General.

INTOXICATING LIQUORS—PENALTY FOR ADVERTISING OF INTOXICATING LIQUORS IN DRY TERRITORY BY KENTUCKY FIRM.

A person engaged in the sale of intoxicating liquors both in Ohio and Kentucky who advertises in dry territory, giving purchasers the option of buying either at the Kentucky or Ohio establishment is subject to the penalty prescribed in Section 13223 of the General Code.

COLUMBUS, OHIO, July 11, 1912.

HON. JOSEPH C. RILEY, Prosecuting Attorney, Ironton, Ohio.

DEAR SIR:—In your letter of February 29, 1912, you ask my opinion upon the following question:

> "Where a person is lawfully engaged in the sale of intoxicating liquors in both Ohio and Kentucky, and has his letter heads, literature, etc., showing that he is engaged in business in both states.
> "Can he advertise by posters and through the mails in any dry territory in this state?"

Section 13223 of the General Code provides:

> "Whoever, directly or indirectly, solicits orders for intoxicating liquors in a county or territory where the sale of such liquor as a beverage is prohibited shall be fined not less than one hundred and fifty dollars nor more than four hundred dollars, and, for each subsequent offense shall be fined not less than four hundred dollars nor more than eight hundred dollars."

Our supreme court, in the case of Hayner vs. State, 83 O. S. 178, has held that this statute is constitutional. The court further decided that "such solicitations may be made by letter as well as in person."

If the posters, spoken of in your inquiry, were solicitations for sale of intoxicating liquors, the prospective purchasers having the option of sending their orders either to the Ohio or Kentucky establishment, and such solicitations were mailed to persons situated in dry territory, then, it is my opinion, under the authority of the Hayner case, supra, that the person is guilty of a violation of Section 13223 of the General Code.

Very truly yours,
TIMOTHY S. HOGAN,
Attorney General.

TOWNSHIP CLERK—EXTRA COMPENSATION AS CLERK OF SCHOOL BOARD BUT NOT AS CLERK OF BOARD OF HEALTH.

By provision of Section 3391 of the General Code the township clerk is required to act as clerk of the township board of health and as there is no provision therefor, he cannot receive extra compensation for services in the latter capacity, where the limitation of $150 per year specified in Section 3308 of the General Code has been reached.

Under Sections 4747 and 4781 of the General Code by virtue of the specific provisions therein the township clerk may receive added compensation for his services as clerk of the township board of education.

COLUMBUS, OHIO, July 11, 1912.

HON. M. O. BURNS, Prosecuting Attorney, Hamilton, Ohio.

DEAR SIR:—Your communication of sometime ago received, in which you state that the clerk of Fairfield township, of your county, acting as clerk of the board of health, received additional compensation for such services, and that he had already received $150.00, the maximum sum allowed township clerks payable out of the township treasury, and requesting my opinion upon the question as to whether or not township clerks are allowed additional compensation for acting as clerk of boards of health of the townships, and

Second: requesting my opinion as to whether or not township clerks are entitled to extra compensation for acting as clerk of the township board of education.

In answer to your first question, I desire to say that Section 3391 of the General Code of Ohio provides as follows:

> "In each township the trustees thereof shall constitute a board of health, which shall be for the township outside the limits of any municipality. Each year they shall elect one of their number president and the township clerk shall be clerk of the board of health. They > shall appoint a health officer and may appoint as many sanitary officers as they deem necessary to carry out the provisions of this chapter and they shall define the duties and fix the compensation of such appointees who serve during the pleasure of the board. Such board of health shall meet annually and at such other times as it deems necessary."

By virtue of the above section, just quoted, the township trustees become ex-officio the board of health of the township, and the township clerk becomes ex-officio clerk of the board of health of the township, but nowhere in this, or any other section does the law grant any extra compensation or fees to a clerk of the township board of health, nor authorize the trustees, as the township board of health, to make any allowance to the township clerk as its clerk.

Section 3308 of the General Code specifically provides what fees the clerk shall receive as clerk of the township, and specifically provides as follows:

> "In no one year shall he be entitled to receive from the township treasury more than one hundred and fifty dollars."

It will be plainly seen that township clerks are compensated by statutory fees, and the maximum which any township clerk may receive out of the township treasury is $150.00, and in your inquiry you state that the township clerk of Fairfield township had received the maximum amount allowed by law as to township clerks, and extra compensation as clerk of the township board of health.

While under the rule laid down in the case of Marion Township Board of Health vs. Columbus, 12 Ohio Decisions, 554, "that township boards of health and township trustees, although the latter constitutes the former, are separate and distinct functionaries, and neither have control over the affairs of the other," I am of the legal opinion that the township trustees, as the township board of health, have such powers, and such only, as are conferred upon them by statute, and the statute above quoted (Section 3391 of the General Code) creating said board, did not grant it the power to allow any compensation to its clerk, who is ex-officio clerk of the board by virtue of his office as township clerk, and in view of the fact that the legislature has not provided any lawful additional compensation to said clerk, nor authorizing the township board of health to make any allowance to its clerk, I am of the opinion that the township clerk, acting as clerk of the board of health, cannot draw any additional compensation from the township treasury, but is limited to receive only the sum, or sums, which he may be entitled to as township clerk, and in no case, other than where there is legal authority to extra compensation or allowance, can he receive in excess of the maximum amount provided in Section 3308 of the General Code viz.: $150.00, in any one year.

In reply to your second question, as to whether or not township clerks are entitled to extra compensation for acting as clerk of the township board of education, I desire to say, that on February 9, 1912, I rendered an opinion on said question to the Hon. Theo. H. Tangeman, prosecuting attorney of Auglaize county, Ohio, in which I held that the board of education may lawfully pay additional compensation to the township clerk for acting as clerk of said board, and base my opinion upon the following statutes, to-wit:

Section 4747 of the General Code provides that the board of education of each school district shall organize on the first Monday of January after the election of members of such board. One member of the board shall be elected president, one as vice president, and, in township school districts, the clerk of the township shall be clerk of the board.

Therefore, in the first place, under said section, the township clerk becomes ex-officio clerk of the board of education of township school districts.

Section 4781 of the General Code provides, in part, as follows: "The board of education of each school district shall fix the compensation of its clerk and treasurer, which shall be paid from the contingent fund of the district."

Hence, Section 4781, just above quoted, authorizes the board of education to fix the compensation of its clerk and treasurer, and, under the ruling laid down in the case above cited in answer to your first question, the duties being separate and distinct, and provisions having been made by the legislature for compensation to be fixed by the board, I am of the opinion that the clerk of the township, acting as clerk of the township school district by virtue of his office, may receive additional compensation as such clerk, although he may have received from the township treasury the maximum sum of $150.00 in any one year, as provided in Section 3308 of the General Code.

Very truly yours,
TIMOTHY S. HOGAN.
Attorney General.

COUNTY EXPERIMENT FARM—POWER OF COUNTY COMMISSIONERS TO PURCHASE LAND WITH RESERVATION OF COAL MINING RIGHTS.

The general power given to the county commissioners under Sections 1165-1 to 1165-12 of the General Code to purchase land for experiment farms, is subject to no statutory restrictions with respect to the nature of the title which may be taken and therefore they may take a deed with reservations of mining rights therein.

COLUMBUS, OHIO, July 14, 1912.

HON. WILLIAM V. CAMPBELL, Prosecuting Attorney, St. Clairsville, Ohio.

DEAR SIR:—I am in receipt of your letter of April 29th, containing the following question, upon which you ask my opinion:

> "The matter of the purchase of an experiment farm about which I called your office this morning stands as follows:
> "The county has taken the necessary steps to provide for the purchase of an experiment farm as provided by Section 1165-1, and following sections, and have decided on the location and farm, but the owner wants to reserve the No. 8 vein of coal underlying all of said premises, and the following reservation on 36 acres:
> "The right to use such part of the thirty-six acres in square form off the northwest corner of the lands above described as may be necessary for the purpose of mining said coal or other coal belonging to the said A. O. Orison, his heirs and assigns, or exercising any right incidental thereto, or that may be necessary for the depositing of gob or refuse from the mines on said lands, or in any way necessary to carry on the coal business, except for the erection of dwelling houses thereon.
> "This is the part concerning which I was in doubt."

It is well settled in this state that the county commissioners possess only such powers as are derived from the statute. The provisions of the experiment farm act, Sections 1165-1 to 1165-12, inclusive, provide for the establishment, and the manner of selection and purchase, of an experiment farm within a county where the voters have authorized the same, and the issue of notes or bonds for the purchase and equipment of such farm.

The section of the code authorizing the purchase of a site for a court house contains the provision that "the title to such real estate shall be conveyed in fee simple to the county."

The statute providing for the establishment, selection and purchase of an experiment farm is general, and it is my opinion that the commissioners would be authorized to purchase said farm, even with the vendor reserving to himself the coal rights underlying the premises sold.

In ordinary acceptation "purchase" is the voluntary conveyance of title by one living person to another. In common usage as a verb Webster defines it as, "To buy, to obtain property by paying the equivalent in money." So, the statutory provisions would authorize the commissioners, before the requirements have been complied with, to buy such lands as they deem fit for the purposes of an experiment farm, and which had been selected as provided by the act; the fact that there was a reservation of the coal underlying the premises would not, in my opinion, prohibit them from taking the title, since it is the surface that they expect to use.

In other jurisdictions are found statutory prohibitions against public officers or counties taking deeds with reservations and conditions, whether in lands donated or purchased, but we have no such statute.

While apparently a more serious question arises in the extended reservation as to the 36 acres, still I am inclined to the view that if the commissioners and board of control deem the 36 acre tract a mere incident to the rest of the farm, there is no reason for not taking a deed for same even with all the reservations noted. The legislature authorized the purchase of the farm; it was not seen fit to prescribe the character of title to be taken, and it is my opinion that a wide discretion is granted to the purchasing officers.

Of course, no permanent improvements should be placed on such 36 acre tract, nor should expenditures be made thereon which would cause loss to the county by reason of the owner of the coal exercising his right to make use of such tract. The respective rights of the parties should be carefully guarded in the deed and provision made for saving the crops of the current year, and for due notice to the county in the event that the owner of the coal desired to so use the tract as to exclude its use for farming purposes.

Very truly yours,

TIMOTHY S. HOGAN,
Attorney General.

ELECTION VOID WHERE TWO CANDIDATES FOR JUSTICE OF THE PEACE INSERTED ON BALLOT WHEN ONLY ONE OFFICE TO BE FILLED.

When by mistake the names of two justices of the peace were inserted upon the ballots and voted upon at an eleection whereat only one could have been properly elected, held:

The election was void for uncertainty as there was no way of ascertaining the choice of the electors and neither one of the candidates could be declared to have been elected.

COLUMBUS, OHIO, July 11, 1912.

HON. CHARLES F. RIBBLE, Prosecuting Attorney, Zanesville, Ohio.

DEAR SIR:—Under date of February 5, 1912, you inquire as follows:

> "In Monroe township, this (Muskingum) county, at the November election, 1911, by mistake, there were two justices of the peace elected when there should have been but one. There was in said township at the time, a justice holding who had been elected two years previous for the term of four years. In the printing of the ballots, it appears the error crept in, and provided for the election of two instead of one justice, as above mentioned. There were only two candidates for election to said offices and each received a certificate of election, also a commission from the governor. And each has presented his bond to the township trustees for approval. Said trustees have accepted and approved the bond for the one of said two justices which received the highest number of votes, and so far have refused to accept and approve the bond of the other."

It appears that two persons were voted for the same office when in fact but one could be elected, as there was but position to fill.

In the case of People vs. Board, 11 Mich, 111, the converse of this situation was presented. It was therein held:

> "Under a law authorizing the election of two circuit court commissioners an election was held, but is was conducted in all respects as if one only was to be chosen; two persons were opposing candidates, and each elector voted for one of the two, but in no instance did a ballot contain more than one name for this office. It was held that only the one receiving the highest number of votes was chosen, and as to the other there was a failure to elect, and it remained vacant."

A situation somewhat similar to the present one was passed upon in case of People vs. Ames, 19 How. Pr., 551, wherein the syllabi read:

> "By the statute of 1847 (Sessions Laws 1847, ch. 489, which is constitutional), the legislature provided that the boards of supervisors might limit the number of county superintendents of the poor to one, and that when no resolution to that effect was passed, the number should be three. If, therefore, a board of supervisors pass a resolution, under this statute, declaring that hereafter there should be but one superintendent of the poor for the county (there being three at the time), they have no power thereafter, by resolution or otherwise, to declare that thereafter there shall be three such superintendents elected for the county. They have power only to reduce the number, none to increase it after it is reduced.

"If under a resolution to restore the number from one to three, an election is had, and three candidates are voted for, the election is void, because the resolution authorizing it is a nullity.

"And when but one person can be elected to an office, and three persons are named on the same ballot, the ballot is void."

Mullin, J., says on page 558:

"When but one person can be elected to an office and three are named on the same ballot, such ballot is void.

"So when three persons are declared elected to an office which but one can fill, there is no way of determining which one of them was elected, hence neither is entitled to the office."

In Paine on Elections at Section 554, it is said:

"Suppose three persons to be voted for when only two can be elected. What is the choice of the elector in such case? It is manifestly impossible to determine. The insertion in a ballot of a single name more than ought to be on it renders it as uncertain as though twenty were inserted. The result is that such a ballot is void for uncertainty. It fails to express the choice of the elector, and consequently cannot be counted as a vote."

The electors of a township have a right to choose who shall be justice of the peace. In the case presented only one justice could be elected, but the voters were permitted to vote for two persons for the office. There is no way to determine which one of the two receiving the highest number of votes would have been chosen if the electors had been given the privilege of voting for only one candidate. As between the two candidates there was no contest. They were not opposing each other.

The ballots were defective and did not permit the electors to express their preference for one of the candidates as against the other.

The election was void as to the office of justice of the peace and neither of the persons receiving a plurality of the votes can claim the office. The one who received the highest number of votes has no better claim to the office than the other.

Respectfully,

TIMOTHY S. HOGAN,

Attorney General.

TAXES AND TAXATION—LONGWORTH ACT—ROADS LOCATED OUTSIDE OF MUNICIPAL CORPORATION AND WITHIN TOWNSHIP —TAXING CORPORATION THEREFOR—POWER TO BORROW MONEY FOR DOES NOT INCLUDE POWER TO IMPROVE.

There is no constitutional objection to conferring upon a township power of levying upon the taxpayers of the entire township including those resident within a municipal corporation situated in said township for the "governmental" benefits of the improvement of roads located within the township but entirely outside of said corporation.

The fact that Sections 3295 of the General Code and 3939 of the General Code confer upon townships the power to "issue bonds for road improvements in the same manner as such power is conferred upon municipal corporations, is not conclusive of the possession of the power of townships to make road improvements" when this power is not otherwise conferred.

Power to improve roads situated as aforesaid upon election of the voters however, is conferred by Sections Nos. 7053 to 7060 of the General Code.

Such roads may also be improved under Section 7019 to 7032 of the General Code, but only in the event that the county commissioners have not themselves taken up the work of improving said roads.

COLUMBUS, OHIO, June 28, 1912.

HONORABLE LEWIS P. METZGER, Prosecuting Attorney, Salem, Ohio.

DEAR SIR:—On April 19th you submitted a question to me which I have studied under considerable difficulties. It was received at a time when I was busily engaged in various matters, so that some delay, for which I beg to apologize, has ensued in answering it. The question is as follows:

> "Can Perry township, Columbiana county, Ohio, within the territory of which is a city, to-wit, the city of Salem, issue bonds under Sections 3295, 3939 and 3940, General Code, by authority of the trustees, without an election, in an amount not to exceed 1 per cent. of all the property within the township, including the city of Salem, in any one year, for the purpose of improving the highways leading into the city, but entirely located within the territory of the township outside the incorporated city, and tax all the property within the township, including the property within the municipal corporation, to pay the interest and principal of said bonds?"

Two principal legal propositions are involved in this question, as follows:

1. What is the effect, if any, of the fact that proposed levies for payment of bonds are to be made upon the taxable property in the village as well as that in the remaining portions of the township; this question to be considered from the broader, or constitutional aspect?

2. What power has the township to construct improved roads?

I mention these questions separately because it seems to me from the phraseology, and from that of Mr. K. L. Cobourn to the bureau of inspection and supervision of public offices relating to the same matter, which has also been referred to me, that the first question is the one which has given you concern. It has been otherwise with me. There is a general implied constitutional limitation upon the exercise of taxation which is stated as being that the purposes for which taxes are levied must pertain to the district within which the levy is made, see Wasson et al. vs. Wayne, 49 O. E., 622. Hubbard vs. Fitzsimmons, 57 O. S. 436.

The application of this principle to the question you submit does not offer any obstacle to the exercise of the power in question by township trustees. The incorporation of a municipality within the territorial limits, a township does not, as a general proposition, take the territory within the new corporate limits out of the township. It is still a part of the original taxing district, and the property therein must pay its share of the burden of taxation for township purposes. It is true that the taxable property in the city is subject to the additional burden, and the real property therein to the exceptional burden on account of the improvement of streets by paving as it customary. This furnishes no reason in law, however, for the conclusion that such property is no longer chargeable for a share of the burden of improving the road of the township, if the improvement of the roads be an activity which the township as a political subdivision is authorized by law to engage in. Many statutes, and some cases, may be cited upon the proposition that the mere fact that the power of the township and city as to a certain subject matter is similar does not prevent the township from supporting the exercise of its powers by a levy within the limits of the corporation.

Lewis vs. Laylin, 46 O. S., 663, Sections 6976 et seq. of the General Code.

The determination of what charges are township charges as such rests primarily in the discretion of the legislature, although the exercise of that discretion is not conclusive as disclosed by the cases already cited. If, however, the legislature enacts a law whereby a certain political subdivision is empowered to engage in a certain governmental activity, a very strong presumption arises to the effect that such activity is beneficial to all the inhabitants of that subdivision, and to no other, so, therefore, if townships are by the statutes authorized to build improved roads, it is to be presumed that this authority is granted because the inhabitants of that subdivision share with substantial equality to the exclusion of the inhabitants of other political subdivisions the benefits of such a policy in the governmental sense. If such statutes existed it would not do for a court to hold them unconstitutional either because it might be made to appear that as a matter of fact the inhabitants of other townships than the township making the improvement shared largely in the benefits thereof, nor because, on the other hand, a part of the inhabitants of the township might be subject to other and additional taxes or assessments for the purpose of improving certain specific roads or streets. The acceptance of the first theory would logically result in a holding that if road-making is a state or county activity no locality can be especially taxed therefor; the adoption of the other extreme, too, would necessitate the passage of a law virtually limiting the payment for the improvement of the road to assessments on specially benefited property.

Of course, governmental benefits must be carefully distinguished from special benefits. It is seemingly the intention of our legislature, as witnessed by the statutes on the subject, that the construction of a road confers both kinds of benefits. It is of the latter that I speak when I say that the legislature's determination as to the political subdivision the inhabitants of which are benefited in that sense by the making of an improvement and which ought, therefore, be the improving agency, and the district in which that tax shall be levied is therefore conclusive.

I am, therefore, of the opinion that as to the first of the two questions into which I have separated your query, that if the township as a political subdivision is authorized to engage in the undertaking of improving roads, then the burden of taxation for the support of this activity not only may, but must be shared by all the taxable property in the township, including that which is situated within a city or village wholly or partly within such township, which said city or village may be itself a unit for the improvement of streets and roads.

It will thus be seen that the second of the two questions suggested by me is directly raised, and, therefore, it must be ascertained whether or not the statutes of this state do authorize the townships as such to engage in the enterprise of improving roads.

Sections 3295 and 3296 of the General Code are referred to by you and Mr. Coburn seemingly with the idea that they constitute legislation of the kind which I have been discussing. These sections provide as follows:

> "Section 3295. The trustees of any township may issue and sell bonds in such amounts and denominations, for such periods of time and at such rate of interest, not to exceed six per cent., in such manner as is provided by law for the sale of bonds of such township, for any period of the purposes authorized by law for the sale of bonds by a municipal corporation for specific purposes, when not less than two of such trustees, by an affirmative vote, by resolution deem it necessary, and the provisions of law applicable to municipal corporations in the issue and sale of bonds for specific purposes, the limitations thereon, and for the submission thereof to the voters, shall extend and apply to the trustees of townships.
> "Section 3939. When it deems it necessary, the council of a municipal corporation, by an affirmative vote of not less than two-thirds of the members elected or appointed thereto, by resolution or ordinance, may issue and sell bonds in such amounts and denominations, for such period of time, at such rate of interest, not exceeding six per cent., and in the manner as provided by law, for any of the following specific purposes:
> "4. For improving highways leading into the corporation, or for building or improving a turnpike, or for purchasing one or more turnpike roads and making them free.
> "22. For resurfacing, repairing or improving any existing street or streets as well as other public highways."

Section 3940 provides as follows:

> "Such bonds may be issued for any or all of such purposes, but the total bonded indebtedness created in any one fiscal year under the authority of the preceding section, by a municipal corporation shall not exceed one per cent. of the total value of all property in such municipal corporation, as listed and assessed for taxation, except as hereinafter provided in this chapter."

The question which has troubled me most arises right here.

I am aware that it has become generally understood that the so-called Longworth act, of which the above sections are parts, is sufficient authority for municipal, county or township authorities to undertake any of the things enumerated therein. Some of the enumerated things seem to be included in Section 3939 upon this theory. I cannot assent to it, however. In my opinion this statute authorizes the borrowing of money, but not the doing of the thing for which the money is to be borrowed. I am aware of the seeming paradox here, and of the apparent reductio ad absurdum involved in holding that the legislature meant to authorize a municipal corporation to borrow money for an object for which it could not expend it when borrowed. A little reflection, however, will, I think, convince one that the view which I take here is correct. Suppose, for example, that the legislature should by amendment of other sections of the statute take away the power of a municipal corporation granted to it in such other sections to provide for the poor, and should make that exclusively a county function, could it still be held that the power of a municipal corporation to borrow money "for erecting infirmaries," as provided in paragraph six of Section 3939, would exist? I think not. I think it is intended by Section 3939 and the succeeding sections to provide that municipal corporations and townships may borrow money for the accomplishment of such of the enumerated purposes as may be committed by the legislature to such political subdivisions in other statutes.

So, therefore, a township cannot be said to have power to borrow money "for erecting workhouses, prisons and police stations," "for constructing wharves and landings on navigable waters" "for erecting infirmaries" "for the establishment of free public baths and municipal lodging houses," or any of the other enterprises in which townships are not otherwise authorized by law to engage. These four seemingly do not apply to townships, although all the "specific purposes" enumerated in Section 3939 are supposed to be purposes for which by Section 3295 townships can borrow money.

In truth, the Longworth act, so-called, though many times re-drafted by the general assembly, still fails to express the meaning which it is evidently designed to express. Section 3939 itself is in very bad form; it is certainly improper, if not unconstitutional, for the legislature to attempt to confer upon a political subdivision the power of engaging in certain governmental or proprietary activities simply by authorizing such subdivision to borrow money for that purpose.

I am, therefore, of the opinion that Section 3939 does not of itself confer authority on the township trustees to borrow money for the purpose of improving the highways, nor to levy a tax for the purpose of paying such a loan. I am of the opinion, however, that if elsewhere in the statutes there is found authority on the part of the township trustees to improve the roads of the township, then bonds may be issued under Section 3939 and subject to its limitations for the purpose of carrying that power into effect.

The whole subject of the improvement of the highways of a township by township trustees is provided for in Sections 6976 to 7060 of the General Code. In these sections will be found several striking inconsistencies which are explicable, however, by the fact that these sections are made up of different acts passed at different times, seemingly without regard to the existence of other laws covering the same subject matter.

Section 6976 authorizes the township trustees, upon petition, and after the favorable result of a general election, in the township, to improve by general taxation the road within such township.

"* * * including a road running into a through a village or city."

The machinery for this purpose is provided for by the sections beginning with the one already cited and ending with Section 7108 of the General Code. Sections 7019 to 7032, General Code, authorize the township trustees of any township, without any petition and without submitting any question to the vote of the electors of the township to make a levy each year

> "for the purpose of improving by macadamizing and graveling the public highways in the township."

Although the sections are short and not numerous, they provide a complete scheme for improving the roads of the township. Sections 7033 to 7052, inclusive, provide for the creation of the township, or part of it, as a special district for the improvement of the roads. It is expressly provided, however, in Section 7033 that territory within the boundaries of a municipal corporation shall be excluded from such road district.

Sections 7053 to 7060, inclusive, authorize the creation of the township into a separate road district, the boundaries of which seemingly are co-extensive with that of the township, which must be effected by a vote of the people.

Now coming to the application of these different statutory provisions to the question at hand, it appear that Sections 6076 to 7018, General Code, do not apply to nor authorize such an improvement as is contemplated, because it is only when one of the roads to be improved passes through or enters a municipal corporation that these sections apply, and this, as I understand it, is not the case which gives rise to the question submitted by you.

Sections 7033 to 7052 do not apply for the manifest reason that no territory within a municipal corporation can be included within the road district to be created thereunder. Sections 7053 to 7060 might apply, but would require an election, which, as I understand it, you want to avoid.

The only sections which would apply, and which would authorize township trustees to improve the roads of the township without authority of a vote of the people are Sections 7019 to 7032, inclusive. Section 7020, one of these sections, provides as follows:

> "The next preceding section shall not apply to townships in a county in which the county commissioners have improved or are improving the high ways by macadamizing and graveling."

The effect of this section is to withdraw the application of the whole subdivision of the chapter from the townships in which the county commissioners have improved the roads.

For the reasons already suggested, I am of the opinion that if there are at the present time in Perry township, Columbiana county roads improved by the county commissioners, or in process of improvement by such commissioners, the township trustees, without a vote of the electors, are without power to improve the roads of the township either within or outside of the corporate limits of the city of Salem; and they likewise without power, in spite of the provisions of Section 3939 of the General Code (adopted in 3295, G. C.), to borrow money and expend the proceeds thereof in making such improvement. On the other hand, I am of the opinion that if the county commissioners have not or are not now improving any roads in Perry township, the trustees of that township have the power, under Sections 7019 to 7032, inclusive, to improve by macadamizing and graveling the public highways in the township, and to levy annually for this purpose; and to aid in the execution of this power such trustees may borrow money under Sections 3295 and 3939, General Code.

I am further of the opinion that the taxes levied either with or without an issue of bonds, whether under Seections 7019 and 7021 themselves, or for interest and sinking funds purposes, to retire the bonds issued under Section 3939 for this purpose, must be upon the duplicate of the entire township including the city of Salem.

Very truly yours,

TIMOTHY S. HOGAN,

Attorney General.

SHERIFF—FEES FOR RECEIVING, DISCHARGING OR SURRENDERING PRISONERS—PAYMENT INTO FEE FUND.

By Section 2845 of the General Code the sheriff is entitled to charge a fee of fifty cents for receiving, discharging or surrendering each prisoner to be charged but once in each case and such fee is to be paid by virtue of Sections 2982 and 2983 of the General Code into sheriff's fee fund.

COLUMBUS, OHIO, July 17, 1912.

HON. R. A. BEARD, Prosecuting Attorney, Youngstown, Ohio.

DEAR SIR:—Your favor of June 21st, in which you state that your sheriff has discovered that many of the other sheriffs in the state are charging a fee of fifty cents as jail fees for receiving, discharging or surrendering each prisoner to be charged but once in each case, is received.

Then you inquire:

"Is the sheriff entitled to this fee, and if so, does it go to him personally or to his fee fund?"

Section 2345, General Code, provides as follows:

"For the services hereinafter specified, when rendered, the sheriff shall charge and collect the following fees and no more: * * * jail fees for receiving, discharging or surrendering each prisoner to be charged but once in each case, fifty cents * * *."

Section 2977, General Code, is as follows:

"All the fees, costs, percentages, penalties, allowances and other perquisites collected or received by law as compensation for services by a county auditor, county treasurer, probate judge, sheriff, clerk of courts, or recorder, shall be so received and collected for the sole use of the treasury of the county in which they are elected and shall be held as public moneys belonging to such county and accounted for and paid over as such as hereinafter provided."

Section 2978, General Code, provides as follows:

"Each probate judge, auditor, treasurer, clerk of courts, sheriff and recorder, shall charge and collect the fees, costs, percentages, allowances and compensation allowed by law."

Section 2983, General Code, is as follows:

"At the end of each quarter, each such officer shall pay into the county treasury on the warrant of the county auditor, all fees, costs, penalties, percentages, allowances and perquisites of whatever kind collected by his office during such quarter, for his official services, which money shall be kept in separate funds by the county treasurer, and credited, to the office from which they were received."

You will note that under authority of Section 2845, General Code, the sheriff has a right to charge fifty cents as jail fees for receiving, discharging or surrendering each prisoner to be charged but once in each case.

Section 2977, General Code, provides that "all fees, costs, percentages, penalties, allowances and perquisites collected or received by law as compensation for services by the sheriff, shall be received and collected for the sole use of the treasury of the county and shall be held as public moneys."

Section 2978, General Code, provides that "the sheriff shall charge and collect the fees, costs, percentages, allowances and compensation allowed by law."

Section 2982, General Code, provides that he shall keep account of all fees collected, and Section 2983, General Code, provides that he shall pay into the county treasury on the first Monday of April, July, October and January of each year, all fees collected.

I therefore, held that the sheriff is entitled to charge a fee of fifty cents for receiving, discharging or surrendering each prisoner, to be charged but once in each case and the fee is to be paid into the sheriff's fee fund.

Very truly yours

TIMOTHY S. HOGAN,

Attorney General.

COUNTY FAIR ASSOCIATIONS—RIGHT TO FUNDS IN COUNTY—GENERAL FUND RAISED BY LEVIES FOR FAIR PURPOSES AT FORMER TIMES—ASSESSMENTS AGAINST ASSOCIATIONS FOR STREET IMPROVEMENTS NOT PAYABLE BY COUNTY.

By virtue of Sections 9893 and 9894 of the General Code money raised by taxation for county agricultural society purposes need not be used within any specific time and when there is such money in the general fund of the county it may be used by said association after it has been properly appropriated.

There is no statutory authorization permitting the county commissioners to pay special assessments for street improvements fronting on county fair association's property, from moneys in the county treasury.

COLUMBUS, OHIO, July 11, 1912.

HON. DAVID A. WEBSTER, Prosecuting Attorney, Bryan, Ohio.

DEAR SIR:—Your favor of March 25, 1912, is received in which you inquire:

> "The directors of our county fair association failed to make the request upon the county commissioners, as provided by Section 9894, General Code, and for that reason the commissioners failed to make a levy for that purpose. But there is in the treasury, credited to the general fund, several hundred dollars that have been raised for the purpose of the county fair association prior to the levy made for this year.
> "Would the county commissioners have a right to pay out of the treasury, credited to the general fund, that sum which remains in the treasury and raised under the former levies, to the fair association, and under that portion of Section 9894, General Code, which reads as follows: 'Said commissioners shall pay out of the treasury any sum from money in the general fund not otherwise appropriated, in anticipation of such levy.'

"A part of the fair grounds lies within the village of Montpelier and last summer they paved the street running along in front of the fair ground and the fair association's portion or assessment amounts to about $2,000.00 and they have paid into the village treasury about two hundred and seventy odd dollars, as the first installment of the assessment and while it might have been an oversight on the part of the fair association or the county commissioners, yet is would come very acceptable to the fair association this year if there could be paid out of the county treasury the amount of this assessment as paid by the fair association, as it will be impossible for them to get that amount as provided under said Section 9894, to-wit $1,500.00, as there is not that amount in the general fund not appropriated."

Section 9894, General Code, provides:

"When a county or a county agricultural society, owns or holds under a lease, real estate used as a site wherein to hold fairs, and the county agricultural society therein has the control and management of such lands and buildings, for the purpose of encouraging agricultural fairs, the county commissioners shall on the request of the agricultural society annually levy taxes not exceeding a tenth of one mill upon all taxable property of the county, but in no event to exceed the sum of one thousand five hundred dollars, which sum shall be paid by the treasurer of the county to the treasurer of the agricultural society, upon an order from the county auditor duly issued therefor. Such commissioners shall pay out of the treasury any sum from money in the general fund not otherwise appropriated, in anticipation of such levy."

It appears that the county commissioners have made no levy as authorized by this section. The power of the commissioners to pay out of the general fund any money not otherwise appropriated, as given in the last sentence of Section 9894, General Code, is in anticipation of such levy. In your case no levy has been made, and there is therefore no levy to anticipate. The power here given is to advance the money until the amount due under the levy can be collected from the taxpayers.

It appears, however, that there is money in the county treasury which has been heretofore levied for the purposes of the county fair association, but which has not been expended by it.

Section 9893, General Code, provides:

"When money has been raised by taxation in a county for the purpose of leasing lands for county fairs, or of erecting buildings for county fair purposes, or for making improvements on county fair grounds, or any purpose connected with use of county fair grounds or the management thereof by a county agricultural society, it shall be used for such purpose only, notwithstanding the law under which the money was so raised has expired by limitation. Such moneys shall be used for the purpose intended by the act under which they were levied and collected by taxation."

There is nothing is Section 9894, General Code, to require the money that is raised by taxation for the purpose therein set forth, to be expended in any certain year. It may be partly expended in one and partly in another year.

By virtue of Section 9893, General Code, the money so raised by taxation cannot be used for any other purpose. It is my conclusion, therefore, that the money in the county treasury, which has been raised by taxation for the use of a county agricultural society under Section 9894, General Code, must be used for the purpose for which it was levied. A balance remaining at the end of the year may be used the following year.

The balance in your county treasury to the credit of the county fair association, or which was levied for its use, may be now used by said association, after the necessary appropriation has been made thereof.

You inquire further as to securing a repayment from the county of the amount paid for a special assessment upon the property of the fair association for the improvement of a street.

The assessment is made against the property, which is under the control and management of the fair association. It is in fact a debt of the association and not of the county. I find no authority for the county commissioners to pay such special assessment from the funds of the county.

Section 9895, General Code, provides:

> "If a county society and the county commissioners decide that the interests of the society and county demand an appropriation from the county treasury for the purchase and improvement of county fair grounds greater than that authorized by the preceding section, or without action of or purchase by the society, the commissioners may levy a tax upon all the taxable property of the county, the amount of which they shall fix, but shall not exceed half a mill thereon, in addition to the amount authorized in the preceding section to be paid for such purpose."

By virtue of Section 9896, General Code, a levy under the foregoing section must be submitted to a vote of the electors of the county.

Section 9887, General Code, provides:

> "When a county society has purchased, or leased real estate whereon to hold fairs for a term of not less than twenty years, or the title to the grounds is vested in fee in the county, but the society has the control and management of the lands and buildings; if they think it for the interests of the county, and society, the county commissioners may pay out of the county treasury the same amount of money for the purchase or lease and improvement of such site as is paid by such society or individuals for that purpose, and may levy a tax upon all the taxable property of the county sufficient to meet such payment."

These sections authorize the commissioners to levy a tax under certain conditions, but do not authorize them to pay money from the county treasury to meet the expenditures of the fair association, such as are made for a special asessment.

Respectfully,

TIMOTHY S. HOGAN,

Attorney General.

BOXWELL-PATTERSON GRADUATE—TUITION—BOARDS OF EDUCATION—EFFECT OF REMOVAL TO OTHER DISTRICT—DIPLOMA ENTITLES TO ATTENDANCE AT ANY HIGH SCHOOL.

When a Patterson graduate whose tuition at an outside district first grade high school has been paid by the school board of her legal residence, removes to a special school district maintaining a third grade high school, and still continues to attend the fourth year of the first grade high school aforesaid, there is no provision of law by which either the school board of her first or that of her new residence can be made chargeable with her tuition.

Under Section 7744 of the General Code she is entitled to attend any high school in the state. This statute applies to the first grade high school aforesaid, and no contrary provision being made for tuition, none need be paid.

COLUMBUS, OHIO, June 24, 1912.

HON. D. W. MURPHY, Prosecuting Attorney, Batavia, Ohio.

DEAR SIR:—I herewith acknowledge the receipt of your inquiry of June 14, 1912, wherein you inquire as follows:

> "A Patterson graduate in Miami township, Clermont county, Ohio, attended the Milford (Ohio) school for three years as such graduate, gave due notice to the Miami township school board, and the Miami township school board paid her tuition for three years at the Milford high school.
> "In March of her third year in the Milford school she moved from Miami township to Owensville special school district in Stone Lick township, Clermont county, Ohio. She continued from March to June to go to the Milford school which was her third year at that school, the Milford school maintaining a four years' course. In the following fall she again attended the Milford school for her fourth year, being then a resident of the Owensville school district in Stone Lick township, there being maintained by the Owensville school board a high school having three years' course. She did not notify the Owensville board of her attendance at the Milford high school for the fourth year. After she attended the Milford school and graduated therefrom the Owensville board of Stone Lick township refused to pay her tuition at the Milford school, on the ground, first, that she had never gone to the Owensville school; second, that she was not a graduate of Stone Lick township; and, third, that she gave no notice of attending the Milford school during the fourth year.
> "The board of education of both the Milford school in Miami township where she attended high school and the board of education of the Owensville school where she resided, have requested an opinion from me as to who is liable for the payment of her tuition."

In reply to your inquiry I desire to say, that Section 7651 of the General Code classifies high schools as follows:

> "The high schools of the state shall be classified into schools of the first, second and third grades. All courses of study offered in such schools shall be in branches enumerated in Section 7649."

Section 7652, of the General Code, provides as follows:

"A high school of the first grade shall be a school in which the courses offered cover a period of not less than four years, of not less than thirty-two weeks each, in which not less than sixteen courses are required for graduation."

Section 7653, of the General Code, provides:

"A high school of the second grade shall cover a period of not less than three years, of not less than thirty-two weeks each, in which not less than twelve courses of study are required for graduation."

Section 7654. of the General Code, provides:

"A high school of the third grade shall cover a period of not less than two years, of not less than twenty-eight weeks each, in which not less than eight courses of study are required for graduation."

In your inquiry you state that the board of education of the Owensville school district, located in Stone Lick township, maintained a high school having a three-year course, so that, I concluded, the said Owensville high school is a high school of the second grade, as classified by statute.

The Milford high school, which the said Patterson graduate attended, being a high school with a four-year course, comes within the first grade, as classified by statute, above quoted.

Section 7748, of the General Code, provides as follows:

"A board of education providing a third grade high school as defined by law shall be required to pay the tuition of graduates from such school residing in the district at any first grade high school for two years, or at a second grade high school for one year and a first grade high school for one year. Such a board providing a second grade high school as defined by law shall pay the tuition of graduates residing in the district at any first grade high school for one year; except, that, a board maintaining a second or third grade high school is not required to pay such tuition when a levy of twelve mills permitted by law for such district has been reached and all the funds so raised are necessary for the support of the schools of such district. No board of education is required to pay the tuition of any pupil for more than four school years; except that it must pay the tuition of all successful applicants, who have complied with the further provisions hereof, residing more than four miles by the most direct route of public travel, from the high school provided by the board, when such applicants attend a nearer high school, or in lieu of paying such tuition the board of education maintaining a high school may pay for the transportation of the pupils living more than four miles from the said high school maintained by the said board of education to said high school. Where more than one high school is maintained, by agreement of the board and parent or guardian, pupils may attend either and their transportation shall be so paid. A pupil living in a village or city district who has completed the elementary school course and whose legal residence has been transferred to a township or special district in this state before he begins or completes a high school course, shall be entitled to all the rights and privileges of a Boxwell-Patterson graduate."

It will be noted that said section only requires the boards of education of such high schools to pay the tuition of their graduates from such respective high schools to the high schools of a higher grade.

In an opinion of the date of July 31, 1911, which was rendered to the Hon. F. M. Stevens, prosecuting attorney, Elyria, Ohio, this department held that a board of education is not required to pay the tuition of pupils residing in its district while attending another high school, unless such pupil is a graduate of its own school. I am herewith enclosing a copy of said opinion.

In view of said opinion, it follows, therefore, that inasmuch as the Patterson graduate, about whom you inquire, was not a graduate of the Owensville high school, the board of education of the said Owensville school district is not liable for her tuition.

The said graduate is a Patterson graduate, and Section 7747, of the General Code, provides as to the tuition of such graduates, as follows:

"The tuition of pupils holding diplomas and residing in township or special districts, in which no high school is maintained, shall be paid by the board of education of the school district in which they have legal school residence, such tuition to be computed by the month. An attendance any part of the month shall create a liability for the entire month; but a board of education maintaining a high school shall not charge more tuition than it charges for other non-resident pupils."

After said graduate removed from Miami township, where she received her diploma, to the Owensville school district, she lost her legal school residence in said township.

It is to be noted that said Section 7747, of the General Code, specifically states that the board of education is only required to pay the tuition of pupils holding diplomas, and residing in township or special districts in which no high school is maintained and in which such pupils have legal school residence. In this connection, it is also to be noted that the Owensville school district, to which said pupil removed, maintained a high school of the second grade. It, therefore, follows, that said Section 7747, G. C., eliminates the school board of Miami township from any and all liability for the tuition of the said Patterson graduate for and during the time after she removed from Miami township, in Clermont county, to the Owensville school district in Stone Lick township in said county.

Section 7744, of the General Code, and its co-related sections provide for the acquiring of diplomas to attend high schools by pupils residing in districts which have no high school.

Said Section 7744 provides that such diploma shall entitle its holder to enter any high school in the state, as follows, to wit:

"The board of county school examiners shall provide for the holding of a county commencement not later than August 15th, at such a place as it determines. At this commencement an annual address must be delivered, at the conclusion of which a diploma shall be presented to each successful applicant wha has complied with the provisions hereof. Such diploma shall entitle its holder to enter any high school in the state."

It is the clear intention of said section to give all pupils in the state, residing in school districts not having high schools, an opportunity to attend a high school, if such pupils desire to avail themselves of the opportunity to do so.

The fact that the said Patterson graduate had such diploma entitled her to enter any high school in the state.

For the reason herein stated, I am of the opinion that the school board of Miami township is not liable for the tuition of the said graduate for and during the time she attended the Milford high school after she removed from said township; also, for reasons heretofore stated, I am of the opinion that the board of education of the Owensville school district is not liable for her tuition for and during the time she attended the Milford high school after she removed from Miami township to Owensville.

Very truly yours,
TIMOTHY S. HOGAN,
Attorney General.

AGRICULTURAL SOCIETIES—STATUTORY REQUIREMENTS—LEVY FOR—REQUEST FOR COUNTY AID—ONE SOCIETY TO A COUNTY.

That an agricultural society may receive the benefit of the levy provided for in Section 9894, of the General Code, all statutory provisions must be complied with, and when such an association is not properly organized and has not made the required request for the levy to the county commissioners they may not receive the benefit thereof.

The statutes provide for but one such agricultural society to a county, and where more than one has complied with the procedure for organization, the one which has first complied with the statutes is alone entitled to recognition.

COLUMBUS, OHIO, July 16, 1912.

HON. SHOLTO M. DOUGLAS, Prosecuting Attorney, Waverly, Ohio.

DEAR SIR:—Your favor of June 17, 1912, is received in which you inquire:

> "I wish to ask your opinion upon certain questions arising under Section 9894, G. C., which provides for a tax levy to support 'agricultural societies.'
> "Prior to the making of the tax levy a year ago there were in this county two fair associations. One was not organized as an 'agricultural society' as required by Section 9880, et sequor, and there is doubt as to whether or not the other association was so organized, but they, at least, were recognized by Mr. Sandles, of the state board of agriculture, as 'The Pike County Agricultural Society,' and upon his certificate they drew the '2c per capita' provided for by Section 9880.
> "This latter association by their officers requested in writing that this levy be made for their benefit; the president of the former says they made no request, but the secretary says an informal request for the levy was made to the auditor.
> "Shortly after this time both associations reorganized so as to leave no doubt, I understand, that they were organized so as to entitle them to the proceeds of any future levy.

"The right of the association which claims to have been properly organized to the money is now disputed, and I desire to submit for your opinion, the following questions:

"Which, if either, of these associations is entitled to the proceeds of the levy made a year ago?

"Having now two 'agricultural societies,' now should the next levy be made for the benefit of both if both request it? If not, for which should it be made?"

Section 9894, General Code, to which you refer, provides:

"When a county or a county agricultural society, owns or holds under a lease, real estate used as a site whereon to hold fairs, and the county agricultural society therein has the control and management of such lands and buildings, for the purpose of encouraging agricultural fairs, the county commissioners shall on the request of the agricultural society annually levy taxes of not exceeding a tenth of one mill upon all taxable property of the county, but in no event to exceed the sum of one thousand five hundred dollars, which sum shall be paid by the treasurer of the county to the treasurer of the agricultural society, upon an order from the county auditor duly issued therefor. Such commissioners shall pay out from the treasury any sum from money in the general fund not otherwise appropriated, in anticipation of such levy."

This section authorizes the county commissioners to make a levy upon "request of the agricultural society." One of the associations in your county made a written request for the levy to the county commissioners. The other made no request to the commissioners, but claim to have made an "informal request" to the auditor. You further state that the society claiming to have made the request to the auditor was not organized as required by Sections 9880, et seq., General Code.

Section 9880, General Code, provides:

"When thirty or more persons, residents of a county, or of a district embracing one or more counties, organize themselves into an agricultural society, which adopts a constitution and by-laws, selects the usual and proper officers, and otherwise conducts its affairs in conformity to law, and the rules of the state board of agriculture, and when such county or district society has held an annual exhibition in accordance with the three following sections, and made proper report to the state board, then, upon presentation to the county auditor, of a certificate from the president of the state board attested by the secretary thereof, that the laws of the state and the rules of the board have been complied with, the county auditor of each county wherein such agricultural societies are organized, annually shall draw an order on the treasurer of the county in favor of the president of the county or district agricultural society for a sum equal to two cents to each inhabitant thereof, on the basis of the last previous national census. The total amount of such order shall not in any county exceed eight hundred dollars, and the treasurer of the county shall pay it.

In order for such an association to secure aid from the county it must comply with the conditions of the statutes.

The request for the levy to be made under Section 9894, General Code, should in my opinion, be made to the county commissioners, who are to make the levy.

The one association in your county was not organized in accordance with the provisions of Section 9880, General Code, and did not make a request to the county commissioners for the levy. In fact, it is doubtful if they made any request. The levy was made by the commissioners upon the request of the other association and for their aid. The money collected under such levy should go to the association upon whose request the levy was made, provided, of course, that it has complied with all the conditions of the statutes.

You state that there is doubt whether this association was organized as required by Section 9880, et seq., General Code. In order for this association to receive public aid it must come clearly within the provisions of the statutes.

It appears that there are now two agricultural societies in the county organized as required by Section 9880, et seq., both of which are claiming the aid of the county.

Section 9881, General Code, provides:

> "The several county or district societies formed under the provisions of the preceding section, annually shall offer and award premiums for the improvement of soils, tillage, crops, manures, implements, stock, articles of domestic industry, and such other articles, productions and improvements, as they deem proper, and may perform all acts they deem best calculated to promote the agricultural and household manufacturing interests of the district and of the state. They shall regulate the amount of premiums, and their different grades, so that small as well as large farmers may have an opportunity to compete therefor. In making their awards special reference shall be had to the profits which accrue, or are likely to accrue, from the improved mode of raising the crop, or of improving the soil, or stock, or of the fabrication of the articles thus offered, so that the premium will be given for the most economical mode of improvement."

The statutes do not specifically limit the number of agricultural societies that may be organized in a certain county. Neither do they specifically limit the number of associations to which public aid can be given. There is no authority or provision of statute by which the aid to be granted under Sections 9880 and 9894, General Code, can be apportioned between two or more associations, or that such aid may be paid alternately to two societies.

The purpose of these statutes is to encourage agriculture, and the aid of the public is given to promote county fairs in order to exhibit the products of the farm and of the home.

The language of Section 9894, General Code, is that "the county commissioners shall on the request of the agricultural society, annually levy taxes—which sum shall be paid by the treasurer of the county to the treasurer of the agricultural society." The language of Section 9880, General Code, is "the county auditor—annually shall draw an order on the treasurer of the county in favor of the president of the county or district agricultural society." A district must embrace one or more counties as provided in Section 9880, supra.

These provisions as well as those of the other sections make it clear that the county can give aid to but one agricultural society in any one year, and that it cannot aid more than one. The money is to be paid to the "agricultural society" and not to the "agricultural society, or societies."

The statutes fix no means of determining which association shall receive the support of the county, where there are two associations in a county that have complied with the requirements of the statutes. In such cases the society first properly organized is the only society which can receive the aid of the county.

Respectfully,

TIMOTHY S. HOGAN,

Attorney General.

BOARD OF EDUCATION OF TOWNSHIP—PAYMENT OF PATRONS FOR CONVEYANCE OF OWN PUPILS WHEN SUB-DISTRICT SCHOOLS SUSPENDED.

Under Sec. 7730, of the General Code, when schools in sub-districts have been suspended, a township board of education may pay each patron for conveying his own pupil instead of employing one man to convey all pupils, where funds are insufficient to apply the latter method.

COLUMBUS, OHIO, July 19, 1912.

HON. GEORGE D. KLEIN, Prosecuting Attorney, Coshocton, Ohio.

DEAR SIR:—Your favor of July 9th received. You state:

> "The board of education of Jefferson township, in this county, have centralized the schools and have made provision to transport the pupils to a central school in one of the sub-districts, however, in which there are but a few pupils and very hard to get at.
> "They have thus far been unable to get a man to transport the pupils for the money that the board is able to offer, but instead of that they offer to each patron who have pupils to send, $20.00 apiece and take his own pupils to and from the central school.
> "It is now contended by some of these patrons, that transportation means that they be hauled by one man, and that the arrangement for each patron to take his own pupil or pupils is not in compliance with Section 7730, of the General Code.
> "It was my opinion that such transportation would be a compliance with the law, and I desire very much to have your opinion, and to have it as soon as possible, for the board must make arrangements soon to comply with the law.
> "In order that you might understand my question, I will put it in this way: A, B, C and D each have pupils to attend the central school. Is the board compelled to hire one man to transport all those pupils or can the board pay A, B, C and D individually for each to transport his own pupils?"

You inquire whether it is lawful for the board of education to employ each patron who has pupils to send to the central school established in Jefferson township, your county, to take his own pupils to and from the central school because your board is unable to get one person to transport the pupils for the money the board has for that purpose, it being contended by some of the patrons of the district, you state, that transportation means that they must be hauled by one person, and that the arrangement for each patron to take his own pupil or pupils is not in compliance with Section 7730, General Code.

Section 7730, General Code, is as follows:

> "The board of education of any township school district may suspend the schools in any or all sub-districts in the township district. Upon such suspension the board must provide for the conveyance of the pupils residing in such sub-district or sub-districts to a public school in the township district, or to a public school in another district, the cost thereof to be paid out of the funds of the township school district. Or, the board may abolish all the sub-districts providing conveyance is furnished to one or more central schools, the expense thereof to be paid out of the funds of the district. No sub-district school where the average daily attendance is twelve or more, shall be so suspended or abolished, after a vote has been taken under the provisions of law therefor, when at such election a majority of the votes cast thereon were against the proposition of centralization, or when a petition has been filed thereunder and has not yet been voted upon at an election."

This section authorizes the board of education to abolish all sub-districts of a township, provided conveyances are furnished to one or more central schools, and the expense thereof to be paid out of the funds of the district.

This section authorizes and makes it mandatory upon the board of education to provide conveyances in the abolished sub-districts.

The board, under authority of this section, may find it necessary to employ one or more persons to transport the pupils to and from the central school. In the interest of economy, it may be necessary to have more persons than one employed.

You state that you are unable to get one person to transport the pupils for the money that the board is able to offer, but that you can employ the parents of pupils to haul their own children to and from the central school within the sum provided for that purpose.

I am of the opinion, therefore, that such contracts would be legal, provided, of course, no contract can be made with any member of the board of education to transport his own children, for the reason that such contracts are prohibited by law.

Very truly yours,

TIMOTHY S. HOGAN,

Attorney General.

SALARY OF MEMBERS OF BOARD OF REVIEW CANNOT BE CHANGED BY COUNTY COMMISSIONERS DURING ANNUAL SESSION—PERSON FILLING VACANCY SUCCEEDS TO SALARY OF PREDECESSOR.

By authority of State vs. Edwards, when the county commissioners fix the salary of the members of the board of review such salary cannot be changed during the annual session of the board. When at the opening of such session the commissioners have failed to fix said salary the salary fixed for the previous session shall remain unchanged throughout the existing session.

When a person is appointed to fill a vacancy in the board of review, his salary may not be made different from that of the prior encumbent.

COLUMBUS, OHIO, July 19, 1912.

HON. HARRY P. BLACK, Prosecuting Attorney, Tiffin, Ohio.

DEAR SIR:—Your letter of June 12th received. You submit the following inquiry:

> "The board of review of the cities of Fostoria and Tiffin appointed for the purpose to determine the values of the real and personal properties of the two cities, appointed by the attorney general, the treasurer of state and the auditor of state, had their compensation fixed at $5.00 per day. They have rendered faithful and efficient service ever since their organization, and it is a good investment for the taxpayers of both cities. However, the board of county commissioners of this county struck with a spasm of economy, propose to reduce that now to $4.00 per day. My contention is that these men are state officers appointed for a definite fixed period of time; that when their salary is once fixed as it was in this case, that it can neither be deducted from nor added to during their term of office. This, then, is my contention; that at the time of their appointment by the board who had the appointing power, the term of office fixed and their compensation fixed, that that can neither be added to or reduced.
> "Second question. A former member of the Tiffin board of review having been elected mayor of the city of Tiffin, resigned his membership on the board of review and his place was filled by Michael Morrow.
> "Query: If the first question is answered in the affirmative, does he succeed to the same compensation that Mr. Keppel enjoyed or is he bound by the action of the board of county commissioners?"

Section 5621, General Code, requires the county commissioners to fix the salary of the members of the board of review within certain limitations therein prescribed.

> "Query: When the county commissioners have, in compliance with this provision, fixed the salaries of the members of the board, for what period of time does the resolution fixing the compensation extend?"

Section 5621, General Code, provides as follows:

"The county commissioners shall fix the salary of the members of the board of review, which shall not be less than three dollars and fifty cents per day for each day the board is in session, and not to exceed two hundred and fifty dollars per month for the time such board is in session. Such salary shall be payable monthly out of the county treasury upon the order of said board and the warrant of the county auditor. The board shall meet in rooms provided by the county commissioners, and when in session, shall devote their entire time to the duties of their office. No member thereof shall be engaged in any other business or employment during the period of time covered by the session of the board."

The question of the authority of the county commissioners to fix compensation of members of the board of review, was up before the circuit court of Montgomery county recently, in the case of State ex rel. vs. Edwards, unreported.

The Dayton city board of review was established in 1884, and the board of county commissioners at that time fixed the salary of each member of said board at $2,000.00 per year. No further action was ever taken by the board of county commissioners relating to fixing the salaries of members of the board, until March, 1910, when the county commissioners by resolution upon their minutes, reduced the salary of each member to $3.50 per day. One of the members of the board of review thereupon brought suit in mandamus against the county auditor to compel him to issue a warrant for his salary at the old rate of $2,000.00 per year. Upon hearing the circuit court held that the salary of members of the board of review could be fixed by the county commissioners at the beginning of each year's session in June, and that salary would remain unchanged during the year, that if no action was taken by the county commissioners at the beginning of the year's session, the salary fixed for the former year would continue as the salary of the members of the board of review for the ensuing year.

Following that opinion I hold, that it is the duty of the county commissioners to fix the compensation for members of the board of review for each annual session of the board, and when the commissioners have failed, at the opening of a session of the board of review, to fix the salaries of the members for such session, they cannot fix it during the session and the salary previously fixed is presumed to apply to the current session.

Your letter also states that:

"A former member of the Tiffin board of review having been elected mayor of the city of Tiffin, resigned his membership on the board and his place was filled by another party.

"Query: If the first question is answered in the affirmative, does he succeed to the same compensation that the former member enjoyed or is he bound by the action of the county commissioners?"

Answering your second question, when a member of the board of review resigns during a session, his successor succeeds to the same compensation enjoyed by the resigning member.

Very truly yours,

TIMOTHY S. HOGAN,

Attorney General.

TAXES AND TAXATION—LEVY FOR AGRICULTURAL SOCIETY—NECESSITY FOR REQUEST—DISCRETION OF COUNTY COMMISSIONERS AND BUDGET COMMISSION.

In accordance with the provisions of Section 9894 of the General Code an agricultural society as a condition precedent to receiving the benefit of the levy therein provided for such levy to the county commissioners.

The latter officials may then determine the amount to be levied, which shall not exceed $1,500.00 which amount is submitted to the further discretion of the budget commission's power to reduce the same.

COLUMBUS, OHIO, July 24, 1912.

HON. F. L. JOHNSON, Prosecuting Attorney, Xenia, Ohio.

DEAR SIR:—I have your inquiry of July 15th, wherein you state:

> "Has the county auditor the right to pay the Greene county agricultural society $1,500.00 under Section 9894 as amended, Ohio Laws, Vol. 102, page 105, when no levy has been made for such purpose and no demand filed for such levy until after the time has passed for the commissioners to make their levy?
> "A bill has now been filed with the county auditor by the agricultural society for $1,500.00 to be paid from the taxes of 1911. The agricultural society made no demand, nor did the county commissioners make a levy for the years 1911 or 1912."

Section 9894 of the General Code provides:

> "When a county or a county agricultural society, owns or holds under a lease, real estate used as a site whereon to hold fairs, and the county agricultural society therein has the control and management of such lands and buildings, for the purpose of encouraging agricultural fairs, the county commissioners shall on the request of the agricultural society annually levy taxes of not exceeding a tenth of one mill upon all taxable property of the county, but in no event to exceed the sum of one thousand five hundred dollars, which sum shall be paid by the treasurer of the county to the treasurer of the agricultural society, upon an order from the county auditor duly issued therefor. Such commissioners shall pay out of the treasury any sum from money in the general fund not otherwise appropriated, in anticipation of such levy."

In an opinion to the Hon. J. W. Smith, prosecuting attorney of Ottawa, Ohio, under date of October 19th, 1911, inter alia, in construing the above section, I said:

> "The sole object and purpose of county assistance to agricultural societies is for the express purpose of encouraging agriculture. Heretofore it was optional for county commissioners to grant this assistance and the only purpose of the amendment of Section 9894 was to extend the list of societies to whom assistance should be given, to limit the maximum amount of such assistance, and make it mandatory upon the commissioners to make the levy, providing the agricultural societies come within the purview of the statutes. Nor could it be that the legislature intended that the agricultural societies should fix the amount that was to be levied upon their request. Their only function in the matter is to make the request and then it is within the authority of the commissioners to determine the amount of the levy that would be made to raise the fund required so long as it did not exceed the limitation the law provides. I take it that it is fairly inferable from the section that if the societies make such representations as would be deemed proper, showing the necessity for a certain amount of money, the commissioners then should determine how much, in their judgment, will be necessary, keeping within the limitation provided, and then it becomes the duty of the commissioners to raise the amount so determined. Of course, this section must be read in the light of the amended tax laws, and now instead of a direct levy, it becomes the duty of the county commissioners to take care of the amount decided to be raised for the purpose in their annual budget, as provided by Section 5649-3*a*, and the amount determined and certified by the commissioners is subject to reduction by the budget commission."

You state in your question that the agricultural society made no demand, nor did the county commissioners make a levy for either the year 1911 or 1912.

Now, the only power granted the commissioners to pay out of the general fund any money not otherwise appropriated, is given in the last sentence of Section 9894 of the General Code, and is to be "in anticipation of such levy." In the case cited, no levy having been made, there is no levy to anticipate.

You state further, that "a bill has now been filed with the county auditor by the agricultural society for $1,500.00 to be paid from the taxes of 1911."

Since the society has no claim against the county, as a matter of right, I fail to see how they can present a bill for $1,500.00, or any other sum. As stated in my opinion to Hon. J. W. Smith, the society must make the request, the commissioners must determine the amount to be allowed up to the maximum provided for in the law, and the commissioners must then carry this amount into their budget, and the budget commissioners finally determine the exact amount to be provided before the levy would be authorized.

I sadly fear that your agricultural society has mistaken the legal manner of obtaining assistance from the county, and it is my opinion that the so-called "bill" for $1,500.00 now filed with the county auditor should not be allowed or paid.

Very truly yours,

TIMOTHY S. HOGAN.

Attorney General.

BOARD OF EDUCATION—LIABILITY FOR TUITION OF RESIDENT PUPIL ATTENDING HIGH SCHOOL OF ANOTHER DISTRICT—NO DEDUCTION OF SCHOOL TAX ON PROPERTY OWNED BY PUPIL OR PARENT IN LATTER DISTRICT.

The provisions of Section 7683 of the General Code, providing for a deduction from the tuition of a non-resident high school pupil, of the amount of school tax paid by such pupil or his parent upon property owned and located within the school district attended, referred to cases where the pupil or parent were themselves chargeable with such tuition.

Said section has no application to Section 7747 of the General Code, under which the board of education of such pupil's residence is now made liable for such tuition.

In this case, therefore, the amount of said school tax may not be deducted.

COLUMBUS, OHIO, July 31, 1912.

HON. J. W. SMITH, Prosecuting Attorney, Ottawa, Ohio.

DEAR SIR:—Your favor of May 29, 1912, is received, in which you inquire as follows:

> "A pupil holding a diploma under Section 7747 of the General Code, and residing in a district where no high school is maintained, attends a high school in another district. The parent of such pupil owns propery in the district where he attends such high school. Should the amount of school tax collected from such property, be deducted from the charge for tuition against the board of education of the district, in which the pupil resides? I refer to Section 7683 of the General Code."

Section 7747, General Code, to which you refer, provides:

> "The tuition of pupils holding diplomas and residing in township or special districts, in which no high school is maintained, shall be paid by the board of education of the school district in which they have legal school residence, such tuition to be computed by the month. An attendance any part of the month shall create a liability for the entire month; but a board of education maintaining a high school shall not charge more tuition than it charges for other non-resident pupils."

Section 7682, General Code, provides:

> "Each board of education may admit other persons upon such terms or upon the payment of such tuition as it prescribes."

Section 7683, General Code, provides:

> "When a youth between the age of six and twenty-one years or his parent owns property in a school district in which he does not reside, and he attends the schools of such district, the amount of school tax paid on such property shall be credited on his tuition."

The statutes do not specifically provide that the board of education may secure the benefit of the school tax as provided in Section 7683, General Code. Do the provisions of Section 7683, General Code, extend to the board of education in the case in which you submit?

The intent and purpose of the legislature in passing the provisions of Section 7683, General Code, will aid in reaching a conclusion on this question. This purpose can be ascertained by noting the history of the legislation upon this provision.

The first provision statute of a similar nature is found in Section 71 of the act of 70 Ohio Laws 195, wherein it was provided:

> "* * *and boards of education of city, village or special districts shall also have power to admit without charge for tuition, persons within the school age who are members of the family of any freeholder whose residence is not within such district, if any part of such freeholder's homestead is within such district."

In the amendatory act in 77 Ohio Laws 196, a similar provision is found, to-wit:

> "And such youth may also be admitted free if they are members of the family of a freeholder whose residence is without but whose homestead is partly within such district."

These provisions for free attendance applied only when a part of the homestead was in the district. In the amendatory act of 84 Ohio Laws 69, the provision was made so as to apply as a credit of the school taxes upon the tuition to be paid as follows:

> "Each board of education may admit other persons of like age upon such terms or upon payment of such tuition as it may prescribe; provided, that in all counties which do not contain a city of the first grade of the first class, in such case there shall be credited on the tuition so charged the amount of school tax in such district for the current school year which may be paid by such non-resident pupil or a parent thereof."

This amendatory act was passed March 11, 1887. This provision is in substance the same as is now found in Section 7683, General Code. At the time it was first inserted in the statutes there was no provision of statute similar to that found in Section 7747, General Code. At that time, therefore, the provision of Section 7683, General Code, applied only to the tuition to be paid by the pupil or parent. In passing this provision the legislature, no doubt, thought it unjust that a pupil or parent should pay school taxes to a certain school district in which they did not reside, and that they should in addition pay full tuition if such pupil attended the schools of such district.

On March 22, 1892, in 89 Ohio Laws 123, is found the first provision similar to that found in Section 7747, General Code. Section three of said act is as follows:

> "The tuition of such graduates as may attend any village or city high school of the county may be paid by the board of education of the special or township districts in which such pupils reside."

There is nothing in this act to show that the legislature had in contemplation the provisions now found in Section 7683, General Code.

This provision was amended in 94 Ohio Laws 175, so as to require the board of education to pay the tuition, as follows:

> "The tuition of such successful applicant shall be paid by the board of education of the township or the special district in which such applicant resides, provided that there is no high school maintained and supported by the township or special district in which such pupil resides, where such pupil may attend without paying tuition."

This provision was placed in substantially its present form by act of 95 Ohio Laws 71.

In none of these acts pertaining to the provision now found in Section 7747, General Code, is there any reference to a credit upon the tuition to be so paid.

Prior to the passage of this act in 1892, 89 Ohio Laws 123, a school district that did not maintain a high school could not pay the tuition of its pupils in another high school. After the passage of the amendatory act in 94 Ohio Laws 175 a school district was required to pay the tuition of pupils residing in their district, who had complied with the provisions of the statutes as to examination, etc.

The evident purpose of this legislation was to require each school district to give its resident pupils a high school education at the expense of the school district.

The situation where a pupil or parent pays the tuition is somewhat different. The same reason for the credit of the school tax paid by such pupil or parent upon the tuition, does not apply to the tuition to be paid by the school district under the provisions of Section 7747, General Code. There is nothing in the statutes to show that the legislature intended that such school tax should be credited upon the tuition to be paid by the school district.

It is my opinion, therefore, that the school taxes to be credited by virtue of Section 7683, General Code, is to be credited upon the tuition when it is to be paid by the pupil or parent, and not when such tuition is to be paid by a school district by virtue of Section 7747, General Code.

Respectfully,
TIMOTHY S. HOGAN,
Attorney General.

POOR RELIEF—LEGAL SETTLEMENT OF MINOR IS THAT OF FATHER —REMOVAL AFTER DEATH OF FATHER OF NO EFFECT.

The county of legal settlement of a minor for purposes of poor relief is that of the father, and such settlement cannot be changed during minority by removal of said minor after the death of the father for any length of time.

When, therefore, a minor who, with his parents, had a legal settlement in Mahoning county, removes after the death of his parents to Columbiana county and there resides for a period of three months, Mahoning county is liable alone for his support.

COLUMBUS, OHIO, July 24, 1912.

HON. LEWIS P. METZGER, Prosecuting Attorney, Lisbon, Ohio.

DEAR SIR:—Your favor of June 25, 1912, is received in which you state:

> "Honorable R. A. Beard, prosecuting attorney of Mahoning county, does not agree with me as to the construction to be placed upon Sections 3477, 3478 and 3479 of the General Code and we have agreed to submit the matter to your department for determination.

"The case involved is as follows: A minor by the name of A. W., whose father and mother were both deceased, left Smith township, Mahoning county, where he had resided for a number of years, sometime between the 25th and 30th of March, 1912, and went to live with Leroy Gobley, in Knox township, Columbiana county, Ohio. At the time he left Mahoning county, his father and mother having both died shortly prior to that time, he had no intention of again returning to Mahoning county but went to Columbiana county with the intention of trying to earn his own living and making Columbiana county his home.

"On November 12, 1912, he was accidently shot injuring him so severely that it was imperative that he be taken to a hospital for treatment and he was taken to the hospital at Alliance on November 12, 1912. Mr. Beard contends that inasmuch as he had been in Knox township, Columbiana county more than three months that either Knox township, Columbiana county or both were responsible for his care until his recovery. I contend that inasmuch as he was a minor whose parents had last resided in Smith township, Mahoning county, Ohio, and he had not been in Columbiana county, twelve months that either Smith township or Mahoning county, or both, are required by law to provide for his support and maintenance until his recovery.

"Your determination of this matter will avoid litigation between the counties."

The foregoing statement of facts is agreed to by Hon. R. A. Beard, prosecuting attorney of Mahoning county.

The question to be determined is the legal settlement of the minor, who was injured, under the poor laws of Ohio.

Section 3477, General Code, provides:

"Each person shall be considered to have obtained a legal settlement in any county in this state in which he or she has continuously resided and supported himself or herself for twelve consecutive months, without relief under the provisions of law for the relief of the poor, subject to the following exceptions:

"First. An indentured servant or apprentice legally brought into this state shall be deemed to have obtained a legal settlement in the township or municipal corporation in which such servant or apprentice has served his or her master or mistress for one year continuously.

"Second. The wife or widow of a person whose last legal settlement was in a township or municipal corporation in this state, shall be considered to be legally settled in the same township or municipal corporation. If she has not obtained a legal settlement in this state, she shall be deemed to be legally settled in the place where her last legal settlement was previous to her marriage."

Section 3478, General Code, provides:

"In an action to compel the support or relief of a pauper, or in an action based upon the refusal of such officers to afford support or relief to any person, it shall be a sufficient defense for the township trustees, or proper municipal officers to show that such person, during the period necessary to obtain a legal settlement therein has been supported in whole or in part by others with the intention to thereby make such person a charge upon such township or municipal corporation. The fact that such person, during the period necessary to obtain a legal settlement therein, has been supported in whole or in part by others shall be prima facie evidence of such intention."

Section 3479, General Code, provides:

"A person having a legal settlement in any county in this state shall be considered as having a legal settlement in the township, or municipal corporation therein, in which he has last resided continuously and supported himself for three consecutive months without relief, under the provisions of law for the relief of the poor."

In the case of Trustees vs. Trustees, 3 Ohio 99, it is held:

"A minor obtains a settlement in the township where his father was legally settled, and can by no act of his own, whilst a minor, obtain a legal settlement elsewhere."

On page 103, Judge Hitchcock says:

"In the case before the court, the pauper, it is true, at the time he went to reside in the township of Letart, had no father living. This, however can not vary the case. Samuel Jackson, the father, was last legally settled in the township of Lebanon. In virtue of the settlement, Edmund, the son, was legally settled in the same place. By no length of settlement in any other township, previous to arriving at the age of twenty-one, could he gain any other legal settlement. Having been reduced to poverty during his infancy, the township of Lebanon was chargeable with his support."

In the case cited the minor was seventeen years of age and left the township in which his father died after his father's death and was absent for more than a year, working for his support. The court held, however, that the township in which his father had a legal settlement at the time of his death, was the legal settlement of the boy and this township was liable for his relief under the poor laws.

Under Section 3477, General Code, a person must reside in the county for twelve consecutive months in order to obtain a legal settlement therein. The minor in question in this case did not reside in Columbiana county that length of time. Even though he could change his legal settlement he has not resided in Columbiana county the required length of time.

The three month period provided in Section 3479, General Code, refers to a township or municipal corporation within the county in which the person has a legal settlement. He must first obtain a legal settlement in the county before he can obtain a legal settlement in township of the county.

The legal settlement of the minor in question is that of his father at the time of his death. It is not stated that the father lived in Mahoning couny for one year as required by Section 3477, supra. I assume that is the case. I also assume that the father had a legal settlement in Smith township at the time of his death.

The relief of the minor in question, if he is entitled to public relief, must be borne by Smith township and Mahoning county, in the same manner as any other pauper is relieved who has a settlement in said township and county. Columbiana county is not liable therefor as the legal settlement of the minor is in Mahoning county.

Respectfully,
TIMOTHY S. HOGAN,
Attorney General.

COUNTY COMMISSIONERS—POWER TO SELL AND PURCHASE LAND FOR COUNTY INFIRMARY.

Under Sections 2447 and 2433, of the General Code, when it is deemed best for the interests of the county, the county commissioners may sell land and buildings held for infirmary purposes and purchase new land for the same purposes.

COLUMBUS, OHIO, August 9, 1912.

HON. LAWRENCE E. LAYBOURNE, Prosecuting Attorney, Springfield, Ohio.

DEAR SIR:—Your favor of August 3d received. You state that:

> "More than fifty years ago, Clark county purchased a site of about fifty acres and erected buildings thereon for the purpose of establishing a county infirmary and still maintains a county infirmary on the same site, which is now within the corporate limits of the city of Springfield.
> "The greater part of this land is still used for farm purposes in connection with said infirmary. The buildings are out of date and badly dilapidated so that extensive repairs and improvements are now needed.
> "A real estate company has offered the county commissioners a splendid offer for this property for the purpose of dividing the same into lots to be sold for residence purposes. The county commissioners are of the opinion that it is desirable, necessary and to the best interests of the county from a financial standpoint, to sell their present infirmary site and purchase a farm a reasonable distance from the city and erect new buildings thereon for the purpose of a county infirmary.
> "They are satisfied that the price offered for the present site, with the worn and dilapidated buildings thereon, is at least equal to an amount necessary to purchase a farm of equal size and to erect new and improved buildings for the purpose of providing a new infirmary suitable to the present needs of the county."

and you inquire whether under the above state of facts the county commissioners may dispose of the infirmary land and purchase another site for the county infirmary. The authority of the commissioners to purchase another site for the infirmary is found in Section 2433, of the General Code, which provides as follows:

> "When, in their opinion, it is necessary, the commissioners may purchase a site for a court house, or jail, or land for an infirmary or a detention home, or additional land for an infirmary or county children's home at such price and upon such terms of payment, as are agreed upon between them and the owner or owners of the property. The title to such real estate shall be conveyed in fee simple to the county."

The authority of the commissioners to sell real estate belonging to the county is given in Section 2447, of the General Code, which is as follows:

"If, in their opinion, the interests of the county so require, the commissioners may sell any real estate belonging to the county, and not needed for public use."

You state that your present infirmary buildings were built more than fifty years ago, and that the buildings are out of date and badly dilapidated, and the present location of the infirmary is undesirable. This would be sufficient reason for the county commissioners to act under Sections 2433 and 2447, of the General Code, and pass appropriate resolutions declaring that it is to the best interests of the county to sell the real estate where the infirmary is now located, and to purchase a site for the county infirmary, concurring in your opinion and advice to the county commissioners.

Very truly yours,
TIMOTHY S. HOGAN,
Attorney General.

COUNTY BRIDGES—POWER OF COUNTY COMMISSIONERS TO EXPEND MONEY, ISSUE BONDS AND LEVY TAXES FOR—EMERGENCY CASES.

Under Sections 2434, 5638 and 5642-1 to 5644, of the General Code, the county commissioners may expend money, or issue bonds in anticipation of a levy or levy and issue bonds in anticipation of collection for the purpose of building at any time a county bridge whose cost is less than $18,000.00, or in case of emergency for the purpose of building a bridge in excess of that sum.

For building a bridge whose cost exceeds $18,000.00, when no emergency exists, the authorization of the electors under Sec. 5638, of the General Code, is essential.

COLUMBUS, OHIO, August 15, 1912.

HON. JOSEPH C. RILEY, Prosecuting Attorney, Ironton, Ohio.

DEAR SIR:—In your letter of August 1st, receipt whereof is acknowledged, you ask me to define the authority of the county commissioners to issue bonds or borrow money for the repair and rebuilding of bridges injured by floods, without submitting the question to a vote of the electors.

This power seems to exist by virtue of Section 2434, General Code, as amended, 102 O. L., 54, which provides in part as follows:

"* * * for the purpose of * * * * a court house, county offices, jail, county infirmary, detention home, or additional land for an infirmary * * * or other necessary buildings or bridges, or for the purpose of enlarging, repairing, improving, or rebuilding thereof * * * * * the commissioners may borrow such sum or sums of money as they deem necessary, at a rate of interest not to exceed six per cent. per annum, and issue bonds of the county to secure the payment of the principal and interest thereof."

So far as this section is concerned, there is no requirement that the proposition of borrowing money, or that of making the repairs and improvements themselves be submitted to a vote of the electors for any reason whatever.

I am of the opinion, however, in view of certain language in Section 2434, which I have not quoted above, that the limitations of Section 5638, etc., General Code, apply to the making of improvements for which, under Section 2434, money may be borrowed. Said sections provide in part as follows:

Section 5638, General Code.

"The county commissioners shall not levy a tax, appropriate money or issue bonds for the purpose of building county buildings, * * * * the expense of which will exceed $15,000.00 * * * *; or for building a county bridge, the expense of which exceed $18,000.00, except in case of casualty, and as hereinafter provided; * * * * without first submitting to the voters of the county, the question as to the policy of making such expenditure."

It will be observed that the question to be submitted is not the policy of issuing the bonds, but that of making the expenditure, and the question would have to be submitted even if the county had accumulated sufficient surplus funds to make the contemplated improvement without levying any tax therefor or borrowing any money on that account.

Section 5642-1, General Code:

"If a majority of the votes so cast are against the proposed expenditure the board of county commissioners shall not assess a tax or issue bonds therefore. If a majority of the votes cast are in favor of the proposed expenditure, the board of county commissioners shall proceed to issue bonds in any sum not exceeding the amount stated upon said ballots, the proceeds of which shall be used exclusively for the purpose stated upon said ballot, and said board shall levy such amount of tax as may be necessary to pay the interest accruing on said bonds to redeem them at maturity."

Section 5643, General Code:

"If an important bridge, belonging to or maintained by any county, becomes dangerous to public travel, by decay or otherwise and is condemned for public travel by the commissioners of such county, the repairs thereof, or the building of a new bridge in place thereof, is deemed, by them, necessary for the public accommodation, the commissioners, without first submitting the question to the voters of the county, may levy a tax for either of such purposes in an amount not to exceed in any one year two-tenths of one mill for every dollar of taxable property upon the tax duplicate of said county."

Section 5644, General Code:

"If the county commissioners deem it necessary or advisable, they may anticipate the collection of such special tax by borrowing a sum not exceeding the amount so levied, at a rate of interest not exceeding six per cent. per annum, payable semi-annually and may issue notes or bonds therefor, payable when said tax is collected, or the commissioners, without such submission of the question, may proceed under the authority conferred by law to borrow such sums of money as is necessary for either of the purposes before mentioned, and issue bonds therefor. For the payment of the principal and interest on such bonds, they shall annually levy a tax as provided by law."

It is my opinion that the scheme of legislation embodied in the section last above quoted does not become applicable at all unless the cost of repairing or rebuilding a particular bridge exceeds $18,000, then, unless the situation constitutes an emergency or casualty it will be necessary to submit the policy of making the improvement to a vote. If, however, the emergency exists, the commissioners may proceed without a vote and under the limitations of Sections 5643 and 5644 may levy taxes and anticipate the collection thereof by the issuance of bonds; or under Sections 5644 and 2434, which are evidently referred to therein, may simply borrow the money and then levy the tax so as to meet the principal and interest thereof. That is to say, if in your county it is necessary to borrow money for the purpose of repairing and rebuilding certain bridges injured by floods, and the cost of repairing and rebuilding any one bridge does not exceed $18,000, the commissioners may proceed under Section 2434 to borrow money and issue bonds and to levy taxes for the retirement thereof under the provisions of Section 2434 and related sections without paying any attention to the provisions of Section 5638, etc. If, however, the cost of repairing any one bridge does exceed $18,000, and as to that particular bridge, its unavailability for public travel does not constitute an emergency (which I do not imagine to be the case, then the proceeding would have to be in accordance with the provisions of Sections 5638 to 5642-1, inclusive, supra. If, however, there is a bridge among those which must be repaired, the cost of which rebuilding will exceed $18,000 and the bridge is important and its condition constitutes a menace to public travel, then the commissioners may lawfully proceed under Sections 5643 and 5644, and their powers under these sections are practically the same as those which they could exercise under Section 2434, if the cost of making the repairs did not exceed $18,000 as to any one bridge.

Very truly yours,

TIMOTHY S. HOGAN,

Attorney General.

COLLATERAL INHERITANCE TAX—TAX ON "RIGHT TO RECEIVE" AND NOT ON "PROPERTY"—DEDUCTION OF DEBTS AND COSTS OF ADMINISTRATION—APPEAL IN PROBATE COURT.

From a review of the decisions it is now settled in this state that the collateral inheritance tax is a tax upon the right to receive the property and not a tax upon the estate itself.

It is the specific legacies which are to be taxed therefore, and debts due the estate; as well as costs of administration must be deducted when the estate in the aggregate has been devised collaterally.

These deductions may not be made from the inventory filed by the probate judge, under Section 5341, of the General Code, with the auditor. Such deductions must be made by application to probate court under the procedure set out for appraisal, etc., under Sections 5343 and 5344, of the General Code. Such procedure may be avoided, however, by agreement between the prosecuting attorney and all interested parties.

COLUMBUS, OHIO, August 15, 1912.

HON. HARRY P. BLACK, Prosecuting Attorney, Tiffin, Ohio.

DEAR SIR:—I beg to apologize for the delay which has ensued in answering your letter of May 6th, in which you submit an inquiry relating to the procedure under the collateral inheritance tax law. Matters have become so congested in the office during the late term of court in this county that I am just now engaged in an effort to bring my advisory work down to date. The question which you submit is as follows:

> "An estate of approximately twenty thousand dollars is subject to distribution among several heirs and personal representatives, the relationship of all of whom to the decedent is such as to make the entire estate, in the aggregate, subject to the collateral inheritance tax. There are now claims against the estate for taxes and costs of administration, amounting approximately to five thousand dollars. The probate judge desires to be advised as to his duty under Section 5340, of the General Code, to make and deliver to the county auditor, for the purpose of assessing a tax thereon, a copy of the inventory of the whole estate, it being contended that the five thousand dollars, which has been or will be expended for taxes, funeral expenses and costs of administration, shall be deducted from the amount of this inventory. The question also seems to be raised as to the duty of the county auditor in certifying the value of the estate subject to taxes, and particularly as to whether, if inventory of the entire estate, without any deduction, be delivered to him by the probate judge, he may or should lawfully make any deductions on account of the premises."

The statutes in question are as follows:

> "Section 5331. All property within the jurisdiction of this state, and any interests therein, * * * which pass by will or by the intestate laws of this state, or by deed, grant, sale or gift, made or intended to take effect in possession or enjoyment after the death of the grantor, to a person * * * other than to or for the use of (those within certain degrees of relationship) shall be liable to a tax of five per cent. of its value, above the sum of two hundred dollars. * * * All administrators, executors and trustees, and any such grantee * * * shall be liable for all such taxes * * *. Such taxes shall become due and payable immediately upon the death of the decedent and shall at once become a lien upon the property, and be and remain a lien until paid.

"Section 5336. An administrator, executor, or trustee, having in charge, or trust, property subject to such law, shall deduct the tax therefrom or collect the tax thereon from the legatee or person entitled to the property. He shall not deliver any specific legacy or property subject to such tax to any person until he has collected the tax thereon.

"Section 5337. When a legacy subject to such tax is charged upon or payable out of real estate, the heir or devisee, before paying it, shall deduct the tax therefrom and pay it to the executor, administrator, or trustee, and the tax shall remain a charge upon the real estate until it is paid. Payments thereof shall be enforced by the executor, administrator, or trustee, in like manner as the payment of the legacy itself could be enforced.

"Section 5340. Within ten days after the filing of the inventory of every such estate, any part of which may be subject to a tax under the provisions of this sub-division of this chapter, the judge of the probate court, in which such inventory is filed, shall make and deliver to the county auditor of such county a copy of the inventory; or, if it can be conveniently separated, a copy of such part of the estate, with the appraisal thereof. The auditor shall certify the value of the estate, subject to taxation * * *.

"Section 5343. The value of such property, subject to said tax, shall be its actual market value as found by the probate court. If the state, through the prosecuting attorney of the proper county, or any person interested in the succession to the property, applies to the court, it shall appoint three disinterested persons, who, being first sworn, shall view and appraise such property at its actual market value for the purposes of this tax, and make return thereof to the court. The return may be accepted by the court in a like manner as the original inventory of the estate is accepted, and if so accepted, it shall be binding upon the person by whom this tax is to be paid and upon the state. * * *

"Section 5344. The probate court, having either principal or auxiliary jurisdiction of the settlement of the estate of the decedent, shall have jurisdiction to hear and determine all questions in relation to such tax that arise, affecting any devise, legacy or inheritance under this sub-division of this chapter, subject to appeal as in other cases, and the prosecuting attorney shall represent the interests of the state in such proceedings.

"Section 5348. The word 'property' as used in this sub-division of this chapter includes real and personal estate, any form of interest therein, and annuities."

Legislation of this sort is of comparatively recent date in this state, but in several states, notably in New York and Pennsylvania, has long been a feature of the system of taxation. Accordingly, many questions like that which you submit, which have been frequently considered in other jurisdictions, have not been passed upon in Ohio. Practically the only decisions in this state under the provisions of the above quoted sections, and others like them, relate to constitutional questions exclusively. Yet, these few decisions, none of them directly in point, furnish a reliable index to the solution of the questions which you submit.

It is obvious, of course, that your questions lack definite answer in the above quoted sections themselves. It is required that the probate judge cause a copy of the inventory and appraisement to be filed with the county auditor and the county auditor to compute the amount of tax, and to certify the same to the county treasurer for collection. It is not, however, expressly required that the county auditor be bound by the appraisement, as conclusively showing the value of the estate, in fixing the amount of the tax. On the other hand it is expressly required that the value of the property subject to taxation be fixed and determined by the probate court; yet, no method is provided for the certification by the probate court to the county auditor of the value as determined by him; this is left to inference.

Furthermore, the statutes are themselves ambiguous as to what it is that is to be valued by the probate judge. True, Section 5348 contains a definition, but that definition does not solve the question which arises here, and which is as follows:

> "Is the thing to be valued the estate as a whole or only the interests therein which pass to the collateral heirs, devisees, grantees, or legatees, as the case may be?"

In reality the question is deeper than this, and is concerned with the real subject of taxation; for I am satisfied that the thing to be valued is identical with the subject of the tax; so that if it be ascertained that the estate as a whole is the thing taxed, then, it would naturally follow that such estate should be valued as an entirety.

It is here that what decisions are available in Ohio become helpful. In State ex rel. vs. Ferris, 52 O. S., 314 ,the court was considering the constitutionality of a direct inheritance tax law, very similar in many respects to the one now under consideration. Thus, the first section of that act (91 O. L., 166) provided as follows:

> "All property within the jurisdiction of this state, and any interest therein, * * * which shall pass by will, etc., * * * to the use of (certain persons in the direct line of ascent or descent) shall be liable to a tax * * *. Such taxes shall become due and payable immediately upon the death of the decedent, and shall at once become a lien upon said property."

The first attack upon the act was to the effect that it was a property tax and, not being levied by "a uniform rule," was, therefore, repugnant to Section 2 of Article XII, of the Constitution. On this point the court, per Burket, J., made use of the following language:

> "In view of the authorities cited, it must be conceded that the general assembly has the power to pass an inheritance tax for purposes of general revenue, unless prohibited by the Constitution of our state. Properly understood, it is not the right to transmit, but the right and privilege to receive, that is taxed. The right to dispose of property during the lifetime of the owner, cannot be separated from the property itself, and therefore to tax the right of disposal by contract in the lifetime of the owner, even though to take effect at his death, is to tax the property itself. But the right to dispose of the property by will or descent taking effect after the death of the owner, is not so closely connected with the right of property, and it is not so clear that such right may not be taxed.

"But when the right to receive the property is considered, it is clear that the right is distinct and separate from the property itself, and the state may tax this right to receive property, and this is so whether the property is disposed of by the owner during his lifetime, or at his death.

"This right to receive property is under the control of the legislature, and it has the power to regulate and lay such burdens thereon as it may see fit, within the provisions of the Constitution. To regulate by taxation or otherwise the privilege or right to receive property, is not in conflict with the first section of the bill of rights, which recognizes the inalienable right of acquiring, possessing and protecting property. Were it otherwise, all our laws as to wills, descent, distribution and conveyances would be unconstitutional.

"It is urged, however, that the statute in question does not tax the right or privilege of receiving property, but taxes the property itself.

"It must be conceded that the language used in the statute, is upon its face clearly a taxation of the property itself, and not of the right to acquire property. And for myself, I think this is the true construction of the act. Others of the court, however, think that when the operation and effect of the statute are considered, that it may be regarded as taxing the right or privilege, rather than the property. Certain it is that the only thing that can be constitutionally taxed is the right or privilege of succession, and a statute having such taxation in view, should express its purpose in words applicable to such subject matter of taxation.

"It is conceded by all parties, that if this statute imposes a tax on property, that it is unconstitutional. As a majority of the court are of opinion that it is not a tax on property, but upon the right to receive property, the statute must, as to this point, be sustained.

"It is also contended that this tax is a tax on property because it is made a lien upon the real estate received, and cases are cited sustaining this view. Estate of William Bittinger, 128 Pa. St., 344.

"The statute in that case provides as follows: 'The tax on real estate shall remain a lien on the real estate on which the same is charged until paid.' While the statute in this state provides simply that the inheritance tax 'shall at once become a lien upon said property.' But aside from the difference in the words of the statute there is no force in the contention. If the legislature has the power to assess a tax upon the right to receive and succeed to property, it clearly has the right to make such tax a lien upon the property received by the use of such right; and the making of such lien does not change the tax from a tax upon the right to receive, to a tax upon the property received under the right."

In Hagerty vs. State, 55 O. S., 613, the court was passing upon the constitutionality of the very act now under consideration. The following is found in the opinion of the court:

"Most of the objections urged against the validity of the act are answered in State ex rel. vs. Ferris, 53 Ohio St., 314. The act there held invalid made an inhibited distinction as to the value of the property received, the right to receive being there, as here, the real subject of the imposition."

In State vs. Guilbert, 70 O. S., 229, a subsequently enacted direct inheritance tax law was held constitutional, and in the course of the opinion, per Spear, C. J., the following language appears:

"We are relieved of any extended inquiry with respect to the question of the power of the general assembly to impose an inheritance tax. It was held in the State ex rel. vs. Ferris, 53 Ohio St., 314, that a tax on inheritance is an excise tax; that is, it is a tax on the right to receive property as distinct from a tax on the property itself, and this right to tax is within the power of the general assembly, which body may regulate the privilege and lay such burdens thereon as it may see fit within the provisions of the constitution, and that such imposition is not in conflict with the first section of the bill of rights. The act in question in that case was held unconstitutional because it undertook to exempt from taxation the right to succeed to estates not exceeding twenty thousand dollars in value, while taxing the whole right of succeeding to estates which exceed that sum in value, and also because it sought to tax at a higher rate per centum the right to succeed to estates of larger value than to estates of smaller value. The act in question in Hagerty vs. the State, 55 Ohio St., 613, laid a tax upon collateral inheritance, making provision for exemptions in the amount of two hundred dollars; and was assailed because it discriminated among collateral kindred, the tax being imposed upon the value of the property received by some and not upon that received by others. It was sustained on the ground that the power exercised is legislative, being vested by the first section of the second article of the constitution, which provides that the legislative power of the state shall be vested in the general assembly; that the right to receive property by inheritance is not guaranteed by the constitution; neither does that instrument prescribe any limitation upon the power of the general assembly to designate the persons who may thus receive, and the discrimination is based upon and justified by the fact that there are degrees in collateral kinship. The ground upon which the power to levy such taxes rests is stated in Magoun vs. Illinois Trust & Savings Bank, 170 U. S., 283, thus: 'They (the cases cited) are based in two principles: 1. An inheritance tax is not one on property, but one on the succession. 2. The right to take property by devise or descent is a creature of the law, and not a natural right—a privilege, and therefore the authority which confers it may impose conditions upon it. Upon these principles it is deduced that the states may tax the privilege, discriminate between relatives, and between these and strangers, and grant exemptions; and are not precluded from this power by the provisions of the respective state constitutions requiring uniformity and equality in taxation.'"

So that it is now completely settled in Ohio that the subject of the inheritance tax is not the property itself, but the right or privilege of receiving the property upon the death of the intestate or the donor.

It is here to be remarked also that though the question is suggested in State ex rel. vs. Ferris, supra., it is not the right to transmit that is taxed, even if a tax could be constitutionally levied upon a right personal to a deceased person. The Ohio courts have correctly reasoned, that in order to sustain the constitutionality of the inheritance tax, as well as the indirect inheritance tax as now the repealed direct inheritance tax, they would have to hold those taxes to be levied not upon the property belonging to the estate as such, but upon the several interests of the takers thereof subject to the tax.

There are, of course, internal evidences of such an intention which may be found in the act itself, though the provisions affording such evidence are perhaps seemingly inconsistent with other provisions which might be relied upon in support of an opposite conclusion. Thus, Sections 5336 and 5337, supra, support the conclusion that it is the interest of the person entitled to the property by virtue of the laws of intestacy or the testamenary act of the decedent, and not the estate as a whole which is taxed; indeed, the latter section uses the significant phrase "a legacy subject to tax." There are other like provisions scattered through the above sections, and such provisions are in a way inconsistent with some other provisions thereof, but, as I have already pointed out, it is now perfectly settled that the real subject of the tax is the interest of the legatee or donor and not the estate itself.

This proposition is ultimately decisive of the question, although it may not so appear at first blush. In the often cited case of in re estate of Swift, 137 N. Y., 77, Gray, J., delivering the opinion of the court reasons elaborately and convincingly to the conclusion that under language substantially identical with that which we are considering the subject of the inheritance tax of the state of New York is not the right of succession or devolution but the property itself. In the course of this reasoning he hints very strongly that because of this premise there may be no deductions from the appraised value of the estate, and that the tax is assessed upon the value of the entire estate, regardless of debts and expenses of administration. I mention this case because it has been followed in other decisions in the same state, notably, in re Millward's Estate, 27 N. Y., Supp. 286, where it was distinctly held, in the language of the first syllabus that > "The appraiser of an estate subject to the transfer tax * * * is not authorized to deduct the debts, funeral expenses and expenses of administration in making his report of the value of the estate."

holding, at the same time, that debts owing by the decedent might be so deducted. This was the only question in the case, and in re estate of Swift, supra, is the only authority cited.

However, Judge Gray, in writing the opinion in the Swift case, clearly stated that the other members of the court disagreed with him as to the nature of the tax. Thus, on page 88, the following language appears:

> "My brethren are of the opinion that the tax imposed under the act is a tax on the right of succession, under a will, or by devolution in case intestacy; a view of the law which my consideration of the question precludes my assenting to."

Thus it is that in later cases in the same jurisdiction the Swift case has been ignored, and it has been repeatedly held that debts of the decedent, debts of the estate in the hands of the administrator, costs of administration, and costs and expenses of litigation necessary to protect the estate and to determine the duty of the trustee or administrator, must be deducted before the tax is computed. In re Hoffman, 143 N. Y., 327; in re Western, 152 N. Y., 93; in re Gihon, 169 N. Y., 443.

So far as I am able to ascertain, this rule is followed in all other jurisdictions where inheritance tax laws are in force. See Gallup's Appeal, 76 Conn., 617.

Hopkins' Appeal, 77 Conn., 644.
Connell vs. Prosby, 210 Ill., 380.
Succession of May, 120 La. Annual, 692.
Callahan vs. Roodridge, 171 Mass., 595.
Orcutt's Appeal, 97 Pa. St., 179.
Commonwealth's Appeal, 127 Pa. St., 435.
Shelton vs. Campbell, 109 Tenn., 690.
Trust Company vs. Speed, 114 Tenn., 677.

The reasoning of the court in many of these cases is as follows:

The law (like the Ohio law) requires that the subject of taxation is to be valued for taxation. The subject of taxation is the right to succeed. Therefore, the value to be ascertained is the cash value of the interest of the ultimate taker of the estate, not that of the specific property which may be held by the administrator or executor; therefore, also, debts must be deducted from the estate as a whole, and only that portion of the value represented by the whole estate be divided ratably in order to ascertain the value of the separate interests of the various takers.

I have taken the pains to ascertain that the above cited decisions are under statutes substantially identical with that of Ohio. I am, therefore, of the opinion that in the case you submit all the claims against the estate must be deducted from the total appraisement thereof for the purpose of fixing the total amount of the tax due.

But such a holding does not necessarily carry with it the conclusion that these debts should be deducted from the appraisement filed with the auditor by the probate judge, under Section 5341. I am of the opinion that the inventory of the whole estate and the appraisement thereof, or of such part thereof as may be conveniently separated as representing the amount of the estate subject to the tax, must be certified by the probate judge to the auditor. That is to say, if the probate judge is able to separate from the inventory certain items that are not subject to the tax he may do so, otherwise he must file the inventory of the entire estate.

The question is, then raised as to how and when deduction is to be made. The statute furnishes no answer to this question, excepting that afforded by Sections 5343 and 5344, of the General Code, supra. In view of the provisions of these sections, I am of the opinion that if no application to the probate court is made under this section there is no manner in which the deduction may be made; but that these sections afford a convenient method by which the probate judge may hear and determine all questions relating to what debts, funeral expenses and costs of administration ought to be deducted from the original appraisement in determining the value of the estate. I beg to advise you, therefore, that, with the single exception expressly made in Section 5340, it is the duty of the probate judge to make and deliver to the county auditor a copy of the inventory of the entire estate of the decedent; that, presumably, this inventory represents the value of the estate for inheritance tax purposes, except as to specific devises, legacies and trusts, exempt under Section 5332, General Code, or such as are not included within the catalogue enumerated in Section 5331; but that any interested party may lawfully apply to the probate court for an order valuing the several interests subject to taxation, so as to provide for the deduction of debts and costs of administration. I know of no reason why an agreement between the prosecuting attorney and all interested parties, may not be entered into whereby the expensive procedure provided for in Sections 5343 and 5344, may be avoided and the expense to the county done away with.

Very truly yours,
TIMOTHY S. HOGAN,
Attorney General.

ELECTION ON CONSTITUTIONAL AMENDMENTS—COMPENSATION OF DEPUTY STATE SUPERVISORS OF ELECTIONS, JUDGES, CLERKS, CHALLENGERS AND INSPECTORS—CHALLENGERS AND INSPECTORS.

In counties having no registration cities, under Section 4822, of the General Code, the compensation therein provided for shall serve for the services required of deputy state supervisors of elections and their clerks. There is no authority for further compensation for services connected with the constitutional amendment election of 1912.

Under Section 4800, of the General Code, judges and clerks shall receive the $3.00 per diem prescribed for "each election day," during which they preside, and the same shall apply to services rendered at the constitutional amendment election.

There being no provision for compensation for challengers and inspectors at said election, none can be paid to such. The deputy supervisors must be guided by the directions of the secretary of state, who is the chief election officer of the state in the matter of compelling attendance of said inspectors and challengers.

COLUMBUS, OHIO, August 21, 1912.

HON. CHEEVER W. PETTAY, Prosecuting Attorney, Cadiz, Ohio.

DEAR SIR:—Replying to your communication of August 14th, wherein you ask my opinion on the following questions:

> "First. Are the members of the board of deputy state supervisors of election and their clerk entitled to extra compensation for taking charge of the constitutional election to be held September 3, next, or is the work imposed upon them in the holding of said election to be done by them without compensation other than that which they would receive if no constitutional election was held?
> "Second. Are the judges and clerks of the constitutional election to receive the same per diem as in general elections?
> "Third. Can the persons appointed as challengers receive any pay for their services at such constitutional election?

Section 4822, General Code provides as follows:

> "Each deputy state supervisor shall receive for his services the sum of three dollars for each election precinct in his respective county, and the clerk shall receive for his services the sum of four dollars for each election precinct in his respective county. The compensation so allowed such officers during any year shall be determined by the number of precincts in such county at the November election of the next preceding year. The compensation paid to each of such deputy state supervisors under this section shall in no case be less than one hundred and twenty-five dollars each year. Such compensation shall be paid quarterly from the general revenue fund of the county upon vouchers of the board, made and certified by the chief deputy and the clerk thereof. Upon presentation of any such voucher, the county auditor shall issue his warrant upon the county treasurer for the amount thereof, and the treasurer shall pay it."

The only other sections providing for the compensation of deputy state supervisors and their clerk are Sections 4942 and 4943, General Code, but since they apply to counties containing registration cities they would have no application to your case.

A cursory reading of Section 4822, supra, discloses that the compensation therein provided is a yearly compensation for all services as such deputy state supervisors unless otherwise in the statutes extra compensation is fixed. The only other compensation for members of boards of deputy state supervisors and their clerk outside of the sections heretofore referred to will be found in Section 4990, General Code, which is only applicable to primary elections. It is my opinion that the compensation provided for in Section 4822, supra, is for all elections, general and special, and that the work imposed upon such officers by reason of the holding of the election on the constitutional amendments under a well known rule of law in the absence of special provision otherwise, is deemed compensated by their regular compensation.

Answering your second question, would say that since Section 4860, General Code, provides that judges and clerks shall each receive as compensation for their services the sum of $3.00, which services shall be "the receiving, recording, canvassing and making returns of all votes that may be delivered to them in the voting precinct in which they preside on each election day." I do not think there can be any question but that they are entitled to the per diem provided for their services at the special election held on the proposed changes in the constitution.

Answering your third question, I would call your attention to the concluding "schedule" of the constitutional amendments under the heading of "Method of Submission." Among other things, it provides that challengers and witnesses shall be admitted to the polling place under such regulations as may be prescribed by the secretary of state. By virtue of that authority, the secretary of state on July 19th, 1912, formulated certain instructions to deputy state supervisors of elections in re special election, Tuesday, September 3, 1912, on constitutional amendments. Instruction No. 7 reads as follows:

"The board of deputy state supervisors of elections in each county are hereby instructed to appoint for each voting precinct two challengers and two inspectors, the challengers shall be permitted to remain in the voting places during the time the polls are open. The inspectors shall be permitted to remain in the voting places after the polls are closed and during the time of the counting and tallying of the ballots. The challengers and inspectors shall be qualified electors of the precinct in which they are to serve, and they shall be fair, impartial, unbiased and unprejudiced as to each proposal."

Subsequently on July 29, 1912, the secretary of state addressed to the deputy state supervisors of election of the state of Ohio, a further communication instructing the election authorities that there was no provision in the law authorizing the payment of challengers and inspectors or witnesses at elections, and that the constitutional convention did not make any provision for the payment of those who act as challengers, inspectors and witnesses at the special election to be held September 3, 1912. The state supervisor of elections further said:

> "If it is impossible to procure competent persons to serve in any precinct or precincts without compensation, it is a condition which cannot be helped by either myself as chief election officer of the state or by you as deputies."

Inasmuch as the state supervisor of elections is made, by law, the chief election officer with power to advise the deputy state supervisors as to the usual method of conducting elections, it is my opinion that the deputy state supervisors should follow the instructions of their chief.

Very truly yours,

TIMOTHY S. HOGAN,
Attorney General.

ACTING MAYOR—VILLAGES—PRESIDENT PRO TEM. OF COUNCIL HAS NO JUDICIAL POWERS IN MAYOR'S ABSENCE.

Inasmuch as all judicial officers must be elected by the people of their district, and as a president pro tem. of a village council is elected by the council and not by the people, that official can have no jurisdiction to act in a judicial capacity during the absence of the mayor.

COLUMBUS, OHIO, August 22, 1912.

HON. TOM O. CROSSAN, Prosecuting Attorney, Perry County, New Lexington, Ohio.

DEAR SIR:—Your favor of August 15th received. You inquire whether the president pro tem. of the village council has any judicial powers in the absence of the mayor and while acting as mayor.

The circuit court of Belmont county, in the case of the State of Ohio vs. William T. Hance, expressly held:

> "The president pro tem. of a village council as acting mayor * * has no jurisdiction to hear and determine a misdemeanor."

You call my attention to the fact that the Hance case was decided in 1904, and in 1908 the legislature amended Section 195, of the Municipal Code, as you say, "for the express purpose of giving the president pro tem. these powers in the mayor's absence." I am still of the opinion that the president pro tem. of the village council has no jurisdiction to hear and determine a misdemeanor. One of the reasons assigned by the court in the Hance case was, that it was not within the competency of the legislature to clothe with judicial power any officer or person not elected as a judge.

The supreme court of Ohio, in the case of the Logan Branch Bank ex parte, in 1 Ohio State, 432, says, at page 434:

> "The tenth section of the same article provides 'that all judges, other than those provided for in this constitution, shall be elected by the electors of the judicial district for which they may be created, but not for a longer term of office than five years.'
> "Thus all the judicial power of the state is vested in the courts designated in the constitution, and in such courts as may be organized under the first section. But it is perfectly clear that, upon the creation of any additional court by the legislature, the judicial officer must be elected, as such, by the electors of the district for which such court is created; and it is not within the competency of the legislature to clothe with judicial power any officer or person, not elected as a judge."

The president pro tem. of the village council is not elected by a vote of the people of the municipality—he is chosen by the council. Judicial power, then, cannot be conferred upon him by the legislature. I, therefore, follow the decision in the Hance case, and hold that the president pro tem. of the village council as acting mayor has no jurisdiction to hear and determine a misdemeanor or to act in a judicial capacity.

Respectfully yours,
TIMOTHY S. HOGAN,
Attorney General.

EXTRADITION CASES—FEES OF CLERKS OF COURTS PAID BY AGENT OF STATE AND CHARGED AS NECESSARY EXPENSES.

The statutes do not compel the clerk of courts to perform any services in connection with the extradition cases. When a clerk provides the requisite papers, his services for the same should be compensated for by the agent of the state appointed in such cases by the governor, and charged as his neecssary expenses against the state.

COLUMBUS, OHIO, August 22, 1912.

HON. JAMES J. WEADOCK, Prosecuting Attorney of Allen County, Lima, Ohio.

DEAR SIR:—I hereby acknowledge receipt of your communication of July 2, 1912, which is as follows:

> "When a prosecuting attorney makes application to the governor of the state of Ohio for the extradition of a fugitive under indictment the application must be accompanied by a certified copy of the indictment found against the fugitive. In case of forgery, embezzlement, fraud and false pretenses, the application must be accompanied by an affidavit of the complaining witness. The application must also be accompanied with a copy of the capias and certificate of the clerk of court of the official capacity of the prosecuting attorney. These papers must all be in duplicate and are all issued by the clerk of courts.

"Certain fees are taxed for these various papers. Are these fees to be taxed by the clerk as his costs and collected by him as his costs and made a part of the costs of the case by him, or are these fees to be paid to the clerk by the agent of the state under the extradition and by him charged up in his expense account?"

Extradition in such cases as your inquiry covers is a matter in which the governor exercises his discretion. The proceedings are all statutory, and such cases as you mention are covered under the title, "Fugitives from Justice," in Sections 109 to 118, G. C., inclusive. There is nothing in the statutes providing for the payment to the clerk of the fees mentioned by you; neither is there any law compelling the clerk to perform any duties in relation to extradition proceedings; nor any provision requiring him to keep a record thereof. The record is kept in the governor's office. (Section 144, G. C.)

Section 109, of the General Code provides:

"On application, the governor may appoint an agent to demand of the executive authority of another state a person charged with felony who has fled from justice in this state."

The documents necessary and required by Sections 110 and 111 should all be secured by the agent, officers or others interested in the return of the fugitive. The clerk, of course, is entitled to such fees as are usual for like services, and, in my opinion, he can demand payment therefor at the time of their rendition.

The requisition may never be effective, and the accused never brought to trial, thus leaving the clerk's fees for these preliminary services uncollectable from the county.

Furthermore, the whole proceeding in extradition is generally secret, the case not being docketed, and therefore no place to make a record of these fees on the part of the clerk.

Section 2491, G. C., seems to provide for the payment of such expenses, as follows:

"When any person charged with a felony has fled to another state, territory or country, and the governor has issued a requisition for such person, or has requested the president of the United States to issue extradition papers, the commissioners may pay from the county treasury to the agent designated in such requisition or request to execute them, all necessary expenses of pursuing and returning such person so charged, or so much thereof as to them seems just."

I believe this includes all such matters as your inquiry covers, and are a part of the agent's "necessary expenses," for without such document he could not pursue and return the accused. I am, therefore, of the opinion that the agent aforesaid should pay for all these documents and include the same in his account to the commissioners for allowance.

Yours truly,

TIMOTHY S. HOGAN,

Attorney General.

COUNTY COMMISSIONERS OFFICE—VACANCY—ELECTION OF SUCCESSOR—APPOINTEE PRO TEM.

Under Section 2397 of the General Code, when a vacancy occurs in the office of county commissioner, more than thirty days prior to the next election for state and county officers, the successor must be elected at the said election. Said successor shall serve, under Section 2396 of the General Code, for the unexpired term of his predecessor.

A commissioner pro tem. may be appointed under Section 2397 of the General Code by the probate judge, auditor and recorder of the county, to serve until the successor aforesaid is elected and qualified.

When a commissioner pro tem. is so appointed, the fact that the governor's commission states that the appointment is for the unexpired term, does not affect a change in the law.

COLUMBUS, OHIO, August 22, 1912.

HON. DAVID T. SIMPSON, Prosecuting Attorney, Millersburg, Ohio.

DEAR SIR:—In your communication of July 24, 1912, you state:

> "J. S. was elected commissioner and served two months and died, his son was appointed by Governor Harmon to serve out the unexpired term of his father J. S., and has commenced the discharge of his duties. There being about twenty months of the term of J. S. to be filled, will it be necessary to have an election at this fall election and have a commissioner elected for the short term of about one year? Does this commissioner hold good for the full length of time of the term of J. S. as it says on its face that he is to serve for the unexpired term of J. S.?"

Section 2397, General Code, provides as follows:

> "If a vacancy in the office of commissioner occurs more than thirty days before the next election for state and county officers, a successor shall be elected thereat. If a vacancy occurs more than thirty days before such election, or within that time, and the interest of the county requires that the vacancy be filled before the election, the probate judge, auditor and recorder of the county, or a majority of them, shall appoint a commissioner, who shall hold his office until his successor is elected and qualified."

It is apparent from a consideration of the above section that in the event a vacancy in the office of commissioner occurs more than thirty days before the next election for state and county officers, a successor shall be elected thereat. In the case submitted the vacancy occurred more than thirty days before the election for state and county officers which will be held this November, and as a consequence a successor should be elected thereat. The commissioner pro tem. provided for in Section 2397, supra., and I take it that A was appointed as provided by this section by the probate judge, auditor and recorder or a majority of them, holds his office until his successor is elected and qualified, and since provision is made for the election of a successor at this November election, being the next regular election more than thirty days after the occurrence of the vacancy, the term of his appointment would expire upon the election and qualification of said successor.

In your question you state that A was appointed by Governor Harmon, but in your communication of July 27th you refer to the "commission given him by the governor which provides that he is appointed to fill out the unexpired term of J. S."

The provision for the filling out of the unexpired term written into a commission executed by the governor has no effect as to determining the term of the office. That is governed solely by the statute, and it is a principle too well settled to need citation of authorities that the law and not the commission determines an officer's term. As to certain other county officers the statute provides for a successor pro tem. who fills out the unexpired term, but in the case of county commissioners other provision has been made. This is rendered all the more apparent by a mere reading of Section 2396, General Code, which is as follows:

> "When a commissioner is elected to fill a vacancy occasioned by death, resignation, or removal, he shall hold his office for the unexpired time for which his predecessor was elected."

If the appointee, in case of vacancy, was entitled to hold the full unexpired term there would be no necessity for such a provision as contained in Section 2396, supra., for there would never be a commissioner elected to fill the vacancy.

In view of Sections 2396 and 2397, supra., I can come to no other conclusion but that a successor to J. S. should be elected at the coming November election and that the term of said successor would be for the unexpired term; also that at said election, it being the regular time of the election of county commissioners, a commissioner should be elected for the full term whose tenure of office would commence on the third Monday in September next after his election. (Section 2395, General Code.)

Yours very truly,

TIMOTHY S. HOGAN,

Attorney General.

TAXES AND TAXATION—LIEN OF STATE FOR TAXES A RIGHT IN REM—RIGHT ATTACHES SECOND MONDAY IN APRIL, BUT PAYMENT AFTER OCTOBER 1st MUST BE ENFORCED AGAINST LAND ITSELF—EFFECT OF APPROPRIATION PROCEEDINGS BY BOARD OF EDUCATION AFTER SECOND MONDAY IN APRIL.

Under the present state of the statutes, the tax against real estate is a right in rem, and can only be satisfied by the state by action against the land itself, regardless of the ownership of the land.

Under 5671 of the General Code, the right of the state for taxes against land attaches on the day preceding the second Monday in April. When action is begun, therefore, by the board of education after the second Monday in April, the land is not exempt from taxes for that year, and, after October first, judgment meanwhile having been granted for such appropriation, the state must obtain its taxes when they are not paid, through sale of the land itself.

The board of education, however, may recover the amount of said taxes in a personal action against the party owning the land on the day preceding the second Monday in April.

COLUMBUS, OHIO, July 5, 1912.

HON. CHEEVER W. PETTAY, Prosecuting Attorney, Cadiz, Ohio.

DEAR SIR:—I herewith desire to acknowledge the receipt of the following inquiry from you:

> "On April 11, 1911, application was made to the probate court of Harrison county, Ohio, for the appointment of a jury to award compensation and assess damages to the owner of a tract of land which had been appropriated by a board of education of a municipality in this county. The said jury was selected and the compensation and damages were awarded by their verdict on May 5, 1911. And the said board of education at once paid same and took possession of the land appropriated.
> "Now, the question comes up as to whether the owner of said property on the day preceding the second Monday of April, 1911, should pay the taxes on said land so appropriated as aforesaid, for the tax year, 1911, or whether the owner of said land on said date escapes liability for the reason that the land was taken by appropriation proceedings in said probate court before October 1, 1911. The resolution of the board of education declaring its intention to appropriate said land was of course, passed before the day preceding the second Monday of April, but the application aforesaid was not filed in probate court till after said date set out in Section 5671, General Code of Ohio.
> "Kindly let me have your opinion as to whether or not we should hold the aforesaid owner of said land at time aforesaid, for the taxes on said land for the tax year 1911."

In reply thereto, I desire to say that Section 7624 of the General Code provides for the appropriation of lands for school purposes, as follows:

"When it is necessary to procure or enlarge a school site, and the board of education and the owner of the proposed site or addition are unable to agree upon the sale and purchase thereof, the board shall make an accurate plat and description of the parcel of land which it desires for such purposes, and file them with the probate judge, or court of insolvency, of the proper county. Thereupon the same proceedings of appropriation shall be had which are provided for the appropriation of private property by municipal corporations."

Section 5671 of the General Code provides that the lien for taxes attaches to real property on the day preceding the second Monday of April annually, as follows, to-wit:

"The lien of the state for taxes levied for all purposes, in each year, shall attach to all real property subject to such taxes on the day preceding the second Monday of April, annually, and continue until such taxes, with any penalties accruing thereon, are paid. All personal property subject to taxation shall be liable to be seized and sold for taxes. The personal property of a deceased person shall be liable, in the hands of an executor or administrator, for any tax due on it from the testator or intestate."

In your letter you state that the application to appropriate the said lands for school purposes was not filed in the probate court by the board of education until April 11, 1911. The lien for taxes had attached to said lands prior to that date: in other words, the taxes for the year 1911 were a lien on said lands before the appropriation proceedings even became lis pendens by the filing of the application, on April 11, 1911. The fact that the resolution to appropriate said lands was passed by the board of education before the day preceding the second Monday of April, would in no wise change my opinion in this regard. (See Trust Co. vs. Root, 72 O. S. 535).

Section 5671 of the General Code, above quoted, specifically says that the lien of the state for taxes for all purposes in each year shall attach to all real property on the day preceding the second Monday of April, annually, and shall continue until such taxes are paid, together with any penalty accruing thereon.

It was held in Creps vs. Baird, 3 O. S. 287, that "Taxes due upon lands are a personal debt of him in whose name the lands are listed when the taxes accrue, as well as a lien upon the lands, unless 'the same are not his property, and are erroneously charged in his name for taxation.'"

Since this decision, however, there have been fundamental changes in the statutes of the state. No longer is it possible to sue the owner of real property and secure a personal judgment against him for the amount of taxes thereof, nor distrain personal property of such owner for the same purpose.

Section 5697 of the General Code provides for the only civil action which may be brought to collect taxes, and Section 2658 of the General Code, as construed in state ex rel. vs. Gibson, 1st N. P. n. s., 565, affirmed 70 O. S. 424, authorizes the treasurer to distrain personal property of the person charged with personal taxes. Both of these sections, however, apply solely to the collection of taxes on personal property.

The remedies afforded by Sections 5704 to 5773, inclusive, of the General Code, for the collection of the tax on real estate are exhaustive, or at least pursuit of them to the end thereof is a condition precedent to the assertion of any personal right of action against the owner of the property.

In other words, in the present state of the law, which is made even clearer by the history of legislation, which I shall not recite, the tax on real estate is assessed in rem, and that on personal property is assessed in personam.

The obligation to pay the tax upon real estate is, of course, a personal one as among different parties, and is recognized as such by the various statutes, so that the party paying the taxes on real estate may, by virtue thereof, have a right of action against the party who sought to have paid them, as between the two, but the state and county are not primarily interested in such matters.

In Hoglen vs. Cohan, 30 O. S. 436, it was held that taxes on real estate sold at judicial sale after the day preceding the second Monday of April and before the first of October, could not be deducted from the proceeds of the sale, in spite of the provisions of Section 5671 of the General Code.

In the course of that opinion the following language is used on page 443:

> "The duplicate of taxes, delivery into the possession of the county treasurer on the 1st day of October annually is his warrant of authority for collecting the several levies found against the entries thereon, to-together with penalties and interest that may accrue. From that date, each parcel of land entered upon the tax duplicate, is seized in law and charged with the payment of the levy against it. This is not changed, in any degree, by the fact that the owner is personally liable. In these respects a tax levy, on the land, does not differ in principle from a levy on land by the sheriff under an execution."

so that, even if my conclusion as to the nature of the tax upon real estate were incorrect, it would still be true that such tax is primarily a tax upon the land as such, regardless of its ownership at tax paying time.

Now, the tax against the land in question was lawfully assessed; that is to say, the property was not exempt at the time the lien of the state attached. The taxes, therefore, must be paid, as I have already held.

The enforcement of the state's lien for taxes against this property must take its usual course. If the board of education does not pay the taxes on this land (although the board is not liable for them) it would be the duty of the auditor to advertise the same as delinquent, and, in other respects, seek to make the tax out of the land itself. The land is clearly subject to sale for taxes, and the board of education must protect itself by the payment of the taxes or else find itself divested of a portion, or all of its title in and to the premises.

The board of education should have protected itself in this regard in the course of the appropriation proceedings. In fact, the jury in these proceedings may be presumed to have taken the taxes into account in fixing the compensation to be paid by the board of education for the property.

For all the foregoing reasons I am of the opinion that the county treasurer may not, at least without exhausting the remedies provided for in Sections 5704 to 5773, inclusive, of the General Code, proceed against the owner of this property.

If the board of education does not pay the taxes when due the land must be offered for sale. Only in the event that it fails to sell at either the delinquent or forfeited land sale may any personal action be brought, if at all.

Very truly yours,

TIMOTHY S. HOGAN,
Attorney General.

BOARD OF EDUCATION—INCORPORATION OF VILLAGE OUT OF TERRITORY ATTACHED TO VILLAGE SCHOOL DISTRICT—BOND ISSUE OF FORMER VILLAGE SCHOOL DISTRICT UNAFFECTED AND TERRITORY REMAINS ATTACHED—NEW VILLAGE DOES NOT CONSTITUTE A NEW VILLAGE SCHOOL DISTRICT, AND ELECTION OF BOARD OF EDUCATION VOID.

The legislature has made provision for the formation of various other school districts from the township school districts. The evident purpose of the legislature, however, as disclosed by Sections 4681, 4687 and 4728 of the General Code, is to protect such school districts formed out of the township school district, e. g., city and village school districts and special school districts, from the encroachments of other school districts of a similar class.

When, therefore, a village is created entirely out of lands which have been attached to another village for school purposes, even though the valuation of said newly incorporated village exceeds $100,000.00, nevertheless Section 4681 of the General Code, providing that a village of such valuation shall become a village school district, will have no application. The former village school district will remain intact, and the territory out of which the new village was formed shall be deemed detached from said newly incorporated village for school purposes within the sense of Section 4681 of the General Code.

(1) From the premises; a bond issue made by the first village school district shall remain unaffeceted by the incorporation of the second village, and the same may be taxed against the residents thereof.

(2) An election of a board of education by the residents of the newly incorporated village is null and void.

COLUMBUS, OHIO, August 6, 1912.

HON. JAY S. PAISLEY, Prosecuting Attorney, Steubenville, Ohio.

DEAR SIR:—Under date of June 6, 1912, you state as follows:

> "The Empire village school district in this county includes all the territory in the village of Empire and also some outside territory attached for school purposes.
> "By a vote of the people bonds were issued to the amount of about $30,000.00 by the Empire village school district and sold May 1, 1912.
> "About the same time the persons living in the territory outside of the village in said school district created another village called Ekeyville. The same persons had voted on the bond issue, The election upon the incorporation of Ekeyville was held May 9, 1912, eight days after the bonds were sold. The bond issue, of course, was based upon the entire valuation of the district.
> "The bonds were issued for the purpose of building a new school house, plans for which have been made costing an amount approximately equal to the bond issue. The contract has not yet been let. About one-fourth of the total valuation of the school district is in the proposed incorporation of Ekeyville.
> "What, if any, effect would the new incorporation of Ekeyville have upon taxes to be levied to pay the bonds? Would the property in the new village of Ekeyville be subject to taxation to pay the bonds or would the General Code, Section 3544 apply, and would the total amount of the bonds be taken into consideration in dividing the funds or debts? I take it that the incorporation of a new village carries with it the creation of a new school district."

In response to the foregoing inquiry you were sent an opinion given to Hon. James F. Bell, prosecuting attorney of London, Ohio, under date of April 18, 1912, released, May 13, 1912. On June 27, 1912, you send a further communication in which you state:

"In this county the bonds were sold for the purpose of erecting a new school building before a vote was taken of a part of the people in the school district to create another village. The board of education desires to know if the people in the new village would be relieved of paying taxes for the purpose of paying off the indebtedness thus incurred by the issuing of the bonds.

"One of the five members of the old Empire village school district is a resident of the new village of Ekeyville. The new village of Ekeyville has held a special election and has elected five members of its board of education. Was the election legal, and if it was, what is the status of the Empire village school district whose board of education consists of four members living therein and one member living in the new village of Ekeyville?

"There is no doubt but what the value of the property of the new village of Ekeyville exceeds the sum of one hundred thousand dollars."

The question to be determined in this situation is whether or not the new village becomes a village school district by operation of the statute.

Section 4681, General Code, provides:

"Each village, together with the territory attached to it for school purposes, and excluding the territory within its corporate limits detached for school purposes, and having in the district thus formed a total tax valuation of not less than one hundred thousand dollars, shall constitute a village school district."

Section 4687, General Code, provides:

"Upon the creation of a village, it shall thereby become a village school district, as herein provided, and, if the territory of such village previous to its creation was included within the boundaries of a special school district and such special school district included more territory than is included within the village, such territory shall thereby be attached to such village school district for school purposes."

Section 4710, General Code, provides:

"In villages hereafter created, a board of education shall be elected as provided in the preceding section. If such election is a special election, the members elected shall serve for the term indicated in such section from the first Monday in January after the last preceding election for members of the board of education, and the board shall organize on the second Monday after the special election."

The provisions of Section 4681, General Code, were under consideration in the case of Buckman vs. State 81 Ohio St., 171 wherein it was held:

> "By force of the provisions of Section 3888, Revised Statutes, as amended April 2, 1906, and in effect April 16, 1906 (98 O. L. 217), each incorporated village then existing—April 16, 1906—or since created, 'together with the territory attached to it for school purposes, and excluding the territory within its corporate limits detached for school purposes, and having in the district thus formed a total valuation of not less than one hundred thousand dollars,' constitutes and is a village school district, no vote of the electors of such village being necessary to the creation or establishment of such district."

It will be observed that in Section 4681, supra, the district thus formed which is to constitute the new village school district is to consist of the territory of the village and also such territory as is attached to it for school purposes, "and excluding the territory within corporate limits detached for school purposes." These provisions were not construed in Buckman vs. State, supra. They must be considered in determining the present question.

Before the incorporation of the village of Ekeyville, all the territory thereof was in the Empire village school district for school purposes. The territory outside the village of Empire, part of which is now in the new village, was attached at some time to the Empire village school district and was so attached at the time of the incorporation of the village of Ekeyville. After it was so attached for school purposes a village was formed from this attached territory. Did the creation of a village have the effect of detaching the territory therein from the village school district of Empire?

It is conceded that the new village has a tax valuation of more than one hundred thousand dollars, and comes within the amount required for the formation of a village school district by the operation of Section 4681, General Code.

The real question to be determined in this case is, can a village school district be created from another village school district by the mere operation of the statute?

In the case of Scott vs. McCullough, 72 Ohio St., 538, it is held:

> "No part of the territory of a special school district is subject to be taken to form another special school district."

Summers, J., says on page 539:

> "The civil township is the basis of our school system."

He then reviews the history of legislation on the formation of subdistricts, village and city districts, and in conclusion, says on page 540:

> "The important thing is the fact that only territory forming part of the township shool district was taken in creating other districts."

On page 546, he further says:

> "If part of one district may be embraced in another, then part of the latter may be taken for another, and so on as long as other provisions of the statutes may be complied with, and with such consequences as make it unreasonable to assume that such a possibility was within the contemplation of the legislature."

Section 4728, General Code, provides for the formation of special school districts, as follows:

"A special school district may be formed of any contiguous territory, not included within the limits of a city or village, which has a total tax valuation of not less than one hundred thousand dollars."

The statute under consideration in Scott vs. McCullough, supra, contained similar provisions, and defendants contended, as shown on page 544, that as the statute in terms exempts territory included within a village or city, any constructive exemption is precluded. The court, however, overruled this contention.

In the case of Fulks vs. Wright, 72 Ohio St., 547, it is held:

"When the schools of a township have been centralized, no part of the territory comprised in such centralization is subject to be taken to form a special school district."

The defendants in error contended in this case that a special school district may be formed from any contiguous territory not included within a village or city. The court, Summers, J., says on page 548 and 549:

"But we are of opinion, for the reasons stated in the opinion in that case, (Scott vs. McCullough, supra), that the words 'contiguous territory' are to be limited to such territory as the legislature manifestly had in contemplation when the section was enacted, and that is, to territory that had not been pre-empted by being taken to form some other district, but such as remained a township district or a part thereof. Many illustrations of such construction might be given. Two presently occur. Literally construed, the statutes providing for the organization of villages and hamlets would authorize their creation out of territory already forming a part of a village or hamlet. That would be absurd and manifestly was not intended."

In the formation of special school districts the statute specifically protects the territory of a village or city. When a village is formed composing a special school district, the special school district is in effect continued in existence under the form of a village school district, as shown by the provisions of Section 4687, General Code, supra.

The evident purpose of the legislature is to protect city school districts, village school districts, and special school districts from the encroachment of other school districts of a similar class.

The original school district was that of the township. The legislature in providing for the formation of other school districts has from time to time taken the territory of the township to form these other districts. As held by Summers, J., in the case of Fulks vs. Wright, supra, the territory to be taken in the formation of some other school district, is to be taken from the township, and not from territory which has "been pre-empted by being taken to form some other school district."

The territory now composing the new village of Ekeyville has been attached to the Empire school district. It has been "pre-empted" by that school district, and cannot be taken to form another village school district.

In determining whether or not a new village school district has been formed by the creation of a new village, the territory in such new village attached thereto or detached therefrom for school purposes must be taken into consideration. The attaching of the territory in question to the Empire school district for school purposes is in effect a detaching of that territory from the territory which now composes the village of Ekeyville. The statute operates upon the territory which forms the new village and not necessarily upon the village which was not in fact in existence at the time the territory was attached to the Empire school district.

If we take from the new village the territory therein, which is attached to the Empire district for school purposes, there will not remain any territory from which to form a new village school district.

The creation of the village of Ekeyville did not create a village school district by operation of law.

The provisions of Section 4710, General Code, as to the election of a board of education in a newly created village apply only when such village becomes a village school district. It does not apply to the village of Ekeyville.

The Empire village school district remains the same as it was prior to the incorporation of the village of Ekeyville. The territory in the village of Ekeyville is still attached to the Empire school district for school purposes. The election of a board of education in the new village was null and void.

The other questions which you submit are based upon the conclusion that the creation of the new village made a new school district. The holding above disposes of all those questions.

Respectfully,
TIMOTHY S. HOGAN,
Attorney General.

SALARY OF PROBATE JUDGE BASED ON FEDERAL CENSUS PRECEDING ELECTION—VACANCY AFFECTS NO CHANGE IN SALARY.

Inasmuch as under Section 2992 of the General Code the salary of a probate judge is based upon the last federal census preceding his election, a probate judge who was elected prior to 1910, will receive salary based upon the federal census of 1900.

The salary fixed at the beginning of an official term remains the same and is in no wise affected by the occurrence of a vacancy.

COLUMBUS, OHIO, August 23, 1912.

HON. F. M. STEVENS, Prosecuting Attorney of Lorain County, Elyria, Ohio.

DEAR SIR:—I have your letter of August 6th, wherein you state:

> "I submit to you for your opinion the following question: Whether or not a probate judge, appointed in June of this year to fill the vacancy caused by the death of our former probate judge, should receive a salary upon the basis of the 1910 census, or whether the same should be determined upon the basis of the 1900 census?"

Section 2992 of the General Code prich provides what salary shall be paid to a probate judge is, in part, as follows:

"Each probate judge shall receive one hundred dollars for each full one thousand of the first fifteen thousand of the population of the county, as shown by the last federal census next preceding his election; * * *."

I have not been informed as to when the deceased probate judge was elected but assume that is was prior to the year 1910. His salary was therefore based upon the population of the county as shown by the federal census of 1900; it was a fixed and definite sum which could neither be increased nor diminished during the term for which he was elected, had he lived to complete it.

The salary attaching to the office of probate judge, once the amount is determined according to the method prescribed by Section 2992, remains unchanged until the taking of another federal census and an election thereafter. No election to the office of probate judge having been held since the taking of the federal census of 1910, it follows that the salary attaching to that office will not change until another election is held. A person appointed to fill a vacancy occurring during a term stands in the same relation as the officer who was elected, and cannot receive an increase of salary during the unexpired portion of the term in the absence of a statutory regulation to that effect.

The only reported case that I have been able to find on this question is the case of Storke vs. Goux, 129 Cal., 526, where it was held:

"The salary attached to a county or municipal office at the beginning of an official term must continue without increase during the entire term for which the officer was elected notwithstanding the creation of a vacancy in the term, which is filled by the appointment of another."

I am of the opinion, therefore, that the salary of the present probate judge of your county should be the same as that of his predecessor in office.

Very truly yours,

TIMOTHY S. HOGAN,
Attorney General.

REMOVAL OF MAYOR—REMOVAL BY GOVERNOR EXECUTIVE FUNCTION AND COMPULSORY PROCESS OF WITNESSES NOT ESSENTIAL—FORFEITURE AFTER PROCEDURE IN PROBATE COURT A JUDICIAL PROCEDURE.

The removal of a public official from office is an executive function. The procedure set out in Sections 4268 and 4269, General Code for removal of a mayor by the governor for causes therein specified is not void and ineffective, for the reason that no provision is made for witnesses by compulsory process.

The procedure set out in 4670, General Code, providing for a hearing before the probate court in certain instances of misfeasance or malfeasance in office, is essentially a judicial procedure, and not withstanding the fact that provision is made for an entry of removal from office, the procedure is directed properly to the ascertainment of the fact of malfeasance or misfeasance, which in itself works a forfeiture of office. The power of removal being executive in its nature, such power is not to be deemed vested in the probate court.

The misfeasance or malfeasance complained of in Section 4670, General Code, must be some act specifically prohibited by statute, whilst the procedure set out in 4268 and 4269, General Code, may be invoked for general causes, not so defined, but which constitutes misconduct, gross neglect of duty, gross immorality or habitual drunkenness.

COLUMBUS, OHIO, August 26, 1912.

HON. T. J. KREMER, Prosecuting Attorney, Woodsfield, Ohio.

DEAR SIR:—I acknowledge receipt of your letter of August 7th, in which you set forth the following facts:

> "An action has been brought before the probate court of Monroe county, Ohio, to oust the mayor of the incorporated village of Clarington, Ohio, for malfeasance and misfeasance in office. The attorneys for the mayor have questioned the jurisdiction of the probate court in such a proceeding and insist that the probate court has no jurisdiction but insist that an action of this kind must be brought before the governor of the state under Section 4268 of the General Code of Ohio."

I gather from your letter that the probate judge desires my opinion as to whether or not he has jurisdiction of a complaint before him. Upon this assumption I venture to answer your letter. I should not presume to express my view in a matter already in litigation except upon the assurance that the judge before whom it was pending desired me to do so.

At the outset of the consideration of this question I am confronted by the fact to which you called my attention in your letter of August 13th, that Hon. Wade H. Ellis, one of my predecessors, has held that the procedure under Section 4268, General Code, is not available at all and that the action in the probate court is the only method by which a mayor may be removed. This holding of Mr. Ellis' was embodied in an opinion rendered to Hon. Myron T. Herrick, governor, on March 16, 1905, and is on file in this office. On examining it I find that Mr. Ellis held that what was then Section 226, Municipal Code, now embodied in Sections 4268 and 4269, General Code, is "vitally ineffective and inoperative." The reason upon which Mr. Ellis' conclusion was based is stated to be the fact that the section, as considered by him and as at present constituted, contains no authority, by compulsory process or otherwise, to bring before the governor witnesses to sustain the charges or to refute them on behalf of the accused official. Mr. Ellis' view seems to have been that the absence of such a provision was itself a denial of what the statute requires as "a full and fair opportunity to be heard in his defense" as affecting the accused and, also, constituted a deficiency in the machinery, because of which the governor would be virtually helpless to sustain charges which might be filed in his office by him under the section.

In his discussion of the question, however, Mr. Ellis goes further than this and suggests that the statute is unconstitutional because it does not afford to the mayor a full and fair opportunity to be heard in his own defense. He cites certain authorities upon the proposition that the removal of a public official for cause necessitates notice of the cause and hearing upon the facts involved, and that such a hearing must possess the necessary ingredients of a fair trial.

Ultimately, I think, all of the propositions which Mr. Ellis discusses are founded upon the assumption that a public officer who is subject to removal for cause has a right, regardless of the provisions of the statute, to compulsory process to secure the attendance of witnesses in his behalf, so that the failure of the statute to secure him this right renders it void.

I am unable to agree with Mr. Ellis upon this proposition. Some of the authorities cited by him are inapposite; others, notably Dullman vs. Wilson, 53 Michigan, 392, have been expressly disapproved by our own supreme court. The proposition which lies at the foundation of the case just cited is that removal for cause is a judicial power and must be exercised under all the safeguards and sanction which characterize the exercise of that power. The supreme court of Michigan, in so holding, follows a line of decisions to the same effect which have not been accepted by the supreme court of Ohio. In state ex rel. vs. Hawkins, 44 O. S., 98, will be found in the language of Minshall, J., an exhaustive discussion of the nature of the power of removal for cause. This case is peculiarly in point, because it involves the power of the governor of the state to remove, for cause, certain officers of the city of Cincinnati. Without quoting exhaustively from the decision, suffice it to say that it is there held that the power of removal for cause is an executive, and not a judicial power, at least to the extent that the legislature is authorized to vest it in executive officers. It is also held, as a necessary corollary to this proposition, that when an executive officer is proceeding to exercise this power so vested in him by the legislature his determination and finding on the facts, unless fraudulently or arbitrarily reached, constitutes an exercise of executive discretion which is not reviewable by the courts. The contrary, of course, would be the case if the power were judicial. Speaking of the line of decisions of which Dullman vs. Wilson, supra, is an instance and specifically mentioning that case among others, Judge Minshall says at page 113:

> "Those decisions have, as a rule, proceeded upon the ground, that an incumbent has a property in his office, and that he cannot be deprived of his right without the judgment of a court. This view finds support in the doctrines of the common law, which regarded an office as an hereditament, but has no foundation whatever in a republic government like our own. (Citing a large number of cases)."

The ultimate conclusion reached by the court in this case is, as already pointed out, that the power of removal for cause may be vested by the general assembly in an executive officer under statutes which provide for its exercise as an executive function under safeguards requiring notice and hearing, but not amounting to the procedure of a trial in a court of law or equity.

This decision of the supreme court of Ohio has been approved in cases subsequently decided,

"State ex rel. vs. Sullivan, 58 O. S., 504;
"State ex rel. vs. Hoglan, 64 O. S., 532."

In both of these cases, one of which is cited in Mr. Ellis' opinion, the court came to the conclusion that the power of removal had not been properly exercised. In neither of them, however, was its conclusion based upon the denial of any supposed right to have compulsory process for securing the attendance of witnesses in behalf of the accused. On the contrary, the statutes under which both of them were decided did not authorize issuance of such compulsory process. If the position taken by Mr. Ellis was correct these cases would have been decided upon that point alone, and the decision in State ex rel. vs. Hawkins would have been opposite to that actually reached; on the contrary in each one of these cases the proposition laid down is adhered to and the legality of the exercise of the power of removal for cause was in each case determined by standards applicable to the action of an executive officer.

I have searched in vain for authority in support of the proposition advanced by Mr. Ellis. The cases and texts cited by him do not support his contention. There are many well established statutes, both those providing for removal from office for cause and others involving even property rights which would have to be held unconstitutional if this conclusion be admitted, for example, the statutes creating the state board of pharmacy, the state dental board and state medical board, the office of the chief inspector of workshops and factories, and other similar statutes providing for executive action, as, for example, the revocation of the certificate of a practitioner of medicine, necessitating notice and hearing, but not affording either to the officer or to the adversary party compulsory process to secure the attendance of witnesses.

In this state of the law I believe it to be inadvisable and unsafe to hold that a statute is unconstitutional which does not afford to an officer subject to removal for cause the opportunity to enforce the attendance of witnesses in his behalf upon the hearing which the law requires; nor do I believe it proper to hold that a statute is inoperative which does not afford to the removing officer the power to secure the attendance of witnesses in support of the specifications upon which the hearing was held. While there can be no doubt as to the propriety, policy, and convenience of affording such means, both to the removing officer and to the officer subject to removal, I am unable to reach the conclusion that the failure of the statute to provide such means to either of such officers renders it either unconstitutional or inoperative.

It has never been my policy to hold statutes void in the absence of authority sustaining such a proposition where, as in this case, there is a total absence of authority upon the proposition, and where, also, the proposition contended for, if correct, would involve a large number of statutes which have been in force and effect for a number of years. I think it my duty to afford every presumption of constitutionality to the statute which is so questioned.

In addition to what I have said, I may state that in a hasty examination of statutes providing for removal for cause I find that many of them fail to provide for securing compulsory attendance of witnesses at the hearing, which must be considered to be a necessary feature of the exercise of the power. Indeed, I do not understand that it is essential that the governor, for example, should be required to receive verbal testimony only in support of or against the charges filed in his office under the statute now under consideration. He is not precluded from receiving and considering affidavits which may be filed by any interested party and which may bear in any way upon the subject of the complaint. The authorities are unanimous upon the point that whatever be the nature of the proceeding to remove it need not be characterized by adherance to the technical rules of evidence.

I, therefore, am of the opinion that Section 4268, General Code, which provides for the removal of the mayor of a municipal corporation by the governor of the state, is a valid, constitutional, and fully operative statute. Such a conclusion brings me then to the consideration of the scope and effect of this section, considered in connection with Section 4670, General Code.

Section 4268, General Code, provides in effect that the governor, after notice and hearing, shall remove the mayor if guilty of "misconduct in office, bribery, any gross neglect of duty, gross immorality, or habitual drunkenness." With the exception of "bribery" these enumerated causes are all general in their nature and do not constitute specific offenses prohibited by other statutes. Section 4670, General Code, on the other hand, is essentially dissimilar; the causes of complaint therein prescribed, insofar as the mayor might be concerned, are as follows:

> "that * * officer of a corporation is or has been interested, directly or indirectly, in the profits of a contract, job, work or service, or is or has been acting as commissioner, architect, superintendent or engineer in work undertaken or prosecuted by the corporation, contrary to law, or that * * an officer of the corporation has been guilty of misfeasance or malfeasance in office."

It is clear that as to the first of these enumerated causes of complaint in the probate court it may be said that it concerns an act unlawful in itself which works a forfeiture of the office. In view of the nature of the proceeding, I am of the opinion, too, that the "misfeasance or malfeasance" of which the section speaks must be some positive act or acts prohibited by law, which of themselves work a forfeiture of the office. The purpose of the whole proceeding is not so much the removal from office as it is the ascertainment of facts which constitute a forfeiture of office. It is true that Section 4674 provides that at the conclusion of the proceeding, if the verdict of the jury sustains the charges "the probate judge shall enter the charges and findings thereon upon the record of the court, (and) make an order removing such officer from office." The proceeding is spoken of, therefore, as if it were an exercise of the power of removal or amotion, as it is sometimes called. It would be more accurate, however, I think, to consider it as a proceeding to forfeit office. Even the above quoted language of Section 4674 is not inconsistent with this theory, because it provides that the charges and findings shall themselves be entered upon the record, and because, further, Section 4675 provides for proceedings in error. Removal from office being an executive function purely, to be exercised by the use of sound discretion, it is clear that there could be no question of judicial error arising in the course of the exercise of such a power. It would not be inconsistent with the idea of executive removal to provide for an appeal for the purpose of reviewing the discretion of the removing officer or tribunal, but this is entirely a different thing from a proceeding in error, the only purpose of which is to test the sufficiency, in law, of the charges filed or the correctness of the verdict, or the rulings of the court.

I am, therefore, of the opinion that Section 4670 and succeeding section provide for the exercise of purely judicial powers, the object of the inquiry being to ascertain whether or not, in fact and in law, the accused officer has committed an act or acts which constitute ground for removal or, more accurately, which themselves amount to a forfeiture of the office.

Section 4268, as already pointed out, provides for an exercise of executive power, not under the sanction of any hard and fast rules of laws but rather in the use of sound discretion, to be exercised liberally, as the case may require.

The two proceedings being essentially dissimilar there is, therefore, nothing inconsistent between the two sections under consideration and both must be regarded as fully in effect. Section 4670 having been considered in the case of State ex rel. vs. Ganson, 56 O. S., 315, as applicable to a mayor, I am of the opinion that, for the reasons stated, no intention can be imputed to the legislature to create an exception in the case of a mayor by the enactment of Section 4268.

The principle is well stated in Dillon on municipal corporations, 5th Ed., Section 467, as follows:

> "* * the removal of an officer upon conviction of an offense which forfeits his right to hold the office is an act mainly judicial, and perhaps administrative only as connected with the exercise of the police power. The removal of an officer as incident to the executive power of appointment, is not judicial, and, even where such removal is restricted by the establishment of certain precedent formalities, it is not judicial in the same sense as a removal made wholly as a punishment for an offense. The distinction referred to undoubtedly exists as between a proceeding before the courts of the state by way of indictment for official misconduct, (upon which forfeiture of office results, * * *) on the one hand, and a removal for cause after a hearing by the council or executive officers of the city, on the other hand. * * *."

In the note, at page 786, the author says:

> "The statutory provision for trial before the appointing power and removal thereby does not preclude the indictment of the officer for official misconduct and removal thereon upon a verdict of guilty pursuant to another statute. The remedies are concurrent. Coffey vs. Superior Court, 147 Cal., 525; Roberts vs. Superior Court, 147 Cal., 568."

I am therefore of the opinion that the probate court has jurisdiction in a proper case of a complaint filed under Section 4670 against a mayor. I venture to suggest, however, that the judicial character of the proceeding and its essential nature, as I have tried to describe it, necessitate holding that the "misfeasance or malfeasance" complained of shall be some act prohibited by law or unlawful at the common laws; mere "gross neglect of duty" or "habitual drunkenness," as spoken of in Section 4268, would not be proper grounds for complaint under Section 4670.

Very truly yours,

TIMOTHY S. HOGAN.

Attorney General.

ROADS AND HIGHWAYS—CONTROL OF ROADS IMPROVED THROUGH BONDS, ISSUED BY COUNTY COMMISSIONERS UNDER STATE HIGHWAY ACT, IS VESTED IN STATE HIGHWAY COMMISSIONER.

When the county commissioners issue bonds under Section 53 of the state highway act, for the highway improvements therein provided for the control and management of the work of constructing, improving, maintaining or repairing such highways, is vested in the state highway commissioner and the county commissioners have no authority in this respect.

COLUMBUS, OHIO, September 18, 1912.

HON. JAMES W. DARBY, Prosecuting Attorney, Vinton County, McArthur, Ohio.

DEAR SIR:—I beg to acknowledge receipt of your letter of September 16th, wherein you state:

> "Our county commissioners insist that they have a right under Section 53, page 348 of Vol. 102 of the Ohio Laws to issue bonds and build pikes, superintending looking after, controlling and doing everything that is to be done. My idea of the matter is that this provides a part of the machinery for running the requirements in connection with the state highway department."

Section 53 of the act of May 31, 1911, 102 O. L., 348 provides as follows:

> "The county commissioners in anticipation of the collection of such taxes and assessments, and whenever in their judgment it is necessary, are hereby authorized to sell the bonds of any such county in which such construction, improvement, maintenance or repair is to be made to any amount not exceeding in the aggregate one per cent. of the tax duplicate of such county. Such bonds shall state for what purposes issued, and bear interest at a rate not in excess of five per cent. per annum, payable semi-annually, and in such amounts to mature in not more than ten years after they are issued, as the county commissioners shall determine. Such bonds shall be advertised once each week for four consecutive weeks in two newspapers published and having a general circulation within the county. Such bonds shall be sold to the highest responsible bidder and for not less than par and accrued interest. The county commissioners may reject any and all bids. The proceeds of such bonds shall be used exclusively for the payment of the cost and expense of the construction, improvement, maintenance or repair of the highway for which the bonds were issued, except that any balance remaining after all of the cost and expense of the improvement have been paid, shall become a part of the county road improvement fund."

The foregoing is a part of the law providing for aid by the state in the construction, maintenance and repair of highways. The bonds therein provided for are to be issued by the county commissioners to pay the county's portion of the cost of an improvement in cases where financial aid is received from the state under the state highway law. The moneys derived from such bonds must be expended in conjunction with the funds received from the state and in accordance with the requirements of Section 33 of the highway law, which provides:

"The state's proportion of the cost and expense of the construction, improvement, maintenance or repair of any highway under the provisions of this chapter shall be paid by the treasurer of state upon the warrant of the auditor of state issued upon the requisition of the state highway commissioner from an appropriation made to carry out its provisions. The county's, township's and property owner's proportion of the cost and expense of such construction, improvement, maintenance and repairs, shall be paid by the treasurer of the county, in which the highway is located upon the warrant of the county auditor issued upon the requisition of the state highway commissioner from any funds in the county treasury for the construction, improvement, maintenance or repair of roads."

The letting of contracts is vested in the state highway commissioner subject only to approval by the county commissioners. Section 6 of the highway act, now Section 1183, General Code, gives to the state highway commissioner general supervision as follows:

"The state highway commissioner shall have general supervision of the construction, improvement, maintenance and repair of all highways, bridges and culverts which are constructed, improved, maintained or repaired by the aid of state money. * * *"

I am of the opinion, therefore, that when bonds are issued by the county commissioners under favor of Section 53, above quoted, the commissioners are not authorizing to assume charge of the work of constructing, improving, maintaining or repairing highways.

Very truly yours,

TIMOTHY S. HOGAN,

Attorney General.

BANKS AND BANKING—DEPOSITORIES OF COUNTY—ACTIVE AND INACTIVE—PAYMENT BY TREASURER BY CHECK ONLY—CURRENT EXPENSES—AWARD OF DEPOSITS WHEN BANKS DO NOT BID ON ALL FUNDS.

By virtue of the express provision of Section 2745, General Code, and also by reason of the fact that Section 2736, General Code, is the later section, the provision of Section 2736, General Code, that "all money shall be payable only upon the check of the county treasurer" governs the provision of Section 2675, General Code, that payment of warrants may be made in cash.

In the language of 2736, General Code, providing that "thereafter before noon of each business day, he shall deposit therein all money received by him during the preceding business day, except as hereinbefore provided," the word "therein" necessarily refers to active depositories and the words "except as hereinbefore provided" refer to amounts not necessary for current demands. Such amounts may, therefore, be deposited in inactive depositories directly.

When the commissioners have advertised for bids for inactive depositories, under 2716, General Code, and when after all the banks bidding therefor have been awarded the amounts bid for, there still remains a balance of funds unawarded, the commissioners may, under 2715-1, General Code, either first increase the deposits in the banks awarded the first deposits, upon the procurance of additional security, at the same rate of interest; or may deposit such balance in banks outside the county after advertising for bids as provided in Section 2716, General Code.

COLUMBUS, OHIO, September 12, 1912.

HON. F. R. HOGUE, Prosecuting Attorney, Jefferson, Ohio.

DEAR SIR:—Under date of August 28, 1912, you inquire of this department as follows:

> "The commissioners of this county have just established depositaries for the funds of the county, under the county depositary law as amended in 102 Ohio Laws 59-60, and in connection therewith two or three questions have arisen upon which I am not clear.
> "First. Is Section 2736, General Code, to be literally construed so that every cent which comes into the treasury must be deposited by the treasurer and checked out in payment of all warrants, or can he keep in the treasury sufficient cash to pay, and is he authorized to pay warrants in cash which come in during the course of the day? It will be readily observed that to compel the treasurer to draw a check upon the depositary in payment of every small warrant, such as witness fees, etc., would entail a great additional burden upon the treasurer, and it does not seem to me that such a condition was contemplated by the legislature.
> "Second. Section 2736, General Code, contains this sentence:
> "Thereafter before noon of each business day, he shall deposit therein all money received by him the preceding business day, except as hereinbefore provided.
> "Does this word 'therein' refer to the active depositary, compelling the treasurer to deposit all moneys in the active depositary and check therefrom into the inactive depositary, or may it be construed to refer to both the inactive and active depositaries, so that the treasurer may select either one in which to make his deposit?

"Third. At the opening of bids for depositaries recently, three different banks bid for the inactive deposits, to the amount of $300,000.00, each bank specifying the amount they desired, and these were all the bids received. The funds of the county at tax paying time and until the semi-annual distribution amount approximately to $400,000.00. Under the circumstances I could see no other relief except to readvertise for depositaries for this extra money, and have so instructed the commissioners. If you are aware of any other legal manner in which this money can be deposited, would be glad to receive such information."

Section 2736, General Code, as amended in 102 Ohio Laws 59, provides:

"Upon the receipt by the county treasurer of a written notice from the commissioners that a depositary, or depositaries, have been selected in pursuance of law, and naming the bank or banks or trust companies so selected, such treasurer shall deposit in such bank or banks or trust companies as directed by the commissioners, and designated as inactive depositaries to the credit of the county all money in his possession, except such amount as is necessary to meet current demands, which shall be deposited by such treasurer in the active depositary or depositaries. Thereafter before noon of each day, he shall deposit therein all money received by him the preceding business day except as hereinbefore provided. Such money shall be payable only on the check of the treasurer."

This section as amended in 101 Ohio Laws 354, provided:

"Upon the receipt by the county treasurer of a written notice from the commissioners that a depositary, or depositaries, have been selected in pursuance of law, and naming the bank or banks or trust companies so selected, such treasurer shall deposit in such bank or banks or trust companies as directed by the commissioners, to the credit of the county all money in his possession, except such as is necessary to meet current demands. Thereafter before noon of each business day, he shall deposit therein all money received by him the preceding business day except as hereinbefore provided. Such money shall be payable only on the check of the treasurer. The proceeds of checks, warrants, drafts or other claims deposited for collection and on which no interest is paid as provided by law shall be promptly returned to the county treasury."

The amendatory act of 102 Ohio Laws 59, provided for active and inactive depositaries. The original act made no provisions as to active and inactive depositaries, all depositaries were in effect inactive depositaries.

Under the provisions of Section 2736, General Code, as found in the amendatory act of 101 Ohio Laws, supra, the money "necessary to meet current demands," was not required to be deposited in a county depositary. The amendment of said section in 102 Ohio Laws made an additional provision as to such moneys, by adding after the words "except such amount as is necessary to meet current demands" the following: "which shall be deposited by such treasurer in the active depositary or depositaries." This clause so added plainly limits and applies to the amount necessary to meet current demands.

The specific purpose of the legislature in making this amendment was to provide for active depositaries and to require all moneys to be deposited either in an active or an inactive depositary. Prior to this amendment the active funds remained in the county treasury. The statute did not fix the amount to be retained as active funds, but left it to the discretion of the treasurer.

Before passing definitely upon this question other sections must be considered.

Section 2675, General Code, provides:

> "When a warrant drawn on him as treasurer by the auditor of the county is presented for payment, if there is money in the treasury or depository to the credit of the fund on which it is drawn, and the warrant is endorsed by the payee thereof, the county treasurer shall redeem it by payment of cash or by check on the depository, and shall stamp on the fact of such warrant, "redeemed," and the date of redemption."

The provision herein as to paying warrants in cash or by check was contained in the act of 97 Ohio Laws 459. It was therefore in the statutes prior to the amendment of Section 2736, General Code, in 102 Ohio Laws, supra.

Section 2745, General Code, provides:

> "Any provision of statute which conflicts with any provision herein relating to county depositaries shall be held to be superseded by the latter as to any inconsistency and not otherwise in counties having a depositary or depositaries for county funds under these provisions. If for any reason, any such county is without a depositary for such funds, the money of the county shall be placed and remain in custody of the treasurer until another depositary is designated, and he shall be governed by the general laws relating to county treasurers."

This statute specifically provides that if there is any inconsistency in the statutes, the provision of the county depositary law should control. Section 2736, General Code, is a part of the county depositary law. It is also a later enactment than Section 2675, General Code.

Sections 2736, General Code and 2675, General Code, should be construed, if possible, so as to give effect to the provisions of each. If they are so inconsistent that only one can be given operation, then the later enactment must control. The later enactment in this case is further sustained by the provisions of Section 2745, General Code.

Are the two sections inconsistent? Section 2675, General Code will permit a county treasurer to pay warrants either in cash or by check upon the depositary. Section 2736, General Code, requires the county treasurer to deposit all money, including that needed to meet current demands, in a county depositary. It provides further that such money shall be payable only upon the check of the county treasurer. This will include the money necessary to meet current expenses. In other words current demands must be paid by check upon the county depositary where such money is on deposit.

The sentence following must also be considered. It reads:

> "Thereafter before noon of each business day, he shall deposit therein all money received by him the preceding business day except as hereinbefore provided."

This sentence is also found in the act of 101 Ohio Laws 354, supra. In this act, the words, "except as hereinbefore provided" referred to the money necessary for current demands" which, in accordance with said act, could be retained in the county treasury. In the amendatory act of 102 Ohio Laws 59, all moneys, that not needed to pay current demands and that necessary to pay current demands, are required to be placed in a county depositary. Therefore, the words "except as hereinbefore provided" if they now refer to any part of the section, must still refer to the moneys needed to pay current demands, but as limited by the provision added in the amendatory act in 102 Ohio Laws 59, that such money shall be deposited in an active depositary.

Section 2736, General Code, does not permit warrants to be paid in cash and is therefore inconsistent with Section 2675, General Code.

It is my conclusion that under the provisions of Section 2736, General Code, as amended in 102 Ohio Laws 59, the county treasurer is not authorized to pay warrants in cash from the current receipts of the day. He must pay all vouchers by check upon the active depositary, or depositaries.

This, as you state, will require additional labor and inconvenience for the county treasurer. No doubt the law could be made so as to permit the county treasurer to pay current demands from current receipts and then require that the balance in the county treasury at the end of each business day should be deposited in a county depositary upon the following business day. The statute does not so provide and this is a matter for the legislature to determine. We can only construe the statutes as we find them.

You inquire further as to the meaning of the word "therein" as used in said Section 2736, General Code. The sentence containing this word is quoted on page five of this opinion.

The original county depositary act did not contain provisions for active and inactive depositaries. This was provided for in the amendatory act of 102 Ohio Laws 59.

In the original act the word "therein" referred to the only banks which were made depositaries and which were in fact the inactive depositaries. The active funds were retained in the county treasury. As now used in the present Section 2736, General Code, the word "therein" refers to the inactive depositaries, and the words "except as hereinbefore provided" refer to the funds needed for current demands, which funds are now required to be placed in an active depositary. In making this construction, we are following the meaning of these words as used in the original act.

Applying this construction to your specific inquiry, I am of opinion that the county treasurer can deposit funds directly in an inactive depositary and is not required to first deposit such funds in the active depositary. In fact it is made the duty of the county treasurer to deposit the funds not needed to pay current demands in an inactive depositary, and that which is necessary to pay current demands in an active depositary.

You next inquire as to the manner of determining depositaries for the amount remaining in the county treasury after all the banks bidding therefor have given the total amount for which they bid.

This is covered by Section 2715-1, General Code, which was enacted in 102 Ohio Laws 59. Said section reads:

> "The deposits in active depositaries, as provided for in the next preceding section shall at all times be subject to draft for the purpose of meeting the current expenses of the county. The deposits in inactive depositaries shall remain until such time as the county treasurer is obliged to withdraw a portion or all of same and place it in the active depositary > or depositaries for current use. Each bank or trust company, when submitting proposals as provided in Section 2716 for the inactive deposits, shall stipulate the amount of money desired by such bank or trust company; and when the aggregate amount placed with all the banks and trust companies, qualifying for same, in any county, does not equal the amount that may be placed into inactive depositaries, the county commissioners shall, upon securing sufficient additional security from any or all of such inactive depositaries authorize the county treasurer to increase the deposits therein; or such county commissioners shall in the manner herein provided designate a bank or banks or trust companies, located outside of the county in which the county treasurer shall deposit such excess funds."

It appears from your letter that the aggregate amount placed with all the banks qualifying for the same does not equal the amount that may be placed in the inactive depositaries. The banks have been given the full amounts for which they bid and qualified for. In such case the county commissioners may pursue either or both of two courses for the deposit of the excess. They may take additional security from the inactive depositaries and authorize the county treasurer to increase the deposits therein; or they may designate, in the manner provided in the depositary act, a depositary outside of the county.

If they pursue the first course, competitive bidding is not required. The rate of interest to be paid will be the same as that offered in the bank's original bid and upon which it was given some of the inactive funds. In order for a bank to secure funds under this provision it must first be an inactive depositary.

If it is desired or necessary to pursue the second course, that is designate a bank or banks outside the county, then the provisions of Section 2716, General Code, as to advertising for bids must be complied with.

Said Section 2716, General Code, provides:

> "When the commissioners of a county provide such depositary or depositaries, they shall publish for two consecutive weeks in two newspapers of opposite politics and of general circulation in the county a notice which shall invite sealed proposals from all banks or trust companies within the provisions of the next two preceding sections, which proposals shall stipulate the rate of interest, not less than two per cent. per annum on the average daily balance, on inactive deposits, and not less than one per cent. per annum on the average daily balance on active deposits, that will be paid for the use of the money of the county, as herein provided. Each proposal shall contain the names of the sureties or securities, or both, that will be offered to the county in case the proposal is accepted."

In conclusion, the additional $100,000.00 may be given to the inactive depositaries without competitive bidding, upon the giving by any or all of them of additional security and by the direction of the county commissioners, at the same rate of interest such banks are now paying, or the county commissioners may readvertise for the letting of such funds and may designate a bank or banks outside of the county as such inactive depositary or depositaries.

Respectfully,

TIMOTHY S. HOGAN,

Attorney General.

ROADS AND HIGHWAYS—TWO MILE ASSESSMENT PIKE LAW—COUNTY COMMISSIONERS NOT OBLIGATED TO KEEP IN REPAIR THOSE PARTS OF MACADAMIZED OR GRAVELED ROADS WHERE SIDEWALKS HAVE BEEN CURBED AND GUTTERED.

When a county or state road passes through a street of a municipal corporation of a county, which road has been improved by graveling or macadamizing under the old two mile assessment pike law: HELD:

Under 7734 and 7744, General Code, it is the duty of the county commissioners to keep in repair only those portions of such road within their county included within the corporate limits of a city or village, whereon the sidewalks have not been curbed and guttered by the municipality.

COLUMBUS, OHIO, September 27, 1912.

HON. CHEEVER W. PETTAY, Prosecuting Attorney, Cadiz, Ohio.

DEAR SIR:—I am in receipt of your letter of September 3rd, wherein you state:

> "A certain county or state road passes through the main street of a municipal corporation of our county. The sidewalks along said street have been curbed and guttered between certain points in said corporation. Some 25 or 30 years ago the road passing along said street through said village was improved under the old two mile assessment pike law."

and then inquire:

> "Whose duty is it to keep said improved road in repair within the limits of said municipal corporation betweeen the points therein where the sidewalks have been curbed and guttered?"

Section 7444, General Code, provides:

> "The county commissioners shall keep in repair the portions of such roads within their respective counties, as are included within the corporate limits of a city or village in such counties, to points therein where the sidewalks have been curbed and guttered, and no further."

In your letter of inquiry you call my attention to an opinion rendered by me to the Hon. Frank J. Rockwell, under date of January 30, 1912, which you state was brought to your attention by reason of a newspaper article commenting thereon. The opinion which I rendered to Mr. Rockwell involved the question as to whose duty it was to repair a county road improved by paving with brick inside of a municipality, and in such opinion following the construction laid down in the case of Railroad vs. Defiance 52 O. S. 262, I held that the provisions of Section 7444, General Code, do not apply to other than macadam or gravel free road as set out in Section 7443, General Code, and that since the road concerning which the inquiry was made was a road paved with brick, such Section 7444, General Code, was not applicable to the matter under consideration and would, therefore, not be further considered. Having eliminated Section 7444, General Code, from discussion I considered the various cases in Ohio, and came to the conclusion that the county commissioners and municipal authorities have concurrent jurisdiction of so much of the county improved roads as lie within the corporate limits of a municipality.

You can, therefore, readily see that the exact question submitted by you, the road in question being as you state macadam, was not considered in such opinion. I presume that the person who prepared the article for the newspaper on the Rockwell opinion did not read the same carefully and simply took the conclusion at which I arrived as being a general proposition covering all cases. However, such conclusion should have been stated as follows:

> "That the county commissioners and municipal authorities have concurrent jurisdiction of so much of county improved roads, except those specified in Section 7443 and 7444, General Code, as lie within the corporate limits of a municipality."

Section 7444, General Code above set out in full has been construed, so I am informed, in two different ways. That is to say, that the words "to points therein wherein the sidewalks have been curbed and guttered, and not further," refer to points along the side of the road and that it is still the duty of the county commissioners to improve the road through its entire length on either side thereof only to where the sidewalks have been curbed and guttered. The other construction which has been placed upon this statute is that the county commissioners are required to repair such road only up to where the municipal authorities have constructed sidewalks and curbed and guttered the same along such roads. In other words, one construction as placed upon it is that the words "to points therein" mean to points in the road, and the other construction the word "therein" is construed to mean within the municipality.

Since the county commissioners have absolutely no authority to place sidewalks along county roads and since a municipality is by law given such power, I am of the opinion that such Section 7444, General Code, means that the county commissioners shall keep in repair a county road up to a point where the sidewalks having been curbed and guttered begin, and that they no longer are required to keep in repair such road beyond where the sidewalks so begin, and that at the other end their duty again begins at the place where the sidewalks having been curbed and guttered ceases. In other words, that such county commissioners are relieved from all duty of repair of all that portion of county roads within the municipality along the side of which sidewalks have been curbed and guttered. There is no specific authority in Ohio in relation to this matter but by way of dictum I would call your attention to the case of Railroad vs. Defiance 52 O. S. 262, at page 301 wherein the court, William, J., says:

> "It is quite clear, therefore, that Section 4906 has no application to the roads involved in this case; and, where applicable, it has no other effect than to cast on the commissioners the burden of keeping the roads to which it relates in repair, until otherwise improved by the city or village, and does not exclude the power of the municipal authorities to improve them at their discretion. (Section 4906 above referred to is now Section 7444, General Code.)"

In passing I would state that the proposition as laid down by said court in said case on page 299 as follows:

> "This position we think, untenable. The highways so brought within the corporate limits of the defendant, were removed from the control which the county commissioners theretofore had over them, and become subject to the control, supervision and care of the municipal authorities, like other streets and highways of the corporation."

has been fully discussed in the case of The State of Ohio ex rel. Peter Witt vs. W. E. Craig et al., 22 C. C. 135, at 138 the court reaching the conclusion that the results of the two cases (Railroad Company vs. Defiance and Lewis vs. Laylin) is simply to sustain the jurisdiction of the county commissioners and municipal authorities over such highways.

A further dictum is found in the case of Slusser vs. City of Sidney 11 N. P. n. s., 297 at page 301, which was a case involving the approach to bridges and in which case the court states as follows:

> "So that even if the bridge was for all practical purposes to be considered a part of the highway and come within the purview of Section 7444, General Code, requiring the county commissioners to keep in repair the portions of such roads within their respective counties which are included within the corporate limits of the city to points only where sidewalks have been curbed and guttered, yet effect ought to be given to the statute which requires them, even if curbs and gutters have been constructed up to or past the point of this bridge, to erect and maintain the bridge and its approaches."

Specifically answering your inquiry I desire to state, first, that the opinion to the Hon. Frank J. Rockwell, under date of January 30, 1912, specifically excepted Sections 7443 and 7444, General Code. In other words, macadamized roads, and therefore, is no authority either way in reference to your inquiry. The court in the case of Railroad Company vs. Defiance has declared that Section 7444 applies to Section 7443, to wit: all macadam and gravel free roads whether constructed under the general or local laws by taxation or assessment or both, and I am, therefore, of the opinion that it is the duty of the county commissioners to keep a macadam state or county road passing through the main street of a municipal corporation in repair within said corporation only until they come to the place of beginning of the sidewalks where they have been curbed and guttered, and that then the duty of repairing said road passes to the municipal authorities to keep the same in repair to the place at the other end of said road where the curbing and guttering of said sidewalks stops.

Yours very truly,

TIMOTHY S. HOGAN,
Attorney General.

ELECTION POLLS—OPEN FROM 5:30 TO 6:00 EXCEPT IN REGISTRATION CITIES WHERE THEY SHALL BE OPEN FROM 5:30 TO 5:30.

Section 5056, General Code, providing that the polls shall be opened from 5:30 to 6:00 is a general statute and applicable to all cities. Section 4925, General Code, providing that the polls shall be opened from 5:30 to 5:30 is a special statute applicable only to registration cities.

The ruling of the secretary of state, therefore, that polls in all cities shall be open from 5:30 to 6:00, except registration cities which are excepted by Section 4925, supra, wherein the polls shall be open from 5:30 to 5:30, is concurred with.

COLUMBUS, OHIO, October 3, 1912.

HON. HENRY HART, Prosecuting Attorney, Sandusky, Ohio.

DEAR SIR:—I beg to acknowledge receipt of your letter of September 18th, wherein you state:

> "In looking over the Code I find that Section provides that the polls shall be opened from 5:30 a. m. to 5:30 p. m., and that Section 5056 provides that the polls shall be opened from 5:30 a. m. to 6:00 p. m., central standard time. These two sections plainly are repugnant to each other and it is hard to figure out just what the law is upon the subject. I find that Section 5056 was amended in the last session of the legislature, found in Session Laws 102, page 446, making this therefore the latest law.
> "I have, therefore, advised the sheriff to provide for the opening and closing of the polls from 5:30 a. m. to 6:00 p. m. central standard time, and I do this under the numerous decisions that where two acts of the legislature are repugnant that the one last enacted should control.
> "I notice in the instructions given by the secretary of state to the election boards that under Section 4925 he holds and instructs that the polls be opened from 5:30 a. m. to 5:30 p. m., holding differently from what I construe to be the law.
> "I, therefore, write you and ask your opinion and construction of these acts as above indicated * * *."

Part first, title 14, of the General Code, is entitled of Electors." In chapter 5, supra, will be found Section 4925, which provides as follows:

> "On the day of the November election in each year and of any other election, the polls shall be opened by the judges of elections appointed and organized, as herein provided, by proclamation made by the chairman at the hour of five-thirty o'clock forenoon, standard time, and shall be closed by proclamation at the hour of five-thirty o'clock afternoon."

Chapter 9 of title 14 is entitled "Casting and Counting of Votes." In this chapter will be found Section 5056, General Code, which provides as follows:

> "The polls shall be opened at five-thirty o'clock forenoon and kept open up to and close at six o'clock, central standard time in the afternoon of the same day."

While these two sections appear to be repugnant to each other, and Section 5056, as amended, 102 O. L. 446, appears to be the later law, still, since Section 4925 is found in the chapter applying to registration cities, and is the latest amended form of the provision for the closing of polls in registration cities, while Section 5056 is the general statute, which was applicable to all places other than registration cities, it is not difficult to see that both statutes can be given effect, and it is not necessary to argue that the older statute is repealed.

Statutes fixing the time for the opening and closing of polls are more particularly directly to those having charge of the election machinery (19 O. S. 25); and since it is incumbent upon the state supervisor and inspector of elections, by virtue of his office, to advise as to the proper method of conducting elections, your question is more properly referable to him. The state supervisor has, as I understand, made a ruling upon this exact question. He has held, and his instructions to the various deputy state supervisors of elections throughout the state, will be, that the provisions of Section 4925 shall apply to all registration cities, and in such places the polls shall close at 5:30 o'clock in the afternoon; and that the provisions of Section 5056, requiring that the polls shall be opened at 5:30 o'clock forenoon and kept open up to and close at six o'clock, central standard time in the afternoon, shall apply to all polls other than in registration cities. I fully concur with the construction the state supervisor of elections has placed upon these sections, enabling them both to be given full and proper meaning.

Very truly yours,

TIMOTHY S. HOGAN,
Attorney General.

TOWNSHIP TRUSTEES—POWER TO PURCHASE ROAD ROLLER AND OTHER ROAD MACHINERY—PAYMENTS MUST BE MADE FROM TOWNSHIP TREASURY—BONDS MAY NOT BE ISSUED THEREFOR.

By Sections 3275 and 7164, General Code, the township trustees are given power to purchase a road roller and other road machinery and pay for the same out of moneys in the township treasury not otherwise appropriated.

Under Section 3295, General Code, the trustees may issue bonds when not otherwise provided for, only for the amounts and for the purposes for which municipal corporations may issue bonds.

Municipal corporations cannot issue bonds except for purposes expressly authorized, and as they are not authorized to issue bonds for the purpose of purchasing road machinery, said power cannot therefore exist in the township trustees.

COLUMBUS, OHIO, October 4, 1912.

HON. J. W. SMITH, Prosecuting Attorney, Ottawa, Ohio.

DEAR SIR:—I beg to acknowledge receipt of your letter of September 27th, which reads in part as follows:

> "A board of trustees of one of the townships in this county desires to submit the question of levying a tax and bonding the township in question exclusive of the municipal corporation therein for $4,000.00, for the purpose of purchasing a road roller and other road machinery for use in the construction and repair of the roads in said township.

"Section 3275 and Section 7164, of the General Code, clearly authorize the purchase of road machinery, but I can find no section specifically authorizing the submission of this question, and the issue of bonds for the purchase of such machinery upon the vote of the electors of the said township. The question is one of considerable importance to us, and I am submitting it to you for your opinion."

Sections 3275 and 7164, General Code provide:

"Section 3275. The trustees may purchase such number of plows and scrapers and any other road building or road repairing machinery they deem necesssary, for the use of the township, which shall be used exclusively for that purpose. The cost and expenses thereof shall be paid on the order of the trustees, from moneys in the township treasury not otherwise appropriated. They shall take possession of such plows, scrapers or machinery, or may authorize an employe of the township or other person, to take charge thereof, who shall take care of and preserve them when not in use.

"Section 7164. The township trustees may furnish such tools, implements and machinery, as they deem necessary, for the construction, repair and maintenance, of the roads in the several road districts within their township, to be paid for out of money in the township treasury not otherwise appropriated. They shall take a receipt from each road superintendent for such implements as are delivered to him, showing the number, kind and condition thereof."

There can be no doubt of the right of township trustees to purchase road machinery, under the foregoing statutes, when the money required therefor is in the township treasury. I have not been able to find any statute which, in express terms, grants to township trustees the right to issue and sell bonds for the purchase of road machinery. The power of township trustees to issue bonds in cases not specifically provided for by other statutes is conferred by Section 3295, General Code, as follows:

"The trustees of any township may issue and sell bonds in such amounts and denominations, for such periods of time and at such rate of interest, not to exceed six per cent., in such manner as is provided by law for the sale of bonds by such township, for any of the purposes authorized by law for the sale of bonds by a municipal corporation for specific purposes, when not less than two of such trustees, by an affirmative vote, by resolution deem it necessary, and the provisions of law applicable to municipal corporations in the issue and sale of bonds for specific purposes, the limitations thereon, and for the submission thereof to the voters, shall extend and apply to the trustees of townships."

It will be observed that the foregoing limits the purposes for which township trustees may issue and sell bonds of the township to the specific purposes for which municipal corporations may issue and sell their bonds.

Sections 3939 and 3939-1 set forth the various purposes for which a municipal corporation may issue and sell its bonds, none of which is similar to the purpose for which the township trustees in question desire to issue and sell the bonds of the township. It is well settled that municipal corporations have only such powers as are expressly conferred upon them by statute. The right of such a corporation to issue and sell bonds, for a purpose not expressly authorized by statute, was before the circuit court in the case of Dunham vs. Opes, 3 C. C. R., 274. On page 281 of the opinion the court say:

> "As heretofore stated, it seemed to us, that in view of the legislation as it now stands, that the council of a municipal corporation cannot properly issue bonds in anticipation of the collection of tax levied, even for the current year, without a grant of such power—that as the right to do this is expressly conferred in certain cases by Sections 2685 and 2700, the maxim, that 'the express mention of one thing implies the exclusion of another' applies, and leads to the conclusion that the legislature did not intend to confer the right to anticipate the collection of any other taxes, than those expressly mentioned."

> "We think the claim cannot now be properly made as urged by counsel for the village, under the decision of the supreme court in the case of The Bank of Chillicothe vs. The City of Chillicothe, 6 Ohio, pt. 2, 31, that independent of the statutes the village has the right to issue the bonds in anticipation of any tax. That case held substantially, that when the charter contains no restriction on the power of a municipal corporation to borrow money, it may do so. Our municipal code is now the charter of all such corporations, and it is full of restrictions on the power to levy taxes and borrow money, as we have already shown. In the case of Morrill vs. The Town of Monticello (9th Weekly Law Bulletin, 113), the U. S. circuit court for the district of Indiana, Judge Gresham delivering the opinion of the court, it was held, 'that municipal corporations have no general power to issue bonds or other commercial paper. That it must be conferred by statute. And no such power having been granted by the legislature in that case, that purchasers of the bonds, notwithstanding their form, hold them as non-negotiable paper, and subject to all legal and equitable defenses in favor of the maker."

Inasmuch as township trustees cannot issue and sell bonds of the township for a purpose for which a municipal corporation may not issue and sell them, and as the latter is without authority to issue and sell its bonds to provide a fund for the purchase of road machinery, I am of the opinion that township trustees may not legally issue and sell bonds for the purchase of such machinery.

No authority having been granted to township trustees to issue and sell such bonds, I am of the opinion that a favorable vote of the electors upon a submission of the question to them would not confer such authority.

Very truly yours,

TIMOTHY S. HOGAN,
Attorney General.

CORRUPT PRACTICE ACT—CIRCUIT AND COMMON PLEAS JUDGES—STATE OFFICES—$2,500.00 LIMITATION—MAY MAKE CONTRIBUTION TO POLITICAL COMMITTEES.

The office of circuit or common pleas judge is a state office and the sum of $2,500.00, provided by Section 5175-29, General Code, fixing the limitation of expenditures for state offices, determines the amount which may be expended by a candidate for common pleas or circuit court judge.

There is no prohibition in the corrupt practice act that would inhibit a candidate for common pleas or circuit judge in making a contribution to a political committee, so long as such contribution added to his other expenses in connection with his nomination and election, did not exceed the amount fixed by law to wit, $2,500.00.

COLUMBUS, OHIO, October 7, 1912.

HON. W. H. SMITH, Prosecuting Attorney, Caldwell, Ohio.

DEAR SIR:—I beg to acknowledge receipt of your letter of September 16th, wherein you submit the following questions for my consideration:

> "1. Does Section 29, of the act to prevent corrupt practices at elections make any provision for the amount of expenditures that may be made by candidates for common pleas or circuit judges?
> "2. Can the candidates named in query first lawfully make contribution to political committees?"

Answering your first question, I beg leave to inform you that in an opinion to Hon Charles Krichbaum, prosecuting attorney, Canton, Ohio, under date of February 8, 1912, I held that the office of circuit or common pleas judge is a state office. (See Section 1, Article XVII, Dillon Municipal Corporations, fourth edition; Section 58, People vs. Curley, 5 Colorado 419); and that the sum of twenty-five hundred dollars, provided for in Section 29 of the corrupt practices act, fixes the limitation of the amount of money a candidate for judge of the common pleas or circuit court is entitled to expend for his nomination and election.

Answering your second question, Section 5175-2, of the General Code (Section 2 of the corrupt practices act), provides for the filing of a statement of expenditures by candidates, and contains the following exception:

> "but individuals other than candidates making only contributions, the receipts of which must be accounted for by others, need not file such statement under this section."

Section 5175-26, of the General Code, provides that:

> "Any person is guilty of a corrupt practice if he, directly or indirectly, by himself or through any other person, in connection with, or in respect of any election, pays, lends or contributes * * * any money or other valuable consideration, for any other purpose than the following matters and services * * *"

There is no provision in this section for a contribution. It details the matters and things for which money or other valuable consideration may be paid, loaned or contributed.

Section 5175-29 provides that:

> "The total amount expended by a candidate for a public office, voted for at an election, by the qualified electors of the state, or any political sub-division thereof, for any of the purposes specified in Section 26 of this act, for contributions to political committees, as that term is defined in Section 1 of this act, or for any purpose tending in any way, directly indirectly, to promote or aid in securing his nomination or election, shall not exceed the amount specified herein * * *"

The corrupt practices act must be read as a whole. Certain expenditures are looked upon and regarded as legitimate; and it is conceded that, in the conduct of a campaign, either by a candidate or a committee, there are many necessary expenses that must be incurred and met. The law recognizes, as shown by reference to Section 2 of the act, supra, that individuals may make contributions as counter-distinguished from expenditures. Section 29 of the act likewise specifically mentions "contributions to political committees" as one of the component parts of the total expenditure of a candidate, which is limited by this section. The candidate making the contribution to the committee contemplates that they will expend the same for the legitimate and permitted things pertaining to the election, as provided by Section 26 of the act.

It is my opinion, therefore, that there is no prohibition in the corrupt practices act that would inhibit a candidate for common pleas or circuit judge in making a contribution to a political committee, so long as such contribution, added to his other expenses, in connection with his nomination and election, did not exceed the amount fixed by law, to wit: Twenty-five hundred dollars.

Very truly yours,

TIMOTHY S. HOGAN,
Attorney General.

HOLIDAYS—ACTS ILLEGAL ARE ONLY THOSE EXPRESSLY PROHIBITED—MORTGAGE MAY BE FILED ON SATURDAY AFTERNOON.

Statutes prescribing holidays are construed to make illegal only such acts performed therein as are expressly prohibited in terms.

A county recorder's office may, therefore, be kept open Saturday afternoons and mortgages filed at that time, take precedence over a chattel mortgage filed at any time the following Monday.

COLUMBUS, OHIO, October 2, 1912.

HON. CHAS. A. BLACKFORD, Prosecuting Attorney, Findlay, Ohio.

DEAR SIR:—Under date of August 19th you wrote me, in part, as follows:

> "This county has pursued the plan of closing the county offices at three o'clock p. m. each Saturday. The statute reads that 'Every Saturday of each year shall be a one-half legal holiday for all purposes, beginning at twelve o'clock noon and ending at twelve midnight.' As a compromise between the parties contending for and against a half holiday, the officials of this county have authorized the officers to close the offices at three o'clock p. m. and the question arises:

"1. As to whether or not this half legal holiday is compulsory.

"2. If a chattel mortgage should be filed between twelve o'clock and three o'clock p. m., the time of closing the recorder's office, whether such filing would take precedence over a chattel mortgage filed the first minute after opening the recorder's office on the following Monday?"

The rule on this subject is stated in Cyc., volume 21, page 445, as follows:

"As in the case of other transactions the validity vol non of official acts performed on a legal holiday depends on the terms of the statute. The mere designation of a day as a holiday does not invalidate a sheriff's sale, or an order adjourning the sale made on such day. Indeed statutes having for their object the suspension of official transactions on holidays will be construed as prohibiting only such acts as are in express terms or by clear implication described. Thus, a prohibition against the transaction of public business in the public offices of the state or the counties of the state on a legal holiday has been held not to apply to municipal legislation, or to the making of a return by surveyors of a public road."

The principle announced in the text is amply supported by authorities therein cited. Our supreme court, in the case of State of Ohio vs. Thomas, 61 O. S., 444, in the opinion, on page 466, say:

"Where the transaction of judicial business on Sunday or holidays is expressly forbidden by statute, acts of a ministerial character on those days are held unlawful; such as the issue of a warrant for the apprehension of a criminal and his admission to bail, the receiving of a verdict and committing the defendant for sentence, the issue and service of civil process, and many other acts of a similar nature. All of which is a recognition of the rule already stated, that whatever acts may be lawfully done on other days are also lawful when performed on Sunday or a holiday, except when, and in so far as their performance on those days is prohibited by statute."

And in the case of Glenn vs. Eddy, 22 Vroom, 255, Justice Magie, in rendering the opinion of the court, says:

"When the statute declares them to be legal holidays, it does not permit a reference to the legal status of Sunday to discover its meaning, for it proceeds to interpret the phrase, so far as it is prohibitory, by an express enactment, what shall not be done thereon. What it thus expresses is prohibited; what it fails to prohibit remains lawful to be done."

To the same effect are judicial decisions in other jurisdictions. So that it may be said to be the weight of authority that any act may be performed on a holiday which is not expressly prohibited by statute.

In view of the foregoing, I am of the opinion that county officers may legally keep their offices open for the transaction of business on Saturday afternoons, inasmuch as the same is not expressly prohibited by the statute which you have quoted above.

It follows from the answer to your first question that a chattel mortgage, filed at any time on Saturday afternoon, would take precedence over a chattel mortgage filed the first minute after opening the recorder's office on the following Monday.

Very truly yours,
TIMOTHY S. HOGAN,
Attorney General.

ROADS AND HIGHWAYS — TOWNSHIP ROAD DISTRICTS — COUNTY COMMISSIONERS MAY NOT AID CONSTRUCTION BUT MUST MAINTAIN AND KEEP IN REPAIR.

The county commissioners are required by Section 7050, General Code, to maintain and keep in repair roads constructed by the township trustees under Sections 7033 to 7052, General Code, providing for road districts.

The commissioners are not authorized, however, to take any part in the construction of such road and may not render assistance when the trustees are short of funds.

COLUMBUS, OHIO, September 25, 1912.

HON. F. M. STEVENS, Prosecuting Attorney, Elyria, Ohio.

DEAR SIR:—Under date of September 6th, you inquired of me as follows:

> "Brighton township, this county, within about a year under Sections 7033-7052, inclusive, General Code, organized itself into a road district. It has now under process of construction a road, but will only have funds sufficient to complete part of the work, i. e., to do the excavating, grading and ditching, and the trustees have applied to the county commissioners for enough funds to finish this road, i. e., put on the stone, properly roll it and apply the top dressing, for which it is estimated about $700.00 will be required, and I am unable to find any authority for such practice.
> "At their request, however, I am submitting for your determination the question above involved."

Sections 7033-7052, inclusive, of the General Code, constitute a subdivision of the township road laws entitled "Township or Precinct, a Road District." Under said subdivision the township trustees may organize a part or all of a township into a road district. When this is accomplished, the trustees are empowered to borrow money, issue bonds and levy taxes upon the taxable property of the road district, to pay the costs and expenses of improving public ways therein.

County commissioners are required, by Section 7050, General Code, to maintain and keep in repair, such roads, after they are improved, but there does not seem to be any authority permitting them to assist in the construction of such roads.

It is, therefore, my opinion that the commissioners of Lorain county may not legally expend county funds in assisting the township trustees to construct the road in question.

Very truly yours,
TIMOTHY S. HOGAN,
Attorney General.

COUNTY BRIDGES AND APPROACHES TO SAME—POWERS OF COUNTY COMMISSIONERS AND TOWNSHIP TRUSTEES TO CONTRACT FOR CONSTRUCTION AND REPAIR—POWER OF COUNTY COMMISSIONERS AND INFIRMARY DIRECTORS TO EMPLOY PHYSICIAN FOR CHILDREN'S HOME.

By virtue of Section 2422, General Code, the county commissioners are required to pay the entire cost of construction and repairs to the approaches and ways to all bridges, over streams and public canals on state and county roads, free turnpikes and plank roads, in common public use, except where such bridges are wholly in cities and villages which have received the part of the bridge fund which they are entitled to demand, and except also where the cost of such construction and repair does not exceed fifty dollars, in which case said construction and repair must be accomplished by the township trustees.

Under 7562, General Code, the township trustees are required to pay the entire cost of construction and repair of all bridges and culverts except upon improved and free turnpike roads when the cost of such construction does not exceed fifty dollars. Such bridges are taken entirely from the jurisdiction of the county commissioners.

Also by Section 7562, General Code, the township trustees are required to keep in repair all bridges constructed by the county commissioners, but only to the extent of ten dollars per year upon any one bridge. When, therefore, the cost of any one repair will bring the total amount expended for such bridge, to an excess over ten dollars for a given year, the entire cost of such repair must be borne by the county commissioners.

What shall constitute a reconstruction and what a repair of a bridge depends upon the facts in each particular case.

The work done under the supervision of the county commissioners should be contracted for by them, and the work to be done by the township trustees should be constructed for by the township trustees, but this rule may have exceptions when applied to particular facts.

Under Section 2546, General Code, the infirmary directors are given power to contract for physicians for the relief of county poor, and by virtue of this section they may contract for a physician for the county children's home. After January 1, 1913, however, this power will be vested in the county commissioners.

COLUMBUS, OHIO, October 5, 1912.

HON. JOSEPH C. RILEY, Prosecuting Attorney, Ironton, Ohio.

DEAR SIR:—Your favor of September 6, 1912, is received, in which you inquire:

> "Sections 2422 and 7562 provide for the construction and repair of bridges and approaches by township trustees.
> "First. When the cost of construction of bridges exceeds fifty dollars, should the township trustees pay on such construction the sum of fifty dollars, or should the county commissioners pay the whole amount, when the cost of construction exceeds fifty dollars?
> "Second. When the repair of such bridges in any one year exceeds ten dollars, should the total amount of the repair be paid by the county commissioners, or should the excess of the amount of ten dollars be paid by the county commissioners and the amount of ten dollars be paid by the township trustees?

"Third. When such bridges are washed off of foundations and one, or part of the abutments are destroyed by floods, should replacing and rebuilding such abutments and bridges be considered construction or repair?

"Fourth. Should such construction and repair be contracted by county commissioners or township trustees, or both?

"Sections 3070-3108, of the General Code, provide for the organization of children's homes but make no specific provision for employment of physician, unless the by-laws or regulations provide for the same as authorized in Section 3085, of the General Code.

"Trustees of the children's home of Lawrence county have made no regulations relative to employment of a physician.

"Fifth. Who has the authority to employ a physician in the children's home, trustees, county commissioners or matron?"

Section 2422, General Code, provides:

"Except as therein provided, the commissioners shall construct and keep in repair, approaches or ways to all bridges named in the preceding section. But when the cost of the construction or repair of the approaches or ways to any such bridge does not exceed fifty dollars, such construction or repair shall be performed by the township trustees."

Section 2421, General Code, provides:

"The commissioners shall construct and keep in repair necessary bridges over streams and public canals on state and county roads, free turnpikes, improved roads, abandoned turnpikes and plank roads in common public use, except only such bridges as are wholly in cities and villages having by law the right to demand, and do demand and receive part of the bridge fund levied upon property therein. If they do not demand and receive a portion of the bridge tax, the commissioners shall construct and keep in repair all bridges in such cities and villages. The granting of the demand, made by any city or village for its portion of the bridge tax, shall be optional with the board of commissioners."

Section 7562, General Code, provides:

"The township trustees shall cause to be built and kept in repair all bridges and culverts, except upon improved and free turnpike roads, when the cost of construction does not exceed fifty dollars, and shall keep in repair all bridges constructed by the commissioners. Such repair by said trustees of a bridge in any year shall not exceed ten dollars and they may levy a tax for the payment thereof."

By virtue of Section 2422, General Code, the county commissioners are required to construct and keep in repair the approaches and ways to all bridges named in Section 2421, General Code, unless the cost of such construction or repair does not exceed fifty dollars. If the cost does not exceed fifty dollars such repair or construction of such approaches or ways is to be performed by the township trustees. This does not apply to the repair of the bridge itself. Section 2421,

General Code, directs the commissioners to keep the bridges in repair, but does not limit the amount to be expended for such repairs.

By virtue of Section 7562, General Code, the township trustees are required to build and keep in repair certain bridges and culverts, when the cost of construction does not exceed fifty dollars.

Sections 2422 and 7562, General Code, do not provide that the county commissioners shall pay the excess above fifty dollars of the cost of construction of the bridge or of the cost of the construction or repair of the approaches. Neither do they provide for a division of the liability. They plainly provide that the county commissioners shall construct the bridges or the approaches and keep the approaches in repair, if the cost is in excess of fifty dollars, and the township trustees shall construct the bridges, or the approaches, and keep said approaches in repair, if the cost thereof does not exceed fifty dollars.

Therefore, if the cost of construction of the bridge, or of the approaches thereto, or the cost of the repair of the approaches exceeds fifty dollars the county commissioners should pay the entire amount thereof. If the cost of construction of the bridge or approaches, or the cost of the repair of the approaches, does not exceed fifty dollars, then the township trustees shall pay the same.

Your second inquiry is as to the cost of the repair of the bridges. It is not in reference to the repair of the approaches to the bridge.

By virtue of Section 7562, General Code, the township trustees are to keep in repair bridges the construction of which did not exceed fifty dollars. They are also required to keep in repair all bridges constructed by the county commissioners. Then follows a provision which limits the amount the township trustees can expend upon a bridge within any year. It must be first determined whether this limit applies to all bridges or only to those constructed by the county commissioners.

In the present section the limitation is in a separate sentence. In the original section, as shown in Bates Rev. Stat. of 1908, Section 4940, the limitation is a part of the sentence which requires the township trustees to make the repairs.

This part of Section 4940, Rev. Stat. reads:

> "but the trustees of the several townships shall cause to be built and kept in repair all bridges and culverts, except upon improved and free turnpike roads, when the cost of construction does not exceed fifty dollars, and shall keep in repair all bridges constructed by the commissioners; provided, however, such repair by said trustees of any such bridge in any year shall not exceed ten dollars and they are authorized to levy a tax for the payment of the same."

The use of the word "such" before "repair" and "bridge" in the above section shows that it was intended that the limitation of ten dollars was to apply to the bridges constructed by the county commissioners and not to the bridges consructed by the township trustees. There would be no reason why the county commissioners should pay any part of the repair of bridges which the township trustees are required to construct. The needed repairs of a bridge constructed by the township trustees may exceed ten dollars in a year. Such a bridge is under the control of the trustees. They are required to construct the same and they are required to keep the same in repair. That bridge is taken from the jurisdiction of the county commissioners.

The language used in the statutes governing the repair of the bridges constructed by the county commissioners and the payment of the cost thereof is different from that used in reference to the cost of construction.

If the township trustees expend in a certain year ten dollars for the repair of a bridge, and said amount is not sufficient to keep said bridge in repair, it then becomes the duty of the county commissioners to make the additional repairs, as authorized by Section 2421, General Code. The statute does not, specifically authorize a division of the expenses of the repairs, if the same amount to more than ten dollars in a year.

It may occur that the township trustees would expend, in the early part of the year, ten dollars for certain repairs, and that later other repairs were needed, which of necessity would have to be made by the county commissioners. In such case the county would not be required to refund to the township the ten dollars already expended by it nor would the township be authorized to make any further repairs.

It may occur that the amount of repairs needed at a given time would require an expenditure in excess of ten dollars. The statute, in my opinion, does not contemplate in such case that the township trustees shall contract for repairs in the sum of ten dollars, and that then the county commissioners should make the additional repairs. This would mean a division of responsibility and would likely lead to extravagance, rather than to economy or efficiency. The evident purpose of the statute is that the trustees shall make all small repairs, while the county commissioners shall make the larger repairs to a bridge.

Therefore, I am of opinion, that if the repairs to be made upon a bridge constructed by the county commissioners at a given time, will require an expenditure in excess of ten dollars, such repairs shall be made by the county commissioners at the expense of the county. If the cost does not exceed ten dollars, such repairs should be made by the township trustees, provided, however, they have not made repairs on such bridge to the amount of ten dollars in that year. If they have made repairs in an amount less than ten dollars, then they can only make such repairs as will not cause an expenditure by them for the year in excess of ten dollars. This rule applies only to the bridges constructed by the county commissioners and which the township trustees are required to keep in repair by virtue of Section 7562, General Code.

Your third inquiry is an abstract proposition, which will depend for answer upon the particular facts of each case, and which may also be controlled by the provisions of the statute to be applied or construed.

There is no definite rule of law by which it may be determined in all cases as to what shall constitute a reconstruction of a bridge and what shall constitute a repair of a bridge. This will depend upon the facts of each particular case. If your inquiry in reference to the statutes above construed, I cannot now see that it is of importance in view of the construction that has been placed upon said sections in answer to your first and second questions.

However, if this does not answer your purpose, this department will give the matter further consideration upon the statement of further facts.

In answer to your fourth inquiry, I am of opinion that the work to be done under the supervision of the county commissioners should be contracted for by them, and that the work to be done by the trustees should be contracted for by the township trustees.

Section 2344, General Code, provides:

> "When it becomes necessary to erect a bridge, the county commissioners shall determine the length and width of the superstructure, whether it shall be single or double track, and advertise for proposals for performing the labor and furnishing the materials necessary to the erection thereof. In their discretion, the commissioners may cause to be prepared plans, descriptions and specifications for such superstructure, which shall be kept on file in the auditor's office for inspection by bidders and persons interested, and invite bids or proposals in accordance therewith.

Section 3274, General Code, provides:

"When money is received into the township treasury from the county treasury for road purposes, the trustees shall cause such money to be appropriated to building bridges or repairing public roads within the township. After public notice, they shall let by contract to the lowest bidder, such part or parts of any road as they deem expedient, equal to the amount of money to be appropriated, if in their opinion such bidder is competent to perform the work. When such labor is performed in accordance with the contract or conditions of the letting, the trustees shall draw an order in favor of the person who has performed such labor for the amount due therefor."

The rule stated above is a general rule which may have exceptions when applied to particular facts.

Your next inquiry is in reference to the employment of a physician for a county children's home.

The county children's home is under the management of a board of trustees, appointed by the county commissioners.

Section 3081, General Code, provides:

"When the necessary site and buildings are provided by the county, the commissioners shall appoint a board of four trustees, as follows: One for one year, one for two years, one for three years, and one for four years, from the first Monday of March thereafter. Not more than two of such trustees shall be of the same political party. Annually thereafter on the first Monday of March, the county commissioners shall appoint one such trustee, who shall hold his office for the term of four years and until his successor is appointed and qualified."

Section 3084, General Code, provides:

"The board of trustees shall designate a suitable person to act as superintendent of the home, who shall also be clerk of such board, and who shall receive for his services such compensation as the board of trustees designates at the time of his appointment. He shall perform such duties, and give security for their faithful performance, as the trustees require.

Section 3085, General Code, provides:

"Subject to such rules and regulations as the trustees prescribe, the superintendent shall have entire charge and control of such home and the inmates therein. Upon the recommendation of the superintendent, the trustees may appoint a matron, assistant matron, and teacher, whose duties shall be the care of the inmates of the home and to direct their employment, giving suitable physical, mental and moral training to them. Under the direction of the superintendent, the matron shall have the control, general management and supervision of the household duties of the home, and the matron, assistant matron and teacher shall perform such other duties, and receive for their services such compensation as the trustees may by by-laws from time to time direct. They may be removed at the pleasure of the trustees or a majority of them."

Section 3086, General Code, provides:

"The superintendent may suspend temporarily a matron, assistant matron, or teacher, notice of which must be immediately given to the board of trustees for their approval or disapproval, but, if in their judgment it is for the best interest of the home and of the county, the trustees may dispense with a superintendent and authorize the matron to assume entire charge of the home and its management."

It appears from your letter that by virtue of the foregoing section the board of trustees has dispensed with a superintendent and placed the home in charge of the matron.

The matron has charge and control of the children's home and of the inmates, under the rules and regulations prescribed by the board of trustees.

The statutes do not specifically authorize the board of trustees of the home, or the matron, to employ a physician for the home or to furnish medical relief to the inmates.

The trustees are required to report to the county commissioners, and the commissioners are required to make appropriations for the expenses of the home.

Section 3105, General Code, provides:

"At their regular quarterly meeting at which such estimate is presented to them, the commissioners shall carefully examine the estimate, and if, in their judgment, it is reasonable and ratably within the assessment for the support of the home for the current year, or so much thereof as they deem reasonable and within such assessment, the board of commissioners shall allow and approve, and shall appropriate and set apart such amount for the use of the home. Upon the order of the trustees of the home, the county auditor shall draw his warrant upon the county treasurer, who shall pay such warrant from the fund so appropriated and set apart.

Section 3104, General Code, provides:

"The board of trustees shall report quarterly to the commissioners of the county the condition of the home, and make out and deliver to the commissioners a carefully prepared estimate, in writing, of the wants of the home for the succeeding quarter. Such estimate shall specify separately the amounts required for each of the following purposes, to wit: First, food, fuel and forage; second, clothing; third, pay of officers and employes; fourth, repairs; fifth, improvement of buildings and grounds; sixth, books and stationery; seventh, furniture; eighth, transportation of inmates; ninth, live stock; tenth, other expenses."

It is apparent that the children's home is a county institution in which the poor and dependent children of the county are cared for. The inmates are wards of the county.

The only specific provision of statute authorizing the employment of a physician by the county, is found in connection with the provisions for the relief of the poor in the county infirmary.

Section 2546, General Code, provides:

> "County commissioners may contract with one or more competent physicians, to furnish medical relief and medicines necessary for the persons of their respective townships to come under their charge, but no contract shall extend beyond one year. Such contract shall be given to the lowest competent bidder, the county commissioners reserving the right to reject any or all bids. The physicians shall report quarterly to the county commissioners on blanks furnished by the commissioners, the names of all persons to whom they have furnished medical relief or medicines, the number of visits made in attending such persons, the character of the disease, and such other information as may be required by the commissioners. The commissioners may discharge any such physician for proper cause."

This statute is not limited to the relief of those who may be confined in the county infirmary. It is for the relief of "persons of their respective townships to come under their charge."

Section 2544, General Code, provides:

> "In any county having an infirmary, when the trustees of a township, after making the inquiry provided by law, are of the opinion that the person complained of is entitled to admission to the county infirmary, they shall forthwith transmit a statement of the facts to the superintendent of the infirmary, and if it appears that such person is legally settled in the township or has no legal settlement in this state, or that such settlement is unknown, and the superintendent of the infirmary is satisfied that he should become a county charge, they shall forthwith receive and provide for him in such institution, or otherwise, and thereupon the liability of the township shall cease. The superintendent of the infirmary shall not be liable for any relief furnished, or expenses incurred by the township trustees."

Section 2545, General Code, provides:

> "The superintendent of the infirmary shall report quarterly to the board of state charities, the names of all persons to whom relief has been given outside of the infirmary, whether medical or otherwise, together with their age, sex and nationality, whether married or single, and, if married, the number of persons in the family, and the ages of each; also the reasons for extending relief, the nature and amount of the relief given, and any other information prescribed by such board."

Sections 2544 and 2545, General Code, were construed in an opinion of this department given to Hon. W. V. Wright, prosecuting attorney, New Philadelphia, Ohio, under date of October 4, 1911. In that opinion it was held that the infirmary directors could grant relief to persons outside the infirmary. The right to grant relief outside the infirmary will include the right to furnish medical services and relief, as is plainly shown by Section 2545, General Code, when it provides that the superintendent shall report "the names of all persons to whom relief has been given outside of the infirmary, whether medical or otherwise."

Sections 2544, 2545 and 2546, General Code, as above quoted, are as they were amended in 102 Ohio Laws, 433. This amendatory act does not become effective until January 1, 1913. The purpose of the amendatory act is to abolish the offices of infirmary directors and transfer their duties to the county commissioners or to the superintendent of the infirmary. The commissioners cannot exercise the power granted them by Section 2546, General Code, until January 1, 1913. At the present time this power is vested in the infirmary directors. Also the duties prescribed to be performed by the superintendent of the infirmary in Sections 2544 and 2545, General Code, now devolve upon the infirmary directors and will so devolve upon them until January 1, 1913.

The authority granted to contract with one or more physicians under Section 2546, General Code, is sufficient to authorize a contract with one or more physicians for the relief of all dependent persons under the charge of the county. When a contract is entered into with a physician or physicians for the relief of the poor of the county, such contract may be made to include the furnishing of medical attention and services to the inmates of the county children's home.

I am, therefore, of the opinion that the infirmary directors are now authorized to and should provide for a physician for the medical care and attention of the inmates of the county children's home. After January 1, 1913, this power will be vested in the county commissioners.

Respectively,
TIMOTHY S. HOGAN,
Attorney General.

PUBLIC OFFICERS—INTEREST IN PUBLIC EXPENDITURES—BOARD OF TOWNSHIP TRUSTEES MAY ASSESS COMPENSATION TO MEMBER FOR GRAVEL TAKEN BY ROAD SUPERINTENDENT.

Though it is general rule of common law that a public officer may not act in a judicial or quasi judicial capacity in which he has a pecuniary interest, yet, there is an exception to this rule which prevents a failure of justice where the interest of the officer in question is small and he is the only person authorized to act.

Under Section 7138, General Code, the board of township trustees may, therefore, assess the compensation to be made to a member of the board when the road superintendent has entered upon his land under authority of Section 7138, General Code, and carried away gravel for the use of a road. The interested member should withhold his vote upon the question, however.

COLUMBUS, OHIO, September 19, 1912.

HON. F. L. JOHNSON, Prosecuting Attorney of Greene County, Xenia, Ohio.

DEAR SIR:—In your favor of September 12th you request my opinion as follows:

> "Section 7137, of the General Code, gives the road superintendent power to enter on lands and dig and carry away gravel for the use of a road, and Section 7138 provides for the land owners' compensation to be assessed by the trustees of the township.
> "In Spring Valley township of this county, the road superintendent entered upon the land of one of the trustees of the township and hauled away gravel for the improvement of the roads in that township. There was, I believe, no other gravel pit in that township.

"The question then arises, can the trustee collect from the township for the gravel so used?"

Section 12910, of the General Code, provides as follows:

"Whoever, holding an office of trust or profit by election or appointment or as agent, servant or employe of such officer or of a board of such officers, is interested in a contract for the purchase of property, supplies or fire insurance for the use of the county, township, city, village, board of education or a public institution with which he is connected, shall be imprisoned in the penitentiary not less than one year nor more than ten years."

Section 12912, of the General Code, provides:

"Whoever, being an officer of a municipal corporation or member of the council thereof or the trustees of a township, is interested in the profits of a contract job, work or services for such corporation or township, or acts as commissioner, architect, superintendent or engineer, in work undertaken or prosecuted by such corporation or township during the term for which he was elected or appointed, or for one year thereafter, or becomes the employe of the contractor of such contract, job, work or services while in office, shall be fined not less than fifty dollars nor more than one thousand dollars or imprisoned not less than thirty days nor more than six months, or both, and forfeit his office."

Section 12910 prohibits interest in a contract. And Section 12912 prohibits interest in a contract, job, work or services for the township. The proceedings in these cases are an exercise of the police power in which the individual affected has no voice whatever, and this does not in any sense partake of the nature of a contract, job, work or services for the township as is contemplated by the statute. These sections, therefore, have no application.

It is a general rule of common law based upon public policy that a public officer may not act in a judicial or quasi-judicial capacity in a preceding in which he has a pecuniary interest. (Throop on Public Officers, Sec. 607; 29 Cyc., p. 1435.)

An exception to this rule is stated in Throop on Public Officers, Sec. 609, as follows:

"Exception; His Interest Small, and He the Only Judge Authorized to Act—We must, however, notice here one exception to the common law rule, as it applies also in cases where the power to be exercised is of a quasi judicial character. It relates to the case where a judge, although interested, is the only one who can administer justice between the parties. The rulings on this subject were fully reviewed, by a distinguishd judge of the court of appeals of New York, who declared his deduction therefrom as follows: 'That where a judicial officer has not so direct an interest in the cause or matter, that the result must necessarily affect him, to his personal or pecuniary loss or gain; or where his personal or pecuniary interest is minute, and he has so exclusive jurisdiction of the cause or matter, by constitution or by statute, as that his refusal to act will prevent any proceeding in it; then he may act, so far as there may not be a failure of remedy, or, as is someimes expressed, a failure of justice.'"

In Section 617 the same author says:

> "So, it has been held, that a commissioner, appointed by a special statute to award damages for land, taken in laying out a highway, is not rendered incompetent by the fact that he owns the land which has been taken for the improvement. The court said, that the maxim that no man shall be judge in his own case, applies to judicial officers, but not to officers whose duties partake of an administrative character, and are only quasi judicial * * *. If this objection should prevail, assessors, highway commissioners, tax commissioners and many other boards of public officers, would be incompetent to act, and it would be impracticable to exercise some of the most important functions of the government."

I am of the opinion that this exception is particularly applicable to the case at hand. Where an officer, though interested, is the only one who can administer justice, he may assess his own compensation. In the present case, the board of trustees is the only tribunal which can prevent a failure of justice. The trustee personally interested, however, should withhold his vote upon the assessment of his compensation, for the gravel so taken, and the same may be fixed by the other two members of the board. When the reimbursement has been so fixed, the trustee in question may receive its amount without incurring any liability for so doing.

Very truly yours

TIMOTHY S. HOGAN,
Attorney General.

TAX MAPS—COUNTY COMMISSIONERS MUST ADVERTISE FOR BIDS IN QUADRENNIAL APPRAISEMENT YEAR FOR CONSTRUCTION OF MAPS WHEN COUNTY SURVEYOR REFUSES TO ACT.

Under Section 5551, General Code, the county commissioners are authorized to appoint the county surveyor to make correct and keep up to date a set of tax maps of the county. When the surveyor refuses to act in accordance with such appointment, the only alternative granted by the statutes is the method provided by Section 5549, General Code, for sealed proposals upon advertisement and bids, for the construction of the necessary maps during quadrennial appraisement years.

COLUMBUS, OHIO, October 3, 1912.

HONORABLE HENRY HART, Prosecuting Attorney, Sandusky, Ohio.

DEAR SIR:—I herewith desire to acknowledge receipt of your letter of August 22, 1912, wherein you inquire as follows:

> "Under the provisions of Section 5551 of the General Code authorizing the county commissioners to appoint the county surveyor to make, correct and keep up to date a complete set of tax maps of the county, on September 7, 1910, the commissioners adopted the following resolution:
> "'Upon motion made by Mr. Rieger and seconded by Mr. Oswald that the county surveyor, A. C. Schults, be and he is hereby re-appointed tax-map draughtsman for one year at a salary of $25.00 per month. Motion carried. Upon a roll call the following vote was had: Mr. Rieger, aye; Mr. Oswald, aye; Mr. Riedy, aye.'

"The surveyor kept up this work for four or five months and then refused to do any further work and failed to keep up the tax maps to date. On the 14th day of this month the county commissioners without advertising or receiving bids, employed a firm of engineers not connected with the county surveyor's office to keep up the tax maps to date at the price of $25.00 per month, the same amount as offered the county surveyor.

"The county surveyor now argues that the county commissioners have no authority under Section 5548 to 5552, both inclusive, of the General Code, to employ any body outside of the county surveyor to keep up the tax maps under the provisions of Section 5551, and that if they do employ outside parties it would be necessary to advertise under the provisions of Section 5549 of the General Code. The county surveyor claims that the action of the county commissioners is therefore illegal and has asked me for an opinion upon the matter. I shall be pleased to receive your opinion on the construction of the statutes."

In reply to your inquiry I desire to say that Section 5551 of the General Code provides as follows:

"The board of county commissioners may appoint the county surveyor, who shall employ such number of assistants as are necessary, not exceeding four, to provide for making, correcting and keeping up to date a complete set of tax maps for the county. Such maps shall show all original lots and parcels of land * *. Such maps shall be for the use of the board of equalization and the auditor, and be kept in the office of the county auditor."

Section 5549 provides as follows:

"If, in the opinion of the county commissioners, it is necessary to the proper appraisal of the real estate of such county, on or before their June session, one thousand nine hundred and thirteen, and every fourth year thereafter, they may advertise for four consecutive weeks in one or more newspapers of general circulation in the county, for sealed proposals to construct the necessary maps and plats to enable the assessors in the county, or any district thereof, to correctly re-appraise all real estate. The maps and plats shall be made under the supervision of the county auditor, and such advertisement shall particularly specify the extent and character of the work to be done. Each bid shall be accompanied by * * * bond. * * The commissioners shall open the bids on the day named in the advertisement, and, within three days thereafter, award the contract to the lowest and best bidder, if, in their opinion, it is to the interest of the county so to do, or they may reject any and all bids."

The county commissioners have only such authority as is granted by the statutes. Section 5551 of the General Code provides that the county commissioners may appoint the county surveyor for making, correcting and keeping up to date a complete set of tax maps of the county. I take it that the phraseology of said section does not mean that the county commissioners can appoint any person other than the county surveyor unless there is some statutory provision therefor which is provided for by Section 5549 of the General Code, supra, insofar as the original construction of such tax maps is concerned. The county commissioners may employ the county surveyor for such work, to wit, making, correcting and keeping up to date a complete set of tax maps of the county without requiring bids, and fix his salary at not to exceed $2,000.00 per year; or, such county commissioners, if they deem it necessary, may have such maps made by some other person than the county surveyor, by advertising for bids for the construction of such maps as provided by Section 5549, supra. Said section, however, gives the commissioners no authority to employ such person in correcting and keeping up to date such tax maps, but only goes so far as to authorize the county commissioners, when in their opinion it is necessary, to employ some party other than the county surveyor on or before their June session of 1913, and every four years thereafter to construct such tax maps as to enable the assessors of the county or any district thereof to correctly re-appraise all real estate.

Opinion—Therefore, in direct answer to your inquiry, I am of the opinion that the county commissioners have no authority to employ any person other than the county surveyor to correct and keep up the tax maps of the county, and if they see fit or deem it necessary to employ some person other than the county surveyor for making such tax maps before the time for making the quadrennial appraisement, then they must let the contract for such work by advertising for bids as provided in Section 5549 of the General Code, above quoted, which can be done at any time prior to their June session, 1913. If the surveyor refuses to keep up such maps, then the maps will have to be constructed in strict accordance with Section 5549 of the General Code.

Very respectfully,
TIMOTHY S. HOGAN,
Attorney General.

COUNTY BRIDGES—NECESSITY FOR ADVERTISING AND BIDS WHEN PURCHASE PRICE EXCEEDS $200.00.

There is no provision of the General Code which authorizes county commissioners to enter into contract for the purchase of bridges, where the purchase price will exceed $200.00, without advertising for bids.

COLUMBUS, OHIO, October 15, 1912.

HON. G. P. GILMER, Prosecuting Attorney, Warren, Ohio.

DEAR SIR:—I beg to acknowledge receipt of your letter of October 8th, wherein you state:

> "Will you kindly advise us if there is any provision of the General Code which authorizes county commissioners to enter into contract for the purchase of bridges where the purchase price will exceed $200.00 without advertising for bids. Your advice in this matter will be greatly appreciated by the county commissioners and by myself."

Section 2354 of the General Code provides that:

> "When the estimated cost of a public building, bridge or bridge substructure or of making an addition thereto or repair thereof does not exceed two hundred dollars, it may be let at private contract without publication or notice."

The foregoing is a part of the chapter of the General Code relating to building regulations. I have examined the other provisions of said chapter, as well as other statutes relating to the subject of bridges, and the powers and duties of county commissioners in reference thereto, and I have been unable to discover any provision other than that above quoted.

Very truly yours,

TIMOTHY S. HOGAN,
Attorney General.

VOTER—CITIZENSHIP—UNNATURALIZED ALIEN WHO IS AN HONORABLY DISCHARGED U. S. SOLDIER MAY NOT VOTE BUT MAY BECOME A CITIZEN UPON PETITION TO COURT.

A man who comes to the United States at the age of six years, whose parents were not naturalized prior to his maintaining his majority and who has not himself been naturalized, is not a citizen within Article V, Section 1, of the Ohio Constitution and may not be permitted to vote, notwithstanding he has been permitted to vote for many years, and is an honorably discharged soldier of the United States.

Under 2166, Revised Statutes of the United States, however, he may become a citizen upon petition to the court, without previous intention to become a citizen, by proof of one year's residence.

COLUMBUS, OHIO, October 16, 1912.

HON. CHARLES KRICHBAUM, Prosecuting Attorney, Canton, Ohio.

DEAR SIR:—I am in receipt of a communication from Hon. Charles C. Bow, probate judge of your county, asking an opinion upon the following question:

> "A boy came to this country from Germany when six years of age and afterwards enlisted in the Union army and served three years during the Civil war, after which he was honorably discharged and during all the years of his majority he has voted; his registration is now challenged upon the grounds of his failure to become naturalized. Some claim has been made that an honorably discharged soldier of the United States is entitled to the right of citizenship without naturalization papers. My question is, has this man the right to register and vote."

Article V, Section 1 of the Constitution provides who may vote in the following manner:

> "Every white male citizeen of the United States, of the age of twenty-one years, who shall have been a resident of the state one year next preceding the election and of the county, township or ward, in which he resides, such time as may be provided by law, shall have the qualifications of an elector, and be entitled to vote at all elections."

In find no provision, constitutional or statutory that an honorably discharged soldier of the United States is entitled to the rights of citizenship without naturalization papers.

Van Dyne in his "Citizenship of the United States" paragraph 39, says:

"It is erroneously supposed by some that the mere fact of service and discharge operate to naturalize the party, whereas they are only part of the evidence on which naturalization may be granted. The alien soldier, sailor or marine can only avail himself of the privileges of the above laws by personal application to one of the courts having jurisdiction of the naturalization of foreigners and upon the declaration and proof required by law."

Section 2166 U. S. Statutes provides:

"Any Alien of the age of twenty-one years and upward, who has enlisted, or may enlist, in the armies of the United States, either the regular or the volunteer forces, and has been or may be hereafter, honorably discharged, shall be admitted to become a citizen of the United States, upon his petition, without any previous declaration of his intention to become such; and he shall not be required to prove more than one year's residence within the United States previous to his application to become such citizen; and the court admitting such alien shall, in addition to such proof of residence and good moral character, as now provided by law, be satisfied by competent proof of such person's having been honorably discharged from the service of the United States."

In your inquiry you do not state whether the boy coming to this country from Germany, when six years of age, was accompanied by his parents, and if he was so accompanied, whether or not his parents were naturalized during the minority of the boy. If they were so naturalized, then, under Section 2177 Revised Statutes of the United States which provides that "the children of persons who have been duly naturalized under any law of the United States * * * being under the age of twenty-one at the time of the naturalization of their parents shall. if dwelling in the United States, be considered as citizens thereof * * *," he would become a citizen. If his parents were not naturalized and he did not become a citizen by their naturalization then it is my opinion that the mere fact that he was honorably discharged as a soldier of the Civil war, and has since voted, would not confer upon him any right to register and vote. He, of course, could avail himself of the privilege given him under Section 2166 Revised Statutes of the United States.

The supreme court of California, in the case of People ex rel. Orman vs. Reilly, 15 Cal. 48 holds "A mere residence in the country as a soldier does not make one a citizen."

So, while under the facts as stated in the question, it seems a hardship for a man who has served three years during the Civil war, was honorably discharged and during all the passing years has voted without any question now should be stopped from voting, still under the law as I find it, I can arrive at no other conclusion than that he is not entitled to register and vote.

Yours very truly,

TIMOTHY S. HOGAN,
Attorney General.

FEE FUNDS—5 PER CENT. RESERVED BY SHERIFF FOR LISTING UNCLAIMED MONEYS MUST BE PAID INTO FEE FUND.

Under Section 2977, General Code, the 5 per cent. of all unclaimed moneys which is received by the sheriff under 3045, General Code for listing the same, must be paid into the fee fund.

COLUMBUS, OHIO, October 8, 1912.

HON. R. A. BEARD, Prosecuting Attorney, Youngstown, Ohio.

DEAR SIR:—Your favor of September 27, 1912, is received. You ask my opinion on the following matter:

> "Under Section 3045 does the 5 per cent. to the sheriff for paying unclaimed money into the treasurer's office belong to him as an individual or is he supposed to pay it into the fee fund?"

Section 3045, General Code, provides as follows:

> "Each clerk, probate judge or sheriff shall keep a book, which shall be the records of his office, showing in detail all the moneys paid by him into the county treasury, with proper references showing where each item may be found on the respective cash books and dockets, giving the names of the parties to whom such money belongs, in alphabetical order. A detailed statement of each item shall be furnished the county auditor, and no clerk, probate judge or sheriff, shall receive from his succssor in office any fees earned by him, which have come into the hands of such successor, until settlements are fully made. For making the lists and payment of unclaimed moneys into the treasury, the probate judge and sheriff shall be allowed five per cent. of the amount so paid."

This section as it now stands is found in 88 O. L., page 239 and was passed April 11, 1889.

Section 2977, General Code, provides as follows:

> "All the fees, costs, percentages, penalties, allowances and other perquisites collected or received by law as compensation for services by a county auditor, county treasurer, probate judge, sheriff, clerk of courts, or recorder shall be so received and collected for the sole use of the treasury of the county in which they are elected and shall be held as public moneys belonging to such county and accounted for and paid over as such as hereinafter provided."

This section is found in 98 O. L. page 89 and was passed March 22, 1906.

Under authority of the last named section all the fees, costs, percentages, penalties, allowances and other perquisites received by law as compensation for services by a county sheriff shall be received and collected for the sole use of the treasury of the county in which he is elected and shall be held as public moneys belonging to such county and accounted for and paid over as provided by law.

I am, therefore, of the opinion that the five per cent. allowed to the sheriff for paying unclaimed money into the treasurer's office under Section 3045, General Code, shall be paid into the fee fund.

Yours very truly,
TIMOTHY S. HOGAN,
Attorney General.

CORRUPT PRACTICES ACT—CANDIDATE FOR PROBATE JUDGE MAY HIRE REPRESENTATIVE IN EACH VOTING PRECINCT, A MAN TO PREPARE LIST OF VOTERS, A MAN WITH RIG TO TRANSPORT HIM ABOUT VILLAGE, AND TO DISTRIBUTE LITERATURE.

Under Section 5175-26, General Code, a candidate for probate judge nominated at other than a party primary may hire a person to represent him in each voting precinct on election day, and if such candidate's nomination paper contains the name of the committee, such committeee should certify the names of the representatives so designated to the board of elections at least two days before the election day.

Under 5175-26, General Code, such candidate may hire and pay a man to prepare a list of voters in each precinct, but he may not hire more than one person to prepare such list.

Under the provision of the same section, permitting a candidate expenses for traveling, such candidate may hire a man with a rig, for a reasonable sum, to drive him about his district and such a man may incidentally introduce him to the voters.

Under the provision of the same section, permitting the publication and circulation of literature, such candidate may hire a man with a rig to distribute literature.

All expenditures must be kept within the limitation of 5175-29, General Code.

COLUMBUS, OHIO, October 17, 1912.

HON. ALLEN THURMAN WILLIAMSON, Prosecuting Attorney, Marietta, Ohio.

DEAR SIR:—I have your letter of October 10th, submitting for an opinion thereon the following questions; involving the construction of the corrupt practices act:

> "1. Under Section 26, can a candidate, particularly a candidate for probate judge, select a person to represent him in each voting precinct on election day and pay him not to exceed $5.00 per day for his services? If so, who shall certify the name of such person to the board of deputy state supervisors of elections?
> "2. Can a candidate for probate judge hire and pay a man to prepare him a list of voters in each precinct for the individual use of such candidate?
> "3. Can any candidate hire and pay a man to drive him around and introduce him to the people of his township provided he pays no more than reasonable compensation for the man's time and use of his rig?
> "4. Can a candidate hire a man and rig to distribute literature for him in each township?"

In answer to your first question I beg leave to say that in an opinion to Hon. F. M. Stevens, prosecuting attorney at Elyria, Ohio, under date of May 18, 1912, I held that under Section 5175-26, General Code.

> "Each candidate may designate one representative in each voting precinct upon each election day, whose name shall be certified to by the chairman and secretary of the controlling committee of a party to the board of state supervisors of elections at least two days before such election or election day, and who may be paid for their services by such committee or candidate not in excess of five dollars per day each."

So if your question refers to a candidate for probate judge nominated at a party primary the opinion to Mr. Stevens, which I herewith enclose fully answers the same.

If your candidate is a judicial candidate, nominated other than at a party primary I am still of the opinion that such candidate would have the right to designate some person as his representative in each voting precinct upon election day. If this latter candidate's nomination paper contains the names of the committee as is usually done to represent the independent party or the candidate for the office nominated, then it is my view that such committee should certify the names so designated by the candidate to the board of deputy supervisors of elections at least two days before the election day.

Answering your second question would say, a candidate for probate judge has the same right as the candidate for any other office to hire and pay a man to prepare him a list of the voters in each precinct. Section 5175-26, General Code, makes it a corrupt practice for any person directly or indirectly, by himself or through any other person, in connection with or in respect to any election, to pay, lend or contribute or offer or promise to pay, lend or contribute any money or other valuable consideration for any other purpose than for the following matters and services at their reasonable, bona fide and customary value: " * * the preparation of lists of voters and payment of necessary personal expenses by a candidate; * * *." This same section further provides that, "no party organization or candidate shall compensate or hire in any one precinct more than one person to prepare lists of voters * * *."

It is my opinion, therefore, that a candidate may hire and pay a man to prepare him a list of voters in each precinct, but he must not hire or pay more than one person to prepare such list.

3rd. Section 5175-26 provides among other things that the following is a permitted expense, to wit: "* * * payment of necessary personal expenses by a candidate; the reasonable traveling expenses of the committeemen, agents, clerks and speakers; * *."

I think that under this section there is no question but that a candidate is entitled to his expense of transportation and if he hires and pays a man to drive him through his district, paying him no more than the reasonable, bona fide and customary compensation for the man's time and the use of his rig, he does not offend against the corrupt practices act, and the mere fact that such man may introduce him to the people that they meet on their travels, since it is merely accidental, and not the purpose for which the compensation is given, would not in my opinion militate against such expense.

4th. Answering your fourth question would say that Section 5175-26 enumerating the matters and things for which expenditures are permitted amongst other things lists the following:

"* * * the preparation, printing and publication of posters, lithographs, banners, notices and literary material, * * * the pay of newspapers for advertisements, pictures, reading matter and additional circulation, the preparation and circulation of letters, pamphlets and literature bearing on the election."

In Wooster's dictionary "publication" is defined as, "the act of publishing or making known, etc." In Webster the same word is defined as "the act of publishing or making known; notice to the public at large either by words, writing or printing." In Bouvier's Law Dictionary "publication" is defined as "the act by which a thing is made public." The Century dictionary defines "publication" as "the act of publishing or printing a public notice, notification to the people at large by special writing or publication."

The Century dictionary defines "circulation" as "1, the act of circulating or moving in a circuit or circle; 2, the act or state of being diffused or distributed; the act of passing from point to point.

Now, while Section 5175-26 does not in express words permit the hiring of a man and rig to distribute literature it does provide for the "publishing" of notices and literary material, etc., and also for the "circulation" of letters, pamphlets and literature bearing on the election.

In view of the above provisions it is my opinion that whatever expense the candidate is put to in distributing literature in a given township is a proper expense so long as the cost thereof is at the reasonable, bona fide and customary value.

You will understand, of course, that all expenditures must be kept within the limitation provided for in Section 5175-29, General Code.

Yours very truly,

TIMOTHY S. HOGAN.
Attorney General.

COUNTY COMMISSIONER—POWER TO BORROW MONEY WHEN FUND EXHAUSTED, FOR SALARIES, ELECTION EXPENSES AND REPAIR OF BRIDGES—CANNOT BORROW TO REPLENISH OVERDRAWN FUNDS.

If there is no money in the general fund of a county at a given time and no surplus is available from the fee fund of the various county offices, money may be borrowed to meet the salaries as they become due, under Section 5656, General Code.

The same procedure may be employed to defray election expenses, when there is not sufficient in the election funds to meet the same.

In the case of exhaustion of the bridge fund when urgent necessity requires the repair of important bridges, bonds may be issued under authority of Sections 5643, 5644 and 2434, General Code.

There is no authority for the commissioners to issue deficiency bonds for the purpose of reimbursing overdrawn funds; existing, valid and binding indebtedness may be met, however, by borrowing under Section 5656, General Code.

COLUMBUS, OHIO, October 21, 1912.

HON. DANIEL W. MURPHY, Prosecuting Attorney, Batavia, Ohio.

DEAR SIR:—I acknowledge receipt of your letter of September 5th, submitting four questions arising out of the present financial conditions of Clermont county.

As you have had some conferences with members of this department respecting these questions, I shall state them in brief and answer them in a rather summary manner, feeling more free to do this on account of the fact that the reasoning upon which my answers are based has been set forth in other opinions of this department, copies of which you have. Your questions are as follows:

> "1. If there is no money in the general fund of the county at a given time, and no surplus is available from the fee fund of the various county offices, how can the salaries of the various county officers be paid?
> "2. In case of exhaustion of the bridge fund and in the face of a condition of urgent necessity requiring the repair of important bridges, may deficiency bonds be issued by the county commissioners for this purpose without submitting the question to a vote of the people?
> "3. Have the county commissioners authority to issue deficiency bonds for the purpose of replenishing any overdraft or exhausted fund?
> "4. There is not enough money in the election fund of the county to defray expenses of the special elections held so far during the half of the fiscal year and those required yet to be held by law; may bonds be issued to defray those expenses without a vote of the people?"

Answering your first question, I beg to state that one method at least by which the situation may be met without great inconvenience is the borrowing of money to meet the salaries of the officers as the installments thereof become due. Such money may be borrowed on the notes of the county commissionrs on which they will not be personally liable, and such notes may be funded by issuing bonds when a sufficient amount of such notes are outstanding. Bonds must be advertised and sold as provided by law, and the proceeds used for this purpose. (Section 5656, et seq., of the General Code.)

Answering your second question, I beg to call your attention to the provisions of Sections 5643 and 5644, of the General Code, particularly the latter. It is to be observed that under these provisions, the county commissioners for the purpose of repairing any important bridges in case of necessity may regardless of the cost of such repairs,

> "proceed under the authority conferred by law to borrow such amounts of money as are necessary for said purpose before mentioned, and issue bonds therefor."

The authority "conferred by law" referred to herein is to be found in Section 2434, of the General Code. Ample authority, therefore, exists for the issuance of bonds as referred to in your second question, although for the sake of accuracy such bonds should not be called "deficiency bonds."

Your third question is fully answered, I think, in the opinion rendered to Hon. Edward C. Turner, prosecuting attorney of Franklin county, a copy of which you have, I think. In that opinion I hold that there is no authority to issue deficiency bonds directly for the purpose of reimbursing overdrawn funds, but that perhaps the more cumbersome and less direct method of issuing bonds to pay valid indebtedness under Sections 5656 et seq. of the General Code must be followed in a situation like the one you describe. Stating it in another way, I am unable to find a statute authorizing the county commissioners to issue what might be properly termed "deficiency bonds" either by the vote of the people or otherwise, though the council in a municipal corporation has such power.

Answering your fourth question, I beg to state that the election expenses should be met in the same manner as the salaries must be met as pointed out in answering your first question. That is to say, the law requires that these expenses be incurred and when they constitute valid indebtedness of the county for the discharge of which money may be borrowed by the county commissioners on notes or otherwise, and such notes must be funded by the issuance of bonds.

Very truly yours,

TIMOTHY S. HOGAN,
Attorney General.

CORRUPT PRACTICE ACT—BOARD OF DEPUTY STATE SUPERVISORS OF ELECTIONS MAY NOT REFUSE TO PLACE UPON THE BALLOT THE NAME OF A PARTY NOMINATED AT PRIMARIES, WHO FAILS TO FILE ACCOUNT OF EXPENDITURES—REFUSAL OF ELECTION CERTIFICATE—CRIMINAL PENALTY.

Under Section 4985, General Code, it is made the duty of the board of elections to place upon the ballots the names of persons nominated at the primaries, and there is no authority vested in said board to withhold the name of candidates who fail to file accounts of campaign expenditures.

Under 5175-8, General Code, however, the board may refuse a certificate of election to such candidates and under Section 5175-13 and 5175-32, General Code, criminal penalties may be enforced.

COLUMBUS, OHIO, October 16, 1912.

HON. ARTHUR VAN EPP, Prosecuting Attorney, Medina, Ohio.

DEAR SIR:—I am in receipt of your communication of the 7th, in which you state:

> "As you well know, the law requires that all persons who were candidates for nomination at the May primaries are required to file a statement of expenditures, and what I desire your opinion on is, whether or not the board of deputy state supervisors of elections of a county would have a right to place the name of such persons who were nominated at that primary, and who failed to file an affidavit as to expenditures, on the ballot, to be voted for at the coming election, and especially so if objection was raised with such board to the placing of a name of any such candidate on the ballot, for the reason that such candidate had not filed the affidavit of expenditures as provided by law, or in other words, is it a discretionary matter with the board, or is the disqualification such that the board must refuse to place the name on the ballot, especially if objection is made."

A reference to the statutes will disclose that Section 4985, General Code, is applicable to the question you submit. Said section is as follows:

> "When the primary has been held to make nominations of candidates to be voted for at the ensuing November election, the board of deputy state supervisors shall place the names of the persons so nominated upon the official ballot as the candidates of the respective political parties nominating them."

In the absence of any further provision it is apparent that when a candidate has been nominated at the primaries and his nomination has been determined by the canvass of the board of elections it is the duty of the said board to place said candidate's name upon the official ballot.

Section 5175-8, General Code, provides:

> "No board, office or officer authorized by law to issue commissions or certificates of election shall issue a commission or certificate of election to any person required by this act to file a statement or statements until such statement or statements have been so made, verified and filed by such persons as provided by this act. No person required by this act to file a statement or statements shall enter upon the duties of any office to which he may be elected until he has filed all statements provided by this act, nor shall he receive any salary or emolument prior to the filing of the same."

This is the section that probably raised the question in your mind as to the right of the board to place the name of a person nominated at the primary, but who had failed to file an affidavit as to his expenditures, upon the official ballot.

You will see that the only inhibition in this section is the issuance by such board or officer of a commission or certificate of election to any person, who under the corrupt practices act was bound to file a statement of his expenditures. The said section further prohibits any person entering upon the duties of his office and provides that he shall not receive any salary or emolument incident to his office until he shall have first filed the statement of expenditures provided for by law. But the section by no manner or means authorizes the election board to refuse to place on the official ballot the name of a candidate who has omitted to file the required statement.

The corrupt practices act further provides (Sec. 5175-13, General Code) that > "Any person who shall violate any of the provisions of the act shall be held to be guilty of a corrupt practice," and Section 5175-32 prescribes the penalty when one has been convicted of a corrupt practice, to wit, a fine or imprisonment or both and forfeiture of any office to which he shall have been elected These are the only provisions punishing a failure to file a statement of expenses. The legislature did not see fit to further provide that a candidate, by failing to file his statement of expenditures should be prohibited from having his name placed upon the official ballot, and in such absence it is my opinion that the deputy state supervisors of elections are not authorized to refuse to place the name of the candidate who has been duly nominated at the primary upon the official ballot merely because he has failed, neglected or refused to file the statement of expenses required by the corrupt practices act.

The question of penalizing him for such failure is taken care of in the act, but nowhere do we find authority for the board refusing to place his name on the ballot.

In my opinion, therefore, it is not a discretionary matter with the board, nor is the failure to file the expense account such a disqualification that would authorize the board to refuse to place his name on the ballot whether objection thereto is raised or not. It is their duty, if he has been duly nominated to place his name upon the official ballot as provided in Section 4985, supra.

Yours very truly,

TIMOTHY S. HOGAN,
Attorney General.

CORPORATIONS — ARTICLES OF GAS CORPORATIONS WHICH FURNISH GAS BY PIPE LINE FROM PLANT IN ONE COUNTY TO CONSUMERS IN ANOTHER COUNTY MUST SET OUT ROUTE AND TERMINI OF PIPE LINE.

Although gas companies did not exist at the time of the passage of 8625, General Code, yet the language employed in Section 5 of that statute, requiring the articles of a corporation formed for the purpose which includes the construction of an improvement not to be located at a single place to set forth the kind of improvement intended to be constructed and its termini and the counties in or through which it or its branches will pass, is applicable to gas companies which furnish gas by means of a pipe line from its plant in one county to consumers in another county, as well as in its own county. The practice of the secretary of state in requiring such companies to comply with Section 5625 is, therefore, correct.

COLUMBUS, OHIO, November 7, 1912.

HON. THOMAS MULCAHY, Prosecuting Attorney, Napoleon, Ohio.

DEAR SIR:—I beg to acknowledge receipt of your letter of October 15th, submitting for my opinion the following question:

> "If a gas company is located at a village or city in one county, and is furnishing gas by means of a pipe line from its plant in said county to a village or city and the inhabitants thereof in another county, as well as to the village or city and the inhabitants thereof, where its plant is located, must the articles of incorporation set forth the names of the counties in which said villages or cities are located, in order to comply with the provisions of Section 8625, of the General Code, or are the provisions of the fifth clause of said Section 8625 not applicable to gas companies?"

Said Section 8625, of the General Code, provides in part as follows:

> "5. But, if the corporation is for a purpose which includes the construction of an improvement not to be located at a single place, the articles of incorporation must also set forth
> "a. The kind of improvement intended to be constructed.
> "b. Its termini, and the counties in or through which it or its branches will pass."

This language is prima facie applicable to gas companies as well as to any other kind of corporation, the purpose of which contemplates the construction of an improvement. Undoubtedly, this part of the statute, when originally enacted, was intended to apply only or primarily to railroad, turnpike, canal, pipe line and other transportation companies. However, the legislature designedly used language which is not limited to such companies, and I am of the opinion, upon authorities which I need not cite, that even though the business of manufacturing artificial gas or producing natural gas may have come into existence since the statute was enacted, yet, if such corporations, organized for the purpose of transacting either of these businesses, require an improvement not to be located in any one place, they are within the genus of things in the legislative mind, as evidenced by the language used, and the section must be held to apply to them.

The question impressed me as being such a one as to make of some weight the contemporaneous administrative construction thereof by the secretary of state; that is to say, I was disposed to follow whatever ruling might have been adopted in that department upon the question, and I, therefore, caused inquiry to be made at that office and ascertained that it has been the practice there to require gas companies contemplating the construction of an improvement, not to be located at any one place, to set forth the route and termini of the improvement, as required by the statute.

For all of these reasons I am of the opinion that a gas company, such as that described by you, should, in order to comply with Section 8625, General Code, set forth in its articles of incorporation the kind of improvement intended to be constructed, its termini, and the counties in or through which its branches will pass.

Very truly yours,

TIMOTHY S. HOGAN,
Attorney General.

ROADS AND HIGHWAYS—GARRETT LAW—NOT NECESSARY TO COUNT LAND OWNERS WITHIN MUNICIPALITY—NON-SIGNERS MUST BE COUNTED AGAINST, IF SIGNERS ARE COUNTED FOR THE IMPROVEMENT.

In a proceeding to construct a public road, under the so-called Garrett law, the object of the provision of Section 6929, General Code, prescribing that "it shall not be necessary in determining such majority petitioners to count land owners residing within a municipality," is to permit a majority of resident land owners residing outside of a municipality to petition for the improvement of the road.

Under this provision, if it is desired to count any of the land owners residing in a municipality, all such land owners should be counted.

When, therefore, a majority of the land owners residing outside of a municipality, did not sign, and also a majority of those residing within the municipality did not sign, and when the total of all signers did not constitute a majority of the resident land owners, the statute has not been complied with.

In brief, if the signers within a municipality are counted for the improvement, those not signing must be counted against in the determination of the majority.

COLUMBUS, OHIO, October 19, 1912.

HON. HOLLAND C. WEBSTER, Prosecuting Attorney, Toledo, Ohio.

DEAR SIR:—Your favor of September 20, 1912, through your assistant, Hon. Lewis E. Mallow, is received, in which you state as follows:

> "On April 22, 1909, the board of county commissioners of Lucas county, acting under the provisions of the Garrett law, so-called, Sections 6926-6950, of the General Code, found for and ordered constructed the improvement of a public road known as the Brown road, in Jerusalem and Oregon townships of said county as petitioned for. Such proceedings were thereafter had by and before said board that bonds of the county in approximately the sum of $65,000 were issued and sold for the purpose of constructing said improvement, and said improvement was thereafter constructed as planned. Upon completion of the improvement, the cost and expense thereof was assessed as provided in said sections of the General Code, and the assessment resolution passed by said board, one-third upon the real estate lying and being within one mile of said improvement, and the balance thereof upon the townships at large through which said improvement extends, in proportion to the length of said improvement in each of said townships.

"An injunction suit has been filed on behalf of a number of land owners whose property has been assessed on account of the one-third cost and expense of said improvement, one of the grounds of said suit, among others, being that the petition for said improvement was not signed by a majority of the resident owners of real estate situated within one mile of said road, as provided by law.

"We call you attention particularly to the last clause of Section 6929, of the General Code, which provides that 'it shall not be necessary, in determining such majority petitioners, to count land owners residing within a municipality.'

"After careful investigation made, it appears that twenty-four owners of land situated within a mile of said improvement, who live in a a municipality, to wit, the city of Toledo, signed the petition for the improvement of the Brown road, but that twenty-seven other owners of land situated within a mile of said improvement, living in a municipality, to wit, the city of Toledo, did not sign said petition. By counting the twenty-four signers referred to, for the petition, and not counting against it or considering the twenty-seven land owners referred to, who did not sign, it would appear that there is a slight margin of two or three over and above a majority of resident owners in favor of the improvement.

"The question presented, and upon which we desire your opinion is: In determining whether or not a majority of such resident owners are in favor of the improvement, may owners of land residing within a municipality and who have signed the petition be counted for the improvement, without, at the same time, counting as against the improvement owners of land residing within a municipality and who have not signed the petition?"

You further state that the object of securing an opinion of this department is to aid you in securing a compromise of the litigation and is not to be used in the trial of the action.

Section 6929, General Code, to which you specially refer, provides:

"Said order shall also state the lands which shall be subject to be assessed for the cost and expense of the improvement, and whether the estimated assessment therefor shall be made before the improvement is commenced, or after it is completed. It shall not be necessary in determining such majority petitioners to count land owner's residing within a municipality."

Section 6926, General Code, provides:

"When a majority of the resident owners of real estate situated within one mile of a public road, present a petition to the board of county commissioners asking for the grading and improving of such road, the county commissioners shall go upon the line of the road described in such petition. If, in their opinion, the public utility requires such road to be graded and improved, they shall determine whether the improvement shall be partly or wholly constructed of stone, gravel or brick, any or all, and what part or parts of such road improvement shall be of stone, gravel or brick, and enter their decision on their journal."

The provisions of these two sections and also the provisions of Sections 6927 and 6928, General Code, were contained in the first section of the original act as said first section was amended in 99 Ohio Laws 489. This amendatory act was approved by the governor on May 9, 1908, and action of the county commissioners was had on April 22, 1909. The amendatory act will therefore apply to your situation, as the action of the commissioners was taken prior to the adoption of the General Code.

Section 1 of the original act, passed April 4, 1900, 94 Ohio Laws 96, was amended in 99 Ohio Laws 489, by adding the following proviso:

"Provided that it shall not be necessary in determining such majority petitioners to count any such resident land owners residing within any municipality.''

It is this provision of the statute which is now up for construction.

In the case of Darke County vs. Baker, 74 Ohio St., 258, to which you refer, the syllabi read:

"The words 'resident owners' as used in Section 1 of the act of the general assembly passed April 4, 1900 (94 O. L. 96), entitled 'An act to provide for the improvement of public roads,' mean, and were intended to designate and include, all owners of real estate who are residents of the county and own lands lying within one mile of the road to be improved, and all must be considered and counted in determining whether a majority of the resident owners of real estate have signed the petition asking for the improvement.

"A petition presented to the county commissioners under favor of this section, asking for the improvement of a public road, which is not signed by a majority of such resident land owners, does not confer upon the commissioners jurisdiction; and where said commissioners assume to act on such petition and are threatening to proceed with and make said improvement, they may be restrained therefrom by injunction."

In the foregoing case the resident owners of land residing in a village were taken into consideration in ascertaining the number for a majority.

The above proviso was inserted after the rendition of the above decision and was inserted, no doubt, for the purpose of changing the rule of ascertaining the majority which was applied by the court in the foregoing case.

The proviso makes it unnecessary to count the resident land owners residing within a municipality in determining the majority of the petitioners. The statute does not specifically provide that they shall not be counted. The purpose of the provision is evidently to permit the majority of the resident land owners residing outside of a municipality to petition for the improvement of the road.

In your case, a part of the resident land owners residing in a municipality and owning real estate within one mile of the proposed improvement, petitioned for said improvement, and other such resident land owners did not so petition. In determining the majority those residing in the municipality and who signed the petition were counted for the improvement, while those who resided in the municipality and who did not sign the petition, were not counted against the petition, and were not taken into consideration in determining the total number of resident land owners. That is, a part of a certain class were considered for the improvement, while the remaining part of said class were eliminated from consideration entirely.

It is apparent that the majority of the resident land owners coming within the terms of the statute, and residing outside of the municipality did not sign the petition. It is also shown that a majority of the resident land owners residing in the municipality did not sign the petition. It is also apparent that a majority of the resident land owners residing within and without the municipality, and owning lands within a mile of said improvement, did not sign the petition. By eliminating those who resided in the municipality and who did not sign the petition, and by counting those who resided in the municipality and who did sign the petition, a majority is secured.

This, in my opinion, is not a proper application of the provisions of the proviso. The statute does not specifically prohibit the land owners residing in a municipality from being counted in ascertaining a majority, but says that it is not necessary to count such land owners.

If it is desired to count any of the land owners residing in a municipality, all such land owners should be counted. In other words, all must be counted or none. It would require specific authority of the legislature to count a part of a certain class and to exclude others. Even such a provision might be unconstitutional as class legislation.

By counting all of the resident land owners residing in a municipality with those residing without, a majority of the resident land owners did not sign the petition. So also by counting none of those residing in a municipality, a majority of the resident land owners did not sign the petition.

As a majority did not sign the petition, the county commissioners were without jurisdiction to proceed under the provisions of Sections 6926, General Code, et seq., as is held in Darke County vs. Baker, 74 Ohio St., supra.

Respectfully,

TIMOTHY S. HOGAN,

Attorney General.

ROADS AND HIGHWAYS—TOWNSHIP TRUSTEES MAY NOT RECEIVE COMPENSATION FOR SUPERINTENDING ROADS—EXTRA SERVICES IN PUBLIC OFFICE GRATUITOUS IF NO COMPENSATION NAMED.

When a statute adds certain duties to an office without making provision for payment for the same, such duties must be performed gratuitously. The township trustees, therefore, may not receive the sum of $2.00 per day as superintendents of roads for the work required by Section 1218, General Code.

COLUMBUS, OHIO, October 29, 1912.

HONORABLE W. J. SCHWENCK, Prosecuting Attorney, Bucyrus, Ohio.

DEAR SIR:—Under date of October 21st, you inquired of me as follows:

> "I desire to ask your opinion as to whether or not the township trustees can be appointed and paid the sum of $2.00 per day as superintendent of roads on which state aid money raised prior to 1911 is used. You understand that the county commissioners are issuing money in the various townships and have authorized the township trustees in their respective townships to superintend or inspect the repairing of the roads that are being repaired with state aid money. We now have several bills filed by township trustees, and we are holding up the payment of these bills pending the receipt of your opinion."

In view of the fact that the fund mentioned in your letter was raised prior to 1911, the effect of the governor's veto of the section of the present highway act repealing the former law on that subject is not pertinent to your inquiry and will not be considered.

Section 1218 of the General Code, provides:

> "If permanent roads of not less than standard width have been constructed prior to the establishment of the state highway department and the materials thereof are gravel, brick, macadam or material of like quality, the county commissioners may make application to the state highway commissioner on or before January first of each year, for the amount of state funds apportioned to such county. Thereupon the amount so apportioned shall be paid to the county treasurer, if the county commissioners of such county have levied or will levy a tax on the duplicate of the county sufficient to equal the amount so appropriated. Such appropriation and levy shall become a part of the pike repair fund of the townships, and be apportioned to the townships or road districts of not less than one township each in proportion to the amount of the fund collected by such levy in each township or road district. Township trustees or other authorities having charge thereof shall apply such fund to the repair of improved roads in the same manner as other pike repair funds are applied, but the material used therefor shall be equal to the material used in the original construction of such road."

Neither the foregoing nor any other provision of the statutes that I have been able to find specifies that township trustees shall be entitled to any compensation for the services required of them by Section 1218. It is well settled in Ohio that when a statute requires of a public officer the performance of certain services, and no provision is made for payment, such services are to be regarded as gratuitous, or as being compensated by other fees accruing to such officer by virtue of his office. The rule on this subject is stated by our supreme court in the case of Jones, Auditor vs. Commissioners, 57 O. S., 189, at page 209, as follows:

> "'An officer whose fees are regulated by statute, can charge fees for those services only to which compensation is by law affixed' (Debolt vs. Trustees, 7 O. S., 237); and the corollary is, as held in Anderson vs. Commissioners, 25 O. S., 13, 'where a service for the benefit of the public is required by law, and no provision for its payment is made, it must be regarded as gratuitous, and no claim for compensation can be enforced,' which rule is more fully stated, but to like import in Strawn vs. Commissioners, 47 O. S., at page 408."

In the case of Clark vs. Commissioners, 58 O. S., 107, it was said by Burket, J.:

> "It is well settled that a public officer is not entitled to receive pay for services out of the public treasury, unless there is some statute authorizing the same. Services performed for the public, where no provision is made by statute for payment, are regarded as a gratuity, or as being compensated by the fees, privileges and emoluments accruing to such officer in the matters pertaining to his office. Jones vs. Commissioners, 57 O. S., 189. To warrant payment out of the public treasury, it must appear that such payment is authorized by statute. Section 5, Article 10 of the Constitution. Diebolt vs. Trustees, 7 O. S., 237; Anderson vs. Commissioners, 25 O. S., 13; Strawn vs. Commissioners, 47 O. S., 404."

Other Ohio authorities in support of this principle are cited in Volume 11, at page 248, of Michie's Encyclopedic Digest of Ohio Reports.

Various statutes fix compensation for township trustees for particular services, but they cannot be held to apply to a service for which no compensation is expressly fixed by statute.

I am, therefore, of the opinion that township trustees are not entitled to any compensation whatever for superintending the repair of improved roads under Section 1218, supra.

Very truly yours,
TIMOTHY S. HOGAN,
Attorney General.

SEWER DISTRICT—CREATION BY COUNTY COMMISSIONERS—SPECIAL TAX LEVY TO RETIRE CERTIFICATE OF INDEBTEDNESS AND BOND ISSUE IN ANTICIPATION OF ASSESSMENTS—POWER TO ISSUE CERTIFICATE OF INDEBTEDNESS TO COVER COST OF EMPLOYMENT OF ENGINEER TO PREPARE PLANS AND SPECIFICATIONS.

When the county commissioners desire to proceed under the act of 102 Ohio Laws, 482 et seq., to create a sewer district within the county, and lying within three miles of an incorporated city therein, bonds may be issued under Section 5 of the said act, in anticipation of the collection of assessments, and under Section 6 of said act, money may be borrowed upon certificates of indebtedness, in anticipation of a tax levy upon all property in the county.

Although Section 3 of said act provides that all the cost of said improvement may be assessed upon the land, and Section 8 enumerated what items may be included in the assessment, still under a liberal interpretation of the act, this enumeration should not be held to be exhaustive of all possible items which may be made part of the costs of the improvement; and since Section 9 expressly authorizes the use of a sanitary engineer for making necessary plans and specifications, the expense of his employment should not be paid out of the current funds, but should be paid out of the special tax levy provided for. Under said Section 6, therefore, certificates of indebtedness may be issued for the moneys borrowed for the payment of an engineer for such purpose, which certificate may be met by the proceeds of a special tax levy.

COLUMBUS, OHIO, November 11, 1912.

HON. HOLLAND C. WEBSTER, Prosecuting Attorney, Toledo, Ohio.

DEAR SIR:—I beg to acknowledge receipt of letter of October 19th, from Hon. Lewis E. Mallow, assistant prosecuting attorney, submitting for my opinion the following question:

> "The county commissioners of Lucas county desire to proceed under the act approved June 8, 1912, 102 O. L. 482 et seq., therein designated as Sections 6602-1 to 6602-9, inclusive, to create a sewer district within the county, and lying within three miles of an incorporated city therein. A sanitary engineer has been employed to prepare the necessary plans and specifications for the improvement, but the commissioners have no funds in the treasury available to meet this preliminary expense.
> "May the commissioners borrow money under Section 6 of said act, on certificate of indebtedness, for the purpose of meeting this preliminary expense; or, is the borrowing power of the commissioners limited to that defined in Section 5 thereof?"

The sections specifically mentioned in your inquiry provide as follows:

> "Section 5. The board of county commissioners may, if they deem expedient, assess, by resolution, the property as provided in the improvement resolution and cause such assessment to be collected before the letting of said contract, or it may at (its) option, delay the making of such assessment until the work is completed, and then upon the certificate of the sanitary engineer in charge showing the completion of the work, assess by resolution the real estate as provided in the improvement resolution, and issue bonds in anticipation of the collection of such assessment.

"Section 6. For the purpose of paying a part or the whole of the cost and expense of the construction of any such sewer, the board of county commissioners may borrow money at a rate of interest not exceeding six per cent., per annum, on certificate of indebtedness, to be signed by its president and clerk and may levy a tax in addition to the amount otherwise authorized, upon all property in the county appearing upon the tax duplicate, for the purpose of discharging and paying such certificates of indebtedness. * * *"

It is very clear to me that the bonds to be issued under Section 5 are limited to the anticipation of the collection of the assessment which is to be made, or has been made. It is equally clear to me that the borrowing of money under Section 6, on certificate of indebtedness, is for the purpose of meeting the portion of the cost and expense which is to be paid by the county, as distinguished from that portion which is to be assessed upon specially benefited property.

I am of the opinion, then, that the two powers are entirely separate and distinct; so much so, indeed, that the proceeds of assessment may not be used to discharge certificates of indebtedness issued under Section 6; but the latter must be met by levy upon the general county duplicate, as therein provided.

Now, the portion of the cost and expense which will be assessed upon specially benefited property, and that which will be paid by the county must be determined by the commissioners at the time of the passage of the "improvement resolution," as provided in Section 3 of the act, which contains, inter alia, the following language:

"* * * Said improvement resolution shall contain a statement of the district or part thereof proposed to be so improved, the character of materials to be used, a reference to the plan and specifications and mode of payment of the cost and expense thereof, and said improvement resolution may provide for assessing any or all of the cost and expense of the improvement upon the lots, lands and other real property in such district as may be specially benefited thereby, provided that in the case of a main sewer the property immediately abutting thereon may be assessed for local drainage and the balance of the cost and expense of such improvement may be assessed upon all of the property within said district proportionately and in accordance with the special benefits conferred. * * *"

So that, the entire cost of the improvement being estimated, and the portion thereof to be assessed upon specially benefited property having been determined, the remainder of the cost not so assessed, and that only, may be met by issuing certificates of indebtedness under Section 6.

But one question remains to be answered, namely: as to whether the preliminary expenses described by you are a part of the cost of the improvement for which money may be borrowed under Section 6.

It is provided by Section 9 that:

"* * * The county commissioners may use a competent sanitary engineer to prepare the necessary plans and specifications for the sewers and districts herein provided for. Said engineer may also be employed in superintending the work of constructing the sewer improvements made under this act and the person so employed shall be compensated not to exceed $10.00 a day and expenses for each day actually employed in such services."

Section 8 of the act provides that:

"The assessment herein provided for may include the amount of money paid or to be paid to the contractor in the discharge of his contract, the cost of publication of all resolutions or notices, the cost of serving copies of such resolution declaring the necessity for the construction of such improvement, the cost of inspection, interest on bonds issued in anticipation of the collection of said assessments, and the cost of making said assessments, as well as any money paid for the purchase of land or right of way for any such sewer."

It seems clear from consideration of these sections that the assessment may not include the compensation of the engineer for preparing the plans and specifications. The peculiar language of Section 8 is such as to necessitate such a conclusion. On the other hand, the cost of superintendence of the construction work is clearly a part of the cost which may be assessed.

Does it follow, then, that because the cost of the preparation of the plans and specifications is not a part of the expense which may be assessed it is likewise not a part of the expense for which money may be borrowed under Section 6? Some provisions of the act seem to indicate an affirmative answer to this question. Thus, Section 3, as above quoted, provides that "any or all of the cost and expense of the improvement may be assessed upon the land." When, therefore, Section 8 provides, in detail, what items may be included in the assessment, it would seem to follow that such enumeration is exhaustive of all the items of expense which may be incorporated in the improvement account, whether met by assessment or otherwise.

Here, however, I am inclined to a liberal interpretation of the statute. Section 9 expressly authorizes the use of a sanitary engineer for making the necessary plans and specifications, and I do not believe that it was contemplated by the legislature that such an engineer should be employed by the county commissioners out of their current funds. In substance and effect this expense is a part of the expense of the particular improvement, despite any inference to the contrary that might be drawn from the peculiar language used. Although, therefore, I am of the opinion that the expense of the preparation of plans and specifications cannot be included in the amount assessed against specially benefited property, I am also of the opinion that if the commissioners have properly provided in their improvement resolution for the division of the total cost and expense between the county generally, and the specially benefited property to be assessed, they may include within that portion of the cost and expense which is to be paid for by the county the compensation of the sanitary engineer employed for the purpose of making necessary plans and specifications, as well as all other preliminary matters of like nature; and, for the purpose of paying the county's portion, may issue certificates of indebtedness, as provided in Section 6 of the act above quoted; and may, subsequently, levy taxes for the purpose of paying such certificates, when due, together with interest thereon.

Very truly yours,

TIMOTHY S. HOGAN,
Attorney General.

ROADS AND HIGHWAYS—TOWNSHIP TRUSTEES MAY REPAIR ROAD BY GRAVELING, EITHER BY ONE OR SEVERAL CONTRACTS, WITH A FUND DERIVED FROM GENERAL LEVY—CONTRACTS NOT LIMITED TO $200.00.

When the trustees of a township have on hand a road fund derived from a general levy, under Section 5649-3a of the General Code, they may under Section 3274, General Code, let a contract for the repair by graveling a certain road or they may let separate contracts for the repair of separate sections of such road; upon advertising and bids. Such contract or contracts are not limited to $200.00.

COLUMBUS, OHIO, November 11, 1912.

HON. GEORGE D. KLIEN, Prosecuting Attorney, Coshocton, Ohio.

DEAR SIR:—I have your letter of September 23rd which is in part as follows:

> "The trustees of Tuscarawas township, our county, have a road fund at this time amounting to $3,300.00. I have held and instructed them numerous times that they cannot spend to exceed $200.00 on any one job or contract let by them and then it must be by competitive bidding for anything over $50.00.
> "These trustees have a road in their jurisdiction that needs gravel and would cost $1,000.00 or $1,500.00 to put in the whole work. They wanted to know of me whether they could split this road up into sections and let a number of contracts, so that no one section or contract of said road would cost to exceed $200.00."

Sections 6957 to 7060 inclusive of the General Code constitute the chapter relating to township roads. The first subdivision of the chapter refers solely to the procedure necessary to open and lay out township roads, and the several other subdivisions of the same chapter consist of a series of special acts which confer upon the township trustees the power to levy a tax or issue bonds for the purpose of improving roads within the township. Some of these acts expressly permit the trustees to let construction contracts in sections.

I am advised by you under date of September 26th that the fund mentioned in your letter of September 23rd came into the township treasury by virtue of the levy made under Section 5649-3a of the General Code and not under any of the special acts heretofore referred to and consequently it will not be necessary to consider the latter further.

Section 5649-3a provides in part as follows:

> "* * * the aggregate of all taxes that may be levied by a township for township purposes on the taxable property in the township on the tax list shall not exceed in any one year two mills."

Section 3274 of the General Code provides for the disposition of the money received from the county treasurer for road purposes as follows:

> "When money is received into the township treasury from the county treasury for road purposes, the trustees shall cause such money to be appropriated to building bridges or repairing public roads within the township. After public notice, they shall let by contract to the lowest bidder, such part or parts of any road as they deem expedient, equal to the amount of money to be appropriated, if in their opinion such bidder is competent to perform the work. When such labor is performed in accordance with the contract or conditions of the letting, the trustees shall draw an order in favor of the person who has performed such labor for the amount due therefor."

I am unable to ascertain from the facts before me whether the graveling of the road in question would constitute "construction" or "repair," but assuming the latter to be true, it is my opinion that Section 3274 is applicable. That section clearly confers upon township trustees the power to let contracts for the repair of a part or parts of any road, that is, they may divide the road into sections and let the contract for each section separately or they may let the whole road in one contract. Our statutes do not contain any limitation upon the power of township trustees to expend more than two hundred dollars on any one contract. The limit of fifty dollars referred to by you applies to expenditures by the trustees under Section 7562, General Code, for the building and keeping in repair of bridges on other than improved or free turnpike roads and there is nothing contained in that section which has any reference to competitive bidding. The township trustees, when proceeding under Section 3274, must advertise for bids in all cases regardless of the amount involved.

I am, therefore, of the opinion that it is optional with the trustees of Tuscarawas township whether they repair said road as a whole in one contract or in sections by separate contracts. If the latter is done they are not limited to $200.00 for each section.

Yours very truly,

TIMOTHY S. HOGAN,
Attorney General.

ROADS AND HIGHWAYS—FUNDS DERIVED FROM LEVY OF COUNTY COMMISSIONERS FOR REPAIR OF ROADS UNDER CONTROL OF COMMISSIONERS MAY NOT BE EXCLUDED BY TOWNSHIP TRUSTEES—JOINT SUPERVISION OF TRUSTEES AND COMMISSIONERS.

Funds levied by the county commissioners, under Section 6956-18, General Code, for the repair and maintenance of roads, are county funds to be applied to roads under the control of the county commissioners, and such funds may not be apportioned to the various townships to be worked out by their trustees in conjunction with the county commissioners.

The county commissioners are also without authority to order the township trustees to work out this money and present their bills and have the same allowed by the commissioners.

The county commissioners may, however, under Section 6596-20, General Code, agree with the township trustees with reference to the expenditure of such funds.

COLUMBUS, OHIO, September 29, 1912.

HON. JOHN F. MAHAR, Prosecuting Attorney, Greenville, Ohio.

DEAR SIR:—Under date of August 28th, you wrote me as follows:

"The Darke county commissioners have levied a road tax on the duplicate of Darke county under Section 6956-18 et seq.,

"(a) Can county commissioners apportion this money to the various townships and order said amounts given to the treasurer of the various townships, and allow the trustees of the various townships in conjunction with the county commissioners to work out said amounts?

"(b) Or must this money be worked out by the commissioners and paid for by the commissioners out of the above amounts?

"(c) Or can the county commissioners order the trustees to work out this money on the roads and present their bills for the same and then be allowed by the commissioners and paid out of the above amount?"

Sections 6956-18, 6956-19 and 6956-20 of the General Code provide as follows:
Section 6956-18.

"That the supervision and control of all roads and turnpikes which are known as county roads and were built under supervision of county commissioners either by petition or under existing laws at time same were built, or roads that were built by turnpike companies and afterward acquired by any county, or any road built under a special act shall be under the control of the county commissioners who shall have the power to make levies for repair and maintenance of same: authorize the commissioners to refuse to make a levy for road funds under the provisions of Sections 5635, 5636, 7419, 7420."

Section 6956-19.

"The supervision of all roads known as township roads which were built under the direction of township trustees by petition or under existing laws at the time same were built, shall be under the direct control of township trustees who shall have power to levy for improvement and repair of same."

Section 6956-20.

"The officers named in the foregoing sections shall exercise their jurisdiction under the existing laws over those roads as they now stand. The board of county commissioners and township trustees may enter into an agreement between said boards whereby they may jointly supervise, repair or maintain any state, county and township road in their respective jurisdictions."

Section 6956-18 vests the supervision and control of certain roads in the county commissioners and authorizes them "to make levies for repair and maintenance of same."

Section 6956-19 places the supervision of township roads under the control of township trustees, and they are likewise empowered to make levies for the improvement and repair thereof.

Section 6956-20 authorizes the county commissioners and township trustees to enter into an agreement "whereby they may jointly supervise, repair and maintain any state, county or township road in their respective jurisdictions."

Jointly is defined by Webster as: "In a joint manner, unitedly; so as to be or become liable to a joint obligation."

The funds in question are county funds levied by the county commissioners for the repair and maintenance of county roads, etc., and the payment thereof to the township trustees, according to the plan outlined in question (a) would constitute a supervision and expenditure by the trustees alone and not by the commissioners and trustees acting jointly as required by Section 6956-20.

I am of the opinion, therefore, that question (a) should be answered in the negative. In my opinion said money may be expended under the direction of the county commissioners alone or they may agree with the township trustees in reference thereto.

I am also of the opinion that the county commissioners are without authority to order the township trustees to work out this money and present their bills and have the same allowed by the commissioners.

Yours very truly,

TIMOTHY S. HOGAN,
Attorney General.

INCORPORATION OF VILLAGE—BOUNDARIES IDENTICAL WITH TOWNSHIP—WHEN ELECTION FOR VILLAGE TREASURER RESULTS IN TIE, TOWNSHIP CLERK SHALL DETERMINE BY LOT—ABOLITION OF TOWNSHIP OFFICERS.

When proceedings were had for the incorporation of all the territory comprising Northfield township into a village, under Sections 3526 et seq., General Code, and when an election was held for the officer of such village, under 3536, General Code, which election resulted in a tie vote, as to two candidates for village treasurer; held:

That under Section 3536, General Code, the election must be conducted as prescribed for the election of township officers and that, therefore, under Section 5113, General Code, the clerk of the township shall determine by lot which of the candidates for village treasurer was elected.

Although Section 3512, General Code, expressly provides that all township offices shall be abolished, such section does not contemplate the abolition of such offices until after the village organization has been perfected and after its officers have been elected.

COLUMBUS, OHIO, November 8, 1912.

HON. FRANK J. ROCKWELL, Prosecuting Attorney, Akron, Ohio.

DEAR SIR:—Your favor of November 4, 1912, through Hon Charles T. Grant, assistant prosecuting attorney, is received, in which you inquire:

> "Some weeks ago proceedings were had before the township trustees for the incorporation of all the territory comprising Northfield township into a village, under Sections 3526, et seq., General Code, and such steps have since been had that on November 2nd an election of municipal officers was held in this newly incorporated village under Section 3536, General Code.
> "Such election resulted in a tie vote as to two candidates for village treasurer, each candidate receiving 65 votes.
> "Question. Who is to determine which of the two candidates is elected?"

Section 3536, General Code, provides for the first election of municipal officers in a newly created village, as follows:

> "The first election of officers for such corporation shall be at the first municipal election after its creation, and the place of holding the election shall be fixed by the agent of the petitioners. Notice thereof, printed or plainly written, shall be posted by him in three or more public places within the limits of the corporation, at least ten days before the election. The election shall be conducted, and the officers chosen and qualified, in the manner prescribed for the election of township officers, and the first election may be a special election held at any time not exceeding six months after the incorporation, and the time and place of holding it shall be fixed by such agent, and notice thereof shall be given as is required herein for the municipal election."

By virtue of this section the election is to be conducted and the officers chosen in the manner prescribed for the election of township officers.

Section 5111, General Code, provides:

> "In November elections held in odd numbered years for township officers, justices of the peace, municipal officers and members of boards of education the judges and clerks of election in each precinct shall make and certify the returns to the clerk of the township or the clerk or auditor of the municipality in or for which the election is held or the clerk of the board of education of the school district, respectively, instead of to the board of deputy state supervisors of the county. This provision shall not apply to the return of elections for assessors of real property."

There is no clerk of the new village at the time of the first election and the returns must be made to the clerk of the township as such returns are made in the case of the election of township officers.

Section 5112, General Code, provides:

> "The returns of township election shall be made by the judges and clerks in the severeal precincts to the proper township clerk within one day after the election. Such clerk shall canvass the vote, declare the result and issue and deliver certificates to the officers so elected."

Section 5113, General Code, provides:

> If two or more persons have the highest and an equal number of votes for any one of the township offices directed to be filled, the clerk of the township shall determine by lot which of such persons is duly elected."

Section 5116, General Code, provides:

> "If the result of an election for municipal officers cannot be determined from the votes cast for the reason that more than the number of persons to be elected have an equal number of votes for the same office, the officers whose duty it is to ascertain the persons elected, shall determine by lot which of such persons shall be declared elected."

The provisions of Section 5113, General Code, govern in case of a tie vote in the election of township officers. By virtue of Section 3536, General Code, supra, the first officers of a newly created village are chosen in the same manner as township officers. Section 5116, General Code, governs in case of a tie vote in the election of municipal officers. This section does not govern your case, because Section 3536, General Code, specifically provides that the first officers of a new village shall be chosen in the manner prescribed for the election of township officers.

In the case of a tie in the election of a township officer the clerk of the township determines the election by lot. So also at the first election of officers of a newly created village the clerk of the township has the power to determine by lot the person who has been elected where there is a tie vote.

In your case there is another question to be considered. It appears that the entire township was incorporated into the village. This makes the boundaries of the township and of the village identical.

Section 3512, General Code, applies to such a condition. Said section reads:

> "When the corporate limits of a city or village become identical with those of a township, all township officers shall be abolished, and the duties thereof shall thereafter be performed by the corresponding officers of the city or village, except that justices of the peace and constables shall continue the exercise of their functions under municipal ordinances providing offices, regulating the disposition of their fees, their compensation, clerks and other officers and employes. Such justices and constables shall be elected at municipal elections. All property, moneys, credits, books, records and documents of such township shall be delivered to the council of such city or village. All rights, interests or claims in favor of or against the township may be enforced by or against the corporation."

It is contended that Sections 3530 and 3531, General Code, contemplate that the township organization shall go out of existence as soon as the village is incorporated, that is, at the time of the proper certificate is forwarded to the secretary of state by the county recorder.

Section 3530, General Code, provides:

> "The trustees shall make a certified transcript of the journal entries of all their proceedings and a majority of them having signed it, with the original petition and plat, they shall deliver it to the county recorder, who shall forthwith make a record of the petition, transcript and plat or map, in the public book of records, and preserve in his office the original papers delivered to him by the trustees, and certify thereon that the transcribed petition and map are properly recorded. When the recorder has so made such record, he shall certify and forward to the secretary of state a transcript thereof."

Section 3531, General Code, provides:

> "The corporation shall then be a village under the name adopted in the petition, with all powers and authorities given to villages by this title, but no injunction shall be brought, as herein provided in case of filing the transcript with the county commissioners, unless the action be instituted within ten days from the filing of the papers by the trustees with the county recorder, but the right of petition to the court of common pleas for error shall exist as provided in the following section of this chapter."

These two sections provide, among other things, when the territory shall become a village. They make no provision as to the discontinuance of the township organization.

In most cases a new village takes in but part of the township. It is not often that a whole township is incorporated into a village. Sections 3530 and 3531, General Code, apply to the incorporation of all villages and do not make special provision for a case similar to yours. Section 3512, General Code, governs in your case and determines when the township organization shall cease.

The newly incorporated municipality became a village, by virtue of Sections 3530 and 3531, General Code, when the recorder had made the record and forwarded a certified copy thereof to the secretary of state. It became a village at that time but it had not yet perfected its organization. It was not yet ready to carry on its government and its affairs. It had no officers. Officers could be elected at the next regular municipal election, or a special election could be called and held within six months after the incorporation.

At the time the certificate was forwarded to the secretary of state by the county recorder the boundaries of the village and of the township were identical.

Section 3512, General Code, provides that:

"When the corporate limits of a city or village become identical with those of a township, all township offices shall be abolished."

If this provision was strictly applied there would be no township officers from and after the date of incorporation, and at the time of the election in question there would be no township clerk to determine the tie vote.

Section 3512, General Code, further provides:

"and the duties thereof shall thereafter be performed by the corresponding officers of the city or village,"

This provision contemplates that there are officers of the village or city who can take over and perform the duties of the township officers whose offices are abolished. In other words, when the township officers relinquish their offices, the municipal officers are ready to take charge and conduct the governmental affairs of the territory.

It is not the purpose of the statute that the territory shall be entirely without officers and government during the interval between the incorporation of the village and the election of the first officers. On the other hand the statute contemplates that the township officers shall continue in office until the new village officers have been elected and qualified. The newly incorporated territory is a village in name from the time of its incorporation but it is not in full organization until the officers are elected and qualified.

Therefore, the township officers should continue to perform their duties as township officers until such duties can be performed by the newly elected village officers.

At the time of the election in question the clerk of the township was still in office and had power to determine the tie vote and he should cast lots to determine who has been elected.

Respectfully,
TIMOTHY S. HOGAN,
Attorney General.

CORRUPT PRACTICES—REPRESENTATIVES AT POLLS—LIST SIGNED BY CHAIRMAN AND SECRETARY OF COMMITTEE AND FILED AT OFFICE OF BOARD OF ELECTIONS, IS SUFFICIENT CERTIFICATION.

When a county chairman of a democratic executive committee, filed the list of party and personal representatives to be at or near the polls on election day, properly certified to by the chairman and secretary, with the chief deputy of the deputy state supervisors of elections, three days before election, when the supervisors were not in session and the clerk was not in his office, such action is a sufficient compliance with Section 5175-26, General Code, requiring such list to be "certified" to the board of elections at least two days before election.

COLUMBUS, OHIO, November 11, 1912.

HON. JOSEPH C. RILEY, Prosecuting Attorney, Ironton, Ohio.

DEAR SIR:—I beg to acknowledge receipt of your favor of November 8, 1912, wherein you state:

> "I desire your opinion on Section 5175-26, of the General Code, on the following:
> "On November 2, 1912, F. G. Roberts, county chairman of the democratic executive committee and one or more candidates on the judicial ticket filed the list of party and personal representatives to be at or near polls on election day, November 5, 1912, with the chief deputy of the deputy state supervisors of elections of Lawrence county, and said supervisors not being in session and the clerk of said board not being in the office. Said representatives were not to be paid in excess of $5.00 per day. Does this comply with the above section of law?"

Section 5175-26, General Code, provides as follows:

> "* * * * Each political party may designate one party representative in each precinct upon each registration day and such committee may designate not more than three (3) such representatives and each candidate one representative in each voting precinct upon each election day, whose names shall be certified to by the chairman and secretary of the controlling committee of such party to the board of deputy state supervisors of elections, at least two (2) days before such registration or election day, and who may be paid for their services by such committee or candidate not in excess of five ($5.00) dollars per day each." * * *

I call your attention to the fact that the language of the statute does not require a list of names to be "filed," but that the names shall be "certified to" by the chairman and secretary to the board of deputy state supervisors of elections.

The word "certify" is variously defined by the authorities:

> "'Certify,' to give certain knowledge or information of; make evident; vouch for the truth of; to testify in writing; give a certificate of; make a declaration about in writing under hand or hand and seal; to make attestation either in writing or orally as to the truth or excellence of something. (Standard Dictionary, quoted in People vs. Foster, 27 Misc. (N. Y.) 576.)

"To testify in writing; to make a declaration in writing. (Webster's Dictionary, quoted in State vs. Gee, 28 Oregon, 100.)

"To testify to writing; to make note or establish as a fact. (Anderson's Law Dictionary, quoted in Chicago R. R. Co. vs. People, 65 N. E. 701.)

"The term 'to certify' as used in reference to legal documents and in the absence of statutory power declaring the particular form of certification, any form which affirms the fact in writing is sufficient." (State vs. Brill, 59 N. W. 989.)

So it is readily seen that all that is required under the section of the General Code referred to is that the names selected as representatives be made known to the board by some written declaration signed by the chairman and secretary of the controlling committee of the political party.

In your question you state that this list was filed with the chief deputy of the deputy state supervisors of elections of Lawrence county on November 2, 1912, the said supervisors not being in session at that time, and the clerk of said board not being in the office. It is my opinion that this is a sufficient compliance with the statutes, for, as it is well known, many of the boards of elections in the smaller counties do not remain in continuous session, and it is not unusual to hand such papers to the chief deputy or the clerk who is presumed to later place them with the papers on file with the board. It certainly would be repugnant to all justice and fairness to hold that when a party has done all that he is required to do under the law, that by reason of some mere irregularity and beyond his control or fault he would not be protected in complying with the statute insofar as it lay within his power. I take it that even the neglect or refusal of an official would not work to the injury of the party so complying with the statute as far as he was able to do.

I am, therefore, of the opinion, under the facts stated by you, that the certification to the deputy state supervisors of election complies with Section 5175-26, General Code.

Yours very truly,

TIMOTHY S. HOGAN,
Attorney General.

TRANSFER OF DUTIES OF INFIRMARY DIRECTORS TO COUNTY COMMISSIONERS NOT AN EXERCISE OF APPOINTING POWER—ACT CONSTITUTIONAL.

The transfer of the duties of the infirmary directors to the county commissioners by the act abolishing the infirmary directors, is not an exercise of the appointing power, and therefore, is not in contravention to the constitutional requirement that all county officers shall be elected.

COLUMBUS, OHIO, November 22 ,1912.

HON. LAWRENCE E. LAYBOURNE, Prosecting Attorney, Springfield, Ohio.

DEAR SIR:—Under date of November 1st, you request my opinion, as follows:

"On May 31, 1911, the general assembly of Ohio repealed the laws creating and incorporating boards of infirmary directors. Said repeal to be effective January 1, 1913. (102 O. L. 433.)

"By the same act all powers and duties of all boards of infirmary directors were attempted to be transferred to and vested in boards of county commissioners. The nominal term of the present board of infirmary directors began January 1, 1911, and expires January 1, 1913.

"The term of the present board of county commissioners began the third Monday of September, 1911, at which time said board had no jurisdiction over the county infirmary, and does not expire until the third Monday in September, 1913.

"Is the attempted transfer, beginning January 1, 1913, of the functions of infirmary directors, to a board which was never elected for the purpose of performing such functions, in conflict with article 10 of the constitution of Ohio?

"If so, can the constitutional difficulty be obviated by allowing the present board of infirmary directors to hold until the first Monday of September, 1913, when the commissioners to be elected at the coming election shall be qualified in their offices?"

Sections 1 and 2, of article 10, are material parts of article 10, of the constitution, to which you refer. They are as follows:

"Section 1. The general assembly shall provide, by law, for the election of such county and township officers as may be necessary.

"Section 2. County officers shall be elected on the first Tuesday after the first Monday in November, by the electors of each county in such manner, and for such term, not exceeding three years, as may be provided by law. (As amended October 13, 1885; 82 v. 446.)"

I take it that the gist of your inquiry is whether or not the transfer of the duties of the county infirmary directors to the county commissioners amounts to the appointment of the county commissioners to the position of infirmary directors, thereby contravening the requirement of these constitutional sections, which make it necessary for all county officers to be elected.

In the case of ex rel. Attorney General vs. Kennon et al., 7 O. S., page 547, at page 572, Judge Swan said:

"If the general assembly annex to an office already existing and filled additional powers and duties, upon what ground can it be claimed that this is the exercise by the general assembly of the appointing power? Certainly upon this only, that the general assembly has enlarged or added to the powers and duties of an existing office. But this is really absurd; for, if adding to the duties or powers of existing offices is an exercise of the appointing power, then every new duty required, or power conferred upon any state, county or township officer, must be deemed the exercise by the general assembly of the appointing power, and forbidden by the constitution.

"But these fallacious positions arise out of a misapprehension of what is meant by the exercise of the appointing power. An office, until filled, is an impersonal thing—an incorporated hereditament. It is filled by the exercise of the appointing power, and when filled, the office and officer both exist. The office itself may by law be enlarged in its powers, or new duties enjoined, without touching the appointment or tenure of office of the incumbent or his successor. It would therefore seem highly probable, although the question is not before us, that the general assembly could, without displacing or appointing a governor of Ohio, annex to the office of governor the power of appointing directors of the penitentiary, or the duty of performing any other legitimate executive function."

It is well settled that the general assembly may increase the duties and add to the powers of the existing offices. I am of the opinion that this was what was done by the law to which you refer, with reference to the county commissioners, and that there has been no violation of the article of the constitution referred to, in adding to their duties, the duties formerly resting upon the infirmary directors.

Very truly yours

TIMOTHY S. HOGAN,
Attorney General.

EXTRA COMPENSATION NOT ALLOWED TO TOWNSHIP TRUSTEES FOR SUPERVISING PUBLIC ROADS.

Under the general rule of law, that duties which are added to an office without fixing any extra compensation therefor are to be performed gratuitously, the township trustees may be allowed no extra compensation for supervising the improvement of public roads under Section 7052, General Code.

COLUMBUS, OHIO, November 12, 1912.

HON. P. G. GILLMER, Prosecuting Attorney, Warren, Ohio.

DEAR SIR:—Under date of October 25, 1912, you inquire of me concerning the following question:

> "Question has been made in this township as to whether a member of the board of township trustees appointed in pursuance of the provisions of Section 7052, of the General Code of Ohio, to supervise the improvement of the public roads can receive extra compensation over and above the regular per diem allowed by law."

Section 7052, of the General Code, provides as follows:

> "The trustees shall designate one of their number to supervise the improvement of each working section of the public ways. They shall provide such blanks, books and records, as are necessary, and allow to the township clerk for the services to be rendered by him, reasonable compensation; all of which shall be paid out of the funds provided for such improvement on the order and allowance of the township trustees."

The foregoing is a part of the sub-division of the township road laws, entitled "Township or Precinct a Road District," and provides a method of improving township roads when a township or part thereof is created by the township trustees into a separate road district. Our statutes do not provide that township trustees shall be entitled to an extra compensation for services rendered by them when performing the duties required by Section 7052.

It is well settled in Ohio that when a statute requires of a public officer the performance of certain services, and no provision is made for payment, such services are to be regarded as gratuitous, or as being compensated by other fees accruing to such officer by virtue of his office. The rule on this subject is stated by our supreme court in the case of Jones, Auditor, vs. Commissioners, 57 O. S., 189, at page 209, as follows:

> "'An officer whose fees are regulated by statute can charge fees for those services only to which compensation is by law affixed' (Debolt vs. Trustees, 7 O. S., 237); and the corollary is, as held in Anderson vs. Commissioners, 25 O. S., 13, 'where a service for the benefit of the public is required by law, and no provision for its payment is made, it must be regarded as gratuitous, and no claim for compensation can be enforced,' which rule is more fully stated, but to like import, in Strawn vs. Commissioners, 47 O. S,, at page 408."

In the case of Clark vs. Commissioners, 58 O. S., 107, it was said by Burket, J.:

> "It is well settled that a public officer is not entitled to receive pay for services out of the public treasury, unless there is some statute authorizing the same. Services performed for the public, where no provision is made by statute for payment, are regarded as a gratuity, or as being compensated by the fees, privileges and emoluments accruing to such officer in the matters pertaining to his office. Jones vs. Commissioners, 57 O. S., 189. To warrant payment out of the public treasury, it must appear that such payment is authorized by statute. Section 5, article 10, of the constitution. Diebolt vs. Trustees, 7 O. S., 237; Anderson vs. Commissioners, 25 O. S., 13; Strawn vs. Commissioners, 47 O. S., 404."

Other Ohio authorities in support of this principle are cited in volume II, at page 248, of Michie's Encylclopedia Digest of Ohio Reports.

In view of the uniformity of the Ohio authorities upon this point, and the fact that no compensation is fixed by statute for township trustees for services performed under Section 7052, I am of the opinion that they are not entitled to extra compensation for such services.

Very truly yours,

TIMOTHY S. HOGAN,

Attorney General.

FUNDING AND REFUNDING OF INDEBTEDNESS BY BOARD OF EDUCATION—PURPOSES FOR WHICH BOARD MAY BORROW—CANNOT BORROW TO MEET CONTINGENT EXPENSES—CREATION OF SINKING FUND TO MEET INDEBTEDNESS AND INTEREST, MANDATORY.

Board of education may borrow money for only two purposes:

1. For specific building or improvement enterprises.
2. To fund or refund a valid existing indebtedness of the district.

Inasmuch as no indebtedness may be created except in case of hiring of teachers and other employes, without the issuance of a certificate of the clerk to the effect that the money necessary is in the treasury to the credit of the proper fund and not appropriated for any other purpose, it is clear that a valid existing indebtedness for contingent expenses could not be created beyond the amount in the treasury to cover the same. There cannot, therefore, exist, so far as contingent expenses are concerned, such a valid existing indebtedness as would permit the funding or refunding of the same.

Sections 7587 and 7613, General Code, provide for the creation of a sinking fund for the payment of bonds and interest out of the board's levy, and Section 7614, General Code, provides for the appointment of commissioners of the sinking fund, through the common pleas court.

These sections are mandatory and the interest on the money borrowed by reason of exhaustion of funds for the payment of teachers should be paid from such sinking fund and such should not be paid from either the tuition or the contingent fund.

COLUMBUS, OHIO, November 19, 1912.

HON. F. A. SHIVELEY, Prosecuting Attorney, West Union, Ohio.

DEAR SIR:—I beg to acknowledge receipt of your letter of November 7th, in which you ask my opinion upon the following questions:

> "Have township boards of education the authority to borrow money for contingent expenses, such as providing fuel, furniture, crayon and all other items of expense for which payment must be made from the contingent fund?
> "If boards of education borrow money for the purpose of paying teachers in instances where the tuition fund is exhausted before the district may receive the state aid, from what fund is the interest on such debt properly payable? From the contingent or tuition fund?"

You have been kind enough to state your views in connection with these questions, which is to the effect that there is no statutory authority for borrowing money for the contingent expenses of a township board of education. I agree with you in this view. Boards of education may exercise the borrowing power for two purposes, and two only, viz.:

1. For specific building or improvement enterprises.
2. To fund or refund a valid existing indebtedness of the district.

An indebtedness of the district cannot be created except in case of the compensation of teachers and other employes save after the issuance of a certificate of the clerk to the effect that the money necessary to discharge the obligation is in the treasury to the credit of the proper fund and not appropriated for any other purpose. It would be manifestly impossible therefore to incur an obligation for contingent expenses and to regard such an obligation as a valid indebtedness of the district.

The foregoing fully answers your first question. With respect to your second question, I beg to state that Section 7587 provides as follows:

> "Such levy shall be divided by the board of election into four funds: First, tuition fund; second, building fund; third, contingent fund; fourth, bonds, interest and sinking fund. A separate levy must be made for each fund."

Section 7613, of the General Code is in pari materia with the foregoing section and provides as follows:

> "In any school district having a bonded indebtedness, for the payment of which, with interest, no provision has been made by a special tax levy for that particular purpose, the board of education of such district annually, on or before the thirty-first day of August, shall set aside from its revenues a sum equal to not less than one-fortieth of such indebtedness together with a sum sufficient to pay the annual interest thereon.''

Sections 7614 et seq. provide for the creation of a board of commissioners of the sinking fund of the district, and it is my opinion, in the first instance, that the proper way to manage the payment of interest upon bonds issued for the purpose mentioned by you is through the machinery provided by these sections. The sections themselves are in form mandatory, and I am of the opinion that it is the duty of any board of education which has a bonded indebtedness to apply to the common pleas court for the appointment of a commission of this sort. (See State ex rel. vs. Board of Education, 3 N. P., n. s. 401.)

Whether or not such a commission has been created, and at least prior to its creation, if no one has taken steps to compel compliance with the sections just commented upon, I am of the opinion that interest charges upon bonded indebtedness created by a board of education must be met from the sinking fund levy expressly required to be made by Section 7587 supra, and that it is the duty of the board of education to divide its levy in the manner provided by that section if there are interest charges of this sort to be met. It follows, therefore, that such payments should not be made either from the contingent or from the tuition fund regardless of the nature of the indebtedness, to provide for which the bonds were originally issued.

In conclusion, I note that you state that you would like to have cited to you any authority that may exist for the borrowing of money for contingent expenses by boards of education. As already stated, I know of no such authority.

Yours very truly,

TIMOTHY S. HOGAN,
Attorney General.

ELECTION EXPENSES—VILLAGE MAY NOT CHARGE TOWNSHIP FOR USE OF TOWN HALL FOR ELECTIONS—LIGHT, HEAT AND FUEL PAID BY COUNTY AND CHARGED BACK IN ODD NUMBERED YEARS.

As set out in a former opinion when a village furnished a room and heat, light and fuel for election purposes, the expense of fuel and light is paid from the county treasury and charged back to the political sub-division in odd numbered years, except for special elections.

The village cannot charge rent to the township for the use of its town hall for election purposes.

COLUMBUS, OHIO, November 29, 1912.

HON. D. W. MURPHY, Prosecuting Attorney, Batavia, Ohio.

DEAR SIR:—Under date of November 21, 1912, you inquire:

> "The township trustees of Miami township, Clermont county, Ohio, refuse to pay the village of Milford in Clermont county, Ohio, rent for election day for the use of the town hall, being the place where the election was held on November 5, 1912. Miami township has five election precincts, three being in the township proper outside of municipalities and two being precincts in villages, one being in Loveland and the other in Milford.
> "On November 5th the village of Milford furnished a room, electric light and heat for holding the election, and it asks pay from the township trustees for the same.
> "In November, 1911, the same room was used for a township and municipal election and the township trustees of Miami township refused to pay their proportionate share of the rent for the year 1911 under like circumstances."

Your question involves two propositions:

First. The right of the village to charge rent against the township for the use of its town hall for the purpose of holding elections therein, and Second. The right of the village to charge for furnishing light and heat in such town hall when used for elections.

Both of these questions have been answered by this department in two opinions, in which it was attempted to provide rules for the payment of all expenses pertaining to elections. These opinions cover a number of matters, and therefore the propositions, in which you are interested will be specifically referred to.

In an opinion given to the bureau of inspection and supervision of public offices under date of February 27, 1912, it was held:

> "In counties having no registration city, and in precincts outside of a registration city in counties having a registration city, the expense of supplying chairs, tables, etc., provided by the board of elections, shall be paid by the county, and cannot be charged back. The expense for light, fuel and such supplies as are consumed at a particular election is to be charged back to the political division in which such election was held in odd numbered years, except for special elections."

The expense of fuel and light for voting places is paid from the county treasury and is charged back in odd numbered years. The county should pay the village for the light and heat furnished for elections and in the odd numbered years the county should charge such expense back to the political division in which such election was held, as prescribed in Section 5053, General Code.

The opinion above referred to has been printed by the bureau and a copy can be secured from it on application.

In a later opinion given to the bureau of inspection and supervision of public offices, approving a schedule of expenses for elections, the other proposition was considered.

In that opinion it was held:

> "Section 4844, General Code, provides that the township trustees shall select the place of voting in the township precincts; that the council of the corporation shall select the place in municipalities; and that the board of elections shall designate the place in registration cities. Nothing is said in this section as to who shall pay for such rooms or places. The payment of the rent of voting places is specifically provided for in registration cities and has been covered in the opinion of February 27.
> "There is no specific provision of statute directing how the rent for voting places in a township or in a municipality other than a registration city, shall be paid. In the absence of such specific provision, any necessary expense incurred for renting rooms for elections in such places would constitute a proper and necessary expense of the election to be paid as provided in Sections 4821 and 5052, General Code, by the county, and to be charged back in odd numbered years as provided in Section 5053, General Code.
> "You refer to the report of the attorney general of 1906, at page 10. An opposite holding is apparently made by the attorney general in the opinions of 1909-1910, at page 602.
> "A question will arise as to the right of a township or municipal corporation to charge the county rental for the use of its public hall or building for holding elections therein. I find no authority to make such charge. Said buildings are provided for public purposes, and it adds no expense to the township or municipality to permit the use of such building for elections."

I am, therefore, of the opinion that the village cannot charge rent for the use of its town hall for election purposes.

Respectfully,

TIMOTHY S. HOGAN,

Attorney General.

OFFICES INCOMPATIBLE—PROSECUTING ATTORNEY AND MEMBER VILLAGE BOARD OF EDUCATION.

Inasmuch as under Section 4701, General Code, the prosecuting attorney is obliged to prosecute all actions against member of a village board of education for misfeasance or malfeasance in office, considerations of public policy will not permit that official to hold a position on such board of education.

COLUMBUS, OHIO, December 20, 1912.

HON. LEVI B. MOORE, Prosecuting Attorney-Elect, Waverly, Ohio.

DEAR SIR:—Under date of December 9th, you request my opinion upon the question, whether you may serve as prosecuting attorney and at the same time retain your position as member of the Waverly school board.

In Throop on Public Officers, page 38, the following rule is stated:

> "'Offices are said to be incompatible and inconsistent, so as not to be executed by the same person, when from the multiplicity of business in them they cannot be executed with care and ability, or when, their being subordinate and interfering with each other, it induces a presumption that they cannot be executed with impartiality and honesty.' And in Dillon on Municipal Corporations (166, note), it is said, that 'Incompatibility in offices exists where the nature and duty of the two offices are such as render it improper, from considerations of public policy, for one incumbent to retain both.'"

Section 4761, General Code, provides as follows:

> "Except in city school districts, the prosecuting attorney of the county shall be the legal adviser of all board of education of the county in which he is serving. He shall prosecute all actions against a member or officer of a board of education for malfeasance or misfeasance in office, and he shall be the legal counsel of such boards or the officers thereof in all civil actions brought by or against them and shall conduct such actions in his official capacity. When such civil action is between two or more boards of education in the same county, the prosecuting attorney shall not be required to act for either of them. In city school districts, the city solicitor shall be the legal adviser and attorney for the board of education thereof, and shall perform the same services for such board as herein required of the prosecuting attorney for other boards of education of the county."

In an opinion rendered to the state commissioner of common schools, under date of March 4, 1912, I held that the duties of the prosecuting attorney, as set out in this section, apply to village boards of education. The rule is fundamental that an officer may not be placed in a position which requires him to act as judge in his own case, and, inasmuch as Section 4761, General Code, provides that the prosecuting attorney shall prosecute all actions against members or officers of a board of education for malfeasance or misfeasance in office, it is clear that considerations of public policy will not permit one individual to hold both these offices at the same time.

Very truly yours,
TIMOTHY S. HOGAN,
Attorney General.

TEACHER—BOARD OF EDUCATION CANNOT PAY FOR SERVICES PERFORMED WITHOUT CERTIFICATE.

A contract made by a board of education to pay for services of a teacher performed by the latter, prior to the obtaining of a certificate, is void, and said teacher cannot be reimbursed for such services.

COLUMBUS, OHIO, December 3, 1912.

HON. H. R. PATCHIN, Prosecuting Attorney, Chardon, Ohio.

DEAR SIR:—I beg to acknowledge receipt of your letter of November 15, 1912, wherein you inquire as follows:

> "On September 2, 1912, the board of education of Russel township, in our county, passed the following resolution: 'Whereas, Miss A. has presented an application for a school in Russel township school district, now therefore, be it
> "Resolved, That Miss A. be engaged to teach the school in sub-district No. 9, with a salary of $40.00 per month, and $2.00 janitor's fees, providing she presents the proper qualifications on or before September 16, 1912.'
> "It appears that Miss A. had no certificate at the time this resolution was passed, she began to teach the following Monday, but she did not receive her certificate until October 5, 1912. October 21, 1912, the board passed a resolution as follows:
> "'Be it Resolved, That Miss A. be hired to teach the school in sub-district No. 9 for the balance of the year, with a salary of $45.00 per month and with $2.00 for janitor's fees.'
> "It is apparent that the board is attempting to pay this teacher for her work during September, when she had no certificate and my query is, under the circumstances, is this last contract legal?"

In reply to your inquiry, I desire to say that Section 7830 of the General Code provides as follows:

> "No person shall be employed or enter upon the performance of his duties as a teacher in any elementary school supported wholly or in part by the state in any village, township or special school district who has not obtained from the board of school examiners having legal jurisdiction a certificate of good moral character; that he or she is qualified to teach orthography, reading, writing, arithmetic, English grammar and composition, geography, history of the United States, including civil government, physiology, including narcotics, literature, and on and after September 1, 1912, elementary agriculture, and that he or she possesses an adequate knowledge of the theory and practice of teaching."

The provision of said section that no person shall be employed as a teacher unless he has first obtained the certificate required by law, does not render invalid a contract for such employment made with the teacher before such teacher obtains the required certificate, provided he obtains it before entering upon the duties of his employment.

> "A teacher may be appointed by a board of education, who at the time has no certificate, if he obtains one before the commencement of the schools." (Youman's et al. vs. Board of Education, 13 C. C., p. 207.)
> "The provision of Section 7, of the school law passed March 14, 1864, that 'no person shall be employed as a teacher unless he has first obtained the certificate required by law,' does not render invalid a contract for employment made with the teacher before he obtains the requisite certificate, provided he obtains it before entering upon the duties of his employment." (School Dis. No. 2, Oxford Tp., Butler Co. vs. Lewis N. Dillman, 22 O. S., 194.)

In view of the above decisions the teacher in question was qualified to contract with the said board of education even though she had not yet obtained the certificate to teach as required by law, provided she obtained a certificate before entering upon the duties of her employment. Inasmuch as she failed to obtain such certificate before entering upon her duties or as stipulated by the board of education, that she present proper qualifications on or before September 16, 1912, the contract of September 2, 1912, between said teacher and the board of education never became effective unless it be held that it took effect when Miss A. procured her certificate and continued to teach thereafter. The resolution of October 21, as quoted by you, if made with the intention you state, to wit, to pay this teacher for her work during September when she had no certificate, can be held to be nothing more nor less than an effort by the board to do that which the legislature undertook to prevent school examiners from doing when it enacted Section 7817, General Code, where it reads: "In no case shall the board hold any private examination nor antedate any certificate."

Miss A. should be paid, and I am sorry that I can see no way by which she may be paid for the month of September. However, she knew what the requirements of the law and her contract were, and it cannot be said that any advantage has been taken of her in any legal sense.

My conclusion, in answer to your question is, the board had a perfect right to make a contract on October 21st, but no right to make one by which payment should be made to Miss A. for her September labors.

Yours very truly,

TIMOTHY S. HOGAN,
Attorney General.

VILLAGE SCHOOL DISTRICT FORMED FROM SPECIAL SCHOOL DISTRICT—TIME OF ELECTION AND ORGANIZATION OF VILLAGE SCHOOL DISTRICT BOARD OF EDUCATION.

When a special school district becomes a village school district, either by the creation of a village having school property to the valuation of $100,000.00 or by vote of the electors when the valuation is less, the board of education of the special school district shall hold over until the board of education of the village school district is organized.

When the village school district board is elected at a special election, the board shall organize on the second Monday after the special election.

COLUMBUS, OHIO, December 17, 1912.

HON. F. R. HOGUE, Prosecuting Attorney, Jefferson, Ohio.

DEAR SIR:—Under date of December 10, 1912, you inquire:

> "In the township of Kingsville in this county there has existed for some time a special school district known as the North Kingsville school district, and recently the territory comprising this district has been incorporated into a village, and a special election had, at which a board of education was chosen. The question now arises as to when, if at all, the board of education of the special district shall turn over the property and control of the schools to the newly elected board of education."

Section 4687, General Code, provides:

> "Upon the creation of a village, it shall thereby become a village school district, as herein provided, and, if the territory of such village previous to its creation was included within the boundaries of a special school district and such special school district included more territory than is included with the village, such territory shall thereby be attached to such village school district for school purposes."

As submitted by you, I take it that the boundaries of the special school district and of the new village are identical. Even though they are not identical, the part of the special school district outside the village will by virtue of Section 4687, General Code, become attached to the village school district for school purposes.

Said Section 4687, General Code, provides that upon the creation of a village, "it shall become a village school district, as herein provided." Sections 4681 and 4682, General Code, prescribe when a village shall become a village school district. It is to the provisions of these sections that Section 4687, General Code, refers by the words "as herein provided."

Section 4681, General Code, provides:

> "Each village, together with the territory attached to it for school purposes, and excluding the territory within its corporate limits detached for school purposes, and having in the district thus formed a total tax valuation of not less than one hundred thousand dollars, shall constitute a village school district.''

This section has been constructed in case of Buckman vs. State, 81 Ohio St., 171, wherein it is held:

> "By force of the provisions of Section 3888, Revised Statutes, as amended April 2, 1906, and in effect April 16, 1906 (98 O. L., 217), each incorporated village then existing—April 16, 1906—or since created, "together with the territory attached to it for school purposes, and excluding the territory within its corporate limits detached for school purposes, and having in the district thus formed a total tax valuation of not less than one hundred thousand dollars," constitutes and is a village school district, no vote of the electors of such village being necessary to the creation or establishment of such district."

By virtue of this decision if the village, together with the territory attached for school purposes and excluding the territory detached for school purposes, has the necessary tax valuation it becomes a village school district without a vote of the electors.

Section 4682, General Code, provides:

> "A village, together with the territory attached to it for school purposes, and excluding the territory within its corporate limits detached for school purposes, with a tax valuation of less than one hundred thousand dollars, shall not constitute a village school district, but the proposition to dissolve or organize such village school district shall be submitted by the board of education to the electors of such village at any general or special election called for that purpose, and be so determined by a majority vote of such electors."

This section provides for villages which with the territory attached for school purposes and excluding that which is detached for school purposes, have a tax valuation of less than one hundred thousand dollars.

I assume that the school district now in question has the necessary tax valuation to constitute it a village school district without a vote of the electors as provided in Section 4681, General Code. If it has not such necessary tax valuation, it will remain a special school district unless the question of organizing a village school district has been submitted to the electors, and such election resulted favorable, as provided in Section 4682, General Code.

For the purposes of this opinion it will be necessary to assume that the district is a village school district.

The special school district has now been changed to a village school district by virtue of Section 4687, General Code. This section makes no provision as to the continuance in office of the board of education of the special school district.

Section 4686, General Code, provides:

> "When a village is advanced to a city, the village school district shall thereby become a city school district. When a city is reduced to a village, the city school district shall thereby become a village school district. The members of the board of education in village school districts that are advanced to city school districts, and in city school districts that are reduced to village school districts shall continue in office until succeeded by the members of the board of education of the new district, who shall be elected at the next succeeding annual election for school board members."

This section does not apply to your case. It governs when a city school district becomes a village school district, or vice versa. It makes no provision for a board of education when a special school district becomes a village school district.

The election of a board of education of a special school district is provided for in Sections 4736, et seq., General Code.

Section 4736, General Code, provides:

> "The board of education of a special school district shall consist of five members, elected at large at the same time as township officers are elected and in the manner provided by law."

Section 4737, General Code, provides:

> "At the first township election after the creation of a special district therein, a board of education shall be elected in such district, as herein provided, two members to serve for two years and three to serve for four years, and at the proper township election thereafter, their successors shall be elected for the term of four years."

These sections make no provision for the continuance in office of the board of education of a special school district when such district becomes a village school district.

Sections 4708, et seq., General Code, provide for the election of the members of the board of education of a village school district.

Section 4708, General Code, provides:

> "In village school districts, the board of education shall consist of five members elected at large at the same time as municipal officers are elected and in the manner provided by law."

Section 4709, General Code, provides:

> "At the first election in such district, a board of education shall be elected, two members to serve for two years and three to serve for four years. At the proper municipal election held thereafter, their successors shall be elected for a term of four years."

Section 4710, General Code, provides:

> "In villages hereafter created, a board of education shall be elected as provided in the preceding section. If such election is a special election, the members elected shall serve for the term indicated in such section from the first Monday in January after the last preceding election for members of the board of education, and the board shall organize on the second Monday after the special election."

It appears that in your case a special election was held in the new village, and that a board of education was elected thereat. This board of education was elected for the village school district. The special school district for which the former board of education was elected has been superceded by the village school district. The statutes do not authorize the members elected on the board of education of a special school district to act for a village school district, nor do the statutes continue such members in office and make them members of the board of education of the succeeding village school district.

As soon as the board of education which was elected for and by the village school district is organized, it may take charge of the property and affairs of the school district, and thereupon the board of education of the special school district will cease to exist.

Very truly,
TIMOTHY S. HOGAN,
Attorney General.

CHILDREN'S HOME—CHILDREN COMMITTED BY JUVENILE COURT UNDER CONTROL OF COURT AND NOT OF TRUSTEES

It is the intention of the juvenile court provisions to place children under the complete control of the courts and its provisions therefore, as to children committed by the juvenile court of the children's home, supersede the earlier statutes providing that children shall not be admitted to the children's home without approval of the trustees and that the trustees shall have full control of all children admitted to the home.

COLUMBUS, OHIO, December 9, 1912.

HON. HUGH R. GILMORE, Prosecuting Attorney, Eaton, Ohio.

DEAR SIR:—I beg to acknowledge yours of November 14, 1912, which is as follows:

> "Kindly give me your opinion as to the construction of Sections 1643, 1653, 3090 and 3093, General Code.
> "Section 1643 fixes the time that the jurisdiction of the court over a juvenile lasts.
> "Section 1653 provides that the judge may commit a dependent child to a county institution.
> "Section 3090 provides that children can only be admitted to children's home upon approval of trustees.
> "Section 3090 provides that children of the home are under full control of the trustees.
> "Query: Can the court, who has found a child dependent, commit such child to the children's home until the further order of the court, or during all the time such child remains under the jurisdiction of the court, without the approval of the trustees of such home, and without them exercising such control over said child as is provided by Section 3093.
> "Sections 1643 and 1653 having been passed subsequent to the other sections in question, I am of the opinion that they would prevail, and would only be an additional method of admission to the home. I believe that the court could be given full control over any child found to be dependent, and the trustees would have no power of control over such child, regardless of Section 3093, and it would be the duty of the trustees to keep and care for such child until such dependent child arrived at the age of 21, or until the further order of the court, regardless of the fact that another section (3093, G. C.) places inmates under the guardianship of the trustees until such inmates arrive at the age of 18, giving such trustees power to find homes for children.

"Not being able to agree with the trustees of the local children's home on this subject, I write for your opinion."

I am of the opinion that your construction of these sections of the law, as set forth in your above letter, is the correct one.

In construing statutes on a given subject, like the above, reference must be had to their history, date of passage and subject matter. They should be read in connection with each other, with a view of obtaining from the whole their true meaning as intended by the legislature.

By a careful observation of the above rules, as to the questions submitted herein, there is no apparent conflict. Sections 3090 and 3094, General Code, were substantially embraced in Sections 931 and 932, Revised Statutes. These provisions comprised part of the old law as to children's homes, in force before the year 1880. The old manner of receiving, controlling, discharging, etc., still prevails, as to all children who are not admitted through the channels of the courts. None of the rights, powers or duties of the trustees are curtailed as to that class of children.

On the 25th of April, 1904 (97 O. L., 561), the legislature framed a law entitled: "An act to regulate the treatment and control of dependent, neglected and delinquent children."

This created the juvenile court system, and was an advance movement in the care of Ohio's unfortunate children. This statute being somewhat imperfect and experimental, the legislature took up this progressive and humane subject, and through amendments from time to time, finally enacted substantially the present law, on April 23, 1908 (99 O. L., 192). This act embraces Sections 1643, 1653, General Code, cited by you.

The intention of the legislature was to vest in the courts the absolute control of all dependent children brought before them.

This is what Section 1643 provides, and this is true whether the child is in an institution or elsewhere. The court can remove it, and place it where the child's interests, as viewed by the court, require.

Section 1653 says the judge may commit a dependent child, under 17 years, "to the care of some suitable state or county institution, etc." Now a children's home is a suitable county institution, and I am of opinion that the officers of such home are bound to receive into said home, dependent children committed thereto by the judge, providing they are residents of the county, and free from disease or dangerous bodily infirmities. This is a cumulative means of admission, not provided in the old law, and is the outgrowth of the advanced grounds provided by the juvenile act.

The juvenile law and the sections above quoted, do not deprive the trustees of the home of the absolute control of the child while in the home, but they may not place the same out, indenture or adopt it, without the consent of the committing court. Neither can they discharge or return the child to parents or guardians without the court's consent.

The court retains jurisdiction of the child, and may discharge it any time, or change its location, or do any other thing for the child's good, as determined by the court, and the trustees are bound by the court's orders.

Yours very truly,

TIMOTHY S. HOGAN,
Attorney General.

BUILDING OF COUNTY COURT HOUSE—CHANGES MADE BY CONTRACTOR WITHOUT AGREEMENT WITH COMMISSION CANNOT BE RECOVERED FOR—COMMISSION MAY NOT PAY.

Section 2340, General Code, provides that changes or alterations of buildings constructed under Section 2333, et seq., General Code, cannot be made without agreement in writing between the commission and the contractor, as provided by Section 2340, General Code, and when improvements are made by a contractor without such agreement he cannot recover for such changes.

The commission is without power to allow compensation for such extras.

COLUMBUS, OHIO, December 19, 1912.

HON. J. W. SMITH, Prosecuting Attorney, Ottawa, Ohio.

DEAR SIR:—I have your letter of December 12, 1912, in which you inquire:

> "1. This county has just completed the building of a court house under the provisions of Section 2333, et seq., of the General Code. Can a claim by the contractor for extras be enforced against the county where such changes or additions were made without any agreement in writing between the commission and the contractor as provided for in Section 2340, of the General Code?
> "2. If the claim cannot be enforced against the county, would the commission be authorized in its discretion to allow such extras if they considered that such changes were necessary and that the county had received full value of such changes or extras?"

Section 2340, General Code, reads:

> "When approved by the building commission, plans, drawings, representations, bills of material, specifications of work and estimates of cost thereof shall be filed by the county auditor in his office and shall not be altered, unless such alteration shall first be drawn, specified and estimated as required by law for the original plans and approved by the building commission. No such changes shall be made until the price to be paid therefor shall have been agreed upon in writing between the commission and the contractor."

Attention is called to the sentence, "No such change shall be made until the price to be paid therefor shall have been agreed upon in writing between the commission and the contractor." Inasmuch as a "change" may not be made until a written agreement as above provided is entered into, it necessarily follows that payment cannot be made for a change in the plans or contract not so entered into.

I am further of the opinion that the commission is not authorized to make payment of claims which cannot be enforced against the county.

Yours very truly,

TIMOTHY S. HOGAN,
Attorney General.

COSTS OF TRANSCRIPT OF TESTIMONY BEFORE GRAND JURY, ORDERED BY PROSECUTING ATTORNEY CANNOT BE TAXED AGAINST DEFENDANT.

A transcript of testimony taken before the grand jury, ordered by the prosecuting attorney, under Section 13561, General Code, is not included in Section 1552, General Code, providing for the taxing as costs, transcripts made in criminal cases by request of the prosecuting attorney and there is no authority elsewhere in the statutes permitting the costs of a transcript so taken before the grand jury to be taxed against a defendant.

COLUMBUS, OHIO, December 19, 1912.

HON. THEO. H. TANGEMAN, Prosecuting Attorney, Wapakoneta, Ohio.

DEAR SIR:—In your letter of December 9, 1912, you inquire:

> "In your opinion, can the expense of making a transcript of testimony of witnesses before a grand jury, such transcript being ordered by the prosecuting attorney be properly included as part of the costs to be taxed against a defendant convicted of an offense in which the transcript of said testimony was used by the prosecuting attorney."

I think there is quite a broad distinction between cost of transcripts of testimony taken on a trial and before a grand jury.

Section 13561, General Code, reads:

> "The official stenographer of the county, at the request of the prosecuting attorney, shall take shorthand notes of the testimony and furnish a transcript thereof to him and to no other person, but the stenographer shall withdraw from the jury room before the jurors begin to express their views or give their votes on a matter before them. The stenographer shall take an oath, to be administered by the court after the grand jurors are sworn, imposing an obligation of secrecy to not disclose any testimony taken or heard except to such jury or prosecutor, unless called upon in a court of justice to make disclosures."

This section precludes transcripts being given to any person other than the prosecuting attorney, except the same be brought out on the trial, in which event the same becomes a part of the testimony going before the trial jury.

Section 1552, General Code, provides inter alia:

> "The compensation for transcripts made in criminal cases by request of the prosecuting attorney or the defendant and transcripts ordered by the court in either civil or criminal cases shall be paid from the county treasury and taxed and collected as other costs."

The language "or by the defendant" cannot be held to apply to transcripts of testimony taken before the grand jury, for the reason that under Section 13561, the stenographer is prohibited from making the same.

I think a fair construction of these statutes is to the effect that transcripts of testimony before the grand jury cannot be charged or taxed to the defendant as part of the costs of the case.

Section 1553, provides inter alia:

> "* * * * When the testimony of witnesses is taken before the grand jury, they shall receive for such transcript as may be ordered by the prosecuting attorney the same compensation per folio and be paid therefor in the manner herein provided."

That is clearly a provision for payment of expense of making a transcript of testimony before a grand jury, and does not make the same a part of the costs but says the same shall be paid in the manner "herein" provided, thus leaving the question to rest upon the provision of Section 1552, and from which it is reasonable to conclude that transcripts of testimony taken before the grand jury were not thought to be included in the language "transcripts made in criminal cases by request of the prosecuting attorney," as used in Section 1552.

There still remains to be considered what is meant by the language "paid as herein provided." An examination of the act of April 20, 1904, where the language was first used, will develop the fact that the language there used was,

> "When the testimony of witnesses is taken before the grand jury in any county by such stenographer, in pursuance of Section 7193, of the Revised Statutes, they shall receive the same compensation per folio for such transcript as may be ordered by the prosecuting attorney, and be paid therefor in the manner herein provided."

A careful examination of the act fails to disclose any provision for the payment of these transcripts, unless it be held to come within the terms of Section 5 (97 O. L., 178), where the language is identical with that now found in Section 1552, General Code.

The testimony taken before the grand jury is taken in the absence of the person charged, and he is precluded from being present.

I would be inclined to question the power of the legislature to charge such transcript to the party indicted, but until it does so in express terms, I will hold that the cost of such transcript cannot be charged to a defendant as part of the costs in a criminal case nor included in costs to be paid by the state in the event of conviction and sentence to the penitentiary.

Yours very truly,

TIMOTHY S. HOGAN,

Attorney General.

CHIEF OF POLICE—CANNOT BE SUMMARILY DISMISSED BY MAYOR —POWER OF SUSPENSION SUBJECT TO JUDGMENT OF CIVIL SERVICE—CLASSIFIED SERVICE.

Mayor of a city may not remove a chief of police and appoint a successor unless charges are filed and the same sustained by the civil service commission.

The words "as provided by law" as employed in Section 4484, of the General Code, establish a connection with Section 152, of the Municipal Code, which limits the powers of the mayor with reference to the chief of police to those of suspension for specified causes.

It is unquestionable that a mayor may suspend a chief of police only for specified causes and that such suspension is subject to the review and final judgment of the civil service commission. It is contrary to the intent of the legislature that the mayor's powers of suspension should be limited to certain specified causes and subject to supervision and review, whilst the same official's powers of summary removal should be unlimited, absolute and final. So long as the greater includes the less the victim of a minor wrong should not be accorded greater rights nor privileges than are granted to a like victim of a greater one."

Chiefs of police are now members of the unclassified service.

COLUMBUS, OHIO, January 3, 1912.

HON. A. E. JACOBS, City Solicitor, Wellston, Ohio.

DEAR SIR:—Your favor of December 28, 1911, received. You inquire whether I have issued an opinion in reference to the chief of police of cities being removed only for cause.

Your inquiry touches a subject of vast importance to the municipalities of the state, and I have, therefore, given the matter considerable investigation and careful consideration, arriving at the conclusion that the mayor of a city may not remove a chief of police and appoint a successor unless charges are filed and sustained by the proper tribunal as hereinafter pointed out.

It is sometimes advantageous to first state the position of the adverse side, and having at hand the brief of one of the leading law firms of the state in support of the claim that a mayor of a city may remove the chief of police and appoint a successor under the municipal code of the state, as amended, I shall now give copy of that brief, and then point out wherein I think the brief so fully covers the claim of those who take the view opposite from myself that I think little could be added to it on said proposition in favor of removal without cause.

COPY OF BRIEF.

"Can a mayor of a city remove a chief of police and appoint a successor under the Municipal Code of the state of Ohio, as amended?

"Section 129 of the Municipal Code, as originally enacted provided:

"The mayor shall be elected for a term of two years and shall serve until his successor is elected and qualified. He shall be an elector of the corporation. The mayor shall be the chief conservator of the peace within the corporation and shall have such other powers and perform such other duties as are conferred and required in Sections 1746, 1747 and 1748, of the Revised Statutes of Ohio; such as are provided in this act, and all other acts or parts of acts applying to all cities of the state and not inconsistent herewith.

"The directors and officers provided in this act shall have the exclusive right, subject to the limitations herein prescribed to appoint all officers, clerks and employes, in their several respective departments or offices, and shall likewise, subject to the limitations herein prescribed, have sole power to remove or suspend any of such officers, clerks, or employes.

"As the subject matter of Sections 1746, 1747 and 1748 is not in any wise germane to the proposition under consideration, we shall not give them consideration. There are, however, two distinctive features of the statute above that should be noted:

"First, the mayor has no power either of appointment or of removal; the power of appointment and removal or suspension being lodged exclusively in the directors and officers provided in the act.

"Second, the statute by its wording makes a distinction between 'removal' and 'suspension' of officers, and this is plain from the disjunctive 'or' in the last line 'power to remove or suspend.'

"Section 129, of the Municipal Code of Ohio, remained as given above until 1908, when it was amended to read as follows:

" 'The mayor shall be elected for a term of two years and shall serve until his successor is elected and qualified. He shall be an elector of the corporation. The mayor shall be the chief conservator of the peace within the corporation. He shall appoint and have the power to remove the director of public service, the director of public safety and the heads of the sub-departments of the departments of public service and public safety, and shall have such other powers and perform such other duties as are conferred and required in Sections 1746, 1747 and 1748, of the Revised Statutes of Ohio; such as are provided in this act, and all other acts or parts of acts applying to all cities of the state and not inconsistent herewith.

" 'The directors and officers provided for in this act shall have the exclusive right, subject to the limitations herein prescribed to appoint all officers, clerks and employes in their several respective departments or offices and shall likewise, subject to the limitations herein prescribed, have sole power to remove or suspend any such officers, clerks or employes.'

"Two very important features of this amendment are worthy of note:

"First, the power of removal of heads of sub-departments is vested in the mayor, and this power is an unqualified power in so far as any limitation prescribed by this section is concerned.

"Second, as in the original section the distinction between 'removal' and 'suspension' is preserved with the same clearness as in the original section. In fact, if there is any difference between the sections in this respect it is a clearer expression of legislative intent in the latter to emphasize the distinction between removal and suspension. In the latter section the disjunctive is used as in the former, and in addition to this the power of removal is vested in the mayor, but nothing is said about suspension in referring to his powers.

"The last section above quoted—Section 129—as amended (99 O. L., 562), in so far as the duties and powers of the mayor are concerned, is carried into the General Code of Ohio, as Sections 4249 and 4250.

"It now becomes necessary to inquire, first, as to the power of the mayor to suspend chiefs of the police and fire departments, and second, as to whether or not there are any other provisions that would limit the power of the mayor in removing such chiefs.

"As to the first, Section 152 of the original Municipal Code, prescribed his powers as follows:

"'The mayor shall have the exclusive right to suspend the chief of police department or the chief of the fire department for incompetence, gross neglect of duty, gross immorality, habitual drunkenness, failure to obey orders given him by proper authority or for any other reasonable or just cause. In the event that either the said chief of police or chief of the fire department shall be suspended as herein provided it shall be the duty of the mayor to forthwith certify such fact, together with the cause of suspension, to the board of public safety, which shall within five days from and after the date of the receipt of such notice proceed to hear said charges and render its judgment thereon, which shall be final.'

"The above section as amended is now Section 4381, of the General Code of Ohio; the amendment, however, not being of such a nature as to warrant quoting of the same herein.

"The feature of this statute that becomes important in this discussion is the setting forth the causes of suspension, whereas the statute on removal of chiefs by the mayor is silent as to cause.

"As to the second proposition as to whether or not there are other provisions of law that would limit the power of the mayor in the removal of chiefs, we observe that Section 162, of the Municipal Code, as amended (99 O. L., 567), provides:

"'Nothing in this act shall prevent the dismissal or discharge of any appointee by the removing board or officer, except the chiefs and members of the police and fire departments shall be dismissed only as provided in Section 152 of this act, and the appeal therein provided to the board of public safety shall be made to the civil service commission as is therein provided and under such rules as the commission may adopt.'

"The above section, which became Section 4484 of the General Code of Ohio, is amended in 102 O. L., 45, where it is amended and all reference to Section 152 omitted; and, since this amendment is important, it is essential that it be quoted in full.

"'Nothing herein shall prevent the dismissal or discharge of any appointee by the removing board or officer, except that the chiefs and members of the police and fire departments and the sanitary police shall be dismissed only as provided by law, and the appeal therefrom shall be made to the civil service commission under such rules as the commission may adopt.'

"This having been passed March 11, 1911, would seem on the face of it to settle this controversy, and that no chief could be dismissed without the power or right, rather of appeal. And it could not be contended within reason that the word dismissal did not include removal.

"However, Section 166, of the Municipal Code, as amended (99 O. L., 567), throws light upon this proposition:

"'No officer, secretary, clerk, sergeant, patrolman, foreman, or employe serving in the police or fire departments of any city of this state at the time this act goes into effect shall be removed or reduced in rank or pay, except in accordance with the provisions of Section 152, of this act.'

"This section limiting the power to remove to chiefs appointed after this act—1908—read in connection with Section 4249 and 4250, of the General Code of Ohio, would clearly indicate that the mayor has the power to remove chiefs appointed after the Paine law became effective.

"In fact there can be no question about this as the supreme court in the case of The State ex rel. vs. Roney, 82 O. S., 376, so decided.

"The only question that remains then is whether or not Section 4484, as amended (102 O. L., 48), and given above, limits the power and makes it necessary to effect the removal only in such manner as to give the removed chief the right of appeal.

"It would seem that the intent of such amended section is to so limit the power. But when from a review of all statutes governing this power and all authorities construing the same, we find that nowhere is this power limited to cause, it would be difficult to see just how an appeal could be effected.

"If the statutes giving the power to remove give the power unlimited and unqualified and without making it necessary to assign a cause, it is difficult to perceive just how Section 4484 could be followed; in other words without amending former sections giving this power, we submit that the provisions of Section 4484 in so far as removal of chiefs is concerned, is nugatory.

"Viewing the matter as we do we are of the opinion that the chief of police of this city appointed January 1, 1910, is subject to removal, and the newly elected mayor may remove and appoint a successor. (Signed.)"

It will be noted that counsel writing the brief say:

"As to second proposition as to whether or not there are other provisions of law that would limit the power of the mayor in the removal of chiefs, we observe that Section 162, of the Municipal Code, as amended (99 O. L., 567), provides:

" 'Nothing in this act shall prevent the dismissal or discharge of any appointee by the removing board or officer, except that chiefs and members of the police and fire departments shall be dismissed only as provided in Section 152 of this act and the appeal therein provided to the board of public safety shall be made to the civil service commission as is therein provided and under such rules as the commission may adopt. * *'

"The above section which became Section 4484 of the General Code of Ohio, is amended in 102 O. L., 45, where it is amended and all reference to Section 152 omitted; and, since this amendment is important it is essential that it be quoted in full.

'Nothing herein shall prevent the dismissal or discharge of any appointee by the removing board or officer, except that the chiefs and members of the police and fire departments and the sanitary police shall be dismissed only as provided by law, and the appeal therefrom shall be made to the civil service commission under such rules as the commission may adopt.'

"This having been passed March 11, 1911, would seem on the face of it to settle this controversy, and that no chief could be dismissed without the power or right, rather, of appeal. And it could not be contended within reason that the word dismissal did not include removal.''

It is here conceded, and I think properly, that the word "dismissal," as contained in the amendment, includes "removal." At first glance it might appear that because all direct reference to Section 152, of the Municipal Code, is left out of Section 4484, of the General Code, therefore, the provisions of Section 152 do not apply. In other words, that there is a link out of the chain connecting Section 4484 of the General Code with Section 152 of the Municipal Code, but such connection is nevertheless there. It will be kept in mind that the codifying commission sought to change the verbiage so as to express the laws in the best legal way, and in Section 4484 they, therefore, in lieu of the expression "shall be dismissed only as provided in Section 152 of this act" (to be found in Section 162 of the Paine law, which passed into Section 4484, General Code) used the expression "shall be dismissed only as provided by law." This makes the connection plain between original section 152, of the Municipal Code, which is as follows:

> "The chief of the police and the chief of the fire department shall have exclusive right to suspend any of the deputies, officers or employes in his respective department and under his management and control, for incompetence, gross neglect of duty, gross immorality, habitual drunkenness, failure to obey orders given him by the proper authority, or for any other reasonable and just cause.
> "If any such employe be suspended as herein provided, the said chief of police or the chief of the fire department, as the case may be, shall forthwith in writing, certify such fact, together with the cause of such suspension, to the mayor, who shall within five days from the receipt of the same, proceed to inquire into the cause of such suspension and render his judgment thereon and his judgment in the matter shall be final, except as otherwise provided in this act.
> "The mayor shall have the exclusive right to suspend the chief of the police department or the chief of the fire department for incompetence, gross neglect of duty, gross immorality, habitual drunkenness, failure to obey orders given him by the proper authority or for any other reasonable and just cause. In the event that either the said chief of police or chief of the fire department shall be suspended as herein provided, it shall be the duty of the mayor to forthwith certify such fact, together with the cause of such suspension, to the board of public safety, which shall within five days from and after the date of the receipt of such notice proceed to hear said charges and render its judgment thereon, which shall be final."

And its successor, Section 4381, General Code, which is as follows:

> "The mayor shall have the exclusive right to suspend the chief of the police department or the chief of the fire department for incompetence, gross neglect of duty, gross immorality, habitual drunkenness, failure to obey orders given him by the proper authority or for any other reasonable and just cause. If either the chief of police or chief of the fire department is so suspended, the mayor forthwith shall certify such fact, together with the cause of such suspension, to the civil service commission, who within five days from the date of receipt of such notice shall proceed to hear such charges and render judgment thereon, which shall be final."

On the one hand, and Section 4484, General Code, on the other hand, the latter section being as follows:

"Nothing herein shall prevent the dismissal or discharge of any appointee by the removing board or officer, except that the chiefs and members of the police and fire departments shall be dismissed only as provided by law, and the appeal therefrom shall be made to the civil service commission under such rules as the commission may adopt."

The latter section was amended by the act of March 15, 1911, the amended act being as follows:

"Nothing herein shall prevent the dismissal or discharge of any appointee by the removing board or officer, except the chiefs and members of the police and fire departments and of the sanitary police shall be dismissed only as provided by law, and the appeal therefrom shall be made to the civil service commission under such rules as the commission may adopt."

It will be noted that the last amendment does not affect the question at hand, because it simply adds to the provision of the statute the words "the sanitary police." This would seem to make the connection complete and to disclose that by legislative interpretation itself the action taken under the provisions of Section 152, of the Municipal Code, is one that may lead to permanent removal as well as temporary suspension. In other words, "suspend" is used in the broad sense in Section 152, of the Municipal Code, otherwise the word "dismissal" would have no place in either Section 4484, General Code, or the amendment thereto found in 102 O. L., 45.

Referring again to the brief of counsel, he says:

"However, Section 166, of the Municipal Code, as amended (99 O. L., 567), throws light upon this proposition:

"'No officer, secretary, clerk, sergeant, patrolmen, foreman, or other employe serving in the police or fire departments of any city of this state at the time this act goes into effect shall be removed or reduced in rank or pay, except in accordance with the provisions of Section 152 of this act.'

"This action limiting the power to remove to chiefs appointed after this act—1908—read in connection with Sections 4249 and 4250, of the General Code of Ohio, would clearly indicate that the mayor has the power to remove chiefs appointed after the Paine law became effective.

"In fact there can be no question about this, as the supreme court in the case of The State ex rel. vs. Roney, 82 O. S., 376, so decided."

The principle of the Roney case, in my judgment, settles the matter at hand against the right of removal of chiefs without cause, and counsel have put just the opposite construction upon it that it properly bears. The question in dispute there was as to when Section 162, of the Paine law, went into effect. It will be kept in mind also that Section 162, of the Paine law, is still in full force and effect, it passing into Section 4484, supra, and the latter as aforesaid into the act of March 15, 1911. The fourth syllabus in the Roney case is as follows:

"Between July 31 and January 2, 1910, the exercise of the power of appointment and of removal of the chief of police of a city was at the pleasure of the mayor, excepting that the appointee must be an elector of the city."

Judge Summers, speaking for the court, page 382 said:

"As already stated, the repeal of the sections providing for a board of public safety was in effect on August 1, 1909, so that there was no classified list from which to appoint a chief of police; and Section 162 providing that the chief of police shall be dismissed only as provided in Section 152 did not take effect until from and after January 1, 1910, and Section 186 does not apply to the chief of police because as to him special provision is made, so that on August 1, 1909, and from then until from and after January 1, 1910, the only limitation or regulation of the mayor's power of appointment and removal of a chief of police was that the appointee must be an elector of the city. This raises the questions, when did Section 162 take effect, and was the relator removed before the section took effect? The act declares that Section 162 shall take effect and be in force from and after January 1, 1910. The terms of office of mayors expired on December 31, 1909, and new terms commenced and new mayors came into office on January 1, 1910, but there is nothing in that fact or in the act to show that the legislature intended the act to take effect on that date, or that its selection of a date was not purely arbitrary, so that the question is, what is meant by the words from and after January 1, 1910? The word 'from' is a word of exclusion, and excluding January 1, the section was in effect on January 2. In some cases a distinction is made between computations of time from an act done and those from the date and day of the date, including the day of the act done in the former and excluding the day of the date in the latter. I. Lewis' Sutherland Statutory Construction (2 ed.), Section 185. In Minnesota the day of the passage is excluded where the act provides it shall take effect 'from and after its passage.' Parkinson vs. Brandenburg, 35 Minn., 294. And in Wisconsin, where an act takes effect from and after its passage and publication, the day of publication is excluded. O'Connor vs. Fon du Lac, 109 Wis., 253. In this state the distinction referred to in Sutherland seems to be made. A law made to take effect from and after its passage is in effect on the day of its passage. (State ex rel. vs. O'Brien et al., 47 Ohio St., 464), while in computing time under a statute making an act unlawful from a day named to another day named, the first is excluded and the last included. The State of Ohio vs. Elson, 77 Ohio St., 489. But whether or not the day of an act done should be included, there can be no doubt that the day named from which the act is to be in effect should be excluded, and that the section was not in effect until January 2, 1910.

"This brings us to the question whether the removal of the relator was valid. Section 168 having gone into effect after the mayor declared the relator removed but before notice to the relator of the removal. The removal without notice and without a hearing, being authorized at the time the power was exercised, was accomplished, although it was not complete until notice to the relator. It was held in Fitz's Case, Cro. Eliz. 12, that a sheriff is not discharged from his office until the new patent is shown to him, and in Boucher vs. Wiseman, Cro. Eliz. 440, that the office of sheriff continues until he has regular notice of his discharge. These cases and others are reviewed by Allen J., in Holley vs. Mayor, etc., of New York City, 59 N. Y., 166, and then says: 'Public policy and justice to the superseded official may require that he shall not be treated as a trespasser, and that his acts shall be valid until he has notice that his authority has been revoked, but further than this, no case has, as yet gone, so far as reported decisions have come under my notice.' In The State ex rel. Kuhlman vs. Rost, 47 La. An. 53-60, it is said by Nicholls, C. J.: 'If the governor had the power to remove him, there was no necessity for official notification to him of the removal to bring it about. The removal of itself operated a divestiture of the office, at least for the purposes of this suit. Had intermediate action taken place before notice in which Cambre had participated in ignorance of his removal, and were the validity of the action taken at that time and under these circumstances contested, a different question would arise.'

"From these considerations it follows that the removal of the relator and the appointment of the defendant was authorized, and the question as to whether the relator was an elector is immaterial."

It will, therefore, be seen that the court in reviewing its conclusion did so expressly on the ground that Section 162 was not in effect on the day that the removal of the chief of police of Marietta was made. This case, it seems to me, settles the matter at hand. It will be noticed that Judge Summers gives expression to the proposition that where special provision is made the general provisions do not apply. It certainly would be an unreasonable interpretation to hold that a mayor might remove a chief of police summarily, and without cause, and yet would be called upon to prove his case when suspending. It is true that ordinarily suspension means deprivation of the right to perform the duties of an office for a specified time, but in that case suspension is but a preliminary step and removable, and surely the power of suspension in its limited sense is absolute. That suspension may properly be followed by a judgment of suspension, reduction or dismissal from the department is disclosed by the legislature itself. Note the language of Section 4390, General Code, as found in 101 O. L., 297:

"If any such employe is suspended as herein provided, the chief of police or the chief of the fire department, as the case may be, forthwith in writing, shall certify such fact, together with the cause for such suspension to the director of public safety, who within five days from the receipt thereof, shall proceed to inquire into the cause of such suspension and render judgment thereon, which judgment, if the charge be sustained, may be either suspension, reduction in rank or dismissal from the department, and such judgment in the matter shall be final except as otherwise provided in this sub-division. Said director, in any investigation of charges against a member of the police or fire department shall have the same powers to administer oaths and to secure the attendance of witnesses and the production of books and papers as are conferred by this sub-division upon the mayor."

Note also Section 4487, of the General Code, found likewise in 101 O. L., 297:

"The director of public safety may suspend any of the employes of the police or fire department who are by law his exclusive management and control, for incompetence, gross neglect of duty, gross immorality, habitual drunkenness, failure to obey orders given him by the proper authority, or for any other reasonable and just cause, and shall forthwith notify such employe of the charges against him, and within five days thereafter, shall proceed to inquire into such charges and render his judgment thereon, which judgment, if the charge be sustained, may be either suspension, reduction in rank or dismissal from the department, and such judgment in the matter shall be final except as otherwise provided in this sub-division."

It seems to me that it is almost an absurd proposition to hold that a mayor may summarily remove a chief of police, and yet when it comes to suspension for a limited time require him to have as a ground therefor, and to be proven before the civil service commission, the fact that such chief is incompetent or has been guilty of gross neglect of duty, gross immorality, habitual drunkenness, failure to obey orders given him by the proper authorities or for any other reasonable or just cause. Can it be said for a moment that the legislature intended a locus penitentiae for a habitual drunkard? It might with reference to himself but certainly not with reference to the public. The very seriousness of the charges referred to in Section 4381 indicate the power of absolute removal through the mayor and the civil service commission for cause.

Quoting again from the brief of counsel:

> "The only question that remains then is whether or not Section 4484, as amended (102 O. L., 48), and given above, limits the power and makes it necessary to effect the removal only in such manner as to give the removal chief the right of appeal.
> "It would seem that the intent of such amended section is to so limit the power. But when from a review of all statutes governing this power and all the authorities construing the same, we find that nowhere is this power limited to cause, it would be difficult to see just how an appeal could be effected."

The answer to all of which is that Section 162, of the Paine law, has been in effect since January 2, 1910; that under its provisions the chief and members of the fire and police departments shall be dismissed as provided only in Section 152 of this act, and the appeal therein provided to the board of public safety shall be made to the public service commission as therein provided. Could anything be plainer than the language used therein, "shall be dismissed only as provided in Section 152?" The language now being, "shall be dismissed only as provided by law," the exact equivalent.

Quoting again from the brief of counsel:

> "If the statutes giving the power to remove give the power unlimited and unqualified and without making it necessary to assign a cause, it is difficult to perceive just how Section 4484 could be followed; in other words, without amending former sections giving this power, we submit that the provisions of Section 4484 in so far as removal of chiefs is concerned, is nugatory."

The helplessness of a court to declare nugatory the last act of a legislature when the same is not unconstitutional is so well stated by Judge Summers as to not merit discussion here. If there was anything contradictory between Section 4484, General Code, and the former statute, 4484, being the last act of the legislature, would control and would impliedly repeal the former section in so far as the former section was inconsistent, leaving it stand to give its full scope, except so far as supplanted by the latter section.

Some mention has been made as to whether or not the chief of police is within the civil service. In my judgment, that question is not material here. Suffice it to say that in the original Municipal Code, Section 149, it was expressly provided that the chief of police shall be appointed from the classified list of each department, but the statute was changed, and Section 149, of the Municipal Code, passed into Sections 4374 and 4375 of the General Code, and the provision that the chief of police should be appointed from the classified list was omitted. Now, however, by virtue of Section 4479, General Code, the chief of police is within the unclassified department of the civil service.

The foregoing makes very clear what will be hereinafter said and the hereinafter part is really all that need be gone into to decide the matter at hand.

By virtue of Section 129, Municipal Code, Vol. 96, the exclusive right of the appointment and removal of officers, clerks and employes was in the directors and officers mentioned in said Section 129. The last mentioned section was amended by Section 129, of the Paine law, and the power of the appointment and removal of the director of public service, the director of public safety and the heads of the subdepartments of public service and public safety, was lodged in the mayor, and was absolute, except as hereinafter stated.

Section 129, of the Paine law, passed into Sections 4249 and 4250, of the General Code, leaving the same absolute power, except this: Section 162, of the Paine law, being the same law that granted the power of appointment and removal in the mayor, says:

> "Nothing in this act shall prevent the dismissal or discharge of any appointee by the removing board or officer (leaving up to this point absolute the power of removal); except that the chiefs and members of the police and fire departments shall be dismissed only as provided in Section 152 of this act, and the appeal therein provided to the board of public safety shall be made to the civil service commission as is therein provided and under such rules as the commission may adopt."

So that Sections 4249 and 4250, of the General Code, must be read in connection with Section 162, of the Paine law, or Section 4484, of the General Code, as amended 102 Ohio Laws, 45.

Since writing the foregoing, I find an opinion of Judge Foran in the case of Collwitzer vs. The City of Cleveland et al., 11 N. P., n. s. 449, wherein Judge Foran says on page 457:

> "The two sections of the General Code, 4484 and 4485, seem to be carved out of this original Section 162, as amended, of the Municipal Code of 1902. This section will be found on page 567 of 99 O. L., and the following extract is significant: 'Nothing in this act shall prevent the dismissal or discharge of any appointee by the removing board or officer, except that the chiefs and members of the police and fire departments shall be dismissed only as provided in Section 152 of this act.' If the Paine amendment to the Municipal Code of 1902 is to stand by itself, the phrase 'Section 152 of this act' is incomprehensible, because the amendatory Paine act does not contain any such section. The language refers plainly and explicitly to Section 152 of the act of October 22, 1902, of the Municipal Code act of 1902; and the Paine act being merely amendatory of the act of October 22, 1902, Section 158, of the Municipal Code of 1902, as thus amended, clearly and equivocally extends the merit system to all departments of the public service, the sanitary police included."

So that by the language of Judge Foran, the Paine act is directly connected with the original Municipal Code act, of which it is amendatory, and all provisions are in pari materia and living statutes, except in so far as repealed.

Suspension and removal or dismissal are not equivalent terms, the distinction being that while each results in the same thing, the one is permanent while the other is merely temporary, and it would be doing violence to reason to hold that an officer who was temporarily dismissed should have rights not accorded to one from whom his office was permanently taken away. So long as the greater includes the less, the victim in a minor wrong should not be accorded greater rights nor privileges than are granted to a like victim of a greater one.

Very respectfully yours,

TIMOTHY S. HOGAN,
Attorney General.

TAXES AND TAXATION—SMITH ONE PER CENT. LAW—TAXING DISTRICTS—PROPORTIONATE SHARE OF SHORTAGE—DISCRETION OF BUDGET COMMISSION—INJUNCTIONS.

In general, a city or any other taxing district cannot be made to bear more than its proportionate share of a shortage made necessary to bring the total levy for all purposes within the limitations of the Smith one per cent. tax law. The abuse of discretion, however, on the part of the budget commissioners must be clearly apparent before the courts will substitute their judgment for that of the budget commission.

2. The direction of the supreme court in State vs. Sanzenbacher, stating that it is the duty of the budget commission in revising and reducing levies "to have due regard to the proportions of the total amount that each taxing board or taxing officers are authorized to levy" is not to be construed strictly. The words imply a discretionary power on the part of the commission.

3. A clear, arbitrary and considerable violation of this discretion may be remedied by injunction or mandamus.

COLUMBUS, OHIO, January 3, 1912.

HON. W. R. WHITE, City Solicitor, Gallipolis, Ohio.

DEAR SIR:—I beg to acknowledge receipt of your letter of December 21, 1911, submitting therein for my opinion thereon the following question:

> "Can an appeal of any kind be taken from the adjustment and certification of the budget to the auditor by the budget commissioners—especially if any improper adjustment has been made?
> "Can the estimates made by the city be cut down so as to take care of the shortage of the county generally—that is, can the city be compelled to bear more than its proportionate share of the shortage of the funds needed for county purposes?"

The duties of the budget commission are prescribed in Section 5649-3c, General Code, as enacted, 102 O. L., 271. This section provides in part as follows:

> "* * If the budget commissioners find * * the total amount of taxes to be raised therein * * to exceed such authorized amount in any * * taxing district in the county, the budget commissioners shall adjust the various amounts to be raised so that the total amount thereof shall not exceed in any taxing district the sum authorized to be levied therein. In making such adjustment the budget commissioners > may revise and change the annual estimates contained in such budgets, and may reduce any or all the items in any such budget, but shall not increase the total of any such budget, or any item therein. The budget commissioners shall reduce the estimates contained in any or all such budgets by such amount or amounts as will bring the total for each * * taxing district, within the limits provided by law.

> "When the budget commissioners have completed their work they shall certify their action to the county auditor, who shall ascertain the rate of taxes necessary to be levied upon the taxable property therein of such * * taxing district, returned on the grand duplicate, and place it on the tax list of the county."

In the case of State ex rel. vs. Sanzenbacher, No. 13118, recently decided by the supreme court of this state, the foregoing provisions were construed as follows:

> "* * and whenever such levy exceeds either of said limitations, then it is the duty of the budget commission to revise and reduce said levies in manner and form as directed and authorized by Section 5649-3c, General Code, as enacted June 2, 1911, having due regard to the proportions of the total amount that each taxing board or taxing officers are authorized to levy, so that such aggregate of all taxes for all purposes in each taxing district shall not exceed ten mills on the dollar exclusive of sinking fund and interest purposes as aforesaid, and shall not produce for the year 1911 a greater amount of taxes than levied in the year 1910, as provided in paragraph 3 of this entry * * *"

In holding that the budget commission in the discharge of its duties under the section above quoted must "have due regard to the proportions of the total amount that each taxing board or taxing officers are authorized to levy," the supreme court, in my opinion, did not intend to lay down a hard and fast rule to be binding upon the budget commission. Rather, in my opinion, the intention of the supreme court was to indicate what might in a given case amount to an abuse of the discretion reposed in the budget commission. That is to say, while the budget commission is not obliged to preserve strictly the proportions of Section 5649-3a in reducing the various budgets so as to bring the total within the limitations of the one per cent. law, yet any considerable or arbitrary deviation from these proportions will be presumed to be an abuse of discretion. Such an abuse of discretion may, of course, be remedied by proceedings of a judicial nature either in injunction or in mandamus directing the budget commissioners properly to exercise their discretion and enjoining them from making a certificate which will amount to an improper exercise of such discretion. Such a proceeding, in my judgment, would constitute the only "appeal" from the adjustment and certification of the budget by the commissioners to the auditors. It would seem to afford an adequate remedy available to any taxing district aggrieved by the action of the budget commissioners, and could be pursued in any case in which there has been a clear abuse of the discretion of the commissioners.

Yet it must not be forgotten that the power of the budget commissioners is, in every sense of the word, a discretionary power. The supreme court's decision is not, as I have already indicated, to be taken as laying down the principle that courts will substitute their discretion for that of the budget commissioners. So long as the courts cannot say there has been an abuse of discretion, the action of the budget commission will not, in my opinion, be interfered with.

The one per cent. law, so-called, does not provide for any direct appeal to the courts or to any other authority from the certification of the budget commissioners.

The remedy which I have described is the only one, in my judgment, available for the correction of an improper exercise of power on the part of the budget commission.

Your second question cannot be categorically answered. In general it may be said that a city or any other taxing district cannot be made to bear more than its proportionate share of a shortage made necessary in order to bring the total levy for all purposes within the limitations of the act. Yet if it does not appear that the failure of the budget commissioners to observe the proportions set forth in Section 5649-3a amounts to an abuse of discretion, the courts would not, in my judgment, interfere.

Very truly yours,
TIMOTHY S. HOGAN,
Attorney General.

CITY SOLICITOR—COMPENSATION AS PROSECUTOR—GERMANE OR INCIDENTAL DUTIES—OFFICES DEPENDENT AND INDEPENDENT—CHANGE OR INCREASE OF COMPENSATION DURING TERM OF OFFICE.

If the purpose has been set forth in the annual budget, and the appropriation is within the amount fixed by the budget commissioners as provided by Section 5649-3d, General Code, and the council has not fixed the allowance for compensation of a city solicitor for services performed as prosecutor in the police or mayor's court, it may fix such allowance during the incumbency of such offices.

The duties of the prosecutor are not so germane or incidental to those of city solicitor as to make a fixing of compensation for one of the offices a change or increase in the compensation of the other.

COLUMBUS, OHIO, January 12, 1912.

HON. JOHN E. SCOTT, City Solicitor, Salem, Ohio.

DEAR SIR:—Your favor of January 2, 1912, is received in which you ask an opinion of the following:

> "I was elected city solicitor at the last general election and am now serving as such solicitor. Has the council authority under Section 4307, General Code, to make an allowance to me, for prosecuting in the mayor's court, or would such action upon the part of council at this time be contrary to Section 4213, General Code? I will appreciate the favor very much if you will kindly favor me with a prompt reply. Council wishes to make the necessary appropriation for the present half year if permitted."

I assume from your letter that no compensation has ever been fixed or allowed for the service of the city solicitor, performed as prosecutor in the mayor's court.

Section 4213, General Code, provides:

> "The salary of any officer, clerk or employe shall not be increased or diminished during the term for which he was elected or appointed, and, except as otherwise provided in this title, all fees pertaining to any office shall be paid into the city treasury."

Section 4305, General Code, prescribes the general duties and powers of a city solicitor as follows:

> "The solicitor shall prepare all contracts, bonds and other instruments in writing in which the city is concerned, and shall serve the several directors and officers mentioned in this title as legal counsel and attorney."

Section 4306, General Code, as amended in 102 Ohio Laws 131, provides that the solicitor shall act as prosecutor in the police and mayor's court, as follows:

> "The solicitor shall also be prosecuting attorney of the police or mayor's court. When council allows an assistant or assistants to the solicitor, he may designate an assistant or assistants to act as prosecuting attorney or attorneys of the police or mayor's court. The person thus designated shall be subject to the approval of the city council."

Section 4307, General Code, as amended in 102 Ohio Laws 131 prescribes the duties of the prosecutor in the police and mayor's court, and the manner of fixing his compensation, as follows:

> "The prosecuting attorney of the police or mayor's court shall prosecute all cases brought before such court, and perform the same duties, as far as they are applicable thereto, as required of the prosecuting attorney of the county. The city solicitor or the assistant or assistants whom he may designate to act as prosecuting attorney or attorneys of the police or mayor's court shall receive for this service such compensation as council may prescribe, and such additional compensation as the county commissioners shall allow."

The question arises, are the offices of city solicitor and prosecuting attorney of the police and mayor's court, separate offices, filled by the same person, or are they separate functions of one and the same office?

Section 4305 prescribes the general duties and powers of a city solicitor. Section 4306 places a further duty upon him of acting as police prosecutor, where no assistant is assigned to that work. Section 4307 sets forth the duties of the prosecuting attorney of the police and mayor's court. These duties are different from those prescribed for the solicitor. Both positions pertain to legal services, that of solicitor has to do with civil and governmental duties, while that of prosecutor pertains to criminal law.

The salary of the solicitor, as solicitor, is fixed by council by virtue of the statute granting it the power to fix the salaries of city officers. The compensation of the solicitor, when he acts as prosecuting attorney of the police or mayor's court is allowed by council by authority of Section 4307, General Code, supra.

When an assistant performs the duties of prosecutor in the police or mayor's court there is no question but that the positions of city solicitor and of such prosecuting attorney are two separate offices. Does the rule change when the city solicitor performs the duties of both positions? In a great many of the cities the city solicitor can easily perform the duties of both positions. Rather than to have two officials in all cases it has been thought advisable to have the same person fill these positions where that is practicable. It will be further observed that the solicitor is made ex-officio prosecutor in the mayor's court.

The syllabus in case of Lewis vs. State, 11 Cir. Dec. 647, is as follows:

"The services performed on the decennial county board of equalization, under the Hendley-Royer law, by the auditor, county surveyor and county commissioners are without the scope of their official duties as such, and are not so 'incident' or 'germane' to the regular duties of the offices to which they have been respectively elected, as to make the provision for compensation contained in the Hendley law, in contravention of the act of the legislature, 94 O. L., 396, or of the constitution, Art. 2, Section 20."

On page 694, Jelke, J., says:

"An incident or germane duty cannot be larger and more important than the essential or prescribed duties of an office. It seems to us that this duty is so large and important that the legislature did wisely in not imposing it upon any county officer as such, and in confiding it to a separate board; and although the auditor acts as a member of the board, the board's action is so superior to the auditor, and controlling upon him is his official capacity as auditor, that his position on the board cannot be considered as an incident or germane duty.

"It was said in White vs. East Saginaw, 43 Mich., 567, 6 N. W., 86, in a somewhat different inquiry: 'The imposition of new duties not "incidental" or "germane" to the regular duties of his office upon an officer, does not change his office, but invests him with a new office.'

"We therefore are of opinion that the compensation of five dollars per day, provided for the auditor in the Hendley law is not in contravention of any other legislative provision or of the constitution.

"This conclusion follows with even greater certainty as to the surveyor and county commissioners."

In the lower court, in the same case, reported as State vs. Lewis, 10 Low. Dec. 537, the second and fourth syllabi read:

"The provisions of Section 20, Article 2, of the Constitution, that the salary of a county official cannot be increased during his term of office, apply only to compensation for duties germane to his office or incidental or collateral thereto, and do not apply to services rendered in an independent employment to which he is appointed by an act of the state legislature.

"Under the foregoing rules, a county surveyor who is required by law to perform the duties of a member of the county board of equalization, is entitled to compensation therefor, independent of and without regard to the compensation which he may receive as county surveyor."

On page 539, Dempsey, J., says:

"* * * A compensation has been fixed by law for his services as a member of the county board of equalization. There is no doubt that an officer who receives a stated salary cannot recover further compensation for extra duties imposed upon him by the legislature germane to his office, or even for incidental or collateral services which properly belong to or form a part of his main office. But this rule has its limit. As Judge Potts (24 N. J. L. R., 768) says:

"'It does not follow from the principles laid down that a public officer is bound to perform all manner of public service without compensation, because his office has a salary annexed to it, nor is he, in consequence of holding an office, rendered legally incompetent to the discharge of duties which are clearly extra-official, outside the scope of his official duty.'"

On page 540, Dempsey, J., further says:

"The rule, therefore, may be stated as follows: 'When a public officer is employed to render services in an independent employment not germane or incidental to his official duties, to which the law has annexed compensation, he may receive for such services additional compensation.'"

The same principle is applied in case of State vs. Coughlan, 18 Low. Dec., 289, and additional authorities are quoted in the opinion in support of the rule.

On page 296, Roberts, J., says:

"It was held by supreme court of California, Ellis vs. Tulare Co., 44 Pac. Rep. 575, that county surveyors and ex-officio road commissioners whose compensation as such supervisors is fixed by statute, are in addition entitled to pay as such supervisors."

Applying the rule laid down in the above cases. Are the duties of prosecuting attorney of the police or mayor's court "germane" or incident" to the duties of a city solicitor? They cannot be said to be incident, because the duties of one position are as important as the duties of the other. The duties of the prosecutor prescribed in Section 4307, General Code, are not in any way incidental to the duties prescribed in Section 4305, General Code, for the solicitor. The duties of each office pertain to a different and distinct phases of legal service. The word "germane" means closely related. Although the duties of each office are legal services, the duties of one office cannot be said to be closely related to the duties of the other. The respective duties grow out of entirely different transactions and concern a different set of persons.

The statute has recognized a distinction between the duties of each office. The duties are separately prescribed. Compensation for each position is fixed by authority of different statutes. The positions of solicitor and prosecutor in the police or mayor's court are separate and distinct offices, although they may be filled by the same person.

Coming then to the question asked. Council has fixed the salary of the solicitor in his capacity as solicitor, but has not fixed any allowance for his services as prosecutor. This latter position occupies the same situation as an office for which no compensation is fixed.

On page 558, in case of State vs. Kennon, 7 O. S., 547, Brinkerhof, J., says:

"Again, it is said that no fees, salary, or other compensation, is annexed to the discharge of the duties devolving by statute upon these defendants. This is true; and it is also true that compensation to them hereafter is nowhere by these statutes prohibited or precluded. That they shall not hereafter receive any compensation for services by them rendered and expenses incurred under these acts, is nowhere made a condition of their acceptance of the trusts reposed in them. There is nothing to prevent their applying to the legislature for compensation, nor to prevent the legislature from awarding it."

In case of State vs. Carlisle, 16 Low. Dec. 263, the syllabus reads:

> "While an officer cannot attack the constitutionality of a statute under which he has received compensation for his official acts, yet where such statute has been held unconstitutional in another proceeding and such officer enjoined from receiving the salary provided thereunder, he will be entitled to the compensation provided by an act passed to take the place of such unconstitutional statute; and such amendatory act will not come within the constitutional inhibition forbidding the legislature to change the salary of an officer during his existing term.

On page 266, Evans, J., says:

> "If there is no salary at all, or none definitely fixed, then legislation providing a salary during his term could not affect any change, for there is none existing to affect."

The rule is that where there is no compensation definitely fixed for an office the compensation therefor may be fixed during the incumbency of an officer.

It is my conclusion that where council has not fixed the allowance for compensation of a city solicitor for services performed as prosecutor in the police or mayor's court, it may fix such allowance during the incumbency of such officer.

In making the appropriation, however, for such allowance I desire to call your attention to the limitation contained in Section 5649-3*d*, General Code, 102 Ohio Laws, 272, which provides:

> "At the beginning of each fiscal half year the various boards mentioned in Section 5649-3*a* of this act shall make appropriations for each of the several objects for which money has to be provided, from the moneys known to be in the treasury from the collection of taxes and all other sources of revenue, and all expenditures within the following six months shall be made from and within such appropriations and balances thereof, but no appropriation shall be made for any purpose not set forth in the annual budget nor for a greater amount for such purpose than the total amount fixed by the budget commissioners, exclusive of receipts and balances."

The facts submitted do not permit me to pass upon this phase of the case.

Respectfully,

TIMOTHY S. HOGAN,

Attorney General.

DIRECTOR OF PUBLIC SERVICE—POWER TO CREATE SUBDEPARTMENTS AND OFFICES—POWER AND DUTIES OF COUNCIL—MUST FIX SALARIES OF APPOINTEES.

The director of public service is the sole judge of the number of subdepartments to be created and the number of superintendents, deputies and employes he shall appoint.

The council however, through the exclusive right given it under Section 4214 of the General Code, to fix by ordinance the salaries and compensation of such offices, has a power of check over the director of public service.

The council may be compelled by mandamus to provide a salary for each office or employe so appointed.

COLUMBUS, OHIO, December 29, 1911.

HON. CLIFFORD L. BELT, City Solicitor, Bellaire, Ohio.

DEAR SIR:—I am in receipt of your communication wherein you state:

> "Has the director of public service the right under Section 4327 of the General Code to arbitrarily establish subdepartments in the department of service and determine the number of superintendents, deputies, etc., therefor? If so, may the council be compelled by mandamus proceedings to provide a salary for each officer or employe appointed for such subdepartment?"

Section 4327 of the General Code is as follows:

> "The director of public service may establish such subdepartment as may be necessary and determine the number of superintendents, deputies, inspectors, engineers, harbor masters, clerks, laborers, and other persons, necessary for the execution of the work and the performance of the duties of this department."

Section 4214 of the General Code provides:

> "Except as otherwise provided in this title, council, by ordinance or resolution, shall determine the number of officers, clerks and employes in each department of the city government, and shall fix by ordinance or resolution their respective salaries and compensation, and the amount of bond to be given for each officer, clerk or employe in each department of the government, if any be required. Such bond shall be made by such officer, clerk or employe, with surety subject to the approval of the mayor."

You inquire whether a department of public service has the right under Section 4327 of the General Code to arbitrarily establish such subdepartments in the department of service and determine the number of superintendents, deputies, etc., therefor? The department of public service under authority of said Section 4327 of the General Code has the right to establish such subdepartments as he deems necessary and he, under authority of the said section, can determine the number of superintendents, deputies, inspectors, employes, harbor masters, clerks, laborers and other persons that he needs for the execution of the work and the performance of the duties of his department. However, the director of public service should be governed by the needs of the department in the establishment of subdepartments and the employment of persons to do the work enjoined upon him by the statutes. He should also keep in mind the principles of public economy and should only create departments and employ deputies and inspectors when the efficiency in his department demands it, and he should never arbitrarily create departments, appoint deputies, etc., just because he has the power so to do. However, he is the sole judge of the number of subdepartments he creates and the number of the superintendents, deputies and laborers, etc., he shall appoint; but council, under authority of Section 4214 of the General Code, has the exclusive right to fix by ordinance the salaries and compensation of each officer and employe selected by the director of public service, and in case the director of public service acts arbitrarily and without necessity, the council can act as a check upon the department by fixing the salaries commensurate with the service to be performed by any appointee by the department of public service.

However, in case the department of public service has created any office or department or has appointed any deputy or employed any person or persons for work in his department, it is mandatory upon council to provide a salary for each officer, department or employe appointed. In case of refusal mandamus will lie to compel council to act, but the amount to be paid to each officer or employe rests in the discretion of council.

Very truly yours,
TIMOTHY S. HOGAN,
Attorney General.

COMPENSATION OF ASSISTANT CLERK FOR SERVING NOTICES—APPOINTMENT BY CLERK—POWERS OF COUNCIL TO APPOINT—DUTY OF CITY AUDITOR.

An assistant clerk appointed by the clerk for the purpose of serving notices cannot be compensated by the council if the council had neither created the position of assistant clerk nor elected a person to fill such position, even though money had been appropriated by the council for that purpose.

The city auditor cannot honor a bill authorized by council drawn for the purpose of such compensation.

COLUMBUS, OHIO, November 27, 1911.

HON. C. W. JUNIPER, City Solicitor, Nelsonville, Ohio.

DEAR SIR:—I beg to acknowledge receipt of your letter of October 18th, requesting my opinion upon the following question:

"Section 52 of the Municipal Code provides:

"A notice of the passage of the resolution required in the last preceding section shall be served by the clerk of council or an assistant, upon the owner of each piece of property to be assessed in the manner provided by law for the service of summons in civil action, etc.

"Our council has fixed the salary of the clerk at $180.00 per year, payable monthly. There is nothing said about the allowance of fees for serving the notices above referred to. At the beginning of each fiscal half year, our council has been appropriating money to pay the clerk's salary for the half year, and has also made an appropriation under the subdivision of the clerk of council for serving notices. This was done this year, as well as formerly.

"Recently, our council passed resolutions for the improvement of two streets to be paid for by special assessments, and the clerk of council employed an assistant to serve the notices required in Section 52 of the Municipal Code. The bills for these services were presented to the council, allowed by them, and were ordered paid by an ordinance of council duly passed. The auditor is now holding up the bills as he is in doubt as to whether it is legal to pay them, as he has received a ruling from the state bureau of accounting, that it is not legal to pay such bills unless the council provides by ordinance that the clerk of council may employ an assistant to serve such notices."

Section 52 of the Municipal Code is Section 3818 of the General Code, and you have quoted enough of it for the purpose at hand.

Permit me to call your attention to the provisions of Sections 4210 and 4214, General Code, which are in part as follows:

"Section 4210. Within ten days from the commencement of their term the members of council shall elect a president pro tem., a clerk, and such other employes of council as may be necessary, and fix their duties, bonds and compensation * * *.

"Section 4214. Except as otherwise provided in this title council, by ordinance or resolution, shall determine the number of officers, clerks and employes in each department of the city government, and shall fix by ordinance or resolution their respective salaries and compensation * * *."

If the assistant to the clerk of council be regarded as an officer of council, then, he must be elected by council itself, and council cannot, in my opinion, delegate the authority to select him to the clerk. If, on the other hand, the assistant to the clerk be regarded not as an officer of council, but as an employe in a department of the city government, to wit: the legislative government, and the department of the clerk of council, then, his position must be created by ordinance of council.

It is insufficient authority, in my opinion, for the employment by the clerk of an assistant, for this or any other purpose, that the statute providing for the serving of notices refers to an assistant; and it is likewise insufficient authority for the employment by the clerk of an assistant that council has appropriated money for this service.

These points being established, it is my opinion that the auditor is within his duty in refusing to pay the bill in question, though approved by council.

I regret that what seems to be a meritorious case is complicated by a seeming technicality. The technicality, however, is one which has a necessary place in the scheme of government outlined in the Municipal Code, and is designed to guard against the real evils which might arise were it not therein incorporated.

Very truly yours,

TIMOTHY S. HOGAN,

Attorney General.

BOARD OF EDUCATION—RULES AND REGULATIONS GOVERNING TEACHERS—POWER TO REGULATE COMPENSATION OF TEACHERS—REDUCTION OF SALARY DURING ABSENCE.

In the exercise of the unlimited discretion which Section 7690, General Code, grants to the board of education in the matter of the fixing and payment of the salaries of its teachers, they may adopt a rule under which a teacher's compensation is reduced during absence for just cause.

COLUMBUS, OHIO, December 14, 1911.

HON. DAVID G. JENKINS, City Solicitor, Youngstown, Ohio.

DEAR SIR:—Your favor of October 24, 1911, is received in which you submit the following inquiry:

> "The rules and regulations of the local board of education contain the following provisions:
> "Section 35. In all cases of absence on the part of any one connected with the teaching force, a proportionate reduction in the absentee's salary shall be made, unless otherwise ordered by the board, except:
> "First. In case of death in immediate family (father, mother, wife, sister, brother or any blood relation living in the same home with the teacher and buried therefrom); no reduction shall be made for four days for such cause from date of such death, including Saturday and Sunday.
> "Second. When a teacher is called away from the building during a session of school on account of illness or other emergency of which the principal shall be the judge, he or she shall be entitled to his or her salary for such session.
> "Third. When, owing to sickness, a regular teacher is absent a portion of any school month in which there is a holiday authorized by the board of education, said regular teacher shall be entitled to his or her regular salary for such holidays.
> "When, owing to sickness, a teacher is absent, he or she may be allowed full pay for not to exceed three days in any one term. If the sickness is prolonged, and a substitute is provided, the teacher shall be entitled to half pay.
> "Allowance shall in no case be for more than four weeks. The teacher must, in case of absence for more than a week, furnish a physician's certificate that such absence was caused by sickness.
> "There are no provisions in conflict with the above.
> "The local board desires an opinion as to whether said provisions are in conflict with law in that payment of salaries is made to teachers when no service is performed.
> "Section 7690, General Code, providees that 'each board shall fix the salaries of all teachers, which may be increased, but not diminished during the term for which the appointment is made.' I find no other limitations applicable other than provisions that boards must pay teachers for time lost by reason of epidemics and for times spent at institutes. Section 7690 above quoted seems to me to be of sufficient breadth to validate the local rule I have quoted."

Section 7690, General Code, from which you have quoted, provides as follows:

> "Each board of education shall have the management and control of all of the public schools of whatever name or character in the district. It may appoint a superintendent of the public schools, truant officers, and janitors and fix their salaries. If deemed essential for the best interests of the schools of the district, under proper rules and regulations, the board may appoint a superintendent of buildings, and such other employes as it deems necessary. Each board shall fix the salaries of all teachers, which may be increased, but not diminished during the term for which the appointment is made. Teachers must be paid for all time lost when the schools in which they are employed are closed owing to an epidemic or other public calamity."

It is a rule of law that an officer who is unable to perform the duties of his office on account of sickness, is nevertheless entitled to the salary incident to such office. The salary of a teacher is based upon the amount of service performed, and he is an employe and not an officer.

In case of Murphy vs. Board of Education, 84 N. Y. Supp. 380 (App. Div. of Sup. Ct.), rules and regulations similar to those of which you inquire, were adjudicated upon. The syllabi read:

> "Under Greater New York Charter, Section 1103 (Law 1897, p. 399, c. 378) authorizing the school boards in the respective boroughs in appoint all teachers and other members of the teaching staff on the nomination of the board of superintendents, etc., the position of a teacher in the school is that of an employe, resting on contract of employment, and not that of an officer of the city.
> "Greater New York Charter, Section 1070 (laws 1897, p. 384, c. 378) authorizes the board of education to enact by-laws, rules and regulations for the disbursement of the school funds, and Section 1100 provides that the school board in each borough shall by its by-laws provide for the payment of salaries of school teachers. Section 1091 p. 394, gives each school board power to adopt by-laws regulating the exercise of all powers vested in it, and regulating the exercise of powers by teachers, and for the regulation of all disbursements of the school funds. By laws 1901, p. 421, c. 186, a teacher's retirement fund was created, into which 'all money, pay or salary forfeited or withheld from any teacher for or on account of absence from duty for any cause was to be paid.' Held, that under such sections a borough school board has power to enact a by-law providing for the deduction of one thirtieth of a teacher's monthly pay for each day of absence without leave, and that the amount so deducted should be paid to such retirement fund."

On page 382, of the opinion, Ingraham, J., says:

> "* * * A teacher being an employe and his relation to the appointing power contractural, nothing stands in the way of a revisal of his compensation by the authorities having power to fix the salary to be paid the teacher at any time. The salary of an employe not being an incident to the office, but payment for services rendered, there would certainly be nothing illegal in a provision changing the condition under which the salary is paid, so that it is payable only for the period for which the services are actually rendered. The school board, therefore, has the power to reduce the salary of a teacher by providing that he is to receive no compensation for the days on which he is absent without leave. It is undoubtedly true that until the salary is reduced, or the employe is discharged, he is entitled to receive the compensation agreed upon."

In this case the question was as to the right of the board of education to make reduction for the time a teacher was absent from duty without leave. While in your inquiry the board has passed a rule to make reduction in pay for absence from duty, except in certain cases, when for a certain length of time no reduction is made, and reduction of one-half of the salary is made when absent on account of sickness for not more than four weeks. It evidently was urged in the above case that the teacher was entitled to pay during absence for cause, and that the board could make no reductions therefor. The right of the board to make such reduction was recognized. The court further says, that until the salary is reduced or the employe is discharged, he is entitled to receive the compensation agreed upon.

In case of Loehr vs. Board of Education, the second syllabus reads:

"In the absence of a constitutional or statutory limitation, boards of education may exercise an unlimited discretion both in the employment and dismissal of teachers, and in their transfer and assignment."

Section 7690, General Code, grants to the board of education the management and control of all public schools; such board may make proper rules and regulations governing the appointment of superintendents of buildings and other employes. Each board is authorized to fix the salary of all teachers.

This statute grants to the board of education complete control over the fixing and payment of the salaries of its teachers. The board, under its provisions, is authorized to make rules and regulations, and to enter into contracts, for the employment of teachers. The rules and regulations which you submit are in my opinion a reasonable exercise of the discretion placed in the board of education for the government of the schools and of its right to fix the salaries of the teachers.

Respectfully,
TIMOTHY S. HOGAN,
Attorney General.

DIRECTOR OF PUBLIC SERVICE—SALARY—COMPENSATION FOR ADDITIONAL DUTIES — SUPERINTENDING STREET WORK, WATERWORKS, AND COLLECTING WATER RENTS—INITIATIVE AND REFERENDUM ACT—SEMI-ANNUAL APPROPRIATION ORDINANCE AS EMERGENCY MEASURE.

If the director of public service does not create subdepartments and subofficials as provided for in Section 4326 of the General Code, he is obliged to perform the duties himself. These duties, in such cases cannot be provided for as "expenses" of the various departments, as the provisions were intended to apply to such expenses as were incurred by the director in the appointment of the necessary officers and agents under Section 3956, General Code.

An ordinance fixing the compensation and salary of the director of public service, his foreman and clerks is an ordinance involving the expenditure of money and therefore, remaining inoperative for 60 days, cannot be deemed an emergency measure to take effect immediately.

The semi-annual appropriation ordinances do not come within Sections 2 or 3 of the initiative and referendum act.

COLUMBUS, OHIO, January 18, 1911.

HON. W. J. TOSSELL, City Solicitor, Norwalk, Ohio.

DEAR SIR:—Under date of December 15th you submitted for my consideration several inquiries which I shall take up in the order in which you submitted them.

Your first inquiries:

> "May a small city, of the size of Norwalk, for a fixed salary impose upon its director of public service, in addition to performing the statutory duties of his office, the duty of personally superintending street work, superintending municipal water works and collecting the water rents thereof; and if so apportion his salary to the service and waterworks funds in proportion to the services rendered each?"

The duties of director of public service are prescribed in Section 4326 of the General code as follows:

> "The director of public service shall manage municipal water, lighting, heating, power, garbage and other undertakings of the city; parks, baths, play grounds, market houses, cemeteries, crematories, sewage disposal plants and farms, and shall make and preserve surveys, maps, plans, drawings and estimates. He shall supervise the construction and have charge of the maintenance of public buildings and other property of the corporation not otherwise provided for in this title. He shall have the management of all other matters provided by the council in connection with the public service of the city."

It will be seen, therefore, that the law imposes upon the director of public service in the first instance the duty of managing the municipal water works.

Section 4327 of the General Code authorizes the director of public service to establish such subdepartments as may be necessary and to determine the number of superintendents, etc.

As I view this provision of the law it is purely optional with the director of public service as to whether he will establish any subdepartments or provide for any superintendents. Therefore, I am of the opinion that such director of public service if he decides not to appoint a superintendent of the municipal waterworks should perform the duties of such office himself.

Section 3956 of the General Code provides:

> "The director of public service shall manage, conduct and control the waterworks, furnish supplies of water, collect water rents, and appoint necessary officers and agents."

Section 3958 of the General Code provides that for the purpose of paying the expenses of conducting and managing the waterworks, such director may assess and collect from time to time a water rent of sufficient amount in such manner as he deems most equitable upon all tenements and premises supplied with water.

Section 3959 of the General Code provides for the disposition of the surplus after paying the expenses of conducting and managing the water works.

Section 3960 of the General Code provides:

> "Money collected for waterworks purposes shall be deposited weekly with the treasurer of the corporation. Money so deposited shall be kept as a separate and distinct fund. When appropriated by council, it shall be subject to the order of the director of public service. Such director shall sign all orders drawn on the treasurer of the corporation against such fund."

The director of public service, as I view it, is primarily a city officer generally for the reason that Section 4323 of the General Code states that in each city there shall be a department of public service which shall be administered by a director of public service.

Under the provisions of Section 3959 of the General Code it is made a part of his duties as such city officer to manage, conduct and control the waterworks, and, therefore, if he should personally conduct and control the waterworks he would do so as a part of his general duties as such director of public service, and should be paid from the salary appropriated for such office, and, consequently, in so performing such duties as a part of his general duties there would be no expense of conducting and managing the waterworks as I view it, within the meaning of such words, in Section 3958, General Code, supra. The words "for the purpose of paying the expenses of conducting and managing the waterworks" would seem to me to mean such expenses as are created by the public service director himself by the appointment of the necessary officers and agents under Section 3956 of the General Code, supra.

Under Section 3960 of the General Code, supra, the moneys derived from water rents are kept as a separate and distinct fund, and when appropriated by council are subject to the order of the director of public service who shall sign all orders drawn on the treasury against such fund. This method of using the water rents would seem to me to mean solely that such expenses of conducting and managing the waterworks other than any part of the salary of the service director, as a city officer, shall be paid from the water rents, but I do not believe that a part of such water rents may be used in the payment of the salary of the director himself.

Furthermore, I do not believe that the director can appoint himself to any office which he has created by virtue of Section 4327 of the General Code, as the duty in the first instance devolves upon him under his general power as city officer, and it is only when he does establish subdepartments that appointments can be made thereto.

You next inquire:

> "May not an ordinance fixing the compensation and salary of a director of public service and his foreman and clerks, to be passed by three-fourths of the members of a council taking office January 1, 1912, be deemed an emergency measure and take effect immediately upon passage, subject however to subsequent referendum."

While the initiative and referendum law is not specific in its provisions, but very general, yet I am of the opinion that an ordinance fixing the compensation and salary of the director of public service, his foreman and clerks, being an ordinance involving the expenditure of money and therefore remaining inoperative for sixty days cannot be deemed an emergency measure, and take effect immediately upon passage. Such conclusion I reached in an opinion rendered to Hon. H. W. Houston, city solicitor, Urbana, Ohio, under date of December 29, 1911, and herewith enclose copy of such opinion.

You next inquire:

> "May not the semi-annual appropriation ordinance be declared and passed as an emergency measure?"

I have heretofore held in an opinion to Hon. C. C. Middleswart, solicitor for the village of Matamoras, Marrietta, Ohio, under date of November 3, 1911, that such an ordinance is not one involving the expenditure of money as contemplated in the initiative and referendum act since although such an ordinance divides the money in the general treasury into various funds and sets them apart for the various departments of the municipal government, yet it does not of itself expend the money. Therefore, it is not within the second paragraph of Section 2 of the initiative and referendum act as found in 102 Ohio Laws 522, nor do I believe that it is within the first paragraph of such section for the reason that it cannot be considered as within the wording "any other power delegated * * * by the general assembly." My reason for coming to this conclusion is that Section 3797 of the General Code which provides for semi-annual appropriations states that council shall make appropriations for each of the several objects for which the corporation has to provide. In other words, it seems to me that it is a duty devolving upon council rather than a power given it.

Section 3 of the initiative and referendum act provides:

> "All other acts of city council not included among those specified in Section 2 of this act, shall also remain inoperative for sixty days after passage and may be submitted to popular vote in the manner herein provided, except that any act, not included within those specified in Section 2 of this act, as remaining inoperative for sixty days, and which is declared to be an emergency measure, and receiving a three-fourths majority in council of such municipal corporation may go into effect immediately and remain in effect until repealed by city council or by direct vote of the people as herein provided."

Having stated my opinion to be that the semi-annual appropriation ordinance is not within the provisions of Section 2 of the initiative and referendum act it becomes necessary to consider whether it was within Section 3 as above set forth.

I am inclined to the view that it is not for the reason that if it were considered as an act of a city council not included among those specified in Section 2 it would remain inoperative for sixty days after the passage of such ordinance unless it were declared to be an emergency measure. If it were declared to be an emergency measure it would go into effect immediately and remain in effect until repealed by the city council or direct vote of the people. Being an ordinance in full force and effect the repealing of such ordinance would have to be proposed to the city council by thirty per cent. of the qualified voters and submitted to the council for its action at its next meeting, and if within sixty days after such submission such proposed ordinances, repealing the semi-annual appropriation ordinance, was not passed it would be the duty of the clerk to certify said proposed ordinance to the officer having control of elections who shall cause the question of the passage of such ordinance to be submitted to vote at the next regular election, which if the vote be favorable shall become a valid ordinance from the date of the determination of the vote. This would continue the semi-annual appropriation ordinance in effect during the entire life of such ordinance, and, therefore, it would seem to me such ordinance could not be considered as within the third section of the initiative and referendum act.

You next inquire:

"Do ordinances involving emergency measures require publication?"

Section 4227 of the General Code provides that ordinances of a general nature, or providing for improvement, shall be published before going into operation.

Section 3 of the initiative and referendum act provides that an emergency measure may go into effect immediately.

Although Section 3 provides, as above, that an emergency measure may go into effect immediately, I am inclined to the opinion that such word "immediately" is used in contradistinction to the provision that ordinances shall remain inoperative for sixty days after passage, and that, therefore, they should be published in the same manner as has been done prior to the passage of the initiative and referendum act. Especially is this true when we consider that the object of the referendum is that the electors in a municipality may, should council pass ordinances, cause the same to be referred to them for approval or disapproval. The object of publication is to advise the electors of the municipality of ordinances and resolutions passed by council, and should an emergency ordinance of a general nature or providing for improvement, wherever it is of that nature, be passed, the publication thereof would, in many instances, be the only knowledge that the electors could have that such ordinance had been passed.

Therefore, I am of the opinion that any ordinance of a general nature or providing for improvement, passed as an emergency ordinance, would require publication.

You next inquire:

"In view of the initiative and referendum act when is the proper time, if any, for publication of municipal ordinances generally and not emergency measures?"

In this connection I herewith enclose you copy of opinion heretofore rendered by me on that subject to Hon. Elmer T. Boyd, city solicitor of Marion, Ohio, under date of October 4, 1911.

Very truly yours,

TIMOTHY S. HOGAN,
Attorney General.

CIVIL SERVICE—CHIEFS OF POLICE AND FIRE IN CITIES—CHANGE OF VILLAGE TO CITY— APPOINTMENT BY MAYOR—OTHER EMPLOYES—CLASSIFIED AND UNCLASSIFIED SERVICE—SCHOOL DISTRICT AND EMPLOYES OF SCHOOL BOARD.

The chief of police and the chief of the fire department of cities are appointed by the mayor and need not be selected from the classified service and such appointments are not subject to civil service regulations.

It is the intention of Section 3499, General Code, when a village becomes a city that a complete new organization be effected. The positions under the village government are not the same positions as those under the city government though their duties be substantially the same. Under this rule, members of the fire and police departments other than the chiefs thereof appointed under the village government, are not entitled, without examination, to the same position in the city government. Such positions enter into the classified service.

The same principle governs under Section 4686, General Code, when a village school district becomes a city school district, with regard to employes of the school board whose positions under the new district are included within the classified service.

COLUMBUS, OHIO, January 9, 1912.

HON. ELMER E. BODEN, City Solicitor, Barberton, Ohio.

DEAR SIR:—Your favor of January 2, 1912, is received, in which you make inquiry of this department as follows:

> "Will you kindly give me your opinion as to the following matters pertaining to the new city government of the city of Barberton, Ohio:
> "1. The chief of police and the chief of the fire department come within the unclassified service of the civil service. Do these officers pass the civil service examination and appear upon the registered list of the civil service commission, or how are these appointments made?
> "2. Must the members of the first police department and fire department under the city government (except the chiefs) be appointed from the registered list of the civil service commission, or would it be possible to provide a saving clause in the ordinance organizing said departments whereby the old members would hold over without examination?
> "3. In relation to the school board, will the present employes, such as janitors, etc., come under the civil service rule without examination, or must they take the examination and be placed upon the registered list? If they must take the examination, would this also apply to men who have been in the service continuously since a time prior to the enactment of the civil service rule (1902)?"

Barberton is one of those municipalities which passed from a village to a city by the recent federal census.

Your first inquiry covers the appointment of the chiefs of the police and fire departments.

Section 4479, General Code, divides the employes of a city into classified and unclassified service as follows:

"The civil service shall be divided into classified and unclassified service. The unclassified service shall include the positions of officers elected by the people or appointed to fill vacancies in offices filled by popular election, or whose appointment is subject to confirmation by the council, or who are appointed by any state officer or by any court, employes of the council, persons who by law are to serve without remuneration, persons who are appointed to positions requiring professional or technical skill as may be determined by the civil service commission; persons appointed or employed to give instruction in any educational institution, persons appointed by any board or officers supervising elections; persons who as members of a board or otherwise, have charge of any principal department of the government of any city, the head or chief of any division or principal department relating to engineering, waterworks, street cleaning, of health, the chief of the police department, the chief of the fire department, the superintendent of any workhouse, house of refuge, infirmary, or hospital, the librarian of any public library, private secretaries, deputies in the office of the city auditor and city treasurer, unskilled laborers, and such appointees of the civil service commission as they may by rule determine. The classified service shall comprise offices and places not included in the unclassified service."

Section 4480, General Code, prescribes for examinations, as follows:

"Applicants for admission into the classified service shall be subjected to examination which shall be competitive, public and open to residents of the city, with such limitations as to age, residence, health, habits and moral character as the commission prescribes. The commission shall prepare rules and regulations adopted to carry out these purposes with reference to the classified service of the city, which rules and regulations shall provide for the grading of offices and positions similar in character in groups and divisions so as to permit the filling of offices and positions in the higher grades as far as practicable through promotions, and for public examinations to ascertain the fitness of applicants for appointment in the classified service. Such applicants shall take rank upon the register as candidates in the order of their relative standing without reference to priority of examination. The result of the examination shall be accessible to all persons."

The chief of the police department and the chief of the fire department are specifically placed in the unclassified service by Section 4479, supra. Section 4480, General Code, prescribes that applicants for admission to the classified service shall be subject to examination. As the chiefs of the police and fire departments are not in the classified service, they are not required to take an examination for appointment.

Section 4250, General Code, provides:

"The mayor shall be the chief conservator of the peace within the corporation. He shall appoint and have the power to remove the director of public service, the director of public safety and the heads of the subdepartments of the departments of public service and public safety, and shall have such other powers and perform such other duties as are conferred and required by law."

The police and fire departments are subdepartments of the department of public safety. The mayor has the appointing power of the heads or chiefs of these departments.

Section 149 of the Municipal Code, 96 Ohio Laws 70, contained this provision:

> "The chief of police shall be appointed from the classified service of such department."

Section 150 of the Municipal Code, 96 Ohio Laws 70, contained this provision:

> "The chief of the fire department shall be appointed from the classified list of such department."

In carrying these sections into the General Code these provisions were omitted? The statutes do not prescribe any restrictions upon the mayor requiring him to make such appointments from the classified service.

The chief of police and the chief of the fire department are appointed by the mayor and such appointments are not subject to civil service rules and regulations and need not be made from the classified service.

Your next inquiry is as to the right of the incumbents of certain offices, who were appointed under the village form of government, to hold over without examination, when such village passes to a city by reason of increase in population, and such positions pass into the classified service of such city.

The statutes which placed certain positions in the classified service did not require an examination of the incumbents of such positions and such incumbents held their positions without examination.

On page 10 of the opinion in the case of State vs. Wyman, 71 O. S., 1, Summers, J., says:

> "It seems to have been the purpose of the legislature in the enactment of the code, so far as possible, to provide that officers and employes in the police and fire departments, in office when the new code went into effect, should not be disturbed in their office or employment, and that thereafter these departments should be under the so-called merit system, and that appointments thereto could be made only in the manner provided by the code. But it was not the intention of the legislature that appointments to any vacancies that might exist in any of the offices or employments in the classified service could be made only from the list of incumbents of offices and employments in the classified service. It is not difficult to understand why the legislature, in adopting the merit system, should provide that those already in office might remain without examination, but it does not appear why it also should be provided that a vacancy in the highest office could be filled only from their number."

The fourth syllabus in case of State vs. Hall, 15 Cir. Dec. 361, is as follows:

> "Section 159 et seq. (1536-695 Rev. Stat.), requiring every applicant for appointment to the new police department to submit to an examination by the board of public safety, has no application to those who were in office or members of the old department at the time the new Municipal Code went into effect."

These authorities cover positions which were filled under the city form of government, and where such positions were afterwards placed in the classified service by statute.

That is not the situation which is now presented. The positions now occupied by the members of the police and fire departments, were created and filled under the village form of government, and are village positions, although the incumbents are now acting as such officers for the city. The positions which are to be created and filled are city positions and are to be filled under the city form of government. Can a village officer, who holds over, be considered as an incumbent of a similar city position?

Section 3499, General Code, prescribes as follows:

> "Officers of a village advanced to a city, or of a city reduced to a village, shall continue in office until succeeded by the proper officers of the new corporation at the next regular election, and the ordinances thereof not inconsistent with the laws relating to the new corporation shall continue in force until changed or repealed."

The officers of the village are continued in office "until succeeded by the proper officers of the new corporation at the next regular election." In other words the old form of government is continued until the new form of government can be put in operation. The statute calls the city a "new corporation." It further provides that the old officers shall hold over until succeeded by the proper officers. It is evident from these provisions that it was the intent that a complete new organization should be effected. The positions under the village form of government, although similar in name and having similar duties, are not the same positions as those under the city form of government. One is a village office, the other is a city office.

It is my conclusion, therefore, that the members of the fire and police departments appointed under the village form of government, are not entitled without examination to the same positions in the city form of government, where such village passes to a city and such city positions are in the classified service. Neither can council provide a saving clause in the ordinance organizing such departments whereby the old members would be entitled to the positions without examination.

Examinations should be held for applicants for these positions and they should be filled in accordance with the civil service rules and regulations.

Your third question covers the civil service in schools. As in the fire and police departments, civil service is applicable only to cities and to city school districts. The civil service was not extended to city schools until April 30, 1910, when Sections 7690-1, et seq., General Code, were enacted as shown in 101 Ohio Laws, 154.

Section 4686, General Code, provides for the advancement of a village school district to a city school district as follows:

> "When a village is advanced to a city, the village school district shall thereby become a city school district. When a city is reduced to a village, the city school district shall thereby become a village school district. The members of the board of education in village school districts that are advanced to city school districts, and in city school districts that are reduced to village school districts shall continue in office until succeeded by the members of the board of education of the new district, who shall be elected at the next succeeding annual election for school board members."

The provisions as to continuance in office applies to the members of the board of education only. This section also refers to the city district as a "new district."

Section 7690-5, General Code, 101 Ohio Laws, 155, provides:

> "No officer or employe within the classified service who shall have been appointed under the provisions of this act or who shall have been continuously in the employment of the board of education for a period of three years shall be removed, reduced in rank or discharged except for some cause relating to his moral character or his suitableness and capacity to perform the duties of his position, though he may be suspended from duty without pay for a period of not exceeding thirty (30) days pending the investigation of charges against him. Such cause shall be determined by the removing authority and reported in writing with a specific statement of the reasons therefor to the commission, but shall not be made public without the consent of the person discharged. Before such removal, reduction or discharge shall become effective the removing authority shall give such person a reasonable apportunity to know the charges against him and to be heard in his own behalf, and if such charges be not sustained by the commission he shall be reinstated in his position."

This latter section contains a provision different from those found in the regulations for city employes. It provides that no officer or employe within the classified service, "who shall have been continuously in the employment of the board of education for a period of three years shall be removed," etc.

While this section is for the protection of the employes who have served three years, it is my opinion that the board of education herein referred to and for which such employe must be employed for three years, is the board of education of the district by which he is employed, and its predecessors. The city school district of Barberton has not been in existence for three years and this provision cannot apply to it. The village district is succeeded by the city district.

I am therefore of the opinion that the same rules govern the city school district as apply to the city positions and that all positions in the classified service must be filled after examination of applicants and in accordance with the civil service regulations.

Respectfully,
TIMOTHY S. HOGAN,
Attorney General.

INITIATIVE AND REFERENDUM—"CLERK OF THE MUNICIPAL CORPORATION" IS CLERK OF COUNCIL IN CITIES FOR FILING OF PETITIONS—CITY AUDTOR.

In cities the "clerk of council" is the proper clerk of the municipal corporation, with whom should be filed the various petitions specified in the initiative and referendum act (102 O. L. 521) notwithstanding Section 224 of the Municipal Code which provides that for certain purposes "city clerk" shall be construed to mean "city auditor."

COLUMBUS, OHIO, January 20, 1912.

HON. JONATHAN TAYLOR, City Solicitor, Akron, Ohio.

DEAR SIR:—Under date of January 13th you submitted for my opinion the question as to what officer is meant under the term "clerk of such municipal corporation" as found in the initiative and referendum act found in 102 Ohio Laws 521 as the party with whom the various petitions shall be filed.

As the clerk of a village is likewise the clerk of the village council there can be no question in so far as villages are concerned as to proper party with whom to file an initiative or referendum petition.

In cities there is now no officer properly designated as city clerk, the duties formerly devolving upon the city clerk being now divided between the clerk of council and the city auditor.

The question, therefore, arises in reference to filing of initiative and referendum petitions in regard to ordinances, resolutions and measures of a city whether the "clerk of the municipality" in this instance refers to the clerk of council or city auditor.

Prior to the adoption of the Municipal Code the clerk of the municipality was charged with all of the duties now comprised within the duties of the clerk of council and the duties of city auditor, except that in certain cities of certain grades and classes had in addition to a city clerk, also a city auditor (or in some instances a city comptroller). There was, therefore, before the adoption of the Municipal Code in each and every municipal corporation an officer duly designated as "city clerk." In some of said municipal corporations such officer performed the duties which in other of such municipal corporations devolved upon the city auditor. The term "city clerk," however, was retained even in those cities in which there was either a city auditor or a city comptroller as the case may be.

At the adoption of the Municipal Code a uniform rule was established and for those cities which prior to the adoption thereof did not have a city auditor, a city auditor was provided and the duties devolving upon the city auditor were the same generally which pertained to the office of city auditor in those cities which prior to the adoption of the Municipal Code had such an officer. The rest of the duties of city clerk were transferred to what is known as the clerk of council and the provision of the Municipal Code covering such point is as follows:

> "The members of council shall * * * elect a * * * clerk, who shall also perform the duties of city clerk unless otherwise specified in this act * * *."

The duties which pertained to the office of city clerk prior to the adoption of the Municipal Code and which were otherwise specified in the Municipal Code were the duties which were transferred to the city auditor under such code, and generally the same duties which pertained to the city auditor in those cities having a city auditor prior to the adoption of such code.

The duties which were transferred to the clerk of council as the duties of city clerk not otherwise specified in the Municipal Code were such duties as were found in Section 1755 Revised Statutes prior to the adoption of the Municipal Code as follows:

> "The clerk shall attend all the meetings of the council, and make a fair and accurate record of all its proceedings, and of all rules, by-laws, resolutions and ordinances passed by the council, and the same shall be subject to the inspection of all persons interested."

As prior to the Municipal Code the city clerk was required to keep a fair and accurate record of all the proceedings of council even in such cities in which there was a city auditor and the title of "city clerk" was retained even in such cities having a city auditor, I am of the opinion that the clerk of council would be the proper party to be considered as the city clerk at the time of the adoption of the Municipal Code.

When the statutes were codified the codifying commission omitted the words "who shall also perform the duties of city clerk unless otherwise specified in this act." The omission of this language, however, does not seem to me to have changed in the least degree the duties of the clerk of council, and by reference to the language so omitted it will be seen that the clerk of council was charged with the duties, which prior to the adoption of the Municipal Code, devolved upon the city clerk, in all instances whether there was a city auditor in such municipal corporation or not.

There being no such officer as city clerk at the present time, and the clerk of council having been charged with the duty of keeping a fair and accurate record of all proceedings of council, and all rules, by-laws, resolutions and ordinances passed by council, which duties generally devolved upon the city clerk when there was such an officer, and such duties devolving upon him in all instances whether the city had a city auditor or not, I am of the opinion that the provision of the initiative and referendum act that the petition shall be filed "with the clerk of such municipality" means in reference to cities, the clerk of council.

In reaching the conclusion that the clerk of council is the officer meant as the clerk of the municipality under the provisions of the initiative and referendum act I have not disregarded the provisions of Section 224 of the Municipal Code which provides as follows:

> "With respect to oaths of office and official bonds and the effect of the failure to take or give the same, Sections 1737, 1738, 1739, 1740, 1741, 1742 and 1743, of the Revised Statutes of Ohio, were not inconsistent with this act, shall be and remain in full force and effect; and where the words 'city clerk' appear in said sections they shall be construed to mean, in a city, the auditor, and in a village, the clerk."

As said section was intended, as I view it, not to constitute the city auditor provided for in said code; the city clerk as such city clerk existed prior to the adoption of said code, but said section was solely to provide for the oaths and bond of the auditor on whom had devolved part of the duties which had theretofore been those of a city clerk in municipal corporation for which no city auditor was provided.

Yours truly,

TIMOTHY S. HOGAN,
Attorney General.

TAXES AND TAXATION—SMITH ONE PER CENT. LAW—ROAD DISTRICTS—LIMITATION ON LEVIES—STATUTORY CONSTRUCTION—MUNICIPAL CORPORATION IN TOWNSHIP—IMPROVEMENT OF PUBLIC HIGHWAY WITHIN CORPORATE LIMITS—TOWNSHIP LEVIES.

As a general rule, the tax limitation act of 1911 by implication repeals all provisions in the pre-existing law to the general effect that a particular levy shall be in addition to all other levies authorized by law.

Under this rule and also from the terms of the act itself, the levies for road improvements under 6956-149, General Code, are not outside of any of the limitations of the Smith one per cent. law. These are purely township levies and for the purpose of the act in which Section 6956-149 is found, the township or townships do not constitute a "special district."

Under Sections 7095-7136, General Code, which provide for road districts, such road district may be composed in part of a township containing a municipal corporation or part thereof, but if so composed, the whole township including the municipal corporation, must be regarded as a part of the road district.

Under the aforesaid section, after a road district has been organized by a vote of the people, it is not required that the question of the issue of bonds shall be submitted to a vote of the electors.

The commissioners have uncontrolled discretion as to the creation of a bonded indebtedness except as to statutory limitations on the amount thereof.

The limitation of the Smith act is not upon the amount levied by a taxing district but upon the total amount which may be levied by all taxing authorities upon the property in a taxing district in the year 1910, so that the fact that the districts in question did not exist in 1910 would not prevent the levy, under the Smith law provision.

The practical result of the establishment of such road district would be to deprive the city, county, township and other divisions the amounts they might otherwise be allowed.

A levy for road purposes under Sections 7095-7136, inclusive, General Code, is quite independent of any municipal or township levy made in the road district, except so far as both are to be affected by the fact that the limitations of fifteen mills, ten mills and the 1910 tax must apply to and include them both.

No public highway within the corporate limits of a city or village in such road district shall be improved unless such road extends through such road district continuously.

COLUMBUS, OHIO, December 28, 1911.

HON. CUSTER SNYDER, City Solicitor, Lorain, Ohio.

DEAR SIR:—I beg to acknowledge receipt of your letter of October 18th enclosing an advertisement published by the commissioners of road district No. 2, Lorain county, Ohio, notifying the qualified electors of said district, which is composed of three townships in Lorain county, to assemble at the place appointed for holding elections in such townships, and the wards and voting precincts therein on the date for holding the general election, and then and there vote by ballot upon the question of the general improvement of the public roads of such road district by general taxation levied upon the property therein. You state that the city of Lorain is included within such road district, comprising a large part of two of the townships composing the same. You solicit my opinion upon the following questions:

"1. An interpretation of Section 6956-14, G. C., O. L. 101, p. 253, with especial reference as to whether or not the county commissioners have authority to levy a tax of ten mills or any part thereof in any one year, in addition to all other levies allowed by law for road improvements. If so, what is the procedure and is it restricted or prohibited by the Smith one per cent. taxation law, so called, and in what manner?

"2. Under Sections 7095 to 7136, inclusive, of the G. C., (2) can a township contiguous and adjacent to a township containing a municipal corporation, organize a road district composed of the adjacent township, or townships outside of the municipal corporation? (b) Under the sections above quoted, after a road district has been organized by a vote of the people, have the road commissioners authority to issue bonds for road improvements covering said district without another vote of the people authorizing the same? (c) Under this chapter and the provisions of the Smith one per cent. law, can there be a levy of any kind or amount for road improvements in said road district by the county commissioners, the proposed road district not being a taxing district in the year 1910, and no money whatsoever having been raised by taxation in said district during said year of 1910? This district was not organized in the year 1910, but is to be voted upon at the coming general election.

"3. Under Section 5649-3a, G. C., if five mills are levied by a municipal corporation on the taxable property of the corporation in any one year, can an additional levy for road purposes be made under authority of Section 7095 to 7136, inclusive, and if so, what is the procedure?

"4. Under the enclosed notice of election will it be possible to improve as a part of the road district in which a municipality is included the streets of such municipality?"

Section 6956-14 as enacted 101 O. L., 253, is a part of a road law which provides generally for the laying out, construction, repairing or improvement of any public road upon a petition of a majority of the owners of real estate who own lands within one mile in any direction from either side, end or terminus of the road or part thereof. The act provides that the expense of such improvement shall be borne in part by assessment upon the owners of real estate within such territory, in part by township levies and in part by general levy upon the duplicate of the county.

Section 6956-14 relates in particular to the county and township levies, and provides in part as follows:

"* * * for the purpose of providing by taxation funds for the payment of the county's proportion of the cost and expense of * * * the improvements * * * the county commissioners are hereby authorized to levy upon all the taxable property of the county a tax * * * not exceeding in the aggregate in any one year the sum of one mill upon each dollar of the valuation of the taxable property in the county. Said levy shall be in addition to all other levies authorized by law, notwithstanding any limitation upon the aggregate amount of such levies now in force. For the purpose of providing by taxation funds for the payment of said proportion of the cost and expense of all improvements made under the provisions of this act to be paid by the township or townships * * * the county commissioners are hereby authorized to levy upon all the taxable property of any township or townships in which said road improvement is situated, in whole or in part, a tax not exceeding ten mills in any one year * * *. Said levy shall be in addition to all other levies authorized by law, notwithstanding any limitation upon the aggregate amount of such levies now in force."

Your first question relates to the effect of the Smith one per cent. law, so called, which imposes limitations upon township and county levies, upon this section, which is not expressly repealed thereby.

As a general rule the tax limitation act of 1911 by implication repeals all provisions in the pre-existing law to the general effect that a particular levy shall be in addition to all other levies authorized by law. With respect to the levies referred to in Section 6956-14, however, it is unnecessary to rely upon a repeal by implicaation. Said levies are expressly made exempt from the limitations "now in force." The word "now" must mean the date of the passage of Section 6956-14, viz., May 19, 1910. For this reason there can be no question but that the levies of Section 6956-14 are within the limitations of the Smith law, so far as its provisions, to the effect that such levies shall be in addition to all other levies by law, are concerned.

Indeed, I find no reason for holding that the levies under Section 6956-14 are outside of any of the limitations of the Smith law. The exclusions from those limitations are as follows:

1. Levies for sinking fund and interest purposes necessary to provide for indebtedness incurred prior to June 2, 1911, or thereafter by vote of the people, are exempt from the ten mill limitation but not from the limitation measured by the taxes levied in 1910 (Sections 5649-2 and 5649-3, 102 O. L., 269).

2. Emergency levies under Section 5649-4 and levies authorized by vote of the people as provided in Section 5649-5 are outside of the ten mill limitation but not outside of the limitation measured by the 1910 tax except as to the emergency levies, which seem to be outside of all limitations. (Section 5649-3, supra.)

3. Special levies provided for by vote of the electors, special assessments, levies for road taxes that may be worked out by the taxpayers, and levies and assessments in special districts created for road and ditch improvements are outside of the internal limitations of Section 5649-3a upon the levies of taxation for county, township, municipal and local school purposes respectively.

It is clear that neither of the levies of Section 6956-14 fall within any of these classes unless they are "levies for road taxes that may be worked out by the taxpayers" or "levies in special districts created for road or ditch improvements."

The township levies of Section 6956-14 are not levies in special districts created for road or ditch improvements. They are purely township levies and for the purpose of the act in which Section 6956-14 is found, the township or townships do not constitute a "special district." There seems to be considerable doubt as to whether or not the township levy under Section 6956-14 is a levy for road purposes which may be worked out by the taxpayer.

By section 5649, as amended (101 O. L., 113), it is provided in part that > "Any person charged with a road tax may discharge the same by labor on the public highways."

By examining the context of Section 5649, as it appears in the General Code, it will appear, I think, that the section as a whole relates to township taxes. I do not believe, however, that the special levy of Section 6956-14 was intended to be included within those levies which might be worked out by the taxpayer. This question is probably doubtful, but I take it, it is not of great importance to you.

The exact effect of the tax limitation law of 1911 upon the authority to levy under Section 6956-14 is defined, in my opinion, by the first paragraph of Section 5649-3, 102 O. L., 269, which provides in effect that the maximum rate of taxation in any taxing district, for any purpose, shall be the amount that would have been raised under the pre-existing law upon the duplicate for the year 1910 in any taxing district, and in no event more than the maximum rate prescribed by the pre-existing law. That is to say, instead of the commissioners now being authorized to levy (always within the limitations of the Smith law, of course) one mill upon the county duplicate, and ten mills upon the township duplicate for the purposes mentioned in Section 6956-14, they may not levy more than an amount equal to one mill upon the 1910 duplicate and ten mills upon the 1910 duplicate of the township respectively, and they may not levy such amounts if such levy would produce a rate in excess of one mill or ten mills respectively on the 1910 duplicate, or if such a levy would exceed any of the other limitations of the act of 1911.

Under the procedure of the Smith law, which is fully set forth, I believe, in Section 5649-3a and succeeding sections of the General Code, the county commissioners must submit their needs under Section 6956-14 to the budget commissioners, who have authority to determine the amount of money which shall be raised for such purpose.

Answering the first sub-division of your second question, I beg to state that in my opinion under Sections 7095 to 7136, inclusive, General Code, being the sections which provide for road districts of the kind referred to in your general statement, such a road district may be composed in part of a township containing a municipal corporation or part thereof, but if so composed, the whole township, including the municipal corporation, must be regarded as a part of the road district. There is no authority of law for an election in a road district consisting of a part of a township. On the other hand, Section 7103, General Code, expressly provides that the question as to the creation of a road district for the purpose of improving the public roads thereof by general taxation levied upon the property therein shall be submitted to "the qualified electors thereof, including a village or city therein."

Under this peculiar language, the only question that could arise is as to whether or not a part of a city, which said city is located in more than one township, might be within a road district without the remainder of the city also being included in the same road district. The facts which you submit, however, do not raise this question.

Answering the second sub-division of your second question, I beg to state, the authority of the road commissioners of a special road district to issue bonds is defined by Sections 7123, etc., General Code. These sections do not require that the question of issuing such bonds shall be submitted to a vote of the electors. On the contrary, the commissioners have uncontrolled discretion as to the creation of a bonded indebtedness, except as to the amount thereof, which shall not exceed $250,000, except in a road district where a total tax valuation exceeds five million dollars, and in which such district the commissioners may issue and sell bonds in the additional sum of $25,000 for each million dollars of tax valuation in excess of five million dollars. (Section 7124.)

I might remark that the limitations of the Smith act certainly include and apply to levies for the purpose of retiring such bonds. That being the case, it will probably be difficult for any such bonds to obtain a market.

Answering the third sub-division of your second question, I beg to state that the fact that the taxing district to be created if the electors vote to establish the special road district to which you refer was not in existence in the year 1910, is immaterial. Section 5649-2, General Code, as enacted in 102 O. L., 268, does not, as seems to be popularly supposed, limit each taxing district as a levying authority, so to speak, to the amount of taxes which it had in the year 1910. The phraseology is as follows:

"* * * * the aggregate amount of taxes that may be levied on the taxable property in any county, township, city, village, school district or other taxing district for the year 1911, * * * including taxes levied under authority of Section 5649-1, of the General Code, and levies made for state, county, township, municipal, school and all other purposes, shall not in any one year exceed in the aggregate the total amount of taxes that were levied upon the taxable property therein of such county, township, city, village, school district or other taxing district, for all purposes in the year 1910."

The limitation then is not upon the amount levied by a taxing district but upon the total amount which may be levied by all taxing authorities, including the state, upon the property in a taxing district in the year 1910. This limitation corresponds to the ten mill limitation of the same act, and not to the five, three and two mill limitations of Section 5649-3a.

From this it follows the practical result of the creation of a special road district, such as that described in your general statement will be to deprive the city, county and the townships of taxes which they otherwise might have had for municipal, county and township purposes respectively. The mere fact that the district did not exist in 1910 will in no wise affect the amount of taxes which it may have after it is created. This is rendered even clearer by the provisions of Section 5649-3a already quoted to the effect that levies in special road districts are not to be limited by any of the rates set forth in that section. There is, therefore, no limitation in the Smith act upon the amount that may be levied for road district purposes, save and except the fact that such levy together with the levy for state, county, township, school district and municipal purposes, must not exceed fifteen mills or ten mills, exclusive of interest and sinking fund levies, or the amount raised in the territory of the district or of any of the taxing districts therein in the year 1910.

Answering your third question, I beg to state that for reasons already pointed out, a levy for road purposes under Sections 7095 to 7136, inclusive, General Code, is quite independent of any municipal or township levy made in the road district, except in so far as both are to be affected by the fact that the limitations of fifteen mills, ten mills and the 1910 tax must apply to and include them both.

Answering your fourth question, I beg to state that Section 7108 expressly provides that "no public highway within the corporate limits of a city or village in such road district shall be improved unless such road extends through such road district continouusly."

This sentence itself would seem to be a complete answer to your fourth question.

Yours very truly,
TIMOTHY S. HOGAN,
Attorney General.

MUNICIPAL CORPORATION—POWER OF COUNCIL TO TRANSFER FUNDS—FUNDS RAISED BY TAXATION—SINKING FUND—FUNDS FOR SPECIFIC PURPOSES RAISED BY BOND ISSUE—PETITION TO COMMON PLEAS COURT.

The city council by virtue of 3799, General Code, may transfer credit from one of a number of funds raised by taxation upon all property in the corporation when the purpose of such fund is accomplished or abandoned, to another or other funds of a similar nature.

This power, however, does not extend to funds raised by bond issue or otherwise than by taxation on all personal and real property of the corporation.

Funds created by bond issue must be devoted first to the purpose of the specified improvemnts, second, to the sinking fund for the purpose of retiring the outstanding bonds and only after these purposes are accomplished may the balance of the bond be turned into the general fund of the corporation.

It is a grave question whether under Section 2296 upon petition to the common pleas court provided therein, the court could find it within its power to make any change in the effect of the aforesaid rules.

COLUMBUS, OHIO, January 16, 1912.

HON. E. H. WILCOX, City Solicitor, Cleveland, Ohio.

DEAR SIR:—I am in receipt of a letter, under date of January 9, from Hon. Thomas Coughlin, city auditor, of Cleveland, requesting my opinion upon a question of interest to the administration of your city. Mr. Coughlin, doubtless, is not familiar with the invariable rule of this department, namely, that official advice will not be given to city officers, other than the city solicitor. Inasmuch as the matter concerning which he inquires seems to be one of immediate and general interest in Cleveland, I am presuming to address the opinion direct to you, with the request that you communicate the holding thereof to the city auditor and such other officers as may be interested therein if you agree therewith.

The question as submitted is as follows:

> "During the past three years, the city of Cleveland sold a large number of bonds for various enterprises. The improvements have not gone forward as rapidly as was expected, and as a result the money derived from the sale of these bonds has earned a considerable interest, the amount at this time being in excess of $100,000.
> "It is suggested that this accrued interest is subject to appropriation by the city council, and can be used for any purpose to which it (the council) may desire to apply the fund.
> "I am writing this letter to ask your official opinion as to whether it is legal and proper for us to appropriate the accrued interest on bond money, to be applied to paying the ordinary expenditures of the municipal government, or for such other purposes as the council may deem expedient."

I have heretofore held, in an opinion addressed to the bureau of inspection and supervision of public offices, that depository interest received from moneys realized from the sale of bonds for special improvements goes into and is to be treated as a part of the improvement fund. The query of the bureau was as to whether or not such money would be credited to the sinking fund; your query raised the question, in the first instance, as to whether or not such money belongs in the general fund of the city. As above indicated, my opinion is that it belongs neither in the sinking fund nor in the general fund, but in the improvement fund.

The question as to the availability of such fund for appropriation by the council of the municipal corporation to the general uses and purposes of the municipality is affected, it seems to me, by Section 3799, of the General Code, which provides as follows:

> "By the votes of three-fourths of all the members elected thereto, and the approval of the mayor, the council may at any time transfer all or a portion of one fund or a balance remaining therein, to the credit of one or more funds, but there shall be no such transfer except among funds raised by taxation upon all the real and personal property in the corporation, nor until the subject of the fund from which the transfer is to be effected has been accomplished or abandoned."

This section indicates that moneys not raised by taxation—or more accurately, funds not produced in the first instance by taxation—are to be treated separately and apart from funds raised by taxation, for appropriation purposes. This is, in my judgment, because all such funds, not raised by taxation, are to be regarded in a qualified sense, at least, trust funds. So, in the case of a fund for a specified improvement, the body of the fund is to be regarded as devoted, with or without appropriation, to the uses and purposes of the specified improvement. This conclusion is made the more evident by a consideration of Section 3802, of the General Code, which provides, in effect, that cash balances existing in funds other than funds created for improvements shall be transferred to the general fund, and by Section 3804, G. C., which provides as follows:

> "When any unexpected balance remaining in a fund created by an issue of bonds, the whole or part of which bonds are still outstanding, unpaid and unprovided for, is no longer needed for the purpose for which such fund was created, it shall be transferred to the trustee of the sinking fund to be applied in the payment of the bonds."

All these sections are in pari materia, and, read together, they establish the following conclusion:

Funds created by bond issues cannot be devoted in whole or in part to the general purposes of the municipality, but must be applied, first, to the specified improvement; second, to the retirement of outstanding bonds, and interest thereon, and third (and only in the event that there are no outstanding bonds to be provided for), the fund may become a part of the general fund of the corporation. It is to be noted, however, that the contingency upon which such money may become a part of the general fund is a very remote one. So remote is it, indeed, that the general assembly has not seen fit to provide any express authority for transferring an unexpended balance in a fund created by an issue of bonds when the bonds themselves are all provided for, to the general revenue fund, as it has done in the case of moneys other than those in funds created for particular improvements, by Section 3802, above referred to. Nevertheless, because there is no other place for moneys to go to under such circumstances, it is my opinion that they may lawfully be credited to the general revenue fund, at least under authority of a transfer of funds made by the court, as I shall hereinafter point out, when no longer needed for the purpose of the improvement and its expense, or for the purpose of retiring bonds. In other words, while it is true that the general revenue fund has what may for convenience be termed a residuary interest in the proceeds of the sale of an issue of bonds, including the depository interest thereon, the claim of the sinking fund is, by virtue of Section 3804, above quoted, prior to such interest of the general revenue fund.

By Section 296 and succeeding sections, G. C., authority is given to the council of municipal corporation to transfer any fund under their supervision from one fund to another, by applying to the common pleas court, which is given power to order such transfer. Transfers under these sections are not limited to those among funds raised by taxation, nor is the power of the court limited by the requirement that the fund thus to be transferred is no longer needed for the purpose for which it was levied, or for the object to which it was originally devoted, as is the case with transfers made directly by the city council. It is simply required that if the council desires to transfer any fund to another fund it shall file a petition in the manner set forth in the statutes; and "if, upon the hearing the court finds * * * that the petition states sufficient facts, that there are good reasons, or that a necessity exists for the transfer, and that no injury will result therefrom, it shall grant the prayer of the petition * * *" (Section 2300, G. C.)

It would perhaps be presumptuous for me to attempt to define the power and jurisdiction of the court of common pleas in a proceeding of this kind. For this reason I express no opinion as to whether a court could or could not hold that "no injury will result" from a transfer of moneys from an improvement fund, in the face of Section 3804, above quoted, which seems to require that unexpended balances in such improvement fund shall be devoted to the payment of the bonds outstanding and interest thereon, so long at least as bonds were actually outstanding and unprovided for. If the court does have this power over funds raised by bond issue for the purpose of constructing a public improvement, it has virtually the power to set aside Section 3804. Whether or not this was the intention of the general assembly in enacting Section 2296 and the succeeding sections of the General Code, has not been judicially determined.

For the reasons above suggested, I hesitate to express any opinion thereon.

I am clearly of the opinion, however, that so long as the bonds remain unpaid the depository interest in question may not be appropriated without a transfer of funds.

Very truly yours,
TIMOTHY S. HOGAN,
Attorney General.

CONTRACTS OF DIRECTOR OF PUBLIC SERVICE — PROCEDURE — NECESSITY FOR AUTHORIZATION OF COUNCIL AND APPROVAL OF BOARD OF CONTROL.

In the case of a contract by the director of public service for a year's supply of coal involving the expenditure of more than five hundred dollars, first, the council must authorize; secondly, the director must advertise for bids; and thirdly, the award must be approved by the board of control. After the council has first authorized the contract, it has nothing further to do with the matter.

COLUMBUS, OHIO, January 19, 1912.

HON. G. T. THOMAS, City Solicitor, Troy, Ohio.

DEAR SIR:—I have carefully examined the opinion of the circuit court of Lorain county in the case of Railway Company vs. Elyria, 14 C. C., N. S., 365, referred to in your letter of January 3d, receipt whereof is acknowledged, and I have come to the following conclusion respecting that decision:

This decision does not hold, as you seem to fear, that all contracts for any period of time made by the director of public service of a municipal corporation must be approved by the city council. The question in the case related to a contract between a city and a railroad company whereby the city agreed to sell water to the railroad company during a considerable period of time in the future. General Code, Section 3973, expressly provides that such contracts shall be approved by council, and it was upon the language of this section that the court based its holding that

> "The contract here involved * * * cannot be sustained, because it was not approved by the city council." (Opinion, page 367.)

Contracts for the purchase of a year's supply of coal for the use of the waterworks and the like are governed by the provisions of Section 4328, General Code, which requires contracts involving the expenditure of more than five hundred dollars to be first authorized by council, and by Section 4403, General Code, which requires that such contract involving an expenditure of more than five hundred dollars to be awarded subject to the approval of the board of control.

In the case, then, of a contract for a year's coal supply involving the expenditure of more than five hundred dollars, such contract must first be authorized to be entered into by the city council. The director of public service must then advertise for bids; upon opening them he must seek the approval of the board of control as to the award he will make; under the direction of the board of control, he must award the contract to the lowest and best bidder. After council has once authorized the contract it has nothing further to do with the matter.

Very truly yours,

TIMOTHY S. HOGAN,
Attorney General.

CIVIL SERVICE—CITY ENGINEER IN UNCLASSIFIED SERVICE—APPROPRIATIONS—TRANSFER OF FUNDS—SMITH ONE PER CENT. LAW—APPROPRIATIONS OF MONEYS NOT IN TREASURY.

When there is such a position as that of city engineer it must be deemed in law to be the head of a sub-department of the city within the department of public service, the incumbent of which by Section 4250, General Code, shall be appointed by the mayor. In any event, the position of engineer being one that requires professional or technical skill, is taken from the classified service by Section 4479, General Code.

When an amount has been appropriated for a certain purpose, it can be neither increased nor decreased nor diverted from its specified purpose.

Prior to the enactment of the Smith one per cent. law, 102 O. L. 272, council could anticipate revenues expected to come into the treasury during the succeeding half year. By that act, however, council is limited in its appropriations to the money known to be in the treasury.

COLUMBUS, OHIO, January 25, 1912.

HON. ALBERT S. FENZEL, City Solicitor, Middletown, Ohio.

DEAR SIR:—I beg to acknowledge receipt of your letter of January 15th, requesting my opinion upon the following questions:

"Who appoints the city engineer?

"After council appropriates a certain sum of money to be used during the last half year (for 1911) for the purpose of lighting the city, did any official have the right to divert any of this money to any other fund?

"Can council appropriate money for purposes allowed by law, when there was no money to appropriate?"

The following provisions of the General Code are applicable to the first question submitted by you:

"Section 4250. * * * He (the mayor) shall appoint and have the power to remove * * * the heads of the sub-departments of the departments of public service and public safety, * * *

"Section 4327. The director of public service may establish such sub-department as may be necessary and determine the number of superintendents, * * * engineers * * * and other persons, necessary for the execution of the work and the performance of the duties of this department.

"Section 4479. * * * The unclassified service shall include the positions of * * * persons who are appointed to positions requiring professional or technical skill as may be determined by the civil service commission; * * * the head or chief of any division or principal department relating to engineering, * * *"

No section of the General Code provides for the office of city engineer. That is to say, unless this office is established as the head of a sub-department within the department of public service, as provided in the above quoted section, it has no existence whatever. Certain provisions of the sections relating to the making of assessments for improvements seem to require that there be a position known as city engineer. Whether or not it is practically necessary that the position of city engineer be established as the head of a sub-department within the department of public service is a question which need not be determined. Suffice it to say, however, where there is such a position as that of city engineer, it must be deemed in law to be the head of a sub-department within the department of public service. This being the case, it follows, from the provisions above cited, that the mayor has the right to appoint a city engineer when the position of city engineer is so created. If, however, the position of city engineer has not been created as the head of a sub-department within the department of public service, then the engineering work of the city may be done by engineers who are simply employes of that department. That is to say, in such event there would be no separate sub-department of engineering, and the engineering force of the city would consist of one or more employes of the department of public service who would secure their positions by appointment or employment, as the case may be, by the director of public service. Inasmuch as the position of an engineer is one requiring professional or technical skill, it would seem that in any event an engineering position would not be within the classified or civil service.

Answering your second question, I beg to state that this department has repeatedly held that there is no authority for making transfers among appropriation accounts, residing either in council or in any other officer or department of the city government. When an amount has been appropriated for a certain purpose, the amount of such appropriation may be neither increased nor diminished. Money so appropriated may lawfully be used only for the purposes for which the appropriation was made by council. At the end of the appropriation period the balance in the account lapses, of course, to the fund from which it was appropriated and may be reappropriated by council for any purpose for which the fund itself may be lawfully appropriated.

Answering your third question, I beg to state that since the enactment of Section 5649-3d, General Code, as a part of the Smith one per cent. law, so called, 102 O. L., 272, council is limited in its appropriations to the money known to be in the treasury. That section provides in part as follows:

> "At the beginning of each fiscal half year the various boards mentioned in Section 5649-3a of this act shall make appropriations for each of the several objects for which money has to be provided, from the moneys known to be in the treasury from the collection of taxes and all other sources of revenue, and all expenditures within the following six months shall be made from and within such appropriations and balances thereof, * * *"

Heretofore, as you know, council might anticipate revenues estimated to come into the treasury during the succeeding half yearly period. This, by reason of the above quoted provision, is no longer the case.

Very truly yours,

TIMOTHY S. HOGAN,

Attorney General.

TAXES AND TAXATION—SMITH ONE PER CENT. LAW—LEVY BY SCHOOL BOARD FOR LIBRARY PURPOSES—"INTERIOR LIMITATIONS"—CONTRACT WITH LIBRARY ASSOCIATION NOT AN INDEBTEDNESS—NO IMPAIRMENT OF CONTRACT.

A levy of one mill by the board of education imposed annually for the purpose of reimbursing a library association for services to the public in pursuance of a contract between the board and the association, is within the interior limitations of the Smith law and is not a "levy for, sinking fund and interest purposes necessary to provide for indebtedness created prior to the passage" of the Smith law.

The obligation which rests upon the board is not an indebtedness within the meaning of the statute nor is there an "impairment of the obligation of contract" in the effect of the Smith law upon such procedures.

COLUMBUS, OHIO, January 9, 1912.

HON. HARRY D. SMITH, City Solicitor, Xenia, Ohio.

DEAR SIR:—In answering your letter of September 6th, I beg again to apologize for the delay which has ensued in this office in respect to the same, caused, however, by the fact that a part of your letter was personal in its nature, which fact led me to lay it aside in deference to business of an official nature as is always my custom.

You inquire what, if any, effect the enactment of the Smith one per cent. law, so-called, has upon the operation of Section 7641, General Code.

Said Section 7641, General Code, provides as follows:

> "The board of education in any city, village or special school district may contract annually with any library corporation or other organization owning and maintaining a library, for the use of such library by the residents of such district, and it annually may levy a tax not exceeding one mill on the taxable property of such district to pay therefor. Such board of education shall require an annual report in writing from such library corporation or other organization."

It appears from the letter enclosed in your communication that the board of education of the city school district of Xenia, prior to the enactment of the Smith one per cent. law, so-called, entered into a contract with the Xenia library association under which the board of education has levied for the support of the association a certain amount of money.

At the time this contract was entered into and until the Smith law became effective, this contract imposed upon the board of education of the school district a valid and existing obligation equal in dignity to the obligation of any other contract entered into by the board. Yet this obligation being contingent, did not create an "indebtedness" within the meaning of that word as used in Section 5649-2, and in Section 5649-3 of the Smith law, 102 O. L., 269. That is to say, the contract did not impose upon the school district a fixed and liquidated indebtedness necessitating the creation of a sinking fund, but the duty of the board of education to make the levy was dependent upon the continued existence of the library and the discharge by the library association of the obligation assured by it under the contract. This being the case, the levy provided for by Section 7641 is not, in my judgment, "a levy for sinking fund and interest purposes necessary to provide for indebtedness created prior to the passage of" the Smith one per cent. law within the meaning of the sections above referred to of that law.

In the case of State ex rel. vs. Sanzenbacher, unreported, recently decided by the supreme court of this state, the court construed Section 5649-3*a*, which provides what may be termed the "interior limitations" applicable to levies for local purposes, including levies which may be made by boards of education, as if the same exceptions were made therein as are expressly made in Section 5649-2 and 5649-3, as above referred to. For reasons similar to those above expressed, however, levies like those authorized to be made under Section 7641 are not to be regarded as exclusive of the limitations of five, three and two mills respectively imposed by Sections 5649-3*a*.

For all of the above reasons, then, the Smith one per cent. law in its entirety, including all the limitations thereof, must be regarded as applicable to levies made under authority of Section 7641.

Section 7641 provides expressly that the contract entered into between the board of education and the library association must be made "annually." It is apparent, therefore, that in any event the only subsisting obligation in existence at the time of the passage of the Smith one per cent. law under contract of this sort would be the obligation to make a levy for the current year. Such an obligation is not, in my judgment, directly impaired by the enactment of the Smith law. To hold that the Smith law would in any way interfere with the obligation of such contract would be to give to that law the effect of impairing the obligation of a contract—a thing prohibited, of course, by the constitution of this state and by that of the United States.

If the obligation of the board of education under the contract was simply to pay a certain amount to the library association, then, in my opinion, the board of education would be obliged to pay that amount to the library association out of the proceeds of its levy as determined by the budget commission (under the facts stated by you, a levy of three mills). This would follow because the board of education had not bound itself to make a levy, but merely to pay a certain amount.

Hereafter, the power of the board of education annually to contract with the library association will remain under Section 7641 unimpaired, excepting the board of education may not now levy one mill for that purpose, nor may any levy which it makes be made, irrespective of any of the limitations of the Smith law. That is to say, by virtue of the first paragraph of Section 5649-3 of the Smith law, the maximum rate of one mill prescribed by Section 7641 is reduced so as not to produce any more money than would have been produced in the year 1910 by a levy of one mill upon the duplicate for that year—assuming, of course, that the duplicate of the school district of the city of Xenia was increased between the years 1910 and 1911. The amount which would have been raised by a levy of one mill upon the duplicate of 1910 is then the amount which may be levied by the school district for this purpose for the year 1911 or any year thereafter; but such a levy when made must be taken into consideration with the other levies of the board of education in ascertaining whether or not the limitation of five mills prescribed by Section 5649-3*a* has been exceeded.

From what I have said you will observe that it is not my opinion that Section 7647 is repealed by the Smith one per cent. law. It is simply amended by implication, so to speak, and the power of the board of education to enter into the contract therein provided for still exists.

Very truly yours,

TIMOTHY S. HOGAN,

Attorney General.

OFFICES COMPATIBLE—CITY SOLICITOR AND MEMBER OF BOARD OF REVIEW—"HOLDING OF OTHER PUBLIC OFFICE OR EMPLOYMENT."

A city solicitor may hold the office of member of the board of review if there is no conflict in the duties of the offices.

The provision of Section 5621 to the effect that "no member thereof shall be engaged in any other business or employment during the period of time covered by the session of the board" merely has the effect of making the work of the solicitor's office subordinate to that of the board.

COLUMBUS, OHIO, January 25, 1912.

HON. MARK L. THOMSEN, City Solicitor, for Newburgh, Cleveland, Ohio.

DEAR SIR:—I am in receipt of your letter of January 17, 1912, which is as follows:

> "The writer is city solicitor for the city of Newburgh and has been for a year and two months. Previous to my appointment as solicitor of the city of Newburgh, I was appointed a member of the board of equalization and board of review of Newburgh city for a term of five years and on organization of the board was elected president thereof. The city of Newburgh has a population of about six thousand and consequently not much time is needed for the position as president of the board. We met last summer and worked for about thirty days and finished the work for the year. For the time we met I gave my entire time to the work, this in no way interfering with my position as city solicitor.

"The county auditor approved my voucher for pay for this period, amounting to about $160.00, but I purposely did not draw the amount, desiring an opinion from your office as to whether or not I could do so in view of my position as city solicitor. While I do not personally think there is any legal objection to this, I have felt as the matter concerned myself I should have a ruling from an outside party, and I should appreciate very much a ruling from your office on that point mailed to my address."

Section 5618 of the General Code provides as follows:

"Upon the written application of a county auditor to the state board of appraisers and assessors for laying excise taxes for the appointment of a board of review for a municipal corporation of such county, for the equalization of real and personal property, moneys and credits within such municipal corporation, said state board may appoint such board of review, to be composed of three citizens, freeholders of such municipal corporation not more than two of whom shall belong to the same political party."

Section 5619, General Code, provides that:

"One member of the board of review shall be appointed for the term of one year, one member for the term of three years, and one member for the term of five years. Thereafter at the expiration of the term of a members, there shall be appointed by the state board of appraisers and assessors, a freeholder of such municipal corporation as successor to such member for the term of five years, and all vacancies in the board shall be filled for the unexpired term in the manner as the original appointment. The state board of appraisers and assessors for laying excise taxes may remove any members of the board."

Section 5621, General Code, provides:

"The county commissioners shall fix the salary of the members of the board of review, which shall not be less than three dollars and fifty cents per day for each day the board is in session, and not to exceed two hundred and fifty dollars per month for the time such board is in session. Such salary shall be payable monthly out of the county treasury upon the order of said board and the warrant of the county auditor. The board shall meet in rooms provided by the county commissioners, and when in session, shall devote their entire time to the duties of their office. No member thereof shall be engaged in any other business or employment during the period of time covered by the session of the board."

Section 4303, General Code, provides as follows:

"The solicitor shall be elected for a term of two years commencing on the first day of January next after his election, and shall serve until his successor is elected and qualified. He shall be an elector of the city."

Section 4304, General Code, provides as follows:

"No person shall be eligible to the office of solicitor of a municipal corporation who is not an attorney and counselor at law, duly admitted to practice in this state."

It seems to me there can be no question of your right to hold both of these offices, as, in my opinion, they are not incompatible. The only possible conflict is one contemplated by the law itself, it seems to me, in the last sentence of Section 5621, which I have underlined; and this would require that during the time when the board of review is in session the duties of the office of city solicitor, if there were any to be performed at that time, be subordinated to your duties as member of the board of review. This question, however, does not arise in your particular case, as you expressly state that during the time your board met you gave your entire time to your work. I can, therefore, see no objection to your drawing the amount of salary properly due you for this work.

Very truly yours,
TIMOTHY S. HOGAN,
Attorney General.

MAYOR—POWER TO MAKE APPOINTMENT—TIME LIMITS—TERM OF OFFICE OF APPOINTEES.

Under Section 4251, General Code, the new mayor may not make appointments earlier than the second Monday in January, in those offices under this power which have incumbents.

When there are vacancies, however, he may appoint at any time, and his appointees hold office until their successors are elected and qualified.

COLUMBUS, OHIO, January 23, 1912.

HON. CLYDE C. PORTER, City Solicitor, Tiffin, Ohio.

DEAR SIR:—I beg to acknowledge receipt of your letter of January 6th, wherein you state:

"At the request of Walter K. Keppel, mayor of our city, we are asking you for an interpretation of Section 4251 of the General Code.

"Mr. Keppel wishes to known whether or not the appointment made, made his appointments, and the appointees have already entered upon the discharge of their duties, the old officers having resigned at the end of the last year.

"Mr. Keppel wishes to know whether or not the applicants made, will be good for the entire year, or only until the second Monday in January or February."

Section 4250 of the General Code provides:

> "The mayor shall be the chief conservator of the peace within the corporation. He shall appoint and have the power to remove the director of public service, the director of public safety and the heads of the subdepartments of the departments of public service and public safety, and shall have such other powers and perform such other duties as are conferred and required by law."

Section 4251, General Code provides:

> "The director of public service, director of public safety, directors of the university, street commissioner, or any board or officer whose appointment is required herein shall be appointed not earlier than the second Monday in January and not later than the first Monday in February, and shall hold their respective offices until their successors are appointed as herein required."

I take it that your inquiry refers to the appointment of the director of public service and the director of public safety. From a cursory reading of the sections above quoted, it is apparent that the mayor has the power of appointing and removing such directors at will. Section 4251 provides that the directors, as well as the other heads of departments and boards and officers, whose appointment is required therein, shall be appointed not earlier than the second Monday in January and not later than the first Monday in February, and that such officers shall hold their respective offices until their successors are appointed, as therein required.

Section 4252 provides that in case of death, resignation, etc., of any officer or director of any department of a city, unless otherwise provided by law, the mayor thereof shall fill the vacancy by appointment, and such appointment shall continue for the unexpired term and until a successor is duly appointed, or duly elected and qualified, or until such disability is removed.

It appears from your inquiry that the mayor made his appointments on the first day of January, 1912, the prior incumbents having all resigned on that date. These appointees, under the statute, would hold until successors were duly appointed. So, as far as the continuation in office of appointees of the mayor, made January 1st, is concerned, they would hold until the mayor would make other appointments to the same positions.

It strikes me that it is a matter of indifference whether the mayor, following the direction of Section 4251, makes his appointments between the second Monday in January and the first Monday in February, or whether he does not do so, so long as he intends the same persons to fill the places, and makes no other appointments; the additional appointment would give them no further or added powers. Still, to be regular, and if the mayor should desire, he might reappoint the persons whom he has already appointed as public service and public safety directors.

Very truly yours,

TIMOTHY S. HOGAN,
Attorney General.

MOVING PICTURE SHOWS—"BUSINESS"—VIOLATION OF SUNDAY LAWS AND EMPLOYMENT OF MINOR PROVISIONS—PICTURES OF THEATRICAL PERFORMANCES.

The operation of a moving picture show is such an opening of a place for the transaction of business as to come within the prohibitions of Section 13044, General Code, prohibiting the employment of minors and the transaction of business on Sunday.

Such an entertainment is also intended by the terms of 13049, General Code, as amended 102 O. L. 72, as it is an exhibit of pictures of performances forbidden on Sunday.

COLUMBUS, OHIO, January 29, 1912.

HON. D. F. DUNLAVY, City Solicitor, Ashtabula, Ohio.

DEAR SIR:—I herewith acknowledge receipt of your communication of January 8, 1912, wherein you inquire as follows:

> "The mayor of this city, Mr. I. H. Pardee, has requested me to solicit your opinion in reference to Section 13044 of the General Code, as to whether or not a moving picture show would be considered a place for the transaction of business, also whether or not a moving picture show would come within Section 13049 of the General Code as revised in 102 O. L., at page 92?"

In reply thereto would say Section 13044 of the General Code provides as follows:

> "Whoever, being over fourteen years of age, engages in common labor or opens or causes to be opened, a building or place for transaction of business, or requires a person in his employ or under his control to engage in common labor on Sunday, on complaint made within ten days thereafter, shall be fined twenty-five dollars, and for each subsequent offense, shall be fined not less than fifty dollars nor more than one hundred dollars and imprisoned not less than five days nor more than thirty days."

Section 13049 of the General Code, as amended 102 O. L., page 92 provides as follows:

> "Whoever, on Sunday, participates in or exhibits to the public with or without charge for admittance, in a building, room, ground, garden or other place, a theatrical or dramatic performance or an equestrian or circus performance of jugglers, acrobats, rope dancing or sparring exhibition, variety show, negro minstrelsy, living statuary, balooning, base ball playing in the forenoon, ten pins or other game of similar kind or participates in keeping a low or disorderly house of resort or sells, disposes of or gives away, ale, beer, porter or spirituous liquor in a building appendant or adjacent thereto, where such show, performance or exhibition is given, or houses or place is kept, on complaint within twenty days thereafter, shall be fined not more than one hundred dollars or imprisoned in jail not more than six months or both."

Webster defines the term "business" as follows:

> "That which busies, or that which occupies the time, attention or labor of one, as his principal concerns, whether for a longer or shorter time. Employment, occupation or employment for a livelihood or gain, as agriculture, trade, mechanical, art or profession."

The operation of a moving picture show is an employment or occupation for the purpose of amusing and entertaining those who patronize or attend such show. The purpose of operating such picture shows is for financial gain on the part of the operator or owner, and the place wherein such occupation or employment is followed would, in my judgment, be a place of business or a place for the transaction of business, and comes within the provisions contained in Section 13044 of the General Code above quoted.

In answer to your second question I desire to say that this department held, in an opinion rendered early in the year, that a moving picture show comes within the provisions of Section 13049 of the General Code, and I am of the opinion that such shows are also within the provisions of said section as amended 102 O. L. page 92, for the reason that the scenes exhibited at such shows are pictures either of theatrical or dramatic performances and the exhibition of the same on Sunday is in violation of Section 13049 of the General Code as amended 102 O. L. page 92, which is above quoted.

Yours very truly,

TIMOTHY S. HOGAN,

Attorney General.

INTOXICATING LIQUORS—PETITIONS FOR WET AND DRY ELECTION—LOCAL OPTION—QUALIFIED ELECTOR—SIGNERS OF PETITIONS, QUALIFICATIONS OF.

The signer of a petition for wet and dry elections, under Section 6127, General Code, need not have actually cast his ballot at the last preceding general election. It is sufficient if he is a qualified elector at the time of signing the petition.

COLUMBUS, OHIO, February 2, 1912.

HON. WALTER S. STEVENSON, City Solicitor, Leipsic, Ohio.

DEAR SIR:—I am in receipt of your letter of February 1st, wherein you state:

> "In determining who are qualified electors under Section 6127 of the General Code of Ohio, we find in Re South Charleston Election, 3 N. P., 373; 50 B. 173, the court used this language, or rather the court is quoted as follows 'forty per cent. of those Who Cast Votes at last preceding election,' etc.
> "This would indicate that to be counted as being a qualified elector the person signing this petition must necessarily have cast his ballot at the last preceding election for municipal officers. What is your opinion in this matter? This is to be used by the undersigned in determining who are qualified electors upon the presentation of a petition on Monday, February 5th."

Section 6127 of the General Code provides:

> "When, in a municipal corporation divided into wards, qualified electors in a number equal to forty per cent. of the number of votes cast therein at the last preceding general election for state and county officers, or when, in any other municipal corporation, qualified electors in a number equal to forty per cent. of the votes cast therein at the last preceding general election for municipal officers, petition the council thereof for the privilege to determine by ballot whether the sale of intoxicating liquors as a beverage shall be prohibited within the limits of such municipal corporation, such council shall order a special election to be held at the usual place or places for holding elections therein in not less than twenty days nor more than thirty days from the filing of such petition with the mayor of such municipal corporation or from the presentation of such petition to the council thereof. Thereupon such petition shall be filed as a public document with the clerk of such municipal corporation and preserved for reference and inspection."

This section is made up of parts of Sections 4364-20*a* and 4364-20*e*. You will notice there has been a change, and while Section 4364-20*e* stated:

> "* * * and in other municipalities forty per cent. of the qualified electors at the last preceding election * * *."

the provisions in Section 6127, supra, read:

> "* * * in any other municipal corporation qualified electors in a number equal to forty per cent. of the votes cast * * *."

so now the jurisdiction of fact for council to find is whether or not in a municipality a petition is signed by the "qualified electors in a number equal to forty per cent. of the votes cast therein at the last preceding general election for municipal officers;" i. e. when the corporation is not divided into wards.

In the case to which you call my attention—In Re South Charleston Election 3 N. P., 373, while the court used the language you quote in your letter, it was in stating the contention of the contestors. Judge Geiger, in his opinion in this case, at page 376, used the following language:

> "The contestors claim further that the term 'forty per cent. of the qualified electors at the last preceding municipal election' required that the petition be signed by forty per cent. of those individuals who appeared and cast their ballots at the said election; and that it is not sufficient to have forty per cent. of the number; but the very individuals who voted at the last preceding municipal election should sign the petition to the extent of forty per cent. This position is not tenable. The intention of the legislature was not to give to the voters who cast their ballots at the preceding election any advantage over those who, by reason of absence, sickness or other cause, did not. The body of the electors, as it may have existed at the last preceding election, may have changed considerably at the time of the filing of the petition, by reason of death, or otherwise. The plain intention of the statute is that when the petition is signed by as many qualified electors as shall equal forty per cent. of those who cast their votes at the last preceding election, then the petition shall be sufficient."

I think this would be decisive of the question even if the General Code had not made the matter plain beyond all doubt.

The function of the council when a petition under Section 6127 of the General Code is presented, is to determine whether the petitioners on the said petition are qualified electors of the municipal corporation at the time of the action of the council in ordering the election and whether or not the number of said petitioners so found, as aforesaid, is equal to forty per cent. of the vote cast in the municipal corporation at the last preceding general election for municipal officers. So, the question of whether the petitioner actually voted at the last election is immaterial. He is a qualified petitioner if he is a qualified elector of the municipality at the time council seeks to act on the petition.

Very truly yours,

TIMOTHY S. HOGAN,
Attorney General.

CIVIL SERVICE—DEPARTMENTS OF ELECTRIC LIGHT AND WATER-WORKS—EMPLOYES—CLERKS IN DIRECTOR OF PUBLIC SERVICE OFFICE—CLASSIFIED AND UNCLASSIFIED SERVICE—NO EXAMINATION OF INCUMBENTS—DUTIES OF CITY AUDITOR.

All employes in either of the departments of electric light or waterworks of a city, come under the civil service control except the single individuals at the heads of departments and the incumbents of such positions as the commission have determined under Section 4479, General Code, to require professional or technical skill.

A clerk in the office of the director of public service is subject to the civil service, but a private secretary is not.

When an office, by reason of the creation of a statute, enters into the jurisdiction of the civil service commission or passes from the unclassified to the classified service, the incumbent is not required to take an examination.

The civil service commission must provide for examinations for all positions in the classified service and make rules governing the same.

The directors of public service must comply with civil service statutes without notice.

The appointing board or officer must certify all appointments and vacancies in the classified service to the auditor, and the latter official is burdened with the responsibility of allowing no claims for services in violation of the civil service regulatons.

COLUMBUS, OHIO, December 29, 1911.

HON. G. T. THOMAS, City Solicitor, Troy, Ohio.

DEAR SIR:—Under favor of December 14, 1911, you ask an opinion of this department upon the following:

> "I transmit to you a copy of a resolution passed by the civil service commission of this city December 11, 1911, and also a copy of a letter transmitted to me at the same time.
> "My personal opinion is that all of the employes, except the superintendent and chief engineer, come under the head of civil service.
> "The opinion has been expressed also that the clerks appointed in the office of the director of public service are also under civil service.

"With the exception of the police and fire departments, civil service has been a dead letter in this city, because of the hostility of the administration."

The letter enclosed states as follows:

"We herewith transmit to you copy of resolution passed at a meeting of this board at its office on Monday evening, December 11, 1911.

"It is contended by the director of public service that none of the employes in either of the departments of electric light or waterworks come under the jurisdiction of the civil service board. If that be true, this board may as well disband, for only the police and firemen would be under any rules made by this board, and in this little city it would be a farce.

The resolution enclosed states the facts as follows:

"That the electric light plant is owned and operated by the city of Troy, and has in its employ for its operation the following employes:

"One superintendent.

"One chief engineer.

"Two assistant engineers.

"One electrician.

"One trimmer.

"Three linemen, repairers.

"That the waterworks is owned and operated by the city of Troy, and has in its employ for its operation the following employes:

"One superintendent.

"One chief engineer.

"Two assistant engineers.

"One inspector.

"It is conceded that the superintendent of each of these plants, and the chief engineer do not come under the operation of Section 4479, G. C., and belong in the unclassified service.

"If the remainder of said employes belong to the classified service, an answer to the following questions is desired:

"First—Shall all the employes, except the above officers, admitted to be in the unclassified service now in the employ of the city, be directed to appear before this board for examination?

"Second—Shall the board by authority of Section 4479, provide for the examination of engineers, firemen and electricians, under rules made by this board?

"Third—If the present employes are found to be competent and qualified for their positions, shall this board report the fact to the director of public service that the employes are under civil service, and that in the future employment of men in the classified service in these departments, shall be governed by Section 4481, General Code?

"Fourth—Shall the full list of said officers, salaries, etc., be certified to the city auditor, as required by Section 4604, General Code?"

Section 4479, General Code, divides the employes of a city into classified and unclassified service, as follows:

"The civil service shall be divided into classified and unclassified service. The unclassified service shall include the positions of officers elected by the people or appointed to fill vacancies in offices filled by popular election, or whose appointment is subject to confirmation by the council, or who are appointed by any state officer or by any court, employes of the council, persons who by law are to serve without remuneration, persons who are appointed to positions requiring professional or technical skill as may be determined by the civil service commission; persons appointed or employed to give instruction in any educational institution; persons appointed by any board or officers supervising elections; persons who as members of a board or otherwise, have charge of any principal department of the government of any city, the head or chief of any division or principal department relating to engineering, waterworks, street cleaning, or health, the chief of the police department, the chief of the fire department, the superintendent of any workhouse, house of refuge, infirmary, or hospital, the librarian of any public library, private secretaries, deputies in the office of the city auditor and city treasurer, unskilled laborers, and such appointees of the civil service commission as they may by rule determine. The classified service shall comprise offices and places not included in the unclassified service."

Under the Municipal Code as passed in 1902, the civil service covered only the department of public safety. The civil service was extended to the other departments by act in 99 Ohio Laws, 562, and this part of the act became effective January 1, 1910. At that time employes of the city should have been placed in the classified and unclassified service.

The superintendents of the electric light plant and of the waterworks have charge of a principal department of the government of the city and are in the unclassified service.

It appears that the city of Troy has a "chief engineer" in the waterworks, and also a "chief engineer" in the electric light plant. The statute exempts from civil service regulations the "head or chief of any division or principal department relating to engineering." The mere fact that the title of an employe is that of chief engineer does not make him the head or chief of the department of engineering. Each of these may be the chief engineer in the electric light plant or in the waterworks department. But that fact does not make either of them the head of the engineering department of the city. There could not be two heads of such a department. It appears further that each of them are subordinate to the superintendent of the department in which he is employed. They cannot, therefore, be at the head of any division or principal department.

Unless the city of Troy has an engineering department, and one of these employes known as "chief engineer" is at the head of such department, I am of the opinion that both are subject to civil service regulations, unless, however, it has been determined by the civil service commission that they occupy positions requiring professional or technical skill, as provided in said Section 4479.

The other employes of these departments do not come under any of the positions enumerated as the unclassified service and are therefore subject to civil service regulations.

You further inquire as to clerks in the office of the director of public service. The position in the unclassified service which might fit this position is that of private secretary. A private secretary would hardly be known as a clerk. The position of clerk is subject to civil service regulations.

It appears that civil service has not been put into operation in your city. The civil service commission asks in regard to the examination of the present incumbents.

In passing from the unclassified to the classified service the statutes do not require an examination of the incumbents.

On page 10, of the opinion, in the case of State vs. Wyman, 71 O. S., 1, Summers, J., says:

> "It seems to have been the purpose of the legislature in the enactment of the code, so far as possible, to provide that officers and employes in the police and fire departments, in office when the new code went into effect, should not be disturbed in their office or employment, and that thereafter these departments should be under the so-called merit system, and that appointments thereto could be made only in the manner provided by the code. But it was not the intention of the legislature that appointments to any vacancies that might exist in any of the offices or employments in the classified service could be made only from the list of incumbents of offices and employments in the classified service. It is not difficult to understand why the legislature, in adopting the merit system, should provide that those already in office might remain without examination, but it does not appear why it also should be provided that a vacancy in the highest office could be filled only from their number."

The fourth syllabus in case of State vs. Hall, 15 Cir. Dec., 361, is as follows:

> "Section 159, et seq. (Sec. 1536-695 Rev. Stat.), requiring every applicant for appointment to the new police department to submit to an examination by the board of public safety, has no application to those who were in office or members of the old department at the time the new Municipal Code went into effect."

The statutes do not require that the incumbent of an office shall take an examination when the position which he holds is placed in the classified service.

The employes of the city of Troy who were subject to civil service regulations should have been placed in the classified list on January 1, 1910. All appointments to fill vacancies since said time in the classified service should have been made from the list certified by the civil service commission after examination of the applicants. Any person appointed to one of these positions since January 1, 1910, and who has not been appointed in the manner prescribed for the classified list, except one appointed under Section 4488, G. C., has not been legally appointed to the position and a vacancy should be declared and filled in the proper manner.

Section 4481, General Code, provides:

> "Appointments shall be made in the following manner: The appointing board or officer shall notify the commission of any vacancy to be filled. The commission shall thereupon certify to such board or officer the three candidates graded highest in the respective lists as shown by the result of such examination. Such board or officer shall thereupon appoint one of the three so certified. Grades and standings so established shall remain the grades for a period of six months, or longer if the commission so determines, and in succeeding notifications of vacancies, candidates not selected may be dropped by the commission after having been certified a total of three times."

Answering the questions of the civil service commission, my conclusions may be summarized as follows:

First—Persons in the classified service who were in the employ of the city on January 1, 1910, are not required to take an examination. Examinations should be held for all positions in the classified service, which are vacant, or which have been vacant since January 1, 1910, and have been filled without compliance with the civil service regulations.

Second—The civil service commission should provide for examinations for all positions which are in the classified service and make rules governing the same.

Third—It is the duty of the director of public service, without notice, to comply with the statutes governing the civil service. Under the circumstances which exist in your city it might be well to notify the director as to what positions are in the classified service.

Fourth—Section 4504, General Code, to which reference is made, provides:

> "No clerk, auditor or accounting officer of any city shall allow the claim of any officer for services of any deputy or other person in violation of the provisions of this title."

This statute does not require a certification to the city auditor, nor does any other statute require such a certificate from the civil service commission.

Section 4491, General Code, requires a certification from the appointing board or officer, as follows:

> "The appointing board or officer shall certify to the auditor all appointments to offices and places in the respective departments of the classified service of such city, and all vacancies occurring therein, whether by dismissal, removal, resignation or death, and the date thereof."

Respectfully,

TIMOTHY S. HOGAN,

Attorney General.

BONDS, AUTHORIZED BY ELECTORS—TAXATION LIMITATIONS—POWER OF MAYOR TO REMOVE AND APPOINT AND POWER OF COUNCIL TO CHANGE SALARY OF A CITY ENGINEER—SUSPENSION OF THREE READINGS RULE OF COUNCIL.

Bonds issued under Sections 3939-3952, General Code, when authorized by a favorable vote of the people, within the principle established in 83 O. S., 482, are not to be considered in arriving at the 2½ per cent. limitation prescribed under such sections. These sections, however, have been subjected to several changes in 102 Ohio Laws.

The official known as city engineer at the head of a sub-department in the department of public service, is by reason of the Paine law subject to the control of the mayor who may at any time remove him and appoint a successor.

The salary may be changed by council at will, as that official is not the holder of a statutory term of office.

There is no exception to the rule that council may by a three-fourths vote, suspend the rule requiring three readings.

COLUMBUS, OHIO, February 9, 1912.

HON. G. B. FINDLEY, City Solicitor, Elyria, Ohio.

DEAR SIR:—I beg to acknowledge receipt of your letter of January 24, requesting my opinion upon the following questions:

"1. Whether or not bonds issued under authority of Sections 3939 to 3952, inclusive, when authorized by a favorable vote of the people, are to be considered in arriving at the two and one-half per cent. limitation prescribed under such sections?

"2. Whether or not the mayor of a city can remove the city engineer and appoint another engineer to his place, and the city council then raise the salary of the new engineer so appointed, all of this being done during the term for which the mayor makes the appointment?

"3. If the raise in the engineer's salary, indicated above, is legal, can the city council under a suspension of the rules, pass the ordinance increasing the pay of the newly appointed engineer? Or must this have the three readings?"

Your first question is answered in the negative by the holding of the supreme court in the case of the city of Cleveland vs. Cleveland, 83 O. S., 482, unreported. That was the precise question involved in that case, and the holding of the court was that, bonds issued upon the approval of the electors were not to be counted in ascertaining the (then) limitation of four per cent. imposed by the Longworth act. In this connection permit me to call your attention to the fact that Sections 3939 to 3953, inclusive, have been repealed and re-enacted twice in the 102 O. L.

Answering your second question, I beg to state that there is no such office in the city government as that of "city engineer," excepting as same exists as a head of a sub-department within the department of public service. As such the incumbent thereof may be removed at will by the mayor under favor of Section 4250, General Code. This being the case, I am of the opinion, as to this position, there is no "term of office" within the meaning of Section 4219, which prohibits a change in the compensation of any office during the term for which an incumbent may have been elected.

Some confusion arises by virtue of the conflicting provisions of Sections 4251 and 4252, General Code. The first of these sections requires the mayor to make his appointments within a certain definite period of time, and the second of the two, which authorizes the mayor to fill vacancies, speaks of "the unexpired term." Both of these sections were passed as parts of the original Municipal Code. The scheme of that plan of government, as enacted into law in 1902, contemplated an elective board of public service. A radical change was made in the law by the enactment of the so-called "Paine Law," 99 O. L., 562. The controlling purpose of this scheme is found embodied in Section 4250, above cited. By this law, the mayor is made the responsible head of the entire city administration, with virtual power to dictate the policy of every department therein. It was in the Paine law that the power of the mayor to remove and appoint at will the heads of the sub-departments in the department of public service first appeared. In my opinion the existence of this power is quite inconsistent with the provisions of Section 4251 and Section 4252. It is not necessary in discussing the present question to determine whether or not these two sections were impliedly repealed as a whole by the enactment of the Paine law. Suffice it to state, that as to the offices over which the mayor is given absolute control by what is now Section 4250, General Code, the provisions of Sections 4251 and 4252 cannot, in reason, apply. Inasmuch as Section 4250 is one of later enactment it follows that it must control.

For all the foregoing, then, I am of the opinion that the mayor may at any time remove a city engineer and reappoint his successor, and that the salary of the engineer is subject to such change as council may choose to make, and that at any time, inasmuch as the city engineer has no term whatever.

Answering your third question, I beg to state that Section 4224, General Code, expressly authorizes the rule for three separate readings, to be suspended by three-fourths vote of council. There is no exception to this rule.

Very truly yours,
TIMOTHY S. HOGAN,
Attorney General.

NO NECESSITY FOR ENCLOSED BLANK VOTING SQUARE IN COUNTY LOCAL OPTION ELECTION BALLOTS—GENERAL BALLOTS—DIRECTORY AND MANDATORY PROVISIONS.

Section 6111, General Code, providing for the form of ballot to be used in county local option elections does not provide for a "blank enclosed space" for the marking of the voter's cross, as does Section 5021 providing for election ballots generally, and for this reason and also for the reason stated in 46 Cal., 398, that the law is merely directory as to those things over which the voter does not have control, a ballot in a county local option election which fails to have said space enclosed, is not illegal.

COLUMBUS, OHIO, February 7, 1912.

HON. C. W. WHITE, City Solicitor, Gallipolis, Ohio.

DEAR SIR:—I am in receipt of your letter of January 25, wherein you ask for a ruling as to whether or not the form of ballot used at the special local option election under the Rose county local option law was legal or illegal, and you say the form of ballot used was as follows:

	The sale of intoxicating liquors as a beverage shall be prohibited.
	The sale of intoxicating liquors as a beverage shall not be prohibited.

Your contention is that the form of ballot as used, and diagrammed above, was illegal because it did not "leave a square in which the negative choice might be indicated."

While it is true that Section 5021, providing for the form of election ballots generally, requires that "ballots be so printed as to give each elector a clear opportunity to designate by a cross mark in a blank enclosed space * * * on the left and before the name of each candidate his choice of particular candidates," that is not the section under which a ballot under the so-called Rose county local option law would be formulated. The ballot to be used in the county local option elections is provided for in Section 6111, General Code, which provides as follows:

> "The ballots at a special election held under the provisions of Sections 6108 and 6109, shall be printed with an affirmative and negative statement, to wit: 'The sale of intoxicating liquors as a beverage shall be prohibited,' 'The sale of intoxicating liquors as a beverage shall not be prohibited,' with a blank space on the left side of each statement in which to give each elector an opportunity to clearly designate his choice by a cross mark as follows:

"_____The sale of intoxicating liquors as a beverage shall be prohibited.

"_____The sale of intoxicating liquors as a beverage shall not be prohibited."

A comparison of the two sections shows that while Section 5201 provides for "a blank enclosed space," Section 6111 merely provides for a "blank space on the left side of each statement in which to give each elector an opportunity to clearly designate his choice by a cross mark.''.

While, without a doubt, the ballot would have had a more finished appearance and would have been a better job mechanically and typographically if it had the line under the negative statement similar to the one under the affirmative statement, I am inclined to the belief that the elector had the opportunity of marking the ballot as printed equally as well as if the finished product had been placed before him. The general proposition governing is thus stated in McCrary on Elections, Par. 538, in referring to a California case—Kirk vs. Rhoads, 46 Cal., 398:

"* * * The court held, and we think upon the soundest reason, that as to those things over which the voter has control, the law is mandatory, and that as to such things as are not under his control, it should be held to be directory only. The conclusion of the court was that the purpose and object of the statute was to secure the freedom and purity of elections, and to place the elector above and beyond the reach of improper influences or restraint in casting his ballot, and that it should have such a reasonable construction as would tend to secure these important results. And so construing the statute, the court concluded that a ballot cast by an elector in good faith should not be rejected for failure to comply with the law in matters over which the elector has no control; such as the exact size of the ticket, the precise kind of paper or the particular character of type or heading used."

I am, therefore, of the opinion that the use of a ballot, like the one submitted, at a county local option election would not render the election void by reason of a claim that the arrangement was illegal in form.

Very truly yours,

TIMOTHY S. HOGAN,
Attorney General.

MUNICIPAL CORPORATION—FUNDING INDEBTEDNESS—EXISTING OBLIGATIONS—"EXPENDITURE"—SMITH ONE PER CENT. LAW—INITIATIVE AND REFERENDUM ACT.

When a municipal corporation has not sufficient funds to make an appropriation from which to meet obligation due upon a legal contract with an electric light company for public lighting purposes, the council under Sections 3916 and 3917, General Code, may fund such indebtedness by issuing bonds therefor.

Such an issue is not an "expenditure" within the comprehension of Section 5649-3*d of the Smith one per cent. law and as it does not create a new charge upon the municipality, is not within the restrictions of the initiative and referendum law so as to require the measure authorizing the same to be suspended for* 60 days or to be subject to the vote of the electors.

COLUMBUS, OHIO, February 6, 1912.

HON. HOWARD E. MACGREGOR, City Auditor, Springfield, Ohio.

DEAR SIR:—I beg to acknowledge receipt of your letter of January 15th, submitting for my opinion thereon, the following question:

> "The city of Springfield has contracted with an electric light company for lighting the streets and public places of the municipality. The money in the treasury at the time the first semi-annual appropriation ordinance for the fiscal year 1912, was passed was insufficient to meet the obligations of the city, accruing from time to time under this contract. Accordingly, no appropriation for this purpose was made in said ordinance. May bonds lawfully be issued under Section 3916, General Code, for the purpose of funding the indebtedness of the city arising under its said contract, and thus meeting this obligation thereunder?"

The following section of the General Code are applicable to the solution of the question above stated:

Section 5649-3*e*, 102 O. L., 272:

> "Unexpended appropriations or balances of appropriations remaining over at the end of the year, and the balances remaining over at any time after a fixed charge shall have been terminated by reason of the object of the appropriation having been satisfied or abandoned, shall revert to the general fund, and shall then be subject to other authorized uses, as such board or officers may determine."

Section 3982 of the General Code:

> "The council of a municipality in which electric lighting companies, natural or artificial gas companies, gas light or coke companies, or companies for supplying water for public or private consumption, are established, or into which their wires, mains or pipes are conducted, may regulate from time to time the price which such companies may charge for electric light, or for gas for lighting or fuel purposes, or for water for public or private consumption, furnished by such companies to the citizens, public grounds, and buildings, streets, lanes, alleys, avenues, wharves, and landing places, or for fire protection. * * *"

Section 3983 of the General Code:

"If council fixes the price at which it shall require a company to furnish electricity or either natural or artificial gas to the citizens, or public buildings or for the purpose of lighting the streets, alleys, wharves, landing places, public grounds or other places or for other purposes, for a period not exceeding ten years, and the company or persons so to furnish such electricity or gas assents thereto, by written acceptance, filed in the office of the auditor or clerk of the corporation, the council shall not require such company to furnish electricity or either natural or artificial gas, as the case may be, at a less price during the period of time agreed on, not exceeding such ten years."

Section 3809 of the General Code:

"The council of a city may authorize, and the council of a village may make, a contract with any person, firm or company for lighting the streets, alleys, lands, lanes, squares and public places in the municipal corporation, or for furnishing water to such corporation, or for the collection and disposal of garbage in such corporation, or for the leasing of the electric light plant and equipment, or the waterworks plant, or both, of any person, firm or company therein situated, for a period not exceeding ten years, and the requirement of a certificate that the necessary money is in the treasury shall not apply to such contract * * *."

Section 3916 of the General Code:

"For the purpose of extending the time of payment of any indebtedness, which from its limits of taxation the corporation is unable to pay at maturity, or when it appears to the council for the best interest of the corporation, the council thereof may issue bonds of the corporation or borrow money so as to change but not to increase the indebtedness, in such amounts, for such lengths of time and at such rate of interest as the council deems proper, not to exceed six per cent. per annum, payable annually or semi-annually."

Section 3917 of the General Code:

"No indebtedness of such municipal corporation shall be funded, refunded, or extended, unless it shall first be determined to be an existing valid and binding obligation of the corporation by a formal resolution of the council thereof. * * *"

Your letter does not so state, but I assume from the manner in which your question is phrased that the contract between the city and the electric light company was made prior to the enactment of what is known as the "Smith one per cent. law." Upon this assumption, I am of the opinion that, under the related sections above quoted, council may lawfully issue bonds and fund the indebtedness of the municipality as it accrues from time to time under the contract above referred to. Provision for valid prior indebtedness is, in my opinion, to be regarded as impliedly accepted from the language of Section 5649-3*d* to the effect that,

"All expenditures within the following six months shall be made from and within such appropriations and balances thereof."

This sentence, in my judgment, operates as a limitation upon the powers of the municipality to expend moneys in its treasury, but not upon its power to borrow money and expend the proceeds. The word "expenditure" itself refers, in my opinion, not to the mere withdrawal of the money from the treasury, but to the making of a contract under which money is to be withdrawn from the treasury. Section 3809 having expressly provided that the certificate that the money is in the treasury and not appropriated for any other purpose shall not be necessary in case of contracts like that concerning which you inquire, it follows that the obligation itself is valid and continuous, and that the municipal corporation must discharge the same regardless of statutes like Section 5649-3*d*, which, in this respect, is precisely identical with former statutes applicable to municipal corporations.

In other words, it is my opinion that no "appropriation" is necessary to apply the proceeds of an issue of bonds for the purpose of discharging a valid pre-existing indebtedness of the corporation.

It appears from your statement of facts that the inability of the city to meet this obligation arises from the fact that the limits of taxation now applicable to the city do not permit council at this time to appropriate money for that purpose. Thus the case is brought squarely within that provision of Section 3916, which requires that a municipal corporation find itself unable to pay the debt at maturity. Even if this were not so, said section permits bonds to be issued whenever a debt is due and unpaid and it is deemed by the council to be for the best interests of the municipality so to fund the same.

In short, the situation presents, in my judgment, every essential prerequisite to the exercise of the power of council under Section 3916 and 3917, above quoted.

You ask further as to whether or not an ordinance issuing bonds under these circumstances is within the initiative and referendum law, and accordingly does not become effective until the expiration of the period therein provided for. In my judgment this question is to be answered in the negative. As I construe the intiative and referendum law, so called, it applies to all legislation which has the effect of imposing a new and distinct charge upon the municipality, or creating a new and distinct right as against the municipality. In the case of refunding bonds the debt is already in existence and must be a valid and existing obligation of the city before the bonds can even be issued. The only additional burden to the city created by the issuance of such bonds is that of the interest thereon. Inasmuch, however, as the municipality is already liable upon its contract, and cannot evade meeting the obligations thereof, I am of the opinion that the method which I have already held may be taken to accomplish this result, is not one subject to the approval or disapproval of the electors under the initiative and referendum law.

Very truly yours,

TIMOTHY S. HOGAN,
Attorney General.

PUBLIC OFFICER—INTEREST IN CONTRACTS OF MUNICIPALITY—CIVIL SERVICE COMMISSIONER AS OFFICER AND STOCKHOLDER OF A CORPORATION DEALING WITH MUNICIPALITY.

If a member of the civil service commission of a city, who is the secretary and treasurer of a corporation is also a stockholder in such corporation, he has such a pecuniary interest in the contracts of the corporation as to bring that official within the prohibitions of Section 3808 and 12912, General Code, against the officer of a corporation having interest in the profits, of a contract, job work, etc., which may be negotiated between such corporation and such municipality.

COLUMBUS, OHIO, February 9, 1912.

HON. GEORGE C. STIENEMAN, City Solicitor, Sandusky, Ohio.

DEAR SIR:—I beg to acknowledge receipt of your letter of January 17th, requesting my opinion upon the following question:

> "Can a municipality legally pay a claim for printing legal notices, ordinances, job work, etc., for the city by a corporation whose secretary and treasurer is a member of the municipal civil service commission?

I also acknowledge receipt of your subsequent letter of January 24th, expressing your view of the question and citing certain authorities.

No time need be spent in discussing the proposition that a member of the municipal service commission is an officer of the city.

This being the case, the following sections of the General Code are applicable.

> "Section 3808. No member of the council, board, officer or commissioner of the corporation, shall have any interest in the expenditure of money on the part of the corporation other than his fixed compensation. A violation of any provision of this or the preceding two sections shall disqualify the party violating it from holding any office of trust or profit in the corporation, and shall render him liable to the corporation for all sums of money or other thing he may receive contrary to the provisions of such sections, and if in office he shall be dismissed therefrom."
> "Section 12912. Whoever, being an officer of a municipal corporation * * * is interested in the profits of a contract, job work or services for such corporation * * * shall be fined, etc. * * *"

The contract thus being made illegal are, in my judgment, to be treated as such for all purposes. It follows, upon familiar principles, that no action can be maintained upon such a contract by either party thereto.

Two questions of law are presented in your query, as follows:

1. Is a contract for public printing one of those to which either or both of these sections, above quoted, apply? The answer to this question must be in the affirmative, it having been held in the case of McCormick vs. Niles, 81 O. S., 246, that the liability of the municipality to pay for such public printing, even, as is required by law to be inserted in a newspaper of general circulation in the corporation, must rest upon an express contract made between an authorized officer of the municipality and the proprietor of the newspaper. If liability must rest upon express contracts, and if the express contract in question is void for illegality, then there is no obligation whatsoever upon the city to pay for such printing, and such work is no different in this respect from casual or job work.

2. Has the secretary and treasurer of a corporation such an interest in its contracts as is prohibited by either or both of these sections? While the language of these sections is very broad, I am of the opinion that, both being penal in a sense at least, they must be held to apply only to a pecuniary interest, dependent upon the success of the contractor in securing the municipal contract. An employe of a corporation whose conpensation consists of a regular salary in no direct way dependent upon the amount of business which the corporation succeeds in getting, has no such interest as that inhibited by these statutes. Dunlap vs. City, 13 Weekly Notes of Cases, 98, cited with approval by Summers, J., in delivering the opinion of the court in State ex rel. vs. Egry, 79 O. S., 416.

If the person concerning whom you are inquiring is a stockholder of the corporation as well as the secretary and treasurer thereof, a different rule applies. A stockholder has an actual, though minute, interest in every contract of the corporation.

This rule is laid down or recognized in the following cases, among others:

"Commonwealth vs. DeCamp, 177 Pa. State, 112.
"Kennett Elec. Lt. Co., vs. Kennett Square, 4 Pa. Dist. 707.
"Stroud vs. Water Company, 56 N. J. L., 422.
"Foster vs. Cape May, 56 I. D., 78.
"Broken Bow vs. Waterworks Co., 57 Neb., 548."

I am aware of no adjudicated case in this state pertaining to the question as to whether or not a stockholder's interest is sufficient under these statutes. I have been told that a common pleas court has adopted a rule contrary to that which I have above defined. The case is not, however, so far as I am able to ascertain, reported, and for this reason as well as because the question is not fully adjudicated in this state, I cannot do otherwise than follow the rule which has become settled by the weight of authority in other jurisdictions under statutes substantially identical with those under consideration.

For the foregoing reasons, then, and upon the above cited authorities, I am of the opinion that if the secretary and treasurer of a corporation is also a stockholder thereof and such person occupies the position of member of the civil service commission of a city, contracts between the city and such corporation are illegal and void, though such contracts may have been made on behalf of the city by a department of the city government other than the civil service commission.

Very truly yours,

TIMOTHY S. HOGAN,
Attorney General.

POLICE RELIEF FUND—RULES OF TRUSTEES—POWER TO COMPEL CONTRIBUTION— MAINTENANCE BY TAXATION

As the police relief refund is intended by the statutes to be maintained by taxation, though provision is made for voluntary contributions and although power is given to the trustees of such fund to make regulation, nevertheless, a rule by them, to the effect that policemen who refuse to contribute, cannot partake in the fund, is illegal.

COLUMBUS, OHIO, February 7, 1912.

HON. DAVID G. JENKINS, City Solicitor, Youngstown, Ohio.

DEAR SIR:—I beg to acknowledge receipt of your letter of January 9, 1912, wherein you inquire as follows:

> "The trustees of the police relief fund of this city desire an opinion as to the legality and enforcibility of the following rule of their by-laws:
> "'All members of the police department desiring to participate in the relief fund as herein provided shall pay the following monthly contributions thereto; chief of police, seventy-five (75) cents; captains, sixty-five (65) cents; lieutenants and detectives, sixty (60) cents; patrolmen, clerks, operators, turnkeys, patrol drivers and wagonmen, fifty (50) cents. The moneys derived from said monthly contributions shall be placed in fund Number 1, or what is known as the reserve fund of the police relief fund. These payments shall be due and payable by the members to the secretary of the police relief fund on the fifth (5th) day of each month, commencing with the fifth day of July, 1911. The secretary shall give each member a receipt for the amount so paid in. Members of the police department failing to make and pay the monthly contributions as above specified shall not be members of the police relief fund association, and shall not participate in said fund, nor in the pensions as herein provided for members of said police relief association.'
> "The trustees contend that they have power to make and enforce the above rule under Section 4628, General Code, which provides that 'such trustees shall make all rules and regulations for the distribution of the fund, including the qualifications of those to whom any portion of the fund shall be paid and the amount thereof.' They further claim that mere membership in the police department does not entitle one to participate in the pension funds, but that compliance with the rules as laid down by the trustees and of which the above is one, is a prerequisite. Kindly advise me of your ruling thereon as soon as convenient."

In reply to your inquiry would say Section 4616 of the General Code provides for the appointment of trustees of the police relief fund as follows:

> "In any municipal corporation, having a police department supported in whole or in part at public expense, the council by ordinance may declare the necessity for the establishment and maintenance of a police relief fund. Thereupon a board of trustees, who shall be known as 'trustees of the police relief fund' shall be created, which in cities shall consist of the director of public safety, and in villages of the marshal, and five other persons, members of such department. But upon petition of a majority of the members of the police department, such director or marshal may designate a less number than five to be elected trustees."

Section 4621 of the General Code provides that a tax may be levied for maintaining such fund as follows:

"In each municipality availing itself of these provisions, to maintain the police relief fund, the council thereof each year, in the manner provided by law for other municipal levies, and in addition to all other levies authorized by law, may levy a tax of not to exceed three-tenths of a mill on each dollar upon all the real and personal property as listed for taxation in the municipality. In the matter of such levy, the board of trustees of the police relief fund shall be subject to the provisions of law controlling the heads of departments in such municipality, and shall discharge all the duties required of such heads of departments."

Section 4625, General Code, provides that the members of the police department may make voluntary contributions to such police relief fund as follows:

"The trustees of the fund may also receive such uniform amounts from each person designated by the rules of the police department, a member thereof, as he voluntarily agrees to, to be deducted from his monthly pay, and the amount so received shall be used as a fund to increase the pension which may be granted to such person or his beneficiaries, or in the discretion of such trustees money derived from such monthly deductions shall be used to relieve members of the force who contribute thereto when sick or disabled from the performance of duty, for funeral expenses, relief of their families in case of death or for pensions when honorably retired from the force."

Section 4628, General Code, provides that such trustees shall make all rules and regulations for the distribution of such fund as follows:

"Such trustees shall make all rules and regulations for the distribution of the fund, including the qualifications of those to whom any portion of the fund shall be paid and the amount thereof, but no rules or regulations shall be in force until approved by the director of public safety or the marshal of the municipality, as the case may be."

Under Section 4625 of the General Code, above quoted, the members of the police department may contribute to such police relief fund such an amount each month as is uniform and as voluntarily agreed upon by the members of the department to be deducted from their monthly pay. It is apparent by the provisions contained in Section 4621 of the General Code, above quoted, that the police relief fund is primarily created and maintained by a general tax levied on the real and personal property of the municipality. Under the rule which is proposed to be adopted and enforced by the trustees of the relief fund of your city, if the members of the police department fail to pay the monthly contributions therein specified, then such member shall not participate in the police relief fund created by law.

Under the authority of Section 4628 of the General Code, above quoted, the trustees of the police relief fund can make rules and regulations for the distribution of the fund and also prescribe the qualifications of those to whom the fund shall be paid. However, I am of the opinion that such trustees cannot legally adopt such rules and regulations as would entirely deprive the members of the police department from sharing in the relief fund for the reason as above stated, that such fund is created and maintained by general taxation upon all the real and personal property of the municipality, availing itself of the provisions to create and maintain a police relief fund.

Therefore it is my conclusion that the trustees of the police relief fund of your city are without legal authority to adopt and enforce the rule above quoted.

Yours truly,

TIMOTHY S. HOGAN,
Attorney General.

OFFICES INCOMPATIBLE—MEMBER OF CIVIL SERVICE COMMISSION AND CLERK OF THE COMMISSION.

Under Section 4478, General Code, providing that civil service commissioners "shall hold no other position in the public service" and also under Section 3808, General Code, providing that "no commissioners of the corporation shall have any interest in the expenditure of money on the part of the corporation other than his fixed compensation," a member of a civil service commission may not act at the same time as its clerk and receive the salary for both positions.

COLUMBUS, OHIO, February 14, 1912.

HON. W. S. JACKSON, City Solicitor, Lima, Ohio.

DEAR SIR:—I desire to acknowledge receipt of your letter of January 13, 1912, wherein you state the following facts:

> "The civil service commission of Lima, Ohio, is composed of three members as provided by law.
> "The city of Lima provides by ordinance for each commissioner's salary at $50.00 per year. Also, there is provided a clerk and salary for said clerk in the following manner as Section 2 of the ordinance:
> " 'That said commission be and it is hereby allowed one clerk, and said clerk shall receive a salary of $100.00 per year, payable quarterly.'
> "The small allowance for clerk hire makes it exceeding difficult to find a clerk for the commission. Therefore, one of the members of the commission has signified his willingness to perform the clerk's work, providing that he can receive the compensation allowed for a clerk."

And inquire as follows:

> "Is it legal for a memer of the civil service commission drawing a salary of $50.00 a year to assume the clerkship of same commission and draw the additional compensation allowed for clerk hire of $100.00 per year?"

In reply, to your inquiry, I desire to say that Section 4478, of the General Code, provides for the appointment of a civil service commission composed of three members, as follows, to wit:

"In cities, the president of the board of education of the city school district in which the city is located, the president of the board of trustees of the sinking fund, and the president of the council shall constitute a commission which shall appoint three resident electors of the city to be known as civil service commissioners. They shall be appointed for terms of three years and shall hold office until their successors are appointed and qualified, and may be removed by the appointing commission. The appointing commission shall fill any vacancy caused by removal, by appointment for unexpired terms. The civil service commission first appointed hereunder shall be appointed one for one year, one for two years and one for three years. They shall hold no other positions in the public service, excepting in schools and libraries."

It will be noted that the last clause of the above cited section provides that the commissioners so appointed shall hold no other position in the public service. Furthermore, I desire to cite Section 3808, of the General Code, which provides that no officer or commissioner of the corporation shall have any interest in the expenditure of money on the part of the corporation except their fixed compensation as follows, to wit:

"No member of council, board, officer or commissioner of the corporation, shall have any interest in the expenditure of money on the part of the corporation other than his fixed compensation. A violation of any provision of this or the preceding two sections shall disqualify the party violating it from holding any office of trust or profit in the corporation and shall render him liable to the corporation for all sums of money or other thing he may receive contrary to the provisions of such actions, and if in office he shall be dismissed therefrom."

In the statement of facts above quoted you state that the respective commissioners each receive a salary of $50.00 per year, and also that the clerk of said civil service commission is allowed $100 per year as provided by ordinance of the municipality. As I view the matter, if a member of the commission, receiving $50.00 per year for his services as such member were to also act as clerk of the commission at an annual salary of $100.00, it would constitute such an interest on the part of such commissioner in the expenditure of money on the part of the corporation as to disqualify said commissioner from acting as clerk of the commission as provided in Section 3808, General Code, above quoted, and in addition to the foregoing disqualifications said Section 4478, as above quoted, specifically provides that the members of the civil service commission shall hold no other position in the public service. Therefore, in direct answer to your inquiry, I am of the opinion that it is not legal for a member of the civil service commission drawing a salary of $50.00 a year to assume the clerkship of said commission and draw an additional compensation allowed for clerk hire, to wit, the sum of $100.00 per year.

Yours very truly,

TIMOTHY S. HOGAN,

Attorney General.

BOARD OF HEALTH—POWERS OF COUNCIL TO ABOLISH REPEALED —INVALID ORDINANCE ABOLISHING BOARD—EFFECT UPON TERMS OF NEW APPOINTEES.

Where an ordinance intended by a village council to abolish the board of health and place its duties upon the board of public service, under Section 1536-723, Revised Statutes, the taking effect of which ordinance was suspended by the mayor's veto until after the passage of the General Code and the consequent repeal of said Section 1536-723, the ordinance was null and void, and the board of health was not abolished.

When the former members of the board had resigned, appointment of new members to the board of health by an ordinance mistakenly presumed to effect a re-establishment of the board was a mere filling of vacancies and not an establishment of new offices. The appointees, therefore, serve for the unexpired terms of the members whom they respectively succeeded.

COLUMBUS, OHIO, February 13, 1912.

HON. BEN L. BENNETT, City Solicitor, East Liverpool, Ohio.

DEAR SIR:—Under date of January 9, 1912, you ask an opinion of this department upon the following:

> "I desire to submit for the consideration of your department a question concerning the board of health of this city and will appreciate receiving from you your valued advice.
> "On March 18, 1910, the city council of this city passed an ordinance abolishing the city board of health and naming the service director as supervisor of said department; on March 28, 1910, this ordinance was vetoed by the mayor; on April 14, 1910, and while said ordinance was inoperative, the entire board of health resigned, said ordinance being inoperative on account of mayor's veto. On April 28, 1910, council reconsidered said ordinance and passed it over the mayor's veto. On July 14, 1910, council re-established the board of health and repealed the ordinance of abolishing same and on the ninth day of August, 1910, the mayor appointed five men to act as such board.
> "The question to be determined is, did council have the right on March 18, 1910, to abolish the board of health, as at that time there was but one service director. If they did not have such right, then are not the appointees of the mayor, made on August 9, 1910, merely filling vacancies of the members of said board, who had resigned?
> "The question is one of vital importance to the city, upon which I would solicit your advice."

The action of council upon said ordinance was started before the adoption of the General Code, and its action thereon was not completed until after the General Code became effective. The General Code was passed by the general assembly on March 23, 1910, and was approved by the governor on March 29, 1910, upon which latter date it became effective.

The ordinance was passed by council on March 18, 1910; was vetoed by the mayor on March 28, 1910, and on April 28, 1910, it was passed by council over the veto of the mayor. The final act of passage was taken on April 28, 1910, and in order to be legal, council must have had on said April 28, 1910, the power to abolish the board of health, and to place the director of public service in charge of the department of health of the city.

Section 4404, General Code, provides:

> "The council of each municipality shall establish a board of health, composed of five members to be appointed by the mayor and confirmed by council, who shall serve without compensation, and a majority of whom shall be a quorum. The mayor shall be president by virtue of his office. But in villages the council, if it deems advisable, may appoint a health officer, to be approved by the state board of health, who shall act instead of a board of health, and fix his salary and term of office. Such appointee shall have the powers and perform the duties granted to or imposed upon boards of health, except that rules, regulations or orders of a general character and required to be published, made by such health officer, shall be approved by the state board of health."

In addition to the above provisions, Section 1536-723, Rev. Stat., contained the following provision after the word quorum:

> "Provided, that whenever the council of any city shall declare by ordinance that it will be for the best interests of said city that the board of service act as a board of health for the city, then upon the passage of said ordinance the board of public service of said city shall be the duly authorized board of health thereof, and shall have all the powers and perform all the duties prescribed by law for boards of health."

No doubt the action of council on March 18, 1910, to abolish the board of health was attempted to be passed by virtue of the foregoing provision. This provision, however, was not carried into the General Code, and said Section 1536-723, Rev. Stat., was specifically repealed by the General Code by Section 13767, subdivision (43).

Section 4234, General Code, provides for the veto power of a mayor of cities as follows:

> "Every ordinance or resolution of council shall, before it goes into effect, be presented to the mayor for approval. The mayor, if he approves it, shall sign and return it forthwith to council. If he does not approve it, he shall within ten days after its passage or adoption return it with his objections to council, or if council is not in session, to the next regular meeting thereof, which objections council shall cause to be entered upon its journal. The mayor may approve or disapprove the whole or any item of an ordinance appropriating money. If he does not return such ordinance or resolution within the time limited by this section, it shall take effect in the same manner as if he had signed it, unless council, by adjournment, prevents its return. When the mayor disapproves an ordinance or resolution, or any part thereof, and returns it to the council with its objections, council may, after ten days, reconsider it, and if such ordinance, resolution or item, upon such reconsideraton is approved by the votes of two-thirds of all the members elected to council, it shall then take effect as if signed by the mayor. The provisions of this section shall apply only in cities."

The veto of the mayor on March 28, 1910, prevented the ordinance from going into effect. All steps had not been taken for its legal passage, if council had power to pass the same, until April 28, 1910, and at that time the General Code was in effect The General Code does not authorize council to abolish a board of health and to place the same in charge of any other officer or board. On April 28, 1910, the power of council to pass such an ordinance had been repealed, and the ordinance was therefore, illegal and null and void. The board of health was not thereby abolished. The action of July 14, 1910, to re-establish the board of health was not necessary as the board of health was still in existence, although there were no members to fill the positions.

In case of State vs. Massillon, 14 Cir. Dec. 249, it is held that the establishment of a board of health is mandatory. Voorhees, J., says on page 253:

> "This law and the establishment of a board of health is a police regulation, and may be so characterized. It is mandatory, and the legislature has imposed this duty, and the council of each city is required to establish such a board."

The terms of office of the members of the board of health is prescribed by Section 4406, General Code, which provides:

> "The term of office of the members of the board shall be five years from the date of appointment, and until their successors are appointed and qualified, except that those first appointed shall be classified as follows: One to serve for five years, one for four years, one for three years, one for two years, and one for one year, and thereafter one shall be appointed each year."

It appears that the entire board of health resigned on April 14, 1910, and on August 9, 1910, the mayor appointed a new board. The appointees should have been appointed to fill the unexpired terms of the members who resigned on April 14, 1910. A question might arise as to who are filling the respective unexpired terms, as they are of different duration. The facts submitted do not permit me to pass upon that question.

Respectfully,
TIMOTHY S. HOGAN,
Attorney General.

INITIATIVE AND REFERENDUM — ORDINANCE APPROPRIATING MONEY FOR BOARD OF HEALTH EXPENDITURES—NOT AN "EXPENDITURE OF MONEY."

An ordinance of the village council appropriating moneys to pay expenses incurred by the board of health is not such an "expenditure of moneys" as to come within the initiative and referendum act."

COLUMBUS, OHIO, February 8, 1912.

HON. TELLIS T. SHAW, City Solicitor, Defiance, Ohio.

DEAR SIR:—On January 3rd you stated that there have been a large number of smallpox cases in the city of Defiance; that the board of health has obligated itself to the payment of bills of various kinds by reason thereof to the amount of $2,000.00 or more, and that council has appropriated money for the payment of these bills.

You desire our opinion as to whether the ordinance appropriating money for the payment of the above bills is within the initiative and referendum act, 102 Ohio Laws, 521, and, therefore, whether the city auditor should draw warrants for the bills so allowed and the city treasurer pay the same before the expiration of sixty day.

Section 4451, General Code, being a section under the sub-title "Dangerous Communicable Diseases" under the chapter relating to board of health, provides when expenses are incurred by the board of health under the provisions of this chapter, upon application and certificate from such board, the council shall pass the necessary appropriation ordinances to pay the expenses so incurred and certified.

Paragraph 2, of Section 2, of the initiative and referendum act, provides that no ordinance involving the expenditure of money shall become effective in less than sixty days.

In an opinion rendered to the Hon. W. J. Tossell, city solicitor, Norwalk, Ohio, under date of January 18, 1912, I have held that the semi-annual appropriation ordinance passed by city council is not within the provisions of the initiative and referendum act, for the reason that the same cannot be considered to come under the first paragraph of Section 2, of said act, as one of the powers delegated to municipal corporation because it is a duty not a power so delegated. I have further held that it is not an ordinance involving the expenditure of money, as such ordinance does not expend the money itself, but simply makes applicable the fund for the purpose, and further I have held that it is not within Section 3, of said act, for the reasons stated in said opinion.

Under the provisions of the sections of the General Code relating to the board of health, they are given full power to incur such bills as are necessary thereunder, and under the provisions of Section 4451, above quoted, it is made the duty of council to pass the necessary appropriation ordinances to pay the same.

I am, therefore, of the opinion that since such ordinance being similar to the semi-annual appropriation ordinance, is not an ordinance involving the expenditure of money, and that, therefore, it is not within the provisions of the initiative and referendum act.

In your letter of January 3d you ask a further question in reference to the salary ordinance passed by council, and in reply thereto I mailed you on January 5, 1912, a copy of an opinion heretofore rendered to the Hon. H. W. Houston, city solicitor, Urbana, Ohio.

Very truly yours,
TIMOTHY S. HOGAN,
Attorney General.

ELEVATOR IN CITY BUILDING—APPROPRIATION FOR REPAIR FROM WATERWORKS FUND NOT LEGAL—OTHER FUNDS—DIRECTOR OF PUBLIC SERVICE.

When an ordinance has been passed authorizing the director of public service to enter into a contract for the construction of an elevator in the city building which is largely for the accommodation of the waterworks department, council may not appropriate the amount for this purpose from the waterworks funds for the reason that such a purpose is not within Sections 3958 and 3959, General Code, authorizing the uses to which said fund may be applied.

The elevator's use however, by changes in the location of the waterworks department, might readily be directed to other city purposes, and the appropriation made without difficulty from the general fund or some fund for repair of public buildings.

COLUMBUS, OHIO, February 13, 1912.

HON. HOWARD E. MACGREGOR, City Solicitor, Springfield, Ohio.

DEAR SIR:—Your favor of January 11th received. You state in your communication that:

> "On the 9th inst., the city council of Springfield passed an ordinance authorizing and directing the director of public service to enter into a contract and to expend a sum not to exceed fifteen hundred dollars $1,500.00), for the purposes of replacing and repairing the elevator in the city hall, for the use and benefit of the waterworks department.
> "I enclose a copy of the ordinance herewith, and would be pleased to have you render me an opinion as to the right of council to appropriate money out of the waterworks department for the purpose herein set forth.
> "The present elevator, which it is desired to be replaced, has been in operation in the city building for a long period of time, probably twenty years, and is run by hydraulic pressure, and is now unsafe, needing repairing badly. With each ascent of the elevator, enormous quantities of water are used and wasted and is a drain on the waterworks department, and the superintendent of the department has so stated that matter to council and has explained to that body that it is a matter of economy in the use of water, to install a different type of elevator. About nine-tenths of the passengers using the elevator are people who enter the building for the purpose of settling water bills."

You request my opinion as to the right of the city council of Springfield to appropriate money out of the waterworks department for purposes set forth in the ordinance. A copy of such ordinance is as follows:

> "An ordinance authorizing and directing the director of public service to enter into a contract and to expend a sum not to exceed fifteen hundred ($1,500.00) dollars for the purpose of replacing and repairing the elevator in the city hall of Springfield, Ohio, for the use and benefit of the waterworks department of the said city.
> "Be it ordained by the council of the city of Springfield, state of Ohio, three-fourths of all members elected thereto concurring:

"Section 1. That the director of public service be and he is hereby authorized to enter into a contract after advertisement according to law in a sum not to exceed fifteen hundred ($1,500.00) dollars, for the purpose of repairing and replacing the elevator in the city hall of Springfield, Ohio, for the use and benefit of the waterworks department of said city, said sum to be expended only upon proper voucher aforesaid and for no other purpose whatever.

"Section 2. This ordinance shall take effect and be in force from and after earliest period allowed by law."

Section 3958, General Code, provides as follows:

"For the purpose of paying the expenses of conducting and managing the waterworks, such director may assess and collect from time to time a water rent of sufficient amount in such manner as he deems most equitable upon all tenements and premises supplied with water. When more than one tenant or water taker is supplied with one hydrant or off the same pipe, and when the assessments therefor are not paid when due, the director shall look directly to the owner of the property for so much of the water rent thereof as remains unpaid, which shall be collected in the same manner as other city taxes."

Section 3959, General Code, provides in part as follows:

"After paying the expenses of conducting and managing the waterworks, any surplus therefrom may be applied to the repairs, enlargement or extension of the works or of the reservoirs, the payment of the interest of any loan made for their construction or for the creation of a sinking fund for the liquidation of the debt."

The only purposes for which the waterworks funds, collected under authority of said Section 3958, General Code, can be used, are set forth in said Sections 3958 and 3959. They are:

1st. Expenses of conducting and managing the water works.

2nd. For the repairs, enlargement or extension of the works or of the reservoirs; payment of the interest of any loan, etc.

The expenditure of fifteen hundred dollars for the repair of this elevator is not authorized under the second head, because the only repairs that could be made from funds collected under Section 3958 are repairs of the waterworks or reservoirs.

The only question remaining is as to whether, because the elevator sought to be repaired is used by patrons of the waterworks who go to the city hall for the purpose of settling water bills, the expense of repairing such elevator is properly chargeable under the head of "expenses of conducting and managing the waterworks." I am of the opinion that it cannot be done. The city building is used for the general business of the city; no doubt, all the departments of the city government are located there; and the fact that one portion of it is used by the waterworks department cannot, under the most favorable construction, bring the expense of repairing this portion, or maintaining it, under the head of "expenses of conducting and managing the waterworks." The city building is maintained as an entirety for city purposes; the waterworks department is properly located there; and the fact that users of water make use of this elevator in entering the building for settling water bills does not prevent its use by other citizens, entering the building to transact business with other departments. The room now occupied by the waterworks department and the elevator used by patrons in reaching said rooms may be used, in the future, for some other purpose; there is no reason why the proper authorities cannot change the location of the waterworks department in the city building. So that the repair of this elevator is not properly chargeable to the expense of conducting and managing the waterworks, but to the general fund, or fund appropriated for repairs of city buildings.

Very truly yours,
TIMOTHY S. HOGAN,
Attorney General.

ASSESSMENTS—THREE-FOURTHS PETITION OF PROPERTY HOLDERS—ASSESSMENT OF MORE THAN ONE-THIRD OF VALUE—CONCURRENCE OF THREE-FOURTHS AND MAJORITY OF COUNCIL.

The general rule is that in making assessments for improvement on abutting properties, council shall be limited to one-third of the actual value of the property after the improvement is made. Under Section 3836, General Code, however, when a petition for an improvement is subscribed by three-fourths in interest of the owners of abutting property, the entire cost may be assessed against the signers of the petition in the manner indicated in the petition. Abutting property holders who did not sign the petition, however, may be assessed only to the extent of one-third of the value after improvement is made.

Three-fourths of the members of council must concur in passing a resolution providing for such improvement except when a majority of the property holders petition the same, in which case a concurrence of a majority of the council shall suffice.

COLUMBUS, OHIO, January 29, 1912.

HON. JONATHON TAYLOR, City Solicitor, Akron, Ohio.

DEAR SIR:—I beg to acknowledge receipt of your letter of January 19th, requesting my opinion upon the following question:

> "Directing your attention to Section 3836, on a three-fourths petition, does it indicate that there is absolutely no limitation on the amount of assessments, or is it limited by the language of Section 3819, which provides that it shall not exceed one-third of the actual value of the property after the improvement is made? Again, Section 3836 seems to provide that on a three-fourths petition, the remaining one-fourth is limited to 33 per cent. of the tax value. Is not this in conflict with Section 3819, as above referred to?
> "For the sake of being definite, let me suppose several cases which might reasonably occur in the city:
> "1. Council decides to improve on its own initiative without a petition. We all agree, I believe, that in this event under Section 3835 a three-fourths vote of the council is necessary. Now then, is the limitation of assessment under this proceeding 33 per cent. of the tax value, as set forth in Section 3836, or is it one-third of the value of the property after the improvement is made?
> "2. An improvement is made on petition of the owners of a majority of the foot frontage as set forth in Section 3835, thereupon council proceeds with its legislation. Now, again, is the limitation of the 33 per cent. of the tax value, or is it one-third of the tax value after the improvement is made. With reference to the situation last stated, if it is true that Section 3836 applies so as to limit the assessment to 33 per cent. of the tax value because there was not a three-fourths petition filed, then is there any way of assessing the property owners that Section 3819 seems to contemplate? In other words, is not Section 3819 abrogated by Section 3836 insofar as providing for an assessment of one-third of the actual value after the improvement is made?"

The three sections of the General Code to which you refer in your letter are as follows:

"Section 3836. When a petition subscribed by three-fourths in interest of the owners of property abutting upon a street or highway of any description between designated points, in a municipal corporation, is regularly presented to the council for that purpose, the entire cost of any improvement of such a street or highway, without reference to the value of the lands of those who subscribed such petition, may be assessed and collected in equal annual installments, proportioned to the whole assessment, in a manner to be indicated in the petition, or if not so indicated, then in the manner to be indicated in the petition which may be fixed by the council. * * * When the lot or land of one who did not subscribe the petition is assessed, such assessment shall not exceed thirty-three per cent. of the tax value of his lot or land * * *.

"Section 3819. The council shall limit all assessments to the special benefits conferred upon the property assessed, and in no case shall there be levied upon any lot or parcel of land in the corporation any assessment or assessments for any or all purposes, within a period of five years, to exceed thirty-three and one-third per cent. of the actual value thereof after improvement is made * * *.

"Section 3835. No public improvement, the cost or part of cost of which is to be specially assessed on the owners of property, shall be made without the concurrence of three-fourths of the members elected to council, unless the owners of a majority of the foot frontage to be assessed, petition in writing therefor, in which event the council, a majority of the members elected thereto concurring, may proceed with the improvement in the manner herein provided."

The answer to all of the questions which you suggest is supplied by the establishment of a single principle, namely; Section 3836, General Code, provides a special method of assessment, and is to be regarded in all respects as an exception to the general rule defined by Section 3819 and 3835, General Code. These sections were all enacted at the same time as parts of the Municipal Code of 1902, and no one of them is to be regarded as inconsistent with another of them, unless such inference is irresistible.

Former statutes similar to Sections 3819 and 3836, respectively were construed and the inter-relation thereof pointed out in the case of Hays vs. Cincinnati, 62 O. S., 116. From this case, as well as from the language of the two statutes above referred to, it is clear, I think, that the limitation of Section 3819 upon the amount of any assessment or assessments within a period of five years constitutes the general rule binding upon council in all cases, excepting those specifically enumerated in Section 3836. When, however, under Section 3836 a petition subscribed by three-fourths in interest of the owners of property abutting upon a street or highway is presented to council and the petition itself prays that the entire cost of the improvement may be assessed upon the owners of property abutting thereon, council then may act as to the subscribers of the petition without any regard to limitation whatever. As to those who do not subscribe the petition, however, council is in such cases strictly limited to assessing within thirty-three per cent. of the tax value of each separate lot or tract of land as prescribed in said section. In order, then, to allow council to act under Section 3836, not only must the petition containing the signatures of the owners of three-fourths of the abutting property be presented to council, but the prayer of the petition must be specifically that the entire cost of the improvement may be paid for by special assessment. This proceeding is a special one, constituting the sole exception to the rule of Section 3819, and its procedure must be strictly followed in order to authorize council to assess the entire cost of the improvement upon the owners of abutting property. And when council does proceed to assess the entire cost upon the abutting property, it may not assess all owners alike, but in assessing the owners of property who have not signed the petition must keep within the limitation above referred to.

Section 3835 has no bearing whatever upon the manner of making the assessment. Its effect is limited solely to the vote by which council may order a public improvement involving the assessment of a portion of the costs thereof upon the owners of abutting property. The petition of which it speaks is not the petition referred to in Section 3836, and the procedure of the latter section is an exception to the rule of Section 3835 in precisely the same manner as it constitutes an exception to the rule of Section 3819.

Answering your specific questions, I beg to state there is no limitation whatever upon the amount of an assessment which may be levied by council upon the property of one who signs a petition under Section 3836; that there is no conflict between Sections 3836 and 3819, the former section providing for a separate and distinct procedure from that to which the latter applies; that when council improves on its own initiative without a petition, the limitation of all assessments is one-third of the actual value after the improvement is made, as set forth in Section 3819; that when the owners of a majority of the foot frontage of property upon a street petitioned for an improvement as set forth in Section 3835, council may act by a majority vote but is limited precisely as in the case just supposed, in making its assessment; that is to say, the limitation in such case is one-third of the actual value after the improvement is made; and that finally the only case in which council is limited in its assessing power to one-third of the tax value is that of an owner of property abutting upon a proposed improvement which has been petitioned for under Section 3836 when the owner has not signed the petition.

Very truly yours,

TIMOTHY S. HOGAN.
Attorney General.

INITIATIVE AND REFERENDUM ACT—DESIGNATION OF NEWSPAPERS FOR LEGAL ADVERTISING, NOT WITHIN—COMPLIANCE BY MUNICIPAL CORPORATION WITH MANDATORY LAW—"EXPENDITURE"—DUTIES OF COUNCIL.

Action of the council in designating certain papers to receive the legal advertising of the city for the year is not within the provisions of the initiative and referendum, providing for sixty days suspension and for the right of electors to vote thereon. Such action is an obligatory fulfillment of positive law and not an exercise of a power delegated to a municipality. Neither is it an expenditure of moneys as intended by the aforesaid act.

COLUMBUS, OHIO, February 23, 1912.

HON. STUART R. BOLIN, City Solicitor, Columbus, Ohio.

DEAR SIR:—Under date of February 21st you wrote me to the following effect:

> "By recent action of the council of the city of Columbus, three newspapers published in the city, one Republican, one Democrat and a German publication, were designated as the papers to receive the legal advertising of the city for the year 1912 and the city clerk has executed written contracts with each of the several papers covering said period upon the basis of bids theretofore received pursuant to action of the committee on rules, printing and revision of said council."

You then request our opinion as to whether or not such action of council would be within the provisions of the initiative and referendum act 102 Ohio Laws 521.

Section 4227, General Code, provides that ordinances of a general nature or providing for improvements shall be published before going into operation.

Section 4228, General Code, requires that such ordinances and resolutions shall be published in two newspapers of opposite politics, published and of general circulation in the municipality if such there be, and shall be published in a newspaper printed in the German language if there is in such municipality such a paper having a bona fide circulation of not less than one thousand copies.

It will thus be seen that the law makes it the positive duty of council to advertise ordinances of a general nature or providing for improvements, and failure so to do would, of course, invalidate such ordinance or resolution.

Council in the case has attempted to carry out this positive provision of law by designating the newspapers and authorizing the clerk to enter into contracts with such newspapers, a contract therefor being necessary under the decision of Niles vs. McCormick 81 Ohio State 246.

I am of the opinion that said acts of council could not be considered under Section 2 of the initiative and referendum act for the reason that it cannot be considered as the exercising of any power delegated to municipal corporations, as it is an absolute duty of council and not a power which it may or may not exercise in its judgment. Nor do I believe that it is within the term "involving the expenditure of money." While it is true that the action of council in designating the newspapers and authorizing the clerk to make a contract therefor will cause the expenditure of the money in the printing of the ordinances, yet the designation of the newspapers simply directs to whom the money expended for printing ordinances shall be paid. The statutes governing the actions of council direct the expenditure of the money. It would absolutely block the administration of municipal affairs if the referendum provided for in the act in question were to be construed as including the designation by council of the proper newspapers in which legal advertising should be placed. This may be readily seen by the fact that until the proper newspapers are designated and a contract entered into said papers cannot under the decision of Niles vs. McCormick supra recover for such legal advertising, and the ordinances requiring advertising would not receive such advertising as is required by statute and would consequently, be of no force and effect. If a referendum petition was proper in relation to such act of council the mere filing thereof would prevent council until such action was submitted to the people from passing any ordinance or resolution of a general nature or providing for improvement.

I am, therefore, of the opinion that the words "involving the expenditure of money" is not to be so construed as to include the action of council in designating certain newspapers for legal advertising and authorizing the clerk to enter into contracts with such papers.

Very truly yours,
TIMOTHY S. HOGAN,
Attorney General.

TAXES AND TAXATION—SMITH ONE PER CENT. LAW—MUNICIPAL CORPORATIONS—NO NECESSITY FOR APPROPRIATION FOR PURPOSE OF EXPENDITURES OF PROCEEDS OF BOND ISSUE—HUMANE OFFICER—CIVIL SERVICE—APPOINTMENT AND DISMISSAL BY MAYOR AND HUMANE SOCIETY.

Moneys belonging to a municipality, which have been acquired through an issue of bonds, may be expended for their specific purpose even though an appropriation of such funds has not been made for such specific purpose.

A humane officer is not an officer of a municipality but an officer of the humane society and as such is not subject to the regulations of civil service and therefore upon dismissal, is not entitled to a right of appeal to the civil service commission.

The humane officer is appointed by the mayor and humane society jointly, holds subject to the will of both appointing powers and can be dismissed only by the action of both.

COLUMBUS, OHIO, February 15, 1912.

HON. ALBERT S. FENZEL, City Solicitor, Middletown, Ohio.

DEAR SIR:—I acknowledge receipt of your letter of February 1st, upon the following questions:

> "1. Last year the council of this city passed two bond issues for the purpose of improving existing streets, there is still the larger part of the money from this bond issue in the city treasury; the question being whether or not any provision whatever should be made in the appropriation ordinance, for the first six months of this year, for the disposal of this money receiving from the sale of these bonds?

"2. Has the humane officer the right to appeal to the civil service commission upon dismissal?

"3. After the humane officer has been chosen by the humane society, and the mayor of the city has signed his commission as humane officer, can the mayor recall his signature to the humane officer's commission at any time he declares, thus revoking this officer's commission?"

Section 5649-3*d*, General Code, as amended 102 O. L., 272, provides in part that, at the beginning of each half-yearly period appropriation shall be made from the moneys known to be in the treasury for each of the purposes for which the municipality has to provide; and further, that,

"* * *all expenditures within the following six months shall be made from and within such appropriations and balances thereof. * * *"

In spite of this seeming all-inclusive language, I am of the opinion that the expenditure of moneys raised by the issuance of bonds is not governed thereby. Similar language has been in the Municipal Code ever since its adoption in 1902. Yet the practice has been, I believe, to regard the proceeds of bond issues as not subject thereto. This practice has never been challenged, and in my judgment, it should be regarded as having been in the mind of the general assembly when it enacted Section 5649-3*d*.

Strength is lent to this conclusion by the fact that said Section 5649-3*d* further provides that no appropriation shall be made for any purpose not set forth in the annual budget. Inasmuch as the purpose for which bonds are issued would in scarcely any case be a purpose for which taxes would have to be levied and for which accordingly an estimate would have to be incorporated in the annual budget made up under Section 5649-3*a*, it would seem that this provision is of itself evidence that the legislature did not intend that any part of the section should apply to the proceeds of bonds issued.

For the foregoing reasons, then, I am of the opinion, as to your first question, that proceeds of bond issues need not be appropriated by council in order to be available before expenditure.

Your second and third questions may be considered together, inasmuch as both of them involve the status, as an officer of the city, of the agent of the humane society.

The following sections of the General Code must be considered in connection with these two questions:

"Section 10067. Societies for the prevention of acts of cruelty to animals may be organized in any county, by the association of not less than seven persons. The members thereof, at a meeting called for the purpose, shall elect not less than three of their members directors, who shall continue in office until their successors are duly chosen.

"Section 10070. Such societies may appoint agents who are residents of the county or municipality for which the appointment is made, for the purpose of prosecuting any person guilty of an act of cruelty to persons or animals, who may arrest any person found violating any provision of this chapter, or any other law for protecting persons or animals or preventing acts of cruelty thereto. * * *.

"Section 10071. All appointments by such societies under the next preceding section shall have the approval of the mayor of the city or village for which they are made. If the society exists outside of the city or village, appointments shall be approved by the probate judge of the county for which they are made. The mayor or probate judge shall keep a record of such appointments.

"Section 10072. Upon the approval of the appointment of such an agent by the mayor of the city or village, the council thereof shall pay monthly to such agent or agents from the general revenue fund of the city or village, such salary as the council deems just and reasonable. * * * The amount of salary to be paid monthly by the council of the village to such agent shall not be less than five dollars, by the council of the city not less than twenty dollars, and by the commissioners of the county not less than twenty-five dollars. * * *"

The status of the humane society agent appointed for a municipal corporation is peculiar. Assuming the validity of the law which is not called into question by your queries, it appears, I think, that this agent is not an officer of the municipal corporation at all, although his compensation is to be paid by the municipality. In the first instance, he is an officer or agent of the society. Clearly he is an appointee of the society and not of the municipality. The power of the mayor, to be exercised in connection with his appointment, is not that of appointment itself, but that of confirmation.

Now, the tenure of office of such an agent is not prescribed by any provision of law. Upon elementary principles, then, such agent holds his office at the pleasure of the appointing authority. (Mechem on Public Officers, Section 445.) Inasmuch as the appointing power consists of both the humane society and mayor, that is, the concurrence of both is necessary to effect an appointment, I am of the opinion that a like concurrence is necessary to effect removal. That is to say, the mayor can, by no act of his, create a vacancy in the position of agent of the humane society, nor, on the other hand, could the humane society itself by any act of the society, create such a vacancy. In short, that a removal under these sections may be complete, the humane society must act in the first instance, and the mayor must either approve the action, or signify his approval thereof by approving the appointment of a successor to the agent.

From what has been said it follows, of course, that the humane officer is not an officer of the municipal corporation. Accordingly no question could arise as to such an officer's being in the civil service. I am accordingly of the opinion, in answer to your first question, that upon proper removal in the manner just described, the humane officer has no appeal to the civil service commission of the city.

I am also of the opinion, for the reasons above stated, that the mayor of the city may not by recalling his signature to the humane officer's commission, or by any other single act, revoke such commission and thus effect the removal of the officer.

Very truly yours,

TIMOTHY S. HOGAN,

Attorney General.

MUNICIPAL CORPORATIONS—ASSESSMENT FOR SEWERS—POWERS OF COUNCIL TO REASSESS AND TO COMPROMISE ILLEGAL ASSESSMENTS—POWER TO ASSESS PROPERTY ALREADY DRAINED —IRREGULARITY IN PROCEEDINGS—ILLEGALITY OF ASSESSMENT FOR BENEFITS.

When premises are supplied with local drainage of a permanent nature which is sufficient for the usual and necessary purposes of sewerage, an assessment for an additional sewer is illegal.

The foot frontage of a lot is an element which may be taken into consideration in assessing for benefit and where such an assessment has been materially effected by reason of the assumption of a foot frontage which is larger than the reality, the assessment would be unjust and illegal.

Reassessments may be made by council upon two grounds only:

First—When the proceedings have been informal or irregular and Second—When the assessment has been adjudged illegal by a court of competent jurisdiction.

When objections are made to an assessment on the ground of illegality, however, the claim becomes such a disputed one as the corporation has the power to adjust and settle or compromise, which is an incident to the corporation's power of financial control and its powers to sue and be sued.

In this connection, the council should bear in mind that in a compromise settlement, the entire municipality bears the burden of the reduction of the assessment while in reassessment procedure, the burden falls on the remaining directly benefited property holders.

COLUMBUS, OHIO, February 19, 1912.

HON. CARL J. GUGLER, City Solicitor, Galion, Ohio.

DEAR SIR:—Under favor of January 31, 1912, you ask an opinion of this department upon the following:

> "In the past few years there have been a large number of sanitary sewer laterals built in this city and they were all built on the benefit plan, and the assessments for same were all made after the work was completed and no objections were filed before the assessments were made in the time required by law. Under this statement of facts I would like to have your opinion on the following propositions:
> "First—M. built a private sewer some years ago with the consent of council and at his own expense, later on the city built a sewer, and he helped to pay for this, still later on and at the present time he is being assessed for another sewer, this latter sewer is two feet higher on the inlet on the premises and cannot be used by him. He took this matter up with the former solicitor and was assured right along that he would not be assessed, nevertheless he was assessed, and relying on the statements of the former solicitor he made no protests, the assessing ordinance was confirmed and duly published.
> "Query: Is there any manner in which this member can be relieved of this wrong by council without having the assessment set aside by court, and if so, how?
> "Second—When right of way was obtained for the city for the main trunk line sewer, the city in a number of instances paid money as part consideration to right of way and also agreed by the city grantors should have inlets to the trunk line sewer, the city furnished these inlets. The board that secured the right of way promised the grantors that they would not be assessed for the sewer laterals, but this was not contained in a written agreement and the board had no authority so to do, but there is no question but the grantors thought that this was a part of their consideration, nevertheless they were assessed. These grantors are now objecting to the assessments levied against them; first, because being connected with the trunk line sewer they have sufficient sewerage and feel that they should not now be assessed, and secondly, because the board promised them that they would not be assessed for lateral.

"Query: In your opinion, should these parties be relieved of these assessments, and if so, how can it be accomplished?

"Third—In estimating the benefits the boards took into consideration the foot frontage as one of the elements upon which to determine benefits, and in a number of instances they inadvertently took into consideration more foot frontage than the parties had. In one instance they considered the front as 99 feet when the real frontage was only 60 feet.

"Query: Can this error be remedied, and if so, how?"

Each of the three state of facts which you submit call for an answer to practically the same questions of law, to wit, the right of council to remit all or part of a special assessment, which is illegal or exceeds the special benefits? Also the right of council to make a reassessment.

Section 3812, General Code, provides three methods by which special assessment may be levied, as follows:

"Each municipal corporation shall have special power to levy and collect special assessments, to be exercised in the manner provided by law. The council of any municipal corporation may assess upon the abutting, adjacent and contiguous or other specially benefited lots or lands in the corporation, any part of the entire cost of an expense connected with the improvement of any street, alley, dock, wharf, pier, public road, or place by grading, draining, curbing, paving, repaving, repairing, constructing sidewalks, piers, wharves, docks, retaining walls, sewers, drains, water courses, water mains or laying or water pipe and any part of the cost of lighting, sprinkling, sweeping, cleaning or planting shade trees thereupon, and any part of the cost and expense connected with or made for changing the channel of, or narrowing, widening, dredging, deepening or improving any stream or water course, and for constructing or improving any levee or levees, or boulevards thereon, or along or about the same, together with any retaining wall, or riprap protection, bulkheads, culverts, approaches, flood gates or waterways or drains incidental thereto, which the council may declare conducive to the public health, convenience or welfare, by any of the following methods:

"First—By a percentage of the tax value of the property assessed.

"Second—In proportion to the benefits which may result from the improvement, or

"Third—By the foot front of the property bounding and abutting upon the improvement."

In cases submitted council has made the assessment in accordance with the special benefits derived therefrom.

In your first and second propositions it appears that assessments were made against property which was already supplied with local drainage.

This is covered by Section 3819, General Code, which provides:

> "The council shall limit all assessments to the special benefits conferred upon the property assessed, and in no case shall there be levied upon any lot or parcel of land in the corporation any assessment or assessments for any or all purposes, within a period of five years, to exceed thirty-three and one-third per cent. of the actual value thereof after improvement is made. Assessments levied for the construction of main sewers shall not exceed the sum that in the opinion of council would be required to construct an ordinary street sewer or drain of sufficient capacity to drain or sewer the lots or lands to be assessed for such improvement, nor shall any lots or lands be assessed that do not need local drainage or which are provided therewith."

What shall constitute sufficient local drainage is set forth in the following authorities:

The sixth syllabus in case of Hildebrand vs. City of Toledo, 17 Cir. Dec., 427, reads:

> "Lots are not provided with adequate local drainage, such as will exempt them from paying their share of an assessment levied to pay the cost of a sewer improvement, unless the right exists to dispose of sewage as it is at the time being disposed of, and the right to so continue is one that cannot be interfered with; the present right must include not only the idea of permanency of structure, but also control. Hence, a claim of adequate local drainage, based upon the right to allow sewage to drain into a natural water course running through a municipality, is not sustained, where such drainage will pollute the stream and create a nuisance, and imperil the health of other riparian owners."

The first and second syllabus in case of Ford vs. City of Toledo, 64 Ohio St., 92 reads:

> "Section 2380, of the Revised Statutes, and the exemptions of property from assessments for sewers as therein provided, are applicable where the assessment is levied for the construction of a main sewer in a city of the third grade of the first class.
> "The 'local drainage' contemplated by that provision, is that which provides the lot or land with adequate drainage for the necessary and usual purposes of sewerage; and it is not enough to entitle a lot or land to exemption from assessment, that it is provided with sufficient surface drainage, or does not need drainage of that kind."

In order to be exempt from a special assessment for sewers the premises must be supplied with a local drainage of a permanent nature. It must be sufficient to supply the premises with adequate drainage for the usual and necessary purposes of sewerage. If any of the premises that have been assessed are provided with such local drainage they cannot be assessed for an additional sewer. Each case must be determined by its own particular facts.

It appears further in your second proposition that in consideration of securing a right of way, the city granted to the land owners the right to use the sewer. This right of way was secured, no doubt, over private property which had not been dedicated to such public use that it might be used by the city for a sewer line without compensation therefor. Where it is necessary to appropriate or purchase a right of way for a sewer line, an agreement to permit the use of the sewer as a part of the consideration for such right of way would be a valid consideration, if the contract was otherwise legally entered into. You do not state by what board the promise was made that these land owners should not be liable for future assessment for lateral sewers. You do state, however, that it was unauthorized, and if so, it can have no bearing upon the present situation. The people have been granted the use of the sewer by the city, and if the use of such sewer has the effect of providing the premises with sufficient local drainage, as herein defined, such premises cannot be assessed for another sewer.

In your third proposition it appears that in estimating the benefits the assessing board took into consideration the foot frontage of the lots, and in some cases figured on a greater frontage than the lot had. In levying assessments by the foot frontage rule, the frontage of the lot is the controlling factor. In levying by the special benefit rule, the benefits conferred is the controlling factor. However, in ascertaining the benefits the size of the lot would be one of the elements to be considered. It is reasonable to suppose that the benefit of a sewer is greater to a large lot than it is to a small lot. However, this is not the controlling factor and other elements must be taken into consideration. But where all the other elements are substantially the same, the larger lot would be benefited to a greater extent than the smaller lot. In such case, if a mistake has been made in estimating the size of the lot, the assessment levied by reason of such mistake would not be equitable and would subject the premises to a greater or lesser burden than other lots similarly situated would bear. It is the purpose of the law that the burdens and benefits should be borne and received equally.

By applying the foregoing principles to each particular case you should have no difficulty in determining the legality or justness of the particular assessment levied.

The following sections of the General Code provide the method by which the assessments shall be made when levied in accordance with the benefits conferred.

Section 3847, General Code, provides:

> "When it is determined to assess the whole or part of the cost of an improvement in proportion to the benefit which may result therefrom, as provided for herein, the council may appoint three disinterested freeholders of the corporation to report to it the estimated assessment of such cost on the lots and lands to be charged therewith, in proportion as nearly as may be, to the benefits which may result from the improvement to the several lots or parcels of land so assessed, a copy of which assessment shall be filed in the office of the clerk of the corporation for public inspection."

Section 3848, General Code, provides:

> "If any person objects to an assessment, he shall file his objections, in writing, with the clerk, within two weeks after the expiration of such notice, and thereupon the council shall appoint three disinterested freeholders of the corporation to act as an equalizing board."

Section 3849, General Code, provides:

"A concurrence of two-thirds of the members of the council shall be necessary to appoint the equalizing board and to confirm its assessment."

Section 3850, General Code, provides:

"On a day appointed by the council for that purpose, the equalization board, after taking an oath before the proper officers, to honestly and impartially discharge their duties, shall hear and determine all objections to the assessment, and shall equalize it, as they think proper, which equalized assessment they shall report to the council, which may confirm, or set it aside, and cause a new assessment to be made and appoint a new equalizing board possessing the same qualifications which shall proceed in the manner above provided. When the assessment is confirmed by the council it shall be complete and final, and shall be recorded in the office of the clerk of council."

You do not state whether or not the requirements of the foregoing statutes have been complied with. It is alleged in a communication to this department by the attorney of some of the parties interested that they have not been complied with in every particular. If this is true, and such omissions are sufficient to cause said assessment to be invalid, by reason of some informality or irregularity in the proceedings, council may act under Section 3902, General Code, and make a reassessment. Until such facts are properly submitted through the city solicitor they will not be passed upon. The provisions of said section will, however, be considered.

Section 3902, General Code, provides:

"When it appears to the council that a special assessment is invalid, by reason of informality or irregularity in the proceedings, or when an assessment is adjudged to be illegal, by a court of competent jurisdiction, the council may order a reassessment, whether the improvement has been made or not."

There are two grounds when a reassessment may be made. First, when the special assessment is invalid, by reason of informality or irregularity in the proceedings, and second, when an assessment is adjudged to be illegal by a court of competent jurisdiction. The second does not apply, as it is your desire to avoid litigation, if possible.

The first power has not been construed by the courts of Ohio, as far as we have been able to find. In several cases, however, assessments have been held illegal without prejudice to the right of council to make a reassessment.

The eighth syllabus in case of Upington vs. Oviatt, 24 Ohio St., 232, reads:

"In a case arising under the statute referred to, when it appears that the assessment placed upon the county duplicate for collection was made upon a wrong basis, by omitting property which ought to have been assessed, the collection of the assessment will be enjoined, but without prejudice to the right of the city to make a reassessment, and collect the same in accordance with the provisions of the statute."

In this case, as in the other cases examined, the assessments were held illegal by a court of competent jurisdiction, and the right of council to make a reassessment was recognized.

The first and third syllabus in case of Dean vs. Charlton, 27 Wis., 522, read:

> "While it is probably too late to question the right of the legislature to authorize municipal corporations to reassess and relevy special taxes void for irregularity in the proceedings, yet such statutes, being in derrogation of individual rights, should be strictly construed.
> "The reassessment of the tax in this case would be authorized by Section 1, Ch. 132, Laws of 1868, if the tax had been adjudged void for any irregularity in any of the proceedings in levying it, or for any omission to comply with the forms of the law under which it was assessed; and by Ch. 316, P. & L. Laws of 1869, if it had been adjudged void for want of power in the city to order the work, or 'for a non-compliance with any of the provisions of the city charter in ordering or letting of the work, or making the contracts in relation thereto.' But these statutes strictly construed, do not apply to the tax here in question, which was set aside for a palpable misfeasance—a violation of a plain provision of the law, in fraud of plaintiff's rights and unlawfully increasing his taxes."

The first syllabus in case of Martin vs. City of Oskaloosa, 99 N. W., 557 (Supt. Ct. of Iowa, 1904), reads:

> "Code, Section 836, providing that when by reason of non-conformity to any law or ordinance, or by reason of any omission, informality, or irregularity, any special assessment is invalid, the city council shall have power to correct the same by resolution or ordinance and may reassess and relevy the same, authorizes the correction of informalities and irregularities in procedure only, and cannot be resorted to for the purpose of curing defects or covering omissions jurisdictional in character."

The rule of construction as to the power of municipal corporations is set forth by the supreme court.

Wright, J., in case of Bloom vs. Xenia, 32 Ohio St., 461, says at page 465:

> "While, therefore, the policy of our law is to concede power to the legislature and to recognize that which has been done as rightly done, with regard to municipal corporations they must make their power apparent, and show regularity in their acts."

On page 466 he further says:

> "We think, therefore, that it may be said that the policy of our jurisprudence is to require of municipal corporations a strict observance of their powers, and that in the exercise of these powers they should observe the forms the law has directed. All tribunals of special and limited jurisdiction must show the authority under which they act, and act in the manner pointed out."

The first syllabus in case of Ravenna vs. Penna. Co., 45 Ohio St., 118, reads:

> "Municipal corporations, in their public capacity, possess such powers and such only, as are expressly granted by statute, and such as may be implied as essential to carry into effect those which are expressly granted."

The act of reassessing a special assessment would affect all those whose assessments are changed. The power to reassess carries with it the power to increase as well as to decrease a special assessment. Where a reassessment is made, as in your case, to relieve from an excessive assessment, it would mean the raising of the assessments of others in order to make up the amount that would be reduced. In order to sustain such additional assessment council would have to show the power to make such reassessment and the rule of strict construction would be applied.

The first power granted to council by Section 3902, General Code, is that it shall have the power to make a reassessment when the assessment is invalid, by reason of informality or irregularity in the proceedings. Applying the rule of strict construction, the power thus granted council cannot be exercised in any cases other than those specified, to wit, those which are invalid, by reason of informality or irregularity in the proceedings. The informality or irregularity must be sufficient to make the assessment invalid. If the proceedings have been regular and all formalities of the law have been complied with, council cannot order a reassessment until the assessment has been declared illegal by a court of competent jurisdiction. This rule would apply under the statute, even though council was satisfied that the assessment was illegal upon other ground than that of informality or irreguarity.

The fact that premises had been charged with an assessment for a sewer, when they had sufficient local drainage, would not be due to any informality or irregularity in the proceedings. This would go to the merits of the assessment. It would be due to an error of the assessing board, or by council, or by a mistake of the law. The proceedings may be regular in every respect and still such an error occur. The same is true in the case where a mistake was made in estimating the benefits by taking into consideration a wrong frontage. A reassessment can be made in such case only after the assessment has been held illegal by a court of competent jurisdiction.

However, council has other powers:

Section 4240, General Code, grants to council the management and control of the finances of the corporation as follows:

> "The council shall have the management and control of the finances and property of the corporation, except as may be otherwise provided, and have such other powers and perform such other duties as may be conferred by law."

Section 3615, General Code, provides:

> "Each municipal corporation shall be a body politic and corporate, which shall have perpetual succession, may use a common seal, sue and be sued, and acquire property by purchase, gift devise, appropriation, lease or lease with the privilege of purchase, for any municipal purpose authorized by law, and hold, manage and control it and make any and all rules and regulations, by ordinance or resolution, that may be required to carry out fully all the provisions of any conveyance, deed or will, in relation to any gift or bequest, or the provisions of any lease by which it may acquire property."

Section 821, of Dillon on Municipal Corporations, 5th Ed., reads in part as follows:

"Growing out of its authority to create debts and to incur liabilities, a municipal corporation has power to settle disputed claims, against it, and an agreement to pay these is not void for want of consideration."

Section 822, of same, reads in part:

"As a general proposition municipal corporations have, unless specially restricted, the same powers to liquidate claims and indebtedness that natural persons have, and from that source proceeds power to adjust all disputed claims, and when the amount is ascertained to pay the same as other indebtedness."

The third and fourth syllabi in case of Agnew vs. Brall, 124 Ill., 312, are as follows:

"A municipal corporation has the power, however, to settle doubtful and disputed claims against it or in its favor. This power results from the capacity and power of suing and being sued, and to prosecute and defend suits.

"A judgment in favor of a city is not to be regarded final so long as the defendant therein has the right of appeal and at any time before the right of appeal expires, the city council may lawfully compromise the case, and settle the claim by the acceptance of a less sum than that of the judgment, and the city will be bound by such settlement."

Justice Craig, on page 315, says:

"But a municipal corporation has power to settle disputed claims against it. (Dillion on Municipal Corporations, Section 398). It may prosecute suits in favor of the corporation and defend actions brought against it. It may sue and be sued, and the right to settle matters in litigation follows logically from the right to maintain or defend actions. This doctrine is well stated in town of Petersburg vs. Moppin, 14 Ill., 195, where it is said 'The power to prosecute suits in behalf of the corporation includes the power to settle the same. So the power to defend suits brought against the corporation, gives them the same power of adjustment. They may compromise doubtful controversies to which the corporation is a party either as plaintiff or defendant.'"

Municipal corporations in Ohio can sue or be sued. This power carries with it the right of the corporation to settle and adjust disputed claims.

By Section 4240, General Code, council has the management of the finances of the corporation. Where payment of a special assessment is resisted or objection is made thereto, it is a claim in favor of the city which is in dispute. The city would have a right to compromise and settle such claim, and the council, having charge of the finances of the corporation, would be the proper body to make such compromise, in such manner as it sees fit and proper.

Where the council may either compromise or make a reassessment, this should be taken into consideration. When a compromise is made the amount of the reduction must be borne by the city at large, while in a reassessment, the amount reduced upon certain premises is charged to other premises.

In conclusion: Where there are informalities or irregularities in the proceedings by reason of which a special assessment is invalid, council may make a reassessment.

In cases where an excessive assessment has been made and the excessive part is illegal and collection thereof may be enjoind by a court of competent jurisdiction, council may release the illegal part of such assessment.

Respectfully,
TIMOTHY S. HOGAN,
Attorney General.

CIVIL SERVICE—CLASSIFIED SERVICE—NIGHT OPERATOR OF TELEPHONE AND TELEGRAPH POLICE PATROL SYSTEM.

A night operator of the telephone and telegraph signal police patrol system is within the classified service and therefore, subject to civil service rules and regulations and cannot be discharged except as therein provided.

COLUMBUS, OHIO, February 14, 1912.

HON. ROY N. MERRYMAN, City Solicitor, Steubenville, Ohio.

DEAR SIR:—Your favor of January 17, 1912, is received, in which you ask an opinion of this department upon the following:

> "The new administration in this city, being desirous of dispensing with the services of the present night operator of the telephone and telegraph signal police patrol system, and he having been placed on the classified list by the local civil service commission, I write to ask your opinion as to whether or not he is rightfully on the classified list. It is true he is under the safety department and under the supervision of the chief of police."

Section 4479, General Code, provides for the classified and unclassified service as follows:

> "The civil service shall be divided into classified and unclassified service. The unclassified service shall include the positions of officers popular election, or whose appointment is subject to confirmation by the council, or who are appointed by any state officer or by any court, employes of the council, persons who by law are to serve without remuneration, persons who are appointed to positions requiring professional or technical skill as may be determined by the civil service commission; persons appointed or employed to give instruction in any educational institution, persons appointed by any board or officers supervising elections; persons who as members of a board or otherwise, have charge of any principal department of the government of any city, the head or chief of any division or principal department relating to engineering, waterworks, street cleaning, or health, the chief of the police department, the chief of the fire department, the superintendent of any workhouse, house of refuge, infirmary, or hospital, the librarian of any public library, private secretaries, deputies in the office of the city auditor and city treasurer, unskilled laborers, and such appointees of the civil service commission as they may by rule determine. The classified service shall comprise offices and places not included in the unclassified service."

The positions and classes of positions enumerated by the foregoing statute are placed in the unclassified service. All others are placed in the classified service and are subject to civil service regulations.

The position of night operator of the telephone and telegraph signal police patrol system, does not come within any of the positions or classes enumerated in said Section 4479, General Code, and is therefore in the classified service.

The occupant of the position is subject to civil service regulations and cannot be discharged, except as provided by said regulations.

Respectfully,
TIMOTHY S. HOGAN,
Attorney General.

MUNICIPAL CORPORATIONS—POWER OF COUNCIL TO TRANSFER FUNDS—APPLICATION TO COMMON PLEAS COURTS—BUDGET COMMISSION—"RECEIPTS AND BALANCES"—ASSESSMENTS ON STREET OF DIVERSIFIED WIDTHS.

When the budget commission has appropriated for the library of a city, a certain sum for maintenance and it later develops that such fund will not be necessary during the period for which appropriated, the council may not, of its own power, transfer such fund to the safety fund, under Section 3799, General Code, because that section requires as a condition precedent to such power, that the object of the fund to be transferred has been accomplished or abandoned.

Sections 2296, et seq., General Code, afford a remedy, by authorizing council to apply to common pleas court for permission to transfer funds when "there are good reasons, or a necessity exists" and when "no injury will result therefrom."

Such transfer is not precluded by Section 5649-3d, General Code, stipulating against appropriations for purposes, or amounts, not set forth in the annual budget, for the reason that the terms "exclusive of receipts and balances" employed in this section excepts moneys derived from sources other than taxation, or available beforehand, or as in this case transferred from other funds.

When a street is wider in one part than in another part, the improvement may, in the discretion of the council, be subdivided into two sections and the cost of each section assessed against the property abutting thereon, or it may be assessed uniformly upon all abutting property holders.

COLUMBUS, OHIO, February 13, 1912.

HON. ALBERT S. FENZEL, City Solicitor, Middletown, Ohio.

DEAR SIR:—I beg to acknowledge receipt of your letter of January 29th, requesting my opinion upon the following questions:

> "(1) The budget commission of this county has appropriated for the library of this city the sum of about $2,300.00; as the library building is now in the course of construction, and will not be completed until the first of next July, and as this sum is only applicable to maintenance of the library, we would like to know whether or not the money could be diverted from the library fund into the safety fund at the time council passes the appropriation ordinance for the first half of this year; there is now on hand in the library fund, outside of the $2,300.00, above mentioned, the sum of about $3,100.00, which is sufficient to maintain the library for the last six months of this year.

"(2.) A certain street of this city has been paved, and we are having some difficulty in making assessments, owing to the fact that half of this street is very narrow and the other half very wide; the question being whether, as the ordinance of necessity makes provision for front foot, the abutting property owners on the narrow part of the street must pay in the same proportion as those owning on the wider part of the street."

The object sought to be obtained by the council of Middletown, as described in your first question, could only be achieved through a transfer of the funds. The power of council to transfer funds is defined in Section 3799, General Code, which provides as follows:

"By the votes of three-fourths of all the members elected thereto, and the approval of the mayor, the council may at any time transfer all or a portion of one fund or a balance remaining therein, to the credit of one or more funds, but there shall be no such transfer except among funds raised by taxation upon all the real and personal property in the corporation, nor until the object of the fund from which the transfer is to be effected has been accomplished or abandoned."

It is to be observed that the power herein created does not exist unless the object of the fund from which the transfer is to be effected has been accomplished and abandoned. This does not seem to be the case with respect to the library fund described in your question. It is my opinion, therefore, that council may not by a three-fourths vote and with the approval of the mayor make the transfer desired.

I call your attention, however, to the provisions of Sections 2296, et seq., General Code, which authorize council by application to the common pleas court to transfer public funds under their supervision from one fund to another. Here the only requirement is: "There are good reasons, or that a necessity exists for the transfer, and that no injury will result therefrom." (Section 2300, General Code.)

It is my opinion, therefor, that this method of transfer is available in the case presented by you.

A further question arises as to whether or not, under Section 5649-3*d*, the sum thus transferred may be made available for appropriation to the safety department. That section, as enacted 101 O. L., 272, provides in part, that

"No appropriation shall be made for any purpose not set forth in the annual budget or for a greater amount for such purpose than the total amount fixed by the budget commissioners, exclusive of the receipts and balances. * * *"

In an opinion to the bureau of inspection and supervision of public offices, I have held that the phrase, "exclusive of the receipts and balances," modifies the last preceding phrase of the clause above quoted. From this I have concluded that the amount fixed by the budget commissioners is a limitation upon the power of council to appropriate only as to the proceeds of taxation for the specific fund. That is to say, that the budget commission has determined that a certain sum shall be allowed for a certain fund, and levied upon the duplicate for that purpose, council may not appropriate from the avails of taxation more for this specific purpose than the sum so fixed, but that moneys in the treasury to the credit of the fund produced from sources other than taxation, or consisting of balances in the fund at the time the proceeds of taxation became available, may be appropriated for any purpose set forth in the budget regardless of the amount fixed by the budget commissioners. In my opinion funds made available for expenditure by transfer from other funds not needed are to be treated as "receipts and balances" within the meaning of Section 5649-3*d*.

I am, therefore, of the opinion that when the transfer of funds has been made by the order of court, as above suggested, the amount thus transerred to the safety fund may be appropriated to the uses and purposes of that department.

Answering your second question, I beg to state that where a street to be improved is not of the same uniform width throughout, the council may subdivide the improvement into sections, without necessarily providing for as many separate improvements as there are sections, and assess the cost of each section upon the property abutting thereon.

Finley vs. Frey, 51 O. S., 390.

This method of assessment is optional with council and not compulsory, and if council assesses all lots abutting upon the improvement uniformly for the cost of the entire improvement, the assesment will be valid.

Smith vs. Cininnati, 6 N. P., 175.

It will thus be seen that council is vested with discretion to determine the most just and equitable method of adjustment in cases like that described in your second question.

Very truly yours,
TIMOTHY S. HOGAN,
Attorney General.

BOARD OF EDUCATION—SEMI-ANNUAL APPROPRIATIONS— LIMITATION TO MONEY IN TREASURY—SMITH ONE PER CENT. LAW.

Section 5649-3d provides that appropriations shall be made "from the moneys known to be in the treasury" and omits the former language of the code "or estimated to come into it during the six months next ensuing." The latter verbiage may not be reread into the statutes and the board of education must be governed accordingly.

COLUMBUS, OHIO, February 13, 1912.

HON. THOMAS J. SUMMERS, City Solicitor, Marietta, Ohio.

DEAR SIR:—I beg to acknowledge receipt of your letter of January 31st, requesting my opinion upon a question submitted to you by the board of education of the Marietta city school district. The question is as follows:

> "May the board of education, in making its semi-annual appropriation under Section 5649-3*d*, General Code, as enacted 102 O. L., 272, anticipate the proceeds of tax collections not then in the treasury but coming into it during the six months, the appropriation being for the purpose of erecting a new school building?"

I have, in several opinions, construed Section 5649--3*d*. You will observe that the section provides that appropriations shall be made, "from the moneys known to be in the treasury," and that it omits the language found in Section 3797, General Code, "or estimated to come into it during six months next ensuing, etc."

Upon familiar principles, this language omitted cannot be read into the new section. In my opinion the provisions of Section 5649-3*d* apply to all expenditures from revenues raised by taxation. The only implied exception to its provisions, of which I am able to conceive, is that of the expenditure of the proceeds of a bond issue. I am accordingly of the opinion that an appropriaation may not lawfully be made under Section 5649-3*d* of moneys estimated to come into the treasury during the six-months period, and that this rule applies as well to appropriations for the erection of buildings as to other objects for which appropriations must be made.

Very truly yours,

TIMOTHY S. HOGAN,
Attorney General.

INITIATIVE AND REFERENDUM ACT—SEMI-ANNUAL APPROPRIATION ORDINANCE NOT AN EXPENDITURE—"EMERGENCY MEASURE"—ORDINANCE FIXING SALARY OF POLICE INVOLVES "EXPENDITURE"—READING ORDINANCE THREE DAYS AT ADJOURNED MEETINGS.

Section 4224, General Code, requiring ordinances to be read on three different days, is satisfied if read on different days in the course of a single meeting adjourned from day to day.

The semi-annual appropriation ordinance does not involve an "expenditure" within the meaning of the initiative and referendum act and is therefore not subject to its provisions.

In order to constitute an ordinance an emergency measure, a statement of the fact that it is so intended must be incorporated in the ordinance itself for the reason that council speaks only by record and cannot therefore, "declare" as provided by statute except by ordinance.

Council cannot declare an ordinance to be an emergency measure which, under the definition of emergency could not be considered such.

An ordinance reorganizing the police force, specifying the number, rank, salary and bond of its members involves an "expenditure" and is subject to the initiative and referendum act.

COLUMBUS, OHIO, February 15, 1912.

HON. H. STANLEY MCCALL, City Solicitor, Portsmouth, Ohio.

DEAR SIR:—Under date of January 5th you submitted for my opinion several questions which I shall take up seriatim:

You first state:

> "The General Code prescribes that municipal ordinances shall be read three times on separate days. Council held its initial meeting here January 3rd, and an ordinance was read for the first time. The meeting was adjourned to meet the following day, January 4th, which meeting being had, the said ordinance was supposed to be given its second reading then. Was or was not the reading at the adjourned meeting a second reading on a separate day within the meaning of the code?"

Section 4224, General Code, in part provides:

> "No by-law, ordinance or resolution of a general or permanent nature or granting a franchise, or creating a right, or involving the expenditure of money, or the levying of a tax, or for the puchase, lease, sale or transfer of property, shall be passed, unless it has been fully and distinctly read on three different days, and with respect to any by-law, ordinance or resolution, there shall be no authority to dispense with this rule, except by a three-fourths vote of all members elected thereto, taken by yeas and nays on each by-law, resolution or ordinance and entered on the journal."

The question submitted by you is as to the meaning of "three different days." While it is true that an adjourned meeting of a council is but a continuation of the meeting from which it is adjourned, yet as I construe the words "three different days" they refer to the ordinary meaning of days and does not mean three regular meetings of council as provided for in Section 4239 which provides:

> "The council shall not be required to hold more than one regular meeting in each week, and the meetings may be held at such time and place as is prescribed by ordinance, and shall, at all times, be open to the public."

I am confirmed in this view by the case of Cutcomp vs. Utt, Mayor, 60 Iowa, 156, the first syllabus of which is as follows:

> "1. Cities and towns; passage of ordinances; reading at adjourned meetings. At a meeting of the council of a city, an ordinance was offered and passed to its first reading by a majority. The council then adjourned till the next day, when the ordinance was passed by a majority to its second reading. The council then adjourned to the next day but one, when the ordinance was read a third time, and passed by a majority. HELD, that the ordinance was not void because the second and third readings were at adjourned meetings, and that it was read on "three different days" as contemplated by Section 489 of the code."

The court on page 157 says as follows:

> "It is contended that the new ordinance is void, because the adjourned meetings of the council at which it was read a second and third time and passed, without there being at any time a majority vote of three-fourths of the council, was illegal, and that the adjourned meetings were nothing but a continuation of the regular meeting, and authorities are cited which appear to hold that an adjourned meeting of the trustees or council of a municipal corporation is but a continuation of the regular meeting from which it was adjourned. But the question under consideration cannot be affected by adjudged cases, because it must be determined by our statute. Section 489 of the Code provides that ordinances shall be read on three different days, unless three-fourths of the council shall dispense with the rule. This is just what was done by the council in passing upon this ordinance. The idea that 'three different days' means three general meetings of the council finds no support in the statute."

I am, therefore of the opinion that the reading of the ordinance referred to by you in your question at the adjourned meeting was a second reading on a separate day within the meaning of the code.

Second. You next ask whether the semi-annual appropriation ordinance is within the initiative and referendum act 102 Ohio Laws 521.

In answer thereto I beg to state that in an opinion rendered to Hon. W. J. Tossell, city solicitor, Norwalk, Ohio, under date of January 18, 1912, I advised him as follows:

> "You next inquire:
>
> "'May not the semi-annual appropriation ordinance be declared and passed as an emergency measure?'
> "I have heretofore held in an opinion to Hon. C. C. Middelswart, solicitor for the village of Matamoras, Marietta, Ohio, under date of November 3, 1911, that such an ordinance is not one involving the expenditure of money as contemplated in the initiative and referendum act since although such an ordinance divides the money in the general treasury into various funds and sets them apart for the various departments of the municipal government, yet it does not of itself expend the money. Therefore, it is not within the second paragraph of Section 2 of the initiative and referendum act as found in 102 Ohio Laws 522, nor do I believe that it is within the first paragraph of such section for the reason that it cannot be considered as within the wording 'any other power delegated * * * by the general assembly.' My reason for coming to this conclusion is that Section 3797 of the General Code which provides for semi-annual appropriations states that council shall make appropriations for each of the several objects for which the corporation has to provide. In other words, it seems to me that it is a duty devolving upon council rather than a power given it.
> "Section 3 of the initiative and referendum act provides:
> "'All other acts of city council not included among those specified in Section 2 of this act, shall also remain inoperative for sixty days after passage and may be submitted to popular vote in the manner herein provided, except that any act, not included within those specified in Section 2 of this act, as remaining inoperative for sixty days, and which is declared to be an emergency measure, and receiving a three-fourths majority in council of such municipal corporation may go into effect immediately and remain in effect until repealed by city council or by direct vote of the people as herein provided'
> "Having stated my opinion to be that the semi-annual appropriation ordinance is not within the provisions of Section 2 of the initiative and referendum act it becomes necessary to consider whether it was within Section 3 as above set forth.
> "I am inclined to the view that it is not for the reason that if it were considered as an act of a city council not included among those specified in Section 2 it would remain inoperative for sixty days after the passage of such ordinance unless it were declared to be an emergency measure. If it were declared to be an emergency measure it would go into effect immediately and remain in effect until repealed by the city council or direct vote of the people. Being an ordinance in full force and effect the repealing of such ordinance would have to be proposed to the city council by thirty per cent. of the qualified voters and submitted to the council for its action at its next meeting, and if within sixty days after such submission such proposed ordinance, repealing the semi-annual appropriation ordinance, was not passed it would be the duty of the clerk to certify said proposed ordinance to the officer having control of elections who shall cause the question of the passage of such ordinance to be submitted to vote at the next regular election, which if the vote be favorable shall become a valid ordinance from the date of the determination of the vote. This would continue the semi-annual appropriation ordinance in effect during the entire life of such ordinance, and, therefore, it would seem to me such ordinance could not be considered as within the third section of the initiative and referendum act."

You next desire an opinion as to whether it is necessary to incorporate in an ordinance itself a statement that it is an emergency measure.

Section 3 of the initiative and referendum act states that:

"Any act not included within those specified in Section two of this act as remaining inoperative for sixty days and which is declared to be an emergency measure and receiving a three-fourths majority in council of such municipal corporation may go into effect immediately."

The provisions that the ordinance must be declared to be an emergency measure would require, as I view it, a statement in the ordinance itself that it is an emergency measure as I know of no way in which council could declare such ordinance to be an emergency measure without a statement in such ordinance that it is an emergency measure since council must speak by its records.

You next inquire whether a passage by a three-fourths vote in the absence of any declaration of its being an emergency measure would be in compliance with Section 3.

Since I have given it as my opinion above that in order to constitute an emergency measure it is necessary that the same be declared in the ordinance as such emergency measure the mere passage of such an ordinance by a three-fourths vote of council would not be in compliance with Section 3 constituting such an ordinance an emergency measure.

You then inquire as to the meaning of an emergency measure. In this regard I herewith quote from an opinion which I have heretofore rendered to the Hon. N. M. Greenberger, city solicitor, Akron, Ohio, under date of October 27, 1911, and which is as follows:

"While it is true that Section 3 of the initiative and referendum act foregoing set forth declares that certain acts may take effect immediately, provided they be declared by council to be an 'emergency measure,' yet I do not believe that council can declare an act to be an emergency measure which could not be considered under the definition of 'emergency' to be such. In other words, I do not believe that council by mere declaration that a measure is an emergency measure can so constitute it if the definition of 'emergency' did not apply to such measure.

"'Emergency' is defined by the Century dictionary as follows:

"A sudden or unexpected happening; an unforeseen occurrence or condition; specifically, a perplexing contingency or complication of circumstances.'

"Again, 'A sudden or unexpected occasion for action; exigency; pressing necessity.'

"Again, 'Something not calculated upon; an unexpected gain.'

"'Emergency' is defined by Webster to be:

"'A condition of things happening suddenly or unexpectedly; an unforeseen occurrence; a sudden occasion.'

"Again, 'Any event or occasional combination of circumstances which calls for immediate action or remedy; pressing necessity; exigency.'

"The facts stated in your letter do not give rise, as I view it, to any emergency, and, consequently, an ordinance thereunder could not be considered as an emergency measure."

Finally, you submit the following:

"Would an ordinance reorganizing the police force, specifying the number, rank, salary and bond of its members (if no compliance with Section 3) be inoperative for sixty days after its passage and would it come under Section 2 or 3 of the above-mentioned act?"

In an opinion heretofore rendered to Hon. John T. Blake, city solicitor, Canton, Ohio, under date of December 22, 1911, I have given it as my opinion that an ordinance increasing the number of regular patrolmen of the city as the employment of such patrolmen necessarily involved the payment for their services, such ordinance is to be considered as an ordinance involving the expenditure of money, and, therefore, will not become effective in less than sixty days after its passage.

As the ordinance reorganizing the police force specifying the number, rank, salary and bond of its members would undoubtedly involve the expenditure of money in payment for their services, I am of the opinion that such ordinance is within the second paragraph of Section 2 of the initiative and referendum act and, would therefore not become effective in less than sixty days after its passage.

Very truly yours,

TIMOTHY S. HOGAN,
Attorney General.

SMITH ONE PER CENT. LAW—APPROPRIATION FOR INCREASED CLERK'S SALARY FROM GENERAL FUND, EXCEEDING ESTIMATE MADE BY BUDGET COMMISSION—"RECEIPTS AND BALANCES."

When the council has legally increased the salary of the clerk from two hundred to three hundred dollars after the budget commission had made an allowance for the purpose of only two hundred dollars, the council may in an appropriation ordinance for the next period, provide funds for the increase out of excess moneys in the general fund providing the estimates for other purposes is not thereby affected.

Section 5649-3*d limiting appropriations to the purpose set forth in the annual budget and to the amounts fixed by the budget commission relates to moneys raised by taxation only, and expressly excludes moneys designated as "receipts and balances" such as those of the general fund derived for the transfer of balances left in other funds at the close of the preceding fiscal years.*

COLUMBUS, OHIO, February 26, 1912.

HON. J. J. BROWN, City Solicitor, Alliance, Ohio.

DEAR SIR:—Your favor of December 19, 1911, is received, in which you ask an opinion of this department upon the following:

"I herewith submit for your valuable opinion the following proposition: Section 5649-3*d*, as set forth in 102 Ohio Laws, page 272, among others, contains the following: 'but no appropriation shall be made for any purpose not set forth in the annual budget, nor for a greater amount for such purpose than the total amount fixed by the budget commissioners, exclusive of receipts and balances.'

"The clerk of council in this city has been receiving an annual salary of $200.00. At a recent meeting, our council increased this salary to $300.00 per year. It appears that the annual budget as prepared for the year 1912, contains an appropriation only in the amount of $200.00 to pay the salary of the clerk of council for the year 1912.

"Query: Will the application of that part of said section above quoted, prevent the clerk of council's receiving the benefit of such increase in salary for year 1912, if the council shall, in the appropriation ordinance to be passed in January, 1912, provide funds for said increase from balances in the general fund at the end of year 1911?"

Section 5649-3*d*, General Code, 102 Ohio Laws 272, provides:

"At the beginning of each fiscal half-year the various boards mentioned in Section 5649-3*d* of this act shall make appropriations for each of the several objects for which money has to be provided, from the moneys known to be in the treasury from the collection of taxes and all other sources of revenue, and all expenditures within the following six months shall be made from and within such appropriations and balances thereof, but no appropriation shall be made for any purpose not set forth in the annual budget nor for a greater amount for such purpose than the total amount fixed by the budget commissioners, exclusive of receipts and balances."

This department has recently passed upon the meaning of the clause in the above section now under consideration. This section is part of the Smith one per cent. tax law. The budget commission provided for in said law have nothing to do with the revenues of a city, which come to it from other sources than that of taxation. The balances in the treasury of the several funds and the other receipts are submitted to the budget commission in order that they may determine the amount to be raised for such city by taxation.

If the levies necessary to meet the various annual budgets submitted by the taxing authorities in a particular taxing district, including the levy of the state, does not exceed the limitations provided in the Smith tax law, the budget commission cannot change any of the items in the annual budgets. It is only when the amount to be raised by taxation, or the levies therefor, exceed the limitations of the Smith tax law, that the budget commission has any right to make changes in the annual budgets. The power of the budget commission is limited to the amount of money to be raised by taxation, and the levies therefor. The city has other revenues besides those raised by taxation.

The amount fixed by the budget commission is the amount which is to be raised by taxation. The limitations, then, in Section 5649-3*d* that no appropriation shall be made for a greater amount for such purpose than the total amount fixed by the budget commissioners, applies only to the amount of money to be raised by taxation. That is, that no appropriation from the money raised by taxation shall be greater than the total amount fixed by the budget commission for any certain purpose.

The words "receipts and balances" at the end of said section refer to the receipts other than those received from taxation and to the balances which may remain in a fund at the end of any half fiscal year.

The effect of the words "exclusive of receipts and balances" is that an appropriation for a certain purpose may be greater than the total amount fixed by the budget commission for such purpose, provided the excess is appropriated from the receipts from sources other than taxation and from the balances in the funds from which such appropriation is made.

The question arises: Can the increase in the salary of an officer of a municipal corporation, be provided for by an appropriation from the balance in the general fund at the end of the fiscal year.

In your case the annual budget contained an estimate of $200.00 for the salary of the clerk of council for 1912. Since the making of the annual budget council has increased the salary of the clerk to $300.00. Can this increase for the year 1912 be provided for from the balance in the general fund at the end of the fiscal year of 1911?

At the end of the fiscal year all balances revert to the general fund in accordance with Section 5649-3*e*, General Code, 102 Ohio Laws 272, which provides:

> "Unexpended appropriations or balances of appropriations remaining over at the end of the year, and the balances remaining over at any time after a fixed charge shall have been terminated by reason of the object of the appropriation having been satisfied or abandoned, shall revert to the general fund, and shall then be subject to other authorized uses, as such board or officers may determine."

Section 3802, General Code, provides:

> "When a cash balance exists at the end of such fiscal year, in a fund, other than a fund created for a public improvement, and for any reason such cash balance can no longer be lawfully used for the purpose for which it was created, the auditor or other accounting officer thereof shall transfer such balance to the general fund of the corporation."

Section 3803, General Code, provides:

> "When money so authorized to be transferred to the general fund of a municipal corporation has been so transferred, it shall be available for the general purposes of the corporation, as other moneys in the general fund."

In making up the annual budget, itemized estimates are required by Section 3790, General Code, which provides:

> "To enable the mayor to make up his annual budget, each director or board and each officer, provided for in this title, on or before the last Monday in March of each year, shall make and file with the mayor, and also with the auditor, a carefully prepared and itemized estimate of the amount of money needed in such department or office for all purposes for the ensuing fiscal year, such estimate to be given for each month."

Section 5649-3*a*, General Code, 102 Ohio Laws 270, provides:

> "On or before the first Monday in June, each year, the county commissioners of each county, the council of each municipal corporation, the trustees of each township, each board of education and all other boards or officers authorized by law to levy taxes, within the county, except taxes for state purposes, shall submit or cause to be submitted to the county auditor an annual budget, setting forth in itemized form an estimate stating the amount of money needed for their wants for the incoming year and for each month thereof. Such annual budgets shall specifically set forth.

The fourth and fifth syllabi in case of Ampt vs. Cincinnati, 8 Ohio Dec., 475, read:

"The appropriations above referred to must be detailed, specific and explicit for the several objects for which the city has provided, apportioned to each month; and in every case in which it is practicable must classify and subdivide the expenditures for any particular object; and if such classification and subdivision are not observed in the appropriating ordinance the same will be null and void.

"Where the estimate as to any particular object has been agreed upon by the officers and boards whose duty it is to make such estimate, the amount of such expenditure cannot be increased by means of the appropriating ordinance; and an attempt to expend an amount above the estimate is illegal."

In case of Stem vs. Cincinnati, 9 Ohio Dec. 45, the third syllabus reads:

"The estimates required by Sections 2690*a* to 2690*q*, Rev. Stat., relating to municipal funds and expenditures, and the appropriations therein provided for, are mandatory so far as any municipal expenditure is concerned. Whether the failure to observe them would affect the the validity of a tax levy. Quaere?"

The syllabi in case of State vs. Lewis, 8 Ohio Dec. 575, are as follows:

"The provisions of Section 1005, Rev. Stat. requiring the county auditor to furnish the commissioners a detailed estimate of money needed for county purposes, and Section 1007, Rev. Stat. providing that the county commissioners shall make detailed and specific appropriations for the several objects for which the county has to provide, are mandatory and the failure of such officers to comply with the provisions of the aforesaid sections invalidates their acts, and an expenditure intended to be made in the absence of such compliance will be enjoined.

"The auditor is not relieved by the fact that the salaries of officers are absolutely fixed by law, from including the same in his estimates, nor are the commissioners thereby relieved from making detailed and specific appropriations. Such estimates and appropriations are necessary for the purposes of advising the public and inviting criticism."

The foregoing decisions construe statutes similar to those under consideration. By virtue of these decisions, the requirement of the statutes that estimates shall be made is mandatory. But in your case there was an estimate and the question now is can council appropriate an amount greater than the estimate for this purpose?

In the case of Ampt vs. Cincinnati, 8 Ohio Dec. 475, supra, it is specifically held that no expenditure can be made above the estimate. The statute under consideration in that case contained a provision which is not found in the present statutes, and which will distinguish that case from the present situation.

On page 481, the court says:

> "* * *the comptroller, board of legislation and the board of supervisors each in turn then revises such estimates, and if deemed proper reduces them 'so as to prevent unnecessary expenditure and to bring them within fair limits to the other expenditures required by the city.' Sec. 2690-9 Rev. Stat."

The provision in Section 5649-3*d*, supra, that "no appropriation shall be made for any purpose not set forth in the annual budget," does not prevent council from increasing an appropriation for such purpose above that provided by the estimate in the annual budget for such purpose. Nor do I find any provision of statute which specifically limits the power of council to make an appropriation greater than that provided in the annual budget, provided there is money in the treasury to meet such increase not otherwise appropriated or needed to meet the other estimates of the annual budget.

Council has a right to increase salaries. They may make such increase at any time before the officers whose salary is changed takes the office. The annual budget for the coming year is to be submitted to the county auditor on or before the first Monday in June. From this time until the new officers take their seats in January, council may increase the salary of such officers. This right has not been taken away or limited by statute.

At the end of the fiscal year all balances of appropriations revert to the general fund, and by virtue of Section 5649-3*e* it shall then be subject to other authorized uses. Section 3803 provides that when money is transferred to the general fund as provided in Section 3802, "it shall be available for the general purposes of the corporation, as other money in the general fund."

In case of Higgins vs. City of San Diego, 131 Cal. 294, the tenth syllabus reads:

> "The payment of the legal salary of a city justice out of the general fund, instead out of the salary fund, is not an illegal payment which can be complained of by a water company in an action for the reasonable value of water used by the city."

In case of Burlington, etc., Railroad Co., vs. Board of County Commissioners, 12 Neb., 324, Labech, J., says on page 327:

> "The 'general fund' of a county as its name implies is one devoted to a variety of uses, and its expenditure is left mainly to the discretion of the board of county commissioners."

Barnes, C., says on page 645, in case of Kelly vs. Broadwell, 92 N. W., 643, as follows:

> "* * * It was proper for the city to provide a miscellaneous fund to be called a 'general fund' for the payment of claims which would arise and for which it was impossible to estimate the exact amount which would be required."

The general fund of a corporation, as defined in the foregoing decisions, is a fund used for general and miscellaneous purposes of the corporation.

Section 5649-3*e*, the latest enactment of the legislature, says that the balances reverting to the general fund "shall be subject to other authorized uses." It is my opinion that an increase in salary would be an authorized use, which can be appropriated from the balance in the general fund at the end of the fiscal year. This appropriation, however cannot be made at the expense of lessening the other estimates provided in the annual budget.

Respectfully,
TIMOTHY S. HOGAN,
Attorney General.

OFFICES INCOMPATIBLE—COUNCILMAN AND HIGH SCHOOL PRINCIPAL OR HIGH SCHOOL JANITOR.

A councilman by express provisions of statute may hold no other public office or employment, except that of notary public or member of the state militia, and therefore neither a principal of a high school nor a janitor in a public school building may hold the office of councilman.

COLUMBUS, OHIO, March 8, 1912.

HON. CARL ARMSTRONG, City Solicitor, Steubenville, Ohio.

DEAR SIR:—I beg to acknowledge receipt of your letter of February 10, 1912, wherein you submit the following statement of facts and inquiry:

> "H. B. Galbraith, an elector of Mingo Junction, Ohio, is and has been for four years, principal of the high school of Mingo Junction, Ohio, which village is part of a special school district; W. B. Lisle also an elector of said village is employed by the board of education of said special school district as janitor or superintendent of the building in which the high school is located. Both Galbraith and Lisle were, on November 7, 1911, regularly elected members of the village council of Mingo Junction, Ohio, and took their seats as such councilmen in January, 1912,
> "Your opinion is desired by them as to their eligibility as such members of council."

In reply thereto I desire to cite Section 4218, General Code, which provides as follows:

> "Each member of council shall have resided in the village one year next preceding his election, and shall be an elector thereof. No member of council shall hold any other public office or employment, except that of notary public or member of the state militia, or be interested in any contract with the village. Any member who ceases to possess any of the qualifications herein required or removes from the village shall forfeit his office."

Said Section 4218 applies to villages. Section 4207, General Code, which applies only to cities provides as follows:

> "Councilmen at large shall have resided in their respective cities, and councilmen from wards shall have resided in their respective wards, for at least one year next preceding their election. Each member of council shall be an elector of the city, shall not hold any other public office or employment, except that of notary public or member of the state militia, and shall not be interested in any contract with the city. A member who ceases to possess any of the qualifications herein required, or removes from his ward, if elected from a ward, or from the city, if elected from the city at large, shall forthwith forfeit his office."

Both statutes provide the qualifications of members of council in both villages and cities respectively and their provisions are exactly alike, at least insofar as they provide that each member of council shall be an elector of the respective municipality and shall not hold any other public office or employment except that of notary public or member of the state militia, etc.

In the case of State vs. Gard, 19 Circuit Decisions 426 (29 C. C. 426) which you cite in your inquiry, the court in the syllabus of said case holds as follows:

> "The election to the office of councilman of a person who holds the office of county school examiner and is also a teacher in the schools of the city contravenes the provisions of Sec. 120 of the Municipal Code (Rev. Stat. 1536-613; Lan. 3098) and is therefore a nullity."

In this case the court construed Section 4207, General Code, above cited and which applies to cities, but inasmuch as the provisions of said section are exactly similar to the provisions of Section 4218 of the General Code the principles enunciated by the court apply alike to both villages and cities and would therefore apply to the village of Mingo Junction. In the opinion the court speaking, obiter dictum, refers to the superintendent of schools as holding a position of public employment. The court further says that,

> "We are of the opinion that inhibition against persons holding public office or employment is not limited to office in or employment by the municipality, but extends to all public office and employment. This is evidenced by the exception of notaries public and members of the militia."

If the position of superintendent of public schools is a position of public employment then it necessarily follows by analogy that the position of principal of public schools is a position of public employment, and likewise the position of janitor.

Therefore, it is my opinion that the parties, to wit, H. B. Galbraith, as principal of the Mingo Junction high school and W. B. Lisle as janitor of the high school building are both holding positions of public employment, and they are, therefore, ineligible as members of the council in and for the village of Mingo Junction.

Yours very truly,

TIMOTHY S. HOGAN,

Attorney General.

BANKS AND BANKING—DEPOSITORY FOR MUNICIPAL CORPORATIONS—STOCKHOLDERS ACCEPTABLE AS SURETIES OF BANK.

An incorporated bank is a separate entity from its stockholders and the latter may be accepted as a surety for such bank, when selected as a depository for municipal funds.

COLUMBUS, OHIO, March 6, 1912.

HON. J. D. T. BOLD, City Solicitor, Canal Dover, Ohio.

DEAR SIR:—I am in receipt of your letter of February 28, 1912, in which you request my opinion upon the following question:

> "Eight men own all, or nearly all, the stock in a bank incorporated and existing under the laws of this state, with a capital stock of $50,000.00 all paid in. This city advertises for bids for the highest rate of interest for the deposit of the 'public moneys' of the city. When the bids are opened, it is found that the said bank has offered the highest rate of interest and is accordingly awarded the contract, etc., etc. The bank offers a bond as security for said 'public moneys' signed by the aforesaid 'eight men' and all of whom are jointly reputed to be worth more than the amount of the bond they offer.
> "What I would like to know is: Would that be a strictly legal bond, eight or any other number of men becoming their own bondsmen, as it were?"

The deposit of moneys belonging to municipalities is provided for by Section 4294, etc., General Code, and the deposit to be made by your city is, as I take it, under Section 4295. This section is as follows:

> "The council may provide by ordinance for the deposit of all public moneys coming into the hands of the treasurer, in such bank or banks, situated within the county, as offered, at competitive bidding, the highest rate of interest and give a good and sufficient bond issued by a surety company authorized to do business in the state, or furnish good and sufficient surety, or secure said moneys by deposit of bonds or other interest bearing obligations of the United States or those for the payment of principal and interest of which the faith of the United States is pledged, including bonds of the District of Columbia; bonds of the state of Ohio or any other state of the United States; legally issued bonds of any city, village, county, township or other political subdivision of this or any other state or territory of the United States and as to which there has been on default of principal, interest or coupons, and which in the opinion of the treasurer are good and collectible, providing the issuing body politic has not defaulted at any time since the year 1900, in the payment of the principal and interest of any of its bonds, said security to be subject to the approval of the proper municipal officers, in a sum not less than ten per cent. in excess of the maximum amount at any time to be deposited, but there shall not be deposited in any one bank an amount in exess of the paid in capital stock and surplus of such banks, and not in any event to exceed one million dollars. And whenever any of the funds of any of the political sub-divisions of the state shall be deposited under any of the depositary laws of the state, the securities herein mentioned, in addition to such other securities as are prescribed by law, may be accepted to secure such deposits."

And by Section 4296 it is provided that in the ordinance authorized by Section 4295, council may determine, among other things, the authority which shall determine the sufficiency of the security offered for such deposits. The bank which made the bid referred to in your letter being an incorporated institution must be treated as any other corporation, that is, as an artificial person or entity, and as such it can deal with its stockholders individually. The stockholders are interested in it and liable for its debts only to the extent of the stock they own. In this case the corporation being a bank a stockholder can borrow money from it, and the bank can enforce collection of the debt against the stockholder.

The fact that eight men own all of the stock, and that these eight men sign the bond given by the bank to secure its deposit, it seems to me, has no bearing upon the question, for the same question would arise if one of the stockholders of the bank was possessed of sufficient property to qualify him as surety, and he should sign the bond individually. That is, your real question is, whether the stockholder of a bank can be accepted as surety for the bank. There is no rule of law of which I am aware that would prevent this. The object in requiring a surety bond is, of course, to furnish an additional protection to the assured, that is, some person or corporation to whom he may look for reimbursement in case default is made by the principal; and the test is in any case whether there is an additional liability to that of the principal.

As stated above in case of the bank, the stockholders, as such, are only liable to the extent of the stock owned by them for the debts of the bank, but when they sign the bond of the bank as individual sureties they thereby become liable to the full extent of the sum named in the bond in addition to their liability as stockholders of the bank. Really they make themselves doubly liable; first, as stockholders, to the extent of the stock owned by each, and, second, as sureties on the bond, each to the amount named on the bond. The only question to be determined, therefore, is as to the sufficiency of the surety. That is, in qualifying the signers of this bond as sureties, the amount of stock they own in the bank, if considered at all in estimating their assets, should be considered as a liability rather than an asset. This matter of the sufficiency of the security is to be determined as provided by ordinance.

Yours very truly,
TIMOTHY S. HOGAN,
Attorney General.

ELECTIONS, SPECIAL—TAXES AND TAXATION—DISTRIBUTION OF EXPENSES AMONG TAXATION SUB-DIVISIONS—CITY SCHOOL DISTRICT IN REGISTRATION CITY—PAYMENT FROM CITY AND COUNTY.

As a uniform and strictly just system of distribution of taxes is admittedly impossible, the legislature, though generally placed under such limitations as it is possible to justly define, is permitted a discretion with respect to the distribution of the expense of elections.

As a general rule, elections held in the various sub-divisions are of general benefit to the county. Special elections are generally only of benefit to the district in which they are held, yet the law authorizing such elections is of general application and open to all sub-divisions.

Under Section 5052, General Code provision is made for the payment of school elections by the county, and there is no authority to charge back such expense against the special school district wherein such a special election is held.

The statutes expressly provide further, that in a registration city, the cost of registration, and the rent and furnishings of voting places, and the cost of poll books for precincts in the city, shall be paid by the city. Therefore, such expenses will be borne by a registration city when a city school district consisting of territory within such city holds a special school election and the balance of the expenses of said election will be paid by the county.

COLUMBUS, OHIO, March 9, 1912.

HON. RODERIC JONES, City Solicitor, Newark, Ohio.

DEAR SIR:—Under date of February 16, 1912, you ask an opinion of this department upon the following:

> "The board of education of the Newark city school district, which largely consists of territory within the corporate limits of the city of Newark, has taken such steps for a special election upon the question of issuing the bonds of the school district as will under the law require the deputy state supervisor of elections of the county to order an election not later than March 16th.
> "I am asked for advice by both the city auditor and the board of education as to who will be compelled to pay the expense of this special election, which is estimated will amount to about $1,000.00. I have been unable to find any authority on the subject, and do not know of any law requiring the school district to pay the expenses of the election, and upon this point I should like to be advised by you.
> "If your office agrees with me that there is no such law, then this situation further arises: The city council, in making its semi-annual appropriation, did not anticipate that this special election would be necessary and as a consequence thereof, there is no money appropriated to pay for it, and the state bureau of uniform accounting has recently instructed the city officials here that they are without authority to transfer funds, therefore, I am unable to see, if the expense of the election devolves upon the city, how it is to pay it. You will see the exigency of the situation is such that an early reply will be necessary."

This brings up the question of the payment of the expenses of holding a special election in a city school district.

Section 4946, General Code, provides:

"The additional compensation of members of the board of deputy state supervisors and of its clerk in such city hereinbefore specified, the lawful compensation of the deputy clerk and his assistants and all registrars of electors in such city, the necessary cost of the registers, books, blanks, forms, stationery and supplies provided by the board for the purposes herein authorized, including poll books for special elections, and the cost of the rent, furnishing and supplies for rooms hired by the board for its offices and as places for registration of electors and the holding of elections in such city, shall be paid by such city from its general fund. Such expense shall be paid by the treasurer of such city upon vouchers of the board, certified by its chief deputy and clerk and warrant of the city auditor. Each such voucher shall specify the actual services rendered, the items of supplies furnished and the price or rates charged in detail."

The city of Newark is a registration city, and by virtue of the foregoing section the cost of registration for special elections is paid by the city. While this is not a special election for the city of Newark, it is an election of the city school district of the city of Newark. It is my conclusion that by the above section the poll books of such special election shall be paid by the city, that is for use of all precincts in the city. In the precincts outside the city, poll books and tally sheets should be paid by the county by virtue of Section 5048, General Code, which provides:

"The board of deputy state supervisors of each county shall furnish at the expense of the county and at least five days before the day of election, the necessary poll books and tally sheets required in each voting precinct in the county for presidential, congressional, state, county, township, municipal or other elections."

By virtue of the provisions of Section 4946, the rent and furnishings of voting places are paid by the city for all precincts in the city.

Section 4944, General Code, as amended in 101 Ohio Laws, page 344, provides:

"The registrars of each election precinct in such cities shall be allowed and paid for their services as registrars four dollars per day, and no more for not more than six days at any one election. In registration cities having a population of three hundred thousand or more by the last preceding federal census, the judges of election, including the registrars as judges and the clerks of election, shall each be allowed and paid ten dollars for each general election and five dollars for each special election, at which they serve and no more, either from the city or county. In all other registration cities, the judges of election, including the registrars as judges and clerks of election, shall each be allowed and paid five dollars for each election at which they serve and no more, either from the city or county. No registrar, judge or clerk shall be entitled to the compensation so fixed except upon the allowance and order of the board of deputy state supervisors made at a joint session, certifying that each has fully performed his duty according to law as such, and stating the number of days' service actually performed by each. Such allowance and order shall be certified by the chief deputy and clerk of the board to the city or county auditor."

The foregoing section fixes the compensation of registrars and of precinct judges and clerks in registration cities, and how such compensation shall be paid. It does not specify what part shall be paid directly from the county and what part directly from the city.

Section 5052, General Code, provides:

> "All expenses of printing and distributing ballots, cards of explanation to officers of the election and voters, blanks and other proper and necessary expenses of any general or special election, including compensation of precinct election officers, shall be paid from the county treasury, as other county expenses."

Section 5043, General Code, provides:

> "In November elections held in odd numbered years, such compensation and expenses shall be a charge against the township, city, village or political division in which such election was held, and the amount so paid by the county shall be retained by the county auditor from funds due such township, city, village or political division, at the time of making the semi-annual distribution of taxes. The amount of such expenses shall be ascertained and apportioned by the deputy state supervisors to the several political divisions and certified to the county auditor. In municipalities situated in two or more counties, the proportion of expense charged to each of such counties shall be ascertained and apportioned by the clerk or auditor of the municipality and certified by him to the several county auditors."

Section 5054, General Code, provides:

> "County commissioners, township trustees, councils, boards of education or other authorities, authorized to levy taxes, shall make the necessary levy to meet such expenses, which levy may be in addition to all other levies authorized or required by law."

The foregoing sections governing the payment of the general expenses of elections apply to school elections. Section 5052 authorizes the payment of such expense from the county treasury. Section 5053 authorizes the county auditor to charge back such expenses for the November election in odd numbered years to the political division in which such election was held. There is no authority to charge back such expense for special elections. Nor do I find any authority to charge the expense of a special election in a school district to such school district.

A question has been raised as to the constitutional right of the legislature to provide that the expense of a special election held in a school district for the benefit of such school district, shall be paid by the county. It is contended that county funds cannot be used for the purposes of a school district.

Elections are held in all parts of the county, whether for municipal, township, county or state purposes. They are of benefit not only to the political division for which such election may be held but of general benefit to all the people of the county. This is especially true of general elections held in November of each year. Whether the expense for such elections shall be paid by the county at large or by the particular political division is a matter of legislative control and discretion. In fact, payment under either plan would be substantially the same. The more populous communities have the larger election expense, they also pay the larger amount of taxes.

In special elections, however, the expense incurred is usually for the particular benefit of the political division in which such election is held. As in your case, the expense is for the benefit of the city school district, and the board of education by its act requiring a special election has created or authorized such expense. While it is for the benefit of this particular school district in this instance, the law providing for special elections can be brought in use by any school district in the county. It has general application. The fact that the county did not create the expense is not fatal to the law.

In State vs. Commissioners of Hamilton County, 2 Bull., 155, the district court of Hamilton county held:

> "An act of the legislature (74 O. L., 503), requiring county commissioners to levy a tax to raise a fund which is to be expended by the board of public works of a city within such county, for bridge purposes, and over which, therefore, they had no control does not violate the constitution."

In case of Baker vs. State, 2 Cir. Dec. 401, the syllabus reads:

> "The fees of judges and clerks of municipal elections must be paid by the county. The only exception in the statute is township elections, and that does not include municipal ones. (Sec. 2963, Rev. Stat., 84 O. L., 217.)"

This was an action in mandamus to require the county auditor to pay the compensation of the precinct judge of a municipal election. It does not appear that the constitutional question was raised or considered, but the court held that the county auditor should pay the compensation.

The courts and text writers hold that it is impossible to have exact equality in levying taxes and in apportioning the expenses and burdens of government. This is left to the legislature, although its power is not unlimited. Unless there is a clear abuse of power the act of the legislature should be upheld.

It is my conclusion that election expenses are of a general nature and of benefit to all parts of the county, and that the legislature is authorized to make provision for the payment of such expense, either by the county, or by the political division in which such election is held, or in part by each.

The legislature has provided that the general expense of special elections, including compensation of precinct judges and clerks, shall be paid from the county treasury, and it has not authorized the county auditor, or any one else, to charge back any part of such expense to the political division in which such election is held.

In the absence of statutory authority the county auditor cannot charge back and collect such expense from the school district, or from the city.

It is my conclusion that the expense of a special election for a bond issue in a city school district of a registration city should be paid as follows:

The cost of registration in the city should be paid by the city.

The rent and furnishings of voting places in the city and the cost of poll books for precincts in the city should be paid by the city.

All other expense of such election should be paid by the county.

You further inquire as to how the portion of such expense to be paid by the city can be met when council has failed to make an appropriation therefor.

Section 3800, General Code, provides:

"In making the semi-annual appropriations and apportionments herein required, council may deduct and set apart from any moneys, not otherwise appropriated, such sum as it deems proper as a contingent fund to provide for any deficiency in any of the detailed appropriations, which may lawfully and by any unforeseen emergency happen. Such contigent fund or any part thereof may be expended for any such emergency only by ordinance passed by two-thirds of all the members elected to council, and approved by the mayor. Any balance remaining in such contingent fund at the end of the fiscal year shall thereupon become a part of the general fund, to be again appropriated as other moneys belonging to the corporation. This section shall not interfere with the provisions of law authorizing the transfer of funds by the court of common pleas."

The eighth syllabus in case of Stem vs. Cincinnati, 9 Ohio Dec., 45, reads:

"The decision to hold the encampment in Cincinnati not having been reached until after the estimates for the year 1898 had been made, and after the appropriation for the first half of the fiscal year of 1898 had been made, whatever increase in the legitimate municipal expenditures will be required by reason of such event may be paid out of the contingent fund."

A special election called by a board of education after the semi-annual appropriation ordinance had been passed by the council of the city in which such election is to be held, would be, as to the city council, an unforeseen emergency and the expense thereof to be borne by the city could be paid out of the contingent fund provided in accordance with Section 3800, General Code, supra.

If for any reason this cannot be done, then Sections 2296, et seq., General Code, provide a remedy.

Section 2296, General Code, provides:

"The county commissioners, infirmary directors of a county or municipality, township trustees, the board of education of a school district, or the council or other board having the legislative power of a municipality, may transfer public funds under their supervision, from one fund to another, or to a new fund created under their respective supervision, in the manner hereinafter provided, which shall be in addition to all other procedures now provided by law."

Section 2297, General Code, provides:

"A resolution of such officers or board shall be duly passed by a majority of all the members thereof, declaring the necessity therefor, and such officers or board shall file a petition in the court of common pleas of the county in which the funds are held. The petition shall set forth the name and amount of the fund, the fund or funds to which it is desired to be transferred, a copy of such resolution with a full statement of the proceedings pertaining to its passage, and the reason or necessity for the transfer."

By virtue of these sections application can be made to the court of common pleas for a transfer of funds.

Respectfully,

TIMOTHY S. HOGAN,

Attorney General.

TAXES AND TAXATION—EXEMPTION OF CERTAIN SOCIETIES—CONSTITUTIONALITY—TAXABLE SECURITIES NOT EXEMPT.

The greater part of Section 5364, General Code, providing for exemption from taxation of certain societies, is unconstitutional.

Such part thereof as is constitutional, however, intends as to societies therein included to exempt all properties, real and personal, except taxable securities, owned by such societies.

COLUMBUS, OHIO, March 15, 1912.

HON. DAVID H. JAMES, City Solicitor, Martins Ferry, Ohio.

DEAR SIR:—Some time ago you submitted to this department the following question for opinion:

> "Just what property and funds may certain societies named in Section 5364, of the General Code, hold exempt from taxation under the provisions of said section?"

I beg to apologize for the delay which has ensued in answering your letter, which has been occasioned by an unusual pressure of business in this office, and by the illuness of counsel to whom the question was referred.

Section 5364, General Code, is as follows:

> "Real or personal property belonging to an incorporated post of the Grand Army of the Republic, Union Veterans' Union, grand lodge of Free and Accepted Masons, grand lodge of the Independent Order of Odd Fellows, grand lodge of the Knights of Pythias, associations for the exclusive benefit, use and care of aged, infirm and dependent women, a religious or secret benevolent organization maintaining a lodge system, an incorporated association of commercial traveling men, an association which is intended to create a fund or is used or intended to be used for the care and maintenance of indigent soldiers of the late war, indigent members of said organizations, and the widows, orphans and beneficiaries of the deceased members of such organizations, and not operated with a view to profit or having as their principal object the issuance of insurance certificates of membership, and the interest or income derived therefrom, shall not be taxable, and the trustees of any such organizations shall not be required to return or list such property for taxation."

The greater part of this section is unquestionably unconstitutional; a part of it, however, is, equally without question, constitutional. As to such societies as to which the section constitutionally relates, it is my opinion that the exemption thereby created extends to all real and personal property by them owned, irrespective of the use to which same is put.

This holding is not inconsistent with that of the supreme court in the case of Library Association vs. Pelton, 36 O. S., 253. There the court relied, at least in part, upon the language, "not leased or otherwise used with a view to profit." No such language is found in the section under consideration. On the contrary, not only is the property itself exempt, but the interest or income derived therefrom." "Property" could not produce "income," unless it were "used with a view to profit."

Therefore, the general observations set forth in the latter part of the opinion in the case of Library Association vs. Pelton, supra., are not applicable to Section 5364. The rule of strict construction and all presumptions arising therefrom yield to plain language like that to which I have called attention. The express mention of the "interest and income derived therefrom" would seem to extend the exemptions to the moneys and credits of such organizations as well as to their tangible real and personal property. The only subject of taxation, therefore, upon which general levies may be made against the organizations to which Section 5364 constitutionally applies, is the investments thereof. Taxable securities, the property of such societies, may be taxed against them.

You do not inquire as to the constitutionality of the section. If you have a specific case or cases to which its application is questioned, I shall be pleased, on request, to state my views thereon.

Very truly yours,
TIMOTHY S. HOGAN,
Attorney General.

VILLAGE ADVANCING TO CITY—ORDINANCE BY VILLAGE COUNCIL TO FIX SALARY OF VILLAGE CLERK NOT APPLICABLE TO CLERK OF COUNCIL ELECTED BY CITY COUNCIL.

The office of village clerk and that of city clerk are not the same, and an ordinance of a village fixing the salary of a village clerk, cannot, when such village advances to a city, serve for payment to the clerk elected by the council under the city regime for the purpose of serving as clerk of the council, for the reason that such ordinance is not consistent with the laws relating to the new corporation.

COLUMBUS, OHIO, March 13, 1912.

HON. CHARLES A. HEILKER, City Solicitor, St. Bernard, Ohio.

DEAR SIR:—Under date of February 21, 1912, you ask an opinion of this department upon the following:

> "The city auditor of St. Bernard, Ohio, informs me, that he has an opinion from your office that he cannot pay the salary of the acting city clerk, whose salary was fixed by ordinance of council passed on January 12th, 1912, because the ordinance is inoperative for sixty days.
> "Mr. B., the young man appointed as city clerk, under this ordinance has been engaged in that capacity since the assumption by the new council of the duties of their office. He took up the work of the former clerk who had been elected village clerk, but acted as city clerk, because subsequent to his election the village became a city.
> "Mr. Broerman acted as city clerk, since the first meeting on the motion of council, and at the first regular meeting the ordinance was passed appointing him and fixing his salary.
>
> "It seems to me that Mr. B., being the successor to the village clerk, is entitled to have that salary paid until the ordinance appointing him and fixing his salary goes into effect."

This is one of the municipalities which passed from a village to a city by the result of the last federal census.

Section 3499, General Code, provides:

> "Officers of a village advanced to a city, or of a city reduced to a village, shall continue in office until succeeded by the proper officers of the new corporation at the next regular election, and the ordinances thereof not inconsistent with the laws relating to the new corporation shall continue in force until changed or repealed."

By virtue of the foregoing section the ordinances of the village of St. Bernard that are not inconsistent with the laws relating to the government of the city of St. Bernard, will continue in force until changed or repealed.

Is, then, the ordinance of the village of St. Bernard fixing the salary of the clerk of the village of St. Bernard inconsistent with the laws governing the city of St. Bernard?

Section 4210, General Code, provides:

> "Within ten days from the commencement of their terms, the members of council shall elect a president pro tem., a clerk, and such other employes of council as may be necessary, and fix their duties, bonds and compensation. The officers and employes of council shall serve for two years, but may be removed at any time for cause, at a regular meeting by a vote of two-thirds of the members elected to council."

Section 4279, General Code, provides:

> "The clerk shall be elected for a term of two years, commencing on the first day of January next after his election, and shall serve until his successor is elected and qualified. He shall be an elector of the corporation."

In accordance with the provisions of the foregoing sections, the clerk of a village is elected by the voters of the village for a term of two years, and the clerk of the council of a city is elected by the council for a term of two years.

By virtue of Sections 4280, et seq., General Code, the village clerk performs the duties of the clerk of council. Under the laws governing the city the clerk elected by council performs the duties of the clerk of the council of the city.

In addition to his duties as clerk of the village council, the village clerk performs the duties which are prescribed for the city auditor and village clerk, by Sections 4283, et seq., General Code. In other words, the village clerk is not only the clerk of the council, but he is in effect, also the auditor of the village.

The respective duties of clerk of council and of auditor are placed upon two officers in the city form of government.

It is my conclusion that the positions of village clerk and of clerk of council of a city are not the same offices. The city auditor is as much the successor of the village clerk as is the clerk of council, and he would have the same right to claim the compensation fixed for the village clerk.

The ordinance of the village fixing the salary of the village clerk is inconsistent with the laws governing a city, and that the positions of clerk of a village and clerk of a city council are different offices.

Therefore, the salary fixed for the village clerk by the village council cannot be paid to the clerk of the city council, who is elected by city council in perfecting the change of government from a village to a city.

Respectfully,
TIMOTHY S. HOGAN,
Attorney General.

BOARD OF PUBLIC WORKS—CONTROL OF MIAMI RIVER—CONSTRUCTION OF BRIDGE ACROSS SAID RIVER BY PENNSYLVANIA RAILROAD COMPANY—NECESSITY FOR APPLICATION AND FILING OF PLANS WITH THE BOARD.

The great Miami River is under the jurisdiction and control of the board of public works and before the Pennsylvania Railroad Company may construct a bridge across said river, it should file an application with the board of public works for the approval or disapproval of the plans in accordance with procedure of Section 8775, General Code.

COLUMBUS, OHIO, March 25, 1912.

HON. D. S. LINDSEY, City Solicitor, Piqua, Ohio.

DEAR SIR:—I beg to acknowledge receipt of your communication of March 11, 1912, in which you say that > "The Pennsylvania Railroad Company has an ordinance pending before the council of this city for the elevation of its tracks through the city. Included in the proposed improvement is the erection of a bridge across the Miami River. The plans of the improvement show the placing of two piers in the channel of the river which has aroused considerable opposition from the residents of that part of the city which is more likely to be affected by high waters."

and request me to advise you as to what officer or board has jurisdiction over the Miami River, which is of record a navigable river.

In reply I desire to say that in the case of Walker and Fulton vs. Board of Public Works, 16 Ohio Report, page 540, the supreme court of this state recognized and held the great Miami River, the river passing through Piqua, in which the piers to the proposed bridge are to be built, to be a navigable stream; and the same lying wholly within the state, I am of the opinion that the state board of public works of Ohio has jurisdiction of the Miami River as to the erection of bridges thereover, under favor of Section 8775, General Code, which provides as follows:

> "When the line of the road crosses a canal or any navigable water, the company shall file with the board of public works, the plan of the bridge, and other fixtures therefor, which shall designate the place of crossing. If the board approves such plan, it shall notify the company, in writing, of such approval. If the board disapproves such plan, or fails to approve it within twenty days from the filing thereof, the company may apply to the court of common pleas, or a judge thereof in vacation, and upon reasonable notice being given to the members of the board, upon good cause shown, the court or judge shall appoint a competent, disinterested engineer, not a resident of a county through which the road passes, to examine such crossing, and prescribe the plan and conditions thereof, so as not to impede navigation. Within twenty days from his appointment, such engineer shall make his returns to the common pleas court of the county wherein such crossing is to be made, subject to exceptions by either party. At the next term after filing the return, the court shall examine, approve and confirm it, unless good cause be shown against such approval. Its order of confirmation shall be sufficient authority for the erection, use and occupancy of such bridge, in accordance with such plans."

Under the provisions of law, and particularly the section of the General Code just quoted, the Pennsylvania Railroad Company, desiring to construct a bridge across the Miami River in the city of Piqua, Ohio, a navigable body of water, should file an application with the board of public works for its approval or disapproval of the plan for such bridge, and such matter should be determined by the board of public works prior to any action toward the erection thereof.

Very truly yours,

TIMOTHY S. HOGAN,
Attorney General.

OFFICES INCOMPATIBLE—CITY AUDITOR AND CLERK OF SINKING FUND TRUSTEES — STATUTORY REMOVAL OF INCOMPATIBILITY.

The offices of city auditor and clerk of the sinking fund trustees are in their natures, incompatible for the reason that it is made the duty of the auditor to audit the books of the clerk of the sinking fund trustees, and only in the case where the council has not authorized a clerk or secretary of the sinking fund trustees does the statute remove the incompatibility and permit the city auditor to serve in that capacity.

COLUMBUS, OHIO, March 16, 1912.

HON. G. T. THOMAS, City Solicitor, Troy, Ohio.

DEAR SIR:—Under date of February 23, 1912, you state in part as follows:

"I have at hand the following letter from C. W. Douglas, chairman of the finance committee of the city council:

"'Will you kindly give me an opinion as to the legality of the city auditor drawing a salary for his work for the sinking fund commission in addition to his salary as city auditor, as authorized by the council? I understand he is now paid by the sinking fund commission about $90.00 per annum and that they want to increase his salary from them $200.00 per year.'

"The city council did provide a salary for a clerk of the trustees of the sinking fund, and the trustees elected the city auditor to that office."

Your further inquire if the city auditor can act as clerk or secretary of the trustees of the sinking fund where council has provided a salary for a clerk of such trustees.

Section 4509, General Code, provides:

"The trustees of the sinking fund, immediately after their appointment and qualification, shall elect one of their number as president and another as vice-president, who, in the absence or disability of the president, shall perform his duties and exercise his powers, and such secretary, clerks or employes as council may provide by an ordinance which shall fix their duties, bonds and compensation. Where no clerks or secretary is authorized, the auditor of the city or clerk of the village shall act as secretary of the board."

By virtue of the provisions of the foregoing section, council is authorized to provide for a secretary, clerks or other employes of the sinking fund commission and to fix their duties and compensation. The trustees of the sinking fund have no authority to fix the compensation of their secretary or other employes. This authority is vested in council.

Where no clerk or secretary is authorized by council the city auditor, or the clerk of the village shall act as secretary of the board. In your city it appears that the council has authorized a clerk, and provided a salary for such clerk. In such case the provision that the city auditor shall act as secretary of the board does not apply. The trustees are then empowered to appoint some one as its clerk or secretary.

It appears that the trustees have appointed the city auditor as their secretary, and the question arises, are the positions incompatible?

The legislature has provided that under certain conditions the same person may be city auditor and secretary to the trustees of the sinking fund, at the same time. In such case the legislature has determined that the positions are not incompatible.

The case of Commonwealth vs. Tate, 3 Leigh's Rep. 802, (30 Va.) is an authority that incompatibility at common law may be removed by legislative enactment.

The syllabus reads:

> "The office of deputy sheriff is incompatible with the office of justice of the peace, though by the statute law of Virginia the office of high sheriff is not so; and the acceptance of the office of deputy sheriff vacates the office of justice."

The opinion was rendered by a divided court, ten favoring and eight against the opinion rendered. All agreed, however, that the incompatibility existing at common law as to the positions of justice of the peace and high sheriff had been removed by the legislative act. The difference in opinion arose as to whether the removal of incompatibility between the high sheriff and justice of the peace, extended by implication to the position of deputy sheriff. The majority of the court held that it did not.

The trustees of the sinking fund serve without compensation, and the detail work is performed by its secretary or clerk.

Section 4284, General Code, prescribes certain duties for the city auditor as follows:

> "At the end of each fiscal year, or oftener if required by council, the auditor shall examine and audit the accounts of all officers and departments. He shall prescribe the form of accounts and reports to be rendered to his department, and the form and method of keeping accounts by all other departments, and, subject to the powers and duties of the state bureau of inspection and supervision of public offices, shall have the inspection and revision thereof. Upon the death, resignation, removal or expiration of the term of any officer, the auditor shall audit the accounts of such officer, and if such officer be found indebted to the city, he shall immediately give notice thereof to council and to the solicitor, and the latter shall proceed forthwith to collect the indebtedness."

By virtue of this section the city auditor is required to audit the accounts of the trustees of the sinking fund and of their clerk or secretary.

The rule of incompatibility of office is laid down in the case of State ex rel. vs. Gebert, 12 Cir. Ct., N. S., 273, by Dustin, J., when he says on page 275 of the opinion:

> "Offices are considered incompatible when one is subordinate to, or in any way a check upon the other; or when it is physically impossible for one person to discharge the duties of both."

The city auditor is required to audit the accounts of the secretary of the sinking fund commission. He therefore acts as a check upon that position. The two positions, unless the statutes otherwise provide, are incompatible.

The statute does not authorize the trustees to appoint the city auditor as their clerk or secretary. The statute authorizes the city auditor to act as such secretary only when council has not authorized a clerk or secretary for the sinking fund commission. The authority to act as such secretary should be limited to the conditions prescribed in the statute and should not be extended to permit the city auditor to be appointed as such secretary or clerk where council had authorized a clerk or secretary.

The city auditor cannot, therefore, be appointed secretary or clerk of the sinking fund commission by the trustees of such commission when council has authorized a clerk or secretary.

Respectfully,
TIMOTHY S. HOGAN,
Attorney General.

DIRECTOR OF PUBLIC SERVICE—POWER OF COUNCIL TO INCREASE AND DECREASE SALARY DURING INCUMBENCY—"TERM OF OFFICE"—"FEDERAL" AND "BOARD" PLANS—PATENT AMBIGUITY IN STATUTE.

Section 4250, General Code, providing for the powers of appointment and removal of a director of public service, by the mayor, and Section 3252 presenting the idea of a term of office, and Section 3259, requiring appointments to be made in a definite time, present a patent ambiguity.

Inasmuch as Sections 4251 and 4252 are carried down from the statutes relating to the old "board plan," which was succeeded by the "federal plan," of which Section 4250 is an essential provision, the latter statute should be allowed to control. Therefore, the director of public service has no "term of office" within the comprehension of Section 4213, General Code, and the council is therefore not prohibited from decreasing or diminishing his salary during his incumbency.

COLUMBUS, OHIO, March 26, 1912.

HON. THOS. C. DAVIS, City Solicitor, Massillon, Ohio.

DEAR SIR:—I beg to acknowledge receipt of your letter of February 15th, in which you request my opinion upon the following questions:

> "First—Does the director of public service have a 'term' of office as that phrase is used technically?

"Second—Can the salary of the director of public service legally be increased while he is holding that office?"

These questions invite consideration of Sections 4250, 4251 and 4252, General Code. There are inconsistencies apparent upon the face of these sections as they stand. The power to remove the director of public service, the director of public safety and the heads of the sub-departments of public service and public safety, and to appoint them at will, clearly conferred by Section 4250, is inconsistent with the idea of a "term of office," indirectly referred to in Section 4252, and with the requirement that appointments be made within a specified period, as required by Section 4251. Here then, we have an excellent example of a patent ambiguity, created by conflicting provisions of a codified law. Under well established principles of statutory construction it is permissible to resolve such ambiguity by recourse to the pre-existing statutes. Such investigation establishes the fact that Sections 4251 and 4252 were originally enacted as Sections 223 and 228, respectively, of the Municipal Code of 1902, although subsequently amended, 97 O. L., 39 and 97 O. L., 78, respectively. Both at the time of the original enactment of these sections, and at the time they were amended in 1904, the directors of public service were independent of the mayor; instead of a single director of public service there was a board of three directors, elected by the people; and instead of a single director of public safety there was a board of public safety, the members of which were appointed for a definite term, and if the mayor failed to appoint within the specified period the vacancy was to be filled by the governor (Municipal Code, 1902, Section 146.)

Section 4250, on the other hand, was Section 129, of the Municipal Code, as fundamentally amended by the enactment of what was popularly known as the "Paine law," 99 O. L., 562. The amendments embodied in the Paine law constituted a radical change in the system of municipal government; instead of what was known as the "board plan," the "federal plan" was intended to be adopted thereby. Under this plan, as is apparent from a consideration of other sections of the code as then amended, the mayor became the responsible head of the entire city administration, excepting the legal department and that of the auditor.

Having regard, then, to the plain provisions and intentions of the Paine law, and to the date of its adoption, as compared with that of the provisions now embodied in Sections 4251 and 4252, I am of the opinion that in so far as Sections 4251 and 4252 relate to the director of public service, the director of public safety and the heads of sub-departments in these two departments of the municipal government, they were impliedly amended or repealed by the adoption of the Paine law, and especially that part now embodied in Section 4250, General Code. I therefore reach the conclusion that Section 4250 is the controlling section, and that the answer to your first question is in the negative; the director of public service has no term of office but holds his place at the pleasure of the mayor.

Your second question is rendered easy of answer by the discussion which has preceded. By Section 4213, General Code, council is prohibited from increasing or diminishing the salary of any officer "during the term for which he was elected or appointed." In order that this limitation shall be effective and applicable, it is necessary that the officer have a "term" for which he has been appointed.

In the case of State ex rel. vs. Moody, supreme court, unreported, affirming the same case decided by the circuit court of Lake county, 13 C. C., N. S., 577, this principle was recognized, and city officers and employes within the civil service were held protected by the provisions of the statute because their tenure, though indeterminate, was not dependent upon the will of the appointing power, but upon good behavior. The distinction is very sharply drawn, and it is impliedly conceded in the opinion that if the appointing power has also an unqualified power of removal an appointee would not have a "term" within the meaning of the statute under consideration.

From all the foregoing it is my opinion that the salary of the director of public service may be increased or diminished so as to affect the director holding office at the time the ordinance making such change therein becomes effective.

Very truly yours,

TIMOTHY S. HOGAN,
Attorney General.

ORDINANCES — SEMI-ANNUAL APPROPRIATION ORDINANCES NOT OF A GENERAL NATURE AND NEED NOT BE PUBLISHED IN ANY NEWSPAPER—ORDINANCE RENEWING FRANCHISE IS OF GENERAL NATURE.

The semi-annual appropriation ordinance is not an ordinance of a general nature and need not be published in any newspaper.

An ordinance granting a renewal of a street railroad franchise is a granting of certain rights which affect all citizens and in which the city as a whole is interested. It is, therefore, an ordinance of a general nature and should be published in two newspapers of opposite politics as required by Section 4228, General Code.

COLUMBUS, OHIO, April 3, 1912.

HON. GEO. C. VON BESELER, City Solicitor, Painesville, Ohio.

DEAR SIR:—Your favor of February 19, 1912, is received in which you inquire as follows:

> "The council of the city of Painesville, through me as their city solicitor, refer to you the following two questions for your consideration.
> "Question 1. We understand that the semi-annual appropriation ordinance is not an ordinance of a general nature and need not be published in two newspapers of opposite politics, but need it be published at all in some newspaper?
> "Question 2. The council of the city of Painesville in consideration of the extension of street car lines, such extensions lying entirely without the corporation, are granting a renewal of all franchises within the city of Painesville, although the present franchises would not expire for ten or fifteen years. Is this ordinance granting a renewal an ordinance of a general nature? Is it necessary that it be published in two newspapers of opposite politics; if not, need it be published in some newspaper?"

Under date of January 25, 1911, this department rendered an opinion to Hon. H. R. Schuler, city solicitor of Galion, Ohio, in which it was held that the semi-annual appropriation ordinance was not an ordinance of a general nature and need not be published in two newspapers of opposite politics. As it is not an ordinance of a general nature it need not be published in any newspaper.

You next inquire, is an ordinance granting a renewal of a franchise to a street railway company an ordinance of general nature which should be published?

Section 4227, General Code, provides:

"Ordinances, resolutions and by-laws shall be authenticated by the signature of the presiding officer and clerk of the council. Ordinances of a general nature, or providing for improvements shall be published as hereinafter provided before going into operation. No ordinance shall take effect until the expiration of ten days after the first publication of such notice. As soon as a by-law, resolution or ordinance is passed and signed, it shall be recorded by the clerk in a book to be furnished by the council for the purpose."

In stating your conclusion upon your second inquiry you cite the case of State vs. Railway, 20 Cir. Dec. 632, in which it is held:

"An ordinance extending a street railway grant, which relates to but one road and involves no expenditure of money belonging to the city, but is simply a contract between the railway company and the city, is not of general or permanent nature, and is not rendered invalid by reason of failure to read it on three different days or to suspend the rules requiring this to be done."

The next syllabus of this case, however, holds:

"The duty of publishing an ordinance rests upon the city, and in an action brought by the city solicitor to oust a street railway company from its franchise, it is encumbent upon the city to establish such an omission, and in the absence of proof to that effect a presumption arises that publication was regularly made."

On page 636, of the opinion, Sullivan, J., says:

"It is claimed by the relator that the ordinance was not published as required by the statute, and for that reason it is void. It was not incumbent upon the railway company to discharge this duty; it was upon the city. It seeks now to avail itself, to the prejudice of the company, of its own omission. Being incumbent upon the city, the burden of establishing this omission is upon it. We are of the opinion it has not discharged it; and, in the absence of testimony on the point, the presumption is, that the ordinance was published."

While this opinion does not directly state that such ordinance must be published, yet it is easily seen that that was the conclusion of the court. The opinion states that it was the duty of the city to see that the ordinance was published as required by statute. The court further presumed that the ordinance was published in the absence of evidence to the contrary. If no publication was required, the opinion of the court would have been different. Its opinion is based on the premise that publication was required.

Although the first syllabus quoted states that such an ordinance is not of a general nature, and although it appears that the decision was confirmed without report by the supreme court, yet that is not conclusive that publication was not required. The reasons of the supreme court in affirming the decision do not appear. The legality of the ordinance because it had not been read on three days might have been reached upon other grounds, for example, that the requirement that the ordinance should be read on three days was directory and not mandatory.

The granting or renewal of a franchise to a street railway company is of general interest to all the inhabitants of the city. It is a granting of certain rights in which the city as a whole is vitally interested. It is my conclusion that an ordinance granting a renewal of a franchise is an ordinance of a general nature, and should be published as other ordinances of a general nature.

Section 4228, General Code, provides:

> "Ordinances and resolutions requiring publication shall be published in two newspapers of opposite politics, published and of general circulation in such municipality, if such there be, and shall be published in a newspaper printed in the German language if there is in such municipality such a paper having a bona fide paid circulation within such municipality of not less than one thousand copies. Proof of such circulation shall be made by the affidavit of the proprietor or editor of such paper, and shall be filed with the clerk of the council."

If there are two papers, published and of general circulation in the city of Painesville, of opposite politics, said ordinance should be published in each of said papers in the same manner as other ordinances of a general nature.

Respectfully,
TIMOTHY S. HOGAN,
Attorney General.

DIRECTOR OF PUBLIC SERVICE—MANDATORY DUTY TO IMPROVE STREET WHEN DIRECTED AND AUTHORIZED BY COUNCIL—LEGISLATIVE POWER.

The power to determine the necessity of a public improvement, is a legislative power which in contracts exceeding $500 is not conferred upon the director of public service and when council authorizes and directs the latter officer to improve a certain street involving an expense of more than $500, it is mandatory upon that official to carry out the contract.

COLUMBUS, OHIO, April 1, 1912.

HON. A. J. LAYNE, City Solicitor, Ironton, Ohio.

DEAR SIR:—I beg to acknowledge the receipt of your letter of March 19th, requesting my opinion upon the following question:

> "If council authorizes and directs the improvement of a certain street, and the proceedings are regular in all respects, may the director of public service disregard the action of council and refuse to advertise and proceed with the improvement of the street?"

The following sections of the General Code furnish an answer to this question:

> "Section 4211. The powers of council shall be legislative only, and it shall perform no administrative duties whatever, and it shall neither appoint nor confirm any officer or employe in the city government except those of its own body, except as is otherwise provided in this title. All contracts requiring the authority of council for their execution shall be entered into and conducted to performance by the board or officers having charge of the matters to which they relate, and after authority to make such contracts has been given and the necessary appropriation made, council shall take no further action thereon."

"Section 4325. The director of public service shall supervise the improvement and repair of streets * * * the construction of public improvements and public works except * * * as otherwise provided in this title.

"Section 4328. This director of public service may make any contract * * * for any work under the supervision of that department not involving more than five hundred dollars. When an expenditure within the department * * * exceeds five hundred dollars, such expenditure shall first be authorized and directed by ordinance of council. When so authorized and directed, the director of public service shall make a written contract * * *.

"Section 4403. No contract in the department of public service or the department of public safety in excess of five hundred dollars shall be awarded except on the approval of the board of control, which shall direct the director of the appropriate department to enter into the contract.

"Section 3833. The contract for any such improvement (paid for in part by special assessment) shall be let by the director of public service in the same manner as other contracts, and in case all bids be rejected such director in cities and the council in villages may order a readvertisement for bids."

The precise question which you ask has strangely enough never been adjudicated under these sections. Apparently a case has never arisen in which a director of public service has refused to proceed with an improvement authorized by council. I confess that the question as it is thus raised in the purely argumentative way impresses me as being somewhat difficult.

By the first section above quoted the power of council is limited to that of a legislative character. It is expressly provided that after council has authorized the contract, it shall take no further action thereon. Whether or not the provisions of Section 4211 preclude council from directing or commanding the making of a given improvement as well as merely authorizing it, is on the face of that section at least a difficult question. On the other hand, the powers and duties of the director of public service are no more explicitly prescribed.

Section 4325 simply authorizes him to supervise public improvements, but does not define the extent of the supervision which he is to give to them in particular. Neither this statute nor Section 4211 on the face thereof prescribe who shall decide whether or not a given improvement shall be made.

Section 4328 sheds a little more light than is shed by either of the other sections already discussed. It provides that the director of public service may make any contract within his department involving not more than five hundred dollars, but that when an expenditure which is within the department does involve more than five hundred dollars it shall first be authorized and directed by ordinance of council. Here is inferential authority delegated to council to direct an expenditure of more than five hundred dollars.

Not solely on the authority of the last section above quoted, however, but upon the general principles of separation of powers as between the legislative and executive or administrative departments of the government, I am of the opinion that legislative power includes the power to determine the necessity of a given improvement and that such a question is not a question of administration. If council has the power to direct the making of a contract, and if council's authority is necessary in order to authorize the making of a given improvement, then the action of council becomes the legislation of the city. It is as much an act of legislation to declare that a given improvement shall not be made as it is to authorize it. When the director of public service therefore refuses to proceed with an improvement authorized and directed by council and thus sets up his judgment against that of the council, he is attempting to exercise legislative power; more accurately, he is refusing to obey a law which is binding upon him. In spite, therefore, of the lack of explicit language in the statute, but in harmony with such explicit language as is found in the above quoted sections, I am of the opinion that it is the duty of the director of public service to carry into effect an ordinance of council authorizing and directing the making of a given improvement, and that the action of council is more than a grant of power to the director. It is a legislative mandate, the execution of which becomes his official duty.

Yours very truly,
TIMOTHY S. HOGAN,
Attorney General.

SINKING FUND TRUSTEES—RULES FOR SALE OF BONDS—REFUNDING BONDS AND INVESTMENT BONDS—NECESSITY FOR ADVERTISEMENT—BELOW PAR.

Upon arguments based upon convenience as well as upon the fact that provisions relating to sale of bonds by the sinking fund trustees are special and should be construed as exceptions to general provisions, and particularly in the light of the fact that for the sale of refunding bonds by the sinking fund trustees in the same chapter, advertising requirements and other restrictions are made applicable, Section 4517 should be construed to permit the sinking fund trustees when selling bonds for the purpose of satisfying any obligation under their supervision, to sell the same without advertising and for any just and reasonable price obtainable even though it be less than par.

COLUMBUS, OHIO, April 8, 1912.

HON. STUART BOLIN, City Solicitor, Columbus, Ohio.

MY DEAR SIR:—I beg to acknowledge receipt of your letter of April 1, 1912, requesting a reconsideration of my opinion of December 1, 1911, to Honorable Jonathan Taylor, assistant city solicitor of Akron, construing Sections 3923 and 3924, of the General Code, which govern the sale of the bonds of municipalities, with respect to their application to sales by the sinking fund trustees.

In the former opinion I held that, under these sections, bonds of a municipality, when sold by its sinking fund trustees, for the purpose of satisfying an obligation arising under their supervision must be sold by competitive bidding after advertisement, and for not less than par. In so holding I followed the opinion of one of my predecessors, Hon. Wade H. Ellis, which opinion was founded upon the decision of the supreme court in the case of Cincinnati vs. Guckenberger, 63 O. S., 353. That decision, as may be ascertained by an examination of it, is seemingly in point in that it applies to Section 2709, Rev. Stat., the subject matter of which was subsequently incorporated almost verbatim in Section 97, Municipal Code, which, in turn, has become Sections 3922 to 3925, inclusive, General Code.

I confess that I was influenced to a considerable extent in my holding by the fact that the matter had already been passed upon by this department and by the assumption which I made that under these circumstances the ruling had been generally followed. Your advice to me is that Mr. Ellis' opinion has not been followed, but that the opposite practice has prevailed, and that trustees of the sinking fund have not been selling bonds of the municipality which they represent when held by them and when necessary to satisfy an obligation arising under their supervision, either after advertisement or at par.

I accordingly gladly undertake the reconsideration of my former opinion as if the question were now arising de novo.

On closer examination of the case of Cincinnati vs. Guckenberger, I find that the exact question presented therein was as to whether the trustees of the sinking fund of the city of Cincinnati might issue and sell refunding bonds of the city under a special statute, without complying with the provisions of 2709, R. S., aforesaid. The exact scheme contemplated by the trustees was the refunding of a number of outstanding issues of bonds of the Cincinnati-Southern Railroad, owned by the city of Cincinnati, which bonds were in the possession of the trustees, by the issuance and sale without competitive bidding of "consolidated sinking fund bonds." Such issue was to be made under authority of Section 2729-G (2), Revised Statute, quoted in the statement of the case, and in the opinion of the court. The decision of the court was that bonds so issued and sold by the trustees should be sold after advertisement by competitive bids and at par.

The point concerning this case with which I am now impressed is that the sale of the city's bonds in this instance was by the authority which had the power to and did issue them on behalf of the municipality. The case was not that of the sale of bonds of the city by the sinking fund trustees when held by them as investments and sold for the purpose of meeting obligations chargeable against the sinking fund.

This brings me to the consideration of the exact language of Sections 3923, et seq., of the General Code. The material portions of the related statutes are as follows:

> "Section 3922. When a municipal corporation issues its bonds, it shall first offer them at par and accrued interest to the trustees of the sinking fund, in their official capacity, or, in case there are no such trustees, to the officer or officers of such corporation having charge of its debts, in their official capacity. If such trustees or other officers of the sinking fund decline to take any or all of such bonds at par and accrued interest, the corporation shall offer for the board of commissioners of the sinking fund of the city school district such bonds, or so many of them, at par and accrued interest and without competitive bidding as have not been taken by the trustees of the sinking fund, and the board of commissioners of the sinking fund of the city school district may take such bonds, or any part thereof.
> "Section 3923. Only after the refusal of all such officers to take all or any of such bonds at par and interest, bona fide for and to be held for the benefit of such corporation, sinking fund or debt, shall the bonds, or as many of them as remain, be advertised for public sale. In no case shall the bonds of the corporation be sold for less than their par value, nor shall such bonds when so held for the benefit of such sinking fund or debts, be sold, except when necessary to meet the requirements of such fund or debt.
> "Section 3924. Sales of bonds, other than to the trustees of the sinking fund of the city or to the board of commissioners of the sinking fund of the city school district, as herein authorized, by any municipal corporation, shall be to the highest and best bidder, after thirty days' notice in at least two newspapers of general circulation in the county where such municipal corporation is situated, setting forth the nature, amount, rate of interest and length of time the bonds have to run, with time and place of sale. * * *"

In the same connection regard ought to be had to the provisions of Section 4517, General Code, which is as follows:

"The trustees of the sinking fund shall have charge of and provide for the payment of all bonds issued by the corporation, the interest maturing thereon and the payment of all judgments final against the corporation, except in condemnation of property cases. They shall receive from the auditor of the city or clerk of the village all taxes, assessments and moneys collected for such purposes and invest and disburse them in the manner provided by law. For the satisfaction of any obligation under their supervision, the trustees of the sinking fund may sell or use any of the securities or money in their possession."

As I now view it, the first three sections above quoted, considered by themselves, afford considerable ambiguity. In the first place, the first phrase of Section 3922 speaks of the issuance of bonds by "a municipal corporation." Now the bonds of a municipal corporation must be issued by some of its officers. Ordinarily this is done by the council, although under special statutes like that referred to in Cincinnati vs. Guckenberger, the authority to issue the bonds of the municipality may be imposed upon other officers of the city government. Again, the last sentence of Section 3923 is, on its face, very broad, and applies to any sale of the bonds of a municipal corporation. In its broadest scope, this section would preclude the commissioners of the sinking fund of the city school district from selling the bonds of a municipality at less than par. This, however, cannot be the proper interpretation of Section 3923, for the trustees of commissioners of the sinking fund of the school district are a body corporate quite distinct from the city government or any department thereof, and this section of the Municipal Code can scarcely be construed as a limitation upon the right of that body to dispose of its securities. The same observation is applicable to Section 3924. Here, however, the inference which I have drawn is made the clearer by a consideration of the second sentence of that section (not above quoted) which is as follows:

"Additional notice may be published outside of such county by order of the council, but when such bonds have been once so advertised and offered for public sale, and they, or any part thereof, remain unsold, those unsold may be sold at private sale at not less than their par value, under the direction of the mayor and the officers and agents of the corporation by whom such bonds have been, or shall be, prepared, advertised and offered at public sale."

Clearly this sentence refers to sales made by the municipal corporation as such.

The sections are then at least ambiguous. That being the case, I am satisfied that weight ought to be given to the provisions of Section 4217, supra. Here we find authority vested in the trustees of the sinking fund to sell securities in their possession whenever necessary to meet obligations payable out of the sinking fund. The exact language is as follows:

> "* * * For the satisfaction of any obligation under their supervision, the trustees of the sinking fund may sell or use any of the securities or money in their possession."

It will be observed that the sinking fund trustees are not only authorized to sell bonds for the purpose mentioned, but also to "use" them. The entire power pertains to the satisfaction of obligations arising under their supervision, and is not a general power to sell the bonds of the municipality. It is, therefore, to be regarded as a special grant of power and may fairly be made subject to the rule which governs the construction of special provisions inconsistent with general ones. Under favor of this rule the failure of Section 4517 to provide that the sinking fund trustees shall not proceed in any particular manner in the sale or use of the bonds for the satisfaction of obligations under their supervision, or be limited to any particular selling price in case of sale, precludes the conclusion that it was intended that the trustees should be subject to any such regulations or limitations in the exercise of their power.

There is one consideration, however, which I have not yet mentioned, which seems to me conclusive of the entire matter. In Cincinnati vs. Guckenberger, the reasoning of the court is broader, it seems to me, than the necessities of the case required. Thus on page 371, of the opinion, per Spear, J., the following language is found:

> "A sale being required, and no method of conducting it having been provided, it follows that we look to other sections for that detail, and it is given in Section 2709, by the requirement of a sale to the highest and best bidder after thirty days' notice by advertisement in newspapers."

This language, standing by itself, certainly justified Mr. Ellis' conclusion and that followed by me in my former opinion. This remark could just as well be made of Section 4517, General Code, as of Section 2729-a, et seq., R. S., which the court had before it. As a matter of fact, however, Section 2729-g (2), R. S., to which I have already referred, and which is partially quoted on page 368 of the report of the above entitled case, contained the following express provision:

> "Such bonds shall be sold as provided in Section 2709, of the Revised Statutes."

This provision of itself was sufficient ground for the decision in Cincinnati vs. Guckenberger. A similar provision is found in Section 4522, General Code, which is one of a series of sections, commencing with Section 4520, which authorize the issuance of refunding bonds by the sinking fund trustees, and are, therefore, essentially similar to those sections of the Revised Statutes under review in Cincinnati vs. Guckenberger. The provision of Section 4522 as to the sale of such bonds is as follows:

> "They shall be sold as provided by law for the sale of bonds by a municipal corporation."

It seems to me, as a matter of statutory construction, that two statutes like Sections 4517 and 4522, found in the same chapter, both pertaining to the powers of the trustees of the sinking fund, and therefore, strictly in pari materia, must be construed together for whatever light they may mutually shed upon each other. If that is the case, then I think it fair to conclude that a power to sell, conferred in unqualified terms by one section is to be deemed indeed an unqualified power if a power to sell, conferred by the other section, is expressly qualified in the manner set forth in Section 4522. That is to say, the mere fact that bonds issued for refunding purposes by the sinking fund trustees are required to be sold in the manner prescribed for the sale of bonds issued by the municipal corporation, is itself strong evidence that securities sold by the sinking fund trustees under the special power to sell for the purpose of meeting obligations against the sinking fund, need not be so sold, even though they are the bonds of the municipality itself.

In addition to all of the foregoing considerations, there is a very strong argument of convenience in favor of the conclusion which I have reached. In a case like that under consideration, the argument of convenience may properly be used. Thus it appears that due regard for the purpose for which the board of sinking fund trustees was created, suggests the obvious fact that obligations payable out of the funds under their supervision should be promptly met. It is made the duty of the board to keep its funds invested in securities, and the board is encouraged to invest in the securities of the municipal corporation which it represents. Yet, from the fund represented by such investments, the board must meet the installments of interest and principal "of the public debts as they fall due, promptly, in order to preserve the city's credit; in like manner they may be called upon to pay large final judgments upon short notice.

Now, the funds of the sinking fund trustees need not necessarily be invested solely in the securities of the corporation itself. They may be invested in any municipal, state, or United States bonds. There is certainly no provision to the effect that in selling securities other than those of the municipal corporation, the trustees must advertise and sell at par. Convenience would suggest that the sinking fund trustees be governed by the same rules in disposing of any securities under their possession for the purpose of meeting obligations. This argument of convenience is particularly strong as to the question of requiring the trustees to sell at par. It is well known, of course, that there are times of financial stringency when securities are not salable except at a discount. Yet, the bonded indebtedness of an municipal corporation must be provided for and installments thereof met in such times as well as at other times. If this argument is valid as to sales at par, it applies equally to the necessity for advertisement, because under Sections 3923 and 3924, supra, a given construction as to one of these questions must necessarily be decisive of the other.

For all of the foregoing reasons, then, I am of the opinion upon such reconsideration as I have given to the question presented by your letter, that the trustees of the sinking fund of a municipal corporation selling securities of the municipal corporation in which their funds are invested, for the purpose of meeting obligations arising under their supervision, need not advertise such sale as provided in Section 3924, General Code, and may secure for such bonds any price which by the exercise of business judgment and diligence they may be able to secure, though less than the par value thereof.

Very truly yours,

TIMOTHY S. HOGAN,

Attorney General.

MUNICIPAL CORPORATIONS—DIRECTOR OF PUBLIC SERVICE AND COUNCIL—POWERS OF, RESPECTIVE TO WATERWORKS, ELECTRIC POWER PLANTS AND CEMETERIES—DISCRIMINATORY CHARGES—METERS—SURPLUS POWER.

By express provision of Section 3958, General Code, the director of public service is vested with the power of fixing the rates and conditions for the supply of water from a municipal waterworks. The same authority, by provision of Sections 3956 and 3957, General Code, may compel users to furnish their own meters when it is decided to charge by that method.

If basis is made upon proper classification and upon equitable rates, different prices may be charged to different classes according as they use a greater or a less amount of water.

Municipal corporations have the undisputed power to establish electric power plants and to furnish light and power to consumers. As, however, the power to fix the rates is not expressly vested in the director of public service, such rates must be fixed by the council and that authority in this connection may charge different rates to different consumers under the same limitations as apply to the director of public service with reference to water rates.

If a municipal electric plant, by virtue of a lighter demand upon its power during certain parts of the day, is possessed of surplus power, the same may be furnished at a less rate than is charged during those hours when the demand is heaviest.

Under Sections 6165 and 6166, General Code, the director of public service of a city owning a cemetery, is vested with the absolute power to fix the rates and terms of payment for cemetery lots.

COLUMBUS, OHIO, April 1, 1912.

HON. C. T. THOMAS, City Solicitor, Troy, Ohio.

DEAR SIR:—I beg to acknowledge receipt of your communication in which you request my opinion as follows:

> "Certain questions of importance to this city have been propounded to me by the city officials, and being uncertain of my position in the matter, I am anxious to have an answer to the following questions:
> "The statement of facts is as follows:
>
> "This city is the owner of its own waterworks; part of the users pay on a flat rate basis, that is, by the number of openings, while others have meters that are furnished by the city, and pay a minimum charge for the use of water through the meter, but over 16,500 gallons of water is used each quarter, at 12 cents per thousand.
> "Question 1. Who has the authority and whose duty is it to fix the rate and conditions of the use of water?
> "2. If meters are required, shall the user of water be compelled to furnish their own meters, or shall the city furnish them as part of the equipment of the plant?
> "3. Can the authority authorized to fix prices, make one price to one class that use water and another price to another class; or must there be a common, uniform basis of charge, a fixed standard of use and charge?
> "The city is the owner of its own electric light plant, and from its output furnishes the streets with light, and to its citizens light and power.

"Question 1. Who has the right, and whose duty is it to fix the rate charged consumers? Can the authority who has the power to fix rates charge for light and power, or either (all produced from one machine) to one class of customers one rate per K. W. and to another class charge a different rate on the quantity consumed?

"2. Can there be such a thing as a "surplus" in a plant owned by the people and all the power produced from the same plant for all the buyers of electric force, which can be sold for a less sum to one class of consumers. If there is any such thing as a surplus, where does the surplus begin, at the first part, middle, or end of the day?

"The city is the owner of a cemetery.

"Question 1. Who has the power and whose duty is it to fix the price at which lots or portions of lots can be sold?"

In answer to your first question under the statement of facts relating to your waterworks, I desire to say that Section 3956, General Code, provides that

> "The director of public service shall manage, conduct and control the waterworks, furnish supplies of water, collect water rents, and appoint necessary officers and agents."

and Section 3957, General Code, provides:

> "Such director may make such by-laws and regulations as he deems necessary for the safe, economical and efficient management and protection of the waterworks Such by-laws and regulations shall have the same validity as ordinances when not repugnant thereto or to the constitution of laws of the state."

Section 3958 provides:

> "For the purpose of paying the expenses of conducting and managing the waterworks, such director may assess and collect from time to time a water rent of sufficient amount in such manner as he deems most equitable upon all tenements and premises supplied with water. * * *"

Under the above quoted sections of the General Code and the decisions of the courts of this state, there can be no question but that the director of public service of cities in this state has the authority, and it is the duty to fix the rate and conditions of the use of water.

Replying to the second question under the statement of facts relative to your municipal water plant, I am of the opinion that under Section 3957, General Code, the director of public service may provide a by-law and regulation requiring all users of water to furnish and own meters, if he deems such action necessary for the safe, economic and efficient management and protection of the waterworks. Under the provisions of said section the administrative control of the waterworks of a municipality is given solely to the director of public service; and it seems to me that under that section the director of public service would have the authority to compel users of water, first, to use meters, and second, to furnish and own the same.

Answering the third question under said statement of facts, as to the authority to fix prices, making one price to one class that use water and another price to another class, or whether there must be a common, uniform basis of charge, a fixed standard of use and charge, I desire to say that I have carefully examined the provisions of the Municipal Code, and the sections of the General Code as well, and I find therein no express provision respecting the manner of fixing rates for water furnished by a municipality to consumers therein; the only provision of the code relative thereto is Section 3958, which provides that and I am of the opinion, under said section, that the legislature intended to vest in the director of public service a discretionary power to fix or assess and collect, from the users of water, such amount as he deems most equitable. In supplying water there are generally two methods of charging which might be adopted; one by measure, installing meters; the other by charging a flat rate, estimated largely by the number and character of the taps; and in the absence of any limitation, fixed by statute upon the powers of the director of public service, to fix rates, it seems unquestionable to me that the director of public service could adopt either or both methods of charging for water furnished, so long as he would make the price of each claim uniform. Therefore, in answer to your question, I am of the opinion that the director of public service, being authorized to fix prices, may make one price to one class of water users and another price to another class, if the prices fixed for the different classes are upon an equitable basis, that is, according to the amount of water used. In other words, it is my opinion that such action on the part of the director of public service, under the powers granted to him by the above quoted section, would not be such a discrimination as would be a violation of law. It has been held repeatedly that a minimum rate may be charged for the use of water, although it operates in some cases somewhat differently than it does in others, on the ground that it is the nominal operation of a regulation; and while it may, therefore, be true that some applicants might be paying for a little more than others, upon a pro rata basis, the objection of discrimination could not be taken.

> "For the purpose of paying the expenses of conducting and managing the waterworks, such director may assess and collect from time to time a water rent of sufficient amount in such manner as he deems most equitable upon all tenements and premises supplied with water. * * *"

Answering your first question under the statement of facts relative to the electric light plant, I would say that I have carefully examined the provisions of the Municipal Code, both before and after its amendment by the Paine law, so called, and the corresponding sections of the General Code as well, and I find therein no express provision whatever respecting the manner of fixing rates chargeable for electric light and power furnished from a municipal plant. The only provisions relating to the matter are as follows:

> "Section 7, of the Municipal Code. * * * All municipal corporations shall have the * * * general power * * *.
> "Section 15. * * * to establish and maintain municipal lighting, power and heating plants * * *.
> "Section 2486, Revised Statutes. The council of any city or village shall have power * * * to erect * * * electric works at the expense of the corporation * * *."

That these provisions authorize a municipality to maintain an electric light plant from which electricity for lighting and power purposes may be furnished and sold to the inhabitants of a municipality as well as to use the current produced at such plant for purely municipal purposes, has always been the practical construction of this statute. Indeed, whatever may have been the exact extent of the powers of municipalities in this respect in the year 1907, the revision of such Section 7, of the Municipal Code by the general assembly of 1908 (99 O. L. 34, paragraph 7), resolved all doubts by expressly providing that every municipal corporation should have the power not only to establish and operate municipal lighting and power plants, but also to furnish the municipality and inhabitants thereof with light, power and heat.

Your question, however, presents a more difficult preliminary question, to wit: What department of the city government has the power to fix the rates chargeable for electric current furnished to citizens and inhabitants thereof? The director of public service, under the provisions of Section 4326, is vested with the power to manage municipal water, lighting, heating, power, garbage and other undertakings of the city, and, therefore, there can be no question as to the authority of the director of public service to manage the municipal lighting and heating plants and other property of the corporation not otherwise provided for. But whether such a general grant of power suffices to confer upon the department of public service authority to fix rates and make contracts relating to the price of electric current; or whether council, in pursuance of its general legislative authority, and especially under Section 127, Municipal Code, which provides that may fix such rates, is not exactly clear. It is my opinion, however, that Section 127, Municipal Code, governs and the council should fix rates and direct the director of public service to enter into contracts respecting electric current to be furnished to consumers from the municipal plant. The authority was directly conferred, by statute, upon the director of public service to fix the price to be charged for water furnished by the municipal water plant to consumers of water within the municipality but the statutes do not confer such power upon the director of public service in relation to electric current furnished by the municipality from a municipal plant to users of current within said municipality. I am, therefore, of the opinion that the holding of my predecessor, Hon. U. G. Denman, that the council of a municipality should fix rates to be charged for electric current to be furnished consumers from a municipal plant, rendered to Hon. E. C. Long, city solicitor of Bellefontaine, Ohio, under date of October 22, 1910, is correct upon the reasoning therein set forth; and I am also of the opinion that the council, having the authority to fix rates to be charged for light and power, is vested with the authority, as the legislative body of the municipality, to fix a certain rate to be charged to one class of consumers, and another rate to be charged another class of consumers, provided the rates fixed are based upon a graded calculation and uniform as to all consumers using the amount specified in the respective classes.

> "* * * All powers conferred by this act upon municipal corporations shall be exercised by council, unless otherwise provided herein."

Replying to the second question under the statement of facts relating to the electric light plant, to wit:

> "Can there be such a thing as a 'surplus' in a plant owned by the people and all the power produced from the same plant for all the buyers of electric force, which can be sold for a less sum to one class of consumers? If there is any such thing as a surplus, where doees the surplus begin, at the first part, middle, or end of the day?"

I desire to say that this question is one of electrical engineering, except that part pertaining to the sale of such surplus, if there be any, and the sale thereof for a less sum to one class than to another; but I take it that there can be a surplus in any plant, either municipal or private, erected for the purpose of generating electric current for lighting, heating and power purposes; and that surplus would be the difference between the capacity of the plant and that required to supply all customers being furnished current for lighting, heating or power purposes, by said plant. As to where the surplus begins, at the first part, middle or end of the day, would depend upon the time wherein the greatest load was to be carried in order to furnish the necessary current during the operation of the plant; and, in my opinion, might be at the first part, the middle or end of the day, according to the part of the day which required the greatest amount of power from said plant.

In conclusion, I am of the opinion, that if your plant did not need a surplus, for example, the power during the part of the day which is light which would be necessary in the dark season of the day to furnish arc lights or street lamps, your council could fix a rate which would be less for those hours which would not consume the surplus current than for the hours during which said surplus would be used.

Answering your question as to who has the power and whose duty it is to fix the price at which lots or premiums of lots in a cemetery may be sold, Section 4165, of the General Code, provides that > "The director shall determine the size and price of lots, the terms of payment therefor, and shall give to each purchaser a receipt, showing the amount paid and a pertinent description of the lot or lots sold. Upon producing such receipt to the proper officer, the purchaser shall be entitled to a deed for the lot or lots described therein."

And Section 4166 provides:

> "No more shall be charged for lots than is necessary to reimburse the corporation for the expense of lands purchased or appropriated for cemetery purposes, and to keep in order and embellish the grounds, and provision shall be made for the interment in such cemetery of persons buried at the expense of the corporation."

Under the sections just quoted, it is my opinion that the director of public service of a city owning a cemetery is vested with the absolute power to fix the size and price, and terms of payment therefor, of lots or portions therein.

Very truly yours,

TIMOTHY S. HOGAN,
Attorney General.

SEMI-ANNUAL APPROPRIATION ORDINANCE — PUBLICATION UNAUTHORIZED — PAYMENT OF, FROM CITY TREASURY, ILLEGAL.

As the semi-annual appropiation ordinance is not an ordinance of general nature, and there is, therefore, no authority in law for the publication of the same, payment for a publication thereof cannot be legally made out of the city treasury.

COLUMBUS, OHIO, April 15, 1912.

HON. Z. N. FAIR, City Solicitor, New Philadelphia, Ohio.

DEAR SIR:—Under date of March 20, 1912, you write us that your city auditor informs you that he has received a notice not to have the semi-annual appropriation ordinance published, and that the payment of the same could not be legally paid out of the city treasury. You further state that the opinion was current in your city some time ago that the ordinance in question was passed as an emergency measure since you were allowed to pay city officials and current expenses without waiting for the expiration of sixty days, as provided for in the referendum act; also that the semi-annual appropriation ordinance was published under this impression, and that the payment of the same is now withheld by the city auditor. You, therefore, ask whether the payment for the publishing of the semi-annual appropriation ordinance can legally be paid out of the city treasury.

In an opinion rendered to the Hon. W. J. Tossell, city solicitor, Norwalk, Ohio, under date of January 18, 1912, I held that the semi-annual appropriation ordinance was not within the purview of the initiative and referendum act as found in 102 Ohio Laws, 521. This opinion is to be found in printed form in LVII No. 5, Ohio Law Bulletin 42, under date of January 29, 1912.

Under date of October 4, 1911, in an opinion to the Hon. Elmer T. Boyd, city solicitor, Marion, Ohio, I held that ordinances passed by the city council requiring publication should be published as heretofore.

In an opinon rendered to the Hon. Geo. C. Von Beseler, city solicitor, Painesville, Ohio, under date of April 3, 1912, I held as follows:

> "Under date of January 25, 1911, this department rendered an opinion to Hon. H. R. Schuler, city solicitor of Galion, Ohio, in which it was held that the semi-annual appropriation ordinance was not an ordinance of a general nature and need not be published in two newspapers of opposite politics. As it is not an ordinance of a general nature, it need not be published in any newspaper."

The initiative and referendum act does not involve the question of publication of ordinances, but leaves the law, as I view it, as it was prior to the passage of said act.

Having held that the semi-annual appropriation ordinance was not an ordinance of a general nature, and, therefore, that it was not necessary to publish such ordinance, there is, of course, no authority in law for the payment of the publication of such ordinance, and consequently, payment for the publication thereof cannot be legally made out of the city treasury.

Very truly yours,

TIMOTHY S. HOGAN,

Attorney General.

INITIATIVE AND REFERENDUM ACT—CERTIFICATION OF FACT OF FILING OF PETITIONS FOR REFERENDUM BY CLERK TO BOARD OF DEPUTY STATE SUPERVISORS OF ELECTIONS—DUTY OF CLERK TO CANVASS NAMES ON PETITIONS.

When a petition for a referendum has been filed under the Crosser act, it is the duty of the clerk to certify within ten days, merely the fact of the filing of said petition to the board of elections. The board, therefore, does not get possession of the petitions, and it is the duty of the clerk alone to canvass the names on said petition, and said duty must be performed before the certification of the fact of their filing by the clerk to the board.

COLUMBUS, OHIO, April 16, 1912.

HON. JONATHAN TAYLOR, City Solicitor, Akron, Ohio.

DEAR SIR:—Under date of February 12th you state that under favor of the Crosser act there has been filed with the city clerk a petition alleging to contain a sufficient number of names, which petition calls for a referendum on an issue of bonds by the city of Akron for the purchase of certain property for a city hall site. You then request my opinion as to whether or not the board of elections are authorized to canvass the names which have been attached to the petition.

The first paragraph of Section 4227-2, General Code, provides that if a referendum petition is filed, the clerk (of council) shall "certify such ordinance, resolution or other measure" to the board of elections, who shall submit the same to the vote of the electors at the next general election.

The second paragraph of Section 4227-2 provides that if a referendum petition is filed thereunder the clerk (of council) "shall certify the fact of the filing of such petition" to the board of elections, who shall cause the ordinance or resolution to be voted on at the next regular election. It would appear to me from a reading of said Section 4227-2, General Code, that under the first paragraph thereof after a referendum petition has been filed with the clerk, it is his duty to certify the ordinance to the board of elections, and not his duty to send over the petition which has been filed with him. The same is true in reference to the second paragraph of said section, as after a referendum petition is filed thereunder, it is the duty of the clerk to certify the fact of the filing of the petition to the board of elections. It would, therefore, appear that at no time does the board of elections obtain the possession of the petition itself, and, consequently, would be unable to canvass the names upon such petitions. It is the duty of the clerk (of council) to determine that the petition is signed by fifteen per cent. of the qualified electors of the municipality.

It is true that such clerk under the provisions of the act is to certify the ordinance within ten days after the filing of the petition, yet it is his duty in the first instance to satisfy himself that the requisite fifteen per cent. of the qualified electors have signed the petition, and he, therefore, is the proper party to canvass the names that are attached to such petition. It would, of course, have been well to have placed this duty upon the board of elections because of their peculiar knowledge of the various voters throughout the city, yet the legislature has not seen fit so to do, nor am I able to find any general provision of law that would authorize them to canvass such names.

I am, therefore, of the opinion that the board of elections is without authority to canvass the names signed to a referendum petition.

Yours truly,

TIMOTHY S. HOGAN,

Attorney General.

COUNCIL—CONTINUOUS BODY—POWER TO ACT BEFORE AND AFTER EXPIRATION OF TEN DAYS AFTER VETO BY MAYOR—INCREASE OF SALARY OF DIRECTOR OF PUBLIC SERVICE.

When council acts upon an ordinance fixing the salary of a director of public service within ten days after the same has been vetoed by the mayor, said action is null and void, and as Section 4234, General Code, provides that ten days after said veto, said ordinance may be reconsidered, a new council, since the council is a continuous body, may act upon said ordinance at any time.

COLUMBUS, OHIO, April 22, 1912.

HON. ALBERT S. FENZEL, City Solicitor, Middletown, Ohio.

DEAR SIR:—Under date of January 15th you submitted for my opinion the following facts:

> "The salary of the director of public service of this city is, and has been heretofore, one thousand dollars per year; on the 15th of last December, council passed, under suspension of rules, an ordinance fixing the salary of the service director at one thousand five hundred dollars, on December 22nd, the mayor returned this ordinance to council with his veto; council then (without waiting for the ten days required by law to elapse) took action on this ordinance, and on the vote failed to pass it over the mayor's veto."

You desire to know whether or not the present council can pass the ordinance mentioned over the veto of the mayor who has gone out of office.

Following the ruling in the well considered case of Smith vs. Railway 8 Nisi Prius 1, I am of the opinion that the council is a continuous body and that the business remaining unfinished at the termination of the terms of office of councilmen does not die thereby causing it to be taken up again entirely new by the incoming council.

Such being the fact, I am of the opinion that unless the action of the outgoing council was valid and complete upon the ordinance in question the present council can consider the same again and pass it over the mayor's veto.

Section 4234, General Code, states in part as follows:

> "When the mayor disapproves an ordinance or resolution, or any part thereof, and returns it to council with his objections, council may, after ten days, reconsider it, and if such ordinance, resolution or item, upon such reconsideration is approved by the votes of two-thirds of all the members elected to council, it shall take effect as if signed by the mayor. The provisions of this section shall apply only in cities."

From the statement above given by you it appears that council without waiting for the ten days required by law to elapse took action upon the ordinance in question and failed to pass the same over the mayor's veto. As Section 4234, General Code, above quoted, authorized council to reconsider it after ten days from its return to the council by the mayor, and as council did not wait in this instance for said ten days to expire, I am of the opinion that the attempted action of council was null and void and of no force and effect, as council was at the time it attempted to pass said ordinance over the veto of the mayor totally without authority so to do. I am, therefore, of the opinion that the new council, since there is no limitation upon the time within which the same shall be considered after the ten days from the return of such ordinance to council can reconsider such ordinance and pass the same over the veto of the mayor in the manner provided in Section 4234.

We have considered the question as to whether or not a director of public service has a "term of office" and, therefore, whether the salary of such officer is within the inhibitions of Section 4213, General Code, which provides in part as follows:

> "The salary of any officer, clerk or employe shall not be increased or diminished during the term for which he was elected or appointed."

Our conclusions thereon are found in an opinion rendered to Hon. Thomas C. Davis, city solicitor, Massillon, Ohio, under date of March 26, 1912, copy of which opinion we herewith enclose.

Very truly yours,
TIMOTHY S. HOGAN,
Attorney General.

CIVIL SERVICE—RESIGNATION OF FIREMAN—REQUIREMENTS FOR REGAINING POSITION.

When a fireman resigns his position, a vacancy is created and he may regain such position only by fulfilling requirements for examination and otherwise, in accordance with Section 7481, General Code, providing for the filling of such vacancies.

COLUMBUS, OHIO, April 27, 1912.

HON. J. F. NIELAN, City Solicitor, Hamilton, Ohio.

DEAR SIR:—Your favor of April 5, 1912, is received, in which you inquire as follows:

> "J. M. of this city, was formerly employed in the fire department of the city of H. for a period of about fifteen years. As a result of a misunderstanding, Mr. M. resigned from the fire department, and now wishes to be reinstated in said department, and at the request of the director of public safety I am writing to ask whether under the law the director of public safety has any authority to reappoint Mr. M. without an examination and having his name certified to the director of public safety as being eligible to appointment in said department."

The act of the employe is resigning his position severed his connection with the service of the city. He thereby terminated all the rights which he had to his position, including the protection which he had to his position by reason of being in the classified service.

The statute does not make any provision covering the question you ask.

Section 4481, General Code, prescribes how appointments shall be made in the classified service, as follows:

> "Appointments shall be made in the following manner: The appointing board or officer shall notify the commission of any vacancy to be filled. The commission shall thereupon certify to such board or officer the three candidates graded highest in the respective lists as shown by the result of such examination. Such board or officer shall thereupon appoint one of the three so certified. Grades and standings so established shall remain the grades for a period of six months, or longer if the commission so determines, and in succeeding notifications of vacancies, candidates not selected may be dropped by the commission after having been certified a total of three times."

When an employe resigns a vacancy is created. This vacancy, if the position is in the classified service, should be filled in accordance with the provisions of Section 4481, General Code. There is no other way to fill such vacancy. If there is no vacancy, the appointing officer has no power to make an appointment.

An employe in the classified service of a city, who resigns his position, cannot be reinstated after such resignation has become effective. In order to be reappointed he must take the examination as required by statute and his name certified to the appointing officer or board by the civil service commission.

Respectfully,

TIMOTHY S. HOGAN,

Attorney General.

INITIATIVE AND REFERENDUM ACT—ORDINANCE PROVIDING FOR DONATION OF LAND FOR ARMORY PURPOSES—SIXTY-DAY EXPIRATION—"EMERGENCY"—"RIGHT"—"EXPENDITURE."

A resolution or ordinance of council authorizing a deed to be made to the state of Ohio for the purpose of donating a site for armory purposes does not "involve an expenditure of money" nor does it "create a right" within the meaning of Section 2, of the initiative and referendum act and therefore, does not remain inoperative for sixty days.

As such a purpose does not come within the scope of the term "emergency," the same may not be declared such for the purpose of permitting the ordinance to go into effect immediately.

Such an ordinance, however, being the exercise of a power delegated to the municipal corporation, is within paragraph 1, of Section 2 of the initiative and referendum act and would become effective as prior to the passage of the act. The ordinance, however, should remain inoperative for thirty days in order to give the electors their right to file a referendum petition within that time.

COLUMBUS, OHIO, April 25, 1912.

HON. D. F. MILLS, City Solicitor, Sidney, Ohio.

DEAR SIR:—Under date of April 24, 1912, you state that the city of Sidney desires to donate a site to the state of Ohio for armory purposes, and that you desire an opinion on the following:

"1. Whether the resolution or ordinance passed by council authorizing a deed to be made to the state of Ohio for the purpose in question under the provisions of Section 3631, G. C., 102 O. L. 153 remains inoperative for sixty days under paragraph two of Section two of the initiative and referendum act, 102 Ohio Laws 521.

"2. If said ordinance does not come within the provisions of paragraph two of Section two of the initiative and referendum act would council be jusified in declaring said resolution or ordinance to be an emergency measure as provided in Section three of said act so that the same may go into effect immediately.

"3. If council so declares said ordinance an emergency measure what would be the holding on the question of the validity of the deed executed under an ordinance declaring this to be an emergency measure."

Paragraph one of Section two of the initiative and referendum act provides in part as follows:

"Any ordinance, resolution or other measure of a municipal corporation, granting a franchise, creating a right, involving the expenditure of money or exercising any other power delegated to such municipal corporation by the general assembly, shall be submitted to the qualified electors for their approval or rejection in the manner herein provided, * * *."

Paragraph two of Section two provides in part:

"No resolution, ordinance, or measure of any municipal corporation, creating a right, involving the expenditure of money, granting a franchise, conferring, extending or renewing a right to use the streets, or regulating the use of the streets for water, gas, electricity, telephone, telegraph, power or street railways, or other public or quasi-public utility shall become effective in less than sixty days after its passage * * *."

Section three of the initiative and referendum act provides:

"All other acts of city council not included among those specified in Section 2 of this act, shall also remain inoperative for sixty days after passage, and may be submitted to popular vote in the manner herein provided, except that any act, not included within those specified in Section 2 of this act, as remaining inoperative for sixty days, and which is declared to be an emergency measure, and receiving a three-fourths majority in council of such municipal corporation may go into effect immediately and remain in effect until repealed by city council or by direct vote of the people as herein provided."

Section 3616 of the General Code provides:

"All municipal corporations shall have the general powers mentioned in this chapter, and council may provide by ordinance or resolution for the exercise and enforcement of them."

Section 3631, General Code, as amended 102 O. L. 153, which is one of the powers mentioned in said chapter provides in part as follows:

"* * *to hold real estate or any interest therein and other property for the use of the corporation and to sell or lease it, or to donate the same by deed in fee simple to the state of Ohio as a site for the erection of an armory."

Your first question is as to whether or not a resolution or ordinance authorizing a deed to be made to the state for armory purposes under Section 3631 supra would remain inoperative for sixty days. Upon an examinaation of paragraph two of Section two of the initiative and referendum act the only question that can arise is whether or not such an ordinance or resolution would create a right or would involve the expenditure of money. As I view the question as the property is to pass from the city to the state by donation the ordinance providing therefor could under no circumstances be considered as an ordinance involving the expenditure of money. The word "donate" negatives the idea of expenditure. Does the ordinance create a right? The question as to what is meant by the term "creating a right" was considered in the case of State of Ohio ex rel. vs. Barr 5 O. N. P. 435. In such case the court says:

> "Passing now to the consideration of what is a 'right' within the meaning of the clause 'creating a right,' we find among others the following definitions:
> "'Right;' That which one has a legal or special claim to do or to exact; legal power; authority; as, a sheriff has the right to arrest a criminal.'
> "Webster's International Dictionary. 'Often used to designate power, prerogative and privilege, especially when applied to corporations; a capacity residing in one man of controlling, with the assent and assitance of the state, the action of others.' A. and E. Ency. of Law vol. 21, p. 406.
>
> "'A legal right may be said to be a claim which can be enforced by legal means against the persons or community whose duty it is to respect it.'
> "Blackstone, Book 1, p. 123, 'A power, privilege, prerogative.'
> "Anderson's Law Dictionary. The meaning given by these definitions must have been the meaning intended for this clause by the legislature. A franchise is sometimes termed a right, but that evidently is not the kind of right referred to here, since the section specially enumerates 'the granting of the franchise' in naming the classes of legislation by the council which require to be submitted to the mayor for approval. If 'franchise' and 'right' here mean the same thing, then the clause, 'or creating a right' is tautology, and the courts are always constrained to giving such force and effect to statutes as will avoid tautological expressions. In Pancoast vs. Ruffin, etc., 1 Ohio 386 the court says:
> "'Statutes should be so construed as to give effect to the intention of the legislature, and, if possible render every section and clause effectually operative.'
> "Besides franchises we know of no other class, or kinds of rights, except those comprehended in the definitions before given, which a city council has the power to create. The 'right' meant by the statute then, is a prerogative, authority, a legal power. * * *
> "In taking this view of the ordinance we follow the reasoning of the supreme court of New York, in the case of People against Dikeman, 7 Howard's Prac. R. 130, wherein the court says: 'In law it (the word "right") is most frequently applied to property in its restricted sense, but it is often used to designate power, prerogative and privilege, and especially when applied to corporations. Indeed, a large portion of the rights of political corporations consist of powers conferred upon them. Corporate powers are not generally exercised by the whole body.

> They are, to a great extent, delegated to its officers and in municipal corporations to the different departments; these are generally electoral, legislative and administrative.'"

Under the definitions as found in the above cited case I am of the opinion that an ordinance or resolution such as the one in question cannot be considered as an ordinance or resolution creating a right.

I, therefore, hold in answer to your first question that an ordinance or resolution passed by council authorizing a deed to be made to the state of Ohio for armory purposes under the provisions of Section 3631, G. C., 102 O. L. 153, does not remain inoperative for sixty days under paragraph two of Section two of the initiative and referendum act.

Answering your second question I have heretofore given it as my opinion that council cannot by mere declaration declare an ordinance or resolution to be an emergency measure unless the same would come within the term "emergency" as the same is defined. I so hold in an opinion to the Hon. Nicholas H. Greenberger, city solicitor, Akron, Ohio, under date of October 27, 1911, as follows:

> "While it is true that Section 3 of the initiative and referendum act foregoing set forth declares that certain acts may take effect immediately, provided they be declared by council to be an 'emergency measure,' yet I do not believe that council can declare an act to be an emergency measure which could not be considered under the definition of 'emergency' to be such. In other words, I do not believe that council by mere declaration that a measure is an emergency measure can so constitute it if the definition of 'emergency' did not apply to such measure.
> "'Emergency' is defined by the Century Dictionary as follows:
>
> "'A sudden or unexpected happening; an unforeseen occurrence or condition; specifically, a perplexing contingency or complication of circumstances.' Again,
>
> "'A sudden or unexpected occasion for action; exigency; pressing necessity.' Again,
>
> "'Something not calculated upon; an unexpected gain.'
>
> "'Emergency' is defined by Webster to be: 'A condition of things happening suddenly or unexpectedly; an unforeseen occurrence; a sudden occasion.' Again,
> "'Any event or occasional combination of circumstances which calls for immediate action or remedy; pressing necessity; exigency.'"

I can conceive of no facts that could arise in reference to the passage of an ordinance or resolution donating property to the state of Ohio for armory purposes which could give rise to an emergency as the same is defined.

I am, therefore, of the opinion that council would not be justified in declaring said resolution or ordinance to be an emergency measure as provided in Section three of said act so that the same may go into effect immediately.

You next inquire if council so declares said ordinance an emergency measure what would be the holding on the question of the validity of the deed executed under an ordinance declaring this to be an emergency measure.

As I have heretofore held that I cannot conceive of any situation in which council could declare an ordinance or resolution donating property to the state of Ohio for armory purposes to be an emergency measure such a declaration in such ordinance or resolution would not have the effect of permitting the same to go into effect immediately.

The power to donate property is as before stated included in Section 3631, General Code among the general powers of a municipal corporation and an ordinance of resolution providing therefor, would, as I view the matter, come within paragraph one of Section two of the Crosser act in that it was the exercising of a power delegated to the municipal corporation by the general assembly, and, consequently, the qualified electors of such municipality would have the power to cause the same to be referred to them for approval under the provisions of said paragraph and section. In short, I am of the opinion that such an ordinance or resolution is within paragraph one of Section two of the act. It will be noted that paragraph one of Section two does not specify any time within which an ordinance shall become effective thereunder, and I, therefore, am of the opinion that the same would become effective as prior to the passage of said act, but as the electors of the municipality have the power by referendum petition filed within thirty days after the passage or adoption of such ordinance or resolution to cause the same to be referred to them at the next general election this department would insist that the ordinance or resolution in question should remain inoperative thirty days in order to give the electors an opportunity to file a referendum petition thereon before the making of a deed thereunder, and would disregard the fact that it was endeavored to pass the ordinance or resolution as an emergency measure.

Very truly yours,
TIMOTHY S. HOGAN,
Attorney General.

SINKING FUND TRUSTEES—POWER TO INVEST MONEYS IN BONDS DOES NOT INCLUDE NOTES OF MUNICIPALITY.

Section 4514, General Code, providing for the investment by the sinking fund trustees, of moneys held by them in "bonds" of the various subdivisions, does not confer the right nor power to invest said moneys in "notes" of a municipality.

COLUMBUS, OHIO, April 19, 1912.

HON. CLYDE C. PORTER, City Solicitor, Tiffin, Ohio.

DEAR SIR:—I wish to apologize for the considerable delay which has ensued in answering your letter of February 27th. Your letter was unfortunately mislaid and did not come to light until a day or two ago.

You request my opinion as to whether or not the trustees of the sinking fund of a municipal corporation can invest the funds in notes of the municipality. Section 4514 of the General Code provides as follows:

> "The trustees of the sinking fund shall invest all moneys received by them in bonds of the United States, the state of Ohio, or of any municipal corporation, school, township or county bonds, in such state, and hold in reserve only such sums as may be needed for effecting the terms of this title. All interest received by them shall be reinvested in like manner."

Authority of a municipal corporation to issue notes as distinguished from bonds is found in Section 3915 and 3916 of the General Code which provide as follows:

> "Municipal corporations may borrow money and issue notes in anticipation of the collection of special assessments. Such notes shall be signed and sealed as municipal bonds are signed and sealed. They shall bear interest at a rate not to exceed six percent. per annum and be due and payable not later than five years from the date of issue. The notes shall not exceed in amount the estimated cost of the improvement, and shall recite upon the face the purpose for which they were issued. All assessments collected for the improvement, and all unexpended balances remaining in the fund after the costs and expenses of the improvement have been paid, shall be applied to the payment of the notes and the interest thereon until both are fully provided for. Council ordinances and proceedings relating to the issue of such notes shall not require publication.
> "Section 3916. For the purpose of extending the time of payment of any indebtedness, which from its limits of taxation the corporation is unable to pay at maturity, or when it appears to the council for the best interest of the corporation, the council thereof may issue bonds of the corporation or borrow money so as to change but not to increase the indebtedness, in such amounts, for such length of time and at such rate of interest as the council may deem proper, not to exceed six per cent. per annum, payable annually or semi-annually."

It is to be observed at the outset that bonds and notes are separately treated in the sections relating to the power of the municipality to borrow money. Unless a contrary intention appears, then it must be presumed that they are to be separately treated elsewhere in the Municipal Code and especially in sections dealing with the fiscal affairs of the municipality. So, in Section 4506, which relates to the creating of a sinking fund, it is provided that a sinking fund shall be created > "for the extinguishment of all bonds and funded debts and for the payment of all judgments final except in condemnation of property cases * * *."

So, also, in Section 4511 it is provided that the city auditor or the village clerk shall report to the trustees of the sinking fund a statement of > "the outstanding indebtedness of the corporation for bonds issued."

and Section 4513 provides that the trustees of the sinking fund shall certify to council

> "the rate of tax necessary to provide a sinking fund for the future payment of bonds issued by the corporation for the payment of final judgments, except in condemnation of property cases, for the payment of interest on bonded indebtedness, and the rents due on perpetual leaseholds, etc."

From these and other sections which I deem it unnecessary to quote, I have arrived at the conclusion that when the word "bonds" is used in the sections relating to the powers and duties of the trustees of the sinking fund, it cannot be given a meaning broad enough to include the notes issued by a municipal corporation under either of the two sections above quoted. These notes are no part of the funded indebtedness of the municipality and are distinguishable from the bonds on that ground alone.

Section 4514 itself, the one especially called in question in connection with your inquiry, may not be given a construction more liberal than that of any other section of the same chapter which are in pari materia with it, and I am, therefore, of the opinion that under said section as it now stands, the trustees of the sinking fund are without power to invest the funds in notes issued by a municipal corporation.

In so holding I have followed my predecessor, Hon. U. G. Denman, who has rendered a similar opinion. Very truly yours,

TIMOTHY S. HOGAN,
Attorney General.

CONSTITUTIONAL LAW—COURTS—ACT ESTABLISHING CANTON AND YOUNGSTOWN CRIMINAL COURTS—SPECIAL LEGISLATION—TWO SUBJECTS IN ONE BILL—TWO-THIRDS VOTE.

By virtue of Article IV, Section 4, of the Constitution, which grants special legislative powers with reference to the organization of courts, the act establishing the Canton criminal court is not violative of the constitutional prohibition against special legislation.

The fact that the amendatory act refers both to the Canton court and to the criminal court of Youngstown, does not nullify said act by virtue of the constitutional provision against the treatment of more than one subject in a single bill. Said constitutional regulation is merely directory and not mandatory.

The fact that said original act did not receive a two-thirds vote of the general assembly would prevent the passage of the law. Since, however, the amendments to said act have received the required two-thirds vote, this legislative action has the effect of a valid confirmation of the act.

COLUMBUS, OHIO, April 27, 1912.

HON. FRANK N. SWEITZER, Assistant City Solicitor, Canton, Ohio.

DEAR SIR:—I herewith enclose report rendered to me by one of my special council in reference to the constitutionality of the Canton criminal court. I have carefully considered said report, together with the briefs submitted by yourself and Hon. John C. Welty, and find said report to be in all respects correct, and, therefore, have adopted the same as my opinion. It would seem to me that there was absolutely no doubt of the legality of the establishment of the Canton criminal court. Very truly yours,

TIMOTHY S. HOGAN,
Attorney General.

(Enclosure.)

IN RE CANTON CRIMINAL COURT.

COLUMBUS, OHIO, March 20, 1912.

HON. TIMOTHY S. HOGAN, Attorney General, Columbus, Ohio.

DEAR SIR:—The question of the legality of the establishment of the Canton criminal court has been referred to me for investigation and report.

The act purporting to establish a criminal court in Canton is found in 99 Ohio Laws, page 607. The first section of this act was amended by act found in 100 Ohio Laws, 69.

It is contended that this court has not been legally established for the following reasons:

First—It is special legislation.

Second—The amendatory act in 100 Ohio Laws, 69, contained more than one subject.

Third—The act in 99 Ohio Laws, 607, did not receive two-thirds vote of the house of representatives.

I.

SPECIAL LEGISLATION.

Special legislation establishing courts was held constitutional in case of State vs. Bloch, 65 Ohio State, 370, the syllabus of which case reads:

> "The act to establish a court of insolvency in counties containing a city of the second grade of the first class and for the relief of the probate court in such counties (92 O. L., 475), and the acts conferring additional and concurrent jurisdiction on such court (93 O. L., 464, and 94 O. L., 353), are constitutional and valid."

This decision is based upon the provisions of Article I, Section 4, of the Constitution of Ohio. The court on pages 390 and 391, by Williams, J., says:

> "* * * But by Section 1, of Article IV, there is a special grant of legislative power upon a particular subject, which itself prescribes the rule for the government of the legislative body in the exercise of that power. It provides that: 'The judicial power of the state is vested in a supreme court, circuit courts, courts of common pleas, courts of probate, justices of the peace, and such other courts inferior to the supreme court, as the general assembly may from time to time establish.' The power is here undoubtedly granted to the general assembly to create courts other than those enumerated in the section; and the material inquiry is, what other courts may be so created? The answer is found in the language of the section, which is 'such' other courts 'as the general assembly may from time to time establish.' That language vests in that body full power to determine what other courts it will establish, local, if deemed proper, either for separate counties or districts, and to define their jurisdiction and powers. The only limitation placed upon the exercise of that power is that the courts so established shall be inferior to the supreme court, subject, of course, to the further qualification that no legislation can alter the judicial system established by the constitution, nor interfere with the courts designated by that instrument as the recipients of the judicial power."

The criminal court of Canton is inferior to the supreme court, and its establishment does not interfere with the courts established by the constitution. The legislature, therefore, has power to establish such courts in any city or district they may deem that such court is required.

It is contended that the foregoing case is distinguishable from the present case, in that the law in that case was of general application in that it applied to all cities of a certain class, while in the present case the act specifically names Canton and cannot apply to any other city. It is well known that the classification of cities lately in vogue in Ohio, was made so that only one of the larger cities should be contained in a certain class. The decision above was rendered at about the same time that it was held that the classification of cities for other purposes was unconstitutional.

The decision in State vs. Bloch, supra, plainly applies to the case in question. The court says that the legislature may establish local courts, if necessary, or for separate districts or counties. The act in 99 Ohio Laws, 607, is not void as being special legislation.

II.

MORE THAN ONE SUBJECT IN BILL.

It is contended that the amendatory act in 100 Ohio Laws, 69, is invalid because said act purported to amend the act in reference to the criminal court of Canton and also the act in reference to the criminal court of Youngstown.

It is well established in Ohio that the requirement of the constitution that no bill shall contain more than one subject is directory and not mandatory. Even though this provision were mandatory, the act in question deals with but one subject, and that subject is criminal courts.

In case of Pim vs. Nicholson, 6 Ohio St., 177, the first syllabus reads:

> "The provision in the constitution, Article II, Section 10, that 'no bill shall contain more than one subject, which shall be clearly expressed in its title,' was incorporated into the constitution for the purpose of making it a permanent rule of the houses, and to operate only upon bills in their progress through the general assembly. It is directory only, and the supervision of its observance must be left to the general assemby. The act, therefore, of April 10, 1856 (53 Ohio L., 179), entitled 'an act in addition to the several acts in relation to the courts of justice, and their powers and duties,' cannot be impeached as a violation, in the title or subject, of the above mentioned permanent rule of the general assembly."

The same is held in State vs. Covington, 28 Ohio St., 102; Oshe vs. State, 37 Ohio St., 494; and in Will vs. State, 46 Ohio St., 450.

In the latter case, Williams, J., says, on pages 450 and 451, of the opinion:

> "It is first suggested, rather than contended, that the act is without force, because that clause of Section 16, of Article II, of the Constitution which provides that 'no bill shall contain more than one subject, which shall be clearly expressed in its title,' has been disregarded. If it were true, that in the enactment of this statute, the legislature failed to observe the constitutional provision referred to, the statute would not, on that account, be invalid."

The amendatory act in 100 Ohio Laws, 69, is not invalid, because it contains more than one subject.

III.

TWO-THIRDS VOTE.

House Journal, Volume 99, at page 790, of the house of representatives shows that the act found in 99 Ohio Laws, 607, received only seventy-four votes when it recites:

"The question being, shall the bill pass, the yeas and nays were taken, and resulted yeas 74, nays 0, as follows:"

Here follows names of those voting for the bill, being 74 in number. One hundred and twenty-one representatives were elected to the house, and a two-thirds vote would be 81. It is apparent that this act did not receive a two-thirds vote in the house of representatives.

Section 15, Article IV, of the constitution, provides:

"The general assembly may increase, or diminish, the number of the judges of the supreme court, the number of the districts of the court of common pleas, the number of judges in any district, change the districts, or the subdivision thereof, or establish other courts, whenever two-thirds of the members elected to each house shall concur therein; but no such change, addition, or diminution, shall vacate the office of any judge."

In case of State vs. Price, 4 Cir. Dec. 296 (8 C. C., 25), it is held:

"In determining the existence of a statute, the house and senate journals may be examined, notwithstanding the act appears in the annual laws with the required certificate of the speakers of each house, and the usual certificate of the secretary of state appended to the volume."

That the journals of the senate and house may be looked to in order to determine the passage of a bill is recognized in Fordyce vs. Goodman, 20 Ohio St., 1-17; and in State vs. Smith, 44 Ohio St., 3, 348-361.

The act in 99 Ohio Laws, 607, purported to establish a criminal court for Canton. Under the constitution such an act required a two-thirds vote of the members elected to the senate and house. The journal of the house of representatives shows that the bill did not receive a two-thirds vote. The bill was not legally passed.

The fourth syllabus in case of Miller vs. State, 3 Ohio St., 475, reads:

"No bill can become a law without receiving the number of votes required by the constitution, and if it were found, by an inspection of the legislative journals, that what purports to be a law upon the statute book was not passed by the requisite number of votes, it might possibly be the duty of the courts to treat it as a nullity. * * *."

The first syllabus in case of Attorney General vs. Joy, 55 Mich., 94, reads:

"A bill that has not been passed according to the conditions prescribed by the constitution does not become a law by receiving the governor's signature or by publication among the statutes."

On page 99 Cooley, C. J., says:

"A bill considered in the legislature, but not constitutionally passed, can never become a law by its being signed by the governor and published with the statutes. That is too plain a proposition to need argument or illustration."

The act found in 99 Ohio Laws, 607, did not become a law by the signatures of the presiding officers, and by the approval of the governor and its publication in the laws of Ohio, as it did not receive the required number of votes in the house of representatives.

The next year, however, and before any steps had been taken under this act to institute the court by the election of a judge or otherwise, the first section of this act was amended as set forth in 100 Ohio Laws, 69.

The title to this amendatory act reads as follows:

> "To amend Section 1 of an act entitled, 'An act to establish a criminal court in the city of Canton, Ohio,' passed May 9, 1908, 99 Ohio Laws, pages 607 and 608 and to amend Section 1 of an act entitled 'An act to establish a criminal court in the city of Youngstown, Mahoning county, Ohio,' passed April 23, 1904, 97 Ohio Laws, page 623, and relating to the practice of law by the judges of said courts.

The first section of this act and the amended first section of the Canton criminal act, reads as follows:

> "Section 1. That Section 1, of an act entitled, 'An act to establish a criminal court in the city of Canton, Stark county, Ohio,' passed May 9, 1908, and appearing in 99 Ohio Laws, page 607, and Section 1, of an act entitled, 'An act to establish a criminal court in the city of Youngstown, Mahoning county, Ohio,' passed April 23, 1904, and appearing in 97 Ohio Laws, page 623, be and they respectively are hereby amended so as to read as follows:
> "Section 1. That there shall be, and is hereby established in the city of Canton, Stark county, a criminal court, held by a judge, which court shall be styled the criminal court and be a court of record, and shall have jurisdiction of any offense under any ordinance of the said city of Canton and of any misdemeanor committed within the limits of said city, to hear and finally determine the same and impose the prescribed penalty; but cases in which the accused is entitled to a trial by a jury, shall be so tried unless a jury be waived in writing by the accused. Provided, however, that nothing in this act contained nor in other laws of Ohio shall prevent a judge of such criminal court from practicing as an attorney and counselor at law in any other court in said state in any and all matters or business not originating or pending in said court hereby established."

This amendatory act received a two-thirds vote in each house and was thus legally passed.

It is contended that this amendatory act confirms the act in 99 Ohio Laws, 607, and carries with it the other sections not amended.

The case relied upon to sustain the contention is that of Attorney General vs. Joy, 55 Mich., 94, the fourth syllabus of which reads:

> "An act of legislation may be confirmed by the subsequent recognition of it; an express confirmation is unnecessary."

In this case the act did not receive the required two-thirds vote by one. The act had been amended and supplemented upon several occasions. The court held that the original act had been confirmed by the legislature.

On page 106, of the opinion, Cooley, C. J., says:

"But treating the questions as purely legal questions, unaffected by the considerations mentioned, we should still be of opinion that no case was made by the relator. If we concede that the act of 1855 was not constitutionally adopted, and that for that reason it was a nullity at the time, it will not follow that it has remained invalid to this time. What the legislature failed at that time to adopt in due form, it had ample power to affirm and validate afterwards if it saw fit to do so. It might have been confirmed by an act of legislation expressly declaring the intent of the legislature to that effect; but that would be only one method of confirmation. The indirect method, by recognizing and acting upon it as a valid law and inviting others to do so, might be equally effectual. The question of confirmation is not one of form, but of the expression of legislative will; and when we find the will expressed in any form of words, direct or indirect, it is sufficient."

In State vs. Cincinnati, 52 Ohio St., 419, it is held:

"An amended section of a statute takes the place of the original section, and must be construed with reference to the other sections, and they with reference to it; the whole statute, after the amendment, has the same effect as if re-enacted with the amendment, and hence, an unconstitutional statute may be amended into a constitutional one, so far as its future operation is concerned, by removing its objectionable provisions, or supplying others to confirm it to the requirements of the constitution."

The act of the legislature in passing the amendatory act in 100 Ohio Laws, 69, which was adopted by the required two-thirds vote in each house, was a confirmation and recognition of the act in 99 Ohio Laws, 607. It was an expression of the legislative will that this act should stand as a valid law, and this latter act was passed by a constitutional majority.

It is my conclusion that the criminal court of Canton is a legally established court and that it can exercise the jurisdiction and procedure prescribed in the act of 99 Ohio Laws, 607.

Respectfully,
NICHOLAS J. WEISAND,
Special Counsel.

INITIATIVE AND REFERENDUM ACT—ORDINANCE PROVIDING FOR REFUNDING INDEBTEDNESS—"EMERGENCY"—SIXTY-DAY IN-OPERATION AND SUSPENSION OF EFFECT.

An ordinance providing for the refunding of an existing indebtedness of a municipality is not within paragraph 2, of Section 2, of the initiative and referendum act, requiring certain ordinances to remain ineffective for sixty days.

As such an ordinance, however, is an exercise of a power delegated to a municipality, it is within paragraph 1, of Section 2, of the said act, and is subject to a referendum petition within thirty days. As it is not provided otherwise, the ordinance shall take effect as prior to the act.

By provision of Section 3, of the act, this ordinance, if its nature justifies the same, may, within its terms, be declared an "Emergency" measure within the meaning of this section, and be permitted thereby to go into effect immediately.

COLUMBUS, OHIO, April 15, 1912.

HON. A. J. LAYNE, City Solicitor, Ironton, Ohio.

DEAR SIR:—Under date of March 9th you wrote me as follows:

> "The question has arisen relative to whether an ordinance providing for the refunding of bonds comes under the referendum law, requiring sixty days to elapse before the ordinance goes into effect. As this ordinance does not provide for the expenditure of money, it is our opinion that if the ordinance provides specifically that this is an emergency measure that ten days is sufficient for the publication of the ordinance. In view of the fact that a difference of opinion on this question might interfere with the sale of the bonds, we would like to have your opinion on this matter before passing the ordinance."

Section 3916, General Code, provides as follows:

> "For the purpose of extending the time of payment of any indebtedness, which from its limits of taxation the corporation is unable to pay at maturity, or when it appears to the council for the best interest of the corporation, the council thereof may issue bonds of the corporation or borrow money so as to change but not to increase the indebtedness, in such amounts, for such length of time and at such rate of interest as the council deems proper, not to exceed six per cent. per annum, payable annually or semi-annually."

Section 3917, General Code, provides as follows:

> "No indebtedness of such municipal corporation shall be funded, refunded, or extended, unless it shall first be determined to be an existing valid and binding obligation of the corporation by a formal resolution of the council thereof. Such resolution shall also state the amount of the existing indebtedness to be funded, refunded or extended, the aggregate amount of bonds to be issued therefor, their number and denomination, the date of maturity, the rate of interest they shall bear and the place of payment of principal and interest."

The first paragraph of Section 2, of the initiative and referendum act, 102 Ohio Laws, 521, known as Section 4227-2, General Code, provides in part as follows:

> "Any ordinance * * * of a municipal corporation granting, a franchise creating a right, involving the expenditure of money or exercising any other power delegated to such municipal corporation by the general assembly, shall be submitted to the qualified electors for their approval or rejection in the manner herein provided, if within thirty days after the passage or adoption of such ordinance * * * by the council, there be filed with the clerk of such municipal corporation, a petition * * *."

The second paragraph provides:

> "No * * * ordinance * * * of any municipal corporation, creating a right, involving the expenditure of money, granting a franchise, conferring, extending or renewing a right to use of the streets, or regulating the use of the streets for water * * * shall become effective in less than sixty days after its passage."

Section 3, of the initiative and referendum act, provides as follows:

> "All other acts of city council not included among those specified in Section 2, of this act, shall also remain inoperative for sixty days after their passage and may be submitted to popular vote in the manner herein provided, except that any act, not included within those specified in Section 2, of this act, as remaining inoperative for sixty days and which is declared to be an emergency measure and receiving a three-fourths majority in council of such municipal corporation may go into effect immediately and remain in effect until repealed by city council or by direct vote of the people as herein provided."

By a consideration of Section 3916, General Code, supra., it will be seen that the purpose of a refunding bond is to extend the time of payment of any indebtedness, or change the indebtedness, but that it is specifically provided that such indebtedness shall not be increased. I am, therefore, of the opinion that an ordinance providing for the refunding of bonds can in no sense be considered as an ordinance involving the expenditure of money as such term is used in the initiative and referendum act for the reason that such bonds are to take care of an existing, valid and binding obligation of the corporation theretofore incurred. Such an ordinance would not, therefore, be within paragraph 2, of Section 2 of said act as it would not come within any of the other classifications contained in said paragraph 2 of said Section 2.

Paragraph 1, of Section 2, of said act, provides that an ordinance "exercising any other power delegated to such municipal corporation by the general assembly." The power to fund or refund the indebtedness of a corporation is a power specifically delegated by Section 3916 General Code, supra., by the general assembly to a municipal corporation, and I am, therefore, of the opinion that an ordinance providing for the refunding of bonds would come within the first paragraph of said Section 2.

Upon an examination of said Section 2 of said act, it will be seen that there is no provision when the ordinances coming within said section and not coming within the second paragraph of said act shall go into effect, and although it provides that a referendum petition may be filed within thirty days after the passage thereof, yet I am of the opinion that such an ordinance would go into effect in the same manner as it would prior to the passage of the initiative and referendum act, subject, however, to be suspended in its operation upon the filing of a referendum petition within the required thirty days.

Section 3, of the initiative and referendum act, foregoing set forth, states that "all other acts not included among those specified in Section 2, shall remain inoperative for sixty days after passage, except that any act not included within those specified in Section 2 as remaining inoperative for sixty days and declared to be an emergency measure, and receiving a three-fourths majority in council, may go into effect immediately and remain in effect until repealed.

I am unable from your inquiry to determine whether or not there is any emergency, as the same is understood in law which could exist for the passage of an ordinance for the refunding of bonds.

An emergency has been defined as follows:

"Emergency" is defined by the Century Dictionary as follows:

> "A sudden or unexpected happening; an unforeseen occurrence or condition; specifically, a perplexing contingency or complication of circumstances."

Again,

> "A sudden or unexpected occasion for action; exigency; pressing necessity."

Again,

> "Something not calculated upon; an unexpected gain."

"Emergency" is defined by Webster to be:

> "A condition of things happening suddenly or unexpectedly; an unforeseen occurrence; a sudden occasion."

Again,

> "Any event or occasional combination of circumstance which calls for immediate action or remedy; pressing necessity; exigency."

I have heretofore stated in an opinion that I do not believe that council can declare an act to be an emergency measure which could not be considered under the definition of "emergency" to be such.

If, however, an ordinance providing for the refunding of bonds could under the definition of "emergency" be considered as an emergency measure, it would be well to have the same so declared in such ordinance and the same could then go into effect, as it would have prior to the passage of the initiative and referendum act and remain in effect until repealed by council or by direct vote of the people.

Very truly yours,

TIMOTHY S. HOGAN,
Attorney General.

ORDINANCE FOR SEWER IMPROVEMENT—RESOLUTION OF NECESSITY UNNECESSARY WHERE ALL COSTS ARE PAID BY CITY—VOTE OF ELECTORS ON CONTRACT WITH PRIVATE WATER COMPANY.

A city ordinance declaring it necessary and determining to proceed with a storm water sewer, and providing for the payment of the cost thereof by the city, is valid, the resolution of necessity not being required in such sewer improvements except where part of the cost of the improvements is paid by assessment on property holders.

Under Section 3981, General Code, a contract entered into between a city and a water company for a supply of water to the city and its citizens, must be submitted to a vote of the electors of the city.

COLUMBUS, OHIO, May 8, 1912.

HON. MARSHALL G. FENTON, City Solicitor, Chillicothe, Ohio.

DEAR SIR:—I beg to acknowledge receipt of your letter of April 3d, enclosing copy of Ordinance No. 345, N. S., of the city of Chillicothe, which is in part as follows:

"AN ORDINANCE.

"Declaring it necessary and determining to proceed with the construction of a storm water sewer in Eighth and Ninth streets from the Honey Creek sewer in Caldwell street to Mulberry street, in Mulberry street from Ninth to Tenth street.

"Be it ordained, by the city council of the city of Chillicothe, Ohio, three-fourths of the members elected thereto concuring:

"SECTION 1. That it is necessary to improve Eight and Ninth streets from the Honey Creek sewer in Caldwell street to Mulberry street, and Mulberry street from Ninth to Tenth street by constructing therein a storm water sewer, together with all the necessary catch basins, manholes, etc., and that it is hereby determined to proceed with the construction of said storm water sewer in accordance with the plans adopted by council, October 10, 1911, and now on file in the office of the auditor of said city, which specifications are hereby approved, and of the materials set forth in the following approximate estimate of the proposed improvement:

"* * * * * * * * * * * * * *

"SECTION 2. That the whole cost of said improvement, including the cost of any real estate or interest therein, purchased or appropriated, and the cost of any appropriation proceedings therefor, and the damages awarded any owner of adjoining lands and interest therein, and the cost and expense of any such award, the cost of construction and all other necessary expenses shall be paid by the city of Chillicothe, state of Ohio, out of the proceeds of the sale of bonds to be issued by the said city for such purpose in the manner provided by law.

"SECTION 3. That the director of public service be and hereby is authorized and directed to make and execute a contract for said improvement with the lowest and best bidder after advertisement, according to law.

"SECTION 4. That the clerk be and he is hereby directed to cause this ordinance to be published in the manner provided by law."

You call my attention to the fact that the resolution of necessity and the ordinance determining to proceed are attempted to be included in the same act of council. You submit thereon the following question:

"1. Is the above ordinance valid as a whole?
"2. Is it valid as a resolution of necessity?"

You also submit the following independent question:

"Must a contract, entered into between a city and a private company for a supply of water to the city and its citizens, be submitted to a vote of the electors of the city?"

Your first question is somewhat novel; it is made so by the provisions of Section 2, of the ordinance, which is to the general effect that the entire cost of the proposed improvement shall be paid by the city of Chillicothe, no part thereof being assessed either upon the owners of abutting property or upon those of specially benefited property, or property lying within the bounds of any sewer district of the city. This fact becomes of importance in connection with Section 3814 and succeeding sections of the General Code. I quote such portions of these sections as are necessary to illustrate the point I have in mind.

"Sec. 3814. When it is deemed necessary by a municipal corporation to make a public improvement to be paid for in whole or in part by special assessments, council shall declare the necessity thereof * * *."

Sec. 3816, which provides for having on file, in the office of the director of public service, the plans and specifications, etc., of the proposed improvement, is qualified by the introductory clause "At the time of the passage of such resolution;" so that the remainder of the section only applies to cases covered by Section 3814.

Section 3823 provides in part as follows:

"An owner of a lot, or of land, bounding or abutting upon a proposed improvement, claiming that he will sustain damages by reason of the improvement, within two weeks after the service of the notice or the completion of the publication thereof, shall file a claim in writing with the clerk of the council, setting forth the amount of the damages claimed, with a general description of the property with respect to which it is claimed the injury will accrue. * * *"

It must be noted here that this section applies to all "proposed improvements," and not merely to those to be paid for in part by assessments.

Section 3825 provides for what is familiarly known as the ordinance determining to proceed. It is as follows:

"If the council decides to proceed with the improvement, an ordinance for the purpose shall be passed. Such ordinance shall set forth specifically the lots and lands to be assessed for the improvement, shall contain a statement of the general nature of that may be bid upon therefor, the mode of payment therefor, a reference to the resolution there-tofore passed for such improvement with date of its passage, and a statement of the intention of council to proceed therewith in accordance with such resolution and in accordance with the plans, specifications, estimates and profiles provided for such improvement."

The chief office of this ordinance, as is apparent upon its face, is to furnish the necessary directions to the administrative officers of the city government; the rights of the public are not intended to be safeguarded by it; it notifies the treasurer as to his duty with respect to the collection of the assessment; and it notifies the director of public service as to his duty with respect to the terms of the contract for the improvement. It is made clear by Section 3824 that the council may determine to proceed with an improvement without determining the extent of the damages. That section is as follows:

"At the expiration of the time limited for so filing claims for damages, the council shall determine whether it will proceed with the proposed improvement or not, and whether the claims for damages so filed shall be judicially inquired into, as hereinafter provided, before commencing, or after the completion of the proposed improvements."

The procedure for carrying this section into effect is found in Section 3829, which I do not quote.

Section 3833 provides as follows:

"The contract for any such improvement shall be let by the director of public service, in the same manner as other contracts, and in case all bids be rejected, such director in cities and the council in villages may order a readvertisement for bids."

There might be some doubt, in view of the facts to which I have called attention, as to the application of this section to all improvements. This point is immaterial, however, in view of the statutes relating to the general powers and duties of the council and the director of public service, respectively, with respect to the making of contracts. I need not quote these sections.

Coming now to the more specific provisions relating to sewers, it is to be observed that Sections 3871, et seq., General Code, relate generally to the construction of sewers by sewer districts, according to a system devised by the engineer. The ordinance does not disclose, on its face, that the proposed proceeding is in accordance with a plan of sewerage which has been prepared; if it is, then, of course, it is governed by Sections 3878 and 3879, General Code, which require the passage of a resolution of necessity and a separate ordinance determining to proceed as in other cases, whenever the council deems it necessary to construct a part of the sewer provided for in the plan.

If this proceeding is independent of any plan but is, as it seems to be, an ordinance providing for the construction of a single storm water sewer, then I am of the opinion that the sections last above cited do not apply.

Section 3882 is of particular interest in connection with this question; it provides as follows:

"If in its opinion expedient, the council may provide for the construction of main drains and branch drains connecting therewith without previously adopting any plan of sewerage or division of the territory of the municipal corporation or any part thereof, into districts, and may assess the cost and expense thereof upon such lots or lands as shall be designated in the ordinance to improve, or they may be paid from the sewer fund, or by the municipal corporation at large, as council determines, and such proceedings shall be had in respect to such improvements and assessments as are provided for herein for the construction of main or branch sewers according to a previously adopted plan."

The real problem presented by your first question arises out of the language of Section 3882. The question is as to whether or not this section, in enacting that "such proceedings shall be had in respect to such improvements and assessments as are provided for herein for the construction of main or branch sewers, according to a previously adopted plan," intends to make necessary the same proceedings when no assessment is to be made as when a part of the cost of the improvement is to be assessed upon specially benefited property. Under Section 3814 and succeeding sections, it has been held, in the case of The East End Banking and Trust Company vs. The City of Cleveland, 1 N. P., n. s. 493, affirmed by the supreme court without report, that the passing of a separate resolution of necessity an ordinance determining to proceed is not necessary where the whole cost of the improvement is to be borne by the municipal corporation. Lawrence, J., delivering the opinion of the common pleas court, points out that under former statutes, existing prior to the adoption of the Municipal Code of 1902, all municipal improvements were required to be made in this way; i. e., by the passage of a resolution of necessity and the adoption of an ordinance determining to proceed. Since that time, however, the provisions, as construed by the judge, are held applicable only to cases in which the improvement is to be paid for in whole or in part by special assessments. The exact question arose out of a controversy as to whether or not a property owner who failed to present his claim for damages within two weeks after the service of the notice or the completion of the publication thereof as prescribed in present Section 3823, General Code, was barred from asserting such a claim. The court held that he was not so barred because Section 3823, then Section 54, Municipal Code, in common with all the statutes in pari materia, related solely to the making of public improvements to be paid for in part by assessment.

Does, then, this reasoning, which seems to me to be absolutely correct, apply to Section 3882? That section, in common with the other sections which are quoted in this opinion, is found in the chapter which purports to relate to "assessments;" yet, in specific terms, it applies to the construction of drains which may be paid for by the municipal corporation at large, and requires that such improvement shall be made by following such proceedings as are prescribed for the construction of sewers, according to a previously adopted plan.

Careful analysis of Section 3882 is necessary in order to determine whether or not the rule of construction to which the other sections of the chapter are subject is to be applied to it. On the other hand, the considerations already mentioned seem to lead to the conclusion that although a branch sewer is being constructed without assessment, the procedure of making assessments must be followed. However, it does not seem reasonable that the general assembly should have intended that a paving improvement or a grade crossing elimination, or any other of the improvements, might be constructed by the city without going through with all the formalities incident to the making of an assessment; and yet, if a sewer is to be laid without assessment, these very formalities must be observed; that is to say, there does not seem to be any logical reason for making a special exception with respect to the construction of sewers.

It is possible to construe Section 3882, without doing any violence to its language, so as to make the last clause thereof applicable only to cases in which assessments are to be made; that clause provides that "such proceedings shall be had in respect to such improvements and assessments as are provided for herein for the construction of main or branch sewers, according to a previously adopted plan." Now, the construction of sewers according to a previously adopted plan might be made in one of two ways; the sections relating to such plan provide, it is true, for the making of assessments by sewer districts, but there is nothing to prevent a municipal corporation from constructing a sewerage system according to a previously adopted plan without assessing any part of the cost thereof upon specially benefited property. Sanitation and sewage disposal are matters of public interest, not mere private services, and there is no reason whatever, as far as I am able to ascertain, why a municipal corporation should be deemed obliged to assess any portion of the cost of construction of any sewer against any property.

It follows from all this that when the legislature required that the same proceedings should be had in the case of the construction of a single sewer without assessment as provided for in the case of the construction of sewers according to a previously adopted plan, it might well have had in mind the possibility of the construction of a sewerage system without assessment.

To what end this reasoning might lead is perhaps immaterial in consideration of this question. In my opinion, whether or not all the procedure of assessment is, by reason of the peculiar language of the related statutes, necessary, in strict law, in the case of the construction of a sewer to be paid for by the city, the failure to pass a separate resolution of necessity and an ordinance determining to proceed is not fatal to any step of the procedure in such case. The sole office of the resolution of necessity is to afford to property owners, who will be damaged by the proposed improvement, opportunity to file their claims of damage. If notice were served under the ordinance which you present to me, and if the same was published as required by law for the resolution of necessity, each owner of property is duly charged with notice in the premises; inasmuch as there is no assessment to be made, such a claim for damages may be asserted against the municipal corporation at any time, and the sole question would be that raised in the Cleveland case, namely, as to whether or not the limitation of two weeks, within which to file claims for damages, would apply.

There are no property owners to be notified of the city's intention to assess their lands, because no assessment is to be made.

Waiving, then, the technical question which might be raised, I am of the opinion that the ordinance above quoted affords legal ground and sufficient authority to the director of public service to proceed with the improvement, and does not deprive any property owner, who may suffer special damage by reason of such improvement, of an opportunity to have the matter of his damages adjudicated as guaranteed by the constitution.

I have, as you will observe, answered both of your first two questions in the foregoing discussion, not categorically, it is true, but sufficiently, I think, for your purpose.

Coming now to your third question, I beg to advise that it is expressly provided by Section 3981, of the General Code that > "A municipal corporation may contract with any individual or individuals or an incorporated company for supplying water for fire purposes, or for cisterns, reservoirs, streets, squares and other public places within the corporate limits, or for the purpose of supplying the citizens of such municipal corporation with water for such time, and upon such terms as may be agreed upon. But such contract shall not be executed or binding upon the municipal corporation until it has been ratified by a vote of the electors thereof, at a special or general election, and the municipal corporation shall have the same power to protect such water supply and prevent the pollution thereof as though the waterworks were owned by such municipal corporation."

There seems to be no question as to the meaning of this section; it clearly requires that contracts, such as that concerning which you inquire, must be submitted to a vote of the electors.

Very truly yours,
TIMOTHY S. HOGAN.
Attorney General.

PUBLICATION OF ORDINANCES—ASSESSING ORDINANCE—"GENERAL NATURE" AND "PROVIDING FOR AN IMPROVEMENT."

An assessing ordinance is not an ordinance of a "general nature" nor is it an ordinance "providing for an improvement" within the meaning of Section 4227, General Code, providing for the publication of such ordinances.

The fact that such ordinance had not been published would not prove an obstacle in an action for the collection of an assessment.

COLUMBUS, OHIO, April 24, 1912.

HON. F. G. LONG, City Solicitor, Bellefontaine, Ohio.

DEAR SIR:—Under date of February 1, 1912, you stated you desired my opinion as to whether or not an assessing ordinance must be published before becoming effective.

Section 4227, General Code, provides that ordinances of a general nature or providing for improvement shall be published before going into operation, and that no ordinance shall take effect until the expiration of ten days after the first publication of such notice.

The question arises, therefore, as to whether or not an assessing ordinance is:

(a) An ordinance of a general nature;

(b) An ordinance providing for improvement.

A. An assessment for street purposes has been defined:

> "As those special and local impositions upon property in the immediate vicinity of an improved street, which were necessary to pay for the improvement, and laid with reference to the special benefit derived from the expenditure of the money.
> "Hill vs. Higdon 5 O. S. 243,-247 cited with approval in Raymond vs. Cleveland 42 O. S. 522-527."

Since it has been determined that an assessing ordinance is purely a special and local imposition upon property, I am of opinion that such an ordinance cannot be considered as an ordinance of a general nature.

B. The next question to be determined is whether or not such an ordinance is one providing for improvement.

My predecessor, the Hon. U. G. Denman rendered an opinion under date of February 13, 1909, wherein he states:

> "I am of the opinion that the assessing ordinance is an ordinance 'providing for improvements' within the meaning of the statute as quoted above. The improvement is not provided for when the resolution declaring the necessity, and the ordinance determining to proceed with the improvement, are passed, but since the improvement is to be paid for by special assessments upon abutting or benefited properties, it is > further necessary to, pass another ordinance to make such assessments, and thereby provide for the payment of the cost and expense of making the improvement."

This opinion proceeds upon the basis that the provision of statute that an ordinance providing for improvements shall be published means not only such ordinance as provide or authorize the improvement but likewise the payment for such improvement. In other words, this ruling extends the meaning of the words "providing for" to include everything necessary not only to fully authorize the improvement, but such other ordinances as are necessary to be passed in order to create the funds necessary for the payment thereof.

In my opinion this is entirely too broad a meaning to be given to the words "providing for." As I view the meaning of such words it is only such ordinances as are necessary to provide for the making of the improvement that are required to be published.

In the case of Kohler Brick Co., City of Toledo, 10 C. C. n. s. 137 the contention was made that the assessment ordinances in such case was not published as required by Revised Statutes 1695 (1536-621 R. S.) which contained the same provision as Section 4227, General Code, for the reason that it was not all published. Said ordinance referred to a report of the assessors, and it was urged that the report was thereby made a part of the ordinance, and should have been published with it which was not done. The court on p. 417 says:

> "But we are of the opinion that it was not necessary to publish this ordinance at all; so that we need not pass upon the question whether the schedule was made a part of the ordinance so that in case the publication of any part of it was required, the schedule should be published with it.
> "Revised Statute 1695 (Sec. 536-621) requires that:
> "'Ordinances of a general nature or providing for improvements shall be published in some newspaper of general circulation in the corporation.'
> "This ordinance was not an ordinance providing for an improvement; the improvement had been provided for; and it was not an ordinance of a general nature, but was of a special nature."

As I view the matter the ruling of the circuit court in the above case is the better one and I, therefore, hold that an assessing ordinance is not required to be published.

You ask for my opinion as to whether the collection of an assessment could be enforced if it was necessary to bring an action for the same if the assessing ordinance is not published. Having determined that the assessing ordinance does not require publication under the statute, I am of the opinion that the fact that the assessing ordinance is not published will not militate against the collection of an assessment if it is necessary to bring an action for the same.

Very truly yours,

TIMOTHY S. HOGAN,
Attorney General.

"NEWSPAPERS OF GENERAL CIRCULATION"—PUBLICATION OF ORDINANCES AND RESOLUTIONS.

Whether or not a newspaper is of "general circulation" as intended by Sections 4228 and 4229, General Code, pertaining to publications of ordinances, resolutions, etc., is a question of fact.

The following elements, however, are essential:

1. The circulation must not be confined to a particular class, but must have a substantial circulation outside of said class.

2. The circulation must not be confined to a particular territory but must reach substantially all parts of the city.

The paper must contain general news but may be primarily devoted to special legal, scientific or religious topics.

Under these rules, it is possible that a newspaper with a paid up subscription of three hundred and forty, may be considered a newspaper of general circulation in a city with a population of 5,732, provided all elements are present.

COLUMBUS, OHIO, April 15, 1912.

HON. HARRY F. WITTENBRINK, City Solicitor, St. Marys, Ohio.

DEAR SIR:—Under date of January 23rd you call my attention to Section 4228-4229, General Code, which provides for the publication of ordinances and resolutions requiring publication in two newspapers of opposite politics "of general circulation."

You desire our opinion as to what should be the subscription list of a newspaper published in a city of 5732 population so as to be classed as a newspaper of general circulataion. As you state in your letter this is a question of fact and a matter to be determined by the jury, but that you desire some expression of opinion from this office of the subject.

Under date of February 2nd you restate your question as:

> "Can a newspaper with a paid up subcription of 340 be considered a newspaper of general circulation in a city with a population of 5,732, as is the case in St. Marys, Ohio."

It would be impossible for me to lay down any hard and fast rule in reference to the matter as it is one concerning which there can be a wide difference of opinion. The term "general circulation," as it appears to me, refers to two things:

(1) That the circulation must not be confined to a particular class;

(2) That it must not be confined to a particular territory within the municipality.

The great trend of authorities seems to be that a newspaper, as ordinarily understood, is a publication which contains what is called the general current news of the day, but that it is not essential that it be devoted exclusively to the dissemination of news of a general character and may be one devoted primarily to the discussion of religious, legal or scientific topics.

When we come, however, to a consideration of the term "general circulation," having determined that the publication in question is a newspaper, it would seem to me that if such publication were one devoted primarily to discussion of religious, legal, commercial or scientific topics it is necessary that such newspaper shall circulate beyond the particular class for which it is intended. Various cases have held that a newspaper devoted primarily to legal news but containing general current news of the day is a newspaper of general circulation when it is shown that it circulates not only among lawyers, but business men, brokers and bankers as well, I do not undertake to say how great a circulation such newspaper should have outside of the particular class, but it should be a substantial circulation.

Second. It seems to me that a newpaper in order to be considered of general circulation would have to circulate in the municipality generally. I do not mean by that that it must have readers in each and every block in the city, or that it must circulate even in every part of the city, but it must circulate so generally as to reach substantially all parts of the city.

In your inquiry you state that the newspaper in question has 340 paid up subscriptions in a city with a population of 5,732.

If the newspaper in question circulates solely in one single portion of the municipality although it has 340 paid up subscribers I would not personally consider it as a newspaper of general circulation. If, however, the subscription list would disclose that it went into the various sections of the city I would consider, provided the other elements are present, that it was a newspaper of general circulation.

While I am well aware that what I have said establishes no definite and positive rule to guide you, yet it is solely a matter of fact and is one concerning which the legislature has not seen fit to determine by positive provision of law, I am unable to give you a more definite rule to follow.

I would call your attention to the case of state ex rel, Sentinel Co., vs. Wood Co. 33 O. C. C. 93 (Comrs.) wherein the court considered the question of what under the provisions of Section 2508 would be considered "general circulation" for a newspaper.

The third branch of the syllabus of said case is as follows:

> "A newspaper having a circulation of about 800 subscribers in a county of about 50,000 inhabitants, in fifteen of the twenty townships of which it had a circulation of thirty-six subscribers out of a population of 35,000 or more, and the remainder of its circulation being in a part of the county containing the other five townships, is a paper of general circulation within the meaning of General Code 2508."

This case was affirmed without report by the supreme court in the case of State vs. Sockman, 84 O. S. 447.

It would seem, therefore, that the supreme court of Ohio in affirming the circuit court has established the rule that a newspaper is of general circulation although said paper does not circulate in all parts of the particular district and in a greater part thereof has but an insignificant circulation, the major portion of the circulation of such newspaper being in but a small portion of such district.

Very truly yours,
TIMOTHY S. HOGAN,
Attorney General.

RIPARIAN RIGHTS—LAKE ERIE AND CITY OF CLEVELAND— HARBOR LINE AND BREAKWATER ESTABLISHMENT—RIGHTS OF STATE, FEDERAL GOVERNMENT, CITY AND SHORE OWNERS.

The circuit court in the decision of White vs. City of Cleveland has recognized the right of the riparian owner to fill in and reclaim land from his shore line to the point of navigability as established by the state or by the national government in its regulation of interstate commerce, until such time as this right may be taken away by the state.

When land is so filled in and reclaimed, the title to the made lands is identical with and subject to the same rights and burdens as the title to the uplands. The state therefore, has only such rights of reference to the made lands as it could have exercised with reference to the former shore lands.

The following plans are submitted for an opinion with respect to their legality:

1. By the river and harbor commission of Cleveland;

To construct an island within the harbor as limited by the breakwater constructed by the U. S. government.

2. By the river and harbor committee of the Cleveland chamber of commerce:

By agreement of all parties concerned, to connect made land with the shore land reserving a right of way for public purposes.

Section 10 of the act of Congress of March 3, 1899, 30 Statutes at Large, 1121-1151 provides that no obstruction not affirmatively authorized by congress to the navigable capacity of any waters of the United States shall be made; and further forbids the building of any obstruction outside of harbor lines or where no harbor lines have been established, except upon plans recommended by the chief of engineers and authorized by the secretary of war; and also forbids interference with the course or capacity of the waters within the limits of any breakwater unless a recommendation has been made by the chief of engineers and authorization made by the secretary of war.

The United States in this case has established a breakwater but has not as yet established a harbor line.

The above statute has been construed however, to leave the right to the states and local authorities to pass such legislation as does not conflict with the U. S. legislation therein laid down, and therefore to leave to such authorities, the exclusive right to regulate obstructions within the U. S. harbor line and to determine to what extent lands may be filled in and new lands made so long as such determinations do not conflict with acts of congress upon the same subject.

As to the island plan:

Where an island springs up of itself or arises from natural causes, title to the same accrues to the submerged lands and not to the shore lands.

A shore owner is subject to both gains and losses which occur to his land by reason of natural causes. When artificial interference is made with his riparian rights however, he must be compensaated for losses occasioned thereby, to these rights of wharfage, egress to navigation, fishing facilities, etc.

Said island with the consent of federal and state authorities, may therefore, be constructed subject to these rules, the best plan seeming to be that of having the federal government establish the harbor line at a convenient place, outside of which with the consent of the federal and state officials, the island could be constructed.

As to the second plan:

The state has control of the harbor within the harbor line and subject to the riparian rights of the shore owner may regulate the filling in of land, and the right of the state to lay out roads and rights of way over submerged lands is well established. There can be no objections to proceedings to which all parties agree. Until these plans have been effected, all encroachment upon the harbor should be opposed by the city.

COLUMBUS, OHIO, April 16, 1912.

HON. E. K. WILCOX, City Solicitor, Cleveland, Ohio.

DEAR SIR:—Your favor of February 9, 1912, is received in which you state as follows:

> "I am pleased to refer to a communication addressed to you by Mr. R. E. Collins, clerk, and enclosing a certified copy of resolution No. 23660, adopted by the council of the city of Cleveland, and I would greatly appreciate your opinion as therein requested."

The resolution referred to reads:

> "WHEREAS, the attorney general, in an opinion rendered some time ago, said that the title to the submerged lands near the shores of Lake Erie is in the state of Ohio, and that it is competent for the state to make such disposition of such lands as the public interest requires; and
> "WHEREAS, the Pennsylvania company has filled in over the submerged lands in front of its premises on the lake shore, and in the city of Cleveland, and between the shore line and the harbor line, as established by the national government; therefore, be it
> "Resolved by the council of the city of Cleveland, state of Ohio, that the attorney general be requested to report to the council his opinion, as to what rights the state of Ohio has or may now exercise with reference to the made lands over such submerged lands; be it further
> "Resolved, that the clerk be and he is hereby directed to forward to the attorney general a certified copy of this resolution."

Under date of November 1, 1911, in an opinion rendered by this department to the state board of public works it was held as follows:

> "While the authorities and text writers do not agree upon the right of the riparian owner to reclaim the submerged lands, the weight of authority is that the riparian owner has a right to fill in and reclaim the submerged lands, so long as he does not interfere with the rights of the public to use the waters for navigation; that this right is a license or franchise, revocable at the will of the legislature, but when the license has been exercised by filling in, the right is irrevocable.
> "The title to the made or reclaimed land attaches to the owner of the uplands.
> "In many states this is a subject of legislative control and the rights of the riparian owners are governed by statute."

Since rendering the above opinion the circuit court of Cuyahoga county has passed upon this question.

The first syllabus in case of White vs. City of Cleveland, 14 Cir. Ct. N. S., 369 (Ohio Law Rep. December 25, 1911), reads:

> "The city of Cleveland having, in 1872, appropriated for park purposes certain lands bordering on Lake Erie, thereby acquired an easement for park purposes in the shore and the riparian rights appurtenant thereto, which include the right to wharf out and make land to the limit of navigability unless prevented by the state; having made land without interference by the state, the made land is affected by the same easement for park purposes with which the shore lands are affected, as are also any piers built out in front of the made land."

This decision is a recognition of the right of a riparian owner to fill in and reclaim land from his shore line to the point of navigability as may be established by the state or by the national government in the regulation of commerce, unless such filling in of land is prevented by the state. It is also a recognition that the title to the made land attaches to, and is the same as, the title to the upland. If the owner of the upland has a title in fee simple, he takes a title in fee simple to the made or reclaimed land. In other words the title to the made land is the same and is subject to the same burdens as the title to the uplands.

This is the rule of title in those states which recognize the right of the riparian owner to build out and reclaim the submerged lands. In the states which do not recognize that right, the title remains in the state or in its grantee.

In case of Nieney vs. Nolan, 67 A., 1008, (Sup. Ct. of New Jersey, 1907), it is held:

> "Under the common law, if the owner of land bounded by the shore upon tide waters make improvements upon or reclaim the shore adjoining his lands, the part of the shore so improved or reclaimed belongs to him, and cannot be granted by the state."

In case of Sioux City vs. Chicago and Northwestern Railway Co., 129 Iowa 694, it is held:

> "The title to accreted or reclaimed land goes with the fee to which it is annexed."

Some of the cases cited in the opinion of November 1, 1911, hold to the same effect.

The case of White vs. City of Cleveland, 14 C. C. N. S. 369, supra, which is the only authority I find in Ohio directly upon this subject, has been taken on error to the supreme court of Ohio, and its decision is awaited with interest. In that case it is urged by the city of Cleveland that the title to the made land remains in the state, unless authority has been given by the state to reclaim such land. This contention, however, was not sustained by the circuit court and we can only await the decision of the supreme court for a final settlement of this question.

If the supreme court sustains the decision of the circuit court on this point, it will determine that the title to the made land attaches to the title in the uplands.

The decision of the circuit court, however, now stands as the highest authority on the question, and following that opinion, the title to the reclaimed or made land attaches to the title in the upland and the state can exercise only that authority over the made land which it can and does exercise over the uplands. This authority is that of a sovereign only. All other rights which the state had in the submerged lands, were divested by the exercise, by the riparian owner, of his license to fill in and reclaim the submerged lands.

In addition to the foregoing request for an opinion, two plans for the improvement of the harbor at Cleveland have been submitted.

The first, by the river and harbor commission of Cleveland, which involves the construction of an island within the harbor as limited by the breakwater constructed by the United States government.

The second, proposed by the river and harbor committee of the Cleveland chamber of commerce, which proposes by agreement with all the parties concerned to connect the made land with the shore land, and reserving a right of way over the same to be used for public purposes.

This department can only pass upon the legal principles involved in these proposed plans. It cannot pass upon the desirability of either plan. That must be 'worked out by those primarily interested in the question and are better able to determine the various conditions which present themselves.

The United States government has built a breakwater at great expense for the harbor and is about to establish a harbor line.

The following questions arise:

Does the fixing of a harbor line by the federal government, authorize the building of wharves, or docks and the filling in and making of land out of that line?

What is the extent of the jurisdiction of the state over the part of the harbor within the established harbor line?

What is the extent of the power of the legislature to regulate the filling in or reclaiming of submerged lands?

The title to an island constructed upon submerged lands in Lake Erie.

The United States government has full power to establish harbor lines under its constitutional grant to regulate interstate and foreign commerce.

Section ten of the act of congress of March 3, 1899, 30 Stat. at Large 1121, 1151, provides:

> "That the creation of any obstruction not affirmatively authorized by congress, to the navigable capacity of any of the waters of the United States is hereby prohibited; and it shall not be lawful to build or commence the building of any wharf, pier, dolphin, boom, wier, breakwater, bulkhead, jetty, or other structures in any port, roadstead, haven, harbor, canal, navigable river, or other water of the United States, outside established harbor lines, or where no harbor lines have been established, except on plans recommended by the chief of engineers and authorized by the secretary of war; and it shall not be lawful to excavate or fill, or in any manner to alter or modify the course, location, condition, or capacity of any port, roadstead, haven, harbor, canal, lake, harbor of refuge, or inclosure within the limits of any breakwater, or of the channel of any navigable water of the United States, unless the work has been recommended by the chief of engineers and authorized by the secretary of war prior to beginning the same."

This act superseded an act of September 19, 1890, which contained provisions substantially the same as in the above section.

The act of 1890 has been construed by the supreme court of the United States as to obstructions in navigable waters lying wholly within a state.

In case of Montgomery vs. Portland, 190 U. S. 89, it is held:

> "While Section 12 of the act of Congress of September 19, 1890, forbade the construction or extension of piers, wharves, bulkheads, or other works, beyond the harbor lines established under the direction of the secretary of war in navigable waters of the United States, 'except under such regulations as may be prescribed from time to time by him' it does not follow that congress intended in such matters to disregard altogether the wishes of the local authorities. Under existing enactments the right of private persons to erect structures in a navigable water of the United States, that is entirely within the limits of a state, is not complete and absolute without the concurrent or joint assent of both the federal government and the state government."

Harlan, J., on page 106, says:

"While Section 12 of the act of 1890 forbade the construction or extension of piers, wharves, bulkheads, or other works, beyond the harbor lines established under the direction of the secretary of war in navigable waters of the United States, 'except under such regulations as may be prescribed from time to time by him,' it does not follow that congress intended in such matters to disregard altogether the wishes of the local authorities. Its general legislation so far means nothing more than that the regulations established by the secretary in respect of waters, the navigation and commerce upon which may be regulated by congress, shall not be disregarded even by the states. Congress has not, however, indicated its purpose to wholly ignore the original power of the states to regulate the use of navigable waters entirely within their respective limits. Upon the authority then of Cummings vs. City of Chicago and the cases therein cited to which we may add Wallamette Bridge Co. vs. Hatch, 125 U. S. 1 we hold that under existing enactments, the right of private persons to erect structures in a navigable water of the United States that is entirely within the limits of a state, cannot be said to be complete and absolute without the concurrent or joint assent of both the general and state governments."

In the above case the harbor line was established in 1892 by act of the national and state governments. In 1898, the federal government extended the harbor line and approved plans permitting Montgomery to build his wharf to the new line. The state authorities did not approve the plans and the construction of the wharf was enjoined.

While the foregoing opinion does not construe the act of March 3, 1899, as above quoted, the court in the opening statement said that it had in view the provisions of said act.

The same doctrine is set forth in the case of Cummings vs. Chicago, 188 U. S., 410; and in Lake Shore & Michigan Southern Ry. Co. vs. Ohio, 165 U. S., 365. This latter case was taken to the supreme court of the United States on error proceedings from the supreme court of Ohio.

The syllabus of the case reads:

"The provisions in Sections 4, 5 and 7 of the act of September 19, 1890, c. 907, conferring upon the secretary of war authority concerning bridges over navigable water ways, do not deprive the states of authority to bridge such streams, but simply create an additional and cumulative remedy to prevent such structures, although lawfully authorized, from interfering with commerce."

The supreme court of Ohio did not report its decision, but the case is referred to in 33 Bull., at page 169.

The foregoing cases arose in connection with waters lying wholly within the state.

In the case of Portland vs. Montgomery, as reported in 38 Oreg. 215, which is the same case reviewed by the supreme court of the United states in 190 U. S., 89, supra, the syllabus reads:

> "Act of congress, September 19, 1890, (26 Stat. 454, 455, Sec. 7) prohibiting the construction of a wharf outside the harbor lines of any port without the permission of the secretary of war, does not prohibit a state or a city having power to control the location of wharves within its limits, from enacting an ordinance restraining the construction of wharves beyond a wharf line adopted by the city, and which is within the harbor line fixed by the secretary of war, since the act of congress only prohibits the extension of the wharf beyond such line, and does not either expressly or impliedly give riparian owners the right to wharf out to the government line."

On pages 226 and 227, Bean, C. J., says:

> "But, as we construe the act of 1890, it was not designed to interfere with the power and authority of the several states over the location and construction of wharves, piers, and landing places unless they encroach upon the harbor lines established by the secretary of war. * * *
> "It provides that under certain circumstances the secretary of war may establish a line in harbors of the United States, beyond which no pier, wharf, etc., shall be extended, except by his permission, or under such regulations as may be prescribed from time to time. This is not equivalent, however, to a legislative declaration that they may be extended up to such line regardless of the local laws on the subject. The more reasonable construction is that congress, in the exercise of its paramount authority under the commercial clause of the constitution, has authorized the establishment of a line beyond which such structures shall not be extended except by permission of the secretary of war, but has left to the several states authority to determine whether local interests require that a larger space in the harbor shall be reserved for the use of ships and shipping than that outside of such line.
> "Congress has thus assumed jurisdiction over that part of a harbor outside of a line which the secretary of war may lawfully establish. But it has not, in our opinion, assumed jurisdiction or authority over the space between such line and the shore, nor has it made any provision, directly or indirectly, as to what use shall be made thereof. While wharves, piers and landing places are essential to commerce by water, they are nevertheless, in their nature local, attached to the soil, and require a diversity of rules and regulations. Full jurisdiction and control over them is vested in the state, in the absence of congressional legislation upon the subject; and such legislation cannot, we think, be inferred from mere authority given an executive officer to establish a line in the harbor beyond which it shall be unlawful to extend such structure without his consent.
> "* * * So long as the legislation of the state does not interfere with the duties of such officer, or conflict with the line established by him, it is controlling. Now, in this case, there is no conflict. The purpose of the city of Portland is not to interfere with the harbor line relocated by the secretary of war in September, 1898, but to prohibit the extension of wharves and piers beyond a certain line inside thereof. In our opinion, such power and authority still remain in the state, and congress has not by the act of 1890 assumed to exercise exclusive control over the matter."

The case of Rhea vs. Newport N. & W. V. R. Co., 50 Fed. 16, arose in connection with a bridge wholly in Kentucky, constructed over the Cumberland river which river did not lie wholly within the state. The syllabus reads:

> "The commercial power of congress is exclusive of state authority only where the subjects upon which it is exerted are national in their character, and admit and require uniformity of regulations affecting alike all the states; and when the subjects within that power are local in their nature or operation or constitute mere aids to commerce, the states may provide for their regulation and management until congress intervenes and supersedes their action. C. Cardwell vs. Bridge Co. 113 U. S. 205 followed."

On pages 20 and 21 of 50 Fed. 16 supra, Jackson, Circuit Judge, says:

> "It is true that in most of the cases above cited the public or navigable waters were wholly within the limits of the state authorizing the erection of bridges or obstructions in or over the same, and that expressions are found in one or more of the opinions which apparently attach some importance to that fact. The decisions did not, however, proceed or rest upon that ground, but upon the principle that such portion of navigable waters as lay or were embraced within the limits or territory jurisdiction of the state were subject to state authority, in respect to bridges over the same, until congress exercised its superior and paramount authority of regulation and control. Navigable waters entirely within the limits of a state stand upon the same footing, and are subject to the same controlling authority of Congress as those extending through or reaching beyond the state. The right of the state, in the absence of congressional regulation to the contrary, to authorize the erection of bridges over such portions of navigable waters as may be embraced within its limits, does not depend upon the length of such waters, nor is the state's authority restricted or affected by the fact that some portion of the stream may extend beyond its territorial jurisdiction."

In construing the act of 1890, the attorney general of the United States, says:

> "The statute is revisory and defensive in its nature, it clears the way for interstate and foreign commerce, but does not assume the police power or local control. (1891) 20 Op. Atty. Gen. 101."

The provisions of the act of congress of 1890, construed in the foregoing cases are substantially the same as the provisions of the later act of 1899. It is conclusively held that by this act the United States government has not taken exclusive control of harbors where it has established harbor lines. There are certain things of a local nature which are left to local control. The construction of wharves, docks and the making of land is subject to local regulations as they are local in their nature and affect local interests more than they affect interstate or foreign commerce.

In the opinion rendered by this department on November 1, 1911, this conclusion is reached:

> "The riparian rights of the owners of banks of navigable waters are to be determined by the state in which such land is situated."

The riparian rights are matters of local control and not of national regulation. The right to build out from the shore and make land is a right permitted or granted by the state and is under its control. Congress has not attempted to control the action of the state as to any riparian rights. But, in the exercise of its powers to regulate interstate and foreign commerce, congress has granted to the secretary of war, authority to prevent obstructions to navigation. It has not, however, authorized the secretary of war, to grant permission to make such obstructions. The act of congress is defensive, and is enacted to protect the right of navigation. It is not constructive legislation and cannot be construed as granting authority to build wharves or make land.

The act of congress in question does not make a distinction between navigable waters which lie wholly within a state and those which lie only partly within a state. Although some of the cases appear to make a distinction upon this ground, yet, as stated by Jackson, circuit judge in 50 Fed. 16, supra, the decisions were not based upon that ground. In as much as the act itself does not make any such distinction, the principles laid down in the foregoing decisions apply as well to the waters which are only partly within the state.

The harbor at Cleveland is wholly within the state of Ohio. The contemplated improvements are also wholly within the state. The right to make land is under state control. This right cannot extend, even with the consent of the state, beyond the harbor line to be established by the United States government, without the consent of the federal government. The United States government controls the part of the harbor beyond the harbor line, and the state, under the present law, has control of the harbor within the harbor line, with the condition that all structures therein must secure the approval of the secretary of war.

The state may fix a line within the line fixed by the federal government, beyond which no obstructions to navigation may extend.

In the Oregon case, passed upon in 190 U. S., 89, the secretary of war granted permission to build a wharf out to the federal harbor line. No permission therefor was granted by the state. The construction of the wharf out to the federal harbor line was enjoined. The court held that both the federal and state governments must concur in authorizing such construction. In the Oregon case, and in the other cases cited herein upon this proposition, the state legislature had enacted laws granting to some board or other authority the power to control harbors, or the building of bridges. The rule is that where the state has enacted legislation to control the building of structures in harbors, both the national and state governments must grant permission to build out into the harbor from the shore, before such building out will be legally authorized. In other words state and federal regulations must be complied with. This rule will especially apply to the making of land.

The extent of the legislative control: The courts and text writers do not attempt to limit or specifically define the extent of legislative control over navigable waters. The power of the legislature is based upon its right to regulate commerce and navigation, which is the paramount use to which navigable water is put. It has been seen that the state holds the title to the submerged lands of Lake Erie in trust for public uses. The principal public uses are those of navigation and fishing. It is the duty of the state as such trustees to protect public navigation and fishing. It is the right of the state through its legislative body, or through its agents duly authorized by legislative enactment, to determine what is or what is not an interference with these rights. The shore owners have certain riparian rights, and it is the duty of the state as sovereign to protect these rights. The filling in of land by one shore owner may interfere with the riparian rights of another. The state may adjust these conflicting rights and determine how they shall be exercised.

It is well recognized that the state has full and complete power over public fishing and navigation. The extent of this power cannot be definitely limited or defined. In this respect it stands upon the same footing as the police power of the state.

At Section 138 of Gould on Water Rights, 3rd Ed., it is said:

> "It is competent for state legislatures to control the management and occupation of wharves and piers in navigable waters, even in the hands of private persons, to establish wharf or harbor lines, and to empower commissioners to license structures extending to such lines. Such statutes do not conflict with the commercial power of congress, so long as the latter remains unexercised. * * * The mere establishment of a harbor or dock line does not change rights of property, nor is it an abandonment of the right of the state to control and regulate the water within the lines.

In Lincoln vs. Davis, 53 Mich., 375, it is held:

> "Riparian rights upon the great lakes are, in theory, the same as upon navigable streams; and are not governed by any such proprietary division as high and low water marks. The submerged lands are appurtenant to the upland, so far as their limits can be reasonably identified; but in public waters the state law must determine how far rights in such lands can be exercised consistently with the easement of navigation. The state can forbid any erections in navigable waters, and on navigable streams and along the Great Lakes can fix the distance beyond which private erections cannot be maintained."

In case of Yates vs. Milwaukee, 10 Wall. 497, it is held:

> "The owners of land bounded by a navigable river have certain riparian rights, whether his title extend to the middle of the stream or not.
>
> "Among these are free access to the navigable part of the stream, and the right to make a landing, wharf, or pier for his own use, or for the use of the public.
> "These rights are valuable, and are property, and cannot be taken for the public good only when due compensation is made.
> "They are to be enjoyed subject to such general rules and laws as the legislature may prescribe for the protection of the public right in the river as a navigable stream.
> "But a statute of a state which confers on a city, the power to establish dock and wharf lines and to restrain encroachments, and prevent obstructions to such a stream, does not authorize it to be declared by special ordinance a private wharf to be an obstruction to navigation and a nuisance, and to order its removal, when in point of fact, it was no obstruction, or hindrance to navigation.

"The question of nuisance or obstruction, must be determined by general and fixed laws, and it is not to be tolerated that the local municipal authorities of a city declare any particular business or structure a nuisance in such a summary mode, and enforce its decision at its own pleasure."

In state vs. Sargent & Co., 45 Conn., 358, the syllabi read:

"The owners of land bounded on a harbor own only to high water mark. They have a right to construct wharves upon the soil below that line, if they conform to such regulations as the state shall see fit to prescribe, and do not obstruct navigation.

"The duty of protecting the paramount right of navigation rests upon the legislature, and they are to determine for themselves by what methods and instrumentalities they will discharge it.

"They have power to vest in commissioners appointed by themselves authority to restrain such proprietors from extending structures into navigable waters.

"The enactment of such a law is in no sense an exercise of the right of eminent domain. The public do not appropriate or use any right of the land owner in the soil of the shore."

Farnham on Water Rights, at page 509 and 510 discusses the purposes of wharves and the control of the legislature over their construction, as follows:

"* * * But wharves are as much a necessity to navigation as is the harbor itself, and therefore the right to construct and maintain them is as great as to maintain the harbor. If the harbor is kept entirely free from wharves, it is useless for the purpose for which it is created. On the other hand, wharves and piers may be extended into the harbor is such a way as to occupy all its available space and destroy the harbor itself. Under such circumstances there must be some power which can fix the limits of the respective rights, and establish a line to which it can, but beyond which it cannot go. This power resides in the legislature, and may be exercised through commissioners, or such other appointees as it chooses. And the line may be fixed so as to permit the erection of wharves of different lengths if the configuration of the shore is such as to require it. But since the riparian owner has a right of access to the waters and to make such right available it must include a right of access to water which is deep enough to accommodate the shipping which resorts to the harbor, the harbor line cannot be fixed in such a way as to prevent the construction of wharves which will reach navigable water. The interest of the public will prevent the drawing of lines which will not permit the erection of efficient wharves in most instances, because, if the line should be drawn around the entire harbor, which would prevent the erection of any wharf which would reach navigable water, the harbor itself would be destroyed. The consequence of this is that there has been no general attempt to fix lines which would prevent all wharves from reaching navigable water, but a discrimination has been made against some land owners by drawing the lines in front of their property so as to cut them off from deep water. Such regulations are unjust, and contrary to the principles upon which the federal and state governments are founded, which require the laws to bear equally upon all citizens."

These authorities recognize the right of the state to control its harbors. The state may determine what shall or what shall not be built in its navigable waters, subject to the paramount right of congress. It may grant to commissioners, or to municipalities or other political divisions, the control of harbors and navigable waters.

In the exercise of its power to regulate navigation, and to carry out the trust which it holds in its navigable waters, the state of Ohio has full power to determine in what manner or to what extent the submerged lands may be filled and new land made, so long as such regulations do not conflict with any acts of congress upon the same subject. The state regulations must also keep in view the use of the waters by the shore owner for navigation purposes.

The island plan will now be considered.

There are numerous cases which determine the title to an island which is formed by natural causes in navigable waters. But I do not find any decision as to the title of an island which is constructed by artificial means as is proposed in the present plan.

The rule of ownership is stated in Farnham on Water Rights on pages 275 and 276 as follows:

> "If the title to the soil where the island springs up is in private ownership the island will belong to the owner of the soil. Therefore, where an island arises in a stream the title to the bed of which is in the state, it does not belong to the owner of either shore. An island formed upon the portion of the bed which belongs to the riparian owner becomes his property."

At Section 166 of Gould on Water Rights, 3rd Ed., it is stated:

> "When islands are formed by either the sudden or gradual action of tide waters within the territory of the nation, they belong to the crown at common law and in this country to the respective states. The same is true of the navigable fresh waters of this country belonging to the state, except that when shoals, sandbars, or islands form along the margin of the water, it is a question of fact for the jury whether they are the property of the state or of the riparian owners as accretions. In general, if an island growing out of the water has a fixed channel which separates it from the adjacent land, the owner of such land cannot claim the island as belonging to it by accretion."

In case of State vs. Fenn, 10 Nisi Prius, N. S. 325, Kinkead, J., approves the rule of ownership as stated in Cyc. when he says at page 334:

> "The ordinary rules of law which determine the ownership of islands, formed or created naturally in beds of streams or bodies of water, cannot be resorted to in solving the problem in this case. The rule is that 'ownership of an island follows the ownership of the bed of the water, so that if the state owns the land under water it belongs to the state.' 29 Cyc., 354."

In Sherwood vs. Commission, 113 Mich. 227; it is held:

> "The fee to an unsurveyed island in one of the Great Lakes, situated several hundred feet distant from the mainland, is in the state, and not in the riparian owner."

In this case the island was about six hundred feet from the shore. In the case Perkins vs. Adams, 132 Mo. 131, the syllabi read:

"The title of a riparian owner on the Missouri river does not extend to the center of the main channel but only to the water's edge.

"Such owner is not entitled to land formed by the river making an island by depositing sand on its bed and afterward connecting it with the shore by the receding of the intervening river, but only to such land as may be added to the original grant by the gradual process of accretion or reliction to his shore line.

"A riparian owner on the Missouri river is not the owner of an island which springs up in the river whether it be on the one side or the other of the main channel."

In Packer vs. Bird, 71 Calif., 134, it is held:

"Where a patent issued on a confirmed Mexican grant describes the land conveyed as bounded by a river navigable in fact, the title to the patentee extends no farther than the edge of the stream and does not include an island situated in the river opposite the mainland, notwithstanding the portion of the river between the island and the mainland is not navigable."

Thornton, J., at page 135, says:

"There is but one river, and that a navigable one. The waters on each side of the island constitute parts of one navigable stream."

The rule is well established that where an island springs up or is gradually formed in a navigable stream, the title to the island thus formed follows the title to the submerged lands and does not attach to the title of the owner of the shore. The rule of title is the same although the part of the stream lying between the island and the mainland is no longer navigable.

In building an island by artificial means, the rights of the riparian owner must be considered.

The shore owner may receive an increase in his land through natural causes, and he may suffer loss by the washing away of his land. These are incidents of his ownership. He is not required to give, nor can he receive compensation for the increase or loss caused by natural causes. In 71 Calif., 134, supra, it is seen that an island formed in a navigable stream belongs to the owner of the bed of the stream and not to the shore owner, even though the part of the stream lying between the island and the mainland is no longer navigable. In such case, if the island is large enough, a riparian owner may be entirely cut off from navigable water and thus be deprived of his riparian right to reach navigable water. This right would be cut off by natural causes. He cannot demand compensation for such loss.

But if an island were formed by artificial means, the right of the shore owner to reach navigable water, could not be taken away without compensation. Any island, artificially constructed, which would prevent the shore owner reaching navigable water from his shore would be a taking of his property, as such right is a property right in this state.

In building an island, therefore, in a harbor, the rights of the shore owner must be protected. What would be a sufficient channel to give the shore owner the beneficial use of the water and his land for purposes of navigation must be determined by the facts of each particular case. The use to which the shore land is put, the nature of the shipping in the harbor, the facilities for reaching out to the water beyond the breakwater or limits of the harbor, as well as other conditions must be carefully considered.

In Atlee vs. Packett Co., 21 Wall., 389, Miller, Justice in defining the purposes of wharves, says at page 393:

> "The wharves or piers are generally located by lines bearing such relation to the shore and to the navigable water as to present no danger to vessels using the river, and the control which the state exercises over them is such as to secure at once their usefulness and their safety.
> "* * * Wharves and piers are as necessary almost to the successful uses of the stream in navigation as the vessels themselves, and are to be considered as an important part of the instrumentalities of this branch of commerce. But to be of any value in this respect they must reach so far into deep water as to enable vessels used in ordinary navigation to float while they touch them and are lashed to their sides. They must of necessity occupy a part of the stream over which a vessel could float if they were not there."

In order to build an island in a harbor the plans must be approved as required by Section 10 of act of congress of March 3, 1899, by the officials of the federal government. As the island is to be constructed upon land held by the state the consent of the state through its legislature, or its duly authorized agents, should be secured. The island would have to be constructed so as not to deprive the riparian owner of his rights.

If the consent of the federal and state governments was secured and none of the rights of the riparian owner impaired, such riparian owner could not object to the construction of an island in front of his land.

The plan submitted shows a three hundred foot channel between the proposed line to which the shore owners may make land and the line of the proposed islands. The plan shows two islands with a three hundred foot channel separating the same. The plan also shows that in order to get from the harbor out into the lake ships must go to either end of the breakwater. The plan of the islands submitted would not require ships to go any greater distance to the east of west than they are required to go by reason of the breakwater.

If the channel between the islands and the shore is of sufficient width and depth to accommodiate all ships that now or may reasonably be expected to use this harbor, then the right of the shore owner to reach navigable water would be properly conserved.

In order, however, to obviate all doubt, it would appear best to have the federal government establish the harbor line at the line on the plans submitted to which it is proposed that shore owners may make land. Then by consent of the proper federal and state officials, authority could be granted to the city of Cleveland to construct an island beyond such harbor line, upon plans to be hereafter approved. The title to such an island would be in the state with full power to grant the same for any purpose.

The plan proposed by the river and harbor committee of the Cleveland chamber of commerce, is to be secured by agreement of all parties interested.

As the state has control of the harbor within the harbor line and may regulate the construction of wharves and docks and the filling in of land, it may enter into an agreement with the shore owners as to the terms and conditions upon which such land may be made. The legislature may, without agreement, prescribe how such land may be made, but cannot thereby injure the riparian rights.

The principal feature of this plan is the right of way for public uses. There are cases in which cities have laid out streets over submerged lands and the right to do so is sustained by the courts.

In case of Clement vs. Burns, 43 N. H., 609, it is held:

> "The selectmen of a town have jurisdiction to lay out a highway over land reclaimed from the sea or navigable river, by embankments or filling in, so as to raise it above high water mark."

In Henshaw vs. Hunting, 1 Gray (Mass.), 203, it is held:

> "A highway may be located, without special authority of the legislature, over flats, lying between high and low water mark, which have been lawfully filled up by the proprietor of the adjoining upland."

In this case part of the street laid out extended into the sea.

Through its power to lay out streets and to appropriate land for the same, the city could lay out a right of way through the part proposed to be filled in and this right of way would attach to the filled land when made.

As said above this latter plan rests upon agreement and there is no legal prohibition against such an agreement if all parties consent to such agreement.

The questions involved in the improvement of the harbors on the Great Lakes, and especially of the harbor at Cleveland, are of vast importance to the public interests of the state and especially to the people of the cities in which such harbors are located.

The legislature of Ohio has not enacted any law to regulate the construction of private wharves, or to control the filling in of land. The federal government has acted, and until the state legislature has acted all encroachments upon the harbor should be enjoined. The proper course to pursue would be for the city of Cleveland and its citizens to oppose the granting of any permission by the federal government to make land in the harbor that might interfere with the proper improvement of the harbor. Also, if possible, the establishment of a harbor line should be postponed until the question involved have been properly presented to the next legislature for its action.

Respectfully,

TIMOTHY S. HOGAN,

Attorney General.

CANTON CRIMINAL COURT—FEES OF CHIEFS OF POLICE SAME AS THOSE OF CONSTABLE IN JUSTICE OF PEACE COURTS—STATE CASE—FELONIES AND MISDEMEANORS.

Under Section 14700, General Code, relating to fees in the city criminal court of Canton, Ohio, by provision of the words therein "other fees shall be the same as before the justice of the peace in like cases." Chiefs of police of Canton for serving processes in the criminal court are entitled to the same fees as are allowed a constable for like services before a justice of the peace.

The city of Canton has no control over the fees charged for chiefs of police in state cases, and such fees shall be paid as provided for the recovery of fees in felonies and misdemeanors, in Sections 3016, 3017 and 3019, General Code.

COLUMBUS, OHIO, May 2, 1912.

HON. FRANK N. SWEITZER, Assistant City Solicitor, Canton, Ohio.

DEAR SIR:—Under date of March 18, 1912, you ask an opinion of this department upon the following:

> "At the request of our chief of police, I am writing for information with reference to your holdings on the question of the allowance of fees to chiefs of police in state cases in cities having a city criminal court.
> "As you know, our city criminal court is similar to the one in Youngstown, Akron and several other Ohio cities, and was created by a so-called special act of the legislature.
> "My query is this: Under your holdings, can an allowance be made to the chief of police as fees for state cases?"

It has recently been held by this department that the criminal court of Canton has been legally established, and that the act of 99 Ohio Laws, 607, was confirmed by the amendatory act in 100 Ohio Laws, 69. These acts are now known as Sections 14696 to 14706, inclusive, in the appendix of the General Code.

Section 14700, appendix of the General Code, provides:

> "The court shall have power to compel the attendance of witnesses, jurors and parties; jurors shall have the qualifications and be subject to the challenges of those in court of common pleas in like cases; they shall be selected, summoned and impaneled in accordance with an ordinance of the council; or if no such ordinance is in force, in accordance with a rule of the court and they shall receive the same fees as are allowed jurors and witnesses in courts of justice of the peace; other fees shall be the same as before the justice of the peace in like cases."

There is no specific provision of statute requiring the chief of police to serve process in the Canton criminal court, nor is there any other statute than the above, which will authorize the charging of fees to him for service of process in such court.

In the case of Delaware vs. Mathews, 13 Cir. Ct., N. S., 539, Taggart, J., says at page 540, of the opinion:

> "The chief of police, in cities having a police court, were to receive like fees as constables and sheriffs in the probate court and before justices of the peace."

An examination of the statute upon which the above was based will show that the provisions thereof were similar to those covering the fees in the Canton criminal court.

Section 4581, General Code, provides:

> "Other fees in the police court shall be the same in state cases as are allowed in the probate court, or before justices of the peace, in like cases, and in cases for violation of ordinances such fees as the council, by ordinance, prescribes, not exceeding the fees for like services in state cases."

This section was in its present form when the foregoing decision was rendered. At that time there was no specific provision of statute that the chief of police should serve process in the police court, nor did any other statute authorize the charging of fees for services rendered by him.

If the words "other fees" as contained in Section 4581, General Code, authorize the charging of fees for process served in a police court by a chief of police, then it also follows that the words "other fees" as used in Section 14700, supra., referring to the Canton criminal court, will authorize the charging of fees for process served by the chief of police in such criminal court.

The chief of police of Canton, who serves process in the Canton criminal court, is entitled to the same fees as are allowed a constable for similar service before a justice of the peace.

The section under consideration does not provide who shall pay these fees, nor to whom they shall be paid. Your inquiry is only as to the fees in state criminal cases.

Section 3016, General Code, provides:

> "In felonies, when the defendant is convicted, the costs of the justice of the peace, police judge or justice, mayor, marshal, chief of police. constable and witnesses, shall be paid from the county treasury and inserted in the judgment of conviction, so that such costs may be paid to the county from the state treasury. In all cases, when recognizances are taken, forfeited and collected and no conviction is had, such costs shall be paid from the county treasury."

Section 3017, General Code, provides:

> "In no other cases whatever shall any cost be paid from the state or county treasury to a justice of the peace, police judge or justice, mayor, marshal, chief of police, or constable."

Section 3019, General Code, provides:

> "In felonies wherein the state fails, and misdemeanors wherein the defendant proves insolvent, the county commissioners at any regular session, may make an allowance to any such officer in place of fees, but in any year the aggregate allowances to such officer shall not exceed the fees legally taxed to him in such causes, nor in any year shall the aggregate amount allowed an officer exceed one hundred dollars."

The foregoing sections authorize the payment from the county treasury of the fees therein enumerated in state criminal cases.

Section 4213, General Code, provides:

> "The salary of any officer, clerk or employe shall not be increased or diminished during the term for which he was elected or appointed, and, except as otherwise provided in this title, all fees pertaining to any office shall be paid into the city treasury."

In the case of Portsmouth vs. Milstead and Portsmouth vs. Baucus, 18 Cir. Dec., 384, it is held:

> "The provisions of 96 O. L., Sec. 126 (Rev. Stat., 1536-633; Lan. 3228), requiring 'that all fees pertaining to any office shall be paid into the city treasury' has reference to municipal fees solely, or such fees as may be fixed by municipal authority.
> "Said section does not authorize cities to interfere with the fees of mayors or chiefs of police in state criminal cases; whether such authority can be delegated to municipalities, quaere."

This decision was affirmed without report by the supreme court as shown in 76 Ohio St., 597.

The city of Canton has no control over the fees charged for services of the chief of police in state criminal cases. These fees are subject to state control, and Section 4213, General Code, requiring all fees to be paid into the city treasury, does not apply to such fees in state criminal cases.

The chief of police is entitled to the fees to be paid by virtue of Section 3016, General Code, or to the allowance made by the commissioners under Section 3019, General Code, for services performed in state criminal cases before the criminal court of Canton, Ohio.

Respectfully,
TIMOTHY S. HOGAN,
Attorney General.

COUNCIL — ESTABLISHMENT OF GRADE CROSSINGS — METHODS OF PROCEDURE BY AGREEMENT WITH OR BY COMPULSION OF RAILROAD COMPANY—RESOLUTION DETERMINING TO PROCEED MUST BE PASSED.

Council may proceed to install grade crossings by two different methods, one prescribed by Sections 8863-8873, General Code, by which action is taken through agreement with the railroad company and another method prescribed by Sections 8874-8894, General Code, by which council may require a railroad company to eliminate grade crossings.

Section 8866, General Code, providing that the resolution determining to proceed shall be passed not less than thirty nor more than ninety days after the resolution of necessity, applies only to proceeding taken by agreement, under the former statutes.

When, therefore, council has acted under the latter statutes, the fact that the council had not passed the resolution determining to proceed within ninety days after the resolution of necessity, is immaterial, and the mere fact that the railroad company has approved the plans and specifications does not constitute such agreement to the establishment of the grade crossing as to make the procedure of the council such as prescribed by the former statutes, and thereby make the ninety-day restriction of 1866, General Code, applicable.

COLUMBUS, OHIO, May 1, 1912.

HON. WILLIAM M. ROACH, City Solicitor, Alliance, Ohio.

DEAR SIR:—Under date of April 4, 1912, you inquire of this department as follows:

> "The city of Alliance has in contemplation the abolishment of a certain grade crossing in the city, and to that end, the council has passed certain legislation under the provisions of Sections 8874 to 8894, inclusive, General Code, and I would be pleased to have your opinion on this question:
> "Where a municipality undertakes to abolish a grade crossing, proceeding under the provisions of Sections 8874 to 8894, inclusive, General Code, as amended 101 O. L., 377, is there a time limit within which council must pass the ordinance determining its intention to proceed with such work, after the passage of an ordinance declaring it necessary to make such improvemnts, or, in other words, is it necessary that the provisions of Section 8866, which provides that:
> "* * * * * * * * * * * * * * * * *
> be complied with in regard to the time within which such ordinance shall be passed by council?
>
> "The facts in this case are these:
> "On August 21, 1911, the council of the city of Alliance, passed an ordinance requiring The Pittsburgh, Ft. Wayne & Chicago Railroad, within three months to co-operate with the engineer of the city, to prepare and submit to the council, plans and specifications for the abolishment of the grade crossing at the intersection of North Arch avenue and The Pittsburgh, Ft. Wayne & Chicago Railroad.
> "The railroad evidently complied with this requirement, for on September 15, 1911, the council passed a resolution approving the plans and specifications agreed upon by the engineer of the city of Alliance, Ohio, and The Pennsylvania Company, operating The Pittsburgh, Ft. Wayne & Chicago Railroad, for the elimination of the grade crossing at North Arch avenue, and ordered the same to be filed in the department of public service.

"On September 5, 1911, the council passed a resolution entitled:

> "'A resolution, declaring the necessity and the intention to abolish the grade crossing at North Arch avenue and The Pittsburgh, Ft. Wayne & Chicago Railroad, operated by The Pennsylvania Company, assignee of The Pennsylvania Railroad Company, lessee, in the city of Alliance, state of Ohio, pursuant to the provisions of Sections 8874 and 8894, inclusive, of the General Code of Ohio, as amended by the act of the general assembly, passed May 10, 1910. (101 O. L., 377.)'

"Now on January 29, 1912, being more than ninety days to wit, one hundred and forty, after the passage of this last resolution, the council passed an ordinance to proceed with the improvement; the ordinance being entitled:

"* * * * * * * * * * * * * * * *

"Was this last ordinance passed within the time prescribed by law, where the proceedings were had under Sections 8878-8894, inclusive?

"If you should determine that Section 8866 does not apply, and that there is no limit in time between the passage of the resolution of 'necessity' and the passage of the ordinance to 'proceed,' then I would be pleased to have you suggest the further proceedings to be pursued in carrying into effect the final agreement between the city and the railroad company."

The legislature of Ohio has passed two separate acts for the elimination of grade crossings. The first is found in 90 Ohio Laws, page 360. This act authorizes the council of a municipality or the commissioners of a county, upon agreement with the railroad to eliminate grade crossings. The provisions of this act are now known as Sections 8863 to 8873, inclusive of the General Code.

In 95 Ohio, Laws, page 356, is another act, by the provisions of which a municipal corporation may require a railroad company to eliminate grade crossings. This act is known as Sections 8874 to 8894, inclusive of the General Code. In passing this last act, no reference was made to the former act. The repealing clause provided:

> "All acts and parts of acts in conflict or inconsistent with this act are hereby repealed."

The purpose of each act is shown by the respective first sections thereof. The first section of the first act is now Section 8863, General Code, and the first section of the second act is now found in Sections 8874 and 8875, General Code.

Section 8863, General Code, provides:

> "If the council of a municipal corporation in which a railroad or railroads, and a street or other public highway cross each other at a grade or otherwise, or the commissioners of a county in which, outside of a municipal corporation, a railroad or railroads and public road or highway cross each other at grade, and the directors of the railroad company or companies are of the opinion that the security and convenience of the public require alterations in such crossing, or the approaches thereto, or in the location of the railroad or railroads or the public highway, or grades thereof, so as to avoid a crossing at grade, or that such crossing should be discontinued with or without building a new way in substitution therefor, and if they agree as to the alterations they may be made as hereinafter provided."

Section 8874, General Code, provides:

"Any municipal corporation may raise or lower, or cause to be raised or lowered, the grade of any street or way, above or below railroad tracks therein, and may require any railroad company operating a railroad in such municipality to raise or lower the grade of its tracks and may construct ways or crossings above the tracks of any railroad, or require the railroad company to construct ways or crossings that are to be passed under its tracks. Any municipality may require such railroad company to erect permanent piers, abutments or any other appropriate supports, in the ways, crossings, streets, roads or alleys, whenever in the opinion of council, the raising or lowering of the grade of any such railroad tracks, or the raising or lowering of the constructions of such ways, crossings or supports, may be necessary, upon the terms and conditions hereinafter set forth."

Section 8863, General Code, contemplates an agreement between the municipality of the county, and the railroad company before any steps are taken by either to eliminate the grade crossing. The agreement comes first. This act does not provide how grade crossings shall be eliminated when there is no agreement.

Section 8874, General Code, authorizes a municipal corporation to eliminate grade crossings and gives council power to require the railroad company to join therein. The resolution requiring the railroad company to join in eliminating the grade crossing is passed before any agreement is entered into. It is adverse in its nature. Other sections of the later act authorize the railroad company to agree upon plans and specifications and to act with the municipal corporation.

Section 8876, General Code, provides:

"The council of such municipality, for the purpose of making or causing such an improvement to be made, by ordinance may require the railroad company, in co-operation with the engineer of the municipality, or the engineer designated in such ordinance, to prepare and submit to such council, within three months, unless longer time is mutually agreed upon in writing, plans and specifications for such improvement, specifying the number, character and location of all piers and supports, which are to be permanently placed in any street or way, therein, specifying the grades to be established for the streets, and the height, character and estimated cost of any viaduct or way above or below any railroad track, and the change of grade required to be made of such tracks, including sidetracks and switches. But in changing the grade of any railroad, no grade shall be required to exceed the established maximum or ruling grade governing the operations by engines of that division or part of the railroad on which the improvement is to be made, without the consent of the railroad company, nor shall the railroad company's tracks be required to be placed below high water mark."

Section 8877, General Code, provides:

> "If at the expiration of three months from the passage of such ordinance, the railroad company has refused or failed to co-operate in the preparation of such plans and specifications or if the engineer of the municipality or engineer designated in such ordinance by council, and the railroad company fail to agree upon the plans and specifications for such improvement, then either the railroad company or municipal corporation may submit the matter of determining the method by which the improvement shall be made to the court of common pleas having jurisdiction in the county in which the municipality is situated."

Section 8878, General Code, provides that either the municipal corporation or the railroad company may petition the court of common pleas, and Section 8879, General Code, prescribes the procedure therein, and the authority of the court.

Section 8880, General Code, provides:

> "If the court finds that the public security and convenience require such changes to be made, and that the plans presented by the petitioner or any of the parties answering thereto are reasonable and practicable, it shall order the changes to be made in accordance with the most reasonable and practicable plan presented to the court. The municipality shall be required to make such changes in the streets, roads or highways as may be necessary, and the railroad company or companies be required to make the changes necessary in the tracks and roadbed, in order to comply with the rulings of the court. If more than one railroad company own tracks on the crossing in question, the court shall apportion the part of the expense payable by the railroad companies between or among such companies. But if the court finds that the security and convenience of the public do not require that alterations be made in such crossing or crossings, or that none of the plans are reasonable or practicable, the improvement shall not be made upon such plans."

Section 8882, General Code, provides:

> "If a municipality, or railroad company refuses or neglects to comply with the orders or findings made by the court under the provisions hereof, the court may enforce its orders or findings by either mandamus or mandatory injunction or as for contempt of court, as the necessity of the case may require, upon the application of either party to such proceedings."

The first action of the council of Alliance to eliminate the grade crossing in question was taken in accordance with the provisions of Section 8874, General Code. No agreement had been entered into prior to the passage of the first resolution. It was not then known that the railroad company would agree to the plans and specifications, and that it would agree to the elimination of the grade crossing in accordance with such plans. It is apparent that the action of council was taken under Section 8874, so that the provisions of Sections 8879, et seq., General Code, could be followed if the railroad company failed to agree to the elimination of the crossing.

It appears that the railroad company has co-operated with the engineer of the city and has agreed upon the plans and specifications, but it does not appear that they have entered into an agreement with the city to eliminate the grade crossing in accordance with these plans and specifications.

The original act in 95 Ohio Laws, 357, as set forth in Section 3337-17b, Bates, Revised Statutes, contained this clause:

> "* * * and in the event that either the municipality or the railroad company shall not consent to the making of such improvements according to the plans and specifications submitted," then an appeal may be made to the court. This clause was eliminated when the section was amended in 100 Ohio Laws, 78, and was not replaced when carried into the General Code.

The mere making of plans and specifications and agreeing thereto, would not be equivalent to an agreement for the elimination of the grade crossing in accordance with such plans and specifications. Although the above clause is not now in the statute, nevertheless it is necessary, in order to eliminate a grade crossing by agreement, that the railroad company and the city enter into an agreement that such crossing shall be eliminated in accordance with the plans and specifications agreed upon. If either of them fail to consent then an appeal may be taken to the common pleas court. In other words, the agreement to the plans and specifications should also include an agreement that the grade crossing shall be eliminated in accordance with such plans and specifications, before such agreement would be complete.

You ask for a method of procedure when the parties have agreed as they have done in this case. Whether an appeal is made to the court, or whether the municipality and the railroad company agree, the steps to be taken are the same in each case. The authority of the court is to determine the method by which the improvement shall be made and to determine the plans and specifications therefor. When the court has so determined the city and railroad company are in the same position as if they had entered into a contract for such elimination. In the one case the manner of the elimination of the grade crossing is fixed by the court of common pleas; in the other by agreement of the parties. The provisions of Section 8883, et seq., General Code, are to be followed in each case. If these sections do not cover all the details, the general statutes in reference to public improvements by a city shall be followed.

In considering your inquiry so far, your first question has not been answered. You ask if the provisions of Section 8866, General Code, apply.

This section provides:

> "In not less than thirty nor more than ninety days after the passage of such resolution the council or commissioners shall determine whether it or they will proceed with the proposed improvement or not. If it is decided to proceed therewith, an ordinance by the council or resolution by the commissioners shall be passed, which ordinance or resolution must contain, in addition to the terms and conditions stated in such resolution, the plans and specifications of the proposed alteration and improvement, a statement of the damages claimed or likely to accure by reason thereof, and how their payment is to be apportioned between the municipality or county and the railroad company or companies; also who shall supervise the work of construction. Upon the acceptance of this resolution or ordinance by resolution by the railroad company or companies through their directors, it shall constitute an agreement, valid and binding on the municipality or county and the railroad company or companies, respectively. Such agreement shall thereupon be filed in the common pleas court of the county in which the crossing is located, for entry upon its records, whereupon it shall have the same force and effect as a decree of the court."

This section is a part of the act of 90 Ohio Laws, 360. As seen herein, this act contemplates that there should be an agreement before any steps are taken. In your case council acted under the later act, now known as Sections 8874 to 8894, General Code.

Section 8864, General Code, provides:

> "When it is deemed necessary by a municipality or a county to join with any railroad company or companies in the alteration or abolition of a grade or other crossing, the council of the municipality, by a two-thirds vote of all the members elected thereto, or the commissioners of the county, by a unanimous vote, by resolution, shall declare such necessity and intent, and state therein the manner in which the alterations in the crossing are to be made, giving the method of constructing the new crossing with the grades for the railroad or railroads and the public way or ways; also what land or other property it is necessary to appropriate, and how their cost is to be apportioned between the municipality or county and the railroad company or companies; also by whom the work of construction is to be done and how its cost is to be apportioned between the municipality or county and the railroad company or companies."

The words "such resolution" used in the first part of Section 8866, General Code, refers to the resolution provided for in Section 8864, supra., in fact the original act specified Section 2 of the act, that is the resolution therein provided for.

The provisions of Section 8866, General Code, apply only when the municipal corporation of the county and the railroad company or companies agree upon such elimination before any steps are taken, and does not apply when proceedings are started under the provisions of Section 8874, et seq., General Code.

In your case the proceedings were started before any agreement was entered into and were to that extent adverse. The fact that the railroad afterwards agreed to the plans and specifications did not change the situation. The improvement would still be made in accordance with the provisions of Sections 8874, et seq., and not under provisions of Sections 8863 to 8873, General Code.

The provisions of Section 8866, General Code, did not apply to your case. Council was not required to pass the resolution to "proceed," within ninety days after it had passed the resolution of "necessity" for the elimination of the grade crossing.

Respectfully,
TIMOTHY S. HOGAN,
Attorney General.

ORDINANCES SHALL NOT CONTAIN MORE THAN ONE SUBJECT—RESOLUTION OF NECESSITY FOR IMPROVEMENT OF SEVERAL STREETS.

A resolution of council declaring it necessary to improve several streets and alleys cannot be passed for the reason that each street involves a different situation with different considerations and such a resolution would therefore violate Section 4226, General Code, prohibiting the passage of any ordinance, resolution or by-law containing more than one subject.

COLUMBUS, OHIO, May 10, 1912.

HON. D. F. MILLS, City Solicitor, Sidney, Ohio.

DEAR SIR:—Your favor of April 29, 1912, is received, in which you inquire as follows:

> "The city council desires to pave certain alleys and streets in the city being parts of seventeen different streets and eighteen different alleys. I am enclosing herewith a title of a resolution which council has passed declaring it necessary to improve said streets and alleys, omitting the names of the streets. The original resolution has the names of each and all the streets and alleys set for in the title as well as in the body of the resolution.
> "I would like to have an opinion from the attorney general's office as to whether or not this resolution with the title expressed as I have it would violate the provisions of Section 4226, G. C., providing as follows:
>
> "'No ordinance, resolution or by-law shall contain more than one subject, which shall be clearly expressed in its title.'"

Section 4226, General Code, reads in full as follows:

> "No ordinance, resolution or by-law shall contain more than one subject, which shall be clearly expressed in its title. No by-law or ordinance, or section thereof, shall be revived or amended, unless the new by-law or ordinance contains the entire by-law or ordinance, or section revived or amended, and the by-law or ordinance, section or sections so amended shall be repealed? Each such by-law, resolution and ordinance shall be adopted or passed by a separate vote of the council and the yeas and nays shall be entered upon the journal."

The provision of this statute now under consideration is held to be mandatory in case of Heffner vs. City of Toledo, wherein Summers, J., says at page 423 of the opinion:

> "The requirement of Section 1694 that no by-law or ordinance shall contain more than one subject, which shall be clearly expressed in its title,' evidently was suggested by the provision of Section 16 of Article 2 of the Constitution that: 'no bill shall contain more than one subject, which shall be clearly expressed in its title.' The latter provision has been held to be directory (Pim vs. Nicholson, 6 Ohio St., 176), and if the former were so it would not require further consideration, but it has been held mandatory (Bloom vs. City of Xenia, 32 Ohio St., 461; Campbell vs. City of Cincinnati et al., 49 Ohio St., 463."

The syllabi of this case lay down certain principles as to the purpose and construction of Section 4226, General Code, where it is held:

"The statutory requirement that 'no by-law or ordinance shall contain more than one subject, which shall be clearly expressed in its title,' was intended to prevent the uniting in one ordinance of diverse subjects or measures and effecting its passage by uniting in its support all those in favor of any, and to prevent the adoption or ordinances by the votes of councilmen ignorant of their contents.

"Whether an ordinance is violative of the statutory requirement that 'no by-law or ordinance shall contain more than one subject, which shall be clearly expressed in its title,' is to be determined not by its form, but in the light of the mischief the statute was intended to prevent.

"An ordinance to provide for the issuing of bonds to pay the city's part of the cost of thirty-two street and sewer improvements, entitled: 'An ordinance to provide for the issue of general street improvement bonds of the city of Toledo, state of Ohio, to pay said city's part of the cost and expense of improving sundry streets and alleys by paving, repaving, grading and macadamizing, and by constructing sewers therein and to pay the said city's part of the cost and expense of constructing such sewers,' is not in conflict with the statutory requirement that 'no by-law or ordinance shall contain more than one subject, which shall be clearly expressed in its title.'"

On page 425, Summers, J., says:

"The issuing of bonds to pay the city's part of the cost of such improvements is merely incidental to the making of the improvement, and council cannot provide for the making of the separate improvements without the concurrence of three-fourths of the whole number of members elected to council, unless the owners of a majority of the foot frontage to be assessed petition in writing therefor, and in that event the concurrence of a majority of the whole number elected is essential."

In the foregoing case the improvements had been determined upon and the liability of the city ascertained. The purpose of the ordinance was to issue bonds to pay the city's part of the cost of the improvements which included street and sewer improvements. This, as the court says, was incidental to the making of the improvement. This case is not therefore an authority for joining two or more distinct improvements in one ordinance.

In case of Elyria Gas & Water Co. vs. City of Elyria, 57 Ohio St., 376, the fourth syllabus reads:

"The purchase of water works, and the erection of new ones, are distinct measures, requiring different proceedings; and a resolution of council which combines both as one, and provides for the submission, in that form, of the question of the issue and sale of the bonds of the municipality for both purposes combined, is unauthorized, and ineffectual for either purpose; nor can it be made effectual for either, by the elimination of the other in the proceedings subsequent to the resolution.

It is the policy of the statute that each measure for which it is proposed to issue and sell the bonds of the corporation shall stand on its own merits, unaided by combination with others, and that it be voted upon as an independent measure, by the council and electors, uninfluenced by such combination."

On page 380 and 381, Williams, J., says:

"* * * And, it is the policy of the statute that the proposition for each separate improvement shall stand on its own merits, unaided by combination with any other measure, and be so acted upon by the council in the first instance, and then, if adopted, be so submitted for approval by the electors that each may be voted upon as a separate measure, uninfluenced by combination with others."

From the foregoing decision it is seen that each improvement should stand upon its own merits and not be aided by combination with others.

Under the chapter on assessments in the General Code there is a provision which specifically authorizes council to provide for sprinkling, sweeping, or cleaning more than one street or alley in the same ordinance.

Section 3842, General Code, provides:

"The council of a city upon the recommendation of the director of public service, or the council of a village, may provide by ordinance for sprinkling with water, sweeping, or cleaning of such streets or alleys, or parts thereof. For the purpose of carrying out the provision of this section and of the three next preceding sections, one ordinance may be made to include one or more streets or alleys, or parts thereof, and one or more of the powers granted by such sections."

This is an exception from the general statute. If it was legal and proper to provide for the improvement of more than one street in the same ordinance, the foregoing provision would be mere surplusage. It appears, therefore, that the legislature construed the provision of Section 4226, General Code, as preventing the improvement of more than one street in the same ordinance.

The improvement of one street is separate and distinct from the improvement of another street. It is not likely that the same conditions would exist as to all the streets to be improved. The streets may be of different widths; they may be improved by different materials; some may be improved after petition by the abutting owners and others upon the initiative of council; the elements of damages and benefits would likely be different on different streets.

The various conditions involved in the improvement of a street or alley make it more practical, and almost imperative, that each street should be improved by separate and distinct proceedings and that is the apparent purpose of the statute.

While the general purpose of the ordinance would be the improvement of streets, yet it is for the improvement of separate and distinct streets, and would thereby contain matter pertaining to two separate improvements.

Any ordinance which provides for the improvement of more than one street would be in violation of Section 4226, General Code, because it would contain more than one subject.

Respectfully,

TIMOTHY S. HOGAN,

Attorney General.

INITIATIVE AND REFERENDUM ACT—WITHDRAWING OF NAMES FROM PETITION AFTER FILING WITH CLERK NOT AUTHORIZED.

It is the duty of the clerk, after determining that 15 per cent. of the electors have duly signed the referendum petition, and within 10 days after the filing thereof to certify the ordinance to the proper officers having control of the elections in the municipality.

When the petition has once been filed with the clerk, there is no authority for the withdrawing of names therefrom.

COLUMBUS, OHIO, May 10, 1912.

HON. TOLLIS T. SHAW, City Solicitor, Defiance, Ohio.

DEAR SIR:—Under date of April 19th you advise us of the following state of facts:

> "The council of the city of Defiance recently passed an ordinance granting a certain franchise which comes under Section 2 of the initiative and referendum law passed May 31, 1911, volume 102, page 521 Ohio Laws. After the passage of the ordinance and within thirty days, a referendum petition was filed with the clerk, containing a sufficient amount of names to warrant the clerk certifying the ordinance to the board of elections. Afterwards, and within ten days of the filing of the petition with the clerk, certain signers of the original petition requested the clerk to withdraw their names from the petition. The number so withdrawn reduces the names in number to such a number which would be less than the number of signatures required authorizing the certificate to be made by the clerk. The clerk assumed to have the authority after the filing of the petition with him, to strike from the petition the names of such parties making such request."

You therefore, desire to know:

> "First. Whether or not, if after a proper number of signatures to the petition are signed, and the petition filed with the clerk, the parties so signing have a right to withdraw their names by request with the clerk, and whether or not the clerk has authority to withhold the certificate required by reason of this fact.
> "Second. Under the second paragraph of the section referred to, can a petition be filed any time within sixty days, and do the words 'during which time' mean sixty days?"

In answer to your second question we have heretofore referred you to an opinion rendered to Hon. Don J. Young, prosecuting attorney, Norwalk, Ohio, in our letter to you of April 23, 1912.

Section 4227-2, General Code, provides for referendum and states that if "within thirty days after the passage or adoption of" an ordinance "by the council there be filed with the clerk of such municipal corporation, a petition or petitions "ordering the submission of such ordinance * * * to the vote of the electors of such municipal corporation," such ordinance shall be submitted to the qualified electors for their approval or rejection.

It is made the duty of the clerk within ten days after the filing of such petition or petitions to certify such ordinance to the officer or officers having control of elections in such municipal corporation. There is no authority whatever in said statute permitting the withdrawal of names from a petition after said petition has been filed with the clerk. Upon the filing of a petition or petitions it is the duty of the clerk to determine whether or not there is the requisite fifteen per cent. of the electors duly signed to the petition. Such is his sole authority in the matter and if he finds that the same bears the names of fifteen per cent. of the electors it is his duty to certify the ordinance to the proper officers as provided in said section. If when the petition was filed there were the requisite number of names signed to the petition the statute in regard to referendum has been complied with and such being the case and there being no authority to withdraw the names after the filing of such petition, I am of the opinion that the parties so signing have not the right to withdraw their names by request with the clerk after the petitions are so filed with him, nor has the clerk the authority by reason of this fact to withhold the certifying of the ordinance to the proper officers having control of elections in such municipality for submission to a vote of the electors at the next general election.

Yours very truly,
TIMOTHY S. HOGAN,
Attorney General.

CIVIL SERVICE—APPOINTMENT—CERTIFICATION BY CIVIL SERVICE COMMISSION OF ONE CANDIDATE TO APPOINTING BOARD—BOARD NOT OBLIGED TO APPOINT.

Section 4481, General Code, providing for the appointment of members of the classified service in a city, by the appointing board from a list of three candidates which have been examined and certified by the civil service commission in investing said board with a power of "appointment" intends to confer a certain power of discretion and when therefore, only one candidate is certified by the commission, the board may appoint or reject him as it sees fit. When three candidates are certified however, the board is obliged to appoint one of the three.

The civil service commission may drop from the eligible list, only such candidates as have been certified to the appointing board three times in a list from which the board is required to make a selection to wit: in a list of at least three candidates.

COLUMBUS, OHIO, April 29, 1912.

HON. ALLEN G. AIGLER, City Solicitor, Bellevue, Ohio.

DEAR SIR:—Under date of April 16, 1912, you inquire:

> "Recently the civil service commission of Bellevue held an examination for candidates for the position of patrolman in the police department. Only one candidate appeared and took the examination. The civil service commission passed the candidate and thereupon certified his name to the director of public safety for appointment to the office of patrolman. The civil service commission claims that the director of public safety is required to appoint the person so certified, there being a vacancy in the office of patrolman."

The manner of making apppointments to the classified service in a city is fixed by Section 4481, General Code, which provides:

> "Appointments shall be made in the following manner: The appointing board or officer shall notify the commission of any vacancy to be filled. The commission shall thereupon certify to such board or officer the three candidates graded highest in the respective lists as shown by the result of such examination. Such board or officers shall thereupon appoint one of the three so certified. Grades and standings so established shall remain the grades for a period of six months, or longer if the commission so determines, and in succeeding notifications of vacancies, candidates not selected may be dropped by the commission after having been certified to total of three times."

This section requires the civil service commission to certify three names, and the appointing officer or board is required to appoint one of the three so certified. His discretion of appointment is limited to the three names certified.

The effect of certifying only one name and requiring the appointing officer or board to appoint the person certified would take from such officer or board the right of appointment and place it in the hands of the civil service commission.

In case of People ex rel. vs. Mosher, 163 N. Y. 32, it is held:

> "The provision of the civil service law that 'appointments shall be made * * * by appointment of those graded highest in open competitive examinations conducted by the state or municipal commission' is unconstitutional, since the right of appointment of necessity involves the power of selection and the exercise of discretion and judgment, and the limitation of the right of appointment to the person graded highest would transfer the real power of appointment from the local authorities to the civil service commission and thus completely nullify that provision of the constitution which confers the power of appointing city officers upon the local authorities of the municipality."

On page 40 of the opinion, Martin, J., says:

> "The decisions of this and other courts, state and federal, as to the meaning of the word 'appointment' and what constitutes an appointment under the law, are to the effect that the choice of a person to fill an office constitutes the essence of the appointment, that the selection must be the discretionary act of the officer or board clothed with the power of of appointment; that while he or it may listen to the recommendation or advice of others, yet the selection must finally be his or its act, which has never been regarded or held to be ministerial. Thus it is seen that the authorities upon the subject and the opinion of those who have been connected with the civil service reform from its inception all agree in the conclusion that the power of selection for a public office is and should be vested alone in the officers or board authorized to appoint, although it be limited to persons possessing the qualifications required by the civil service statutes and rules, and that at least some power of selection is necessary to constitute an appointment, which should be exercised by the local authorities, independently of the civil service commission."

On page 42, Martin, J., further says:

> " * * * As we have already seen, the right of appointment, of necessity, involves the power of selection and the exercise of discretion and judgment. Without that power in no just sense can it be said that the right exists."

Under the laws of Ohio the civil service commission has no right of appointment. It can only limit the power of appointment by requiring the appointing officer or board to appoint one of the three candidates certified by it. The statute leaves the appointing officer or board a limited discretion and power of selection in making the appointments, but does not entirely take away the discretionary power. This power of selection is limited to the three who are certified. A further limitation of this discretion would be unauthorized. A certification of less than three names would not be a compliance with the statute and the appointing officer or board would not be required to appoint if less than three candidates were certified.

It appears that the civil service commission has certified the one name upon its list. Such person is qualified for the appointment and the appointing officer or board may appoint the person so certified, but is not required to do so.

A further question presents itself. The statute provides that when a candidate has been certified three times and has not been appointed, the civil service commission may drop such candidate from the eligible list. Under this provision a candidate has a right to be certified three times in a list of three candidates. When less than three are certified, the appointing officer or board is not required to appoint either of them, but when three are certified one of the three must be appointed.

In order to give a candidate an equal chance of appointment with the others he should be certified three times in a list from which the appointing officer or board is required to make a selection and not three times in a list from which no appointment is required.

Respectfully,
TIMOTHY S. HOGAN,
Attorney General.

COUNCIL—POWER TO FIX HOURS OF DUTY FOR FIREMEN.

Under Section 4393, General Code, council may fix the hours of labor of firemen with the one limitation that they shall not require continuous duty more than six days out of every seven.

COLUMBUS, OHIO, May 13, 1912.

HON. MARSHALL G. FENTON, City Solicitor, Chillicothe, Ohio.

DEAR SIR:—Your favor of May 6, 1912, is received in which you inquire of the following:

"Will you kindly render me an opinion in regard to the time required for the members of the fire department to be on duty? I have rendered an opinion holding that the firemen are not required to be on duty more than six days in every seven as provided in 101 Ohio Laws 380."

Section 4393, General Code, as amended in 101 Ohio Laws 380, provides:

"The council may establish all necessary regulations to guard against the occurrence of fires, protect the property and lives of the citizens against damages and accidents resulting therefrom and for such purpose may establish and maintain a fire department, provide for the establishment and organization of fire engine and hose companies, establish the hours of labor of the members of its fire department, but after the first day of January, nineteen hundred and eleven, council shall not require any fireman to be on duty continuously more than six days in every seven, and provide such by-laws and regulations for their government as is deemed necessary and proper."

By virtue of this section council is authorized to "establish the hours of labor" of the members of the fire department. The only restriction placed upon that power is that after January 1, 1911, no fireman shall be required "to be on duty continuously more than six days in every seven." The effect of this provision is that each fireman must have at least one day off duty out of each seven days.

So long as the time fixed for duty by council does not exceed six days of continuous duty out of any seven consecutive days it would not conflict with the statute. The statute fixes six days continuous duty as the maximum of consecutive days of service. It does not fix any minimum. The hours of service are left to the discretion of council with this one limitaiton that no fireman shall be required to be on duty continuously for more than six days in every seven days.

Respectfully,

TIMOTHY S. HOGAN,
Attorney General.

CHIEFS OF POLICE—FEES FOR SERVICES IN STATE CRIMINAL CASES IN POLICE COURT.

The city has no control over fees assessed in state cases, and Section 4213, General Code, providing that all fees pertaining to any office shall be paid into the city treasury, has no application to fees assessed in police courts for state cases.

Under Section 4581, General Code, providing that other fees in police court shall be the same in state cases as are allowed in probate court or before justices of the peace in similar cases, the chief of police is entitled to legal fees charged to him for services in state criminal cases in a police court.

Such fees being payable as in a justice court, the chief of police when he performs the services of a constable, shall be compensated under Section 3347, General Code, and when he performs the services of a sheriff, shall be paid as provided in Section 2845, General Code.

COLUMBUS, OHIO, May 13, 1912.

HON. HOWARD E. MCGREGOR, City Solicitor, Springfield, Ohio.

DEAR SIR:—Under date of May 1, 1912, you inquire of this department as follows:

> "The question has arisen in this city as to whether or not the chief of police should be paid fees for attendance at police court and for the service of process issued by the judge of said court, as in the same manner as are allowed fees in the probate court or before justices of the peace."

Your inquiry covers the services of the chief of police in all cases before the police court, whether arising from violation of city ordinances, or from violations of the statutes of Ohio.

Section 4581, General Code, provides:

> "Other fees in the police court shall be the same in state cases as are allowed in the probate court, or before justices of the peace, in like cases, and in cases for violation of ordinances such fees as the council, by ordinance, prescribes, not exceeding the fees for like services in state cases."

The fees in the cases for violation of ordinances are to be fixed by council. The fees in state cases are to be the same as are allowed in the probate court or before justices of the peace in like cases.

The disposition of the fees in city cases will be first considered.

Section 4213, General Code, provides:

> "The salary of any officer, clerk or employe shall not be increased or diminished during the term for which he was elected or appointed, and, except as otherwise provided in this title, all fees pertaining to any office shall be paid into the city treasury."

In the case of Portsmouth vs. Milstead, 18 Cir. Dec., 384, it is held:

> "The provisions of 96 O. L., Sec. 126 (Rev. Stat., 1536-633; Lan., 3228), requiring 'that all fees pertaining to any office shall be paid into the city treasury,' has reference to municipal fees solely, or such fees as may be fixed by municipal authority.
> "Said section does not authorize cities to interfere with the fees of mayors or chiefs of police in state criminal cases; whether such authority can be delegated to municipalities, quaere."

The fees in cases of violation of ordinances are prescribed by council, that is by municipal authority. Fees charged to the chief of police in such cases should be paid into the city treasury. The salary which the chief of police receives from the city is paid him for his services performed for the city, and he is not entitled to any fees in city cases.

In order to determine the disposition of fees in state cases, it will be necessary to ascertain what fees can be legally charged to a chief of police.

There is no specific provision of statute requiring the chief of police to serve process in the police court, nor is there any other statute, than Section 4581, General Code, supra., which might authorize the charging of fees to the chief of police in state criminal cases in a police court.

In the case of Delaware vs. Matthews, 13 Cir. Ct., N. S., 539, Taggart, J., says at page 540, of the opinion:

> "* * * The chief of police, in cities having a police court, were to receive like fees as constables and sheriffs in the probate court and before justices of the peace."

The provisions of Section 4581, General Code, were in their present form when the above opinion was rendered. At that time, as now, there was no specific provision of statute making it the duty of the chief of police to serve process in the police court. He is, however, the proper officer to serve such process.

Section 4581, General Code, authorizes the charging of fees to a chief of police for official service in a state criminal case before a judge of a police court.

The statute provides that the fees shall be the same "as are allowed in the probate court, or before justices of the peace, in like cases." This statute seems to provide two methods of charging fees.

Process in a probate court may be served by a sheriff or a constable.

Section 1596, General Code, provides:

> "When required by the probate judge, sheriffs, coroners and constables shall attend his court, serve and return process directed and delivered to them by such judge, * * * *"

"The fees in a probate court are prescribed by Section 11204, General Code, which provides:

> "The fees of witnesses, jurors, sheriffs, coroners and constables, for all services rendered in the probate court, or by order of the probate judge, shall be the same as is provided by law, for like services in the court of common pleas."

The fees of the chief of police, in accordance with the above provisions, are to be the same as are allowed in justices courts and in the court of common pleas in like cases. The same situation is thus presented as was presented in considering a similar provision in Section 4534, General Code. In construing this latter section, this department, in an opinion, a copy of which is enclosed, rendered to the bureau of inspection and supervision of public offices, dated August 30, 1911, it was held:

> "That in cases other than those arising out of violations or ordinances, the fees of a constable should be taxed in favor of the chief of police under Section 4534, General Code, as amended, unless Section 3347, which prescribes the fees of a constable fails to provide a fee for the specific service performed by the chief of police; in which case the chief is entitled to the fee provided for the sheriff by Section 2845 as amended."

The foregoing conclusion was based upon the ground that the duties of a chief of police in a mayor's court are similar to those of a constable before a justice of the peace, rather than those of a sheriff in a court of common pleas. The same applies to the present situation, and the rule as above stated should apply to Section 4581, General Code, now under consideration.

In the case of Portsmouth vs. Milstead, 18 Cir. Dec., 384, supra., it is seen that the city has no control of the fees charged for services of a chief of police in a state criminal case. These fees are subject to state control and Section 4213, General Code, requiring all fees to be paid into the city treasury, does not apply to the fees of a chief of police in state criminal cases.

The chief of police is entitled to the legal fees charged to him for services in state criminal cases in a police court.

Respectfully,
TIMOTHY S. HOGAN,
Attorney General.

CIVIL SERVICE—INITIATIVE AND REFERENDUM ACT—VILLAGE ADVANCING TO CITY—ORDINANCE PROVIDING FOR FIREMEN—POWERS OF APPOINTMENT OF FIREMEN BY DIRECTOR OF PUBLIC SAFETY.

On January 29, 1911, when Bellevue was a village, the mayor appointed for a term of one year, the necessary firemen under Section 4390, General Code.

On January 10, 1912, after Bellevue had become a city, the city council passed an ordinance organizing a city fire department, which ordinance, by virtue of the initiative and referendum act, could not become effective until after the expiration of sixty days and the village ordinance organizing the fire department would remain in effect until that time.

Pending such time, therefore, the director of public safety could act only under the village ordinance and therefor, at the expiration of the terms of the village firemen to wit: After January 29, 1912, the director could fill the vacancies by appointment.

The members appointed by the director would, however, be subject to civil service regulations, and therefore, such appointments could be only temporary, under Section 4488, General Code, until examinations could be held and the positions filled as required by the civil service law.

Under these rules, therefore, when the director made appointments on January 31, 1912, to fill positions under the new ordinance, aforesaid, which had not yet become effective, he could only appoint the number authorized by the village ordinance, and these could only be compensated as de facto officers.

COLUMBUS, OHIO, April 4, 1912.

HON. ALLAN G. AIGLER, City Solicitor, Bellevue, Ohio.

DEAR SIR:—Under date of March 9, 1912, you submit the following inquiries:

> "On the 29th day of January, 1911, the mayor of the village of Bellevue, with the advice and consent of the council, appointed for a term of one year the necessary firemen for the village of Bellevue in accordance with Section 4390, of the General Code of Ohio. The salary of the village firemen was fixed by ordinance. When did the terms of the village firemen expire?
> "The civil service commission of the city of Bellevue has so far failed to hold the necessary examinations for firemen to fill the positions created by ordinance for the organization of the city fire department.

On the 31st day of January, 1912, the director of public safety appointed firemen to fill the places created by the ordinance for the organization of the city fire department to serve until such time as the civil service commission should be able to certify names for appointment to the positions of firemen. Perhaps I should add that the ordinance for the organization of the city fire department and fixing the salaries of the members thereof was passed on the 10th day of January, 1912.

"As between the old village firemen and the appointees of the director of public safety, who, if any, are entitled to the salary as firemen of the city?"

The ordinance of January 10, 1912, to organize the city fire department and to fix the salaries of the members thereof, is an ordinance involving the expenditure of money. Such ordinance, as heretofore held by this department, is subject to the Crosser initiative and referendum act and does not become operative until sixty days after its passage. The ordinance would not be effective for any purpose until said sixty days had elapsed. Until such time the director of public safety could not act under it, and any appointments of firemen to fill positions created by this ordinance to take effect prior to the date when such ordinance became operative, would be null and void.

Bellevue is one of those municipalities which passed from a village to a city by the result of the last federal census.

Section 3499, General Code, provides:

"Officers of a village advanced to a city, or of a city reduced to a village, shall continue in office until succeeded by the proper officers of the new corporation at the next regular election, and the ordinances thereof not inconsistent with the laws relating to the new corporation shall continue in force until changed or repealed."

The village form of government was continued by virtue of Section 3499, General Code, until the new form of government could be established and the city officers elected at the next general election of municipal officers.

The evident purpose of this statute, as shown by its provisions, was to provide a transition from the village form of government to the city form, without causing any break in the exercise of the governmental functions. The old form should continue until the new could be perfected. The officers of the village are continued in office until succeeded by the proper officers of the new corporation, and the ordinances of the village, not inconsistent with the laws relating to a city, are continued in force until repealed or changed by the new council.

The council elected for the city took office on the first day of January, 1912, and on January 10, 1912, the ordinance reorganizing the fire department was passed. The council acted diligently in providing for the new fire department, but for reasons over which they had no control, the ordinance could not become effective until sixty days after its passage.

A fire department is an important and necessary feature of a city government. It was not the intent of the legislature that the city should be without fire protection until the ordinance reorganizing the fire department should become operative, but on the contrary, the purpose and intent of the statute is that the old organization should continue until superseded by the new.

Under the village form of government, firemen, other than volunteers, are appointed for terms of one year as provided by Section 4390, General Code, which reads:

> "Council may provide for the employment of such firemen as it deems best and fix their compensation, or for the services of volunteer firemen. All firemen, other than volunteers, shall be appointed by the mayor for terms of one year, with the advice and consent of the council."

It appears that in Bellevue the firemen were appointed on January 29, 1911, for terms of one year. The terms of these firemen, unless superseded by the new firemen of the city, would not expire until January 29, 1912. They were not superseded by the new firemen at that time, and they were therefore, entitled to serve their full terms.

At the expiration of their terms, however, the ordinanc reorganizing the fire department had not become effective. This ordinance, although passed prior to January 29, 1912, did not repeal or change the village ordinance organizing the fire department, until it became operative.

Fire departments are established under both village and city forms of government. The general purpose of each is the same, the protection of life and property against loss by fire. The respective duties of the firemen would be substantially the same under either form of government.

The ordinance of the village organizing the fire department would not be inconsistent with the laws relating to the city form of government. The ordinance of the village of Bellevue, organizing the fire department, continued in force until superseded by the ordinance of the city, which would be the date when said ordinance became operative.

The fire department passed under the control of the director of public safety on January 1, 1912, or as soon thereafter as he took his office. The director of public safety could act under the village ordinance until such time as the city ordinance became effective. The terms of the village firemen expired on January 29, 1912. The director of public safety could either continue these men in their positions, or he could appoint others to fill the vacancies. These men were appointed for a definite term and at the expiration of that time, there would be a vacancy which could be filled in the manner provided by law.

Under the city form of government, the fire department is subject to civil service regulations. It is held by the courts that when the departments of the city were placed under civil service, the incumbents in the positions of the classified service, continued in their positions without examination, and were thereafter subject to civil service rules. This principle does not apply to a village passing to a city. The officers appointed under the village form of government would not be continued in office without examination.

Section 4488, General Code, authorizes temporary appointments as follows:

> "To prevent the stoppage of public business or to meet extraordinary exigencies, as provided in this title, the mayor may make temporary appointments."

It appears from your inquiry that no examinations have been held by the civil service commission to fill the positions of firemen. From a further communication it appears that examinations have later been held but that not enough have passed to fill all the positions. In such cases temporary appointments can be made by virtue of Section 4488, General Code, until all the positions can be filled as required by the civil service law.

The appointments to fill the vacancies upon the expiration of the terms of the village firemen would be only temporary.

From your letter it appears that the appointments of the director of public safety made on January 31, 1912, were made to fill positions created under the new ordinance. The only positions he could then fill were those authorized by the village ordinance.

While this proceeding may be irregular, and the firemen so appointed were only de facto officers or employes, yet there were no de jure firemen who could claim the compensation. The terms of the firemen appointed under the village form of government had expired, the city ordinance had not yet become effective, and the new appointees were actually filling the positions and performing the duties pertaining thereto.

In so far as the appointees of January 31, 1912, were filling positions authorized by the village ordinance they are entitled to the pay fixed by such ordinance. If the number so appointed was in excess of the number of positions authorized by the village ordinance, the excessive number could not be paid.

Respectfully,
TIMOTHY S. HOGAN,
Attorney General.

CIVIL SERVICE—SUMMARY DISCHARGE OF FIREMEN NOT APPOINTED FROM CLASSIFIED LIST.

When firemen were appointed after the department had been placed under the civil service, but before any classified list had been created, such firemen could be summarily discharged as soon as the positions were properly filled under civil service regulations.

COLUMBUS, OHIO, May 12, 1912.

HON. A. J. LAYNE, City Solicitor, Ironton, Ohio.

DEAR SIR:—Your favor of January 11, 1912, is received in which you inquire as follows:

> "Three firemen of the fire department were summarily discharged by the mayor and director of public safety January 10, 1912. These three firemen were respectively appointed July 9, 1908, and September 20, 1909, and February 1, 1911. They were not appointed from any classified list, as there was no such list until very recently. Their positions were, on said 10th day of January, 1912, filled regularly from the classified list of those who had successfully taken the civil service examination. These firemen were discharged on the theory that they were temporary employes and not entitled to service when an eligible civil service list was available.
> "Had the mayor and the director of public safety the right to summarily remove said firemen?"

The police and fire departments of cities were placed under civil service by the provisions of Section 153, and others, of the Municipal Code, which was passed October 22, 1902, and became effective as to these provisions on the first Monday in May, 1903.

Following the decisions of the courts this department has held that when a department of a city passes from the unclassified to the classified service, the incumbents in the positions pass into the classified service without examination and are thereafter subject to civil service regulations.

It appears from your letter that the three firemen who were discharged were each of them appointed after the fire department had passed under civil service regulations; and that they were not appointed as required by civil service laws.

Section 4485, General Code, provides how members of the classified service shall be removed, as follows:

> "No officer or employe within the classified service shall be removed, reduced in rank, or discharged, except for some cause relating to his moral character or his suitableness to perform the duties of his position, though he may be suspended from duty for a period not to exceed thirty days, pending the investigation of charges against him. Such cause shall be determined by the removing authority and reported in writing, with a specific statement of reasons, to the commission, but shall not be made public without the consent of the person discharged. Before such removal, reduction, or discharge, the removing authority shall give such person a reasonable opportunity to know the charges against him and to be heard in his own behalf."

The above section protects those who have been legally appointed to positions in the classified service, or who passed to the classified service because they held the positions when such positions were placed in the classified service. The three firemen in question do not come within either of these classes. They were not incumbents in 1903 and they were not appointed from the classified list after examination. The positions which they occupied should have been filled from the classified service as soon as available. Their discharge in the manner stated by you was not illegal.

Respectfully,

TIMOTHY S. HOGAN,

Attorney General.

COUNTY AUDITOR—MANDATORY DUTY TO DRAW DRAFT WHEN REQUESTED UNDER SECTION 2692, GENERAL CODE.

Section 2692, General Code, makes it mandatory upon the county auditor to draw the draft therein provided for when properly requested by the proper local authority.

COLUMBUS, OHIO, May 1, 1912.

HON. A. J. LAYNE, City Solicitor, Ironton, Ohio.

DEAR SIR:—I have your letter of January 1, 1912, in which you inquire:

> "(1.) Under Section 2692, General Code, has the county auditor discretion to draw or not draw such draft when properly requested by the proper local authority?"

My opinion is that the words "may draw" are not discretionary but authoritive, and that the auditor has no discretion when the request is properly made.

I am of the opinion that, assuming the request is within the two-thirds limit, there can be no reason why the auditor should refuse such request. As to some taxing districts the advance payments, perhaps, ought not to be favored, in view of the provisions of the Smith one per cent. law; that act has the effect, in my judgment, and as I have heretofore held, of devoting the proceeds of a levy made in a given year to the sole purpose of operating the taxing district during the next fiscal year. Therefore, the proceeds of a given levy cannot be used until the beginning of the next fiscal half year. As to school districts and municipal corporations, at least, however, the fiscal year for which the levy is made begins prior to the first distribution of the proceeds of the levy, so that it is practically necessary in the case of such taxing districts to rely upon the advance payments made under authority of Section 2692.

Investigation will develop when this provision was first enacted that it was made mandatory, and the only change in phraseology was when it became Section 11234, Revised Statutes. The rule laid down in such cases is found in Allen vs. Russell, 37 O. S., 337, as follows:

> "But where the general stautes of the state, or all on a particular subject are revised and consolidated, there is a strong presumption that the same construction which the statutes received before revision and consolidation should be applied to the enactment in its revised and consolidated form, although the language may have been changed."

I am, therefore, of the opinion that Section 2692, General Code, is mandatory as to the county auditor.

Very respectfully,
TIMOTHY S. HOGAN,
Attorney General.

UNION CEMETERY TRUSTEES—POWER TO HIRE CLERK AND FIX SALARY—POWER AND DUTY OF JOINT BOARD OF CONTROL TO FIX SALARY OF TRUSTEES.

A member of the board of trustees of a union cemetery cannot be employed and receive pay as a clerk for the secretary or managing trustee of such board.

The trustees of a union cemetery are vested with the powers of the trustees of the cemetery of a municipal corporation, which powers are identical with those of the director of public service in a city. Such powers including the right to appoint a clerk to the secretary and managing trustee if said clerk is deemed necessary, and also the power to fix the salary of said clerk.

The salary of said clerk must be approved however, by the joint board of control of such union cemetery, composed of the governing boards of the subdivisions which jointly maintain the cemetery.

Said joint board may also fix a compensation for the board of trustees.

COLUMBUS, OHIO, April 22, 1912.

HON. A. J. LAYNE, City Solicitor, Ironton, Ohio.

DEAR SIR:—Under date of January 3, 1912, you ask an opinion of this department upon the following:

"The trustees elect of a union cemetery have asked for answers to the three questions following:

"Can one of the trustees be employed and paid for services rendered by him as clerk for the secretary and managing trustee?

"Can the board of trustees employ a clerk for the secretary and managing trustee who is not one of the trustees and can they pay him for said services?

"In your opinion of May 31, 1911, in reply to letter of Will E. Heck, state examiner, as found at page 177 of the report of the examination for the city of Ironton (No. 7.) we find that you use the following language, to wit:

"'The duties of the board of trustees of union cemetery being defined by law as above set forth, no member of such board has the right to receive any compensation for any work or labor except such as is paid to every member of the board by virtue of the public office which he holds.'

"Is there any law or authority for the payment of the members of such board 'by virtue of the public office which they hold."

Your first inquiry is answered in the opinion rendered to the bureau of inspection and supervision of public offices on may 31, 1911, to which you refer, and in which it is stated:

"The trustees of union cemeteries are public officers of the municipality or township and are elected by the people and cannot employ one of their number for extra pay to do any necessary work."

It therefore follows, that a member of the board of trustees of a union cemetery cannot be employed and receive pay as a clerk for the secretary or managing trustee of such board.

In answering your second inquiry it will be necessary to refer to the statutes. Section 4189, General Code provides:

"The cemetery so owned in common, shall be under the control and management of the trustees, and their authority over it and their duties in relation thereto, shall be the same as where the cemetery is the exclusive property of a single corporation."

Section 4178, General Code, provides the duties of trustees of a cemetery of a village, as follows:

"The board of cemetery trustees shall have the powers and perform the duties prescribed in this chapter for the director of public service. Such trustees shall organize in accordance with the provisions in this chapter for the organization of trustees of union cemeteries."

Section 4162, General Code, provides for the management of cemeteries of a city, as follows:

"The director shall direct all the improvements and embellishments of the grounds and lots, protect and preserve them, and, subject to the approval of the council, appoint necessary superintendents, employes and agents, determine their term of office and the amount of their compensation."

The director herein referred to is the director of public service.

Section 4170, General Code, authorizes the director of public service to employ a clerk, as follows:

> "The director shall appoint a clerk, and keep accurate minutes of all his proceedings, and report quarterly to the council all the moneys received and disbursed by him in the management and control of the cemetery."

Section 4193, General Code, provides:

> "The trustees of such township or townships, or the council or councils of such municipal corporation or corporations may at any time call a joint meeting of the council or councils and the trustees of the township or townships, on a reasonable notice given by either, for the purpose of making joint rules and regulations for the government of the cemetery, or changing them, and making such orders as may be found necessary for the application of moneys arising from the sale of lots, taxes, or otherwise."

The trustees of townships and councils of municipal corporations referred to in the latter section are the trustees and councils of the political divisions that have joint control of the union cemetery and for whom said cemetery is maintained.

By virtue of Section 4189, General Code, the trustees of a union cemetery have the same authority and perform the same duties over such cemetery, as is prescribed for cemeteries maintained by a single corporation. Section 4170, General Code, prescribes the powers and duties of trustees of a village cemetery and gives them the same power as is granted the director of public service.

By Section 4162, General Code, the director of public service is authorized to appoint the necessary superintendents, employes and agents and fix their compensation, all of which is subject to the approval of council. The trustees of a union cemetery have the same power. As the trustees of a union cemetery act for more than one political division, there is no council for the cemetery district. But the statutes, Section 4193, General Code, makes the trustees of the township and the council of the municipal corporations interested in the cemetery, a joint body for making rules and regulations and for making orders for the "application of moneys arising from the sale of lots, taxes, or otherwise."

It is my conclusion that the trustees of a union cemetery may appoint a clerk, if it deems such clerk necessary, to the secretary and managing trustee, and fix his compensation, but that such appointment and the fixing of his compensation is subject to the approval of the joint body composed of the trustees, or members of the councils of the political divisions that jointly maintain such union cemetery.

You next inquire as to the compensation of the trustees of a union cemetery.

The statute does not fix any compensation therefor, neither does the statute provide that they shall serve without compensation.

Under the authority vested in the joint body of trustees and council as provided in Section 4193, General Code, this joint body could fix a compensation for such trustees. Council in a municipal corporation have general powers to fix salaries, and in townships this power is usually vested in the trustees. This power is not taken away when they act jointly with a similar body.

Respectfully,

TIMOTHY S. HOGAN,
Attorney General.

SALARY, INCREASE AND DECREASE OF—POLICE OFFICERS IN CIVIL SERVICE—NO TERM OF OFFICE.

Police officers, under the civil service, do not hold their office for a specific term and therefore their salaries may be increased or decreased during tenure of office.

COLUMBUS, OHIO, May 18, 1912.

HON. BEN L. BENNETT, City Solicitor, East Liverpool, Ohio.

DEAR SIR:—Under date of April 25, 1912, you advised me that your city council is desirous of raising the salaries of the members of the police department, but that some time ago the supreme court affirmed a decision of the Lake county circuit court, without report, in which it was held in the lower court that as a police officer's term of office extended during good behavior his salary cannot be raised or lowered during incumbency. You further call attention to the fact that an exhaustive and well worded opinion in the court of common pleas of Cuyahoga county has held that an officer's salary could be raised during his term of office.

When the matter of raising or lowering policemen's salaries was first brought to the attention of this department an opinion was rendered on January 20, 1911, to the bureau of inspection and supervision of public offices, Columbus, Ohio, holding that policemen had no official term and, therefore, did not come within the purview of Section 4213, General Code. At the time of rendering such opinion there had been no expression of court upon the subject.

Subsequently the decision of the circuit court of Lake county in the case of State ex rel. Speller vs. Painesville was published February 13, 1911, in the Ohio Law Bulletin, Volume LXVI No. 7 which is the case to which you refer in your letter of inquiry. Under date of February 14, 1911, the Hon. James W. Galbraith, prosecuting attorney, Mansfield, Ohio, again submitted the question in reference to firemen as to the right to increase or diminish their salaries, and under date of March 7, 1911, I rendered an opinion based solely on said circuit court case that the salaries of policemen and firemen could not be increased or diminished. As such decision was the only one on the subject at that time I felt it to be my duty to waive my personal opinion and follow the ruling of the court as therein stated. I did not at that time have before me anything pertaining to such case but the decision as published as foregoing stated. This case was subsequently taken to the supreme court for review and the supreme court affirmed the judgment of the circuit court without report. In the entry there is no expression of the supreme court that it followed the reasoning of the circuit court in said circuit court's opinion. I have carefully examined the record and briefs as filed in the supreme court in said case and find that the supreme court would have had to affirm said judgment on either theory of the case, to wit: that the salaries of policemen and firemen could be increased or diminished after they had entered the service, or on the theory that such salaries would not be increased or diminished after they had entered the service. The record in said case discloses that on July 15, 1903, the council of Painesville passed an ordinance fixing the salary of patrolmen in the sum of seven hundred and twenty dollars per year; that on October 12, 1903, the relator was appointed a patrolman; that on December 18, 1907, council passed an ordinance increasing the salary of patrolmen to eight hundred and forty dollars per year, and that on January 12, 1910, said council reduced the salary of patrolmen to the original sum of seven hundred and twenty dollars per year. It would, therefore, appear that under either view of the case the salary of the patrolmen was seven hundred and twenty dollars per year, and that, consequently, he was not entitled to the writ as prayed for. Since the affirmance of said case by the supreme court there have been two decisions of the common pleas court in relation to the matter, one by Judge Lawrence of the court of common pleas of Cuyahoga county, in the case of Stage vs. Coughlan et al. decided March 15, 1912, and found reported in 12 Nisi Prius n. s. 419, and one by judge Sprigg, of the court of common pleas of Montgomery county, in the case of State ex rel. vs. Bish decided March 9, 1912, reported in 12 Nisi Prius n. s. 369. In both of the above cases it was held that the salaries of policemen and firemen can be increased or diminished for the reason that said policemen and firemen do not hold their positions for a fixed or definite term.

After a very careful consideration of the two cases decided in the common pleas courts above mentioned, together with the opinion in the so-called Painesville case, and in view of the fact that the supreme court did not necessarily affirm the reasoning of the circuit court in affirming the judgment of said Painesville case, I am of the opinion that the reasoning of the common pleas courts is the better one, and believe that the same states the proper rule of law.

As before stated in the beginnig of this letter that was my original view in the matter.

I am, therefore, of the opinion that those holding under the civil service are not appointed for a "term" within the meaning of Section 4213, General Code, and that, consequently, council has power to increase or diminish their salaries after appointment.

I beg further to say that I am forwarding copy of this opinion to the bureau of inspection and supervision of public offices, advising them that this department would follow the decisions of the common pleas courts before referred to unless the same were expressly reversed by a superior court, and directing the bureau of inspection and supervision of public offices to be governed accordingly.

Very truly yours,

TIMOTHY S. HOGAN,
Attorney General.

INTEREST OF PUBLIC OFFICIAL IN PUBLIC EXPENDITURES—COUNCILMAN MAY NOT SELL GROCERIES TO CITY HOSPITAL.

By virtue of Sections 3808 and 12910, General Code, a member of a city council cannot sell supplies to a city hospital, or be interested in the expenditure of money by the city other than the fixed compensation of his office.

COLUMBUS, OHIO, May 16, 1912.

HON. R. CLINT COLE, City Solicitor, Findlay, Ohio.

DEAR SIR:—Under date of May 7, 1912, you inquire as follows:

> "The question has come up here as to whether or not, and if so to what extent, councilmen can sell supplies to a city institution.
> "One of our councilmen is engaged in the grocery business. We have a hospital that is a city institution. Can the manager of the hospital buy groceries from this councilman?"

The situation which you present is covered by Sections 3808 and 12910 of the General Code.

Section 3808, General Code, provides:

> "No member of council, board, officer or commissioner of the corporation, shall have any interest in the expenditure of money on the part of the corporation other than his fixed compensation. A violation of any provision of this or the preceding two sections shall disqualify the party violating it from holding any office of trust or profit in the corporation, and shall render him liable to the corporation for all sums of money or other thing he may receive contrary to the provisions of such sections, and if in office he shall be dismissed therefrom."

Section 12910, General Code, provides:

> "Whoever holding an office of trust or profit by election or appointment, or as agent, servant or employe of such officer or of a board of such officers, is interested in a contract for the purchase of property, supplies or fire insurance for the use of the county, township, city, village, board of education or a public institution with which he is connected, shall be imprisoned in the penitentiary not less than one year nor more than ten years."

Section 3808, General Code, prohibits a member of council from having any interest in the expenditure of money on the part of the corporation, other than his fixed compensation. A violation of this provision disqualifies the violator from holding any office of trust or profit in the corporation. Section 12910 makes such transaction a penal offense.

The person in your case is a member of council. The city of which he is a councilman maintains a hospital. The purchase of supplies for this hospital is made with city money. It is an expenditure of the city of which such person is a councilman. The statute prohibits such councilman from having any interest in any expenditure of the city other than his fixed compensation.

If those in control of the city hospital should purchase supplies from the grocery store owned by a councilman of the city, such councilman would have an interest in such expenditure of money, and such councilman would thereby violate the provisions of Section 3808, General Code.

A member of the council of a city cannot sell supplies to a city hospital, or be interested in the expenditure of money by the city other than the fixed compensation of his office.

Respectfully,
TIMOTHY S. HOGAN,
Attorney General.

INTOXICATING LIQUORS—ELECTIONS—CITY LOCATED IN TWO COUNTIES—RIGHT OF CITY VOTERS RESIDING IN DRY COUNTY TO VOTE ON BEAL LAW ELECTION IN SAID CITY.

When three wards of a city are located in one county and another ward of said city is located in another county, which latter county has been voted dry under the Rose law; held:

That the city is the unit and the residents of the ward located in the dry county may vote in a Beal election held in said city.

COLUMBUS, OHIO, May 23, 1912.

HON. ORA R. WADE, City Solicitor, Fostoria, Ohio.

DEAR SIR:—I am in receipt of your communication of May 6th, wherein you state:

> "A petition is being circulated in our city for the purpose of having a special election called to vote the town dry under the Beal law. Our city is located in two counties. The first, third and fourth wards are in Seneca county, and the second ward is in Hancock county, Ohio. Hancock county voted dry three years ago, and the second ward of this city voted in that election, and the territory is still dry.
> "Will you please advise me whether or not Hancock county would have the right to vote at a special election held in this city. Several parties held that they have no right to vote for something they already have. The council of our city has requested me to write you for an opinion."

Section 6108, General Code, provides as follows:

> "When thirty-five per cent. of the qualified electors of a county petition the commissioners, or a common pleas judge thereof, for the privilege to determine by ballot whether the sale of intoxicating liquors as a beverage shall be prohibited within the limits of such county, such commissioners or common pleas judge shall order a special election to be held in not less than twenty days nor more than thirty days from the filing of such petition with or the presentation of such petition to such commissioners or common pleas judge. The petition shall be filed as a public document with the clerk of the common pleas court of such county and preserved for reference and inspection."

Section 6112, General Code, provides as follows:

> "If a majority of the votes cast at such election are in favor of prohibiting the sale of intoxicating liquors as a beverage, then from and after thirty days from the date of holding such election it shall be unlawful for any person, personally or by agent, within the limits of such county to sell, furnish or give away intoxicating liquors to be used as a beverage, or to keep a place where such liquors are kept for sale, given away or furnished for beverage purposes."

The above sections are parts of the so-called Rose law, in reference to local option in counties.

Section 6116, which was part of Section 8 of the Rose law, provides:

> "The foregoing sections of this subdivision of this chapter shall not affect, amend, repeal or alter in any way any other law or ordinance which prohibits throughout a municipality, township or residence district the selling, furnishing or giving away of intoxicating liquor as a beverage, or the keeping of a place where intoxicating liquor is sold, furnished or given away as a beverage."

It was under the provisions of the above act that Hancock county, wherein is situated the second ward of Fostoria, voted dry.

Section 6127 provides:

> "When, in a municipal corporation divided into wards, qualified electors in a number equal to forty per cent. of the number of votes cast therein at the last preceding general elections for state and county officers, or when, in any other municipal corporation, qualified electors in a number equal to forty per cent. of the votes cast therein at the last preceding general election for municipal officers, petition the council thereof for the privilege to determine by ballot whether the sale of intoxicating liquors as a beverage, shall be prohibited within the limits of such municipal corporation, such council shall order a special election to be held at the usual place or places for holding elections therein in not less than twenty days nor more than thirty days from the filing of such petition with the mayor of such municipal corporation or from the presentation of such petition to the council thereof. Thereupon such petition shall be filed as a public document with the clerk of such municipal corporation and preserved for reference and inspection."

Section 6131, General Code, provides:

> "If a majority of the votes cast at such election shall be in favor of prohibiting the sale of intoxicating liquors as a beverage, then from and after thirty days from the date of holding such election, no person, personally or by agent, within the limits of such municipal corporation shall sell, furnish or give away any intoxicating liquors to be used as a beverage, or keep a place where such liquors are kept for sale, given away or furnished for beverage purposes."

Sections 6127 and 6131, supra, are parts of the act known as the Beal law, providing for local option in municipal corporations. In the case of the Rose county local option the entire county is the unit, and whichever way, "wet" or "dry," the county votes, the entire territory of the county becomes, and the fact that municipalities within said counties may vote "wet" or "dry," as the case may be, would be unavailing, as they would become either "wet" or "dry,' dependent upon the way the entire county voted. Again, if, under the law, the county voted "wet," still, under the municipal local option law, the municipalities would have a legal right to vote to determine whether they should remain "wet" or "dry;" and the fact that but a short time prior, the entire county had voted would not prevent the municipal election.

So, in the case cited by you; the mere fact that the second ward of your city, voting in the Hancock county local option election, was voted "dry" would have no bearing at all upon the right of the residents of that portion of the city to take part in a municipal election to determine whether or not the municipality of Fostoria should be "wet" or "dry."

Under Sections 6140 et seq., residence districts may be determined in which the sale of intoxicating liquors shall be prohibited. In that case each residence district would be the unit and it would be possible that a great portion of a municipality might be, in this manner, rendered "dry," and this being a minor vote of the entire electorate of the municipality, in the event that a Beal law local option election was holden in such municipality, it certainly could not be held that the mere fact that the electors in these residence units had exercised their rights of prohibiting the sale of intoxicating liquor in their respective territories would prevent them from voting at the election when the entire municipality was the unit. Likewise in the case instanced by you, it is my opinion that in the proposed Beal law election the city of Fostoria is the unit; such election, under the statute, is to be conducted "as provided by law for the election of members of the council of such municipal corporation as far as such a law is applicable." (Section 6128, General Code.) Therefore, all of the qualified electors of the entire city would be eligible to vote at this municipal election and the mere fact that some of the territory has taken part in a vote of a larger unit would not prevent their exercise of the right to vote in the municipal election.

I am, therefore, of the opinion that the voters of the second ward of your city have a perfect right to vote in the proposed Beal law election.

Very truly yours,

TIMOTHY S. HOGAN.

Attorney General.

COUNCILMAN OF CITY—MAY BE APPOINTED STREET COMMISSIONER AFTER RESIGNATION.

There is nothing in the statutes to prohibit a councilman of a city from resigning and immediately receiving an appointment as street commissioner, under the public service department.

COLUMBUS, OHIO, May 27, 1912.

HON. JAMES L. LEONARD, City Solicitor, Mt. Vernon, Ohio.

DEAR SIR:—Under date of May 11, 1912, you inquire as follows:

> "Can a duly elected and acting councilman resign and immediately thereafter be appointed to the office of street commissioner? Does Section 12912, General Code, apply to a case of this kind?"

I take it that the councilman and street commissioner to whom you refer are officers of a city and not of a village. The statute prescribes the duties of a street commissioner of a village, but does not prescribe his duties in a city. The director of public service in a city has the authority which is granted to the street commissioner in a village.

Section 4364, General Code, provides:

> "Under the direction of council, the street commissioner, or an engineer, when one is so provided by council, shall supervise the improvement and repair of streets, avenues, alleys, lands, lanes, squares, wards, landings, market houses, bridges, viaducts, sidewalks, sewers, drains, ditches, culverts, ship canals, streams, and water courses. Such commissioner or engineer shall also supervise the lighting, sprinkling and cleaning of all public places, and shall perform such other duties consistent with the nature of his office as council may require."

Section 4325, General Code, provides:

"The director of public service shall supervise the improvement and repair of streets, avenues, alleys, lands, lanes, squares, wharves, docks, landings, market houses, bridges, viaducts, aqueducts, sidewalks, play grounds, sewers, drains, ditches, culverts, ship canals, streams and water courses, the lighting, sprinkling and cleaning of public places, the construction of public improvements and public works, except those having reference to the department of public safety, or as otherwise provided in this title."

The director of public service is authorized to establish subdepartments by virtue of Section 4327, General Code, which provides:

"The director of public service may establish such subdepartment as may be necessary and determine the number of superintendents, deputies, inspectors, engineers, harbor masters, clerks, laborers and other persons, necessary for the execution of the work and the performance of the duties of this department."

I take it that the office of street commissioner is an office of the city, which is under the supervision of the director of public service, and that the compensation to be paid the holder of the office has been fixed by council.

It appears that member of council has resigned and was immediately thereafter appointed as street commissioner. You ask if Section 12912, General Code, will prevent such appointment.

Said section provides:

"Whoever, being an officer of a municipal corporation or member of the council thereof or the trustee of a township, is interested in the profits of a contract, job, work or services for such corporation or township, or acts as commissioner, architect, superintendent or engineer, in work undertaken or prosecuted by such corporation or township during the term for which he was elected or appointed, or for one year thereafter, or becomes the employe of the contractor of such contract, job, work or services while in office, shall be fined not less than fifty dollars nor more than one thousand dollars or imprisoned not less than thirty nor more than six months, or both, and forfeit his office."

The purpose of this section is to prevent an officer of a municipality from having any interest in the profits of any contract or work done for the city. It specifically prohibits such officer from acting as commissioner, architect, superintendent or engineer in work undertaken by the municipality during the term for which he was elected or appointed and for one year thereafter. The statute seeks to prevent any officer from securing any interest in any contract with the municipality, so that he might not be tempted to use his official position to further the interests of a contractor or of himself.

It is not the purpose of the statute to prevent an officer from holding another office in the village or city, at the expiration of the term of his first office, even though the second office has duties which pertain to work undertaken by the municipality. Likewise this section does not prevent an officer resigning a position in the city government and accepting appointment to another office in the service of the city.

It is my conclusion that a councilman of a city may resign such position and immediately thereafter be appointed to the position of street commissioner of such city.

Respectfully,
TIMOTHY S. HOGAN,
Attorney General.

COUNCIL MAY NOT LICENSE PERSONS OR CORPORATIONS CONSTRUCTING OR REPAIRING SIDEWALKS—POWERS OF REGULATION AND CONTROL.

Under Section 3714 and Section 3853, General Code, council has control of and power to regulate the construction of sidewalks as therein provided.

A council is not authorized, however, to require a license of persons or corporations who are engaged in the business of constructing and repairing sidewalks.

COLUMBUS, OHIO, May 29, 1912.

HON. GEORGE BUNTING, City Solicitor, Warren, Ohio.

DEAR SIR:—Under date of May 22, 1912, you inquire as follows:

> "I wish to avail myself of your opinion as to the legality of the enclosed sidewalk ordinance."

Section 2 of the ordinance enclosed, provides:

> "No person, firm or corporation shall engage in or conduct the business of sidewalk construction or repair of sidewalks in the city of Warren, Ohio, without holding the proper license for such work from the board of control of the city of Warren, Ohio, excepting the persons operating under special contract with the city for such work, and as otherwise provided herein."

Section 5, of the ordinance, provides a license fee of five dollars. This ordinance provides for the licensing of persons, firms and corporations engaged in the business of constructing and repairing sidewalks. There are other features in this ordinance, but the right to license this business, is the only part that need be considered in this opinion.

There are several sections of the statutes which authorize a municipal corporation to license certain occupations and things. These sections need not be quoted, as none of them cover persons or corporations engaged in constructing or repairing sidewalks.

Section 3637, General Code, applies to house movers, plumbers, sewer tappers and vault cleaners. Section 3672, General Code, refers to exhibitors, hawkers, peddlers, autioneers, hucksters and other occupations. Sections 3673, 3674, 3675 and 3676, General Code, authorize the licensing of various occupations and things. There is no authority given to municipal corporations to license persons or corporations engaged in repairing or constructing sidewalks.

In case of Frank vs. Cincinnati, 7 Low. Dec. 544, it is held:

> "Municipal corporations possess only such powers as are expressly granted by statute and such as are necessarily implied as essential to carry into effect those expressly granted. Sections 1692, 2669 and 2672, Rev. Stat., do not confer upon municipalities the right to license ticket brokers or scalpers, or to license any other business. Therefore, an ordinance to license and regulate the business of railroad and steamship ticket brokers or scalpers, in the city of Cincinnati, is illegal and void."

This principle is recognized in case of French vs. City of Toledo, 81 Ohio St., 160, when Summers, J., says at page 169, of the opinion:

> "The affidavit does not charge the defendant with the doing of any act for which the state authorized the city to exact a license."

In other words, if the state has not authorized the city to exact a license, a person cannot be punished for violation of an ordinance which attempts to require a license.

The state legislature has not authorized the city to require a license from persons or corporations engaged in constructing sidewalks, and the ordinance submitted is illegal and unauthorized.

The city, however, has the right to regulate the construction and repair of sidewalks.

Section 3714, General Code, provides:

> "Municipal corporations shall have special power to regulate the use of the streets, to be exercised in the manner provided by law. The council shall have the care, supervision and control of public highways, streets, avenues, alleys, sidewalks, public grounds, bridges, aqueducts and viaducts within the corporation, and shall cause them to be kept open, in repair, and free from nuisance."

Section 3853, General Code, provides:

> "The council of municipal corporations may provide by ordinance for the construction and repair of necessary sidewalks, curbing, or gutters, or parts thereof, within the limits of the corporation, and may require by imposition of suitable penalties or otherwise, the owners and occupants of abutting lots and lands to keep the sidewalks, curbing and gutters in repair, free from snow or any nuisance."

The sections following 3853, General Code, prescribe the manner in which council may require the construction of sidewalks. These statutes do not authorize the city to require a license of persons or corporations who are engaged in the business of constructing and repairing sidewalks.

The ordinance submitted by you is clearly illegal.

Respectfully,
TIMOTHY S. HOGAN,
Attorney General.

DIRECTOR OF PUBLIC SERVICE—CONTROL OF INCOME FROM FUNDS FOR CEMETERY PURPOSES—CONTROL AND POWER OF INVESTMENT BY COUNCIL—DUTIES OF CITY TREASURER, CLERK OF COUNCIL AND CLERK OF CEMETERY.

Under Sections 4167, 4168 and 4169, General Code, the director of public service is authorized to sell cemetery lots and to receive donations for cemetery purposes. All money so received must be turned over to the clerk of council and by him given into the custody of the city treasurer subject to the control and power of the investment of the same by the council.

The income of such money shall be paid to the director of public service to be by him devoted to cemetery purposes.

A record of all expenditures, receipts and accounts of these moneys shall be kept by a clerk of the cemetery appointed under Section 4170, General Code, by the director.

COLUMBUS, OHIO, May 27, 1912.

HON. RODERICK JONES, City Solicitor, Newark, Ohio.

DEAR SIR:—Your favor of January 4, 1912, is received, in which you state as follows:—

> "As city solicitor of the city of Newark, I ask your advice and instructions concerning Sections 4168 and 4169, of the General Code, referring to the creation and management of the permanent fund for the care of lots in municipal cemeteries. I refer this matter to you because I have not been able to construe the statutes mentioned in any way which would be at the same time workable and afford any protection to the city or to the persons who provide this permanent fund against the dishonesty or carelessness of its custodians.
> "It seems to me to be fairly clear by 4168 how this money is to be raised and who shall receive it on behalf of the city. 4169, however, provides that the director is to turn over to the council property held by him as a permanent fund; that the council shall then do certain things, among which is the investment of these funds. No custodian seems to be provided other than the director was to turn the funds over to the council, which was to invest them, but who should have the custody of them pending investment is not clear.
> "It seems to me to be manifestly impossible for the council as a council to have the custody of any funds or to have the custody of the securities in which said funds are invested. It is not only impossible, but also improper, since the members of the council, or the council itself, are not required to give bond. Another thing which I do not understand is the manner of handling the income thereof, which may arise from such investments as the council may make. I am informed by the city auditor that there is no means known to him by which a record of the receipts of the income of this fund can be kept in his office or by which the payments directed to be made can be made upon a voucher issued from his office. Should the director of public service simply receive in his official capacity the income of such funds and disburse the same in his official capacity keeping his own accounts of the same without the intervention of the city auditor or of the city treasurer?"

Section 4167, General Code, provides:

"The director of public service shall have entire charge and control of receipts from the sale of lots, and of the laying off and embellishing the grounds. He may receive donations by bequest, devise, or deed of gift, or otherwise, or money, or other property, the principal or interest of which is to be used for the enlargement, improvement, embellishment or care of the cemetery grounds generally, or for any particular part, or parts, lot or lots therein, as the donor directs, or as the director may from time to time determine if no direction is given. He shall sell lots, receive payment therefor, direct the improvements, and make the expenditures, under such rules and orders as he prescribes, and invest, manage and control property received by donations and surplus funds in his hands from any source whatever."

Section 4168, General Code, provides:

"In the by-laws and regulations, the director shall declare the amount of money he will accept by agreement, gift, devise, bequest or otherwise and hold as a permanent fund of the cemetery. He shall pledge the faith and credit of the city for the perpetual care of the lot or lots designated, using only the interest or income of the money. On receipt of the sum of money they designate, the director shall issue therefor a written receipt and acknowledgment thereof, signed by him and bind the faith and credit of the corporation to forever hold such money as a permanent fund, and to provide perpetual care of the lot or lots therein named, for the use, income or interest of such money. He shall enter on the minutes of his proceedings full detail of the obligation, and shall enter the receipt and incomes of the money and the expenditure thereof in detail of his books of account, keeping each case separately."

Section 4169, General Code, provides:

"The director shall turn over to the council property on hand or held by him as a permanent fund, for such purposes under his control, or such money as may thereafter come to him for such purpose, rendering a full statement thereof, by whom, when, and for what purpose paid. The council shall acknowledge receipt thereof in writing to the director signed by its clerk. By resolution duly passed and entered on the minutes of its proceedings, the council shall pledge the faith and credit of the corporation to forever hold such money as a permanent fund, and pay in semi-annual payments, to the director as interest on the funds, sufficient to provide perpetual care of the lot and lots as agreed by the director. The council and its successors shall invest and keep invested such funds in interest bearing debts of the city, if any, and if no such debts are owing by the city, in safe interest bearing bonds, or stocks for the benefit of such cemetery funds, that will bear as great an income as possible, and all such money and the income thereof shall be exempt from taxation, the same as other cemetery property."

Section 4170, General Code, provides:

"The director shall appoint a clerk, and keep accurate minutes of all his proceedings, and report quarterly to the council all the moneys received and disbursed by him in the management and control of the cemetery."

The director of public service is authorized to receive funds, the interest and income on which is to be used in taking care of lots in the city cemetery. By Section 4169, General Code, he is required to "enter the receipt and income of the money and the expenditure thereof in detail of his books of account, keeping each separately." By virtue of Section 4170, General Code, the director of public service is authorized to appoint a clerk, and is directed to keep accurate minutes of his proceedings and to report quarterly to council all moneys received and disbursed by him. It is apparently the duty of the director of public service, through the clerk thus appointed, to keep all accounts and to make record of all his proceedings.

Section 4169, General Code, directs the director of public service to turn over to council property and money held by him as a permanent fund. The council shall acknowledge receipt thereof signed by its clerk. Council is composed of several members, and like all boards, it can only act as a body and through its chosen officers. The clerk of council receipts for the funds. In order to receipt for them he must first receive them. It is not contemplated that each individual member of council should actively participate in the handling of the money. The receipt of funds by the clerk of council, in his official capacity, would in law be the receipt of the funds by council.

Section 4210, General Code, provides:

> "Within ten days from the commencement of their term, the members of council shall elect a president pro tem., a clerk, and such other employes of council as may be necessary, and fix their duties, bonds and compensation. The officers and employes of council shall serve for two years, but may be removed at any time for cause, at a regular meeting by a vote of two-thirds of the members elected to council."

The council elects its clerk, fixes his bond and prescribes his duties other than those prescribed by statute. Where the clerk receives funds or holds securities, the council can fix the bond of the clerk in such sum as will sufficiently protect the funds and securities.

Section 4300, General Code, provides:

> "The treasurer shall receive and disburse all funds of the corporation, including the school funds, and such other funds as arise in or belong to any department or part of the corporation government."

The treasurer of the corporation is made custodian of all funds of the corporation or that arise in any department or part of the government of the corporation. The funds received by council through the director of public service to secure the care of the cemetery or lots therein arise in a department of the city government. The credit of the city is pledged to carry out the object for which the funds are donated. The provisions of Section 4300, General Code, would include the funds under consideration.

Therefore, upon receipt of the funds, the clerk of council should pay the same into the city treasury.

The council is further directed to invest the funds. The city treasurer will hold the money until council has authorized its investment. The funds are invested by order of council and the investment is under its control. The securities should, therefore, be held by the clerk of council in his official capacity.

I find no statute which authorizes the auditor or treasurer of the city to receive or to pay out the income derived from the funds. The director of public service is required to take care of the lots and to expend the income of the funds for that purpose. By virtue of the provisions of Section 4169, General Code, the income is paid to the director to carry out the purpose for which the principal was donated.

It is seen that a clerk of the cemetery is provided for, and in my opinion, one of his duties would be to keep account of all receipts and expenditures.

Section 4214, General Code, provides:

> "Except as otherwise provided in this title, council, by ordinance or resolution, shall determine the number of officers, clerks and employes in each department of the city government, and shall fix by ordinance or resolution their respective salaries and compensation, and the amount of bond to be given for each officer, clerk or employe in each department of the government, if any be required. Such bond shall be made by such officer, clerk or employe, with surety subject to the approval of the mayor."

By virtue of this section council can require the clerk of the cemetery to give bond for the faithful discharge of his duties.

In conclusion, the director of public service is authorized to receive donations, the income of which is to be used in caring for the city cemetery or part thereof, or for certain lots therein. These funds are turned over to council through its clerk. The clerk of council pays the same into the city treasury, where they are held until invested. The income of the investments is to be paid to the director of public service, and to be expended by him in the care of the lots or cemetery, as required by the terms of the donations. The clerk of the cemetery should keep an accurate account of all receipts and expenditures.

Respectfully,
TIMOTHY S. HOGAN.
Attorney General.

ELECTIONS—DISQUALIFIED COUNCILMAN—PLURALITY OF VOTES —EQUAL RIGHT OF FORMER COUNCILMEN TO HOLD OVER— VACANCY.

When one of six councilmen who have received the requisite plurality at an election, is disqualified by reason of non-residence for a previous year, the candidate receiving the next highest vote has not received a plurality and cannot therefore, be held to be elected.

Each of the six former councilmen is equally entitled to hold over, and unless five voluntarily resign, all must relinquish their right to hold over. The vacancy thereby created could then be filled by the five newly elected members, under Section 4236, General Code.

COLUMBUS, OHIO, May 16, 1912.

HON. HOWARD C. SPICER, Solicitor of Kenmore, Akron, Ohio.

DEAR SIR:—Under date of May 8, 1912, you inquire of this department as follows:

> "One of the six councilmen elected in this village last November had not at the time of the election resided within the village one year as required by law, this matter was just discovered some time ago, on my advice the councilman in question tendered his resignation, which was accepted, now the question arises whether a vacancy arises by reason of the resignation or whether the person receiving the next highest number of votes at the last election should be the councilman to succeed the one who has resigned."

The residential qualification of a councilman of a village is prescribed by Section 4218, General Code, which provides:

"Each member of council shall have resided in the village one year next preceding his election, and shall be an elector thereof. No member of the council shall hold any other public office or employment, except that of notary public or member of the state militia, or be interested in any contract with the village. Any member who ceases to possess any of the qualifications herein required or removes from the village shall forfeit his office."

You state that one of the six persons elected as councilman had not resided within the village the prescribed length of time to be eligible. Although one of the six persons receiving the highest number of votes for councilman, he could not qualify for the position.

The rights of the candidate receiving the next highest number of votes will be considered first. The supreme court of Ohio has laid down the rule as to his rights.

In case of State vs. Speidel, 62 Ohio St., 156, the first syllabus reads:

"When the candidates for an office for whom a majority or plurality of votes was cast at an election, dies on the election day and before the polls are closed, the candidate for the same office receiving the next highest number of votes is not thereby elected; nor has he thereby acquired any right to be inducted into the said office."

On page 158, Davis, J., says:

"The claim of Cover that he has the right to be inducted into the office of sheriff of Clermont county, has no foundation. Whether Buvinger, the deceased candidate was elected or not, Cover was not elected. No process of valid reasoning can make 3,802 votes to be more than 4,369 votes. Not merely a plurality, but a majority, of all the votes cast for sheriff on that election day, were cast against Cover; and it does not avail him that the majority of votes was cast, in good faith, for a man who had died during the election. The majority was not for Cover, and that is all he can make of it. The election may fail altogether by reason of the death of the person receiving the largest number of votes cast, or by reason of ineligibility of the successful candidate, or by reason of irregularities, but that could not elect a man who in fact has received a smaller number of votes than his opponent."

It requires a plurality of votes to elect. When six persons are to be elected for the same positions, as in this case, the six receiving the highest votes are elected. The one receiving the seventh highest vote would have no claim to the position. The voters in good faith elected six men for councilman. The man who received the next or seventh highest vote was defeated. As seen in the opinion of Justice

Davis, supra, the fact that one of the six elected was ineligible to the office, would not alter the rule. The man who received the seventh highest number of votes did not receive a sufficient number of votes to entitle to the election, and he has no claim to the office.

The situation is presented: There were six positions to be filled at the November election for councilmen; five persons were elected who could and did qualify; the sixth could not qualify; there was no position to which no successor was elected or qualified. By virtue of Section 4215, General Code, councilmen serve until their successors are elected and qualified. Said section provides:

> "The legislative power of each village shall be vested in, and exercised by, a council, composed of six members, who shall be elected by the electors of the village at large, for terms of two years and shall serve until their successors are elected and qualified."

There is one position for which no person has qualified. The question arises which of the six old councilmen hold over? The fact that the person who was ineligible to the position took the office and served for a time, would not alter the rights of the old councilmen. He was a de facto officer, but not a de jure officer.

When a person is a candidate for councilman of a village he is not a candidate to succeed any particular person. Each councilman is elected by the village at large and the positions are identical.

Each of the old councilmen has a right to hold over. But there is but one position to fill and six persons have an equal right to fill that position. As against the five who were elected last November, neither of the six old councilmen have any right to the position, but as against each other, each have an equal right to hold over.

In the case of a tie vote for an election the statute provides a means of breaking the tie. But there is no provision of statute governing the present situation. If two or more of the old members insisted upon holding over the newly elected members could bring proceedings to oust them, and the court could not decide as to which of the old councilmen should hold over. The only alternative would be to oust all the old members.

If the old members of council are able to determine among themselves, which one shall hold over, such person could hold the position, provided the other five resigned. If they do not so determine, neither of the six can hold over, and all must relinquish their right to the office. In such case there would be a vacancy which could be filled by council in accordance with Section 4236, General Code, which provides:

> "When the office of councilman becomes vacant, the vacancy shall be filled by election by council for the unexpired term. If council fail within thirty days to fill such vacancy, the mayor shall fill it by appointment."

The right of one of the old councilmen to hold over, as above set forth, is based upon the conclusion that they have not forfeited their right thereto since January 1, 1912. The facts submitted do not permit a positive conclusion that there is a vacancy, but from the principles of law herein stated, you should have no difficulty in determining this question.

Respectfully,
TIMOTHY S. HOGAN,
Attorney General.

"GARBAGE COLLECTION" AND "DISPOSAL"—POWER OF COUNCIL TO CONTRACT WITH PRIVATE COMPANY FOR—LIMITATION OF PERIOD OF DURATION OF CONTRACT—APPROVAL BY BOARD OF HEALTH OF LIQUID WASTE WITHIN TWENTY MILES OF WATER INTAKE.

Section 4470, General Code, providing that the council may contract for a period not exceeding five years for the "collection and removal" of garbage does not prevent a contract for a longer period for the "disposal" of garbage.

Under Section 3809, General Code, however, a contract for the disposal of garbage is limited to ten years. There is nothing to prevent the council from agreeing to collect and remove garbage for a company contracting to dispose of the same for the permitted period.

Under Section 2140, General Code, a municipal corporation may not establish a garbage disposal plant with a liquid waste which may enter any stream within twenty miles above the intake of a public water supply until the same is approved by the state board of health.

COLUMBUS, OHIO, May 29, 1912.

HON. JONATHAN TAYLOR, City Solicitor, Akron, Ohio.

DEAR SIR:—Your favor of May 22, 1912, is received, in which you inquire as follows:

> "I beg to direct your attention to Sections 3809 and 4470 of the General Code, with reference to the time for which the municipal authorities may take a contract relative to the disposal of garbage. You will note that the one section seems to provide for a contract for five years and the other for ten years.
>
> "Here in Akron we are confronted with this situation: A prospective company wishes to install a process for disposing of sewage and garbage, and their plans call for an initial investment of the sum of $300,000.00. Manifestly, the company wishes to protect its investment, and it has occurred to the gentlemen who are back of the process that five years or even ten years is a very short period within which to authorize a contract. What the city wishes to know is this: Is there any lawful means by which the city can give these gentlemen a longer time within which to operate, that is, for instance, twenty-five years.
> "It should be said in this connection that their plan contemplates that the city shall collect at its own expense all the garbage of the city and deliver it to this proposed company. The company's part in the transaction is to provide the plant, and to dispose of the garbage and the sewage in a manner satisfactory to the state board of health. You will see that we are anxious to know also whether the city can enter into an agreement with this gentleman for a longer period than five or ten years on the part of the city to collect and deliver this garbage to them. Our part of the contract would be to collect and deliver the garbage to them, and they want not only the right to dispose of the garbage for a period of say twenty-five years, but necessarily they wish the city to agree to deliver the garbage for the same length of time for which they have a contract."

Section 4470, General Code, provides:

Your inquiry is as to the time for which a city may contract with a private person or corporation for the disposal of garbage. You refer to two sections of the statutes.

> "The council may contract for a period of not to exceed five years for the collection and removal of such garbage, nightsoil, dead animals, and other solid waste substances at the expense of the municipality or at the expense of persons responsible for the existence of such waste substances."

This section does not refer to the disposal of garbage. It has reference to the collection and removal of garbage. The city may collect and remove the garbage by its employes through a department of the city or it may contract with a private person or corporation to collect and remove the garbage. After it is collected and removed, another step is necessary and that is the disposal of the garbage.

It appears that the city is endeavoring to enter into a contract for the disposal of the garbage by a private person or corporation, and that the city shall collect and remove the garbage to the plant to be established by such private person. Such a contract would not affect the right of the city to contract, under Section 4470, General Code, for the collection and removal of the garbage. The city may still collect the garbage itself, or it may contract for the collection and removal of the same.

The limitation of five years in Section 4470, General Code, for a contract for the collection and removal of garbage does not apply to a contract for the disposal of the garbage.

Section 3809, General Code, to which you also refer, provides:

> "The council of a city may authorize, and the council of a village may make, a contract with any person, firm or company, for lighting the streets, alleys, lands, lanes, squares and public places in the municipal corporation, or for furnishing water to such corporation, or for the collection and disposal of garbage in such corporation, or for the leasing of the electric light plant and equipment, or the waterworks plant, or both, of any person, firm or company therein situated, for a period not exceeding ten years, and the requirement of a certificate that the necessary money is in the treasury shall not apply to such contract, and such requirement shall not apply to street improvement contracts extending for one year or more, nor to contracts made by the board of health, nor to contracts made by a village for the employment of legal counsel."

This section covers the "collection and disposal" of garbage. It limits the time for which a contract may be entered into for the collection and disposal of garbage, "for a period of not exceeding ten years."

Section 3649, General Code, sets forth one of the enumerated powers of municipalities as follows:

> "To provide for the collection and disposition of sewage, garbage, ashes, animal and vegetable refuse, dead animals and animal offal and to establish, maintain and regulate plants for the disposal thereof."

By virtue of this section the city is authorized to provide for the collection and disposal of garbage. It does not fix a time limit as to a contract for such purpose.

The only time limit that I find fixed by statute for the disposal of garbage is that found in Section 3809, supra, which is ten years. There can be no doubt as to the time which is fixed by this section. Such contract cannot run for a period exceeding ten years. A contract for a longer period would be unauthorized.

The city cannot enter into a contract for the disposal of its garbage for a period to exceed ten years.

You further inquire if the city can agree to collect and deliver the garbage to the plant for the same period for which a contract may be entered into for the disposal of the garbage.

The five-year limitation in Section 4470, General Code, does not apply to a contract for the disposal of the garbage. The city is authorized to contract for the disposal of the garbage, and it is essential first that the garbage be collected and removed from the different parts of the city to the disposal plant. One of the conditions of the contract is that the city shall deliver the garbage to the disposal plant. The disposal company then attends to its disposition.

The condition to collect and remove the garbage should run for the same length of time as the contract. And as Section 3809, General Code, authorizes the city to contract for the "collection and disposal" of garbage for a period not exceeding ten years, the city may agree to collect and remove the garbage to the disposal plant for such period of ten years. The city may still contract for the collection and removal of the garbage for a period of five years as provided in Section 4470, General Code.

Under date of May 27, 1912, you submit a supplemental inquiry in reference to Section 1240, General Code, and ask if this section will prevent a private corporation as well as a municipal corporation from establishing a garbage disposal plant with a liquid waste which may enter any stream within twenty miles above the intake of a public water supply, until the same is approved by the board of health.

Said Section 2140, General Code, provides:

> "No city, village, public institution, corporation or person shall provide or install for public use, a water supply or sewerage system, or purification works for a water supply or sewage, of a municipal corporation or public institution or make a change in the water supply, water water works intake, water purification works of a municipal corporation or public institution, until the plans therefor have been submitted to and approved by the state board of health. No city, village, corporation or person shall establish a garbage disposal or manufacturing plant having a liquid waste which may enter any stream within twenty miles above the intake of a public water supply until the location of such garbage or manufacturing plant, including plans for disposing of such liquid waste, is approved by the state board of health. Whoever violates any provision of this section shall be fined not less than one hundred nor more than five hundred dollars."

The words of the statute "no city, village, corporation or person," leave no doubt as to the application of the statute. These words will include private as well as public corporations. The provisions of this statute apply to municipal corporations and also to private corporations and persons.

Respectfully,

TIMOTHY S. HOGAN,
Attorney General.

TEACHER—CANNOT RECEIVE INSTITUTE FEE WHILE ATTENDING SUMMER SCHOOL.

Section 7870, General Code, providing for compensation to teachers for attendance at a teachers' institute, requires as a condition precedent to reimbursement, a certificate of actual daily attendance and as such certificate could not be given to a teacher who is in attendance at a summer school while the county institute is in session, he may not receive the institute attendance fee.

COLUMBUS, OHIO, May 31, 1912.

HON. R. C. COLE, City Solicitor, Findlay, Ohio.

DEAR SIR:—I am in receipt of your letter of April 30, 1912, wherein you inquire as follows:

> "I have been asked by the superintendent of our schools, J. F. Smith, for an opinion as to whether or not a board of education can legally pay the institute attendance fee to one of its teachers who may be in attendance at a summer school while the county institute is in session."

In reply, Section 7870 of the General Code provides as follows:

> "The boards of education of all school districts are required to pay the teachers and superintendents of their respective districts their regular salary for the week they attend the institute upon the teachers or superintendents presenting certificates of full regular daily attendance, signed by the president and secretary of such institute. If the institute held when the public schools are not in session, such teachers or superintendents shall be paid two dollars a day for actual daily attendance as certified by the president and secretary of such institute, for not less than four, nor more than six days of actual attendance to be paid as an addition to the first month's salary after the institute, by the board of education by which such teacher or superintendent is then employed."

It would seem from the above language of the statute that a teacher must actually attend an institute in order to be legally entitled to pay from the board of education.

The above quoted section forbids payment to a teacher unless such teacher presents a "certificate of full regular daily attendance, signed by the president and secretary of such institute."

Said section further reiterates that "actual attendance" is required, in the following language:

> "Such teachers or superintendents shall be paid two dollars a day for actual daily attendance, as certified by the president and secretary of such institute for not less than four, nor more than six days of actual attendance."

Such president and secretary are without authority to issue such certificate of "actual daily attendance" to a teacher unless such teacher has actually attended the institute as required by said section.

I am of the opinion, therefore, that a board of education cannot legally pay the institute attendance fee to one of its teachers, who may be in attendance at a summer school while the county institute is in session.

Yours very truly,

TIMOTHY S. HOGAN,
Attorney General.

BANKS AND BANKING—MUNICIPAL DEPOSITORY—"GOOD AND SUFFICIENT SURETY" MEANS PERSONAL SURETY; NOT MORTGAGE AND NOTE SECURITIES.

The words "or furnish good and sufficient surety" in Section 4295, General Code, providing for the deposit of municipal funds in banks which "give a good and sufficient bond issued by a surety company authorized to do business in this state, or furnish good and sufficient surety," refer to personal sureties only, and therefore, do not authorize counsel to accept note and mortgage securities.

COLUMBUS, OHIO, June 11, 1912.

HON. ALFRED CLUM, Solicitor for the City of East Cleveland, Rockefeller Building, Cleveland, Ohio.

DEAR SIR:—In your letter of May 23, 1912, you make the following request for my opinion:

> "I am solicitor for the city of East Cleveland, Ohio, and for guidance in the matter of procuring security for the city depository I solicit your construction of General Code Section 4295, as amended May 18, 1911. (102 O. L., 122.)
> "The attorneys for the depository claim that the clause, 'give a good and sufficient bond issued by a surety company authorized to do business in the state, or furnish good and sufficient surety, or secure said moneys by a deposit of bonds or other interest bearing obligations,' etc., authorizes the municipality to accept first mortgage deeds and notes from private individuals as security for the deposit of city moneys, the same as though the above quoted clause read, 'give a good and sufficient bond issued by a surety company authorized to do business in the state, or furnish other good and sufficient security, or secure said moneys by a deposit,' etc. * * *"

Section 4295 of the General Code is as follows:

> "The council may provide by ordinance for the deposit of all public moneys coming into the hands of the treasurer, in such bank or banks, situated within the county, as offer, at competitive bidding, the highest rate of interest and give a good and sufficient bond issued by a surety company authorized to do business in the state, or furnish good and sufficient surety, or secure said moneys by a deposit of bonds or other interest bearing obligations of the United States or those for the payment of principal and interest of which the faith of the United States is pledged, including bonds of the District of Columbia; bonds of the state of Ohio or of any other state of the United States; legally issued bonds of any city, village, county, township or other political subdivision of this or any other state or territory of the United States and as to which there has been no default of principal, interest or coupons, and which in the opinion of the treasurer are good and collectible, providing the issuing body politic has not defaulted at any time since the year 1900, in the payment of the principal and interest of any of its bonds, said security to be subject to the approval of the proper municipal officers, in a sum not less than ten per cent. in excess of the maximum amount at any time to be deposited, but there shall not be deposited in any one bank an amount in excess of the paid in capital stock and surplus and such banks, and not in any event to exceed one million dollars. And whenever any of the funds of any of the political subdivisions of the state shall be deposited under any of the depositary laws of the state, the securities herein mentioned, in addition to such other securities as are prescribed by law, may be accepted to secure such deposits."

In my opinion the only securities that can be deposited by a bank to secure a deposit made with it under this section are the securities named in the section as quoted above, and as the catalog of such securities as there given does not include mortgage deeds and notes from private individuals, my opinion is that the same cannot be accepted as securities. These securities are evidences of indebtedness and could not be accepted under the provisions authorizing such deposits to be secured by "a good and sufficient bond issued by a surety company * * or furnish good and sufficient surety * * *" because the word "surety" as here used relates, I take it, to personal sureties as opposed to surety companies. This, I think, is evidenced by the statute itself in further specifying certain securities which may be accepted, thus making three classes of sureties which may be given by a bank: 1st, a bond issued by a surety company; 2nd, personal surety; 3rd, a deposit of securities.

Very truly yours,
TIMOTHY S. HOGAN,
Attorney General.

DIRECTOR OF PUBLIC SERVICE—ILLEGAL AND VOID CONTRACTS—OMISSION OF AUDITOR'S CERTIFICATE — NO RECOVERY AGAINST CONTRACTOR FOR MONEYS PAID—LIABILITY OF PUBLIC OFFICIALS.

When a director of public service has entered into a contract without complying with Section 3806, General Code, requiring a certificate of the auditor to the effect that moneys are in the treasury and appropriated to the purpose of the contract, such contract is absolutely void.

When the contractor has received payment for work done on such contract, however, and there is no evidence of fraud or mistake, no recovery may be had from the contractor nor are the public officials involved liable for the amount so paid.

COLUMBUS, OHIO, May 28, 1912.

HON. JOHN T. BLAKE, City Solicitor, Canton, Ohio.

DEAR SIR:—Your favor of May 17, 1912, is received, in which you require as follows:

"1. A director of service enters into a contract for certain labor and material, the labor and material being furnished in pursuance to the contract, the director approves vouchers in favor of the contractor, which are honored by the auditor and paid by the treasurer of the city.

"The director in making this contract did not comply with the provisions of Sections 3806-8, of the code, and the amount being in excess of $500.00 the expenditure, or contract, was not authorized by council.

"2. A director of service enters into a contract under the terms of which the contractor is to paint certain bridges, and receive therefor the actual cost of labor and material, plus a certain daily allowance to himself for services, supervision, etc. Bills are rendered by the contractor weekly, or bi-weekly, and paid upon vouchers approved by the director; none of the bills exceeding $500.00, but in the aggregate the amount greatly exceeding $500.00, and the painting of no bridge costing $500.00.

"The director making the contract did not comply with Sections 3806-8, of the code, as to certificate of funds, etc., nor was the expenditure, or contract, authorized by council.

"In either of the above cases, is the director of service and his bondsmen liable for the amount of money so expended?"

It appears that the provisions of Sections 3806, General Code, have not been complied with in either of the cases you submit. If the contracts are illegal on that account, then it will not be necessary to consider whether the second contract is violative of Section 4328, General Code, in reference to contracts in excess of $500.00.

Section 3806, General Code, provides:

"No contract, agreement or other obligation involving the expenditure of money shall be entered into, nor shall any ordinance, resolution or order for the expenditure of money, be passed by the council or by any board or officer of a municipal corporation, unless the auditor or clerk thereof, first certifies to council or to the proper board, as the case may be, that the money required for such contract, agreement or other obligation, or to pay such appropriation or expenditure, is in the treasury to the credit of the fund from which it is to be drawn and not appropriated for any other purpose, which certificate shall be filed and immediately recorded. The sum so certified shall not thereafter be considered unappropriated until the corporation is discharged from the contract, agreement or obligation, or so long as the ordinance, resolution or order is in force."

Section 3807, General Code, provides:

"All contracts, agreements or other obligations, and all ordinances, resolutions and orders entered into or passed, contrary to the provisions of the preceding section shall be void, and no person whatever shall have any claim or demand against the corporation thereunder, nor shall the council, or board, officer, or commissioner of any municipal corporation, waive or qualify the limits fixed by such ordinance, resolution or order, or fasten upon the corporation any liability whatever for any excess of such limits, or release any party from an exact compliance with his contract under such ordinance, resolution or order."

Section 4328, General Code, provides:

> "The director of public service may make any contract or purchase supplies or material or provide labor for any work under the supervision of that department not involving more than $500.00. When an expenditure within the department, other than the compensation of persons employed therein, exceeds $500.00, such expenditure shall first be authorized and directed by ordinance of council. When so authorized and directed, the director of public service shall make a written contract with the lowest and best bidder after advertisement for not less than two nor more than four consecutive weeks in a newspaper of general circulation within the city."

In the second case submitted by you, the contractor acted in the nature of a superintendent of the work, and he was paid for his services in addition to the cost of labor and material. Even though it is found that he was actually employed as superintendent and to be paid a stipulated compensation as other officers or employes of the city, this fact would not excuse a non-compliance with the provisions of Section 3806, General Code.

In case of Pittinger vs. City of Wellsville, 75 Ohio St., 508, it is held:

> "The policy of our statutes respecting municipal corporations is that no debt shall be incurred for the ordinary expenses of the corporation unless an appropriation to meet it has been made by the city council, and the city auditor or clerk has certified to the city council that the money is in the treasury; and in the absence of such certificate, as required by Section 45, of the Municipal Code, the board of public service is without authority to employ a janitor for the city building, and a person so employed cannot recover from the city for his services."

It is also held that where the provisions of Section 3806, General Code, have not been complied with, the contractor cannot recover from the city even though he has completed his part of the contract.

In Comstock vs. Incorporated Village of Nelsonville, 61 Ohio St., 288, the third syllabus reads:

> "Whether the certificate required by said Section 2702 has been filed and recorded or not, must be ascertained by each contractor for himself at his peril. In the absence of such certificate, when required, no liability arises against the municipality, even though the contractor has fully performed his contract."

In case of Lancaster vs. Miller, 58 Ohio St., 558, it is held:

> "A contract entered into by a municipal corporation by which, in its own behalf, it undertakes to pay for the construction of a sewer in one of its streets, the cost of which exceeds $500.00, imposes no valid obligation on the corporation, unless it has advertised for bids according to the requirements of Section 2303, Revised Statutes.
> "Nor will such contract impose on the corporation a valid obligation even if bids were advertised for pursuant to said Section 2303, unless the auditor, or clerk, of the corporation, as the case may be, 'shall first certify that the money required for' that purpose 'is in the treasury to the credit of the fund from which it is to be drawn,' etc., as required by Section 2702, Revised Statutes.

"Where either of such requirements has been omitted, the municipality will not by the acts of its officers be estopped to set up such omission as a defense to an action brought against it on such contract."

In both of the contracts in question the provisions of Section 3806, General Code, were not complied with. The contracts were null and void, and the contractor or person employed thereunder could not have recovered any payment from the city by virtue of such contracts. The payments, however, have been made. They were made under an illegal contract and without authority of law.

The question arises as to the liability of the director of public service for the illegal payments. Before considering the liability of the officer it might be well to first consider the right of recovery from the contractor.

In case of State vs. Fronizer, 77 Ohio St., 7, it is held:

"Section 1277, Revised Statutes, which authorizes a prosecuting attorney to bring action to recover back money of the county which has been misapplied, or illegally drawn from the county treasury, does not authorize the recovery back of money paid on a county commissioners' bridge contract fully executed but rendered void by force of Section 2834b, because of the lack, through inadvertence, of a certificate by the county auditor that the money is in the treasury to the credit of the fund, or has been levied and is in process of collection, there being no claim of unfairness or fraud in the making, or fraud or extortion in the execution of such contract for such work, nor any claim of effort to put the contractor in statu quo by a return of the bridge or otherwise, the same having been accepted by the board of commissioners and incorporated as part of the public highway.

On pages 17 and 18, Spear, J., says:

"The exact question arising upon this record has not before been presented to this court, although the statute itself was under review in Vindicator Printing Company vs. State, 68 Ohio St., 362. That case is authority for the proposition that there may be a recovery back by the prosecuting attorney where the money has been paid for the publishing of certain notices, the publication of which was not authorized by law. The publications were not only without authority of law, but they were of no value to either the county or the public. Therefore no property of the company had been obtained by the county. Clearly the case is not analogous to the case at bar."

A later decision, however, should also be considered in this connection. In case of Walker vs. Village of Dillonvale, 82 Ohio St., 137, it is held:

"In the absence of statutory regulation a taxpayer may maintain action, on behalf of himself and other taxpayers, to recover money illegally paid out of the public treasury; and in such action may unite as defendants all against whom any relief is asked and whose right will be affected by the determination of the subject of the action."

On page 145, Summers, J., says:

> "If a stockholder in such an association may sue in behalf of himself and other stockholders, and if a taxpayer may sue to enjoin the misapplication of the funds of a city, we see no good reason why he may not be permitted to sue on behalf of the city to recover the funds that have been misapplied. If those entrusted with the custody of public funds, or those who duty it is to protect the public interests are remiss in their duty, or refuse to act, the taxpayer should be permitted to do so, and the courts in the exercise of a sound discretion will prevent any abuse of the privilege."

This decision apparently changes the rule laid down in the case of Vindicator Printing Co., vs. State, 68 Ohio St., 362, in which it is held:

> "But where a claim for such excessive publications has been presented to the board and allowed, and payment made by the treasurer on the warrant of the auditor prior to April 25, 1898, the prosecuting attorney cannot maintain an action, in the absence of both fraud and mistake of fact, to recover back the money.
> "The act of April 25, 1898 (93 O. L., 408), clothes the prosecuting attorney with power to recover back money so illegally drawn from the treasury on and after the date of its passage."

It is to be observed that prior to April 25, 1898, there was no statutory authority for the prosecuting attorney to bring an action for the recovery of money of the county which had been misapplied.

The Dillonvale case in 82 Ohio St., lays down the rule that a taxpayer, may, without authority of statute, bring an action to recover funds which have been illegally paid out. Although the city solicitor is not authorized by statute to bring such an action, the ruling in the Dillonvale case that a taxpayer can bring such an action would also apply to the city solicitor, who is the proper authority of the city to bring suits in its behalf, and authorize him to sue in the first instance for the recovery of the money, without the intervention of a taxpayer.

While the Dillonvale case changes the rule as to the right of the city solicitor to bring the action, as formerly laid down in Vindicator Co. vs. State, supra, it does not change the rule of liability as set forth in 77 Ohio St., 7, supra. In Walker vs. Dillonvale, the question arose as to payment of salaries to councilmen, while in State vs. Fronizer, 77 Ohio St., 7, the question arose in reference to a contract, which had been fully completed. The contract price was paid and the county received property of the company.

The Dillonvale case is more nearly analogous to the situation in Vindicator Co. vs. State, which case is distinguished in the case of State vs. Fronizer, 77 Ohio St., 7. An officer is not entitled to pay for his services as such officer unless it is authorized by law. Although he gives his time to the city an excessive payment to him could be recovered, upon the same ground that a payment to a contractor, who had rendered no beneficial service, could be recovered, if such payment was illegal.

The situation in the present case, now under consideration is similar to that in 77 Ohio St., 7. The rule enunciated in that case applies, therefore, to the contractor in each case submitted by you.

As to the liability of the officer, the rule of recovery is stated in the fifth syllabus of case of McAlexander vs. Haviland Village School, 7, Nisi Prius, N. S., 590, as follows:

"Public funds paid out on a contract, completed in good faith and free from fraud and collusion, cannot be recovered back at the instance of a taxpayer, notwithstanding the contract was illegal and void."

This was an action, among other things, to recover from the members of the board of education and from the contractor, the amount of money paid out upon an illegal contract for the construction of a school house.

On page 600, Cameron, J., says:

"While the court finds that the contract for the building and construction of said school house was illegal and void, yet the court further finds that said contract has been fully executed, and the building built, completed and paid for, in good faith, free from fraud or collusion on the part of said board, the members thereof, or the contractor.

"It is, therefore, the further order and judgment of the court that the mandatory injunctions prayed for, should be and are refused, as is also the prayer for a finding of the amount of money claimed to be illegally paid out by said board of education on account of said proposed school building; and judgment therefor."

As to the right of recovery from the contractor, this decision follows the rule in 77 Ohio St., 7, and extends the rule to the right of recovery from the officer who authorized the illegal contract, or rather entered into the contract.

In your statement of the cases, there is nothing to show that there was collusion or fraud in the giving of the contracts. If the contracts were entered into in good faith, and there was no collusion or fraud, the officers who participated in the illegal contract, are not personally liable for the money so illegally paid out. Such contracts should be enjoined in the first instance when the noncompliance with the statutes is discovered. Furthermore, the auditor should refuse to make payment of the same. After payment has been made, and the contract completed in good faith, no recovery can be had.

The director of public service and his bondsmen are not liable for the money paid out on the contracts, if performed in good faith, and without fraud or collusion.

Respectfully,
TIMOTHY S. HOGAN,
Attorney General.

INITIATIVE AND REFERENDUM ACT—BOND ISSUE AUTHORIZED BY VOTE OF PEOPLE PRIOR TO ACT—SUBSEQUENT ACTION OF COUNCIL NOT WITHIN ACT—WHEN RESOLUTION OF NECESSITY PASSED BEFORE ACT WAS IN EFFECT, THE ORDINANCE DETERMINING TO PROCEED, PASSED AFTER THE ACT, IS SUBJECT TO THE ACT.

Since it is the object of the initiative and referendum to enable the electors to express their opinion upon a measure, when a two-thirds vote of the electors have, before the initiative and referendum went into effect, authorized an issue of waterworks bonds, any further acts of council, carrying out the purposes of the bond issue, after the initiative and referendum had gone into effect, are not required to be subjected to the vote of the people.

When upon street improvement proceedings upon the assessment plan, an issue of bonds has been authorized by council prior to the passage of the initiative and referendum act, and the ordinance determining to proceed is passed after that statute, since this ordinance is the one primarily involving the expenditure, it is subject to the statute and must be suspended sixty days.

COLUMBUS, OHIO, June 17, 1912.

HON. H. STANLEY MCCALL, City Solicitor, Portsmouth, Ohio

DEAR SIR:—In a letter dated May 13, 1912, you stated that before the initiative and referendum law (102 O. L., 521) was enacted, the people of Portsmouth voted at a special election in favor of issuing $300,000 worth of bonds for the purpose of enlarging your present waterworks plant, and that nothing was done in regard to selling these bonds until lately, when the city council voted to sell the same at once.

You state that the reason for the delay of council in selling the bonds was that the state board of health refused to approve the waterworks plans then decided upon, but that since that time new plans have been drawn up which are in accordance with the state board of health's ruling.

You inquire whether the initiative and referendum law would apply to any measures which may be passed by the council in appropriating the money for the purpose for which the fund was created, thereby making said enactments inoperative for sixty days.

In an opinion rendered to the Hon. Nicholas M. Greenberger, city solicitor, Akron, Ohio, under date of December 14, 1911, I gave it as my opinion that an ordinance providing for the issuance of bonds in pursuance of the authorization of electors was not within the provisions of the initiative and referendum act, stating my reason therefor that the object of the referendum is to provide a method whereby the electors of a municipality, should they so desire, may have submitted to them for their approval the various ordinances and resolutions passed and adopted by council; that since the electors had already had the question of the issuance of bonds submitted to them, and had voted in favor thereof a further submission would be in effect but a repetition of the former submission; that to hold otherwise would be to hold that although two-thirds of the voters of the municipality had voted in favor of the bonds, yet, upon a petition filed by fifteen per cent. of the electors the question would again have to be submitted to the electors at the next general election, thus postponing the carrying out of the will of the two-thrids majority voting at such election.

The electors of Portsmouth having heretofore, at an election held for that purpose, authorized the issuance of the said bonds in the sum mentioned, and for the purpose mentioned, I am of the opinion that the acts of council necessary to carry into effect the purpose for which the bonds were so issued would not be within the purview of the initiative and referendum act. If the said acts were to be construed as within the provisions of the initiative and referendum act, a bare fifteen per cent. of the electors of the municipality could, by filing a referendum petition, postpone any action thereon until the next general election, at which time, if a majority of such electors should vote against the adoption of the said acts, would defeat such acts, and thus defeat the will of the two-thirds majority at the special election authorizing the issuance of the bonds for the purpose mentioned.

You next state, that prior to the enactment of the initiative and referendum act bonds had been authorized and sold and a fund created for the payment of the city's share of the street improvement under the assessment plan; that, however, no further steps were taken in reference to the street improvement until after the referendum act was in force. You, therefore, desire to know whether the ordinance determining to proceed with the improvement shall remain inoperative for sixty days, or whether the same would go into effect in accordance with the law in force, as it stood at the time the ordinance authorizing the sale of bonds was passed.

I have heretofore given it as my opinion in an opinion rendered to the Hon. M. R. Smith, city solicitor, Conneaut, Ohio, under date of October 25, 1911, that an ordinance determining to proceed, since such ordinance is the one that involves the expenditure of the money, is the only ordinance involved in the various steps necessary for the improvement under the assessment plan, that the electors of the municipality may cause to have referred to them for approval if they so desire.

I further held in such opinion that the resolution, of necessity, is merely preliminary, and the assessing and bond ordinances are ancillary thereto.

Although the ordinance authorizing the issuing of bonds for the city's share of the improvement was passed prior to the enactment of the initiative and referendum act, yet, since the ordinance determining to proceed, which is the ordinance which finally determines that the expenditures shall be made, had not been passed until after the passage of the initiative and referendum act, I am of the opinion that such ordinance is within the provisions of said act, and would, therefore, under paragraph 2 of Section 2, not become operative until sixty days after its passage.

Very truly yours,

TIMOTHY S. HOGAN,

Attorney General.

AUTOMOBILES — POWERS OF MUNICIPALITIES TO REGULATE SPEED—FINES PAYABLE ONLY INTO COUNTY TREASURY.

Section 12604, General Code, regulating the speed of automobiles, was passed in order to provide a uniform system of regulation by placing the matter within the exclusive jurisdiction of the state, and municipalities have no power thereunder, except that of defining the "business and closely built up portions."

All violations of this statute are misdemeanors and the fines therefor must be paid into the county treasury, under Section 12378, General Code.

COLUMBUS, OHIO, June 14, 1912.

HON. HARRY F. WITTENBRINK, City Solicitor, St. Marys, Ohio.

DEAR SIR:—I desire to acknowledge receipt of your letter of inquiry under date of May 23, 1912, wherein you state:

> "I would be pleased to have an opinion from your office in regard to the construction of Sections 6307, 12604 and 12608, of the General Code of Ohio. The question arising is as follows:
> "Suppose the council of a municipality passes an ordinance defining the business and closely built-up portions thereof as provided in Section 12608, of the General Code, and suppose a party is charged with violating the speed limit as provided in Section 12604, and is fined under the provisions of that section, into what fund must such fine as collected by the mayor be placed—does it remain in the municipality, or does such fine belong to the county as provided in Section 12378, of the General Code?"

In reply thereto, I desire to say that Section 12604, of the General Code, provides for the violation of certain speed limits as follows:

> "Whoever operates a motorcycle or motor vehicle at a greater speed than eight miles an hour in the business and closely built up portions of a municipality, or more than fifteen miles an hour in other portions thereof, or more than twenty miles an hour outside of a municipality, shall be fined not more than twenty-five dollars, and, for a second offense shall be fined not less than twenty-five dollars nor more than fifty dollars."

Section 12608, of the General Code, provides that municipalities cannot diminish or change said speed limits by ordinance as follows:

> "The rates of speed mentioned in Section 12604 shall not be diminished or prohibited by an ordinance, rule or regulation of a municipality, board or other public authority, but municipalities, by ordinance, may define what are the business and closely built-up portions thereof."

Section 12607 places a further limitation upon local or municipal authorities, as follows:

> "For a third or subsequent offense, a person convicted of a violation of any provision of the next four preceding sections, shall be fined not less than fifty dollars nor more than one hundred dollars or imprisoned not more than thirty days, but if such subsequent offense occurred within one year after any former offense, he shall be imprisoned not less than ten days nor more than thirty."

The reasons for establishing state-wide limitations of speed as applied to motor vehicles, and prohibiting local authorities from interfering therewith is well stated in the case of Frisbie vs. the City of Columbus, 80 O. S., 686, pages 686 and 687, of the opinion thereof, which is as follows:

"The automobile has but recently come into common use. Its use is not restricted to a particular locality or city, but extends from city to city all over the state, and to other states, and the number of horses likely to be frightened and the dangerous speed with which many cars were operated led to the enactment of ordinances regulating its use. These regulations were so various, and in some instances so unreasonable, and in view of the fact that outside of his own city it was impracticable for the operator to learn what the regulations were until after he had violated them, that the necessity for a law, making uniform regulations that might be known and understood by all, was apparent.

"Accordingly in 1906 a law was passed (98 O. L., 320), that provided for an annual license, the registration of the care and its identification by a number attached. It regulated the speed and manner of operating the car and prescribed brakes, lights and signals, and then provided: (Section 19.) Subject to the provisions of this act, local authorities shall have no power to pass, enforce or maintain any ordinance, rule or regulation requiring of any owner or operator of a motor vehicle any license or permit to use the public highways, or excluding or prohibiting any motor vehicle whose owner has complied with Section 2 of this act from the free use of such highways, except such driveway, speedway or road as has been or may be expressly set apart by law for the exclusive use of horses and light carriages, or except as herein provided, in any way affecting the registration or numbering of motor vehicles or prescribing a slower rate of speed than herein specified at which said vehicles may be operated, or the use of the public highways, contrary to or inconsistent with the provisions of this act; and all such ordinances, rules or regulations now in force are hereby declared to be of no validity or effect.

"This act is, substantially, a copy of the New York motor vehicle law (L., 1904, Ch., 538), Laws of New York, 1904, which law it is held, in City of Buffalo vs. Lewis, 192 N. Y. 197, 'was clearly designed as a new, complete and general enactment to take the place of all the previous statutes, ordinances or rules relating to the use of motor vehicles upon the streets and highways of this state and must be held to have repealed all former statutes relating to such subject matter, even if such former acts are not in all respects repugnant to its provisions. The common council of the city of Buffalo had, therefore, no power, in 1907, to enact an ordinance in pursuance of the provision of chapter 31 of the laws of 1904, amended Section 17, of the city charter (L. 1891, Ch., 105), and authorizing it to enact an ordinance imposing tax upon the owners of motor vehicles or the privilege of operating them upon the streets of such city, since the provisions of the statute in question must be considered as repealed by the subsequent enactment of the motor vehicle law, and that statute expressly provides that with certain exceptions, not applicable to the question under consideration, local authorities shall have no power to pass, enforce or maintain any ordinance, rule or regulation requiring of any owner or operator of a motor vehicle any license, or permit, to use the public highways contrary to or inconsistent with its provisions.'

"The Ohio law of 1906, as appears from that part of Section 19, above quoted, expressly declares that all such ordinances and regulations shall be of no validity or effect."

In the above case the court construed the act regulating the speed of motor vehicles as passed April 2, 1906, and found in 98 O. L., 320. Said act was subsequently amended in 99 O. L., 538, and constitutes the present statutory law in Ohio upon the subject of regulating motor vehicles. It is apparent, by virtue of Sections 6307 and 12608, of the General Code, above quoted, that the speed limitation of motor vehicles is no longer subject to municipal control or regulation by ordinance, except in so far as municipalities may define what are the business or closely built-up portions thereof, as provided in Section 12608, of the General Code, above quoted. Any violation of such speed limitation is now made a misdemeanor by virtue of Section 12604, of the General Code, and it necessarily follows that any violation thereof must be prosecuted in the name of the state of Ohio. This being true, it logically follows that the principle of the law governs as laid down in the case of Cleveland vs. Jewett, 39 O. S., 271, the syllabus of that case being as follows:

"Fines and costs received by the directors of the workhouse at Cleveland, from persons convicted of misdemeanors, under the statutes, in prosecutions in the name of the state in the court of Cuyahoga county, and committed to such workhouse for non-payment of fines and costs, must, under Rev. Stat. Section 6802, be paid into the county treasury; and where such fines and costs have been paid into the city treasury, the city, on refusing to pay the same into the county treasury, is liable to an action therefor by the county commissioners."

In said case the court was construing Section 12378, of the General Code (Section 6802, Rev. Stat.). Said Section 12378, G. C., provides as follows:

"Unless otherwise required by law, an officer who collects a fine, shall pay it into the treasury of the county in which such fine was assessed, to the credit of the county general fund within twenty days after the receipt thereof, take the treasurer's duplicate receipts therefor and forthwith deposit one of them with the county auditor."

Section 4270, of the General Code, specifically provides that the mayor shall pay certain fines, penalties and forfeitures into the county treasury, as follows, to wit:

"* * * All fines, penalties and forfeitures collected by him in state cases shall be by him paid over to the county treasurer monthly."

Therefore, in accordance with the foregoing, it is my conclusion that all fines collected by the mayor under Section 12604 of G. C., should be paid into the county treasury.

Very truly yours,
TIMOTHY S. HOGAN,
Attorney General.

PRESIDENT OF COUNCIL OF CITIES—MAY NOT PERFORM JUDICIAL ACT WHEN ACTING AS MAYOR IN THE ABSENCE OF THE MAYOR.

In the decision of State vs. Hance, the court expressly states that the president of the council in cities, is deprived of the power to perform judicial acts in the absence of the mayor.

COLUMBUS, OHIO, June 12, 1912.

HON. S. C. CARNES, City Solicitor, Cambridge, Ohio.

DEAR SIR:—Your letter of April 19, 1912, received. You state:

> "As city solicitor of Cambridge, Ohio, I am called upon for an opinion in the following matter: Cambridge is a city without a police judge; the mayor for some time past has been, and probably for some time to come will be, unable to attend to his duties as mayor, and the question has arisen as to the powers of the president of council to perform judicial acts and act as mayor in connection with the mayor's court work; also whether or not the right under Section 4549 must be invoked in cities in case of the absence of the mayor.
> "26 G. C. 473 determines the question as regards the president of council in villages where he is not elected as president of council, but I do not feel able to determine whether or not the reasoning of Judge Cook in that decision applies to the same situation in cities and, therefore, am asking you for an opinion in the matter.
> "We have taken the safe course for the time being and had a justice of the peace designated but do not know from what source he will get his fees in prosecutions under ordinances, and as the matter is somewhat urgent, an early reply would be greatly appreciated."

You inquire as to the powers of president of council to perform judicial acts and act as mayor in connection with mayor's court work in the absence of the mayor.

Section 4272 of the General Code provides for the election of president of council for a term of two years.

Section 4273 of the General Code provides as follows:

> "When the mayor is absent from the city, or is unable for any cause to perform his duties, the president of the council shall be the acting mayor. While the president of the city council is acting as mayor, he shall not serve as president of council."

Section 4216 of the General Code provides as follows:

> "At the first meeting in January of each year, the council shall immediately proceed to elect a president pro tem. from their own number, who shall serve until the first meeting of the council in January next after his election. From time to time the council may provide such employes for the village as they may determine, and such employes may be removed at any regular meeting by a majority of the members elected to council. When the mayor is absent from the village or is unable for any cause to perform his duties, the president pro tem. of council becomes acting mayor, and shall have the same powers and perform the same duties as the mayor."

Section 4549 of the General Code provides in part as follows:

"* * * In cities having no police judge, in the absence or during the disability of the mayor, he may designate a justice of the peace to perform his duties in criminal matters, which justice shall, during the time, have the same power and authority as the mayor."

You state in your communication, that Cambridge is a city without a police judge; that the mayor has been for some time, and is not now able to perform the duties of mayor; that you have designated, as provided by Section 4549, General Code, a justice of the peace to perform the duties of mayor in criminal matters.

You will note that the language in Sections 4216 and 4273 of the General Code, authorizing the president pro tem. of council of a village and president of council of a city to act as mayor in the absence or disability of the mayor, is substantially the same.

The circuit court of Belmont county, Ohio, in the case of State vs. Hance, 4 C. C. N. S. p. 541, held:

"The president pro tem. of a village council as acting mayor, under Section 1536-854 of the Revised Statutes, has no jurisdiction to hear and determine a misdemeanor."

Judge Cook, in his opinion in this case, on page 432 said:

"It is provided that 'in cities having no police judge, in the absence, or during the disability of the mayor, he may designate a justice of the peace to perform his duties in criminal matters, which justice shall, during the time, have the same power and authority as the mayor.' We are not prepared to say, as claimed by counsel, that this provision applies to villages. This provision however should have some effect in construing the section under consideration. The president pro tem. of council of cities has the same powers as in villages when the mayor is disqualified from acting. The provisions as to cities and villages are very similar (Section 1536-664). Why, then, should the mayor of a city be required to call in a justice of the peace, in a city having no police judge, to perform his duties in criminal cases? The president pro tem. of council could perform the duties as well in cities as in villages, but in cities he is deprived of that power. From these considerations we are persuaded that the president pro tem. of the council of a village has not jurisdiction to hear and determine a prosecution for a misdemeanor.

"This view is strengthened by the decision in case of Logan Branch Bank, ex parte, 1 O. S., 432. On page 434, Corwin, Judge, says:

" 'It is not within the competency of the legislature to clothe with judicial power any officer or person not elected as a judge.' "

You will note that Judge Cook expressly says "a president pro tem. of council could perform the duties as well in cities as in villages, but in cities, he is deprived of that power."

I am, therefore, of the opinion that the president of council in cities has not the power to perform judicial acts in connection with the mayor's court work.

Very truly yours,

TIMOTHY S. HOGAN,
Attorney General.

CITY SOLICITOR, IN A CONTROVERSY BETWEEN CITY SCHOOL BOARD AND CITY, MAY REPRESENT EITHER—ORDER OF COUNCIL INEFFECTIVE.

In a controversy between a board of education of a city school district and the city, the solicitor is at liberty to choose which of the two parties he will represent regardless of a resolution of council ordering him to represent the city.

COLUMBUS, OHIO, June 21, 1912.

HON. MARSHALL G. FENTON, City Solicitor, Chillicothe, Ohio.

DEAR SIR:—Under date of June 3rd you state as follows:

"On May 2, 1912, the board of education of the school district of the city of Chillicothe, Ohio, instructed me to collect the rental claiming to be due said board from the city of Chillicothe for the use of the upper floor of the city building in said city. Section 4761 of the General Code provides, in part, as follows:

"In city school districts, the city solicitor shall be the legal adviser and attorney for the board of education thereof, and shall perform the same services for such board as herein required of the prosecuting attorney for other boards of education of the county.'

"On May 31, 1912, the council of the city of Chillicothe passed and the mayor approved June 3, 1912, a resolution in accordance with Section 4308 of the General Code as follows:

"'A resolution authorizing and directing the city solicitor to represent the corporation of the city of Chillicothe in the controversy with the board of education of the school district of Chillicothe, Ohio, in regard to the rental due said board from the city of Chillicothe for the use of the upper floor of the city building in which the said corporation, the said city of Chillicothe, is a party.'

"'Be it resolved by the council of the city of Chillicothe, state of Ohio, that the city solicitor be and he is hereby authorized and directed to represent the corporation of the city of Chillicothe in the controversy with the board of education of the school district of Chillicothe, Ohio, as to the collection of rental due said board of education from the city of Chillicothe for the use of the upper floor of the city building.'"

You then inquire:

"As solicitor, is it my duty to represent the city of Chillicothe or the board of education of the school district of Chillicothe, Ohio, or have I the discretion to choose whom I shall represent?"

Under the provisions of Section 4305 of the General Code the city solicitor is constituted the legal counsel and attorney of the city, and under the provisions of Section 4761 of the General Code, referred to in your inquiry, the city solicitor is also constituted the legal adviser and attorney of the board of education of the city school district.

There is no provision of statute making either of his said duties paramount to the other.

As he cannot serve in both capacities in the case put by you I am of the opinion that he is fully authorized to choose which of the two parties he will represent in the controversy.

Very truly yours,
TIMOTHY S. HOGAN,
Attorney General.

COMPENSATION AND DUTIES OF CITY CHEMIST FIXED BY COUNCIL MAY NOT BE VARIED BY AUTHORITY OF WATER WORKS SUPERINTENDENT OR DIRECTOR OF PUBLIC SERVICE.

When council has, by ordinance, fixed the salary of the city chemist and provided that only certain duties shall be required of him, the water works superintendent or the director of public service may not impose other duties upon said chemist which are incidental to a city chemist's work and thereby, make compensation for the same, a charge upon the city.

COLUMBUS, OHIO, June 20, 1912.

HON. G. B. FINDLEY, City Solicitor, Elyria, Ohio.

DEAR SIR:—Under favor of June 13, 1912, you inquire as follows:

> "The director of public service of this city, under the authority granted by the council in ordinance No. 1715, a copy of which is enclosed herewith, orally employed a city chemist at $40.00 per month, with the oral understanding that his duties would be limited to three analyses of water each week.
> "Can the said city chemist analyze coal, cider, and other materials for the city at the request of the water works superintendent or the director of public service, and receive from the city additional compensation for each analysis so made?"

The ordinance fixing the salary of the chemist, as submitted by you, provides as follows:

> "To amend Ordinance No. 1681, passed by the council of the city of Elyria, January 12, 1910, to provide for the employment of a chemist at the water works plant.
> "Be it ordained by the council of the city of Elyria, state of Ohio that Ordinance No. 1681 of said city, adopted by the council thereof on the 12th day of January, 1910, be and same is hereby amended to add the following paragraph; under division water works department.

"One chemist, salary $480.00 per annum, payable semi-monthly from the water works fund of the city."

The ordinance of which the above is an additional paragraph fixes the salaries of various officers but contains no provision as to a chemist.

The authority of council to fix the salary is provided in Section 4214, General Code, which reads:

"Except as otherwise provided in this title council, by ordinance or resolution, shall determine the number of officers, clerks and employes in each department of the city government, and shall fix by ordinance or resolution their respective salaries and compensation, and the amount of bond to be given for each officer, clerk or employé in each department of the government if any be required. Such bond shall be made by such officer, clerk or employe, with surety subject to the approval of the mayor."

In case of Smith vs. Lothschuetz, 20 Ohio Dec. 390, it is held:

"A director of public service of a city has no power, either under Section 139, 140 or 141 of the act of 99 O. L. 563 (General Code 4324, 4325, 4326), the Payne law, giving him the management and supervision of his department to fix salaries or compensation of employes therein but the exclusive right to fix salaries and compensation thereof is reposed in the city council by Section 227 of such act (General Code 4214)."

In your city the council has fixed the salary of a chemist at $480.00 per annum. It appears that the director of public service has employed a chemist at that salary with the understanding that he should make three analyses each week. You inquire as to the authority of the director of public service or of the superintendent of the water works to require additional work of such chemist and of such chemist's right to receive extra compensation therefor. The extra work is of the same nature as that which he is to perform by his employment as city chemist.

In case of Lewis vs. Harrison, 11 Cir. Dec., 647, Jelke, J., says at page 648:

"The reason of such constitutional and legislative provisions sounds in contract, and is that one entering upon an office to which a salary or compensation has been affixed undertakes not only to perform such duties as are prescribed to such office, but has in contemplation the performance of all duties which may arise which are naturally incident to such office or are germane to it, and that when the legislature specifies an additional duty germane in its nature and naturally incident to the office it has added nothing but what the officer is deemed to have had in contemplation when he entered upon the office at a fixed salary."

The extra duties of the city chemist in question are germane to the duties of the office, they are of the same nature. The council has fixed the salary of the chemist. If extra compensation were to be paid such chemist, for work in excess of that for which he was employed, but which is of the same nature as the other work pertaining to his position, this would in effect give him a compensation in excess of that fixed by ordinance. The amount of his compensation would not be fixed by council but by the director of public service who gives him the additional work.

As seen above the director of public service cannot fix the compensation. If the director of public service were permitted to make a contract of employment, as in this case, limiting the number of analyses, and could then require extra analyses of such employe for which the city must pay in addition to the salary fixed by council, such director would in effect be fixing the compensation as other than that prescribed.

Council has fixed the compensation of the city chemist and this compensation cannot be increased by the director of public service or the superintendent of the water works requiring extra work of such chemist, as a chemist. Such chemist could not receive extra compensation for such work. His salary is fixed by council. If the compensation so fixed for the city chemist is not in keeping with the duties of the position, the remedy lies with council to change the salary, and not in giving the chemist extra pay for work pertaining to the duties of his office, although such work may be in addition to what he is required to do by virtue of his employment.

Respectfully,

TIMOTHY S. HOGAN,

Attorney General.

CIVIL SERVICE—CHIEF OF POLICE IN UNCLASSIFIED SERVICE—APPOINTMENT AND REMOVAL BY MAYOR.

The chief of police is a member of the unclassified service and under Section 4250, General Code, the mayor is given the power to appoint that official as the head of a subdepartment of the department of public safety, without the requirement of examination. Such appointment need not be made from the ranks of the police department.

COLUMBUS, OHIO, June 24, 1912.

HON. MEEKER TERWILLIGER, City Solicitor, Circleville, Ohio.

DEAR SIR:—Your favor of June 14, 1912, is received, in which you inquire as follows:

> "In case of a vacancy occurring in the office of chief of police, by resignation, can the mayor appoint some person who has not taken an examination under the civil service commission? And who is not now in service as captain or other office in the police department.
>
> "In other words, can the mayor go outside the department and appoint some one as chief of police or will he have to make the appointment from the present police department, or will he have to make a requisition to the civil service commission to certify him three names from the list, from whom he must appoint a chief of police.
> "The mayor might prefer going outside of the department, to select his chief."

The employes of a city are divided into classified and unclassified service by virtue of Section 4479, General Code, which provides:

"The civil service shall be divided into classified and unclassified service. The unclassified service shall include the positions of officers elected by the people or appointed to fill vacancies in offices filled by popular election, or whose appointment is subject to confirmation by the council, or who are appointed by any state officer or by any court, employes of the council, persons who by law are to serve without remuneration, persons who are appointed to positions requiring professional or technical skill as may be determined by the civil service commission; persons appointed or employed to give instruction in any educational institution, persons appointed by any board or officers supervising elections; persons who as members of a board or otherwise, have charge of any principal department of the government of any city, the head or chief of any division or principal department relating to engineering, water works, street cleaning, or health, the chief of the police department. the chief of the fire department, the superintendent of any workhouse, house of refuge, infirmary, or hospital, the librarian of any public library, private secretaries, deputies in the office of the city auditor and city treasurer, unskilled laborers and such appointees as the civil service commission as they may by rule determine. The classified service shall comprise offices and places not included in the unclassified service."

By virtue of the foregoing section the chief of police is placed in the unclassified service.

Section 4250, General Code, gives the mayor the power to appoint the chief of police. Said section reads:

"The mayor shall be the chief conservator of the peace within the corporation. He shall appoint and have the power to remove the director of public service, the director of public safety and the heads of the subdepartments of the departments of public service and public safety, and shall have such other powers and perform such other duties as are conferred and required by law."

The chief of police is the head of the police department, which is a subdepartment of public safety. This section does not limit the mayor as to the manner of the appointment.

Section 1536-685 of the Revised Statutes, contains this provision:

"The chief of police shall be appointed from the classified list of such department."

This provision was not carried into the General Code. There is no provision in the General Code requiring that the chief of police shall be appointed from the classified service.

The provision of the civil service law that applicants for positions in the classified service shall take an examination, applies to positions in the classified service and not to those in the unclassified service.

Section 4480, General Code, provides:

"Applicants for admission into the classified service shall be subjected to examination which shall be competitive, public and open to residents of the city, with such limitation as to age, residence, health, habits and moral character as the commission prescribes. The commission shall prepare rules and regulations adapted to carry out these purposes with reference to the classified service of the city, which rules and regulations shall provide for the grading of offices and positions similar in character in groups and divisions so as to permit the filling of offices and positions in the higher grades as far as practicable through promotions, and for public examinations to ascertain the fitness of applicants for appointment in the classified service. Such applicant shall take rank upon the register as candidates in the order of their relative standing without reference to priority of examination. The result of the examination shall be accessible to all persons."

The chief of police is not in the classified service and an appointee to such position is not required to take an examination.

In making his appointment for chief of police the mayor is not confined to the persons in the police department, but may go outside of it.

Respectfully,

TIMOTHY S. HOGAN.

Attorney General.

OFFICES COMPATIBLE—CLERK AND MEMBER OF SCHOOL BOARD—OFFICES INCOMPATIBLE—TREASURER AND MEMBER OF SCHOOL BOARD—WHEN DEPOSITORY ESTABLISHED, MEMBER MAY PERFORM DUTIES OF CLERK AND TREASURER.

By specific provision of Section 4747, General Code, a member of a board of education may at the same time, act as its clerk and receive compensation for both services.

The position of members of the board of education and treasurer of the board are incompatible, however.

Under Section 4782, General Code, when a depository is established, the clerk performs the duties of the treasurer and a member of the school board may, in this case, perform such duties.

COLUMBUS, OHIO, June 24, 1912.

HON. D. F. DUNLAVY, City Solicitor, Ashtabula, Ohio.

DEAR SIR:—I herewith desire to acknowledge the receipt of your letter of May 29, 1912, wherein you inquire as follows:

"As city solicitor of the city of Ashtabula, I write you to ascertain your opinion on the following proposition; can a member of the board of education in a city where a depository has been established, act as treasurer and clerk of said board, or either?

"In our city a depository has been provided according to statute, but the conditions are such that it would make it very inconvenient for the tuition, which is very small in amount, to be handled directly through the depository and on that account it has been handled through clerk. At this time the question seems to arise on the proposition as to whether or not the clerk of said board can act as treasurer and also involving the question aforesaid mention, and we are now up against the proposition as to how to handle the same."

In reply to your inquiry I desire to say, that this department, in an opinion of the date of March 4, 1911, rendered to the Hon. T. E. McElhiney, prosecuting attorney, McConnellsville, Ohio, held, that a clerk of a township board of education can legally receive compensation, both as a member of such board of education and as clerk, a copy of which opinion I am enclosing herewith.

Section 4747 of the General Code provides as follows:

> "The board of education of each school district shall organize on the first Monday in January after the election of members of such board. One member of the board shall be elected president and a person, who may or may not be a member of the board, shall be elected clerk. The president shall serve for a term of one year and the clerk for a term not to exceed two years. The board shall fix the time of holding its regular meetings."

Inasmuch as Section 4747 of the General Code specifically says that the clerk may or may not be a member of the board, I am, therefore, of the opinion that, without question, a member of a board of education can legally act as clerk of the board of education.

In an opinion of the date of January 29, 1912, rendered to Hon. Hugh R. Gilmore, prosecuting attorney, Eaton, Ohio, this department held, that the office of member of the board of education and the office of treasurer of the board of education are incompatible, and cannot be held by the same person at the same time. I am enclosing you herewith a copy of said opinion also.

From the conclusions reached in the above opinions, it is apparent that while a member of a board of education could legally act as a clerk of such board, such member could not, however, act as treasurer, or both as treasurer and clerk. However, I desire to say, that when a depository is provided for by the board of education a different question arises by reason of Section 4782 of the General Code, which provides as follows:

> "When a depository has been provided for the school moneys of a district, as authorized by law, the board of education of the district, by resolution adopted by a vote of a majority of its members, may dispense with a treasurer of the school moneys, belonging to such school district. In such case, the clerk of the board of education of a district shall perform all the services, discharge all the duties and be subject to all the obligations required by law of the treasurer of such school district."

Said section specifically says that when a depository is provided by the board of education, that then such board, by resolution adopted by a majority vote thereof, may dispense with a treasurer of school moneys, and that thereupon the clerk of such board shall discharge all the duties of the treasurer.

Therefore, in direct answer to your question, I am of the opinion that a member of the board of education, in a city where a depository has been established, can act as clerk and also perform and discharge the duties of treasurer of such board of education at the same time.

Very truly yours,

TIMOTHY S. HOGAN,

Attorney General.

BASEBALL PLAYING ON SUNDAY—POWERS OF COUNCIL TO LICENSE, REGULATE OR PERMIT—CHEERING—"PUBLIC NUISANCE"—"LOUD NOISES"—RIOTOUS AND DISORDERLY CONDUCT.

By virtue of Section 13049, General Code, baseball playing of any kind is prohibited on Sunday morning, and as regards that time, therefore, council may not regulate, license or permit ball playing of any kind.

Section 3670, General Code, delegates to council the power to regulate and license ball grounds conducted for a profit at any time other than Sunday forenoon, in any reasonable manner deemed advisable.

The words "to prevent noise" and "to preserve the peace and good order," in Section 3658, General Code, extend only to the prevention of riot and disorder.

Section 3670, General Code, refers to ball grounds conducted for a profit only and council therefore, cannot prevent cheering or regulate ball grounds not conducted for a profit, under either Section 3670 or Section 3658, General Code. Neither of said "conducts" can be classed as "public nuisances," to be abated under Section 3650, General Code.

An ordinance prohibiting cheering would probably be annulled on the ground of unreasonableness. Council cannot prevent cheering at a ball game, and may prevent only such "loud noises" as amount to riotous or disorderly conduct.

COLUMBUS, OHIO, July 3, 1912.

HON. JOSEPH SMITH, City Solicitor, Niles, Ohio.

DEAR SIR:—Under date of April 9th, I received your favor in which you state in part:

> "A petition has been presented to the city council to permit Sunday baseball playing. The city ordinance prohibits Sunday ball playing, as it has not been changed since the legislature amended Section 13049, of the General Code.
> "I am informed that you have rendered an opinion that an ordinance in conflict with said section is null and void. If you have rendered an opinion to this effect, I would like to see it."

No such opinion has been rendered by this department. It is my opinion, however, that an ordinance of council which is actually in conflict with Section 13049, of the General Code, or with any other state statute would be null and void.

In your letter you further state:

> "I would like to know your opinion as to whether under Sections 3658 or 3670, the council can pass an ordinance to regulate the use of ball grounds on Sunday, or license the owners or lessees of ball grounds to permit Sunday ball playing, and whether or not council can pass an ordinance to prohibit cheering or any other loud noise at ball games played on Sunday?"

The code sections material are as follows:

> "Section 13049. Whoever, on Sunday, participates in or exhibits to the public with or without charge for admittance, in a building, room, ground, garden or other place, a theatrical or dramatic performance or an equestrian or circus performance of jugglers, acrobats, rope dancing or sparring exhibition, variety show, negro minstrelsy, living statuary, ballooning, baseball playing in the forenoon, ten pins or other game of similar kind or participates in keeping a low or disorderly house of resort or sells, disposes of or gives away ale, beer, porter or spirituous liquor in a building appendant or adjacent thereto, where such show, performance, or exhibition is given, or houses or place is kept, on complaint within twenty days thereafter, shall be fined not more than one hundred dollars or imprisoned in jail not more than six months, or both.

"Section 3658. To prevent riot, gambling, noise and disturbance, indecent and disorderly conduct or assemblages, and to preserve the peace and good order, and to protect the property of the corporation and its inhabitants.

"Section 3670. To regulate and license manufacturers and dealers in explosives, pawnbrokers, chattel mortgages and salary loan brokers, peddlers, public ball rooms, scavengers, intelligence offices, billiard rooms, bowling alleys, livery, sale and boarding stables, dancing or riding academies or schools, race courses, ball grounds, street musicians, second-hand dealers, junk shops and all persons engaged in the trade, business or profession of manicuring, massaging or chiropody. In the granting of any license a municipal corporation may exact and receive such sums of money as the council shall deem proper and expedient."

Section 13049, of the General Code, prohibits ball playing on Sunday forenoon. Your questions, therefore, are eliminated as regards Sunday morning, and are to be considered only as they pertain to the remainder of the day.

The rule of construction is briefly stated in Whitcomb vs. City of Springfield, 3 O. C. C., on page 246, which is as follows:

"Municipal corporations derive their powers from the statutes passed by the general assembly, in which all legislative power is vested by the constitution. That body may delegate to cities and villages the power to make by-laws and ordinances, which, when authorized, have the force, in favor of the municipality, and against those bound thereby, of laws passed by the legislature. An ordinance which does not fall within the grant of power, express or necessarily implied, is void.

"In determining the existence of such power all substantial doubts are to be solved against the corporation and in favor of the general public."

Section 3670, General Code, above quoted is clear and unambiguous in so far as it confers on council, the right to license and regulate ball grounds. In construing this act, however, the court, in Village of Silverton vs. Davis, 10 C. C., n. s. on page 60, restricts its application to ball playing for profit only.

On page 63, Judge Smith says:

"The section relates to one engaged in the 'business' or 'occupation,' or one who 'keeps' or is 'proprietor' of, or 'manager' of a certain 'thing or business.'"

I am, therefore, of the opinion that under Section 3670, General Code, council may license and regulate the conduct on Sunday afternoons, of ball grounds which are conducted for a profit.

If council is given power to regulate and license ball playing, under Section 3658, General Code, above quoted, that power is conferred by the words therein "to prevent noise" or "to preserve peace and good order."

These expressions are each construed in the case of Whitcomb vs. City of Springfield, 3 O. C. C., p. 244.

On page 249 the court says:

> "No construction has been given to these words by our supreme court. But testing the section as it formerly stood by the rules stated, we cannot escape the conviction that the word 'noise,' as used therein, is ejusdem generis with 'riot' and 'disorderly conduct.' And we do not think there is any reason to suppose that the legislature intended to enlarge the meaning of these words by the transposition of the word 'gambling.' The same construction is to be given to the phrase 'peace and good.' These words are correlatives or antitheses of 'noise' and 'disturbance.' The council may prevent the one by preserving the other. Peace and good order, as used in the statute, consist in the absence of riot, noise and disturbance, as therein intended."

In the light of this construction, inasmuch as neither the game itself nor the practice of cheering as such can be classed as inherently riotous or disorderly, or as a natural menace to peace and good order, neither of these conducts can be held to come within the terms of Section 3658, General Code. Council, therefore, has no power to regulate ball games not conducted for a profit, nor to prevent cheering, under this section.

In further support of this construction, I beg to refer to the cases of City of Wellsville vs. O'Connor, and City of Wellsville vs. Kirkbride, 1 O. C. C., n. s., p. 253, wherein it was held that the provisions of Section 3658, General Code, are to be construed within the limitations of what is now Section 3664, which statute can, in no sense be construed to include the practice of ball playing nor of cheering thereat.

The one other possible grant of power which might extend to the restraint of cheering is that conferred by Section 3650, General Code, to cause any nuisance to be abated. Cheering, in its primary meaning, however, and as it is generally demonstrated in the course of the national game, in no sense of the word can be construed to come within the term "public nuisance."

I can point to no authority in council, therefore, to prevent cheering as such, at a baseball game, unless it comes within council's powers to regulate games conducted for a profit on other than Sunday forenoons, which powers are conferred by Sections 3670 and 3657, General Code. The practicability of such a method of regulation, however, and its reasonableness present questions of very grave doubt. Although they are questions in which council's discretion has a controlling force, I am of the opinion that an ordinance separating cheering from the game would exceed the bounds of a legitimate discretion, and invoke annullment at the hands of the courts, on the grounds of unreasonableness.

Answering specifically, each of your questions in conclusion:

First—Council cannot regulate license nor permit ball playing of any kind on Sunday morning.

Second—Section 3670, General Code, clothes council with the power to regulate and license ball grounds conducted for a profit on Sunday afternoons in any reasonable manner which it deems advisable.

Third—Neither Section 3670, General Code, nor Section 3658, General Code, confers upon council, the power to regulate or license ball grounds which are not conducted for a profit.

Fourth—There has been no authority delegated to council to prevent cheering at a ball game.

Fifth—Council is empowered to prevent such "loud noises" at ball games as amount to riotous or disorderly conduct.

Very truly yours,

TIMOTHY S. HOGAN,

Attorney General.

CIVIL SERVICE—APPOINTMENT OF POLICEMEN AND FIREMEN WHEN ONLY ONE APPLICANT CERTIFIED BY COMMISSION—TEMPORARY APPOINTMENT WITHOUT EXAMINATION.

Under the civil service law the appointing power may appoint the only applicant for a position as policeman or fireman which is certified to him by the commission. He is not obliged to appoint, however, unless three are certified to him.

Temporary appointments may be made under Section 4488, of the General Code, without examination.

A permanent appointment may not be made, however, without examinations,

COLUMBUS, OHIO, June 28, 1912.

HON. CLYDE C. PORTER, City Solicitor, Tiffin. Ohio.

DEAR SIR:—Your favor of June 19, 1912, is received in which you inqiure as follows:

> "At the request of the mayor of this city, we are writing for your opinion in the following matter. The city of Tiffin recently, through the proper channels, appointed a civil service commission. At the examination, called for by this commission, there was but one applicant for the appointment of fireman and one applicant for the appointment as policeman.
> "It appears that there have been substitutes doing duty in these two departments. The mayor wishes to know whether or not appointments to regular positions can be made from among these substitutes, in these two departments, without requiring them to take the civil service examination."

The manner of appointment to positions in the classified service of the city is provided for by Section 4480 and 4481, General Code.

Section 4480, General Code, provides:

> "Applicants for admission into the classified service shall be subjected to examination which shall be competitive, public and open to residents of the city, with such limitations as to age, residence, health, habits and moral character as the commission prescribes. The commission shall prepare rules and regulations adapted to carry out these purposes with reference to the classified service of the city, which rules and regulations shall provide for the grading of offices and positions similar in character in groups and divisions so as to permit the filling of offices and positions in the higher grades as far as practicable through promotions, and for public examinations to ascertain the fitness of applicants for appointment in the classified service. Such applicant shall take rank upon the register as candidates in the order of their relative standing without reference to priority of examination. The result of the examination shall be accessible to all persons."

Section 4481, General Code, provides:

> "Appointments shall be made in the following manner: The appointing board or officer shall notify the commission of any vacancy to be filled. The commission shall thereupon certify to such board or officer the three candidates graded highest in the respective lists as shown by the result of such examination. Such board or officer shall thereupon appoint one of the three so certified. Grades and standings so established shall remain the grades for a period of six months, or longer if the commission so determines, and in succeeding notifications of vacancies, candidates not selected may be dropped by the commission after having been certified a total of three times."

It appears that there have not been enough applicants before the civil service commission to fill the positions, or to permit the civil service commission to certify three names as required by Section 4481, General Code.

In an opinion given to Allen G. Aigler, city solicitor of Bellevue, Ohio, on April 29, 1912, is was held that where the civil service commission has less than three names qualified for a certain position, the appointing officer or board may appoint such persons, but are not required to make an appointment unless three names are certified to it by the commission.

In your case the civil service commission may certify the one name upon its list and the mayor or other appointing power may appoint such person, but he is not required to do so.

Section 4488, General Code, provides:

"To prevent the stoppage of business or to meet extraordinary exigencies, as provided in this title, the mayor may make temporary appointments."

A case such as you present would constitute an emergency and the mayor may make temporary appointments until such time as the civil service commission can certify sufficient names to fill the positions. Such emergency appointees are not, however, entitled to the positions permanently.

Appointments to regular positions in the classified service can only be made in the manner provided in Section 4480 and 4481, General Code. Applicants must take the examination and must be certified to the appointing board or officer by the civil service commission. Emergency appointees do not hold regular positions.

Section 4480, General Code, provides that appointments to the higher positions should be made by promotion as far as practicable. This would apply to substitute patrolmen who would be appointed as regular patrolmen. This does not dispense with the requirement that the applicants must take the examination. If the substitutes desire regular appointments they should qualify therefor by taking the examination.

The substitutes cannot be appointed to positions as regular patrolmen or policemen or firemen without taking the civil service examination for such position.

Respectfully,
TIMOTHY S. HOGAN,
Attorney General

MUNICIPAL PUBLIC UTILITIES—ELECTRIC LIGHT PLANT OWNED BY CITY CANNOT USE POLES OF PRIVATE COMPANY.

Public utilities which are owned or operated by a municipality are not included within the provisions of the public utilities act requiring one utility to use the poles or equipment of another utility. These provisions are therefore not available for municipal electric light plant owned by the city of Akron.

COLUMBUS, OHIO, July 13, 1912.

HON. JONATHAN TAYLOR, City Solicitor, Akron, Ohio.

I beg to acknowledge receipt of your communication of July 8th, in which you request my opinion as follows:

> "If the city of Akron should erect a municipal electric lighting plant, I wish to ask you whether we could avail ourselves of the public utility act under the provisions which allow one utility to use the poles of another utility."

In reply thereto I desire to say that Section 614-2*a* of the General Code provides as follows:

> "The term 'public utility' as used in this act, shall mean and include every corporation, company, co-partnership, person or association, their lessees, trustees or receivers, defined in the next preceding section, except such public utilities as operate their utilitis not for profit, and except such public utilities as are, or may hereafter be owned or operated by any municipality, etc."

Section 614-29, General Code, provides that,

> "Every public utility having any equipment on, over or under any street, or highway, shall, subject to the provisions of Section 9103 of the General Code, for a reasonable compensation, permit the use of the same by any other public utility whenever the commission shall determine as provided in Section 32 (General Code Section 614-30) hereof that public convenience, welfare and necessity require such use, or joint use, and such use or joint use will not result in irreparable injury to the owner or other users of such equipment, nor in any substantial detriment to the service to be rendered by such owner or other users."

Section 614-30, General Code, provides that,

> "In case of failure to agree upon such use or joint use or the conditions or compensation for such use or joint use, any public utility may apply to the commission, and if after investigation the commission shall ascertain that the public convenience, welfare and necessity require such use or joint use and that it would not result in irreparable injury to the owner or other users of such property or equipment, nor in any substantial detriment to the service to be rendered by such owner or other users of such property or equipment, said commission shall by order direct that such use or joint use be permitted and prescribe reasonable conditions and compensation for such joint use."

From a careful reading and consideration of the whole act creating the public service commission, and particularly the sections above quoted, I am of the opinion that public utilities, such "as are or may hereafter be owned or operated by any municipality," cannot avail themselves of the provisions of Section 614-29, General Code, and compel other public utilities to consent to the use of their equipment on, over or under any street or highway, the legislature having exempted such municipal public utilities from the operation of said sections.

I arrive at the above conclusion, more thoroughly convinced of the correctness thereof, by virtue of the fact that there is no remedy procedure provided in said act wherein the commission would be given the right to entertain jurisdiction and enforce an order to that effect when the public utility seeking to use the other public utility's equipment is a public utility owned by a municipality and exempt from the provisions of said act.

I am, therefore, of the opinion that should the city of Akron erect a municipal electric light plant it could not avail itself of the public utility act under the provisions quoted, which permit one utility to use the poles or equipment of another utility, as therein provided.

Very truly yours,

TIMOTHY S. HOGAN,

Attorney General.

GARBAGE COLLECTION AND REMOVAL—POWERS OF COUNCIL, BOARD OF HEALTH, AND DIRECTOR OF PUBLIC SERVICE TO CONTRACT FOR—ADVERTISEMENT AND BIDS.

Legislative acts granting powers to municipalities are not in the nature of contracts and they may be modified or withdrawn by the legislature at will. Section 4470 of the General Code granting to council the power to contract for garbage collection and removal is a valid exception to Section 4211 of the General Code, providing that the powers of council shall be legislative only.

Such contracts should be entered into through the president and clerk of the council.

There is no authority given to the board of health to execute a contract for the collection and disposal of garbage under either Section 3809 or 4470 of the General Code.

Under Section 3809 of the General Code the council of a village may make such contract but the council of a city is thereunder empowered only to authorize the proper authorities to enter into the same.

Under Sections 4216, 4324 and 4326 of the General Code the director of public service becomes the proper officer to enter into such contract upon the authorization of the council.

Under Section 3809 of the General Code the requirement of the auditor's certificate to the effect that there is money in the treasury is dispensed with and under Section 4328 of the General Code advertising and bids are required only when the expenditure amounts to more than $500.00.

Section 4463 of the General Code empowers council to authorize the board of health to contract for the removal of garbage.

COLUMBUS, OHIO, July 5, 1912.

HON. JONATHAN TAYLOR, City Solicitor, Akron, Ohio.

DEAR SIR:—Under date of June 15, 1912, you ask an opinion of this department upon the following:

> "I wish to write you again regarding the proposed garbage contract into which we are about to enter, and the query in my mind is who is the proper officer to execute the contract referred to in Section 3809 of the General Code. You will note the section reads:
> "'The council of the city may authorize—a contract—for the collection and disposal of garbage in such corporation.'
> "Whom should the council authorize?
> "Again, the contract referred to in Section 3809, is it subject to competitive bidding, and must it be advertised as other contracts?
> "With reference to Section 4470, you will note it reads:
> "'The council may contract for a period of not to exceed five years.'
>
> "This seems to be a departure from our ordinary standard method of procedure, as in practically all other cases council makes no contracts but simply authorizes them. My questions are these with regard to this section:
> "1. If the council make such a contract, by whom is it executed?
> "2. If the council authorizes such a contract whom should it authorize to execute the same?

"With regard to both these sections, to what extent, if any, may the board of health contract for either of the purposes set out in these sections 3809 and 4470?"

The question in reference to Section 4470, General Code, as to the power of the city council to contract will be considered first. Said Section 4470, General Code, provides:

"The council may contract for a period of not to exceed five years for the collection and removal of such garbage, nightsoil, dead animals, and other solid waste substances at the expense of the municipality or at the expense of the persons responsible for the existence of such waste substances."

This section standing alone will authorize council to enter into a contract for the purpose therein provided.

Section 4211, General Code, limits the power of council as follows:

"The powers of council shall be legislative only, and it shall perform no administrative duties whatever and shall neither appoint nor confirm any officer or employe in the city government except those of its own body, except as is otherwise provided in this title. All contracts requiring the authority of council for their execution shall be entered into and conducted to performance by the board or officers having charge of the matters to which they relate, and after authority to make such contracts has been given and the necessary appropriation made, council shall take no further action thereon."

There is no constitutional limitation upon the powers of council, or upon the power of the legislature to fix the manner in which contract shall be executed by municipal corporations. The limitation of the powers of a city council fixed by Section 4211, General Code, has been prescribed by the legislature and the same power has granted to council the authority to contract under Section 4470, General Code.

The Municipal Code of Ohio is the charter of its municipal corporations. All powers therein provided are granted by the legislature and may be taken away or modified at the will of the legislature.

In McQuillen of Municipal Corporations at Section 165 it is said:

The usual judicial view is that, neither is the charter of a municipal corporation nor any legislative act conferring power or regulating the use of property held by it for governmental (state) purposes a contract within the meaning of the constitutional prohibition of laws impairing the obligation of contracts. Therefore, the general legal doctrine, supported by an unbroken line of authorities, is that, political powers conferred upon public corporations for the local government of a place are not vested rights as against the state, and where there is no constitutional restriction, either express or implied, on the action of the legislature it has absolute power to create, change, modify or destroy them at pleasure."

Dillon in his work on Municipal Corporations, fifth edition says at Section 106:

"Legislative acts respecting the political and governmental powers of municipal corporations not being in the nature of contracts the provisions thereof may be changed at pleasure where the constitutional rights of creditors and others are not invaded."

The limitation placed upon the powers of council by Section 4211, General Code, is a general rule. An exception to that rule has been made by the legislature in Section 4470, General Code. Sections 4211 and 4470, General Code, have been passed by the same authority and are of equal validity. In order to permit the provisions of each section to stand, Section 4470, General Code, must be considered as an exception to the rule as set forth in Section 4211.

The provision of Section 4211, General Code, that the power of council shall be legislative only does not invalidate the provision of Section 4470, which authorizes the council to contract.

A contract by council should be entered into through its officers. In the case of contracts by a village council, they are entered into on behalf of the village by the mayor and clerk of the village, as provided in Section 4221, General Code. The mayor of a village is the presiding officer of council and the clerk of of the village performs the duties of the clerk of council.

All boards or bodies act through their officers. Council as a body authorizes the execution of the contract and agrees upon its terms, by resolution or ordinance. The officers of council, the president and clerk, carry out the will of council by formally executing the contract on behalf of the city in their official capacities. In this manner council makes the contract.

Section 4470, General Code is placed, under the chapter relating to the board of health of municipalities. Section 4463, General Code, gives the board of health the power to contract for the removal of garbage as follows:

"The council may empower the board of health to employ such number of scavengers for the removal of swill, garbage and offal from the houses, buildings, yards and lots within the municipality, as it deems necessary. In such case the board may make contracts therefor, subject to the approval of council, to be signed by the proper officers of the council, and may regulate the work to be done. Upon the request of the board of health, it shall be the duty of council to lease or purchase suitable lands, the location of which shall be approved by the board of health, to be used as a dump ground for such and other noxious substances removed from the municipality."

Your inquiry as to the power of the board of health is as to Sections 3809 and 4470, General Code, and not as to Section 4463, General Code. I find no authority given to the board of health to execute a contract for the purposes mentioned in Sections 4470 and 3809, General Code.

Said Section 3809, General Code, provides:

"The council of a city may authorize, and the council of a village may make, a contract with any person, firm or company for lighting the streets, alleys, lands, lanes, squares and public places in the municipal corporation, or for furnishing water to such corporation, or for the collection and disposal of garbage in such corporation, or for the leasing of the electric light plant and equipment, or the water works plant, or both, of any person, firm or company therein situated, for a period not exceeding ten years, and the requirement of a certificate that the necessary money is in the treasury shall not apply to such contract, and such requirement shall not apply to street improvement contracts extending for one year or more, nor to contracts made by the board of health, nor to contracts made by a village for the employment of legal counsel."

It will be observed that this section gives power to the council of a city to authorize a contract for the collection and disposal of the garbage. It does not authorize council to make the contract for such purpose.

This section does not provide who shall execute such a contract for the city. The statutes applying to the power to contract for a city must control.

By virtue of Section 4468, General Code, the board of health may recommend to council the necessity of providing means for the proper disposal of garbage, sewage and waste matters of the city.

Said Section 4468, General Code, provides:

"Upon the recommendation of the board of health of a municipality, or, if the powers of such board have been vested in any other officer or board, upon the recommendation of such officer or board, the council may cause plans and estimates to be prepared and acquire by condemnation or otherwise such land or lands within or without the corporate limits as are necessary to provide for the proper disposal in a sanitary manner of the sewage, garbage and waste matters, and either or any of them, of the municipality."

This section does not authorize the board of health to execute a contract for that purpose.

Section 4324, General Code, provides:

"The director of public service shall manage and supervise all public works and undertakings of the city, except as otherwise provided by law, and shall have all powers and perform all duties conferred upon him by law. He shall keep a record of his proceedings, a copy of which, certified by him, shall be competent evidence in all courts."

Section 4325, General Code, provides:

"The director of public service shall supervise the improvement and repair of streets, avenues, alleys, lands, lanes, squares, wharves, docks, landings, market houses, bridges, viaducts, aqueducts, sidewalks, play grounds, sewers, drains, ditches, culverts, ship canals, streams and water courses, the lighting, sprinkling and cleaning of public places, the construction of public improvements and public works, except those having reference to the department of public safety, or as otherwise provided in this title."

Section 4326, General Code, provides:

"The director of public service shall manage municipal water, lighting, heating, power, garbage and other undertakings of the city, parks, baths, play grounds, market houses, cemeteries, crematories, sewage disposal plants and farms, and shall make and preserve surveys, maps, plans, drawings and estimates. He shall supervise the construction and have charge of the maintenance of public buildings and other property of the corporation not otherwise provided for in this title. He shall have the management of all other matters provided by the council in connection with the public service of the city."

The director of public service is given authority, by Section 4324, General Code, over all public works and undertakings of the city, except as otherwise provided for by law.

Section 4326, General Code, specifically gives the director of public service the management of the undertakings of the city pertaining to garbage and of sewage disposal plants.

These statutes place the management of the garbage and sewage works and undertakings of the city in the director of public service. Section 4211, General Code, provides that the officer or board having charge of the matters to which a contract relates shall execute such contract.

The execution of the contract for the collection and disposal of the garbage provided and authorized by Section 3809, General Code, is not specifically provided for. The director of public service, therefore, should execute the contracts entered into by virtue of said Section 3809, General Code, for the collection and disposal of the garbage. The council is to execute the contract authorized by Section 4470 for the collection and removal of the garbage. The board of health is not authorized to execute a contract under either of said Sections 3809 and 4470, General Code, but may contract in the manner provided in Section 4463, General Code.

These several sections all relate to garbage. There is distinction in the manner of collecting and removing the same. While contracts under the several sections are to be executed by different authorities, the possibility of conflict in authority is avoided for the reason that council must act in each case. Council makes the contract under Section 4470, General Code, and must authorize the contracts under Sections 3809 and 4463, General Code. No contract can be entered into under these sections without the authority of council.

Shall the contract for the collection and disposal of garbage under Section 3809, General Code, be let at competitive bidding, after advertising therefor?

Section 4328, General Code, provides for competitive bidding as following:

> "The director of public service may make any contract or purchase supplies or material or provide labor for any work under the supervision of that department not involving more than five hundred dollars. When an expenditure within the department, other than the compensation of persons employed therein, exceeds five hundred dollars, such expenditure shall first be authorized and directed by ordinance of council. When so authorized and directed, the director of public service shall make a written contract with the lowest and best bidder after advertising for not less than two nor more than four consecutive weeks in a newspaper of general circulation within the city."

The requirement for competitive bidding is based upon the amount of the expenditure involved in the contract. If the contract calls for an expenditure in excess of five hundred dollars, or the improvement will cost more than five hundred dollars, the contract must be let at competitive bidding.

It will be observed that under Section 3809, General Code, a contract for the collection and disposal of garbage may be entered into without first securing a certificate from the auditor that the money therefor is in the treasury. No exception is made, however, as to competitive bidding, if the contract involves an expenditure in excess of five hundred dollars.

From the facts submitted in your former inquiry of May 22, 1912, I take it that the proposed contract involves no expenditure of money upon the part of the city. The city is not required to pay the proposed company anything for the disposal of the garbage. The company receives its compensation from the products of the garbage. The city, however, is required to deliver the garbage to the proposed plant. The collection and removal of garbage is a part of the duty of the city, which duty it may perform at the expense of the city or at the expense of those who are responsible for the garbage. The fact that the city is required to deliver the garbage to the proposed plant, would not of itself necessarily require an extra expenditure of money. The city must remove the garbage and it may as well remove it to the proposed plant as to some other point.

A contract under Section 3809, General Code, for the disposal of garbage by a private person or company, by which the city is to deliver its garbage to the proposed plant, wherein the garbage is to be disposed of without additional expense to the city, does not involve an expenditure of money by the city, and does not require competitive bidding.

If such contract involves an expenditure of money in excess of five hundred dollars, or involves the sale of real estate by the municipality, then such contract, or such sale of real estate, must be advertised and let or sold at competitive bidding.

The features of the proposed contract submitted by you do not show either of the above conditions.

The purpose of advertising a contract is to secure bidders. As this contract may be let without competitive bids, advertising of such contract is not required.

Respectfully,

TIMOTHY S. HOGAN,

Attorney General.

PUBLICATIONS OF COUNCIL—NEWSPAPER IN WHICH MAYOR IS INTERESTED IS DISQUALIFIED.

By provision of Section 3808 of the General Code when a mayor is pecuniarily interested in a newspaper, publications of council may not be made in said paper. In such case said paper is disqualified and must be deemed to be non-existing within the contemplation of the statutes requiring publication.

COLUMBUS, OHIO, July 13, 1912.

HON. WILLIAM B. JAMES, City Solicitor, Bowling Green, Ohio.

DEAR SIR:—Your favor of June 24, 1912, is received in which you inquire:

> "Can the mayor of the city, in which there are but two newspapers of general circulation of opposite politics, and who is the owner of a one-half interest in one of said papers, receive compensation for the publication of ordinances and resolutions required to be published in two newspapers of opposite politics?
>
> "In explanation I might say that our city, Bowling Green, has but two papers published in the city, one Republican, and one Democratic paper. The mayor of Bowling Green owns a one-half interest in the Wood County Democrat.
>
> "What would you say as to the necessity of publication, validity if no charge for publication is made, and the right of the paper under the circumstances to be paid for the publication?"

Section 3808, General Code, provides:

> "No member of council, board, officer or commissioner of the corporation, shall have any interest in the expenditure of money on the part of the corporation other than his fixed compensation. A violation of any provision of this or the preceding two sections shall disqualify the party violating it from holding any office of trust or profit in the corporation, and shall render him liable to the corporation for all sums of money or other thing he may receive contrary to the provisions of such sections, and if in office he shall be dismissed therefrom."

Section 12910, General Code, provides:

> "Whoever, holding an office of trust or profit by election or appointment, or as agent, servant or employe of such officer or of a board of such officers is interested in a contract for the purchase of property, supplies or fire insurance for the use of the county, township, city, village, board of education or a public institution with which he is connected, shall be imprisoned in the penitentiary not less than one year nor more than ten years."

The mayor is an officer of the city. The foregoing sections make it a penal offense for an officer of the city to be interested in a contract with such city for the expenditure of money, other than his compensation. The mayor as such officer cannot be interested in a contract for the publication of ordinances and other legal notices.

The mayor is interested in one of the newspapers of your city. So long as he is mayor and has a financial interest in such newspaper, no contract can be entered into with such newspaper by the city. The statutes do not contemplate that notices shall be published in a newspaper without compensation for such publication. The newspaper in which the mayor has an interest is ineligible to publish any ordinances or other notices for the city.

Section 4227, General Code, provides:

> "Ordinances, resolutions and by-laws shall be authenticated by the signature of the presiding officer and clerk of the council. Ordinances of a general nature, or providing for improvements shall be published as hereinafter provided before going into operation. No ordinance shall take effect until the expiration of ten days after the first publication of such notice. As soon as a by-law, resolution or ordinance is passed and signed, it shall be recorded by the clerk in a book to be furnished by the council for the purpose."

In construing this section in an opinion to the bureau of inspection and supervisions of public offices under date of August 13, 1911, it was held that in order to make this section clear, the following words contained in the original section of the Revised Statutes must be read into said Section 4227, General Code, to wit:

> "Ordinances of a general nature, or providing for improvements shall be published in some newspaper of general circulation in the corporation; if a daily, twice, if a weekly, once before going into operation."

Section 4229, General Code, provides:

"Except as otherwise provided in this title, in all municipal corporations the statements, ordinances, resolutions, orders, proclamations, notices and reports required by this title, or the ordinances of a municipality to be published, shall be published in two newspapers of opposite politics of general circulation therein, if there are such in the municipality, and for the following times: The statement of receipts and disbursements required shall be published once; the ordinances and resolutions once a week for two consecutive weeks; proclamations of elections once a week for two consecutive weeks; notices of contracts and of sale of bonds once a week for four consecutive weeks; all other matters shall be published once."

This section provides for publication in two newspapers of opposite politics, if there are such in the municipality.

In your city there are two newspapers of opposite politics, but one of said newspapers is disqualified from publishing ordinances and resolutions for the city. The statute has reference to two newspapers that are qualified to publish such ordinances and notices.

Your city has, therefore, but one newspaper that is qualified under the statutes to publish the ordinances and other notices for the city. Publication in such newspaper will be sufficient to make the ordinances and notices valid. Publication in the other newspaper which is disqualified is not required.

Respectfully,

TIMOTHY S. HOGAN,

Attorney General.

COUNCIL—TAX MAY NOT BE LEVIED FOR BENEFIT OTHER THAN A FREE HOSPITAL.

Section 4021 of the General Code authorizes the council to levy and collect a tax for the aid only of a private corporation or association which maintains a free public hospital for the benefit of inhabitants of the municipality.

COLUMBUS, OHIO, July 12, 1912.

HON. J. D. T. BOLD, City Solicitor, Canal Dover, Ohio.

DEAR SIR:—I am in receipt of an inquiry from you of the date of June 19, 1912, as follows:

"There is a hospital situated outside the corporate limits of this city and said hospital is not a 'free public hospital for the benefit of the inhabitants of the municipality.' Can the council of this city make the levy and collect the tax and pay the same to said hospital as authorized by Section 4021 of the General Code. We would be much obliged for your opinion on the above as soon as possible."

Section 4021 of the General Code provides that the council of a municipality may levy a tax to compensate a free public hospital as follows:

"The council of each municipality, annually, may levy and collect a tax not to exceed one mill on each dollar of the taxable property of the municipality and pay the amount to a private corporation or association which maintains and furnishes a free public hospital for the benefit of the inhabitants of the municipality, or not free except to such inhabitants of the municipality as in the opinion of a majority of the trustees of such hospital are unable to pay. Such payment shall be as and for compensation for the use and maintenance of such hospital. Without change or interference in the organization of such corporation or association, the council shall require the treasurer thereof, annually, to make a financial report setting forth all of the money and property which has come into its hands during the preceding year and the disposition thereof, together with any recommendations as to its future necessities."

I am of the opinion that said section should be strictly construed. Your inquiry states that said hospital is not a "free public hospital for the benefit of the inhabitants of the municipality." Said hospital does not, therefore, come within the provisions contained in Section 4021 of the General Code. In other words, the council can only aid an individual, corporation or association "which maintains and furnishes a free public hospital for the benefit of the inhabitants of the municipality," and the hospital about which you inquire is not such a hospital.

Therefore, in direct answer to your question, I am of the opinion that the council of your city cannot make the levy and collect the tax and pay the same to said hospital, as authorized by said Section 4021 of the General Code, above quoted.

I am,

Very truly yours,

TIMOTHY S. HOGAN,

Attorney General.

CHIEFS OF POLICE AND MAYORS—FEES IN STATE CRIMINAL CASES.

Under 4534 of the General Code the mayor is entitled to the same fees for services in state criminal cases as are charged by justices of the peace in such cases.

COLUMBUS, OHIO, August 3, 1912.

HON. GEORGE C. VON BESELER, City Solicitor, Painesville, Ohio.

DEAR SIR:—Your favor of July 16, 1912, is received in which you inquire:

"The question here has arisen in reference to fees of the mayor and the chief of police in state cases. May I respectfully request your opinion in each case?"

The fees of a chief of police for service in a mayor's court and the disposition thereof has been determined by this department in an opinion to the bureau of inspection and supervision of public offices under date of August 30, 1911, a copy of which is herewith enclosed.

Section 4534, General Code, as amended in 102 Ohio Laws 476, provides:

"In felonies and other criminal proceedings not herein provided for, such mayor shall have jurisdiction and power, throughout the county, concurrent with justices of the peace. The chief of police shall execute and return all writs and process to him directed by the mayor, and shall by himself or deputy attend on the sittings of such court, to execute the orders and process thereof and to preserve order therein, and his jurisdiction and that of his deputies in the execution of such writs and process, and in criminal cases, and in cases of violation of ordinances of the corporation, shall be co-extensive with the county and in civil case shall be co-extensive with the jurisdiction of the mayor therein. The fees of the mayor in all cases, excepting those arising out of violation of ordinances, shall be the same as those allowed justices of the peace for similar services and the fees of the chief of police or his deputies in all cases, excepting those arising out of violations of ordinances shall be the same as those allowed sheriffs and constables in similar cases."

By virtue of this statute the fees of the mayor, except in cases of violations of ordinances, are to be the same as those allowed justices of the peace for similar services. This will include the fees in state criminal cases. Therefore, in state criminal cases the mayor shall receive the same fees as a justice of the peace for similar services.

Section 4213, General Code, provides:

"The salary of any officer, clerk or employe shall not be increased or diminished during the term for which he was elected or appointed, and, except as otherwise provided in this title, all fees pertaining to any office shall be paid into the city treasury."

In the case of Portsmouth vs. Milstead, 18 Cir. Dec., 384, it is held:

"The provision of 96 O. L. Section 126 (Rev. Stat. 1536-633; Lan. 3228) requiring 'that all fees pertaining to any office shall be paid into the city treasury' has reference to municipal fees solely, or such fees as may be fixed by municipal authority.

"Said section does not authorize cities to interfere with the fees of mayors or chiefs of police in state criminal cases; whether such authority can be delegated to municipalities, quaere."

The fees of the mayor in state criminal cases are not fixed by municipal authority and the provisions of Section 4213, General Code, do not apply to such fees. These fees are subject to state control.

For the same reason that the chief of police is entitled to the fees in state criminal cases, the mayor is also entitled to the fees charged to him for services in state criminal cases.

It is my conclusion that the mayor is entitled to the legal fees charged to him for services in state criminal cases in his court.

Respectfully,

TIMOTHY S. HOGAN,

Attorney General.

SMITH ONE PER CENT. LAW—TEN MILL AND AMOUNT LEVIED IN 1910 ARE LIMITATIONS ON AMOUNT LEVIED IN NOT BY A TAXING DISTRICT—BUDGET COMMISSION MAY NOT REDUCE BELOW LEGAL LIMITATIONS—MANDAMUS AND INJUNCTIONS AGAINST COMMISSION.

Under the Smith one per cent. law, both the ten mill limitation and the limitation with respect to the amount levied in the year 1910 extend to levies made in a taxing district for all purposes and not to levies made by such taxing districts.

The budget commission is not an independent levying authority. Its discretion must not be exercised beyond the province of preventing levies in excess of legal limitations, and when the amounts certified to it are within such limitations it is not empowered to make reductions therein.

The budget commission must be allowed a reasonable discretion, however, in making allowances for estimated increases in the duplicate between the time of making up the annual budget and the time when the duplicate is transmitted to the county treasurer by the county auditor through the agency of the county auditor and board of review.

REMEDIES:

(1.) When the budget commission has clearly exceeded its authority, its work may not be deemed to have not been completed within the meaning of Section 5649-3a, of the General Code, and its certificate to the auditor may not be deemed to be final. It may, therefore, be compelled, in an action in mandamus, to complete its work.

(2.) When the certification has not been made to the auditor, the action may be in injunction to restrain any illegal action.

COLUMBUS, OHIO, August 15, 1912.

HON. STUART R. BOLIN, City Solicitor, Columbus, Ohio.

DEAR SIR:—I beg to acknowledge receipt of your letter of August 1, requesting my opinion upon the following facts:

> "The city of Columbus this month submitted to the auditor of Franklin county a request for $1,642,314.85 to be raised from a levy of taxes for the year 1913, and the same was referred by the auditor to the budget commission, upon consideration of which the budget commission have deducted from the request for the service fund $35,665.85, thereby making the allowance to the city of Columbus for all purposes $1,606,-649.00, instead of $1,642,314.85 requested.
> "The tax duplicate for the city of Columbus for the year 1910 was $101,588,930.00, upon which the taxpayers of Columbus paid a rate of 3.12 on each $100.00 of valuation, which yielded a total revenue of $3,169,-574.61. The 6 per cent. additional allowance for the year 1913 on this amount, the allowance being $190,174.47, would make a total available revenue for the city of Columbus for the year 1913, $3,359,749.08.
> "The tax duplicate for the city of Columbus for the year 1912 as estimated by the county auditor is $240,000,000.00. Upon this amount the taxpayers of the city of Columbus will pay next year 1.34 per $100.00 of valuation, which will yield a revenue of $3,216,000.00. This amount is $143,749.08 less than the amount permitted to be raised by taxation for the year 1913, and is the total amount which will be paid in by taxation by the taxpayers of the city of Columbus for that year at the rate of 1.34. This figure of $143,749.08 might have been added to any of the taxing districts of the city of Columbus, and yet the same would not exceed the 6 per cent. limitation upon the total of taxes paid in this corporation, nor does the same exceed the amount permitted by the Smith law for any special subdivision or purpose.

"I would like your opinion as to whether or not the budget commission and the county auditor should return the $35,665.85 to the duplicate to the credit of the city of Columbus."

If I interpret your statement of facts correctly, it is to the effect that the budget commission has reduced the aggregate estimated levies within the taxing district of the city of Columbus below the amount represented by the total levy made in the year 1910, plus 6% thereof. While you do not so state, I assume that if the additional $143,749.08, of which you speak, were added to the total levy as fixed by the budget commission resulting in a total levy of $3,216,000, this result of the total would not require the levy of a rate in excess of that authorized by Section 5649-2, exclusive of interest and sinking fund levies and in excess of that prescribed by Section 5649-5b for all levies combined.

I also assume that the addition of the $35,665.85 to the levy made by the city of Columbus would not cause the aggregate levy for the city to require a rate in excess of the limitation of five mills prescribed by Section 5649-3a, of the Smith law, as interpreted in State ex rel. vs. Sanzenbacher, 84 O. S., ——, unreported—that is to say, exclusive of interest and sinking fund levies.

In order to consider the facts which you suggest with relation to the question which you ask, it is necessary for me to make these assumptions. The opinion which I shall give you is based upon them, and if they are erroneous then the conclusion which I shall state does not necessarily follow.

You speak of the "tax duplicate of the city of Columbus for the year 1910." By this I assume that you mean the duplicate made up in October, 1910. This is correct. Both Sections 5649-2 and 5649-3 provide a limitation measured by the "total amount of taxes that were levied * * * for all purposes in the year 1910;" so that the duplicate to which regard must be had for the purpose of ascertaining this limitation is not the duplicate made up in the year 1909 for the year 1910, but the duplicate made up in the year 1910 for the year 1911.

You also speak of the "6% additional allowance for the year 1913 on this amount." Here again you have correctly interpreted the law, although you have not used the words of the law.

Section 5649-3, General Code, provides that:

"The total amount of taxes which may be levied in the year 1911 * * * for all purposes shall not exceed in the aggregate the total amount of taxes levied in the year 1910, plus six per cent. thereof for the year 1912."

This really means—and I think it is perfectly apparent—"plus 6% thereof in the year 1912 for the year 1913." So that the amount which may be levied in the year 1912, other limitations of the law being left out of the question is 6% in excess of the amount that was levied in the year 1910.

You have also correctly interpreted the law in applying the limitation which I have been discussing not to the amount which may be levied by the taxing authorities of any taxing district, but to the amount that may be levied or allowed to be levied within the limits of any taxing district for all purposes and by all taxing authorities. Section 5649-2, General Code provides that:

> "The aggregate amount of taxes that may be levied on the taxable property in any * * * taxing district for the year 1911 and any year thereafter, including * * * levies for state, county, township, municipal, school and all other purposes shall not in any one year exceed in the aggregate the total amount of the taxes that were levied upon the taxable property therein * * * for all purposes in the year 1910."

Similar language is incorporated in Section 5649-3, so that there cannot be the shadow of a doubt that this limitation, like that of ten mills, is not upon the amount which may be levied by a taxing district but in a taxing district.

The ultimate question which you ask turns on the powers and dtuies of the budget commission which are explicitly set forth in Section 5649-3c. I quote the first paragraph of that section in full:

> "The auditor shall lay before the budget commissioners the annual budget submitted to him by the boards and officers named in Section 5649-3a of this act, together with an estimate to be prepared by the auditor of the amount of money to be raised for state purposes in each taxing district in the county, and such other information as the budget commissioners may request, or the tax commission of Ohio may prescribe. The budget commissioners shall examine such budgets and estimates prepared by the county auditor, and ascertain the total amount proposed to be raised in each taxing district for state, county, township, city, village, school district, or other taxing district purposes. If the budget commissioners find that the total amount of taxes to be raised therein does not exceed the amount authorized to be raised in any township, city, village, school district, or other taxing district in the county, the fact shall be certified to the county auditor. If such total is found to exceed such authorized amount in any township, city, village, school district, or other taxing district in the county, the budget commissioners shall adjust the various amounts to be raised, so that the total amount thereof shall not exceed in any taxing district the sum authorized to be levied therein. In making such adjustment the budget commissioners may revise and change the annual estimates contained in such budgets, and may reduce any or all the items in any such budget, but shall not increase the total of any such budget, or any item therein. The budget commissioners shall reduce the estimates contained in any or all such budgets by such amount or amounts as will bring the total for each township, city, village, school district, or other taxing district, within the limits provided by law.

It seems to me that the following points are true in connection with the meaning of this section:

1. The budget commission is not an independent levying authority. The sole purpose of its creation is to provide an agency for the enforcement of the limitations, provided by the remainder of the act. Some of these limitations, notably the one which we are discussing, are imposed from the standpoint of the taxpayer rather than from the standpoint of the taxing district; that is to say, they are applicable to the aggregate levies to be made within a given territory and not to any single levy or to any levies made by a single authority as such. Hence the limitations of the law are not self-executing, but must be put into effect and applied by some duly constituted authority. This necessity is supplied in the shape of the budget commission.

2. The section which I have quoted, defining as it does the powers and duties of a tribunal exercising revisionary and plenary power over levies made by different and independent governmental agencies, must be strictly construed. This I think is elementary. It is not intended that the budget commission shall exercise any discretionary power, the exercise of which is not made absolutely necessary in order that the single purpose of the budget commission's existence may be accomplished.

3. The section itself in conferring the power to revise and adjust the annual estimates contained in the budgets always qualifies its grant of power by a statement of the purpose for which the power is granted. I quote this statement as it occurs in the section:

> "So that the total amount * * * shall not exceed in any taxing district the sum authorized to be levied therein; * * * 'as will bring the total for each * * * taxing district within the limits provided by law.'"

Having regard to these three points, which I think are self-evident, I am of the opinion that the budget commission is not authorized to reduce any estimate further than may be necessary to bring the aggregate of all estimates down to the limits provided in the law. If, for example, a municipal corporation has submitted an estimate which will require a levy in excess of the five mills prescribed by Section 5649-3a, it will be the duty of the budget commission, so far as that limitation is concerned, to reduce any or all of the items in that budget by such an amount in the aggregate as would bring the total within the limitation. This done, the full extent of the power of the budget commission in that particular would have been exerted. It would not then have authority, because it might deem some item of the budget extravagant or unnecessary, further to reduce any of the items therein so that ultimately the estimate as reduced by the budget commission would call for a levy of less than five mills. The same principle applies to the enforcement of the ten mill limitation and that of the limitation measured by the 1910 tax, plus 6% thereof for the year 1912. In reducing and revising the estimates in the various budgets submitted by them with a view to the enforcement of this limitation, the budget commission is without authority to carry its reductions to the point where an aggregate amount considerably less than that of the 1910 taxes, plus 6%, would result.

Each reduction made by the budget commission in the aggregate amount after the same has been reduced to the amount of the 1910 taxes, plus 6%, would be in excess of the jurisdiction of the commission and an abuse of its power.

I am, therefore, of the opinion that the budget commission for Franklin county has certainly exceeded its authority in reducing the aggregate of all budgets applicable within the territory of the city of Columbus $143,749.08 below the figure to which it was authorized by law to reduce that aggregate. In so holding, however, I wish to qualify my opinion by stating that strict mathematical accuracy is not required of the budget commission in the view I have taken of the law. An approximation of such aggregates is all that can be required, and I believe that the budget commission may lawfully take into account the possibility of increases being made in the duplicate between the time of making up the annual budget and the time when the duplicate is transmitted to the county treasurer by the county auditor through the agency of the county auditor and the board of review.

As you, yourself state, the duplicate upon which the budget commission is working is at best an estimated duplicate, so that in all cases of this sort there would be the question of fact as to whether or not the budget commission has not properly exercised a sound discretion committed to it though it may have deviated slightly from the strict mathematical rule of the statute. The deviations in the specific instance described by you, however, does not appear to be slight, amounting to a little over half a million on the estimated duplicate. In order that the rate fixed by the budget commission (1.34) may produce in the city of Columbus in the year 1913 the amount of revenue levied upon the duplicate of 1910, plus 6%, it will be necessary, as I compute, for the county auditor and the board of review to add approximately $18,250,000.00 to the tax duplicate. This is possible, of course, but it hardly seems likely to me that it could be claimed on behalf of the budget commission that any such considerable increase over the auditor's estimate could have been anticipated in any degree of possibility.

It would seem, therefore, that while on the facts you submit it cannot be said that the budget commission has arbitrarily exceeded its powers, yet these facts are sufficient, in my judgment, to create a very strong presumption of such arbitrary action which would have to be refuted by very satisfactory proof to the effect that the budget commission had reasons, such as I have suggested, for refusing the aggregate below $3,359,749.08.

Coming now to the question which you submit, I cannot advise from the facts stated by you, that the budget commission and the county auditor must return the $35,665.85 stricken from the estimate of the city of Columbus to the credit of the city. In order to pass upon the right of the city to have its full estimate allowed, it would be necessary for me to know the facts respecting the estimate submitted by the county commissioners and that submitted by the board of education of the city of Columbus school district. If the estimates submitted by these two other sets of officers would not require a levy in the city of Columbus in excess of the difference between $143,749.08 and $36,665.85, then in my opinion the city, the school district and the county are each entitled to the full amount of their estimate so far as the territory of the city of Columbus is concerned, although both the county and the school district might have to be reduced on account of other levies made in territory outside of the corporate limits of Columbus.

I am clearly of the opinion, however, that the city has the right to question the proceedings of the budget commission. The theory of such a proceeding would be as follows: The budget commission appears to have acted in excess of its authority; therefore that which it has done is not a "completion of their work" within the meaning of the last paragraph of Section 5649-3c. Therefore, if the action of the budget commission has been certified to the county auditor, this certificate is not final and the budget commission could be compelled by a proceeding in mandamus to complete its work and to divide the $143,749.08 among the various taxing districts levying within the territory of the city of Columbus, having due regard to the proportions in which these districts are authorized to levy therein, and having also regard to the interests of the county which has to levy in every taxing district and those of the school district which overlaps into taxing districts other than that of the city of Columbus; and having regard also to the imperative needs of the city of Columbus. As already suggested, this would be on the theory that the work of the budget commission has not been completed according to law, and that the budget commission is threatening to leave its work in an incompleted state to the injury of the city for which the city has no adequate remedy at law.

If, however, the budget commissioners have not assumed to have completed their work and have not certified their final action to the county auditor, then if the members of the commission refuse to reconsider their tentative action, the proper proceeding would seem to be in injunction to restrain the budget commission from reducing the aggregate levies within the territory of the city of Columbus below those made within the same territory in the year 1910, plus 6%.

I have endeavored to cover the entire field of inquiries suggested by your letter. I regret that I am unable to return a categorical answer to the question which you expressly submit. I am very strongly of the opinion that the principles which I have laid down are correct, and trust that they may be applied by those concerned in an amicable settlement of the controversy.

Yours very truly,

TIMOTHY S. HOGAN,
Attorney General.

MANAGEMENT OF PARKS BY DIRECTOR OF PUBLIC SERVICE—MAY PROHIBIT BASEBALL THEREIN, NOTWITHSTANDING ORDINANCE OF COUNCIL.

Since the powers of council are legislative only, by virtue of Section 4326, and since the management of the parks is an administrative function, which is vested in the director of public service by Section 4326, of the General Code, that official may prohibit the playing of baseball in the parks on Sunday afternoon in spite of an ordinance of council authorizing the playing of the game at such time.

COLUMBUS, OHIO, August 10, 1912.

HON. R. B. HYGATT, City Solicitor, Conneaut, Ohio.

DEAR SIR:—I beg to acknowledge receipt of your letter of July 26, wherein you state:

> "At the last regular meeting of the city council, I was instructed by motion duly passed to draw an ordinance permitting the playing of baseball Sunday afternoons between the hours of two and six on the ball grounds in the park owned by the city of Conneaut.
> "The city owns only one public park, and this consists of about fourteen (14) acres of land, a large part of which is a sloping bank to the beach. The conditions are such that it was impossible to construct the ball grounds in such a way that the ball would not occasionally be batted over the bank onto the beach. This materially interferes with the enjoyment of the park for other purposes when a ball game is being played.
> "The director of public service (there being no park commissioners) has refused to allow baseball to be played in the park on Sundays on the ground that the said city owns only one park, and that the playing of such game materially interferes with the enjoyment of the park by all the people of the city.
> "A majority of the council take the position that the playing of baseball in the park on Sunday is desired by a majority of the people of the city, and have theretofore instructed the above ordinance to be drawn.

"Does the city council have power to legislate on this subject contrary to the orders of the director of public service?"

Section 4326, of the General Code, provides that:

"The director of public service shall manage * * * parks."

Section 4211 provides that:

"The powers of council shall be legislative only, and it shall perform no administrative duties whatever."

And further provides that:

"All contracts requiring the authority of council for their execution shall be entered into and conducted to performance by the board or officers having charge of the matters to which they relate, and after authority to make such contracts has been given and the necessary appropriation made, council shall take no further action thereon."

The management of parks is an administrative and not a legislative function, and such management is, by Section 4326, vested exclusively in the director of public service. Council may make appropriations for the maintenance of parks, but the director of public service is given the power under Section 4326 to make contracts or purchase supplies or material, or provide labor for any work under the supervision of his department not involving more than $500.00. When an expenditure other than the compensation of employes in such department exceeds $500.00, the same shall first be authorized by council, and in such cases the council is required to authorize and direct the director of public service to enter into contracts therefor.

From the foregoing, it will be observed that the powers of council over the director of public service in the performance of his official duties, among which is the management of parks, are very limited.

The director of public service, as an incident of his statutory power to manage parks, has in my judgment, the exclusive right to determine the manner in which said parks shall be used by the public; and I am, therefore, of the opinion that council is without legal authority to pass such an ordinance as that described in your letter, as it would be an encroachment upon the power of the director of public service, unwarranted by statute.

Very truly yours,

TIMOTHY S. HOGAN,

Attorney General.

OHIO STATE BUILDING CODE—PROVISION FOR DIMENSIONS OF THEATER BUILDING MAY NOT BE AVOIDED BY CONSENT OF BUILDING CODE COMMISSION.

Section 5 of the Ohio state building code, providing for the substitution of "another fixture, device or construction by consent of the commission upon submission of plans and specifications, etc.," is an amendment to the original act which was intended to take care of later improved devices, fixtures or constructions, and was not intended to apply to provisions for fixed dimensions.

Said Section 5 may not, therefore, be resorted to to enable Section 3, which specifies dimensions for theater buildings, to be departed from.

COLUMBUS, OHIO, August 15, 1912.

HON. W. A. O'GRADY, City Solicitor, Wellsville, Ohio.

DEAR SIR:—I have your letter of July 17th wherein you state:

> "I am requested to ask for the opinion of your department in reference to Section (5) governing administration under part one of the Ohio state building code, issued in small book form by department in charge of same, Section (5) contains the following phrase 'Where use of another fixture, device or construction, is desired at variance with what is described, in this statute" plans and specifications shall be submitted to proper authorities mentioned in Section (1).
> "Section (3) under part (2) of the said building code, reads as follows: Title exposure and courts, no theater shall be less than twenty-five feet wide measuring in the clear between the walls nor less than fifteen feet high. We desire to learn whether in your opinion Section (3) of the said code is mandatory and absolute, or whether the language of Section (5) permits the proper authorities to permit parties to construct picture theater less than the width enumerated in Section (3) of part (2) of the said code."

It is true that Section (5) of the state building code (12600-277, General Code) provides:

> "* * * Where the use of another fixture, device or construction is desired at variance with what is described in this statute, the plans, specifications and details shall be furnished to the proper state and municipal authorities mentioned in Section (1), (General Code 12600-281) for examination and approval and if required actual tests shall be made to the complete satisfaction of said state and municipal authorities that the fixture, device, or construction proposed answers to all intents and purposes the fixture, device or construction hereafter described in this statute, instead of actual tests satisfactory evidence of such tests may be presented for approval with full particulars of the results and containing the names of witnesses of said tests."

But this provision was an amendment to the act as originally drawn, presented therein to take care of a later and improved device, fixture and construction going into the physical construction of the buildings.

There was no intent, nor did the legislative mind contemplate that this provision should apply to provisions for fixed dimensions. In fact, in the construction of a building, Section (5) above quoted was intended to apply particularly to the "standard device" detailed in part (3) of the act (12600-72*a* et seq.).

Section (3), part (2) of the Ohio state building code (12600-4, General Code) provides:

> "No theater shall be less than twenty-five feet wide, measuring in the clear between the walls not less than fifteen feet high * * *."

The ruling of the department whose duty it is to enforce the provisions of the building code, has been that the language of Section (3), last above quoted, is mandatory and that the provisions of Section (5), supra, are in no way applicable to, or affect the provisions of Section (3), part (2).

I am constrained to hold with the ruling of the department and it is my opinion that the provisions for the dimensions of a theater as provided in Section 12600-4, General Code, are mandatory and that they cannot be modified by the provisions of Section 12600-277, General Code; nor would the provisions of said last mentioned section be applicable to the question involving the width and height of a theater, under Section (3), part (2) of the building code.

Very truly yours,
TIMOTHY S. HOGAN,
Attorney General.

LIBRARY—DEED DONATING LAND FOR, GOVERNS AS TO ITS TERMS PROVIDING FOR APPOINTMENT OF DIRECTORS.

When by the terms of a deed of property donated to the city of Mt. Vernon in 1884, for library purposes, directors were required to be chosen in a specified manner, said terms should be allowed to control, and Section 4004 of the General Code, passed subsequent to said deed, providing for the appointment of directors of libraries established by a municipality, shall have no application.

COLUMBUS, OHIO, August 23, 1912.

HON. JAMES L. LEONARD, City Solicitor, Mt. Vernon, Ohio.

DEAR SIR:—Under date of June 21st, you inquired of me as follows:

> "The city of Mt. Vernon has a deed made in 1884 for certain property to be used by said city for public library purposes; in said deed is the following limitation:
> "'The board of directors shall furnish to the mayor of said city a list of names of not less than six residents of said city, from which he shall select, subject to the approval of the council of said city, two persons to serve as directors for the term of three years from the first Monday in July next thereafter, and until successors are duly appointed and qualified.'
> "Should the mayor, in making the appointments, follow this limitation, or should he be governed by the statute now in force, Section 4004 of the General Code?"

Section 4004 of the General Code provides:

"The erection and equipment, and the custody, control and administration of free public libraries established by municipal corporations, shall be vested in six trustees, not more than three of whom belong to the same political party, and not more than three of whom shall be women. Such trustees shall be appointed by the mayor, to serve without compensation, for a term of four years and until their successors are appointed and qualified. In the first instance three of such trustees shall be appointed for a term of two years, and three for a term of four years. Vacancies shall be filled by like appointment for the unexpired term."

The deed from the trustees of the original donors to the city of Mt. Vernon was made prior to the enactment of Section 4404, General Code (97 O. L., 38). and provided a different method for the selection of trustees than that required by Section 4004. That section clearly refers to libraries established by municipal corporations. The Mt. Vernon library was established by certain private citizens and not by the municipality itself, and for this reason I hold that Section 4004 does not apply.

It is, therefore, my opinion that the mayor of Mt. Vernon should appoint trustees of said library in accordance with the term of the deed, rather than of the statute.

Very respectfully,

TIMOTHY S. HOGAN,

Attorney General.

INITIATIVE AND REFERENDUM—ORDINANCE AUTHORIZING ISSUE OF BONDS AFTER ORDINANCE DETERMINING TO PROCEED NOT SUSPENDED SIXTY DAYS—SAME WITH RESPECT TO ORDINANCE FOR BORROWING MONEY WHICH IS TO BE ASSESSED AGAINST OWNERS FOR SEWER CONNECTIONS, AND NOT PAID FROM MUNICIPAL FUNDS—RENTAL BY CITY FOR GAS AND ELECTRIC METERS—BINDING INDEBTEDNESS FOR SALARIES OF OFFICERS.

1. An ordinance authorizing the issuance of bonds for a street improvement, following an ordinance determining to proceed with said improvement does not involve an expenditure of money within the meaning of the initiative and referendum act, and is not required to lay over 60 days. Such ordinance goes into effect ten days after its first publication.

2. An ordinance providing for the borrowing of money by a city for the purpose of paying the cost of constructing sewer connections from houses upon failure of the owners to make such connections is not required to be suspended 60 days under the initiative and referendum act, for the reason that said cost is to be collected by assessment against the property holders and is not borne by the municipality itself, and, therefore, such an ordinance does not involve an expenditure of municipal funds as intended by the initiative and referendum.

3. If meters are supplied by a municipality which operates a municipal gas or electric power plant, said municipality may charge a reasonable rent for the same.

4. Under Sections 3916 and 3917 of the General Code, salaries due public officials are such valid existing and binding obligations as will enable its council to borrow money for payment of the same when it has not on hand sufficient sums for the purpose.

Council may not act under the same statutes, however, for the purpose of replenishing exhausted funds.

COLUMBUS, OHIO, August 7, 1912.

HON. F. G. LONG, City Solicitor, Bellefontaine, Ohio.

DEAR SIR:—Under date of July 6, 1912, you submitted to me several questions requesting my opinion thereon. I shall take up said questions and answer the same seriatim.

First. The first question submitted by you is as follows:

> "Should an ordinance authorizing the issuance of bonds for a street improvement, following an ordinance determining to proceed with the street improvement be governed, as to the time of going into effect, by the initiative and referendum law which is applicable to certain other ordinances? Or may said bond ordinance, following the ordinance to proceed be in force after ten days from its first publication?"

In answer to such question I herewith submit for your consideration an opinion rendered to the Hon. M. R. Smith, city solicitor, Conneaut, Ohio, under date of October 25, 1911, which you will find on reading over to fully cover your inquiry.

In this case, however, I beg to state that I have been informed that the common pleas court of Portage county has rendered a decision wherein it is held that the bond ordinance following the ordinance determining to proceed is an ordinance involving the expenditure of money, and, consequently, that said ordinance would lie sixty days before becoming effective under paragraph two of Section 4227-2, General Code. As a bond ordinance is simply one providing in advance of the collection of assessments the moneys necessary to carry out the provisions of the ordinance determining to proceed, I am of the opinion, as stated in the opinion herewith enclosed, that it is not necessary that said ordinance shall lie sixty days before becoming effective, and, consequently, would be in force after ten days from its first publication.

Second. You next inquire as follows:

> "In this city the director of public service has, according to law, Section 3812-1, General Code, and in view of a contemplated street improvement, served notices on abutting property owners to construct sewer house connections. About half of them have done so and the time limit is up. May we borrow money for this purpose on the city's note, and would the ordinance providing for this note be governed by the provisions of the initiative and referendum as referred to in question one, since it is a special improvement and only concerns a few?"

Section 3812-1, General Code, provides in substance that whenever the director of public service in cities deems it necessary in view of a contemplated street paving or as a sanitary regulation that sewer or water connections or both be constructed he shall cause written notice thereof to be given to the owner of each lot or parcel of land to which such connections are to be made and shall appoint some competent person to serve said notice; that if any of the said lot owners be non-residents or cannot be found such notice may be given publication twice in one or more newspapers of general circulation in the municipality. It is further provided in said section "If said connections are not constructed within twenty days of such service of notice or day of first publication thereof, as the case may be, the same may be done by the city and the cost thereof, together with a penalty of five per cent. (5%) assessed against the lots and lands for which such connections are made and said assessments shall be certified and collected as other assessments for street improvements."

Section 3915, General Code, authorizes municipal corporations to borrow money and issue notes in anticipation of the collection of special assessments.

In view of the fact that said Section 3915, General Code, provides that a municipal corporation may borrow money and issue notes in anticipation of the collection of special assessments, and the fact that the cost of the sewer house connections may be assessed against the lots for which such connections are made, thus being treated as a special assessment, I am of the opinion that the city may borrow money for the purpose of paying for the work done by the city by note as provided in Section 3915, General Code. As the money with which to pay this note is to be collected by way of special assessments upon the property owners and no part thereof to be paid out of the public moneys of the city, I am of the opinion that the provisions of paragraph two of Section 4227-2, General Code, providing that no ordinance involving the expenditure of money shall become effective in less than sixty days does not apply as I construe said provision of said section to apply solely to ordinances involving the expenditure of public moneys of the corporation, and not to ordinances which do not and cannot involve the expenditure of public money but moneys which are not to be a burden on the general taxpayers.

Specifically answering your question, therefore, I am of the opinion that the municipal corporation can borrow money on the city's note for the payment of the work done by the city upon failure of the property owner to make the necessary sewer connection, and further, that the ordinance providing for this note is not one covered by the provisions of Section 4227-2 of the General Code.

Third. Your third inquiry is as follows:

> "May cities legally collect meter rent for gas or electric meters? If they cannot, may they establish a minimum charge?"

The power of municipal corporations to establish municipal gas and electric plants is found in Section 3618, General Code, being one of the enumerated powers therein, as follows:

> "To establish, maintain and operate municipal lighting, power and heating plants, and to furnish the municipality and the inhabitants thereof with light, power and heat, to procure everything necessary therefor, and to acquire by purchase, lease or otherwise, the necessary lands for such purposes, within and without the municipality."

and Section 3990 of the General Code:

> "The council of a municipality may, when it is deemed expedient and for the public good, erect gas works or electric works at the expense of the corporation, or purchase any gas or electric works already erected therein, but in villages where gas works or electrical works have already been erected by any person, company of persons, or corporation, to whom a franchise to erect and operate gas works or electric works has been granted, and such franchise has not expired, the council shall with the consent of the owner or owners, purchase such gas works or electric works already erected therein."

Section 3982, General Code, provides that council of a municipality in which an electric light company or gas company has been established may regulate the price from time to time which such companies may charge for such electric light or gas for lighting and fuel purposes, and further provides such companies shall in no event charge more for such electric light or gas than the price specified by ordinance. It further provides that council may regulate and fix the price which such companies may charge for the rent of their meters, and that in the ordinance regulating the price which such companies may charge for electric light or gas that such price shall include the use of the meter to be furnished by the company and that in such case the meters so furnished shall be furnished and kept in repair by such companies and no separate charge made either directly or indirectly for the use or repair of them.

Section 9329, General Code, provides that no gas company shall charge rent for meter. It is to be noted that the legislature by Section 3982, General Code, has granted to council the power to regulate and fix the price not only of gas and electricity to be furnished by public service corporations but also to regulate the charge that can be made by said companies for the rent of their meters, further granting them the power to provide that the price to be charged for the electricity or gas so furnished shall include the use of the meters and further that it is a positive provision of law under Section 9329, General Code, that such companies shall make no charge for the use of gas meters. While the decisions in relation to the rent of meters to be charged by public service corporations furnishing gas and electricity are not uniform, yet from a reading of said cases, the rule may be finally deduced that if meters be supplied by such corporations or by a municipality it has the right, in the absence of statutory provision to the contrary, to charge reasonable rent for the meter. In the case put by you there is no question of construction to be placed on an ordinance granting the right to a private corporation, nor is there any statutory inhibition placed against a municipality owning and operating a gas plant or electric light plant that no rent shall be charged for the meters used in measuring out such gas or electricity. The statutes are silent upon the subject, and, consequently as I view it, reasonable rules and regulations can be made which may provide that the meter for the measuring of either gas or electricity shall be furnished by the municipal corporation and a reasonable rental charged for the use of such meter. As you have stated your question to be whether cities may legally collect a meter rent for gas or electricity, and if they cannot, may they establish a minimum charge, and as I have given it as my opinion that such cities may legally collect a meter rent for gas and electric meters, I do not undertake to answer the question as to whether a minimum charge may be established.

Fourth. You next inquire as follows:

> "In about two months more our salaries will cease being paid for the want of funds with which to pay them, and a number of other funds will have been exhausted by that time. What can be done in order to obtain money with which to meet the same?"

You do not state in your inquiry the reason why there is a lack of funds with which to pay your salaries, or the reason why a number of the other funds will be exhausted; that is to say whether because the amount raised by taxation and placed to the credit of such fund has been exhausted, or whether council in making its semi-annual appropriation has failed to appropriate out of the specific fund an amount necessary to meet such salaries and other expenses. The salaries to be paid by municipal corporations are fixed by council, and usually are payable monthly. As soon as the services are performed the amount due becomes an existing, valid and binding obligation of the corporation as are all other fixed charges of such corporation.

Section 3916, General Code, provides as follows:

> "For the purpose of extending the time of payment of any indebtedness, which from its limits of taxation the corporation is unable to pay at maturity, or when it appears to the council for the best interest of the corporation, the council thereof may issue bonds of the corporation or borrow money so as to change but not to increase the indebtedness, in such amounts, for such length of time and at such rate of interest as the council deems proper, not to exceed six per cent. per annum, payable annually or semi-annually."

Section 3917, General Code, provides as follows:

> "No indebtedness of such municipal corporation shall be funded, refunded, or extended, unless it shall first be determined to be an existing valid and binding obligation of the corporation by a formal resolution of the council thereof. Such resolution shall also state the amount of the existing indebtedness to be funded, refunded or extended, the aggregate amount of bonds to be issued therefor, their number and denomination, the date of maturity, the rate of interest they shall bear, and the place of payment of principal and interest."

From the language of your inquiry I am unable to decide whether the condition that there will be no money with which to pay your salaries within about two months is caused by reason of limitation of taxation or not, but Section 3916, General Code, provides that when it appears to the council for the best interest of the corporation the council may borrow money so as to change but not increase the indebtedness. Section 3917, General Code, provides that no indebtedness shall be funded, until it be determined by council to be an existing, valid and binding obligation. I am aware of the fact that it has been held in the case of Herrman et al. vs. The City of Cincinnati 9 O. C. C. 357 that Section 2701 Revised Statutes as it stood at the time said case was decided was not intended to authorize the issue of bonds of a municipality to meet deficiencies in its various departments, but that it was intended by such section to authorize the issue of bonds after a prior funded indebtedness of the municipal corporation existed. The statute, Section 2701 R. S. as it at that time existed did not contain the provisions that are now embraced in Section 3917, General Code. It is to be noted that Section 3917, General Code, provides that no indebtedness of a municipal corporation shall be funded unless it shall first be determined to be an existing, valid and binding obligation. This addition to Section 2701, Revised Statutes, was first incorporated in said section in 1896 and as it grants to a municipal corporation the right to fund an existing, valid and binding obligation, I am of the opinion that it does now authorize the issue of bonds to take care of such obligations whether the same had been a previously funded indebtedness of the corporation or not. As the salaries of the municipal officers are valid and binding obligations upon the corporation, I am of the opinion that under Section 3916 and Section 3917 of the General Code council may borrow money in order to pay the same when due. In reference to the other funds which have been exhausted moneys in which were not to take care of the existing, valid and binding obligations of the corporation, I am of the opinion that money cannot be borrowed in order to replenish the same, for the reason that the same is not covered by Sections 3916 and 3917, General Code. The Smith law, Section 5649-3*d* requires that all expenditures within the six months following the appropriation shall be made from and within such appropriations and balances thereof, except as to existing, valid and binding obligations of the corporation, I am of the opinion that appropriations that have been exhausted prior to the end of the six months cannot be replenished by the issuance of either deficiency bonds or by the issuance of bonds under the sections above referred to, but that as to the fixed charges of a corporation, such as salaries, which are upon services being rendered an existing, valid and binding obligation of the corporation, money may be borrowed to pay the same as provided in Sections 3916 and 3917 of the General Code supra.

Yours truly,

TIMOTHY S. HOGAN,

Attorney General.

CEMETERIES—TOWNSHIP OR MUNICIPAL BOARDS OR TRUSTEES MAY NOT LEASE OR DEED LOTS TO MAUSOLEUM COMPANY.

The only power given by the statutes to trustees or boards controlling public cemeteries, either municipal or township, is to vest the title to lots directly in individuals who purchase the same.

They have no power, therefore, to lease or deed cemetery lands, either permanently or temporarily, to a mausoleum company under any agreement whatever.

COLUMBUS, OHIO, August 13, 1912.

HONORABLE R. CLINT COLE, City Solicitor, Findlay, Ohio.

DEAR SIR:—I beg to acknowledge receipt of your two letters, dated June 24th and August 2, 1912, respectively. I had written an opinion covering your first letter, but upon receipt of the latter one, I will reply to both. Your first letter contains the following:

STATEMENT.

"The Standard Mausoleum Company, of Findlay, Ohio, a company organized for the purpose of constructing mausoleums, desires to make arrangements with the proper city authority for the erection of a mausoleum within the cemetery owned by the city. These arrangements embrace the purchase of sufficient land within said cemetery whereon to construct said mausoleum.

"Said company proposes to sell crypts in said building to inhabitants of the city and adjoining townships, and to turn over to the proper authorities an endowment or maintenance fund sufficient to perpetually care for said mausoleum in return for which the proper municipal authorities shall assume the maintenance thereof."

ASSUMPTIONS.

"1. That the method of construction is agreed upon.
"2. That all sanitary features are acceptable.
"3. That the endowment fund is sufficient."

QUERIES.

"1. Is such an arrangement within the legal authority of any department of the city government?

"2. If so, what board, officer, or official body has authority to grant such permission?

"As it is the desire of our cemetery directors to negotiate on some basis with said mausoleum company, I would appreciate very much any suggestion whereby the same might be legally accomplished.

In your second letter you request an opinion on the following proposition:

"Have the proper municipal or township authorities, owning public cemeteries, legal authority to permit said mausoleum companies to erect a mausoleum where the proper municipal authorities or township trustees do not part with either the title or control of the land upon which such building is located, and have the proper municipal authorities or township trustees the legal right to assume the perpetual maintenance and care of such building if the mausoleum company places in its hands a sufficient sum to fully endow and maintain the same?"

My reply to both of your letters is as follows: Neither your city, nor any department thereof, has power, under the law as it now stands, to enter into any such arrangement or contract as the one suggested and outlined in your first letter. The same conclusion applies to the matters in your second letter relative to municipal or township cemeteries. Despite the attempted endowment, and the other conditions set forth in your letter, it yet remains plainly to be seen that the county trustees do invest the mausoleum company with at least temporary control and temporary title to the lots upon which the proposed structure is about to be erected.

You say in your letter that the mausoleum company "will contract to reconvey the same as soon as conveyance of individual crypts can be made to individual purchasers thereof." This shows a parting with title for an indefinite time, and a control of the lots vested in the company. The only power given cemetery trustees, or boards controlling public cemeteries, either municipal or township, is to vest the title to lots directly to individuals who purchase the same.

It will require additional legislature to confer such power on any of the above cemetery authorities along the lines proposed in both of your letters. I have heretofore rendered an opinion to the Honorable F. R. Hogue, prosecuting attorney of Ashtabula county, dated April 30, 1912, released May 14, 1912, and a further opinion to the bureau of inspection and supervision of public offices, under date of June 24, 1912, on this general subject, copies of which are herewith enclosed. These opinions cover the questions submitted by you and are reaffirmed.

Very truly yours,

TIMOTHY S. HOGAN,
Attorney General.

OILING STREETS—ASSESSMENT OF WHOLE COST INCLUDING STREET INTERSECTIONS UPON ABUTTING PROPERTY WHEN IMPROVEMENT PETITIONED FOR—CITY NOT ABUTTING OWNER OF INTERSECTING STREETS.

Sections 3753 et seq., of the General Code are special provisions with reference to assessments for oiling of streets, and any provisions therein, which are in conflict with Section 3820 of the General Code, which is a general provision providing that the corporation when assessments are made for street improvement shall pay at least 1/50 of the cost, as well as the cost of street intersections should be allowed to govern.

Applying this rule under Section 3753, when such oiling is petitioned for, the whole cost thereof, including street intersections, may be assessed against the abutting property.

The city cannot be regarded, for these purposes, as the abutting property holder of intersecting streets.

COLUMBUS, OHIO, August 8, 1912.

HON. MEEKER TERWILLINGER, City Solicitor, Circleville, Ohio.

DEAR SIR:—Your favor of July 15, 1912, is received, in which you inquire:

"Interpretation of words 'the whole cost thereof' in Section 3753 and 'the entire cost of any improvement' in Section 3836 of the General Code of Ohio.

"Some doubt has arisen in my mind as to the legal construction to be placed upon the words 'the whole cost thereof,' used in Section 3753 with reference to assessing for oiling streets under said section; under said section, can the 'whole cost' for oiling any street be assessed upon the property abutting said street by the abutting foot—proportionately—or does it recognize the limitation of Section 3820, General Code, and mean the whole cost of said oiling, excepting the cost of oiling street and alley intersections? We have a number of petitions which are signed by the owners of a majority of the abutting feet of property on a street or connecting streets, having a roadway of over 5,000 square yards, which petitions pray that the roadways within the district described in said petitions may be treated with oil, and for the assessment of the 'whole cost thereof' on the property abutting such street, etc. Is the entire cost of said street oiling to be ascertained (including the cost of oiling the intersections of said street which is petitioned to be oiled) and assessed upon the abutters, in proportion to their abutting feet? Even though the petitions read as above stated, would Section 3760, General Code, have any application where it reads 'the corporation's portion of the cost thereof, may be paid, etc., 'be considered, and the 'corporation's portion' be held to mean the costs of oiling the street and alley intersections?"

At the beginning of your letter you ask for an interpretation of the provisions of Section 3836, General Code. But in as much as the facts stated in your inquiry apply only to the provisions of Section 3753, General Code, only the provisions of the latter section will be construed in this opinion.

The act pertaining to the oiling of streets by a municipality was a special act which is first found in 98 Ohio Laws 50. The original act consisted of eight sections, which are now known as Sections 3751 to 3761, both inclusive, of the General Code.

Section 3753, General Code, provides:

"When a written petition signed by the owners of a majority of the abutting property on a street or alley, or part thereof, or of connecting or intersecting streets or alleys, or parts thereof, having a roadway area of not less than five thousand square yards, is presented to the director of public service in a city, or in the council in a village, praying that the roadways within the territory described be treated with oil, and for the assessment of the whole cost thereof on the property abutting such streets or alleys, the director or council shall forthwith declare, by resolution, such territory to be, and thereupon it shall be, a district within which the roadways will be treated with oil, for a period named in the petition, not to exceed the life of the contract, and the cost thereof assessed upon the property abutting the streets or alleys therein, by the abutting foot."

Section 3754, General Code, provides:

"When, in the opinion of the director of public service in a city, or of council in a village, the treatment with oil, for the purpose of laying the dust on and preserving the surface of, the roadways of any public park or parks, or of any street or alley, or part thereof, or of connecting or intersecting streets or alleys, or parts thereof, having a roadway area of not less than five thousand square yards, will be of general benefit within the corporation, such director or council may declare by resolution such park or parks, or the territory including such street or alley, or part thereof, or intersecting or connecting streets or alleys, or parts thereof, to be, it thereupon shall be a district, within which the roadways shall be treated with oil, for a period named in the resolution, not to exceed the life of the contract. The whole cost, or such portion thereof as may by him or the council be deemed just, shall be paid by the corporation, and the remainder of the cost to be assessed by the abutting foot on the property abutting the streets or alleys in such district. There shall be no assessment levied on any property in excess of fifty per cent. of the whole cost, except where petitioned for, as hereinbefore provided."

Section 3758, General Code, provides:

"Where the whole or a portion of the cost is to be assessed, such director or council shall, within thirty days after the first treatment with oil has been accomplished, and at his or its option may, at any time previous thereto, levy an assessment by the abutting foot on the property abutting the streets and alleys in the district, to pay the whole or such portion of the cost as was in the resolution determined. The assessment may be collected in one or more installments, in the manner provided for assessments for street improvements, with a penalty of five per cent. and interest for failure to pay at the time fixed in the assessing ordinance. No assessment shall be collected in more than one installment, unless the work petitioned for covers a period of time greater than one year, when the installments may equal in number the years for which the district was created."

Section 3759, General Code, provides:

"Bonds or certificates of indebtedness may be issued and sold in anticipation of the collection of such assessments, or installments of assessments, and there may be included in one bond issue or one certificate of indebtedness the amount of uncollected assessments, or installments of assessments, levied on the property, in any number of districts and payable within any one calendar year. In the cost shall be included the cost of work done on intersections and roadways within the district, advertising, inspection and superintendence. The right of the municipality to levy such assessments shall not be affected by the amount of assessments theretofore levied upon such property."

Section 3760, General Code, provides:

"Such treatment with oil shall be regarded as a cleaning and repairing of streets and alleys, and the corporation's portion of the cost thereof may be paid from any fund available for the cleaning or repairing of streets or alleys. When the roads of a public park or parks are ordered to be so treated, the cost thereof may be paid from any fund available for the care or maintenance of such parks."

The foregoing sections are provisions of the special act pertaining to the oil ing of streets, alleys and parks.

You ask if the provisions of Section 3820, General Code, apply to the assessments to be levied by virtue of Section 3753, General Code.

Said Section 3820, General Code, provides:

> "The corporation shall pay such part of the cost and expense of improvements for which special assessments are levied as council deems just, which part shall be not less than one-fiftieth of all such cost and expense, and in addition thereto, the corporation shall pay the cost of intersections."

The provisions of this section are not found in the special act pertaining to the treatment with oil of streets, alleys and parks.

Section 3820, General Code, provides that the city shall pay the cost of intersections and also not less than one-fiftieth of the cost of such improvement. In Section 3754, General Code, when council or the director of public service acts upon its or his own volition, it is provided that no assessment shall be levied against the abutting property in excess of fifty per cent of the whole cost. If Section 3820, General Code, applied to the oiling of streets, we would have two rules of apportionment of the cost thereof.

The provisions of Section 3758 and 3759, General Code, were found in Section six of the original act. Section 3758, General Code authorizes thhe levying of "an assessment by the abutting foot—to pay the whole or such portion of the cost as was in the resolution determined." And in Section 3759, General Code, it is provided, "in the cost shall be included the cost of work done on intersections and roadways within the district."

It is evident, therefore, that the whole cost is to include the cost of intersections.

These provisions of Sections 3758 and 3759, General Code, and the provision of Section 3754, General Code, as to the proportion of the cost that may be levied against the abutting property when no petition is filed, show conclusively that the provisions of Section 3820, General Code, do not apply to the act pertaining to the oiling of streets.

When petitioned for as provided in Section 3753, General Code, the "whole cost" of such treatment is to be levied against the abutting property. It might be urged that the city should pay for the oiling of the intersections because the city is the owner of the intersecting streets, and such streets should be considered as abutting property. This contention has not been upheld by the supreme court of Ohio.

In the case of Creighton vs. Scott, 14 Ohio St., 438, it is held:

> "When in making such improvement, squares formed by the intersection of other streets, are crossed and improved, the city council may, if the object of improving the squares is the improvement of such street, assess the whole expense upon the same property on which the other expenses of such improvement are assessed."

On page 443, White, J., says:

> "As to the second proposition, the squares at the intersections form, in common, parts of both streets, and are to be improved as the other portions. It is the duty of the city council to determine to which of the streets, thus occupying ground in common, the expense of improvement, in any given case, is to be appropriated; or whether to both. If the necessity and object are for the improvement of only one of the streets, and in making the improvement across the square the other is incidentally affected, we think the whole expense may be assessed upon the same property on which the other expenses of the improvement are assessed."

In the case of State vs. Mitchell, 31 Ohio St. 592, it is held:

"Under the provisions of the act, the intersecting streets and alleys are not subject to be assessed to pay for the improvement."

In this latter case, the commissioners who were to make the assessment excluded the cost of improving the intersections upon the theory that the intersecting streets should be considered as abutting property. The court overruled this contention.

You have called attention to the provisions of Section 3760, supra, General Code, which provides the manner in which the city's portion of the cost may be paid. This provision applies when the city is required to pay part of the cost. It does not mean that the city shall pay part of the cost when the oiling is petitioned for.

It is seen that the intersecting streets cannot be considered as abutting property and is not subject to assessment upon that theory. The treament of the intersections with oil is for the benefit, usually, of the street as a whole and following the rule stated by White, J., in Creighton vs. Scott, supra, the whole cost of oiling may be apportioned to the street that is oiled.

It is my conclusion that the provisions of Section 3753, General Code, as to levying the "whole cost" of treating a street with oil when petitioned for, will authorize the levying of an assessment against the abutting property for the cost of oiling the intersections of streets and alleys, that is, the term "whole cost" as therein used will include the cost of oiling the intersections.

Respectfully,

TIMOTHY S. HOGAN,

Attorney General.

FIREMAN AN EMPLOYEE—NOT ENTITLED TO PAY WHILE INCAPACITATED—RELIEF BY COUNCIL FROM PENSION FUNDS AND FROM FIRE FUND.

An officer entitled to a salary receives the same whether performing his duties or not. A mere employe is paid for the services which he performs, and his compensation may be suspended during incapacity for duty. A city fireman is an employe, within this rule, and he is not entitled to pay while incapacitated for work.

Under Section 4379, which supplies the reasons for which a fireman may be suspended from the service, sickness is not included.

Under Section 4600, of the General Code, a pension fund may be provided by the city for the benefit of disabled firemen, and under Section 4383, of the General Code, council may provide for assistance to regular members of the department out of the police and fire funds, by general ordinance. After a fireman has resigned the council cannot act under this section to afford relief for a former period of disability.

COLUMBUS, OHIO, August 6, 1912.

HON. MEEKER TERWILLIGER, City Solicitor, Circleville, Ohio.

DEAR SIR:—Under date of June 25, 1912, you make inquiry of this department as follows:

> "One of our regular firemen, in the city fire department, took sick last January, and has been unable to perform any duties since. Our director of public safety, called upon him, and as this fireman has been in the fire department here for about twenty years, the director did not like to have him suspended, but he was continued in service, with the understanding that the fireman was to continue in the service nominally, but that a substitute was to be employed, who should perform the regular duties of said sick fireman until such time as he would recover his health, said substitute to draw the salary of the regular fireman. Said substitute worked during January, February and half of the month of March; but during the latter half of March and the whole of April this sick fireman's place was not filled by substitute or otherwise. Said sick fireman was not suspended, it being understood that he was to pay for his substitute, and his substitute was paid the salary of the sick fireman for part of January, all of February and one-half of March. Now it seems that this sick fireman is no better, and has tendered his resignation, under the date of May 1, 1912, which has been accepted and his place filled as provided by law.
> "We have no firemen's pension fund and no fund for the relief of disabled firemen.
>
> "Now this sick fireman presents his claim to the city for full pay from the time his substitute began work up to the date of his resignation May 1st, on the ground that he was not suspended and that he was still in the service, although disabled by sickness from January 15th last to May 1st, the date he resigned.
>
> "The sick fireman did not report for and performed no duty.
> "1. Can a fireman be suspended on account of ill-health or sickness?

"2. While this sick fireman was continued in service, and no substitute furnished or paid, yet said sick fireman performed no duty, can he draw salary?

"3. Can said sick fireman draw full pay from the time he took sick in January last until May 1st, the date he resigned, notwithstanding the fact that he performed no service, and that a substitute was employed from January 15 to March 15, at the regular salary of said fireman?"

It is a well established principle of law that an officer is entitled to the salary, which is an incident to the office, whether he performs the duties of the office or not. This principle does not apply to an employe who is paid for the services which he performs.

In State vs. Jennings, 57 Ohio St., 415, it is held that a fireman is an employe. The second and third syllabi read:

"To constitute a public office, against the incumbent of which quo warranto will lie, it is essential that certain independent public duties, a part of the sovereignty of the state, should be appointed to it by law, to be exercised by the incumbent, in virtue of his election or appointement to the office, thus created and defined, and not as a mere employe, subject to the direction and control of some one else.

"Where, in pursuance of an ordinance, a fireman is employed by the council to perform the usual duties of a fireman; who has no control of the fire department, or its property other than in the use of it; performs his duties subject to the chief of the department and the city council; and is paid by the month for his services, he is not a public officer; and cannot be ousted from his employment by a proceeding in quo warranto, on the ground that he should have been appointed by the mayor with the advice and consent of the council."

The salary which is fixed for a fireman is based upon services rendered or to be rendered. If he performs no services he is not entitled to the salary of the position.

The firemen in question who was unable to perform the duties of that position because of sickness is not entitled to the salary during the period of his sickness.

You ask if a fireman may be suspended for ill-health or sickness.

Section 4379, General Code, provides:

"The chief of the police and the chief of the fire department shall have exclusive right to suspend any of the deputies, officers or employes in his respective department and under his management and control, for incompetence, gross neglect of duty, gross immorality, habitual drunkenness, failure to obey orders given him by the proper authority, or for any other reasonable and just cause."

The cause for suspension under this section should be something for which the employe is at fault. Sickness or ill-health is not such a fault. An employe who is sick should be continued in the service until he is again able to perform his duties. This will apply especially to those under civil service.

If the illness is of such a nature that he will be permanently incapacitated for further duty, he should be retired or removed.

You further ask as what relief council can grant to this fireman.

The statutes, Sections 4600, et seq., General Code, provide a means by virtue of a firemen's pension fund by which firemen may receive aid from the city when they are disabled. Your city has not it appears, acted under these provisions.

Section 4383, General Code, provides:

> "Council may provide by general ordinance for the relief out of the police or fire funds, of members of either department temporarily or permanently disabled in the discharge of their duty. Nothing herein shall impair, restrict or repeal any provision of law authorizing the levy of taxes in municipalities to provide for firemen's police and sanitary police pension funds, and to create and perpetuate boards of trustees for the administration of such funds."

This section authorizes council to relieve the members of the police or fire department when such members are disabled in the discharge of their duties. However, in order that council may relieve such firemen or policemen, they must be members of the department. In your case the fireman has resigned. He is no longer a member of either department.

In order to grant such relief to the members of the fire or police departments, council is required to act by "general ordinance." It appears that council has not acted under this provision of the statutes. It cannot now pass a general ordinance so as to grant relief to the person in question. The fireman has resigned from the department, and has thereby severed his connection with the service of the city.

I am of the opinion that the city council cannot now grant relief to the fireman in question.

Respectfully,
TIMOTHY S. HOGAN,
Attorney General.

DIRECTOR OF PUBLIC SERVICE—APPOINTEES IN DEPARTMENT—SALARY FIXED BY COUNCIL FOR ENGINEER IN EXCESS OF $500.00—ADVERTISEMENT AND BIDS NOT REQUIRED.

Under Section 4327, of the General Code, the director of public service is required to create the position and name the appointee therefor in his department, while under Section 4214, of the General Code, council must fix the compensation by ordinance or resolution.

In paying compensation of an engineer so fixed at an amount in excess of $500.00, advertisement and bids are not required under Section 4328, of the General Code.

COLUMBUS, OHIO, August 16, 1912.

HON. D. F. MILLS, City Solicitor, Sidney, Ohio

DEAR SIR:—Your favor of July 19, 1912 is received, in which you inquire:

> "The council of the city of Sidney, Ohio, are contemplating improving certain streets and alleys in the city by paving, etc., and they desire the services of an experienced engineer to supervise the entire work, making the original plans, surveys, etc. I would like to have your opinion as to whether or not it is absolutely necessary to advertise for bids as provided in Section 4328, General Code. The amount to be paid the engineer employed will exceed $500.00."

Section 4328, General Code, to which you refer, provides:

"The director of public service may make any contract or purchase supplies or material or provide labor for any work under the supervision of that department not involving more than $500.00. When an expenditure within the department, other than the compensation of persons employed therein, exceeds $500.00, such expenditure shall first be authorized and directed by ordinance of council. When so authorized and directed, the director of public service shall make a written contract with the lowest and best bidder after advertisement for not less than two nor more than four consecutive weeks in a newspaper of general circulation within the city."

The requirement in the foregoing section for competitive bidding covers expenditures "other than the compensation of persons employed therein."

The engineer the city desires to employ would be employed in the department of public service. The amount to be paid him would be his compensation for his services. In order, however, for a person to be employed in the department of public service of a city, a position must be created by the director of public service, and the compensation for the same must be fixed by council.

Section 4327, General Code, provides:

"The director of public service may establish such subdepartment as may be necessary and determine the number of superintendents, deputies, inspectors, engineers, harbor masters, clerks, laborers and other persons, necessary for the execution of the work and the performance of the duties of this department."

Section 4214, General Code, provides:

"Except as otherwise provided in this title, council, by ordinance or resolution, shall determine the number of officers, clerks and employes in each department of the city government, and shall fix by ordinance or resolution their respective salaries and compensation, and the amount of bond to be given for each officer, clerk or employe in each department of the government, if any be required. Such bond shall be made by such officer, clerk or employe, with surety subject to the approval of the mayor."

The director of public service should create the position of engineer in question in his department, and the council should then fix the salary for such position.

In employing or appointing a person to fill a position as engineer so created, ability, experience and other qualifications are taken into consideration. Competitive bidding in such a case would be worthless.

It is not necessary to ask for bids in order to employ an experienced engineer to fill a position in the department of public service of a city.

Respectfully,

TIMOTHY S. HOGAN,

Attorney General.

SEWER ASSESSMENTS—GENERAL SEWERAGE PLAN—NOTICE OF RESOLUTION OF NECESSITY NEED NOT BE SERVED ON ABUTTING OWNERS IN CONSTRUCTION OF MAIN OR DISTRICT SEWERS.

By virtue of Section 3834 of the General Code, notices of the passage of the resolution of necessity to construct sewers as a part of a general plan must be served upon abutting owners in all cases except abutting owners upon main or district sewers, which, under Section 3872 of the General Code, are defined to be such as have their outlet in a river or other proper place.

COLUMBUS, OHIO, August 1, 1912.

HON. ELMER E. BODEN, City Solicitor, Barberton, Ohio.

DEAR SIR:—Under date of July 6th, you state that at the request of your city council you wish our opinion as to the service of notice upon property owners upon a storm sewer improvement when such improvement is made under a plan for a system of sewerage.

In your letter you state in part as follows:

> "Assessments in general are provided for by Sections 3812 to 3837 of the General Code of Ohio.
>
> "Section 3814 provides for the resolution of necessity and the manner in which same shall be published."
> "Section 3818 provides for the service of notice of the passage of such resolution of necessity, and Section 3823 provides for the filing of claims for damages.
> "But where the improvement is made under a plan for a system of sewerage for the whole or any part of the municipality, it seems that special provisions are made therefor, and that a different rule applies.
> "The subject of 'sewers' is especially provided for in Sections 3871 to 3891 of the General Code. Section 3871 provides in part: 'In addition to the power herein conferred to construct sewers and levy assessments therefor, council of a municipal corporation may provide a system of sewerage for such municipal corporation or any part thereof * * *.'
> "Section 3872 provides for sewer districts; Section 3873, as to how plan to be prepared; Section 3874, for notice of completion of plan to be advertised; Section 3877 for the designation of portions for immediate construction; Section 3875 for objections to plan; Section 3876 for amendment of plan.
> "Section 3878 provides for the Resolution of Necessity, and concludes by saying: '* * * and shall cause the resolution to be published once a week for not less than two nor more than four consecutive weeks in one newspaper of general circulation in the corporation.'
> "Section 3879 provides for the Ordinance Determining to Proceed, and reads in part as follows: 'After the publication of such notice, the council shall determine whether it shall proceed with the proposed improvement or not, and if it decides to proceed therewith, an ordinance for the purpose shall be passed. * * *'"

You further call our attention to Section 3834 of the General Code. You then advise us as follows:

"All the necessary steps under these special provisions have been complied with, and as laid down in Ellis' Ohio Municipal Code (5th Edition) pp. 331 and 332, up to and including the Resolution of Necessity. A general plan was adopted, reported to council, notice thereof published for ten days, plan approved by council by ordinance, resolution designating portion required for immedate use, and resolution of necessity. Am including herewith Resolution No. 36 and Resolution No. 42 which please return to me."

Resolution No. 36, enclosed in your letter, was passed in pursuance of the provisions of Section 3877 of the General Code which provides as follows:

"After such plan has been adopted and approved, the council shall designate such portions of the work as may be required for immediate use, and the designation shall be by districts, and shall show what districts or part thereof is to be improved, and may order the engineer to make an estimate of the cost and expense of constructing the work, or such portions thereof as may have been designated in accordance with the last section, according to such plan, and report them to council."

Upon an examination of said resolution it is to be noted that Section 2 thereof provides that the territory designated by said resolution shall be known and designated "Barberton storm sewer district number three," and that Section 3 thereof provides:

"That said district shall consist of two main sewers, to be known as main sewer No. 1 and main sewer No. 2, with the necessary branch or connecting sewers."

Section 4 thereof provides:

"That said main sewers, with the necessary branch or connecting sewers, shall be constructed upon and drain the separate portions of of said district as follows, to wit:

"Main Sewer No. 1 (describing it); Main Sewer No. 2 (describing it)."

Resolution No. 42 was passed in pursuance of the provisions of Section 3878, General Code, and is designated "a resolution declaring it necessary to construct main and local storm sewers in storm sewer district number three in the city of Barberton, Ohio."

Section No. 1, provides that:

"That it is necessary to construct all of the main and local storm sewers provided for in a general plan for a system of storm sewerage for the following described territory to the city of Barberton, Ohio, to wit: (describing said territory)."

Section 2 provides:

"That said main and local storm sewers shall be constructed in accordance with the plans and specifications on file in the office of the auditor of said city, and shall be as follows, to wit: Main Sewer No. 1, (describing it); Main sewer No. 2, (describing it); Mulberry Street describing it); Center Street (describing it); and thereafter describing various other streets and avenues."

Sections 3871 et seq., General Code, provide for the establishment of a system according to a previously adopted plan and it is stated in Section 3871 that such power is "in addition to the power herein conferred to construct sewers and levy assessments therefor."

Section 3872, General Code, provides as follows:

> "The plan so devised shall be formed with a view of the division of the corporation into as many sewer districts as may be deemed necessary for securing efficient sewerage. Each of the districts shall be designated by a name and number, and shall consist of one or more main sewers, with the necessary branch or connecting sewers, the main sewers having their outlet in a river, or other proper place. The districts shall be so arranged as to be independent of each other, so far as practicable."

It is to be noted that "main sewers" are defined as such sewers as have their outlet in a river or other proper place.

Section 3878, General Code, provides as follows:

> "When it is deemed necessary by a municipal corporation to construct all or a part of the sewers provided for in such plan, the council shall declare by resolution the necessity thereof. Such resolution shall contain a declaration of the necessity of such improvement, a statement of the district or districts or parts thereof proposed to be constructed, the character of the materials to be used, a reference to the plans and specifications, where they are on file, and the mode of payment therefor, and shall cause the resolution to be published one a week for not less than two nor more than four consecutive weeks in one newspaper of general circulation in the corporation."

Section 3879, General Code, provides in part as follows:

> "After the publication of such notice, the council shall determine whether it shall proceed with the proposed improvement or not, and if it decided to proceed therewith, an ordinance for the purpose shall be passed."

Section 3818, General Code, provides as follows:

> "A notice of the passage of such resolution shall be served by the clerk of council, or an assistant, upon the owner of each piece of property to be assessed, in the manner provided by law for the service of summons in civil actions. If any such owners or persons are not residents of the county, or if it appears by the return in any case of the notice, that such owner cannot be found, the notice shall be published at least twice in a newspaper of general circulation within the corporation. Whether by service or publication, such notice shall be completed at least twenty days before the improvement is made or the assessment levied, and the return of the officer or person serving the notice, or a certified copy of the return shall be prima facie evidence of the service of the notice as herein required."

Section 3834 of the General Code, the latter part thereof, provides:

> "In the construction of sewers, excepting main or district sewers, notice of the passage of the resolution therefor shall be made in the manner hereinbefore provided."

If I read Resolutions Nos. 36 and 42 respectively correctly the said Barberton storm sewer district No. 3 is to consist of two main sewers and branch sewers connecting therewith in the various streets, to wit: Mulberry, Center and others designated therein.

The question you desire answered is whether or not notice of the passage of the resolution of necessity must be served upon the owner of each piece of property to be assessed as provided in Section 3834, General Code, also foregoing set forth.

Section 3834, General Code, was first introduced into the law, 97 O. L. 123, and so much as is pertinent to this inquiry read as follows:

> "In the case of the construction of sewers hereafter excepting main or district sewers, notice of the passage of the resolution therefor, as provided in Section 84 of the act of which this is amendatory (now Section 3878 General Code) shall be made in the manner provided in Section 52 of said act as amended herein. (Now Section 3818, General Code.)"

While it is true that it is provided in Section 3824 of the General Code that at the expiration of the time limited for so filing claims for damages, council shall determine whether it will proceed with the improvement or not, and whether the claims for damages so filed shall be judicially inquired into, as hereinafter provided, before commencing, or after the completion of the proposed improvement, and under Section 3879, General Code, it is provided that after the publication of such notice (as required in Section 3878, General Code) the council shall determine whether it shall proceed with the proposed improvement or not, yet in view of the provisions of Section 3834, General Code, that in the construction of sewers, excepting main or district sewers, notice of the passage of the resolution therefor shall be made in the manner hereinbefore provided, I am of the opinion that it is necessary to serve such notice on the owners of the property to be assessed on all connecting sewers, but that it is not necessary to serve such owners with such notice as to the main sewers which have been designated in Resolution No. 42 as main sewer No. 1 and main sewer No. 2. This is more clearly seen by reference to the statute as originally passed in that said statute specifically provided that the notice of the passage of the resolution passed in accordance with the provisions of Section 3878, General Code shall be made in the manner provided in Section 3818. In other words, the only exception that is made in reference to serving notice of the passage of the resolution provided for in Section 3878 in the construction of sewers is in relation to main or district sewers, which, as before stated, under the provisions of Section 3872, General Code, are defined as such sewers as have their outlet in a river or other proper place.

I am, therefore, of the opinion that it is necessary to serve notice upon the property owners in a storm sewer improvement when such improvement is made under a plan for a system of sewerage in regard to such sewers as are not main or district sewers.

I herewith return you the copies of the two resolutions which you enclosed in your inquiry.

Very truly yours,

TIMOTHY S. HOGAN,
Attorney General.

REFUNDING INDEBTEDNESS—POWERS OF COUNCIL AND SINKING FUND TRUSTEES.

By provision of Section 3916 and 3917, General Code, when the sinking fund trustees of a city have not sufficient funds to meet the installments of the bonded indebtedness during the current year, council may refund the bonded indebtedness and sell bonds for the purpose of meeting the bonds to become due.

Under Section 3925, General Code, a new relief is accorded by which semi-annual interest bearing bonds may be exchanged for outstanding bonds, with the consent of the holders, to such reduction of interest.

COLUMBUS, OHIO, September 12, 1912.

HON. B. F. LONG, City Solicitor, Shelby, Ohio.

DEAR SIR:—I beg to acknowledge receipt of your letter of August 22nd requesting my opinion upon the following question:

> "The sinking fund trustees of a city have not sufficient funds under their control to meet the installments of the bonded indebtedness of the city during the current year.
>
> "May the council of the city refund the bonded indebtedness and issue and sell bonds for the purposes of meeting the bonds to become due?"

Section 3916 of the General Code provides as follows:

> "For the purpose of extending the time of payment of any indebtedness, which from its limits of taxation the corporation is unable to pay at maturity, or when it appears to the council for the best interest of the corporation, the council thereof may issue bonds of the corporation or borrow money so as to change but not to increase the indebtedness, in such amounts, for such length of time and at such rate of interest as the council deems proper, not to exceed six per cent. per annum, payable annually or semi-annually."

Section 3917, General Code, must be read in connection with the foregoing section and is as follows:

> "No indebtedness of such municipal corporation shall be funded, refunded, or extended, unless it shall first be determined to be an existing valid and binding obligation of the corporation by a formal resolution of the council thereof. Such resolution shall also state the amount of the existing indebtedness to be funded, refunded or extended, the aggregate amount of bonds to be issued therefor, their number and denomination, the date of maturity, the rate of interest they shall bear, and the place of payment of principal and interest."

I am clearly of the opinion that council has authority under these sections to issue bonds for the purpose of refunding the indebtedness which the city cannot meet. In the case you submit the existing indebtedness is bonded, and as to the bonds coming due, is matured, and cannot be met because of the limits of taxation of the corporation—for you advise me that the lack of funds in the hands of the sinking fund trustees is due to the enforcement of the limitations of the Smith law. However, Section 3916 authorizes the refunding of bonded indebtedness "when it appears to the council for the best interests of the corporation." So that the authority of council to refund the bonded indebtedness by the issuance and sale of new bonds is very broad and is not even limited to cases in which the bonded indebtedness is due and cannot be paid at maturity because of the limits of taxation.

In this connection I beg leave to call attention to Section 3925, General Code, which provides as follows:

> "When it appears to the council of a municipal corporation, to be for the best interests thereof to renew or refund any bonded indebtedness of such corporation which has not matured, and thereby reduce the rate of interest thereon, such council may issue for that purpose new bonds, with semi-annual interest coupons attached, and exchange them with the holder or holders of such outstanding bonds, if they consent to make such exchange and to such reduction of interest. When new bonds are issued they shall not in any case exceed in amount the outstanding bonded indebtedness to be renewed or refunded."

I do not know that this section will be of use to you but it seems to afford still another method of relief in a case like that which you describe.

Yours very truly,

TIMOTHY S. HOGAN,
Attorney General.

HUMANE AGENT—APPROVAL OF APPOINTMENT BY MAYOR MAY NOT BE REVOKED—MANDATORY DUTY OF COUNCIL TO PAY SALARY.

Under Section 10071, General Code, appointment of humane agent by humane societies must be approved by the mayor of the city or village for which they are made. After such approval has been made, inasmuch as the power of removal of such agent is not vested in the will of the mayor, he may not revoke his approval.

The council has no power to direct the mayor to revoke such approval and may be compelled by action in mandamus to fix the salary of said agent under 10072, General Code, at not less than twenty dollars per month, and to make an appropriation for the same.

COLUMBUS, OHIO, August 20, 1912.

HON. HARRY F. WITTENBRINK, City Solicitor, St. Marys, Ohio.

DEAR SIR:—Your letter of July 31st received. You state:

> "On the first day of June, 1912, one Mr. S. was duly appointed humane officer of the Auglaize county humane society, and such appointment was approved by the mayor of the city of St. Marys, Ohio, according to law, on the 4th day of June, 1912. After such approval and confirmation as required by law, the city council was asked to fix a salary. This was refused and thereupon the council passed a motion instructing the mayor to withdraw his said approval.

"1. Was the action of council in thus instructing the mayor legal and according to law?

"2. Has the mayor power or authority to revoke such approval or confirmation after once given?

"3. If so, by what process? And for what causes?

"The fact of the matter is that at a previous meeting of the said council, that body instructed the mayor not to consider any appointments in respect to the humane society. But the mayor, either through negligence on his part or because of unavoidable mistake, approved the appointment of Mr. S. as humane officer. When Mr. S. made inquiries in regard to salary he discovered council had made no appropriation and had not determined upon any salary. Furthermore, council refused to determine such salary or make appropriations for same but instead that body ordered the mayor to withdraw his approval."

Section 10067 of the General Code provides that humane societies may be organized in any county by the association of not less than seven persons. Section 10070 authorizes said societies to "appoint agents who are residents of the county or municipality for which the appointment is made, for the purpose of prosecuting any person guilty of an act of cruelty to persons or animals," etc. Section 10071 provides:

"All appointments by such societies under the next preceding section shall have the approval of the mayor of the city or village for which they are made. If the society exists outside of a city or village, appointments shall be approved by the probate judge of the county for which they are made. The mayor or probate judge shall keep a record of such appointments."

It appears that the appointment of said humane officer was regularly made by the humane society, and that the mayor approved such appointment. Council was thereupon asked to fix a salary for such officer and refused to do so, but instead passed a motion instructing the mayor to withdraw his approval of said officer.

This action of council was, in my opinion, clearly illegal. The approval of the agent appointed by a duly organized humane society is an executive function and rests exclusively in the discretion of the mayor and the appointee is not subject to confirmation by council. Council has legislative powers only and its attempt to dictate to the mayor was beyond the scope of its powers and an unwarranted interference with the functions of the executive.

I am also of the opinion that the mayor is without authority to revoke such approval after it is once given, and in support of this view I call your attention to the following authorities: In 29 Cyc., at page 1372, it is said:

"After the act of appointment is complete the power of the appointing authority is exhausted. The appointing authority may not revoke its former appointment and make another. The only exception to this statement is to be found in the case of appointments by legislative bodies whose actions in the case of appointments are generally treated like their legislative business and governed by their ordinary rules."

The supreme court of the United States, in the case of Marbury vs. Madison, 1 Cranch, 137, at page 161 of the opinion, says:

"Where an officer is removable at the will of the executive, the circumstance which completes his appointment is of no concern; because the act is at any time revokable; and the commission may be arrested, if still in the office, but when the officer is not removable at the will of the executive the appointment is not revokable and cannot be annulled. It has conferred legal rights which cannot be assumed. The discretion of the executive is to be exercised until the appointment has been made. But having once made the appointment, his power over the office is terminated in all cases, where by law the officer is not removable by him."

It is held in the case of Haight vs. Love, 39 N. J., 14, that:

"When a board has completely exercised its power of appointing a person to an office, and that person is not removable at the will of the board, a recision of the appointment will not affect the right to the office."

The first syllabus in the case of Speed vs. Common Council of Detroit, 97 Mich., 198, is:

"Act No. 419, Local Acts of 1893, vests in the mayor of the city of Detroit the exclusive power to appoint a city counselor, and when such appointment has been duly made and filed it is absolute, and beyond the power of the mayor to recall."

Another question is suggested by your letter that I deem worthy of consideration, namely: Whether council may legally refuse to fix a salary for the humane officer? In this connection I quote Section 10072 of the General Code, as follows:

"Upon the approval of the appointment of such an agent by the mayor of the city or village, the council thereof shall pay monthly to such agent or agents from the general revenue fund of the city or village, such salary as council deems just and reasonable. Upon the approval of the appointment of such an agent by the probate judge of the county, the county commissioners shall pay monthly to such agent or agents, from the general revenue fund of the county, such salary as they deem just and reasonable. The commissioners and the council of such city or village may agree upon the amount each is to pay such agent or agents monthly. The amount of salary to be paid monthly by the council of the village to such agent shall not be less than five dollars, by the council of the city not less than twenty dollars, and by the commissioners of the county not less than twenty-five dollars. But not more than one agent in each county shall receive remuneration from the county commissioners under this section."

Section 4214 of the Code requires council, except as otherwise provided in the title of which that section is a part, to determine the number of officers, clerks and employes in each department of the city government, and fix their respective salaries or compensation. It may be contended that because council did not first determine the position of humane officer it cannot now be compelled to fix the salary of such officer and make an appropriation therefor. It is true the humane officer has certain police powers and draws his compensation from the city treasury, but he is not a city officer. He derives his authority from his appointment by the humane society and approval of the mayor or probate judge, as the case may be, pursuant to Sections 10070 and 10071, independent of any action that council may take. Section 4214 refers only to the establishment of city officers or positions not otherwise provided for by statute and inasmuch as the appointment of a humane officer is provided for by another statute, I am of the opinion that Section 4214 does not govern in that case.

Section 10072, supra, places upon council the duty of paying to such agent, monthly, out of the city treasury, such salary as the council deems just and reasonable, but not less than twenty dollars.

I am of the opinion that council, under said section, may be compelled by mandamus to fix the salary of such humane officer and make an appropriation to pay the same.

Very truly yours,
TIMOTHY S. HOGAN,
Attorney General.

PLATTING OF LANDS WITHIN THREE MILES OF CITY LIMITS—APPROVAL OF PLATTING COMMISSIONERS NOT ESSENTIAL TO RECORDING OF LAND IN ANOTHER COUNTY OR OTHER CORPORATION.

Under Section 4346, General Code, before lands, which are to be platted within three miles of the corporate limits of this city, may be recorded in the county in which said city is located, the approval of the director of service, as platting commissioner, must be endorsed upon the plat thereof; provided said city is the nearest to said lands.

Said section, in view of its plain language, would have no application as regard the right to record, where said lands are located in a county other than the one in which said city is located.

Under 3580, General Code, a plat of land within a municipal corporation, must be approved by the council before it may be recorded. In view of this section, the requirements of approval by the platting commissioner of a city cannot be applicable to land within three miles of said city which is located within another municipal corporation.

COLUMBUS, OHIO, August 30, 1912.

HON. DAVID G. JENKINS, City Solicitor, Youngstown, Ohio.

DEAR SIR:—Your favor of August 9, 1912, is received, in which you state and inquire as follows:

> "The platting commissioner of the city of Youngstown, authorized by council under Section 4346, General Code, has adopted rules and has drawn a comprehensive plan for the platting of all territory within three (3) miles of the corporate limits of the city. The city limits on the north, for a distance of about four (4) miles, are practically identical with the line between Trumbull and Mahoning counties, the city itself being wholly in the latter county.

"First. Has the platting commissioner jurisdiction over lands in Trumbull county within three miles of the corporate limits of Youngstown for the purpose of requiring plats to be first submitted to him and to receive his approval as in accordance with his rules and plan before same shall be entitled to record in Trumbull county?

"Second. Has the platting commissioner jurisdiction over plats in incorporated villages in Mahoning county located within three miles of the city limits?"

Section 4346, General Code, to which you refer, provides:

"The director of public service shall also be the platting commissioner of the city, who shall provide regulations governing the platting of all lands to require all streets and alleys to be in proper width and to be coterminous with adjoining streets and alleys. Whenever council shall deem it expedient to plat any portion of the territory within the corporate limits in which the necessary or convenient streets, or alleys have not already been accepted by the corporation so as to become public streets, or when any person plats any lands within three miles of the corporate limits of a city, the platting commissioner shall, if they are in accordance with the rules as prescribed by him, endorse his written approval thereon and no plat of such land shall be entitled to record in the recorder's office in the county in which such city is located without such written approval so endorsed thereon; provided, that the approval of the platting commission of a city shall not be required, unless such city is the nearest to the lands sought to be alotted."

The provisions of this section in reference to platting land within three miles of the corporate limits of a city were first inserted in the statutes by act in 101 Ohio Laws, 205, which was approved May 13, 1910. Prior to the passage of this amendment to Section 4346, General Code, municipal corporations had no jurisdiction of the platting of lands beyond their corporate limits:

This section now provides that "when any person plats any lands within three miles of the corporate limits of a city the platting commissioner shall, if they are in accordance with the rules, as prescribed by him, endorse his written approval thereon." This provision of the section, standing alone, would authorize a land owner, who plats land within three miles of the corporate limits of a city to submit such plat to the platting commissioner of the city for his approval. If such plat is made in accordance with the rules prescribed by him, the platting commissioner would be authorized to endorse his written approval upon such plat. Under this provision county lines would not be a bar to the right of the land owner or to the authority of the platting commissioner.

The provision following that last above quoted prescribes the manner in which the land owner may be required to submit his plat to the platting commissioner for approval. This provision reads, "and no plat of such land shall be entitled to record in the recorder's office in the county in which such city is located without such written approval so endorsed thereon."

A plat of land is of no substantial benefit unless the same can be recorded. In accordance with the above provision a plat of land within three miles of a city cannot be recorded in the county "in which such city is located" without the written approval of such plat by the platting commissioner of such city.

A plat of land within three miles of the boundaries of a city, but which is in a county other than that in which the city is located, is not required to be recorded in the county in which such city is located. A plat of land is to be recorded in the county in which the land is situated.

The words used in this last cited provision are not ambiguous, although they may not express the full intent of the legislature. The intent of the legislature must be determined from the language of the statute. If such language is clear, statutory rules of construction do not apply. It is only when the language used is uncertain or ambiguous that resort is had to extrinsic aids in the construction of a statute.

This provision provides that such plat shall not be recorded in the county in which such city is located, without the approval of the platting commissioner. In order to make this provision apply to land located in another county it should read that such plat should not be recorded "in the county in which such land is located," without the written approval of the plat by the platting commissioner.

In order to give the platting commissioner jurisdiction over land in a county other than the one in which such city is located, it would be necessary to read the word "city" in the last above quoted clause as meaning "land." It is within the province of the legislature to change the words of a statute. We can only construe the law as enacted. It is not within the province of an executive or judicial officer to change the plain meaning of the words of a statute.

It is my conclusion that under the provisions of Section 4346, General Code, a city cannot require an owner of land in a county other than in which such city is located to submit a plat of his land to the director of public service, who is the platting commissioner of such city, for approval, even though the land so platted is within three miles of the corporate limits of such city.

Therefore the platting commission of Youngstown would not have jurisdiction over the platting of land in Trumbull county.

Your second inquiry is as to the authority of the platting commissioner over the platting of lands in an incorporated village, when the land so platted is within three miles of the limits of the city.

The plain import of the language used in Section 4346, General Code, would give such platting commissioner jurisdiction over lands of villages if such land is within three miles of the boundaries of the city.

However, there are other statutes to be taken into consideration.

Section 4354, General Code, provides:

> "When municipal corporations adjoin each other, the councils thereof may agree, in any manner they determine, upon the appointment of a joint commission for the purposes of this chapter. Such commission, when appointed, shall have all the power over the territory of the municipal corporations described in the resolutions of the councils, that is hereby given to a commissioner appointed by a single council."

This section applies to all municipal corporations, cities and villages. It does not appear, however, that the municipal corporations in your case, adjoin each other.

Section 4356, General Code, provides:

> "The council shall provide by resolution or ordinance for the care, supervision, and management of all public parks, baths, libraries, market houses, crematories, sewage disposal plants, houses of refuge and correction, workhouses, infirmaries, hospitals, pest houses, or any of such institutions owned, maintained or established by the village. When the council determines to plat any of the streets as authorized by law, it shall provide for the platting thereof."

Section 3586, General Code, provides:

"When there are no record plats adopted by a platting commission or board of public works, no such map or plat of any addition within the limits of a municipal corporation shall be recorded until the engineer thereof certifies that the streets, as laid down on the plats of such addition, correspond with those laid down on the recorded plats of the platting commission or board of public works. When there are streets laid down in addition to those adopted by a platting commissin or board of public works, or in any municipal corporation where no platting commission is or has been in existence, no such plat shall be recorded until it has been approved by the council of the municipal corporation."

By virtue of this latter section a plat of land within a municipal corporation must be approved by the council of such municipal corporation before such plat can be recorded. The council of a village, therefore, has the power to approve plats of land in said village.

If such land in a village is located within three miles of the boundaries of a city, there would be, by a literal construction of the statutes, two powers to approve such plat, to wit: the village council, and the platting commissioner of the city. There is no provision in either statute to show that such a condition was contemplated, nor is there anything in the statute to show that the platting commissioner of a city is to have jurisdiction of the platting of land in a village, exclusive of the right of the village council.

The platting of territory in a village is under the jurisdiction of the council of the village. That territory has been taken by the village and so long as it remains a part of such village, it is subject to the jurisdiction thereof.

A director of public service of a city could not take jurisdiction over the territory of an incorporated village unless such jurisdiction is specifically granted him by statute. There is no specific authority granted him by statute to approve plats of land situated within a village.

The proper construction to be placed upon the provisions of Section 4346, General Code, is that a plat of land within three miles of the corporate limits of a city must be approved by the director of public service, as the platting commissioner of such city, unless such land is situated in an incorporated village or city, or unless such land is located in a county other than that in which such city is located. There is a further provision that such city in order to have jurisdiction of the platting of such land must be the nearest to the lands sought to be platted.

Respectfully,

TIMOTHY S. HOGAN,

Attorney General.

PAVING BETWEEN RAILS OF STREET RAILWAY COMPANY—NOT AN ASSESSMENT AGAINST LOTS AND LANDS—POWER TO ASSESS BASED ON CONTRACT—CERTIFICATION TO COUNTY AUDITOR VOID—COLLECTION FROM COMPANY.

The provisions of Section 3812, General Code, providing that council shall have power to levy and collect special assessments, and of 3818, General Code, granting to council the power to designate the mode of payment of such assessments, apply solely to assessments against "lots and lands" and since the paving between the rails of a street railway company cannot be said to specially benefit "lots or lands" of said company, said provisions can have no application to an assessment against such company for paving between its tracks.

The power, therefore, to assess a railway company for such paving under 3776, General Code, and the assessment therefor, must be based upon the contract with the company as set out in its franchise.

Section 3892 providing for the certification of assessments to the county auditor applies only to assessments against "lots and lands" and has no application.

The collection must be made directly from the company by the council, therefore, in accordance with the terms of the franchise.

COLUMBUS, OHIO, September 10, 1912.

HON. JAMES L. LEONARD, City Solicitor, Mount Vernon, Ohio.

DEAR SIR:—Your favor of August 22, 1912, is received in which you inquire:

> "The franchise of a street railway company, says that it must pave between the rails of its tracks when the city paves the street. How should the assessment for the cost of the same be collected from the street railway? Should their total assessment be collected at the time of the completion of the improvement or should it be certified to the county auditor in installments the same as against other abutting property owners?
> "The thing I am trying to find out is whether or not such an assessment can be collected if it has been certified in installments."

The provisions for the levying of special assessments for the improvement of streets and other improvements are found in Section 3812, et seq., General Code.

Section 3812, General Code, determines the property upon which the assessment may be levied as follows:

> "Each municipal corporation shall have special power to levy and collect special assessments, to be exercised in the manner provided by law. The council of any municipal corporation may assess upon the abutting, adjacent and contiguous or other specially benefited lots or lands in the corporation, any part of the entire cost of an expense connected with the improvement of any street, alley, dock, wharf, pier, public road, or place by grading, draining, curbing, paving, repaving, repairing, constructing sidewalks, piers, wharves, docks, retaining walls, sewers, drains, watercourses, water mains or laying of water pipe and any part of the cost of lighting, sprinkling, sweeping, cleaning or planting shade trees thereupon, and any part of the cost and expense connected with or made for changing the channel of, or narrowing, widening, dredging, deepening or improving any stream or watercourse, and for constructing or improving any levee or levees, or boulevards thereon, or along or about the same, together with any retaining wall, or riprap protection, bulkheads, culverts, approaches, flood gates, or water ways or drains incidental thereto, which the council may declare conducive to the public health, convenience or welfare, by any of the following methods:

"First. By a percentage of the tax value of the property assessed.

"Second. In proportion to the benefits which may result from the improvement, or

"Third. By the foot front of the property bounding and abutting upon the improvement."

The assessment is to be made upon the "abutting, adjacent and contiguous or other specially benefited lots or lands" in the corporation.

Does this provision include the franchise and trackage of a street railway company and will it authorize a special assessment upon such franchise and trackage for the improvement of a street in which such tracks are located?

I take it that you are inquiring of the part of a street improvement to be paid by a street railway company, because it has tracks in a street improved or to be improved, and not to the part it is required to pay because it owns real estate abutting on such improvement. This opinion will deal solely with the obligation of the street railway company because of its trackage and franchise in the street.

The general rule is stated in Dillon on Municipal Corporations, fifth edition, at Section 1452, as follows:

"It is almost uniformly held that the rails, ties, and other appliances of street railways and other railroads, which are constructed in and along the streets of a municipality, constitute property of such a nature that it may be, and usually is, benefited by the paving of a street, or by otherwise improving it; and that the legislature may impose, or authorize a municipality to impose, a special assessment upon such railways for the cost of the improvement. But in keeping with the principle which requires the power of taxation to be expressly delegated, a special assessment against the tracks and other appliances of a street railway must be authorized by language appropriate to include property of that nature; and authority conferred by statute to levy a special assessment for the improvement of the street upon the lots and property abutting on the street, has been held not sufficient to support an assessment against a street railway."

It appears that it is generally held that the tracks of a street railway and its other appliances are benefited by the improvement of a street. The statute provides that the assessment may be made upon the "lots or lands" generally benefited or abutting, adjacent or contiguous thereto. In other words the property assessed must be lots or lands.

In Dean vs. Mayor and Alderman of the city of Paterson, 67 N. J. Law, 199, it is held:

"A street railway exercising its franchise within a city street, although having a property in its ties, rails and other necessary equipment, is not liable to be assessed for benefits of a street improvement made by the city, under the act of June 13, 1898 (Pamph. L. p. 466) which directs the assessment to be made in proportion to the benefits acquired by lands and real estate bordering on such street."

In the case of Seattle vs. Seattle Electric Company, 48 Wash. 599, the syllabus reads:

> "Under Bal. Code, Section 796, authorizing the assessment of lots, blocks or parcels of land that may be benefited by a municipal improvement, a street railway company's right of way and trackage upon a street, cannot be assessed where it did not own the fee in the street, but only held a franchise for its use for a limited time."

In State vs. District Court of Ramsey County, 31 Minn. 354, it is held:

> "A portion of the track of the St. Paul City Railway Company in a public street is not real estate within the meaning of sub. 6, title 1, Section 3 of the city charter, (Sp. Laws 1874, c. 1,) and therefore not assessable for the expense of paving."

The statute in the above case provided that the assessments were to be levied upon the real estate to be benefited thereby or fronting thereon. In the various statutes providing for the enforcement of the assessment the property to be sold and levied against is referred to as lots and lands. After quoting from these several statutes, Berry, J., says on page 357 of the report:

> "From these quotations and references, it is apparent that the real estate upon which assessments are authorized to be made, and against which assessment proceedings, culminating in judgments and sales, are authorized to be carried on, consists of "lots and parcels of land," using that expression in its ordinary sense. That a mere easement, such as is the right of the petitioner in the streets in which its track is laid, or the rails, spikes, and timbers which compose its track, are not lots or parcels of land, admits of no argument. Neither is its franchise to lay, maintain and operate its road over the streets nor such franchise and its track taken together, a lot or parcel of land. Hence, it appears to follow that a portion of its track in a public street cannot be assessable as real estate to defray the expenses of paving."

The franchise and trackage of a street railway company in a street in which it has only an easement, cannot be held to be a lot or lots, or land. The street railway company does not own the fee to the street or any part thereof. It only has a right to use the street for the purpose of maintaining and operating a street railway system.

Therefore, the franchise and trackage of a street railway company cannot be specially assessed for the paving of a street under the provisions of Section 3812, General Code. While it no doubt is benefited by the improvement, its franchise and track are not lots or lands.

Section 3815, General Code, authorizes council to provide for the payment of the special assessment in annual installments as follows:

> "Such resolution shall determine the general nature of the improvement, what shall be the grade of the street, alley, or other public place to be improved, the grade or elevation of the curbs, and shall approve the plans, specifications, estimates and profiles for the proposed improvement. In such resolution council shall also determine the method of the assessment, the mode of payment, and whether or not bonds shall be issued in anticipation of the collection thereof. Assessments for any improvement may be payable in one to ten installments at such time as council prescribes."

The assessment herein referred to is that which is authorized to be levied by Section 3812, General Code. There is no other specific provision of statute authorizing council to make assessments payable in annual installments. As the franchise and trackage of a street railway company are not subject to special assessment under the provisions of Section 3812, General Code, so also Section 3815, General Code, will not apply to the part to be paid by the street railway company under the provisions of its franchise.

The franchise under which the street railway is operating requires it to pave that part of the street between the rails of its track when the city paves the street. The liability of the street railway is to be determined by the terms of its franchise, which is in the nature of a contract with the city.

The authority of council to make such requirement as to paving is found in Section 3776, General Code, which reads:

"The council may require any part or all of the track, between the rails of any street railroad constructed within the corporate limits, to be paved with stone, gravel, boulders, or wooden or asphaltic pavement, as may be deemed proper, but without the corporate limits, paving between the rails with stone, boulders, wooden or asphaltic pavement shall not be required."

At Section 1124 of Page and Jones on Assessments, it is said:

"Grants of franchises may contain provisions with reference to the collection of assessments, and such provisions, if otherwise valid, control. If a street railway company accepts a franchise granted by statutory authority, and such franchise ordinance contains the provision that assessment against a street railway shall be collected in the same manner as other street assessments, assessments against the railway may be collected in the manner prescribed by law at the time of the improvement for collecting street assessments."

Also at Section 605 of said work the rule is stated to be:

"If the liability of the street railway rests on its charter or on other statutory provisions such liability must be enforced in accordance with such statute. A contract liability must be enforced as such. The liability of a street railway company to a city under a contract by which the street railway company agrees to pave a certain part of the street cannot be enforced in a proceeding to apportion an assessment on the theory of benefits."

The terms of the franchise determine the liability of the street railway company. The collection of the share of the railway company should be made in accordance with the terms of the franchise.

It appears that the company is required to pave its share of the street at the same time that the city paves the street. Under such a provision the company could itself pave its share of the street. In such case the city would have nothing to do with the collection of the cost thereof. The company would, no doubt, in such case, be required to pay the cost upon the completion of the work.

A franchise usually provides how the improvement shall be made when the company refuses or neglects to pave its part.

Such a provision was construed in the case of City of Columbus vs. Street Railroad Company, 45 Ohio St. 98, wherein it is held:

> "The city of Columbus, by ordinance, granted the privilege to a company to construct and operate a street railroad on one of its streets for a specified period. The ordinance provided that the company should make, construct, and keep in order and repair, all that part of the street included between the rails of its tracks and switches, in the same manner, and with like material, as the street is constructed and repaired, so long as it shall use the same for its railroad; and any failure to comply with the provisions of the ordinance, or with any general ordinance of the city, regulating the use of its streets, or the police regulations thereof, should render such railroad company liable to the city, in an action of damages for such failure; and the council after giving the company twenty days notice, should have the right to order any work to be done on the railroad, necessary to keep it in repair, and charge the cost and expense thereof upon the railroad company. Held:
> "1. That the ordinance did not divest the city of its control of the street, or abridge its right to improve the same; and it might, during the period named, cause to be made new improvements thereof, including the part occupied by the street railway, and determine the kind of improvements to be so made.
> "2. By constructing and operating its railway the company accepted the burdens, with the privileges of the ordinance, and thereby incurred the continuing obligation, to make, construct and keep in order and repair, as long as it enjoyed those privileges, the portion of the street between the rails of its track, including such new improvement thereof as the city might determine and direct.
> "3. When, after notice, the company fails to do the work so required of it, and the city then causes it to be done, its reasonable cost may be recovered by action against the company; and it is not essential to the liability of the company therefor, that the notice to make such improvement precede the letting of the contract by the city for the same. It is sufficient if such notice be given before the work is done, and while the company may still perform the same.
> "4. Where the company, after receiving such notice, without attempt to perform any part of the work required of it, permitted the city, without objection or complaint, to commence and complete it, adjusted the track of its railway to conform thereto, as it progressed, and with knowledge that the city expected it to pay for the same, and of all the circumstances, received all the benefits thereof as fully as if it had been performed by the company, the city may recover the reasonable cost of the work so done, although the notice does not strictly conform to the requirements of the ordinance."

In this case the city was granted the right to recover the reasonable cost of the work. The right of this recovery is based upon the franchise and not upon the right to levy a special assessment. The terms of the franchise should determine the manner of collection. If the franchise does not otherwise provide the cost of the street railway's share should be collected as an entirety at the completion of the work.

You ask further if an assessment against a street railway company can be collected if the same has been certified in installments. It does not appear how the share of the street railway was ascertained. If it was made under the provisions of Section 3812, General Code, it is illegal. I assume that the amount to be paid by the street railway company was fixed in accordance with the terms of its franchise.

Section 3892, General Code, provides:

> "When any special assessment, is made, has been confirmed by council, and bonds, notes or certificates of indebtedness of the corporation are issued in anticipation of the collection thereof, the clerk of the council, on or before the second Monday in September, each year, shall certify such assessments to the county auditor, stating the amounts and time of payment. The county auditor shall place the assessment upon the tax list in accordance therewith and the county treasurer shall collect it in the same manner as other taxes are collected, and when collected pay such assessment to the treasurer of the corporation, to be by him applied to the payment of such bonds, notes or certificates of indebtedness and interest thereon, and for no other purpose. For the purpose of enforcing such collection, the county treasurer shall have the same power and authority as allowed by law for the collection of state and county taxes."

The special assessments herein referred to are those made by virtue of Section 3812, General Code. This section does not apply to the amount to be paid by a street railway company under its franchise. The statutes do not authorize the share of the street railway company to be certified to the county auditor.

The city under the franchise would be authorized to collect directly from the street railway company. If the share of the street railway company has been certified to the county auditor it should be held a nullity and collection be made in accordance with the terms of the franchise. That determines the contractual rights of the city and of the street railway company.

Respectfully,
TIMOTHY S. HOGAN,
Attorney General.

POLICE INSPECTOR—OFFICE MAY BE ABOLISHED BY COUNCIL—INCUMBENT HAS NO RELIEF—CIVIL SERVICE.

By virtue of Section 4374, General Code, the police department of a city may be reorganized by council and by virtue of this power, a police inspector who has been promoted from policeman to the office established by council may lose his position through the abolition by council of his office.

The civil service laws have made no provision for such a contingency and a person losing his position in this manner has therefore no relief.

COLUMBUS, OHIO, August 26, 1912.

HON. HOWARD MCGREGOR, City Solicitor, Springfield, Ohio.

DEAR SIR:—Your favor of July 31, 1912, is received in which you inquire:

"The council of the city of Springfield has, by ordinance, created the position of inspector of police under authority of law, and the present incumbent of the office of inspector of police is occupying same under the civil service.

"My office has been requested by a committee of council for an opinion on whether or not the office of inspector of police can be abolished.

"I will appreciate it very much if your department will furnish me an opinion as to whether or not the office can be abolished and if so, whether or not the present incumbent ceases longer to be a member of the police department or whether or not he is simply reduced in rank."

The authority of council to organize the police department of a city is found in Section 4374, General Code, which provides:

"The police department of each city shall be composed of a chief of police and such inspectors, captains, lieutenants, sergeants, corporals, detectives, patrolmen and other police court officers, station house keepers, drivers, and substitutes, as are provided by ordinance or resolution of council."

A police department may be reorganized by council by reducing or increasing the number of members thereof, or by creating or abolishing certain positions therein.

This is sustained by the case of State vs. Searcy, 11 Cir. Ct. N. S., 521, wherein the second syllabus reads:

"Section 227 of the Municipal Code of 1902 (Revised Statutes, 1536-1005), authorizing municipal councils to fix the number of employes in the department of public safety, gives councils authority to reduce the number of its patrolmen."

The rule is stated in 28 Cyc. at page 512:

"The office of a member of the police force may be abolished by the municipality, or the membership of the police department reduced for economic reasons, and in such case an officer may be dismissed from the service without a hearing and opportunity to show cause against the order of dismissal, a resolution abolishing the office and causing the chief of police to notify the incumbent that he was discharged being effectual as a dismissal. A dismissal by reasons of reduction of the force or abolition of the office does not violate a rule than no member shall be removed except for cause, or a rule requiring presentation of charges and a hearing, nor do the veteran acts apply where an office is abolished in good faith. It has been held, however, that the power to reduce the force cannot be exercised for the purpose of creating a vacancy and the appointment of some other person, but should be made in good faith. On abolition of the office the right to salary ceases."

When a position is abolished the incumbent has no further right to that position, nor to the salary provided therefor.

The position of inspector of police has been created by ordinance of council. Council can abolish such position by amending or repealing this provision of the ordinance. When the position is abolished the right of the incumbent thereto ceases.

The position is in the classified service of the city. The inspector of police is of a higher rank than that of patrolman. The position has probably been filled by promotion in accordance with the provisions of Section 4480, General Code, which reads:

> "Applicants for admission into the classified service shall be subjected to examination which shall be competitive, public and open to residents of the city, with such limitations as to age, residence, health, habits and moral character as the commission prescribes. The commission shall prepare rules and regulations adapted to carry out these purposes with reference to the classified service of the city, which rules and regulations shall provide for the granting of offices and positions similar in character in groups and divisions so as to permit the filling of offices and positions in the higher grades as far as practicable through promotions, and for public examinations to ascertain the fitness of applicants for appointment in the classified service. Such applicants shall take rank upon the register as candidates in the order of their relative standing without reference to priority of examination. The result of the examination shall be accessible to all persons."

The statutes do not cover the situation when an office of higher rank is abolished. There is no provision of statute determining the status of the incumbent.

The provisions of the civil service law recognize the right to reduce an employe or officer to a lower rank. These provisions apply when an incumbent is reduced in rank for cause.

Section 4485, General Code, provides:

> "No officer or employe within the classified service shall be removed, reduced in rank, or discharged, except for some cause relating to his moral character or his suitableness to perform the duties of his position, though he may be suspended from duty for a period not to exceed thirty days, pending the investigation of charges against him. Such cause shall be determined by the removing authority and reported in writing, with a specific statement of reasons, to the commission, but shall not be made public without the consent of the person discharged. Before such removal, reduction, or discharge, the removing authority shall give such person a reasonable opportunity to know the charges against him and to be heard in his own behalf."

Section 4487, General Code, provides:

> "The director of public safety may suspend any of the employes of the police or fire department who are by law under his exclusive management and control, for incompetence, gross neglect of duty, gross immorality, habitual drunkenness, failure to obey orders given him by the proper authority, or for any other reasonable and just cause, and shall forthwith notify such employe of the charges against him, and, within five days thereafter, shall proceed to inquire into such charges and render his judgment thereon, which judgment, if the charge be sustained, may be > either suspension, reduction in rank or dismissal from the department, and such judgment in the matter shall be final, except as otherwise provided in this subdivision."

In each of the foreging sections the reduction in rank is for some cause, some fault of the individual who is reduced in rank. The statutes do not provide for the status of a holder of a position when the position is abolished.

In case of State vs. Searcy, 11 Cir. Ct. N. S. 521, supra, Jones, J., says at pages 522 and 523:

> "In the drafting of the municipal code while the legislature had in view the application of the merit system to possible increases of the force and to individual removals therefrom for specific causes, it did not make any provision whatever for a material reduction of the force of employes by the action of the city council."

Also on pages 524 and 525, he further says:

> "The merit system devised, was to meet the contingency of increases in the force and of individual removals for cause. Farther it does not apply. To meet the contingency that has arisen in this case, where a material reduction has been made in the police force, as is now suggested by counsel for relators by the application of the element of seniority of service, fould be to enlarge judicially the scope of the act where the legislature had failed."

The civil service law does not provide for the reduction in rank of an employe in the classified service of a city, when a position to which he has been promoted has been abolished. The council may legally abolish the position of inspector of police and the incumbent thereupon loses all right to such position. The incumbent thereof has no legal right to any other position. He occupies but one position and that has been abolished. His service with the city thereupon terminates.

This places the incumbent in an unfortunate position. He has probably been promoted because of good service or of special merit. However, this department can only construe the law as it has been enacted by the legislature. It is within the province of the legislature to make the law.

Respectfully,

TIMOTHY S. HOGAN,
Attorney General.

CITY SOLICITOR—LEGAL ADVISER OF CITY SCHOOL DISTRICT BOARDS OF EDUCATION AS TO TITLE TO REAL ESTATE—NOT OBLIGATED TO FURNISH ABSTRACT OF TITLE.

The duties of the city solicitor with respect to city school district boards of education, are set out in full in Section 4761, General Code, and as he is made the "legal adviser" of such boards, it is his duty as such to give his opinion upon the legal title to real estate in which the board is interested.

He may formulate his opinion in any reliable legal manner he desires however, and is not compelled to make his advice take the form of an abstract of title.

COLUMBUS, OHIO, October 1, 1912.

HON. D. S. LINDSEY, City Solicitor, Piqua, Ohio.

DEAR SIR:—Under favor of September 3, 1912, you request my opinion upon the question, whether it is one of the duties of the city solicitor to make and prepare abstracts of title for the board of education of the city.

The duties of the city solicitor with respect to boards of education of the city are set out in full in Section 4761 of the General Code, as follows:

> "Except in city school districts, the prosecuting attorney of the county shall be the legal adviser of all boards of education of the county in which he is serving. He shall prosecute all actions against a member or officer of a board of education for malfeasance or misfeasance in office, and he shall be the legal counsel of such boards or the officers thereof in all civil actions brought by or against them and shall conduct such actions in his official capacity. When such civil action is between two or more boards of education in the same county, the prosecuting attorney shall not be required to act for either of them. In city school districts, the city solicitor shall be the legal adviser and attorney for the board of education thereof, and shall perform the same services for such board as herein required of the prosecuting attorney for the other boards of education of the county."

Whilst the city solicitor is unquestionably obligated, as legal adviser of the city board of education, to give his opinion upon the nature and the validity of the title to any real estate in which the board possesses an interest, or which it is contemplating the purchase of, I am of the opinion that there is nothing within the provision of the above quoted statute which empowers the board to dictate or in any way fixes the manner or form in which such opinion must be rendered.

The city solicitor is free to found his advice upon any reliable legal grounds he may see fit to resort to and may formulate his expression of such opinion with the same freedom. The city solicitor may, therefore, if he so desires, render such advice in the form of an abstract of title, prepared by himself, but he is not obligated so to do.

In brief, neither the duties of the city solicitor as "legal adviser" nor as "attorney," as these terms are employed in this statute, extend to services of such nature as the preparation of abstracts of title, and as such duty is clearly not included in any of the requirements of this section, I am, therefore, of the opinion that the city solicitor is not obligated to make his advice upon the title of real estate, take the form of an abstract of title.

Yours very truly,

TIMOTHY S. HOGAN,

Attorney General.

BOARD OF EDUCATION—POWER TO BUILD FOOT BRIDGE ON RIGHT OF WAY DEEDED TO IT WITH RESERVATION OF RIGHT OF USE IN COMMON BY GRANTOR.

Under authority of Sections 4749 and 7620, General Code, boards of education may legally construct a foot bridge upon a strip of land in which a right of way for a walk has been deeded it and a condition in the deed for such right of way providing for its use by the board in common with the grantor would not invalidate the same.

COLUMBUS, OHIO, October 2, 1912.

HON. G. B. FINDLEY, City Solicitor, Elyria, Ohio.

DEAR SIR:— am in receipt of your letter of June 13th, in which you inquire as follows:

> "Can a board of education legally construct a foot bridge upon a strip of land in which a right of way for a walk has been deeded to it; said right of way to be used by the board of education in common with the grantor?"

In reply thereto I would say that Sections 4749 and 7620 of the General Code provide as follows:

> "Section 4749. The board of education of each school district, organized under the provisions of this title, shall be a body politic and corporate, and, as such, capable of suing and being sued, contracting and being contracted with, acquiring, holding, possessing and disposing of real and personal property, and taking and holding in trust for the use and benefit of such district any grant or device of land and any donation or bequest of money or other personal property and of exercising such other powers and privileges as are conferred by this title and the laws relating to the public schools of this state.
> "Section 7620. The board of education of a district may build, enlarge, repair and furnish the necessary school houses, purchase or lease sites therefor, or rights of way thereto, or purchase or lease real estate to be used as play grounds for children, or rent suitable school rooms, provide the necessary apparatus and make all other necessary provisions for the schools under its control. It also, shall provide fuel for schools, build and keep in good repair fences inclosing such school houses, when deemed desirable plant shade and ornamental trees on the school grounds, make all other provisions necessary for the convenience and prosperity of the schools within the subdistricts."

From your inquiry I gather that there is a ravine between the school building and the street; that you have a deed for the right of way from The Elyria Memorial Hospital Company, and by constructing a foot bridge over the ravine a suitable walk can be had from the school house to the street. I also take it that it was part of the consideration expressed in the deed that the school board should erect a foot bridge to complete the walk, and after its completion to be used jointly by the school board and the hospital.

Under authority of the above quoted sections the school board has the right to purchase real estate and rights of way; and it follows after the right of way is obtained that it has the right to grade and build a foot bridge and to do the several other things that may be necessary to make the right of way to the school house a safe and convenient one.

Having decided that your board of education has the right to construct a foot bridge upon the strip of land acquired from the hospital company, I do not think that a condition in the deed that the right of way is to be used by the board of education in common with the grantor, as part of the consideration or otherwise, is illegal. I concur with your opinion in that respect. In any event, even if it were technically illegal to have this right of way used jointly, under the circumstances related in your letter, where the school board is in need of a suitable passage to the street, and can obtain the same by permitting the joint use of the right of way by some other party, they shoud take advantage of the opportunity to secure the right of way and erect a suitable foot bridge thereon and allow it to be used by the grantor.

Very truly yours,
TIMOTHY S. HOGAN,
Attorney General.

PRESIDENT PRO TEM. OF COUNCIL NOT ALLOWED COMPENSATION FOR SERVICES DURING TEMPORARY ABSENCE OF PRESIDENT WHEN ORDINANCE DOES NOT SO PROVIDE.

When a service for the benefit of the public is required by law and no provision for its payment is made, it must be regarded as gratuitous and there can be no claim for compensation where ordinance does not so provide, therefore, the president pro tem. of council cannot be allowed for his services during the temporary absence of the president of council.

COLUMBUS, OHIO, September 30, 1912.

HON. MARSHALL G. FENTON, City Solicitor, Chillicothe, Ohio.

DEAR SIR:—Your letter of August 15th received. You inquire, can the president pro tem. of the city council draw the salary of the president of council during the latter's absence on leave from the city council? You state that the ordinance of the city does not provide for any salary for the president pro tem. of council while acting as president of council, and that you are of opinion, for that reason, that the services of the president pro tem. of council must be regarded as gratuitous, and that no claim for compensation can be enforced.

I agree with you in your conclusion, as it has been expressly held in our supreme court in the case of Anderson vs. Commissioners, 25 O. S. 13, that when a service for the benefit of the public is required by law, and no provision for its payment is made it must be regarded as gratuitous and no claim for compensation can be enforced.

In the case you present I infer that the president of council was granted a leave of absence for only a short period and during that time the president pro tem. of council acted as president of council, and during the absence of the president of council the president drew the salary provided by law. In that event there would be no authority to allow the president pro tem. of council for the services performed by him during the absence of the president of council.

Yours very truly,

TIMOTHY S. HOGAN,
Attorney General.

BOARD OF EDUCATION—FUNDING INDEBTEDNESS—MAY ISSUE NOTES TO PAY TEACHERS FOR SERVICES PERFORMED WHEN TAXATION LIMITATION PREVENTS PAYMENT.

Under Section 5656, General Code, the board of education is disjunctively authorized to issue bonds or "borrow money" for the purpose of funding valid existing and binding indebtedness under the limitations prescribed in Sections 5656 to 5658, General Code.

When teachers' services have been performed therefore, the board may issue notes to pay the same when it is unable to meet the same by reason of limits of taxation.

COLUMBUS, OHIO, October 2, 1912.

HON. H. STANLEY MCCALL, City Solicitor, Portsmouth, Ohio.

DEAR SIR:—Under date of September 12th you state that the working out of the Smith one per cent. law has played havoc with your school funds and you are asking a little information as to the authority of the board of education to borrow money. You further state:

> "The board of education finds out that the money that it received for its tuition fund in the August settlement of taxes will not be sufficient to pay the current expenses therefrom until it receives its next advance draw and settlement of the December taxes. The question then presents itself, as to how the board will be able to pay the salaries of the teachers during this period."

Section 5656, General Code, provides in part as follows:

> "* * * the board of education of a school district * * * for the purpose of extending the time of payment of any indebtedness which from its limits of taxation such * * * district * * * is unable to pay at maturity, may borrow money or issue the bond thereof * * * so as to change, but not increase the indebtedness in the amounts, for the length of time and at the rate of interest that said * * * board * * * deem proper, not to exceed the rate of six per cent per annum, payable annually or semi-annually."

Section 5657, General Code, provides in part:

> "When it appears to the * * * board of education of a school district * * * to be for the best interest of such * * * school district * * * to renew, refund or extend the time of payment of any bonded indebtedness which has not matured and thereby reduce the rate of interest thereon, they may issue, for that purpose, new bonds, and exchange the bonds with the holder or holders of such outstanding bonds if such holder or holders consent to make such exchange and to such reduction of interest."

Section 5658, General Code, provides in part:

"No indebtedness of a * * * school district * * * shall be funded, refunded or extended unless such indebtedness is first determined to be an existing, valid and binding obligation of such * * * school district * * * by a formal resolution of * * * * * * the board of education * * thereof. * * *. Such resolution shall state the amount of the existing indebtedness to be funded, refunded or extended, the aggregate amount of bonds to be issued therefor, their number and denomination, the date of their maturity, the rate of interest they shall bear and the place of payment of principal and interest."

Section 5656, General Code, supra, authorizes the board of education, for the purposes therein mentioned, to borrow money or issue the bonds thereof using the term in the disjunctive—"borrow money or issue the bonds thereof."

I am of the opinion that a board of education under such provision and such other limitations of such act has the authority to borrow money on notes as well as to issue bonds of school districts and thus fund the indebtedness in that way.

It must first, however, be determined under Section 5658, General Code, by a resolution of the board of education that the indebtedness is an existing, valid and binding obligation on the school district. In order that the teachers' salaries shall become an existing, valid and binding obligation on the board of education it is necessary that the services be first performed. Having been so performed, I am of the opinion that in order to pay the teacher for such service so performed the board of education is authorized under the provisions of Sections 5656, General Code, et seq., to borrow money in order to pay said salary.

Very truly yours,

TIMOTHY S. HOGAN,

Attorney General.

WHARFAGE—MUNICIPAL CORPORATIONS—ORDINANCE MAY NOT BE AMENDED BY MOTION—RENT CHARGE—PROPRIETARY CAPACITY OF CITY AS OPPOSED TO GOVERNMENTAL CAPACITY—CHARGE FOR STEAMBOATS AND VESSELS LANDING AT PRIVATE WHARFBOAT ATTACHED TO WHARF—CLASSIFICATION OF CHARGES—QUESTION OF REASONABLENESS AS DEFENSE AND BY INJUNCTION—STATUTE OF LIMITATION—SET OFF FOR DESK RENT OF WHARF MASTER NOT ALLOWED WHEN NOT AUTHORIZED—WHARF MASTER MAY NOT RECEIVE AS COMPENSATION A PER CENT. OF CHARGES RECOVERED BY CITY.

Under Section 4226, General Code, an ordinance cannot be amended unless the new ordinance contains the entire ordinance amended. An attempt by mere motion, therefore, to reduce a wharfage fee which has been fixed by ordinance is of no effect, and the city is entitled to the same wharfage fee after the motion as was fixed by the ordinance. If only the reduced fee has been paid, the city may recover the difference.

A city builds and charges for wharfage in its proprietary, not its governmental capacity. The charge is therefore a rent charge and not an exercise of police power.

A vessel which lands at a wharfboat which is owned by a company and remains attached to the wharf is such a user of the wharf as to be chargeable for wharfage.

Different rates may be charged different classes of boats, providing the classification is reasonable and such classification may be based upon the number of times the vessel uses the wharf.

The question of reasonableness of the charges may be raised by the persons charged, by injunction to restrain the denial of the use of the wharf when the excessive charge is unpaid. Such unreasonableness may also be employed as a defense when suit is brought to collect the charge. The unreasonableness must be clear, however, before the court will interfere with the discretion of council.

The six-year limitation provided in Section 11222, General Code, applies to a claim for wharfage. When payments have been made within that time, however, upon the general amount, the entire account is revived from the date of last payment as provided by Section 11223, General Code, and if the accounts are against one owner in behalf of several vessels, payments on general account, without specifying any particular vessel, will revive the general account for all.

When a wharf master's compensation is fixed at 25 per cent. of the amounts collected, he cannot receive pay for amounts recovered by suit on the part of the city, which he has neglected to collect.

When, without any authorization on behalf of the city such wharf master maintains his desk on a wharfboat owned by a private company, he is deemed to be so placed by private management and such company cannot claim a set off for desk rental against a claim for wharfage charges by the city.

COLUMBUS, OHIO, October 15, 1912.

HON. A. J. LAYNE, City Solicitor, Ironton, Ohio.

DEAR SIR:—Under date of June 27, 1912, you submit to this department for answer, several questions pertaining to the findings of the bureau of inspection and supervision of public offices against the owners of a certain wharfboat and a certain steamboat for failure to pay wharfage as provided by ordinance of the city of Ironton for the use of a wharf established by said city. These findings are found at pages 62 to 84 of the report of said bureau of the examination of the offices of said city of Ironton for the period from May, 1909, to January, 1911. The facts are given in said report and you submit the following questions:

> First. Is the fee fixed by the ordinance passed in 1869 or the motion passed in 1879 to control?
> "It is to be noted that the motion passed in 1879 refers to a particular wharfboat which wharfboat is now in possession of The Ironton Wharfboat Company, against whom the claim for arrearages is made, and such boat was the only wharfboat attached to such public landing or wharf.
>
> "Second. Is the fee fixed by the ordinance for wharfage a license or a rent charge? Does the same come under the police power of the municipality or is it in the exercise of a proprietary right of the municipality?
>
> "Third. Can a charge be properly made under the ordinance fixing the fee therefor for the landing of steamboats and other craft at the wharfboat so owned by The Ironton Wharfboat Company?"
> "Fourth. It is to be noted at page 69 of said report that there are different charges made for different craft landing at such wharf, such difference in charge being based principally upon the points between which the boats ply. Does this difference or discrimination in such charges render the ordinance invalid?
>
> "Fifth. Can the question of the reasonableness of the charge be raised by the party against whom the charge is made?
> "Sixth. What is the statute of limitations governing the arrearages?
>
> "Seventh. The wharf master has a desk on the dock of the wharfboat company by special arrangement and makes his collections from such place. Can the wharfboat company claim a set off against the city for such use of its wharfboat by the wharf master?
> "Eighth. By the ordinance the wharf master gets 25 per cent. of the collections of wharfage as his compensation. If the city brings suit for recovery of the arrearages and secures payment thereof will he be entitled to his percentage of the amount so collected?"

It appears from the report that an ordinance was passed in 1869, fixing the charge for a wharfboat using the wharf of the city at $1.00 per day. At a meeting of council held in February, 1879, a motion was made in council and carried reducing the charge in words as follows:

> "Mr. Goldcamp made the following motion, which was carried: I move that G. W. Bradford's wharfboat be reduced from one dollar to seventy-five cents per day."

The wharfboat herein referred to is the only wharfboat that has used said wharf and is the same wharfboat against which the findings have been made for arrearages.

Section 4226, General Code, provides the manner in which an ordinance made be amended. Said section reads:

> "No ordinance, resolution or by-law shall contain more than one subject, which shall be clearly expressed in its title. No by-law or ordinance, or section thereof, shall be revived or amended, unless the new by-law or ordinance contains the entire by-law or ordinance, or section revived or amended, and the by-law or ordinance, section or sections so amended shall be repealed. Each such by-law, resolution and ordinance shall be adopted or passed by a separate vote of the council and the yeas and nays shall be entered upon the journal."

The rule for an amendment of an ordinance is stated in 28th Cyc. at pages 380 and 381:

> "In general power to amend a by-law or ordinance is to be exercised in the same mode as power to enact. * * * However, an ordinance cannot be amended by mere resolution or motion, but only by another ordinance enacted with like formality as the original ordinance, especially where it does not contain "the entire ordinance or section revised or amended."

The rate to be charged against a wharfboat was established by ordinance of council. The action of council purporting to reduce the charge does not attempt to amend the ordinance, but is an effort to reduce the charge by motion. This motion has not the dignity of a resolution much less that of an ordinance.

The motion does not amend the ordinance and cannot be urged as a reduction of the charge for wharfage.

It is apparent from the report that the charge for a wharfboat has been reduced to seventy-five cents. In the ordinance passed June 27, 1905, as shown on page 69 of the report it is provided:

> "Provided further, that any individual, corporation or company owning or operating a wharfboat at said landing shall pay the sum of seventy-five cents per day for each and every day, payable monthly in advance."

The fee is here fixed at seventy-five cents per day. This appears to be the first time the charge was regularly reduced to seventy-five cents per day for a wharfboat. The findings against the wharfboat cover the period from June 1, 1899, to January 31, 1911.

The ordinance of 1869 fixing the charge at one dollar per day governs until it was regularly amended by ordinance of council. This was done by ordinance in June, 1905. The rate of $1.00 per day should be recovered until the ordinance of 1905 became effective, then the rate to be recovered is seventy-five cents per day.

Your second inquiry is as to the nature of the change for wharfage.

Wharfage is defined at page 894 of 40th volume of Cyc. as follows:

> "In its most general legal sense, wharfage is the use of a wharf furnished in the ordinary course of navigation. In this sense the term is usually applied to the use of a wharf by a vessel for the loading and unloading of goods or passengers. But it also may clearly include the use of a wharf while lying alongside for protection. In its limited sense wharfage is a charge or rent for the use of a wharf; the compensation paid for loading goods on a wharf or shipping them off."

Farnham on Water Rights says at page 579:

"But the right to construct wharves is not held by the municipal corporation in its public or governmental capacity. The erection and maintenance of such structures are merely a business enterprise in regard to which the municipality acts in its private capacity; and there is no good reason why the city should not make contracts with regard to them, the same as it does with regard to other property held in the same capacity."

The charge made by the owner of a wharf is for the use of the wharf by the vessel. The fee charged for such use is not a license; it is in the nature of a rent charge. A municipality in building and maintaining a wharf acts in its proprietary capacity and not in its governmental capacity. The right to charge wharfage by a city which owns the wharf does not come within the police power of such city.

Your third inquiry involves the right of the city to charge a vessel for the use of the wharf, when such vessel is in fact moored to a wharfboat, which wharfboat is attached to the wharf and is charged wharfage by the city.

The wharfboat remains at the wharf continuously. In order to use the wharf for the loading and unloading of passengers and freight it is also necessary to use the wharfboat. The wharfboat cannot be used without the wharf. The wharf is maintained and owned by the city and the wharfboat by a private company. They are both essential for the proper use of the wharfage facilities. One is not complete without the other.

The ordinance which fixes the charge for wharfage for the landing of vessels at the wharf, also fixes the charge to be made against the wharfboat. The ordinance does not purport to give the exclusive use of the wharf to the wharfboat, nor does it grant the owner of the wharfboat the exclusive right to charge wharfage. There is no attempt to farm out or lease the wharf to the owner of the wharfboat. On the contrary the charge against the wharfboat is made for its use of the wharf, and the city in effect, if not specifically, reserves the right to charge other vessels for their use of the wharf.

At pages 580 and 581 of Farnham on Water Rights, it is said:

"The mere fact that a vessel which actually receives support from a pier is fastened to the further side of vessels which are themselves attached to the pier does not deprive the pier owner of his wharfage. But the owner of a wharf or pier is not entitled to collect wharfage from a vessel which is within the slip unless it makes use of his wharf. So, the owner of a wharf, within whose dock the vessel floats in discharging her cargo is entitled to the wharfage, although she may be moored to another wharf."

On page 575 of his work, Farnham further says:

"In the absence of statutory or other rules governing the matter of wharfage, the liability for it attaches whenever a vessel makes use of a wharf to aid in discharging her cargo or in getting into her berth at another wharf, whether she intends to discharge her cargo at the wharf the aid of which she has received or not. If a vessel in discharging her cargo makes use of two adjoining wharves, or of a pier and the adjoining bulkhead, she must pay the regular rates of wharfage to each."

Also on page 576, he says:

"If in bringing goods discharged upon the wharf to land it is necessary to transport them over a wharf the owner of the latter is entitled to wharfage for the use made of his property."

A vessel which uses the wharfboat must also use the wharf in getting its cargo to the shore. In order to load and unload its passengers and freight the boat must use both the wharf and the wharfboat and it is liable to the owners of each for the use thereof.

It appears that the vessel which is in arrearage for wharfage is owned by the same persons as own the wharfboat. This fact will not prevent the city from charging said vessel for wharfage.

On page 574 of Farnham on Water Rights, it is said:

"The fact that the dock is owned by the charterer of the vessel does not absolve the vessel from liability."

In Mueller vs. Spreckles, 48 Fed. 574, the syllabus reads:

"Where a vessel to make the delivery required by the terms of the charter, is compelled to enter, and for this purpose enters the dock of the charterer, she is liable to him for the ordinary charges for such accommodation."

The city may, therefore, charge a vessel for wharfage even though such vessel must also pay for the use of the wharfboat. The fact that a vessel and the wharfboat are owned by the same person or company does not change the liability.

Your fourth inquiry is as to the manner of making the differences in the rates charged.

The provision of the codified ordinances of the city of Ironton fixing the fees to be charged for wharfage is set forth at page 62 of the report and provides:

"Each steamboat $2.00 per day and $1.00 for each subsequent day remaining at the landing; regular packets plying between Cincinnati and Pomeroy, Cincinnati and Pittsburgh, Cincinnati and Charleston and those running from Ironton up the Big Sandy, $1.00 each per landing; regular packets making daily round trip between Portsmouth and Proctorville, each the sum of $15.00 per month paid semi-annually in advance. Ferry operating between the city of Ironton and Russell, Kentucky, $360.00 per annum, payable monthly, in advance. Any individual, corporation or company operating a wharfboat at said landing the sum of 75c per day for each and every day; each propeller, barge, keel-boat, canal-boat, scow, raft, store-boat, house-boat or shanty-boat, 50c per day and 25c for every subsequent day such craft may remain at the landing."

This ordinance fixes a rate for each steamboat landing at the wharf. It then provides a less charge for regular packets plying between certain points. The steamboats do not evidently make regular landings. They use the wharf but a few times in a month or year. All steamboats coming within this class must pay the same charge. The charge is $1.00 for each landing of regular packets plying between certain points. A charge of $15.00 per month is made for packets making a daily round trip between certain points. A different charge is made for ferry boats.

While the ordinance designates the routes of the boats as the basis of its classification of charges, such classification is in fact based upon the frequency of the use of the wharf by the vessel. Steamboats make no regular stops; certain boats making daily round trips; other boats, evidently do not make daily round trips; ferry boats make landings several times a day. The basis of the classification is in fact the number of times the wharf is used by the vessel.

All vessels coming within a certain class are charged the same rate of wharfage. A grading of charges in accordance with the number of times the wharf is used in a given period is a reasonable and proper method of fixing the charges. This is in effect what council has done. It has divided the vessels in classes based upon the points between which the boats ply. This classification may be based upon the frequency of the use of the wharf and also upon the size of the different boats.

This is a reasonable classification and there is no discrimination apparent from the provisions of the ordinance.

Your next inquiry is as to the right to raise the question of the reasonableness of the charge.

At page 582 of Farnham on Water Rights, the rule is stated:

> "Wharfage must always be reasonable, and is subject to public regulation, which should be done by the legislature or officers to whom the authority is delegated. The court will not undertake to fix a limit to the amount which a municipal corporation may charge for wharves maintained by it; although it may declare whether or not rates which have been fixed are reasonable when the question is properly brought before it. Where the schedule rate is higher than the customary rate, the court will not enforce it where it appears to be excessive."

In some of the cases cited the question of the reasonableness of the charge was raised as a defense. In others the action was for an injunction seeking to restrain the collection of the excessive charges.

In De Bary Baya Merchants' Line vs. Jacksonville T. & W. Ry. Co., 40 Fed. 392, it is held:

> "A bill seeking injunction against extortionate charges must allege that complainant has no other means of carrying on his business than those wherein he is so overcharged.
>
> "A bill alleging discrimination in charges must aver that there are some parties who are charged less than complainant.
>
> "A reasonable compensation can be charged by the owner of a public or private wharf for its use by other parties."

In the case of The First Municipality vs. Pease, 2 La. Ann. 538, it is held:

"Where a municipal corporation is authorized to impose a wharfage charge, as a compensation for keeping the wharves in a proper condition for the safe and expeditious shipping and landing of merchandise, a court will not undertake to fix any limit to the amount which the municipal authorities may exact for that purpose. The question of the extent to which this right may be exercised, is purely administrative."

In Leathers vs. Aiken, 9 Fed. 679, it is held:

"A municipal corporation, owning improved wharves and other artificial means, which it maintains at its own cost, for the benefit of those engaged in commerce upon the public navigable waters of the United States, may charge and collect, from parties using its wharves, such reasonable fee as will fairly remunerate it for the use of its property."

On page 909 of the 40th volume of Cyc. the rule is stated to be:

"Where wharfage charges are excessive, the proper remedy seems to be to commence an action at law to determine the excess, and, the excess being thus established, to seek an injunction from a court of equity to restrain the collection of such excess. So in a case where no wharfage can be legally demanded, an injunction will issue to prevent the collection thereof."

The proper remedy to determine the reasonableness of a charge for wharfage is by injunction to restrain the collection of the excessive charge. This is not, however, the only remedy. Wharfage is usually collected in advance and if not paid the boat is denied the use of the wharf. In such case injunction is the proper remedy.

In the present case the wharfage was not collected in advance, in fact, has not been collected at all. The city will doubtless be required to enter suit for the wharfage. As the charge for wharfage must be reasonable, the city can only collect a reasonable amount. A reasonable amount would be a sum sufficient to fairly remunerate it for constructing and maintaining the wharf. It would be a proper defense to such action that the charge was excessive. This defense would apply to only so much of the amount claimed as was proven excessive.

Where the city has fixed the charge by ordinance, the courts will not alter such charges unless they are clearly excessive. The fixing of the charge is a matter for the council in the first instance to determine, and unless such charges are clearly excessive they will be sustained.

Your next inquiry is as to the statutes of limitations.

The charge for wharfage, as has been seen, is not a license or penalty, but is a rent charge for the use of the wharf.

The six-year limitation as provided in Section 11222, General Code, applies to a claim for wharfage. Said Section 11222, General Code, reads:

"An action upon a contract not in writing, express or implied, or upon a liability created by statute other than a forfeiture or penalty, shall be brought within six years after the cause thereof accrued."

Section 11223, General Code, should also be taken into consideration in this case. Said section provides:

> "If payment has been made upon any demand founded on a contract, or a written acknowledgment thereof, or a promise to pay it has been made and signed by the party to be charged, an action may be brought thereon within the time herein limited, after such payment, acknowledgment or promise."

No payments appear to have been made on account of the wharfboat within the six-year period. Payments have been made within that time on account of wharfage for the steamer "Greyhound." It does not appear that these several payments were made for particular months or half months. In most cases the amount paid was for a half month. This is not the case, however, with all the payments. These payments, unless all the vouchers show otherwise, should be credited generally on the account for wharfage. This will bring the entire finding against the steamship "Greyhound" within the statute of limitations.

It is alleged that the wharfboat and the steamship "Greyhound" are owned by the same person or company, although the report shows one to be owned by The Ironton Wharfboat Company and the other by William Bay.

If they are in fact owned by the same person or company the two accounts should be merged, so as to bring the entire amount within the period of the statute of limitations. This cannot be done, however, if the payments made within the six-year period were made on behalf of the wharfage of the steamship "Greyhound."

We next come to the compensation of the wharfmaster.

Section 2 of the ordinance as shown on page 66 of the report, prescribes his duties as follows:

> "The wharfmaster shall have charge of the public landings, the mooring of boats thereto and the collection of wharfage, and for his services shall receive such compensation as the council may determine by resolution.
> "It shall be his duty to cause boats, rafts and crafts to land and moor in such manner as he may deem will best promote the general convenience; he may require any boat, raft or craft to change its position, he may require any skiff, canoe, or incumbrance of any kind to be removed to make room for craft subject to wharfage; he shall take care of and keep all racks, gangways and appurtenances in a situation to accommodate boats and the public; and to preserve good order at the public landings, he may upon view and without warrant arrest and bring before the mayor any persons guilty of disorderly conduct or offending against any provision of this ordinance."

The resolution fixing the compensation of the wharfmaster is not given. He is, however, allowed twenty-five per cent. of the amount of wharfage collected. He has other duties to perform besides the collection of the wharfage. His compensation so paid is to cover all his services as wharfmaster. He has failed to perform his duties in respect to the collections from the wharfboat and from the "Greyhound." By reason of his negligence the city will likely lose a large part of the arrearages. The city is further required to go to additional expense in collecting the same. The wharfmaster has failed to perform his duties as wharfmaster and by reason thereof the city has suffered financial loss. He cannot recover for services which he has not performed. He is an employe of the city, and his compensation is based upon the performance of services.

If the city should recover by suit, or otherwise, the money which is in arrearage through the neglect of the wharfmaster, such wharfmaster could not collect from the city a percentage of the amount so collected.

It appears that the wharfmaster has his desk upon the wharfboat, from which he made his collections. It does not appear how or with whom this arrangement was made. The wharfage is due to the city of Ironton, and in order for the wharfboat company to secure a set-off or counter claim on account of the use of the wharfboat by the wharfmaster, it must appear that such arrangement was made by and on behalf of the city. The city would not be liable for such arrangement made by the wharfmaster, unless he was fully authorized to bind the city therefor. Unless the city has authorized this special arrangement, it must be considered a private arrangement between the wharfmaster and the owner of the wharfboat, and the city would not be liable for such use of the wharfboat.

Respectfully,
TIMOTHY S. HOGAN,
Attorney General.

CIVIL SERVICE COMMISSION—EMPLOYES IN MUNICIPAL DEPARTMENTS SUSPENDED AND REMOVED BY EXECUTIVE HEADS—COMMISSION MAY NOT ADOPT RULE GOVERNING LAY OFF AND REINSTATING OF EMPLOYES.

The power of removal and suspension of employes in municipal departments is still vested in the executive heads thereof, subject to the right of appeal by the employe to the civil service commission.

The right to lay off employes in dull season, and to reappoint them, is therefore vested in the said executive heads and the civil service commission is without authority to adopt a rule governing the method of suspending and reinstating in such cases.

COLUMBUS, OHIO, September 26, 1912.

HON. E. K. WILCOX, City Solicitor, Cleveland, Ohio.

DEAR SIR:—In your favor of September 12, 1912, through your assistant, J. P. Mooney, you inquire as follows:

> "I am enclosing herewith a copy of an opinion upon which I would like to have you pass.
>
> "The question is, has the Paine law given, either by express grant or by implication, to the civil service commission, the power to state how employes whose duties are intermittent, and who are subject to layoff during the winter months, shall be reinstated. Section 2 of Rule 12, over which the controversy has arisen, reads as follows:
> "'In refilling the vacancies caused by layoffs, as provided in the preceding paragraph (which has reference to layoffs during the winter months) the employes so laid off shall be reinstated in the inverse order in which they were laid off the employe last laid off to be the first reinstated to the position formerly held by him.'"

There are two provisions in the civil service law which authorize the civil service commission to make rules and regulations.

Section 4480, General Code, provides:

> "Applicants for admission into the classified service shall be subjected to examination which shall be competitive, public and open to residents of the city, with such limitations as to age, residence, health, habits and moral character as the commission prescribes. The commission shall prepare rules and regulations adapted to carry out these purposes with reference to the classified service of the city, which rules and regulations shall provide for the grading of offices and positions similar in character in groups and divisions so as to permit the filling of offices and positions in the higher grades as far as practicable through promotions, and for public examinations to ascertain the fitness of applicants for appointment in the classified service. Such applicants shall take rank upon the register as candidates in the order of their relative standing without reference to priority of examination. The result of the examination shall be accessible to all persons."

By virtue of this section the civil service commission is authorized to make rules and regulations in reference to the examinations of applicants, and to provide for the grading of offices so that they may be filled by promotion as far as practicable. This provision of the statute will not authorize the civil service commission to adopt a rule, such as you submit, for the reinstatement, or rather the re-employment, of a member of the classified service.

Section 4486, General Code, provides:

> "The commission shall make such other rules and regulations as are not inconsistent with this chapter for the promotion and betterment of the service. The council shall provide for the salaries, if any, of the commission, for such clerical force, examiners, necessary expenses and accommodations as may be necessary for the work of the commission."

This section gives the civil service commission general power to make rules and regulations for the promotion and betterment of the service.

Before construing this provision it will be necessary to examine and ascertain the powers and duties of the executive officers of the city. These officers are given the power of appointment and removal of officers and employes under their charge, subject to the limitations provided by statute.

Section 4246, General Code, provides:

> "The executive power and authority of cities shall be vested in a mayor, president of council, auditor, treasurer, solicitor, director of public service, director of public safety, and such other officers and departments as are provided by this title."

Section 4247, General Code, provides:

> "Subject to the limitations prescribed in this subdivision such executive officers shall have exclusive right to appoint all officers, clerks and employes in their respective departments or offices, and likewise, subject to the limitations herein prescribed, shall have sole power to remove or suspend any of such officers, clerks or employes."

The civil service act prescribes certain limitations upon the power to appoint and to remove. Section 4480, General Code, supra, provides how examinations shall be made. Appointments shall be made in accordance with the provisions of Section 4481, General Code. The officers now in question have been appointed.

Section 4484, General Code, provides:

> "Nothing herein shall prevent the dismissal or discharge of any appointee by the removing board or officer, except that the chiefs and members of the police and fire departments and of the sanitary police shall be dismissed only as provided by law and the appeal therefrom shall be made to the civil service commission under such rules as the commission may adopt."

This section authorizes the civil service commission to make rules governing appeals by employes concerning their discharge or removal.

Section 4485, General Code, provides:

> "No officer or employe within the classified service shall be removed, reduced in rank, or discharged, except for some cause relating to his moral character or his suitableness to perform the duties of his position, though he may be suspended from duty for a period not to exceed thirty days, pending the investigation of charges against him. Such cause shall be determined by the removing authority and reported in writing, with a specific statement of reasons, to the commission, but shall not be made public without the consent of the person discharged. Before such removal, reduction, or discharge, the removing authority shall give such person a reasonable opportunity to know the charges against him and to be heard in his own behalf."

Section 4487, General Code, provides:

> "The director of public safety may suspend any of the employes of the police or fire department who are by law under his exclusive management and control, for incompetence, gross neglect of duty, gross immorality, habitual drunkenness, failure to obey orders given him by the proper authority, or for any other reasonable and just cause, and shall forthwith notify such employe of the charges against him, and, within five days thereafter, shall proceed to inquire into such charges and render his judgment thereon, which judgment, if the charge be sustained, may be either suspension, reduction in rank or dismissal from the department, and such judgment in the matter shall be final, except as otherwise provided in this subdivision."

From the foregoing sections it is seen that the power of removal and suspension is still vested in the executive officer, subject to the right of the employe to appeal to the civil service commission.

The director of public service has authority to determine the number of employes in his department by virtue of Section 4327, General Code, which provides:

> "The director of public service may establish such subdepartment as may be necessary and determine the number of superintendents, deputies, inspectors, engineers, harbor masters, clerks, laborers and other persons, necessary for the execution of the work and the performance of the duties of this department."

Section 4324, General Code, provides:

> "The director of public service shall manage and supervise all public works and undertakings of the city, except as otherwise provided by law, and shall have all powers and perform all duties conferred upon him by law. He shall keep a record of his proceedings, a copy of which, certified by him, shall be competent evidence in all courts."

Section 4368, General Code, provides:

> "Under the direction of the mayor, the director of public safety shall be the executive head of the police and fire departments. He shall be the chief administrative authority of the charity, correction and building departments. He shall have all powers and duties connected with and incident to the appointment, regulation and government of these departments except as otherwise provided by law. He shall keep a record of his proceedings, a copy of which certified by him shall be competent evidence in all courts."

The civil service commission is not given any power to appoint or to remove an officer or employe in the service of the city. It has the power to hold examinations of applicants and to certify names for appointment in the classified service to the appointive officer or board. It has the right to hear appeals from the order of the appointive board or officer suspending or removing an employe or officer in the classified service.

The management and control of the departments, including the officers and employes therein, are given to the respective heads of the departments. The director of public service has control of the employes in his department and the same is true of the director of public safety as to his department.

By the rule which you submit the civil service commission has endeavored to determine, in effect, what employes shall be employed by the executive heads. To this extent, at least, it has sought to limit the management of the departments by their respective heads. This authority has not been granted to the civil service commission.

When the work is not sufficient to keep all the officers and appointees of a department employed, the head of such department can determine who shall be laid off. When the work increases, he likewise can determine who shall be put to work. This is a part of the management of the department and is under his control.

In conclusion, the civil service commission is not authorized to adopt the rule which you submit. Such rule should be held null and void.

Respectfully,

TIMOTHY S. HOGAN,

Attorney General.

BIDS—STATEMENT OF NAME OF PARTY INTERESTED, UNDER CORPORATE CAPACITY, VALID.

A statement of the corporate name under which an individual is accustomed to do business is a compliance with Section 7623, General Code, requiring each bid to contain the name of every person interested therein.

COLUMBUS, OHIO, October 17, 1912.

HON. BEN L. BENNETT, City Solicitor, East Liverpool, Ohio.

DEAR SIR:—Under favor of October 8th, you present the following question:

> "Under Section 7623 of the Code, paragraph 4, it says: 'Each bid must contain the name of every person interested therein, * *'
>
> "In opening the contracts for construction of a school house here yesterday, the lowest bidder, Winland Brothers, state that the Claude Nease Lumber Company were the only persons interested in the contract. The Claude Nease Lumber Company is composed of no one but Mr. Nease. Do you understand the law to mean that the bid must recite who employs the Winland Bros., or do you think that the Claude Nease Lumber Company is sufficient to comply with this section?"

> "A copy of the portion of the bid in question is as follows:
> "As called for in the advertisement the following is a list of and the names of every person interested in the erection and completion of this work.
> (Signed) "CLAUDE NEASE LUMBER COMPANY."

The right of an individual to do business under a corporate name, in the absence of contrary provisions of statute, is well established.

In the case presented, the name of Claude Nease appears as he is accustomed to present it when acting in a business capacity. The object of the statute is to have a disclosure of all proper persons interested in the bid. Inasmuch as the name of the person appearing in a business capacity, does not operate in any way to lessen the responsibility of the individual, and as there is in fact a disclosure of this case of all persons interested, I am of the opinion, that the bid is not defective and that the board of education may award the contract to Winland Brothers, providing all other provisions of the statute have been complied with.

Very truly yours,

TIMOTHY S. HOGAN,

Attorney General.

PRESIDENT OF COUNCIL MAY CAST DECIDING VOTE IN CASE OF A TIE IN ELECTION TO FILL VACANCY IN COUNCIL.

Under Section 4272, General Code, the president of council of a city is given the right to cast a vote in case of a tie and as this right is in nowise limited with respect to a vote to fill a vacancy in council, he may cast the deciding vote in case of a tie in such instance.

COLUMBUS, OHIO, October 21, 1912.

HON. A. W. OVERMEYER, City Solicitor, Fremont, Ohio.

DEAR SIR:—We have your favor of October 18, 1912, wherein you state:

> "Council of the city of Fremont consists of seven members; one of said members has resigned and the other six in attempting to fill the vacancy are deadlocked, one hundred ballots having been cast thereon. Can the president of council cast the deciding vote in the matter?"

Section 4236 of the General Code, provides as follows:

> "When the office of councilman becomes vacant, the vacancy shall be filled by election by council for the unexpired term. If council fail within thirty days to fill such vacancy, the mayor shall fill it by appointment."

Section 4272 of the General Code provides:

> "The president of council shall be elected for a term of two years. * * * He shall be an elector of the corporation, and shall preside at all regular and special meetings of council, but shall have no vote therein except in case of a tie."

The functions of the president of council, under Section 4272, of the General Code, are of an executive or administrative character, and whatever power he exercises in a legislative capacity of the municipal government is not to be implied, but must find its authority in some positive statute.

His powers are expressly stated to be "to preside at all regular and special meetings of council and to give a casting vote in case of a tie." He is only a member sub modo and to the extent of the powers especially committed to him. I find no restriction in the law applicable to the filling of vacancies in council, and if in voting, a tie arises, the president of council may give the casting vote, for an instance is then presented where he may exercise his power to do so, and thus determine the question before council.

Upon some matters the law has required a vote of two-thirds of the whole membership elected to council, for instance, in order to pass an ordinance over the mayor's veto, Section 4234 provides that two-thirds of the whole number elected to council must concur. And for the passage of an ordinance, Section 4224 of the General Code requires a majority of those elected to council.

If the legislature had not intended him to have the right to vote where a tie arises in an election to fill a vacancy in council, the purpose of the legislature would have been easily expressed by similar language, requiring for an election to fill a vacancy a majority of the whole number of councilmen elected.

There are no decisions in Ohio on this question, but in the case of Frost vs. Pacific Savings Company, 42 Oreg. 41, under a law similar to ours giving the mayor a right to vote in case of a tie (there being a vacancy in the office of the city recorder and the vote on filling the vacancy stood four to four, and the mayor cast the deciding vote), it was held that the mayor had a right to vote on the nomination of such officers where the vote of council was evenly divided, and the court said:

> "Under city charters giving the mayor the right to vote in the case of a tie, and providing he shall appoint to office by and with the consent of council, it is uniformly held, as far as we are advised, he is authorized to give the casting vote upon the confirmation of the nominee when the council is evenly divided, and the same reasoning and principles apply in the case at bar. If the legislature had intended to deny the mayor a right to vote upon the appointment to an office in the case of a tie, it could easily have required such appointment could be made by a majority vote of council, but there being nothing in the act indicative of such intention, his right to vote remains the same in this as in other matters coming before the council for consideration."

Therefore, I am of the opinion that the president of your council can cast the deciding vote in the election to fill the vacancy in your city council.

Very truly yours,
TIMOTHY S. HOGAN,
Attorney General.

INITIATIVE AND REFERENDUM—ORDINANCE INCREASING PAY OF CHIEF OF POLICE CANNOT TAKE EFFECT UNTIL SIXTY DAYS AFTER PASSAGE.

Under Section 4227-2, General Code, an ordinance passed on August 19, 1912, providing for an increase of five dollars per month in the salary of the chief of police to take effect from the first day of August 1912, will be suspended sixty days; and such increase of pay will not take effect until October 19.

COLUMBUS, OHIO, October 24, 1912.

HON. JOSEPH O. FRITZ, City Solicitor, Wooster, Ohio.

DEAR SIR:—I am in receipt of your letter of October 22d, wherein you state as follows:

> "The council of the city of Wooster, passed an ordinance August 19, 1912, to amend the then existing ordinance fixing the salary of the chief of police. The ordinance passed increases the salary of that office five dollars per month, and contains a provision that the increase shall date from and payment thereof be made from the first day of August, 1912."

You then inquire as follows:

"(1) Does this ordinance take effect before the 19th day of October, 1912?

"(2) Can the officer whose salary is increased draw the increased salary for the months of August and September?"

Paragraph two of Section 4227-2 of the General Code, provides that no ordinance involving the expenditure of money shall become effective in less than sixty days after its passage. An ordinance increasing or decreasing the salary of an officer of a municipality, since such an ordinance is one providing for the salary of such officer to be expended as the duties of the officer are performed, would necessarily involve the expenditure of money. Such being the case, I am of the opinion that such an ordinance is clearly within the provisions of paragraph two of Section 4227-2 of the General Code, and, consequently, will not become effective in less than sixty days after its passage.

In answer, therefore, to your first question I am of the opinion that the ordinance in question does not take effect before the 19th day of October, 1912.

In answer to your second question, since the statute provides that an ordinance shall not become effective until sixty days after its passage, I am of the opinion that the officer whose salary is increased cannot draw the increased salary for the months of August and September, for the reason that the ordinance under which he would draw such increased salary will not be in force until sixty days after its passage.

Very truly yours,

TIMOTHY S. HOGAN,

Attorney General.

CHIEF OF POLICE HAS EXCLUSIVE POWER TO SUSPEND PATROLMAN—POWERS OF CHIEF OF POLICE AND DIRECTOR OF PUBLIC SAFETY TO MAKE SUSPENSIONS.

Section 4379, General Code, gives the chief of police power to suspend officers and employes of the department who are "under his control and management," while Section 4487, General Code, gives the director of public safety, power to suspend employes of the police department who are under his exclusive control and management.

By virtue of Sections 4372 and 4374, General Code, the chief of police is given the control and management of the officers enumerated in said Section 4374 and by virtue of Section 4375, General Code, the director of public safety is given exclusive control and management of "all other" officers, surgeons, secretaries, clerks and employes.

By Section 3479, General Code, therefore, the chief of police is empowered to suspend only the officers enumerated in Section 4374, General Code, and by Section 4487, General Code, the director of public safety is given power to suspend only the officers enumerated in Section 4375, General Code.

Under the above rule, therefore, the power to suspend a patrolman rests with the chief of police.

As held by the courts in construing similar provisions under the old system this power in the chief of police is exclusive.

COLUMBUS, OHIO, October, 26, 1912.

HON. W. S. JACKSON, City Solicitor, Lima, Ohio.

DEAR SIR:—Your favor of October 12, 1912, is received in which you inquire:

> "Section 4379 of the General Code gives to the chief of police the exclusive right to suspend any of the deputies, officers or employes in his respective department.
> "Section 4487 of the General Code gives the director of public safety the power to suspend any of the employes of the police and fire department who are by law under his exclusive management or control.
>
> "Query: May the director of public safety suspend a patrolman irrespective of any action by the chief of police?"

Section 4379, General Code, provides:

> "The chief of the police and the chief of the fire department shall have exclusive right to suspend any of the deputies, officers or employes in his respective department and under his management and control, for incompetence, gross neglect of duty, gross immorality, habitual drunkenness, failure to obey orders given him by the proper authority, or for any other reasonable and just cause."

This section gives to the chief of police the exclusive right to suspend any of the deputies, officers or employes of the police department, who are "under his management and control."

Section 4487, General Code, provides:

> "The director of public safety may suspend any of the employes of the police or fire department who are by law under his exclusive management and control, for incompetence, gross neglect of duty, gross immorality, habitual drunkenness, failure to obey orders given by the proper authority, or for any other reasonable and just cause, and shall forthwith notify such employe of the charges against him, and, within five days thereafter, shall proceed to inquire into such charges and render his judgment thereon, which judgment, if the charge be sustained, may be either suspension, reduction in rank or dismissal from the department, and such judgment in the matter shall be final, except as otherwise provided in this subdivision."

This section gives to the director of public safety the right to suspend the employes of the police department "who are by law under his exclusive control and management." This section was placed in its present form in 101 Ohio Laws 297. Said Section 4487 when originally placed in the General Code, read:

> "No officer, secretary, clerk, sergeant, patrolman, fireman or other employe serving in the police or fire departments of any city shall be removed or reduced in rank or pay except as provided in this chapter for removals by the chiefs of the police and fire departments."

This form of the section did not give any power to the director of public safety to suspend any of the employes of the police department. The amendatory act gives him that power. It is evident that the power was purposely given to the director of public safety.

There is a difference in the two sections to be construed which will avoid a conflict in authority. Section 4379, General Code, gives the chief of police the power to suspend the officers and employes of the department, who are under his control and management, while Section 4487, General Code, gives the director of public safety the power to suspend employes of the police department who are under his exclusive control and management. The power to suspend held by each officer is limited to those officers or employes who are under his control and management.

Are there, or may there be, two classes of employes in the police department; one under the control and management of the chief of police, and the other under the exclusive control and management of the director of public safety?

Section 4368, General Code, provides:

> "Under the direction of the mayor, the director of public safety shall be the executive head of the police and fire departments. He shall be the chief administrative authority of the charity, correction and building departments. He shall have all powers and duties connected with and incident to the appointment, regulation and government of these departments except as otherwise provided by law. He shall keep a record of his proceedings, a copy of which certified by him shall be competent evidence in all courts."

Section 4372, General Code, provides:

> "The chief of police shall have exclusive control of the station-ing and transfer of all patrolmen and other officers and employes in the department, under such general rules and regulations as the director of public safety prescribes."

Section 4374, General Code, provides:

"The police department of each city shall be composed of a chief of police and such inspectors, captains, lieutenants, sergeants, corporals, detectives, patrolmen and other police court officers, station house keepers, drivers and substitutes, as are provided by ordinance or resolution of council."

Section 4375, General Code, provides:

"The director of public safety shall have the exclusive management and control of all other officers, surgeons, secretaries, clerks and employes as are provided by ordinance or resolution of council. He may commission private policemen, who may not be in the classified list of the department, under such rules and regulations as council prescribes."

The provisions of Sections 4374 and 4375, General Code, were originally contained in one section, to wit, Section 149 of the Municipal Code, 96 Ohio Laws, page 70.

By virtue of Sections 4372 and 4374, General Code, the chief of police is given the control and management of the officers enumerated in said Section 4374. By virtue of Section 4375, General Code, the director of public safety is given exclusive control and management of all other officers, surgeons, secretaries, clerks and employes.

The power of the chief of police to suspend given by Section 4379, General Code, applies to the officers and employes enumerated in Section 4374, General Code. And the power of the director of public safety to suspend as given by Section 4487, General Code, applies to the officers enumerated in Section 4375, General Code.

The officer now in question is a patrolman. Patrolmen are specifically mentioned in Section 4374, General Code, and also in Section 4372, General Code, wherein the chief of police is given the exclusive power to station and transfer all patrolmen. Therefore, the power to suspend a patrolman rests with the chief of police.

A further question arises: Is this power to suspend a patrolman exclusively in the chief of police?

In case of State vs. Baldwin, 77 Ohio St., 532, the second syllabus reads:

"Under the new Municipal Code the mayor has authority to remove an officer or appointee in the police department, upon inquiry into the cause of suspension, by the chief of police, of such officer or appointee; but he is without original jurisdiction to inquire into charges against such an officer (other than the chief of police) or appointee, and upon such an inquiry he is without authority to remove an officer or appointee."

The court in this case had under consideration Sections 147, 148 and 152 of the Municipal Code, 96 Ohio Laws 70-71, and which are now known as Sections 4368, 4372, 4373 and 4379 of the General Code. In carrying these sections into the General Code, the provisions under consideration have not been materially changed, except that the director of public safety has been substituted for the mayor in Section 4368, General Code. Also, in other sections, the board of public safety has been succeeded by the civil service commission.

On pages 551 and 552 of the opinion in State vs. Baldwin, supra, Summers, J., says:

> "The evident purpose of the legislature respecting the police and fire departments, as indicated by the provisions relating to them in the new Municipal Code, was to adopt a civil service or merit system. The chief of police is made the executive head of the department under the direction of the mayor. He is given the exclusive right to suspend any of the deputies, officers or employes under his management or control, and in case of suspension, he is required to certify such fact, together with the cause of such suspension, to the mayor, who then finally determines the matter, excepting that an appeal may be taken to the board of public safety in case the judgment of the mayor is one of removal. The mayor is given the exclusive right to suspend the chief of the police department, and in the event he suspends the chief it is his duty to certify such fact, together with the cause of suspension, to the board of public safety and it is given final jurisdiction. And it is made the duty of the mayor to prefer charges with council against any director of public safety for incompetency, neglect of duty, malfeasance in office, habitual drunkenness, or gross immorality, and it is made the duty of council to inquire into the charges, in the manner provided for the removal of other officers of the municipality. Evidently it was thought that it would be conducive to the discipline or efficiency of the department, respecting the members of the police force, if the exclusive power of suspension should be vested in the chief of police, and if the mayor should not have original jurisdiction to remove members of the force, but only in the event of charges being certified to him by the chief. If the chief fails in his duty the exclusive power of suspending him is vested in the mayor, and he may suspend him and certify the fact to the board, so that the board of public safety does not deal directly with the members of the force or with the chief of the police, but exercises its control through the mayor, and the mayor does not deal directly or immediately with the members of the force but with the chief of police, and the chief is given immediate control of the men."

So under the present law, the director of public safety does not deal directly with the patrolmen, but deals with them through the chief of police. The power of the chief of police to suspend a patrolman is granted in the same terms as was his power under consideration in the above case. The provisions of Section 4487, General Code, as amended in 101 Ohio Laws 297, do not in any way limit that power. The chief of police is given the exclusive right to suspend a patrolman.

Therefore, the director of public safety cannot suspend a patrolman irrespective of any action by the chief of police.

Respectfully,

TIMOTHY S. HOGAN,

Attorney General.

TAXES AND TAXATION—TAXES ILLEGALLY LEVIED PRIOR TO JANUARY 1, 1910, AND COLLECTED WITHOUT DISTRESS ON PROPERTY CANNOT BE RECOVERED—AUTHORITIES MAY VOLUNTARILY REFUND.

By Section 12078-1, General Code, provision is made for the recovery of illegal taxes, levied after January 1, 1910. Illegal taxes levied prior to that date, however, and paid under protest, cannot be recovered unless payment was made when a distress was about to be levied for their payment.

While this rule applies to the legal right of the tax payer to recover, a public official who has collected a tax levy which was plainly illegal may be advised to refund the same.

COLUMBUS, OHIO, November 22, 1912.

HON. WILLIAM M. ROACH, Solicitor, Alliance, Ohio.

DEAR SIR:—Your favor of September 20, 1912, is received in which you inquire:

> "Where a special assessment has been levied by a municipal corporation upon property for public improvement before January 1, 1910 (Sec. 12078-1), and a property owner soon after the assessment had been levied, in order to save the interest on such assessment, desires to and does pay the entire assessment, but at the time of payment states to the auditor of such municipal corporation that he is paying the same under protest and asks to have and has marked by such officer upon his receipt 'Paid under protest,' although at the time of such payment no effort had been made or attempted to be made to collect such assessment or to enforce payment by any process authorized for that purpose, and there having been no attempt to levy a distress upon the property of the party paying such assessment, and the court afterwards determining such assessment to be illegal, can such person recover back to amount of the assessment so paid by him in excess of the legal assessment levied against such property?"

You further state the facts upon which the question arises. It was an assessment for the improvement of a street, wherein the entire cost was levied against the abutting property when only fifty per cent. could be levied.

Section 12078-1, General Code, to which you refer, provides:

> "That if, by judgment or final order of any court of competent jurisdiction in this state, in an action not pending on appeal or error it has been or shall be adjudged and determined that any taxes or assessment or part thereof levied after January 1, 1910, was illegal and such judgment or order has not been made or shall not be made in time to prevent the collection or payment of such tax or assessment, then such tax or assessment or such part thereof as shall at the time of such judgment or order be then unexpended and in the possession of the officer collecting the same, shall be repaid and refunded to the person paying such tax or assessment by the officer having the same in his possession."

This section specifically applies to taxes or assessments that are levied after January 1, 1910. In your case the special assessment was levied before January 1, 1910. This section cannot, therefore, apply to your case.

In Whitbeck vs. Minch, 84 Ohio St., 210, it is held in a per curiam opinion, as follows:

> "A party who pays an illegal assessment upon his property, cannot recover it back in a suit against the treasurer, unless the payment was an involuntary one. To constitute the payment an involuntary one, it must appear that the treasurer was about to levy a distress upon the property of the party charged with the assessment: A simple protest against the validity of the assessment, with notice to the treasurer that the party intends to bring suit to recover it back, is not sufficient. In such case the general rule applies, if litigation is intended, it must precede payment, where, as in such cases, the party has a plain remedy provided by statute, Section 5848, Revised Statutes, and may resort to the same, and thereby avoid a distress of his property."

No syllabus is given to this case, and there is no statement of the facts. This case is considered by Sayler, judge of the superior court of Hamilton county, Ohio, in case of Van Ness vs. Brooks, 25 Bull. 307. The several causes of action in Whitbeck vs. Minch, supra, are set forth at page 307 of 25 Bulletin.

The first cause of action is there given as follows:

> "Minch filed his petition in the common pleas of Cuyahoga county, in which he sets forth that on September 11, 1882, the city council of Cleveland passed an ordinance by which they levied a district sewer tax on all real and personal property in sewer district No. 7 of 4.5 mills on the dollar; that said tax was certified to the county auditor and placed on the tax duplicate for collection and was collected by the treasurer. This sewer district tax plaintiff says is illegal and void. On December 16, 1882, said sewer district tax being as aforesaid on said tax duplicate for collection, and said defendant refusing to receive the other taxes levied on the said property of plaintiff unless said district sewer tax was paid, and threatened unless it was paid to add a penalty thereto, and afterwards, if still unpaid, to collect all said taxes and penalty by summary proceedings, this plaintiff was compelled to, and did under protest pay to said defendant the first half of said district sewer tax on his said personal property, said first half amounting to $187.85, no part of which has been repaid, and plaintiff asks judgment for this amount with interest."

Seven other similar causes of action are shown. The facts in the first cause of action above set forth are similar to yours, except that in your case the special assessment had not been certified to the county treasurer for collection, and there was no refusal by the county treasurer to receive the other taxes upon the property.

I assume also, from your letter, that these payments were made under protest before any action had been brought to enjoin the collection of such special assessment so paid.

The case of Whitbeck vs. Minch, supra, is cited with approval in case of Ratterman vs. Express Co., 49 Ohio State 608, wherein Dickman, J., says at page 619:

> "In Whitbeck vs. Minch, 48 Ohio St., 210, it is said that, a party who pays an illegal assessment upon his property, cannot recover it back in a suit against the treasurer, unless the payment was an involuntary one.
> "It is difficult to lay down a rule by which to determine in the numerous cases that may arise, whether a payment has been made voluntarily or under compulsion. It has been repeatedly held, however, that a mere protest against the validity of a tax or assessment, with notice to the treasurer that the party intends to bring suit to recover it back, is not alone sufficient to relieve the payment of its presumed voluntary character."

In cases seeking the return of taxes or assessments paid under protest, it is necessary to show that such payments are involuntary and not voluntary. It is a question of fact to be determined from the circumstances of each particular case. Section 12078-1, General Code, supra, modifies this rule, but as seen herein this section does not apply to your case.

The facts submitted by you show that there was no compulsion or demand made for the payment of the special assessment. In the first cause of action in case of Whitbeck vs. Minch, there was a further element, the county treasurer refused to receive the other taxes unless the special assessment was paid. The court, nevertheless, held the payment to have been voluntary and denied the right to recover.

I am, therefore, of the opinion that the payment in the case you submit was made voluntarily and without compulsion, and that the payment made under such circumstances cannot be recovered.

Respectfully,
TIMOTHY S. HOGAN,
Attorney General.

ADDENDUM.

However, the case you present seems to be one wherein a distinction might be drawn between the right of the property owner to recover and the obligation of the public to refund. Where the facts are as plain as they seem to be in your case it does seem to me that the authorities would be warranted, if they are so inclined, in refunding this money. Nothing tends so strongly to create a feeling of revulsion in the citizen against law as a manifest injustice. This money was not collected even under the color of law. Its collection was in contravention of law plainly. I would suggest that you treat the claim just as if it were a judgment and honor it accordingly.

AUDITOR'S CERTIFICATE OF SUFFICIENT FUNDS—MUNICIPAL CORPORATIONS—PARTS OF EXPENDITURES MAY NOT BE MADE FROM DIFFERENT FUNDS—CERTIFICATE NOT REQUIRED WHEN PROCEEDS OF ENTIRE BOND ISSUE EXPENDED.

The object of Section 3506, General Code, requiring a certificate of the auditor that there are sufficient funds in the treasury before municipal bonds may be expended is to set aside certain funds for the purpose of the expenditure and as this purpose is already accomplished, where a bond issue is provided for the payment of the entire expenditure on a contract, the certificate of the auditor is not required in such instance.

Where there is more than one contract to be paid out of a special fund, a certificate is required for each contract.

When, therefore, bonds are issued for the manifold purpose of purchasing ground, erecting a fire house and equipping the same, and the auditor has certified that there are sufficient funds in the treasury for the expenditure of a certain sum for a fire engine, an excess over that sum may not be spent for said engine by taking part of the expenditure from the bond issue fund and the balance from the fire fund.

COLUMBUS, OHIO, October 24, 1912.

HON. T. F. THOMPSON, City Solicitor, Zanesville, Ohio.

DEAR SIR:—Under date of October 9, 1912, you inquire as follows:

"Some few months ago council passed an ordinance providing for a bond issue for six thousand dollars for the purpose of purchasing a lot in the city of Zanesville, Ohio, on which to erect a fire station and also for the purpose of erecting a fire station on said lot, and for the purpose of equipping the same. Later council passed an ordinance authorizing the director of public safety to advertise for bids and enter into a contract for the purchase of a fire engine with which to equip said new station. On the later ordinance the auditor certified that there was money in funds for the purchase of said engine, to the amount of thirty-seven hundred and fifty dollars; after which the safety director advertised for bids for an automobile fire engine and entered into the contract for the purchase of an engine in the sum of fifty-five hundred and fifty dollars. This, of course, exceeded the amount in the auditor's certificate, but there was at the time the certificate was put on said ordinance, and now is sufficient funds in fire apparatus to pay for the fire engine in the amount over and above what the certificate called for, to wit, about fifteen hundred dollars.

"The question now arises has the city auditor authority to pay for said fire engine its full price in face of the fact that the certificate on the ordinance provided for only thirty-seven hundred and fifty dollars, and no certificate of funds was placed on the contract?

"In our case we might be able to pay part out of the bond issue and part out of the fire apparatus; and the auditor's certificate as certified, might be treated as applying to that portion that is paid out of the fire apparatus, and a portion paid out of the bond issue, for which a certificate would not be necessary.

"We are convinced that the transaction has been regular and in good faith, but we do not want the auditor to become liable for paying out funds which he has no right to pay out."

Section 3806, General Code, requires the certificate of the auditor as follows:

"No contract, agreement or other obligation involving the expenditure of money shall be entered into, nor shall any ordinance, resolution or order for the expenditure of money, be passed by the council or by any board or officer of a municipal corporation, unless the auditor or clerk thereof, first certifies to council or to the proper board, as the case may be, that the money required for such contract, agreement or other obligation, or to pay such appropriation or expenditure, is in the treasury to the credit of the fund from which it is to be drawn, and not appropriated for any other purpose, which certificate shall be filed and immediately recorded. The sum so certified shall not thereafter be considered unappropriated until the corporation is discharged from the contract, agreement or obligation, or so long as the ordinance, resolution or order is in force."

Section 3809, General Code, provides several exceptions thereto, and reads:

"The council of a city may authorize, and the council of a village may make, a contract with any person, firm or company for lighting the streets, alleys, lands, lanes, squares and public places in the municipal corporation, or for furnishing water to such corporation, or for the collection and disposal of garbage in such corporation, or for the leasing of the electric light plant and equipment, or the waterworks plant, or both, of any person, firm or company therein situated, for a period not exceeding ten years, and the requirement of a certificate that the necessary money is in the treasury shall not apply to such contract, and such requirement shall not apply to street improvement contracts extending for one year or more, nor to contracts made by the board of health, nor to contracts made by a village for the employment of legal counsel."

The contract in question does not come within any of the exceptions provided for in Section 3809, General Code.

In the case of City of Akron vs. Dobson, 81 Ohio St., 66, to which you call attention, the first and third syllabi read:

"A municipal corporation may, under Section 2835, Revised Statutes, issue its bonds for the purpose of equipping buildings used by its fire department with apparatus other than, or in addition to fire engines. The special provisions of paragraph 27 do not govern the general provisions of paragraph 2 of that section.

"Section 1536-205, Revised Statutes, providing that no contract, agreement or other obligation involving the expenditure of money shall be entered into, nor shall any ordinance, resolution or other order for the expenditure of money, be passed by the council or by any board or officer of the municipal corporation, unless the auditor of the corporation shall first certify to council that the money required for the contract, agreement or other obligation, or to pay the appropriation or expenditure, is in the treasury to the credit of the fund from which it is to be drawn and not appropriated for any other purpose, does not apply to an ordinance appropriating the money obtained by council, from a sale of bonds made by it, to the purpose for which the bonds were sold."

The court's opinion upon the question of the requirement of a certificate is very short. Summers, J., says at pages 77 and 78:

"It is also contended that the contract is void because the auditor did not certify to the council that the money required for the contract was in the city treasury as prescribed by Section 1536-205, Revised Statutes. The supplemental petition avers that the auditor did not so certify. This is denied by the answer in the circuit court, and that court does not make any finding upon that issue. This contract cannot create an obligation against the city in the nature of a debt, to meet which no funds have been provided. The council issued and sold the bonds and appropriated the proceeds to meet the expenditures it authorized, and any obligations incurred by the ordinance under the authority conferred are payable only out of the appropriation, so that the section can have no application to such a case."

The opinion is based upon two propositions, first that the obligation creates no debt of the city for which no funds have been created, and second the obligations to be incurred are payable only from the appropriation which was the proceeds of the bonds.

In your case it is sought to pay a part of the contract price from a fund other than that secured by the sale of bonds, and the part to be paid from an additional fund would constitute a debt of the city for the payment of which no fund has been specially provided. The contract price to be paid for the fire engine, is to be paid partly from the fund realized by the sale of bonds and partly from the general revenues of the city. In the case above quoted from the entire contract price was to be paid from the amount realized from the sale of the bonds.

The second syllabus in Emmert vs. City of Elyria, 74 Ohio St., 185, reads:

"Sections 45 and 45*a* of the Municipal Code (1536-205 and 1536-205*a*, Revised Statutes, Bates 5th ed.), providing in substance that no contract involving the expenditure of money shall be entered into unless the auditor of the corporation shall first certify to council that the money required for the contract is in the treasury to the credit of the fund from which it is to be drawn and not appropriated for any other purpose and that a contract entered into contrary to such provision shall be void and that the money to be derived from lawfully authorized bonds or notes sold and in process of delivery shall be deemed in the treasury and in the appropriate fund, do not apply to contracts for street improvements, when bonds have been authorized by the municipality to be issued to pay the entire estimated cost and expense of the improvement."

In this case also "the entire estimated cost and expense of the improvement" was to be paid from the fund realized from the sale of the bonds.

This case is, therefore, also distinguishable from the case which you submit.

It is urged in behalf of the contract in question that there now is, and at the time the certificate of the auditor was made, there was sufficient money in the treasury over and above the amount certified to, to pay the difference in the contract price and the amount certified, and that this additional sum can be paid out of the fire apparatus fund.

It does not appear, and I take it that the certificate of the auditor does not so show, that the amount certified was to be taken from any particular fund. In other words, when the auditor made his certificate, did he certify to funds which were in the treasury by reason of the bond sale, or to funds derived from the general revenue, or did he consider both sources in making his certificate. These facts are material in deciding this question, and the certificate itself must show the manner in which the particular thirty-seven hundred and fifty dollars was raised, if we are to apply the rule of exception laid down in 81 Ohio St. 66, to any part of the contract price. The presumption would be that the special fund raised by the bond issue would be exhausted first in contracting for purposes within the object of such bond issue, before the general revenues would be touched. In the absence of any other showing it would, therefore, be presumed that the amount certified to was to be taken from the fund raised by the bond issue, or at least to the full extent of the balance in such fund if such balance was not sufficient to make up the entire amount certified.

You state that the amount in the treasury other than that realized from the bond sale is about fifteen hundred dollars. If that is correct then part at least of the thirty-seven hundred and fifty dollars certified must be taken from the fund secured from the sale of bonds.

Let us apply the different situations that may arise. In applying these situations it must be remembered that the purpose of a certificate of the auditor is to have a certain sum set aside for the purpose of the contract or expenditure to be made, and this sum cannot be used for any other purpose until the contract or obligation is performed or cancelled.

If the thirty-seven hundred and fifty dollars was to be taken entirely from the bond sale, then the additional amount to be taken from the general revenue was not set aside for the purpose of this contract. There was no certificate as to this additional amount. The entire amount certified was not to be taken from the general revenues, because there does not seem to have been that sum in the treasury derived from the general revenues. It is intended to take about $1,500.00 from the general revenues. You then would have a certificate applicable partly to the bond fund and partly to the other fund, and it is now sought to take an additional amount, either from the bond fund, or from the general revenue. If the additional amount is to be taken from the bond fund, you have the situation of a certificate as to part of said bond fund and no certificate as to the other part. If the additional amount is to be taken from the general revenue, then you have no certificate as to that.

No situation presents itself that will not lead to confusion and doubt. The purpose of the certificate of the auditor is to secure certainty that there is a fund in the treasury to meet the obligations of the city. This certainty cannot be secured in your case by making the certificate applicable to only a part of an entire expenditure made on behalf of the city.

The rule stated in 81 Ohio St., 66 and 74 Ohio St., 323, is therein applied when the entire expenditure is to be made from the special fund created by the bond issue and the sale of the bonds. It is an exception to the requirement of Section 3806, General Code, and the exception made in the foregoing cases should not be extended without reason and authority therefor.

In case of the Village of Carthage vs. Diekmeier, 79 Ohio St., 323, it is held:

> "Where a municipal corporation, by sale of its bonds, creates a fund for the improvement of certain streets, and takes the necessary steps to receive and accept bids and to contract separately for the improvement of each of said streets, the following certificate filed by the clerk of the corporation at the time the bid is accepted and contract executed, to wit: 'I hereby certify that there is money in the village treasury in the fund from which the above fund is proposed to be drawn for payment of the village portion of the improvement and not appropriated for any other purpose sufficient to pay for the same. L. Hall, village clerk,' is not in compliance with Section 2702 (old number), Revised Statutes, in that it is not certified that a specified sum of money required for the contract to improve the street 'is in the treasury to the credit of the fund from which it is to be drawn, and not appropriated for any other purpose.'
> "Where the above defect in the certificate is discovered before the execution of the contract, and the clerk of the corporation, in the presence of the municipal council and with its knowledge and consent, amends the certificate by inserting therein, although in figures, the sum of money required for the contract, and the certificate so amended is filed and recorded as required by said section, and the contract then executed, said certificate is a limitation on the amount to be paid on the contract for that street, beyond which the corporation is not liable to the contractor."

A certificate that sufficient money is in the treasury to pay the obligation and not otherwise appropriated, is not sufficient. The amount must be specified, and the amount so specified is a limit upon the amount to be paid upon the contract. The fund in the last cited case was raised by a bond issue for the improvement of certain streets. Separate contracts were entered into for each street, and a certain amount of the fund appropriated to each street. On pages 340 and 341, Price, J., says:

> "It is contended that the certificate without the figures is according to the language of the statute, and therefore sufficient; that the statute does not require a definite sum to be certified as being in the treasury, but that it is a compliance to certify that there is enough in the treasury unappropriated to other purposes, to meet the obligation or contract. If there was but a single contract or expenditure in contemplation, the claim might be tenable in such an instance, but this we do not decide. But in the present case it appears there were eighteen resolutions, including the one here involved, adopted at the same council meeting. The bids accepted were separate for the different streets, and separate contracts were executed for such streets. * * *
> "Whatever may be the correct view as to the meaning of this statute where a single contract is let, it seems to be a reasonable construction that there be a definite sum certified for each contract where there are several of the same species entered into at the same time to be paid from a theretofore gross fund. It would seem conducive, if not necessary to the safety of each contractor, that a definite sum be certified, because it is on the performance of that act by the village clerk that the money to discharge the obligation is set apart and appropriated, and which 'shall not thereafter be considered unappropriated,' etc."

The court holds in this case that where there is more than one contract to be paid from a special fund, a certificate is required, in order that a certain portion of the specified fund may be appropriated to pay each contract. In your case it is evident that there was more than one contract. The six thousand dollar bond issue would be sufficient to pay for the fifty-five hundred and fifty dollar fire engine, if no other contract or obligation had been paid therefrom. In addition to having more than one contract, you also have the situation of paying part from the amount realized from the bond sale and a part from the funds secured from the general revenue of the city.

Where part of a contract is to be paid from a special fund set apart for the purpose of such contract and a part from the funds derived from the general revenue, a certificate of the city auditor that the money is in the treasury and not otherwise appropriated, is required as to the entire amount to be expended by such contract.

The certificate in your case was made as to thirty-seven hundred and fifty dollars and that is a limitation upon the amount that can be expended upon the contract in question. The contract price exceeds this amount and is therefore illegal and does not bind the city. The city auditor would not be authorized to pay the contract price.

Respectfully,
TIMOTHY S. HOGAN,
Attorney General.

OFFICES COMPATIBLE—CITY SOLICITOR AND PROSECUTING ATTORNEY.

There is not express statutory inhibition against one person holding both the office of prosecuting attorney and city solicitor at the same time.

And, inasmuch as the duties of the office do not conflict as to come within the common law rule of incompatibility, one individual may simultaneously hold both offices.

COLUMBUS, OHIO, November 30, 1912.

HON. C. W. WHITE, City Solicitor, Gallipolis, Ohio.

DEAR SIR:—Under date of November 22, 1912, you inquire of this department as follows:

"I am now serving as city solicitor and have another year yet to serve, and at the last election I was elected to the office of prosecuting attorney of this county, and I would like very much to have your opinion as to whether I can hold both offices."

There are certain offices which a prosecuting attorney cannot hold because of statutory inhibition.

Section 11, General Code, provides:

"No person shall hold at the same time by appointment or election more than one of the following offices: sheriff, county auditor, county treasurer, clerk of the court of common pleas, county recorder, prosecuting attorney, probate judge, and justice of the peace."

This section does not prevent the prosecuting attorney from being also the solicitor of a city.

Section 2910, General Code, provides:

> "No person shall be eligible as a candidate for the office of prosecuting attorney, or be elected thereto, who is not an attorney and counsellor at law, duly licensed to practice in this state. No prosecuting attorney shall be a member of the general assembly of this state, or mayor of a city or village. No county treasurer, county auditor, county surveyor or sheriff, shall be eligible as a candidate for, or elected to, the office of prosecuting attorney."

This section prohibits the prosecuting attorney from being a mayor of a city or village, but says nothing as to city solicitor.

There is no statutory inhibition against the same person holding the positions of prosecuting attorney and city solicitor at the same time. The question arises, are the two positions incompatible?

The rule of incompatibility of offices is stated by Dustin, J., in case of State vs. Gebert, 12 Cir. Ct. N. S. 274, on page 275 of the opinion, where he says:

> "Offices are considered incompatible when one is subordinate to, or in any way a check upon the other; or, when it is physically impossible for one person to discharge the duties of both."

There are three grounds of incompatibility:

First—Physical impossibility of the same person performing the duties of both offices;

Second—When one office is subordinate to the other;

Third—When one office is in any way a check upon the other.

Whether or not it is physically possible for the same person to hold two offices at the same time must be determined from the facts and circumstances of each case.

In many counties in this state it would be physically possible for the same person to be prosecuting attorney of the county and at the same time to be solicitor of a city or village in such county. In other counties the duties required of these two officers would make this physically impossible. This department cannot determine the physical possibility or impossibility from the facts submitted.

The office of city solicitor is not subordinate to the office of prosecuting attorney, or vice versa.

In order to determine if these two offices are in any way a check upon each other it is necessary to look to the duties of the respective offices.

The city solicitor is the legal adviser and attorney of the city which is a separate and distinct body from that of the county of which the prosecuting attorney is the legal authority.

The duties of a city solicitor are prescribed in Section 4303, et seq., General Code, and these sections refer to his duties as the legal counsel of the city and have no reference to the county.

Section 4305, General Code, provides:

"The solicitor shall prepare all contracts, bonds and other instruments in writing in which the city is concerned, and shall serve the several directors and officers mentioned in this title as legal counsel and attorney."

Section 4306, General Code, provides:

"The solicitor shall also be prosecuting attorney of the police or mayor's court. When council allows an assistant or assistants to the solicitor, he may designate an assistant or assistants to act as prosecuting attorney or attorneys of the police or mayor's court. The person thus designated shall be subject to the approval of the city council."

Section 4307, General Code, provides:

"The prosecuting attorney of the police or mayor's court shall prosecute all cases brought before such court, and perform the same duties, as far as they are applicable thereto, as required of the prosecuting attorney of the county. The city solicitor or the assistant or assistants whom he may designate to act as prosecuting attorney or attorneys of the police or mayor's court shall receive for this service such compensation as council may prescribe, and such additional compensation as the county commissioners shall allow."

This latter section does not place upon the city solicitor when acting as police prosecutor any of the duties of the prosecuting attorney of the county. It prescribes the duties of the police prosecutor and requires that he shall perform the same duties "as far as they are applicable thereto, as required of the prosecuting attorney of the county."

In other words the city solicitor or his assistant is prosecutor in the police or mayor's court, and the prosecuting attorney of the county is the prosecutor before the county courts. Their duties as such prosecutors are similar but they act before different jurisdictions. They may be required to act in the same case, but in such event they act in different stages of such case.

The duties as prosecutor of the police or mayor's court are not a check upon the duties of the prosecuting attorney of the county.

Section 4308, General Code, provides:

"When required so to do by resolution of the council, the solicitor shall prosecute or defend, as the case may be, for and in behalf of the corporation, all complaints, suits and controversies in which the corporation is a party, and such other suits, matters and controversies as he shall, by resolution or ordinance, be directed to prosecute, but shall not be required to prosecute any action before the mayor for the violation of an ordinance without first advising such action."

Section 4311, General Code, provides:

"The solicitor shall apply in the name of the corporation, to a court of competent jurisdiction for an order of injunction to restrain the misapplication of funds of the corporation, or the abuse of its corporate powers, or the execution or performance of any contract in behalf of the corporation in contravention of the laws or ordinance governing it, or which was procured by fraud or corruption."

The duties devolving upon the city solicitor by virtue of these sections do not make the office of prosecuting attorney a check upon the office of city solicitor, or vice versa.

The duties of a prosecuting attorney are prescribed in Section 2914, et seq., General Code.

Section 2916, General Code, provides:

"The prosecuting attorney shall have power to inquire into the commission of crimes within the county and shall prosecute on behalf of the state all complaints, suits and controversies in which the state is a party, and such other suits, matters and controversies as he is directed by law to prosecute within or without the county, the probate court, common pleas court and circuit court. In conjunction with the attorney general, he shall also prosecute cases in the supreme court arising in his county. In every case of conviction, he shall forthwith cause execution to be issued for the fine and costs, or costs only, as the case may be, and faithfully urge the collection until it is affected (effected), or found to be impracticable, and forthwith pay to the county treasurer all moneys belonging to the state or county, which come into his possession as fines, forfeitures, costs or otherwise."

Section 2917, General Code, provides:

"The prosecuting attorney shall be the legal adviser of the county commissioners and all other county officers and county boards and any of them may require of him written opinions or instructions in matters connected with their official duties. He shall prosecute and defend all suits and actions which any such officer or board may direct or to which it is a party, and no county officer may employ other counsel or attorney at the expense of the county except as provided in Section 2412. He shall be the legal adviser for all township officers, and no such officer may employ other counsel or attorney except on the order of the township trustees duly entered upon their journal, in which the compensation to be paid for such legal services shall be fixed. Such compensattion shall be paid from the township fund."

Section 2920, General Code, provides:

"The prosecuting attorney shall prepare in legal form the official bonds for all county officers, and see that the acceptance thereof by the proper authorities, the signing thereof, and all the endorsements thereon, are in conformity to law, and that they are deposited with the proper officer. The bond of no county officer shall be accepted or approved by the person or tribunal authorized to approve it, until the prosecuting attorney of the county has inspected it, and certified thereon that it is sufficient. In case of vacancy in the office of prosecuting attorney or of his absence or disability, such duties shall be discharged by the probate judge."

Section 2921, General Code, provides:

> "Upon being satisfied that funds of the county, or public moneys in the hands of the county treasurer or belonging to the county, are about to be or have been, misapplied, or that such public moneys have been illegally drawn, or withheld from, the county treasury, or that a contract in contravention of law has been, or is about to be entered into, or has been or is being executed, or that a contract was procured by fraud or corruption, or that any property, real or personal, belonging to the county is being illegally used or occupied, or is being used or occupied in violation of contract, or that the terms of a contract made by or on behalf of the county are being or have been violated, or that money is due the county, the prosecuting attorneys of the several counties of the state may apply, by civil action in the name of the state, to a court of competent jurisdiction, to restrain such contemplated misapplication of funds, or the completion of such illegal contract not fully completed, or to recover, for the use of the county, all public moneys so misapplied or illegally drawn or withheld from the county treasury, or to recover, for the benefit of the county, damages resulting from the execution of such illegal contract, or to recover, for the benefit of the county, such real or personal property so used or occupied, or to recover, for the benefit of the county, damages resulting from the non-performance of the terms of such contract, or to otherwise enforce it, or to recover such money due the county."

The duties prescribed in the foregoing sections for a prosecuting attorney are not incompatible with the duties of a city solicitor as being a check upon the one or the other office.

In proceedings for the annexation of territory to a city the duties of a city solicitor and of a prosecuting attorney of the county may be conflicting.

Section 3559, General Code, provides:

> "The council of the corporation, by a vote of not less than a majority of the members elected, shall pass an ordinance authorizing such annexation to be made, and directing the solicitor of the corporation, or some one to be named in the ordinance, to prosecute the proceedings necessary to effect it."

Section 3549, General Code, provides:

> "The petition shall be presented to the board of commissioners at a regular session thereof, and when so presented the same proceedings shall be had as far as applicable, and the same duties in respect thereto shall be performed by the commissioners and other officers, as required in case of an application to be organized into a village under the provisions of this division. The final transcript of the commissioners, and the accompanying map or plat and petition, shall be deposited with the auditor or clerk of the municipality to which annexation is proposed to be made, who shall file them in his office."

The proceedings directed to be prosecuted by the city solicitor by Section 3559, General Code, are to be had before the county commissioners by virtue of Section 3560, General Code, which reads:

"The application of the corporation to the county commissioners for such purpose shall be by petition, setting forth that, under an ordinance of the council the territory therein described was authorized to be annexed to the corporation. The petition shall contain an accurate description of the territory, and be accompanied by an accurate map or plat thereof."

Section 3561, General Code, provides:

"When the petition is presented to the commissioners, like proceedings shall be had, in all respects, so far as applicable, as are required in case of annexation on application of citizens in this chapter."

The prosecuting attorney is the legal adviser of the county commissioners. He may be called upon by the commissioners to advise them of their duties in the proceedings. The statutes, however, do not specifically require the prosecuting attorney to perform any duties in connection with such annexation proceedings.

This situation would not constitute the office of prosecuting attorney a check upon the office of city solicitor, nor make one subordinate to the other. It might raise a question of physical possibility to perform the duties of the two offices. This situation may never arise and as it applies to the physical possibility, the incompatibility must be determined when that situation arises.

The prosecuting attorney is a member of the budget commission.

Section 5649-3*b*, General Code, provides:

"The county auditor, the mayor of the largest municipality in the county as shown by the last federal census, and the prosecuting attorney shall constitute a board to be known as the budget commissioners, for the annual adjustment of the rates of taxation. The budget commissioners shall meet at the auditor's office in each county on the first Monday of June, annually and complete their work on or before the first Monday in July next following. Each member thereof shall be sworn, faithfully and impartially, to perform the duties imposed upon him by this act. Two members shall constitute a quorum. The auditor shall be the secretary of the budget commissioners and shall keep a full and accurate record of their proceedings. The auditor shall appoint such messengers and clerks as the board deem necessary, who shall receive not to exceed three dollars per day for their services for the time actually employed, which shall be paid out of the county treasury. The budget commissioners shall be allowed their actual and necessary expenses, such expenses to be itemized and sworn to by the person who incurred them, and paid out of the county treasury when approved by the budget commissioners."

Section 5649-3*c*, General Code, provides:

"The auditor shall lay before the budget commissioners the annual budgets submitted to him by the boards and officers named in Section 5649-3*a* of this act, together with an estimate to be prepared by the auditor of the amount of money to be raised for state purposes in each taxing district in the county, and such other information as the budget commissioners may request, or the tax commission of Ohio may prescribe. The budget commissioners shall examine such budgets and estimates prepared by the county auditor, and ascertain the total amount proposed to be raised in each taxing district for state, county, township, city, village, school district, or other taxing district purposes. If the budget commissioners find that the total amount of taxes to be raised therein does not exceed the amount authorized to be raised in any township, city, village, school district, or other taxing district in the county, the fact shall be certified to the county auditor. If such total is found to exceed such authorized amount in any township, city, village, school district, or other taxing district in the county, the budget commissioners shall adjust the various amounts to be raised so that the total amount thereof shall not exceed in any taxing district the sum authorized to be levied therein. In making such adjustment the budget commissioners may revise and change the annual estimates contained in such budgets, and may reduce any or all the items in any such budget, but shall not increase the total of any such budget, or any item therein. The budget commissioners shall reduce the estimates contained in any or all such budgets by such amount or amounts as will bring the total for each township, city, village, school district, or other taxing district, within the limits provided by law.

"When the budget commissioners have completed their work they shall certify their action to the county auditor, who shall ascertain the rate of taxes necessary to be levied upon the taxable property therein of such county, and of each township, city, village, school district, or other taxing district, returned on the grand duplicate, and place it on the tax list of the county."

The city solicitor has no official duties in connection with the preparation of the city's annual budget, except in his advisory capacity as legal counsel of the city. The mayor of a city has more to do in the preparation of the city's budget than the city solicitor, and yet the statute makes the mayor of the largest city in the county a member of the budget commission.

The duties of a member of the budget commission are separate and distinct from the duties of a city solicitor and also from the duties of a prosecuting attorney as such. These offices are not a check one upon another, and none of them are subordinate to the other.

I am of opinion, therefore, that where it is physically possible for the same person to perform the duties of city solicitor and prosecuting attorney of a county at the same time, the two offices are not incompatible and may be held by the same person at the same time.

Respectfully,
TIMOTHY S. HOGAN,
Attorney General.

PARKS—PURCHASE OF ADDITIONAL LAND AN IMPROVEMENT FOR WHICH PARK TRUSTEES MAY EXPEND FUNDS APPROPRIATED BY COUNCIL FOR "MAINTAINING AND IMPROVING PARK."

When council passes an ordinance appropriating $20,000 for "improving and maintaining" a certain public park, this fund is subject to control by the park trustees under Section 4072, General Code.

The purchase of additional land is an "improvement" for which said trustees may expend the money.

COLUMBUS, OHIO, December 20, 1912.

HON. GEORGE BUNTING, City Solicitor, Warren, Ohio.

DEAR SIR:—I am replying to yours of December 7, 1912, wherein you say that one Packard donated a park to your city, which from time to time has been improved by appropriations of money on the part of the city. You further say that the last ordinance appropriating $20,000 reads: "for the purpose of improving and maintaining the public park known as Packard park;" that the trustees desire to appropriate about six acres of land adjoining the present park.

You then inquire whether this additional tract of land can legally be paid for out of the above mentioned $20,000; and whether this six-acre addition to the original park is an "improvement."

In the first place, the trustees of this park cannot bring appropriation proceedings to acquire this six-acre tract. That must be done by the city, unless the owner, or owners thereof, convey the same to the city, which holds the title to all parks, whether by donation, conveyance, or appropriation.

The original park having been donated to the city, its care, custody, control and future are governed by Sections 4066, et seq., General Code, which provide for a board of trustees to manage the same. These sections are quite broad, and the trustees are vested with full control of the park, and all funds raised or acquired, in relation thereto.

Section 4071 General Code, provides for the meetings of the trustees, their records, rules, and that the auditor or clerk of the municipality shall be the clerk of the board.

Section 4072 enumerates the powers of the board as follows:

> "Such trustees shall have the entire management and control of such property or funds, all improvements of every nature within such parks, moneys derived from levies made for park purposes, moneys from the general fund appropriated by the council for such purposes, proceeds of bonds issued or sold for park purposes, and of moneys or other property donated to any such municipality for park purposes, all of which moneys shall be placed in a special fund called the 'park fund,' and shall be disbursed by the treasurer of any such city or village, only upon a warrant of the auditor or clerk, drawn in accordance with the order of the board of park trustees."

This is a far reaching section, and gives these trustees almost unlimited control over all "park funds." It would seem that it makes no difference how the funds for "park purposes," of the class to which this one belongs, are derived, the trustees are absolute masters of the disposition thereof.

They are given entire management and control of moneys appropriated from the general fund by council for "park purposes."

This "park fund" by Section 4072, is in the hands of the city treasurer as a special fund, and can only be disbursed by an order from the park trustees. So then this $20,000 is a "park fund" and the trustees can disburse it for "park purposes."

Is the acquiring of additional ground adjoining the old park an improvement? In my mind it clearly is. Anything which makes the old park greater, more commodious, better for the accommodation and convenience of the public, more beautiful by territorial extension, more valuable, is an improvement.

"Improvement" and "improve" in the dictionaries and law books (See 21 Cyc. 1743) are interpreted to mean: "to make better," "to increase," "to augment," "to make useful additions," "a valuable addition or betterment," etc.

So that in my opinion the $20,000 or fund is properly subject to be drawn upon by the park trustees, in payment for the six acres, when it becomes the property of the city, and a part of the old park, either by purchase or appropriation.

This is not a matter of narrow construction, but must be looked at in a practical manner under all the facts. When the council placed in the "park fund" of your city this amount of money, it conferred upon the park trustees the authority to pay therefrom any reasonable amount for acquired territory for park purposes, and the same would fall within the title of your ordinance, "for the purpose of improving and maintaining the public park known as Packard park."

Yours very truly,
TIMOTHY S. HOGAN,
Attorney General.

PRESIDENT OF COUNCIL VOTES IN CASE OF TIE—VACANCY FILLED BY APPOINTMENT BY MAYOR—RIGHTS OF COUNCIL TO PROVIDE FOR ELECTION IN QUESTION OF CITY CHARTER ON OWN INITIATIVE AND UPON PETITION OF ELECTORS—BALLOT TO CONTAIN FIFTEEN NAMES.

When a vacancy arises in the position of president of the council of a city, the same is to be filled by appointment by the mayor, under Section 4252, General Code.

Under Section 4272, General Code, the president of the council of a city is entitled to a vote in case of a tie vote on an ordinance or resolution.

Under proposal forty of the constitutional amendments, council may by a two-thirds vote of its members and on its own initiative, provide for an election upon the question of a city charter. But upon petition of ten per cent. of the electors, it becomes mandatory upon the council to provide for such submission, under the same proposal.

The phrase "provision shall be made thereon for the election of fifteen electors" requires that the ballot shall present at least fifteen names to be voted on by the electors.

COLUMBUS, OHIO, December 21, 1912.

HON. JONATHAN TAYLOR, City Solicitor, Akron, Ohio.

DEAR SIR:—I have your letter of October 18, 1912, in which you ask:

"1. Whether the successor of the president of the council, in case of his resignation, should be appointed by the mayor or council?

"2. In case of a tie vote on an ordinance or resolution is the president of the council entitled to vote thereon?

"3. Should a petition of electors be filed with the council before it provides for submission to electors as to question of city charter?

"4. What is meant in proposal forty by the phrase "provision shall be made thereon for the election of fifteen electors?" How are they nominated, by whom, etc.?"

In reply would say, Section 4252 General Code reads:

"In case of death, resignation, removal or disability of any officer or director of any department of a city, unless otherwise provided by law, the mayor thereof shall fill the vacancy by appointment, and such appointment shall continue for the unexpired term and until a successor is duly appointed, or duly elected and qualified, or until such disability is removed."

In the absence of a specific provision of law for the filling of a vacancy occasioned by the resignation of the president of the council (which I am unable to find) the above section would govern, and the mayor would appoint.

Section 4272 General Code reads:

"The president of council shall be elected for a term of two years, commencing on the first day of January next after his election, and shall serve until his successor is elected and qualified. He shall be an elector of the corporation, and shall preside at all regular and special meetings of council, but shall have no vote therein except in case of a tie."

This answers your second question in the affirmative.

In proposal forty will be found this language:

"The legislative authority of any city or village may by a two-thirds vote of its members, and upon petition of ten per cent. of the electors shall forthwith provide, etc."

This I construe to mean that the council may, by a two-thirds vote of its members, and on its own initiative provide for such election; but upon petition of ten per cent. of the electors it becomes mandatory upon the council to provide for such submission.

Your fourth inquiry raises a question of fact rather than law, the phrase "provision shall be made thereon" refers to the ballot rather than the ordinance, and the ordinance should be so drawn that the ballot provided for the electors should give them an opportunity to select the fifteen electors who shall prepare the charter. A ballot without fifteen names upon it would probably not comply for the reason that it would not afford the electors an opportunity to select. One with a greater number than fifteen, with direction to the electors to vote for any fifteen of the names on the ballot, would no doubt be a ballot sufficiently complying with the amendment.

Yours very truly,

TIMOTHY S. HOGAN,

Attorney General.

ASSESSMENTS—INJUNCTION AGAINST ASSESSMENT FOR STREET IMPROVEMENTS AT MORE THAN ONE-THIRD OF VALUE—REASSESSMENT BY COUNCIL.

Where assessments for street improvements under the foot front rule are made against property in excess of one-third value of the premises, the council, not having determined the value of the property and no committee having been appointed to assess values and determine benefits;

Held: It is best for the lot owner to enjoin and thus compel the council to reassess under Section 3902, General Code.

COLUMBUS, OHIO, December 20, 1912.

HON. R. E. MYGATT, City Solicitor, Conneaut, Ohio.

DEAR SIR:—In your letter of December 6th, you state that two assessments were made against the property of one Kate Murphy, under the foot-front rule; that the same were in excess of one-third of the value of the premises; that the council did not determine the value of the property, and no committee to assess values and determine benefits was appointed, and inquire:

> "Does the city council have such right to fix the value of land assessed for improvements when the assessment is made by the foot-frontage rule and rebate the amount of the assessment to an amount not exceeding one-third of such new valuation, and is there any method of correcting the error except by an injunction proceeding by the property owner in a court of competent jurisdiction?"

You call attention to the opinion of my predecessor in office found on page 1040 of "Opinions of Attorney General for 1910-1911," and state you have been following it.

Section 3902, General Code, reads:

> "When it appears to the council that a special assessment is invalid, by reason of informality or irregularity in the proceedings, or when an assessment is adjudged to be illegal, by a court of competent jurisdiction, the council may order a reassessment, whether the improvement has been made or not."

I can see no reason for taking a different view from that taken by Mr. Denman in his opinion referred to.

The question before him, however, was different from the one you present, in that it was there assumed that council had taken legislative action in the matter, while you state they did not do so.

Whether the omission to do the things mentioned by you (which, if done at the time of making the assessment might not have changed matters) would authorize action to be taken on account of "irregularity or informality" as set forth in Section 3902, is not now necessary to determine, although I incline to the view that it would; but as the easiest way out is for the lot owner to enjoin and thus compel the council to reassess, I think it the best course to be pursued.

Yours very truly,

TIMOTHY S. HOGAN,
Attorney General.

ASSESSMENTS—CITY MUST PAY ONE-FIFTIETH OF COST BUT NOT FOR STREET INTERSECTION OF A SANITARY SEWER—BONDS FOR CITY'S SHARE MAY BE AUTHORIZED IN ORDINANCE PROVIDING BONDS FOR OTHER PURPOSES WHEN IMPROVEMENTS AUTHORIZED BY COUNCIL.

By virtue of Section 3820, General Code, the city is required to pay not less than one-fiftieth of all the cost and expense of a sanitary sewer and of a storm sewer; and in addition thereto the city is required to pay the cost of intersections of a storm sewer, but the city is not required to pay the cost of intersections of a private sanitary sewer with a street.

Where the construction of a sanitary sewer has been provided for and authorized and thereafter bonds are to be issued to pay the city's share, of the cost of such improvement, such bond issue may be provided for in an ordinance which provides for the issue of bonds to pay the share of the city of other street and sewer improvements, when such improvements have been authorized by council.

COLUMBUS, OHIO, November 18, 1912.

HON. CARL J. GUGLER, City Solicitor, Galion, Ohio.

DEAR SIR:—Your favor of October 26, 1912, is received in which you inquire:

> "First. Do the provisions of Section 3820, General Code, that the corporation must pay not less than one-fiftieth of the cost and expense of an improvement and the cost and expense of intersections apply to sewers both sanitary and storm water.
> "Second. Can the city by ordinance provide for a blanket bond issue to raise money to pay the city's cost and expense of improving various streets and in the same ordinance provide for bonds for the city's portion of the cost and expense for sanitary sewers if it is required to pay a part of the cost and expense?"

Section 3820, General Code, to which you refer, provides:

> "The corporation shall pay such part of the cost and expense of improvements for which special assessments are levied as council deems just, which part shall be not less than one-fiftieth of all such cost and expense, and in addition thereto, the corporation shall pay the cost of intersections."

In case of Close vs. Parker, 20 Cir. Dec. 384, the third syllabus reads:

> "The provision of the Municipal Code as to improvements for which special assessments are made that "the corporation shall pay the cost of intersection" (Rev. Stat. 2373; Lan. 3604; B. 1536-213; Mun. Code, Sec. 53) has reference to the parts of street improvements at the intersections of streets, one with another. It has no application to the crossing of a street by a sewer for local sanitary drainage."

This decision was affirmed without report as shown at 79 Ohio State 444.

In commenting upon this decision and its affirmance by the supreme court, Page and Adams say in a note to said Section 3820 of their Annotated General Code:

> "The decision in Ball vs. Portsmouth, 82 O. S. 151, given above, makes likely that the affirmance was for some other reason than the approval of the view herein expressed."

This seems to cast some doubt upon the correctness of the holding in the above case.

Wildman, J., in Close vs. Parker, supra, says on pages 387 and 388:

> "It is claimed also in the petition that the assessment is invalid in that there is no deduction for intersectons. In order that I may state the position of counsel for the plaintiff fairly, I read from his brief:
>
> * * * * * * * * * * * *
>
> " 'From paragraph 8 of the agreed statement it appears that the city was not charged with the cost of any intersection.'
> " 'If the crossing of the streets by sewer 930 forms intersections under the terms of the statute, it is conceded in Par. 7 of the agreed statement that the assessment is excessive by 9.93 per cent.'
>
> "The provisions of the Municipal Code of 1902, relied upon by counsel as changing the character of an intersection the construction of which is to be paid for by the city is Sec. 53 (Rev. Stat. 2373; Lan. 3604; B. 1536-213), which reads in part:
>
> " 'It will be noted that the word "intersections" is here used without definition, but by the former statute were clearly contemplated, as counsel agree, improvements extending along or in streets and the provision was that the city should pay the costs of such improvements in the squares made by the intersections of two streets. The examination that I have given to this matter leads my mind to the conclusion that the word had acquired at the time of the passage of the Municipal Code of 1902 a familiar meaning and that it had reference to intersections of the character described in the statute in force up to and at the time of the passage of the Municipal Code; and although the definition of "intersections" is dropped out, I think that the new section—53 of the Code—still had reference to the same class of intersections that had been before known.' "

Also on pages 388 and 389, he further says:

> "This entire legislation and adjudication as to intersections is based upon the idea that the part of the improvement at such intersections is connected with a street improvement to be paid for by assessment. If the property owners are benefited by the general street improvement, assessment is to be made upon such property owners along the street where the other expenses are being assessed. Upon the same principle, if a sanitary sewer is, at the intersection, still for the benefit of the people whose land it drains, although it crosses the street, the owners of the property drained should equitably pay the expenses. The city derives no benefit from a sanitary sewer at the point of crossing a street. The city does not need it. It is not there to take off the surface water; it is not for the purpose of draining the street, but it is for the purpose of caring for the sanitary drainage of the lots which are assessed. Both upon authorities, so far as we are able to find them, and upon principle, as it seems to us, the cost of the improvement at the kind of interesection we have here, should not be paid by the city. To the extent that the city is in any way benefited by this sanitary drainage, as I have already suggested, the city does pay one-fiftieth of the cost."

The court bases its decision upon the ground that the city as a whole does not need the sanitary sewer and is not benefited by such sewer at the point it crosses the street. And for these reasons the city is not required to pay the cost of the intersection. This reasoning, as intimated by the court, does not apply to a sewer which drains the surface water and does not exempt the city from paying one-fiftieth of the entire cost. A storm sewer, as I take it, is used to drain the surface water.

The total assessment in this case was affirmed by the supreme court. From the above quotation from the opinion it appears that it was found in the agreed statement of facts that the city did not deduct for intersections and because of such failure to allow for intersections the "assessments is excessive by 9.93 per cent." The record in the supreme court is not before us, but in view of the above finding of fact, the supreme court could not have affirmed this decision and thereby make the entire assessment valid, without holding that the city was not required to pay for intersections in the case of a special assessment for the construction of a sanitary sewer.

In Ball vs. the City of Portsmouth, 82 Ohio St., 151, referred to in the above note as casting doubt upon the holding in Close vs. Parker, supra, it is held:

"The provision of Section 53, Municipal Code of 1902, which requires the corporation to "pay the costs of intersections" when streets are improved includes all manholes, catch basins and tiling at intersections."

This case arose out of an assessment for the improvement of a street and the manholes, catch basins and tiling at intersections were used for draining the surface water. There is no intimation that it was part of a sanitary sewer.

The court say on page 152:

"With respect to catch basins, manholes and tiling, their location in street improvements is determined by considerations which address themselves to engineers. When they are so located as to become a part of the intersections, the cost of their construction is imposed upon the city in terms which are too plain to admit of interpretation. If there were occasion to seek the reason for the provision of the statute it might be found in the fact that all that is included within the intersections is to be used in the improvement of the crossing streets when such improvements shall be made, and manifest inequality would result from assessing the cost of their construction upon property abutting upon the street first improved."

In Close vs. Parker, 20 Cir. Dec. 384, supra, the court refers to the provisions of the former statute. This is Section 2274 of the Revised Statutes. Said section read in Bates Revised Statutes of 1902, as follows:

> "That when the council of a city, except in cities of the first grade of the first class, and in cities of the first grade of the second class, determines to grade, pave, sewer, or otherwise improve a street, alley or other public highway, and the improvement crosses or intersects another street, alley or public highway, the council shall levy and assess a tax, in addition to that specified in the last section, upon the general tax list of all the taxable real and personal property in the corporation, for the estimated cost and expense of so much of the improvement as may be included in the crossing or intersection of such street, alley or highway, which amount the corporation clerk shall certify to the county auditor, and the same shall be enforced against such real and personal property as other taxes are enforced and collected; and such amount may be so certified, and such levy made, after the contract is let, or said improvement completed, and the provisions hereof shall apply to improvements already determined upon or ordered and for the payment of which special assessments have not been made."

This section applied to the improvement of a street, alley or other public highway and did not apply to a sanitary sewer.

The decision in Ball vs. The City of Portsmouth, supra, does not necessarily overrule the holding in Close vs. Parker, supra. The two cases are clearly distinguishable.

I am of opinion, therefore, that by virtue of Section 3820, General Code, the city is required to pay not less than one-fiftieth of all the cost and expense of a sanitary sewer and also of a storm sewer; and that in addition thereto the city is required to pay the cost of intersections of a storm sewer, but the city is not required to pay the cost of the intersection of a sanitary sewer with a street.

Your second inquiry is in reference to the right of the council to provide for the issue of bonds to pay the city's share of the cost of sanitary sewers by the same ordinance in which it provides for bonds for payment of the city's share of various street improvements.

In Heffner vs. Toledo, 75 Ohio St., 413, it is held:

> "An ordinance to provide for the issuing of bonds to pay the city's part of the cost of thirty-two street and sewer improvements, entitled: "An ordinance to provide for the issue of general street improvement bonds of the city of Toledo, state of Ohio, to pay said city's part of the cost and expense of improving sundry streets and alleys by paving, repaving, grading and macadamizing, and by constructing sewers therein and to pay the said city's part of the cost and expense of constructing such sewers," is not in conflict with the statutory requirement that "No by-law or ordinance shall contain more than one subject, which shall be clearly expressed in its title."
> "A city is not authorized to issue bonds to provide a fund from which to pay its part of the cost of improvements that may from time to time be made, but it may, under Section 53 of the Municipal

Code of 1902, Section 1536-213, Revised Statutes, or under Section 2835, Revised Statutes, issue bonds to pay its part of the cost of specific improvements.

"The bonds authorized by Section 53 of the Municipal Code of 1902 cannot be provided for by resolution or ordinance until after the passage of an ordinance providing for the improvement.

"Under Section 2835, Revised Statutes, the council of the city may by a resolution or ordinance, passed by the affirmative vote of not less than two-thirds of the members elected or appointed thereto, provide for the issuing of bonds to pay the city's part of the cost of a specific improvement before the passage of a resolution declaring the necessity for the improvement."

By virtue of this decision the city is not authorized to issue bonds to provide a fund from which to pay its share of the cost of improvements which may from time to time be made.

The part of Section 1536-213, Revised Statutes, which authorized the city to issue its bonds for its share of the cost of improvements is now found in Section 3821, General Code, which reads:

"A municipality may issue and sell bonds as other bonds are sold to pay the corporation's part of any such improvement, and may levy taxes in addition to all other taxes authorized by law to pay such bonds and the interest thereon."

As held in the above case the bonds to be issued by virtue of Section 3821, General Code, cannot be issued "until after the passage of an ordinance providing for the improvement."

The provisions of Section 2835, Revised Statutes, referred to in the above case are now found in Sections 3939, et seq., General Code. As held therein bonds may be issued by a city under this section for its share of the cost of a specific improvement before the passage of an ordinance providing for the improvement. I take it that in your case it is desired to issue the bonds by virtue of Section 3821, General Code, after the improvement has been provided for.

Summers, J., says on page 425 of Heffner vs. Toledo, supra:

"The issuing of bonds to pay the city's part of the cost of such improvements is merely incidental to the making of the improvement, and council cannot provide for the making of the separate improvements without the concurrence of three-fourths of the whole number of members elected to council, unless the owners of a majority of the foot frontage to be assessed petition in writing therefor, and in that event the concurrence of a majority of the whole number elected is essential. And if a greater part of the cost of the improvement than that required by statute is to be paid by the corporation, it must be provided for in the resolution or ordinance providing for the improvement. It would seem, therefore, that the ordinance in question is not within the mischief intended to be prevented by the statute."

In this case the ordinance provided for the issue of bonds to pay the city's share of the cost of making thirty-two street improvements and for constructing sewers therein. The court decided that the bonds for such purpose could be provided for in one ordinance because the issuing of bonds to pay the city's share of the cost of such improvement was incidental to the improvement itself. So in the case of a sanitary sewer, the issuing of bonds by the city to pay its share of the cost is an incident to the improvement. The improvement is provided for by a separate proceeding. The same reason applies to each class of improvement.

I am, therefore, of the opinion that where the construction of a sanitary sewer has been provided for and authorized and thereafter bonds are to be issued to pay the city's share of the cost of such improvement, such bond issue may be provided for in an ordinance which provides for the issue of bonds to pay the share of the city of other street and sewer improvements when such improvements have been authorized by council.

CITY HALL—APPOINTMENT OF COMMISSION OF PROCURING LAND AND FURNISHING BY DIRECTORS OF PUBLIC SERVICE IS DIRECTORY AND NOT MANDATORY—BOND BY COMMISSIONERS TO CITY TO BE FIXED BY COUNCIL—SUPERVISION OF WORK BY DIRECTOR OF PUBLIC SERVICE.

When the electors of a municipality have authorized the building of a city hall, the director of public service may or may not, as he sees fit, employ a commissioner of five citizens of the city, under Section 4375, General Code, to act under his supervision in procuring land and furnishing said building.

Said Section 4335, General Code, is directory and not mandatory, as the word "may" is only to be construed as "must" or "shall" when the public good or a claim "de inre" demands such construction.

The members of the commission have power to make contracts and should be required by either council or the director of public service to give bond, the amount of which should be fixed by council under Section 4214, General Code.

Such bond is for the benefit of the municipality which is a corporation with power to sue and be sued, and should, therefore, be given to the city and not to the state.

All the work and proceedings of the commission are subject to the approval of the director of public service, who is an ex-officio member. His approval of the action of the commission may be made at any time after the action is taken.

COLUMBUS, OHIO, December 21, 1912.

HON. JOHN F. NEILAN, City Solicitor, Hamilton, Ohio.

DEAR SIR:—Your favor of November 21, 1912, is received in which you inquire:

> "The council of the city of Hamilton, Ohio, by resolution declared the necessity of issuing $200,000 worth of bonds for the purpose of erecting a public hall and public offices or city building. Since the amount of money required necessitated the submission of the question to the qualified electors of the city of Hamilton, the said question was submitted to such electors on the 5th day of November, 1912, and more than two-thirds of the electors voting upon this proposition voted in favor of issuing the said bonds for the aforesaid purpose.

"The director of public service has written me, as city solicitor, in order that he may be advised as to his full duties with regard to employment of five citizens, or whatever number he may be authorized to employ, who shall constitute a commission for procuring the necessary land for the construction or for the furnishing of such city hall."

"I should like to have you advise me:

"First. Whether the director of public service ought not to proceed under Section 4335 of the General Code?

"Second. Whether in your opinion the provisions contained in Section 4335 are directory or mandatory?

"Third. Whether the director of public service is authorized to require the five persons employed by him and constituting the city building commission, to give bond for the faithful performance of their duties, and if said commission can be required to give bond, whether the said bond shall run to the city of Hamilton, or to the state of Ohio?

"Fourth. Whether the director of public service is required to meet with such commission, or may simply approve their action in any matter by making his approval a part of the record of such commission?"

Section 4335, General Code, provides:

"When a city has in contemplation or in process of construction or furnishing a city hall, the director of public service may employ five citizens of such city, to be named by him, not more than three of whom shall belong to the same political party, who shall constitute a commission, under his supervision and direction, for procuring the necessary land for the construction, or for the furnishing of such city hall."

This section applies when the city desires to construct a city hall. A city hall is a building to be used for municipal offices of the city. Such building in addition to the offices often contains a public hall.

Section 4339, General Code, provides:

"When a city has in contemplation or in process of construction a market house or houses or public hall in connection therewith, the director of public service may employ three citizens of the city, to be named by him, who shall constitute a commission."

This section applies to the construction of a market house or houses or a public hall in connection therewith. The public hall contemplated by this section is a hall in connection with a market house. It does not apply to the construction of a building such as you describe.

Section 4343, General Code, provides:

"When a city, or the county in which such city is located, has in contemplation or in process of construction, buildings for public, municipal or county purposes within the boundaries of such city, the director of public service may employ three persons, to be named by him, of whom at least two shall be architects."

This is a general statute which will apply to any building to be constructed and used for municipal purposes. Section 4335, General Code, specifically provides for the construction of a city hall. It is a special statute for this purpose, and it should govern in such case as against the general statute.

If it is desired to appoint a commission to construct the city building in question the director of public service should proceed under Section 4335, General Code.

The provision of Section 4335, General Code, is that,

"the director of public service may employ five citizens of such city * * * who shall constitute a commission."

You ask if this provision is mandatory or if it is merely directory.

The word "may" is used and the ordinary construction of "may" is that it prescribes that which is directory.

At page 1160 of 36 Cyc. it is said:

"As a general rule the word 'may,' when used in a statute, is permissive only and operates to confer discretion, while the words 'shall' and 'must' are imperative, operating to impose a duty which may be enforced. These words, however, are constantly used in statutes without regard to their literal meaning; and in each case are to be given that effect which is necessary to carry out the intention of the legislature as determined by the ordinary rules of construction. Thus the word 'may' should be construed to be mandatory whenever the public or individuals have a claim de jure that the power conferred should be exercised, or whenever something is directed to be done for the sake of justice or the public good; but never for the purpose of creating a right."

In Sifford vs. Beaty, 12 Ohio St., 189, Peck, J., says at page 194:

"In Schuyler Co. vs. Mercer Co., 5 Cowen, 24, the rule on this subject is said to be, 'that the word may means must or shall only, in cases where the public interests or rights are concerned, and where the public or third persons have a claim de jure that the power shall be exercised."

The word "may" as used in statutes usually implies a discretion and the usual construction is that the provision is directory and not mandatory.

Section 4324, General Code, provides:

"The director of public service shall manage and supervise all public works and undertakings of the city, except as otherwise provided by law, and shall have all powers and perform all duties conferred upon him by law. He shall keep a record of his proceedings a copy of which, certified by him, shall be competent evidence in all courts.

Section 4325, General Code, provides:

> "The director of public service shall supervise the improvement and repair of streets, avenues, alleys, lands, lanes, squares, wharves, docks, landings, market houses, bridges, viaducts, aqueducts, sidewalks, play grounds, sewers, drains, ditches, culverts, ship canals, streams and water courses, the lighting, sprinkling and cleaning of public places, the construction of public improvements and public works, except those having reference to the department of public safety or as otherwise provided in this title."

Section 4326, General Code, provides:

> "The director of public service shall manage municipal water, lighting, heating, power, garbage and other undertakings of the city, parks, baths, play grounds, market houses, cemeteries, crematories, sewage disposal plants and farms, and shall make and preserve surveys, maps, plans, drawings and estimates. He shall supervise the construction and have charge of the maintenance of public buildings and other property of the corporation not otherwise provided for in this title. He shall have the management of all other matters provided by the council in connection with the public service of the city."

By virtue of these sections the director of public service is authorized to supervise and manage the construction of public improvements.

It is my opinion that the director of public service may construct said city building under the authority granted by Sections 4324, 4325 and 4326, General Code, or, if he desires, he may appoint a commission of five citizens under the provisions of Sections 4335, et seq., General Code.

The word "may" as used in said Section 4335, General Code, is directory and is not mandatory. This is not a question of right or of public policy. It is a question of administration in the construction of this building.

Your third inquiry is in reference to the bond to be given by such commissioners.

Section 4338, General Code, provides:

> "The commissioners shall each receive such compensation, not to exceed five dollars each per meeting, as the director of public service may fix, but such compensation shall not in any case exceed twelve hundred dollars per annum each, which, together with the expenses of the commissioners shall be paid in the same manner as the cost of such city hall."

This section prescribes the method of fixing the compensation, but nothing is said about the giving of a bond.

Section 4214, General Code, provides:

> "Except as otherwise provided in this title, council, by ordinance or resolution, shall determine the number of officers, clerks and employes in each department of the city government, and shall fix by ordinance or resolution their respective salaries and compensation, and the amount of bond to be given for each officer, clerk or employe in each department of the government, if any be required. Such bond shall be made by such officer, clerk or employe, with surety subject to the approval of the mayor."

Section 4667, General Code, provides:

"The official bonds of all municipal officers shall be prepared by the solicitor. Except as otherwise provided in this title, they shall be in such sum as the council prescribes by general or special ordinance and be subject to the approval of the mayor, except that the mayor's bond shall be approved by the council, or, if it is not legally organized, by the clerk of the court of common pleas of the county in which the corporation or the larger part thereof is situated."

By virtue of Section 4214, General Code, council may fix the amount of bond to be given by each commissioner.

Section 4336, General Code, provides:

"Subject to the approval of the director of public service, such commissioners may acquire in the name of the city, by purchase or appropriation, land for city hall purposes, may employ architects and approve plans and specifications. They shall make in the name of the city all contracts necessary for the construction and furnishing of such city hall, which shall be made after advertisement for bidding, as provided by law for the making of other municipal contracts, and shall be subject to the approval of the director of public service. They shall keep a full record of their proceedings."

By virtue of this section, the commission, under the supervision of the director of public service, has the power to make contracts for the city. An officer having such power should give a bond for the faithful discharge of his duties.

The members of the commission may be required, either by council or by the director of public service, to give a bond. Council shall fix the amount of such bond.

The statute is silent as to the obligee in the bond of a municipal officer. In the case of county officers the statute usually provides that the state of Ohio shall be the obligee. A county, however, is but a quasi-corporation, while a municipality is a corporation in fact, with full power to sue by its corporate name.

Section 4308, General Code, provides:

"When required so to do by resolution of the council, the solicitor shall prosecute or defend, as the case may be, for and in behalf of the corporation, all complaints, suits and controversies in which the corporation is a party, and such other suits, matters and controversies as he shall, by resolution or ordinance, be directed to prosecute, but shall not be required to prosecute any action before the mayor for the violation of an ordinance without first advising such action."

The bond of a municipal officer is for the use and benefit of the municipality. The municipal corporation can sue in its corporate name and it is the proper obligee of such a bond.

The bond of the commissioners in question, if any, is required, should be given to the city of Hamilton.

You next inquire as to the manner in which the director of public service shall exercise his supervision over the work of the commission.

There are but four sections which apply to the commission in question. Three are given above. The other one is Section 4337, General Code, which reads:

> "Such commissioners shall select from their number a president, and they may appoint a clerk and other necessary employes, and, subject to the approval of such director, fix their compensation."

It will be observed that all the work and proceedings of the commission is subject to the approval of the director of public service.

The director of public service is not made an ex-officio member of the commission. The action of the commission upon a subject may be at a different time than the action of the director of public service on the same matter.

In my opinion the director of public service is not required to meet with the commission, although he may do so. His approval of the action of the commission may be made at any time after such action is taken.

Respectfully,

TIMOTHY S. HOGAN,

Attorney General.

TABERNACLE NOT AN ASSEMBLY HALL AND NOT WITHIN BUILDING CODE.

Under the doctrine of "noscitur a sociis" a temporary tabernacle constructed for revival purposes is not such an assembly hall as was intended to be included within the terms of Section 12600-2, General Code.

Such buildings were intended to be treated under the heading of "churches," with reference to which the legislature has as yet failed to act.

Such a building cannot, therefore, be held to come within the building code and is not required to be fireproof.

COLUMBUS, OHIO, December 24, 1912.

HON. E. K. WILCOX, City Solicitor, Cleveland, Ohio.

DEAR SIR:—Your favor of December 6, 1912, is received in which you inquire:

> "A committee representing various affiliated religious bodies here has presented plans to the office of the inspector of buildings covering the erection of a tabernacle, in which it is proposed to hold, for a period of six weeks, evangelistic services. The building, as designed, will accommodate four thousand persons, and it is proposed to erect it of frame construction, wooden sides and a wooden roof, overlaid with tar paper. The building code of the city of Cleveland prohibits the erection of a building of this sort and of this size. In view of the isolated location, however, and of the temporary use to which the building is to be put, it has been thought that upon the advice of the inspector of buildings, and of the fire chief, the council of Cleveland might be willing to abate, in this exceptional instance, the application of the local regulation.

"Another difficulty arises, however, from the fact that in the opinion of the inspector of buildings the state building code also prohibits this building. The matter was laid before the mayor, and he expresses the opinion that whatever might be the possibility of relaxation of the local regulation, he was without power to relax in any particular the state regulation on the subject. It was then suggested that similar tabernacles either have recently been or are now in process of being erected in Columbus and other cities of the state, and that in all likelihood the question had been raised in your office as to whether the state building code, dealing with assembly halls covers such temporary buildings.

"At the request of the mayor, I am writing to ask whether in the opinion of your office the state building code does cover the case. Title I of the state building code covers assembly halls, and among other things groups within the definition of those words buildings in which more than one hundred persons assemble for the purpose of hearing lecturers or speakers. Comprehensive provision is made that all assembly halls having a seating capacity of a thousand or more must be of fireproof construction, so that if the proposed tabernacle building is an assembly hall within the meaning of the state code, it would be prohibited, unless of fireproof construction.

"The only argument suggested by those who appeal to the mayor on this subject which would exclude the proposed building from the operation of this clause is that the building is to be temporary, and after having been used for six weeks, is to be removed."

Section 12600-2, General Code, defines "Assembly Hall" as follows:

"Under the classification of 'assembly halls' are included all buildings or parts of buildings in which persons are assembled for entertainment or amusement, including halls used for lodge rooms or dancing, and all places where persons congregate to witness vaudeville, burlesque, dramatic or operatic performances, to hear speakers or lecturers, to listen to operas, concerts or musical entertainments in which no scenery is used and no motion pictures are thrown upon canvas, screens or walls, and seating one hundred (100) or more persons."

The real question to determine is whether the building described in your letter is an assembly hall under the statutory definition of the same as contained in the section of the act just quoted. You say that the building as designed will accommodate four thousand persons, and it is proposed to erect it of frame construction, wooden sides and a wooden roof, overlaid with tarred paper; and that it is proposed to hold in the building for a period of six weeks evangelistic services. You further advise as follows:

"It was then suggested that similar tabernacles either have recently been or are now in process of being erected in Columbus and other cities of the state."

Let me say in the beginning that the real test of the building seems to be the use to which it is to be put, and the opinion arrived at in this opinion is based solely on the facts stated in your letter, "that it is proposed to hold therein evangelistic services, and the further fact contained by inference in your letter that the building is to be what is known as a "tabernacle." To determine whether or not the building in question is embraced within the term "assembly hall" requires a consideration of more than an interpretation of the section itself which defines assembly halls were such section standing alone; it is necessary to go to the preamble of the section, found on page 588 of 102 Ohio Laws, as follows:

PREAMBLE

"Under part two which follows, will be found under their respective titles, the various classes of buildings covered by this code together with the special requirements for their respective design, construction and equipment.

Classes of Buildings

"The classification of the various buildings will be found under the following tiles, viz.:

"Title 1. Theaters and assembly halls.
"Title 2. Churches.
"Title 3. School buildings.
"Title 4. Asylumns, hospitals and homes.
"Title 5. Hotels, lodging houses, apartments and tenement houses.
"Title 6. Club and lodge buildings.
"Title 7. Workshops, factories and mercantile establishments.

"Buildings or parts of buildings used only for the specific purposes mentioned under their respective titles and classification shall be designed, constructed and equipped as called for under all of the sections coming under such title and classification.

"Buildings used for two or more different kinds of occupancy and combining the classifications covered under two or more different titles shall be designed, constructed and equipped according to all of the various sections of the different titles affecting such building or parts of such building.

"The detailed requirements of the above mentioned special requirements, together with standard devices, will be found in subsequent parts of this code."

It will be noted further that requirements were provided by the legislature for only the following:

"Title 1. Theaters and assembly halls.
"Title 3. School buildings."

The legislature for some reason failed, either by design or through inadvertence, to determine the requirements for the other titles, and much significance is to be attached to this. It will be noticed that the legislature provided as to what are included under the head of "school buildings" thus defining school buildings, so that for the purposes of this act, in so far as the legislature went, it made its own definitions for terms, and doubtless will continue to do so when further legislation is enacted. These terms may or may not be identical with what are known as dictionary definitions as to such terms. Generally speaking, legislative definitions of terms are made for the purpose of removing doubt as to what is ordinarily included within a given term. In the present instance it appears in a way to have created, instead of removing, doubt. In my judgment, without reflecting on the considerations hereinafter referred to in reference to the word "church," it would be extremely doubtful whether a building used for the purposes you name would come under the head of buildings in which persons are assembled to hear speakers or lecturers in the light of the other subjects referred to under the head of assembly halls.

You will observe under the classification of assembly halls are included:

> "* * * all buildings or parts of buildings in which persons are assembled for entertainment or amusement, including halls used for lodge rooms or dancing, and, all places where persons congregate to witness vaudeville, burlesque, dramatic or operatic performances, to hear speakers or lecturers, to listen to operas, concerts or musical entertainments * * *"

Through this rings the idea of entertainment and amusement, or for purposes temporal rather than spiritual. The maxim "Noscitur a Sociis" applies. It is true that there is no limitation on the word speakers or lecturers, but we have to consider it in the light of its surroundings, and its surroundings are "entertainment, amusement, lodge rooms, dancing, vaudeville, burlesque, dramatic or operatic performance, and likewise operas, concerts and musical entertainments."

If it were a place where lecturers were given on some general subject as a business proposition, or where speaking was held under circumstances in which the exercises are commonly referred to as "Speeches," doubtless the section would apply; or a lecture in the sense where tickets are sold by the management when the lectures are given. I do not gather that the building is to be used for any of the purposes I have indicated."

I suppose that under the head of "similar tabernacles erected in Columbus and other cities of the state" you refer to what are known as "Mr. Sunday's tabernacles." The Sunday exercises do not seem to me to be embraced within the scope of the things contained in the section defining assembly halls. They are entirely of a religious nature, and if I am rightly informed are akin to what are commonly known as "revivals" without being, as I understand it, in charge of any particular denomination. The exercises consist of singing hymns, prayer services, the delivery of a sermon, and last but by no means the least indicia of a religious exercise, the taking up of a collection. The whole affair is voluntary.

> "Webster defines an 'evangelist' as 'an occasional preacher having no fixed charge, a traveling missionary, as, among the Disciples of Christ, a minister who organizes church societies and sets churches and their officers in order; especially among various Protestant denominations, a minister or layman who goes about from place to place preaching at special services to awaken religious interest and produce conversions."

So that, as I understand it, the only difference between one of these buildings and a regular church is that the former are temporary in character. If the building you describe were an assembly hall the fact that it was to be used temporarily would be immaterial; its use for assembly hall purposes temporarily would violate the law just as well as if used permanently. The exercises at these evangelistic meetings, as I understand it, are no wise different in their general nature from revival exercises in Methodist churches. I am speaking now of their general scope.

Another distinction might perhaps be drawn, and that is the exercises are, as before said, non-denominational in character. This difference, however, does not detract from the main idea, and that is in the contemplation of the building code such tabernacles are left to be embraced under the head of Title 2—Churches. Had the legislature finished with the work of the building code and given us a definition of churches, the cloud would be removed, but in my judgment a legislative body in providing for the requirements as to tabernacles would be much more likely to put them under the genus churches than under the genus assembly halls because of the very nature of the exercises.

What is a tabernacle? Webster defines tabernacle as:

> "A slightly built or temporary habitation; a transient shelter, a tent. Jewish Antiquity. A structure of wooden framework covered with curtains, carried through the wilderness in the exodus, as a place of sacrifice and worship."

It will thus be seen that originally the word referred to habitation; it really means a hut or shed; by reason of its temporary nature—a church, but for temporal purposes was called a "tabernacle," but its real nature is to be determined by the services. The tabernacle is no less a church because of its temporary qualities.

On account of the importance attached to this question I have given it most careful consideration, appreciating the fact that such structures are sometimes dangerous and quite frequently pronounced unsafe by the police authorities. In respect to the building code and the safety of the health and life of the public, I regard it as my duty to be exceedingly careful lest any provision of the statutes in respect to the public's safety be frittered away by interpretation, but after the most careful consideration I am firmly pursuaded that the legislature has failed to make provision for the requirements as to the construction of the kind of buildings to which you refer. Until the legislature acts on the question, the public must rely upon the safety and welfare promised in the hereafter rather than the safety which the building code is designed to afford.

Very truly yours,

TIMOTHY S. HOGAN,
Attorney General.

MUNICIPAL CORPORATIONS—CONTRACT IN EXCESS OF $500.00 WITHOUT CERTIFICATE OF AUDITOR, VOID—MONEY VOLUNTARILY PAID BY CITY CANNOT BE RECOVERED, HOWEVER, IN ABSENCE OF FRAUD.

When a city council has entered into a contract for repairs to a heating system in a public building in an amount exceeding $500.00, without advertising for bids and without the certification of the auditor to the effect that there are sufficient funds in the treasury unappropriated to any other purpose, such contract is void and the city cannot legally pay for the same.

When money has been voluntarily paid on such contract, however, when there is no evidence of unfairness or fraud in the making or execution of the contract, there can be no recovery from the city of the money so paid. Since the debt in this case is an honest one, payment is advised. Such procedure should not, however, be accounted as a precedent.

COLUMBUS, OHIO, December 24, 1912.

HON. ARTHUR J. WHITE, City Solicitor, Delaware, Ohio.

DEAR SIR:—I beg to acknowledge receipt of your letter of October 29, 1912, which is as follows:

> "I am enclosing you a transcript of the proceedings leading up to the question of the payment of the bills of Wolfley, Marnell, Williams & Co., of this city.
>
> "This matter was brought to your attention some time ago by the city auditor, the city engineer and myself and you advised us at that time that this firm could not legally collect the money due them.
> "This transcript contains the resolution of council authorizing the board of control to enter into a contract for heating the city building; the contract for heating as entered into by the service director, in which contract is found the clause providing for the repairs to be made to the heating system; the resolutions of council to borrow money to pay for these repairs; the opinions of the city solicitor in regard to the payment of the bills in excess of $500.00 and the resolution of the present city council authorizing the city auditor to pay the balance due this firm with interest.
> "Under the provisions of the contract for heating the city building, the firm of Wolfley, Marnell, Williams & Co. was employed to make the necessary repairs to the heating system. It seems at the time they were employed, no estimate could be given of the probable cost of the work, but that the same was to be done by day's work. Council provided $500.00 for the payment of the work, but found this is not enough, and another note for $600.00 was issued. When this amount was used up and there were still unpaid bills, council refused to borrow any more money and there is now a balance due this firm of $689.50, for the payment of which there has been no provision made.
> "It seems that these bills are just and should be paid. Will you kindly render me your opinion as to whether this firm can be paid?"

Your letter discloses that the Delaware city council authorized the board of control to enter into a contract with the Delaware Electric Light, Heat & Power Company, for heating the city building, by resolution passed November 15, 1910; that in accordance with said resolution, on the twenty-first day of November, 1910, the city of Delaware, through its board of control, entered into a contract, as party of the second part, with the said the Delaware Electric Light, Heat & Power Company, as party of the first part. Section 3 of said contract provides as follows:

> "The second party agrees to overhaul the heating system now installed within the city hall building and put it in good order under the supervision and approval of first party, and after the overhauling, repairing and changing has been done, the first party will accept same and give a written approval and acceptance; stating in said acceptance that the second party has put the heating system in good order, suitable to first party for heating the building, after which, if any further changes should become necessary by reason of remodeling the building or changing the radiating surface, or any other changes or repairs to said heating system, the second party will before making such changes notify the first party and the first party will, without cost, direct the changes of the system and all changes must be done according to the direction of first party, and will upon notice of said changes, approve the same in writing. But the expense thereof shall be paid by said second party."

Your letter, and the exhibits thereto attached, further disclose that, for the purpose of making the said repairs, as set forth in Section 3 of said contract, the council of the city of Delaware, by resolution, passed October 18, 1910, authorized the proper city officials to borrow money and issue notes, chargeable to the city of Delaware, Ohio, in the sum of $500.00, to be used in repairing the heating system in the city hall building of said city; and that on November 15, 1910, the city council of said city of Delaware, passed another resolution, authorizing the proper city authorities to borrow money and issue notes, chargeable to the city of Delaware, Ohio, in the sum of $600.00, for the purpose of repairing and improving the heating system of the city hall building of said city. A third resolution was passed by said city council, on April 8, 1912, authorizing the city auditor to pay $689.50 to the firm of Wolfley, Marnell, Williams & Company, said amount being the balance due for repairing and putting in good order the heating system of the Delaware city hall. Said resolution is as follows:

> "Be it resolved by the council of the city of Delaware, state of Ohio:
> "Section 1. That the auditor of the city of Delaware, Ohio, be and he is hereby authorized and directed to pay the sum of $689.50 with interest from February 1, 1911, to Wolfley, Marnell, Williams & Co., in settlement in full to date of all claims held by said Wolfley, Marnell, Williams & Co., against the city of Delaware."

The expenditure involved in making such repairs was in excess of $500.00; and in this opinion we are only concerned with the procedure of the city of Delaware in making said repairs to the heating system in the city hall building. In making said repairs it was incumbent upon the officials of the city of Delaware to proceed as directed by the municipal code. The director of public service, in the present instance, entered into a contract for such repairing and by reason of the fact that the amount involved exceeded $500.00 in amount; therefore, the expenditure should have been first authorized by ordinance of council of said city, after which the director of public service could have entered into a written contract with the lowest and best bidder, after advertising for bids for not less than two nor more than four consecutive weeks, in a newspaper of general circulation within the city, as provided in Section 4328, General Code, which is as follows:

> "The director of public service may make any contract or purchase supplies or material or provide labor for any work under the supervision of that department not involving more than five hundred dollars. When an expenditure within the department, other than a compensation of persons employed therein, exceeds five hundred dollars, such expenditure shall first be authorized and directed by ordinance of council. When so authorized and directed, the director of public service shall make a written contract with the lowest and best bidder after advertising for not less than two nor more than four consecutive weeks in a newspaper of general circulation within the city."

It does not appear that the provisions of the so-called "Burns law," now Section 3806, General Code, were followed. Such provisions require that before any contract, agreement or other obligation for the expenditure of money is entered into, or before any ordinance, resolution or order, for the expenditure of money, shall be passed by the proper municipal authorities, the auditor or clerk of such municipality shall first certify to council or to the proper board that the money required for such contract, agreement, or other obligation, or to pay such expenditure, is in the treasury to the credit of the fund from which it is to be drawn and not appropriated for any other purpose. Said Section 3806 of the General Code is as follows:

> "No contract, agreement or other obligation involving the expenditure of money shall be entered into, nor shall any ordinance, resolution or order for the expenditure of money, be passed by the council or by any board or officer of a municipal corporation, unless the auditor or clerk thereof first certifies to council or to the proper board, as the case may be, that the money required for such contract, agreement or other obligation, or to pay such appropriation or expenditure, is in the treasury to the credit of the fund from which it is to be drawn, and not appropriated for any other purpose, which certificate shall be filed and immediately recorded. The sum so certified shall not thereafter be considered unappropriated until the corporation is discharged from the contract, agreement or obligation, or so long as the ordinance, resolution or order is in force."

The Ohio supreme court, in construing the above quoted sections, holds that a municipality cannot obligate itself except in strict accordance with the statutes of Ohio.

> "1. A contract entered into by a municipal corporation, by which, in its own behalf, it undertakes to pay for the construction of a sewer in one of its streets, the cost of which exceeds five hundred dollars, imposes no valid obligation on the corporation, unless it has advertised for bids according to the requirements of Section 2303, Revised Statutes.

"2. Nor will such contract impose on a corporation a valid obligation even if bids were advertised for pursuant to said Section 2303, unless the auditor, or clerk, of the corporation, as the case may be, 'shall first certify that the money required for' that purpose 'is in the treasury to the credit of the fund from which it is to be drawn,' etc., as required by Section 2702, Revised Statutes.

"3. Where either of such requirements has been omitted the municipality will not by the acts of its officers be estopped to set up such omission as a defense to an action brought against it on such contract."

Lancaster vs. Miller, 58 O. S. 558 (Syllabus 1, 2 and 3).

At page 575 of the opinion in this case the court say:

"It would be idle to enact those statutes, and afterward permit their practical abrogation by neglect or other misconduct of the officers of the municipality. If such effect should be given to such acts of municipal officers it would defeat the operation of the statutes. The strict enforcement of these provisions may occasionally cause instances of injustice; it is possible that municipal bodies may secure benefits under a contract thus declared void and refuse to make satisfaction. In the nature of things, however, these instances will be rare. Those who deal with public agencies entrusted with the management of municipal affairs, usually experience liberal treatment. Such agencies are not stimulated to acts of injustice by cupidity. Self-interest, that great motive to overreaching, is absent. If, however, cases of hardship occur, they should be attributed to the folly of him who entered into the invalid contract. The gateways of municipal prodigality should not be left wide open, because an attempt to narrow them may cause an occasional instance of seeming hardship.

"While there is implied municipal liability at common law, the statutes of this state provide the manner in which contracts, agreements, obligations and appropriations shall be made and entered into by municipalities, and they cannot be entered into otherwise than as provided by statute."

Wellston vs. Morgan, 65 O. S. 219 (1st Syl.).

It is unfortunate that the above quoted sections were not followed. Even though the bills referred to in your inquiry are just, nevertheless a municipal corporation is without authority to expend money except in the manner authorized by statute; and I am, therefore, of the opinion that the unpaid bills, referred to by you, cannot legally be paid, for the reasons above set forth.

Coming now to the final disposition of this case, it is a pity there is not some effective remedy provided by law to cast full responsibility upon those who proceed, in utter disregard of the statutes, in the making of contracts. It is most distressing to an official to be put in the attitude of having to explain why an honest debt should not be paid. It is equally distressing to witness the attempt, on the part of officials, to shift responsibility. I verbally advised the committee that waited on me that no objection would be made by this department to the payment of whatever part of this bill is an honest debt, or to all of it, if it is an honest debt. Under the principle laid down in the case of State ex rel. Hunt, Prosecuting Attorney, vs. Fronizer, et al., 77 O. S. 7, if deficiencies exist in the contract, through inadvertence, there being no claim of unfairness of fraud in the making, or fraud or extortion in the execution of such contract, for work done or labor performed; and if the city has received and is holding the benefits of the contract, and the city voluntarily pays the bill, no recovery for the amount so paid can be had.

If, therefore, the proper authority in your city sees fit to pay this bill in so far as the same is just, no recovery can be had, and the matter, for all practical purposes can be legally regarded as closed. I do not like to give countenance to this principle of law, and suggest it here only upon the theory that without its application an honest debt might go unpaid; and, further, the payment of this bill, under these circumstances, is not to be regarded as a precedent for your city authorities in the future.

Very truly yours,

TIMOTHY S. HOGAN,

Attorney General.

ORDINANCES—SIGNATURE OF PRESIDING OFFICER NOT NECESSARY—RIGHT TO FIX AND CHANGE COMPENSATION OF AN OFFICER DURING INCUMBENCY.

The purpose of the signature of the presiding officer of the council to an ordinance is merely that of authentication and verification of an ordinance. Such signature is not absolutely necessary to the validity of an ordinance.

2. Where there is no compensation definitely fixed for an office, the compensation therefor may be fixed during its incumbency.

The authority which has the right to fix compensation of an officer may change such compensation if such change is made before the officers enter upon the duties of their office.

COLUMBUS, OHIO, January 2, 1912.

HON. O. D. EVERARD, Solicitor, Barberton, Ohio.

DEAR SIR:—Your favor of December 25, 1911, is received in which you ask an opinion upon the following:

> "I have been requested by the council of the city of Barberton to write you for an opinion with reference to the following matters:
>
> "Barberton is one of those municipalities which by virtue of the last federal census became a city after thirty days from the date of the issuance of the proclamation of the secretary of state. As such city it became the duty of the council to fix the salaries of the incoming officials which was accordingly done by an ordinance duly passed as required by law. This ordinance was not signed by the mayor he claiming that the council had no legal right to fix the salaries of the new officials. The council did not mandamus him but instructed the ordinance to be published without his signature. Does this ordinance become a valid ordinance?
> If this ordinance is invalid, or in case of the failure of the council to pass an ordinance fixing the salaries of the new officials, and the newly elected officials qualify as required by law, can such new city officials legally pass an ordinance fixing their own salaries? Can they legally pass an ordinance fixing the salaries of the mayor, solicitor, treasurer and council?"

On December 1, 1911, an opinion was rendered you upon the power of the council of Barberton to fix the salary of incoming officers, and also that it was an official duty of the mayor of a village to authenticate by his signature all ordinances passed by council over which he presided, and that this duty could be enforced by mandamus.

It appears that the mayor still refuses to sign the ordinance and that he has not been mandamused.

Section 4227, General Code, provides:

> "Ordinances, resolutions and by-laws shall be authenticated by the signature of the presiding officer and clerk of the council. Ordinances of a general nature, or providing for improvements shall be published as hereinafter provided before going into operation. No ordinance shall take effect until the expiration of ten days after the first publication of such notice. As soon as a by-law, resolution or ordinance is passed and signed, it shall be recorded by the clerk in a book to be furnished by the council for the purpose."

Section 4255, General Code, provides:

"The mayor shall be elected for a term of two years, commencing on the first day of January, next after his election, and shall serve until his successor is elected and qualified. He shall be an elector of the corporation. He shall be the chief conservator of the peace within the corporation, and shall have the powers hereinafter conferred, perform the duties hereinafter imposed, and such other powers and duties as are provided by law. He shall be the president of the council, and shall preside at all regular and special meetings thereof, but shall have no vote except in case of a tie."

The mayor of a village is the presiding officer of council and as such should authenticate all ordinances, resolutions and by-laws.

His failure or refusal to so sign will not invalidate an ordinance otherwise regularly passed.

The sixth syllabus in case of Blanchard vs. Bissell, 11 O. S. 96, reads:

"An assessment of taxes made pursuant to an ordinance passed by a city council, is not rendered invalid by the omission of the presiding officer of the council to sign the ordinance."

On page 103, Scott, J., says:

"* * * We are strongly inclined to think that the signature of the presiding officer was not essential to the validity of an ordinance of this kind. It is admitted to have been regularly passed, by the proper body, and to have been duly recorded by the proper officer. And though it be true, that the statute directs him to authenticate all ordinances by his signature, it does not follow that his signature is essential to their validity."

In case of Street Railway Company vs. Street Railway Company, 3 Cir. Dec., 493, the 9th syllabus reads:

"The official signatures of the presiding officers of the two boards constituting the city council are not essential to the validity of a city ordinance. Where the names of such officers have been attached, before publication, to an ordinance which has been duly passed, by the city clerk, without express authority, but in accordance with a custom and practice of long standing, the record thereof regularly made by the city clerk is competent evidence of the existence of such ordinance."

The purpose of the signature of a presiding officer to an ordinance is that of authentication and verification of an ordinance. It is a ministerial act, and not a legislative or judicial act. The mayor of a village has not the veto power. His duty in reference to ordinances is that of presiding officer of council. He has no power to approve or disapprove the same.

The ordinance in question is not invalid because of the failure of the mayor to sign the same.

The answer to your first question practically disposes of your second inquiry. However, I will state the principles governing the same.

Section 4213, General Code, provides:

> "The salary of any officer, clerk or employe shall not be increased or diminished during the term for which he was elected or appointed, and, except as otherwise provided in this title, all fees pertaining to any office shall be paid into the city treasury."

On page 558 in case of State vs. Kennon, 7 O. S. 547, Brinkerhoff, J., says:

> "Again, it is said that no fees, salary or other compensation, is annexed to the discharge of the duties devolved by statute upon these defendants. This is true; and it is also true that compensation to them hereafter is nowhere by these statutes prohibited or precluded. That they shall not hereafter receive any compensation for services by them rendered and expenses incurred under these acts, is nowhere made a condition of their acceptance of the trusts reposed in them. There is nothing to prevent their applying to the legislature for compensation, nor to prevent the legislature from awarding it."

In case of State vs. Carlisle, 16 Low Dec., 263, the syllabus reads:

> "While an officer cannot attack the constitutionality of a statute under which he has received compensation for his official acts, yet where such statute has been held unconstitutional in another proceeding and such officer enjoined from receiving the salary provided thereunder, he will be entitled to the compensation provided by an act passed to take the place of such unconstitutional statute; and such amendatory act will not come within the constitutional inhibition forbidding the legislature to charge the salary of an officer during his existing term."

On page 266, Evans, J., says:

> "State vs. McDowell, 19 Neb. 442 (27 N. W. Rep. 433) was a case in which at the time of the relator's election no salary or compensation had been fixed for the services of that officer. During his incumbency his salary was fixed at $300 per annum.
> "The court held the act valid—'That as there was no salary fixed, the act providing for such after his election was not an act either increasing or decreasing his salary.'
>
> "The same rule was held in Purcell vs. Parks, 82 Ill., 346. See Machem, Public Officers 858.
> "The reason for the above holding is, that if there is no salary definitely fixed, or if no salary whatever has theretofore been provided, then there is no salary to increase or diminish by an act providing for a salary during an incumbency.
> "As our constitution provided, 'No change therein shall affect the salary of any officer during his existing term.'

"If there is no salary at all, or none definitely fixed, then legislation providing a salary during his term could not affect any change, for there is none existing to affect."

The case of State vs. Cappeller holds that where a law is passed reducing the salary of an officer after his election and qualification but before he enters upon the duties of his office, such law is constitutional.

The principles of law are these:

Where there is no compensation definitely fixed for an office the compensation therefor may be fixed during the incumbency of an officer.

The authority which has the right to fix compensation of an officer may change such compensation if such change is made before the officer enters upon the duties of his office.

By applying the above principles, you can determine the right of council to fix the salaries. The facts submitted are not sufficient to answer your question specifically.

Respectfully,
TIMOTHY S. HOGAN,
Attorney General.

OFFICES INCOMPATIBLE—COUNCILMAN—PUBLIC OFFICE OR EMPLOYMENT.

Section 4218 General Code provides "No member of council shall hold any other public office or employment," and its terms extend to all public offices and employments.

A councilman may hold neither the office of member of a board of United States pension examiners, township physician nor jail physician.

COLUMBUS, OHIO, January 15, 1912.

HON. ELI H. SPEIDEL, Village Solicitor, Batavia, Ohio.

DEAR SIR:—Under date of January 5, 1912, you requested my opinion upon the following statement of facts:

"At the regular municipal election held on November 7, 1911, one Dr. G. S. VanHorn, was elected a member of the council of the village of Batavia, Clermont county, Ohio. Dr. VanHorn is now a member of the board of United States pension examiners, and he is also one of the township physicians for Batavia township, employed or appointed by the township trustees. Is he eligible for the office of councilman under the provisions of Section 4215 of the General Code of Ohio?

"At the same election, Dr. James K. Ashburn was also chosen as a councilman. Dr. Ashburn now has a contract with the county commissioners as jail physician for the county jail. Is he eligible for the office of councilman under the provisions of the same section of the General Code?"

Section 4218 of the General Code of Ohio, which prescribes the qualifications of a village councilman, reads as follows:

"Each member of council shall have resided in the village one year next preceding his election, and shall be an elector thereof. No member of the council shall hold any other public office or employment, except that of notary public or member of the state militia, or be interested in any contract with the village. Any member who ceases to possess any of the qualifications herein required or removes from the village shall forfeit his office. (96 vs. 82 par. 1965.)"

The words of this statute are, in my judgment, a sufficient answer to your question, since it is expressly provided therein that no member of the council may hold any other public office or employment, except that of notary public and member of the state militia.

My conclusion in this regard is further strengthened by the decision of the circuit court in the case of State ex rel. vs. Gard, 29 C. C. 426, 8 C. C. (n. s.) 599, which decision was affirmed, without report, by the supreme court of Ohio in Vol. 75 at page 606 of the Ohio State Reports. Jelke Jelke, in rendering the opinion, on page 432, says:

"We are of the opinion that the inhibition against persons holding public office or employment is not limited to office in or employment by the municipality, but extends to all public office and employment. This is evidenced by the exception of notaries public and members of the militia."

I am, therefore, very clearly of the opinion that a village councilman may not legally hold any of the positions mentioned in your inquiry.

Very truly yours,

TIMOTHY S. HOGAN,

Attorney General.

ASSESSMENTS—CORNER LOTS—FEET FRONT—ASSESSMENT ON BOTH STREETS.

A corner lot may be assessed for the payment of its share of any improvement upon which it abuts but, may not be assessed under the foot frontage plan upon a greater number of feet front than there are in the actual front of the lot.

It is customary to assess corner lots for improvements on both streets, but according to the same number of feet front.

COLUMBUS, OHIO, January 15, 1912.

HON. CHAS. J. FORD, Village Solicitor, Geneva, Ohio.

DEAR SIR:—Answering your letter of December 16th, receipt whereof is acknowledged, I beg to state that in my opinion a corner lot may be assessed for the payment of its share of any improvement upon which it abuts, but, of course, may not be assessed under the foot frontage plan upon a greater number of feet front than there are in the actual front of the lot. In other words, the number of feet in front of the lot is the number of feet upon the basis of which the lot may be assessed for its share of any improvement upon which it abuts. This point was virtually decided in Haviland vs. City of Columbus, 50 O. S. 471, the leading case upon the subject. The exact question never seems to have been raised in any adjudicated case, but to my personal knowledge it is customary to assess corner lots for improvements on both streets; also, of course, according to the same number of feet front.

Very truly yours,

TIMOTHY S. HOGAN,

Attorney General.

PETITIONS FOR BEAL LAW ELECTION—ADDITION AND WITHDRAWAL OF SIGNATURES—RULE AS APPLIED TO ROSE LAW.

At any time prior to the action of the council upon a petition for a Beal law election under Section 6147, General Code, signatures may be added to or withdrawn therefrom.

COLUMBUS, OHIO, January 23, 1912.

HON. REUBEN R. FREEMAN, Counsel for the Village of Kingston, Chillicothe, Ohio.

DEAR SIR:—I beg to acknowledge receipt of your communication of January 15th, wherein you submit for opinion thereon, the following question:

> "May electors who have signed a petition for a Beal law election (General Code, Section 6147) withdraw their names from such petition before an election is ordered by council?"

I desire, in the first instance, to express my pleasure and thanks for your own expression of opinion on the question, and the memoranda of authorities submitted.

The question of the right of the petitioner on a Beal law petition to withdraw his name therefrom, before final action by council, and after the filing of the same, was decided in the affirmative in a case arising in Highland county, Haynes et al. vs. The Village of Hillsboro, 3 N. P. N. S. 17. The opinion of Probate Judge Hughes, in that case, is entitled to much weight, by reason of the exhaustive research evidenced by his opinion, and the number of authorities examined and commented upon therein. His opinion has been cited with approval by a number of nisi prius courts. Judge Hughes held the law to be:

> "It is the privilege of electors signing a petition for a Beal law election to withdraw their names from the petition, either with or without the consent of council, at any time before the election is ordered; and where such withdrawals reduce the number of signatures remaining on the petition to less than the requisite forty per cent. of the qualified voters, jurisdiction of council to order an election is lost."

Section 6127 of the General Code, which is the provision authorizing a Beal law election, provides:

> "When, in a municipal corporation divided into wards, qualified electors in a number equal to forty per cent. of the number of votes cast therein at the last preceding general election for state and county officers, or when, in any other municipal corporation, qualified electors in a number equal to forty per cent. of the votes cast therein at the last preceding general election for municipal officers, petition the council thereof for the privilege to determine by ballot whether the sale of intoxicating liquors as a beverage shall be prohibited within the limits of such municipal corporation, such council shall order a special election to be held at the usual place or places for holding elections therein in not less than twenty days nor more than thirty days from the filing of such petition with the mayor of such municipal corporation or from the presentation of such petition to the council thereof. Thereupon such petition shall be filed as a public document with the clerk of such municipal corporation and preserved for reference and inspection."

In volume 97, Ohio Laws, at page 87, will be found the act known as the Brannock law. Section 1 of that act provides in part as follows:

"Whenever forty per cent. of the qualified electors of any residence district of any municipal corporation shall petition the mayor of such municipal corporation, or a common pleas judge of the county for the privilege to determine by ballot whether the sale of intoxicating liquors as a beverage shall be prohibited within the limits of such residence district, such mayor or common pleas judge shall order a special election to be held in not less than twenty and not more than thirty days from the filing of such petition with the mayor of the municipal corporation or common pleas judge of the county."

Now, while that law has been repealed, it received some additional interpretation, and owing to the fact that the language is strikingly similar to the wording of the present Beal law, it is apparent that decisions upon provisions of the so-called Brannock law would be equally applicable to like provisions of the Beal law. Judge Morris of the Lucas county court of common pleas, in the case of In re Petition for Special Election in Toledo, decided August 10, 1904, and found reported in 2 N. P. N. S., 469, wherein a similar question arose under the Brannock law, held, among other things:

"Names may be withdrawn from the petition or added to it by the filing of a duplicate petition at any time before the order thereon is made."

In the case of Cole vs. City of Columbus, 2 N. P. (n. s.) 570 (another Brannock law case), Judge Black says:

"It is quite true that persons, before the mayor or judge have acted, may add their names to or withdraw their names from the petition."

I am of the opinion that the real intent of the law is that at the time council proposes to act, and, under the statute, to "order a special election," it then must first find that forty per cent. of the qualified electors, as required by law, are on the petition; that the determination of this fact is jurisdictional; that until that very time, persons so desiring may withdraw their names from the petition.

This view is emphasized by the fact that the legislature in the so-called Rose county local option law, Section 6113, General Code, has provided, among other things, that "no elector shall be permitted to sign his name to such petition after it is filed, or withdraw his name from such petition after it is filed, unless such signature was secured through fraud." Likewise, Section 6149 of the act providing for local option in residence districts contains the following language:

> "No elector will be allowed to add his name to a petition after it is filed, or withdraw his own or authorized signature from a petition unless he can prove to the mayor or judge that it was secured through fraud or misrepresentation."

There would have been no necessity for such provisions in the sections last above referred to, if language similar to that employed in the Beal law could not be held to allow the withdrawal of names that had been theretofore signed.

In view of the decision of Judge Hughes, reinforced by the conceded necessity of specifically providing against the withdrawal of names on a petition, except under given circumstances, in the acts known as the Rose law and the Jones law, I am constrained to hold that electors who have signed a petition for a Beal law election may, up until the time that council orders the election, withdraw their names from the petition.

Very truly yours,
TIMOTHY S. HOGAN,
Attorney General.

HEALTH OFFICER OF VILLAGES—APPOINTMENT BY BOARD AND APPOINTMENT BY COUNCIL—NECESSITY TO BE AN ELECTOR.

A health officer appointed by the board of health of a village under Section 4408, General Code, is not an officer but serves rather in the nature of an employe of a board.

A health officer, however, who is appointed to act in the place of a board of health by the village council, under Section 4404, General Code, is an officer of the village and is within the contemplation of Section 4666 General Code, which requires all officers to be electors.

COLUMBUS, OHIO, February 6, 1912.

HON. R. G. PORTER, Solicitor, Toronto, Ohio.

DEAR SIR:—Under favor of January 5, 1912, you ask an opinion upon the following:

> "I write to ask your opinion as to whether or not a doctor, who has been in this country many years, a Canadian by birth, and who is not as yet naturalized, can be elected by the village council as health officer under a proper ordinance?
> "Under the statute, or Ellis' Municipal Code, Section 187, page

417, there is nothing said about members of boards of health or health officers being citizens of the United States and qualified voters of the municipality as other officers of a city or village.

"But under article 15, Section 4 of the constitution we find that no person shall hold office unless he be an elector. Is this an office as is contemplated by the constitution?"

Section 4404, General Code, provides for the appointment of a health officer by a village council as follows:

"The council of each municipality shall establish a board of health, composed of five members to be appointed by the mayor and confirmed by council who shall serve without compensation and a majority of whom shall be a quorum. The mayor shall be president by virtue of his office. But in villages the council, if it deems advisable, may appoint a health officer, to be approved by the state board of health who shall act instead of a board of health, and fix his salary and term of office. Such appointee shall have the powers and perform the duties granted to or imposed upon boards of health, except that rules, regulations or orders of a general character and required to be published, made by such health officer, shall be approved by the state board of health."

Section 4408, General Code, provides for the appointment of a health officer by a board of health as follows:

"The board of health shall appoint a health officer, who shall be the executive officer. He shall furnish his name, address and other information required by the state board of health. The board may appoint a clerk, and with the consent of council, as many ward or district physicians, or one ward physician for each ward in the city as it deems necessary."

Section 4666, General Code, provides that officers of a corporation shall be electors, as follows:

Each officer of the corporation, or of any department or board thereof, whether elected or appointed as a substitute for a regular officer, shall be an elector within the corporation, except as otherwise expressly provided, and before entering upon his official duties shall take an oath to support the constitution of the United States and the constitution of Ohio, and an oath that he will faithfully, honestly and impartially discharge the duties of the office. Such provisions as to official oaths shall extend to deputies, but they need not be electors."

I take it from your letter that the village council of Toronto has determined to appoint a health officer to act instead of a board of health as it is authorized to do by Section 4404, General Code.

The council fixes the salary and term of office of such health officer appointed by it. The powers and duties of such health officer are the same as that of the board of health. In fact he takes the place of the board of health.

There is considerable difference between the health officer appointed by the village council in accordance with Section 4404 General Code, and the health officer appointed by the board of health as provided by Section 4408, General Code. The first is appointed by the village council; he is the head of the department of health of the village; he has a definite term of office, fixed by council; his duties and powers are prescribed by statute; he performs the same duties, has the same powers and the same responsibilities as the board of health, in fact he might be termed the board of health of the village, if such term could be applied to a position filled by one person. The health officer appointed by the board of health has no term of office; he is under the control of the board of health which prescribes his duties and fixes his compensation.

In State vs. Massillon, 14 Cir. Dec. 249, it is held that a health officer is not an officer. The first syllabus reads:

> "A health officer, appointed by a board of health, as provided by Section 2115 Revised Statutes (4408 Gen. Code) is not an officer or appointee, in contemplation of Section 1717 Revised Statutes, and the board of health may increase or diminish his salary while he is in office."

On page 252, Voorhees, J., says:

> "It will be observed that the duties of the appointee or health officer are not prescribed by statute. He is the servant of the board of health that makes the appointment. He is under their absolute control and direction; and in addition to that, they fix his salary. His salary is at the will of the board of health. His term of office is at their will; they may terminate it at their pleasure."

After further discussing the nature of his employment, Voorhees, J., says on page 253:

> "* * * Now, that being the nature of the employment, perhaps it is a misnomer here to call him an officer at all. He is more like an employe or servant of the board of health."

We have seen the differences in the duties and powers of the health officer appointed by the board of health and the health officer appointed by the village council. The rule in the above case cannot apply to the health officer appointed by the village council under Section 4404, General Code.

In case of State vs. Wichgar, 17 Cir. Dec., it is held:

> "A member of a municipal board of health is an officer of the municipality, and as such ineligible to the office of district physician during his term and for one year thereafter, and he cannot therefore recover for services rendered in such capacity."

The court in a per curiam opinion, says on page 744:

> "A member of the board of health of a municipal corporation is an officer of such corporation, and under Lan. R. L. 10668 (R. S. 6976, * * * to the appointment of district physician by such board during the term for which he was appointed or for one year thereafter, and although rendering services as such physician cannot recover compensation therefor."

The members of boards of health are officers of the municipality. If a village had a board of health, as it may have under Section 4404, General Code, there would be no question that the members thereof would be officers of the village. The health officer, appointed by council, takes the place of the board of health and has the same powers and duties. The same reasons, therefore, that makes a member of the board of health an officer, makes the health officer who takes the place of the board, an officer.

The health officer of a village, appointed by council by virtue of Section 4404, General Code, is an officer of such village.

Section 4666, General Code, supra, provides that all officers of a municipal corporation shall be an elector within the corporation. This provision applies to the health officer appointed by council.

A person who is not an elector of the village cannot be appointed to the position of health officer of such village to act instead of the board of health as provided by Section 4404, General Code.

Respectfully,
TIMOTHY S. HOGAN,
Attorney General.

MUNICIPAL CORPORATION, NEWLY INCORPORATED—REFUSAL OF CLERK-ELECT TO QUALIFY—FILLING OF VACANCY BY ELECTORS —POWERS OF COUNCIL TO HIRE ASSISTANTS, ETC.—POWERS AND METHODS OF CODIFYING COMMISSION.

When a clerk-elect of a newly incorporated village refuses to qualify, there is no remedy by which his position may be filled until the next general election.

The change of the word "municipality" to the word "city" by the codifying commission in Section 4252, General Code, providing for the filling of such vacancy, unequivocally restricts such powers to the mayor of a city, as the language of that section is clear and free from ambiguity. Though the failure to extend this power to villages is the result of inadvertence or mistake, it can be supplied only through the legislature and by no means by the judicial or executive branch of government.

The vacancy can therefore only be filled by the municipality, and only through its electors.

Under Section 4280, the council may appoint one of its members to act as clerk, but only for the performance of certain duties referred to therein.

The only remedy is to induce the clerk to qualify. The council may then relieve his duties by the exercise of its power to employ assistants and to apply the salary intended for the clerk or a portion thereof, to the purpose of compensating such assistants.

COLUMBUS, OHIO, February 10, 1912.

HON. GEO. THORNBURY, Solicitor, Bethesda, Ohio.

DEAR SIR:—Under favor of January 12, 1912, you ask an opinion of this department upon the following:

"I have been retained as solicitor for the village of Bethesda,

Ohio, just incorporated, and the first election of officers was held on January 6, 1912.

"The clerk elected refuses to serve and I have been asked who has the power of appointment to fill the vacancy. In the Municipal Code of Ohio, Section 228, this power seems to be placed with the mayor, but in Section 4252 of the General Code, the word "municipality" as used in the Municipal Code is changed to the word "city," and probably does not cover a village.

"I would thank you to advise me who should appoint the clerk.

"Section 194 of the Municipal Code provides that the village council shall fix the salaries of all officers of the village, but such salary shall not be increased or diminished during their term of office.

"The officers of the village of Bethesda were sworn in on January 11. Will the present council have power to fix salaries for mayor, clerk, treasurer and marshal until the next officers are elected or until the term of the present officers expires?

"Please inform me whether or not the present council can fix salaries for the above officers."

Section 4252, General Code, referred to by you, provides:

"In case of death, resignation, removal or disability of any officer or director in any department of a city, unless otherwise provided by law, the mayor thereof shall fill the vacancy by appointment, and such appointment shall continue for the unexpired term and until a successor is duly appointed, or duly elected and qualified, or until such disability is removed."

This section was known as 1536-1006, in Bate's Revised Statutes, and provided as follows:

"In case of death, resignation, removal or disability of any officer or director in any department of any municipality, the mayor of such city shall fill the vacancy by appointment, and said appointment shall continue for the unexpired term and until a successor shall be duly elected and qualified, or until such disability is removed."

In carrying this section into the General Code the word "municipality" was changed to "city." There is no provision of statute authorizing any officer or body, or board to make appointments to fill vacancies which may exist in village offices.

The rule of construction of statutes which have been revised by a general codification of the statutes as was done in the adoption of the General Code is set forth in the following authorities:

The first syllabus in case of State, ex rel., vs. Commissioners of Shelby County, 36 Ohio St., 326, is as follows:

"Where an act of the legislature, or several acts in pari materia, have undergone revision, the same construction will prevail as before revision, unless the language of the new act plainly requires a change of construction, to conform to the manifest intent of the legislature."

On pages 329 and 330 of the opinion, Boynton, J., says:

> "The latest expression of legislative will must govern. And upon rules of construction equally well settled, the two acts as incorporated into the Revised Statutes have the same effect, and must receive the same interpretation as they received before the revision took place. The court is only warranted in holding the construction of a statute which has undergone revision, to be changed, when the intent of the legislature to make such change is clear, or the language used in the new act plainly requires such change of construction to be made.
> "Neither an alteration in phraseology nor the omission or addition of words in the latter statute necessarily require a change of construction. Conger vs. Barker, 11 Ohio St., 1; Sedgw. on Stat. and Const. Law, 299, 365; Williams vs. The State, 35 Ohio St., 175. The intent to give to the new act a different effect from the old, should be clearly manifested."

The above case is cited with approval in case of Stevenson vs. State, 70 Ohio St., 11, by the court on page 15 of the opinion, where it says:

> "* * * and the rule is well established by the repeated adjudications of this court that 'in the revision of statutes neither an alteration in phraseology nor the omission or addition of words in the latter statute, shall be held necessarily to alter the construction of the former act. And the court is only warranted in holding the construction of a statute, when revised, to be changed, when the intent of the legislature to make such change is clear, or the language used in the new act plainly requires such change of construction.'"

When the rule of construction laid down in the above cases is to be applied is set forth by Minshall, J., in case of Heck vs. State, 44 Ohio St., 536, when he says on pages 537 and 538 of the opinion:

> "Where the language used in a revised statute is of such doubtful import as to call for a construction, it is both reasonable and usual to refer to the statute or statutes from which the revision has been made. But where the language is plain, and leads to no absurd or improbable results, there is no room for construction, and it is the duty of the courts to give it the effect required by the plain and ordinary signification of the words used, whatever may have been the language of the prior statute, or the construction placed upon it. State, ex rel., Pugh vs. Brewster, 44 Ohio St., 249; The United States vs. Bowen, 100 U. S. 508; Allen vs. Russell, 39 Ohio St., 336; Rich vs. Keyser, 54 Pa. St. 86. If the plain language of a revised statute is to be departed from, whenever the language of the prior one may require it, then it may be asked, what is gained by a revision: The definition of crimes must, in such cases, be sought, not in the statutes as they are found to exist, but in the language of those that have been repealed. The more rational rule must be, as we think, to resort to the prior statute for the purpose of removing doubts, not for the purpose of raising them."

The effect of changes made by the late codifying commission in the statutes as adopted by the legislature, is shown by Spear, J., in case of State vs. Toney, 81 Ohio St., 130, when he says at pages 139 and 140 of the opinion:

> "* * * Nor is it accurate to treat the change in the statute as the work of the codifying commission? Their codification was submitted to, considered by, and adopted by the law making body of the state, the general assembly. It should not receive any less respect because the change may have been recommended by three commissioners learned in the law instead of being proposed in the first instance by some single member of the general assembly, and after all is said, the enactment receives its vigor and force as law by reason of its enactment by the general assembly, no matter from what source the inspiration came."

Applying the rules of construction to the statute under consideration: There is no doubt or ambiguity in said Section 4252, General Code, when read by itself. The language is plain and clearly limits its application to vacancies in city offices and departments. The doubt arises when it is discovered that there is no similar power for filling vacancies in village offices. It is probable that the omission of such power from the statutes was due to inadvertence or to a mistake. But, whatever the cause of the omission we can only construe the statutes as we find them. If there is an omission of a power of appointment which should exist, it is for the legislative, and not the executive or judicial, branch of the government to supply such omission.

It is a principle of law that a corporation, private or public, has an inherent power to fill vacancies which may exist in its offices.

In case of Kearney, et al., vs. Andrews, 10 N. J. Eq., 70, the second and third syllabi read:

> "The power of filling vacancies being incident to a corporation, it has the right by its by-laws, to prescribe the manner in which such vacancy shall be filled, provided it is not inconsistent with the design of the charter.
> "The city council of Perth Amboy have no right to elect its own members; the law declares that the members constituting the city council shall be elected by the electors of the city by ballot. The city council cannot confer this authority elsewhere, nor can they usurp it themselves."

On pages 72 and 73, the Chancellor, in delivering the opinion of the court, says:

> "At the annual election, three aldermen and six members of the common council, the number designated by the charter, were duly elected. One of the aldermen and one of the members of the common council, so elected, neglected to take and subscribe the oaths or affirmations required within ten days after the election. The city council thereupon passed a resolution to fill these vacancies, for the reason of such neglect, on the part of the members elected, in not taking their oaths of office. Freeman and White were then elected to fill the vacancies, and were sworn into office. Their election was unlawful. There is no mode designated by the charter by which vacancies are to be supplied. The power of filling vacancies being incident to a corporation (Angell and Ames c. 83, Kyd 79; 2 Kent 277), it has the right by its by-laws, to prescribe the manner in which such vacancy shall be filled, provided it is not inconsistent with the design of the charter, and does not infringe its provisions. Newling vs. Francis, 3 T. R. 189. But the city council had no right to declare who should be the electors. No authority is by the charter, given to that body, to elect its own members; and, by the common law, there is no such incident appertaining to it, as a constituted body, under the charter which creates it. The law declares that the members constituting the city council shall be elected by the electors of the city by ballot. The city council cannot confer this authority elsewhere, nor can they usurp it themselves. If the power to supply vacancies is incident to this corporation it must be exercised by the body at large. They only have the power to elect their officers, when no other mode is designated."

On page 74, the Chancellor further says:

"It does not follow that because such power to fill vacancies is incident to the corporation of 'the inhabitants of the city of Perth Amboy,' therefore, the 'city council,' a board of officers of that corporation in whom certain powers of the body corporate are specifically and exclusively vested, are authorized to supply a vacancy in the office of mayor, or alderman, or member of common council, because, virtute officii, they compose the body of officers who are designed the 'city council.'"

Section 4279, General Code, provides for the election of a clerk of a village, as follows:

"The clerk shall be elected for a term of two years, commencing on the first day of January next after his election, and shall serve until his successor is elected and qualified. He shall be an elector of the corporation."

The corporate body has a right, incident to its powers, to fill vacancies in office. The General Code, in its provisions for villages, which might be termed the village charter, provides that the clerk of the village shall be elected by the electors of the corporation. The electors of the corporation are the voting power of the corporation at large and they may as an incident to their power, fill vacancies in office by election thereto. This power of filling vacancies has not been delegated to any officer, or board of officers. Neither is there any provision of statute authorizing a special election to fill such vacancies. In the absence of such statute, or other legal provision, there is no means by which the will of the electors of the corporation can be ascertained, in order to fill such vacancy.

Section 4280, General Code, provides:

"The clerk shall attend all meetings of council, and keep a record of its proceedings and of all rules, by-laws, resolutions and ordinances passed or adopted, which shall be subject to the inspection of all persons interested. In case of the absence of the clerk, the council shall appoint one of its members to perform his duties for the time."

In addition to the duties herein prescribed the clerk of a village must discharge the duties which are prescribed by Sections 4283 to 4292 of the General Code, which duties are likewise prescribed for the auditor of a city. The power granted to council in Section 4280, General Code, to appoint one of its members to perform the duties of the clerk for the time in case of his absence, applies only to the duties of the clerk set forth in said Section 4280, and does not authorize council to appoint one of its members to perform the other duties of the clerk.

Section 4216, General Code, provides:

> "At the first meeting in January of each year, the council shall immediately proceed to elect a president pro tem. from their own number, who shall serve until the first meeting of the council in January next after his election. From time to time the council may provide such employes for the village as they may determine, and such employes may be removed at any regular meeting by a majority of the members elected to council. When the mayor is absent from the village or is unable for any cause to perform his duties, the president pro tem. of council becomes acting mayor, and shall have the same powers and perform the same duties as the mayor."

Under the foregoing section council is authorized to provide employes for the village. The clerk of the village is an officer of the village with important duties to perform and he is elected by the electors thereof. He cannot be termed an employe, so as to authorize council to provide a clerk of the village under the above section.

Section 3536, General Code, provides for a special election in the case of the first election of officers of a new corporation, as follows:

> "The first election of officers for such corporation shall be at the first municipal election after its creation, and the place of holding the election shall be fixed by the agent of the petitioners. Notice thereof, printed or plainly written, shall be posted by him in three or more public places within the limits of the corporation, at least ten days before the election. The election shall be conducted, and the officers chosen and qualified, in the manner prescribed for the election of township officers, and the first election may be a special election held at any time not exceeding six months after the incorporation, and the time and place of holding it shall be fixed by such agent, and notice thereof shall be given as is required herein for the municipal election."

The election held on January 6, 1912, was no doubt held by virtue of this section. It cannot apply to special elections to fill vacancies in office.

Section 4840, General Code, limits special elections as follows:

> "Unless a statute providing for the submission of a question to the voters of a county, township, city or village provides for the calling of a special election for that purpose, no special election shall be so called. The question so to be voted upon shall be submitted at a > regular election in such county, township, city or village, and notice that such question is to be voted upon shall be embodied in the proclamation for such election."

The statutes do not provide a remedy for the dilemma in which the village finds itself by the refusal of the clerk-elect to qualify and accept the office. There is no power lodged in any officer, board of officers, or body of any kind to make an appointment to fill the vacancy. There is no provision of statute authorizing the holding of a special election to fill such vacancy. This is a matter for the legislature to remedy by an amendment of the statute.

But one solution presents itself. That is to persuade the clerk-elect to qualify and accept the office to which he was elected. He should do this as a public duty. The council could provide an employe who could perform the detail work of the office. The salary and compensation of the clerk and employe could be so arranged by council, so as to make the expense to the village no greater than the salary of the clerk would otherwise be. If the clerk-elect refuses to qualify, there is no remedy.

Your second question is answered by an opinion rendered to O. D. Everard on January 2, 1912, a copy of which is herewith enclosed.

Respectfully,

TIMOTHY S. HOGAN,

Attorney General.

INITIATIVE AND REFERENDUM ACT—"GENERAL ELECTIONS" AND "REGULAR ELECTION" DEFINED.

The term "general election" is defined by Section 4948, General Code, to be the November election in the years when state and county officers are elected. "Regular elections" are generally understood to be other elections held in November of each year except those for special purposes.

Under the initiative and referendum act, however, these terms are used synonymously and refer to the elections held in November of each year.

COLUMBUS, OHIO, February 26, 1912.

HON. I. Q. JORDAN, Village Solicitor, Wilmington, Ohio.

DEAR SIR:—Under date of January 20, you desire my opinion as to the meaning of the words "next regular election" and the words "next general election" as used in the initiative and referendum act, 102 Ohio Laws 521.

Under Section 4948, General Code, the words "general election" are defined for the purposes of the chapter in reference to primary elections as follows:

> "The words 'general election,' the November election in the years when state and county officers are to be elected."

This as far as I am aware is the only definition to be found in the statutes in reference to general elections, but said definition is only used in reference to the provisions in regard to primary elections as found in the General Code.

The words "regular election" refer to what is now the election held in November of each year and in contradistinction of any such elections that might be called for particular purposes.

The words "general election," as I view it, within the meaning of the initiative and referendum act are synonymous with the words "regular election," and I am of the opinion that the words "general election" refer to the election held in November of each year.

That the words "next general election" and "next regular election" are used synonymously in said act appears to me to be very clear when we consider Section 2 thereof.

In the first paragraph of Section 2 it is provided that the clerk shall certify ordinance, etc., granting a franchise, creating a right, involving the expenditure of money, or exercising any other power delegated by the general assembly to the officers having control of elections who shall submit the same to the electors at the next general election.

The second paragraph thereof provides that certain of the ordinances also embraced in the first paragraph thereof shall not become effective in less than sixty days, and that after a petition is filed the clerk shall certify the fact of the filing to the officers having control of elections who shall cause said ordinance or resolution to be voted on at the next regular election.

If a petition is filed under the initiative and referendum act to refer an ordinance, etc., set out in the second paragraph of Section 2 it would be difficult, if not impossible, to ascertain under which paragraph thereof such a petition was filed, and if the term "next general election" and the term "next regular election" are not synonymous there is no way of ascertaining which election is meant at which the people should vote upon such ordinance or resolution.

For the reasons stated, I am of the opinion that the words "next general election" and "next regular election" are used in the initiative and referendum act to refer to what is now the November election of each year.

Very truly yours,

TIMOTHY S. HOGAN,

Attorney General.

INITIATIVE AND REFERENDUM ACT—APPOINTMENT OF POLICEMEN BY MAYOR—REFUSAL BY COUNCIL TO CONFIRM.

Appointments of policemen by the mayor of a village are subject to confirmation by the council and when council refuses to confirm, the action is not amenable to initiative and referendum provisions and the appointment can in no wise be valid.

COLUMBUS, OHIO, February 26, 1912.

HON. R. G. PORTER, Village Solicitor Toronto, Steubenville, Ohio.

DEAR SIR:—Under date of January 5, 1912, you submitted for my opinion the following:

> "Suppose a mayor appoints certain police for the village and council refuses to confirm one, giving no reasons, the appointee being a man of excellent character and ability, but because the mayor is a Socialist and the appointee is of the same party, the council being Republican refuses to confirm, giving no reason for so acting, can the mayor call an election under the new law, called the initiative and referendum and permit the people to decide the matter? Or how can the mayor override the will of council and have his appointee to serve with salary?"

As I view the provisions of the initiative and referendum act such act does not apply to the matter concerning which you write. It does not seem to me to be an ordinance, resolution or measure exercising any power delegated to the municipal corporation by the general assembly, although it is by law provided that the appointments by the mayor shall be subject to the confirmation of council.

The powers, as I understand the first paragraph of the section, refer solely to the legislative power of such council, nor do I think that the confirmation by council can be considered within Section 3 of said act.

Furthermore, Section 3, as I view it, does not apply to the village council in that it provides that all other acts of the city council not included within those specified in Section 2 of this act shall also remain inoperative for sixty days after passage. Even though it should be held that Section 3 of the initiative and referendum act should be extended likewise to acts of a village council, yet in this instance if a referendum petition were permitted to be filed upon the refusal of council to confirm an appointment by the mayor it would require the matter to be submitted to the people at the next general election for their vote thereon, and would thus override the discretion of council in its confirmation of appointments and would make the position an elective one rather than an appointive one. This I do not believe was the intent of the framers of the initiative and referendum act.

I am, therefore, of the opinion the matter is not one concerning which the mayor can call an election under the new law.

You further inquire:

"How can the mayor override the will of council and have his appointee to serve with salary?"

Section 4384, General Code, provides in part as follows:

"When provided by council, and subject to its confirmation, the mayor shall appoint all deputy marshals, policemen, night watchmen and special policemen, and may remove them for cause, which shall be stated in writing to council."

It will be seen from an examination of the above that the appointments by the mayor of policemen are subject to the confirmation of council. Therefore, I do not know of any way that a policeman appointed by the mayor can serve and receive his salary unless his appointment has been confirmed by council. The law makes it a positive requirement that the appointments by the mayor shall be subject to the confirmation of council.

Very truly yours,

TIMOTHY S. HOGAN,
Attorney General.

MUNICIPAL CORPORATIONS—COUNCIL—CONTROL OVER PUBLIC SERVICE COMPANIES—POWERS TO IMPOSE CONDITIONS UPON RIGHT TO USE STREETS—AUGLAIZE POWER COMPANY.

A municipal corporation has only such powers as are conferred by statute to control the disposition of a product of a private corporation such as the Auglaize Power Company. Where, however, such municipal corporation has authority to refuse or grant permission to enter upon the use of its streets, it may attach as a condition precedent to such permission, any reasonable or proper obligations or restraints.

COLUMBUS, OHIO, March 6, 1912.

HON. H. R. DITTMER, Attorney for the Village of Napoleon, Napoleon, Ohio.

DEAR SIR:—Your communication dated February 28, 1912, is received in which you enclose copy of a proposed ordinance granting to The Auglaize Power Company of Toledo, Ohio, the right to erect its towers, poles, wires, etc., on a certain defined right of way through the village of Napoleon, and also in which you state that the object of this company is to pass through the village for the purpose of disposing of its power at a point beyond the village, and that it is not their desire to sell any electricity whatever in said village for any purpose except to an electric railroad; and also state that the village owns its own electric light plant, and that said plant is heavily bonded, and if this company should be permitted to enter the village for the purpose of passing through the village, and on account of such permission to enter the village said company would then be permitted to compete with the village plant, and state further that under Sections 9192, 9193, 9194 and 9195 of the General Code of Ohio it is optional with the village whether or not said company can enter at all, and if it is possible for said company, after being granted a right of way through the village, to sell any electricity without the consent of the council, that the village does not desire to permit said company to pass through it for the reason that it is the object of the village to protect its municipal plant, and you request my opinion upon the following questions:

First. Is Section 3 of the copy of the proposed ordinance binding and enforceable upon said company?

Second. Under said Section 3 would it be possible for said company to sell any electricity in said village except to electric railroads even along the right of way described in said ordinance without the consent of said council as provided in said section?

Third. If the above Section 3 does not prohibit said company from selling its electricity or power in said village unless consented to by said council, I would appreciate a suggestion from you as to a proper manner for this village to protect itself.

It is exceedingly doubtful, as I view it, whether Section 3 of the proposed ordinance is enforceable, but after considering the matter very fully I have concluded that if Section 3 of said ordinance is eliminated and there is attached to the first section of said proposed ordinance the following condition:

> "Provided, however, that the above permission and authority hereby granted by said village to said company is upon the express condition and understanding that no wire of any kind whatever shall be attached to or connected with the wires of said company within said village and used under the above grant for the transmission of electricity through the same without the consent of the council thereof," making such proviso a condition of the grant, that the same would be valid and enforceable.

I believe this answers your inquiries including your request for a suggestion as to how the matter may be cared for in the event that Section 3 of the proposed ordinance might be unenforceable.

While a municipal corporation has no power, excepting that expressly conferred by statute, to control the manner of disposition of a product within its limits, yet it has full power where it has authority to grant or refuse permission to enter a village for any given purpose, to attach to such permission any reasonable and proper condition, and especially to limit its consent to the use of its streets and public places to such use and by such instruments and agencies as may in its judgment impose burdens thereon which are not unreasonable.

The substitute which I have suggested is strictly within the power of the municipality, as above defined, while Section 3 of the ordinance which I have suggested be eliminated therefrom, amounts virtually to a regulation of the business of the power company not contemplated by any of the statutes, and at least is a condition which has no relation to the nature of the municipality's title to or control over its streets and public places.

Yours very truly,

TIMOTHY S. HOGAN,
Attorney General.

OFFICES COMPATIBLE—MARSHAL AND STREET COMMISSIONER, SANITARY POLICEMAN AND JANITOR—POWER OF APPOINTMENT OF SUCH POSITIONS—MAYOR AND COUNCIL.

A street commissioner must be appointed by the mayor and his appointment confirmed by council.

A sanitary policeman must be appointed by the board of health. Council may appoint a janitor.

An ordinance of council, therefore, appointing one individual to fill all of these positions, is illegal in so far as it violates these rules.

The mayor may appoint the marshal as street commissioner, by special provision of statute and as not any of the aforesaid positions are incompatible with the others, a single individual may hold all offices, if properly appointed.

COLUMBUS, OHIO, March 9, 1912.

HON. WALTER S. STEVENSON, Solicitor, Leipsic, Ohio.

DEAR SIR:—Your favor of February 6, 1912, is received, in which you ask an opinion upon the following:

"I herewith enclose Sections 4 and 6 of ordinance No. 261, passed as stated in said ordinance.

"On the 2d of January at a recessed meeting of the council two veterans of the civil war made application for the positions of street commissioner, sanitary policeman and janitor of the city hall. The mayor after reading ordinance No. 261 decided to follow the ordinance. The veterans referred to now insist that the ordinance is invalid and of no effect and that Sections 12893 and 12894 of the General Code of Ohio should and does govern in the matter of filling these positions.

"As solicitor of the village of Leipsic, I have been instructed by the council to take the matter up with you and if possible ascertain whether or not the said ordinance is of any force and effect. Is this ordinance binding on the mayor of the village?"

Section 4 of the ordinance submitted provides:

"That the salary of the marshal shall be $180.00 per annum payable monthly and he shall give bond in the sum of $800.00

"And it is further provided that the marshal shall act and is hereby constituted and appointed street commissioner in and for the said village of Leipsic and he shall receive as his salary as said street commissioner the sum of $10.00 per month payable monthly; and it is further provided that the said marshal shall be and is hereby constituted and appointed sanitary policeman, to act under the instruction of the board of health of the said village; and he shall receive as his salary the sum of ten dollars per month payable monthly; and it is further provided that the said marshal shall be and is hereby constituted and appointed janitor in and for that part of the city building which is under the jurisdiction and used by the said village of Leipsic; and he shall receive as his salary as such janitor the sum of $5.00 per month; and it is further provided that the said marshal as such street commissioner, sanitary policeman and janitor shall be under the supervision and control at all times of the council of the village of Leipsic and the board of health; and upon failure of his part to perform the duties requested of him as such street commissioner, sanitary policeman and janitor then in that event the council may at any time when he fails to perform the duties aforesaid as street commissioner, sanitary policeman and janitor refuse to pay and withhold from him for such failure that part of his salary due him for such service under the conditions of this ordinance."

The question asked is as to the legality of this part of the ordinance. This section, in effect fixes the salaries of the marshal, street commissioner, sanitary policeman and the janitor, and it also virtually appoints the street commissioner, sanitary policeman and janitor for the village of Leipsic. By virtue of this ordinance such appointments are made by council.

The council has the right and authority to fix the salaries of these positions. Has it the right to fill the positions by appointment?

Section 4363, General Code, provides for the appointment of the street commissioner as follows:

"The street commissioner shall be appointed by the mayor and confirmed by council for a term of one year, and shall serve until his successor is appointed and qualified. He shall be an elector of the corporation. Vacancies in the office of street commissioner shall be filled by the mayor for the unexpired term. In any village the marshal shall be eligible to appointment as street commissioner."

By virtue of this section the mayor appoints the street commissioner and the council confirms the appointment. Both the mayor and the council must concur before the appointment is legal. The council has no authority to make the appointment, its authority is confined to the approval of the appointment when made by the mayor. However, the statute makes the marshal eligible to appointment as street commissioner, and the mayor may appoint and council confirm his appointment as such street commissioner.

Section 4411, General Code, as amended in 102 Ohio Laws, page 44, provides:

"The board may also appoint * * * as many persons for sanitary duty as in its opinion the public health and sanitary condition of the corporation require, and such persons shall have general police powers, and be known as the sanitary police, but the council may determine the maximum number of employes so to be appointed."

The board herein referred to is the board of health. The board of health appoints the sanitary police. An appointment of a sanitary policeman would not be legal, if made by council.

Section 4216, General Code, provides:

"At the first meeting in January of each year, the council shall immediately proceed to elect a president pro tem. from their own number, who shall serve until the first meeting of the council in January next after his election. From time to time the council may provide such employes for the village as they may determine, and such employes may be removed at any regular meeting by a majority of the members elected to council. When the mayor is absent from the village or is unable for any cause to perform his duties, the president pro tem. of council becomes acting mayor, and shall have the same powers and perform the same duties as the mayor."

The council of a village is authorized by the above section to provide employes of the village and to appoint the same. The power to appoint, however, does not cover elective officers, nor officers whose appointment is otherwise provided for.

The council has a right to provide for and appoint a janitor, but it has no right to appoint a street commissioner and a sanitary policeman. That part of the ordinance providing for the appointment of the janitor is within the power of council.

The statute makes the marshal eligible to appointment as street commissioner. The positions of sanitary policeman and of janitor are not of themselves inconsistent with or incompatible with each other or with the positions of marshal or street commissioner. It is possible then for the same person to fill these positions if it is physically possible for him to perform the duties pertaining to each office. But the appointments must be made in the manner provided by law.

The appointment by the council of the marshal to fill the positions of street commissioner and sanitary policeman is unauthorized and is illegal. Such appointments should be made respectively by the mayor and board of health.

Respectfully,

TIMOTHY S. HOGAN,

Attorney General.

ASSESSOR IN VILLAGE OF TOWNSHIP ORGANIZATION—NECESSITIES FOR QUALIFICATION—APPROVAL OF BOND BY TOWNSHIP TRUSTEES AND FILING WITH TOWNSHIP CLERK—EFFECT OF FILING BOND WITH VILLAGE CLERK.

A person elected assessor in a village of a township organization has, by virtue of Section 3353, General Code, until the third Monday of April following his election to file his bond with the township clerk and fulfill the other legal requirements for qualification.

When such person has erroneously filed his bond with the mayor, he may nevertheless properly qualify at any time prior to the time limit aforesaid by having his bond approved by the township trustees and by filing the same with the township clerk.

COLUMBUS, OHIO, March 23, 1912.

HON. CHARLES S. BELL, Village Solicitor, Elmwood Place, Ohio.

DEAR SIR:—Your favor of February 24, 1912, is received in which you inquire as follows:

> "Mr. C. J. Z. was duly elected in November last to the office of assessor in the east precinct of this village. He filed his expense account, as provided by the corrupt practices act, and executed a bond and took oath of office.
>
> "The bond in question was approved by the mayor of the village and filed with the village records. The question has arisen as to whether or not Z.'s bond was filed in the proper place, it being contended that it should have been filed with the clerk of the township in which the village of Elmwood is situated.
>
> "In this connection, I would call your attention to Sections 3349 to 3368, inclusive, of the General Code of Ohio.
> "If, in your opinion, this bond should have been filed with the clerk of the township, will it be in order for me to authorize the village clerk to turn this bond over to the township clerk?
>
> "If the office for assessor for the east precinct is vacant by reason of the bond being filed with the mayor of the village, who, in your opinion, has the appointive power to fill such vacancy?"

Section 3350, General Code, provides for the bond of an assessor of personal property as follows:

> "Before entering upon the discharge of his duties each such assessor shall give bond, payable to the state, with two or more freehold sureties approved by the trustees, in such sum as they determine, not less than one thousand dollars, and conditioned for the faithful and impartial discharge of his duties. Such bond, with his oath of office endorsed thereon, shall be deposited with the township clerk. If an assessor is appointed by the county auditor the amount of his bond, not less than one thousand dollars, may be fixed and the sureties therein approved by the auditor, or by the trustees."

By the provisions of this section the assessor-elect is required to give bond before entering upon the discharge of the duties of his office. The bond must be approved by the trustees of the township and filed with the clerk of the township with his oath of office endorsed thereon. An assessor who was elected last November has not yet entered upon the discharge of the duties of his office.

Section 3351, General Code, provides:

"In municipal corporations divided into wards, an assessor shall be elected in each ward. In a township composed in part of a municipal corporation, the county commissioners, by order entered on their journal, may constitute the territory outside such municipal corporation one or more assessor districts. In each ward and assessor district an assessor shall be elected, biennially, in accordance with law, and shall take the same oath, give the same bond and perform the same duties as township assessors. Nothing herein shall interfere with the duties devolving upon deputy state supervisors of elections."

This section governs the election of assessors in municipalities divided into wards, and assessor districts as constituted by the county commissioners. The oath and bond are to be the same as provided for township assessors.

Section 3352, General Code, provides:

"If a person elected assessor in any ward or precinct of a municipal corporation not having a township organization, fails to give bond and take the oath of office for one week after his election, or in the event of removal from the ward or precinct after his election, the office shall be deemed vacant, or should there be at any time a vacancy in such office from any cause, the county auditor shall fill such vacancy by appointing an elector of such ward or precinct to the office of assessor."

This section applies to a municipal corporation not having a township organization. From you letter it appears that the village of Elmwood Place is situated in a township which has a township organization. Section 3352 cannot apply to your situation.

Section 3353, General Code, provides:

"Immediately upon the assessor qualifying, the clerk shall notify the county auditor of such fact. If the county auditor does not receive such notice on or before the third Monday of April, he shall regard the office as vacant, and fill it as provided by law."

When an assessor qualifies it is the duty of the township clerk to immediately notify the county auditor. If the auditor does not receive such notice on or before the third Monday in April the office shall be regarded as vacant. The assessor in question has not yet forfeited his office by virtue of this section.

In the case of State vs. Cappeller, 3 Bull, 853, it is held that although an assessor may be elected in a municipal corporation, he is nevertheless a township officer.

Section 3265, General Code, provides as follows:

> "If after receiving notice of his election or appointment, a person elected or appointed to a township office fails to take the oath of office and give bond within the time required by law, he shall be deemed to have declined to accept, and the vacancy shall be filled as in other cases."

Other sections govern as to when the bond shall be given.

It is my conclusion that the assessor of personal property is a township officer; that the bond of such assessor should be approved by the board of trustees of the township and filed with the clerk of the township.

While such bond should be filed and approved as soon after election as convenient, the assessor-elect may give bond and take the oath of office at any time prior to his entering upon the discharge of the duties of his office, but if the county auditor does not receive notice, on or before the third Monday in April, from the clerk of the township, that such assessor has qualified, the office shall be deemed vacant.

In your case the assessor-elect has not yet forfeited his office, and will not be deemed to have forfeited his office until the county auditor has failed to receive notice of his qualification on or before the third Monday in April. His bond should be approved by the board of trustees and filed with the clerk of the township.

In justice to him and to those who elected him, he should be notified that his bond should be approved by the township trustees and filed with the clerk of the township. He has shown an intention to properly qualify for the position, and he should be given opportunity to file his bond in the proper place and have the same approved.

Respectfully,
TIMOTHY S. HOGAN,
Attorney General.

MAYOR OF VILLAGE, EDITOR AND PUBLISHER OF ONLY NEWSPAPER—CRIMINAL PROHIBITION—PUBLICATION BY COUNCIL IN ANY NEWSPAPER OF GENERAL CIRCULATION.

In a village wherein the mayor is editor and publisher of the only weekly newspaper printed and published therein, publication of village notices, resolutions, ordinances, etc., cannot be made in said newspaper by reason of the prohibitions of Section 3808, General Code, under penalty of criminal action. The mayor's paper will, therefore, be presumed to have refused to make such publications and under authority of Section 4676, General Code, such publications may be made in any newspaper of general circulation in the village.

COLUMBUS, OHIO, March 30, 1912.

HON. JACOB LINE, Solicitor, Mt. Blanchard, Ohio.

DEAR SIR:—Your favor of February 15, 1912, is received in which you inquire as follows:

> "Our present mayor is the editor and publisher of the Mt. Blanchard Journal, a weekly newspaper printed and published in the village, and is the only one printed or published here. Under the code no officer shall become interested in any contract, etc., which you are familiar with. Now the code also provides that certain resolutions, ordinances, etc., shall be published in a newspaper printed and published in the corporation if any, and another statute prescribes for the fees to be paid for such advertising.
> "Now what we wish to know if it is legal to pay the mayor, who is the editor of the paper, for such publications out of the funds of the corporation?
> "If it is not legal to pay him how can we make these ordinances and resolutions legal without publishing them?"

The supreme court of Ohio has held that there must be an express contract entered into for the publication of ordinances, resolutions and other legal notices by a municipal corporation.

The first syllabus in case of McCormick vs. City of Niles, 81 Ohio St., 246, reads:

> "The liability of a municipal corporation to pay for the publication of ordinances, resolutions and legal notices required by law to be published, must rest on express contract, and not upon a mere account for the rendition of such services."

Furthermore, the fees fixed by statute for legal publications are the maximum fees, and it is not only permissible but desirable that a better rate be secured when possible.

Section 3808, General Code, provides:

> "No member of council, board, officer or commissioner of the corporation, shall have any interest in the expenditure of money on the part of the corporation other than his fixed compensation. A violation of any provision of this or the preceding two sections shall disqualify the party violating it from holding any office of trust or profit in the corporation, and shall render him liable to the corporation for all sums of money or other thing he may receive contrary to the provisions of such sections, and if in office he shall be dismissed therefrom."

Section 12910, General Code, provides:

"Whoever, holding an office of trust or profit by election or appointment, or as agent, servant or employe of such officer or of a board of such officers, is interested in a contract for the purchase of property, supplies or fire insurance for the use of the county, township, city, village, board of education or a public institution with which he is connected, shall be imprisoned in the penitentiary not less than one year nor more than ten years.

The mayor is an officer of the village. The foregoing statutes make it a penal offense for an officer to be interested in a contract with the village for the expenditure of money. The mayor as such officer cannot be interested in a contract for the publication of ordinances and other legal notices. A contract entered into with him would be illegal and void.

The sixth syllabus in case of Bellaire Goblet Co. vs. Findlay, 3 Cir. Dec., 205, reads:

"Contracts entered into between a board of gas trustees of a municipality and an incorporated company, when a member of the board of gas trustees is at the same time an officer and personally interested in the incorporated company, are against public policy, and void, the statute making it penal being equivalent to a prohibition."

The situation which presents itself is this: In the village of Mt. Blanchard, there is a newspaper printed, but this paper is not now qualified to publish legal notices of the village, because the mayor is the owner and publisher of such newspaper.

Section 4232, General Code, provides:

"In municipal corporations in which no newspaper is published, it shall be sufficient publication of ordinances, resolutions, statements, orders, proclamations, notices and reports, required by this title to be published, to post up copies thereof at not less than five of the most public places in the corporation, to be determined by the council, for a period of not less than fifteen days prior to the taking effect thereof. Advertising for bids for the construction of public improvements shall be published in at least one newspaper of general circulation in the corporation for not less than two nor more than four consecutive weeks. Notices of the sale of bonds shall be published in such manner and for such time as is provided in this title for the sale of bonds by a municipal corporation, when not sold to the sinking fund. The clerk shall make a certificate of such posting and the time when and places where done, in the manner provided in the preceding section, and such certificate shall be prima facie evidence that the copies were posted up as required.

Section 4676, General Code, provides:

"Where in this title a notice is directed to be published in a newspaper, and no such paper is published at the place mentioned, or if such newspaper is published at the place, but the publisher refuses on tender of his usual charge for a similar notice, to insert it in his newspaper, a publication in any newspaper of general circulation at such place shall be sufficient. Nothing in this section shall be construed to dispense with posters where they are provided for."

The title herein referred to is the one relating to municipal corporations.

Your situation does not come within the provisions of Section 4232, supra, because there is a newspaper published in the village, although it is not now qualified to make the publications.

Neither does Section 4676, General Code, exactly cover your situation. However, under the penal statutes, above quoted, it would be the duty of the mayor, as owner and publisher of the paper to refuse to publish such notices in his paper, even if tendered to him. In such case the statute does not intend that a tender should be made, as it would be useless ceremony. Under the circumstances it would be presumed that the mayor would refuse to make such publications if tendered him.

It is, therefore, my opinion that the village authorities may act as if the mayor had actually refused to insert such notices upon tender of the usual charge. The advertisements can then be inserted, as prescribed by Section 4676, General Code, in some newspaper of general circulation in the village.

Respectfully,

TIMOTHY S. HOGAN,

Attorney General.

EXTRA COMPENSATION TO VILLAGE TREASURER FOR JOURNEY TO COUNTY SEAT—POWERS OF COUNCIL.

Whether or not the village treasurer in going to the county seat, by direction of council, to make an advance draw of funds, is entitled to special compensation and mileage for the same depends on whether or not the ordinance of council providing for the compensation or salary of that official grants the right to such extra compensation.

COLUMBUS, OHIO, March 29, 1912.

HON. THOMAS EUBANK, Village Solicitor, New Madison, Ohio.

DEAR SIR:—Replying to your letter of March 18th, in which you ask whether or not, in my opinion, the village treasurer, in going to the county seat, by direction of council, to make an advance draw of funds, is entitled to special compensation and mileage for the same, I beg to state that in my opinion the answer to this question depends upon the ordinance fixing the compensation of the treasurer.

The services referred to are clearly within the regular duties of the treasurer, and if his compensation as prescribed by the ordinance of council is in the nature of a simple salary, no provision being made for reimbursement of expenses incurred by him, then, in my judgment, he is not entitled to any expenses, nor to any special compensation in connection with or for such services.

On the other hand, if the salary ordinance authorizes the treasurer to be reimbursed for expenses incurred by him he is entitled to such reimbursement; and if the ordinance under which he draws compensation provides a scale of fees or special compensations for particular services, and this particular service is one of those enumerated therein, then, of course, the treasurer is entitled to such special compensation as is provided for in the ordinance.

I refer you to Section 4219, General Code, which expressly authorizes the council to "fix the compensation and bonds of all officers * * * in the village." The word "compensation" has a very broad significance and may be applied to a simple salary or to a scale of fees for separate services.

Very truly yours,

TIMOTHY S. HOGAN,

Attorney General.

BOARD OF TRUSTEES OF PUBLIC AFFAIRS—NO CHARGE FOR WATER SUPPLIED VILLAGE FOR EXTINGUISHING FIRES—WATERWORKS BONDS—WHEN WITHIN LONGWORTH ACT.

By provision of Section 3963 General Code, the board of trustees of public affairs may not collect any sum from the village for supplying water for extinguishing fires.

Bonds issued by a vote of the people for waterworks purposes must be taken into consideration in ascertaining the two and one-half per cent. limitations of the Longworth act in its present form, when the income from the waterworks is insufficient to cover the operating expenses and interest charges and to pass a sufficient amount to the sinking fund to retire the bonds as they become due.

COLUMBUS, OHIO, March 30, 1912.

HON. C. M. BABST, Village Attorney, Crestline, Ohio.

DEAR SIR:—You have submitted to this office for opinion thereon, the following questions:

> "May the board of trustees of public affairs of a village charge and collect from the village any sum for supplying water for extinguishing fires?
> "Are bonds of a village issued by a vote of the people for waterworks purposes to be taken into consideration in ascertaining the two and one-half per cent. limitation of the present form of the so-called Longworth act, 102 O. L., 265, when the income from the waterworks is not sufficient to cover the cost of all the operating expenses and interest charges and to pass a sufficient amount to a sinking fund to retire such bonds when they become due?"

Answering your first question, I beg to state that Section 3963, General Code, as amended 102 O. L., 94, provides as follows:

> "No charge shall be made by the director of public service in cities, or by the board of trustees of public affairs in villages, for supplying water for extinguishing fires, cleaning fire apparatus, or for furnishing or supplying connections with fire hydrants, and keeping them in repair for fire department purposes. * * *"

This question seems conclusive of your first question. My opinion, in accordance therewith, is that the board of trustees of public affairs of a village may not lawfully charge the village for water for extinguishing fires.

Your second question resolves itself into two subsidiary questions. The old Longworth act, so-called, Section 3945 of the General Code, repealed by the act found in 102 O. L., 262, exempted all bonds issued by a vote of the people, from consideration in ascertaining the then limitations of one and four per cent. of the act of which said section was a part. (Cleveland vs. Cleveland, 13 U. S. n. s., 436, affirmed 83 C. S., 482.) Said section 3945 of the General Code, upon which this holding was based was as follows:

"Such limitations of one per cent. and four per cent. hereinbefore prescribed shall not affect bonds lawfully issued for such purposes upon the approval of the electors of the corporation."

As I have already indicated, this section was repealed by the act of 1911 and no language similar to that of the first clause thereof is to be found in that act. What seems to be the parallel provision of the act of 1911 is section 11 thereof, therein designated as Section 3949, General Code, which in full is as follows:

"The 'net indebtedness' prescribed in sections three and ten of this act shall be the difference between the par value of the outstanding and unpaid bonds and the amount held in the sinking fund for their redemption. In ascertaining the limitations of one per cent., four per cent. and eight per cent. herein prescribed, the following bonds shall not be considered:

"a. Bonds issued prior to April 29, 1902.

"b. Bonds issued to refund, extend the time of payment of, or in exchange for, bonds representing an indebtedness created or incurred prior to April 29, 1902.

"c. Bonds issued in anticipation of the collection of special assessments, either in original or refunded form.

"d. Bonds issued for the payment of obligations arising through emergencies caused by epidemics, floods or other forces of nature.

"e. Bonds issued to meet deficiencies in the revenues, as provided for in Section 3931 of the General Code.

"f. Bonds issued for the purpose of purchasing, constructing, improving and extending waterworks when the income from such water works is sufficient to cover the cost of all operating expenses, interest charges and to pass a sufficient amount to a sinking fund to retire such bonds when they become due."

I have mentioned these matters and quoted the statutes not because they are conclusive of the question, but principally for the purpose of pointing out certain distinctions.

It would naturally be supposed that the catalogue set forth in Section 11 of the act of 1911 is exhaustive, and that all bonds, excepting those enumerated therein are to be counted in ascertaining the limitations of one, four and eight per cent. (now, of course, one, two and one-half and five per cent. respectively). This inference seems most appropriate in view of the express reliance of the circuit court in the Cleveland case upon the language which has been eliminated from the revised act.

Upon careful examination of the whole act of 1911, however, I have reached the conclusion that it would be unsafe to rely upon the consideration just mentioned as a basis for a final opinion.

The circuit court in the Cleveland case went no farther in the consideration of that case than was necessary to decide it. That is to say, it found express language in the act which offered sufficient ground for holding that bonds issued by a vote of the electors ought not to be counted in ascertaining the then limitations of one and four per cent. of the Longworth act.

In fact, a careful examination of the phraseology of other sections of the then existing law will disclose, I think, that this express exemption, so to speak, was necessary in order to exclude such bonds from the limitation in question.

Section 3939, as in force prior to the last amendment, provided in part as follows:

> "When it deems it necessary, the council of a municipal corporation * * * may issue and sell bonds * * * for any of the following specific purposes: * * *"

Section 3940 provides, inter alia,

> "* * * the total bonded indebtedness created in any one fiscal year under the authority of the preceding section, by a municipal corporation shall not exceed one per cent. of the total value * * *"

Section 3941 provides that:

> "When such council * * * deems it necessary in any one fiscal year to issue bonds * * * in an amount greater than one per cent. of the total value * * * it shall submit the question of issuing bonds in excess of such one per cent. to a vote of the qualified electors * * *"

Section 3942 provides that:

> *"The net indebtedness incurred by a municipal corporation for such purposes shall never exceed four per cent. of the total value * * * unless the excess of such amount is authorized by vote of the qualified electors of the corporation.* * * *"

Section 3954 provides:

> "No municipal corporation shall create or incur a net indebtedness under the authority of this chapter in excess of eight per cent. * * *."

The limitation of four per cent. under the old law was, therefore, without the express exemption formerly contained in Section 3945 upon the "indebtedness incurred for such purposes" no matter how it was incurred.

Without further discussing the proposition, it seems to me evident that if Section 3945 had been eliminated from the former law, bonds issued by a vote of the people would have had to be counted in ascertaining the limitation of four per cent. (which, of course, corresponds to the present two and one-half limitation).

I have quoted the sections of the old law in order that the verbal differences between them and those of the present law might the more clearly appear.

Section 3939 of the act of 1911 is substantially identical in phraseology with the corresponding sections of the preceding law. The same is true of Section 3940. Many differences appear, however, between the language of Section 3941 and succeeding sections of the new law and that of the corresponding sections of the old law.

Section 3941, as section 3 of the act of 1911 is designated, provides as follows:

> "The net indebtedness created or incurred by council under the authority granted it in Section 1 of this act, and in an act passed April 29, 1902, * * * together with its subsequent amendment, shall never exceed four per cent. of the total value of all property in such municipal corporation as listed and assessed for taxation."

Here there is what might be termed a "break" in the statute.

The power of council to issue bonds in any one year is not further qualified or enlarged. It is not provided that council may issue more than one per cent. in any one year by a vote of the electors, nor that more than four per cent. may be issued at any one time by a vote of the electors. It is simply that council shall have power to issue up to one per cent. in any one year or up to four per cent. at any one time, and under the peculiar language of this section, the four per cent. limitation is expressly placed upon the indebtedness created "by council under the authority granted it."

Now I have pointed out that under the former law, the four per cent. limitation was upon the "net indebtedness incurred by a municipal corporation" so, that this would include bonds issued under authority of the vote of the electors, as well as bonds issued by council under its independent authority.

I have, therefore, reached the conclusion that the phrase "under the authority granted to it * * * in an act passed April 29, 1902, * * * together with its subsequent amendment" does not aptly refer to bonds issued under the Longworth act by a vote of the people. Certainly it does not refer to bonds issued under the act of 1911 by a vote of the people, and it is at least clear that it is the intention, so far as this one section is concerned, to limit the four per cent. (which, of course, has become the two and one-half per cent.) limitation of the law to bonds issued by council itself.

Consideration of the remaining sections of the amended act make this last conclusion perfectly plain. Section 3942 provides as follows:

> "In addition to the authority granted in Section one (1) *of this act and supplementary thereto, the council of a municipal corporation * * * may issue and sell bonds * * * upon obtaining the approval of the electors * * ."

It is significant that council may at any time invite the approval of the electors under this section whether it has reached its one per cent. limitation or its two and one-half per cent. limitation or not. Council might issue bonds under this section by the approval of the electors even if there were no outstanding bonded indebtedness whatever. In this respect the present law is fundamentally different from the former one, and the conclusion which I have already expressed, to the effect that authority of council under the present law to issue bonds on the vote of the electors is entirely independent from its authority to issue bonds without such vote, is completely justified.

It will not be necessary to quote further from the new law. I have said enough, I think, to indicate that in my opinion the limitation of two and one-half per cent. is not applicable to bonds issued by a vote of the electors. I do not think that the question is even doubtful in spite of the seeming application of the rule of enumeration and exclusion afforded by the catalog contained in Section 11 of the act of 1911. That rule does not apply and said Section 11 is without necessary application for the sufficient reason that if Section 11 were not in existence at all, there would be no ground whatever for holding that bonds issued by a vote of the people are to be counted in ascertaining the two and one-half per cent. (or four per cent.) limitation of the act of 1911.

It is my opinion, therefore, that the bonds of which you speak in your second question are not to be counted or taken into consideration in ascertaining whether or not the council has reached the limit of its authority to issue bonds without a vote of the people.

Different sections of the Longworth act were amended and re-enacted more than once during the last session of the general assembly. I have not complicated this opinion by discussing these various acts, as the act which I have referred to is the last expression of the will of the general assembly, excepting possibly as to section 3939, and all prior acts are merged into it.

The above conclusion might make it unnecessary to answer the second of the two questions into which your inquiry divides itself. I have, however, given some consideration to this question, and I am of the opinion that it is sufficiently answered by paragraph "F," of Section 11, above quoted.

In this connection I beg to advise that in my opinion a waterworks plant for which bonds are outstanding must first produce sufficient income to pay all operating expenses, which are the first charges against the same. Then there must be in existence a sinking fund, and the income of the waterworks plant, after paying operating expenses, must be sufficient to pass an amount to this sinking fund large enough to pay interest charges and the installments of principal falling due from time to time. If the income from the plant is insufficient, measured by the above requirements, outstanding bonds issued for the purpose of purchasing, constructing, improving or extending the plant or the distribution system must be counted in ascertaining the limitations of the whole act.

Very truly yours,
TIMOTHY S. HOGAN,
Attorney General.

PUBLICATION OF NOTICES OF CONTRACTS—CODE SECTIONS 4229 AND 4221 NOT CONFLICTING.

Contracts entered into by the council of a village by virtue of Section 4221 General Code, are not governed by the general provisions of Section 4229 General Code, providing for publications of notices of contracts once a week for four consecutive weeks. By virtue of the express proviso of Section 4229 General Code, "except as otherwise provided in this chapter," such notices must be made for "not less than two nor more than four consecutive weeks" as provided by Section 4221 General Code aforesaid.

COLUMBUS, OHIO, April 24, 1912.

HON. C. M. BABST, Solicitor, Crestline, Ohio.

DEAR SIR:—Under date of January 15, 1912, you inquire as follows:

> "There seems to be considerable conflict between the time required for publication in bond sale notices.
> Under Section 3924, G. C., sale notices of bonds should be advertised in two newspapers in the county for 30 days; and under Section 4229, G. C., notices of bond sales should be published once a week for four consecutive weeks.
>
> "I desire to know which of these should be followed.
>
> "Also as to the time notice of sale of contract should be made.
> "Section 4221 requires publication for not less than two nor more than four consecutive weeks; and section 4229 requires once a week for four consecutive weeks.
> "I desire to know which of these should be followed."

Your first question is answered by an opinion rendered to the bureau of inspection and supervision of public offices on April 2, 1912, a copy of which is herewith sent you.

Your second question raises the same point that was considered and passed upon in an opinion to the bureau of supervision of public offices, under date of April 6, 1912. This latter opinion, however, dealt with contracts entered into by the director of public service and the director of public safety.

Section 4221, General Code, prescribes how contracts shall be entered into by the council of a village, as follows:

> "All contracts made by the council of a village shall be executed in the name of the village and signed on behalf of the village by the mayor and clerk. When any expenditure other than the compensation of persons employed therein, exceeds five hundred dollars, such contracts shall be in writing and made with the lowest and best bidder after advertising for not less than two nor more than four consecutive weeks in a newspaper of general circulation within the village. The bids shall be opened at twelve o'clock noon on the last day for filing them, by the clerk of the village and publicly read by him."

Section 4229, General Code, provides:

> "Except as otherwise provided in this title, in all municipal corporations the statements, ordinances, resolutions, orders, proclamations, notices and reports required by this title, or the ordinances of a municipality to be published, shall be published in two newspapers of opposite politics of general circulation therein, if there are such in the municipality, and for the following times: The statement of receipts and disbursements required shall be published once; the ordinances and resolutions once a week for two consecutive weeks; proclamations of elections once a week for two consecutive weeks; notices of contracts and of sale of bonds once a week for four consecutive weeks; all other matters shall be published once."

Section 4221 requires that notices of contracts shall be published "for not less than two nor more than four consecutive weeks," while Section 4229 provides that "notices of contracts" shall be published "once a week for four consecutive weeks."

Section 4229, General Code, contains the proviso, "except as otherwise provided in this title."

The proposition as to which section controls where there is a special and a general statute upon the same subject, is considered in reference to statutes requiring publication by county officials in case of Schloenbach vs. State, 53 Ohio St., 345.

On page 346, the court say:

> "* * * The duty of the commissioners in regard to the publishing of their report is governed wholly by Section 917 of the Revised Statutes, and that section does not afford authority for either ordering such report published in a German newspaper, or paying for the same. See Cincinnati vs. Brickett, 26 Ohio St., 49."

Section 917, Revised Statutes (now Section 2511, General Code), therein referred to, was a special statute which required publication in two newspapers, while a general statute (now Section 6253, General Code) authorized an additional publication in a German newspaper. The court held that the special statute controlled.

The present question can be distinguished from that in 53 Ohio St., 345. The general statute in that case did not refer to the publication authorized by the special statute. In the present situation the general statute, Section 4229, General Code, refers to "notices for contracts" which is the same matter specially covered by Section 4221, General Code.

But the proviso in Section 4229, General Code, "except as otherwise provided in this title" exempts the contracts authorized by Section 4221, General Code, from its provisions.

Contracts entered into by the council of a village by virtue of Section 4221, General Code, are not governed by the provisions of Section 4229, General Code. Such contracts should be advertised for not less than two nor more than four consecutive weeks, as required by Section 4221, General Code.

Respectfully,

TIMOTHY S. HOGAN,

Attorney General.

INITIATIVE AND REFERENDUM ACT—"EXPENDITURE"—"EMERGENCY" —ORDINANCE PROVIDING FOR SPRINKLING AND SWEEPING OF STREETS THROUGH ASSESSMENTS UPON PROPERTY HOLDERS—ORDINANCE AUTHORIZING CONTRACT FOR ONE YEAR NOT A CONTINUING ORDINANCE.

An ordinance providing for the sprinkling and sweeping of streets, the costs of which are to be paid by special assessments upon abutting property, involves an expenditure of money, must remain inoperative for sixty days under Section 2 of the initiative and referendum act and therefore may not be declared an emergency measure.

An ordinance passed February 6, 1911, providing for a contract for labor and implements which contract was not to extend for more than one year, is not a continuing ordinance and cannot at the expiration of that year authorize a second contract by council.

COLUMBUS, OHIO, May 6, 1912.

HON. ARTHUR B. SIMONS, Solicitor, Richwood, Ohio.

DEAR SIR:—I am in receipt of your letter of February 27th, wherein you ask me two questions:

> "First: Whether or not under Section 4227-3 an ordinance providing for the sweeping and sprinkling of streets, the costs of which is to be paid by special assessment upon the abutting property would be classed as an emergency measure, and take effect immediately, and if so what effect would a repeal by vote of the people have upon contracts made for such work?"

The second paragraph of Section 4227-2 General Code provides that no ordinance involving the expenditure of money shall become effective in less than sixty days after its passage. An ordinance providing for sweeping and sprinkling of streets, the cost of which is to be paid by special assessment upon abutting property would be an ordinance involving the expenditure of money although said ordinance provides that the costs of sweeping and sprinkling is to be paid by special assessment upon abutting property. I am, therefore, of the opinion that such an ordinance cannot be classed as an emergency measure to take effect immediately under Section 4227-3 General Code for the reason that it is an ordinance included within those specified in Section 2 of the act as remaining inoperative for sixty days. Such being the case there is no necessity of considering what effect a repeal by the vote of the people would have upon contracts made for such work.

Second: You next inquire whether or not the council could now act under an ordinance, a copy of which you enclose, which ordinance was passed February 6, 1911. An examination of said ordinance, being ordinance No. 302, discloses that Section 1 provides that council direct and authorize the mayor and clerk to enter into contract for and employ the necessary labor for and to purchase the necessary tools and implements for sprinkling, sweeping and cleaning certain streets of the village, which streets are set out.

Section 2 of said ordinance provides:

> "That contract for same shall not extend for more than one year from date of contract."

Section 3 of said ordinance provides:

"That the costs and expenses of said sprinkling, sweeping and cleaning of said streets shall be assessed upon the abutting properties according to the foot frontage thereof, and upon the Columbus, Delaware & Magnetic Springs Railway shall be assessed one cent per lineal foot within said village limits."

Section 4 of said ordinance provides:

"That certificate of indebtedness of the village of Richwood, Ohio, shall be issued in amount equal to not more than $1,000.00 in anticipation of collection of assessments levied to cover cost of said sprinkling, sweeping and cleaning."

As such ordinance specifies that the contract for sprinkling, sweeping and cleaning the streets shall not extend for more than one year from the date of the contract and as it further specifies that the certificate of indebtedness of the village shall be issued in an amount not more than $1,000.00 in anticipation of the collection of assessments, I am of the opinion that such ordinance was operative only for the term of the contract specified in Section 2, which was made in pursuance of said ordinance, to wit: not more than one year from the date of said contract, and, therefore, that council could not act under the ordinance as a continuing ordinance. In other words, as I view said ordinance, it provided solely for a general contract to be made thereunder for the term of not more than one year, and that as soon as said contract was made such provision of the ordinance was executed and does not give council the right to make any further contract after the expiration of the first contract so made.

Yours truly,
TIMOTHY S. HOGAN,
Attorney General.

INITIATIVE AND REFERENDUM ACT—"EXPENDITURE"—"EMERGENCY" —ORDINANCE APPROVING BILLS FOR CURRENT EXPENSES—ORDINANCE AUTHORIZING BOARD OF HEALTH TO PURCHASE EMERGENCY BUILDING FOR SCARLET FEVER PATIENT.

An ordinance approving bills for current expenses for labor and repairs on streets and for telephones, electric lights, etc., does not involve an expenditure of money within the meaning of the initiative and referendum act, and it is legal to pay such bills once in two weeks by a suspension of the three readings rule through a vote of five out of six members of the council.

An act cannot be declared an "emergency" unless it fulfills the definition of that term.

An ordinance authorizing the board of health to contract for the use of a building required as an emergency for detention of scarlet fever patients, involves an "expenditure of money" and under Section 2, paragraph 2 of the initiative and referendum act must remain inoperative for sixty days and cannot be declared an emergency measure.

COLUMBUS, OHIO, May 13, 1912.

HON. CHARLES A. HAMMOND, Solicitor, Oberlin, Ohio.

DEAR SIR:—I am in receipt of your letter of February 14th, wherein you desire my ruling in reference to the initiative and referendum act, especially in reference to Section 4227-2 and 4227-3 General Code as follows:

> First: You inquire whether an ordinance passing bills for the payment of labor on the streets, light accounts payable under a contract with a lighting company, bills for equipment for the fire department, telephone bills, bills for material to make repairs on the streets and sidewalks, and in fact, bills for all those week to week expenditures which must be made to properly care for the municipality's needs, should be passed as an emergency measure and receive a vote of three-fourths of the council."

As the passing of such ordinance is solely for the approval of bills for materials and services theretofore rendered to the village, I am of the opinion that such an ordinance could not be considered as an ordinance involving the expenditure of money. It is true that it authorizes the payment of such bills but if such an ordinance were to be considered within the initiative and referendum act it would absolutely block the administration of municipal affairs in a village.

The passage of such ordinance is purely in an administrative capacity by council and is not in any sense legislative. For that reason I am of the opinion that such an ordinance is not within the purview of the initiative and referendum act. If it were to be considered as an ordinance involving the expenditure of money it could not under paragraph two of Section 4227-2 be declared to be an emergency measure. You state that it has been the custom to pass such bills once in two weeks by a vote of five out of six members of council and under a suspension of the three readings rule and you wish to know whether such action is strictly legal. I am of opinion that it is.

Second: You wish to know whether we can give you any more definite rule in relation to emergency measure than that given in the statute.

I know of no more definite rule that I can give you in relation thereto, but beg to state that I have heretofore rendered an opinion to Hon. N. M. Greenberger, city solicitor, Akron, O., under date of October 25, 1911, in reference to my interpretation of emergency measure as follows:

> "While it is true that Section 2 of the initiative and referendum act foregoing set forth declares that certain acts may take effect immediately, provided they be declared by council to be an 'emergency measure' yet I do not believe that council can declare an act to be an emergency measure which could not be considered under the definition of 'emergency' to be such. In other words, I do not believe that council by mere declaration that a measure is an emergency measure can so constitute it if the definition of 'emergency' did not apply to such measure."

"Emergency" is defined by the Century dictionary as follows:

> "A sudden or unexpected happening; an unforeseen occurrence or condition; specifically, a perplexing contingency or complication of circumstances."

Again,

> "A sudden or unexpected occasion for action; exigency; pressing necessity."

Again,

> "Something not calculated upon; an unexpected gain."

"Emergency" is defined by Webster to be:

> "A condition of things happening suddenly or unexpectedly; an unforeseen occurrence; a sudden occasion."

Again,

> "Any event or occasional combination of circumstances which calls for immediate action or remedy; pressing necessity; exigency."

> "The facts stated in your letter do not give rise, as I view it, to any emergency, and, consequently, an ordinance thereunder could not be considered as an emergency measure."

Third: You ask in what class is the semi-annual appropriation ordinance.

I have heretofore decided in an opinion rendered to Hon. C. C. Middleswart, Marietta, Ohio, under date of November 3, 1911, that the semi-annual appropriation ordinance is not within the purview of the initiative and referendum act.

Fourth: You state if the board of health certifies the immediate need of an emergency building for detention of scarlet fever patients and the council passes an ordinance authorizing the board to make a contract with some property owner for the use of a building at a stipulated price would such an ordinance be one involving the expenditure of money, and under section 2, paragraph two of said act not become effective for sixty days?

If said ordinance is one authorizing the board to make a contract for the use of a building for a stipulated price it is my opinion that such an ordinance is one involving the expenditure of money, and being such, of course, could not be declared to be an emergency measure under the provisions of Section 4227-3.

Very truly yours,
TIMOTHY S. HOGAN,
Attorney General.

SALARY, INCREASE AND DECREASE OF—STREET COMMISSIONER—TERM OF OFFICE—INITIATIVE AND REFERENDUM ACT—SUSPENSION OF EFFECT OF ORDINANCE FOR SIXTY DAYS AND UNTIL GENERAL ELECTION UPON FILING OF REFERENDUM PETITION.

The term of office of the street commissioner, under Section 4363 General Code, does not commence until his appointment by the mayor and confirmation by the council.

An ordinance passed by council decreasing the salary of that officer during the time intervening between the appointment and the confirmation, is not, therefore, within the prohibition of Section 4219 General Code against increase of salary during term of office.

Such ordinance involves an "expenditure of money" and therefore does not take effect until the expiration of sixty days after its passage. Until such time, the street commissioner takes under the old ordinance.

When a referendum petition is duly filed the effect of the ordinance is suspended until the "next general election." If such ordinance is defeated at the election, the old ordinance will remain in effect.

COLUMBUS, OHIO, May 6, 1912.

HON. E. R. YOUNG, Legal Counsel, Ripley, Ohio.

DEAR SIR:—Under date of February 17th you wrote me as follows:

> "On the fifth day of December, 1902, there was passed by the council of the incorporated village of Ripley, Ohio, ordinance No. 107, being 'an ordinance fixing the compensation and bonds of the officers of the village.'
> "That part of said ordinance which relates to the office of street commissioner, is as follows: 'The salary of the street commissioner shall be twenty dollars per month, payable monthly; and he shall give a bond in the sum of five hundred dollars.'
> "On the twelfth day of January, 1911, one D. M. was duly appointed, confirmed and qualified as street commissioner and entered upon the duties of said office.
> "Section 4363 of the General Code relates to the office of street commissioner, and is in substance as follows:
> " 'Shall be appointed by the mayor and confirmed by council for a term of one year and shall serve until his successor is appointed and qualified.' On the eleventh day of January, 1912, at a regular meeting of said council the mayor reported that he had appointed the said D. M. street commissioner for the coming year.

"Said appointment was not confirmed by council, but said council then forthwith proceeded to and did then duly pass an amendment to said ordinance No. 107, with reference to the office of street commissioner, which amendatory ordinance is as follows:

"'AN ORDINANCE No. 152.

"'Amending an ordinance passed on the fifth day of December, 1902, entitled "An ordinance fixing the compensation and bonds of the officers of the village.

"'Be it ordained by the council of the incorporated village of Ripley, Brown county, state of Ohio:

"'Section 1. That ordinance No. 107, passed on the fifth day of December, 1902, being an "Ordinance fixing the compensation and bonds of the officers of the village," and recorded on page 135 of the records of ordinances of said village, be amended so as to read as follows:

"'Section 2. The salary of the street commissioner shall be five dollars per month, payable monthly; and he shall give a bond in the sum of fifty dollars.

"'Section 3. This ordinance shall take effect and be in force from and after the earliest period allowed by law.

"'L. V. WILLIAMS, Mayor.

"'Passed January 11, 1912.

"'D. W. Lemon, Clerk.'

"Said ordinance, after having been duly passed on said eleventh day of January, 1912, was then at that time signed by the mayor and clerk, and afterwards published as required by law.

"At the next regular meeting of the council on the sixth day of February, 1912, the mayor again reported to the council as unfinished business that he had appointed the said D. M. street commissioner, and said appointment was then confirmed by council.

"The said appointee, who had been holding said office under his former appointment of January 12, 1911, duly qualified, on the ninth day of February, 1912, and again entered upon the duties of said office.

"On the tenth day of February, 1912, the said D. M. filed with the clerk of said village a 'petition for the referendum' of said council ordinance No. 152, signed by the required number of electors of said village, ordering the submission of such ordinance to the vote of the electors at the next regular election to be held on the fifth day of November, 1912; and said clerk, pursuant thereto, on the seventeenth day of February, 1912, certified said ordinance of the board of election for the purpose of having the same submitted to the electors at the next regular election.

"Section 4219 of the Code provides in substance: 'Council shall fix the compensation * * * of all officers. The compensation so fixed shall not be increased or diminished during the term for which any officer * * * may have been elected or appointed.'"

Upon the above state of facts you submit six several questions for my opinion as follows:

"1. Does the term 'appointed' as used in the latter section, include confirmation and qualification (i. e., giving bond)?

"2. The fact that the officer was appointed, but was not confirmed until after the passage of the ordinance reducing the salary, does the ordinance come within the inhibition of section 4219 G. C.?

"3. If the ordinance does not take effect under the 'initiative and referendum law' (O. L. 102, p. 521) until sixty days after its passage, does the officer draw a salary of $20.00 per month for the sixty days, or does he draw a salary of $5.00 per month for this time?

"4. If the ordinance is suspended until the next regular election by the filing of the 'petition for referendum,' what salary should be drawn by this officer until the matter is determined by the electors?

"5. What is meant by the next regular election as referred to in the 'Crosser' law?

"6. If the new ordinance is rejected by the electors does the former ordinance which it attempted to repeal remain in effect?"

I shall consider question one and question two together. Section 4219 General Code as set out in your letter states that the compensation fixed by council shall not be increased or diminished during the term for which the officer may have been elected or appointed. This inhibition is against council enacting any legislation during the term of said officer, changing the salary of such officer. From your inquiry it would appear that the mayor appointed the said D. M. as street commissioner for the coming year. The authority to so appoint is found in Section 4363 General Code set forth in your letter which states that such commissioner shall be appointed by the mayor and confirmed by council for the term of one year.

The question, therefore, arises as to when the term of such D. M. as street commissioner would begin. If his term was to begin only upon his appointment by the mayor and confirmation by council and would be for the period of one year after such confirmation, his term would not commence until council had duly confirmed his appointment.

I am of the opinion on reading Section 4363 G. C., that it means that the term of the street commissioner shall only begin after appointment and confirmation by council and continue for the term of one year from such confirmation, and that until such confirmation by council, said council was duly authorized to increase or diminish the compensation of such appointee. I do not, therefore, think it necessary to decide whether the term "appointed" as used in Section 4219 G. C. includes confirmation and qualification as I am of the opinion that the term of such officers would begin upon confirmation by council. The term having so begun the question as to when the officer qualified would be immaterial.

In answer to your second question, I am of the opinion that the ordinance passed January 11, 1912, does not come within the inhibition of Section 4219.

You next inquire if the ordinance does not take effect under the initiative and referendum act until sixty days after its passage does the officer draw his salary of $20.00 per month for the sixty days, or does he draw a salary of $5.00 per month for this time. As I have heretofore given it as my opinion that an ordinance fixing a salary is an ordinance involving the expenditure of money, and, therefore, does not go into effect until sixty days after its passage thereof, I am of the opinion that the officer would draw his salary under the old ordinance until the going into effect of the new ordinance as decided in the opinion to Hon. H. W. Houston, city solicitor, Urbana, Ohio, under date of December 29, 1911.

Fourth: Your fourth question is as follows:

> "If the ordinance is suspended until the next regular election by the filing of the 'petition for referendum,' what salary should be drawn by this officer until the matter is determined by the electors?"

I have heretofore decided in an opinion to Hon. F. X. Frebis, prosecuting attorney, Georgetown, Ohio, under date of April 26, 1912, copy of which we herewith enclose, that upon the filing of a petition for referendum in reference to any ordinance the operation of said ordinance remains suspended and does not become effective until the said ordinance is duly adopted by the electors at the next regular election. Therefore, in answer to your fourth question I would say that the officer in question, since the operation of the ordinance is suspended, would draw the salary fixed by the old ordinance until the new ordinance was adopted by the electors, a referendum petition having been filed in reference to said new ordinance.

Fifth: You next inquire what is meant by "next regular election" as referred to in the "Crosser" law?

In answer thereto I herewith hand you copy of opinion to Hon. I. Q. Jordan, village solicitor, Wilmington, O., under date February 26, 1912, which fully covers the question.

Sixth: You next inquire if the new ordinance is rejected by the electors, does the former ordinance which it attempted to repeal remain in effect?

On examination of the ordinance of January 11, 1912, as set forth in your letter it is entitled "An ordinance amending an ordinance passed on the fifth day of December, 1902." Section 1 of said ordinance provides "That ordinance No. 107 * * * be amended so as to read as follows * * *."

If the new ordinance is rejected by the electors, I am of the opinion that it is as if it were never enacted, and consequently, the former ordinance which it attempts to amend would remain in full force and effect.

Very truly yours,

TIMOTHY S. HOGAN,

Attorney General.

INITIATIVE AND REFERENDUM ACT—COUNCIL—CONTRACT WITH LIGHT COMPANY—ORDINANCE PROVIDING FOR ADDITIONAL LIGHTS INVOLVES "EXPENDITURE."

When a village has in existence a contract with a light company calling for 100 arc lights, with provisions for additional lights upon demand, and the council passes an ordinance designating the location of 180 lights, which number included the first hundred as well as 80 additional lamps provided for in said ordinance, said ordinance involves an expenditure with reference to the additional lights and is subject to suspension under the initiative and referendum act.

The ordinance is to be voted on as a whole and should it fail at election, conditions would remain the same as before the election.

COLUMBUS, OHIO, May 10, 1912.

HON. I. Q. JORDAN, Village Attorney, Wilmington, Ohio.

DEAR SIR:—Under date of March 11th you enclose as copy of light contract between the village of Wilmington and the Wilmington Water & Light Company; also a copy of the resolution passed by the council preceding the present council on the last night of its existence, to wit: December 30, 1911, concerning which a petition for referendum has been duly filed.

You desire to know whether or not the present council is justified in paying the Water & Light Company any part of their bill while the resolution is pending under the referendum, and if so, how much, and further as to what the electors will vote on under the petition for referendum at the next general election.

Upon a consideration of the contract entered into by the village of Wilmington with the Water & Light Company, which is designated in the contract as the United Water & Light Company of New Jersey, and which contract runs for a period of ten years from February 1, 1903, the rights in which contract the Wilmington Water & Light Company succeeded we note that said contract was for one hundred (100) arc lights in all with the provision that the said Water & Light Company "shall from time to time furnish such additional electric lights as the village council may order under the provisions of the contract." I understand both from your letter and from conversation with you that there had been no additional lights ordered by council beyond the one hundred lights provided for in the contract until the passage of the resolution of December 30, 1911.

The resolution of December 30, 1911, states as follows:

"RESOLUTION.

"WHEREAS, The village council of the village of Wilmington, Ohio, have from time to time, ordered various extensions of the lines of the lighting plant, and have directed the lighting committee to locate and caused to be placed tungsten and arc lamps on said extensions, and at various intermediate points; and,

"WHEREAS, A committee of the citizens have purchased and donated to the village various arches for lighting purposes, some of which have taken the places of arc lamps at some of the locations where said arches have been located and placed by order of council; therefore be it

"Resolved, That the locations of the various lights and arches on said system within the village shall be as hereinafter designated, and that said Wilmington Water & Light Company is instructed and directed to maintain lights at said places in accordance with the ordinance contracting with said company for the lighting of the streets, alleys, ways and commons of the village of Wilmington.

"The following arches and lights to burn all night every night: (Specifying thirty-five [35] lights.) The following lights to burn all dark hours until midnight. (Specifying one hundred and forty-five [145] lights.)"

I note that said resolution seeks to designate one hundred and eighty (180) lights, or in other words, eighty (80) more than was provided for in the original contract. Said resolution is based on the assumption, as it appears to me from a reading thereof, that council had prior to the adoption of said resolution ordered under the provisions of the contract additional electric lights. I am assured, however, by you that such is not the case, but that the resolution in question seeks to designate eighty (80) lights in addition to the one hundred (100) lights provided for in the contract. Such being the case, and as such an ordering of additional lights by council would necessarily require that the village pay for the same the resolution involves the expenditure of money, as I view it.

You asked whether or not the council is justified in paying the Water & Light Company any part of their bill while the resolution is pending under the referendum. The payment for the number of lights which were properly contracted for at the time of the passage of the resolution of December 30, 1911, would be legal for the reason that the same is a proper charge against the village under the provisions of the contract. I do not undertake to state exactly how many lights this would make.

You inquire as to what the electors will vote on under the petition for referendum which has been filed. The electors will vote whether or not such resolution should be adopted in its entirety. They will not vote on the question of additional lights, but on the resolution itself. If included in such resolution are those lights which have been properly contracted for, and included therein are those which had, prior to the resolution in question, not been contracted for the referendum thereunder would not affect the contract for the lights which had been properly contracted for. The electors will vote on the resolution as a whole and will either adopt or reject the same. If the resolution is rejected at the polls it will be the same as if it never existed, and the only rights that the light company would have would be those which had been acquired prior to the passage of said resolution.

All that I have said in reference to the light contract would apply equally as well to the water contract, a copy of which I do not have before me, but the facts concerning which I understand are the same as in reference to the light contract.

Very truly yours,

TIMOTHY S. HOGAN,

Attorney General.

"VOLUNTEER FIREMEN"—EXEMPTION FROM MUNICIPAL AND STATE ROAD LABOR.

A volunteer fire department as intended by the statues providing for exemption from municipal or state road labor, is one whose members are not appointed by the mayor and who receive no compensation for their services.

COLUMBUS, OHIO, May 3, 1912.

HON. GEORGE W. ROSE, Village Solicitor, Glouster, Ohio.

DEAR SIR:—I beg to acknowledge receipt of your letter of April 20, 1912, which is as follows:

> "Section 3375, General Code, exempts from performing two days' labor on the public highways, persons coming under certain conditions, among which are:
> "'Any person who is a member of any fire engine, hook and ladder, hose or other company, for the extinguishment of fire or the protection of property at fires, under the control of the corporate authorities of any municipal corporation, and who receives no pay for such services during the time he may continue an acting member of such company,' etc.
> "Section 3738, General Code, exempts:
>
> "'Active members of volunteer engine companies not exceeding thirty, and of hose companies not exceeding twenty,' etc.
> "We have this situation in the village of Glouster. We have a fire chief appointed by the mayor and confirmed by council who receives $5.00 for every fire he attends where there is an actual fire and it is necessary to throw water, and $2.50 where a run to a fire is made and no water thrown. This fire chief has a company of fourteen firemen whom he selects and these firemen are paid $2.00 for each fire attended where it is necessary to throw water, and $1.00 where they make a run, and no water is thrown.
>
> "I desire to ask your opinion as to the following:
>
> "1st. What constitutes a volunteer fire company?
>
> "2nd. Is that of Glouster a volunteer company?
>
> "3rd. Which section of the General Code governs as to this particular case?
> "4th. Would you consider the fire chief and the members of the fire company exempt or liable for the performance of two days' labor upon the public highway?"

In reply I desire to call your attention to the following pertinent sections of the General Code:

> "Section 4389. In each village having or hereafter establishing a fire department, the head thereof shall be a fire chief, appointed by the mayor for a term of two years, and shall be an elector of the corporation.
> "Section 4390. Council may provide for the employment of such firemen as it deems best and fix their compensation, or for the services of volunteer firemen. All firemen other than volunteers, shall be appointed by the mayor for terms of one year with the advice and consent of the council.

"Section 4394. No active volunteer fireman or one who has served five years consecutively as a volunteer fireman shall be required to serve on juries or perform military duty in time of peace or labor on highways."

Section 4390 makes clear two distinctions between regular firemen and volunteer firemen. The first sentence gives council the authority to "provide for the employment of such firemen as it deems best and to fix their compensation, or for the services of volunteer firemen." In the clause giving authority to council to employ regular firemen, the right to provide compensation is expressly recognized; whereas, the clause governing the appointment of volunteer firemen excludes any mention of the compensation.

Another distinction to be observed is that, all firemen other than volunteers shall be appointed by the mayor for a term of one year with the advice of council."

From the statement of facts in your letter, it appears that the chief of the fire department was appointed by the mayor and confirmed by council as required by Section 4389; that the members of the fire department were selected by the chief, and that a certain compensation is provided for their services in attendance at fires.

I am, therefore, of the opinion that a volunteer fire company is one whose members are not appointed by the mayor, and who receive no compensation for their services and accordingly, the fire department of Glouster is not a volunteer company.

The two sections of the General Code cited by you which govern labor on highways are as follows:

"Section 3375. Except honorably discharged soldiers who served in the United States army during actual war, pensioners of the United States government, acting and contributing members of companies, troops and batteries of the Ohio national guard during membership, and members of a fire engine, hook and ladder, hose or other company, for the extinguishment of fire or the protection of property at fires, under the control of the corporate authorities of any municipal corporation, who receive no pay for their services as such acting members, each male person between the age of twenty-one and fifty-five years, able to perform or cause to be performed the labor herein required, shall be liable annually, to perform two days' labor on the highways, under the direction of the road superintendent of the road district in which he resides. (98 vs. 328, Sec. 4).

"Section 3738. The council of any municipal corporation may require each able-bodied male person between the ages of twenty-one and fifty-five years, resident of the corporation, or territory attached as herein provided, to perform by himself or substitute, in each year, two days' labor upon the streets and alleys of such corporation, or upon the public roads or highways that lie within such attached territory, which labor shall be instead of the two days' labor required to be performed upon roads and highways. Active members of volunteer engine companies not exceeding sixty-four, of hook and ladder companies not exceeding thirty, and of hose companies not exceeding twenty, shall be exempt from the performance of such labor during such membership, and, having served faithfully as such for five consecutive years, shall be exempt for five years thereafter. Such labor may be commuted by the payment of three dollars to be expended where the labor should have been applied. (92 vs. 162, Sec. 1.)

Under the latter section council may require able-bodied male persons between the ages of twenty-one and fifty-five years to perform two days' labor on the streets and alleys of the corporation with the exception, among others, of "active members of volunteer engine companies, etc.," and said section also states expressly that "such labor shall be instead of the two days' labor required to be performed on the roads or highways." When council adopts an ordinance providing for the performance of such labor on the streets and alleys all persons, other than those who come within the exceptions, are bound to perform the same under Section 3738, in which event they are exempted by the express provisions of said Section 3738, from performing labor on the highways as required by Section 3375. The chief and members of the Glouster fire department, not being volunteer firemen as above defined are required to perform labor on the streets and alleys of the corporation, providing council has adopted an ordinance requiring such labor; otherwise they are liable to perform labor on the roads and highways under Section 3375 when required so to do by the road superintendent of the road district in which they reside.

Very truly yours,

TIMOTHY S. HOGAN,

Attorney General.

NEWSPAPERS—PUBLICATION OF ORDINANCES, RESOLUTIONS, ETC.—VILLAGE CLERK, EDITOR AND PROPRIETOR OF ONLY NEWSPAPER—POSTING IN FIVE PUBLIC PLACES.

When the only newspaper published, and the only newspaper of general circulation in a village is disqualified from publishing notices and ordinances, and resolutions, because the village clerk is the editor and proprietor thereof, the publications may be made by posting copies of the resolutions, ordinances, etc., in five of the most public places in the village, as prescribed by Section 4232, General Code.

COLUMBUS, OHIO, May 14, 1912.

HON. ROY E. LAYTON, Solicitor of Waynesfield, Wapakoneta, Ohio.

DEAR SIR:—Your favor of May 6, 1912, is received, in which you state as follows:

"Mr. E. B. Y. is the editor, publisher and sole proprietor of the W. C., a weekly newspaper, the only newspaper published in said village and perhaps the only newspaper of general circulation in such municipality. Mr. Y. is also the village clerk. That being the only newspaper published in the village, as I understand it the law is practically mandatory that all resolutions, ordinances, notices, etc., requiring publication shall be published in that newspaper. I might add, however, that the village has no contract with this or any other newspaper for such publication but the printing has been given to it as a matter of course.

"Now the question is, would Mr. Y. be civilly or criminally liable or both, if any ordinances, resolutions or notices should be printed in his paper, and for which of course he would be paid. On the other hand would any legislation be valid if the printing were done in some other newspaper published in another town when the law requires that such publication shall take place in a newspaper published in such municipality. Or is the only alternative for Mr. Y. to resign as village clerk or do the public printing for nothing?"

The greater part of your inquiry is covered by an opinion given to Jacob Line on March 30, 1912, a copy of which is herewith enclosed.

You state that this newspaper is probably the only newspaper of general circulation in the village. If there is no newspaper of general circulation in the municipality other than the one published by the village clerk, the village is without a newspaper qualified to publish ordinances, resolutions, and other notices required to be published.

Section 4232, General Code, provides:

"In municipal corporations in which no newspaper is published, it shall be sufficient publication of ordinances, resolutions, statements, orders, proclamations, notices and reports, required by this title to be published, to post up copies thereof at not less than five of the most public places in the corporation, to be determined by the council, for a period of not less than fifteen days prior to the taking effect thereof. Advertising for bids for the construction of public improvements shall be published in at least one newspaper of general circulation in the corporation for not less than two nor more than four consecutive weeks. Notices of the sale of bonds shall be published in such manner and for such time as is provided in this title for the sale of bonds by a municipal corporation, when not sold to the sinking fund. The clerk shall make a certificate of such posting and the time when and places where done, in the manner provided in the preceding section, and such certificate shall be prima facie evidence that the copies were posted up as required."

Section 4676, General Code, provides:

"Where in this title a notice is directed to be published in a newspaper, and no such paper is published at the place mentioned, or if such newspaper is published at the place, but the publisher refuses on tender of his usual charge for a similar notice, to insert it in his newspaper, a publication in any newspaper of general circulation at such place shall be sufficient. Nothing in this section shall be construed to dispense with posters where they are provided for."

Section 4232, General Code, provides that when no newspaper is published in a municipal corporation, copies of ordinances, resolutions, and the other notices therein enumerated shall be posted at not less than five of the most public places in such corporation. Section 4676, General Code, provides, however, that where no newspaper is published at the place mentioned, such notices may be published in some newspaper of general circulation therein.

There is a newspaper published in the village, but this newspaper is disqualified from publishing such notices. The statute has reference to a newspaper qualified to make the publications. It appears that there is no newspaper of general circulation therein other than the newspaper of the village clerk. The situation of the village is the same as if there was no newspaper published, or of general circulation in such village.

The law does not contemplate that the village clerk shall resign his position, in order that the ordinances may be published in his newspaper. Such a ruling would disqualify the owner of a newspaper under such circumstances from holding an office in the village.

Where the only newspaper published and of general circulation in a village is disqualified from publishing notices and ordinances and resolutions for such village because an officer of the village is the editor and proprietor of such newspaper, and there is no other newspaper of general circulation in such village, the ordinances, resolutions and other notices, may become legal by posting copies of the same in five of the most public places in such village as prescribed by Section 4232, General Code.

Respectfully,
TIMOTHY S. HOGAN,
Attorney General.

VILLAGE SOLICITORS—SERVICES GOVERNED BY CONTRACT—CANNOT BRING SUIT TO COMPEL COUNCILMANIC DUTY FOR TAX PAYER.

The services of a village solicitor are governed by his contract and when his contract provides for "services for the village or any of its officials," such solicitor is not in a situation to bring an action in behalf of a tax payer against the village council to compel it to provide adequate street drainage, under Sections 4311-4313, General Code.

Under Section 4314, General Code, the tax payer himself may bring such suit, and the solicitor must defend the council in the proceeding.

COLUMBUS, OHIO, May 28, 1912.

HON. THOMAS EUBANKS, Solicitor, New Madison, Ohio.

DEAR SIR:—Your favor of May 6, 1912, received. You state that you have been requested by the tax payers of your village to bring an action against your council to compel them to provide adequate drainage for one of your streets. You also state that the terms of your employment as solicitor are that you are to perform all legal services for the village or its officials; that you receive a stipulated sum for your services with an additional fee for court work.

You inquire whether you have the same legal right that a city solicitor has to bring an action of injunction or of mandamus, under authority of Sections 4311 and 4313, General Code, without being ordered to do so by council.

Section 4311, General Code, provides as follows:

> "The solicitor shall apply in the name of the corporation, to a court of competent jurisdiction for an order of injunction to restrain the misapplication of funds of the corporation, or the abuse of its corporate powers, or the execution or performance of any contract made in behalf of the corporation in contravention of the laws or ordinance governing it, or which was procured by fraud or corruption."

Section 4313, General Code, is as follows:

> "In case an officer or board fails to perform any duty expressly enjoined by law or ordinance, the solicitor shall apply to a court of competent jurisdiction for a writ of mandamus to compel the performance of such duty."

I have already held in a former opinion construing Section 4220, General Code, which provides for the employment of legal counsel for a village, that the counsel so employed is not an officer; that he is only an employe and, as such employe, is only bound to the performance of the things he has contracted to do and perform.

You are, by the terms of your contract, to perform all legal services for the village or any of its officials. The village is your client and your employer and you cannot represent the tax payers in a proceeding to mandamus the council until you are relieved from employment by the village.

Sections 4311 and 4313, General Code, were formerly Sections 1777 and 1778, Revised Statutes.

The supreme court of the state of Ohio in the case of Pierce vs. Higgins (79 O. S., p. 14) said in reference to these sections, that, "their terms presupposed the presence of a solicitor and officer on whom a request to bring a suit can be made. The petition shows that the village of Piketon had no solicitor. It was impossible, therefore, to comply with that requirement. * * *"

Section 4313, General Code, provides that "in case an officer fails to perform any duty expressly enjoined by law or ordinance, the solicitor shall apply to a court * * * to compel the performance of such duty."

Your village has no such officer as a solicitor. You are employed by the village and the nature of your employment is the same that exists between any client and an attorney.

Section 4314, General Code, provides a remedy and a course to pursue when there is no solicitor.

Section 4314 provides in part as follows:

> "* * * and any tax payer of any municipal corporation in which there is no solicitor may bring such suit on behalf of such corporation. No such suit or proceeding shall be entertained by any court until the tax payer shall have given security for the costs of the proceedings."

Having no solicitor, any tax payer of your village can bring an action of mandamus in your case providing the facts and the law warrant it, on giving security for the costs of the proceeding.

If this suit is brought, you, having been employed to represent the village in all court proceedings, can represent the council in this action; but you cannot bring an action of mandamus or injunction under authority of Sections 4311 and 4313, General Code, as they do not apply to your situation.

Very truly yours,

TIMOTHY S. HOGAN,

Attorney General.

VILLAGE POLICE—POWER OF MAYOR AND COUNCIL TO APPOINT AND REMOVE—APPOINTMENT WITHOUT SPECIFICATION OF TERM—RIGHT OF INCUMBENT TO HOLD OVER UNTIL PROPER REAPPOINTMENT IS MADE.

When there is in existence in a village, an ordinance authorizing the members of the police department to be appointed by the mayor subject to the confirmation of council, providing that they may hold the office for the time appointed, unless sooner discharged for cause, and until their successors are duly appointed and confirmed, the fact that such officers were appointed and confirmed without the specification of a definite term, is not fatal to the holding of the office. Officers so appointed hold, subject to the will of the appointing power, and until reappointment is properly made, the present incumbents hold over.

Such officers may be removed by the mayor for cause, under Section 4384, General Code. This power is discretionary with the mayor and a provision of ordinance attempting to remove this decretion by empowering council to order the mayor to so remove or discharge, is invalid.

COLUMBUS, OHIO, June 1, 1912.

HON. CARL ARMSTRONG, Solicitor of Mingo Junction, Steubenville, Ohio.

DEAR SIR:—Your favor of May 14, 1912, is received, in which you ask an opinion of this department as follows:

> "I enclose you a statement of fact arising in the village of Mingo Junction, Ohio, concerning which the opinion of your office is desired by council.
>
> "It is a case of holding over of members of the police force; the mayor has reappointed the old members—the council refuses to confirm and the members hold over by virtue of their previous appointment.
> "How to get rid of them is the question before the council, and the mayor and members are at variance on the question."

The statement of facts enclosed shows that two members of the police force were appointed and confirmed in January, 1910; in January, 1912, the new mayor reappointed these two members and council refuses to confirm the appointments. The two members in question are still members of the police force.

The manner of appointing policemen for a village is prescribed by Section 4384, General Code, which provides:

> "The marshal shall be elected for a term of two years, commencing on the first day of January next after his election, and shall serve until his successor is elected and qualified. He shall be an elector of the corporation. When provided for by council, and subject to its confirmation, the mayor shall appoint all deputy marshals, policemen, night watchmen and special policemen, and may remove them for cause, which shall be stated in writing to council."

The statute does not fix the term of office for the policemen.

Under the authority granted by this section council has passed an ordinance organizing the police department.

Section two of the ordinance submitted by you, provides:

> "The members of the police department shall be appointed by the mayor, and confirmed by council, and shall hold office during the time for which they shall be appointed unless sooner suspended or discharged; and each police officer other than the marshal shall receive for his services as such, a salary not to exceed $70.00 per month payable monthly out of the safety fund of this village."

Section 4 of said ordinance provides:

> "Police officers appointed under this ordinance shall enter upon their duties as directed by the mayor and shall continue in office as members of such department until their successors are duly appointed, qualified and confirmed.

The ordinance does not fix a definite term of office, but states that they "shall hold office during the time for which they shall be appointed." It further provides that they "shall continue in office—until their successors are duly appointed, qualified and confirmed."

The question arises as to whether the failure of council to fix a definite term of office for the policemen invalidates the ordinance.

Article 2, Section 20 of the Ohio Constituion, provides:

> "The general assembly, in cases not provided for in this constitution, shall fix the term of office and the compensation of all officers; but no change therein shall affect the salary of any officer during his term, unless the office be abolished.

In case of State vs. Board of Education, 12 Cir. Dec., 333, it is held:

> "The term 'officer' as used in Sec. 20, Art. 2, of the constitution, providing that the general assembly shall not affect the salary of any officer during his existing term, does not refer to such officers as members of a board of school examiners or to officers of a municipal corporation, such as mayor, marshal, clerk, treasurer, etc., but to those created and whose salaries are fixed by the general assembly."

The provision of Section 20, Article 2, of the Constitution, does not require that a term of office be fixed for a policeman of a village.

The ordinance in question was passed March 28, 1909. This was prior to the adoption of the General Code.

Section 1536-860, Revised Statutes, which is now Section 4384, General Code, supra, contained this provision at the time of the passage of the ordinance:

> "Council may provide for such deputy marshals, policemen, night watchmen and special policemen as it may deem best, and fix their duties, periods of service, bonds and compensation, and they shall be appointed by the mayor, and confirmed by the council and may be removed by him for cause which shall be stated in writing to council."

By the authority therein conferred council could provide for policemen and fix their periods of service. Section 4384, General Code, does not specifically authorize council to fix the period of service, but provides that the mayor shall appoint the policemen "when provided for by council." Under either provision council may fix a definite term of office, but are not required to do so.

Throop on Public Offices, says at Section 307, of his work:

> "Where a statute authorizes a city council to regulate the 'manner of appointment and removal' of the city officers, this authorizes the council to fix the terms of their respective offices; and the council may thus fix the terms by providing that the offices shall be held during good behavior."

At Section 386 of Dillon on Municipal Corporations, fifth edition, it is said:

> "But when the statutory authority which is conferred upon the council is not merely to make an appointment, but to provide for the creation and to regulate and control a department, or to make ordinance to regulate and define the manner of the appointment and removal of officers, the council may in connection with the exercise of the powers conferred upon it, fix, by ordinance, the term for which the officers shall be appointed, and the tenure of the office will continue for the prescribed term, so long as the ordinance remains unrepealed."

The authority granted to council in Section 4384, General Code, to provide for deputy marshals and policemen is sufficient to authorize council to fix the term for which they shall be appointed, provided that the statute does not otherwise provide the term of office.

In the case of City of Oklahoma City vs. Dean, 15 Okla., 139, it is held:

> "Policemen in cities of the first class in the territory of Oklahoma are not appointed for any definite length of time. Succeeding administrations in such cities, under the provisions of Section 7, Chapter 12, Article 1, Wilson's Statutes, have the power and it is their duty to appoint certain officials, among them policemen, and when such appointment has been made, and the appointee has qualified and entered upon the duties of the office, the term of his predecessor in office expires, as under the provisions of such statute the term of such officers is made to expire when their successors are chosen."

Gillette, J., quotes the statute and comments upon the same on page 140 as follows:

> "Section 7, Chapter 12, Article 1, Wilson's annotated Statutes provides:
>
> "The mayor shall appoint, by with the consent of council, an assistant city marshal, a city engineer, a city physician and such policeman and other officers as the mayor and council may deem necessary. The officers so appointed shall hold their office until their successors are chosen and qualified.
> "We think this language susceptible of only one construction, to wit: That the mayor and council of each succeeding administration in a city of the first class, shall appoint the officers named, who shall hold their office until their successors are chosen and qualified. Such officers are not appointed for any specified term. Their power to act ends with the qualification of their successors who have been chosen and qualified."

The statute in the above case provided for the appointment of the officers but did not fix a definite term. It provided that they should hold their office until "their successors are chosen and qualified." The court held that their term was ended when their successors were appointed and qualified.

In our situation the statute provides for the appointment when the officers are provided for by council. Council in pursuance of the authority granted by the statute, has provided for the positions and states that the appointees shall "continue in office until their successors are duly appointed, qualified and confirmed." The situation is similar to that in the Oklahoma case. The term of service as fixed by council terminates when the successors are appointed and qualified, unless they are sooner suspended or discharged.

It is usual to fix a definite term of office. This condition, however, is not essential to the creation of an office.

This principle is recognized when the following rules are stated to govern when no definite term is fixed.

In Parsons vs. Breed, 126 Ky. 759, it is held:

"Where neither the constitution nor the statutes fix the term of office, the appointee holds at the pleasure of the appointing power, though it attempts to fix a definite term.

In Fox vs. Ault, 26 Mo. App. 673, it is held:

"A municipal office, held for no definite period of time, is one held at the will of the authority which conferred it, and may be vacated at any time."

In 28 Cyc. at page 503, the rule is stated:

"The term of office of policemen is often fixed by statute, and when so fixed it cannot be changed by ordinance. Where the duration of their appointment is not fixed, policemen hold their office at the pleasure of the appointing power, provided there is no constitutional limitation upon the duration of official terms."

The failure to fix a definite term of office is not fatal to the position. Under the provisions of Section 1536-860, Revised Statutes, above quoted and of Section 4384, General Code, council may or may not fix a definite term of service. The ordinance in question is not invalid because it does not fix a definite term of appointment. The provision in Section 4 of the ordinance that they shall continue in office until their successors are appointed and qualified, will permit the old appointees to hold over.

You ask how they can be removed. Section 4384, supra, provides a way of removal by the mayor. But as the mayor desires their reappointment, it is apparent that he declines to remove them.

Section 4263, General Code, provides:

"The mayor shall have general supervision over each department and the officers provided for in this title. When the mayor has reason to believe that the head of a department or such officer has been guilty in the performance of his official duty of bribery, misfeasance, malfeasance, nonfeasance, misconduct in office, gross neglect of duty, gross immorality or habitual drunkenness, he shall immediately file with the council, except when the removal of such head of department or officer is otherwise provided for, written charges against such person, setting forth in detail a statement of such alleged guilt, and, at the same time, or soon thereafter as possible, serve or cause to be served a true copy of such charges with the person against whom the charges are made. Such service may be in person or by leaving a copy of the charges at the office of such person, and due return thereof made to council, as is provided for the return of the service of summons in a civil action."

This section contains the provision, "except when the removal of such head of department or officer is otherwise provided for." The removal of a policeman of a village is otherwise provided for by Section 4384, General Code, and Section 4263, General Code, would not therefore apply to them.

By virtue of Section 4216, General Code, council has a right to remove employes. Said section reads:

> At the first meeting in January of each year, the council shall immediately proceed to elect a president pro tem. from their own number, who shall serve until the first meeting of the council in January next after his election. From time to time the council may provide such employes for the village as they may determine, and such employes may be removed at any regular meeting by a majority of the members elected to council. When the mayor is absent from the village or is unable from any cause to perform his duties, the president pro tem. of council becomes acting mayor, and shall have the same powers and perform the same duties as the mayor."

The power of council to remove as provided in this section applies to employes who are provided for and appointed by council. It does not authorize council to remove policemen who are appointed by the mayor.

The ordinance attempts to provide a means of discharging these policemen by action of the council.

Section 5 of the ordinance provides:

> "It shall be competent for the mayor at any time to suspend or discharge any or all of the members of the police department of this village and report his said action to council with reasons therefor. And if council by vote sustain such suspension or discharge, said officer or officers so suspended or discharged shall receive no compensation from the date of said action by the mayor. It is further provided that the council may at any time order and direct the mayor to suspend or discharge any member of the police department and unless the mayor complies with said request within ten days council may by a vote of two-thirds of all members elected to council discharge such officer or officers.

Section 4384, General Code, provides that the mayor may remove the policemen for cause, while Section 5 of the ordinance authorizes council to order the mayor to suspend or discharge them. The effect of this provision of the ordinance would be to control in a measure the right of the mayor to remove as given him by Section 4384, General Code. The right to remove carries with it a discretion in the removing power. That is, he may either remove or retain. An effort by council to act under the provision of Section 5 of the ordinance to require the mayor to remove would be an interference with his right to remove as given him by the statute. This provision of the ordinance is, therefore, unauthorized and council cannot act under the same.

The statutes do not authorize council to file charges against these policemen.

The policemen are appointed by the mayor, but such appointments must be confirmed by council. In order to make an appointment legal and complete both the mayor and council must concur in such appointment, that is, the mayor must appoint, and the council must confirm. The appointment of the present force by the present mayor was not complete as council failed to confirm. The persons in question cannot serve under the new appointment, but they can hold over under their former appointment.

The policemen may hold their positions until legally removed or until their successors are appointed, qualified and confirmed.

Respectfully,

TIMOTHY S. HOGAN,

Attorney General.

PUBLIC UTILITIES—POWER OF MUNICIPAL CORPORATION TO ERECT ITS OWN LIGHT AND WATER PLANT WHEN FRANCHISE WITH PRIVATE COMPANY IS IN EXISTENCE—PURCHASE OF LIGHT PLANT.

A village has the right to erect its own light or water plant regardless of the fact that there is still under duration, a franchise granted private companies for these purposes.

In the case of the electric light plant, however, the village is required, under Section 3990, General Code, to purchase the private company's plant with the consent of its owners.

COLUMBUS, OHIO, June 11, 1912.

HON. O. H. STEWART, Village Solicitor, Middleport, Ohio.

DEAR SIR:—I acknowledge receipt of your letter of May 8, in which you state that the village of Middleport is considering the matter of establishing its own water and electric light plant. You also state that a private company is supplying the village with water, and another private company is supplying light.

The water company's contract for city hydrants has expired; but the light company's contract is still in force. You then ask the following questions:

> "1. Has the village of Middleport, under the laws of the state, a legal right to establish a competing municipal water and light plant?

"2. To what extent, if any, would the village be liable to the private companies (Pomeroy & Middleport Water Supply Co. and the Mutual Electric Light Co.) should the village establish its own electric light and water plant?

"Please mention the liability and responsibility as toward each company.

"3. To what extent could the municipal system compete with the private companies for business?"

You further ask what application Section 3990 of the General Code, and 47 O. S. page 52, have to the matters. In reply I desire to state:

Municipal corporations, such as Middleport, have only such powers as are delegated to them by statute, in relation to the matters covered by your inquiry.

The enumerated powers of such corporations are embraced in Title XII, Division II, Chapter I, of the General Code. To this chapter we must look for authority, if any, conferring powers upon your village to do the things under consideration. If this chapter does not specifically provide for these things, and is silent on the subject, then your village has no power to proceed along that line. On the other hand, if this chapter provides for these matters, your village may follow the provisions of the same in a legal manner.

Let us take up the sections, applying to this subject, seriatim.

Section 3616 of the General Code, provides:

"All municipal corporations shall have the general powers mentioned in this chapter, and council may provide by ordinance or resolution for the exercise and enforcement of them."

Section 3618, G. C., provides for the right

"To establish, maintain and operate municipal lighting, power and heating plants, and to furnish the municipality and the inhabitants thereof with light, power and heat, to procure everything necessary therefor, and to acquire by purchase, lease or otherwise, the necessary lands for such purpose, within and without the municipality."

Section 3619, G. C., provides for the right

"To provide for a supply of water, by the construction of wells, pumps, cisterns, aqueducts, water pipes, reservoirs and waterworks, for the protection thereof, and to prevent unnecessary waste of water, and the pollution thereof. To apply moneys received as charges for water to the maintenance, construction, enlargement and extension of the works and to the extinguishment of any indebtedness created therefor."

Electric Works

Section 3990 of the General Code provides:

"The council of a municipality may, when it is deemed expedient and for the public good, erect gas works or electric works at the ex> pense of the corporations, or purchase any gas or electric works already erected therein, but in villages where gas works or electrical works have already been erected by any person, company of persons, or corporation, to whom a franchise to erect and operate gas works or electric works has been granted, and such franchise has not yet expired, the council shall, with the consent of the owner or owners, purchase such gas works or electric works already erected therein."

The section further provides for condemnation proceedings in case of inability to agree, and says that the existing contract shall be considered as an element of valuation in fixing the compensation to be paid for such gas or electric works.

I think it will not be controverted that no municipality has the right, and never did have, under the municipal laws, to grant an exclusive franchise to any electric or waterworks company.

This being so, the municipality has never parted with its right to construct its own waterworks, or electric light plant; and can operate the same in competition with existing plants, except it must purchase the elecric light plant.

Nothing appears in the statute requiring the village to purchase the water plant; therefore, it can install, maintain and operate the same and compete for business with the existing company.

These companies, when they accepted their franchises and entered into their contracts, did so with full knowledge of the law, and are bound by its provisions, the same as if expressed in such contracts and franchises.

If your village follows the law as above set out, and establishes its own municipal plants (purchasing the electric plant), there is no liability or responsibility from it to either company. Of course, these matters must be done by ordinance or resolution, submitted to the people, as other matters of like nature are, and must be in strict conformity to the statutes. The 47 O. S., page 52 is a leading case in Ohio, and is quoted with approval in 48 O. S. 136, 137 and 142; 76 O. S. 338-339; see North Springs Water Co. vs. City of Tacoma, 47 L. R. A., page 214. In that case the supreme court of Washington held in its 2d syllabus as follows:

> "A grant of a franchise to a water company, without any words of exclusion or of limitation upon the right of the city, does not preclude the city from subsequently establishing waterworks of its own, although the result may be to destroy the value of the franchise."

This case cites the 47 State, supra, and also 18 O. S. 262.

The 47 O. S. case, p. 52, went to the supreme court of the United States, and the doctrine affirmed. See 146 U. S. 258.

I believe I have covered the ground of your inquiry.

Very truly yours.

TIMOTHY S. HOGAN,
Attorney General.

WATERWORKS BONDS—SINGLE ORDINANCE MAY NOT PROVIDE FOR BOTH PURCHASE AND IMPROVEMENT OF WATERWORKS—DISTINCT PURPOSES.

The mere fact that, to Section 3940, General Code, there has recently been added the words "that the bonds enumerated in Section 3939, General Code, may be issued for any and all purposes," does not exclude the mandatory provision of Section 4226, General Code, against any by-law, resolution or ordinance containing more than one subject.

Since, therefore, the improvement of waterworks and the purchase of waterworks are distinctly different subjects, provision for bonds for both purposes may not be included in a single ordinance.

COLUMBUS, OHIO, May 28, 1912.

HON. JAMES I. BOULGER, Solicitor of Frankfort, Chillicothe, Ohio.

DEAR SIR:—Your favor of May 15, 1912, is received in which you inquire of the following:

> "The supreme court has held in the Elyria case, 57 Ohio St., that municipalities could not issue bonds under one ordinance both for the erection and purchase of waterworks. Since then Section 3940 of General Code was passed authorizing issue of bonds for any or all of purposes enumerated in Longworth act. Under this I have come to conclusion that a municipality may provide in a single ordinance for purchase and improvement of a waterworks plant. Besides do not believe that this conflicts with Elyria case."

Section 3940, General Code, to which you refer, provides as follows:

> "Such bonds may be issued for any or all of such purposes, but the total indebtedness created in any one fiscal year, by the council of a municipal corporation, under the authority conferred in the preceding section, shall not exceed one per cent. of the total value of all property in such municipal corporation, as listed and assessed for taxation."

The provisions of this section were formerly found in Section 2835, Revised Statutes. The Elyria case, to which you refer, was decided in January, 1898. At that time the provision now found in Section 3940, General Code, to wit, "such bonds may be issued for any or all such purposes," was not in the statute, nor did the statute contain any similar provision. This provision was first inserted in the amendatory act of April 29, 1902, as set forth in 95 Ohio Laws 318. It was not as a matter of course considered in the Elyria case.

In that case, which is styled, The Elyria Gas and Water Co. vs. City of Elyria, 57 Ohio St., 374, it is held in the fourth syllabus:

> "The purchase of waterworks, and the erection of new ones, are distinct measures, requiring different proceedings; and a resolution of council which combines both as one, and provides for the submission, in that form, of the question of the issue and sale of the bonds of the municipality for both purposes combined, is unauthorized, and ineffectual for either purpose; nor can it be made effectual for either, by the elimination of the other in the proceedings subsequent to the resolution. It is the policy of the statute that each measure for which it is proposed to issue and sell the bonds of the corporation shall stand on its own merits, unaided by combination with others, and that it be voted upon as an independent measure, by the council and electors, uninfluenced by such combination."

On page 380, Williams, J., says:

"The power conferred by the statute on the council, is to issue and sell the bonds of the municipality 'for the erection or purchase of waterworks.' The two purposes are entirely distinct. The purchase of waterworks necessarily implies that they have already been erected, and are at present existing property, the subject of sale and purchase; while the erection of waterworks can only have reference to their future construction. That a municipal corporation may own two plants, one acquired by purchase, and another erected by it, or, after having acquired one in the former mode, may proceed to erect a new plant, is not questioned. But their acquisition by these two different methods require different proceedings. And, it is the policy of the statute that the proposition for each separate improvement shall stand on its own merits, unaided by combination with any other measure, and be so acted upon by the council in the first instance, and then, if adopted, be so submitted for approval by the electors that each may be voted upon as a separate measure, uninfluenced by combination with others."

The provisions of Section 3939, General Code, are substantially the same as those under consideration in the above case. This section enumerates 27 different purposes for which bonds may be issued. It provides in part as follows:

"When it deems it necessary, the council of a municipal corporation, by an affirmative vote of not less than two-thirds of the members elected or appointed thereto, by ordinance, may issue and sell bonds in such amounts and denominations, for such period of time, and at such rate of interest, not exceeding six per cent. per annum, as said council may determine and in the manner provided by law, for any of the following specific purposes:

* * * * * * * * * * * *

"11. For erecting or purchasing waterworks for supplying water to the corporation and the inhabitants thereof."

These improvements and purposes for which bonds may be issued may require different proceedings and it would not be possible to include them in the same proceeding. As said in the Elyria case, supra, the erection of waterworks, and the purchase of waterworks are distinct and separate projects and require different proceedings to carry them into effect.

The only words of Section 3940, General Code, which could possibly be construed to change the rule laid down in the Elyria case, are these: Such bonds may be issued for any or all of such purposes.

By these words the legislature has not attempted to change the rule as laid down in the Elyria case. It has not stated that bonds may be issued in the same proceeding, or by virtue of the same proceeding, for two or more of the purposes enumerated in Section 3939, General Code. Neither can it be inferred from the language used, that it meant to authorize the issue of bonds for two or more of the purposes enumerated, by virtue of the same proceeding.

If the legislature intended to provide any such rule it could have used language which would have left no doubt as to its meaning. In Section 3842, General Code, the legislature has expressly authorized the council to include one or more streets or alleys in one ordinance when it provides for the sprinkling, cleaning or sweeping of streets. Said section reads:

> "The council of a city upon the recommendation of the director of public service, or the council of a village, may provide by ordinance for sprinkling with water, sweeping or cleaning of such streets or alleys, or parts thereof. For the purpose of carrying out the provisions of this section and of the three next preceding sections, one ordinance may be made to include one or more streets or alleys, or parts thereof, and one or more of the powers granted by such sections."

The words used in Section 3940, General Code, now under consideration, are general and cannot be construed to authorize council to issue bonds for two or more of the purposes enumerated in Section 3939, General Code, by virtue of the same proceeding. This section deals with bonds and the purposes for which they may be issued. It does not attempt to regulate the proceeding or manner in which they may be authorized. It does not purport to regulate the manner in which the purposes may be carried out.

If such bonds may be issued in the same proceeding, it must be founded upon some other ground. Section 3940, General Code, does not change the rule enunciated in 57 Ohio State, 374, the Elyria case.

In the Elyria case council attempted to provide for the issue of bonds for the erection and purchase of waterworks. In your case you desire to purchase and improve the waterworks. You do not state whether the plant to be improved is the one to be purchased, or whether it is a plant already in operation by the village. In either event, the question arises as to whether these are the same subject or different subjects.

Two subjects cannot be included in the same ordinance as provided in Section 4226, General Code, which provides:

> "No ordinance, resolution or by-law shall contain more than one subject, which shall be clearly expressed in its title. No by-law or ordinance, or section thereof, shall be revived or amended, unless the new by-law or ordinance contains the entire by-law or ordinance, or section revived or amended, and the by-law or ordinance, section or sections so amended shall be repealed. Each such by-law, resolution and ordinance shall be adopted or passed by a separate vote of the council and the yeas and nays shall be entered upon the journal."

The provisions of this statute are held to be mandatory in case of Heffner vs. City of Toledo, 75 Ohio St., 413, wherein Summers, J., says at page 423 of the opinion:

"The requirement of Section 1694 that 'No by-law or ordinance shall contain more than one subject, which shall be clearly expressed in its title,' evidently was suggested by the provision of Section 16 of Article 2 of the Constitution that : 'No bill shall contain more than one subject, which shall be clearly expressed in its title.' The latter provision has been held to be directory (Pim. vs. Nicholson, 6 Ohio St., 174), and if the former were so it would not require further consideration, but it has been held mandatory (Bloom vs. City of Xenia, 32 Ohio St., 461; Campbell vs. City of Cincinnati, et al., 49 Ohio St., 463)."

The first and second syllabi of this case read:

"The statutory requirement that 'No by-law or ordinance shall contain more than one subject, which shall be clearly expressed in its title,' was intended to prevent the uniting in one ordinance of diverse subjects or measures and effecting its passage by uniting in its support all those in favor of any, and to prevent the adoption of ordinances by the votes of councilmen ignorant of their contents.

"Whether an ordinance is violative of the statutory requirement that 'No by-law or ordinance shall contain more than one subject, which shall be clearly expressed in its title,' is to be determined not by its form, but in the light of the mischief the statute was intended to prevent."

In your case the proceedings concern waterworks, but they concern separate features of waterworks. In the Elyria case the proceeding was in reference to waterworks, but the court held that the erection of waterworks was different subject than the purchase of waterworks. They were distinct propositions and required different proceedings.

The improvement of waterworks and the erection of waterworks are both public improvements. The proceedings and steps required for the improvement of waterworks are substantially the same as are required for the erection of a waterworks. Both come under the head of public improvements. In one case you have a waterworks to start with and in the other you have not. The method of procedure would be the same.

It might be observed further that Section 3939, General Code, does not specifically mention the improvement of waterworks. It authorizes the issue of bonds for the erection or purchase of waterworks.

Again, if the waterworks to be improved is a different plant than the one to be purchased, you would have two different subjects. On the other hand, if the plant to be purchased, is the one to be improved, the council would be providing for the improvement of a plant which is not yet under its control.

As there is no difference in the procedure required for the improvement or erection of a waterworks, the principles laid down in the Elyria case would apply as well to the one as to the other. The improvement of waterworks, or the erection of waterworks, require different proceedings than the purchase of a waterworks.

The improvement and purchase of waterworks cannot, therefore, be provided for in the same proceeding.

Respectfully,

TIMOTHY S. HOGAN,

Attorney General.

SMITH ONE PER CENT. LAW—LIMITATIONS TO LEVY FOR YEAR 1910 AND SIX PER CENT. INCREASE FOR 1912—INTEREST AND SINKING FUND LEVIES WITH AND WITHOUT VOTE OF PEOPLE BEFORE AND AFTER JUNE 1, 1912.

Under Section 5649-2 and 5649-3 of the Smith one per cent. law, the limitations measured by the amount of taxes levied within a taxing district in the year 1910, plus six per cent. for the year 1912, etc., do not include levies for interest and principal of any bonds issued before June 1, 1912, nor do they include any such levies issued after June 1, when authorized by a vote of the people.

All other levies are included, however, which are made within the territorial limits of the taxing district whether by state, county, township, school district, special taxing district, road district, etc., excepting emergency levies under Section 5649-4.

The six per cent. increase for 1912 need not be apportioned among the taxing districts according to any rule, except that the budget commission may not exercise a discrimination with respect to the taxing districts.

Levies for bonds not voted upon by the people and made after June 1, 1912, are included not only within the limitations of 1910, and the additional six per cent. for 1912, etc., but also are included within the two, three and five mill limitations.

COLUMBUS, OHIO, June 6, 1912.

HON. WILLIAM O. MATHEWS, Solicitor of the Village of Bay, 1007 Williamson Building, Cleveland, Ohio.

DEAR SIR:—I beg to acknowledge receipt of your communication of May 20, in which you ask my opinion as to whether or not under Sections 5649-2 and 5649-3 of the Smith one per cent. law, so-called, the limitation measured by the amount of taxes levied within a taxing district in the year 1910, plus 6 per cent. for the year 1912, etc., includes levies for interest and principal of bonds issued after June 1, 1911.

The statutory provisions in question are as follows:

> "Section 5649-2. * * *, the aggregate amount of taxes that may be levied on the taxable property in any county * * or other taxing district, for the year 1911, and any year thereafter, including taxes levied under authority of Section 5649-1 of the General Code, and levies for * * all other purposes, shall not in any one year exceed in the aggregate the total amount of taxes that were levied upon the taxable property therein * * for all purposes in the year 1910, provided, however, that the maximum rate * * that may be levied for all purposes * * shall not in any one year exceed ten mills * * * and such levies in addition thereto for sinking fund and interest purposes as may be necessary to provide for any indebtedness heretofore incurred or any indebtedness that may hereafter be incurred by a vote of the people.
> "Section 5649-3. * * * the intent and purpose of this act being to provide the total amount of taxes which may be levied in the year 1911 or in any year thereafter, for all purposes, shall not exceed in the aggregate, the total amount of taxes levied in the year 1910 plus six per cent. thereof for the year 1912 * * * or such less amount as may be produced by the levy of a maximum rate of ten mills on each dollar of the tax valuation of the taxable property therein * * * whether such taxes be levied for the same or other purposes, except to the amount of such levies as may be made for interest and sinking fund purposes as provided in Section 5649-2 of the General Code. * * *"

In Section 5649-2, it will be observed that levies under Section 5649-1 are referred to and included within the first limitation therein defined. Said section provides as follows:

"Section 5649-1. In any taxing district, the taxing authority shall levy a tax sufficient to provide for sinking fund and interest purposes."

Without discussing the grammatical construction, of the two sections above quoted, elaborately, I beg to state that I am of the opinion that the following propositions are true:

First. The limitation measured by the 1910 taxes is not upon the amount which may be levied by a village as such in any year; it is rather upon the amount which may be levied within the territorial limits of the village by state, county, township, school district, village and any special taxing district, such as road districts, etc., combined. The increase of six per cent. for the year 1912 is based upon this total, and it does not necessarily follow that such increase must be apportioned among the several districts levying within the same territory in proportion to the levy made by them therein. Under such circumstances it is possible to conceive of such six per cent. increase being given entirely to one of the taxing districts. This is for the budget commission to decide, though in deciding it, that body must not discriminate among the taxing districts.

Second. The 1910 tax limitation includes all levies for all purposes whatsoever, excepting emergency levies under Section 5649-4, and additional levies voted by the people under Section 5649-5. That is to say, all interest and sinking fund levies to provide for the payment of bonded indebtedness, whether incurred before or after June 1, 1911, must be made within this limitation. This is the principal question concerning which you inquire.

Third. Levies for interest and sinking fund purposes to provide for bonded indebtedness created prior to June 1, 1911, are created thereafter under authority of a vote of the people, while within the limitation measured by the 1910 taxes, are outside of the ten-mill limitation. That is to say, if in a taxing district the amount of taxes levied in the year 1910 divided into the duplicate for the year 1911 or for the year 1912 produces a rate in excess of ten mills, this excess may be used for interest and sinking fund levies for the purposes aforesaid, but not any ordinary or current uses. On the other hand, however, levies for interest and sinking fund purposes to retire and provide for bonds issued after June 1, 1911, without a vote of the people are within both the ten-mill limitation and that measured by the 1910 taxes. In fact, such levies are within all four of the limitations of the Smith law.

As you state in your first letter that the village is considering the question of issuing bonds for a specific purpose without a vote of the people, I must advise you that, interest and sinking fund levies to provide for such bonds must be made not only within the limitation of the 1910 taxes, but also within the ten-mill limitation of Section 5649-2-3, supra, and within the five-mill limitation of Section 5649-3*a*.

The above will be found, I think, in strict accord with the decision of the supreme court in the case of State, ex rel., vs. Sanzenbacher, 84 O. S., unreported.

Very truly yours,
TIMOTHY S. HOGAN,
Attorney General.

POLICEMEN AND FIREMEN IN VILLAGES—POWER OF COUNCIL TO REGULATE APPOINTMENT BY MAYOR AND FIX TERM OF OFFICE—WHERE NO TERM FIXED, SALARY MAY BE INCREASED.

Section 4384, General Code, confers upon the council the power to regulate the number and manner of the appointments, and the term of office of the members of the police and fire department which are to be appointed by the mayor.

Where council has not provided any definite term, council is not prohibited, by the terms of Section 4219, General Code, from increasing the salaries of such appointees during their incumbency.

COLUMBUS, OHIO, June 14, 1912.

HON. J. H. C. LYON, Solicitor of Lowellville, Youngstown, Ohio.

DEAR SIR:—Your favor of June 12, 1912, is received in which you inquire:

> "I am solicitor of the village of Lowellville, Mahoning county, and a question has arisen as to whether or not night policemen and day policemen, who were assigned for the purpose and are not elected officers can receive a higher salary than that which they were to receive under the ordinance they provided when they took office."

The manner of providing policemen for a village is prescribed by Section 4384, General Code, which provides:

> "The marshal shall be elected for a term of two years, commencing on the first day of January next after his election, and shall serve until his successor is elected and qualified. He shall be an elector of the corporation. When provided for by council, and subject to its confirmation, the mayor shall appoint all deputy marshals, policemen, night watchmen and special policemen, and may remove them for cause, which shall be stated in writing to council."

In order to have policemen of a village council must provide therefore by ordinance. The statute does not fix their term of office. By virtue of Section 1536-860, Rev. Stat., which is now Section 4384, General Code, supra, council was specifically authorized to fix the term of office of policemen. Said section provided in part:

> "Council may provide for such deputy marshals, policemen, night watchmen and special policemen as it may deem best, and fix their duties, periods of service, bonds and compensation, * * *"

By the authority therein conferred council could provide for policemen and fix their periods of service. Section 4384, supra, does not specifically authorize council to fix the period of service, but it provides that the mayor shall appoint the policemen "when provided for by council." Under either provision council may fix a definite term of office, but are not required to do so.

Throop on Public Offices, says at Section 307, of his work:

> "Where a statute authorizes a city council to regulate the "manner of appointment and removal" of the city officers, this authorizes the council to fix the terms of their respective offices; and the council may thus fix the terms by providing that the offices shall be held during good behavior."

At Section 386 of Dillon on Municipal Corporations, 5th edition, it is said:

> "But when the statutory authority which is conferred upon the council is not merely to make an appointment, but to provide for the creation and to regulate and control a department, or to make ordinance to regulate and define the manner of the appointment and removal of officers, the council may in connection with the exercise of the powers conferred upon it, fix, by ordinance, the term for which the officers shall be appointed, and the tenure of the office will continue for the prescribed term, so long as the ordinance remains unrepealed."

The authority granted to council in Section 4384, General Code, to provide for deputy marshals and for policemen is sufficient to authorize council to fix the terms for which they shall be appointed.

Your inquiry is as to the power of council to increase the salaries of the village policemen, after their appointment and qualification.

Section 4219, General Code, provides:

> "Council shall fix the compensation and bonds of all officers, clerks and employes in the village government, except as otherwise provided by law. All bonds shall be made with sureties subject to the approval of the mayor. The compensation so fixed shall not be increased or diminished during the term for which any officer, clerk or employe may have been elected or appointed. Members of council may receive as compensation the sum of two dollars for each meeting, not to exceed twenty-four meetings in any one year."

The provisions of this section will prevent council from increasing or diminishing the salary during the term for which the policemen were appointed. The question arises as to the term for which they were appointed. The ordinance must be looked to in order to ascertain if a definite term of service has been provided for the policemen.

If the ordinance has provided a term of office the salary cannot be increased during the term for which such policemen were appointed. If, however, the ordinance has not provided a term of office, such salary may be increased during the incumbency of the policemen.

In case of State vs. Massillon, 14 Cir. Dec., 249, Voorhees, J., says at page 252 of the opinion:

> "The statute now applies to cases where there is an increase during the term. The word 'term' has significance, as we think, under that section of the statute. It simply means to limit. That is, during the period that the office is limited, during that period his salary shall not be increased. But in this case there is no limit fixed by law. It is at the pleasure of the board of health that gives the health officer his position. It is at their pleasure. It is not a term, for the reason there is no limit to it. It may be likened unto a tenancy at will, not a term, because it has no limitation. Therefore it would be difficult to bring such an employe within the terms of Section 1717, Revised Statutes, prohibiting an increase of salary of an officer during his term, whether he be elected or whether he be appointed."

In case of Stage vs. Coughlin, 12 Nisi Prius, N. S., 419 (Ohio Law Rep. of May 6, 1912), the syllabus reads:

> "Members of the police and fire departments of a municipality are not appointed for a 'term' within the meaning of Section 4213, P. & A. Anno. General Code, and having no fixed or definite term the restriction as to changes in salaries does not apply to them, and council has power to increase or diminish their salaries after appointment."

This latter decision was in reference to the salaries of the policemen and firemen of a city who are under civil service.

The right of council to increase the salaries of the policemen in question during their present service, will depend upon the provisions of the ordinance as to the term of their appointment. If the ordinance fixes a term of office council cannot increase the salary during the term for which the incumbent is appointed. If, however, the ordinance does not fix a term of office council may change the compensation during the incumbency of the position.

Respectfully,

TIMOTHY S. HOGAN,

Attorney General.

MORTGAGE ON PROPERTY OF P. C. C. & ST. L. RY. CO.—NOT BARRED BY STATUTE OF LIMITATIONS WHEN DATE OF MATURITY NOT FIXED.

When the mortgage, under date of 1890, was given on the property of the P. C. C. & St. L. Ry. Company in Covington, Ohio, no time was fixed for the maturity of the debt. Said mortgage has, therefore, not been barred by any statute of limitations and the property when sold is subject to the same unless the mortgage is released.

COLUMBUS, OHIO, June 20, 1912.

HON. J. GUY O'DONNELL, Solicitor for Village of Covington, Troy, Ohio.

DEAR SIR:—Under date of May 10, 1912, you inquired of me as follows:

"The village of Covington, Miami county, Ohio, of which I am the solicitor, has issued bonds to purchase real estate to be donated to the state of Ohio for an armory site; an option has been secured on a site that has been approved by the armory board as the most suitable for such building.

"The site is a part of the old right of way of the P. C. C. & St. L. Railway Company and which was included in the blanket mortgage that covers all of its property, they sold it in this condition to a man by the name of Powell of whom the village will purchase; there is no way at this time of getting the mortgage released off of this lot, it does not occur to us that there is any danger by reason the mortgage and the village is willing to purchase it as it stands, provided there will be no obection from your department when the same is deeded to the state.

"If you can fully understand this matter from this letter, I should like to hear what you have to say in reference to the matter, or I shall be pleased to write you further in the matter if you deem it necessary, * * *."

In response to my request for additional information you recently furnished data showing that said mortgage bears date October 1, 1890, and was given for a consideration of $75,000,000 to the Farmers Loan & Trust Company of New York, and William Jackson, of Indianapolis, trustee.

No time seems to have been fixed for the maturity of the debt, and accordingly said mortgage is still in full force and effect as a valid lien against said land, and an action thereon is not barred by any statute of limitations of this state.

The copy of the portion of said mortgage, which you have submitted to me, provides that it shall cover "all rights of way, station grounds, gravel pits, stock yards, and other lands" of the Pittsburgh, Cincinnati, Chicago & St. Louis Railway Company, and clause 8 provides:

"It shall and may be lawful for said railway company, its successors and assigns, and with the consent and approval in writing of the trustee for the time being, at any time or times hereafter, to exchange for other property, or to sell any part of the hereby mortgaged estates and premises free and clear from the lien or the cumbrance of this indenture, and to convey the same without liability on the part of the grantee for the disposition made of the price paid or property received in exchange; provided, however, that evidence of the propriety of such proposed sale or exchange shall be given to the trustee by certificate in writing of one of the officers, or by resolution of the directors of the railway company, and that the proceeds of any sale so made shall, at the option of the railway company, be invested by it, either in the equipment of any remaining part of the mortgaged premises, or in the purchase by said railway company of other property, real or personal, which property so purchased, as also any that may be acquired in exchange as aforesaid, by the railway company, shall be subject to all the trusts hereby declared (including that of sale or exchange) of the property in this indenture described and shall be conveyed in mortgage by the railway company to the trustee for the time being, so to be held; or in the purchase of bonds hereby secured at the same time, and in the same manner as in the purchase of bonds for the sinking fund, which bonds, so purchased shall be forthwith cancelled and retained by the railway company."

Although the foregoing gives authority to the mortgagor to sell or exchange any part of the mortgaged property, the same cannot be done without the consent and approval, in writing, of the trustee, and there is nothing before me to show that such consent was obtained prior to the sale of this property to Powell.

In view of the fact that the state of Ohio will expend a considerable sum for the building of an armory at Covington I cannot see my way clear to approve the title to this proposed site, unless the mortgage covering it is released, or the consent, in writing, of the trustees to said sale is first obtained.

Very truly yours,

TIMOTHY S. HOGAN,

Attorney General.

PUBLIC IMPROVEMENTS—STATE PROPERTY MAY NOT BE ASSESSED WITHOUT LEGISLATIVE AUTHORIZATION.

In the absence of express authorization of the legislature, property belonging to the state may not be assessed for public improvements, and no such authorization is made in Ohio.

COLUMBUS, OHIO, June 20, 1912.

HON. F. M. HAMILTON, Legal Counsel for Village of Lebanon, Lebanon, Ohio.

DEAR SIR:—Under date of May 8, 1912, you submitted three propositions to this department for opinion, and under date of May 10, 1912, your first two questions were answered by sending you a copy of an opinion on said questions rendered previously to your request. Your third question, however, was not answered. Such third question you state as follows:

"How may the proportionate share of street improvement be obtained from the abutting state property, to wit, Armory property?"

The legal proposition involved is whether or not state property may be assessed for street improvements.

Section 3812 (101 O. L. 134) provides, in part, that the "council of any municipal corporation may assess upon the abutting, adjacent and contiguous or other specially benefitted lots or lands in the corporation, any part of the entire cost of and expense connected with the improvement of any street * * *."

Section 3846 of the General Code provides that no part of the cost or expense connected with such work shall be paid by the municipal corporation, except when the whole or any portion of a street or alley, upon which work shall be done, passes by or through a public wharf, market space, park, cemetery, structure for the fire department, waterworks, school building, infirmary, market building, workhouse, hospital, house of refuge, gas works, public prison, or any other public structure or public grounds within and belonging to the corporation.

It will be seen, by a reference to the sections above cited and the other sections of the Code relating to the subject of the improvement of streets on the assessment plan, that there is no provision specifically exempting state property from being assessed for such improvement. It will further be seen that there is no provision of law, other than the general provision that council may assess upon abutting, adjacent and contiguous and other specially benefited lots or lands, that the property of the state shall be included within the property assessed.

While it is true that under Section 5351 of the General Code the real and personal property belonging exclusively to the state is exempt from taxation, yet, an assessment under the decisions, is not considered as a tax as used in said Section 5351.

Dillon on Municipal Corporations, Section 1446, lays down the following principle:

> "The principle which makes property of the state, or any of its political or municipal subdivisions, nontaxable under general statutory provisions, and, in the absence of a positive direction therefor, according to the great weight of authority, also precludes the imposition of a special assessment for a street or other local improvement upon such property, unless there is positive legislative authority therefor."

The principle seems to be that no assessment can be levied against the property belonging to the state, unless the legislature has given specific authority so to do, and that mere general words, such as are used in Section 3812 supra, are not construed to include the property of the state, for the reason that the state is the sovereign, and general language should not be construed as including the sovereign itself.

In an opinion rendered by this department November 30, 1909, to the Hon. Harry E. Garn, City Solicitor, Fremont, Ohio, the then attorney general gave as his opinion that state property may be assessed for municipal improvements in proper cases. I am unable to give my assent to such opinion, believing, as I do, that as the legislature has not specifically provided for the assessment of state property the same is exempt.

In either view of the case, however, no collection of assessment could be made against the state property except by a petition to the legislature for the payment of the same, as there is no authority in law to subject the property of the state for the payment of assessments. This conclusion was also reached in the opinion of my predecessor above referred to.

I am, therefore, of the opinion that there is no way to obtain the proportionate share of street improvement from abutting state property, except as the legislature may decide to pay the same.

Very truly yours,
TIMOTHY S. HOGAN,
Attorney General.

BOARD OF PUBLIC AFFAIRS—NO POWER TO FURNISH FREE WATER TO COUNCIL FOR STREET IMPROVEMENTS—MAY TURN OFF WATER IN EVENT OF NON-PAYMENT OF RENTAL.

The purposes for which free water may be supplied by the board of trustees of public affairs having been specified in Section 3903, General Code, and street improvements not being included as one of said purposes, said board has not only the right but is bound in duty, to charge a rental to council for water used for said purposes.

Said board has the same powers as the director of public service in cities and is, therefore, empowered to make and enforce reasonable rules and regulations and among them to turn off the water in the event of non-payment of rentals. Such a regulation may be enforced against council.

COLUMBUS, OHIO, June 22, 1912.

HON. CHARLES J. FORD, Legal Counsel, Geneva, Ohio.

DEAR SIR:—Under date of April 18th, you submitted two questions as follows:

First: Whether the trustees of public affairs in a village would have a right to charge council for water used in the construction of street improvement, such council having previously agreed with the contractor that he should have free water, and Second: If the trustees have such power whether in the event of council refusing to pay such bill said trustees would have the right to refuse to allow council to turn on the water.

From subsequent correspondence between us I assume that it was distinctly understood by each and every bidder submitting a bid for the work of such street improvement that the village was to supply free water, and I, therefore, consider it solely in reference to your question as to whether or not the trustees could require payment by the council for water used in street construction.

Section 3963, General Code, as amended 102 Ohio Laws 94, provides:

> "No charge shall be made by the director of public service in cities, or by the board of trustees of public affairs in villages, for supplying water for extinguishing fires, cleaning fire apparatus, or for furnishing or supplying connections with fire hydrants, and keeping them in repair for fire department purposes, the cleaning of market houses, the use of any public building belonging to the corporation, or any hospital, asylum, or other charitable institutions, devoted to the relief of the poor, aged, infirm, or destitute persons, or orphan or delinquent children, or for the use of the public school buildings; but, in any case where the said school building, or buildings, are situated within a village or cities, and the boundaries of the school district include territory not within the boundaries of the village or cities in which said building, or buildings, are located, then the directors of such school district shall pay the village or cities for the water furnished for said building or buildings."

The legislature in enacting Section 3963 General Code, supra., has seen fit to designate exactly the purposes for which free water shall be supplied by the board of trustees of public affairs and under the general rule of law "Expressio unius est exclusio alterius" the legislature not having seen fit to provide that free water can be furnished for street improvement, I am of the opinion that the board of trustees of public affairs have the right to charge for water used in the construction of street improvement; not only that they have the right but, for the reason above stated, it is the duty of such trustees so to do.

Second: In answer to your second question I herewith enclose you copy of opinion rendered to the bureau of inspection and supervision of public offices, under date of June 20, 1912, wherein it is held that the powers of the trustees of public affairs are the same as those vested in the director of public service of a city, in relation to waterworks, under Sections 3956-3981 General Code.

Section 3957 General Code provides as follows:

> "Such director may make such by-laws and regulations as he deems necessary for the safe, economical and efficient management and protection of the waterworks. Such by-laws and regulations shall have the same validity as ordinances when not repugnant thereto or to the constitution or laws of this state."

The board of trustees of public affairs being authorized under my holding in the opinion herewith enclosed and under Section 3957 General Code to make such by-laws and regulations as said trustees deemed necessary for the safe, economical and efficient management of the waterworks, I am of the opinion that such trustees may make such reasonable rules and regulations in regard to the matter, which rules and regulations shall be of uniform operation, and that after they so do or have done the council in the case in question would stand on an equal footing with any other person or persons.

I am, therefore, of the opinion that if there is such rule or regulation the board of trustees of public affairs would have the right, in the event of council refusing to pay such bill, to refuse to allow the water to be turned on.

Very truly yours,

TIMOTHY S. HOGAN,

Attorney General.

ANNEXATION PROCEEDINGS—BALLOTS THROWN OUT IN ELECTION NOT COUNTED IN DETERMINING "MAJORITY VOTING AT ELECTION"—ORDINANCE OF COUNCIL APPROVING REPORT OF ANNEXATION COMMISSION NOT WITHIN INITIATIVE AND REFERENDUM.

The expression of an elector's intention is an essential element in a "vote" and ballots which are thrown out in an election are, therefore, not to be included in estimating a "majority of the electors voting at an election," as intended by Section 3569, General Code, relating to elections upon the question of annexation of a municipal corporation.

An ordinance of council formally approving a report of the commissioners appointed to arrange for annexation, is not subject to the initiative and referendum act for the reason that:

1. The question has already been voted upon by the electors and such action would enable fifteen per cent. to defeat the will of the majority.

2. Should council fail to approve the report, the county commissioners are authorized to act for the corporation in approving the report. The approval of said plans by the council is a duty, therefore, and not a delegated power.

3. The legislature by enabling the county commissioners to act in place of council, made it possible for council to evade the possible operation of the initiative and referendum and therefore did not intend its application.

COLUMBUS, OHIO, June 26, 1912.

HON. STANLEY K. HENSHAW, Village Counsel of Hartwell, 514 Main Street, Cincinnati, Ohio.

DEAR SIR:—Under date of May 1st, you stated that at the last general election the village of Hartwell, Hamilton county, Ohio, by a majority of five voted to be annexed to the city of Cincinnati, and that seventeen votes were thrown out and not counted.

You further state that Section 3569 General Code, reads in part as follows:

> "If a majority of the electors of each corporation, voting on the question so submitted, is in favor of annexation, the council of each shall thereupon cause the result to be certified to the other corporation."

And you inquire whether or not such majority means a majority of the valid votes or a majority of the votes actually cast.

The language used in Section 3569 General Code is "a majority of electors voting on the question so submitted."

In order to ascertain the majority it is necessary, of course, to ascertain the total number of electors who have voted upon the question.

Webster defines a "vote" as follows:

> "A wish, choice, or opinion of a person or body of persons, the expression of a wish, desire, will, preference or choice in regard to any measure proposed in which the person voting has an interest; that by which will or preference is expressed in election."

Webster defines "ballot" as follows:

> "A ball used for voting; a piece of paper or other thing used for the same purpose."

Century dictionary defines the term "vote" as follows:

> "The formal expression of a will, preference, wish or choice in regard to any measure proposed; that by which will or preference is expressed."

Century dictionary defines a "ballot" as follows:

> "A ticket or slip of paper, sometimes called a voting paper, on which is written or printed an expression of the electors' choice as between candidates or proposition to be voted for. A method of secret voting by means of small balls or by means of printed or written ballots which are deposited in an urn or box, called a 'ballot box.'"

A "vote," therefore, is the expression of a will, preference, wish or choice of an elector, and a "ballot" is merely the instrument or means of expressing such will, preference, wish or choice.

In the case of State ex rel. vs. Green, 37 O. S. 230, of the opinion, the court say:

> "A vote is but the expression of the will of the voter."

In a case entitled In re Contest of South Charleston, Ohio, election, 50 W. L. B. 175, the court holds in the fifth syllabus as follows:

> "A vote is the expression of a choice; a ballot is a written or printed slip of paper upon which a choice may or may not be indicated; hence ballots upon which no choice is indicated are not votes, and are not to be considered in determining what is a majority of all votes cast."

At page 178 of the opinion, the court very ably differentiates between a vote and a ballot, as follows:

> "A ballot is a printed or written slip of paper upon which a choice may or may not be expressed. The casting of these ballots not properly marked was not the casting of a vote, and consequently the number of votes is not the total number of ballots on which the expression of a choice is indicated."

It is necessary, therefore, to differentiate between the vote and the ballot, and I, therefore, assume that your question means whether or not Section 3569 General Code means majority of votes cast or a majority of ballots cast.

The casting of a ballot not properly marked is not the casting of a vote as it is not indicative of the will or choice, preference or wish of the elector, and the total number of ballots found in the ballot box cannot be considered as the total number of votes cast unless each and every one of such ballots has been properly marked. Where no will is expressed no vote is cast.

I am, therefore, of the opinion that the language used in Section 3569 General Code in view of the definition given by the various dictionaries, and in view of the construction given to language similar to that used in Section 3569 General Code by the courts said language means a majority of the valid votes cast on the subject and does not mean majority of the ballots cast at such election.

Those whose ballots were not properly marked cannot be considered as voting on the question submitted any more than an elector who has absented himself from the polls.

Second: You next state that Section 3571 General Code provides that the council of the municipal corporation proposed to be annexed shall approve within three weeks the report of the commissioners, which approval must be made by an ordinance duly passed. You desire to know whether such ordinance ratifying the action of the commissioners is one that comes within the provisions of Section 4227-2 General Code, which is Section 2 of the initiative and referendum act.

From an examination of the statutes providing for the annexation of one municipal corporation to another it will be seen that there are provisions therein made for the submission of such question to a vote of the electors, and that if upon such submission the question is carried commissioners shall be appointed by the council of each corporation to arrange the terms and conditions of annexation, and report the result to the council of their respective corporations; that further in the event that the commissioners of a municipal corporation proposed to be annexed fail to agree to arrange terms with the annexation commissioners of the annexing municipality within a specified time that the county commissioners shall appoint commissioners for said purpose.

Section 3571 General Code provides as follows:

> "When the report of the commissioners is approved by ordinances passed by each corporation, certified copies thereof, signed by the presiding officer of the council and the respective auditors or clerks of each corporation, and authenticated by the corporate seal of each, if any there be, shall be filed in the office of the auditor or clerk of the corporation to which annexation is proposed to be made. Should the council of the municipal corporation proposed to be annexed fail, for a period of three consecutive weeks after the report of the commissioners is filed with it, to approve the same, it is hereby made the duty of the county commissioners of the county in which said municipal corporation is located to act for said corporation and they are hereby, for that purpose invested with all the powers conferred upon the council in this section and in the event that the report is made to the county commissioners as provided in the next preceding section, then said county commissioners are authorized to approve said report by resolution; provided further that when any municipal corporation is annexed, all contracts existing and in force in any form as valid and subsisting obligations upon any such municipal corporation at the time of such annexation is consummated, shall not extend beyond the original limits of such annexed municipal corporation by virtue of such annexation."

Upon an examination of said section it will be noted that unless the council of the municipal corporation proposed to be annexed approves within three weeks the report of the commissioners the duty devolves upon the county commissioners to act for said corporation. While Section 4227-2 provides that "any ordinance, resolution or other measure of a municipal corporation granting a franchise, creating a right, involving the expenditure of money, or exercising any other powers delegated to such municipal corporation by the general assembly shall be submitted to the qualified electors upon the filing of a referendum petition," yet I do not believe that the ordinance in question approving the report of the commissioners is within the purview of said act:

First: Because the question of annexation has already been submitted to the electors under an election held for that purpose, and the electors having authorized it, steps taken subsequent to such authorization are merely ancillary, and to hold that such an ordinance approving the report of the commissioners is subject to referendum would give fifteen per cent. of the electors of such municipality the power to prevent the carrying out of the will of the majority.

Second: Section 3571 General Code provides that when the report of the commissioner is approved by ordinances passed by each council certified copies thereof shall be filed in the office of the auditor or clerk of the corporation to which annexation is proposed to be made, and that should council of the municipal corporation proposed to be annexed fail for three weeks after the filing of such report to approve the same it is made the duty of the county commissioners to act for said corporation.

The peculiar provision of the statutes substituting the county commissioners for the city council on the failure of the city council to approve the report appears to me to make it the duty of council to approve the report and does not leave any discretion in it so to do. It being a duty devolving upon council and not a power delegated thereto, I am of the opinion that for that reason such ordinance is not within the provisions of Section 4227-2.

Third: The substitution of the county commissioners for the city council on the failure of the city council to approve the report of the annexation commissioners also leads me to the conclusion that the said ordinance approving said report is not within the provisions of Section 4227-2, General Code, as I cannot conceive that the legislature would have intended to so include it for the reason that if it were to be considered as within the provisions of said section and council did not want to have the same subject to referendum, it would only have to fail in its duty of approving the ordinance, thereby transferring its duties to the county commissioners, the action of which commissioners would not be subject to review by referendum petition.

Very truly yours,

TIMOTHY S. HOGAN,

Attorney General.

BANKS AND BANKING—BANKRUPTCY OF INCORPORATED AND PRIVATE BANKS—DEPOSIT OF BONDS BY BANK AS SECURITY FOR DEPOSIT OF MUNICIPAL FUNDS CANNOT BE A PREFERENCE.

A bank incorporated under the laws of Ohio cannot be adjudged a bankrupt. A private bank, however, may become bankrupt.

Inasmuch as in order to constitute a preference a transfer must be made to pay a pre-existing debt, a village may receive municipal bonds owned by a private bank as security for the deposit therein of municipal funds, without danger of creation of a preference, or of liability to nullification on the ground of fraud.

COLUMBUS, OHIO, June 28, 1912.

HON. HOMER W. HAMMOND, Village Solicitor, Columbiana, Ohio.

DEAR SIR:—I beg to acknowledge receipt of your letter wherein you state:

> "Mr. E. T. Coyle, our village treasurer, has consulted me as to whether he should have additional security from the bank in which he keeps the village funds other than bonds of the same bank, which he afterwards deposits in a safety deposit with them."

The letter of Mr. Coyle, to which you refer, reads as follows:

> "As treasurer of the village of Columbiana, O., and treasurer of the Columbiana village school district, I am depositing the funds of both in the Union Banking Company, they agreeing to furnish me with indemnity bond or other securities, indemnifying me against loss on account of having said moneys on deposit with said bank.
> "The officers of the bank have given me some municipal bonds owned by the bank, which bonds I am to hold as security.
> "The question now arises, is this, any security, or in case the bank would fail would the United States court order that I return these securities on the ground of fraud, or that the bank would have no right to prefer one creditor to the disadvantage of the general creditors."

In reply thereto I desire to state, that the deposit of funds of a municipal corporation is regulated by Sections 4295 and 4296 of the General Code, as follows:

> "Section 4295. The council may provide by ordinance for the deposit of all public moneys coming into the hands of the treasurer, in such bank or banks, situated within the county, as offer, at competitive bidding, the highest rate of interest and give a good and sufficient bond issued by a surety company authorized to do business in the state, or furnish good and sufficient surety, or secure said moneys by a deposit of bonds or other interest bearing obligations of the United States or those for the payment of principal and interest of which the faith of the United States is pledged, including bonds of the District of Columbia; bonds of the state of Ohio or of any other state of the United States; legally issued bonds of any city, village, county, township or other political subdivision of this or any other state or territory of the United States and as to which there has been no default of principal, interest or coupons, and which in the opinion of the treasurer are good and collectible, providing the issuing body politic has not defaulted at any time since the year 1900 in the payment of the principal and interest of any of its bonds, said security to be subject to the approval of the proper municipal officers, in a sum not less than ten per cent. in excess of the maximum amount at any time to be deposited, but there shall not be deposited in any one bank an amount in excess of the paid in capital stock and surplus of such banks, and not in any event to exceed one million dollars. And whenever any of the funds of any of the political subdivisions of the state shall be deposited under any of the depositary laws of the state, the securities herein mentioned, in addition to such other securities as are prescribed by law, may be accepted to secure such deposits

"Section 4296. In such ordinance the council may determine the method by which such bids shall be received, the authority which shall receive them, and which shall determine the sufficiency of the security offered, the time for the contracts for which deposits of public money may be made, and all details for carrying into effect the authority here given. Proceedings in connection with such competitive bidding and the deposit of money shall be conducted in such manner as to insure full publicity, and shall be open at all times to the inspection of any citizen. As to any deposits made under authority of an ordinance of the council, pursuant hereof, if the treasurer has exercised due care, neither he nor his bondsmen shall be liable for any loss occasioned thereby."

It will be observed that Section 4295 gives council authority to provide by ordinance for the deposit of the funds of the municipality, and said section recognizes as sufficient security for the funds so deposited any of the following:

The bond of a surety company authorized to do business in this state; bonds of the United States, of the state of Ohio, and of any municipal corporation or township in which there has been no default of principal, interest or coupons, and which in the opinion of the treasurer are good and collectible, providing the issuing body politic has not defaulted at any time since the year 1900.

Council is authorized by Section 4296 to determine the method of receiving bids, and tc designate the authority who shall determine the sufficiency of the security offered, and proceedings in connection with the bidding for funds and the deposit thereof shall be conducted in such manner as to insure full publicity.

The letter of Mr. Coyle does not disclose whether the Union Banking Company is a private bank or a bank incorporated under the laws of Ohio. If it is the latter, it cannot be adjudged a voluntary or involuntary bankrupt, because the bankruptcy law expressly excepts banking corporations from the operation of its provisions.

Assuming, however, that it is a private bank, it would be subject to the bankruptcy law.

A transfer, in order to constitute a preference, must be made by an insolvent debtor to a creditor with the intent to prefer such creditor over other creditors of the same class.

As I view it, such transfer, in order to constitute a preference under the bankruptcy law, must be made to pay a pre-existing debt, that is, a debt owing prior to the making of the transfer, and not one created simultaneously therewith.

The relation of debtor and creditor did not exist between the village of Columbiana and the Union Banking Company prior to the deposit of funds, and the delivery of the bonds by the bank was collateral security for the deposit of funds, so that in no sense can the delivery by the bank of bonds owned by it to the municipality, to secure the funds deposited by the latter with the bank, be regarded as a preference, nor could the same be set aside on the ground of fraud.

Said bonds should be retained in the custody of the treasurer, and, in the event of the failure of the bank, I am of the opinion that the claims of the municipality to such bonds would be paramount to the claim of general creditors.

Very truly yours,

TIMOTHY S. HOGAN,
Attorney General.

TAXES AND TAXATION—SMITH ONE PER CENT. LAW—LONGWORTH ACT—BOARD OF EDUCATION AND MUNICIPAL BOND ISSUES AUTHORIZED BY ELECTORS MUST BE LEVIED FOR AT EXPENSE OF CURRENT EXPENSES—WATERWORKS BONDS WHEN RETIRED BY EARNINGS OF PLANT.

Whether or not levies for bonds issued upon a vote of the people prior to the passage of the Smith law are to be counted in establishing the 15-mill limitation, must now in view of the Putnam county circuit court decision, be deemed an open question.

Neither levying authorities nor the budget commission may contemplate the authorization of electors and unless such election has been held all bonds must be held to be within the limitation of the Smith law.

When a bond election has been held by both a school district and the council, the budget commission must permit a levy for such bonds in both cases, even though such action be at the expense of the allowance for current expenses to either or both subdivisions.

Bonds issued for waterworks purposes by a municipality must be held to be within the one per cent., two and a half per cent. and five per cent. limitations of the Longworth act, until it has been satisfactorily established that the income from such works is sufficient to retire such bonds and to cover cost of operating expenses. Such bonds if authorized by the vote of the people are not within the one per cent. and two and a half per cent. limitations of said act regardless of the carning capacity of the waterworks.

Only bonds of the municipal corporation are to be taken into consideration in estimating the limitations of the Longworth act. Those of a board of education must, therefore, be disregarded.

COLUMBUS, OHIO, July 25, 1912.

HON. O. H. STEWART, Village Solicitor, Middleport, Ohio.

DEAR SIR:—I beg to acknowledge receipt of your letter of June 5th and that of June 15th, requesting my opinion upon the following facts and the questions arising thereunder:

"The board of education of the village of Middleport and the council of the village itself are both preparing to submit bond issues to the vote of the people; the one for school building purposes, the other for the purpose of establishing a municipal water and light plant. The present tax levy for all purposes is fourteen mills.

"1. May a levy for the purpose of paying the bonds be made over and above an aggregate of fifteen mills?

"2. Has either of the two taxing districts a superior right before the budget commission to have a levy for sinking fund purposes as would be required under authority of such election?

"3. Has the board of education a right to have a levy for sinking fund and interest purposes on account of a contemplated issue made?

"4. Would the facts as I have stated them preclude either or both of the taxing districts in question from issuing the bonds proposed to be issued?"

You also submit certain questions not arising from the above facts:

"5. What proof is required as to the satisfaction of the conditions mentioned in paragraph 'F' of Section 11 of the so-called Longworth act as revised 102 O. L. 265?

"6. Are the limitations of the Longworth act ascertained by combining the bonded indebtedness of the corporation and the board of education, or, are the bonds of the corporation as such alone taken into consideration?"

Answering your first question I beg to state that this department has uniformily held that the fifteen-mill limitation of Section 5649-5b of the so-called Smith one per cent. law is all-inclusive, with the exception of emergency levies made under authority of Section 5649-4, 101 O. L. 431. However, the circuit court of Putnam county has taken a different view of this question, at least as to levies to provide for bonds issued prior to the time the Smith law went into effect. The case in which this decision was rendered is at present pending in the supreme court, and until the decision of that court is rendered I presume the question will have to be regarded as open. My advice would be, however, not to exceed fifteen mills in any taxing district, as such action is sure to result in litigation.

Answering your second question I beg to state that inasmuch as neither the village or board of education has, as yet, received authority from the electors to make the contemplated bond issue, neither set of levying authorities has any right, as such, to anticipate the favorable action of the people by a tax levy. That is to say, unless before the budget commission acts finally one or both of these propositions carries, the levy for the purpose of meeting the bonds which will be issued if they carry, cannot be treated as a levy for interest and sinking fund purposes necessary to provide for indebtedness created by the vote of the people. Hence, the board of education would have no authority until its proposition has been approved by the electors to make any levy for sinking fund purposes whatsoever; while the council could not increase its sinking fund levy for the purpose of anticipating a favorable decision of the electors and have that increase exempted from the ten-mill limitation upon the ground that it is a levy to provide for bonded indebtedness created by the vote of the people.

As between the abstract purposes of school buildings and that of water and light plants, there can be no preference. The budget commission is not authorized to prefer the school district to the village upon any grounds of public policy.

The question as to the superiority of rights is to be governed, as I have already stated, by the results of the two elections. If both elections result favorably prior to the final action of the budget commission, then both sinking fund levies must be allowed at the expense of levies for current expenses. If one carries and the other is defeated, then the levy for the former must be made and that for the latter may not be made.

I have already answered the third question in part. Upon the assumption, however, that the board of education succeeds in getting the favorable vote on its proposition to issue bonds before the budget commission acts, I beg to advise that in that event it would be entitled, at all events to have a levy made for interest and sinking fund purposes regardless of any levy, or levies, made by the village for like purposes. The practical result would be that the levy for current expenses made by the board of education, or the village council, or both, would have to be cut down. That is to say, it is erroneous to assume that all sinking fund levies necessary to provide for bonded indebtedness created prior to the adoption of the Smith law, or thereafter by a vote of the people, must be made within the five mills represented by the difference between ten mills and fifteen mills. On the contrary, taxing districts may levy just as much for sinking fund and interest purposes as they may desire to levy, provided they reduce their levies for operating expenses proportionately if necessary in order that the fifteen-mill limitation may be observed.

Answering your fourth question I beg to state that in my opinion there is theoretically no impediment in the way of an issue of bonds by the municipal corporation or by the board of education, after the authority of the electors has been obtained. That is to say, the limitations of the Smith law do not affect the power to borrow money. The practical result of the existence of these limitations, in a given case, may be seriously to affect the ability of the municipality or school district to dispose of its securities. That is to say, because the taxing district has so nearly exhausted its levying power under the Smith law and is forced to make so small a levy for current expenses, purchasers of municipal securities may not wish to buy the proposed bonds. This difficulty, however, is practical and not theoretical.

Answering your fifth question I quote Section 11 of the amended Longworth act in so far as it applies to your question:

> "* * * In ascertaining the limitations of one per cent., four per cent. and eight per cent. herein provided, the following bonds shall not be considered:
> * * * * * * * * * * * *
> "f. Bonds issued for the purpose of purchasing, constructing, improving and extending waterworks when the income from such waters is sufficient to cover the cost of all operating expenses, interest charges and to pass a sufficient amount to a sinking fund to retire such bonds when they become due."

The question which you submit here has never been passed upon by our courts, and the statute being a peculiar one I know of no authority upon the point in any jurisdiction. Apparently bonds issued for "the purpose of purchasing, constructing, improving and extending waterworks" must be counted in ascertaining the respective limitations mentioned in the section until it does appear, as a matter of fact, that the waterworks is producing an income sufficient to cover the cost of operating expense and interest charges and to pass a sufficient amount to a sinking fund to retire the bonds as they become due. I am inclined to the view that this is a question of fact and that the ascertainment of this fact is not subject to estimation in advance. That is to say, if the municipal corporation has no waterworks and issues bonds for the purpose of acquiring such a public utility, the bonds at the time of issue must be counted in ascertaining all the limitations of the Longworth act. If it subsequently appears from the practical operation of the plant, under the rates fixed by the council or the director of public service, that the conditions of paragraph "F" of Section 11, supra, are fulfilled, then such bonds are taken out of the list of bonds which must be taken into consideration in ascertaining the limitations in question. So it would appear by lowering the water rate, for example, council might bring back again into the catagory of bonds which must be counted in ascertaining the limitations, some bonds which had at one time been exempt from such consideration.

I am of the opinion that there must be a demonstration of the problem suggested in paragraph "F," Section 11, before bonds issued for the purpose of acquiring waterworks may be exempted from consideration in ascertaining the limitations of one per cent., four per cent. (now two and one-half per cent.), and eight per cent. (now five per cent.), prescribed by the so-called Longworth act as re-enacted.

In this connection I beg to enclose herewith copy of an opinion rendered to Hon. C. M. Babst, solicitor of the village of Crestline, in which I hold that bonds issued for the purpose of acquiring waterworks, if issued on the authority of a vote of the people, are not to be counted in ascertaining the limitations of one per cent. and four per cent. (or two and one-half per cent.) prescribed by the act, regardless of whether or not the conditions enumerated in paragraph "F" are fulfilled.

Answering your sixth question I beg to state that the bonded indebtedness of a board of education is not to be taken into consideration in ascertaining "the net indebtedness" of a municipal corporation under the Longworth act. The two taxing districts are separate and distinct, and it is only "bonds * * issued by the council" (Section 2, Longworth act, 102 O. L., 263), "net indebtedness created or incurred by council" (Section 3 of said act), and "net indebtedness created or incurred by a municipal corporation" (Section 10 of said act) that are limited in this manner.

Very truly,
TIMOTHY S. HOGAN,
Attorney General.

ADDENDUM:

The common pleas court of Putnam county sustained our view in the case referred to. Judge Kinder of the circuit court, dissented from the opinion of the latter court.

LONGWORTH ACT—COUNCIL—BONDS IN EXCESS OF ONE (1) PER CENT. OF TOTAL TAXATION VALUE WHEN AUTHORIZED BY ELECTORS MAY BE ISSUED AFTER CLOSE OF FISCAL YEAR.

When issue of bonds in excess of one per cent. of the total value of all property has been authorized by vote of electors under 3941, G. C., the statutes do not intend that such issue must necessarily be made within the fiscal year. The limitations of the statutes with reference to the fiscal year refer solely to bonds issued without a vote of the people.

COLUMBUS, OHIO, August 2, 1912.

HON. CLARENCE G. HERBRUCK, Solicitor Village New Berlin, Ohio, Canton, Ohio.

DEAR SIR:—I beg to acknowledge receipt of your letter of June 24th and your subsequent letter of June 27th submitting for my opinion thereon the following question:

> "On April, 1911, the council of the village of New Berlin submitted to the electors of the village a proposition for the issuance of bonds for the purpose of constructing waterworks in excess of 1 per cent. of the taxable value of the property of the village. The ordinance declaring it necessary to issue the bonds, recited that it was necessary 'to issue and sell bonds in the fiscal year beginning January 1, 1911,' for the purposes mentioned. No bonds were in point of fact issued during the year 1911. May the bonds so authorized now be issued and sold?"

The solution of the question submitted depends upon the construction of Section 3939, etc., of the General Code of 1910. Said sections having been amended in material particulars on May 10, 1910, 101 O. L. 432, and having been repealed and re-enacted on May 26, 1911, 102 O. L. 262, which said repeal and revision being subsequent in point of time to the holding of the election in question does not of course affect the question.

Section 3940, General Code, provided in 1910 as follows:

> "Such bonds may be issued for any or all of such purposes, but the total bonded indebtedness created in any one fiscal year under the authority of the preceding section, by a municipal corporation shall not exceed one per cent. of the total value of all property in such municipal corporation, as listed and assessed for taxation, except as hereafter provided in this chapter."

Section 3941 provided as follows:

> "When such council, by resolution or ordinance passed by an affirmative vote of not less than two-thirds of all the members elected or appointed thereto, deems it necessary in any one fiscal year to issue bonds for all or any of the purposes so authorized in an amount greater than one per cent. of the total value of all the property in such municipal corporation as listed and assessed for taxation, it shall submit the question of issuing bonds in excess of such one per cent. to a vote of the qualified electors of the municipal corporation at a general or special election in the manner hereafter provided in this chapter."

Section 3942 provided as follows:

"The net indebtedness incurred by a municipal corporation for such purposes shall never exceed four per cent. of the total value of all the property in such corporation, as listed and assessed for taxation, unless the excess of such amount is authorized by vote of the qualified electors of the corporation in the manner hereafter provided."

As you state there has never been any judicial construction of the statutes quoted with respect to the question you submit. I think the question is to be answered, however, having regard to the obvious purpose and intent of the statute rather than upon any strictly technical construction thereof. So that while it is true that Section 3941, as in force at the time the election was held, did provide that "when * * * council * * * deems it necessary in any one fiscal year to issue bonds * * * in an amount greater than one per cent. of the total value of all the property in such municipal corporation * * * it shall submit the question," etc., this reference to the issuance in the fiscal year is to be taken in connection with other provisions of the statutes in pari materia.

Section 3940 provided that council might issue bonds in any one fiscal year without a vote of the people in an aggregate amount not exceeding one per cent. of the total value. Section 3941 then is to be construed, in my judgment, in connection with this provision as requiring council to submit an issue of bonds which together with the bonds already issued in the fiscal year in which council acts, will result in an aggregate indebtedness exceeding one per cent. of the total tax value of the property of the corporation. Such bonds may not be issued in that year without a vote of the people. Once the vote of the people is had, however, I am of the opinion that it constitutes sufficient authority for council to issue the bonds thereunder at any time. It is only by strict construction and strained inference that the phrase "in any one fiscal year" as used in Section 4931, supra, can be regarded as a limitation upon the time within which the bonds when once authorized may actually be issued. It is rather a limitation upon the time within which they may not be issued without a vote of the people. The inference of which I speak is to be rejected because of the underlying purpose and intent of the statute as I have tried to define it.

For the foregoing reason I am of the opinion that the recital in the ordinance declaring it necessary to issue the bonds in question does not prevent the council, having received the authority of the electors, from proceeding to make the issue at such time as is most convenient to it. I am strengthened in this conclusion by the fact that the proposition submitted to the people under Section 3952 and Section 3953, General Code, is not required to specify the year in which the bonds shall actually be issued.

Yours very truly,

TIMOTHY S. HOGAN,

Attorney General.

STREET COMMISSIONER MUST BE APPOINTED BY MAYOR—COUNCIL MAY NOT EMPLOY OVERSEER.

A street commissioner must be appointed by the mayor and confirmed by the council under 4363, G. C., and council is not empowered to employ an overseer or supervisor to perform the duties of that office.

COLUMBUS, OHIO, August 12, 1912.

HON. ROBERT C. MYERS, Solicitor of the Village of New Boston, Portsmouth, Ohio.

DEAR SIR:—In your letter of January 17th, you make the following request for my opinion thereon:

> "As solicitor of the village of New Boston, Scioto county, Ohio, I submit the following facts and questions for your opinion:
> "No street commissioner was appointed by the mayor for said village at any time during the past four (4) years under provision of Section 4363 of the General Code, nor has the present mayor made any appointment under the provision of this section.
> "During this period the duties of street commissioner have been performed by a supervisor or overseer employed by council, who has been considered as an employe of council.
>
> "In making this employment the council has assumed to act under what it considered its authority conferred upon it by Section 3714 of the General Code.
> "At the last meeting of the village council held on the 15th, inst., council, on motion, employed such overseer or supervisor upon a monthly compensation. It is considered by council that this man is under its direct supervision and control.
> "No. 1. Is the employment of this person within the scope of the powers of council?
>
> "No. 2. Is his employment and the appropriation of funds and funds hereafter appropriated for his compensation legal, under the conditions above stated?"

Section 3714 of the General Code, is as follows:

> "Municipal corporations shall have special power to regulate the use of the streets, to be exercised in the manner provided by law. The council shall have the care, supervision and control of public highways, streets, avenues, alleys, sidewalks, public grounds, bridges, aqueducts and viaducts, within the corporation, and shall cause them to be kept open, in repair and free from nuisance."

This is a general section providing that municipal corporations shall have special power to regulate the use of the streets and that council is to have the care, supervision and control of such streets. It does not specify in what way this control is to be exercised nor how nor under what supervision the same are to be repaired or improved; but this matter is covered by subsequent statutes. In villages by Sections 4363 to 4365, inclusive. These sections are as follows:

"Section 4363. The street commissioner shall be appointed by the mayor and confirmed by council for a term of one year, and shall serve until his successor is appointed and qualified. He shall be an elector of the corporation. Vacancies in the office of street commissioner shall be filled by the mayor for the unexpired term. In any village the marshal shall be eligible to appointment as street commissioner.

"Section 4364. Under the direction of council, the street commissioner, or an engineer, when one is so provided by council, shall supervise the improvement and repair of streets, avenues, alleys, lands, lanes, squares, wards, landings, market houses, bridges, viaducts, sidewalks, sewers, drains, ditches, culverts, ship channels, streams and water courses. Such commissioner or engineer shall also supervise the lighting, sprinkling and cleaning of all public places, and shall perform such other duties consistent with the nature of his office as council may require.

"Section 4365. Such street commissioner or engineer shall have such assistants as council may provide, who shall be employed by the street commissioner and shall serve for such time and for such compensation as is fixed by council."

There is no provision in the statutes for the appointment of a supervisor or overseer to perform the duties of street commissioner, and therefore, the only officer who should perform these duties is the officer named by the statute, that is, the street commissioner who must be appointed by the mayor and confirmed by council. Council has no right to appoint a street commissioner, nor does Section 3714 give it the right to appoint some person to act as street commissioner, giving him some other name, and thus avoiding Section 4363, which provides that such commissioner shall be appointed by the mayor.

Answering your first question, therefore, would say that under the facts detailed in your letter the employment of a supervisor or overseer is not within the scope of the powers of council.

Answering your second question I would say that the employment of this person and the appropriation of funds for his compensation under the conditions as detailed in your letter are not legal.

Yours very truly,

TIMOTHY S. HOGAN,

Attorney General.

INCORPORATION OF VILLAGE—FAILURE TO ELECT CLERK AND TREASURER—DUTY OF AGENT OF PETITIONERS TO CALL ANOTHER ELECTION FOR TREASURER—DESIGNATION OF CLERK FROM COUNCIL MEMBERSHIP.

When a village has been newly incorporated and there has been a failure to provide for a treasurer and a clerk among its officers; held:

There is no statutory provisions for the appointment of a treasurer by the mayor and it is necessary for the agent of the petitioners for incorporation to call another election for the purpose of electing a treasurer to receive the village share of the public funds.

Under Section 4280, G. C., the council may designate one of its own members to act as clerk pending the proper election of that official.

COLUMBUS, OHIO, August 3, 1912.

HON. F. L. WELLS, Solicitor, Village of Stratton, Wellsville, Ohio.

DEAR SIR:—I have your letter of July 8th, wherein you state:

> "I write you as attorney for the village of Stratton, Jefferson county, Ohio. This village was recently incorporated and has had an election following the provisions of Section 3536 of the General Code.
> "Through some misunderstanding they failed to elect a clerk and a treasurer, having been informed by officers of an adjoining village that these positions were filled by the village council. I have been engaged to make application for a division of funds under Section 3544 of the Code and desire first to properly fill the office of treasurer of the village. Does the mayor have authority under the general provisions of Section 4252 to appoint a treasurer, and if not what is our proper method of procedure? Section 4280 of the Code provides in the case of absence of the clerk the council shall appoint one of its members to perform his duties for the time and I have had council designate one of their own number to act as clerk until the date of the next election. Is this proper?"

The situation existing in the village of Stratton is unusual and without precedent so far as diligent research has revealed.

Section 3536 of the General Code is a part of the general chapter relating to the incorporation of villages, and is as follows:

> "The first election of officers for such corporation shall be at the first municipal election after its creation, and the place of holding the election shall be fixed by the agent of the petitioners. Notice thereof, printed or plainly written, shall be posted by him in three or more public places within the limits of the corporation, at least ten days before the election. The election shall be conducted, and the officers chosen and qualified, in the manner prescribed for the election of township officers, and the first election may be a special election held at any time not exceeding six months after the incorporation, and the time and place of holding it shall be fixed by such agent, and notice thereof shall be given as is required herein for the municipal election." (R. S., Sec. 155.)

Section 4252 provides:

> "In case of death, resignation, removal or disability of any officer or director in any department of a city, unless otherwise provided by law, the mayor thereof shall fill the vacancy by appointment, and such appointment shall continue for the unexpired term and until a successor is duly appointed or duly elected and qualified, or until such disability is removed. (97 V. 78 Sec. 228.)

The title of an act may be taken into consideration in ascertaining its meaning. You will observe that certain sections of the municipal code are under the title "cities," others under the title "villages" and others under the title "cities and villages." Section 4252 occurs under the title "cities." This considered in connection with the wording of the section itself leads to the conclusion that its provisions are applicable to cities alone and cannot be extended to include villages. Even if said section were held to apply to villages, the mayor could not appoint a treasurer in a case where there had never been such officer, because by its terms, said section presupposes the existence of a prior incumbent in the office before the vacancy could be filled.

I do not find any statute similar to Section 4252 prescribing what officer or body is empowered to fill vacancies in village offices.

It was the duty of the agent of the petitioners for incorporation to have included the clerk and treasurer in the call for the election of officers in the first instance. Not having done so, it is my opinion that said agent's powers are not completely exhausted, and he may proceed to call another election for the purpose of choosing such officers, and it is his duty to do so to the end that the village may not be deprived of its portion of the public funds by reason of not having a treasurer to receive them.

I am further of the opinion that the designation by council of one of its own members to act as clerk pending the election of a clerk was legal and proper under Section 4280 of the General Code.

Very truly yours,
TIMOTHY S. HOGAN,
Attorney General.

VACANCY IN OFFICE OF VILLAGE MARSHAL CAN ONLY BE FILLED BY REGULAR ELECTION.

There is no authority in the statutes for the filling of a vacancy in the office of a village marshal. Said vacancy can only be filled by regular election.

COLUMBUS, OHIO, August 10, 1912.

HON. AUGUSTUS W. MITHOFF, Solicitor of Sugar Grove, Lancaster, Ohio.

DEAR SIR:—Under date of July 31, 1912, you state:

> "A village marshal was elected in 1909, qualified and took his office in January, 1910, resigned in December, 1911, and resignation accepted.

"In 1911, a candidate was elected, but refused to qualify in January, 1912, or at any other time.

"The mayor appointed a resident of the village to fill the vacancy and the council refuses to allow him any salary, on the ground that the mayor has no power to fill vacancy.

"The question now presented is, who has the power to fill a vacancy in the office of marshal of the village?"

The marshal of a village is an elective officer, as provided in Section 4384, General Code, which provides:

"The marshal shall be elected for a term of two years, commencing on the first day of January next after his election, and shall serve until his successor is elected and qualified. He shall be an elector of the corporation. When provided for by council, and subject to its confirmation, the mayor shall appoint all deputy marshals, policemen, night watchmen and special policemen, and may remove them for cause, which shall be stated in writing to council."

The right to fill vacancies in an elective village office was considered by this department in reference to the position of village clerk in an opinion given to Hon. George Thornbury, solicitor of Bethesda, on February 10, 1912, in which it was held that no officer or board of a village had any right to fill such vacancy by appointment. It was further held that there was no authority to hold a special election. The same situation is presented in the case of a village marshal.

The mayor of a village has no authority to make an appointment to fill a vacancy in the office of village marshal. As there is no authority of statute to fill the vacancy, it cannot be filled until the regular election in November, 1913.

A copy of the opinion above referred to is herewith enclosed.

Respectfully,

TIMOTHY S. HOGAN,

Attorney General.

HEALTH OFFICER IN VILLAGES—PAY CEASES WHEN BOARD OF HEALTH ABOLISHED—HEALTH OFFICER IN PLACE OF BOARD OF HEALTH CANNOT BE APPOINTED WITHOUT CONFIRMATION OF STATE BOARD OF HEALTH.

When council abolished a board of health, the office of the health officer appointed by the board, terminates and his pay ceases from the date of the abolition of the appointing power.

When council appoints a health officer to serve instead of a board of health, under Section 4404, General Code, that appointment is not complete and such health officer may not receive pay until confirmation is made by the state board of health.

COLUMBUS, OHIO, September 10, 1912.

HON. CHARLES J. FORD, Village Solicitor, Geneva, Ohio.

DEAR SIR:—Your letter of August 7th received. You say that your council has recently decided, under the provisions of Section 4404, General Code, to do away with your local board of health and appoint in its place a health officer to act instead of such board of health, subject to the approval of the state board of health; that the old board of health, appointed Mr. A. health officer and he has served up to this time and performed all the duties of the office; that the council in the first place appointed Mr. A as health officer in place of the local board of health and submitted his appointment to the state board of health but said board refused to confirm his appointment; that the council at their last meeting appointed Mr. B as health officer and his appointment has been submitted to the state board of health.

You inquire whether Mr. A is entitled to pay for services rendered as health officer up to the time when Mr. B is to be confirmed by the state board of health and qualifies for the office.

Sections 4404 and 4408 of the General Code, provide as follows:

> "Section 4404. The council of each municipality shall establish a board of health, composed of five members to be appointed by the mayor and confirmed by council who shall serve without compensation and a majority of whom shall be a quorum. The mayor shall be the president by virtue of his office. But in villages the council, if it deems advisable, may appoint a health officer, to be approved by the state board of health who shall act instead of a board of health, and fix his salary and term of office. Such appointee shall have the powers and perform the duties granted to or imposed upon boards of health, except that rules, regulations or orders of a general character are required to be published, made by such health officer, shall be approved by the state board of health."
> "Section 4408. The board of health shall appoint a health officer, who shall be the executive officer. He shall furnish his name, address and other information required by the state board of health. The board may appoint a clerk, and with the consent of council, as many ward or district physicians, or one ward physician for each ward in the city as it deems necessary."

Under authority of Section 4404 your council at one time established a village board of health, and the board of health, acting under Section 4408, appointed Mr. A as health officer. Mr. A by virtue of his appointment by the village board of health was the health officer of your village until his term expired or he was removed, or until his office was abolished. The village council has recently, by appropriate proceedings, abolished the village board of health, and under Section 4404, appointed Mr. A as health officer, and the state board of health refused to approve his appointment. Thereupon the council appointed Mr. B and the state board of health has not acted on his appointment.

By reason of the action of the council in doing away with the village board of health the term of office and employment of every officer and employe of the board ended, as their authority to act came from the board, and when the board was abolished its authority, as well as the authority of its appointees, ended.

Answering your question specifically, I am of the opinion that Mr. A is not entitled to pay for his services after the date of the abolition of the village board of health by the village council.

Yours very truly,

TIMOTHY S. HOGAN,
Attorney General.

BOARD OF TRUSTEES OF PUBLIC AFFAIRS—POWERS OF TO CONTRACT FOR AND SUPERVISE WATERWORKS—FILTRATION PLANT—AUTHORIZATION OF CONTRACT BY COUNCIL.

When the voters of a village have authorized a bond issue for the purpose of installing a filtration plant, a board of trustees of public affairs shall be appointed in accordance with Section 4357, General Code, which board shall have the supervision and control of such waterworks.

Under 2301, the board of trustees are given the powers of the waterworks trustees. Such trustees are not mentioned in the statutes, however, and these powers are construed to be the same as those vested in the director of public service of cities.

Though the director of public service has power to contract the defect aforementioned in 2301, General Code, would make this power in the board of trustees of public affairs doubtful. It is, therefore, advised that a contract by the board of trustees of public affairs for the installation of a filtration plant be first authorized by council.

In case of dispute between the council and the board as to the location of the plant and the making of the contract, the council is superior authority.

COLUMBUS, OHIO, October 7, 1912.

HON. F. H. PELTON, Solicitor for the Village of Willoughby, Cleveland, Ohio.

DEAR SIR:—I am in receipt of your letter of September 6, 1912, which is as follows:

> "As solicitor for the village of Willoughby I would appreciate it if you would enlighten me in the following respects:
> "A bond issue has just been affirmatively voted upon for the installing of a filtration plant, and the ordinance for the issuing of bonds will be passed Monday night. There seems to be considerable difference of opinion between the mayor and council on the one hand, and the board of trustees of public affairs on the other, as to what are the duties of each in regard to entering into contracts, supervising the work of construction, locating the plant, etc., and whose is the final say.

"I am frank to say that the statutes, to me at least, are far from clear as regards the power of the board of trustees of public affairs of villages, and any light you can give me by reference to judicial decisions, or from opinions rendered by your office would be greatly appreciated."

Sections 4357, 4358 and 4361 of the General Code, provide as follows:

"Section 4357. In each village in which waterworks, an electric light plant, artificial or natural gas plant, or other similar public utility is situated or when council orders waterworks, an electric light plant, natural or artificial gas plant or other similar public utility, to be constructed, or to be leased or purchased from any individual, company or corporation, council shall establish at such time a board of trustees of public affairs for the village, which shall consist of three members, residents of the village, who shall be each elected for a term of two years.

"Section 4358. When the council, in accordance with the provisions of this chapter, establishes a board of trustees of public affairs, the mayor of the village shall appoint the members thereof, subject to the confirmation of the council. Such appointees shall hold their respective offices until their successors have been elected according to law and such successors shall be elected at the next regular election of municipal officers held in such village.

"Section 4361. The board of trustees of public affairs shall have all the powers and perform all the duties provided in this title to be exercised and performed by the trustees of waterworks, and such other duties as may be prescribed by law or ordinances not inconsistent herewith."

You will note that when council orders waterworks to be leased, purchased or constructed, it must establish, at such time, a board of trustees of public affairs of the village, which shall consist of three members, residents of the village, who shall be elected for a term of two years. You will note also that after the establishment of the board of trustees of public affairs the members thereof shall be appointed, and shall hold their respective offices until the next regular election, when their successors shall be elected; showing the intent of the legislature—that the construction of the waterworks of a village shall be under the supervision and control of the board of trustees of public affairs.

The powers of the board of trustees of public affairs are found in Section 4361, General Code, above quoted. There is a manifest defect in this section, which confers upon the board of trustees of public affairs of villages all the powers of waterworks trustees, whereas there are no such officers as waterworks trustees mentioned in the code.

I had occasion to construe Section 4361 in an opinion addressed to Hon. Allen C. Aigler, village solicitor of Bellevue, Ohio. I held, in that opinion, that the powers of the trustees of waterworks are the same powers now vested in the director of public service of cities, by Sections 3956 to 3981, General Code; and that these powers are the statutory powers of the board of trustees of public affairs of villages. I also held in that opinion that the board of trustees of public affairs has such powers as may be conferred upon it by ordinance of council.

The powers of the director of public service of a city, in reference to waterworks, are found, as above stated, in Sections 3956 to 3981, General Code. The powers of the director of public service in regard to making contracts for waterworks are found in Section 3961, General Code, which provides:

> "Subject to the provisions of this title, the director of public service may make contracts for the building of machinery, waterworks, buildings, reservoirs and the enlargement and repair thereof, the manufacture and laying down of pipe, the furnishing and supplying with connections all necessary fire hydrants for fire department purposes, keeping them in repair, and for all other purposes necessary to the full and efficient management and construction of water works."

It has been held, in the case of Yaryan vs. The City of Toledo, 8 O. C. C. R. 1, that:

> "The preparation by the board of public service of plans, estimates, specifications and profiles for a new municipal waterworks system, in accordance with a determining ordinance by council, is not an exercise of legislative power, and authority so to do is conferred upon such board and may be exercised by it, notwithstanding Section 127 of the Municipal Code which provides that all power unless otherwise provided is to be exercised by council."

You will note, in the Yaryan case, that the plans, estimates and profiles for a new municipal waterworks system were prepared by the board of public service, in accordance with a determining ordinance by council.

Section 4221, General Code, provides as follows:

> "All contracts made by the council of a village shall be executed in the name of the village and signed on behalf of the village by the mayor and clerk. When any expenditure other than the compensation of persons employed therein, exceeds five hundred dollars, such contracts shall be in writing and made with the lowest and best bidder after advertising for not less than two nor more than four consecutive weeks in a newspaper of general circulation within the village. The bids shall be opened at twelve o'clock noon on the last day for filing them, by the clerk of the village and publicly read by him."

This section states the manner in which contracts may be made by the village, and gives the village council power to contract. A contract made by the village council should be entered into through its officers; it should be entered into by the village mayor and clerk, as provided by said section. All contracts of the village should first be authorized by council. It may authorize the board of trustees of public affairs to enter into a contract, and then, and in that event, it would be the duty of the board of trustees of public affairs to enter into the contract according to law.

There is no question but that the director of public service, in cities, would have the right to enter into a contract for the installation of a filtration plant, supervise the work of construction and locate the plant. But there is some doubt, because of the defect in Section 4361, heretofore referred to, as to whether the board of trustees of public affairs has any statutory authority. I would, therefore, advise that your village council first authorize the contract for the installation of the filtration plant. It may then direct that the contract be entered into through the mayor and clerk, or it may authorize the board of trustees of public affairs to enter into the contract.

Under Section 4361, there is no doubt but that the village council may confer upon the board of trustees of public affairs the power to make contract for the installation of the filtration plant, and to supervise the work of construction, locate the plant, etc.; and, in view of the defect in said section, if council desires that the board of trustees of public affairs do this work, it should pass an ordinance to that effect. However, in case of dispute as to the location of the filtration plant, and the making of the contract, I am of the opinion that the village council is the superior authority.

Very truly yours,

TIMOTHY S. HOGAN,
Attorney General.

CEMETERY TRUSTEES MAY NOT CHARGE TO CREATE A PARTICULAR FUND FOR CARE OF A SPECIAL LOT—CREATION OF PERMANENT FUND BY GIFT OR DONATION.

The statutes do not authorize cemetery trustees to make a charge in the sale of a lot out of which to create a particular fund for the care of a special lot. Charges for the care of lots must be kept in a general fund for the care of all lots.

The only means of creating a particular fund for the care of a special lot or lots is by private donations or gifts, as set forth in Section 4168, General Code, providing for the creation in this manner of a "permanent fund" for this purpose.

COLUMBUS, OHIO, September 13, 1912.

HON. CHARLES J. FORD, Village Solicitor, Geneva, Ohio.

DEAR SIR:—I acknowledge receipt of yours of August 21, 1912, in which you say:

> "The joint cemetery trustees of the township have brought to me the question as to whether they have a right to provide by their rules and regulations that a certain sum should be set aside from the proceeds of each lot sold for the purpose of keeping up said lot."

You then ask whether in my opinion this could be done legally.

The cemetery in question is evidently what is called a "union cemetery," established under Sections 4183, et seq., General Code.

The powers of cemetery trustees, and all their relations to the trusts imposed upon them, in the care and management of the resting place of the dead, entrusted to their care, are statutory; and unless clearly expressed in the law there can be no exercise thereof. They are limited and circumscribed by statutory law, and cannot create any new relations with parties, however desirable, which the strict letter of the law omits to empower them to do.

Your proposition, if approved or carried out, would empower the cemetery trustees to set aside a sum from the sale of each lot for the keeping up of that particular lot. Thus there would have to be kept a separate account as to individual lots and the care of each. This idea is wholly impracticable, unprovided for by law, and would result in discrimination, if the trustees so elected. They might say we will retain a certain sum in one case, and a greater or less sum, in another. The idea of the law is that all moneys coming into the hands of the trustees, whether by taxation or sale of lots, shall constitute a general fund for the benefit of the cemetery as a whole and all the lots therein.

The only means of creating such a fund for the care of a particular lot, is by private donations or gifts, as set forth in Section 4168, General Code. This is called a "permanent fund" for the care of lots, and all who seek special care of their lots, must pursue this course.

There is no doubt but that the cemetery trustees can appropriate from the sale of lots such sums as they may deem proper for the care of lots in general, or any other lawful purpose. Section 4166, General Code, says:

> "No more shall be charged for lots than is necessary to reimburse the corporation for the expense of lands purchased or appropriated for cemetery purposes and to keep in order and embellish the grounds."

If it were the intention of the legislature that charges might be made in the sale of lots, out of which to create a particular fund for the care of each lot, it should have said so.

There being no law authorizing such a proceeding, I am of the opinion that no such agreement on the part of the trustees can be made.

Yours very truly,

TIMOTHY S. HOGAN,
Attorney General.

COUNCIL—SEMI-ANNUAL APPROPRIATIONS MAY BE COMPELLED BY MANDAMUS—NO PERSONAL LIABILITY FOR FAILURE TO PERFORM.

In accordance with the general rule that where an official, obligated to perform a trust or station, has a discretion as to the manner of its performance, he may be compelled by mandamus to perform the duty, council may be compelled by mandamus to make the semi-annual appropriations as required by Section 5649-3d, General Code.

The statutes do not provide any personal liability to the councilmen for failure to perform such duty.

COLUMBUS, OHIO, October 26, 1912.

HON. O. H. STEWART, Solicitor for the Village of Middleport, Pomeroy, Ohio.

DEAR SIR:—Your favor of October 15th received. You state in your communication that the council of the village of Middleport refuses to make the semi-annual appropriation as required by Section 5649-3d of the General Code, and ask me to state the personal liability of each councilman in disregarding the provisions of this statute.

Section 5649-3*d*, General Code, provides as follows:

> "At the beginning of each fiscal half year the various boards mentioned in Section 5649-3*a* of this act shall make appropriations for each of the several objects for which money has to be provided, from the moneys known to be in the treasury from the collection of taxes and all other sources of revenue, and all expenditures within the following six months shall be made from and within such appropriations and balances thereof, but no appropriation shall be made for any purpose not set forth in the annual budget nor for a greater amount for such purpose than the toal amount fixed by the budget commissioners, exclusive of receipts and balances."

Under Section 5649-3*d*, just quoted, it becomes the duty of the council of each municipal corporation, at the beginning of each fiscal half year, to make appropriations for each of the several objects for which money has to be provided, from the moneys known to be in the treasury from the collection of taxes and all other sources of revenue, and no expenditures shall be made during the six months following except those made from and within such appropriations and balances thereof.

Before the passage of the Smith law the authority to make the semi-annual appropriations was found in Section 3797, General Code, which provided as follows:

> "At the beginning of each fiscal half year, the council shall make appropriations for each of the several objects for which the corporation has to provide, or from the moneys known to be in the treasury, or estimated to come into it during the six months next ensuing from the collection of taxes and all other sources of revenue. All expenditures within the following six months shall be made from and within such appropriations and balances thereof."

It was held in the case of State, ex rel., vs. Lewis, 6 O. N. P. 198, that the provisions of Section 3797, General Code, were mandatory, and that a taxpayer might enjoin expenditures if such provisions were not complied with.

It is a well settled principle of law that, wherever an officer has discretion to do or not to do a thing, mandamus may not be resorted to, to compel him to exercise that discretion; but where, exercising a trust or station, he has a discretion as to the mode or manner of performing some duty, and refuses to exercise the discretion at all, he may be compelled by mandamus to do so.

While I am inclined to the view that mandamus would lie against the councilmen of the village of Middleport, to compel them to pass the semi-annual appropriation ordinance, yet, I am not called upon to decide that question at this time. As to the personal liability of each councilman in disregarding the provisions of Section 5649-3*d*, General Code, Section 4670, General Code, provides the remedy for misfeasance or malfeasance in office, but that section does not apply; neither do I find any other provision of the General Code applicable to your situation.

I am, therefore, of the opinion that there is no personal liability on the part of the councilmen of the village of Middleport for their failure to pass the semi-annual appropriation ordinance; but I see no reason why any councilman should refuse to do his duty in that behalf.

Very truly yours,

TIMOTHY S. HOGAN,

Attorney General.

VILLAGE MARSHAL—VACANCY MAY NOT BE FILLED IN VILLAGE BY APPOINTMENT NOR BY SPECIAL ELECTION—SALARY FOR OFFICE MAY BE INCREASED WHEN VACANT—DEPUTY MARSHALS AND POLICEMEN MAY BE APPOINTED.

There is no authority for the filling of a vacancy in the office of the village marshal and there is no authority to call a special election.

Under Section 4384, General Code, however, the mayor may appoint and have supervision and control over deputy marshals and policemen, when provided for by council.

The inhibition of Section 4213, General Code, against change of salary of officers, clerks and employes, during the term for which they were elected or appointed, affects the rights only of existing incumbents and does not prohibit the change of a salary fixed for an office when such change does not affect the salary of a present incumbent during his term. The salary fixed may, therefore, be increased when a vacancy exists in such positions.

COLUMBUS, OHIO, November 6, 1912.

HON. C. B. MCCLINTOCK, Solicitor of Brewster, Canton, Ohio.

DEAR SIR:—Under date of October 23, 1912, you inquire as follows:

> "The council in its appropriation ordinance made January, 1912, fixed the salary of the marshal of the village at $175.00 per year. By reason of so many arrests in this village, and by reason of the office consuming so much of a man's time, the council and mayor have been unable to secure any one to act as marshal of the village at that salary. As all railroad towns, it is a town where there is much violation of the law. At present we have no marshal of the village.
> "I write to learn if there is any possible way by which the salary of the marshal of said village can be increased. The salary when it was fixed at $175.00 was fixed for two years. The statutes expressly provide that the salary of an officer shall not be increased or diminished during his term. It leaves our village in a bad predicament in regard to the enforcement of the law.
> "What would you advise me to do as the legal advisor of said village?"

It appears further that the marshal first elected has resigned and that several appointments have been made by the mayor and confirmed by council, all of whom have resigned.

The first difficulty to present itself is the want of power in the mayor or council or any other village officer to fill a vacancy in the office of village marshal.

This was passed upon by this department in an opinion given to Hon. Augustus W. Mithoff, solicitor of Sugar Grove, in reference to a marshal. Also in an opinion given to Hon. Geo. Thornbury, solicitor of Bethesda, on February 10, 1912, it was considered in reference to a village clerk.

There is no authority to fill a vacancy in the office of the village marshal and there is no authority to call a special election. This has been determined in the foregoing opinions, copies of which are herewith enclosed.

It is expected that the next legislature will cure this defect. In that event the right to increase the salary will become material.

Section 4213, General Code, provides:

> "The salary of any officer, clerk or employe shall not be increased or diminished during the term for which he was elected or appointed, and, except as otherwise provided in this title, all fees pertaining to any office shall be paid into the city treasury."

This section prohibits an increase or decrease in the salary of an officer during the term for which he was elected or appointed.

In your case there is no officer filling the position. All those who have been elected or appointed have resigned.

The inhibition is against the change of an officer's salary during his term. It is not an inhibition against the change of the salary fixed for an office. This inhibition affects the rights of incumbents and not those who have not been elected or appointed.

As there is no incumbent council may now change the salary of the office of village marshal and this change when and while operative will be the salary of any incumbent thereafter appointed or elected. It will be the salary of any one appointed to fill the present unexpired term. The unexpired term, however, cannot be filled until the same is authorized by the incoming legislature.

The council should proceed to fix the salary so that it will become operative before any appointment is made.

As no appointment can be made before the first of January the appropriation ordinance of 1912 can have no bearing upon the question.

While there is no authority to fill a vacancy in the office of a village marshal, your situation may be relieved by virtue of Section 4384, General Code, which authorizes the mayor of a village to appoint deputy marshals and policemen when provided for by council. Such appointees are subject to confirmation by council.

Said Section 4384, General Code, provides:

> "The marshal shall be elected for a term of two years, commencing on the first day of January next after his election, and shall serve until his successor is elected and qualified. He shall be an elector of the corporation. When provided for by council, and subject to its confirmation, the mayor shall appoint all deputy marshals, policemen, night watchmen and special policemen, and may remove them for cause, which shall be stated in writing to council."

Section 4385, General Code, provides:

> "The marshal shall be the peace officer of the village and the executive head under the mayor of the police force. The marshal, deputy marshals, policemen or night watchmen under him shall have the powers conferred by law upon police officers in all villages of the state, and such other powers not inconsistent with the nature of their offices as are conferred by ordinance."

By virtue of this section the marshal is the executive head of the police force of the village under the mayor. No marshal can now be appointed. This will not prevent the village from providing for and having deputy marshals or policemen.

If a village had established a police force, and the same was in full organization, and thereafter the marshal should resign, and his position could not be filled, that fact would not terminate the police force. The members of the force would proceed to perform their duties as before, but under the immediate direction of the mayor. The mere fact that the department has no executive head would not prevent it from carrying on its work. The marshal is the executive head, under the mayor, of the police force. If there is no marshal, and none can be provided, as in this case, I am of the opinion that the mayor could act directly with the police force, instead of through a marshal.

It is my opinion that the council may provide for such number of policemen or deputy marshals as may be needed and that the mayor may appoint the same by virtue of Section 4384, General Code, with the confirmation of council. Such policemen or deputy marshals would have power to make arrests and to preserve the peace.

As council has power to establish a police force, it may also abolish the same at its pleasure. Your difficulty as to enforcement of the law may be solved by council providing a police force.

Respectfully,
TIMOTHY S. HOGAN,
Attorney General.

INCORPORATION OF VILLAGES—NO POWER TO REPAY FEES PAID BY AGENT OF PETITIONERS—TIME OF INCORPORATION—MAKING OF TRANSCRIPTS OF RECORD BY COMMISSIONERS AND RECORDER—FEES OF RECORDER—NOMINATION OF CANDIDATES AT PRIMARY AND BY PETITION——ASSESSMENT OF VILLAGE TERRITORY FOR TOWNSHIP TAXES.

As the same is not provided for by statute, the newly incorporated village is not obligated to repay to the agent of the petitioners fees paid by him in advance, nor may it assume such repayment.

Under Sections 3525 and 3524, General Code, the incorporation is completed when a record has been made by the recorder of the transcripts of the proceedings of the commissioners, to wit: Sixty days after the transcripts have been filed with him.

Under Section 3525, General Code, the recorder is required to make and certify two transcripts of the record and submit them to the secretary of state and the agent of the petitioners, immediately after the record has been made in the proper book of his records in his office as provided by Section 3524, General Code.

Under Sections 3540 and 2778, General Code, the recorder is entitled to twelve cents per hundred words for making transcripts of the record and for certifying a copy from the records.

By virtue of Section 4949, candidates for elective office for voluntary political parties or associations must be made at a primary election, if in the territory which contains the village, the political party or association cast at least 10 per cent. of the entire vote at the next preceding general election. Where there is a special election the statute specifically provides that a primary shall be held for nomination of candidates at such election. Independent candidates and candidates of parties, other than those above specified may be nominated by petition by virtue of Sections 4950 and 4996, General Code.

Under 5646, General Code, the property within the village is still a part of the township and may be assessed for township taxes.

COLUMBUS, OHIO, October 18, 1912.

HON. RUPERT HOLLAND, Solicitor of Walbridge, Toledo, Ohio.

DEAR SIR:—Under date of October 7, 1912, you submit the following questions to this department for answer:

> "First. General Code, Section 3540, allows fees to be demanded in advance of the agent of the petitioners. Can the village later, when fully organized, by vote of council, legally assume repayment to the agent of these and other expenses required by law in the matter of the creation of the village?
> "Second. Is the village under legal obligations to assume and repay the agent these expenses required by law to bring it into existence?
> "Third. Must the transcripts provided for in General Code, Section 3525, be made and certified before the village is organized?
> "Fourth. Is the fee for each transcript the same in amount as the fee for the original recording?

"Fifth. Can nominations for offices in organization by special election be made by petition, or is a primary legally necessary?

"Sixth. Is it proper to assess the village property for the general tax fund of the township within which said village is located?

"Seventh. Is it proper to assess the village property for any of the said township taxes?"

Under date of October 12, you submit an eighth inquiry.

"Eighth. What date should be considered the date of 'incorporation,' when the county commissioners make their decree to that effect, or when the official recording is done?"

Section 3540, General Code, to which you refer, provides:

"Each officer shall receive for the services required of him under this division, the same fees he would be entitled to for similar services in other cases. Unless such fees are paid in advance, for services under this chapter, by the agent of the petitioners, of whom demand may be made, and by some person interested for services under other chapters of this division, the officer shall not be required to perform the service."

Section 3517, General Code, prescribes who may obtain the organization of a village, as follows:

"The inhabitants of any territory laid off into village lots, a plat of which territory has been acknowledged and recorded as is provided with respect to deeds, or the inhabitants of any territory which has been laid off into such lots and surveyed and platted by an engineer or surveyor who certified thereon, under oath, to its correctness, and which is recorded as is provided with respect to deeds, or the inhabitants of any island or adjacent islands, or parts thereof, or of such island or islands or parts thereof, and adjacent territory, may obtain the organization of a village in the manner provided in this title. When such village is organized upon any island or islands, it may be done without reference to the number of permanent inhabitants embraced within such territory, and without such plat having been first made. No corporation under this chapter shall embrace within its limits the grounds or improvements of any county or city infirmary."

Section 3518, General Code, provides:

"Application for such purpose shall be made by petition, which, except as provided in the last preceding section, shall be signed by not less than thirty electors, residing within the proposed corporate limits, and addressed to the county commissioners, accompanied by an accurate map of the territory.

Section 3519, General Code, provides:

"The petition shall contain: 1. An accurate description of the territory embraced within the proposed corporation, and it may contain adjacent territory not laid off into lots. 2. The supposed number of inhabitants residing in the proposed corporation. 3. The name proposed. 4. The name of a person to act as agent for the petitioners, and more than one agent may be named therein."

The petitioners are the persons who are seeking to form the corporation. This is a voluntary obligation upon their part. The petitioners are required to select an agent. This agent is required by Section 3540, General Code, to pay the fees of the officers who are required to perform duties in connection with the incorporation proceedings. There is no specific provision of statute which authorizes the village, after its incorporation to repay to the agent of the petitioners the amount he has paid for such services.

Section 176, subdivision 13, General Code, provides for the amount of the fee to be paid to the secretary of state, as follows:

"The secretary of state shall charge and collect the following fees for official services:

"13. For filing copy of papers evidencing the incorporation of a municipal corporation, or of annexation of territory by a municipal corporation, five dollars, to be paid by the corporation, the petitioners therefor, or their agent."

Under this section the fee of the secretary of state may be paid either by the corporation, the agent, or by the petitioners. There is no provision, however, that the money shall be refunded by the corporation if the fee is paid by the agent or by the petitioners.

The rule is laid down in 28 Cyc., page 177, as follows:

"But a newly created city or other municipality does not become liable for the debts of a purely voluntary association, contracted for public improvements falling within the limits of the municipality, or otherwise, unless such liability is imposed by the legislature."

A village has only such powers as are granted it by the legislature or which are necessarily implied. It is an organization of limited jurisdiction and powers. Its authority to expend money must be found in the acts of the legislature. The legislature has not authorized the village to refund to the petitioners or to their agent the amount necessarily expended by them in securing the organization of the village.

It is, therefore, my opinion that the village has no authority to repay any such expense, and that it is under no obligation to assume such obligations.

This disposes of your first and second questions. Your third question is:

"Must the transcripts provided for in General Code, Section 3525 be made and certified before the village is organized?"

Section 3525, General Code, provides:

"When the record is made, the corporation shall be deemed the village of ....., to be organized and governed under the provisions of this title. Thereupon the recorder shall make, and certify under his official seal, two transcripts of the record, one of which he shall forward to the secretary of state, and, on demand, deliver the other to the agent of the petitioners, with a certificate thereon that the duplicate has been forwarded to the secretary of state. When a municipal corporation is organized by the election of its officers, notice of its existence shall be taken in all judicial proceedings."

Section 3522, General Code, provides:

"Upon such hearing, if the commissioners find that the petition contains all the matters required, that its statements are true, that the name proposed is appropriate, that the limits of the proposed corporation are accurately described and are not unreasonably large or small, that the map or plat is accurate, that the persons whose names are subscribed to the petition are electors residing on the territory, that notice has been given as required, that there is the requisite population for the proposed corporation, and if it seems to the commissioners right that the prayer of the petition be granted, they shall cause an order to be entered on their journal to the effect that the corporation may be organized."

Section 3523, General Code, provides:

"The commissioners shall cause to be entered on their journal all their orders and proceedings in relation to such incorporation, and they shall cause a certified transcript thereof, signed by a majority of them, to be delivered, together with the petition, map and all other papers on file relating to the matter, to the recorder of the county, at the earliest time practicable."

Section 3524, General Code, provides:

"The recorder shall file the transcript and other papers in his office, and at the expiration of sixty days thereafter, unless enjoined as herinafter provided, he shall make a record of the petition, transcript, and map in the proper book of records and preserve in his office the original papers delivered to him by the commissioners, certifying thereon that the transcript, petition, and map are properly recorded."

If the county commissioners grant the prayer of the petition they are required to file a transcript of their orders and proceedings, and the map and other papers with the county recorder. These are filed by the recorder and held for sixty days before a record is made. Unless he has been enjoined, he shall make a record of the petition, transcript and map, at the expiration of said sixty days.

Section 3525, General Code, then provides, that, "when the record is made," "thereupon the recorder shall make" two transcripts of the record. The word "thereupon" refers to the time when the record is made.

In 38 Cyc., page 283, one of the definitions of "thereupon" is given:

"As an adverb of time, without delay or lapse of time; immediately without delay; immediately after that;—

Reading this section with the above definition, it means that when the record is made the recorder shall, without delay, make and certify two transcripts of the record.

The transcripts should be made and one of them forwarded to the secretary of state as soon as can be done after the record is completed.

While considering Section 3525, General Code, your eighth question will be answered.

Section 3536, General Code, provides:

> "The first election of officers for such corporation shall be at the first municipal election after its creation, and the place of holding the election shall be fixed by the agent of the petitioners. Notice thereof, printed or plainly written, shall be posted by him in three or more public places within the limits of the corporation, at least ten days before the election. The election shall be conducted, and the officers chosen and qualified, in the manner prescribed for the election of township officers, and the first election may be a special election held at any time not exceeding six months after the incorporation, and the time and place of holding it shall be fixed by such agent, and notice thereof shall be given as is required herein for the municipal election."

It is apparent from this section that the incorporation is completed before the election of officers. The first sentence of Section 3525, General Code, supra, determines the date of the incorporation. This sentence reads:

> "When the record is made, the corporation shall be deemed the village of ....., to be organized and governed under the provisions of this title."

The decree of the commissioners is but one step in the incorporation proceedings. After their decision the recorder holds the papers for sixty days awaiting proceedings to prevent the incorporation. The procedings are held in abeyance during this period. It is completed when the record is made.

The date of the incorporation will be the date when the record is completed by the county recorder.

Your fourth inquiry is:

> "Is the fee for each transcript the same in amount as the fee for the original recording?"

Section 3540, General Code, supra, provides in part:

> "Each officer shall receive for the services required of him under this division, the same fees he would be entitled to for similar services in other cases."

Section 2778, General Code, provides:

> "For the services hereinafter specified, the recorder shall charge and collect the fees provided in this and the next following section. For recording mortgage, deed of conveyance, power of attorney or other instrument of writing, twelve cents for each hundred words actually written, typewritten or printed on the records and for indexing it, five cents for each grantor and each grantee therein; for certifying copy from the record, twelve cents for each hundred words. The fees in this section provided shall be paid upon the presentation of the respective instruments for record upon the application for any certified copy of the record."

Section 2779, General Code, provides:

"For recording assignment or satisfaction of mortgage or discharge of a soldier, twenty-five cents; for each search of the record, without copy, fifteen cents; for recording any plat not exceeding six lines, one dollar; and for each additional line, ten cents."

Section 2779, General Code, fixes the fee for recording a plat. The map of a village is in fact a plat of the village. Section 2779, General Code, then governs the fee to be charged for recording the map.

Section 2778, General Code, fixes the fee for recording an instrument of writing at twelve cents per hundred words. The same fee is fixed for certifying a copy from the records. The transcript of the record required by Section 3525, General Code, is in fact a certified copy of the record. The recorder is required to make two transcripts of the record. The fees for the record and for the transcript are the same. He is entitled to the regular fee for each transcript made by him.

Your fifth question is:

"Can nominations for offices in organization by special election be made by petition, or is a primary legally necessary?"

The officers to be nominated by primary election are enumerated in Section 4949, General Code, as follows:

"Candidates for member of congress, and for all other public elective offices, delegates provided for herein and members of the controlling committees, of all voluntary political parties or associations, which at the next preceding general election polled in the state or any district, county or subdivision thereof, or municipality, at least ten per cent. of the entire vote cast therein, shall be nominated or selected in such state, district, subdivision or municipality, in accordance with the provisions of this chapter, and persons not so nominated shall not be considered candidates and their names shall not be printed on the official ballots. Delegates, and party controlling committees whose members have not been so selected, shall not be recognized by any board or officer."

Section 4950, General Code, provides:

"Nothing in this chapter shall repeal the provisions of law relating to the nomination of candidates for office by nomination papers, and no elector shall be disqualified from signing a petition for such nomination of candidates for office by nomination papers, because such elector voted at a primary provided for herein to nominate candidates to be voted for at the same election or because such elector signed nomination papers for such primary.

Section 4963, General Code, provides:

> "Primaries under this chapter to nominate candidates for county offices or to select delegates to nominate candidates for state or district offices, shall be held in each county at the usual polling places on the third Tuesday of May of even-numbered years, and primaries held to nominate candidates for township and municipal offices, justices of the peace and members of the board of education shall be held in each county at the usual polling places on the first Tuesday after the first Monday in September of odd-numbered years."

Section 4964, General Code, provides:

> "When a call is issued for a special election, the date of the primary shall be fixed at the same time and in the same manner by the authority calling such special election, which primary shall be held at least two weeks prior to the time fixed for such special election. Nomination papers for such election shall be filed at least ten days before the date for holding such primary, and after such election is called at least five days shall be allowed for circulating and filing nomination papers."

By virtue of Section 4949, General Code, all candidates for an elective office for voluntary political parties or associations must be made at a primary election, if such party or association has cast at least ten per cent. of the entire vote at the next preceding general election in the district, in this case, the municipality.

It might be urged that there was no municipality in existence at the time of the last general election. That is true. This provision, in my opinion, refers to the territory which is to compose the new village. If in that territory a political party or association has cast at the next preceding general election at least ten per cent. of the entire vote cast therein, such political party or association must make its nominations by primary elections. When there is a special election the statute specifically provides that a primary shall be held for nomination of candidates at such election. The statute makes no exceptions as to any offices that may be nominated by a political party that comes within the terms of Section 4949, General Code. This section includes all elective officers.

Section 4996, General Code, provides:

> "Nominations of candidates for any county, township, municipal or ward office may be made by nomination papers, signed in the aggregate for each candidate by not less than three hundred qualified electors of the county or fifty electors of the city or twenty-five electors of the township, ward or village, respectively. In counties containing annual registration cities, such nomination papers shall be signed by petitioners not less in number than one for each fifty persons who voted at the next preceding general election in such county."

Section 4950, General Code, specifically retains the right to nominate by petition. Political parties, however, that cast at least ten per cent. of the entire vote at the next preceding election cannot avail themselves of this method of nominations.

Therefore, candidates of political parties or associations that cast at least ten per cent. of the entire vote polled in the territory of the proposed village at the next preceding general election must be nominated by primary election. Independent candidates and candidates of other parties may be nominated by petition.

Your sixth and seventh inquiries are:

> "Sixth. Is it proper to assess the village property for the general tax fund of the township within which said village is located?
>
> "Seventh. Is it proper to assess the village property for any of the said township taxes?"

Section 5646, General Code, provides:

> "The trustees of each township, on or before the fifteenth day of May, annually, shall determine the amount of taxes necessary for all township purposes, and certify it to the county auditor. The county auditor shall levy, annually, for township purposes, including the relief of the poor, but not including the support of common schools, or the payment of the interest and principal of the debts of the township, such rates of taxes as the trustees of the respective townships certify to him to be necessary, not exceeding one mill on each dollar of the taxable valuation of the property of the township, which does not exceed two hundred thousand dollars, eight-tenths of one mill on each dollar of such taxable valuation exceeding two hundred thousand dollars, and not exceeding three hundred thousand dollars, one-half of one mill on each dollar of such taxable valuation exceeding three hundred thousand dollars, and not exceeding five hundred thousand dollars, four-tenths of a mill on each dollar of such taxable valuation exceeding five hundred thousand dollars, and not exceeding eight hundred thousand dollars, one-fourth of one mill on each dollar of such taxable valuation exceeding eight hundred thousand dollars, and for the payment of the interest and principal of the debts of the township, such sum as the trustees may determine is necessary for that purpose."

The tax to be levied by this section is levied upon the property in the township. When a part of the territory of a township is taken to form a village such territory is not thereby taken from the township. It is still a part of the township. Township officers have jurisdiction over the territory in their township which is included in a village. Justices of the peace have jurisdiction therein. In construing the statutes pertaining to the relief of the poor by the township this department has held that the township trustees should grant relief to persons residing in a municipality within such township.

The property of a village is a part of the property of the township in which such village is located and is liable to be assessed for taxes levied for township purposes.

There is a special statute governing a township when the boundaries of a township and a municipal corporation are identical. It is assumed in your case that the boundaries are not identical.

Very truly,

TIMOTHY S. HOGAN,

Attorney General.

VILLAGE SOLICITORS—SERVICES FIXED BY CONTRACT—COMPENSATION NEED NOT BE NAMED IN CONTRACT.

The duties of a village solicitor are fixed by contract and he may receive extra compensation for such services as are not stipulated for in his contract.

It is not necessary that compensation be fixed before the services are performed.

COLUMBUS, OHIO, December 13, 1912.

HON. O. H. STEWART, Solicitor for the Village of Middleport, Pomeroy, Ohio.

DEAR SIR:—Under date of November 29th, you wrote to me in part as follows:

> "Our village employes a solicitor whose duties are to attend council meetings, give advice, prepare ordinances, resolutions, etc., for which the village pays the modest sum of $75.00 a year.
> "I would like to know if the solicitor is entitled to extra compensation in defending suits brought against the village.
>
> "Our village has been sued by the water company. It is an important suit. I have been formally instructed by council to look after the interests of the village.
> "Also, in the hiring of an attorney or in the instruction of the solicitor to prosecute or defend a suit, should a contract be entered into formally, fixing the compensation or are the instructions of the council sufficient to establish a contract, with compensation to be fixed at the end of the service, or must the compensation be agreed upon in the first place?"

There is no office in a village corresponding to that of solicitor in a city, but Section 4220 of the General Code, authorizes the village council to "provide legal council for the village, or any department or official thereof, for a period not to exceed two years, and provide compensation therefor."

The relation between a village and the legal counsel employed by it by virtue of the authority granted by Section 4220 is contractual and such legal counsel is not required to perform any service not included in his contract. If your contract does not include the work of defending the village in law suits brought against it, I am of the opinion that it is within the power of the village council to provide extra compensation for such services. I am also of the opinion that the instruction of council by way of resolution authorizing you to defend the village in the suit brought against it by the water company is sufficient upon which to found a claim for your services after they are rendered. It is not necessary, in my judgment, that the compensation to be paid should be fixed in advance of the rendition of the services.

Yours very truly,

TIMOTHY S. HOGAN,

Attorney General.

BOARD OF TRUSTEES OF PUBLIC AFFAIRS—MAKING OF CONTRACTS AND SELLING OF BONDS FOR BUILDING A DAM IS VESTED IN VILLAGE COUNCIL.

A contract for building a dam across a river should be made and the proceeds of bonds sold for the same should be expended by the village council and not by the board of public affairs.

COLUMBUS, OHIO, December 6, 1912.

HON. CHARLES J. FORD, Solicitor, Geneva, Ohio.

DEAR SIR:—Your letter of November 26th, in which you inquire whether the proceeds of the $10,000.00 bonds sold for building a dam across Grand river should be expended by the council or turned over to the trustees of public affairs and expended by them is at hand, and in reply I would say that in the absence of an express provision granting the power to contract for this improvement it is the duty of the council to make the same.

The expression found in Section 4361, of the General Code, granting the trustees of public affairs all the powers of water works trustees does not, to my mind, include the right to determine the character of this dam and the power to make a contract for its construction.

I, therefore, agree with your conclusion that the council should make the contract and that it should be executed as provided by Section 4221 of the General Code.

Yours very truly,
TIMOTHY S. HOGAN,
Attorney General.

OFFICES COMPATIBLE—COUNTY SURVEYOR AND MEMBER VILLAGE BOARD OF PUBLIC AFFAIRS—OFFICERS INCOMPATIBLE—MEMBER AND CLERK OF VILLAGE BOARD OF TRUSTEES OF PUBLIC AFFAIRS.

Since the offices of county surveyor and trustee of public affairs of a village are not in any way subordinate to each other, and neither being a check upon the other, and not being physically impossible of performance by one and the same person, they are not incompatible and may be held by a single individual at the same time.

It is contrary to the policy of the law to permit an officer to use his official appointing power to place himself in office. Therefore, the board of public affairs cannot appoint one of their own members clerk of the board.

COLUMBUS, OHIO, December 9, 1912.

HON. S. W. DAKIN, Village Solicitor, Yellow Springs, Ohio.

DEAR SIR:—I herewith acknowledge receipt of your letter of September 3, 1912, wherein you inquire as follows:

"Is it incompatible for a person to hold a county office and at the same time hold the office of board of trustees of public affairs of a village?

"Can a member of such board draw salary as clerk when the ordinance establishing such board provides that they shall not receive any salary as members of said board?"

On September 12, 1912, we wrote you asking that you state what county office is being held by the party holding the office of member of the board of trustees of public affairs, and we also requested in the same letter that you forward to us a copy of the ordinance referred to in your letter of inquiry. In reply thereto we received from you on September 27, 1912, the following communication:

"I herewith enclose copy of ordinance establishing a board of trustees of public affairs. My opinion is, that being a member of said board, the clerk cannot draw a salary as clerk, being prohibited from drawing salary under the ordinance, a copy of which is enclosed. The other question is as to whether it is incompatible to hold a county office, and at the same time hold the office of trustee of public affairs, the office being county surveyor. As far as I can see there is no incompatability in holding this office and at the same time be a member of the board of trustees of public affairs. I may be wrong in these matters, is the reason for asking your opinion. Thanking you for your prompt attention, etc."

Answering your first question I will say that I have carefully looked into the constitutional and statutory provisions of our state, and I do not find any prohibition against one and the same person holding at the same time the office of county surveyor and the office of member of the board of trustees of public affairs of a village. Section 2783 provides as follows:

"No person holding the office of clerk of court, sheriff, county treasurer or county recorder, shall be eligible to the office of county surveyor."

In my opinion said statute does not preclude a person from holding at the same time one of the offices therein mentioned and another office not therein mentioned—the prohibition in said statute is against holding more than one of the offices therein mentioned, and by clear implication it follows that the prohibition is not intended to be extended to holding one of the enumerated offices and another office not therein enumerated at the same time.

Under former rulings of this department, in the absence of such a prohibition, the same person may hold the two offices at the same time provided they are not incompatible. The rule of incompatibility is laid down in the case of State vs. Gebert, 12 CC., n. s., 274, by Judge Dustin, at page 275, of the opinion as follows:

"Offices are considered incompatible when one is subordinate to, or in any way a check upon, the other; or when it is physically impossible for one person to discharge the duties of both."

Therefore, in order to determine whether or not the aforesaid offices are incompatible it is neccesary to look to the statutory duties of each. Section 2792, of the General Code, determines the duties of county surveyors as follows:

> "The county surveyor shall perform all duties for the county now or hereafter authorized or declared by law to be done by a civil engineer or surveyor. He shall prepare all plans, specifications, details, estimates of cost, and submit forms of contracts for the construction or repair of all bridges, culverts, roads, drains, ditches and other public improvements, except buildings, constructed under the authority of any board within and for the county. When required by the county commissioners, he shall inspect all bridges and culverts, and on or before the first day of June of each year report their condition to the commissioners. Such report shall be made oftener if the commissioners so require."

Other duties which county surveyors are to perform are found in Sections 2793 to 2822, inclusive, of the General Code, and are in substance as follows: The inspection of all public improvements made under authority of the board of county commissioners; keeping of complete records of estimates and summaries of bids received and contracts for various improvements; the survey of the land situated in two or more counties, to keep records of the surveys made by himself, or his deputies for the purpose of locating any land or road lines or fixing any corners or monuments; to transcribe any and all dilapidated maps and records of plats and field notes of surveys from records of the common pleas, probate or other courts; to make and keep up in a manner convenient for reference complete indices to all the records in his office; to survey all lands which have been sold for taxes which lie within his county, and other duties contained in the above mentioned sections.

As to the statutory duties of the members of the board of trustees of public affairs, Section 4361 provides as follows:

> "The board of trustees of public affairs shall have all the powers and perform all the duties provided in this title to be exercised and performed by the trustees of waterworks, and such other duties as may be prescribed by law or ordinances not inconsistent herewith."

The general provisions referred to in section governing the management of waterworks are found in Sections 3955 to 3981, inclusive, of the General Code.

Said offices not being in any wise subordinate to each other, and neither of them being a check upon the other, and not being physically impossible of performance by one and the same person—I am of the opinion that the offices of county surveyor and trustee of public affairs of a village are compatible and can be held by one and the same person at the same time.

Your second question is: "Can a member of such board draw a salary as clerk when the ordinance establishing such board provides that they shall not receive any salary as members of said board?" In reply thereto, Section 4357 of the General Code, provides when the board of trustees of public affairs in a village can be established, as follows:

> "In each village in which waterworks, an electric light plant, artificial or natural gas plant, or other similar public utility is situated, or when council orders waterworks, an electric light plant, natural or artificial gas plant or other similar public utility, to be constructed, or to be leased or purchased from any individual, company or corporation, council shall establish at such time a board of trustees of public affairs for the village, which shall consist of three members, residents of the village, who shall be each elected for a term of two years."

Section 4219 of the General Code provides that the council of the village shall fix the compensation of all officers, clerks and employes, except as otherwise provided by law, as follows:

"Council shall fix the compensation and bonds of all officers, clerks and employes in the village government, except as otherwise provided by law. All bonds shall be made with sureties subject to the approval of the mayor. The compensation so fixed shall not be increased or diminished during the term for which any officer, clerk or employe may have been elected or appointed. Members of council may receive as compensation the sum of two dollars for each meeting, not to exceed twenty-four meetings in any one year."

In exercising its prerogative under authority of said statutes, the council of your village passed and adopted the following ordinance:

"An ordinance to establish a board of trustees of public affairs for the village of Yellow Springs, Greene county, Ohio.

"Sec. 1. Be it ordained by the council of the village of Yellow Springs, state of Ohio, that there be, and there is hereby established in said village a board of trustees of public affairs, who shall be residents of said village. Said board shall consist of three members and shall have all of the powers and perform all of the duties provided and required by law for such boards.

"Each member of said board shall receive for the year next after their appointment the sum of fifty dollars for said year; and thereafter no compensation. Said salary shall be paid quarterly in four equal sums. Before entering upon their duties as such trustees, each member of said board shall enter into a proper bond in the sum of five hundred dollars ($500) to the approval of the mayor of said village.

"Said board shall for the time being be appointed by the mayor, subject to the approval of the council and each of said members shall hold office until their successors are duly and legally elected after their appointment

"Sec. 2. This ordinance shall take effect and be in force from and after the earliest period allowed by law.

"Passed July 16, 1909."

Unquestionably the council has the authority to fix the salary and compensation of said members of the board of trustees of public affairs as provided in said ordinance, to wit, $50.00 for the year next after their appointment, and thereafter no compensation. Said salary or compensation could only mean that the members appointed in the first instance by the mayor shall receive compensation, and said compensation shall be for just the one year after their appointment. It follows, therefore, that members of said board to be elected at subsequent municipal elections shall receive no compensation or salary for the reason that said ordinance does not provide for such salary or compensation.

However, your question does not involve the right of such member to draw a salary as such, but does involve his right to draw a salary by virtue of his being appointed clerk of the board of public affairs of your village. Your question presupposes that the board of public affairs has the right and the authority to appoint one of its members as clerk of its board. This would not be in accordance with the principles of law as I believe them to be, and in support thereof I herewith cite the following authorities:

> "It is contrary to the policy of the law for an officer to use his official appointing power to place himself in office. So that even in the absence of a statutory inhibition all officers who have the appointing power are disqualified for appointment to the office to which they may appoint."—29 Cyc., page 1381.
> "A member of the board of health cannot be appointed by the board sanitary policeman and hold both positions at the same time. Such appointment is illegal and void and the party is not entitled to compensation for his services as such sanitary policeman."—State, ex rel., Henry vs. City of Newark, 6 Ohio Nisi Prius, p. 523.

If such member were to be appointed clerk of the board of public affairs it would give him, as such member of the board of public affairs power to vote and possibly the deciding power in the adoption of rules defining his own duties, would invest him with visitorial power over himself and would make him an inspector of his own records, books and also accounts if he should have any. In other words, such appointment would make him a judge over his own cause and this would have the effect of controverting the very checks and safeguards which the law has provided against fraud and peculation.

> "Where a member of the board of directors of a county infirmary was by said board appointed to the office of superintendent of the county infirmary, he still continuing to hold the office of director,
> "Held, that the duties of the two offices are incompatible and cannot be legally held by the same person at the same time, and such appointment was, therefore, illegal and void."—State, ex rel., vs. Taylor, 12 O. S. 130.

Furthermore, Section 4360 of the General Code, provides as follows:

> "The board of trustees of public affairs shall organize by electing one of its members president. It may elect a clerk, who shall be known as the clerk of the board of trustees of public affairs."

If the legislature had intended to give such board of public affairs authority to elect one of its members clerk of such board it would have said so in the same unmistakable phraseology as was employed in the case of the election of one of its members as president.

Therefore, inasmuch as such member is ineligible to be elected as clerk, he, of course, could not draw a salary as such clerk, and the fact that such ordinance, as above quoted establishing said board of public affairs, provides that they shall not receive any salary as members of said board is not determinative of the question.

Yours very truly,

TIMOTHY S. HOGAN,

Attorney General.

LEVIES FOR INTEREST AND SINKING FUND PURPOSES INCURRED AFTER PASSAGE OF SMITH LAW WITHOUT VOTE OF PEOPLE NOT EXEMPTED FROM LIMITATIONS—ASSESSMENTS CANNOT BE MADE IN EXCESS OF ONE-THIRD OF LOT VALUE EXCEPT UPON PETITION.

Levies for interest and sinking fund purposes incurred after the passage of the Smith law without vote of people, are not exempted from the five-mill, ten-mill, nor the "amount levied in 1910" limitations of the Smith law with reference to municipal corporations.

Under Section 3819, General Code, in the absence of a petition of the kind described in Section 3836, General Code, no assessment upon any property can be made which will exceed in amount thirty-three and one-third per cent. of the value of the property after the improvement is made. In case of a petition, under Section 3836, General Code, the signers can be assessed without limit, while those who do not sign may not be assessed in an amount exceeding thirty-three and one-third per cent. of the tax value of their lots. In no event, however, can any lots be assessed beyond the extent of the benefit actually conferred.

COLUMBUS, OHIO, December 17, 1912.

HON. J. R. FITZGIBBON, Solicitor for the Village of Hartford, Newark, Ohio.

DEAR SIR:—I beg to acknowledge receipt of your letter of November 30th, in which you request my opinion on the following questions:

> "1. What is the limitation of the Smith law, applicable to a levy by a municipal corporation for interest and sinking fund purposes to discharge an indebtedness created without a vote of the people after the passage of the act?
> "2. May an assessment for street improvements, made according to the number of feet front, exceed in the aggregate, as to any one tract of real estate, 33 1-3 per cent. of the value of the tract?"

Answering your first question I beg to state that Section 5649-2, General Code, one of the sections of the so-called Smith one per cent. law, provides very explicitly two limitations upon the amount and rate of taxation which may be levied in the aggregate upon the taxable property in a taxing district, viz.: The amount of taxes levied therein in the year 1910, and a rate of ten mills. From the latter limitation and not from the former certain interest and sinking fund levies are exempted, viz.: Those necessary to provide for indebtedness created prior to the passage of the act, i. e., prior to June 2, 1911, or thereafter by a vote of the people.

Section 5649-3*a* provides certain interior limitations which operate upon the rate which may be levied by a village, for example, for village purposes. The supreme court in the case of State, ex rel., vs. Sanzenbacher, 84 O. S. —, unreported, has held that the interest and sinking fund levies exempt, so to speak, from the ten-mill limitation, are also exempt from these interior limitations.

It is very clear, however, from a reading of the entire Smith law, which is too lengthy for quotation here, that nowhere is there any inference to the effect that sinking fund and interest levies necessary to provide for the indebtedness created after the passage of the act without a vote of the people are exempted, so to speak, from any of the limitations. Such levies, on the contrary, must be made within all the limitations of the law. A municipal corporation, therefore, must make its levies for interest and sinking fund purposes necessary to provide for indebtedness so created, both within the five-mill limit of Section 5649-3*a* and within the ten-mill limit of Section 5649-2, as well as within the 1910 tax limit of the same section.

As to these last two limitations it may also be said that they are concurrent and that the section cannot be construed as authorizing cumulative levies equal to the amount raised in 1910 plus ten mills as suggested in your letter as your view of the same.

Answering your second question I beg to state that it is provided by Section 3819, General Code, that:

> "The council shall limit all assessments to the special benefits conferred upon the property assessed, and in no case shall there be levied upon any lot or parcel of land in the corporation any assessment or assessments for any or all purposes within a period of five years, to exceed thirty-three and one-third per cent. of the actual value therof after improvement is made."

It is very clear that these limitations apply to all assessments made in the regular way, according to any of the three methods of assessing provided for in Section 3812.

> Pike vs. Commissioners, 36 O. S. 213.
> Hays vs. Cincinnati, 62 O. S. 116.

The only exception to the rule set forth in Section 3818 is that incorporated in Section 3836, General Code, which provides in general that when a petition subscribed by three-fourths in interest of the owners of abutting property, agreeing that the entire cost of the improvement may be assessed against the abutting property, the total cost of the improvement may be divided between the signers and those who fail to sign, the only limitation being, that those who do not sign shall not be assessed an amount exceeding thirty-three and one-third per cent. of the tax value of the land.

These two sections, in my opinion, exhaust the possibilities of proceeding to improve a street by assessment on abutting property. In the absence of a petition of the kind described in Section 3836 no assessment upon any property can be made which will exceed in amount thirty-three and one-third per cent. of the value of the property after the improvement; in case of a petition under Section 3836 the signers can be assessed without limit, while those who do not sign may not be assessed in an amount exceeding thirty-three and one-third per cent. of the tax value of their lots, and in no event, of course, beyond the extent of the benefit specially conferred.

Yours very truly,

TIMOTHY S. HOGAN,
Attorney General.

WORKMAN'S COMPENSATION ACT—EMPLOYE INJURED OUTSIDE OF STATE MAY NOT SUE EMPLOYER WHO HAS ACCEPTED TERMS OF ACT.

Under Section 1465-57, General Code, providing for injuries or death "wherever occurring," and Section 1465-59, General Code, using the terms "wherever such injuries have occurred," an employe doing the work of an employer who has accepted the terms of the workman's compensation act, who has notice of such acceptance as provided by the act and who is injured in the course of his employment, whilst outside of this state, is not permitted to sue such employer for said injury.

COLUMBUS, OHIO, January 4, 1912.

THE STATE LIABILITY BOARD OF AWARDS, Columbus, Ohio.

GENTLEMEN:—Your favor of November 16, 1911, is received in which you ask an opinion upon the following:

> "We have had frequent inquiries as to whether the act of May 31, 1911 (102 O. L. 524), applies to such employes of an Ohio employer as may, at the time of receiving an injury, be employed outside of the territorial limits of the state of Ohio.
>
> "We have a letter from The Stacey Manufacturing Company, of Cincinnati, the business of which company is manufacturing and installing artificial gas plants, etc., containing such inquiry, which we herewith enclose. This company employs a large number of men, many of whom are engaged outside of the state of Ohio.
>
> "The construction this board has placed upon Sections 20-1 and 20-2 of the act in question is that employes of an Ohio employer injured while engaged in work outside of the territorial limits of Ohio do not come under the provisions of the law. However, the number of inquiries we have received as to this particular question indicates that it is of great importance, and we therefore ask a ruling from your department upon the question."

The letter enclosed states the facts as follows:

> "We have been studying the provisions of Green law and believe that we are ready to take advantage of the act. There are certain features in our business that are not fully covered by this law, for instance, ninety per cent. of all our orders for gas holders, steel water and oil tanks are fabricated here and erected and finished complete in other states by mechanics who are sent from here. Should such employe elect to avail himself of the provisions of this law, be injured while performing work outside of this state, be barred from bringing an action against us?"

Sections 20-1 and 20-2 of the state liability act referred to by you are known as Sections 1465-57 and 1465-58, respectively, of the General Code.

"Any employer who employs five or more workmen or operatives regularly in the same business, or in or about the same establishment who shall pay into the state insurance fund the premiums provided by this act, shall not be liable to respond in damages at common law or by statute, save as hereinafter provided, for injuries or death of any such employe, wherever occurring, during the period covered by such premiums, provided the injured employe has remained in his service with notice that his employer has paid into the state insurance fund the premiums provided by this act; the continuation in the service of such employer with such notice, shall be deemed a waiver by the employe of his right of action aforesaid.

"Each employer paying the premiums provided by this act into the state insurance fund shall post in conspicuous places about his place or places of business typewritten or printed notices stating the fact that he has made such payment; and the same when so posted, shall constitute sufficient notice to his employes of the fact that he has made such payment; and of any subsequent payments he may make after such notices have been posted."

Section 1465-58, General Code, provides:

"For the purpose of creating such state insurance fund, each employer who employes five or more workmen or operatives regularly in the same business, or in or about the same establishment, and his employes in this state, having elected to accept the provisions of this act, shall pay, on or before January 1, 1912, and semi-annually thereafter, the premiums of liability risk in the classes of employment as may be determined and published by the state liability board of awards. The said employers for themselves and their employes shall make such payments to the state treasurer of Ohio, who shall receive and place the same to the credit of said state insurance fund. The premiums provided for in this act shall be paid by the employer and employes in the following proportions, to wit: Ninety per cent. of the premium shall be paid by the employer and ten per cent. by the employes. Each employer is authorized to deduct from the pay roll of his employes ten per cent. of the said premiums for any premium period in proportion to the pay roll of such employes; no deduction shall be made except for that portion of the premium period antedating such pay roll. Each employer shall give a receipt to each employe showing the amount which has been deducted and paid into the state insurance fund."

Section 1465-59, General Code, provides:

"The state liability board of awards shall disburse the state insurance fund to such employes of employers as have paid into said fund the premiums applicable to the classes to which they belong, that have been injured in the course of their employment, wheresoever such injury has occurred, and which have not been purposely self-inflicted, or to their dependents in case death has ensued."

In fixing the place where an injury may occur in order to come within the provisions of this act, Section 1465-57, General Code, contains the clause "for injuries or death of any such employe, wherever occurring," and Section

1465-59, General Code, the clause, "that have been injured in the course of their employment, wheresoever such injury has occurred." The question arises, do these provisions grant jurisdiction over injuries which occur without the state, when the contract of employment is made in Ohio, and the employe is working temporarily in another state?

There is no specific provision of the act which grants jurisdiction over injuries occurring without the state. Do the words above quoted grant such jurisdiction?

The liability act creates a state insurance fund for the benefit of injured workmen and their dependents. Section 1465-58, General Code, requires that ninety per cent. of the premiums shall be paid by the employer and ten per cent. thereof by the employe. The act is not compulsory. The employer may or may not accept the provisions of the act. An employe who has notice that the employer has paid the premiums provided for, and remains in the employ of such employer, thereby chooses to accept the provisions of the act.

Upon the acceptance, therefore, of the employer and the employe of the provisions of the act and the payment of the premiums to the state insurance fund, their rights thereto are in the nature of a contract of insurance by which they agree to settle all liabilities for injuries by the provisions of the liability insurance act.

The words "wherever occurring" and "wheresoever such injury has occurred," are inclusive and controlling of the places where such injury may occur. They apply at any location at which the employe may be injured in the course of his employment, whether at the factory or establishment of the employer, or other place.

An employe who accepts the provisions of the liability act and pays his portion of the premiums required, and who is injured in the course of his employment while temporarily without the state is subject to the provisions of said act and is barred from bringing an action for recovery of damages against his employer.

It will be noted further that Section 1465-58 provides "for the purpose of creating such insurance fund each employer who employes five or more workmen or operatives regularly in the same business or in or about the same establishment, and his employes in this state having elected to accept the provisions of this act, shall, etc." Unquestionably the man who contracts in this state with a firm in this state and who receives his orders either mediately or immediately from officers in this state is an employe in this state just as much as special counsel from the attorney general's office on duty in Washington, D. C., acting for the state, is an officer of this state.

The expression "employes in this state" coupled with the expression in Section 1465-67, "for injuries or death of any such employe" wherever occurring, discloses the purpose of the act, and that is, if one be an employe within the state he is to be compensated for an injury wherever occurring. Unless this meant to give him a contract right out of Ohio as well as in Ohio, the expression "wherever occurring" would be mere surplusage. I think that in view of the fact that courts have no extra territorial jurisdiction the provision, "wherever occurring," is intended to bring employes in the state within the provisions of the act without reference to where they happen to be engaged at the time.

Very truly yours,

TIMOTHY S. HOGAN.

Attorney General.

TAXES AND TAXATION—RAILROAD COMPANIES AND OTHER PUBLIC UTILITIES—EXCISE AND FRANCHISE TAX—INTRASTATE AND INTERSTATE BUSINESS.

Railroad companies and other public utilities doing business in this state, which have no intrastate earnings are not liable for the minimum excise tax of $10.00 or for any other tax.

Such companies are liable, on the other hand, for the annual franchise tax under Sections 106-115 of the act of May 31, 1911.

COLUMBUS, OHIO, December 6, 1911.

THE TAX COMMISSION OF OHIO, Columbus, Ohio.

GENTLEMEN:—I beg to acknowledge receipt of your letter of December 4th, requesting my opinion upon the following questions:

> "(1). Is a railroad company, or other public utility, doing business in this state, which has no intrastate earnings, liable for a minimum tax of $10.00, or any other tax?
> "(2). If a railroad company, or other public utility, doing business in this state, which has no intrastate earnings, is, in your opinion, not liable for any excise tax, is it liable for an annual fee as a domestic or foreign corporation for profit under the provisions of Sections 106-115, inclusive, of the act of May 31, 1911?"

The following provisions of the act of May 31, 1911, are of interest in this connection:

> "Section 81. (103 O. L., 244.) Each public utility, except express, telegraph and telephone companies, and street, suburban and interurban railroad and railroad companies, doing business in this state, shall, annually, on or before the first day of August, and each street, suburban and interurban railroad and railroad company, shall, annually, on or before the first day of September, * * * make and file with the commission a statement * * *
> "Section 83. In the case of each railroad company, such statement shall also contain the entire gross earnings, including all sums earned or charged, whether actually received or not, for the year ending the thirtieth day of June next preceding, from whatever source derived, for business done in this state, including therefrom all earnings derived wholly from interstate business or business done for the federal government. Such statement shall also contain the total gross earnings of such company for such period in this state from business done within this state.
> "Section 88. On the first Monday of October, the commission shall ascertain and determine the gross earnings as herein provided, of each railroad company whose line is wholly or partially within this state, for the year ending on the thirtieth day of June next preceding, excluding therefrom all earnings derived wholly from interstate business or business done for the federal government. The amount so ascertained by the commission shall be the gross earnings of such railroad company for such year.
> "Section 97. In the month of November, the auditor of state shall charge for collection, from each railroad company, a sum in the nature of an excise tax, for the privilege of carrying on its intrastate business, to be computed on the amount so fixed and reported to him by the commission, as the gross earnings of such company on its intrastate business for the year covered by its annual report to the commission, as required in this act, by taking four per cent. of all such gross earnings, which tax shall not be less than ten dollars in any case.

"Section 129. An incorporated company, whether foreign or domestic, owning or operating a public utility in this state, and as such required by law to file reports with the tax commission and to pay an excise tax upon its gross receipts or gross earnings as provided in this act * * * shall not be subject to the provisions of Sections 106 to 115, inclusive, of this act" (which said Sections 106 to 115, inclusive, provide for the payment of annual fees by domestic and foreign corporations for profit).

Upon a consideration of the excise tax sections above quoted, it is reasonably clear to me that the intention of the legislature is to tax the privilege of carrying on intrastate business; whether because of supposed constitutional difficulties or other reasons, the legislature has expressly avoided the semblance of taxing the privilege of doing an interstate public utility business. Therefore, while in my opinion every railroad company in the state must file a report with the commission so as to disclose whether or not any of its earnings are from intrastate business, and while Section 97, above quoted, provides that the auditor shall charge for collection "from each express and telegraph company a sum in the nature of an excise tax," yet, I am of the opinion that when it is ascertained that the railroad company is not exercising the privilege of carrying on intrastate business in this state, the auditor of state may not lawfully charge the minimum tax of $10.00 against said company.

In my opinion, however, a public utility which does a purely interstate business in the state of Ohio is required to pay the franchise tax imposed by Sections 106 to 115, inclusive, of the act of May 31, 1911. Exemption from this franchise tax, which is by Sections 106 and 110 of the act made in terms applicable to all domestic and foreign corporations, is extended to certain corporations by Section 1129 above quoted. This exemption, however, is accorded only to companies owning and operating a public utility and as such required to file reports with the tax commission and pay excise taxes upon their gross earnings or gross receipts.

Companies like those under consideration are owned and operated as public utilities in this state and are required by law to file reports with the tax commission, but they are not required to pay an excise tax upon the gross earnings—one of the elements necessary in order to qualify a company for exemption under Section 129 is therefore missing.

For all of the above reasons, which I have stated very briefly, I am of the opinion that railroad companies or other public utilities doing business in this state, which has no intrastate earnings, are not liable for the minimum excise tax of $10.00 or for any other excise tax, but that such railroad company or companies is liable for the annual franchise tax exacted under Sections 106 to 115, inclusive, of the act of May 31, 1911.

Although I have only quoted those sections relating to railroad companies, the above conclusion applies as well to other public utilities similarly situated as to railroad companies.

Very truly yours,

TIMOTHY S. HOGAN,

Attorney General.

SMITH ONE PER CENT. LAW—FUNDING INDEBTEDNESS—RELIEF FROM LIMITATIONS BY GOOD ROADS DISTRICTS AND SCHOOL DISTRICTS.

When a good roads district formed from adjacent townships, under authority of Section 7095, et seq., General Code, by virtue of a bond issue becomes pressed by the limitations of the Smith law, its indebtedness may be extended, under Sections 7134-7136, General Code.

For relief against the Smith law limitation, a school district may:

First—Be favored by the budget commission as against other taxing districts, by failing to give other taxing districts levying within the school district territory, an amount equal to what they received in 1910, plus six per cent.

Second—By borrowing money from month to month, under Section 5656, General Code, to meet the salaries of teachers and other employes.

Third—By receipt of state aid to the amount of $40.00 per month for each teacher employed.

Fourth—By changing the boundaries of the school district by annexation and detachment of territory.

COLUMBUS, OHIO, July 3, 1912.

HON. RALPH BEARD, Prosecuting Attorney, Youngstown, Ohio.

MY DEAR SIR:—I beg to acknowledge receipt of your letter of June 27th, requesting my opinion upon the following questions:

> "1. Suppose that a good roads district has voted to issue bonds, which were not to become due until 1912, that is, the principal—that the payment of that principal by the 1910 levy would bring a total for taxes within that district greater than what was received in 1910, plus the six per cent. interest. How can the same be taken care of?
> "2. In a school district which has grown much more rapidly than the laws make provision for, and the school enumeration is about double what it was in 1910, and consequently the expense of maintaining the schools is about double, and the amount of taxes necessary for taking care of the schools will exceed the 1910 limitation; how can we take care of the excess? In this district, the teachers receive more than forty dollars per month, which puts them outside of the state aid."

I find that I cannot answer your first question unequivocally, because I do not know what you mean by the term "good roads district." This term might be used to designate several separate and distinct taxing districts provided for in the statutes. If, as seems most natural, you mean thereby to designate the good roads district formed from adjacent townships under authority of Sections 7095, et seq., General Code, I beg to call your attention to Section 7134 to 7136, inclusive. These three sections provide completely for the extension of the indebtedness of such a road district, and afford a convenient and efficacious method of keeping within the limitations of the Smith law, and at the same time providing ultimately for the payment of the indebtedness without necessitating the cutting down of levies for the current needs of the other taxing districts affected thereby.

Of course, if you do not refer to the road districts created under authority of the above mentioned sections, the above advice does not apply at all. In that event, I should prefer a further and more definite statement of facts from you before venturing to express an opinion.

In answer to your second question I beg to suggest the following possible methods of relieving the school district, concerning which you inquire therein, and at the same time keeping within the limitations of the Smith law:

First—By failing to give the other taxing districts levying within the same territory as the school district an amount equal to what they received in 1910, plus 6 per cent. While this seems to contravene the rule enunciated by the supreme court in the case of State vs. Sanzenbacher, I am satisfied that a strictly proportionate reduction is out of the question, and that the budget commission may lawfully take into consideration the needs of the various taxing districts in reducing any or all budgets so as to enforce the limitation measured by the 1910 taxes. You will observe that this limitation is not upon the amount that may be levied by a taxing district, but upon the amount that may be levied in a taxing district by all the authorities levying therein. (See Section 5649-2, General Code.)

Second—By borrowing money under Section 5656 to meet the salaries of teachers and other employes of the board. This, you will observe is possible only from month to month as the salaries become due, because an indebtedness funded under this section must be a valid, legal and existing indebtedness before the power to borrow arises. Such claims are, by virtue of Section 5661, of the General Code, legal charges against the district, in the absence of a certificate that the money is in the treasury, etc., as otherwise provided by Section 5660. This action, of course, could not be taken by the budget commission, but the commission might take the possibility thereof into consideration in fixing the amount of the budget for the school district.

Third—By receipt of state aid. I enclose two opinions upon this subject, one of which is to the effect that the school district may receive state aid to the extent of $40.00 per month for each teacher, although some teachers receive more than that amount; and the other of which explains the application of the Smith one per cent. law to the weak school district law.

Fourth—By changing the boundaries of the school district by annexation and detachment of school territory, as provided by law, so that all the territory within the present boundaries of the school district will be apportioned among taxing districts that will be able to take care of the needs thereof within the limitations of the Smith law.

Very truly yours,

TIMOTHY S. HOGAN,

Attorney General.

BAKESHOPS—REGULATION OF—CODIFICATION OF STATUTE—CLEAR CHANGE OF MEANING—CONSTITUTIONAL LAW.

The codifying commission through Section 1012 of the General Code, providing for the sanitary construction of bakeshops and prohibiting the use of cellars for the same has changed the requirements of the original Section 4364-71, R. S. Since, however, the language of said section is unmistakable the apparent meaning will control and its provisions will govern all bakeshops including those in existence prior to the change of the statute.

The constitutionality of the statute has been passed upon by the common pleas court and until such decision is reversed, it should be allowed to control. Notice before prosecution to offenders against the law is advised, however.

COLUMBUS, OHIO, July 29, 1912.

HON. THOMAS P. KEARNS, State Inspector Workshops and Factories, Columbus, O.

DEAR SIR:—You inquired of me verbally as to whether you should proceed against proprietors of bakeshops which were in operation at and prior to the time of the adoption of Section 1012, General Code, as codified.

Section 1012, General Code, is as follows:

> "All bakeries shall be drained and plumbed in a sanitary manner and provided with such air shafts, windows or ventilating pipes, as the chief inspector of workshops and factories or a district inspector directs. No cellar or basement shall be used as a bakery."

Your inquiry whether or not you should proceed is due to the claim made by some of those affected to the effect that Section 1012 of the General Code does not apply to proprietors of bakeshops in existence at the time of the adoption of the General Code, these proprietors basing the claim on the fact that said section before condification excepted cellars and basements then in use as bakeries.

The original act is found in Ohio laws, Volume 93, page 159. I do not deem it necessary to recite any of said act. It is found in Revised Statutes, Section 4364-71.

The first question that arises is, was it intended by the legislature to change the meaning of Section 4364-71, Revised Statutes, when Section 1012 of the General Code was adopted. I believe that it was the intention of the legislature to completely repeal said Section 4364-71, of the Revised Statutes and to substitute in lieu thereof Section 1012 of the General Code, and that the latter section means just what the language used therein clearly indicates without any reference to previous enactments. I quote from the case of Allen vs. Russell, 39 O. S., page 336, as follows:

> " 'But where all the general statutes of a state, or all on a particular subject, are revised and consolidated, there is a strong presumption that the same construction which the statutes received, or, if their interpretation had been called for, would certainly have received, before revision and consolidation, should be applied to the enactment in its revised and consolidated form, although the language may have been changed. * * * Of course, if it is clear from the words that a change in substance was intended, the statute must be enforced in accordance with its changed form.'

"There is quite a difference between code of laws for a state and a completion in revised form of its statutes. The code is broader in its scope, and more comprehensive in its purposes. Its general object is to embody as near as practicable, all the law of a state, from whatever source derived.

"When properly adopted by the law making power of the state, it has the same effect as one general act from the legislature, containing all the provisions embraced in the volume that is thus adopted. It is more than evidentiary of the law. It is the law itself."

In addition to the authorities cited in support of this view I beg further to advise that I conferred with Hon. James E. Campbell and Hon. L. C. Laylin, two members of the codifying commission, and they both recall the codification of this particular statute and advise that it was the intention of the codifiers to leave no exceptions to Section 1012 of the General Code; that it was intended to make the section complete in itself. They inform me, too, that they explained this change to the legislative committee and said committee acted with full knowledge of the change intended; that the change was made largely at the instance of those who were charged with the enforcement of the former section, finding the same unsatisfactory and difficult of enforcement and rather an impracticable statute.

Further in support of this view is the decision of the common pleas court of Hamilton county, Ohio, which is to be found in the case of Joseph Benhardt vs. Edward Wise, constable, found in Ohio Law Reporter of June 10, 1912, page 545. The opinion of the court (Gorman judge) is as logical as it is lucid and explains clearly the intention of the legislature in enacting Section 1012 of the General Code, and discloses the purpose of such change.

As to the constitutionality of the statute, the opinion of the court in the same case completely answers all questions fairly to be made against the constitutionality of the statute and leaves no room for other than its rigid enforcement. I attach great importance to the opinion of Judge Gorman upon the question of the constitutionality of the statute, because he says that his first impression as to its constitutionality were to the contrary, but that after consideration of the case he is entirely satisfied with the validity of the statute. This court is the only one that has yet passed upon the constitutionality of the act, and in my judgment it becomes your duty when an act is held valid by the common pleas court to enforce it until reversed by a higher court.

In view of the fact that the case referred to has been treated by this department up to the present as a test case, and we think under all circumstances properly so, and in further view of the fact that this was doubtless so understood, at least in Hamilton county, I would suggest that you give notice of your intention to cause arrests to be made of all those who violate the section on and after a certain day to be determined by yourself.

Yours very truly,

TIMOTHY S. HOGAN,
Attorney General.

JUDGE OF COMMON PLEAS COURT—VOTES CAST FOR CONGRESSMAN NOT INVALIDATED BY CONSTITUTION—STATE AND FEDERAL CANDIDACY DISTINGUISHED—CONSTITUTIONAL LAW.

The language of Art. IV, Section 14, of the Constitution of Ohio, prohibits judges of the supreme court and of the common pleas court to hold any other office under the authority of the state or of the United States.

Said provision also makes void all votes cast in behalf of such judicial officers for any elective office under the authority of this state, but does not invalidate votes cast for an office of the federal government.

A common pleas judge, therefore, is not required to resign in order that he may receive votes for the position of United States congressman.

COLUMBUS, OHIO, October 11, 1912.

HON. WARREN GARD, Judge of the Common Pleas Court, Hamilton, Ohio.

DEAR SIR:—I am in receipt of your letter of October 9, 1912, stating that your term as common pleas judge does not expire until January 1, 1913, that you are a candidate for congress in the third congressional district, and asking whether it is necessary for you to resign as common pleas judge before the election to be held on November 5, 1912, in order that the votes cast for you as candidate for congress may not be void.

I considered this question in a conference with Secretary of State Graves a few days ago, and we both at that time came to the conclusion that it would not be necessary for you to resign. Since receiving your letter I have given the matter further attention and feel confident that my first view was correct.

The question arises on account of the constitutional provision of Section 14, Article IV. This section, for the purposes of the question, may be paraphrased as follows:

> "The judges of the supreme court, and of the court of common pleas, * * * shall receive no fees, or perquisites, nor hold any other office of profit or trust, under the authority of this state, or the United States. All votes for either of them, for any elective office, under the authority of this state, given by the general assembly, or the people, shall be void."

The last sentence of this section was added to the provisions as they originally stood in Section 8 of Article III of the Constitution of 1802. In the limited time at my disposal in which to consider the matter, I have been unable to find any authorities bearing directly upon it, and therefore it seems to me that it must be decided by construing the language used in the constitution.

The first provision is clear, "No judge of the supreme court or court of common pleas can hold any other office of profit or trust under the authority of this state or of the United States." But it must be noticed that in the following sentence the words "or of the United States" are omitted, and the provision simply reads,

> "All votes for either of them for any elective office, except a judicial office, under the authority of this state, given by the general assembly, or the people, shall be void."

The only office referred to is an office under the authority of this state, and it would seem, as the words "or of the United States" are used in the preceding sentence to designate additional offices which a judge of the common pleas or supreme courts cannot hold, and as these words are omitted in designating the offices for which a candidate cannot have votes counted if he occupies the position of judge of the supreme court or the court of common pleas, that the prohibition does not extend to any offices except those under the authority of this state. The question therfore is, Is the office of member of congress of the United States an office under the authority of the state of Ohio?" Clearly it is not. The office is created by the Constitution of the United States; the qualification of its members are prescribed by the Constitution of the United States; and while by the Constitution of the United States authority is given to the respective states to provide for the time, place and manner of holding elections for senators and representatives, the power is reserved to congress to at any time make or alter such regulations except as to the places of choosing senators (Section 4, Article I, United States Constitution).

My opinion, therefore, is that there is no constitutional inhibition against a person holding the office of judge of the supreme court or of the common pleas court in Ohio becoming a candidate for the congress of the United States, and having all votes cast for him counted, but that in case of election thereto, such person must resign one of the offices before he can qualify for the other.

Very truly yours,

TIMOTHY S. HOGAN,
Attorney General.

SENTENCE OF MURDER BY JUDGE UPON CONFESSION IN OPEN COURT —POWER OF COURT TO SENTENCE FOR LIFE INSTEAD OF DEATH WHEN EVIDENCE SHOWS FIRST DEGREE.

Section 13692, General Code, providing that when the offense charged is murder and the accused is convicted by confession in open court, the court shall examine the witnesses, determine the degree of the crime and pronounce sentence accordingly, is intended primarily to permit the judge to decide not only the technical degree of the crime, but also its general nature, and includes the right of the judge to exercise the power to determine whether mercy ought to be recommended.

The court is empowered by said statute, therefore, to make the punishment life imprisonment instead of death when it finds the crime to be murder in the first degree and deems it worthy of a recommendation of mercy.

COLUMBUS, OHIO, November 25, 1912.

HON. W. H. MIDDLETON, Judge Court of Common Pleas, Waverly, Ohio.

DEAR JUDGE:—I have your favor of the 20th inst., asking my opinion on the following question:

> "Where a defendant, under the provisions of Sec. 13692, G. C., confesses in open court to the crime of murder, the indictment being for murder in the first degree, and the court examines witnesses to determine the degree of crime, has the court any authority, under the provisions of Sec. 12400, G. C., to fix the punishment at imprisonment in the penitentiary for life if the court determines the degree of crime to be murder in the first degree?"

Section 12400 General Code provides as follows:

"Whoever, purposely, and either of deliberate and premeditated malice, or by means of poison, or in perpetrating or attempting to perpetrate rape, arson, robbery or burglary, kills another is guilty of murder in the first degree and shall be punished by death unless the jury trying the accused recommend mercy, in which case the punishment shall be imprisonment in the penitentiary during life."

Section 13692 of the General Code, provides as follows:

"Upon an indictment, the jury may find the defendant not guilty of the offense charged, but guilty of an attempt to commit it, if such attempt is an offense at law. When the indictment charges an offense including different degrees, the jury may find the defendant not guilty of the degree charged and guilty of an inferior degree thereof. If the offense charged is murder, and the accused is convicted by confession in open court, the court shall examine the witnesses, determine the degree of the crime and pronounce sentence accordingly."

After a confession of the accused in open court the duty of the court seems to be limited to the examination of witnesses, the determining of the degree of crime and pronouncement of sentence accordingly. The real question is, therefore, as to the jurisdiction of the court in determining the degree of crime, whether in that connection the court is warranted in finding the accused entitled to a recommendation for mercy.

Although I have made diligent search I find no record of any opinion of the courts in any reported case. The adjudications and references to similar cases seem to hinge on the constitutionality of the statutes similar to Section 13692 of the General Code, but the opinions of the courts in these cases show a line of reasoning that is instructive.

The court, speaking through Mason, chief justice, in the case of McCauley vs. United States, Morris' Iowa Reports, Vol. 1, page 486, say:

"The statute declares 'that in all trials for murder, the jury before whom such trial is had, if they find the prisoner guilty thereof, shall ascertain in their verdict whether it be murder or manslaughter, and if such person be convicted by confession in open court, the court shall proceed by examination of witnesses in open court to determine the degree of the crime, and shall pronounce sentence accordingly.' It appears that in the present case, on the trial below, after the testimony on the part of the prosecution had closed, the then defendant withdrew his plea of not guilty and pleaded guilty to the indictment, and was thereupon sentenced to be hung. Nothing appears on the record showing that witnesses were examined by the court after he had pleaded guilty, or that the court in any manner decided whether the offense were murder or manslaughter, as contemplated by the statute. This we think was an error.

"Had the trial before the jury proceeded and a general verdict of guilty alone been rendered, it would have been clearly defective. The general plea of guilty only stands in the place of such a general verdict, and was so intended by the legislature. The law seems to regard manslaughter as a species of murder. On an indictment for the higher offense, a conviction may take place for the lower; neither a general verdict or a general plea of guilty is permitted where murder alone is charged in the indictment, but an enquiry and decision as to the more precise nature of the offense are rendered necessary. That enquiry and decision should appear of record."

The instructive feature of the foregoing opinion so far as the present matter is concerned is this: On indictment for a higher offense a conviction may take place for the lower; neither a general verdict or a general plea of guilty is permitted where murder alone is charged in the indictment, but an inquiry and decision as to the more precise nature of the offense are rendered necessary.

I have used this opinion not that it throws any light on the Ohio law, with which you are familiar, but because of the clear method of expression in this opinion as to the reason for the inquiry by the court. The law of Iowa on the subject seems in all particulars the same as that of Ohio. At this point I am clearly of the belief that the purpose of the statute is not limited to the mere fixing of the degree of the crime, such as murder in the first degree, murder in the second degree, manslaughter, etc., although, of course, this is necessary and its main feature. The inquiry and decision, as said, are for the purpose of ascertaining the more precise nature of the offense. In other words, the court takes the place of the jury for all purposes in the statutes and not for a part of the purposes. Section 12400, General Code, authorizes the jury to recommend mercy, and in case the jury recommends mercy punishment shall be imprisonment in the penitentiary during life. The assault on the constitutionality of these statutes authorizing open confession is amongst other things based on the deprivation of the right of the judgment of the jury. They have been upheld on the theory that men of sound mind may confess all the facts that a jury is called upon to inquire into, and it seems to me that if the court were denied the right to exercise any power which the jury might exercise and inquire into the nature of the offense good arguments would exist for the unconstitutionality of such statutes, and, therefore, every intendment is in favor of the proposition that a court in ascertaining the degree of the crime may consider whether or not the accused is entitled to the recommendation for mercy.

Since writing the foregoing I called upon Judge Evans of the common pleas bench of Franklin county, because I recollected that a man by the name of Castor, who killed a policeman some few years ago, entered a plea of guilty to murder in the first degree, and Judge Evans imposed the death penalty on him. The case was carried to the supreme court and the judgment of Judge Evans was affirmed. I inquired of the judge whether when he imposed the death penalty he considered the question you submit, and he advised me that while he gave the matter some consideration he imposed the death penalty because the case was one not calling for a recommendation, but he advised me that recently a similar case was before Judge Bigger of the common pleas court here, the case being that of The State of Ohio vs. Miner Anderson, and that Judge Bigger held that it unquestionably was the spirit of our statutes to give the common pleas judge the right to recommend mercy in his findings, and accordingly he made such a recommendation and imposed sentence of imprisonment for life. Prosecutor Turner advised me that the case came up during his term of office and that Judge Bigger made the ruling which I have described, and that Judge Bigger had followed a precedent set some years ago by Judge Dillon in a similar case.

I will forward to you within the next few days the form of journal entry used by the court here which may save you some labor and be of some assistance to you in case you should impose the sentence of life imprisonment on the with all the laws of Ohio. As to foreign insurance companies, this compliance accused in the case you are to pass upon. The opinions that I have gone over here disclose the importance of the journal entry showing the action of the court in respect to his conclusions.

Very truly yours,
TIMOTHY S. HOGAN,
Attorney General.

INMATES OF STATE INSTITUTIONS—CHARGE FOR KEEPING BECOMES PAYABLE FROM TIME PERSON BECOMES INMATE AND FROM TAKING EFFECT OF LAW.

The charge made by the state for the care and keeping of a patient in a state institution begins when the person becomes an inmate.

Under 1815-4 of the General Code, the same charge for inmates being cared for at the time of the passage of this law became payable from May 2, 1910, i. e., the day when the act became a law.

COLUMBUS, OHIO, July 23, 1912.

HON. S. G. MCADOO, Probate Judge, Ashland, Ohio.

DEAR SIR:—Your communication dated July 11, 1912, in which you request my opinion upon the following questions:

> "Under Section 1815 of the General Code, supplemented by 1815-4, does the charge made by the state for the care and keeping in a state institution begin when the patient is admitted or when his father, mother or guardian are notified?"

Second:

> "If the patient was an inmate of a state institution at the time this act became a law would the charges for his care begin when the act became a law or not until his father, mother or guardian were notified?"

was duly received, and in reply to your first question I desire to say that Section 1815-9 provides as follows:

> "It is the intent of this act that a husband may be held liable for the support of a wife while an inmate of any of said institutions, a wife for a husband, a father or mother for a son or daughter, and a son or daughter, or both, for a father or mother."

and under said section, just above quoted, there can be no question but what the liability attaches from the time the person becomes an inmate of any of said institutions of the state.

In answer to your second question I desire to say that I am of the opinion that under Section 1815-4 any person liable under the act referred to in your inquiry would become liable at the time the act became a law, and not at the time the father, mother or guardian was notified, because the section last above referred to provides, in part, as follows:

> "An order shall be issued to the persons who are determined liable for such payment, requiring them to pay monthly, quarterly or otherwise, as may be arranged, to the board such amount as it or the committee shall deem proper, but no order shall be issued compelling payment for the care of an inmate prior to May 2, 1910."

This section became effective on May 2, 1910, and it was the intent of the legislature that the liability should attach to all inmates of institutions at that time, but no charge should be made for the care or maintenance of any such inmates prior to said date.

Therefore, I am of the legal opinion that charges for the care of such inmates would date back to the time when the act became a law, although the father, mother or guardian were not notified until later.

Very truly yours,

TIMOTHY S. HOGAN,
Attorney General.

TAXES AND TAXATION—COLLATERAL INHERITANCE TAX—EXEMPTION DOES NOT APPLY UNLESS CHILD RECOGNIZED AS ADOPTED HAS BEEN DECLARED A LEGAL HEIR—TAXATION OF SHARES OF STOCK IN FOREIGN INSURANCE COMPANY—EQUITABLE LIFE INSURANCE COMPANY—LISTING AT THE RESIDENCE OF SHAREHOLDER.

Under Section 5331, General Code, the exemption from the collateral inheritance tax therein provided for, cannot apply to a devise to a person recognized as an adopted child, unless such child has been made a legal heir by the declaration before the probate court provided for in Section 8598, General Code.

By virtue of Section 192, General Code, a shareholder in a foreign corporation, two-thirds of whose property is taxed in Ohio and the remainder in another state or states, is not obliged to list his shares of stock in Ohio provided, "such corporation, as a fee for the privilege of exercising its franchise in Ohio, pays annually the same percentage upon its entire authorized capital stock that is required by law to be paid by a domestic corporation on its subscribed or issued capital stock."

This proviso, however, is intended simply to incorporate the principle that a foreign corporation whose stock is entitled to exemption of two-thirds of its property is located in this state, must be one which has complied with all the laws of Ohio. The report and taxes paid by insurance companies supplies this requirement and if it can be shown therefore that two-thirds of the property of the Equitable Life Insurance Company is located in Ohio, and the balance taxed in other states, shares of stock in such company need not be listed in Ohio.

Otherwise, such shares must be listed under Section 5371, General Code, in the taxing district in which the owner of the stock resides at the time of listing.

COLUMBUS, OHIO, November 12, 1912.

HON. GEORGE M. HOKE, Probate Judge, Tiffin, Ohio.

DEAR SIR:—I beg to acknowledge receipt of your letter of December 2, in which you request my opinion upon the following questions:

> "1. A lady takes a child, not related to her by blood or otherwise, to raise; she always regarded her and spoke of her as her adopted daughter, although there never was a legal adoption; on her death, she gives by will, all of her estate to this lady she had taken to raise and whom she always regarded as her adopted daughter. Is the property so devised to this supposed adopted daughter subject to the collateral inheritance tax, as provided in Section 5331, General Code?
>
> "2. A resident of this state owns some of the stock of the Equitable Life Insurance Company of New York, or, let us say, stock of any foreign company; should he list this stock for taxation in Ohio, and is it subject to taxation in this state and in the county in which he resides?"

Section 5331, General Code, contains the provision which governs your first question; it is, in part, as follows:

> "All property within the jurisdiction of this state * * * which pass by will or by the intestate laws of this state * * * to a person in trust or otherwise, other than to or for the use of the father, etc., * * * adopted child, or person recognized as an adopted child, and made a legal heir under the provisions of a statute of this state * * * shall be liable to a tax * * *"

It will be observed that this provision is very explicit. While it withholds the application of the inheritance tax from devises to persons recognized as adopted children of the decedent, yet, the manner of the recognition must be as specified therein. In this respect the statute of Ohio is more strict than those of certain other states; for example, the New York statute of 1892 exempted from the collateral inheritance tax property passing to "any person to whom any such decedent, for not less than ten years prior to such transfer, stood in the mutually acknowledged relation of parent." Under such statute, of course, it was not necessary to show any formal act or proceeding, in order to entitle the taker of the estate to the classification of direct descendent.

The reference in Section 5331, supra, to "a person recognized as an adopted child and made a legal heir" is, evidently, to the proceeding provided for in Section 8598, General Code, which is, in part, as follows:

> "A person of sound mind and memory may appear before the probate judge of his county, and in the presence of such judge and two disinterested persons of his or her acquaintance, file a written declaration, subscribed by him, which must be attested by such persons, declaring that, as his or her free and voluntary act, he or she did designate and appoint another, naming and stating the place of residence of such person specifically, to stand toward him in the relation of an heir-at-law in the event of his or her death. * * * Thenceforward the person thus designated will stand in the same relation, for all purposes, to such declarant as he or she could, if a child born in lawful wedlock. The rules of inheritance will be the same, between him and the relations by blood of the declarant, as if so born; and a certified copy of such record will be prima facie evidence of the fact stated therein, and conclusive evidence, unless impeached for actual fraud, or undue influence."

While very little formality is required by this statute, it is essential that a declaration of some sort be made before the probate court, in writing, attested as therein prescribed. Bird vs. Young, 56 O. S. 210. This proceeding is separate and distinct from that of adoption as such; it has the effect of making the recognized heir capable of inheriting from the person making the declaration. This, however, of itself, would not be sufficient to render devises to the designated heir, or other inheritances by him, from the declarant, exempt from the collateral inheritance tax. Dos Passos on Inheritance Tax Law, Section 37, page 123; State vs. Hunnewell, 3 O. L. Rep. 52.

In other words, the question of inheritance, whether direct or indirect, within the ordinary acceptation of those terms, is quite distinct from the question of exemption from the collateral inheritance tax, although the phrase "collateral inheritance" is used to describe the tax in a general way. The words of Section 5331 will be taken in their ordinary and plain signification, and, especially in the absence of any tax upon direct inheritance, the statute will be construed, if at all, most strongly against any exemption which may be claimed.

Upon these principles, then, a mere mutual recognition, on the part of a decedent and a devisee, during the lifetime of the former, of the relation of parent and adopted child is insufficient to render the devise exempt from the collateral inheritance tax. Formal adoption, in the complete sense of the word, is not necessary, in order to create an exemption, but the very least act which will have that effect is the proceeding provided by Section 8598, supra.

Answering your second question, I beg to refer you to the cases of Bradley vs. Bauder, 36 O. S. 28; Lee vs. Sturgis, 46 O. S. 153; Sturgis vs. Carter, 114; U. S. 511; Worthington vs. Sebastian, 25 O. S. 1, and Hubbard vs. Brush, 61 O. S. 252, all of which relate to the construction and application of the last sentence of what is now Section 5372, General Code. Succinctly stated, these cases are to the effect that if all of the property of a foreign corporation is taxed in Ohio, the owner of its shares need not list them for taxation here, but that if anything less than all the property of the corporation is taxed in Ohio, the shares, being separate interests, must be listed in Ohio.

This rule, however, has been, subsequently to the original enactment of what is now Section 5372, General Code, and its interpretation in these decisions, substantially changed, by the adoption of what is now Section 192, General Code, which is as follows:

> "No person shall be required to list for taxation a share of the capital stock of an Ohio corporation; or a share of the capital stock of a foreign corporation, the property of which is taxed in Ohio in the name of such corporation; or a share of the capital stock of any other foreign corporation, if the holder thereof furnishes satisfactory proof to the taxing authorities that at least two-thirds of the property of such corporation is taxed in Ohio and the remainder is taxed in another state or states, provided such corporation, as a fee for the privilege of exercising its franchise in Ohio, pays annually the same percentage upon its entire authorized capital stock that is required by law to be paid by a domestic corporation on its subscribed or issued capital stock."

This last quoted section furnishes a complete rule by which your second question may be answered. If the Equitable Life Insurance Company of New York, has two-thirds of its properly in Ohio, and the remainder in some other states, and all of such property is taxed in the several states in which it is located, and satisfactory proof of these facts can be furnished to the taxing authorities, by the owner of its stock, then, the stock need not be listed; otherwise, the stock constitutes an investment and must be listed by its owner in Ohio.

The only serious question which arises here is that which is raised by the last proviso of the above quoted Section 192, General Code. Foreign insurance companies are not required to pay a fee for exercising the corporate franchise in Ohio, originally, or to pay annual fees for the continued exercise of the franchise in this state (See Sections 188 and 5518, General Code). I am of the opinion, however, that this proviso is intended simply to incorporate the principle that a foreign corporation, whose stock is entitled to exemption if two-thirds of its property is located in this state, must be one which has complied with all the laws of Ohio. As to foreign insurance companies, this compliance is effected by filing certain reports with the superintendent of insurance and paying certain taxes thereon, and not by paying a franchise tax upon the entire authorized capital stock.

Inasmuch, however, as I imagine that it cannot be shown that two-thirds of the property of the Equitable Life Insurance Company is located in Ohio, I do not apprehend that the question which I have just discussed will arise; and I suspect that, upon the principles laid down, the stock is clearly taxable.

Section 5371, General Code, provides explicitly for the place of taxation of property of this kind. As will be observed, by consulting that section, such property should be returned for taxation in the taxing district in which the owner of the stock resides at the time of listing.

Very truly yours,
TIMOTHY S. HOGAN
Attorney General.

AUTOMOBILES—DEALERS WHO HIRE OUTCARS FOR DEMONSTRATION MUST PAY SEPARATE LICENSE FOR EACH CAR SO LET OUT FOR HIRE.

Under Section 6301, General Code, which provides a registration fee of $10.00 for each make of motor vehicle manufactured or dealt in and requires each individual car of such make to carry a general registration number assigned for such make, until the vehicle is sold or "let for hire," a company which deals in machines but contracts for demonstration services prior to sale, must separately register number and license all cars "hired out" for such demonstration purposes, as provided by Sections 6294, 6298 and 6300, General Code.

COLUMBUS, OHIO, October 26, 1912.

HON. J. A. SHEARER, State Registrar of Automobiles, Columbus, Ohio.

DEAR SIR:—I beg to acknowledge receipt of your letter of June 18, 1912, wherein you state:

> "I am enclosing herewith to you some correspondence had with the Fischer Auto & Service Co., Cincinnati, O.
>
> "In reply to their letter of the 8th inst., I mailed to them copy of an opinion by Attorney General U. G. Denman, dated July 13, 1910, holding that dealer's registration tags could not be used upon motor vehicles operated in the taxi cab or livery business, a copy of which opinion is herewith enclosed to you.
> "From the letter of the Fischer Auto & Service Co., of the 14th inst., which is herewith enclosed, you will note that they do not think the opinion of Attorney General Denman will apply in their case, with reference to operating motor trucks, which you will note from their letter of the 8th inst., herewith enclosed, is for both pleasure and business purposes.
> "In their letter of the 14th inst., they request that this correspondence be submitted to you for an opinion, which, at their request, I am now doing, having notified them accordingly."

The correspondence discloses that the Fischer Auto & Service Co. is a dealer in motor pleasure cars and trucks, and that in order to convince prospective customers of the merits of its goods, has established a series of demonstrations of trucks, for which a fixed contract price is charged. Upon request said company submitted additional facts relative to the nature of its contract, as follows:

> "1. Certain machines of a particular make are used for demonstration purposes solely and a different machine of the same make is later sold to the prospective purchaser unless it so happens that the machine with which demonstration is made is adaptable to the needs and purposes of the prospective purchaser, in which event the sale price is fixed accordingly as explained in the following answer:

"2. Contract price for a demonstration is deducted from the purchase price of the machine only where the same machine under demonstration is sold and where demonstrations are not limited to a day or two. The demands for the various bodies in different businesses and individual tastes will make it possible only occasionally to sell demonstrating truck to prospective purchaser."

The contention of this company is that it has the right to use the numbers assigned to it as a dealer on the motor vehicles used for demonstration purposes, pursuant to the arrangement described above.

The law regulating the registration of motor vehicles is found in Sections 6290 to 6310, inclusive, of the General Code.

Section 6294 requires that every owner of a motor vehicle, operated or driven upon the public road or highways of the state shall, annually, before January 1, of each year, cause to be filed in the office of the secretary of state an application for registration for the following year, accompanied by a registration fee of $5.00 for each gasoline or steam motor vehicle, and $3.00 for each electric motor vehicle. When this is done the secretary of state is required, by Section 6298, to assign to such vehicle a distinctive number, and issue to the owner thereof a certificate of registration and two placards having printed thereon such distinctive number in the manner prescribed by Section 6300, which placards must be displayed on the front and rear of the motor vehicle.

Section 6301 provides that a manufacturer or dealer shall pay a registration fee of $10.00 for each make of motor vehicle manufactured or dealt in, whereupon the secretary of state is required to assign to each make so manufactured or dealt in a distinctive number, which must be carried and displayed on each motor vehicle while it is operated on the public highway, and until it is "sold or let for hire."

The facts submitted to me conclusively show, in my judgment, that the arrangement whereby the Fischer Auto & Service Company make a charge for the demonstration of its machines constitutes a letting thereof for hire, within the meaning of Section 6301, General Code; and, accordingly, I am of the opinion that machines, when a charge is made for their use, should be separately registered.

Very truly yours,

TIMOTHY S. HOGAN,

Attorney General.

PAROLE OF PRISONERS BY BOARD OF ADMINISTRATION—RELEASE MUST BE COMPATIBLE WITH WELFARE OF SOCIETY.

The words of Section 2172, General Code, providing that the judgment of the board of administration, in granting parole to a prisoner shall be based upon the "record and character of the prisoner as established in the penitentiary" are directory merely and not mandatory, and such language is subservient to and must be controlled by the further requirement of the same statute, to the effect that a prisoner shall not be released on parole unless in the judgment of the board his release "will not be incompatible with the welfare of society."

COLUMBUS, OHIO, November 22, 1912.

HON. H. R. PROBASCO, Attorney-at-Law, Cincinnati, Ohio.

MY DEAR SIR:—Your letter of September 13th, relating to the matter of the application of Charles L. Warriner, a prisoner confined in the Ohio penitentiary, made to the Ohio board of administration for parole, together with copies of letters written by you and received by you from said board, was duly received.

I apprehend you are aware of the fact that it is a rule of this department not to advise individual citizens or attorneys-at-law relative to matters pertaining to the action taken by any board or state officer, but I am extending the courtesy to you as attorney for Mr. Warriner of expressing to you my views in construing Section 2172 of the General Code, which reads as follows:

> "A prisoner shall not be released upon parole either conditionally or absolutely, unless, in the judgment of the board of managers, his release will not be incompatible with the welfare of society. Such judgment shall be based upon the record and character of the prisoner as established in the penitentiary."

For the reason that I am confident that should I fail to give you my opinion on this matter, the board of administration would ask for the same, I, therefore, deem it not only a courtesy but a saving of time to give you my opinion.

I cannot agree with your views upon the subject as I believe that in the enactment of the latter clause of said section by the legislature, which reads, "such judgment shall be based upon the record and character of the prisoner as established in the penitentiary," it was the intention of the legislature to vest a discretionary power in the board of managers, now the board of administration as its successor, in relation to forming its judgment, as the whole section must be read together and no prisoner shall be released upon parole either conditionally or absolutely unless in the judgment of the board of managers his release will not be incompatible with the welfare of society, and the words of the latter clause referred to in said section are, in my opinion, affirmative and relate to the manner in which the power or jurisdiction vested in said public board is to be exercised, and do not limit the power or jurisdiction itself and, therefore, should be construed to be directory rather than mandatory.

There seems to be no universal rule by which directory provisions under all circumstances may be distinguished from those which are mandatory, but it seems to be generally taken as a well fixed rule that in each case the character of the statute is determined by consideration of its language taken in connection with the purpose which the legislature had in view by its enactment.

I cannot see wherein any other construction than the above stated can be placed upon said section with safety to the public or to the welfare of society, and I do not think that the legislature intended to deprive the board, in forming its judgment as to whether or not the release of any prisoner upon parole would be incompatible with the welfare of society, of taking into consideration the character of the prisoner as established in the penitentiary and also the character of the man as it may appear to the members of the board, for a prisoner who may be eligible in every other respect, and whose conduct and record for obedience to the rules and regulations of the penitentiary while confined therein, may nevertheless be of such a character that it would be incompatible with the welfare of society to release him from said institution upon parole.

While I do not assume to know anything about the character of the prisoner referred to in your letter I am absolutely of the opinion that said statute is directory and that the board is vested with a discretionary power in matters parole to the extent that I have indicated, and should it not be so many vicious and bad men, prisoners in the Ohio penitentiary, might behave themselves long enough to become eligible to parole, and although their release would be incompatible with the welfare of society, the public would have no relief.

Yours very truly,

TIMOTHY S. HOGAN,
Attorney General.

TAXES AND TAXATION—APPROPRIATION—CONTINGENT FUNDS COVER ONLY DEFICIENCIES FROM UNFORESEEN EMERGENCIES.

The contingent fund established under Section 3800 of the General Code, is dealt with under the head of appropriation, and is intended to cover only such deficiencies as arise from emergencies unforeseen by the appropriating body at the time of making the appropriation.

COLUMBUS, OHIO, July 22, 1912.

HON. STUART R. BOLIN, City Solicitor, Columbus, Ohio.

DEAR SIR:—I beg to acknowledge receipt of your letter of even date herewith, requesting my opinion upon the following question:

> "May deficiencies in detailed appropriation accounts be provided for out of the contingent fund established under Section 3800 of the General Code, if such deficiencies are or could be foreseen at the time of making the semi-annual appropriation?"

In my opinion a deficiency of the kind you specify, which might be foreseen at the time of making the semi-annual appropriation, may not lawfully be met out of the contingent fund established under Section 3800 of the General Code.

Said Section 3800 provides in part, as follows:

> "In making the semi-annual appropriation and apportionment herein required, council may deduct and set apart from any moneys, not otherwise appropriated, such sum as it deems proper as a contingent fund to provide for any deficiency in any of the detailed appropriations, which may lawfully and by any unforeseen emergency happen. Such contingent fund or any part thereof may be expended for any such emergency only by ordinance passed by two-thirds of all the members elected to council and approved by the mayor. * * * "

It is essential to the validity of an expenditure from the contingent fund that the deficiency intended to be supplied thereby shall happen "by unforeseen emergency." In order that an emergency may be such, and may be "unforeseen," within the meaning of this provision, it must be one which is unexpected and entirely out of the ordinary. It must arise by virtue of the happening of an event unusual in its nature, and such as ordinarily is not contemplated at the time of making the appropriation.

> Ampt vs. Cincinnati, 1 N. P. 379.

The sole question which arises here, as I understand your letter, is, as to whether or not the foresight, in the reasonable exercise of which the needs of the city are determined, is, within the meaning of Section 3800, that of the appropriating body or that of the levying authority. It is contended that that is an "unforeseen emergency," which, in the reasonable exercise of the power of the council and the administrative authorities of the city, is not contemplated by them when the levy for municipal purposes is fixed, as provided by law. I do not concur in this view, but rather in the view stated in your opinion submitted to me.

Section 3800 of the General Code is in pari materia with Sections 3796 to 3799, inclusive, of the General Code (formerly Sections 42 and portions of Section 43 of the Municipal Code.) All of these sections relate to the appropriation and expenditure of the moneys of the corporation, as well of those funds derived from miscellaneous sources of revenue, as those derived from taxation.

It is true that all of these sections are found in the chapter relating to taxation, which begins with Section 3784 of the General Code, and the earlier sections of which, together with certain provisions of the so-called Smith one per cent. law, prescribe the machinery of making up the annual budget of the city; but, if it is possible to read Section 3800 in the light of either of these earlier sections, or of those more contiguous to it, I think the latter interpretation must prevail. The fact that said Section 3800 was formerly a part of Section 43 of the Municipal Code, which otherwise, at any rate, deals exclusively with appropriation, and not at all with levies or collections, must not be lost sight of.

But it is not necessary to look to other sections to determine the meaning of the provisions under consideration. On the face of the first sentence of Section 3800 it is obvious, I think, that that which is "unforeseen," within the meaning thereof, is such at the time of making the semi-annual appropriation. This sentence provides that the contingent fund may be set aside at the time of making the semi-annual appropriation. The provision as to time here specified controls the whole section in this particular.

Therefore, an emergency for which the contingent fund may be expended is an emergency "unforeseen in making the semi-annual appropriation."

Very truly yours,

TIMOTHY S. HOGAN,

Attorney General.
